Import demand in the United States, which had weakened since 2007, fell further in 2008. Export growth fell from August, due to weakening demand worldwide and the rebound of the United States dollar. Trade growth in Western Europe was affected by the United States slowdown. Growth of the total European export volume slowed from 3.9 to 3.6 per cent, except for export performance in the United Kingdom, which recovered from the 2007 contraction in trade. Import demand in Europe slowed from 5.2 per cent in 2007 to 3.2 per cent in 2008. The softening of import demand in the United States and elsewhere was also slowing export growth in developed Asia (Japan and Australia in particular). Falling oil prices reversed the trend in preceding years of a rising import bill in Japan and helped preserve the country's trade surplus, despite the poorer export performance. Australia reduced its trade deficit, thanks to sharp increases in the negotiated price for its iron ore and coal exports, underpinning an increase in its export revenues by more than 20 per cent. Canada's external sector suffered from the weak United States economy, especially in the automobile industry, and, from mid-2008, also from the drop in oil prices and the appreciation of the Canadian dollar.

Among the new European Union (EU) member States, Estonia and Latvia saw their imports decline in real terms as a consequence of the bursting housing and credit bubbles. In other new EU members, most notably Bulgaria and Romania, strong private consumption, continued foreign direct investment inflows and strong domestic investment drove import growth by 12 per cent. Exports by new EU members continued to expand at an annualized rate of 11 per cent in real terms. South-Eastern Europe experienced strong import growth of about 8 per cent, amplified in nominal terms by higher food and energy prices. The region's exports grew at about 9 per cent. Export revenue growth of CIS countries was strong, outpacing import value growth. The surge in oil and gas prices in the first half of 2008 helped boost trade surpluses in Azerbaijan, Kazakhstan and the Russian Federation. Growth in the volume of exports from the Russian Federation remained weak, while imports increased by more than 20 per cent. However, owing to the strong rise in hydrocarbon prices in the first six months of 2008, the economy increased its trade surplus, and, in some other parts of the CIS, import growth outpaced export growth in value terms, and trade deficits widened, especially in Armenia, Kyrgyzstan, Moldova and Tajikistan. Ukraine suffered most from the rising costs of imported food, oil and gas, and its trade deficit surged as import demand was further fuelled by strong domestic demand.

Trends in trade differed strongly between the oil and the non-oil exporters in Western Asia. Despite strong import growth, trade surpluses in the major oil-exporting countries of the Gulf Cooperation Council and Iraq increased from their already high levels of 2007. Saudi Arabia's trade surplus reached an estimated 65 per cent of gross domestic product, and Kuwait's 72 per cent. In contrast, in the non-oil economies of the region, such as Jordan, Lebanon and Turkey, rising import costs outpaced increased export revenues, resulting in a further widening of trade and current-account deficits. Export volume growth for the region as a whole was estimated to have weakened from an annual average of 13.7 per cent during 2001–2007 to about 8 per cent in 2008.

China's trade balance continued to widen in dollar terms, despite the appreciation of the renminbi. The Republic of Korea, the second largest exporter in the region, sustained high rates of export growth until the third quarter of 2008, after which the economy's trade balance moved into deficit as a consequence of strongly increasing import costs for energy and materials. Singapore and the Taiwan Province of China suffered from lower demand for information technology products, consistent with the weak demand in industrial countries.

The developing countries most vulnerable to a global economic downturn and volatile commodity prices were primarily found in Africa and Latin America. The good performance of commodity exporters in Africa, owing to the rise in prices in the first part of the year, was expected to give way to a much less favourable outcome, as the demand for their exports declined. A similar reversal of trends would also affect those African countries heavily reliant on agricultural exports and tourism. Oil exporters would see lower current-account surpluses in 2008 compared with previous years, and oil importers, in contrast, were expected to experience widening current-account deficits. South Africa was an exception, as its current-account deficit narrowed substantially in 2008, following its recovery from the electricity crisis that had stalled mining exports the year before. The recession in the United States would be felt most immediately in Mexico and Central America, inasmuch as they relied on United States markets for the largest share of their exports. Countries in South America that relied on a more diverse group of trading partners would feel the consequences once demand for their exports slowed in Europe and in Asia's emerging market economies.

The Trade and Development Report, 2008 [Sales No. E.08.II.D.21], published by UNCTAD, discussed trends and issues in the world economy, including global growth and trade and macroeconomic responses to the commodity boom, particularly the commodity price shocks and the risk of inflation. It stated that in 2007, world trade in real terms expanded less than in the preceding four years, but continued to grow unabated in developing and transition economies, where exports rose by more than 9 per cent in volume terms, with considerable regional differences. As the supply response to higher commodity prices had generally been weak, regions that had a large share of primary commodities in their exports saw lower growth in export volumes than regions with a large share of manufactures in their exports. The United States experienced a particularly sharp slowdown in import volume growth, associated with a significant improvement in its current-account balance owing to sluggish domestic demand and a sharp depreciation of the dollar. In the light of the economic turmoil, for a large number of developing countries the outlook depended primarily on future trends in the prices of their primary commodity exports. Although several structural factors supported the expectation that prices would remain higher than they had been over the previous 20 years, cyclical factors, the end of speculation on higher prices and delayed supply responses could result in a weakening of some commodity prices.

Multilateral trading system

Report of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 62/184 [YUN 2007, p. 969], the Secretary-General submitted an August report [A/63/324] on international trade and development prepared in collaboration with UNCTAD. The report reviewed recent developments in international trade and the trading system, particularly negotiations under the World Trade Organization (WTO) Doha Round and their implications for developing countries. Attention was paid to the linkages of trade and the trading system with the achievement of internationally agreed development goals, particularly the MDGs, and to the emerging challenges of the global economy.

According to the report, robust output and export growth worldwide had marked recent years, driven by the growth in productive capacities in many parts of the developing world. However, global demand and supply shocks, on account of finance, fuel and food prices, had cast uncertainties over the world economy. Growth in 2008 was expected to be lower than in previous years, and the economic slowdown and emerging challenges could undermine the development and poverty alleviation prospects of developing countries and progress towards the MDGs. With increasing economic uncertainty, protectionist and anti-globalization sentiments had re-emerged and concerns over adjustment intensified. In 2007, world merchandise exports expanded by 14.4 per cent, to $13.8 trillion, and exports of services grew by 18.1 per cent, to $3.3 trillion. Developing countries' merchandise exports grew by 15.2 per cent and their share in merchandise exports increased from 37.3 to 37.5 per cent, while their share in exports of services remained unchanged at 25.4 per cent. Merchandise exports from LDCs grew by 21.2 per cent, increasing their world share from 0.85 to 0.91 per cent, while their share of world services trade remained constant at 0.5 per cent. The most dynamic growth in merchandise exports among developing regions was recorded in Asia (16.3 per cent), followed by Latin America (12 per cent) and Africa (10.7 per cent). China recorded the fastest export growth (25.7 per cent), while India's exports grew by 20.3 per cent and Brazil's by 16.6 per cent. South-South trade continued to accelerate, accounting for 46 per cent of total developing country exports, with Asia accounting for 85 per cent and Latin America and Africa for 10 and 5 per cent, respectively. Tariff protection continued to fall. Global most-favoured-nation tariffs averaged 9.4 per cent in 2007. From 2001 to 2007, average most-favoured-nation tariffs imposed by developed countries on low- and middle-income country exports had declined from 11.1 to 6.8 per cent for agriculture, from 4 to 3.4 per cent for industrial products and from 8.5 to 5.9 per cent for textiles and clothing. Relatively high tariffs and peaks, and tariff escalation, remained in developed countries on products exported by developing countries, including agricultural products and textiles and clothing. Globally, duty-free trade increased (34 per cent on average) in all regions over the previous decade, to about 40 per cent. The proportion of trade-related capacity-building in total official development assistance declined from 4.4 per cent in 2001 to 3.5 per cent in 2005, against the backdrop of insufficient progress towards the target of 0.7 per cent of gross national product by 2015, consistent with the Monterrey Consensus [YUN 2002, p. 953]. As to services, developing country exports remained relatively concentrated, as the top five exporters supplied half of all exports, while the top 15 exporters supplied 75 per cent. Asia accounted for three quarters of developing country exports. In 2007, the most dynamic exporter was Africa, with export growth of 19.8 per cent, followed by Asia (18.9 per cent) and Latin America (13 per cent). LDC's exports of services grew by 11.4 per cent. Labour mobility and migration contributed to fostering a trade, investment and development link between countries of origin and of destination. Over 200 million people lived and worked outside their country of origin, and global remittance flows, which reached $318 billion in 2007, were an important source of income and foreign exchange.

The Secretary-General concluded that, halfway to the 2015 target for achieving the MDGs, global economic realities; financial, food, fuel and energy crises; climate change; and migration posed challenges for developing countries. The international trading system could make an important contribution by addressing such challenges, although it alone could not solve the deep-rooted and multifaceted problems. The multilateral trading system remained the cornerstone of global trade governance; however, it should operate within a broader system of global economic governance, and greater coherence across different layers and systems of governance was needed at the national, regional and global levels. International trade continued to be a powerful engine of growth and development, but the majority of developing countries could not fully benefit from it, owing to insufficient productive supply capacities and competitiveness, lack of infrastructure, and enabling policy environment and market access and entry barriers on their exports. The UN system, including UNCTAD, continued to support developing countries, and Aid for Trade was a key component of such support. Ensuring their participation in the international trading system was a challenge that had to be addressed if globalization was to be a positive force for all with its benefits shared equitably. As underlined in the Accra Accord (see p. 1042), maximizing the benefits and minimizing the costs of international trade liberalization called for mutually supportive and coherent policies and governance at all levels. It was critical, in that regard, that the Doha Round be brought to a successful conclusion, and it was necessary to secure increased and effective market access and entry for developing country exports; implement fairer rules; strengthen the development orientation of North-South, South-South and regional trade and cooperation arrangements; mobilize the potential of the services trade and economy for development; and strengthen trade and productive capacity in developing countries.

UNCTAD XII action. In the Accra Accord [TD/442], adopted by UNCTAD XII (see p. 1042), under the sub-theme on key trade and development issues and the new realities in the geography of the world economy, UNCTAD member States stated that a challenge in the development of the multilateral trading system was to ensure that trade would be an engine of economic growth and sustainable development, as well as of poverty eradication. A well-functioning, universal, rules-based, open, non-discriminatory and equitable multilateral trading system could deliver major benefits for development. The Doha Round should contribute by facilitating the integration of developing countries, including LDCs and countries with economies in transition, into the international trading system, and its results should ensure fair, balanced, equitable and market-opening commitments among all members. If the opportunities arising from liberalization and integration were to be fully exploited, there should be an enabling environment that might include both national and regional competition policies and international cooperation to deal with anti-competitive practices, particularly those that affected trade and development of developing countries. The increased scope of anti-competitive practices, including abuse of dominance, might negate the benefits of trade and investment liberalization.

TDB action. In September [A/63/15 (Part IV)], at the high-level segment of its fifty-fifth session on trade and productive capacities for achieving internationally agreed development goals, including the MDGs, the Trade and Development Board (TDB) considered an UNCTAD secretariat report on the subject [TD/B/55/3], which reviewed progress at the midpoint of the achievement of the MDGs and specific policy mechanisms for strengthening the global partnership for development.

Participants stated that the global economic environment and development challenges gave cause for concern and, in that context, trade had an essential role to play. Enhanced market access for developing countries remained crucial, but each country needed the productive capacity to make use of it, and many developing countries would need corresponding assistance. The imbalance between assistance for social development and for the development of economic infrastructure and productive activities, including agriculture, also needed to be redressed. The development effectiveness of aid had to be improved. Policies that promoted economic growth were more likely to reach the objectives set out in the MDGs. Participants stressed that action was needed to integrate efforts within a broader economic development strategy; greater emphasis should be given to production, improvement of productivity and productive capacities in agriculture, manufacturing and services, and infrastructure development; and the global partnership for development should be strengthened. Action was also needed to reorient the role of the State to deliver development objectives; promote country ownership of national strategies; approach the food crisis as a long-term development failure and climate change and energy security problems as critical cross-cutting issues; pursue the conclusion of the Doha Round with a significant development package; implement Aid for Trade without delay, regardless of the outcome of the Doha Round; scale up ODA to meet the MDGs, in line with existing commitments; reverse the decline in ODA for the agriculture sector; introduce new policies and collaborative schemes in both home and recipient countries to harness the role of remittances, both as a potential form of productive investment and a source of income security, through cash transfer programmes or matching funds from the State; make use of the

Follow-up International Conference on Financing for Development to Review the Implementation of the Monterrey Consensus (see p. 1076); encourage donor countries to ensure that their domestic policies in trade, finance and technology were supportive of productive capacity-building in developing countries; and improve coordination among international organizations.

Negotiating frameworks

Resumption of Doha Round negotiations

As noted in the Secretary-General's report on international trade and development [A/63/324], in 2008, the Doha Round entered its seventh year and stood at a critical juncture, as negotiations were scheduled to conclude that year. Focus had been given to establishing full modalities for reducing commitments in agriculture and non-agricultural market access. Achieving progress in other areas of negotiations, such as services, the Agreement on Trade-Related Aspects of Intellectual Property Rights, rules and trade facilitation, had also been given importance to achieve an overall balance within a single undertaking. Following the issuance, in July 2007 [YUN 2007, p. 968], of the first draft modalities on agriculture and non-agricultural market access, revised texts on both subjects were issued in February, May and July 2008 as the basis for discussion. An informal WTO "mini-ministerial" meeting (21–30 July), with the participation of some 40 ministers and senior officials, convened to establish modalities on agriculture and non-agricultural market access, failed to achieve a breakthrough. The meeting was held to resolve key issues through intersectoral negotiations: the extent of reduction in agricultural tariffs and in the overall trade-distorting domestic support for agriculture in developed countries; flexibilities for developing countries in agricultural tariff reduction; and the extent of tariff cuts for industrial products in developing countries. Despite the progress made on many core issues, the small-group discussion among Australia, Brazil, China, India, Japan, the United States and the EU failed on the issue of the special safeguard mechanism in agriculture, and the collapse of the negotiations meant, among other things, that a more ambitious and expeditious reduction of cotton subsidies, sought by African countries, was not addressed by ministers. There was a perceived imbalance in the level of concessions sought from developing countries, particularly in light of the principles of special and differential treatment, including on the proposed extent of industrial tariff cuts by developing countries and of farm subsidy-reductions by developed countries. The failure to set the basis for the concluding stage of the negotiations made it impossible for the Round to be concluded by the end of 2008, and more difficult to resuscitate in 2009. Another complicating factor was the lack of trade promotion authority for the United States Administration. Its renewal was regarded as essential for that country's engagement in the negotiations. There was concern that the Round might be put on hold for some time, possibly two years, while more and more calls were made to resume the negotiations at the earliest date possible. Intensive consultations were under way, including by the WTO Director-General, to determine ways forward and make possible a resumption of negotiations.

The Secretary-General stressed that the delayed conclusion of the Round could lead to greater recourse to trade litigation and the intensification of bilateral and regional trade agreements, which risked further fragmentation of the international trading system. Efforts should be made to re-engage in the negotiations and deliver the development promise of the Round. Careful reflection might be warranted on the definition of the negotiating agenda, as well as on ways in which the multilateral trading system managed a complex, broad-based agenda of negotiations under a single undertaking in an inclusive and transparent manner. The emergence of the dynamic South also called for an adaptation of mindsets, policies and approaches in the trading system. The promise of the Doha development agenda required that development objectives and aspirations would be given greater prominence and that the specific situations and concerns of a diverse membership would receive adequate systemic responses and considerations. The principle of special and differential treatment was essential in all aspects of market access and rule-making negotiations. On the other hand, it had become increasingly challenging to balance the diverse and sometimes mutually competing interests of members, including within developed and developing countries, and such augmentation of diversity added further complexity to the overall calculation of balance.

UNCTAD consideration. TDB, at its fifty-fifth session (Geneva, 15–26 September) [A/63/15 (Part IV)], considered an UNCTAD secretariat report on the evolution of the international trading system and of international trade from a development perspective [TD/B/55/4] that reviewed developments in the international trading system of particular relevance to developing countries, especially developments in the post-Doha work programme, as well as various bilateral and regional initiatives, and coherence between those trade agendas in light of recent trends in international trade. Particular attention was placed on the linkages of trade and trade negotiations with the achievement of the MDGs and with the global food crisis.

The report concluded that the world economy and the international trading system stood at a critical stage for developing countries' trade and development and for the achievement of internationally agreed development goals. Halfway to the 2015 goal of achieving the MDGs, current global economic realities, looming economic slowdown, food and financial crises, and high energy and commodity prices, climate change and migration posed challenges to development prospects of developing countries, as well as to the international trading system. The emergence of the dynamic South within the new geography of trade called for an adaptation of the international trading system to reflect the evolving realities. Bilateral free trade agreements and regional trade agreements continued to proliferate, which risked fragmenting the international trading system. While regional trade agreements could generate gains, they also entailed inherent systemic implications. Despite their contributions, trade agreements alone could not respond to deep-rooted, far-reaching global challenges, and both trade policy and the trading system should operate within a broader system of global economic governance. Greater coherence across different layers and systems of governance at all levels, encompassing development, trade, investment, finance, monetary policy and technology, was essential, and innovative national, regional and global cooperative mechanisms should be explored, particularly in energy and food security. Careful reflection might be warranted on the ways in which the multilateral trading system operated. With WTO membership reaching 153 countries, agreement should take into account their diverse interests and priorities. The widening diversity of membership added further complexity in the calculation of balance in the negotiations, and it would also be necessary to ensure greater inclusiveness and transparency in a bottom-up and member-driven approach to the negotiations.

The TDB President's summary of the deliberations stated that participants regretted the failure of the WTO meeting in July (see p. 1050) to set the basis for concluding the Doha Round in 2008. The collapse was partly attributed to disagreement over the issue of special safeguard mechanisms; however, many other issues remained unresolved. Participants agreed that the setback should not be allowed to derail the entire Doha Round or weaken the multilateral trading system, and recognized that the trading system had to adapt itself better to the structural changes occurring in economies, including the prominence of developing countries emerging as the "new South" and their growing divergence. The trading system also faced the challenge of managing an ever-enlarging diverse and complex trade agenda, while many development-related issues remained unaddressed. Complexities created by proliferating regional and bilateral agreements were a matter of concern, and the importance of improving multilateral oversight and improved transparency was stressed.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Trade Policy*Trade in goods and services, and commodities

The Commission on Trade in Goods and Services, and Commodities, at its twelfth session (Geneva, 7–8 February) [TD/B/COM.1/92], had before it the following documentation: a progress report on the implementation of the agreed conclusions and recommendations of the Commission since UNCTAD XI [TD/B/COM.1/91]; a secretariat background note on globali-zation's contribution to development: trade perspective and UNCTAD's contribution [TD/B/COM.1/90]; and reports of the expert meetings on the participation of developing countries in new and dynamic sectors of world trade: the South-South dimension [YUN 2007, p. 973], and on trade and development implications of financial services and commodity exchanges [ibid.].

The Commission's report contained the Chairman's summary on globalization's contribution to development: trade perspective and UNCTAD's contribution. Participants commended the secretariat for providing a balanced picture of the challenges and opportunities in addressing key emerging trade and development issues, with a view to promoting the achievement of internationally agreed development goals, and noted that issues regarding terms of trade and LDCs' participation in trade and investment required further treatment. It was suggested that UNCTAD research should identify policies conducive to enhancing the effects of both trade-driven and investment-driven globalization, especially in the case of LDCs; and identify the enabling policy environment, regulations and institutions that could help maximize the contribution of international trade to development. Developing countries should sensitize themselves to the importance of regional integration agreements as stepping stones to global integration, especially South-South trade partnerships, and UNCTAD should help them in analysing and identifying possible avenues for South-South trade partnership and dialogue between the dynamic and the less dynamic economies. UNCTAD should also promote and strengthen regional and interregional trade and economic cooperation and integration among developing countries. Particular attention should be given to enhancing the Global System of Trade Preferences among Developing Countries for greater South-South development cooperation, and UNCTAD should prioritize its support for implementation of the Aid for Trade initiative, strengthen its research and analysis work for monitoring economic and policy trends in international trade, and provide early warning and prognosis regarding their impact on development.

As to UNCTAD's contribution to maximizing gains and minimizing costs from trade-driven globalization, participants noted that trade-led globalization had brought about development gains, of which some developing countries were major beneficiaries, but financial instability and commodity and preference dependence had led to the exclusion of the poorest from global trade. That dual and contrasting experience with globalization remained a challenge that UNCTAD should address in building an enabling environment for trade and development. Regarding the challenges of multilateral and other trade negotiations, participants requested UNCTAD to ensure that the development gains from the Doha Round of trade negotiations and regional integration processes were maximized; strengthen its support to developing countries; conduct independent analyses to assist them in trade negotiations; and provide negotiating options for promoting their trade and wider development goals.

With regard to commodities, participants recognized that transforming the commodity sector in developing countries into a dynamic development engine, in the context of high commodity prices and revenues, was a critical challenge, and urged UNCTAD to provide new ideas in that regard. A realistic agenda for commodity trade and development was required: its elements could be found in the UNCTAD XII pre-events on the Global Initiative on Commodities (see p. 1046), the event on hydrocarbon cooperation between India and Africa, the UNCTAD Secretary-General's high-level panel discussion on commodities (ibid.) and the 2005 Arusha Declaration on Commodities adopted by the African Union. In the area of the Aid for Trade initiative, participants highlighted that the UNCTAD XII pre-event on "Aid for trade and development: towards a new global solidarity initiative" (Bangkok, Thailand, 24–25 January) had provided an important forum for discussing the UN role in contributing to its implementation. While services development was the new frontier for trade growth, many developing countries did not have the capacities to play an active role in it, and the initiative should support their national and regional strategies for exploiting the services economy. As to the challenges of emerging trade and development issues, participants recommended that UNCTAD should continue to assist developing countries in addressing them in the global development agenda; strengthen the provision of expert analysis and technical assistance focused on the challenges and opportunities presented by globalization for weak and vulnerable developing countries; and expand in-depth analysis of how the international trading system could contribute to an equitable distribution of the benefits of globalization among countries, while providing them with opportunities to diversify their economies.

The Commission discussed the reports of the two expert meetings and the progress report on the implementation of the agreed conclusions and recommendations of the Commission since UNCTAD XI, and concluded that the integration of developing countries into the global economy through trade was essential and that UNCTAD could make a difference in helping developing countries, especially LDCs and small and vulnerable economies, as well as countries with economies in transition, meet the challenges facing them and take advantage of emerging opportunities. In that connection, there was a need for cooperation in creating an enabling and complementary environment.

At its twenty-fourth special session (Geneva, 17–20 March) [A/63/15 (Part II)], TDB took note of the Commission's report.

At its forty-fourth executive session (Geneva, 10 July) [A/63/15 (Part III)], TDB approved the agenda for the first session of the Trade and Development Commission, which was to succeed the Commission on Trade in Goods and Services, and Commodities.

Interdependence and global economic issues

TDB, in September [A/63/15 (Part IV)], considered interdependence: mobilizing resources for development—commodity prices, productive capacity, supply and distribution. The Board welcomed the Trade and Development Report, 2008 [Sales No. E.08.II.D.21] and its focus on the mobilization of resources for development. Concern was expressed about the deterioration of the global economic situation due to the financial crisis in the United States and its possible repercussions for other countries, especially developing countries, as well as the increasing risk that the slowdown in developed countries would be transmitted to developing countries. As for policies to respond to the crisis, it was agreed that public assistance should not be free of charge and regulation of financial markets should be increased to prevent the recurrence of financial crises. Market discipline was not sufficient, and the State should be more proactive in monitoring financial markets and preventing financial crises. Global macroeconomic coordination implied that surplus countries, particularly in the EU, should adopt policies to counter the recessionary trends and expand demand, and should include coordination of exchange rate policies. Delegations acknowledged the relevance of regional cooperation for development in other areas, such as trade and infrastructure development, as well as addressing the global food crisis.

They also agreed on the importance of commodities for development in developing countries and the need for a multifaceted approach. Price increases had benefited many commodity-producing developing countries, with corresponding improvements in their terms of trade and current-account balances. However, many other developing countries were facing the challenge of increasing food and energy prices, particularly in Africa. The surge in commodity prices did not translate into increased revenues in commodity-exporting developing countries, but was often absorbed by an increase in transnational corporations' profits. Delegations agreed on the pertinence of the Trade and Development Report, 2008 recommendation regarding the improvement and creation of mechanisms to tackle commodity price volatility, as well as limiting excessive speculation in commodity markets. The solution to commodity dependence in developing countries would come through diversification and industrialization, which would require increasing investment in productive capacities. The food crisis and its social consequences were a challenge for developing countries, particularly low-income countries. The solution should be global, helping developing countries to enhance food production capacity, and the needs of small farmers should be addressed with a focus on sustainable agricultural production. Measures to restrict trade in food products should be avoided and agricultural subsidies in developed countries eliminated. ODA should be increased to address both emergency needs and long-term agricultural production constraints.

Delegations supported the call made in the Report to increase ODA to developing countries and target it to growth-related activities. They emphasized the relevance of the Accra Accord (see p. 1042) mandate, welcomed UNCTAD's initial steps to implement it and emphasized the need to strengthen UNCTAD's integrated and holistic approach to development. UNCTAD should continue its independent research and analysis, foster greater coherence among the multilateral trading, financial and monetary systems and continue providing policy advice to developing countries to help them address the challenges and opportunities posed by globalization and interdependence.

Development strategies in a globalized world

In September [A/63/15 (Part IV)], TDB considered development strategies in a globalized world: financial policies and productive investment related to trade and development. It had before it the Trade and Development Report, 2008. The discussion highlighted that since 2000, developing countries as a group had been net exporters of capital. The increase in capital exports, which was the counterpart to a substantial improvement of current-account balances, was attributed to an increase in commodity prices. That was benefiting commodity-exporting economies, and marked a reorientation of macroeconomic policies in many emerging economies to maintain competitive exchange rates and avoid real currency overvaluation. It was suggested that the reorientation was largely the result of financial crises that had struck many developing countries during the previous decade. Countries with net capital exports were also those with higher rates of investment and growth. That fact challenged orthodox economic theories, which maintained that capital should flow from rich to poor countries, where marginal returns were higher, and that poor countries depended on foreign capital to finance higher investments.

In most developing countries, stock markets accounted for a very small portion of investment financing, and the weakness of the banking sector was a major concern. Financial sector reforms had rarely delivered on their promises and had not contributed to lasting improvements in investment financing. Lending rates remained high and bank credit was extended primarily to the public sector and for private consumption. Many delegations saw a role for Governments and central banks in directing credit to private sector investment through instruments such as development banks, public ownership of commercial banks and public credit guarantees. The fact that in many developing countries the largest part of the economy lacked access to banking services was another major problem. It was suggested that, although microfinance institutions played an important role in some countries, they were no substitute for a functioning commercial banking sector as they provided credit in relatively small volumes at high interest rates and for short durations, and it was important to link informal financing schemes with formal ones.

While the increase in ODA since 2002 was welcomed, it was pointed out that most donors were not on track to meet their pledges; that a large part of that increase was due to debt relief, and not fully additional as stipulated in the Monterrey Consensus; and that many developing countries could require further debt relief. Delegations took note of two shifts in aid: measured as a share of total ODA, development-oriented aid had decreased relative to emergency-related aid, and the share of economic aid had decreased relative to social aid. While ODA for social sectors was considered important for progress towards the MDGs, additional ODA should flow into projects related to economic infrastructure and production. Meeting the MDGs still required raising the annual flows of ODA to poor nations. Additional resources were needed to finance investment in infrastructure and production, and national and international support for facilitating workers' remittances could also foster investment finance. It was also suggested that the current financial crisis should lead to a paradigm shift in economic theory and policy, as it had highlighted the inherent risks associated with liberated and unregulated financial markets, and pointed to the need for a strengthened role for the State in supervising and regulating financial activities. Governments should be more active, intervening before bailouts of financial firms became necessary. However, if such bailouts were inevitable, they should not be free of charge, and the financial institutions saved from bankruptcy should be regulated more closely to prevent the recurrence of financial crises. In order to prevent destabilizing financial speculation, prolonged exchange-rate misalignments and unsustainable economic imbalance, several delegations saw a need for international action to strengthen supervision and regulation of financial markets. A framework for timely and orderly exchange-rate adjustments and an effective mechanism for international coordination of macroeconomic policies were considered desirable. Avoiding a recession would require surplus economies to increase domestic demand to compensate for declining demand by the United States, and it was necessary to prevent a competitive devaluation of exchange rates in response to a falling dollar.

Trade promotion and facilitation

In 2008, UN bodies continued to assist developing countries and transition economies in promoting their exports and facilitating their integration into the multilateral trading system. The main originator of technical cooperation projects in that area was the International Trade Centre, under the joint sponsorship of UNCTAD and WTO.

International Trade Centre

According to its Annual Report 2008 [ITC/AG(XLIII)/226], the UNCTAD/WTO International Trade Centre (ITC) delivery of technical assistance stood at $29.4 million during the year. The largest portion of programme funds was spent in Africa (36 per cent), followed by Asia and the Pacific (24 per cent), Latin America and the Caribbean (10 per cent), Europe and the CIS (7 per cent) and the Arab States (3 per cent). The rest (20 per cent) went to global programmes. The share of assistance to LDCs rose to 43 per cent.

ITC devoted an increased share of its activities to LDCs, landlocked developing countries and small island developing States, moving closer (43 per cent) to its target of 50 per cent of technical cooperation for those groups of countries. It also devoted a larger share of its expenditure to enhancing its tools and to a significant investment for improving a selected number of those tools and its products. The research and development investment covered the enhancement of global goods, taking into account non-tariff measures, assessing trade for sustainable development, developing a benchmarking scheme for trade support institutions to improve their effectiveness, developing marketing and branding as part of enterprise competitiveness, and expanding the ITC range of business environment tools for legal, finance and facilitation services. ITC launched a Modular Learning Programme to address the main features of the international trading system as they impacted on business. Its assistance in that area was designed to respond to the specific needs of the private sector in African, Caribbean and Pacific countries to enable them to engage in negotiations on Economic Partnership Agreements with the European Commission. ITC produced a Business Guide to help identify business opportunities in specific sectors targeted for export development, and launched two regional programmes: the Programme for African Capacity Building, funded by Canada, and the Supply Chain and Logistic Programme for Selected Southern African Development Community Countries, funded by the Belgium-Flemish Government. Those programmes, aimed at enhancing regional integration through trade capacity-building assistance and, based on the premise of the commonality of needs that could be addressed at subregional or regional levels, emphasized the strengthening of regional institutions.

Throughout 2008, ITC corporate development was characterized by major change, founded on rigorous review and a focus on export impact for goods. ITC began the year with a new organizational structure and a new Strategic Framework for 2008–2009, which emphasized the context for ITC and its support for the three key client groupings through its mission and three objectives: strengthening the international competitiveness of enterprises through its training and support; increasing the capacity of trade support institutions to support businesses; and strengthening the integration of business into the global economy through enhanced support to policymakers. ITC adopted a new evaluation policy as part of its enhanced performance management and, through the creation of five business lines, refocused its approach to trade-related technical assistance. Those changes came together with the completion of the 2009–2012 Strategic Plan.

Joint Advisory Group

UNCTAD consideration. At its fifty-fifth session (Geneva, 15–26 September) [A/63/15 (Part IV)], TDB considered the report of the ITC Joint Advisory Group (JAG) on its forty-first session [YUN 2007, p. 977]. TDB felt that more consideration should be given to JAG substantive work, because the reform of ITC governance was at a standstill. In addition, there was an impression that ITC was ignoring work done at the country and regional levels, it was duplicating UNCTAD work and not paying enough attention to the ITC work. To address those problems, it was suggested that UNCTAD's coordinating role with ITC be strengthened, including measures for UNCTAD to provide input into ITC without duplicating its work, as provided for in the Accra Accord (see p. 1042). It was also noted that ITC did not have a specific division devoted to LDCs.

ITC representatives acknowledged those criticisms and expressed their commitment to more transparency and to formalize the informal consultations between ITC and member States. Acknowledging that there was no division on LDCs, they said that several cross-cutting units were working on LDC issues, and stressed their intention to spend 50 per cent of the organization's resources on LDCs. Representatives also promised to include TDB comments in the next JAG report.

On 23 September, TDB took note of the JAG report on its forty-first session.

JAG action. JAG, at its forty-second session (Geneva, 10–11 December) [ITC/AG(XLII)/225], considered the reports on ITC 2007 [YUN 2007, p. 975] and 2008 (see p. 1055) activities, the 2009 consolidated programme document: trade for the MDGs, the 2009–2012 Strategic Plan and the ITC Strategic Framework, and proposals for ITC governance. Statements were made by the UNCTAD Secretary-General, the WTO Director-General and the ITC Executive Director. JAG decided that the annual reports should be more objective and analytical, contain lessons learned and show more clearly how ITC activities contributed to its programme objectives. ITC should increase its work at the regional level, both in terms of regional programmes as well as supporting increased intraregional trade. Its work should be tailored to levels of country development. With respect to middle-income countries, more efforts should be applied to the diversification of export structures and development of production with a higher value added, including innovative products. ITC should take advantage of collaborative arrangements when promoting cooperation and trade development, and develop strategies to guide its trade-related technical assistance, taking into account the financial, energy, food and economic crises in order to support beneficiary countries. Greater priority should be given to trade finance. ITC should also give priority to the MDGs and should work closely with UNCTAD on joint programming, including work on trade and the environment, and with WTO in relation to accession countries, with an emphasis on drawing the business sector into the process.

Pledges of trust fund contributions to ITC were announced by China, Denmark, Finland, Germany, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Sweden and the United Kingdom.

ITC administrative arrangements

JAG endorsed the consolidated programme document and decided that ITC should: prioritize projects therein according to the criteria set out in its Strategic Plan; provide for transparency in the development of projects and distribution of funds; invest more efforts to develop in-house expertise in some industrial and service sectors for some countries; and achieve a balance in its programming among the five regions and between the lower and middle-income countries within each region. JAG also endorsed the ITC

Strategic Plan 2009–2012 and the revised Strategic Framework as a basis for the ITC 2010–2011 budget submissions. In response to the decision taken at its forty-first session [YUN 2007, p. 977] on proposals for ITC governance, it discussed two options proposed by informal meetings of interested delegations (June and September) for the composition of an ITC Advisory Board: a Board comprising the ITC Executive Director, one representative each from UNCTAD and WTO, and 20 developing country members (four representatives from each region), as well as 7–20 donor country members. No consensus was reached on a preferred option. JAG decided that the Consultative Committee remained the oversight body for voluntary contributions to the ITC Trust Fund, while JAG remained its policymaking organ.

The General Assembly, in resolution 63/264A of 24 December (see p. 1543), approved revised appropriations for ITC in the amount of $30,873,700.

Enterprise, business facilitation and development

The Commission on Enterprise, Business Facilitation and Development, at its twelfth session (Geneva, 4–5 February) [TD/B/COM.3/86 & Corr.1], considered trade logistics and global value chains [TD/B/COM.3/84]; reports of expert meetings on regional cooperation in transit transport: solutions for landlocked and transit developing countries, and on increasing the participation of developing countries' small and medium-sized enterprises (SMEs) in global value chains [YUN 2007, p. 978]; and a progress report on the implementation of agreed conclusions and recommendations of the Commission at its eleventh session, including assessment of the work of the Commission since UNCTAD XI [TD/B/COM.3/85]. The Commission agreed that the agenda for its next session would be examined after UNCTAD XII (see p. 1041) and that no agreed recommendations would be adopted in view of the Conference. The final report would contain the Chair's summary, as well as an account of procedural matters, and would be submitted to TDB.

The Chairman, in a summary of the deliberations, noted that the Commission's twelfth session offered an opportunity to take stock of progress made over the previous four years and to consider key issues in view of the upcoming UNCTAD XII. The statements emphasized that consideration should be given to the conditions of SMEs in developing countries, and in particular to their specific requirements in LDCs. In that respect, attention was drawn to the need to enhance private-sector participation to improve infrastructure and productive capacities; promote SME development through business linkages and skills upgrading programmes; and adopt multilateral approaches in trade facilitation.

TDB, at its twenty-fourth special session (Geneva, 17–20 March) [A/63/15 (Part II)], took note of the Commission's report.

TDB, at its forty-fourth executive session (Geneva, 10 July) [A/63/15 (Part III)], approved the agenda for the first session of the Investment, Enterprise and Development Commission, which was to succeed the Commission on Enterprise, Business Facilitation and Development (see p. 1045).

Commodities

The UNCTAD/DESA report World Economic Situation and Prospects 2009 [Sales No. E.09.II.C.2] stated that prices of oil and non-oil primary commodities showed strong fluctuations during 2008, largely driven by financial factors as well as shifts in the balance between supply and demand. The prices of most commodities rose sharply in the first half of 2008, continuing a multi-year upward trend that began in 2003. Food prices, especially the price of rice, surged the most in early 2008, leading to a food crisis in some 40 developing countries (see p. 1343). Oil prices also soared by about 50 per cent. While some commodity-specific factors on either the supply or demand side could explain part of that surge, a common factor was the relocation of funds by investors towards commodity markets, along with the declining value of other financial assets. However, those trends reversed sharply in mid-2008. In November, oil prices plummeted by more than 60 per cent from their peak levels of July, and the UNCTAD commodity price index lost 11.5 per cent in dollar terms between June and September. That trend held for all commodity groups, although specific commodities or groups were more affected than others. The change in trends could be partially explained by high price incentives and favourable weather conditions that contributed to increased planting and harvesting of cereals. World production of wheat, maize and rice was expected to exceed demand and contribute to a partial replenishment of stocks. In addition, the appreciation of the United States dollar might also explain part of the price decline in nominal terms. While the replenishment of stocks and lower prices was a welcome turn of events for consumers, the sharp rise in price volatility during the year hurt both consumers and producers.

The tropical beverage price index, which had increased steadily until mid-2008, declined thereafter. In real terms, price levels would remain below the pre-crisis level in the immediate outlook. The vegetable oils and oilseeds price index rose by almost 174 per cent between January 2006 and June 2008, partly owing to the indirect effect of increased production of biofuels, which competed for agricultural inputs and capital utilization. However, prices fell by 30 per cent between June and September 2008, along with falling prices of fossil fuels and most basic grains. Developments in agricultural raw material prices were dominated by price increases for cotton. With a price average of $75.8 per pound over the first six months of 2008, the Cotlook 'A' index increased by 30 per cent, compared with its level in January 2006. Nominal prices surged to levels not recorded since 1997. Between June and September 2008, however, cotton prices fell by 4.5 per cent, following the trend in other commodity prices, albeit less dramatically. The price of natural rubber rose by 73 per cent from January 2006 to June 2008, mainly influenced by rising petroleum prices, which drove the price of synthetic rubber. Declining oil prices pushed down the prices of natural and synthetic rubber by 10 per cent between June and September. The prices of most minerals, ores and metals increased during the commodity price boom, although they peaked at different times. The prospect of a worldwide recession depressed prices in the second half of 2008 as projections for demand fell well short of current capacity. The situation with regard to gold was different, as prices remained at very high levels—about $800 per ounce—owing in part to its use as a safe storage of wealth in times of economic and currency turmoil. China became the largest gold-producing country in 2007, with a total production of 276 tons, outstripping South Africa's 272 tons.

Oil prices were volatile throughout 2008, until the global commodity boom came to an end in the summer. The price of Brent crude, which stood at $100 per barrel (pb) in early January, rose to an all-time high of $145 pb in July, before dropping sharply to $60 pb in November. As was the case with other commodities, the surge in oil prices during the first half of 2008 reflected both a tight balance between supply and demand and increased speculation and herding behaviour. In October, international crude oil prices registered their biggest monthly drop ever as expectations mounted that a severe global economic downturn would sharply reduce demand for oil in 2009. Prices continued to slide even when the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries decided to lower production considerably in late October and announced further cuts in subsequent months. Despite the steep decline in the second half of 2008, the price of Brent crude averaged $101 pb for the year as a whole, almost 40 per cent above the average annual price of $72.5 pb in 2007.

UNCTAD action. In the Accra Accord [TD/442] (see p. 1042), the role and mandate of UNCTAD on commodities issues were reconfirmed. The Accord stipulated that UNCTAD should continue to play a key role, with other international and regional actors and international commodity bodies, addressing the trade and development problems associated with the commodity economy, giving due attention to all commodity sectors such as agriculture, forestry, fisheries, metals and minerals and oil and gas; monitor developments and challenges in commodity markets and address links between international commodity trade and national development, particularly with regard to poverty reduction; and enhance efforts, under the three pillars of its work (research and analysis, technical cooperation and consensus-building), to help commodity-dependent developing countries harness development gains from the boom in commodity prices, as well as to deal with trade and development problems related to commodity dependence.

In that context, the Accord provided that UNCTAD should help commodity-dependent developing countries, particularly small commodity producers: develop national commodity strategies, including mainstream policies into their national and regional development strategies; build supply-side capacity and attain competitiveness; move up value chains and diversify commodity sectors; comply with international trade standards; access commodity information and databases; and take advantage of export opportunities for commodities in emerging markets. Further, UNCTAD should assist developing countries in building human and institutional capacities and in promoting and improving transparency and accountability in the public, private and corporate sectors; establishing effective marketing systems and supporting frameworks for small commodity producers; and developing commodity financing and risk management schemes. It should also promote intergovernmental cooperation in commodities and consensus-building on ways to integrate commodity policies into national, regional and international development and poverty reduction strategies; promote trade-related policies and instruments for resolving commodity problems, as well as investment and financial policies for accessing financial resources for commodity-based development; and contribute to building multi-stakeholder partnerships with a view to identifying innovative approaches to commodity-related problems. The Accord also mandated TDB to establish a multi-year expert meeting on commodities to provide practical options and actionable outcomes, and provided for a strengthening of secretariat arrangements in support of the implementation of the Accra mandate on commodities.

Report of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 61/190 [YUN 2006, p. 1122], the Secretary-General submitted, in August [A/63/267], an UNCTAD secretariat report on world commodity trends and prospects that examined commodity market developments and their impact on developing countries; continuing realities, emerging issues and long-term trade prospects of the global commodity economy; and developments contributing to the implementation of resolution 61/190. According to the report, the broad-based rise in commodity prices since 2002 had accelerated over the previous 18 months in all major commodity groups. While those increases improved the prospects for growth and development of the commodity-producing countries, soaring fuel and food prices were raising concern about the implications for global economic growth and poverty reduction. Following the steep decline from 1995–1997 to 2002, international commodity prices had been on a sustained upward trend since 2002. The UNCTAD price index for non-fuel commodities reached its highest level in current dollars since 1960, rising 110 per cent between 2002 and 2007, and 71 per cent in the first six months of 2008 compared to 2007. The broad-based rise in prices was led by the boom in metal and mineral prices, which had increased by 226 per cent since 2002. There had also been a sharp rise in the price of oil, from a 2002 average monthly level of $25 pb to an average of $108 pb in the first half of 2008. Among agricultural commodities, there had been notable price increases over the period from 2002 to 2007 for agricultural raw materials: mainly rubber, with a price rise of 199 per cent, and tropical logs and cotton, with an increase of 64 and 37 per cent, respectively.

The driving forces behind the boom in commodity prices were a combination of strong global demand, owing to brisk economic growth worldwide, particularly in Asia, led by China, and a slow supply response, together with low inventories for a number of commodities, particularly oil, minerals and metals and grains. Commodity prices were also influenced by speculation, fed by high liquidity in international financial markets and relatively low interest rates, seeking higher returns in comparison to equity and debt securities. The increase in dollar-denominated commodity prices was also partly explained by the depreciation of the dollar vis-à-vis other major currencies. Another major factor in the rise in demand for and prices of some agricultural commodities, particularly maize and oilseeds, was the expansion in the demand for biofuels. Trade in commodities was of vital importance to both exporting and importing countries. A large number of developing countries depended on primary commodity exports, which were critical to employment and income levels, and a major source of Government revenues, accounting for a large share of their resources to be used for financing development. On the other hand, importing countries needed predictable and affordable access to supplies of raw materials in order to maintain and fuel industrial growth and satisfy consumption demands. Other concerns, particularly food and energy security, were also important to both importing and exporting countries. The recent turmoil in commodity markets had underlined the shared interest of all countries in ensuring that commodity markets did not become a source of global macroeconomic instability and social and political upheaval. Despite the progress made in narrowing differences in the Doha Round over the previous 18 months, WTO members had not reached agreement to move the agricultural reform agenda forward. Meanwhile, the existence of high agricultural prices undercut the rationale for large farm subsidies and protection.

The report concluded that the commodity boom had improved the situation of primary commodities in world trade and revived the potential role of commodity trade in contributing to sustained economic growth and poverty reduction in the globalized economy. However, key realities of the commodity economy remained, including high price volatility, declining long-term trends in some commodity prices and incomes in real terms, limited development gains from the production and trade of primary commodities for many developing countries (especially low-income countries) and continued difficulties in diversification. Several emerging issues had a bearing on the extent to which stronger demand and higher prices for commodities would translate into sustainable growth and development and poverty reduction. Those included the distribution of the gains from higher prices between foreign investors and host countries in the extractive industries, the preservation of a competitive environment in commodity supply chains, and energy and food security. The comprehensive framework for action released in July by the High-level Task Force on the Global Food Security Crisis—composed of UN specialized agencies, funds and programmes, the Bretton Woods institutions (the World Bank Group and the International Monetary Fund) and relevant UN Secretariat entities, chaired by the Secretary-General—provided a plan of action for addressing the global food crisis, with a focus on immediate measures to boost global food and nutrition security. The Accra Accord provided an effective framework for dealing with the other commodity issues reviewed in the report. The General Assembly might wish to monitor progress in the implementation of actions in each of those frameworks.

Communication. On 17 September [A/C.2/63/4], the Dominican Republic transmitted to the President of the General Assembly the Declaration adopted at the First Workshop-Conference on Energy and Development (Santo Domingo, Dominican Republic, 30 August), with the theme “Oil speculation”. The Conference brought together journalists, economists and energy experts from the Dominican Republic, the United States and a number of Latin American and Caribbean countries to communicate the increasing urgency and complexity of speculation and price manipulation in the international commodities markets, particularly oil and its derivatives. The Conference placed particular emphasis on their impact on increasing prices of energy and food commodities and the achievement of the MDGs.

As at 31 December 2008, the Agreement had 114 parties. The Andean Community became party during the year.

Finance

Financial policy

The World Economic and Social Survey 2008 [Sales No. E.08.II.C.1] stated that the pro-cyclical behaviour of finance and the vulnerability of countries to external shocks had resulted in economic insecurity, which was further aggravated by the absence of a social contract that provided minimum protection to citizens against unanticipated income loss. The problem was particularly serious in many developing countries, in view of their limited capacity to pursue effective counter-cyclical macroeconomic policies. Extreme poverty was the most damaging expression of economic insecurity. Economic growth in recent years had, in many cases, failed to generate greater economic security and rising incomes for the poor, and even countries that had been growing faster and showed more stability were not able to translate growth into poverty reduction. Such an outcome reflected, in part, the links among growth, investment and labour-market performance in the new economic environment. Concerns about the instability of employment, low pay and lack of protection appeared among the top preoccupations in all countries. For economic growth to be inclusive in the sense of reducing vulnerability, macroeconomic policies should place employment and economic security at the centre of the policy agenda and should be embedded in a broader development strategy, as was the case in the fast-growing East Asian economies. Fiscal policies would give priority to development spending, including investment in education, health and infrastructure. As with the East Asian experience, monetary policy would be coordinated with financial sector and industrial policies, including directed and subsidized credit schemes and managed interest rates, so as to directly influence investment and savings. The right mix of those policies could be applied deliberately so as to promote investment in specific industries at specific times, but it should be especially promoted in sectors with the greatest potential for upgrading skills, reaping economies of scale and raising productivity growth, thereby increasing the rates of return on investment. Governments could enhance the scope for counter-cyclical policies by improving the institutional framework for macroeconomic policymaking. Setting fiscal targets that were independent of short-term fluctuations in economic growth, as well as commodity stabilization funds, could be effective in forcing a counter-cyclical policy stance. In developing countries with open capital accounts, where conducting counter-cyclical monetary policies had become increasingly difficult, there was a need to consider measures to control and regulate international capital flows, as well as the operations of the domestic financial sector. Countries should avoid pro-cyclical biases in fiscal policy through the establishment of broad fiscal rules that guaranteed the long-term sustainability of fiscal balances, including targets for the budget deficit and limits to public indebtedness. The establishment of stabilization funds could also help smooth out fiscal revenues, especially in countries where commodity prices had a large impact on the economy and the fiscal balance.

The World Economic Situation and Prospects 2009 [Sales No. E.09.II.C.2], jointly issued by UNCTAD and the UN Department of Economic and Social Affairs (DESA), stated that, coming on the heels of the food and energy security crises, the global financial crisis would most likely set back progress towards poverty reduction and the achievement of the MDGs. The tightening of access to credit and weaker growth would cut into public revenues and limit the ability of developing countries to make the necessary investments to meet education, health and other human development goals. Unless adequate social safety nets were in place, the poor would be hit the hardest. Policymakers worldwide initially underestimated the depth and breadth of the financial crisis. As a result, policy actions fell behind the curve and, in the early stages, policy stances were inadequate for handling the scale and nature of the crisis. Only after the systemic risks for the global financial system became manifest in September 2008 did six major central banks decide to move in a more coordinated fashion by agreeing to cut their respective official target rates simultaneously and increase direct liquidity injections into financial markets. Further monetary easing was expected in the world economy in 2009. However, with consumer and business confidence seriously depressed and banks reluctant to lend, further lowering of interest rates by central banks would do little to stimulate credit supplies to the non-financial sector or to encourage private spending.

Restoring confidence in financial markets in order to normalize credit flows remained of primary importance. Hence, counter-cyclical macroeconomic policies were needed to complement efforts to rescue the financial sector from widespread systemic failure. With limited space for monetary stimulus, fiscal policy options would need to be examined as ways of reactivating the global economy. The severity of the financial crisis called for policy actions that were commensurate with the scale of the problem and should go beyond any normal range of budgetary considerations. The United States fiscal stimulus package adopted in early 2008 had failed to sustain the economy, and at the end of the year, a second, more substantial package was under discussion. Similarly, European countries were easing monetary policies and preparing for significant fiscal expansion in 2009. A large number of developing countries and economies in transition were reluctant to ease monetary policy over concerns of inflationary pressures and currency depreciation. The scope for counter-cyclical policies would vary greatly across developing countries, mainly for two reasons. First, many countries had a history of pro-cyclical macroeconomic policy adjustment, partly driven by policy rules (such as inflation targeting), and providing greater monetary and fiscal stimuli in such cases would require a departure from existing policy practice and rules. Second, not all countries had sufficient foreign exchange reserves, and some were likely to suffer strong balance-of-payments shocks. There were countries with ample policy space for acting more aggressively to stave off a recession. China had already started to use its policy space, for instance, and had designed a large-scale plan of fiscal stimulus, amounting to 15 per cent of its gross domestic product, to be spent during 2009 and 2010, which was expected to contribute to reinvigorating global demand. For many of the middle- and low-income countries, the scope for providing such stimuli would be even more limited, as they might see their foreign-exchange reserves evaporate quickly, with either continued capital reversals taking place or strong reductions in the demand for their export products, or both. In order to enhance their scope for counter-cyclical responses in the short run, enhancement of compensatory financing and additional and reliable foreign aid flows would be needed to cope with the drops in export earnings and reduced access to private capital flows.

Looking to the long run, a broadening of the development policy framework was needed to conduct active investment and technology policies so as to diversify those countries' economies and reduce their dependence on a few commodity exports, thereby allowing them to meet key development goals. That would require massive resources for public investment in infrastructure, food production, education, health and renewable energy sources. The crisis also presented opportunities to align fiscal stimulus packages with long-term goals for sustainable development. To ensure sufficient stimulus at the global level, it would be desirable to coordinate fiscal stimulus packages internationally.

The financial crisis had also revealed major deficiencies in the regulatory and supervisory frameworks of financial markets. First, the new approach to the regulation of finance, including that under the New Basel Capital Accord (Basel II) rules (recommendations on banking laws and regulations issued by the Basel Committee on Banking Supervision), placed the burden of regulation on the financial institutions themselves. Second, the more complex the trade in securities and other financial instruments became, the greater was the reliance on rating agencies that proved inadequate in part due to conflicts of interest over their own sources of earnings—which were proportional to the trade volume of the instruments they rated. Consequently, risk assessments by rating agencies tended to be highly pro-cyclical as they reacted to the materialization of risks rather than to their build-up. Third, approaches to financial regulation tended to act pro-cyclically, hence exacerbating a credit crunch during a crisis. Fourth, the spread of financial networks across the world, and the character of securitization itself, had made all financial operations hinge on the confidence that each institution in isolation was capable of backing up its operations. However, as insolvencies emerged, such confidence was weakened and might vanish, causing a generalized credit freeze. The risk models applied by regulatory agencies typically disregarded such “contagion” effects and failed to account for the vulnerabilities of the financial system as a whole. The basic objectives of the reform of prudential regulation and supervision of financial sectors should thus be to introduce strong, internationally concerted counter-cyclical rules supported by counter-cyclical macroeconomic policies.

Financial flows

According to the World Economic Situation and Prospects 2009, amid the unfolding global financial crisis, developing countries continued to make increasing substantial net outward transfers of financial resources to developed countries, reaching an all-time high of $933 billion in 2008, after a moderation in the rate of increase in 2007. Much of the increase was concentrated in Western Asia and Africa, as the economies in those regions generated increasing trade surpluses, largely owing to the surge in oil and commodity prices in the first half of 2008. As capital inflows also remained relatively strong up until the third quarter of the year, those regions further increased international reserve positions in the aggregate. Net transfers from countries with economies in transition increased from $101 billion in 2007 to $171 billion, owing mainly to the strong increase in the trade surplus of the Russian Federation. By contrast, in Latin America and the Caribbean and East and South Asia, net outward transfers declined as a consequence of the financial turmoil, leading to a significant reduction in private capital flows from the third quarter of the year onwards.

In terms of foreign direct investment (FDI), developing countries had attracted high and growing levels of private capital flows since 2002, and that trend continued until the end of the second quarter of 2008. With the exception of net portfolio investments, all components registered significant gains. Given the change in financial conditions facing developing countries since the beginning of the third quarter of 2008, the ability of a number of them to raise capital was severely compromised. While at the onset of the financial crisis net commercial bank lending to emerging market economies was stable, despite the weakness in mature credit markets, heightened concerns about the quality of global credit affected most developing markets. The deterioration in investor confidence was mainly triggered by the impact of the United States sub-prime mortgage crisis on balance sheets of banks across the global economy, but especially on those in the United States and Europe. With the failure of major financial institutions in developed countries, global interbank funding conditions deteriorated and, as a result, emerging market sovereign bond spreads widened dramatically.

Economic development in Africa

UNCTAD activities in favour of Africa

The UNCTAD Trade and Development Board (TDB), at its forty-fourth executive session (Geneva, 10 July) [A/63/15 (Part III)], considered the UNCTAD Secretary-General's report [TD/B/EX(44)/2] on activities undertaken in favour of Africa, which provided an overview of UNCTAD research and analysis with regard to Africa's development and a summary of activities, including advisory services and technical co-operation. According to the report, increased efforts were made during the year to disseminate findings of policy analysis and research and create material usable by policymakers. In that regard, UNCTAD continued its work in connection with the United Nations Development Account project on "Developing local capacities for the identification of growth opportunities through resource mobilization", launched in February 2007, whose objective was to strengthen the capacity of African countries to identify and utilize non-debt-creating domestic and foreign resources for growth and poverty reduction within the framework of the MDGs. A policy handbook on enhancing the role of domestic resources in Africa's development was prepared. UNCTAD also continued to provide policy analysis and research in favour of small island developing States and landlocked countries in Africa. It provided advisory services to Cape Verde in the last year of its three-year transition period before its graduation from LDC status in 2007. As part of the preparatory process for the midterm review of the implementation of the Almaty Programme of Action on addressing the special needs of landlocked and transit developing countries [YUN 2003, p. 875], UNCTAD produced two publications that addressed transit transport issues of specific relevance to African landlocked developing countries.

Concerning international trade and commercial diplomacy, UNCTAD cooperated with the African Union and other partners in supporting African countries' engagement, both collectively through the WTO African Group, LDC Group and African, Caribbean and Pacific Group, and individually, in the Doha Round of trade negotiations in key negotiating areas affecting their development interests, including agriculture, non-agricultural market access, services, special and differential treatment, development issues, Aid for Trade, trade-related aspects of intellectual property, and trade facilitation. UNCTAD participated in the WTO African Group seminar on agriculture and non-agricultural market access modalities (Chavannes-de-Bogis, Switzerland, 16–17 February). In the field, it supported national and regional trade policymakers and stakeholders in managing their trade policymaking and multilateral and regional trade negotiations.

Such activities were delivered under the Joint Integrated Technical Assistance Programme, a project on trade capacity-building for Africa funded by the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), Southern African Development Community projects, WTO accession projects and various country-specific projects. UNCTAD supported African countries in assessing the contribution of services to reform the sector, with an emphasis on development, including strengthening access to essential services, and to generate data and reference material for multilateral and regional trade negotiations. It also continued to develop the Measures Affecting Services Trade database for undertaking cross-country and cross-sectoral analysis of legal measures applied to services. It launched the Regional Standards Programme to enable African producers and exporters to meet both official and private-sector standards and assisted small producers in achieving market acceptance by supermarkets, in cooperation with the Swiss supermarket chain Migros.

UNCTAD continued to provide capacity-building and technical activities on competition law and policy to African countries in formulating, revising and enforcing competition policies and legislation, including through study tours, workshops and expert reviews. The assistance included: helping create a competition culture among Government officials, the private sector, State-owned enterprises and consumers; and providing support to regional cooperation arrangements on competition issues that were supportive of trade, investment and development. During the reporting period, it supported African and other debtor countries in preparing their negotiations on the rescheduling or restructuring of bilateral official debt in the framework of the Paris Club, and also supported a number of African countries in investment promotion to enable them to attract and benefit from FDI. The investment policy reviews for Morocco, Rwanda and Zambia were published and presented to the international community through UNCTAD intergovernmental machinery, while those for Mauritania and Nigeria were under preparation.

The report stated that the evaluation of the impact of UNCTAD activities in favour of Africa was a complex task, especially the impact of the research and policy analysis, as UNCTAD work contributed to a broader stream of national and international policy analysis, and many factors influenced the uptake of ideas. However, important steps were taken during the year to disseminate findings at the country level through regional workshops and the elaboration of a policy-makers' handbook based on national and regional workshops. The immediate impact of technical cooperation activities could be gauged in terms of activities implemented during projects. Similarly, the impact of training activities was evident in increased understanding of issues, options and commitments. However, the long-term developmental impact of technical cooperation activities was more difficult to measure. UNCTAD activities had facilitated the development of competition and investment policy in a number of African countries. With regard to competition policy, there had been noticeable policy changes in Egypt, Kenya, Malawi and Mozambique, where UNCTAD had provided assistance. Nevertheless, the broader impact of the introduction of competition law and policy on development, poverty reduction and the achievement of the MDGs was more nebulous.

Despite those difficulties of evaluation, one positive indicator was the continued demand from African countries for a number of long-standing UNCTAD technical cooperation activities, such as the Automated System for Customs Data, the Debt Management and Financial Analysis System, support in the Paris Club negotiations, support for trade negotiations and commercial diplomacy, and improvement in port services, as well as interest in new initiatives such as the Virtual Institute. There was also buoyant demand for expertise in relation to policies to attract FDI and increase investment development linkages. Overall, UNCTAD support for Africa covered a large number of countries, and an important feature of its work was its cooperation with African subregional organizations and the broad alignment of its work with the New Partnership for Africa's Development priorities.

TDB took note of the UNCTAD Secretary-General's report.

African export performance following trade liberalization

TDB, at its fifty-fifth session [A/63/15 (Part IV)], considered economic development in Africa: trade liberalization and export performance, on the basis of the 2008 report by the UNCTAD secretariat entitled Economic Development in Africa 2008—Export Performance Following Trade Liberalization: Some Patterns and Policy Perspectives [Sales No. E.08.II.D.22]. The report discussed the history of trade policy in Africa and the rationale for trade liberalization and its timing, and provided an overview of Africa's export performance in value, volume and composition, as well as of its performance in agriculture. It also investigated the reasons for Africa's failure to diversify into the manufacturing sector in order to increase manufacturing exports, and identified the factors underlying the trends in exports of agricultural and manufacturing products. The report examined some policy options for improving Africa's export performance, revolving around the issues of productivity, competitiveness, market access and access to factors of production, both in agriculture and manufacturing. It stated that the trade liberalization efforts by African countries over the previous 25 years had removed most of the policy barriers considered to be their main impediments. However, though there had been some improvement in Africa's export performance after trade liberalization, the level and composition of its exports had not substantially changed: the performance of the export sector fell short of expectations and the improvement was small relative to the experience of other developing regions. African countries had not diversified their exports towards more dynamic primary commodities and manufacturing goods, which were less prone to the vagaries of international markets. Africa as a whole had even lost export market share, which was down from 6 per cent of world exports in 1980 to 3 per cent in 2007. Hence, it was clear that the recent substantial rises in African countries' export earnings had not allowed Africa to recover its lost market share.

In terms of policy responses and perspectives, an overview of the report [TD/B/55/6] stated that poor export performance in Africa pointed to the need to identify the constraints that continued to limit it. Trade liberalization measures had addressed macro-economic policies such as overvalued exchange rates and restrictive trade policies that constrained export performance. The lack of a supply response to the removal of those constraints suggested the existence of deeper problems related to the production and marketing of exports in both the agricultural and manufacturing sectors, and policies were therefore needed to target those constraints. African Governments should focus on promoting horizontal and vertical diversification towards higher value-added products through a combination of incentives to promote investment in irrigation facilities or other aspects of agricultural production and exports, as well as through the provision of physical infrastructure, agricultural research, extension services and export facilitation services. In the medium to long term, they should tackle such issues as land tenure systems and the gender division of labour in rural areas in order to improve the productivity of agriculture. Steps could also be taken at the global level to improve agricultural export performance, such as liberalizing agricultural trade in developed-country markets, and revisiting previously explored options such as international commodity agreements and diversification funds in order to improve the terms on which African agricultural exporters interacted with the market. Aid for Trade and other technical assistance programmes should be directed at upgrading Africa's trade infrastructure to strengthen its capacity to trade and attain quality and consistency in exports, including by meeting the health and safety requirements for food in export markets. In manufacturing, more attention should be paid to production and marketing aspects to facilitate a substantial increase in exports. In particular, manufacturing firms' competitiveness should be addressed as a priority, at the level of both the economy and the firm. The positive effect of the size of firms on indicators of performance and exports highlighted the need to promote large firms by encouraging FDI in Africa's manufacturing sector, as firms with foreign ownership tended to be larger than domestic ones and were more export-oriented. Domestic investment in existing firms should also be increased to allow them to grow and export more. Another crucial aspect was the access of manufacturing firms to factors of production. Limited access to capital, for example, was identified in many countries as a key constraint to firms' growth. There was an urgent need, therefore, to improve the efficiency of the credit market in African countries by creating credit information bureaux to collect information on creditworthiness and share it with potential lenders. Closer relations should also be encouraged between the private sector and financial institutions. Overall, if African countries were to reap the potential benefits of trade liberalization, attention should be refocused on the productive and marketing constraints facing their agricultural and manufacturing producers.

On 26 September [agreed conclusions 494(LV)], TDB took note of the report's finding that export development required more than trade liberalization and that complementary policies were needed to address the factors constraining supply capacity. It recognized the trade liberalization efforts undertaken unilaterally, regionally and multilaterally by African countries over the previous 25 years, which would require continued and complementary efforts to be fully realized. TDB was concerned about the relatively weak export performance, notably in terms of diversification into higher value-added products in the agricultural and manufacturing sectors, and recognized the impact of the erosion of trade preferences for African countries, which had both trade and development repercussions. In that context, effective solutions had to be found, including through the outcome of multilateral trade negotiations, to address market access opportunities and diversification. TDB reaffirmed that each African country was responsible for its own development, and national strategies should include supply-side sectoral measures such as incentive packages, productivity promotion and institutional reforms, targeting all sectors of the economy, including monetary policies, in order to enhance its supply response to the export opportunities resulting from trade liberalization. TDB was also concerned about the effect of the food crisis on several countries, and recognized the importance of agricultural sector development strategies for achieving internationally agreed development goals and reducing the likelihood of future crises—for example, through measures aimed at increasing public investment in agriculture, providing financial incentives for the modernization of the sector and developing export diversification programmes. It stressed that national structural policies to promote the manufacturing sector should focus on: creating reliable infrastructure that supported efficient production and exports; encouraging firms to become more competitive by increasing labour productivity and developing technological capabilities; and promoting the creation of larger markets and firms in order to benefit from economies of scale, while taking action to support small and medium-sized enterprises (SMEs). TDB regretted the weakness of internal commercial exchanges between African countries, and recognized that regional and interregional economic cooperation and integration, including opportunities offered by South-South and North-South partnerships, had the potential to help them increase their exports, allowing them to diversify away from traditional bulk primary commodities into market-dynamic products.

The Board invited Africa's trade partners to further open up their markets to products of export interest to African countries and continue to assist them in upgrading their capacity to adjust to rising technical standards, in particular food and health standards. It also invited them to address the effects of non-tariff barriers, tariff peaks and tariff escalation, including on Africa's agricultural exports, which hampered diversification; and called on all countries to honour their commitments on duty-free and quota-free market access for LDCs, as provided for in the Ministerial Declaration of the Sixth WTO Ministerial Conference [YUN 2005, p. 1041]. TDB emphasized that donor countries and relevant multilateral organizations played a critical role in helping African countries, including through Aid for Trade, improve their productive and export capacity; and encouraged UNCTAD, as agreed in the Accra Accord, to continue to undertake insightful and critical analysis and to widen the dissemination of its research findings.

Africa's development needs

On 22 September, the General Assembly, in accordance with its resolution 62/242 of 4 March (see p. 1008), held a high-level meeting on Africa's development needs. On the same date (resolution 63/1) (see p. 1009), the Assembly adopted the Political Declaration on Africa's Development Needs, in which it stated that the high-level meeting had reviewed the implementation of all commitments made to and by Africa in order to comprehensively address the special development needs of the continent. All commitments should be effectively implemented and given appropriate follow-up by the international community and by Africa itself. The Assembly underscored the urgency of finding solutions to Africa's major challenges.

International financial system

Report of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 62/185 [YUN 2007, p. 983], the Secretary-General submitted a July report [A/63/96] on the international financial system and development that complemented his reports on the follow-up to the outcome of the International Conference on Financing for Development (see p. 1073) and on the debt crisis and development (see p. 1072). The report reviewed trends in international official and private capital flows to developing countries and international policy challenges arising from the financial crisis, which were critical in expanding the flow and sustainability of development financing. It also highlighted the critical role of multilateralism in addressing the economic challenges facing the international community. According to the report, developing countries continued to make increasing substantial net outward transfers of financial resources to developed countries, reaching $792 billion in 2007. That increase was accompanied by continued net private capital inflows to all developing country subgroupings, propelled by the abundant global liquidity. The expansion of private capital flows enabled emerging economies to sustain their growth and to stay resilient in the face of the ongoing turmoil in developed country financial markets caused by the sub-prime mortgage crisis. However, the increased exposure to those flows left developing countries vulnerable to sudden changes in investor sentiment and to a possible deterioration in global financial market conditions. In the current financial turmoil, developing countries proved to be better prepared than in previous crises. Large currency reserves, improved macroeconomic fundamentals and strong economic growth in emerging economies helped sustain high levels of private capital flows. However, against a backdrop of continuing weakness in financial markets, threats to systemic stability intensified. Strong capital inflows and rising inflationary pressures in emerging economies, due to higher food and energy prices, were leading to expectations that policymakers would increase domestic interest rates or allow for more currency appreciation.

Efforts to craft and implement policy responses to the financial crisis exposed additional challenges related to: improving the governance structure of the international financial institutions; strengthening the foundations of surveillance and policy cooperation on key systemic issues; exploring the role of official financing of emerging market and developing countries; and clarifying the modalities of engagement with low-income countries. The crisis highlighted the multilateral aspects indispensable to building and sustaining sound financial markets, and demonstrated that increased use of newly invented risk transfer instruments in globalized markets carried a number of shortcomings, both in the markets themselves and in the regulatory and supervisory systems. While a process of financial rehabilitation had begun, those actions needed to be reinforced by measures to address the underlying causes of the disruptions. To that end, the report by the Financial Stability Forum on enhancing market and institutional resilience was presented in April and endorsed by the Group of Seven most industrialized countries (G-7), Central Bank Governors and the International Monetary and Financial Committee of the Board of Governors of the International Monetary Fund (IMF). That report set out policy recommendations on prudential oversight of capital, liquidity and risk management; transparency, disclosure and valuation policies; the role and uses of credit ratings; and the authorities' responsiveness to risks and their arrangements to deal with stress in the financial system. The G-7 also identified a number of recommendations by the Financial Stability Forum considered priorities for implementation before the end of summer 2008. The Forum's report emphasized the importance of prompt implementation of the Basel II framework (see p. 1061), which might help make the capital base more reflective of the changing risk profile of banks and serve to institute incentives for better risk measurement and management. Basel II rules required that banks would disclose more information on their risk profile and their nature than called for under Basel I. However, there was also a need for revisions to Basel II to amplify the impact of changing market values on the financing activities of banks.

In terms of the governance reform of the Bretton Woods institutions (the World Bank Group and IMF), the Secretary-General noted that, by the voting deadline of 28 April, governors from 175 of the 185 IMF member countries had voted in favour of the proposed resolution on the IMF quota and voice reform package, which included a second round of ad hoc quota increases of close to 10 per cent, based on a new quota formula; the tripling of basic votes; and the appointment of a second Alternate Director for constituencies consisting of at least 19 members. Also in the resolution, the Executive Board was requested to recommend further realignments of members' quota shares in the context of future general quota reviews, beginning with the fourteenth general review of quotas in 2013, to ensure that those shares reflected their relative positions in the world economy. As to multilateral surveillance, the IMF Executive Board reached an agreement on a "Statement of surveillance priorities" in the context of the 2008 triennial surveillance review. The goal was to strengthen cooperation by reaching consensus on the role of surveillance in helping Governments deal with the challenges of the integrated economy. In addition, the International Working Group of Sovereign Wealth Funds, comprising 25 IMF member countries, was established in May to agree on a common set of voluntary practices. The World Bank launched its own process of voice and participation reform: at its 2007 meeting, the IMF/World Bank Development Committee had welcomed an options paper on voice and participation, detailing a two-stage timetable for possible actions. The Committee also acknowledged that further consultations would be necessary to reach a political consensus and, at its spring 2008 meeting, asked the Bank's Board to prepare options by the 2008 annual meeting, with a view to reaching consensus on a comprehensive package by the spring 2009 meeting.

In his conclusions, the Secretary-General noted that both national and international prudential regulatory frameworks needed to give more attention to the systemic components of risk build-up in financial markets, with particular focus on the inherent pro-cyclicality of financial markets. In the context of integrated global markets, a cooperative and multilaterally coordinated approach to regulatory reform in the financial sector was indispensable. The ongoing reform of the governance structures of the international financial institutions, critical to the integrity of the international financial system, had taken only small first steps, and efforts in that regard should be intensified. In terms of global financial stability, it was vital to reach a consensus on the role of IMF surveillance and its key responsibilities in the international financial system. The international community should strengthen instruments to support low-income countries facing sharp rises in food and energy prices and, to reduce poverty, increased financing for gender equality should be a key feature of the financing for development process.

IMF/World Bank Development Committee. The joint IMF/World Bank Development Committee, in a communiqué issued following its meeting on 13 April, endorsed the overall World Bank Group objective of contributing to an inclusive and sustainable globalization to overcome poverty and enhance growth with care for the environment. The Committee noted that while the balance of risks to the global outlook had become more negative, emerging and developing economies had been less affected by financial market developments. The impact of higher commodity prices was mixed across countries, depending on whether they were net importers or exporters. The Committee asked the World Bank Group and IMF to respond to developing countries' requests for advice on the management of natural resource revenues, and to provide timely policy and financial support to vulnerable countries dealing with shocks, including from energy and food prices. The Committee welcomed the call by the World Bank President to combat hunger and malnutrition through a "New Deal for Global Food Policy", combining immediate assistance with medium- and long-term efforts to boost agricultural productivity in developing countries. It urged donors to provide assistance to the World Food Programme to enable immediate support for countries most affected by the high food prices; encouraged the Group to strengthen its engagement in the agricultural sector; supported efforts to agree on a pro-development Doha Round that improved access to markets; and stressed the need to integrate trade and competitiveness within national development strategies, while stepping up support for Aid for Trade. The Committee acknowledged the work under way on the design, governance and financing of the new Climate Investment Funds to address the challenge of climate change. It also welcomed the Managing Director's report on the reform of IMF quota and voice, and encouraged the Bank to advance work on all aspects of voice and participation, keeping in mind the distinct nature of the Bank's development mandate and the importance of enhancing voice and participation for all developing and transition countries.

At its 12 October meeting, the Development Committee expressed concern over the impact of the financial turmoil and the continued high prices of fuel and food, and asked the World Bank Group and IMF to help address those challenges, in particular the impact on developing countries, and draw lessons from the current crises. Noting the package of reforms enhancing voice and participation of developing and transition countries in the Group's governance and work, it stated that further realignment of Bank shareholding would be taken up by the Bank's Board in a shareholding review that would develop principles, criteria and proposals for doing so, and would consider the evolving weight of all members in the world economy and other Bank-specific criteria consistent with its development mandate, moving towards equitable voting power between developed and developing members. The Board would develop proposals by 2010, with a view to reaching consensus on realignment. There was agreement on the importance of a selection process for the President of the Bank that was merit-based and transparent, with nominations open to all members and transparent Board consideration of all candidates. In addition, the Bank's management committed to continue enhancing diversity of management and staff and decentralizing decision-making. The Committee asked the Group's Boards and management to implement that agreed first step, and looked forward to periodic reports on progress and proposals for a realignment of Bank shareholding.

G-8 statement on global economy. In a 15 October statement, the leaders of the Group of Eight most industrialized countries (G-8) and the President of the European Commission said that they were united in their commitment to fulfil their shared responsibility to resolve the current crisis, strengthen financial institutions, restore confidence in the financial system and provide a sound economic footing for citizens and businesses. They welcomed and commended the decisions taken in support of implementation of the G-7 Plan of Action, which set forth a concerted framework for action and would help financial institutions gain access to needed capital; support important financial institutions and prevent their failure; unfreeze credit markets; restart secondary markets for mortgages; and protect savers and depositors. They undertook to implement those measures on an urgent, transparent and non-discriminatory basis; pledged continued co-operation and coordination; committed to mitigating the adverse impacts of the crisis on emerging economies and developing nations; and supported the critical IMF role in assisting affected countries. They also reaffirmed that open economies and well-regulated markets were essential to economic growth, employment and prosperity, and underscored the importance of continuing efforts to promote trade and investment liberalization. While their focus was on the immediate task of stabilizing markets and restoring confidence, they recognized that changes to the regulatory and institutional regimes for the world's financial sectors were needed. The discussions elaborating such changes, building on the efforts of the Financial Stability Forum and IMF, should involve both developed and developing countries.

CEB consideration. The High-level Committee on Programmes of the United Nations Chief Executives Board for Coordination (CEB), at its sixteenth session (Rome, 30 September–1 October) [CEB/2008/6], discussed, among other subjects, the current financial crisis. It noted that uncertainty existed over the economic consequence of the disruption in financial markets, whether it would have a long- or short-term impact on the rate of sustainable growth, and that the financial crisis would be the main focus of the World Bank/IMF annual meeting in mid-October. The Committee agreed that the crisis was a major market failure, the size and significance of which would lead to re-regulation or to a redefinition of the regulations that applied to the financial markets. The financial crisis also presented an opportunity for the multilateral system, given that there would be a greater demand for public action and for the global public system to evolve. It was observed that the crisis also posed a challenge to the World Bank's ability to fund activities through the international markets; that could have serious consequences not only for the role of the Bank, but also for making headway on issues such as the MDGs. The Committee explored its role in helping prepare the CEB discussion on the crisis so as to focus on system-wide efforts to safeguard critical social and development programmes and to help countries remain on course for the achievement of the MDGs. In that context, the Board should consider the social dimensions of the crisis, which would help in identifying the key contributions that the UN system organizations could make. The financial crisis presented an additional hurdle to raising required resources, and the question was how to create a conducive framework for attracting investments. Linking immediate actions with long-term needs remained a challenge, the importance of environmental protection was highlighted, and it was suggested that the food crisis should also be given increased attention. The Committee was informed that a working group on financing for development within the Development Group structure was looking at UN system preparations for the Doha review conference. At the UN Development Group meeting on 24 September, participants emphasized that the knowledge and capacity of the UN system should be drawn upon in that regard, in an effort to enhance system-wide coherence and elaborate a One United Nations approach. It was suggested that a joint UN Development Group and High-level Committee on Programmes working group be established, and that the Committee nominate organizations to represent it in that group to work alongside the two UN Development Group co-convening organizations, the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) and the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF). The Committee agreed to establish the joint High-level Committee on Programmes/UN Development Group working group on financing for development, with the International Fund for Agricultural Development, the International Labour Organization and the World Bank as co-conveners.

CEB, at its second regular session (New York, 24 October) [CEB/2008/2], held a thematic discussion on the financial crisis.

Interactive Panel on Global Financial Crisis. On 30 October, the General Assembly President convened an Interactive Panel on the Global Financial Crisis to identify steps to secure a more stable and sustainable global economic order. The Panel, which included six eminent experts as well as representatives of Member States, marked the first of what was expected to be a series of intergovernmental consultations on the response to the unfolding financial crisis. It represented an important step in an effort to develop proposals regarding the UN economic and development agenda and the role the United Nations should play in the search for new policy initiatives. There was widespread concern that global economic governance arrangements needed to be radically reformed to be responsive to current economic conditions. It was agreed that the onset of the food, fuel and financial crises had thrown a spotlight on the inadequacies of global institutions in enforcing accountability for economic decisions and maintaining growth and stability, and that developing countries—which represented a much larger proportion of world economic activity than they did when the Bretton Woods institutions were founded—were not sufficiently represented in the global councils of economic governance. As a group, they were net creditors to the global economic system and had an abiding interest in a rules-based and impartial re-vamping of global financial policies and institutions. As the pressure for change increased, the design of the new architecture had to be inclusive and democratic. In its report on the discussion, the Office of the President stated that the exchange among the six panellists and representatives of Member States and regional groups revealed the strong conviction that an integral global response to the crisis was required, States should have a key role in rebuilding the international rules and institutions that had failed to ensure global financial stability, sustained growth and social progress, and the international community should develop the institutional instruments for improving the global system. Participants recognized the need for changes in the governance of international financial institutions, particularly by making the decision-making process more inclusive and equitable, and pointed to the importance of introducing new standards and regulatory schemes and effective compliance mechanisms. They presented recommendations for changes in the international financial architecture and views on the UN role, and called for resources to be made available to help countries mitigate the social impact of the crisis. They also called for the United Nations to play a central role in the search for solutions and implementation of decisions, and agreed that dealing with the financial crisis required consideration, not only of the financial sphere, but also of the crises surrounding food, energy and climate change, without compromising support for the MDGs. The President welcomed the establishment of the High-level Task Force of Experts to undertake a comprehensive review of the international financial system and to forward recommendations to the Assembly.

G-20 consideration. Leaders of the Group of 20 industrialized and developing country economies (G-20) (Washington, D.C., 15 November), in a declaration, expressed their determination to enhance cooperation to restore global growth and achieve needed reforms in the world's financial systems. They said that major underlying factors to the current situation were inconsistent and insufficiently coordinated macroeconomic policies and inadequate structural reforms, which led to unsustainable global macroeconomic outcomes. Noting the actions taken to address the financial crisis, they agreed that a broader policy response was needed, based on closer macroeconomic cooperation, to restore growth, avoid negative spill-overs and support emerging market economies and developing countries. As immediate steps, they agreed to: take actions to stabilize the financial system; recognize the importance of monetary policy support; use fiscal measures to stimulate domestic demand to rapid effect, while maintaining a policy framework conducive to fiscal sustainability; help emerging and developing economies gain access to finance in the current difficult financial conditions, including through liquidity facilities and programme support; stress IMF's important role in crisis response, welcome its new short-term liquidity facility and urge the ongoing review of its instruments and facilities to ensure flexibility; encourage the World Bank and other multilateral development banks (MDBs) to support their development agenda, especially the recent introduction of new facilities by the World Bank in the areas of infrastructure and trade finance; and ensure that IMF, the World Bank and other MDBs had resources to continue playing their role in overcoming the crisis.

In addition, they undertook to implement reforms to strengthen financial markets and regulatory regimes and to implement policies consistent with the following common principles for reform: strengthen financial market transparency; strengthen regulatory regimes, prudential oversight, and risk management, and ensure that financial markets, products and participants were regulated or subject to oversight; exercise strong oversight over credit rating agencies, consistent with the agreed and strengthened international code of conduct; make regulatory regimes more effective over the economic cycle, while ensuring that regulation was efficient, did not stifle innovation and encouraged trade in financial products and services; protect the integrity of the financial markets by bolstering investor and consumer protection; promote information-sharing; call upon national and regional regulators to formulate regulations and other measures in a consistent manner; enhance coordination and cooperation across all segments of financial markets and strengthen cooperation on crisis prevention, management and resolution; and advance the reform of the Bretton Woods institutions, giving greater voice and representation to emerging and developing economies. The leaders committed themselves to implementing those principles and set out an initial list of measures in the Action Plan to Implement Principles of Reform, including high priority actions to be completed prior to 31 March 2009.

Doha Declaration. In the Doha Declaration on Financing for Development, adopted at the Follow-up International Conference on Financing for Development to Review the Implementation of the Monterrey Consensus (Doha, Qatar, 29 November–2 December) [A/CONF.212/7] (see p. 1076), States agreed to hold a conference at the highest level on the world financial and economic crisis and its impact on development, the modalities of which would be defined by the General Assembly President by March 2009.

On 16 December [A/C.5/63/19], the Secretary-General, in a statement on programme budget implications of the draft resolution on the Doha Declaration on Financing for Development: outcome document of the Follow-up International Conference on Financing for Development [A/63/L.57], stated that its adoption could give rise to additional resource requirements in the current biennium. However, in the absence of sufficient details at that stage regarding the conference, it was difficult for the Secretariat to determine the extent of the programme budget implications arising from it. He said that, should the Assembly adopt the draft resolution, a detailed statement of programme budget implications would be submitted to it for consideration during its current session as soon as specific information on the format and modalities of the conference was available.

On 30 December [A/63/657], the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee, having considered the Secretary-General's statement and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions [A/63/625], decided to so inform the Assembly.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December [meeting 72], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/63/412/Add.2], adopted resolution 63/205 without vote [agenda item 47 (b)].

Debt problems of developing countries

In response to General Assembly resolution 62/186 [YUN 2007, p. 986], the Secretary-General submitted a July report [A/63/181] entitled "Towards a durable solution to the debt problems of developing countries". It included a comprehensive analysis of the external debt situation and debt-servicing problems of developing countries and a review of debt management capacity-building efforts, in particular those of the UN system. It also elucidated new developments and key trends in external debt and related areas of development finance and provided a basis for deliberation of policy issues.

According to the report, during 2007, the total external debt of developing and transition economies increased by $373 billion, to a total of $3,357 billion. That increase was more than compensated for by accumulation of international reserves, which grew by over $1,000 billion from 2006, reaching $3,719 billion at the end of 2007. As most international reserves were held in debt instruments issued by the developed economies, by 2008 developing and transition economies as a group had no net external debt, but held net external debt assets of $350 billion. The growth rate of international reserves also outpaced that of short-term debt. At the end of 2007, all developing regions had reserves-to-short-term-debt ratios above 250 per cent (the average was 475 per cent). However, there were large differences between countries in the accumulation of international reserves: four countries (Brazil, China, India and the Russian Federation) held two thirds of all international reserves controlled by developing and transition economies, and several developing countries had reserves well below the level of their short-term external debt. As gross national product

(GNP) grew faster than debt, the external debt-to-GNP ratio of developing and transition economies dropped to 24.4 per cent, two points lower than in 2006. Over the same period, the debt-to-export and debt-service-to-export ratios decreased by three percentage points. While the overall decline was similar to that of 2005–2006, the regional composition had changed. Over 2006–2007, debt ratios decreased in all regions by between one and two percentage points, and sub-Saharan Africa was the region with the smallest decrease (0.8 of a percentage point). That comparatively weak improvement contrasted with a decade of continuous debt reduction that had brought Africa's external debt from 70 per cent of GNP in the second half of the 1990s to 25 per cent by 2007.

Since the start of 2007, progress under the enhanced Highly Indebted Poor Countries (HIPC) Initiative had continued at a slower pace. As at 31 May 2008, just over half of the 41 eligible countries had reached the completion point, with 10 countries at the interim stage between decision and completion points, and 8 at the pre-decision point. From January 2007 to 31 May 2008, three countries (Afghanistan, the Central African Republic and Liberia) had reached the decision point and two (Sao Tome and Principe and the Gambia) their completion points. Since the previous report, four countries (the Gambia, Guinea, Liberia and Togo) had rescheduled their debt with Paris Club creditors, and there was some activity in prepayment and regularizing relations with those creditors.

In his conclusions, the Secretary-General stated that domestic policies aimed at ensuring external debt sustainability should complement macro-level analysis with a careful evaluation of the sustainability of each project. Before borrowing abroad on commercial terms, a country should evaluate a project by ensuring that its social return was higher than the cost of funds, that it would generate the foreign currency necessary to service the debt and that the resource flow would match the payment schedule of the debt contract. In low-income countries, some high-return projects might not satisfy the second and third requirements, so such projects should be financed with grants and concessional loans. Given that an increasing share of borrowing by emerging market countries originated within the private sector, those countries should supervise the activities of private agents and ensure that private borrowing did not generate excessive vulnerabilities in the balance sheets of domestic banks and corporations. Countries that issued sovereign debt in the international capital market and had a well-functioning domestic financial system should adopt a debt strategy incorporated into the framework of a proper asset-liability management approach. Assessing sustainability also required accurate and timely information on debt level and composition, and all developing countries would need a well-functioning mechanism for collecting and reporting data on sovereign debt. The Debt Sustainability Framework, based on the primacy of debt servicing, did not explicitly include an evaluation of the needs to be fulfilled in order to achieve the MDGs. Debt sustainability should be defined as the level of debt that allowed a country to achieve the MDGs and reach 2015 without an increase in debt ratios. Debt relief delivered over the previous few years crowded out non-debt relief aid flows, suggesting that the design and evaluation of initiatives should include an explicit measure of the additionality of debt relief. Donors should recognize that past efforts had been unfair to countries with large developmental needs but low debt levels, and should ensure that those countries were appropriately rewarded for maintaining prudent macroeconomic policies by including them in the Multilateral Debt Relief Initiative (MDRI). Policymakers in advanced economies should acknowledge that shocks that might lead to a liquidity crisis in the developing world often depended on external factors that originated in policy decisions made by the advanced economies. Those externalities called for more international coordination in policymaking. Until recently, research and policy had focused on external debt because there were no data on domestic debt, but collecting and disseminating data on the composition of total public debt was not an impossible task. Because vulnerabilities could not be identified without reliable data on the composition of both external and domestic public debt, the international community should promote efforts aimed at producing and disseminating such data. Economists and practitioners were converging towards the idea that debt crises were related to both debt levels and composition and that there were important interactions between domestic public debt and external debt. As a consequence, the distinction between external and domestic debt was becoming less relevant and the international dialogue should be refocused from external debt to external and public debt. Donors should support programmes designed to improve the debt management and data collection capacity of developing countries and ensure that all countries reported comparable data and covered domestic public debt. The international community recognized the importance of public sector debt information and management as a global public good, as well as its importance in the overall public financial management reform programmes of developing countries. A stronger global partnership framework in debt management capacity-building was nevertheless still needed and should ensure sustained financing from the international community for the continuation of the capacity-building efforts and reliable tools for the majority of developing countries. Since debt crises were bound to occur, even with improved debt management and instruments, the international community should create a mechanism for guaranteeing a speedy resolution of those crises and fair burden-sharing among creditors and debtors. In that regard, an independent international body could be mandated by both debtors and creditors to evaluate the debt situation of all countries faced with external debt problems and propose the level and form of relief to be provided.

Other actions. The UNCTAD/DESA report World Economic Situation and Prospects 2009 [Sales No. E.09.II.C.2] stated that the success of the implementation of the HIPC Initiative required sustained efforts on behalf of the international creditor community. Important challenges were still to be met to implement the Initiative and enable the remaining 18 pre-completion-point countries to reach their completion points. Those included ensuring full participation by creditors and mobilizing additional resources to finance debt relief to all remaining HIPCs. Although most multilateral financial institutions had provided debt relief under the HIPC Initiative and MDRI, some small multilateral institutions still needed to be encouraged to participate in the Initiative. While Paris Club members made strong efforts in their debt-relief commitments, the participation of non-Paris Club official creditors had been low, delivering only about 40 per cent of their expected share in debt-relief operations for HIPCs. So far, 8 non-Paris Club creditors had delivered full debt relief, 22 creditors partial relief and 21 no relief at all. The participation of commercial creditors also remained low, providing 33 per cent of their commitments in 2008—but which was better than only 5 per cent the preceding year.

Another issue related to the implementation of the HIPC Initiative concerned litigation actions by commercial creditors against low-income countries. Even though the amounts involved were small in relation to total debt, the costs of litigation or resolution were significant in relation to debtor countries' export earnings and public budgets. Reducing debt to a sustainable level remained an issue for many HIPCs, which were far from achieving debt sustainability. Risks of debt distress remained high among them, including those that had received full debt relief. Only 10 out of the 23 post-completion-point HIPCs could be classified as being at "low risk" of debt distress, highlighting the fact that many countries continued to be vulnerable. Indeed, several middle- and low-income countries were suffering from debt distress but were not eligible for the HIPC Initiative and had no access to debt relief or to orderly sovereign debt workouts, as granting debt relief was conditional and only countries with unsustainable levels of debt were eligible.

Financing for development

Follow-up to International Conference on Financing for Development

General Assembly review session on Monterrey Consensus thematic areas. In accordance with General Assembly resolution 62/187 [YUN 2007, p. 992], the Assembly President convened, between February and May, review sessions on the six thematic areas of the Monterrey Consensus, adopted at the 2002 International Conference on Financing for Development [YUN 2002, p. 953]: mobilizing domestic financial resources for development (14 February); mobilizing international resources for development: FDI and other private flows (15 February); external debt (10–11 March); addressing systemic issues: enhancing the coherence and consistency of the international monetary, financial and trading systems in support of development (11–12 March); increasing international financial and technical cooperation for development (15–16 April); and international trade as an engine for development (19–20 May). The review sessions consisted of panel presentations and policy deliberations. The President also held interactive hearings with representatives of civil society and the business sector. The summaries of the review sessions were submitted to the Assembly in an August report [A/62/921].

High-level meeting of Economic and Social Council, Bretton Woods institutions, WTO and UNCTAD. The Economic and Social Council, in accordance with decision 2008/203 of 5 February, held a special high-level meeting with the Bretton Woods institutions, WTO and UNCTAD in New York on 14 April, under the theme “Coherence, coordination and cooperation in the context of the implementation of the Monterrey Consensus, including new challenges and emerging issues”. The Secretary-General submitted a March note on the theme to the meeting [E/2008/7] that provided background information and appended a number of points for reflection to inform discussion. Under the overall theme of the high-level meeting, five sub-themes were chosen: new initiatives on financing for development; supporting development efforts and enhancing the role of middle-income countries, including in the area of trade; supporting development efforts of LDCs, including through trade capacity-building; building and sustaining solid financial markets: challenges for international cooperation; and financing of climate change adaptation and mitigation.

The Council President, in his summary of the high-level meeting [A/63/80-E/2008/67], reported on the five sub-themes. As to the new initiatives on financing for development, which were important for achieving the objectives of the Monterrey Consensus, he stated that ODA was hovering around $100 billion. Only five Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development (OECD)/Development Assistance Committee (DAC) members (Denmark, Luxembourg, the Netherlands, Norway and Sweden) had met the UN aid target of 0.7 per cent of gross national income. It was uncertain whether the commitment of the G-8 leaders at their 2005 summit [YUN 2005, p. 1057] to reach $130 billion in 2010 would be attained. Nonetheless, donor countries should honour the aid commitments made at the International Conference on Financing for Development in 2002 and at the 2005 G-8 summit. The need for further resources was evident. The fulfilment of the internationally agreed development goal, as well as resources needed for adaptation to and mitigation of climate change, and for simultaneously facing the energy and food crisis, required vast additional flows. Support for a number of “innovative sources of finance”—a tool suggested in the Monterrey Consensus—was gathering momentum. Several initiatives were implemented and others continued to be explored or were at an initial stage. Participants welcomed those developments, particularly since the funds involved were viewed as additional and often more predictable than ODA. The innovative sources had become an effective tool in development cooperation and should be presented as such in the Doha International Conference, but were not a substitute for, nor should they be counted as, ODA. It was crucial to enhance information channels regarding existing initiatives and new efforts, since that was central to encouraging new countries and other actors to enter the field, and the United Nations should play a greater role in the information efforts. Some participants noted that the new initiatives should not be burdensome for developing countries and that their impact should be thoroughly examined. Efforts in that area should not be scattered too widely and the resources should be distributed in a transparent fashion, preferably using traditional aid distribution mechanisms.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 24 July [meeting 42], the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 2008/14 [draft: E/2008/L.16] without vote [agenda item 6 (a)].

Report of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 62/187 [YUN 2007, p. 992], the Secretary-General submitted a 28 July report [A/63/179] on the latest developments related to the review process on financing for development and the implementation of the Monterrey Consensus that outlined the main developments under each of the six thematic chapter headings of the Consensus (see p. 1072). The report noted the renewed interest in addressing the negative impact of illicit capital flows on domestic resource mobilization. In a special event hosted by Norway at UN Headquarters on 14 February, it was estimated that at least two thirds of illegal international transfers of funds were motivated by tax evasion and the other third by efforts to conceal the proceeds of illegal activities such as drug trade or terrorism financing. At the Technical Group meeting of the Initiative against Hunger and Poverty (Madrid, Spain, 23 May), the importance of an agreement to consider tax evasion as a corrupt practice among countries signatory to the United Nations Convention against Corruption was also highlighted. A working group led by Norway on the development impact of illicit capital flows identified the need to expand cooperation in tax evasion, and referred to the work of the UN Committee of Experts on International Cooperation in Tax Matters and to a proposal to upgrade it to a full intergovernmental body. In the long run, a sustained increase in the revenue capability of the public sector and diversification of the tax base would be critical for mobilizing resources for development and meeting the internationally agreed development goals. Attention was also drawn to the persistence of gender inequalities in labour markets, credit markets and assets distribution. The Commission on the Status of Women, at its fifty-second session (New York, 25 February–7 March) (see p. 1278), called for the strengthening of the Monterrey Consensus regarding gender equality issues, including financing for gender equality. To achieve gender equality, better understanding of the role of women in development was needed, beyond that as caregivers and labourers, and macroeconomic policies should be more coherent with other policies.

In terms of mobilizing international resources for development, the report stated that over the previous five years, buoyed by strong economic growth and improved macroeconomic fundamentals, as well as improvements in investment in many developing countries, global flows of private investment had grown significantly. During the review session on chapter II of the Monterrey Consensus (15 February), it was noted that while there had been a rising trend since 1970, private flows to developing countries were characterized by boom-bust cycles. UNCTAD data showed that FDI inflows remained the single largest component of private resource flows to developing countries and amounted to almost $500 billion in 2007, with a significant part involving South-South investment among developing countries. Through risk mitigation and capacity-building, MDB's and bilateral donors could help broaden FDI flows to a wider range of countries, including LDCs, landlocked developing countries and small island developing States, and relevant multilateral, regional and national institutions could review functions and instruments that allowed them to mitigate the risks facing foreign investors in developing country infrastructure projects. The review session acknowledged the importance of mechanisms to mitigate regulatory risk, increase the role of multilateral and regional development banks in risk mitigation by increasing leverage for their guarantees, and strengthen local currency lending. South-South flows were important in inward FDI to many LDCs, and it was acknowledged that those flows should be facilitated, especially as investors from the South possessed certain advantages when operating in other developing countries. The possibilities for supporting them should also be explored in the context of South-South-North triangular cooperation and collaboration among developing country institutions.

As to international trade as an engine for development, it was acknowledged that more open trade was, by itself, not a guarantee of development and poverty reduction, and that developing countries needed time to enhance their productive capabilities to take advantage of the opportunities from increased market access and to minimize the costs of adjustment entailed by trade reforms and losses in preferential access. In that regard, they also needed access to technology at an affordable price, infrastructure investment and human resource development, an enabling domestic environment for private investment and innovation, and appropriate social safety nets. It was also noted that developing countries needed adequate policy space to manage their trade, financial and development policies in line with their national development priorities and strategies.

With regard to increasing international financial and technical cooperation, both the Assembly review session (New York, 14–16 April) and the first Economic and Social Council Development Cooperation Forum (see p. 902) deliberated on the mixed progress in international development cooperation since 2002. While some donors were meeting, and others surpassing, their commitments in delivering aid, aggregate aid flows from OECD/DAC countries as a whole had fallen significantly short of overall targets. On the other hand, new sources of aid money had proliferated, notably from the assistance programmes of other developing countries and private foundations, although data from non-traditional donors (bilateral and private) were imprecise. It was estimated that new sources currently contributed roughly one fourth of global aid flows. The importance of providing public resources for development was also highlighted. Since ODA provided the resources that would otherwise not be forthcoming from the private sector, the fall-off in resources for development constituted both a political challenge and a developmental threat. Development-oriented assistance normally required many years of predictable funding, preferably through budget support based on strategies identified by national policymakers. The discussions in the review session and the Development Cooperation Forum noted that the Monterrey Consensus had brought together donors and recipients to form a global development cooperation partnership for the first time. The report noted that developing countries that were signatories to, or affected by, the principles of the Paris Declaration were not all members of OECD or even the DAC Working Party on Aid Effectiveness, and that there was an imbalance in development cooperation if recipients were not partners in influencing cooperation guidelines, including in international financial institutions.

In the review session on aid, there was a discussion on the establishment of a peer review process to evaluate aid programmes in order to help address that imbalance. A peer review mechanism could also play an important role in setting guidelines on the use of conditionality to ensure aid effectiveness.

The progress achieved in its many aspects provided the starting point for the Assembly review session on external debt (10–11 March). Since the adoption of the Monterrey Consensus, debt indicators had improved, aided by a confluence of factors, notably the most recent years of low international interest rates and rapid growth in developing countries underpinned by strong export growth. Most developing countries had debt management programmes in place and had built up reserves, thus reducing vulnerability. The prepayment of debt by many developing countries, as well as debt relief for many low-income countries and sizeable debt reductions in countries such as Iraq and Nigeria, contributed to a stable scenario and pointed towards the possibilities for establishing a positive developmental role for external debt. Despite those developments, the review session also examined the obstacles to ensuring debt sustainability and making progress towards the MDGs. The risk of debt distress remained for more than half of the post-completion-point HIPC; highlighted was the importance of strengthened debt management capacity and the possibility of the joint Bank-Fund Debt Sustainability Framework as a coordination point for creditors. Commercial debt buy-backs complementary to the debt relief operations of HIPC and executed by their Governments had been applied to extinguish eligible commercial debt and prevent costly and unjust litigation against those countries. National laws in the major financial centres provided the bases for those lawsuits. The potential profitability of “vulture litigation” also derived from the fact that none of the existing mechanisms provided a guarantee of equivalent treatment to non-participating creditors. There was also a discussion on the non-participation of new creditors in the Paris Club and the difficulty of their inclusion in a body whose procedures had been set previously. Those procedures could be seen as constituting a de facto “court of creditors” with power to make judgments on creditor claims and debt servicing, and thus contravened commonly held principles that decisions be made by an impartial agent.

The review session on addressing systemic issues (11–12 March) discussed the challenges in supporting more effective functioning and coordination of the international financial architecture and the economic aspects of global governance. The international community’s attention had been focused on the challenge of crafting policy responses to financial system weaknesses posed by the financial turmoil. Those responses were spawning additional challenges in adapting the governance structures of the international institutions and other global decision-making bodies. A process of financial rehabilitation had begun, as well as measures to address the underlying causes of the disruptions. The final report of the Financial Stability Forum, presented on 11 April and endorsed by the G-7 and the International Monetary and Financial Committee, set out policy recommendations in prudential oversight of capital, liquidity and risk management; transparency, disclosure and valuation policies; the role and uses of credit ratings; and the authorities’ responsiveness to risks and their arrangements to deal with stress in the financial system. In response to the financial crisis and as a key element in sustaining efficient investment processes during the recovery, the process of strengthening domestic regulatory frameworks over financial markets was accelerating. On 31 March, the United States Treasury initiated that process, and parallel efforts were undertaken in the United Kingdom and other European economies. During the spring meeting of the Bretton Woods institutions, many participants highlighted the international impact of national financial regulatory policies and standards, which affected the access of developing countries to external finance. It was therefore important for developing countries to have a secure voice in the design of future financial regulatory frameworks. In June, credit rating agencies signed an agreement with the New York State Attorney-General setting new standards and guidelines governing how to evaluate investments backed by risky mortgage debt. In July, the United States Federal Reserve indicated that it would issue new lending rules to regulate exotic mortgages and sub-prime loans, and the Securities and Exchange Commission proposed restricting the short selling of stocks of financial companies. Those developments put a spotlight on how a process of re-regulation, heightened disclosure requirements and enhanced public sector oversight over financial markets had started in various locations, and on the potential flaws of unilateral, uncoordinated regulatory reform. In the review session on systemic issues, participants highlighted the changed economic context since the Monterrey Conference, as well as the heightened pressure to update international public oversight and governance structures to make them consistent with the global economic structure. Developing economies had become a much larger proportion of the global economy, and the size and complexity of international private markets in trade and finance had challenged the monitoring and financial capabilities of international public institutions. Many of the more successful developing economies had built up their own reserves as self-insurance against vulnerabilities stemming from private markets. In that context, members of the international community stressed that the governance regime of the international financial institutions was in need of significant reforms to increase the voice of developing countries. Renewed calls were also made to strengthen the intergovernmental follow-up mechanisms to the Monterrey and Doha Conferences and to maintain the UN partnership with the other major institutional stakeholders. In that regard, it was noted that any mechanism had to be effective, inclusive and transparent in view of the need to sustain the “Monterrey spirit” in a follow-up to the Monterrey Consensus and the agreements to be reached at the upcoming Doha Conference (see below). It was also pointed out that the follow-up of the International Conference on Financing for Development should ensure a continuing multi-stakeholder and multi-sector approach and build on the experiences and lessons learned, including strengthening of the interface with the Bretton Woods institutions, with a view to promoting a results-oriented framework for consultations and substantive dialogue, which would secure a larger opportunity for representatives of Bretton Woods institutions to voice their views.

*Follow-up International Conference on Financing for Development to Review
Implementation of the Monterrey Consensus*

The Follow-up International Conference on Financing for Development to Review the Implementation of the Monterrey Consensus was held in Doha, Qatar, from 29 November to 2 December [A/CONF.212/7], in conformity with General Assembly resolution 62/187 [YUN 2007, p. 992] and decision 63/509 of 18 November. The Conference was attended by 171 Member States, the European Community, the Holy See and Palestine, as well as 4 regional commissions, 12 UN bodies, funds and programmes, 9 specialized agencies and related organizations, 18 intergovernmental organizations, the Inter-Parliamentary Union and representatives of a large number of business entities and organizations and non-governmental organizations (NGOs). The work was organized around eight plenary sessions and six interactive multi-stakeholder round tables under the overall theme “Looking ahead: further cooperative actions in financing for development”. The thematic areas considered by the round tables were: mobilizing domestic financial resources for development; mobilizing international resources for development: FDI and other private flows; international trade as an engine for development; increasing international financial and technical cooperation for development; external debt; and addressing systemic issues: enhancing the coherence and consistency of the international monetary, financial and trading systems in support of development.

Parallel and associated events included the Global Civil Society Forum (26–27 November) held under the theme “Investing in people-centred development”; an International Business Forum (28 November), which considered “The impact of the financial crisis and proposed road maps: mobilizing private-sector resources for development”; and a Parliamentary Hearing (28 November), at which members of parliament evaluated the implementation of the Monterrey Consensus and discussed new challenges and emerging issues.

In his address to the Conference, the Secretary-General said that the global financial crisis had brought an abrupt end to a long era of global growth, and compounded other major threats, such as climate change, food insecurity and the persistence of extreme poverty. If not handled properly, the crisis would become tomorrow’s human crisis. The emergency G-20 summit in November (see p. 1068) showed that Governments were deeply concerned and trying to coordinate their actions. Fiscal measures had to be bold, decisive and strongly coordinated. To promote that coordination, a bridge should be built between the G-20 and the rest of the world—the full membership of the United Nations. That bridge should stand on the three pillars of cooperation, sustainability and inclusive governance. The Secretary-General affirmed that the Monterrey Consensus was a major achievement, opening a new era of cooperation that bridged the old North-South divide. The Monterrey vision, if faithfully implemented, could be a path out of the current predicament. The Secretary-General discussed six aspects of development financing. Concerning the first aspect, liquidity, he said that while the wealthiest nations had moved to keep credit flowing at home, efforts should be made to ensure that developing countries could do so as well. Additional emergency financing from IMF, the World Bank and other sources was needed; if not, the credit crisis would spread to emerging economies. As to the second aspect, the MDGs, an increase in grants and long-term lending should be part of the response and donors should hold to their pledges of assistance. Concerning the third aspect, climate change and green growth, he called for a rededication to fighting climate change as part of the solution to the economic downturn. Investments in green technologies would yield pay-offs in the long term for a safer environment and more sustainable growth. The fourth aspect, debt relief, called for stepped-up programmes for the poorest nations so that a greater number of them could benefit. That burden would only weigh more heavily in the current climate, impeding investment and Government spending that might otherwise contribute to growth and economic development. Concerning the fifth aspect, mobilizing local resources, he said that in the new climate, financing for development would come increasingly from within, and Governments should develop new ways to raise revenues, while encouraging domestic firms to make productive investments. Specifically, more international cooperation was needed to minimize harmful tax competition and stem the loss of tax revenues, particularly in resource-rich nations. The sixth aspect, protectionism, required renewed commitment to ensure a development outcome for the Doha round of multilateral trade negotiations and to see the Doha trade round revived and concluded as soon as possible.

Summaries of the plenary meetings and the round-table discussions were contained in a Secretariat note [A/CONF.212/6 & Add.1–7]. The Assembly President submitted the draft outcome document of the Conference [A/CONF.212/3/Rev.1], which the Conference adopted on 2 December as resolution 1, containing in its annex the Doha Declaration on Financing for Development: outcome document of the Follow-up Conference on Financing for Development (see below).

In other action, the Conference expressed its appreciation to Qatar for hosting the Conference (resolution 2) and approved the report of the Credentials Committee (resolution 3).

Development to Review the Implementation of the Monterrey Consensus

Introduction

Reaffirming the goals and commitments
of the Monterrey Consensus

1. We, Heads of State and Government and High Representatives, gathered in Doha, Qatar, from 29 November to 2 December 2008, almost seven years after the landmark International Conference on Financing for Development, held in Monterrey, Mexico, reiterate our resolve to take concrete action to implement the Monterrey Consensus and address the challenges of financing for development in the spirit of global partnership and solidarity. We once again commit ourselves to eradicate poverty, achieve sustained economic growth and promote sustainable development as we advance to a fully inclusive and equitable global economic system.

2. We reaffirm the Monterrey Consensus in its entirety, in its integrity and holistic approach, and recognize that mobilizing financial resources for development and the effective use of all those resources are central to the global partnership for sustainable development, including in support of the achievement of the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals. We also reaffirm the importance of freedom, peace and security, respect for all human rights, including the right to development, the rule of law, gender equality and an overall commitment to just and democratic societies for development, as spelled out in the Monterrey Consensus. We reiterate that each country has primary responsibility for its own economic and social development and that the role of national policies, domestic resources and development strategies cannot be overemphasized. At the same time, domestic economies are now interwoven with the global economic system and, inter alia, the effective use of trade and investment opportunities can help countries to fight poverty. National development efforts need to be supported by an enabling international economic environment.

3. We recognize that the international context has changed in profound ways since we met in Monterrey. There has been progress in some areas, but inequality has widened. We welcome the substantial increase in public and private flows since 2002, which has contributed to higher economic growth in most developing countries and a reduction in global poverty rates. Yet we express our deep concern that the international community is now challenged by the severe impact on development of multiple, interrelated global crises and challenges, such as increased food insecurity, volatile energy and commodity prices, climate change and a global financial crisis, as well as the lack of results so far in the multilateral trade negotiations and a loss of confidence in the international economic system. While acknowledging the response of the international community to these crises and challenges to date, such as the High-level Conference on World Food Security, held in Rome from 3 to 5 June 2008, and the recent Summit on Financial Markets and the World Economy, held in Washington, D.C., on 15 November 2008, we are determined to take immediate and decisive actions and initiatives to overcome all these obstacles and challenges through achievement of people-centred development and to devise important measures for the full, effective and timely implementation of the Monterrey Consensus.

4. We recall that gender equality is a basic human right, a fundamental value and an issue of social justice; it is essential for economic growth, poverty reduction, environmental sustainability and development effectiveness. We reiterate the need for gender mainstreaming into the formulation and implementation of development policies, including financing for development policies, and for dedicated resources. We commit ourselves to increasing our efforts to fulfil our commitments regarding gender equality and the empowerment of women.

5. The spectre of terrorism continues to haunt us and is on the rise. This has serious implications for economic development and social cohesion, apart from its horrific human misery. We resolve to act together stronger than ever to address terrorism in all its forms and manifestations.

6. We reaffirm the political declaration on "Africa's development needs: state of implementation of various commitments, challenges and the way forward", adopted at the high-level meeting of the General Assembly on 22 September 2008. We further reaffirm our commitment to provide and strengthen support to the special needs of Africa and stress that eradicating poverty, particularly in Africa, is the greatest global challenge facing the world today. We underline the importance of accelerating sustainable broad-based economic growth, which is pivotal to bringing Africa into the mainstream of the global economy. We reaffirm the commitment of all States to establish a monitoring mechanism to follow up on all commitments related to the development of Africa as contained in the political declaration on "Africa's development needs". All commitments to and by Africa should be effectively implemented and given appropriate follow-up by the international community and Africa itself. We underscore the urgency of addressing the special needs of Africa based on a partnership among equals.

7. We welcome the decision to convene the Fourth United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries at a high level in 2011.

Mobilizing domestic financial resources for development

8. In the years following the Monterrey Conference, a number of developing countries have made significant progress in the implementation of development policies in key areas of their economic frameworks, often contributing to increased mobilization of domestic resources and higher levels of economic growth. We will continue to build upon this progress by promoting inclusive and equitable growth, eradicating poverty and pursuing sustainable development in its economic, social and environmental dimensions, and by ensuring the necessary enabling environment for mobilizing public and private resources and expanding productive investments. Greater efforts are required to support the creation and sustenance of a conducive environment through appropriate national and international actions.

9. We reaffirm that national ownership and leadership of development strategies and good governance are important for effective mobilization of domestic financial resources and fostering sustained economic growth and sustainable development. In this context, we should take into account the different characteristics and specificities of each country.

10. We recognize that a dynamic, inclusive well-functioning and socially responsible private sector is a valuable instrument for generating economic growth and reducing poverty. In order to foster private-sector development, we shall endeavour to promote an enabling environment that facilitates entrepreneurship and doing business by all, including women, the poor and the vulnerable. The international community, national Governments and regional economic groups should continue to support these efforts.

11. We will continue to pursue appropriate policy and regulatory frameworks at our respective national levels and in a manner consistent with national laws to encourage public and private initiatives, including at the local level, and to foster a dynamic and well-functioning business sector, while improving income growth and distribution, raising productivity, empowering women and protecting labour rights and the environment. We recognize that the appropriate role of Government in market-oriented economies will vary from country to country.

12. Human development remains a key priority, and human resources are the most precious and valuable asset that countries possess. The realization of full and productive employment and decent work for all is essential. We will continue to invest in human capital through inclusive social policies, inter alia, on health and education, in accordance with national strategies. The provision of, and access to, financial and credit services to all is also important. Such facilities have begun to show results, but increased efforts, where appropriate, supported by the international community, are needed. We stress the importance of fostering diverse local and supporting industries that create productive employment and strengthen local communities. We will strive to ensure social security systems that protect the vulnerable in particular.

13. To advance towards the goals of the Monterrey Consensus, policies that link economic and social considerations are required to reduce inequalities within and among countries and guarantee that the poor and vulnerable groups benefit from economic growth and development. Measures aimed at integrating the poor into productive activities, investing in the development of their labour skills and facilitating their entry into the labour market are necessary. In this regard, greater efforts are required for mobilizing more resources, as appropriate, to provide universal access to basic economic and social infrastructure and inclusive social services, as well as capacity-building, taking special care of women, children, older persons and persons with disabilities in order to enhance their social protection.

14. The increasing interdependence of national economies in a globalizing world and the emergence of rules-based regimes for international economic relations have meant that the space for national economic policy, that is, the scope for domestic policies, especially in the areas of trade, investment and international development, is now often framed by international disciplines, commitments and global market considerations. It is for each Government to evaluate the trade-off between the benefits of accepting international rules and commitments and the constraints posed by the loss of policy space.

15. We reiterate that macroeconomic policies should be aimed at sustaining high rates of economic growth, full employment, poverty eradication, and low and stable inflation, and seek to minimize domestic and external imbalances to ensure that the benefits of growth reach all people, especially the poor. They should also attach high priority to avoiding abrupt economic fluctuations that negatively affect income distribution and resource allocation. In this context, the scope for appropriate counter-cyclical policies to preserve economic and financial stability should be expanded. Public investment, consistent with medium- and long-term fiscal sustainability, may have a proactive role and encourage a virtuous cycle of investment.

16. We will continue to undertake fiscal reform, including tax reform, which is key to enhancing macroeconomic policies and mobilizing domestic public resources. We will also continue to improve budgetary processes and to enhance the transparency of public financial management and the quality of expenditures. We will step up efforts to enhance tax revenues through modernized tax systems, more efficient tax collection, broadening the tax base and effectively combating tax evasion. We will undertake these efforts with an overarching view to make tax systems more pro-poor. While each country is responsible for its tax system, it is important to support national efforts in these areas by strengthening technical assistance and enhancing international cooperation and participation in addressing international tax matters, including in the area of double taxation. In this regard, we acknowledge the need to further promote international cooperation in tax matters, and request the Economic and Social Council to examine the strengthening of institutional arrangements, including the United Nations Committee of Experts on International Cooperation in Tax Matters.

17. The development of a sound and broad-based financial sector is central to the mobilization of domestic financial resources and should be an important component of national development strategies. We will strive for diversified, well-regulated, inclusive financial systems that promote savings and channel them to sound growth-generating projects. We will further refine, as appropriate, the supervisory and regulatory mechanisms to enhance the transparency and accountability of the financial sector. We will aim to increase the domestic supply of long-term capital and promote the development of domestic capital markets, including through multilateral, regional, subregional and national development banks.

18. To achieve equitable development and foster a vibrant economy, it is vital to have a financial infrastructure that provides access to a variety of sustainable products and services for micro-, small- and medium-sized businesses, with particular emphasis on women, rural populations and the poor. We will make sure that the benefits of growth reach all people by empowering individuals and communities and by improving access to services in the fields of finance and credit. We recognize that microfinance, including microcredit, has proven to be effective in generating productive self-employment, which can contribute to the achievement of the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals.

Despite some progress, there is widespread demand for microfinance. We underline the need to appropriately support, in a coordinated manner, the efforts of developing countries, including in capacity-building for their microfinance, including microcredit institutions.

19. Gender equality and women's empowerment are essential to achieve equitable and effective development and to foster a vibrant economy. We reaffirm our commitment to eliminate gender-based discrimination in all its forms, including in the labour and financial markets, as well as, inter alia, in the ownership of assets and property rights. We will promote women's rights, including their economic empowerment, and effectively mainstream gender in law reforms, business support services and economic programmes, and give women full and equal access to economic resources. We will further promote and reinforce capacity-building of State and other stakeholders in gender-responsive public management, including, but not limited to, gender budgeting.

20. Capital flight, where it occurs, is a major hindrance to the mobilization of domestic resources for development. We will strengthen national and multilateral efforts to address the various factors that contribute to it. It is vital to address the problem of illicit financial flows, especially money-laundering. Additional measures should be implemented to prevent the transfer abroad of stolen assets and to assist in the recovery and return of such assets, in particular to their countries of origin, consistent with the United Nations Convention against Corruption, as well as to prevent capital flows that have criminal intent. We note the efforts of the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime and the World Bank Group through the Stolen Asset Recovery Initiative and other relevant initiatives. In this regard, we urge as a matter of priority all States that have not yet done so to consider becoming parties to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism, and call for increased cooperation with the same objective.

21. The ongoing fight against corruption at all levels is a priority. Progress among countries has varied since 2002. Corruption affects both developed and developing countries, and both the public and private sectors. We are thus determined to take urgent and decisive steps to continue to combat corruption in all of its manifestations in order to reduce obstacles to effective resource mobilization and allocation and avoid the diversion of resources away from activities that are vital for development. This requires strong institutions at all levels, including, in particular, effective legal and judicial systems and enhanced transparency. We welcome the increased commitment of States that have already ratified or acceded to the United Nations Convention against Corruption, and, in this regard, urge all States that have not yet done so to consider ratifying or acceding to the Convention. We call upon all States parties to fully implement the Convention without delay and to work jointly in the establishment of a mechanism for follow-up on implementation of the Convention.

22. While the pursuit of economic resilience is important for all countries, it requires constant and more concerted efforts in small and vulnerable economies. These national efforts need to be reinforced by international support for capacity-building, including through financial and technical assistance, and United Nations operational activities for development in accordance with national development strategies and priorities. In development cooperation policies, we will pay special attention to the efforts and specific needs of Africa, the least developed countries, landlocked developing countries and small island developing States. Similarly, special and sustained attention is needed to support post-conflict countries in their rebuilding and development efforts.

Mobilizing international resources for development: foreign direct investment and other private flows

23. We recognize that private international capital flows, particularly foreign direct investment, are vital complements to national and international development efforts. We appreciate the rise in private international capital flows to developing countries since the Monterrey Conference and the improvements in business climates that have helped to encourage it. However, we take note with concern that a significant number of developing countries have not experienced a rise in private international capital flows. We will seek to enhance such flows to support development. In this context, we will strengthen national, bilateral and multilateral efforts to assist developing countries in overcoming the structural or other constraints which currently limit their attractiveness as a destination for private capital and foreign direct investment. To that end, we acknowledge the need to particularly assist those countries that have been at a particular disadvantage in attracting such flows, including a number of African countries, least developed countries, landlocked developing countries, small island developing States and countries emerging from conflict or recovering from natural disasters. Such efforts could include the provision of technical, financial and other forms of assistance; the promotion and strengthening of partnerships, including public-private partnerships; and cooperation arrangements at all levels.

24. We will enhance efforts to mobilize investments from all sources in human resources, transport, energy, communications, information technology and other physical, environmental, institutional and social infrastructure that serve to strengthen the business environment, enhance competitiveness and expand trade in developing countries and economies in transition. We recognize the need for bilateral and multilateral partners to provide technical assistance and share best practices relating to these efforts. The programmes, mechanisms and instruments at the disposal of multilateral development agencies and bilateral donors can be used for encouraging business investment, including by contributing to mitigating some of the risks faced by private investors in critical sectors in developing and transition economies. Official development assistance (ODA) and other mechanisms, such as, inter alia, guarantees and public-private partnerships, can play a catalytic role in mobilizing private flows. At the same time, multilateral and regional development banks should continue to explore innovative modalities with developing countries, including low- and middle-income countries and countries with economies in transition, so as to facilitate additional private flows to such countries.

25. Experience has shown that providing an enabling domestic and international investment climate is fundamental to fostering domestic and foreign private investment. Countries need to continue their efforts to achieve a stable and predictable investment climate, with proper contract enforcement and respect for property rights. We will continue to put in place transparent and appropriate regulations at the national and international levels. Efforts should be enhanced to upgrade the skills and technical capabilities of human resources, improve the availability of finance for enterprise, facilitate public-private consultative mechanisms and promote corporate social responsibility. Bilateral investment treaties may promote private flows by increasing legal stability and predictability to investors. It is important that bilateral investment treaties, as well as tax treaties and other tax measures to facilitate foreign investments, take into account regional and multilateral cooperation, including at the regional level. We acknowledge the importance of supporting capacity-building in developing countries aimed at improving their abilities to negotiate mutually beneficial investment agreements. It is important to promote good tax practices and avoid inappropriate ones.

26. To complement national efforts, there is a need for the relevant international and regional institutions, as well as appropriate institutions in source countries, to increase their support for private foreign investment in infrastructure development and other priority areas, including projects to bridge the digital divide in developing countries and countries with economies in transition. To this end, it is important to provide export credits, co-financing, venture capital and other lending instruments, risk guarantees, leveraging aid resources, information on investment opportunities, business development services, forums to facilitate business contacts and cooperation between enterprises of developed and developing countries, as well as funding for feasibility studies. Inter-enterprise partnership is a powerful means for the transfer and dissemination of technology. In this regard, strengthening the multilateral and regional financial and development institutions is desirable. Additional source country measures should also be devised to encourage and facilitate investment flows to developing countries.

27. We recognize that the development impact of foreign direct investment should be maximized. We further recognize that the transfer of technology and business skills is a key channel through which foreign direct investment can positively impact development. We will strengthen national and international efforts aimed at maximizing linkages with domestic production activities, enhancing the transfer of technology and creating training opportunities for the local labour force, including women and young people. It is also important to enact and uphold, as appropriate, labour and environmental protection and anti-corruption laws and regulations in accordance with obligations undertaken in relevant international conventions. We welcome efforts to promote corporate social responsibility and good corporate governance. In this regard, we encourage the work undertaken at the national level and by the United Nations, including through the United Nations Global Compact, and the promotion of internationally agreed corporate social responsibility frameworks, such as the International Labour Organization Tripartite Declaration. We reaffirm that every State has, and shall freely exercise full permanent sovereignty over, all its wealth, natural resources and economic activity. We support measures to enhance corporate transparency and accountability of all companies, taking into account the fundamental principles of domestic law. We take note of voluntary initiatives in this regard, including, inter alia, the Extractive Industries Transparency Initiative.

28. We realize that the perception of a country's current economic conditions and prospects influences the international private financial flows that it attracts. The provision of objective, high-quality information from all sources, including private and public entities, such as national statistical agencies, the International Monetary Fund (IMF), the World Bank, the United Nations system, investment advisers and credit-rating agencies, is vital for informed decisions by potential domestic and foreign investors alike. We will continue to strengthen modalities, including through the efforts of the country itself, the United Nations system and relevant multilateral agencies, to enhance and improve the level and objectivity of information regarding a country's economic situation and outlook.

29. Remittances have become significant private financial resources for households in countries of origin of migration. Remittances cannot be considered as a substitute for foreign direct investment, ODA, debt relief or other public sources of finance for development. They are typically wages transferred to families, mainly to meet part of the needs of the recipient households. The manner of their disposal or deployment is an individual choice. A large portion of migrants' incomes is spent in destination countries and constitutes an important stimulus to domestic demand in their economies. In this regard, we will strengthen existing measures to lower the transaction costs of remittances through increased cooperation between originating and receiving countries and create opportunities for development-oriented investments.

International trade as an engine for development

30. We reaffirm that international trade is an engine for development and sustained economic growth. We also reaffirm that a universal, rules-based, open, non-discriminatory and equitable multilateral trading system, as well as meaningful trade liberalization, can substantially stimulate development worldwide, benefiting all countries at all stages of development. We are encouraged that international trade, especially the trade of developing countries as a group, has expanded at a fast pace in the current decade. Trade among developing countries has now become one of the most dynamic elements in world trade. However, many developing countries, in particular the least developed countries, have remained at the margins of these developments and their trade capacity needs to be enhanced to enable them to exploit more effectively the potential of trade to support their development. We also reaffirm our commitment to meaningful trade liberalization and to ensure that trade plays its full part in promoting economic growth, employment and development for all. We recall our commitment in the Monterrey Consensus to the decisions of the World Trade Organization to place the needs and interests of developing countries at the heart of its work programme and to implement its recommendations.

31. A well-functioning multilateral trading system can bring benefits to all and can contribute to enhancing the integration of the developing countries in the system, in particular the least developed countries. We reiterate our urgent resolve to ensure that the ongoing efforts to improve the operation of the multilateral trading system to better respond to the needs and interests of all developing countries, in particular the least developed countries. This is particularly important at a time when the systemic impact of the financial crisis is affecting us all. We call for the implementation of the ministerial declaration of the World Trade Organization adopted at its Sixth Ministerial Conference, held in Hong Kong, China, from 13 to 18 December 2005, on the central importance of the development dimension in every aspect of the Doha Development Agenda work programme and its commitment to making the development dimension a meaningful reality. We emphasize that maximizing the benefits and minimizing the costs of international trade liberalization calls for development-oriented and coherent policies at all levels.

32. We are very concerned that, despite significant efforts, the Doha Development Agenda round of multilateral trade negotiations has not yet been concluded. A successful result should support the expansion in the exports of developing countries, reinforce the potential for trade to play its due role as the engine of growth and development, and provide increased opportunities for developing countries to use trade to support development. It is important to make progress in key areas of the Doha Development Agenda of special interest to developing countries, such as those outlined in paragraph 28 of the Monterrey Consensus, reaffirming the importance of special and differential treatment referred to therein. To this end, flexibility and political will are essential. We welcome recent commitments concerning trade and the critical importance of rejecting protectionism and not turning inward in times of financial uncertainty, especially as this might particularly affect developing countries. On this basis, we will urgently re-engage and strive to reach agreement by the end of the year on modalities that lead to a successful and early conclusion to the World Trade Organization Doha Development Agenda with an ambitious, balanced and development-oriented outcome.

33. We acknowledge that the optimum pace and sequence of trade liberalization depends on the specific circumstances of each country, and that each country will make this decision based on its own evaluation of the costs and benefits. Trade liberalization must be complemented by appropriate action and strategies at the national level for the expansion of productive capacities, the development of human resources and basic infrastructure, the absorption of technology and the implementation of adequate social safety nets. Achieving the positive impact of trade liberalization on developing countries will also depend to a significant extent on international support for the above measures and actions against policies and practices that distort trade.

34. We recognize the particular challenges faced by least developed countries in integrating beneficially into the international trading system. We acknowledge that least developed countries require special measures and international support to benefit fully from world trade, as well as in adjusting to and integrating beneficially into the global economy. We welcome the decision at the Sixth World Trade Organization Ministerial Conference, held in Hong Kong, China, from 13 to 18 December 2005, on improved market access for least developed countries as set out in the decision and its annex, and call for its full implementation. We also welcome the actions taken by some individual countries since Monterrey towards the goal of full duty-free and quota-free market access for all least developed countries, and call upon other developed and developing countries declaring themselves in a position to do so to take steps towards this objective. We will also reinforce efforts to provide technical assistance to least developed countries that request it in order to enable them to participate more effectively in the multilateral trading system, including through the effective operation of the Enhanced Integrated Framework for Trade-related Technical Assistance to Least Developed Countries and by providing support to allow them to participate effectively in international trade negotiations.

35. We also recognize the particular challenges that may be faced by other developing countries, including small and vulnerable economies, to fully benefit from the multilateral trading system. Appropriate consideration and support should be provided to these countries to help to facilitate their effective participation in the global economy. In this regard, we encourage progress in the implementation of the World Trade Organization work programme on small economies, mandated in the Doha Ministerial Declaration.

36. Aid for Trade is an important component of the measures that will assist developing countries in taking advantage of the opportunities offered by the international trading system, the outcome of the Doha round and regional trade agreements. A critical aim of Aid for Trade should be to enhance trade capacity and international competitiveness while ensuring ownership and alignment with national development strategies of individual developing countries. Aid for Trade should aim to help developing countries, particularly least developed countries, with trade policy and regulations; trade development; building productive capacities; trade-related infrastructure; trade-related adjustment and other trade-related needs. However, Aid for Trade is a complement and not a substitute for a successful outcome of the Doha Development Agenda or any other trade negotiation. Successful programmes under the Aid for Trade Initiative require joint efforts by concerned partners. The commitments by individual donors relating to Aid for Trade should be fully implemented in a timely manner. It is also important that the Aid for Trade needs and priorities of recipient countries are fully integrated and reflected in their national development strategies. United Nations specialized agencies that have a relevant mandate in this field should continue to help developing countries to build their trade-related productive capacities.

37. Broader and effective participation of developing countries in the multilateral trading system, including in any round of multilateral trade negotiations and in the World Trade Organization Doha Development Agenda negotiations, are key objectives. We note progress in this area since Monterrey, as evidenced by the countries that have acceded to the World Trade Organization, the countries that have newly engaged in World Trade Organization accession and the countries that have made progress towards World Trade Organization accession over the past six years. We welcome additional progress in this regard. We also reaffirm our undertaking in Monterrey to facilitate the accession of all developing countries, particularly the least developed countries, as well as countries with economies in transition, that apply for membership in the World Trade Organization. In this regard, we note the decision of the Sixth World Trade Organization Ministerial Conference to give priority to the ongoing accessions with a view to concluding them as rapidly and smoothly as possible.

38. We recognize that regional integration as well as bilateral trade and economic cooperation agreements are important instruments to expand trade and investment. We should continue to ensure that these agreements promote long-term development, advance the goals of the World Trade Organization and are complementary elements of the multilateral trading system. International support for cooperation in trade and other trade-related areas can be catalytic in strengthening and consolidating regional and sub-regional integration. We stress the importance of increased support to South-South trade and cooperation initiatives in trade-related areas, including through triangular cooperation, consistent with World Trade Organization rules.

39. We welcome the ongoing work of international institutions that assist developing countries in realizing the benefits of trade liberalization, in particular the United Nations, the World Trade Organization, the World Bank, IMF and the regional development banks, and encourage their continuing efforts to facilitate trade that results in economic growth and development. In this context, we welcome the outcome of the twelfth session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD), held in Accra from 20 to 25 April 2008, and reaffirm the role of UNCTAD in trade and development.

Increasing international financial and technical cooperation for development

40. We recognize the severe impacts that the current financial and economic crises are having on the ability of developing countries to mobilize resources for development. We stress the importance that ODA plays, leveraging and sustaining financing for development in developing countries. In this regard, we recall our commitments to the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals, and call for the international community to redouble its efforts to facilitate the achievement of these goals.

41. We reaffirm the essential role that ODA plays, as a complement to other sources of financing for development, in facilitating the achievement of development objectives, including the internationally agreed development goals, in particular the Millennium Development Goals. For many African countries, least developed countries, small island developing States and landlocked developing countries, ODA is still the largest source of external financing. ODA can play a catalytic role in assisting developing countries in removing constraints to sustained, inclusive and equitable growth, such as enhancing social institutional and physical infrastructure; promoting foreign direct investment, trade and technological innovation; improving health and education; fostering gender equality; preserving the environment; and eradicating poverty.

42. We are encouraged by the recovery of ODA from its declining trend before the Monterrey Conference (ODA in real terms increased by 40 per cent between 2001 and 2007), while noting that a significant part of aid flows after 2002 comprised debt relief and humanitarian assistance. However, we note with concern the overall decline in ODA in 2006 and 2007, driven in particular by the drop-off in debt relief from its peak in 2005. We are encouraged by the fact that some donor countries have met or surpassed the ODA targets referenced in the Monterrey Consensus (0.7 per cent of gross national product (GNP) for ODA to developing countries and 0.15 to 0.20 per cent of GNP for ODA to least developed countries). We are also encouraged by others that have established timetables for fulfilling their long-standing commitments, such as the European Union, which has agreed to provide, collectively, 0.56 per cent of GNP for ODA by 2010 and 0.7 per cent by 2015 and to channel at least 50 per cent of collective aid increases to Africa, while fully respecting the individual priorities of Member States in development assistance. We welcome the more than doubling of ODA by the United States. We also welcome the declaration by the leaders of the Group of Eight in Hokkaido, Japan, that they are firmly committed to working to fulfil their commitments made at Gleneagles, including increasing, compared to 2004, with other donors, ODA to Africa by 25 billion United States dollars a year by 2010. We encourage donors to work on national timetables, by the end of 2010, to increase aid levels within their respective budget allocation processes towards achieving the established ODA targets. The full implementation of these commitments will substantially boost the resources available to push forward the international development agenda.

43. The fulfilment of all ODA commitments is crucial, including the commitments by many developed countries to achieve the target of 0.7 per cent of GNP for ODA to developing countries by 2015 and to reach the level of at least 0.5 per cent of GNP for ODA by 2010, as well as a target of 0.15 to 0.20 per cent of GNP for ODA to least developed countries. To reach their agreed timetables, donor countries should take all necessary and appropriate measures to raise the rate of aid disbursements to meet their existing commitments. We urge those developed countries that have not yet done so to make additional concrete efforts towards the target of 0.7 per cent of GNP for ODA to developing countries, including the specific target of 0.15 to 0.20 per cent of GNP for ODA to least developed countries in line with the Brussels Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the Decade 2001–2010, in accordance with their commitments. To build on progress achieved in ensuring that ODA is used effectively, we stress the importance of democratic governance, improved transparency and accountability, and managing for results. We strongly encourage all donors to establish, as soon as possible, rolling indicative timetables that illustrate how they aim to reach their goals, in accordance with their respective budget allocation process. We stress the importance of mobilizing greater domestic support in developed countries towards the fulfilment of their commitments, including through raising public awareness, and by providing data on aid effectiveness and demonstrating tangible results.

44. We stress the importance of addressing the development needs of low-income developing countries, including through the provision of technical, financial and other forms of assistance, the promotion and strengthening of partnerships and cooperation arrangements at all levels.

45. We recognize that middle-income countries still face significant challenges in the area of poverty eradication and that their efforts to address those challenges should be strengthened and supported by the United Nations system, the international financial institutions and all other stakeholders, in order to ensure that achievements made to date are sustained. We also acknowledge that ODA is still essential for a number of these countries and has a role to play in targeted areas, taking into account the needs and domestic resources of these countries.

46. We welcome increasing efforts to improve the quality of ODA and to increase its development impact. The Economic and Social Council Development Cooperation Forum, along with recent initiatives, such as the High-level Forums on Aid Effectiveness, which produced the 2005 Paris Declaration on Aid Effectiveness, and the 2008 Accra Agenda for Action, make important contributions to the efforts of those countries which have committed to them, including through the adoption of the fundamental principles of national ownership, alignment, harmonization and managing for results. Continued building on these initiatives, including through more inclusive and broad-based participation, will contribute to enhancing national ownership and making aid delivery more effective and efficient and lead to improved outcomes. We also encourage all donors to improve the quality of aid, increase programme-based approaches, use country systems for activities managed by the public sector, reduce transaction costs and improve mutual accountability and transparency and, in this regard, we call upon all donors to untie aid to the maximum extent. We will make aid more predictable by providing developing countries with regular and timely, indicative information on planned support in the medium term. We recognize the importance of efforts by developing countries to strengthen leadership of their own development, national institutions, systems and capacity to ensure the best results of aid by engaging with parliaments and citizens in shaping those policies and deepening engagement with civil society organizations. We should also bear in mind that there is no one-size-fits-all formula that will guarantee effective assistance. The specific situation of each country needs to be fully considered.

47. We note that the aid architecture has significantly changed in the current decade. New aid providers and novel partnership approaches, which utilize new modalities of cooperation, have contributed to increasing the flow of resources. Further, the interplay of development assistance with private investment, trade and new development actors provides new opportunities for aid to leverage private resource flows. We re-emphasize the importance of the Development Cooperation Forum of the Economic and Social Council as the focal point within the United Nations system for holistic consideration of issues of international development cooperation, with participation by all relevant stakeholders. We shall pursue efforts, both in the United Nations and in collaboration with other relevant institutions, such as the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development (OECD)/ Development Assistance Committee (DAC), to advance dialogue and cooperation among the increasingly diverse community of development partners. All development actors should cooperate closely to ensure that increased resources from all sources are used in a manner which ensures maximum effectiveness. We shall also pursue enhanced collaboration at the country level with the private sector, non-official donors, regional organizations and official donors.

48. There is a growing need for more systematic and universal ways to follow quantity, quality and effectiveness of aid flows, giving due regard to existing schemes and mechanisms. We invite the Secretary-General, with relevant United Nations system agencies, in close cooperation with the World Bank, the regional and subregional development banks, OECD/DAC and other relevant stakeholders, to address this issue and to provide a report for consideration by the Development Cooperation Forum.

49. We reiterate our support for South-South cooperation, as well as triangular cooperation, which provides much needed additional resources to the implementation of development programmes. We recognize the importance and different history and particularities of South-South cooperation and stress that South-South cooperation should be seen as an expression of solidarity and cooperation between countries, based on their shared experiences and objectives. Both forms of cooperation support a development agenda that addresses the particular needs and expectations of developing countries. We also recognize that South-South cooperation complements rather than substitutes for North-South cooperation. We acknowledge the role played by middle-income developing countries as providers and recipients of development cooperation. Regional cooperation could also be strengthened as an effective vehicle for mobilizing resources for development, inter alia, by strengthening regional financial institutions to better assist in upgrading critical sectors in developing countries.

50. We encourage developing countries in a position to do so to continue to make concrete efforts to increase and make more effective their South-South cooperation initiatives in accordance with the principles of aid effectiveness.

51. We recognize the considerable progress made since the Monterrey Conference in voluntary innovative sources of finance and innovative programmes linked to them. We acknowledge that a number of the initiatives of the Technical Group created by the Global Action Initiative against Hunger and Poverty and the Leading Group on Solidarity Levies to Fund Development have become a reality or are in an advanced stage towards implementation. These include, inter alia, the International Finance Facility for Immunization; the pilot advance market commitments and the airline ticket solidarity levies, which finance health programmes in several developing countries, including the International Drug Purchase Facility, UNITAID, to help to combat HIV/AIDS, tuberculosis and malaria; and instruments based on the carbon market. Other noteworthy initiatives include the United States Millennium Challenge Corporation, the President's Emergency Plan for AIDS Relief, the India-Brazil-South Africa Fund, the Egyptian Fund for Technical Cooperation with Africa, the Libya-Africa Investment Portfolio and the PetroCaribe Initiative. We encourage the scaling up and the implementation, where appropriate, of innovative sources of finance initiatives. We acknowledge that these funds should supplement and not be a substitute for traditional sources of finance, and should be disbursed in accordance with the priorities of developing countries and not unduly burden them. We call upon the international community to consider strengthening current initiatives and explore new proposals, while recognizing their voluntary and complementary nature. We request the Secretary-General of the United Nations to continue to address the issue of innovative sources of development finance, public and private, and to produce a progress report by the sixty-fourth session of the General Assembly, taking into account all existing initiatives.

52. We reiterate our resolve to operationalize the World Solidarity Fund established by the General Assembly and invite those countries in a position to do so to make voluntary contributions to the Fund. We also recall the establishment of the Digital Solidarity Fund and encourage voluntary contributions to its financing, including by considering innovative financing mechanisms.

53. We underscore the importance of capacity development and strengthening technical cooperation as important avenues for developing countries to attain their development objectives. In this regard, we reiterate the importance of human resources development, including training, exchange of expertise, knowledge transfer and technical assistance for capacity-building, which involves strengthening institutional capacity, project management and programme planning. The capacity of developing countries to absorb long-term development aid has begun to increase.

54. We underline the important role of an effective, well-managed and adequately resourced United Nations system through its operational activities in delivering capacity-building support for development with long-term sustainability. This is particularly important for least developed countries. Given that the level of core funding inevitably affects the ability of the United Nations system to fulfil this mandate, we urge donor countries and other countries in a position to do so to substantially increase voluntary contributions to the core/regular budgets of the United Nations development system, in particular its funds, programmes and specialized agencies, and to contribute on a multi-year basis, in a sustained and predictable manner. We also note that non-core resources represent an important supplement to the regular resource base of the United Nations development system to support operational activities for development, thus contributing to an increase in total resources, while recognizing that non-core resources are not a substitute for core resources and that unearmarked contributions are vital for the coherence and harmonization of operational activities for development. We welcome the efforts to improve efficiency, coherence and effectiveness of the United Nations development system.

55. The multilateral development banks, including the World Bank, regional and subregional development banks and other international institutions that promote development, can be an important source of financing for development. They provide strategic resources, including in the form of technical assistance, for such areas as governance, institution and capacity-building and the promotion of best practices. They play an important role in enhancing the integration of developing countries in the world economy and in supporting regional integration and other cooperation efforts. They also constitute a valuable forum for exchange of information on best practices between developing countries. For some countries, the net outflow of resources from some of these institutions has become negative and, therefore, we will work with these institutions to enhance their financing to developing countries as part of the measures for further implementation of the Monterrey Consensus. These institutions should continue to explore innovative ways to use their capital to leverage additional finance to foster development while preserving their capital and ensuring their activity is sustainable.

External debt

56. The debt stock of developing countries as a group continues to increase, while key debt sustainability indicators have improved significantly since Monterrey, but care needs to be taken to avoid a recurrence of unsustainable levels of debt. Debt repayment by several developing countries, debt relief under the Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Initiative (HIPC), the Multilateral Debt Relief Initiative (MDRI) and the Evian treatment in the Paris Club, together with other debtor countries' efforts and ongoing initiatives, such as the World Bank/IMF Debt Sustainability Framework, have contributed to achieving such progress. The HIPC initiative is estimated to provide a total of $71 billion to 41 eligible countries, while MDRI is expected to provide an additional $28 billion. Borrowing countries have also enhanced their debt management programmes and many have built reserves. Debt relief initiatives also helped beneficiary countries to mobilize much needed resources for poverty reduction, as part of wider efforts to mobilize financial resources for development. We recognize that the current global financial and economic crises carry the possibility of undoing years of hard work and gains made in relation to the debt of developing countries. The situation demands the implementation of existing and any future bold and encompassing initiatives and mechanisms to resolve the current debt problems of developing countries, particularly for Africa and the least developed countries, in an effective and equitable manner, including through debt cancellation.

57. We stress the importance of continued flexibility with regard to the eligibility criteria for debt relief under HIPC and MDRI. We recall our encouragement to donor countries to take steps to ensure that resources provided for debt relief do not detract from ODA resources intended to be available for developing countries.

58. We underline that heavily indebted poor countries eligible for debt relief will not be able to enjoy its full benefits unless all creditors, including public and private, contribute their fair share and become involved in the international debt resolution mechanisms to ensure the debt sustainability of low-income countries.

59. We emphasize that middle-income developing countries are mainly responsible for the achievement and maintenance of a sustainable debt situation and for addressing their external debt situation. While welcoming the Evian approach, we emphasize the importance of sustained efforts by all towards achieving sustainable debt of middle-income countries, including by improving their sustainable debt management and through debt relief based on current debt mechanisms and debt swap mechanisms on a voluntary basis.

60. We recognize that important challenges remain. Debt service accounts for a significant portion of the fiscal budget and is still unsustainable in a number of developing countries. The existing international debt resolution mechanisms are creditor-driven, while taking into account debtor country situations. More efforts are needed through international debt resolution mechanisms to guarantee equivalent treatment of all creditors, just treatment of creditors and debtors, and legal predictability. We are deeply concerned about increasing vulture fund litigation. In this respect, we welcome recent steps taken to prevent aggressive litigation against HIPC-eligible countries, including through the enhancement of debt buy-back mechanisms and the provision of technical assistance and legal support, as appropriate, by the Bretton Woods institutions and the multilateral development banks. We call upon creditors not to sell claims on HIPC to creditors that do not participate adequately in the debt relief efforts.

61. We will intensify our efforts to prevent debt crises by enhancing international financial mechanisms for crisis prevention and resolution, in cooperation with the private sector, and by finding solutions that are transparent and agreeable to all. These mechanisms need to be underpinned by principles that have served us well in dealing effectively with many debt problems. These include the need to ensure that debt resolution is a joint responsibility of all debtors and creditors, both State and commercial; to recognize that furthering development and restoring debt sustainability are the main objectives of debt resolution; to strengthen transparency and accountability among all parties; to promote responsible borrowing and lending practices; to improve debt management and national ownership of debt management strategies; and to facilitate equivalent treatment of all creditors.

62. We recognize that a shift has occurred from official to commercial borrowing and from external to domestic public debt, although for most low-income countries external finance is still largely official. We note that the number of creditors, both official and private, has increased significantly. We stress the need to address the implications of these changes, including through improved data collection and analysis.

63. In debt renegotiations, we stress the need for full involvement of debtors as well as creditors and the importance of taking into account debtors' national policies and strategies linked to attaining the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals.

64. Technical assistance to manage debt and address debt problems can be crucial for many countries, in particular the most vulnerable. We reaffirm the importance of adequate capacities of debtor countries during debt negotiations, debt renegotiations and for debt management. In this regard, we will continue to provide developing countries with the necessary assistance, including technical assistance, upon request, to enhance debt management, negotiations and renegotiation capacities, including tackling external debt litigation, in order to achieve and maintain debt sustainability. The Bretton Woods institutions and other relevant organizations should continue to play an important role in this field, as appropriate, given their respective mandates. Preserving long-term debt sustainability is a shared responsibility of lenders and borrowers. To this end, we encourage the use of the joint IMF/World Bank Debt Sustainability Framework by creditors and debtors, as appropriate. Borrowers should strive to implement sound macroeconomic policies and public resource management, which are key elements in reducing national vulnerabilities.

65. Particular attention should be paid to keeping the debt sustainability frameworks under review to enhance the effectiveness of monitoring and analysing debt sustainability and consider fundamental changes in debt scenarios, in the face of large exogenous shocks, including those caused by natural catastrophes, severe terms-of-trade shocks or conflict. We stress the need to construct debt indicators based on comprehensive, objective and reliable data. We also need to increase information-sharing, transparency and the use of objective criteria in the construction and evaluation of debt scenarios, including an assessment of domestic public and private debt in order to achieve development goals. We are convinced that enhanced market access to goods and services of export interest to debtor countries is an important factor in enhancing debt sustainability.

66. Debt sustainability frameworks should also give due weight to the development needs of debtor countries, including benefits from expenditures and investment that have long-term social and economic returns. Given the imperative of maintaining debt sustainability and the external financing requirements for meeting development goals, particularly in least developed countries and low-income countries facing increased risks of debt distress, bilateral donors and multilateral financial institutions should seek to increasingly provide grants and concessional loans as the preferred modalities of their financial support instruments to ensure debt sustainability.

67. We acknowledge the need to continue to address all relevant issues regarding external debt problems, including through the United Nations, and we will consider ways to explore enhanced approaches of sovereign debt restructuring mechanisms based on existing frameworks and principles, with broad creditors' and debtors' participation and ensuring comparable burden-sharing among creditors, with an important role for the Bretton Woods institutions.

Addressing systemic issues: enhancing the coherence and consistency of the international monetary, financial and trading systems in support of development

68. Some results have been achieved since Monterrey in addressing systemic issues, but significant additional progress is needed. This is all the more urgent given the current financial crisis. The progress expected after Monterrey with the mandated work of the multilateral financial institutions, including the role of IMF in strengthening surveillance, giving high priority to the identification and prevention of potential crises and strengthening the underpinnings of international financial stability, remains incomplete. The current financial crisis, as well as the continued weaknesses in the international financial system, further underline the need to strengthen the international financial architecture. The reform of the international financial architecture should focus on providing greater transparency and strengthening the voice and participation of developing countries and countries with economies in transition in international decision-making and norm-setting. Thus, we resolve to undertake appropriate and timely steps to improve the functioning of the international economic and financial system. It is essential to maintain the involvement of the United Nations in these undertakings. This is crucial for an integrated implementation of the Monterrey Consensus.

69. We resolve to strengthen the coordination of the United Nations system and all other multilateral financial, trade and development institutions to support economic growth, poverty eradication and sustainable development worldwide. Greater cooperation between the United Nations, the Bretton Woods institutions and the World Trade Organization is needed, based on a clear understanding and respect for their respective mandates and governance structures.

70. We encourage better coordination and enhanced coherence among relevant ministries in all countries to assist in the formulation and effective implementation of policies at all levels. We also encourage international financial and development institutions to continue to enhance policy coherence for development, taking into account diversified needs and changing circumstances. In order to complement national development efforts, we call upon all countries whose policies have an impact on developing countries to increase their efforts to formulate policies consistent with the objectives of sustained growth, poverty eradication and sustainable development of developing countries.

71. Stable international financial markets require sound macroeconomic and financial policies. It is crucial that all countries manage their macroeconomic and financial policies in ways that contribute to global stability and sustained economic growth and sustainable development. Solid and strong financial institutions at the national and international levels are essential pillars of a well-functioning international financial system. Countries should continue to pursue sound macroeconomic policies and, as appropriate, structural reform while also strengthening their financial systems and economic institutions.

72. New and highly globalized financial instruments continue to change the nature of risks in the world economy, requiring continuing enhancement of market oversight and regulation. To strengthen the resilience of the international financial system, we will implement reforms that will strengthen the regulatory and supervisory frameworks of financial markets as needed. We will strive to improve key accounting standards to remedy weaknesses and deficiencies, including those exposed by the current financial crisis. National regulators should enhance financial information and transparency at the domestic level. We will further enhance cooperation among national regulators from all countries to strengthen international financial standards. These efforts should address timely and adequate risk disclosure standards in order to improve the foundation of decisions of investors. There is also a need for enhanced transparency by financial institutions. Enhanced disclosure practices and transparency should assist efforts to reduce illicit capital flows.

73. We reaffirm that the international financial institutions, including the Bretton Woods institutions, need to be further reformed. The reformed multilateral financial institutions should have the technical capacities, credit facilities and financial resources to deal with the management and swift resolution of financial crises in a manner that elicits and facilitates international cooperation and that is consistent with their respective mandates. The international financial institutions should continue to foster the multilateral cooperation needed to restore and safeguard international monetary and financial stability and should stand ready to quickly make available sufficient resources to help countries in overcoming crises. The International Monetary Fund, in collaboration with an expanded and representative Financial Stability Forum and other bodies, should work to better identify vulnerabilities, anticipate potential stresses and act swiftly to play a key role in crisis response. Similarly, the World Bank can also play a significant role to mitigate the difficulties countries face. The Bretton Woods institutions must continue, within their respective mandates, to help developing countries to deal with the adverse effects of exogenous shocks, such as large fluctuations in the prices of key commodities, for example, through the reformed IMF Exogenous Shocks Facility. We also recognize the need for keeping under review the allocation of special drawing rights for development purposes.

74. Regional development banks play a vital role in supporting economic development and assisting regional integration efforts. We encourage continued cooperation and coordination among the regional development banks and other international financial institutions, as appropriate. We should review the adequacy of resources required to accomplish their tasks, as necessary. Other regional cooperation frameworks, such as financial and monetary arrangements that complement the international financial system, can be instrumental in fostering development and financial stability among their members and should be in line with multilateral frameworks, as appropriate. Those arrangements can facilitate financial flows and lower transaction costs and may serve as mechanisms that assist in the prevention of financial crises and render parties to such arrangements more resilient.

75. Credit rating agencies also play a significant role in the provision of information, including assessment of corporate and sovereign risks. The information provided by credit rating agencies should be based on broadly accepted, clearly defined, objective and transparent parameters. The ongoing financial crisis has revealed weaknesses and raised concerns about accounting standards and the way credit rating agencies currently operate. We will exercise strong oversight over credit rating agencies, consistent with the agreed and strengthened international code of conduct, and take additional action to strengthen financial market transparency and enhance the convergence of global accounting standards.

76. We recognize the need to address the often expressed concern at the extent of representation of developing countries in the major standard-setting bodies. We therefore welcome the proposed expansion of the membership in the Financial Stability Forum and encourage the major standard-setting bodies to review their membership promptly while enhancing their effectiveness.

77. We underscore that the Bretton Woods institutions must be comprehensively reformed so that they can more adequately reflect changing economic weights in the world economy and be more responsive to current and future challenges. We reaffirm that the enhancement of the voice and participation of developing countries in the Bretton Woods institutions, in accordance with their respective mandates, is central to strengthening the legitimacy and effectiveness of these institutions. We recognize the governance reforms that the international financial institutions have already undertaken, including the recent agreement regarding the quota review and voice reforms at IMF and related steps in the World Bank, and encourage further reforms in that direction.

78. Welcoming the ongoing international discussions on global economic governance structures, we acknowledge the need to ensure that all countries, including low-income countries, are able to effectively participate in this process.

This debate should review the international financial and monetary architecture and global economic governance structures in order to ensure a more effective and coordinated management of global issues. Such a debate should associate the United Nations, the World Bank, IMF and the World Trade Organization, should involve regional financial institutions and other relevant bodies and should take place in the context of the current initiatives aimed at improving the inclusiveness, legitimacy and effectiveness of the global economic governance structures. Greater cooperation among the United Nations, the Bretton Woods institutions and the World Trade Organization is needed, based on a clear understanding and respect for their respective mandates and governance structures.

79. The United Nations will hold a conference at the highest level on the world financial and economic crisis and its impact on development. The conference will be organized by the President of the General Assembly and the modalities will be defined by March 2009 at the latest.

Other new challenges and emerging issues

80. We commit ourselves to reinvigorating the global partnership for development in order to effectively address the full range of financing for development challenges facing the world today. We recognize that multiple financing for development challenges and opportunities have emerged since the Monterrey Conference, including the impact of the financial crisis, additional costs of climate change mitigation and adaptation and damage to the Earth's environment, price volatility in international markets of key commodities, expanding economic cooperation and the growing needs for reconstruction and development of post-conflict countries. We reaffirm our resolve to take concerted global action to address all these areas while consistently furthering economic and human development for all.

81. We are deeply concerned by the impact of the current financial crisis and global economic slowdown on the ability of developing countries to access the necessary financing for their development objectives. Developing countries and countries with economies in transition risk suffering very serious setbacks to their development objectives, in particular the achievement of the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals. It is critical to adopt further decisive and prompt actions to contain the current crisis and restore sustained economic growth. Given this global context, we call the attention of all donors to the situation and needs of the poorest and most vulnerable. We also urge all donors to maintain and deliver on their ODA commitments and call upon the international community, including the World Bank and IMF, to draw on the full range of their policy advice and resources, as appropriate, to help developing countries and countries with economies in transition to strengthen their economies, maintain growth and protect the most vulnerable groups against the severe impacts of the current crisis. In this context, it is also important for developing countries to maintain sound macroeconomic policies that support sustained economic growth and poverty eradication.

82. The concern of the international community about climate change has increased markedly since the adoption of the Monterrey Consensus. We reiterate the importance of reaching an agreed outcome at the fifteenth session of the Conference of the Parties to the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change, to be held in Copenhagen from 7 to 18 December 2009, and urge all parties to engage constructively in negotiations consistent with the Bali Action Plan. Ongoing and potential responses to tackle this phenomenon have major financing for development implications and will incur substantial additional costs on all countries, thus requiring additional resource mobilization, including from the private sector, particularly for developing countries to address the challenges of climate change, in order to support appropriate national adaptation and mitigation strategies and actions. We reiterate that it is critical to address the pressing needs of developing countries, especially those that are particularly vulnerable to the adverse impacts of climate change, such as the least developed countries, small island developing States, and other affected countries in Africa. In this regard, we urge all parties to engage in the ongoing process in a manner that will ensure an agreed outcome commensurate with the scope and urgency of the climate change challenge. The States parties to the Kyoto Protocol welcome the launching of the Adaptation Fund within the structure of the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change and look forward to its early operationalization with full support.

83. We also underscore the special challenges emerging from volatility in international commodity markets, particularly the volatility of food and energy prices. We take note of recent initiatives and will continue to mobilize resources to assist developing countries, in particular the least developed countries, in attaining food and energy security. At the same time, we recognize the necessity of a substantial sustainable expansion of food production in developing countries by enhancing investments and productivity in the agricultural sector, including in small-scale farms, promoting rural development and intensifying agricultural research. It is critical to eliminate barriers to food production, to improve processing and distribution over time and to have carefully targeted safety nets in the event of food crises. We recognize that food insecurity has multiple and complex causes and that its consequences require a comprehensive and coordinated response in the short, medium and long terms by national Governments and the international community. We thus encourage the development of an inclusive global partnership for agriculture and food. We acknowledge the work of the High-level Task Force on the Global Food Security Crisis established by the Secretary-General and encourage its continued engagement with States Members of the United Nations, relevant organizations, the private sector and, especially, farmers.

84. We acknowledge the recent volatility in energy markets and its impact on low- and middle-income countries. We will strengthen cooperation to develop energy systems that can assist in meeting development needs and are consistent with the efforts to stabilize the global climate, in accordance with the principle of common but differentiated responsibilities and respective capabilities. We will strengthen our efforts to substantially increase the share of renewable energies and to promote energy efficiency and conservation. We reaffirm that access to basic energy services and to clean and sustainable energy is important to eradicate extreme poverty and to achieve the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals.

85. We acknowledge the recent efforts to bring to light the particular challenges faced by middle-income countries in the area of development, poverty eradication and inequality. We note the conferences held in Madrid in March 2007, in Sonsonate, El Salvador, in October 2007 and in Windhoek in August 2008 on international development cooperation with middle-income countries. We welcome the positive impact of expanding economic relations among middle-income countries, as well as recent initiatives by the international financial institutions to enhance their facilities for them.

86. Consensus has emerged since Monterrey that countries emerging from conflict are an important part of the international agenda. Many of the poorest continue to live in post-conflict States where inadequate infrastructure and low investment prevent the delivery of basic social services and limit the productive capacity of the economy. We affirm the importance of providing seamless assistance to peacebuilding efforts, including humanitarian assistance, rehabilitation and nation building, and assistance for governance and the improvement of the social and economic infrastructure. We welcome the efforts of the international community to provide flexibility to post-conflict developing countries regarding debt relief and restructuring and stress the need to continue those efforts in order to help those countries, especially those that are heavily indebted and poor, to achieve initial reconstruction for economic and social development, particularly for the early recovery period. We will step up our efforts to assist countries in accessing financing for development in the post-conflict context. In this regard, we welcome the valuable work of the United Nations Peacebuilding Commission and the Peacebuilding Fund, as well as commitments outlined in the Accra Agenda for Action.

Staying engaged

87. We recommit ourselves to staying fully engaged, nationally, regionally and internationally, to ensuring proper and effective follow-up to the implementation of the Monterrey Consensus, taking into account the intergovernmentally agreed outcome document adopted at this Conference. We will also continue our unrelenting efforts to build bridges between all relevant stakeholders within the holistic agenda of the financing for development process. We appreciate the role played by the United Nations as a focal point for the financing for development follow-up process. It will be important to maintain this role to ensure the continuity and dynamism of our process. We reaffirm the need to further intensify the engagement of all stakeholders, including the United Nations system, the World Bank, IMF and the World Trade Organization, in the follow-up and implementation of the commitments made in Monterrey and reiterated here at Doha.

88. We recognize that maintaining a comprehensive and diverse multi-stakeholder follow-up process, including with civil society and the private sector, is critical. We also recognize the core responsibility of all participants in the financing for development process to exercise ownership of it and to implement their respective commitments. It is important that the follow-up process be undertaken in an integrated fashion, including through the continued engagement of all relevant ministries, in particular ministries of development, finance, trade and foreign affairs. An integrated treatment of financing for development issues in national development plans is also important in enhancing national ownership and implementation of financing for development. The international community should continue to draw upon the expertise, data and analysis available in multiple forums, while enhancing information-sharing and dialogue between the various United Nations and non-United Nations bodies that monitor progress on financing for development issues. There is substantial room to enhance the sharing of best practices.

89. We acknowledge the need for a strengthened and more effective intergovernmental inclusive process to carry out the financing for development follow-up, which would review progress in the implementation of commitments, identify obstacles, challenges and emerging issues and propose concrete recommendations and actions, taking into account various proposals that have been put forward. We request the Economic and Social Council to consider this matter during its spring meeting and at its substantive session of 2009, in consultation with all relevant stakeholders, with a view to making appropriate and timely recommendations for final action by the General Assembly as early as possible in its sixty-fourth session.

90. We will consider the need to hold a follow-up financing for development conference by 2013.

Preparatory process

Economic and Social Council consideration.

By decision 2008/235 of 23 July, the Economic and Social Council decided to transmit to the General Assembly agreed conclusions adopted on 13 May by the Commission on the Status of Women at its fifty-second session (see p. 1278) as an input to the preparations for and outcome of the Follow-up International Conference on Financing for Development to Review the Implementation of the Monterrey Consensus. The Commission reaffirmed the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action [YUN 1995, p. 1170], in which it was emphasized that political commitment was needed to make available resources for the empowerment of women and that funding had to be identified and mobilized from all sources and across all sectors to achieve the goals of gender equality and the empowerment of women; and the outcome of the Assembly's twenty-third special session [YUN 2000, p. 1082], in which Governments were called on to incorporate a gender perspective into the design, development, adoption and execution of all policies and budgetary processes to promote equitable, effective and appropriate resource allocation and establish adequate budgetary allocations to support gender equality and development programmes that enhanced women's empowerment.

UNCTAD consideration. At its fifty-fifth session (Geneva, 15–26 September) [A/63/15 (Part IV)], TDB requested the extended Bureau to decide on the holding of an executive session in mid-November to provide input to the Follow-up International Conference on Financing for Development.

TDB, at its forty-fifth executive session (Geneva, 13 November) [TD/B/EX(45)/3], considered an October UNCTAD secretariat note [TD/B/EX(45)/2] that reviewed the six chapters of the Monterrey Consensus, ranging from mobilization of domestic resources for development to official flows and coherence of the international monetary, financial and trading systems. It highlighted the new features that had evolved in the world economy since the adoption of the Monterrey Consensus in 2002, such as the paradox of capital flows, the speculation in commodity markets and the shortcomings in the functioning of financial markets, and suggested main issues for consideration by the Board, updated to take account of recent developments in the financial and economic environment. The note also addressed implications for developing countries of the financial market crisis and pointed to the need for strengthening global coordination on monetary and financial matters.

The President, in his summary of the meeting, stated that it was an opportunity for States to express their views on the objectives and process of a reform of global economic governance just before the G-20 summit meeting in Washington, D.C. (see p. 1068), scheduled to launch a global effort to reform the international monetary and financial system. Speakers emphasized that the financial and economic crisis called for global solutions to stabilize the system and prevent future crises, and recognized that a shift in thinking had taken place—from purely market-driven solutions towards measures involving an active role of the State. There was a general hope that the Doha Conference would prepare the ground for a comprehensive follow-up to, and strengthening of, the financing for development process, and would help put in place a new approach to development, taking account of lessons to be learned from the crisis and the need to reform the international economic system in order to overcome systemic weaknesses.

The Board agreed that the crisis showed the need, in an increasingly globalized economy, for stronger economic governance, building on the principles of multilateralism with a clear set of global financial rules and regulations. There was broad agreement on the need to examine, with the participation of all States, the international financial system and to address the issue of systemic coherence. The United Nations had the universality of membership, the political credibility and the competence to play a key role in the process of revising the global economic architecture, as well as the legitimacy and confidence of the global community to make that role viable. The debate reflected agreement that the Doha Conference should provide new impetus to the implementation of the Monterrey Consensus and contribute to ensuring that the financial turmoil did not compromise the engagement of the international community in the financing of development. Moreover, it should strengthen the gender dimension and respond to new challenges, such as climate change, the food crisis and energy security.

Participants put forward a number of recommendations to the Conference. Under the sub-theme on mobilizing domestic financial resources for development, they recommended that developing countries should give that issue heightened attention. In particular, special attention should be given to enhancing the role of the banking system in the financing of productive investment, tax collection should be made more effective through greater transparency in rules and regulations, and international cooperation in tax matters should be strengthened. As to the sub-theme on mobilizing international resources for development: FDI and other private flows, efforts should be made to avoid a drop in private capital flows to developing countries; particular support should be given to South-South flows of FDI; and the role of sovereign wealth funds from developing countries in meeting the external financing needs of other developing countries should be strengthened. Efforts to reform the international financial architecture should contain speculation in international financial and currency markets in order to reduce the instability of private capital flows to developing countries. Under the sub-theme on international trade as an engine for development, TDB stressed the importance for developing countries that the financial crisis and the economic slowdown did not lead to a new wave of protectionism. The deadlock in the Doha Round (see p. 1050) should be broken, and efforts to achieve an outcome that reflected the interests of developing countries should be reinforced. Developing countries, especially in Africa, needed to address supply-side constraints, which should be supported by further opening of developed country markets for exports of interest to developing countries. Increased attention should be given to the commodity problem; reforms of the international financial system should also reduce speculation in international commodity markets; and the international community should support national efforts to integrate local producers into international supply chains and innovative financing and risk management tools for agricultural commodity producers.

In relation to the sub-theme on increasing international financial and technical cooperation for development, priority should be given to meeting the new challenges faced by the world's poor as a result of the financial crisis and the recession in the developed countries. The Doha Conference should therefore pay attention to the continuation and increase of ODA flows, especially for countries suffering from a decline in public revenue, should urge the implementation of aid commitments already made by bilateral donors to close the MDG financing gap and, in that context, debt relief should not be considered as part of ODA. Increased official financing to assist developing countries was also necessary and aid had to be provided on a predictable and sustained basis. The development of a framework for Aid for Trade was imperative for countries to reap the potential benefits from trade, as was the Enhanced Integrated Framework and the provision of additional resources for trade financing. The international community should bring forward innovative financing mechanisms, and a new IMF facility should be created to stop the crisis spillover to middle-income countries. Under the sub-theme on external debt, bolder initiatives should be taken to solve the external debt problems of developing countries, particularly in those most affected by reduced foreign exchange incomes and higher costs of their external debt. It was important to achieve and maintain sustainable debt situations in developing countries, and debt sustainability strategies should be linked to a country's capacity to achieve its national development goals.

As to the sub-theme on addressing systemic issues: enhancing the coherence and consistency of the international monetary, financial and trading systems in support of development, in the short term, efforts should ensure a global policy response to restore financial stability and economic growth, and measures should help markets regain confidence and stimulate demand in order to combat a credit crunch and mitigate the impact of the crisis on output growth and employment. Fiscal and monetary policy instruments should be used and implemented. In the medium and long term, Governments should play a more active role in the management of the financial system by strengthening the regulation and supervision of financial intermediaries. The role of credit rating agencies should be reassessed and their activities subjected to stronger public scrutiny. To avoid future crises and reduce the risk of excessive speculation, early-warning systems should be established. The financial system should be reformed around the core principles of transparency, integrity, responsibility, sound banking practice and international governance, and globally acceptable standards of supervision should be elaborated and applied equally in all countries. The international monetary and financial system should be better equipped with instruments to prevent prolonged exchange-rate misalignments and currency speculation, and, in order to achieve coherence between the international trading and financial systems and avoid large current account imbalances, a multilateral exchange rate mechanism and macroeconomic policy should become central in a new economic governance system. Monitoring and surveillance of the financial system through an international body should be strengthened and cover all economies, especially those whose national economic policies and performances had an impact on the rest of the world. The debate on the lessons from the crisis and the process of reform of the economic governance system should take place with universal, democratic and equitable participation of all States, and developing countries should be included in the decision-making and norm-setting processes of the key financial, monetary and trading institutions.

There was a widespread view among delegations that the Doha Conference should be seized to bring developing country concerns to bear on the process of consensus-building on a better international financial architecture. Because of its broad political legitimacy, and adequate representation of different groups of developing countries, the UN system was perceived as having a particular legitimacy to play a key role in international financial reform. UNCTAD was called upon to help contain the negative effects of the crisis on developing countries, building on its proven competence in policy analysis and technical cooperation.

Communications. On 6 October [A/C.2/63/2], Chile transmitted to the Secretary-General the Declaration on Innovative Sources of Financing for Development of the initiative "Action against Hunger and Poverty", adopted on 25 September at the UN High-level Event on the MDGs (see p. 926).

On the same date [A/C.2/63/3], Namibia transmitted to the Secretary-General the Windhoek Ministerial Declaration on Development Cooperation with Middle-Income Countries, adopted at the third International Conference on Development Cooperation with Middle-Income Countries (Windhoek, 4–6 August).

On 8 July [A/63/123], Italy transmitted to the Secretary-General a resolution entitled "Parliamentary oversight of State policies on foreign aid", adopted by the one hundred and eighteenth Assembly of the Inter-Parliamentary Union (Cape Town, South Africa, 13–18 April).

General Assembly action. On 18 November, the General Assembly decided that the arrangements and organization of work of the Follow-up International Conference on Financing for Development would be as set out in the note of the Secretary-General [A/63/345] (decision 63/509). It also decided to recommend for adoption by the Follow-up Conference the provisional rules of procedure for the Conference [A/CONF.212/2] (decision 63/510) and the provisional agenda annexed to its decision (decision 63/511), and to accredit to the Conference three intergovernmental organizations (decision 63/512) and 46 NGOs (decision 63/513).

On 24 December, the Assembly decided that the agenda item "Follow-up to and implementation of the outcome of the 2002 International Conference on Financing for Development and the preparation of the 2008 Review Conference" would remain for consideration at its resumed sixty-third (2009) session (decision 63/552).

Investment, technology and related financial issues

The UNCTAD Commission on Investment, Technology and Related Financial Issues held its twelfth session in Geneva on 12 and 13 February [TD/B/COM.2/82]. It had before it a progress report [TD/B/COM.2/81] on the implementation of the recommendations adopted by the Commission at its eleventh session [YUN 2007, p. 994] and on the Commission's work since UNCTAD XI [YUN 2004, p. 954]. The report focused on UNCTAD's work on policies and measures to help developing countries attract and benefit more from FDI and build productive capacities and international competitiveness, including in-depth analysis, consensus-building and the provision of technical assistance and capacity-building. The work was carried out in cooperation and joint programmes with other related international, regional and national institutions.

On the question of FDI and financing for development, the Commission was briefed by the secretariat on issues discussed in the two panels on trends and on financing infrastructure, highlighting the policy challenges related to the maximization of benefits that countries could achieve from FDI and the need to explore the potential synergies between ODA and FDI in the context of the development of infrastructure industries. It also received the reports of expert meetings on: development implications of international investment-rule-making; and comparing best practices for creating an environment conducive to maximizing development benefits, economic growth and investment in developing countries and countries with economies in transition [YUN 2007, p. 995].

Concerning implementation of the Commission's recommendations, the Chairman's summary stated that delegates called on UNCTAD to: examine the discrepancy between investment images of developing countries and countries with economies in transition and their actual investment climate; study public-private partnerships and particularly the identification of related investment policy tools; examine member countries' legislation related to restrictions of FDI due to national security protection considerations, with a view to increasing transparency and predictability; and analyse the issue of reciprocity in investment treaties and the correlation between the bilateral and multilateral levels of FDI regulation. UNCTAD was urged to produce guidelines to raise the awareness of countries concerning that problem.

TDB, at its twenty-fourth special session (Geneva, 17–20 March) [A/63/15 (Part II)], took note of the Commission's report.

Competition law and policy

The Intergovernmental Group of Experts on Competition Law and Policy, at its ninth session (Geneva, 15–18 July) [TD/B/COM.2/CLP/72], had before it UNCTAD secretariat reports on: abuse of dominance [TD/B/COM.2/CLP/66], review of capacity-building and technical assistance in the area of competition law and policy [TD/B/COM.2/CLP/70], recent important competition cases involving more than one country [TD/B/COM.2/CLP/71], the attribution of competence to community and national competition authorities in the application of competition rules [TD/B/COM.2/CLP/69], competition policy and the exercise of intellectual property rights [TD/B/COM.2/CLP/68], and independence and accountability of competition authorities [TD/B/COM.2/CLP/67]. It also had before it the Handbook on Competition Legislation [TD/B/COM.2/CLP/64]. The Group focused on peer reviews on competition law and policy; review of the Model Law on Competition; studies related to the provisions of the 1980 Set of Multilaterally Agreed Equitable Principles and Rules for the Control of Restrictive Business Practices (known as the Set) [YUN 1980, p. 626]; and its work programme.

In agreed conclusions, the Group of Experts recognized the progress achieved in the elaboration and enforcement of Costa Rica's competition law, and invited States to assist UNCTAD by providing experts or other resources for future activities in connection with voluntary peer reviews. It decided that UNCTAD should undertake a further voluntary peer review on the competition law and policy of a member State or regional grouping of States, during the Group's tenth session; emphasized the importance of independence and accountability of competition authorities; and requested the UNCTAD secretariat to disseminate the summary of the Group's discussions on the topic to interested States, including through its technical cooperation activities, and to prepare a report based on contributions from States for submission to its tenth session. UNCTAD should also promote and support cooperation between competition authorities and Governments, in accordance with paragraphs 103 and 211 of the Accra Accord (see p. 1042). The tenth session of the Intergovernmental Group should consider the following issues for better implementation of the Set: public monopolies, concessions, and competition law and policy; the relationship between competition and industrial policies in promoting economic development; and voluntary peer review on the competition law and policy of Indonesia. The UNCTAD secretariat should prepare reports on those issues, with a view to facilitating the consultations at the peer review, an executive summary of the peer review report in all working languages and a full report in its original language for submission to the Group's tenth session. The secretariat should include on its website an updated review of capacity-building and technical assistance; further issues of the Handbook on Competition Legislation containing commentaries on national competition legislation as the base for further revision and updating of the Model Law; and an updated version of the Directory of Competition Authorities. The Group requested States to assist UNCTAD by providing experts, training facilities or financial resources, and urged the secretariat to focus its capacity-building and technical cooperation activities (including training) on maximizing their impact in all regions.

International standards of accounting and reporting

The Intergovernmental Working Group of Experts on International Standards of Accounting and Reporting (ISAR), at its twenty-fifth session (Geneva, 4–6 November) [TD/B/C.II/ISAR/51 & Corr.1,2], had before it UNCTAD secretariat notes on the 2008 reviews of: the implementation status of corporate governance disclosures: an examination of reporting practices among large enterprises in 10 emerging markets [TD/B/C.II/ISAR/CRP.1], the reporting status of corporate responsibility indicators [TD/B/C.II/ISAR/CRP.2], and the corporate responsibility performance of large emerging market enterprises [TD/B/C.II/ISAR/CRP.3]; as well as notes on: the review of practical implementation issues of international financial reporting standards (IFRS) [TD/B/COM.2/ISAR/28]; guidance on corporate responsibility indicators in annual reports [TD/B/COM.2/ISAR/41]; reviews of practical implementation issues relating to IFRS: case studies of Egypt [TD/B/C.II/ISAR/45], Poland [TD/B/C.II/ISAR/46], Switzerland [TD/B/C.II/ISAR/47] and the United Kingdom [TD/B/C.II/ISAR/48]; practical challenges and related considerations in implementing international standards on auditing (ISAs) [TD/B/C.II/ISAR/49]; and Accounting and Financial Reporting Guidelines for SMEs (SMEGA): level 3 guidance [TD/B/C.II/ISAR/50].

In agreed conclusions, the Working Group noted the country case studies on the implementation of IFRS and the study on implementation of ISAs. It highlighted a number of technical and institutional challenges in their implementation, requested the UNCTAD secretariat to continue conducting studies on their practical implementation, and expressed appreciation to the secretariat for the publication Practical Implementation of International Financial Reporting Standards: Lessons Learned [UNCTAD/DIAE/ED/2008/1], requested at its twenty-fourth session [YUN 2007, p. 996]. It reviewed the revised version of SMEGA level 3 guidance and requested the secretariat to finalize its publication and disseminate it widely, as well as to compile feedback on its implementation to facilitate further revision. The Working Group deliberated on the growing demand for technical and institutional capacity-building in financial reporting, auditing, corporate governance disclosure and reporting, and agreed to communicate to the secretariat requests for technical cooperation, with a view to addressing such requests through bilateral or multilateral technical cooperation projects.

A high-level segment on financial stability and ISAR agreed on the need for further consultations and deliberations on the implications of the credit crisis for corporate financial reporting vis-à-vis financial stability challenges, and requested the secretariat to organize a special meeting to address those matters. At the Chairpersons round table, experts agreed to set up a small group to provide advisory support to the UNCTAD secretariat, and requested the secretariat to make arrangements for the group's establishment and to explore the possibilities of integrating deliberations on implementation of International Public Sector Accounting Standards (IPSAS) into UNCTAD's institutional framework and, in cooperation with the IPSAS Board, to organize technical capacity-building workshops and seminars to assist States in implementing IPSAS. Noting the 2008 review of the implementation status of corporate governance disclosures, the Working Group requested the secretariat to continue to carry out such studies, with a focus on providing information to policymakers, investors and other stakeholders. With respect to the other reviews (see above), UNCTAD should work with the investment analysis community and other experts to provide better understanding of the relationship between investment—particularly in developing countries—and the disclosure practices of enterprises on environmental, social and governance issues, and should also conduct further studies on the voluntary use of corporate responsibility reporting frameworks around the world. The Group welcomed the signing of a memorandum of understanding between UNCTAD and the Global Reporting Initiative.

Strengthening transparency in industries

On 11 September [meeting 121], the General Assembly adopted resolution 62/274 [draft: A/62/L.41/Rev.1 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 56].

Taxation

In March, the Secretary-General submitted to the Economic and Social Council a report on the financing of the Committee of Experts on International Cooperation in Tax Matters [E/2008/4], which addressed the funding of two key areas of the Committee's work: its working methods, specifically the work of its subcommittees and working groups; and its capacity-building activities in support of developing countries and countries with economies in transition. An amount of $324,600 had been appropriated under section 9, Economic and social affairs, of the 2008–2009 programme budget to support the participation of Committee members at its annual sessions in Geneva. However, no funds had been appropriated under the regular budget for the intersessional meetings and working groups, which had to rely on the goodwill of its members and on funding by their employers. The average cost per meeting of the subcommittees and working groups over the biennium was estimated at $27,600 for travel and per diem costs for their members, and an additional $35,000 for one staff member. For the biennium, $367,000 would be required to cover 12 intersessional meetings. In terms of funding options, the Council might wish to consider either providing additional regular budget resources for all 12 meetings, or funding from the regular budget of only a fixed number of meetings for the biennium. While funding through voluntary contributions was an option, the uncertainty of their level would make it difficult to plan the activities of the various subcommittees and working groups and would not guarantee adequate representation from developing countries. In addition, voluntary contributions might be earmarked for specific subcommittees or working groups only, thereby resulting in uneven progress.

As to the provision of capacity-building activities in support of developing countries and countries with economies in transition, as requested by the Council in resolution 2006/48 [YUN 2006, p. 1139], an amount of $450,000 in voluntary contributions would be required during 2008–2009 to conduct at least five regional training workshops and cover the cost of travel and per diem of workshop participants, expert trainers and staff members, including other logistical workshop-related costs. In addition to offers from States to host such capacity-building activities, most of those activities were to be funded through voluntary contributions to the trust fund for tax cooperation matters referred to in Council resolution 2007/39 [YUN 2007, p. 997]. Despite frequent calls for contributions, no funds had been pledged. The Council might wish to further encourage States to make contributions to the trust fund.

By decision 2008/211 of 29 April, the Council deferred consideration of the Secretary-General's report on financing of the Committee to its 2008 substantive session.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 24 July [meeting 42], the Economic and Social Council, having considered the report of the third session of the Committee of Experts on International Cooperation in Tax Matters [YUN 2007, p. 997] and the Secretary-General's report on the financing of the Committee (see above), adopted resolution 2008/16 [draft: E/2008/L.27] without vote [agenda item 13 (b)].

Committee of Experts on International Cooperation in Tax Matters

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolution 2004/69 of 11 November 2004, in which the Council decided that the Ad Hoc Group of Experts on International Cooperation in Tax Matters would be renamed the Committee of Experts on International Cooperation in Tax Matters,

Recognizing the call made in the Monterrey Consensus of the International Conference on Financing for Development for the strengthening of international tax cooperation through enhanced dialogue among national tax authorities and greater coordination of the work of the concerned multilateral bodies and relevant regional organizations, giving special attention to the needs of developing countries and countries with economies in transition,

Recalling the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of and follow-up to commitments and agreements made at the International Conference on Financing for Development and the recommendations contained therein,

Recognizing the need for an inclusive, participatory and broad-based dialogue on international cooperation in tax matters,

Noting the activities developing within the concerned multilateral bodies and relevant subregional and regional organizations,

1. Takes note of the report of the Committee of Experts on International Cooperation in Tax Matters on its third session and the significant progress made in the work of the Committee;

2. Also takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the Committee of Experts on International Cooperation in Tax Matters, taking into account the issues raised by the Committee at its second and third sessions;

3. Recognizes that the Committee agreed to create, as necessary, ad hoc subcommittees composed of experts and observers who would work according to the Committee's rules of procedure to prepare and determine the supporting documentation for the agenda items, including requests for papers by independent experts, for consideration at its regular session;

4. Notes that five subcommittees on substantive matters, namely, the improper use of treaties, the definition of permanent establishment, the exchange of information, including a possible code of conduct on cooperation in combating international tax evasion, dispute resolution and the treatment of Islamic financial instruments, and two working groups, on the revision of the Manual for the Negotiation of Bilateral Tax Treaties between Developed and Developing Countries and on general issues in the revision of the commentaries on the articles of the United Nations Model Double Taxation Convention between Developed and Developing Countries, have been created and are currently working intersessionally;

5. Also notes the importance of adequate representation from developing countries in the meetings of the subcommittees and working groups, and in this regard invites the Secretary-General to intensify efforts to seek appropriate resources;

6. Further notes the establishment of the trust fund by the Secretary-General to supplement regular budget resources, and urges all Member States and relevant organizations to contribute generously to the fund;

7. Invites the Committee to work with the Secretariat on organizing training workshops, in collaboration with concerned multilateral bodies, and regional, subregional and relevant international organizations, for developing countries and countries with economies in transition as part of the work required to carry out its mandate, which includes making recommendations on capacity-building and providing technical assistance, provided that funding is available from the trust fund;

8. Decides that the fourth session of the Committee shall be convened in Geneva from 20 to 24 October 2008;

9. Approves the provisional agenda for the fourth session of the Committee as contained in its report on its third session.

Fourth meeting of Committee of Experts.

In accordance with Council resolution 2008/16, the fourth session of the Committee of Experts on International Cooperation in Tax Matters was held in Geneva from 20 to 24 October [E/2008/45]. The Committee discussed general issues in the revision of the commentaries [E/C.18/2008/CRP.1 & Add.1]; taxation of development projects; definition of permanent establishment [E/C.18/2008/CRP.3]; improper use of treaties [E/C.18/2008/CRP.2 & Add.1]; exchange of information, including the proposed United Nations Code of Conduct on Cooperation in Combating International Tax Evasion and Avoidance [E/C.18/2008/3 & Corr.1 & Add.1 & Add.1/Corr.1]; revision of the United Nations Manual for the Negotiation of Bilateral Tax Treaties between Developed and Developing Countries [E/C.18/2008/CRP.5 & Add.1,2]; dispute resolution [E/C.18/2008/CRP.6 & Add.1]; and treatment of Islamic financial instruments [E/C.18/2008/4 & Corr.1]. The Secretariat also gave a briefing on the linkage of the mandate and work of the Committee to the Follow-up International Conference on Financing for Development to Review the Implementation of the Monterrey Consensus [E/C.18/2008/2] (see p. 1076).

The Committee, in respect of general issues in the revision of the commentaries, asked the Working Group on General Issues in the Review of Commentaries to continue considering the topic, with a view to a further paper available to the Committee's new membership in 2009. Concerning taxation of development projects, participants were urged to discuss the guidelines presented in 2007 [YUN 2007, p. 997] with their relevant ministries or agencies. As to the definition of permanent establishment, the Committee noted the final redrafted commentary on the text of article 5, the suggested improvements and an accompanying commentary. It also noted the proposals submitted by the Subcommittee on Permanent Establishment, including the treatment of article 14 and possible deletion; taxation of fees for technical services; treatment of services and a provision for services under article 5. Regarding the retention or deletion of article 14, the Subcommittee was asked to reconfigure the way it was addressed, so that the article was retained in the UN Model Convention; provide an alternative to its removal and apply articles 5 and 7 to situations previously dealt with under article 14; and focus on an alternative to article 14, with a view to completing consideration by June 2009. The Subcommittee was asked to commence its work with a view to achieving as much as possible before July 2009, when its new members would commence their terms of office. As to improper use of treaties, the Committee concluded that there was a need to refine the concept of beneficial ownership, including by examining developments in the OECD Model Convention, and agreed that the paper submitted by the consultant [E/C.18/2008/CRP.2 & Add.1] could contribute to improved understanding through its inclusion in the Manual for the Negotiation of Bilateral Tax Treaties between Developed and Developing Countries. The Committee agreed that practical application of the concept of beneficial ownership should be recommended to its next membership for consideration, and elaborated on in the Manual. In that respect, any cases and materials on that application in developing countries would be taken into account. It also agreed that the Subcommittee on Improper Use of Treaties should not consider the issue further, and considered proposed additions to the UN Model Convention and commentary addressing approaches for dealing with the improper use of treaties. The Committee agreed that the Subcommittee should continue its work on the proposed UN Code of Conduct on Cooperation in Combating International Tax Evasion and Avoidance, and that an updated version of the Code should be made available by the time of the Follow-up International Conference on Financing for Development. Concerning dispute resolution, it was agreed that a recommendation should be made to the following membership on the importance of improving the mutual agreement procedures and addressing the possibilities for arbitration (either in the UN Model Convention or as an alternative provision). The format of the Manual for the Negotiation of Bilateral Tax Treaties between Developed and Developing Countries was approved, and it was agreed that the Working Group should take into account the current discussions. Concerning the treatment of Islamic financial instruments, the Committee noted that the Working Group had proposed wording for new paragraphs 20.1 to 20.4 of the commentary of the UN Model Convention, which would be inserted between quoted paragraphs 21.1 and 22 of the commentary of the OECD Model Convention. It also noted that other articles might need to be amended to deal with specific Islamic financial instruments, but that it was better to wait until the part of the Manual dealing with such financing had been released and there had been an opportunity to comment thereon.

Transport

Maritime transport

The Review of Maritime Transport, 2008 [Sales No. E.08.II.D.26], prepared by the UNCTAD secretariat, reported that world seaborne trade reached 8.02 billion tons of goods loaded in 2007, a volume increase of 4.8 per cent over the previous year. Dry cargo, including bulk, break-bulk and containerized cargo, accounted for the largest share of goods loaded (66.6 per cent), with oil making up the balance. Measured in ton-miles, world seaborne trade was estimated at 32,932 billion ton-miles in 2007. Strong consumer demand and rapid industrial expansion in emerging developing economies continued to drive growth in world seaborne trade. The world merchant fleet expanded by 7.2 per cent to 1.12 billion deadweight tons (dwt) at the beginning of 2008. The tonnage of oil tankers increased by 6.5 per cent and that of bulk carriers by 6.4 per cent, together representing 71.5 per cent of total tonnage. The fleet of general cargo ships increased by 4.5 per cent in 2007, while the fleet of container ships increased by 16.3 million dwt, or 12 per cent, representing 12.9 per cent of the total world fleet. Total tonnage on order was at its highest level, reaching 10,000 vessels, with a total tonnage of almost 500 million dwt. It consisted of 125 million dwt of oil tankers, 8 million dwt of general cargo vessels, 78 million tons of container ships and 57 million dwt of other vessel types.

As to fleet ownership, at the beginning of 2008, nationals of the 35 top ship-owning economies controlled 95.35 per cent of the world fleet. Greece, the country with the largest fleet, followed by Japan, Germany, China and Norway, together held a market share of 54.2 per cent. Among developing countries, oil exporters controlled a relatively high share of oil tankers, while large exporters of agricultural commodities and other dry bulk tended to be host to dry bulk shipping companies.

Transport of dangerous goods

The Committee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods and on the Globally Harmonized System of Classification and Labelling of Chemicals, at its fourth session (Geneva, 12 December) [ST/SG/AC.10/36 & Corr.1 & Add.1–3 & Add.1/Corr.1 & Add.2/Corr.1], took note of Economic and Social Council decision 2008/201 C of 29 April, approving the application of Nigeria [E/2008/9/Add.12] for membership in the Subcommittee of Experts on the Globally Harmonized System of Classification and Labelling of Chemicals. It also noted the publication of the revised Recommendations on the Transport of Dangerous Goods, Model Regulations [ST/SG/AC.10/1/Rev.15], Amendment 2 to the fourth revised edition of the Recommendations on the Transport of Dangerous Goods, Manual of Test and Criteria [ST/SG/AC.10/11/Rev.4/Amtd.2] and the second revised edition of the Globally Harmonized System of Classification and Labelling of Chemicals (GHS) [ST/SG/AC.10/30/Rev.2] in all UN official languages.

The Committee took note of the reports of the Subcommittee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods on its thirty-first and thirty-second [YUN 2007, p. 998], as well as its thirty-third (Geneva, 30 June–9 July) [ST/SG/AC.10/C.3/66 & Add.1] and thirty-fourth (Geneva, 1–9 December) [ST/SG/AC.10/C.3/68] sessions. It endorsed the reports, including the amendments to the recommendations on the transport of dangerous goods and the new recommendations made, annexed to the report. The Committee also endorsed the reports of the Subcommittee of Experts on GHS on its thirteenth, fourteenth [YUN 2007, p. 998], fifteenth (Geneva, 9–11 July) [ST/SG/AC.10/C.4/30] and sixteenth (Geneva, 10–12 December) [ST/SG/AC.10/C.4/32] sessions, including the amendments to the text of GHS and the new provisions adopted, annexed to its report. It approved the programme of work of the two Subcommittees, agreed on the schedules of their 2009 meetings and adopted a draft resolution for consideration by the Economic and Social Council in 2009.

UNCTAD institutional and organizational questions

The United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) held its twelfth session (UNCTAD XII) in Accra, Ghana, from 20 to 25 April, at which it adopted the Accra Declaration and the Accra Accord, which contained a number of actions to strengthen its institutional bodies (see p. 1042). Its governing body, the Trade and Development Board (TDB), held the following sessions, all in Geneva: twenty-fourth special session (17–20 March); forty-third (3 March), forty-fourth (10 July) and forty-fifth (13 November) executive sessions; and fifty-fifth annual session (15–26 September) [A/63/15 (Parts I–IV) & TD/B/EX(45)/3].

TDB, on 3 March, received a special address by the UN Secretary-General, which stressed that UNCTAD XII could contribute to building an international economic environment that fostered development.

In March, TDB received a briefing by Ghana on the preparations for UNCTAD XII. It took note of the reports of the twelfth sessions of the Commission on Trade in Goods and Services, and Commodities, the Commission on Investment, Technology and Related Financial Issues and the Commission on Enterprise, Business Facilitation and Development. TDB approved the membership of Kazakhstan and Montenegro in the Board and the addition of Estonia, Montenegro and Kazakhstan to list D of the lists of States referred to in General Assembly resolution 1995(XIX) [YUN 1964, p. 210]. It also accepted the change requested by Group D that the approval of Kazakhstan's application would be without prejudice to the composition of the five UN regional groups for the purpose of distribution of posts within the Assembly and its bodies.

In July, TDB approved the agendas for the first sessions of the Trade and Development Commission and of the Investment, Enterprise and Development Commission. It also approved the topics for multi-year expert meetings—transport and trade facilitation; enterprise development policies and capacity-building in science, technology and innovation; services, development and trade: the regulatory and institutional dimension; commodities and development; and investment for development—as well as the terms of reference of the expert meetings for the first three topics, annexed to its report; and authorized the extended Bureau to finalize and approve the topics and terms of reference for the three others. The Board approved the calendar of meetings for the remainder of 2008 and the first half of 2009.

In September, TDB adopted agreed conclusions on: review of progress in the implementation of the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries (LDCs) for the Decade 2001–2010; economic development in Africa: trade liberalization and export performance in Africa; and review of technical cooperation activities of UNCTAD and their financing. It took note of the forty-first annual report on the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law [A/63/17], the report of the forty-first session of the Joint Advisory Group (JAG) on the International Trade Centre (ITC) [ITC/AG(XLI)/216], and the secretariat report on progress made in the implementation of the outcomes of the major UN conferences and summits and UNCTAD's contribution [TD/B/55/7]. It also took note of the reports of the fiftieth [TD/B/WP/200] and fifty-first [TD/B/WP/206] sessions of the Working Party on the Medium-term Plan and the Programme Budget, endorsed the conclusions contained therein and adopted the draft decision contained in the report of the fifty-first session.

TDB took note of the report by the President of the Advisory Body set up in accordance with the Bangkok Plan of Action [YUN 2000, p. 891] on the implementation of courses by the secretariat in 2007–2008 and their relevant impact; of the UNCTAD secretariat report [TD/B/55/2] on assistance to the Palestinian people; and of the summary of a hearing with civil society. It approved topics and terms of reference for multi-year and single-year expert meetings and asked the secretariat to issue a compilation as an official document [TD/B/55/9]. It requested the extended Bureau to meet to decide on the holding of an executive session in mid-November, with a view to providing input to the Follow-up International Conference on Financing for Development to Review the Implementation of the Monterrey Consensus (see p. 1076).

In November, TDB discussed the agenda item on financing for development: Follow-up International Conference on Financing for Development, and adopted a number of recommendations to the Conference.

Appointment of UNCTAD Secretary-General. By decision 63/552 of 24 December, the General Assembly deferred consideration of the sub-item “Confirmation of the appointment of the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development” until its resumed sixty-third (2009) session.

Working Party. The Working Party on the Medium-term Plan and the Programme Budget held two sessions in Geneva: fiftieth (16–20 June) [TD/B/WP/200] and fifty-first (1–5 September) [TD/B/WP/206] sessions.

Technical cooperation

In a July report [TD/B/WP/202 & Add.1,2 & Add.1/Corr.1], the UNCTAD Secretary-General provided a review of technical cooperation activities in 2007. Contributions to UNCTAD voluntary trust funds amounted to $36.8 million, reflecting, in nominal terms, a 26.4 per cent increase over the previous year. Although the depreciation of the United States dollar in the last quarter of 2007 played a role in shaping the dollar amount and the rate at which the contribution grew in 2007, the increase was mainly attributable to a marked growth of resources provided by developed countries and multilateral donors. Developed countries' contributions accounted for 58 per cent ($21.3 million) of the total contributions, an increase of 30 per cent in nominal terms. Contributions from developing countries and economies in transition declined by 17 per cent, and accounted for 21 per cent ($7.7 million) of total contributions. Contributions from multilateral donors increased sharply, with the European Commission providing $5.3 million, a 127 per cent increase over the previous year or 14.5 per cent of total contributions, and the UN system $1.9 million, or 5.2 per cent. The private and public sectors provided $0.7 million, or 1.8 per cent of contributions. UNCTAD technical cooperation expenditures contracted by over 10 per cent to $31.5 million.

By region, $6.7 million (21.4 per cent) went to Asia and the Pacific, $6.2 million (19.8 per cent) to Africa, $3.1 million (9.7 per cent) to Latin America and the Caribbean, and $0.7 million (2.2 per cent) to Europe. LDCs accounted for 41.5 per cent of total delivery. By programme, services infrastructure for development and trade efficiency accounted for 43.2 per cent ($13.6 million) of total expenditures; international trade in goods and services, and commodities, 19.6 per cent ($6.2 million); globalization and development strategies, 16.6 per cent ($5.2 million); investment, technology and enterprise development, 12.4 per cent ($3.9 million); Africa, LDCs and special programmes, 4.3 per cent ($1.3 million); UN regular programme of technical cooperation, 3.3 per cent ($1 million); executive direction and management and support services, 0.4 per cent ($0.12 million); and technical cooperation service, 0.3 per cent ($0.8 million). Major technical assistance programmes in order of expenditure included: Automated System for Customs Data ($11.2 million); debt management and financial analysis system programme ($4.6 million); trade negotiations and commercial diplomacy ($3.1 million); policy and capacity-building ($2.7 million); human resources and information and communication technology ($1.6 million); and trade, environment and development ($1.4 million).

Technical cooperation strategy

The Working Party on the Medium-term Plan and the Programme Budget, at its fifty-first session in September [TD/B/WP/206], considered the July report on UNCTAD technical cooperation activities (see above). It adopted a draft decision for consideration by TDB on the review of the technical cooperation activities of UNCTAD and their financing.

TDB, at its fifty-fifth session in September [A/63/15 (Part IV) (dec. 495(LV))], took note of UNCTAD technical cooperation activities. It welcomed the establishment of the 17 thematic clusters—including existing and proposed multi-year, multi-donor trust funds—and invited the secretariat to continue the consolidation process. It also invited donors in a position to do so to provide multi-year contributions to the newly established thematic trust funds, and urged the secretariat to provide administrative information on the trust funds and donors to provide the secretariat with the required financial instructions for the establishment of multi-donor trust funds and the closing of completed projects. TDB encouraged more communication among the secretariat, beneficiaries and donors, so as to make progress in the clustering process, and requested the secretariat to include an agenda item in the fifty-third session of the Working Party for that interaction on UNCTAD technical cooperation in accordance with the Accra Accord. The secretariat should also explore the possibilities for increasing the number of training courses on key issues of the international economic agenda and other capacity-building activities. TDB encouraged States to include in their delegations officials from the field in beneficiary countries involved in the implementation of technical cooperation to participate in the sessions of the Working Party and to provide an assessment of the impact of technical assistance in their countries. It also encouraged UNCTAD to facilitate the use of virtual conference facilities to enable the broadest possible participation; invited donors and countries to provide funds to assist field-based beneficiary officials to take part in the Working Party's discussion; and proposed that an assessment be made by the UN Chief Executives Board for Coordination cluster, led by UNCTAD and within a year of the conduct of each training workshop for resident coordinators, of the extent to which trade and trade-related issues had been included in UN Development Assistance Frameworks.

Evaluation

In July, in response to a request of the Working Party on the Medium-term Plan and the Programme Budget [YUN 2007, p. 1003], the UNCTAD secretariat submitted a progress report [TD/B/WP/204] on the implementation of the recommendations and observations contained in the evaluation of UNCTAD advisory services on investment. Based on its review of its advisory services in light of those recommendations, UNCTAD restructured and streamlined various activities and projects. All the recommendations contained in the evaluation had been implemented, and investment had been strengthened in terms of relevance, efficiency, effectiveness and impact as a result of the exercise.

Also in response to a Working Party request [YUN 2007, p. 1003], the secretariat submitted a July progress report [TD/B/WP/205] on the implementation of the recommendations contained in the evaluation of UNCTAD trade-related technical assistance and capacity-building on accession to WTO, which addressed only those recommendations that had not been implemented.

The Working Party took note of the changes implemented to UNCTAD's advisory services on investment and encouraged the secretariat to continue efforts towards that end. It also noted the technical assistance programme on accession to WTO, and invited donors in a position to do so to make multi-year contributions to UNCTAD technical cooperation in order to increase predictability in the planning and implementation of the relevant technical assistance programmes. It encouraged the secretariat to continue to strengthen the programme.

Medium-term plan and programme budget

At its fiftieth session (Geneva, 16–20 June) [TD/B/WP/200], the Working Party on the Medium-term Plan and the Programme Budget reviewed the UNCTAD section of the proposed 2010–2011 UN strategic framework [TD/B/L.130] and emphasized that the Accra Accord was the basis for UNCTAD work for the following four years. It therefore recommended that the General Assembly and its competent bodies consider the revision to the UNCTAD section of the proposed strategic framework, which should also be considered as a revision to the strategic framework for the current biennium (2008–2009), so that UNCTAD XII outcomes could be implemented with minimum delay. The Working Party noted that the four-year work plan (2008–2011), developed on the basis of UNCTAD XII outcomes, would be discussed at its fifty-first session.

Recalling the need, set out in the Accra Accord, to establish a mechanism for UNCTAD to contribute more effectively to developing countries' efforts to formulate strategies and policies to respond to the challenges and opportunities of commodity markets, the Working Party noted that the clearly defined resources referred to in the strategic framework under paragraph 10.5 were the existing resources of the Commodities Branch of the Division on International Trade in Goods and Services, and Commodities, which would henceforth be located in a sub-account under subprogramme 3. It welcomed the UNCTAD Secretary-General's guidance on commodities and the new arrangement, and invited him, based on his experience with that arrangement, to explore the option of locating the sub-account on commodities in another subprogramme. Regarding the development of performance indicators in the strategic framework, it called on UNCTAD to strengthen its results-oriented performance measurement and evaluation systems in order to enhance the effectiveness and relevance of the institution, and encouraged all divisions to continue their cooperative work with a view to developing a common, user-friendly reporting format for all subprogrammes. The Party requested the secretariat to report in September on institutional changes to be realized for the implementation of the Accra outcomes, based on the mandates contained in sub-theme 4 of the Accord on strengthening UNCTAD: enhancing its development role, impact and institutional effectiveness. It recommended to TDB that the Working Party be renamed the Working Party on the Strategic Framework and the Programme Budget.

At its fifty-first session (Geneva, 1–5 September) [TD/B/WP/206], the Working Party, in agreed conclusions, noted the four-year work plan for the period 2008–2011 [TD/B/WP/203/Rev.1] and advised the secretariat to implement the 2008–2009 work programme, as reflected in the revised plan, and to reflect the plan in the 2010–2011 work programme. It requested the UNCTAD secretariat to implement the Accra Accord and report regularly on its implementation; to review the progress in the implementation of the work plan against the UNCTAD indicators of achievement; and to report thereon to the Working Party. It also encouraged the secretariat to increase its interdivisional work in the implementation of the work plan, taking advantage of each division's complementary skills and synergies. The secretariat, within the framework of the preparation of the draft programme budget for the next biennium, should review the use of ad hoc expert groups, with a view to improving their cost-effectiveness, including by exploring the use of virtual meetings, and to ensure that they supported full implementation of the Accra Accord. The secretariat should also mainstream cross-cutting issues contained in paragraph 173 of the Accord into the work of all divisions, and ensure that UNCTAD work was conducted in accordance with sub-theme 4 of the Accord.

The Working Party also considered a progress report on the implementation of sub-theme 4 of the Accord [TD/B/WP/207], welcomed the measures taken in the implementation of the Accord, inter alia, through the creation of the Accra Accord Steering Group, and encouraged the secretariat to continue its efforts in that regard and to keep States informed on a regular basis, particularly during the monthly consultations of the TDB President. The Party emphasized the importance of partnership among States, relevant UN system bodies and the secretariat in strengthening the organization, stressed the importance of developing a new communication strategy and encouraged the secretariat to consult with States in that connection. Reiterating the priority UNCTAD should accord to helping countries integrate trade into their UN Development Assistance Frameworks, it requested the secretariat to periodically update States on progress in that regard. UNCTAD should also assist UN resident coordinators in identifying and developing UNCTAD programmes for their countries and their inclusion in UN development frameworks. The secretariat should inform States on the efforts made by the UNCTAD Secretary-General to attract voluntary contributions for the funding of the participation of experts from developing countries in expert meetings, including through the funding campaign to be launched in September.

TDB, at its fifty-fifth session [A/63/15 (Part IV)], took note of the reports of the Working Party on its fiftieth and fifty-first sessions and endorsed the agreed conclusions contained therein, including the change of name to the Working Party on the Strategic Framework and the Programme Budget.

Regional economic and social activities

The five regional commissions continued in 2008 to provide technical cooperation, including advisory services, to their member States to promote programmes and projects and provide training to enhance national capacity-building in various sectors. Four of them—the Economic Commission for Africa (ECA), the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific (ESCAP), the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean (ECLAC) and the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia (ESCWA)—held regular sessions during the year. The Economic Commission for Europe (ECE) did not meet in 2008, but was scheduled to do so in 2009.

The Executive Secretaries of the commissions continued to meet periodically to exchange views and coordinate activities and positions on major development issues. In July, the Economic and Social Council held a dialogue with the Executive Secretaries on the theme “The regional dimension of the themes of the high-level segment for 2008”.

In 2008, ECA organized its annual session as part of the first joint meetings of the African Union (AU) Conference of Ministers of Economy and Finance and the ECA Conference of African Ministers of Finance, Planning and Economic Development. At its March–April session, ECA met on the theme “Meeting Africa’s New Development Challenges in the 21st Century”, and adopted a ministerial statement in which Ministers reaffirmed their commitment to the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals (MDGs), and to the AU New Partnership for Africa’s Development programme as the shared framework for development and global partnership.

Meeting in April on the theme “Energy security and sustainable development in Asia and the Pacific”, ESCAP adopted a resolution calling upon all members and associate members to cooperate in developing renewable energy technologies through the sharing of policy and technological experiences.

During its June session, ECLAC held a regional consultation in preparation for the Follow-up International Conference on Financing for Development to Review the Implementation of the Monterrey Consensus, holding panel discussions on financing and cooperation, mobilization of domestic resources, systemic issues, and gender policies in financing for development. In addition, ECLAC approved the admission of the Cayman Islands as an associate member.

At its May session, ESCWA reviewed financing for development in the region, in preparation for the Follow-up International Conference, and strengthening regional cooperation for achieving the MDGs. It launched a portal for information gathering and issued a report on the MDGs in the Arab region as at 2007. In July, the Economic and Social Council approved the admission of the Sudan as a member of ESCWA.

The regional commissions also found themselves dealing with the effects of the financial crisis that reached significant global proportions towards the end of the year. Within the context of their mandates, the Commissions began to consider what actions they might take to mitigate the effects of that crisis in their regions.

Regional cooperation

In 2008, the United Nations continued to strengthen cooperation among its regional commissions, between them and other UN entities, and with regional and international organizations.

On 8 February (decision 2008/209), the Economic and Social Council decided that the theme for the regional cooperation item of its 2008 substantive session would be “The regional dimension of the themes of the high-level segment for 2008”. Accordingly, the Council held a dialogue with the Executive Secretaries of the regional commissions on that subject on 7 July.

Meetings of Executive Secretaries. As noted by the Secretary-General in his annual report on regional cooperation in the economic, social and related fields [E/2008/15], the 2008 annual meeting of the regional commissions, held by the current coordinator—the Executive Secretary of the Economic Commission for Africa (ECA)—took place in Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, on 16 and 17 June. The Executive Secretaries of the regional commissions also met in New York on the margins of the Economic and Social Council session in July, and of the Second Committee of the General Assembly in October. Notable on their agenda were the regional commissions’ coordinated actions and efforts to support UN system-wide coherence at the regional and global levels, as well as their substantive contributions to, and regional perspectives on, the challenges of climate change, food and energy security, and the ongoing economic and financial crisis. Those issues were also addressed as part of their dialogues with the Council and the Second Committee.

The Executive Secretaries and selected senior staff held their first retreat at the United Nations System Staff College in Turin, Italy, in September, and identified the following main areas for the regional commissions to foster their interregional cooperation and exchange of best practices: statistics, including statistical alignment with the Millennium Development Goals (MDGs) and international standards; energy security and efficiency; transport infrastructure, border crossing and facilitation; aid for trade; disaster risk reduction; and social policy. In addition, two side events were organized at the margins of the Follow-up International Conference on Financing for Development to Review the Implementation of the Monterrey Consensus [YUN 2002, p. 953], held in Doha, Qatar, from 29 November to 2 December (see p. 1072), in which the regional commissions discussed the issues of financing for development and the economics of gender, and the role of regional cooperation and global partnership in financing for development.

Addenda to the Secretary-General's report [E/2008/15/Add.1,2] contained the texts of resolutions and decisions adopted at recent meetings of the regional commissions that called for the Council's attention or action.

By decision 2008/234 of 23 July, the Council took note of the Secretary-General's reports on: regional cooperation and the economic situation in Europe, 2007–2008 [E/2008/16]; the economic and social conditions in Africa, 2008 [E/2008/17]; the economic and social survey of Asia and the Pacific, 2008 [E/2008/18]; the economic situation and outlook of Latin America and the Caribbean, 2007–2008 [E/2008/19]; and the survey of economic and social developments in the ESCWA region, 2007–2008 [E/2008/20].

The Council also adopted resolutions on: the venue of the twenty-fifth (2008) session of ESCWA (see p. 1135); the restructuring of the conference structure of ESCAP (see p. 1114); the admission of the Sudan as a member of ESCWA (see p. 1134); and the venue of the thirty-third (2010) session of ECLAC (see p. 1129).

(For the summaries of the economic surveys and the texts of the resolutions, see the relevant sections of this chapter.)

Global economic and financial crisis

In a later report [E/2009/15], the Secretary-General drew attention to the unfolding of the worst global economic and financial crisis since the Great Depression.

The crisis, which became full-blown in September, was rapidly spreading to developing countries and emerging market economies, which were affected by lower export revenues because of lower volumes and prices, less tourism, increased unemployment, and decreased capital flows, foreign direct investment and remittances, along with fiscal budgetary constraints.

Although unprecedented measures had been taken to avert the worsening of the crisis, the global recovery would be protracted and further policy action would be required to help restore confidence and to relieve the financial markets of the uncertainties that were affecting the prospects for economic recovery. While the prices of food and fuel had decreased since the peak they reached in July, the commodities markets remained highly volatile and uncertain. According to World Bank figures, higher food prices were estimated to have increased global poverty by some 130 million to 135 million people. Meanwhile, fuel prices experienced sharp swings, with oil prices peaking in July and declining by 70 per cent at the end of the year. According to the International Energy Agency, current global trends in energy supply and consumption were patently unsustainable—environmentally, economically and socially.

Each region in the world was affected differently by the multiple crises and each was responding according to its particular conditions and circumstances. However, lessons learned by some regions from previous crises had increased their resilience to the current one. Regional responses had proven to be a valuable means of buffering countries against the impact of the economic and financial crisis, but much remained to be done. Strong regional platforms and South-South cooperation could serve as a basis to address development challenges and implement innovative solutions through enhanced and strengthened coordination and collaboration. The report examined how the different regions were affected by the crises, how they were responding, how those initiatives could be further enhanced and how the five UN regional commissions were supporting Member States in those efforts.

Establishment of posts

By resolution 63/260 of 24 December, the General Assembly established a number of posts for development-related activities, effective 1 January 2009, under the following budget sections: 17, Economic and social development in Africa; 18, Economic and social development in Asia and the Pacific; 19, Economic development in Europe; 20, Economic and social development in Latin America and the Caribbean; and 21, Economic and social development in Western Asia. It also established posts, effective 1 July 2009, for the following sections: 10, Least developed countries, landlocked developing countries and small island developing States; 11, United Nations support for the New Partnership for Africa's Development; and 12, Trade and development. The Assembly decided not to abolish the post of the Special Adviser on Africa at the Under-Secretary-General level, and not to approve the non-post resources for travel of staff, consultants and experts and contractual services, excluding the regional commissions.

Africa

The Economic Commission for Africa (ECA) organized its 2008 annual session as part of the joint meetings of the African Union (AU) Conference of Ministers of Economy and Finance and the ECA Conference of African Ministers of Finance, Planning and Economic Development, according to Economic and Social Council resolution 2007/4 [YUN 2007, p. 1014]. ECA held its forty-first session/First Joint Annual Meetings of the AU and ECA Conference of African Ministers (Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, 31 March–2 April) [E/2008/38-E/ECA/CM.41/5] under the theme “Meeting Africa's New Challenges in the Twenty-first Century”. It had before it an issues paper prepared by the ECA secretariat on the theme [E/ECA/COE/27/2], and also considered the report of the twenty-seventh meeting of the Committee of Experts of the Conference of African Ministers of Finance, Planning and Economic Development [E/ECA/COE/27/5] (Addis Ababa, 26–29 March). A high-level thematic debate covered the issues of empowering the poor; growth, employment and poverty; climate change and development; and HIV/AIDS. A ministerial panel discussion was organized on the impact of the recent rise in oil and food prices on African economies; and Africa's debt situation. Resolutions were adopted on: financing for development [E/2008/38 (res. 854(XLI))]; climate change and development in Africa [res. 855(XLI)]; science with Africa: strengthening research and development, and innovation for Africa's socio-economic development [res. 856(XLI)]; the proposed strategic framework/biennial programme plan for the period 2010–2011 [res. 857(XLI)]; the special meeting of the Governing Council of the African Institute for Economic Development and Planning [res. 858(XLI)]; African Charter on Statistics [res. 859(XLI)]; the Millennium Development Goals (MDGs) [res. 860(XLI)]; and the assessment of progress on regional integration in Africa [res. 861(XLI)].

The session adopted a ministerial statement [E/ECA/CM/41/3] in which Ministers reaffirmed their commitment to the internationally agreed development goals, including the MDGs, and to the AU New Partnership for Africa's Development (NEPAD) [YUN 2001, p. 899] programme as the shared framework for development and global partnership. They also reiterated their commitment to making employment creation a central objective of their economic and social policies, and welcomed the new opportunities for accelerating economic growth and employment creation as a result of rapidly expanding South-South cooperation. Given the finite nature of gas and oil resources, they underscored the need to pursue alternative sources of energy, and committed to implementing all the pillars of the Comprehensive African Agricultural Development Programme to address the escalating food prices. The Ministers also underscored the need to prepare for participation in the global review of the Monterrey Consensus on Financing for Development, to be held in Doha, Qatar, from 29 November to 2 December (see p. 1072), and committed to efforts to mobilize domestic savings, strengthen their financial systems, stem capital flight, promote Pan-African stock exchange and reduce the transaction costs of remittances. Expressing concern about desertification and deforestation, they reaffirmed their commitment to integrate climate change adaptation and mitigation strategies into their national and regional development frameworks.

Economic trends

In 2008, a period in which world growth declined to 2.5 per cent from 3.7 per cent in 2007, Africa's gross domestic product (GDP) fell from 6 to 5.1 per cent, according to an overview of the economic and social conditions in Africa [E/2009/17]. The main driver of Africa's growth was the rise in commodity prices, especially oil, with oil-exporting countries growing at 5.9 per cent—compared to 4.4 per cent for the non-oil countries—and thus accounting for 61.4 per cent of the continent's overall growth. Other factors beneath that sustained growth momentum included good macroeconomic policies and institutional reforms. During the year, GDP growth decelerated in three of five subregions. West Africa grew from 5.2 to 5.4 per cent and Central Africa from 3.9 to 4.9 per cent. GDP growth rates decreased in North Africa (to 5.4 per cent), East Africa (to 5.7 per cent) and Southern Africa (to 4.2 per cent). Overall, East Africa maintained the highest growth rate in 2006–2008, owing to expansion in agriculture, horticulture and services, especially finance, telecommunications and construction, as well as healthy inflows of aid and strong growth in tourism and foreign direct investment.

The Economic Report on Africa, a joint publication of ECA and the AU aiming to disseminate key findings of ECA's research activities, devoted its 2008 edition to Africa and the Monterrey Consensus: Tracking Performance and Progress [Sales No. E.08.II.K.1]. The Report considered the main developments in the world economy; recent economic performance and growth prospects in Africa; and major global development challenges. It also discussed Africa's progress in meeting the goals of the Monterrey Consensus, adopted at the 2002 International Conference on Financing for Development [YUN 2002, p. 953] and the results of the ECA survey on African policymakers' views on its implementation.

Activities in 2008

The ECA programme of work in 2008 was organized under 10 subprogrammes: trade, finance and economic development; food security and sustainable development; governance and public administration; information, science and technology for development; economic cooperation and regional integration; gender and women in development; subregional activities for development; development planning and administration; statistics; and social development [E/2009/38].

Trade, finance and economic development

ECA continued in 2008 to strengthen the capacity of member States to design and implement appropriate policies to achieve sustained economic growth for poverty reduction, in line with the priorities of the Millennium Declaration [YUN 2000, p. 49] and NEPAD. Its work under this subprogramme aimed at promoting higher and sustained economic growth through enhanced capacity for macroeconomic and sectoral policy analysis, international trade and finance.

In 2008, ECA contributed to the preparation of the African Economic Outlook for 2008–2009, providing substantive inputs to the analyses on the short-term and medium-term outlook. In the area of trade, several policy inputs were provided to ongoing initiatives. Key among those was an audit report on the interim Economic Partnership Agreements (EPA) with the European Union and a set of draft policy recommendations on the way forward for the EPA negotiations prepared by the ECA secretariat and submitted to the AU Conference of Ministers of Trade and Finance in April. The ECA African Trade Policy Centre, a field project supported by Canada, expanded its trade-related capacity-building services in 2008, with more than 20 African countries benefiting from training. The Centre also collaborated with GAINDE 2000—a Senegalese customs computer system providing automated solutions for efficiency in trade and transport—in organizing the International Single Window Conference in Dakar in November.

Through research support and advocacy, ECA contributed to an effective participation by African countries in the Follow-up International Conference on Financing for Development to Review the Implementation of the Monterrey Consensus (see p. 1076). It also contributed to the review of commitments by African countries and made several presentations outlining Africa's views and concerns on implementation of the Monterrey Consensus. In addition, the third African Economic Conference was jointly organized with the African Development Bank (AfDB) in Tunis in November, bringing together more than 300 economists and policymakers to discuss issues related to the theme of the Conference: "Globalization, institutions and economic development of Africa". The international financial crisis was also a key focus of attention, as a special meeting of African finance ministers and central bank governors was convened on the first day of the Conference to discuss Africa's response to the crisis.

New Partnership for Africa's Development

As the coordinator of UN agencies and organizations working in Africa in support of NEPAD, a programme for the continent's development initiated by African leaders in 2001 [YUN 2001, p. 899], ECA provided strong and tangible support for the implementation of NEPAD priorities through its analytical work and technical assistance in different areas, with particular focus on socio-economic development and political governance issues. It also collaborated with UN agencies and other partners, in particular AfDB and the regional economic communities, in supporting NEPAD infrastructure development.

(For more information on NEPAD, see p. 1007).

Food security and sustainable development

The objective of the subprogramme on food security and sustainable development was to strengthen the capacity of States to implement policies, strategies and programmes that took account of the synergies between agriculture and environment. Best practices for selected commodities were assessed in West Africa, Central Africa and Southern Africa, with a focus on palm oil and banana plantain in Cameroon, maize in Malawi, cassava in Nigeria, rice and tomato in Senegal, and milk in South Africa. To promote biotechnology uptake in Africa, ECA developed a UN-Biotech/Africa website and embarked on production of a related newsletter.

ECA acted in the context of the AU/NEPAD Comprehensive Africa Agricultural Development Programme (CAADP) to strengthen the development of value chains for strategic food commodities. It also collaborated with the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations to champion the development of mafor agricultural and food products value chains in East Africa; with the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO) to promote development in the agribusiness sector; and with the AU/NEPAD and the AfDB to establish an African common market for agricultural products. Within the CAADP framework, it continued to promote the AU/ECA/AfDB Joint Initiative on Land Policy in Africa, aimed at improving the management of land and land resources.

Climate change

The African Ministerial Conference on the Environment, at its twelfth session (Johannesburg, South Africa, 10–12 June) [UNEP/AMCEN/12/9], approved the Climate for Development in Africa (ClimDev-Africa) programme, a joint AU/ECA/AfDB initiative developed with the Global Climate Observing System to facilitate development of policies, practices, services, observation networks and communication with stakeholders to enable effective climate change mitigation and adaptation in Africa.

In August, ECA participated in negotiations in Accra, Ghana, which advanced work on a strengthened international climate change deal under the UN Framework Convention on Climate Change, as well as on emission reduction rules and tools under the Kyoto Protocol. In November, it played an important role in organizing the Preparatory Meeting on Climate Change for African National Focal Points and Negotiators and the African Conference of Ministers in Charge of Environment on Climate Change.

Jointly with the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) Drylands Development Centre and the International Strategy for Disaster Reduction (see p. 1026), ECA organized the Third African Drought Adaptation Forum (Addis Ababa, 17–19 September), which brought together some 80 policymakers, Government officials, UN agencies, donors, practitioners from local and international non-governmental and community-based organizations, the media and researchers from around Africa and the Arab States to exchange experience, findings and ideas on how to adapt to the increasing threat of drought and climate change in the drylands of Africa.

Governance and public administration

ECA's objective under this subprogramme was to promote good governance practices for all sectors of society, including civil service, the public sector, the private sector and civil society; and to support the African Peer Review Mechanism process by assisting member States in all stages of the process.

ECA expanded its project on "Assessing and monitoring progress towards good governance in Africa", which was designed to inform policymaking on governance-related issues and would culminate in the 2009 publication of the second edition of the African Governance Report, aimed at helping African countries develop, sustain and internalize the norms of good governance.

ECA engaged major stakeholders in the fight against corruption, including the judiciary, national anti-corruption institutions, Parliaments and the pan-African association of national anti-corruption institutions. In October, it organized in Addis Ababa, jointly with the Council for the Development of Social Science Research in Africa, an International Conference on Institutions, Culture and Corruption in Africa, to discuss the issue from an African perspective and develop policies and strategies.

Information, science and technology for development

ECA's work under this subprogramme aimed at strengthening and sustaining an African information society, as well as developing capacity for the formulation, adaptation and implementation of appropriate science and technology policies and programmes. ECA fulfilled its objective of improving States' capacities to formulate, implement, coordinate and evaluate policies and strategies for information for development.

In response to requests by African countries to initiate a programme on cyber security, ECA launched an African Cyber Security Strategy programme in Burkina Faso, Ghana, Kenya and Mozambique. As part of the recent ECA repositioning, more emphasis was placed on strengthening States' capacity to harness the potential of science, technology and innovation for their socio-economic development, mainly through eight science and technology programmes implemented in 2008.

Economic cooperation and regional integration

The objective of ECA under this subprogramme was to promote effective economic cooperation among States and strengthen the process of regional integration in Africa through enhanced intra-African trade and physical integration, with particular emphasis on the development of infrastructure and natural resources. With ECA's support, Burundi and the United Republic of Tanzania ratified a protocol to create a Central African corridor aimed at increasing intra-regional trade in the subregion. ECA's coordinating role contributed to the conclusion of an understanding to create a common free trade area among three regional economic communities: the Common Market for Eastern and Southern Africa (COMESA), the Southern African Development Community (SADC) and the East African Community (EAC).

In June, under the auspices of ECA, experts from 21 African countries and 8 African organizations involved in transport facilitation attended an African regional meeting in Addis Ababa to review the Almaty Programme of Action: Addressing the Special Needs of Landlocked Developing Countries within a New Global Framework for Transit Transport Cooperation for Landlocked and Transit Developing Countries [YUN 2003, p. 875]. In September, in collaboration with the United Nations Department of Economic and Social Affairs, ECA organized a regional forum in Addis Ababa on "Interconnections and electricity access for sustainable development", under the United Nations Development Account project on "Capacity-building for interregional electricity access and supply in Africa". The forum adopted a set of recommendations on how to expand electricity transmission lines and gas pipelines between African countries. It was attended by some 30 policymakers and energy experts representing national power utilities, sub-regional power pools, river basin organizations, regional economic communities and a group of 10 leading electric companies from the Group of Eight (G-8) most industrialized countries.

Gender and women in development

ECA's activities under this subprogramme aimed at contributing to the achievement of women's advancement and gender equality. In August, at the Conference of Ministers of Gender and Women's Affairs, ECA launched an African Women's Rights Observatory, to serve as a comprehensive source of data on research findings and resources, institutions, developments and events related to women's rights in Africa, and to track the progress of African countries in the area of women's human rights. In partnership with the United Nations Human Settlements Programme (UN-Habitat) and UNDP's regional gender programme for Africa, ECA embarked on a study to assess progress in implementing the MDGs in Africa, taking account of the gender dimension in all the indicators of those goals.

The Beijing Platform for Action [YUN 1995, p. 1170] was a key framework used by ECA in its efforts to enhance States' ability to implement and monitor the implementation of regional and global resolutions, conventions, instruments and protocols on women's human rights. In preparation for the review of the Beijing Platform for Action, ECA developed an evaluation process which it presented to its Committee on Women and Development in August. The Committee adopted the process and encouraged ECA to work with speed towards ensuring a successful review.

In November, the Sixth African Development Forum considered the theme "Action on gender equality, women's empowerment and ending violence against women in Africa". The Forum brought together over 800 participants and provided an opportunity for the continent to take stock of progress made towards achieving gender equality and women's empowerment, ending violence against women, identifying the challenges constraining implementation of policies and strategies, and articulating actions to hasten the translation of African countries' commitments into reality. It recommended three priority actions: launching an Africa-wide, three-year campaign to eliminate violence against women and girls, addressing the underlying economic and social causes of their vulnerability and strengthening the legal system and provision of supportive services; scaling up efforts to improve financing for gender equality; and strengthening the collection of reliable data on gender equality, women's empowerment and violence against women and girls.

Subregional development activities

ECA continued to carry out its activities at the subregional level through its five subregional offices, located in Central Africa (Yaoundé, Cameroon), East Africa (Kigali, Rwanda), North Africa (Rabat, Morocco), Southern Africa (Lusaka, Zambia) and West Africa (Niamey, Niger). Their activities aimed primarily at strengthening States' capacities for regional integration by spearheading the delivery of ECA's operational activities targeted at the specific priorities of each subregion, within the overall framework of the implementation of NEPAD and achievement of the MDGs.

The subregional offices also provided guidance to ECA's overall programme delivery, while continuing to operate as subregional nodes for knowledge management and networking to strengthen ECA's outreach. In tracking progress towards the achievement of the MDGs at the country level, they continued to collaborate with other UN agencies through such means as the Common Country Assessment, the United Nations Development Assistance Framework and Delivering as one.

All five offices developed extensive and elaborate multi-year programmes of support and collaboration with major regional economic communities in their subregions, and ECA concluded multi-year programmes of support with the Central African Monetary and Economic Community, the Economic Community of the Great Lakes Countries, COMESA, EAC, the Economic Community of Central African States, the Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS), the Intergovernmental Authority on Development, the Indian Ocean Commission, SADC, the Community of Sahel-Saharan States and the Maghreb Arab Union.

Development planning and administration

The objective of this subprogramme, implemented by the African Institute for Economic Development and Planning (IDEP), based in Dakar, Senegal, was to enhance national and regional capacities to formulate and implement development policies and economic management strategies. Despite its fragile financial situation, the Institute continued to design and implement programmes that supported policymakers' priorities in the area of economic policy and to spearhead efforts in capacity-building. In April, 10 trainees from eight countries graduated from its 18-month Master of Arts degree programme in economic policy and management.

Five courses plus a course in economic report writing in the areas of industrial policy, applied econometrics, debt management, regional integration and project monitoring and evaluation were delivered in 2008. A bilingual session on industrial policy analysis in Africa, sponsored by IDEP with technical assistance from UNIDO, contributed to developing a critical mass of policymakers who would be better equipped to design and manage industrial development policies in Africa. The course was attended by 25 participants from 25 countries, including 10 women. In July, IDEP organized, in collaboration with ECOWAS, a short course on economic report writing for the benefit of National Coordinating Committees operating under the ECOWAS Multilateral Surveillance Mechanism. The course, aimed at enhancing the capacity of Committee officials to produce quarterly economic reports, brought together 31 participants from eight French-speaking countries in the ECOWAS subregion.

Statistics

The objective of ECA's work under this subprogramme was to improve the production, dissemination and use of key demographic, social, economic and environmental statistics, including the MDG indicators, in accordance with internationally agreed standards and good practice, and in order to promote the implementation of the new Reference Regional Strategic Framework for Statistical Capacity-building in Africa.

ECA continued to coordinate the work of the Statistics Cluster of the MDG Africa Working Group, designing a business plan for the Cluster, making recommendations to the MDG Africa Steering Group, and monitoring progress in the implementation of the business plan. It was also involved in a study of discrepancies among national and international data arising from monitoring of work towards the MDGs in Africa. Together with AfDB, it produced a two-year programme of work aimed at reinforcing the capacity of African countries to report on the Goals.

ECA published the quarterly African Statistical Newsletter as a medium for the exchange of knowledge, experience and best practice in statistics and statistical development, with articles written by statisticians from different countries and organizations in and outside Africa. It also continued to work with AfDB to publish the African Statistical Journal, an outlet for technical and research work. ECA also followed up progress in creating awareness among statisticians about gender issues and integrating them into national statistical programmes. A high-level policy dialogue on gender statistics was held in Kampala, Uganda, in June, and a first regional workshop on gender statistics in Addis Ababa in December.

Social development

ECA's objective under this subprogramme was to strengthen the capacity of States to formulate policies and programmes for poverty reduction and for delivering equitable social services and integrating social dimensions in the development process, in line with internationally agreed development goals, including the MDGs. In May, it organized an international conference on the UN Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities, in collaboration with Leonard Cheshire International. That resulted in the adoption of the Addis Ababa Call to Action, designed to help promote and protect the rights of persons with disabilities in Africa and ensure that their concerns were integrated in development policies.

The Commission produced a number of significant reports in 2008: "Youth employment opportunities" focused on promoting decent employment for young women through entrepreneurship training and microfinance; "The state of older people in Africa, 2007–2008: Regional review and appraisal of the Madrid International Plan of Action on Ageing" drew attention to the issue of ageing as a major emerging challenge for Africa; and "Placing social integration at the centre of Africa's development agenda" noted that, despite recent years of relatively high economic growth in Africa, chronic poverty persisted in many countries, partly because Governments and development partners did not pay adequate attention to socially excluded groups.

Programme and organizational questions

Strategic Framework, 2010–2011

The twenty-seventh meeting of the Committee of Experts of the First Joint Annual Meetings of the AU Conference of Ministers of Economy and Finance and ECA Conference of African Ministers of Finance, Planning and Economic Development (Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, 26–29 March) [E/2008/38] considered the proposed ECA Strategic Framework/Biennial Programme Plan for the period 2010–2011 [E/ECA/COE/27/17], to be submitted to the Committee on Programme and Coordination at its June session, and eventually recommended to the General Assembly for approval. The Framework reaffirmed the ECA mandate and scaled up its assistance to African States and their development partners to formulate and implement policies and programmes leading to sustainable economic growth and social development. It noted that ECA would continue to promote regional integration in support of the AU vision and priorities, to meet Africa's special needs and emerging global challenges and to develop a stronger subregional presence by empowering its subregional offices and strengthening its partnerships with the AU, the AfDB and other UN agencies.

The Committee noted that the Framework clearly articulated ECA's priorities for the biennium, took account of some emerging challenges to Africa's development and offered opportunities for collaboration between ECA and Member States. It observed that transport remained a major challenge to Africa's development, and underscored the need to improve air transport services and address aviation safety within the continent. The Committee also underscored the need to translate the Framework into specific and concrete activities, and urged ECA to promote South-South cooperation, including intra-African cooperation, as a strategy for achieving the Framework's objectives.

In response to the issues raised by the Committee, ECA assured the meeting that comments and suggestions made would be taken into consideration and concrete outputs derived from the Framework would be presented in the programme budget. ECA would continue to implement the results-based management framework. It further informed the Committee that transport concerns were addressed under its subprogramme 5, on economic cooperation and regional integration. The Committee recommended the Framework to the Conference of Ministers for its consideration and endorsement.

By resolution 857(XLI), the ECA Conference of Ministers at its forty-first session (Addis Ababa, 31 March–2 April) endorsed the proposed Strategic Framework, taking into account the preceding discussion and related observations.

Asia and the Pacific

The Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific (ESCAP) held its sixty-fourth session in Bangkok, Thailand, in two parts: the senior officials segment from 24 to 26 April and the ministerial segment from 28 to 30 April [E/2008/39]. The session's theme was "Energy security and sustainable development in Asia and the Pacific". Introducing the theme at the Ministerial Round Table, the ESCAP Executive Secretary stressed the need to create a virtuous cycle of sustainable energy that would place greater reliance on renewable energy and improved energy efficiency, and strengthen efforts to mitigate climate change.

On 30 April, in a resolution on promoting renewables for energy security and sustainable development in Asia and the Pacific [E/2008/39 (res. 64/3)], the Commission called upon all members and associate members to cooperate proactively in developing various renewable energy technologies through the sharing of policy and technological experiences; and to encourage and participate actively in subregional, regional and intraregional initiatives on capacity-building, renewable energy demonstration projects and public-private partnerships to improve their reliability and affordability. The Commission also called on them to closely involve developing countries in the development of new and renewable energy technologies, products and services, to make them cost-competitive; to encourage the rapid dissemination of new and renewable energy technologies to developing countries; to make their research institutions accessible to developing countries; and to facilitate, by working with intellectual property rights holders, the transfer of new and renewable energy technologies to developing countries by considering, on a voluntary basis, the reduction of technical and licensing costs.

The Executive Secretary was asked to coordinate with the multilateral funding agencies to enhance financial and technology flows for the development and deployment of new and renewable energy technologies in developing countries; to facilitate synergies with regional groupings to promote the development of renewable energy technologies; to establish an institutional cooperation mechanism with the active engagement of expert research institutions in the region on renewable energy technologies; and to increase participation in public-private partnerships and initiatives to expand the use of renewable technologies through innovative policy options and practical measures.

The Commission also discussed thematic and cross-cutting issues (poverty reduction, globalization, emerging social issues, and countries with special needs); management issues; and technical cooperation activities. In the ministerial segment, it considered the theme of the session, and such policy issues as key challenges for inclusive and sustainable economic and social development since the Commission's previous session; the Economic and Social Survey of Asia and the Pacific 2008 [Sales No. E.08.II.F.7]; and achieving the MDGs in the region.

Economic trends

According to the summary of the economic and social survey of Asia and the Pacific, 2009 [E/2009/18], the Asia-Pacific region, for the second time in a decade, had been hit by financial crisis. Although the crisis had its roots outside the region, its magnitude left no economy untouched, and the region continued to experience significant downward pressures on growth, with social consequences that were still unfolding. The increasing spill-over of the effects of the financial crisis into the real sector, together with long-term challenges posed by climate change and huge volatilities in food and fuel prices dimmed the prospect that the MDGs would be attained by 2015.

Activities in 2008

Poverty reduction

During its sixty-fourth session (24–30 April), the Commission had before it the report of the Committee on Poverty Reduction on its fourth (2007) session [YUN 2007, p. 1017] and secretariat notes on: the summary of progress in the implementation of resolutions relating to the theme of poverty reduction [E/ESCAP/64/2]; financing for development 2008 [E/ESCAP/64/3]; and aid effectiveness [E/ESCAP/64/4].

With respect to the Committee's report, the Commission noted the socio-economic progress of countries in the region, including in the achievement of MDGs. It said that higher food and oil prices were adversely affecting poverty reduction in some countries and that increased regional cooperation would help address that issue. The Commission emphasized that the revitalization of agriculture was key to efforts to address food shortages and contain food inflation. It also noted that microfinance and microcredit were effective tools for poverty reduction.

As for its previous resolutions on poverty reduction, the Commission noted the progress made in the implementation of its resolutions 63/4 [YUN 2007, p. 1017], on achieving the MDGs in the ESCAP region; 62/9 [YUN 2006, p. 1160], on regional follow-up to the Mauritius Strategy for the Further Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States [YUN 2005, p. 946]; and 62/11 [YUN 2006, p. 1159], on implementation of the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the Decade 2001–2010 [YUN 2001, p. 770].

On the subject of financing for development, the Commission observed that savings had increased while the region had attracted more foreign resources for development, particularly foreign direct investment. International trade had increased and external debt had fallen substantially. Steps had also been taken to address systemic issues at both the national and regional levels. However, challenges remained with regard to achieving progress in all of those areas. Nevertheless, some developing countries had made the transition from being recipients of development assistance to being donor countries themselves.

Addressing the question of aid effectiveness, the Commission noted that effective and sustainable assistance should be demand-driven and accompanied by efforts to build absorptive capacity to ensure that aid was used to maximum effectiveness. It also noted the importance of strengthening existing partnerships as well as exploring new ones, in particular under South-South and trilateral North-South-South co-operation frameworks.

Managing globalization

The Commission had before it the reports of the Committee on Managing Globalization on its fourth session [E/ESCAP/64/5, E/ESCAP/64/6], held in two parts in 2007 [YUN 2007, p. 1018]. It also had before it a series of documents relating to four subprogrammes in that area, namely: trade and investment; transport and tourism; environment and sustainable development; and information, communication and space technology [E/ESCAP/64/7, E/ESCAP/64/8 & Corr.1, E/ESCAP/64/9, E/ESCAP/64/10, E/ESCAP/64/11, E/ESCAP/64/12].

Trade and investment

The Commission recognized the importance of sustained trade and investment liberalization for economic and social development. It noted the progress achieved and the initiatives undertaken by developing countries and countries with economies in transition in reducing tariffs and liberalizing and facilitating trade, including through participation in the ongoing Doha round of negotiations and the conclusion of regional and bilateral trade agreements, and it took note of the assistance that some of those countries had provided for neighbouring countries in an effort to promote trade among developing countries.

The Commission noted the importance of trade facilitation, including simplification of trade and customs procedures and documents; e-commerce, including single-window systems; and the elimination of non-tariff barriers to trade. It also noted the policies of various countries in support of an improvement in the investment climate.

Transport and tourism

Noting the importance of transport for economic, social and trade development, the Commission expressed support for the work of the secretariat in the development of the Asian Highway and Trans-Asian Railway. It acknowledged that the Asian Highway and the Trans-Asian Railway networks were building blocks for the development of an international integrated intermodal transport and logistics network for the region, as envisioned in the 2006 Busan Declaration on Transport Development in Asia and the Pacific [YUN 2006, p. 1161]. It recognized the role of the Trans-Asian Railway network in connecting people and expanding trade, and noted the importance of road and transport linkages for creating opportunities for economic activities such as trade, investment and tourism, which would benefit people along the routes. The Commission noted the importance of road safety and expressed its support for the implementation of the Ministerial Declaration on Improving Road Safety in Asia and the Pacific [ibid.]. It also noted that the General Assembly, in its resolution 62/244 of 31 March on improving global road safety (see p. 1340), had welcomed the offer of the Russian Federation to host the first high-level (ministerial) conference on road safety in Moscow in 2009, in order to exchange experiences and foster cooperation.

On 30 April [E/2008/39 (res. 64/4)], the Commission adopted a resolution on the implementation of the 2007 Seoul Declaration on Public-Private Partnerships for Infrastructure Development in Asia and the Pacific [YUN 2007, p. 1019]. It urged members and associate members to place high priority on national development agendas on infrastructure development; promote the role of public-private partnerships and recognize that they could complement Governments' efforts in developing infrastructure facilities and services; and implement policies on public-private partnerships. It encouraged members and associate members to engage in regional cooperation initiatives, and requested the Executive Secretary to work with donor countries and development partners to assist members and associate members in meeting infrastructure development challenges; assist them in their capacity-building programmes; provide technical support to help assess their public-private partnership readiness; and undertake a periodic review of the progress made.

Also on 30 April [ibid. (res. 64/5)], the Commission established the Forum of Asian Ministers of Transport as a regional mechanism within the framework of the Commission's conference structure. It requested the Executive Secretary to convene the Forum's first session in 2009 and subsequently on a regular basis, and to ensure that a regional policy-oriented agenda was placed before the Forum.

Environment and sustainable development

The Commission acknowledged the importance of environment and sustainable development as a key cross-cutting issue in dealing with globalization in Asia and the Pacific, and highlighted the importance of the consensus reached at the 2007 United Nations Climate Change Conference [YUN 2007, p. 1060]. It also noted the importance of regional cooperation in energy security for fostering sustainable development in the region.

On 30 April [res. 64/2], the Commission adopted a resolution on regional cooperation in the implementation of the Hyogo Framework for Action, 2005–2015: Building the Resilience of Nations and Communities to Disasters in Asia and the Pacific [YUN 2005, p. 1016]. The Commission encouraged the countries in the region to host the Asian Ministerial Conference on Disaster Risk Reduction once every two years on a rotational basis.

Also on 30 April [res. 64/3], the Commission, in a resolution on promoting renewables for energy security and sustainable development in Asia and the Pacific, called upon its members and associate members to cooperate in the development of renewable energy technologies through the sharing of policy and technological experiences; to encourage and participate actively in subregional, regional and intraregional initiatives in the areas of capacity-building, renewable energy demonstration projects and public-private partnerships so as to promote renewable energy technologies; to involve developing countries in the development of new and renewable energy technologies, products and services that would eventually make their deployment cost-competitive; and to encourage the rapid dissemination of new and renewable energy technologies to developing countries.

Information, communications and space technology

During its session, the Commission recognized the important role played by information, communications and space technology in economic and social development and in bridging technological gaps among countries of Asia and the Pacific.

On 30 April [res. 64/10], the Commission adopted a resolution on the review of the operational details of the feasibility study for the establishment of an Asian and Pacific centre for information, communications and space technology-enabled disaster management. It invited Iran to review the operational details of the latest proposal for the centre, to clarify the implications, if any, of such changes on the scope, functions and value-added products and services to be offered, along with timelines for scheduling the introduction of information-sharing activities, and to submit them to the Commission's 2009 session.

By a decision of the same date [dec. 64/2], the Commission deferred consideration of the draft resolution sponsored by Iran, entitled "Establishment of the Asian and Pacific Centre for Information, Communication and Space Technology-enabled Disaster Management", to its 2009 session.

Emerging social issues

The Commission had before it the report of the Committee on Emerging Social Issues on its fourth session (Bangkok, Thailand, 26–28 November 2007) [E/ESCAP/64/13] and secretariat notes on: the summary of progress in the implementation of resolutions relating to emerging social issues [E/ESCAP/64/14]; the implementation of the Declaration of Commitment on HIV/AIDS: an assessment of the progress made by ESCAP members: challenges and opportunities [E/ESCAP/64/15]; and the follow-up to the High-level Dialogue on International Migration and Development and the Global Forum on International Migration and Development [E/ESCAP/64/16].

Noting the importance of addressing the threat posed by HIV/AIDS in the light of its impact on social and economic development in the region, the Commission welcomed the technical and financial assistance provided by Japan in the fight against HIV/AIDS—with $800 million having been contributed through the Global Fund to Fight AIDS, Tuberculosis and Malaria since 2002. It also recognized the multifaceted linkages between international migration and development, in particular the impact of migration on poverty reduction, and noted the progress in the implementation of its resolution 63/7 on international migration and development for least developed countries (LDCs), landlocked developing countries and small island developing States [YUN 2007, p. 1019]. It also recognized that persons with disabilities represented one of the most marginalized and underserved group, marked by high levels of illiteracy, poor nutritional status, high unemployment rates and low occupational mobility.

On 30 April [res. 64/8], the Commission adopted a resolution on the regional implementation of the Biwako Millennium Framework for Action [YUN 2002, p. 991] and Biwako Plus Five: Further Efforts towards an Inclusive, Barrier-free and Rights-based Society for Persons with Disabilities in Asia and the Pacific [YUN 2007, p. 1021]. It called on its members and associate members to develop and implement inclusive, barrier-free and rights-based policies on disability in line with the recommendations contained in the Framework and Biwako Plus Five.

Also on 30 April [res. 64/9], the Commission addressed the midpoint review of the implementation of the Plan of Action on Population and Poverty, adopted at the Fifth Asian and Pacific Population Conference [YUN 2003, p. 1013]. The Commission requested its Executive Secretary to assist members and associate members in building their capacity to integrate population factors into development planning; to conduct analytical studies and to compile and disseminate relevant demographic and population-related information and data with a view to identifying key demographic trends and emerging issues in the region; and to convene an expert group meeting to review the implementation of the Plan of Action.

Least developed, landlocked and island developing countries

For its consideration of countries with special needs—LDCs, landlocked developing countries and small island developing States—the Commission had before it the report of the Special Body on Pacific Island Developing Countries on its tenth session (Bangkok, 22–23 April) [E/ESCAP/64/17] and a secretariat note [E/ESCAP/64/18] on "Emerging issues in the implementation of the Almaty Programme of Action" [YUN 2003, p. 875]. The note outlined the Programme's five priority areas—fundamental transit policy issues; infrastructure development and maintenance; trade and trade facilitation; international support measures; and implementation and midterm review—and provided an overview of the issues encountered in its implementation in the ESCAP region.

Citing the seriousness of the unprecedented rise in food and fuel prices, the Commission requested the secretariat to hold, on an urgent basis, a high-level consultative meeting to address, through partnerships, the challenges of the food and fuel crisis prevailing in Asian and Pacific developing countries, including LDCs. It noted that accession to the World Trade Organization (WTO) provided an important opportunity for integrating into the global economy and for sharing the benefits of increased trade. It also noted that the pace of the accession was largely in the hands of each acceding developing country, and was based on that country's implementation of WTO compliant provisions and the successful completion of its bilateral market access negotiations with WTO members.

The Commission took note of the outcome document of the Regional Preparatory Expert Meeting of Euro-Asian Landlocked and Transit Developing Countries for the Mid-term Review of the Almaty Programme of Action (Bangkok, 22–23 April) [E/ESCAP/64/INF/6].

Technical cooperation

The Commission had before it an overview of ESCAP technical cooperation activities, including extrabudgetary contributions in 2007 [E/ESCAP/64/32]. Introducing that report, the Executive Secretary said that ESCAP technical cooperation work ensured that its analytical and normative work was well grounded in national realities. During the year, partnerships with UN and other entities had been a key element of its technical cooperation strategy. The total contributions received for those activities from the regular budget and voluntary contributions amounted to some $15 million. The cost of the delivery of ESCAP programmes in 2007 was approximately $17.6 million, an increase of some 30 per cent over 2006.

A total of $5.5 million had been expended through grants to countries and agencies under the Multi-Donor Voluntary Trust Fund on Tsunami Early Warning Arrangements in the Indian Ocean and Southeast Asia. Those grants had been provided to support tsunami advisory services, the dissemination of warnings and other disaster communications at the regional and national levels, capacity-building in standard operating procedures and related tools, and community-based hazard mapping. ESCAP also worked closely with the Special Unit for South-South Cooperation of UNDP to promote South-South cooperation in such areas as Pacific connectivity through information and communications technology and disaster risk reduction.

Ministerial round table

During its ministerial segment, from 28 to 30 April, the Commission held round tables on the session's theme, "Energy security and sustainable development in Asia and the Pacific". Opening the segment, the Executive Secretary said that the region's energy security challenges were the result of rapid growth in demand for energy, skyrocketing energy prices, and uncertainties with regard to other development concerns. There were grave threats to development prospects for countries in the region on all fronts—economic, social and environmental, including climate change. Some countries, in particular the least developed and landlocked countries and small island developing States, were expected to bear the brunt of the effects of rising energy insecurity.

The Executive Secretary stressed the need for a shift towards a new sustainable energy paradigm, to create a virtuous cycle of sustainable energy that would discourage waste and high energy consumption with their far-reaching economic and environmental costs. Such a paradigm shift would emphasize the quality of economic growth, place greater reliance on renewable energy and improved energy efficiency, and strengthen efforts to mitigate climate change; and it would require regional cooperation. Promoting public-private partnerships to expand the energy infrastructure and energy trade in the region was of utmost urgency. That included the vision of the session's theme study, the creation of a trans-Asian energy system spanning the entire region and linking together the various subregions through a common energy infrastructure.

The Asia-Pacific Business Forum 2008 (Bangkok, Thailand, 27 April), a side event of the Commission's session, was held on the theme "Energy security: opportunities through regional energy cooperation and public-private partnerships" and was attended by some 250 participants from member States, the private sector, civil society, intergovernmental organizations and UN bodies. Addressing the Forum, the Co-chair stressed that the region should expand access to renewable energy sources without jeopardizing long-term prosperity and environmental sustainability, and that energy security, access and efficiency were vital components of a long-term regional strategy. A change was needed from independent to interdependent energy policies by building trust within the region, and Government policies should facilitate energy infrastructure investment, including small-scale projects that would introduce important new supplies of energy. Collective efforts were needed for climate change mitigation and adaptation, and States should have a role in reducing greenhouse gas emissions through the new energy system paradigm.

Policy issues

In a policy statement to the Commission, its Executive Secretary identified four kinds of imbalances in the Asia-Pacific region that needed to be addressed if the region was to achieve the MDGs. The first was the considerable economic imbalance across the region: while the region was the most dynamic in the world, it still had 640 million people living on less than $1 a day. The problems in the agricultural sector, which provided the main livelihood of the poor, warranted urgent attention. The second was social imbalance: in many places, social grievances and exclusion continued along the fault lines of ethnicity, religion and class, together with systemic discrimination and violence against women and girls. Social exclusion and discrimination prevented access to basic services and put many communities at risk. The third kind of imbalance pertained to ecological issues: the region was suffering from a mounting ecological burden that exceeded its ecological carrying capacity. Rapid economic growth and population expansion were exerting increasing pressure on natural resources and on economic and social progress. The challenge for the region's developing countries was to move away from the use of fossil fuels to less polluting sources of energy, while maintaining their growth and development. The fourth was "empathy imbalance": while sizeable sections of the bureaucracy were sensitive to the needs of the marginalized and the disadvantaged, there were many who did not empathize with them or understand their struggles to secure their rights.

The Executive Secretary also highlighted the steps she had taken to strengthen the Commission. First, a more strategic and focused programme direction had been established to guide the delivery of ESCAP services to member States, transforming the Commission into a key player that could support them in shaping a more balanced and integrated economic and social order. Second, strong and strategic partnerships with other regional players had been developed to create greater and more lasting impact. Third, she had revitalized the role of the Regional Coordination Mechanism, which ESCAP chaired, transforming it into a regional platform for system-wide coherence and partnerships. Fourth, she was preparing ESCAP to serve as the regional platform for South-South cooperation and meaningful discussions on the transfer of technologies within the region.

Key challenges

The Commission had before it the report of its Executive Secretary on key challenges for inclusive and sustainable economic and social development since its previous session [E/ESCAP/64/35]. It noted with concern the adverse socio-economic impact of rising food and oil prices. Against that backdrop, it recognized the importance of energy security and sustainable development. The Commission observed that disasters could have a negative impact on sustainable development, and emphasized the importance of regional cooperation for disaster management. It also noted that the transfer of technology and sharing of best practices were crucial to boosting agricultural productivity, promoting alternative energy and improving energy efficiency, and that the building of infrastructure was an important precondition for the development of the energy sector.

Economic and social survey

The Commission had before it a secretariat note [E/ESCAP/64/36] on the summary of the Economic and Social Survey of Asia and the Pacific 2008. The note took stock of the economic and social situation in the region, assessed the risks to its economy and provided an overview of the region's agricultural sector and possible ways to address the emerging food crisis by reviving that sector. During 2007, the developing economies in Asia and the Pacific had recorded an impressive economic performance, but the region had since entered a phase of uncertainty, with a possible slowdown in the global economy, increased risks in international financial markets and relentlessly rising food and oil prices. Observing that the region was still home to about two thirds of the world's poor, the Commission was concerned that high food and energy prices, if continued, could undermine efforts to reduce poverty and achieve the MDGs.

Achieving the MDGs

The Commission had before it a secretariat note entitled "A future within reach: progress towards achieving the Millennium Development Goals in the Asian and Pacific region" [E/ESCAP/64/37]. In addition, a High-level Panel on Millennium Development Goals in Asia and the Pacific, organized as part of the Commission's session, drew attention to the challenges and opportunities for achieving the MDGs in the region.

In her keynote speech, the Executive Secretary observed that achieving the MDGs by 2015 was the cornerstone of the region's development strategy, and that accelerating progress towards the Goals was a shared agenda. The midpoint to 2015 had been crossed and there was mixed news on achievement. Significant progress had been made in reducing income poverty, raising enrolment rates in primary and secondary schools and increasing the participation of women in the economy. Nevertheless, 641 million people in the region still lived below the poverty line, 97 million children below the age of five were underweight, and another 4 million died every year before reaching the age of five. A quarter of a million women died every year during childbirth and as a result of pregnancy-related complications, and 6 million people were living with HIV/AIDS. She noted that children, women, persons with disabilities and other vulnerable groups were the most severely affected by hunger, and women faced widespread discrimination. The development gains made during the last decade or two could be reversed and income poverty could surge if the current high prices of food and energy were not addressed.

By a 30 April resolution on achieving the MDGs in the ESCAP region [res. 64/6], the Commission requested that the Executive Secretary reinforce regional partnerships on the MDGs; assess progress towards achieving all Goals and targets in the ESCAP region and transmit a progress assessment to the Economic and Social Council; assist countries in the region in achieving the Goals, in particular LDCs, landlocked developing countries and Pacific island developing countries; and advocate for the Goals in order to focus the attention of policymakers and other stakeholders.

By a resolution of the same date [ibid. (res. 64/7)], on financing for the achievement of the MDGs by 2015 in the ESCAP region, the Commission urged the developed countries that had not done so to make efforts towards the target of 0.7 per cent of gross national product (GNP) as official development assistance (ODA) to developing countries and 0.15 to 0.20 per cent of GNP to LDCs. It encouraged developing countries to build on progress achieved in ensuring that ODA was used effectively to help achieve development goals and targets, and requested that its Executive Secretary explore the feasibility of establishing a regional MDG resource facility.

Programme and organizational questions

Programme performance, 2006–2007

During its sixty-fourth session (Bangkok, 24–30 April) [E/2008/39], the Commission took note of the ESCAP programme performance report for the biennium 2006–2007 [E/ESCAP/64/20], which included highlights of programme achievements by thematic areas, as well as results and lessons learned under each of the eight subprogrammes during the biennium.

A draft had been reviewed by the Advisory Committee of Permanent Representatives and Other Representatives Designated by Members of the Commission at its special session on 19 March, and major changes, as suggested by the Advisory Committee, had been incorporated into the draft framework. The Commission generally endorsed the draft, subject to the comments and reservations set out in its annual report.

ESCAP sixty-fifth session

On 30 April, the Commission, having considered a secretariat note on the dates, venue and theme topic for its sixty-fifth (2009) session [E/ESCAP/64/33], decided that it would be held in Bangkok in April/May 2009, bearing in mind the celebration of various national holidays in countries of the region in April and early May. On 30 April [res. 64/1], the Commission decided to revise its conference structure, with immediate effect, to conform to the pattern outlined in annex I to the resolution, and requested the Executive Secretary to take into account the revision in the future programme of work and strategic framework. It also requested the Executive Secretary, bearing in mind the goal of maximizing the UN impact on the economic and social development of the region, to reorganize the secretariat so as to enhance its capability to service the subsidiary structure; to provide members and associate members with a preliminary assessment of the organizational and staffing implications of the revision within the next six months; and to undertake systematic monitoring and evaluation of the conference structure and its link to the ESCAP programme priorities. The Commission requested the Executive Secretary to report to the Commission at its sixty-seventh (2011) session on the implementation of the resolution, and decided to review its conference structure at its sixty-ninth (2013) session.

Europe

The Economic Commission for Europe (ECE) did not meet in 2008. Its sixty-third session was to be held in 2009. The state of the European region and the activities of ECE's subsidiary bodies during 2008 are discussed below.

Economic trends

A report on the economic situation in the ECE region: Europe, North America and the Commonwealth of Independent States [E/2009/16] stated that, in 2008, the region entered into what was forecast to be the worst economic downturn since the Second World War. The decline was accompanied by rising unemployment and by especially large declines in international trade and capital flows, while Government fiscal positions had deteriorated significantly. The global slowdown, the result of a financial crisis that began in the United States, was noteworthy not only because of its severity, but also because of its global synchronization.

Activities in 2008

Trade

The Committee on Trade did not meet in 2008. At its second session in 2007 [YUN 2007, p. 1023], it had considered a number of reports and taken various actions dealing with trade. Although its third session was to have been held from 13 to 17 October, it was postponed to 25–26 February 2009.

Timber

The Timber Committee, at its sixty-sixth session (Rome, 21–24 October) [ECE/TIM/2008/9], held jointly with the thirty-fourth session of the European Forestry Commission of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO), addressed a range of issues, including forests and climate change, forests and energy, and forests and water. On climate change, it considered how climate change mitigation and adaptation measures could be integrated into forest sector policies, how forest management strategies could contribute to reducing forests' vulnerabilities to climate change, and how coordination and communication between climate change negotiations and forest sector policies could be improved. With respect to energy, the Committee discussed the growing need for renewable energy, notably from wood, and the consequences for forest policy. It considered the role of wood energy in climate change mitigation and the implications for forest-based industries in Europe, and stressed the importance of sustainable forest management in supplying wood and safeguarding biodiversity. As to the linkages between the forest and water sectors, it presented international legal and policy frameworks and discussed areas for interaction between the forest and water sectors, and strategies which linked forest management and water risk management to deal with floods, droughts, soil erosion and landslides in the context of climate change. The Committee also discussed market developments in 2008 and the prospects for 2009. In addition, it welcomed the Strategic Review and Planning process which took place in 2007–2008, and adopted the Strategic Plan 2008–2013 [ECE/TIM/2008/7 & Add.1] of the ECE/FAO integrated programme of work on timber and forestry, agreed during the Timber Committee's Special Session on the strategic review and plan of the ECE/FAO integrated programme of work on timber and forestry (Geneva, 28–30 April) [ECE/TIM/S/2008/6].

The Joint FAO/ECE Working Party on Forest Economics and Statistics, at its thirtieth session (Geneva, 2–3 April) [ECE/TIM/EFC/WP.2/2008/11], reviewed a range of issues, including potential wood supply, markets and statistics, forest resource assessment, and forest sector outlook studies. It also reviewed its methods of work, and adopted the conclusions and recommendations of a workshop on national wood resource balances (31 March–1 April).

Transport

The seventieth session of the Inland Transport Committee (Geneva, 19–21 February) [ECE/TRANS/200] reviewed, among other topics: Euro-Asian transport links; transport and security; assistance to countries with economies in transition; transport trends and economics; road transport; road traffic safety; harmonization of vehicle regulations; rail transport infrastructure; inland water transport; intermodal transport and logistics; border crossing facilitation; transport of dangerous goods and of perishable foodstuffs; transport statistics; the status of accession to international ECE transport agreements and conventions; the transport situation in ECE member countries and emerging development trends; transport of people with reduced mobility; and the draft programme of work of the Committee 2008–2012. It also considered action taken by its Working Parties on: the Transport of Dangerous Goods; Road Transport; Transport Trends and Economics; Road Traffic Safety; Rail Transport; Inland Water Transport; the Standardization of Technical Safety Requirements in Inland Navigation; the Transport of Perishable Foodstuffs; and Transport Statistics.

On 20 February, the Inland Transport Committee adopted an Additional Protocol to the Convention on the Contract for the International Carriage of Goods by Road Concerning the Electronic Consignment Note.

Energy

The Committee on Sustainable Energy, at its seventeenth session (Geneva, 19–21 November) [ECE/ENERGY/78], focused its energy security dialogue on “Strategic Alliances for Energy Security”, with particular attention to the cooperation and relationship between international and national oil companies on energy security strategies. It also reviewed cooperation and coordination with other bodies, including the Commission’s other sectoral committees; the regional advisory services programme in the field of energy; the Committee’s work programme for 2009–2010; and the performance of the sustainable energy sub-programme.

The Committee endorsed the requests for two-year mandate renewals by its Ad Hoc Groups of Experts on: Financing Energy Efficiency Investments for Climate Change Mitigation; Cleaner Electricity Production from Coal and Other Fossil Fuels; and Coal Mine Methane. It also endorsed the request to renew its Ad Hoc Group of Experts on the Supply and Use of Gas for one year, and endorsed the work programme of the Ad Hoc Group of Experts on Harmonization of Fossil Energy and Mineral Resources Terminology for 2008–2009.

The Committee reviewed and adopted its programme of work for 2009–2010, and approved its provisional calendar of meetings for 2009.

Environment

The Committee on Environmental Policy, at its fifteenth session (Geneva, 21–23 April) [ECE/CEP/148], reviewed the environmental performance reviews of Kazakhstan and adopted related recommendations. It also reviewed its work programme, which included: environmental monitoring; building capacity and partnerships through multilateral environment agreements; ECE’s environment and security initiative, and partnerships with the private sector; and such cross-sectoral initiatives as the Transport, Health and Environment Pan-European Programme, education for sustainable development, and environment and health.

The Committee took note of the outcome of the third regional implementation meeting on sustainable development (Geneva, 28–29 January), addressing agriculture, rural development, land, drought, desertification and Africa [ECE/AC.25/2008/2]. It also considered the outcome of the Sixth Ministerial Conference “Environment for Europe” (Efe) Conference [YUN 2007, p. 1025] and discussed modalities for the reform of the Efe process, as decided by the ministers at the Conference. Ahead of the Committee’s session, the ECE Steering Committee on Education for Sustainable Development held its third meeting (Geneva, 31 March–1 April) [ECE/CEP/AC.13/2008/2], at which it reviewed progress by ECE members in implementing the ECE Strategy for Education for Sustainable Development and related issues.

Housing and land management

The Committee on Housing and Land Management, at its sixty-ninth session (Geneva, 22–23 September) [ECE/HBP/149], decided that two workshops would be held in 2009, in Bulgaria and Austria, on energy efficiency in housing. It considered the relationship between housing and regional demographic changes, and reviewed a draft study on informal set-lements. It welcomed the adoption of a new logo for its housing and land management activities; endorsed the new newsletter, Vital Spaces, recommending that it be published at least quarterly; and supported a thesis award for graduate students working on housing and land management-related issues.

The Committee reviewed its 2008–2009 work programme [ECE/HBP/2008/1], with its focus on country profiles; improving urban environmental performance; land registration and markets; and housing modernization and management. It was informed of progress achieved in developing the country profiles of Belarus and Kyrgyzstan, and of the publication, in May, of Spatial Planning—Key Instruments for Development and Effective Governance, with Special Reference to Countries in Transition. The Working Party on Land Administration announced that its Real Estate Market Advisory Group planned to host, in Rome, a workshop on “Real estate market: risks and benefits” in March 2009. Preparations were also under way for a project on the multi-family housing sector [ECE/HBP/2008/5], and for a workshop on homelessness in May 2009.

Statistics

The Conference of European Statisticians, at its fifty-sixth session (Paris, 10–12 June) [ECE/CES/74], considered the implications of the meetings of one of its parent bodies—the February session of the UN Statistical Commission (see p. 1379). It also considered the coordination of international statistical work in the ECE region, particularly with respect to business statistics; statistics on income, living conditions and poverty; and statistics on gender, culture and the environment. The Conference congratulated the Joint ECE/Organisation for Economic Cooperation and Development (OECD)/Statistical Office of the European Communities (Eurostat) Working Group on Statistics for Sustainable Development for its Report on Statistics for Sustainable Development [ECE/CES/2008/29 & Add.1,2], which provided an overview of different approaches on measurement of sustainable development with a particular focus on the capital approach.

The Conference reviewed the work of the ECE Statistical Division in 2007 and its plans for 2008 [ECE/CES/2008/31], and considered progress made by the Joint ECE/OECD/Eurostat Working Group on the Impact of Globalisation on National Accounts [ECE/CES/2008/32]. It also reported on two seminars held during the Conference session: a Seminar on Strategic Issues Linked to the Measurement of International Transactions, organized by the International Monetary Fund and the United States Bureau of Economic Analysis, and a Seminar on Measuring Population Movement and Integration in a Globalized World, organized by Germany and Eurostat.

Economic cooperation and integration

The Committee on Economic Cooperation and Integration (CECI), at its third session (Geneva, 3–5 December) [ECE/CECI/2008/2], discussed the impact of the economic and financial crisis on issues related to its work, and reviewed the implementation of its 2006–2008 work programme, concluding that its main objectives and outputs had been achieved. The Committee organized policy segment panels on “Cooperative solutions to global challenges: eco-innovation and clean energy for higher competitiveness” and “Wider economic integration through innovative development of efficient and safe transport and trade links.”

The Committee noted the establishment of an active constituency of CECI stakeholders, including business community and expert networks in ECE member States, that contributed to successful programme implementation while benefiting from CECI results and outputs. It emphasized the role of the CECI Teams of Specialists as important pillars of its activities, and encouraged use of its Information Exchange Platform as an instrument of knowledge-sharing by its Teams of Specialists and expert networks.

The Committee adopted its work programme for 2009–2010, taking account of its deliberations on that item [ECE/CECI/2008/6]. Noting that the demand for CECI capacity-building activities and other technical cooperation services from countries with economies in transition had increased considerably in 2008, it agreed on the need to match that demand with an adequate level of regular budget and extrabudgetary resources. It also recommended that the mandates of the Teams of Specialists on Innovation and Competitiveness Policies, on Intellectual Property, and on Public-Private Partnerships be renewed for the period 2009–2010.

The Committee also supported proposals to organize joint events in 2009, including: with the Economic Research Institute of the Ministry of Economy and Budget Planning (Kazakhstan), an international event on “Public-Private Partnerships Facing Global Challenges” to be held in March within the framework of the II Astana Economic Forum; with the Russian Private Equity and Venture Capital Association, an international conference on “Practical Aspects of Public-Private Partnerships in Innovation”, to be held in St. Petersburg, Russian Federation, in October within the framework of the Tenth Venture Capital Fair; and with the Market Research Foundation (Russian Federation), an international conference on “World Economic Crisis: New Opportunities for Public-Private Partnerships” to be held in Kalininograd, Russian Federation, in April.

Latin America and the Caribbean

During its thirty-second session, (Santo Domingo, Dominican Republic, 9–13 June) [E/2008/40], the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean (ECLAC) considered the report Structural Change and Productivity Growth—20 Years Later. Old problems, new opportunities [LC/G.2368(SES.32/4)], which examined the region's performance in the world economy, along with its opportunities and challenges in the new global economic environment; reviewed the region's economic and export performance in the past quarter century; and looked at the emerging opportunities associated with the new techno-economic paradigms. The Commission held a high-level seminar on that subject, which included panel discussions on Latin America and the Caribbean and structural changes in the world economy; competitiveness and learning in the natural-resources sector and in the manufacturing and services sectors; and public-private alliances for innovation and restructuring of production.

ECLAC also discussed the draft work programme of the ECLAC system for 2010–2011, and held a Regional Consultation Preparatory to the Follow-up International Conference on Financing for Development to Review the Implementation of the Monterrey Consensus [YUN 2002, p. 953], to be held in Doha, Qatar, on 29 November–2 December, where it considered the report Trends and challenges in international cooperation and the mobilization of resources for development in Latin America and the Caribbean [LC/G.2380(SES.32/15)]. It held panel discussions on financing and cooperation; mobilization of domestic resources; systemic issues; and financing for development: gender policies. The Commission also had before it reports of the ECLAC sessional Ad Hoc Committee on Population and Development and the Committee on South-South Cooperation, which were annexed to its report.

ECLAC adopted 13 resolutions on various regional issues, including: the Santo Domingo resolution [res. 633(XXXII)], which addressed the issues raised in the report on structural change and productivity growth; ECLAC calendar of conferences for 2008–2010 [res. 634(XXXII)]; ECLAC priorities and programme of work for the 2010–2011 biennium [res. 635(XXXII)]; support for the work of the Latin American and Caribbean Institute for Economic and Social Planning [res. 636(XXXII)]; follow-up to the Plan of Action for the Information Society in Latin America and the Caribbean [res. 637(XXXII)]; ECLAC Statistical Conference of the Americas [res. 638(XXXII)]; ECLAC activities in relation to follow-up to the MDGs and implementation of the outcomes of the major UN conferences and summits in the economic, social and related fields [res. 639(XXXII)]; admission of the Cayman Islands as an associate member of ECLAC [res. 640(XXXII)]; Caribbean Development and Cooperation Committee [res. 641(XXXII)]; South-South Cooperation [res. 642(XXXII)]; location of the Commission's next session [res. 643(XXXII)]; population and development: priority activities for the period 2008–2010 [res. 644(XXXII)]; and Regional Conference on Women in Latin America and the Caribbean [res. 645(XXXII)].

Economic trends

A report on the economic situation in and outlook for Latin America and Caribbean, 2008–2009 [E/2009/19] said that the growth of GDP in the region stood at 4.2 per cent in 2008, its sixth consecutive year of expansion. However, the mid-2007 subprime mortgage market problem in the United States had become, just over a year later, a systemic crisis that crippled the credit markets of the developed countries, with worldwide effects. In the ECLAC region, a fall in economic activity to -0.3 per cent was expected in 2009, and regional unemployment was expected to rise from 7.5 per cent in 2008 to 8.6 per cent. Trends in the world prices of foodstuffs and fuels were likely to bring about a marked fall in inflation, from 8.3 per cent in 2008 to 5.5 to 6 per cent.

Activities in 2008

An ECLAC report on the Commission's work in 2008 and 2009 [LC/G.2436(SES.33/7)] addressed activities undertaken and progress made under its 12 subprogrammes: regional integration and cooperation; production and innovation; macroeconomic policies and growth; equity and social cohesion; mainstreaming the gender perspective in regional development; population and development; public administration; sustainable development and human settlements; natural resources and infrastructure; statistics and economic projections; subregional activities in Mexico and Central America; and subregional activities in the Caribbean.

Regional integration and cooperation

The ECLAC International Trade and Integration Division strengthened the Commission's role as a forum for policy discussion, the exchange of experiences, and as a catalyst for consensus-building. The Division played a pioneering role in helping several countries organize public-sector institutional processes, strategic national visions, and public-private partnerships. It also addressed opportunities for interregional trade and investment, publishing: Opportunities for Trade and Investment between Latin America and the Asia-Pacific region: the link with the Asia-Pacific Economic Cooperation (APEC), Economic and Trade Relations between Latin America and Asia-Pacific: the link with China, and The Latin American Pacific Basin Initiative and the Asia-Pacific region, which it presented at regional and interregional meetings. It also participated in the 2008 China International Auto Parts Expo at Beijing in November.

Significant changes were introduced to the Division's website, resulting in easier access and optimized use of search engines on trade and regional integration. The flagship publication Latin America and the Caribbean in the World Economy 2007: Trends 2008 was launched in Mexico City and received wide media coverage. A document on the international crisis and the opportunities for regional cooperation was prepared for the Summit of Latin America and the Caribbean on Integration and Development, which met at Costa do Sauípe, Brazil, in December.

The Division's technical cooperation activities focused mainly on public-private partnerships; the relationship between trade and development, with special emphasis on social issues and sustainability; negotiation and administration of trade agreements; innovation and competitiveness; and trade development. Its 74 technical cooperation missions addressed competitiveness and export promotion (47 per cent); trade agreements (23 per cent); integration (16 per cent); and relations between Asia and Latin America (14 per cent). In November, a forum was held in Mexico City on attracting FDI, export promotion and export development in the framework of public-private partnerships. It was organized with the support of the Ibero-American Secretariat, ProMéxico, the Mexican Importers and Exporters Association, and the Mexican Business Council for Trade, Investment and Technology.

Production and innovation

The ECLAC Production, Productivity and Management Division devoted considerable effort to strengthening the capacity of Governments to formulate and implement policies and strategies to enhance the productivity and competitiveness of their countries' production structures. In the face of the economic crisis, its flagship publication, Foreign Direct Investment in Latin America, included a special section on the impacts of the crisis on capital flows to the region, as well as an analysis of investment in large coastal hotel and real estate complexes in tropical countries, which were hit hard by the crisis. The Division's research on the determinants of productivity growth in developing countries remained an important reference for policymakers and research institutions.

The Commission's post-graduate summer school hosted 50 young researchers interested in studying and analysing the Latin American and Caribbean economies. The Division continued to maintain the Observatory for the Information Society in Latin America and the Caribbean, which aimed to centralize and harmonize data monitoring the information society in the region. Technical cooperation and support for policymaking included 207 missions, addressing information and communication technologies (ICTs) and innovation (47 per cent); industrial development and small and medium-sized enterprises (35 per cent); agricultural and rural development (13 per cent); and investment and corporate strategy (5 per cent).

Macroeconomic policies and growth

In the context of the financial and economic crisis, the ECLAC Economic Development Division placed emphasis on providing rapid analytical and technical support to Latin American and Caribbean countries, in order to assist them in assessing the impacts of the crisis and formulating policy response. The Division remained a leading contributor to the dissemination of up-to-date information on current macroeconomic policy topics and to the promotion of information-sharing. Its 172 technical cooperation missions focused on financial crisis management (53 per cent); economic growth (15 per cent); employment (13 per cent); development financing (10 per cent); fiscal policy (6 per cent); and monetary and exchange-rate policy (3 per cent).

The Division enhanced the awareness of policymakers in the region about key issues relating to short-term macroeconomic policies within a long-term growth framework by undertaking a systematic assessment of the application of economic policies and reforms and of their impact on the economies of the region, and disseminated its main analyses and findings through its publications. The Division's leading publications—Preliminary Overview of the Economies of Latin America and the Caribbean and Economic Survey of Latin America and the Caribbean—were widely read, and readers' surveys, including feedback from policymakers, academics, the press, non-governmental organizations representatives and economists from the private sector, showed a 94.5 per cent satisfaction rate. The Division also continued to disseminate economic analyses on fiscal policy and labour markets, including a variety of specialized, in-depth macroeconomic analyses, through its working paper series "Macroeconomía del desarrollo". Through such publications as "Regulation, Worker Protection and Active Labour-Market Policies in Latin America", it continued to contribute to the policy debate regarding labour market institutions in the region, and to inform decision-makers and technical personnel of policy options with respect to regulation and protection.

Equity and social cohesion

The global financial crisis, which also affected the social situation, brought an end to six years of successes in reducing poverty, expanding employment, extending social protection coverage and improving income distribution in the region. During the period under review, the ECLAC Social Development Division strengthened its assessment and monitoring of social protection systems and poverty reduction policies, and of the links between families and social protection policies. Its 145 technical cooperation missions focused on social protection (26 per cent); social cohesion and vulnerable groups (25 per cent); education, health and nutrition (25 per cent); poverty eradication (15 per cent); and social indicators (9 per cent).

The 2008 edition of the flagship publication Social Panorama of Latin America provided up-to-date poverty figures from 18 countries, thus contributing to policy discussions regarding the new employment-related targets incorporated into MDGs, the demographic dividend as an opportunity for expanding secondary education coverage, and the issue of youth and family violence from a perspective of social inclusion. The steady increase in downloads of that edition was indicative of the demand for crucial information for assessing social conditions, advances in poverty reduction, migration and health issues, and public social expenditure, as well as of the role of ECLAC in furthering the regional social development agenda.

The Division continued to provide technical cooperation to Governments to develop methodologies for measuring social expenditure. It also devoted much of its work to social protection and conditional cash transfer programmes, as fundamental tools for achieving greater equality and reducing poverty in the region. The Division also disseminated information through the website of the Latin American and Caribbean Network of Social Institutions. Its publication, Youth and Social Cohesion in Ibero-America: A model in the making, which provided a comprehensive, up-to-date picture of the situation of youth in Ibero-America, was presented in October to Heads of State and Government at the eighteenth Ibero-American Summit of Heads of State and Government in El Salvador.

Mainstreaming the gender perspective

The ECLAC Division for Gender Affairs, in its transition from the Women and Development Unit [YUN 2007, p. 1030], was significantly upgraded and strengthened, enabling ECLAC to demonstrate its role in generating knowledge and enhancing capacity for gender equality and the empowerment of women and in contributing to gender mainstreaming in the region. The launching of the Gender Equality Observatory for Latin America and the Caribbean; the implementation of the Quito Consensus [ibid., p. 1031]; and the integration of a gender perspective into the main institutional documents and work priorities of ECLAC were the Division's most important achievements during the period under review.

The Division also carried out preparatory work aimed at fostering collaboration between users and producers of statistical information at the country level through the organization of two technical meetings—Aguascalientes, Mexico, October, and Port-of-

Spain, Trinidad and Tobago, December—with participation by representatives of national machineries for the advancement of women/gender affairs and national statistical offices from the region in defining the basic set of indicators necessary for the functioning of the Gender Equality Observatory. The Division's 37 technical cooperation missions focused on women's rights (49 per cent); gender statistics (38 per cent); institutions and representation of women (8 per cent); and gender and the environment (5 per cent).

ECLAC participated in consolidating efforts to support the UN Secretary-General's Campaign "UNite to End Violence against Women", launched in February, through collaborative response, participatory action and sharing of best practices. The Division contributed to work on the issue of gender-based violence through various means, including the creation of an inter-institutional regional working group to define a regional strategy. It also prepared a series of seven video clips on violence against women, which were widely distributed by the five regional commissions and the regional working group on the occasion of the 2008 International Day for the Elimination of Violence against Women.

Population and development

The ECLAC Latin American and Caribbean Demographic Centre-Population Division was guided by mandates arising from international agreements, especially the Programme of Action of the 1994 International Conference on Population and Development [YUN 1994, p. 955] and the Madrid International Plan of Action on Ageing, 2002 [YUN 2002, p. 1194]. It presented a background document on the socio-economic impact of demographic changes at the 2008 ECLAC sessional Ad Hoc Committee on Population and Development, and prepared a chapter for the 2008 edition of the ECLAC publication Social Panorama of Latin America, on the opportunity to improve secondary education brought about by the demographic dividend.

During 2008, a survey on the activities of national statistical offices in relation to the forthcoming 2010 round of censuses identified thematic areas in which countries of the region needed technical cooperation and support. As a result, the Division organized four workshops on such emerging issues as measurement of racial and ethnic identity; measurement of migration and other forms of mobility; the use of cartography; and the inclusion of health-related questions in censuses.

The Division's 177 technical cooperation missions focused on population censuses and statistics (24 per cent); ageing (19 per cent); indigenous peoples and Afro-descendants (19 per cent); migration (17 per cent); population growth and public policy (11 per cent); fertility and reproductive health (7 per cent); and a rights-based approach in social policy (3 per cent).

Public administration

The Latin American and Caribbean Institute for Economic and Social Planning (ILPES) underscored the need for the countries of the region to strike the necessary balance between private initiative and public action and to consolidate a fiscal and social covenant, defined as the institutional arrangements that ensured effective governance. It sought to foster a healthy, long-term balance between the State, civil society and the market economy through the art of governing for sustainable economic, social and institutional development.

ILPES/ECLAC worked in specialized areas, offering short courses which featured a combination of theory and practice, and systematized the experiences of the countries of the region, assisting government officials in the design and implementation of their development programmes and policies. ILPES was the leading voice within ECLAC for development planning, performance-informed budgeting and public management in the region, at both the national and subnational levels, through its research, technical cooperation and training activities. It catalyzed the collective discussion on those issues, contributing to efforts to improve the quality of public policies and strengthen institutional capacities.

The Division's 393 technical cooperation missions focused on local and regional development (58 per cent); results-based management (21 per cent); planning and budget (11 per cent); and socio-economic project evaluation (10 per cent).

Sustainable development and human settlements

The ECLAC Sustainable Development and Human Settlements Division continued to work on the inter-relationships between economic growth, environmental protection, urban development and social equity. Its technical cooperation and studies strengthened the capacity of the countries of the region to assess their progress towards sustainable development, by generating empirical information and constructing sustainability indicators to measure the magnitude of the economic, social and environmental costs associated with their development strategies at national and subnational levels. Eight studies on climate change mitigation, including evaluation of carbon markets and economic adaptation in the region, were undertaken jointly with national Government institutions of Argentina, Bolivia, Chile, Colombia, Ecuador, Mexico, Paraguay, Peru and Uruguay.

The Division worked on the integration of public policies and the follow-up of international and regional agreements on sustainable development, including their links with environmental goods and services markets. It coordinated a multi-agency report on regional progress under MDG 7 (ensuring environmental sustainability), which included information on carbon dioxide emissions per unit of GDP and deforestation, and the potential impacts of climate change on the achievement of other MDGs, and elaborated on additional difficulties for addressing climate change. The report showed important advances in aspects of environmental sustainability, such as increased number of protected areas, reduced consumption of products that damaged the ozone layer, and increased water and sanitation services in the region.

ECLAC also raised awareness and disseminated its analyses and policy recommendations on the issue of climate change to regional policymakers at major meetings. The Division published four methodological guides aimed at facilitating decision-making in the construction of composite indices of sustainable development, economic analysis of environmental externalities and strategic environmental assessment. In addition, urban infrastructure sustainability analyses were presented at expert group meetings.

The Division's 154 technical cooperation missions focused on natural disasters (38 per cent); climate change (29 per cent); the environment (19 per cent); and development and urban planning (14 per cent). Support was provided to countries and local authorities to enable them to cope with the estimated increase of 40 million inhabitants in urban populations over the following five years, and with the repercussions that the increase would have on demand for housing and public services and in terms of the exacerbation of environmental pollution and soil degradation.

Natural resources and infrastructure

The ECLAC Natural Resources and Infrastructure Division produced analyses and research and provided technical cooperation services to Governments, civil society and academia aimed at improving public policy formulation in the management of natural resources and the provision of public utility and infrastructure services. It focused on strengthening the institutional capacity of countries in the region to formulate and implement public policies and regulatory frameworks, in order to increase efficiency in the sustainable management of natural resources and the provision of public utilities and infrastructure services, and in coordinating and sharing best practices.

In the area of infrastructure, the Division provided support and cooperation to enable countries to address three kinds of challenges threatening future social and economic development: the infrastructure gap resulting from delays in investment coupled with explosive growth in demand for transportation; the lack of sustainable criteria in planning infrastructure services; and problems in the operation of transport and logistics chains that increased costs and affected the competitiveness and productivity of national economies, among other negative externalities.

In the energy sector, the Division supported the region's Governments in the promotion of an integral and sustainable energy policy, with emphasis on renewable energies, energy efficiency and biofuels. With respect to mining, the countries that were most active in that sector—including Argentina, Bolivia, Chile, Colombia, Ecuador, Honduras, Peru and others—received technical cooperation services on environmental management of the mining industry, including aspects of management such as mining liabilities, mine closures and social responsibility.

The Division organized eight seminars and expert meetings, including a regional conference on policies for economically efficient, environmentally sustainable and socially equitable water supply and sewerage services (Santiago, Chile, September). It provided the Latin American and Caribbean energy ministers meeting at the third Regional Energy Integration Forum (Buenos Aires, Argentina, November) with an assessment of the local and regional energy situation and an evaluation of policy proposals on regional integration from the perspective of regional energy markets. The Division's 160 technical cooperation missions focused on energy (42 per cent); maritime transport and ports (19 per cent); land transport and road safety (14 per cent); water (14 per cent); and mining (11 per cent).

Statistics and economic projections

The ECLAC Statistics and Economic Projections Division continued its work in the area of systematization and dissemination of statistics. It supported at least 15 countries of the region in strengthening their national statistical systems and capacities in the areas of national accounts, development of suitable indicators for measuring progress towards the MDGs, household surveys and the production of environmental statistics. In July, together with the Central Bank of Chile, ECLAC hosted a workshop on the application of statistical methods to national accounts; in October, a regional seminar on national accounts was held in Santiago.

Technical cooperation provided by the Division facilitated the estimation of national account data in 17 countries, and five countries implemented the 1993 System of National Accounts recommendations. A set of indicators for measuring social cohesion in the region was also identified, including qualitative indicators on public perceptions on different issues. The Division also provided support to countries to improve the quality and availability of household surveys. Another effort involved improving the accessibility of data collected by ECLAC as a whole, by enabling access to all ECLAC databases through CEPALSTAT, a new statistical information portal on the Commission's website.

The Division's annual flagship publication, Statistical Yearbook for Latin America and the Caribbean, was a leading source of statistical information, providing social, economic and environmental data from the countries of the region. Despite improvements in the quality and completeness of the region's statistical output on economic, environmental, demographic and social matters, more was needed to cope with future challenges. With the support of the United Nations Environment Programme and the Latin American and Caribbean Initiative for Sustainable Development, environmental indicators were developed and adapted to take account of the region's statistical development. A similar process of harmonization was carried out for regional manufacturing business trend surveys.

The Division's 176 technical cooperation missions focused on economic statistics (40 per cent); social statistics (37 per cent); institution-building (17 per cent); and environmental statistics (17 per cent). The main direct beneficiaries were senior technical staff from national statistics offices in ECLAC member States. Their responsibilities included the collection, processing and analysis of economic statistics and data on such social indicators as employment and poverty. Other beneficiaries included central bank officials working on national accounts.

Subregional activities

Caribbean

The ECLAC subregional headquarters for the Caribbean in Port of Spain, Trinidad and Tobago, strengthened its contribution to policymaking in the subregion through the delivery of substantive research outputs, technical cooperation, and training and capacity-building support. Studies were prepared on public-private partnerships and on the escalation in world food and oil prices and the resulting impact on Caribbean economies. Work on analysing the economics of climate change in the Caribbean began in late 2008, focusing initially on determining the situation in terms of available data and policies, and with respect to other instruments relating to climate change impacts.

The subregional headquarters assisted government officials and public and private institutions from 24 Caribbean countries on sustainable development and integration. Efforts were made to increase access for policymakers in the subregion to the work of the subregional office, and to provide them with an opportunity to increase their knowledge on global matters relating to sustainable development and integration in the Caribbean. Expert meetings were convened in the areas of youth issues, crime and violence, gender and sustainable development, including climate change and the Mauritius Strategy for the Further Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States [YUN 2005, p. 946].

In addition, the subregional headquarters continued to highlight developments in the world economy with respect to international trade, tourism, remittance flows, FDI and external financing—all of which strongly influenced the small open economies of the subregion—and to advocate prudent fiscal and policy responses. The annual Economic Survey of the Caribbean [LC/CAR/L.216], which included an economic overview of the subregion in 2008 and the outlook for 2009, provided policymakers with an in-depth discussion of the subregion's economic performance, and put forward recommendations for policy and fiscal change.

The subregional headquarters' 138 technical cooperation missions focused on climate change and the environment (25 per cent); natural disasters (21 per cent); censuses and statistics (21 per cent); gender (10 per cent); economic development (10 per cent); social development (8 per cent); and energy (5 per cent). The headquarters also contributed to economic policymaking in the subregion through studies conducted on public-private partnerships and the subprime mortgage crisis in the United States.

Mexico and Central America

The economies of the northern region of Central America and the Caribbean suffered soaring commodities prices and a devastating hurricane season in 2008, followed by the worldwide economic and financial crisis which erupted at year's end. In response, the ECLAC subregional headquarters in Mexico redirected its activities within its programme of work. Its document "Confronting the crisis. The Central American Isthmus and the Dominican Republic: economic evolution in 2008 and prospects for 2009" [LC/MEX/L.904] examined the causes of the crisis, the channels through which it was transmitted and its economic and social effects, and provided a set of policy recommendations.

In 2008, the subregional headquarters evaluated the impact of international food and oil price hikes on inflation and poverty in Central America. Twice during the year it published a detailed analysis of the economic evolution and outlook for each of the sub-region's 10 countries. It also implemented a successful strategy for electronic distribution of information and publications via its website. In addition, ECLAC and Cuba agreed on a methodology for estimating the Cuban GDP.

In the energy field, it produced studies on the externalities and costs of electricity-generating plants using fossil fuels and of refinery complexes in Mexico—providing the technical basis for the establishment of the national standard for reducing carbon dioxide emissions. Its studies on bioethanol provided the technical basis for a Costa Rican project on introducing bio-fuels into the country's gasoline supply, for which a pilot stage was carried out in 2008.

The subregional headquarters conducted a feasibility study on the economics of climate change in Central America and prepared a project proposal for a comprehensive study on the subject, which was approved by the ministries of environment of the countries of the Central American Isthmus. The Presidents of the subregion, at their Summit on Climate Change and Environment (San Pedro Sula, Honduras, 23–27 May) gave their ministries of environment and finance a mandate to support the study.

The 228 technical cooperation missions of the subregional headquarters focused on economic development (21 per cent); integration and international trade (19 per cent); natural disasters (16 per cent); climate change and the environment (14 per cent); social development (11 per cent); energy and natural resources (10 per cent); and productive development (9 per cent).

Programme and organizational questions

During its thirty-second session (Santo Domingo, 9–13 June) [E/2008/40], the Commission adopted a number of resolutions on programme and organizational matters.

ECLAC calendar of conferences

By its resolution on the ECLAC calendar of conferences for the period 2008–2010 [res. 634(XXXII)], the Commission reaffirmed the decision to maintain the current intergovernmental structure and existing pattern of meetings and approved the calendar of conferences of the Commission as it appeared in the annex to that resolution. It also reaffirmed that the Commission's conference servicing system had been found to be efficient and cost-effective, and recommended that its tasks continue to be the responsibility of the Executive Secretary. It further reaffirmed the importance of continuing to entrust the Commission with the task of organizing and holding regional and subregional meetings to prepare for and follow up on world conferences of the United Nations in the economic and social fields.

ECLAC priorities and programme of work for 2010–2011

In June [res. 635(XXXII)], the Commission endorsed the proposed priorities for the work of the Commission for the 2010–2011 biennium as set forth by the Executive Secretary, which encompassed the consolidation of the advances achieved in the following areas: macroeconomic stability and the promotion of policies to reduce vulnerability; an increase in the region's production potential and a reduction in productivity gaps; an improvement in the region's position in the international economy and the promotion of long-term production development strategies involving appropriate forms of public- and private-sector cooperation and participation; the promotion of a broad social agreement to strengthen social cohesion, to reduce social risks and to strengthen gender mainstreaming in public policies; the refinement of sustainable development policies and an examination of the socio-economic implications of climate change; the strengthening of public management; and the improvement and consolidation of institutions relating to the management of global issues at the regional level.

The Commission urged the Executive Secretary to examine the challenges faced by the region in connection with the global energy and food crisis, and approved the programme of work for the system of the Commission for 2010–2011, which included the Latin American and Caribbean Institute for Economic and Social Planning, and which, with the guidance provided by the resolutions adopted at the Commission's thirty-second session, would become the legislative mandate for the execution of programmes, projects and technical cooperation activities and for the production of recurrent publications identified therein.

Western Asia

The Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia (ESCWA) held its twenty-fifth session in Sana'a, Yemen, from 26 to 29 May [E/2008/41]. Session meetings were held in two segments, one for senior officials and the other for ministers. The senior officials segment considered: a report of the Executive Secretary on the Commission's activities [E/ESCWA/25/5]; management issues; the draft convention on international multimodal transport of goods in the Arab Mashreq; and the request for membership in the Commission by the Sudan. The ministerial segment held two round tables: the first on financing for development in the ESCWA region, in preparation for the Follow-up International Conference on Financing for Development to Review the Implementation of the Monterrey Consensus [YUN 2002, p. 953], to be held in Doha, Qatar, from 29 November to 2 December; the second on strengthening regional cooperation for achieving the MDGs.

With regard to financing for development, delegates reviewed the progress made by countries of the region in implementing the Monterrey Consensus, and took into account the outcome of the regional preparatory meeting on the subject (Doha, 29–30 April). On the achievement of the MDGs, the situation was assessed as at 2007, which marked the mid-point towards their attainment. ESCWA encouraged the strengthening of regional cooperation to counter the main obstacles facing certain Arab countries and subregions, in particular the least developed and conflict-affected countries.

During the session, ESCWA launched the Information Society Portal for the ESCWA Region—a bilingual (English and Arabic), database-driven and open-source Web application dedicated to building an online network for partnerships on information and communication technology (ICT) initiatives. It also issued a report on the MDGs in the Arab region in 2007.

The Commission adopted 12 resolutions, including a resolution concerning the Sudan's request to become a member of ESCWA, which required action by the Economic and Social Council (see p. 1135).

Economic trends

According to the summary of the survey of economic and social developments in the ESCWA region, 2008–2009 [E/2009/20], until the last quarter of 2008, ESCWA member countries exhibited steady economic expansion, boosted by higher-than-usual oil prices, except in conflict-affected areas. However, with the onset of the global financial crisis and the steep drop in oil prices, growth prospects became increasingly uncertain. At the economic level, the impact of the crisis had a fourfold effect in 2008: a plunge in financial and real estate asset prices; a collapse in commodity prices, including energy, metal and food—although food prices remained relatively high; shortages of monetary liquidity, particularly of the United States dollar, in local and international money markets; and a rapid decline in export earnings. Against that global backdrop, ESCWA countries showed resilience in terms of economic expansion until the end of 2008. The increasing economic and social uncertainty further undermined the already precarious sense of security shared by the ESCWA population.

Activities in 2008

In 2008, ESCWA continued to strengthen the complementarity between its normative and analytical work and its technical assistance activities, and to strengthen strategic partnerships with regional and national players, in particular with UN agencies and the League of Arab States and its subsidiary bodies. ESCWA activities under its 2008–2009 work programme [E/ESCWA/26/5(Part I)] focused on seven subprogrammes: integrated management of natural resources; integrated social policies; economic development and integration; ICT for regional integration; statistics for evidence-based policymaking; advancement of women; and conflict mitigation and development.

Climate change and sustainable development

By its resolution on climate change issues in the Arab region [res. 281(XXV)], the Commission asked the secretariat to assess the economic and social vulnerability of the region to climate change, with emphasis on freshwater resources, to increase awareness of climate change and to develop an Arab framework action plan on climate change in partnership with the League of Arab States, the Regional Office for West Asia of the United Nations Environment Programme, and other regional organizations.

In response, ESCWA would continue its efforts to build member countries' capacity to address climate change and foster a deeper understanding of measures to mitigate it. It would address such issues as the vulnerability of the water sector to climate change; large-scale renewable energy applications; reducing transport emissions; and enhancing energy efficiency, while continuing to offer technical assistance. ESCWA expanded its communication and networking efforts through the Arab Integrated Water Resources Management Network. In 2008, training activities were conducted on climate change, economic and financial instruments for integrated water resource management, and gender and water.

During the year, a study and field surveys were prepared for the Qatar General Electricity and Water Corporation, in order to evaluate the situation in Qatar and identify areas for improvement. In Yemen, as part of efforts to support the Ministry of Electricity and Energy, ESCWA held a January workshop on energy efficiency and conservation that focused on integrated energy resource planning, demand-side management and energy audits. It also held an October seminar on national cleaner-fuels strategies that provided an opportunity for collecting data and information.

Social policy

The ESCWA Social Development Division focused on strengthening the capacity of member countries to formulate and promote region-specific, integrated social development policies, with a view to achieving social equity, poverty reduction and sustainable development. It also strove to increase their capacity to develop and implement intersectoral social development plans, programmes and projects focusing on youth, migrant workers, persons with disabilities, and the rural and urban poor. During the year, it produced the Integrated Social Policy Report II: From Concept to Practice [E/ESCWA/SDD/2008/3], and launched technical assistance projects on integrated social policy in Egypt and Palestine. It also published a report, The Status and Prospects of the Arab City I: Urbanization and the Challenge of Urban Slums, focusing on good urban governance, social inclusion and security of tenure, presenting a framework for the dimensions of urbanization and slum areas and examining means to improve life in urban slums and prevent the emergence of new slum areas, while highlighting principles and good practices at the regional and international level.

At its May session [res. 285(XXV)], the Commission encouraged member countries to initiate consultative dialogue aimed at adopting an integrated social policy approach; encourage partnership between Government institutions, the private sector and civil society organizations in the formulation, implementation and monitoring of social policies; adopt and institutionalize integrated social policy and seek a balance between economic priorities and social outcomes; and formulate national youth policies as part of that policy and of national development plans and programmes. ESCWA also requested the secretariat to advocate and enhance the capacity of countries to formulate and adopt an integrated social policy approach.

Economic development

During 2008, the ESCWA Economic Development and Globalization Division (EDGD) enhanced the capacity of member countries to design and implement sound economic policies and strategies for sustainable economic growth, employment creation and poverty alleviation. It organized a wide range of activities on key priority issues of economic importance to the region, in order to increase its capacity to promote foreign direct investment (FDI), formulate and implement adequate trade policies and economic policies for accelerating progress towards achieving the MDGs, and strengthen the processes by which they implemented programmes for improving transport infrastructure and logistics within the framework of the Integrated Transport System in the Arab Mashreq. In line with the Monterrey Consensus of the International Conference on Financing for Development, EDGD continued to support countries in promoting finance for development, and organized a consultative preparatory meeting (Doha, Qatar, 29–30 April) for the Follow-up International Conference.

The division also prepared its Annual Review of Developments in Globalization and Regional Integration in the Arab World, 2008 [Sales No. E.09.II.L.1], which focused on FDI and regional integration, highlighting labour movement in the region. As part of the Review's follow-up activities, an expert group meeting was organized (Beirut, Lebanon, 20 November). Throughout the year, EDGD continued to provide training services for member countries on financing for development, double taxation, FDI statistics and bilateral investment agreements and their economic implications. As to trade promotion activities, it conducted the Third Forum on Arab Business Community and World Trade Organization Agreements (Beirut, July) to enhance the capacity of countries to negotiate and implement subregional, regional and multilateral trade agreements, and to increase awareness in the Arab business community of developments in WTO negotiations and their implications for businesses in the region. It also assessed trade policy trends, trade facilitation, service liberalization measures and the WTO accession process; and provided related policy advocacy and advice through an expert group meeting on the assessment of trends in the region and their implications for trade and economic performance (Beirut, 17–18 December).

By a resolution on regional action to accelerate implementation of the Monterrey Consensus in Western Asia [res. 290(XXV)], the Commission adopted the draft final communiqué issued by the consultative preparatory meeting and affirmed the need for developing countries, including ESCWA member countries, to be more involved in the management of the global financial, monetary and trade system. It urged countries to support regional integration and small and medium-sized enterprises, and make available the financial resources to create new youth employment opportunities. It also called on countries to continue efforts to eradicate financial and administrative corruption and increase their FDI share, and to stress the importance of education and its central role in eradicating poverty and achieving wider socio-economic development goals. The Commission requested the developed donor countries to increase their ODA in order to assist in achieving the MDGs and affirmed the need for member countries to make a contribution at the highest possible level to the Follow-up International Conference. The secretariat was urged to strengthen cooperation with relevant regional and international organizations and other UN regional commissions on Monterrey Consensus-related issues; to follow up the outcome of the Conference; and to support country efforts.

Yemen

On 29 May [res. 289(XXV)], the Commission commended the comprehensive development efforts undertaken by Yemen, which were aimed at eradicating poverty and meeting economic and social needs with the involvement of civil society and the professional, academic and political social sectors. It recommended that ESCWA provide more support to Yemen with a view to achieving the activities undertaken as a part of the comprehensive development and national efforts to realize the MDGs.

ICT and related development issues

During the year, the ESCWA region experienced a widening digital divide and faced major challenges in building the information society. It needed evidence-based policymaking that relied on basic indicators to produce strategies that optimized development. Broadband represented a challenge to developing the region's ICT infrastructure, since most online applications required the transfer and display of significant amounts of data. The financing of ICT projects was another major obstacle. Digital Arabic Content (DAC) was still very limited compared with Internet content in other languages, and increased efforts were needed to promote the DAC industry in the region in order to preserve Arabic language and culture in a digital world.

At its April meeting in Bahrain, the ESCWA Consultative Committee on Scientific and Technological Development and Technological Innovation, through its Information and Communications Technology Division, reviewed progress made towards the establishment of the ESCWA technology centre, including a detailed assessment of regional needs and priorities, and proposed implementation mechanisms for the centre.

At its May session [res. 284(XXV)], the Commission requested the secretariat to set up within ESCWA a multidisciplinary team to support and monitor progress in the operationalization of the ESCWA regional technology centre, to be funded by extrabudgetary resources.

Statistics

The ESCWA Statistics Division aimed at strengthening the capacity of national institutional frameworks for official statistics in member countries, while strengthening their capacity to participate in the 2010 round of population censuses and implement household and other surveys, in order to provide evidence-based data for attainment of the MDGs by 2015.

ESCWA member countries faced major challenges in producing and disseminating reliable and up-to-date data. Their national statistics offices faced significant obstacles in incorporating appropriate data collection plans into statistical strategies; improving methodologies for basic data and metadata collection; raising the accuracy of estimates to bring them into line with international standards; and strengthening reporting mechanisms at the national and international levels.

On 29 May [res. 283(XXV)], the Commission adopted a resolution on ESCWA member country compliance with international standards for enhancing national statistical systems. It requested countries to take measures to produce high-quality official statistics that could be used in international comparisons; adopt the 1994 Fundamental Principles of Official Statistics of the UN Statistical Commission and take action to apply them; complete the implementation of national strategies for statistical development; and enhance the position of the national statistical machinery within the institutional structure. The Commission requested the secretariat to hold training workshops on international concepts, classifications and standards, and to support countries in adopting and undertaking to apply the Fundamental Principles and in designing and implementing national strategies for statistical development.

On the same date [res. 287(XXV)], the Commission adopted a resolution on strengthening statistical capacities for evidence-based policymaking, and encouraged countries to produce MDG indicators and, in particular, indicators related to poverty, education and health, using surveys and other relevant sources; exchange information for best practice in the development of statistical activities; and adopt the Common Set of Core ICT Indicators issued by the Global Partnership on Measuring ICT for Development. The Commission stressed the need to strengthen the impartiality of national statistical offices in order to produce objective data and improve coordination mechanisms within the statistical system.

Gender equality

Despite positive developments in advancing gender equality in ESCWA member countries in recent years, the region still lagged behind on a number of key indicators. With ESCWA assistance, countries addressed three main challenges: promoting and integrating gender in policies, programmes and projects; mitigating the effects of regional instability and conflict; and continuing to implement the 1995 Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action [YUN 1995, p. 1170] and the 1979 Convention on the Elimination of all Forms of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW) [YUN 1979, p. 895].

Through its Centre for Women, the Commission provided policymakers with recommendations on advancing the rights of women in the region; engaging in capacity-building activities on women's rights and the need to adhere to international instruments; engaging in activities aimed at enhancing the capacity of Government institutions in such gender issues as national machineries for women; and raising awareness on gender issues. The full implementation of CEDAW and its optional protocol in the region remained a priority for ESCWA, which organized several capacity-building workshops and advisory missions to raise awareness of its importance and the need for countries to withdraw their reservations.

On 29 May, by a resolution on gender statistics for equality and empowerment of women [res. 286(XXV)], the Commission encouraged member countries to adopt the set of indicators in the Arab Gender Issues and Indicators Framework as a common set of indicators; develop a mechanism for the collection, dissemination and analysis of gender-sensitive indicators and sex-disaggregated data by rural, urban and age information for the formulation of gender-related and gender-sensitive policies and programmes; and implement training programmes to mainstream gender issues and statistics into their statistical systems, with a view to sensitizing data producers and users to the issue of gender quality and women's empowerment.

Conflict mitigation and development

During 2007 and 2008, the ESCWA Emerging and Conflict-related Issues (ECRI) section conducted numerous capacity-building modules for over 4,500 participants from Iraq, Lebanon, Palestine and Yemen, geared towards enhancing the ability of the public sector to take the lead in attainment of development objectives, including the MDGs. Through such training, ESCWA worked to strengthen good governance practice in conflict-affected countries. As part of its technical cooperation activities, ECRI organized two training of trainers workshops on strategic planning for Palestinian and Yemeni public sector managers, in Beirut, Lebanon, and Sana'a, Yemen, respectively.

On 29 May [res. 282(XXV)], the Commission adopted a resolution on mitigating the impact on development of conflict, occupation and instability in ESCWA member countries, and called on them to enhance institutional capacities to respond to the challenges associated with conflict and occupation and to support conflict- or occupation-afflicted countries in overcoming socio-economic and political challenges. It urged the secretariat to raise awareness of the potential impact of conflict and instability on development; build on successful ESCWA interventions in conflict- or occupation-afflicted countries through the development and interchange of best practice and adaptation for use by other countries; contribute to the capacity-building of Government officials; mobilize extrabudgetary resources to finance the implementation of capacity-building and other activities; and enhance partnerships with relevant local, regional and international organizations. It also invited member countries and donors to support ESCWA.

Programme and organizational questions

Establishment of UN Arabic language centre

Pursuant to its resolution 239(XXII) [YUN 2003, p. 1028], the Executive Secretary submitted to ESCWA at its twenty-fifth session an April report on the follow-up to the establishment of a UN Arabic language centre at ESCWA [E/ESCWA/25/5(Part III)]. The report considered ESCWA activities, including carrying out consultations with relevant UN departments, academic institutions and member country experts; preparing technical studies and discussing them at an expert group meeting; and preparing a project document in accordance with the meeting's recommendations.

On 29 May [res. 288(XXV)], the Commission, cognizant of the project document presented to the senior officials segment of its session concerning the establishment of an Arabic language centre at ESCWA—to be involved in the coordination of Arabic terminology, organization of training sessions and building of cooperative relationships with translation institutes and universities, in coordination with the UN Department of General Assembly and Conference Services—encouraged continued cooperation with ESCWA by the focal points designated by member countries for the project. It also requested the Executive Secretary to fund the project from extrabudgetary resources.

Admission of the Sudan to ESCWA membership

On 29 May [res. 280(XXV)], the Commission requested the secretariat to submit to the Economic and Social Council for action the recommendation that the request for membership by the Sudan should be approved.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 22 July [meeting 38], the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 2008/8 [draft: E/2008/15/Add.1] without vote [agenda item 10].

Admission of the Sudan as a member of the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia

The Economic and Social Council,

Taking into consideration paragraph 2 of Economic and Social Council resolution 1818(LV) of 9 August 1973 concerning the terms of reference of the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia, which provided that members of the Commission should consist of the States Members of the United Nations situated in Western Asia that called on the services of the then United Nations Economic and Social Office in Beirut, and that future applications for membership by Member States should be decided on by the Council upon the recommendation of the Commission,

Recalling that the terms of reference and rules of procedure of the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia do not cover the geographical location of countries that may become members thereof nor proscribe a member of one regional commission from being at the same time a member of another regional commission,

Recalling also that most of the other regional commissions have as members countries that are not located in the region that they serve,

1. Welcomes with satisfaction the request by the Government of the Sudan that it be admitted to membership in the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia;
2. Approves the admission of the Sudan as a member of the Commission.

Cooperation with LAS

The General Assembly, by resolution 63/17 of 10 November (see p. 1531), commended the continued efforts of the League of Arab States (LAS) to promote multilateral cooperation among Arab States, and requested the UN system to continue to lend its support. It requested the UN Secretariat and the LAS General Secretariat, within their respective fields of competence, to intensify their cooperation, and called on the Secretary-General to strengthen cooperation and coordination between the United Nations and other UN system organizations and agencies and LAS and its specialized organizations, in order to enhance their capacity to serve the mutual interests and objectives of the two organizations in the political, economic, social, humanitarian, cultural and administrative fields.

Venue and dates of ESCWA twenty-fifth session

On 29 April [meeting 6], the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 2008/1 [draft: E/2008/L.3 & E/2008/SR.6] without vote [agenda item 2].

Venue and dates of the twenty-fifth session of the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia

The Economic and Social Council,

Having considered the letter dated 27 February 2008 from the Executive Secretary of the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia informing the Council of the offer of the Government of Yemen to host the twenty-fifth session of the Commission,

1. Expresses its gratitude to the Government of Yemen for its generous offer;
2. Approves the holding of the twenty-fifth session of the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia in Sana'a from 26 to 29 May 2008.

Frequency of sessions of ESCWA and its subsidiary bodies

In March [E/ESCWA/25/6(Part I)/Add.1], the secretariat provided the background to its evaluation efforts on the conduct of sessions of ESCWA and its subsidiary bodies. It assessed the quality of the services provided to countries in facilitating their consultations and reported on the lessons learned from 18 sessions from 2004 to 2007. In April [E/ESCWA/25/6(Part I)/Add.2], the secretariat reported on the frequency of the sessions and considered the challenges for ESCWA in responding to the emerging needs in light of the ongoing UN reform in the field of development, and the latest intergovernmental machineries of other regional commissions and the frequency of their sessions.

On 29 May [res. 291(XXV)], the Commission called on the secretariat to carry out an in-depth evaluation of the ESCWA intergovernmental structure in light of both programme priority, as identified by countries, and UN reforms. The Commission expressed appreciation for the lessons learned from the evaluation of the intergovernmental sessions during 2004–2007.

Energy, natural resources and cartography

The conservation, development and use of energy and natural resources continued to be the focus of several UN bodies in 2008, including the Commission on Sustainable Development, which commenced its first two-year implementation cycle (2008–2009) on the thematic cluster: agriculture, rural development, land, drought, desertification and Africa.

Recognizing the important role of energy in sustainable development, poverty eradication and achievement of internationally agreed development goals, the Commission, at its sixteenth session in May, discussed the need for new energy technologies, especially renewable energy; energy and industrial development; water services; demand for biofuels; and the improvement of access to energy, water and sanitation in the rural areas. The Commission also observed that despite progress being made with regard to energy for sustainable development, higher energy prices and climate change posed new challenges.

The Director General of the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA), in his annual address to the General Assembly in October, expressed his concern about the proliferation of nuclear weapons and the possibility of extremist groups having access to nuclear or radioactive material. He also noted that IAEA was at the nexus of development and security and had established effective partnerships with the World Health Organization and the Food and Agricultural Organization of the United Nations. Consequently, the use of radiation therapy for treating cancer had increased, higher-yielding food crops had been developed, and more people had access to clean drinking water. Some 439 nuclear power reactors were operating in 30 countries, and 36 new plants were under construction. The Director General cautioned that the primary responsibility for ensuring safety and security depended upon the countries concerned.

The issue of sanitation was the focus of World Water Day (22 March) and one of the main subjects of the UN-Water Annual Report 2008. The United Nations celebrated 2008 as the International Year of Sanitation, which emphasized that disease control and poverty eradication could not be achieved without sanitation, highlighting its importance for health, dignity, and sustainable social and economic development.

The Economic and Social Council recommended that the tenth Conference on the Standardization of Geographical Names be convened in 2012, and that the twenty-fifth session of the United Nations Group of Experts on Geographical Names be held in May 2009.

Energy and natural resources

The Commission on Sustainable Development, at its sixteenth session (New York, 11 May 2007 and 5–16 May 2008) [E/2008/29], focused on the thematic cluster of agriculture, rural development, land, drought, desertification, and Africa for the implementation cycle (2008–2009). In preparation for the session, the Secretary-General submitted reports on each of those areas containing information on issues related to energy and natural resources. A report on the integrated review of the thematic cluster of agriculture, rural development, land, drought, desertification, and Africa in small island developing States [E/CN.17/2008/9] was also submitted.

The Commission reviewed the implementation of the Mauritius Strategy for the Further Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States [YUN 2005, p. 946], focusing on the thematic cluster for the implementation cycle (2008–2009), and adopted a decision on the issue. It also reviewed the implementation of the decisions on water and sanitation and their interlinkages made during its thirteenth session [YUN 2005, p. 1126]. With regard to meeting water and sanitation targets, the Under-Secretary-General for Economic and Social Affairs stated that the world might meet the water target, but not that for sanitation by 2015.

Documents before the Commission included the Secretary-General's report [E/CN.17/2008/2] on the review of implementation of Agenda 21 [YUN 1992, p. 672], the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21 [YUN 1997, p. 792] and the Johannesburg Plan of Implementation [YUN 2002, p. 821]. The report noted the continued need for better access to energy for the rural poor in South Asia and sub-Saharan Africa, how climate change made the development of low-carbon energy technologies a priority, and the uneven progress in slowing natural resource degradation. Despite advances with regard to energy for sustainable development, higher energy prices and climate change posed new demands. For most developing regions, accessibility and affordability of modern energy services remained challenges. Increased energy efficiency and swift development and deployment of advanced, cleaner low-carbon energy technologies were required to balance harmful effects of air pollution and climate change.

In his report on agriculture [E/CN.17/2008/3], the Secretary-General emphasized its role—as by far the largest user of global water supplies—in efforts to reduce hunger and poverty, improve rural livelihoods and achieve sustainable development. He noted that it was difficult for small shareholders to afford fertilizers due to higher energy costs and the depletion of phosphate stocks. As biofuels were gaining international attention and yielding results in many countries, he estimated that their share in global transport energy production would rise from 1 per cent in 2008 to 4–7 per cent in 2030. By 2025, 1.8 billion people would live in absolute water scarcity, exacerbated by climate change; and two thirds of the world's population would live under water-stressed conditions.

As for rural development [E/CN.17/2008/4], the Secretary-General indicated that a majority of the rural population in developing countries continued to lack access to water, sanitation and modern energy sources. He noted that low access to a safe water supply and adequate sanitation caused many diseases in Africa. According to the World Health Organization (WHO), approximately 50 per cent of Africans suffered from one of six water-related diseases.

With regard to implementation on land [E/CN.17/2008/5], the Secretary-General stated that improved soil and water management could enhance land productivity and the availability of water resources. Integrated water resources management was a means to improve interaction in land and water resources management.

In his report on the implementation of Agenda 21 and the Johannesburg Plan of Implementation [E/CN.17/2008/6], the Secretary-General considered the issue of drought and emphasized its impact on the energy sector by exemplifying the case of Ghana in 2007, where the water level of the Akosombo dam dropped below the minimum level of 240 feet, leading to a severe reduction in electricity generation from hydropower and load-shedding of electricity in the entire country. Recent events related to climate change, particularly droughts associated with El Niño, exerted pressures on affected communities and led to overexploitation of natural resources. In reviewing the implementation of Agenda 21 and the Johannesburg Plan of Implementation with regard to desertification [E/CN.17/2008/7], the Secretary-General stated that this was a global issue, and emphasized its serious implications for worldwide eco-safety, poverty eradication, socio-economic stability and sustainable development. He noted that 90 per cent of people in developing countries lagged behind the rest of the world in accessing clean drinking water and adequate sanitation.

In his report on Africa [E/CN.17/2008/8], the Secretary-General underscored that sub-Saharan Africa lacked sufficient access to energy, and that energy production remained expensive, relying heavily on fossil fuels. Moreover, old and inefficient power stations contributed to frequent power shortages in Africa. Water infrastructure development was a priority of most African countries, and many multilateral organizations were involved in working towards the achievement of MDGs with regard to water access. The World Bank had launched the Ethiopian Water Supply and Sanitation Project as a means to improving 5,500 rural water-supply schemes serving 2 million people.

In preparation for the sixteenth session, a number of intersessional meetings were held in 2008, including the International Conference on Combating Desertification (Beijing, 22–24 January), Oslo Policy Forum on Changing the Way We Develop: Dealing with Disasters and Climate Change (Oslo, Norway, 27–29 February) and the High-level Round Table on International Cooperation for Sustainable Development in Caribbean Small Island Developing States (Bridgetown, Barbados, 25–27 March).

Energy

Transit of energy

During 2008, the General Assembly considered the issue of the stable transit of energy and its role in ensuring sustainable development and international cooperation, including the development of transportation systems and pipelines. In that connection, Turkmenistan took the initiative to convene a high-level international conference to discuss the issue in 2009.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December [meeting 72], the Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/63/414 & Corr.1], adopted resolution 63/210 without vote [agenda item 49].

Reliable and stable transit of energy and its role in ensuring sustainable development and international cooperation

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind the growing role of the transit of energy in global processes,

Recognizing the importance of Central Asia and all other transportation and communication hubs and their vital role in the production of energy and its transportation to international markets,

Noting that stable, efficient and reliable energy transportation, as a key factor of sustainable development, is in the interest of the entire international community,

Reiterating the principles of the Rio Declaration on Environment and Development and of Agenda 21, and recalling the recommendations and conclusions contained in the Plan of Implementation of the World Summit on Sustainable Development concerning energy for sustainable development,

1. Welcomes international cooperation in developing transportation systems and pipelines;
2. Recognizes the need for extensive international cooperation in determining ways of ensuring the reliable transportation of energy to international markets through pipelines and other transportation systems;
3. Welcomes the initiative of Turkmenistan to convene in 2009 a high-level international conference to discuss the issue of ensuring the reliable and stable transportation of energy to international markets.

Nuclear energy

By an August note [A/63/276], the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly the 2007 report of the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA). Presenting the report on 27 October [A/63/PV.31], the IAEA Director General stated that concern about the proliferation of nuclear weapons, coupled with the possibility of nuclear or radioactive material falling into the hands of extremist groups, had not diminished since he last addressed the Assembly in 2007. As a development agency, IAEA had established successful partnerships, with WHO and the Food and Agricultural Organization of the United Nations (FAO). Through those partnerships, the use of radiation therapy for treating cancer had increased, higher-yielding food crops had been developed and more people had access to clean drinking water.

The Director General underscored that every aspect of development required reliable access to modern energy resources and that developing countries should view nuclear power as a source of energy that could liberate their citizens from poverty. He stated that the Agency's support had been sought by some 50 States expressing interest in the possible introduction of nuclear power. Increased demand for assistance was particularly strong from developing countries.

In 2008, some 439 nuclear power reactors were operating in 30 countries, and the number of new plants under construction stood at 36. In order to ensure newcomers' nuclear energy safety, efficiency, and minimal proliferation risk, IAEA stressed the need for planning properly, building human resources and infrastructure, establishing independent and effective regulators, and adhering to international safety, security, and non-proliferation instruments. The Director General also stressed that the primary responsibility to ensure safety and security rested with the countries concerned, and emphasized that a single nuclear accident anywhere in the world could undermine the nuclear energy future everywhere. Therefore, the highest safety standards should be maintained.

An important implication of a nuclear renaissance was the wider dissemination of nuclear material, which would increase the risk of nuclear material diversion to produce nuclear weapons. He noted that countries experienced in uranium enrichment and plutonium separation would be able to develop nuclear weapons if they withdrew from the 1968 Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons (NPT) [YUN 1968, p. 17]. He therefore recommended a nuclear fuel bank under IAEA supervision so that new enrichment and reprocessing activities could be brought under multi-lateral control.

The possibility that terrorists might obtain nuclear material remained a serious concern. The Director General indicated that theft or loss of nuclear material was shockingly high, and that the number of such incidents in the year was nearly 250 as at June 2008. Effective nuclear verification required four elements: adequate legal authority, state-of-the-art technology, timely access to all relevant information, and sufficient human and financial resources. As many as 30 States party to NPT had yet to implement their required comprehensive safeguards agreements with the Agency.

The Director General reported that the Democratic People's Republic of Korea briefly suspended access to the Yongbyon nuclear facilities from the Agency's inspectors, who monitored and verified shutdown of the facilities (see p. 595). However, access was restored following an agreement between the United States and the Democratic People's Republic of Korea on a verification protocol.

The IAEA annual report 2008 provided a survey of nuclear developments around the world and of the Agency's work within the framework of the three pillars of technology, safety and security, and verification. The expansion and near- and long-term growth prospects remained centred in Asia. China was considering a significant increase in its growth targets for nuclear power; in 2008, six of the ten construction starts were in China.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 27 October [meeting 32], the General Assembly adopted resolution 63/6 [draft: A/63/L.6 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 80].

Report of the International Atomic Energy Agency

3. Reaffirms its strong support for the indispensable role of the Agency in encouraging and assisting the development and practical application of atomic energy for peaceful uses, in technology transfer to developing countries and in nuclear safety, verification and security;

4. Appeals to Member States to continue to support the activities of the Agency;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit to the Director General of the Agency the records of the sixty-third session of the General Assembly relating to the activities of the Agency.

Natural resources

Water resources

On 22 March, World Water Day [YUN 1992, p. 654], which focused on the theme "Sanitation", was a major outreach event of the International Year of Sanitation. It was coordinated jointly by the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF), WHO and the Water Supply and Sanitation Collaborative Council on behalf of UN-Water. At a gathering in Geneva, a number of prominent speakers gave their perspectives on the challenges related to sanitation.

The UN-Water Annual Report 2008 presented the activities of UN-Water and stated that communication had become increasingly important for UN-Water during the year. A major activity was the restructuring of its website, which was launched in December. A number of seminars and workshops were organized, and an increasing number of documents, reports and fact sheets were prepared by UN-Water or through task forces. Assessment reports focused on the status and trends in water management, and evaluated the progress made toward reaching international development targets related to water as well as challenges and emerging issues. UN-Water also supported coordination among UN agencies and their efforts to monitor the state and utilization of water resources. Activities during the year carried out by seven operational task forces focused on: indicators, monitoring and reporting; sanitation; transboundary waters; IWRM; climate change and water; country-level coordination; and water and gender.

The eighteenth World Water Week (Stockholm, Sweden, 17–23 August) organized workshops, seminars and side events. A specific UN-Water seminar focused on the theme "Transboundary waters—sharing benefits, sharing responsibilities". Other seminars focused on sanitation and the outcomes of regional sanitation conferences and on indicators for action on water management. A UN-Water exhibition was also organized.

The WHO/UNICEF Joint Monitoring Programme for Water Supply and Sanitation continued monitoring activities to provide global reports on water and sanitation coverage in order to facilitate sector planning and management, support countries in their efforts to improve their monitoring systems and provide information for advocacy.

The Chairman of the Commission on Sustainable Development noted the successful efforts of UN-Water and called for its increased role in monitoring the progress of water, sanitation, and IWRM commitments.

Water and sanitation

The Commission considered the Secretary-General's report [E/CN.17/2008/11] on the review of progress in implementing the decision of its thirteenth session on water and sanitation in 2005, which stated that the MDG target on safe drinking water might be achieved, but current trends did not support meeting the sanitation target. It noted that while South Asia, Latin America and the Caribbean, East Asia and the Pacific were on track for meeting water supply targets, West Asian States and sub-Saharan Africa lagged behind. Some of the world's most populous developing countries—including Brazil, Egypt, India, Mexico, Myanmar, Pakistan, Thailand, Turkey and Viet Nam—managed to exceed their targets for providing access to safe drinking water and took strides towards achieving universal access by 2015. Many countries had prioritized water and sanitation services in their national development plans. With regard to basic sanitation services, Latin America and the Caribbean made progress to meet the MDGs target, East Asia and the Pacific moved close to the targeted yearly access figures, but sub-Saharan Africa and South Asia lagged behind. Several countries implemented the Commission's recommendation by establishing an institutional home for sanitation and prioritizing sanitation in national development plans.

Commission consideration. With regard to issues related to water, the Commission warned that projected climate change was likely to intensify problems related to water quality and water shortage in many water-stressed regions. As pressure on water supplies continued to increase, more frequent and severe drought were a matter of concern in both water-short and water-surplus regions. That called for a comprehensive response in respect of climate change mitigation, adaptation, technology transfer and finance. The importance of mainstreaming adaptation to climate change in the water management process was noted. The Commission addressed different aspects of water and sanitation, including the importance of global and national monitoring of the sector; the need for reliable data supported by improved knowledge and research; transfer of technology and capacity-building; the importance of water governance; the role of partnerships; and the importance of strengthening water utilities.

The Commission highlighted the importance of access to safe drinking water and sanitation services for poverty alleviation and for meeting other MDGs, and its interlinkages with health. In addition to limited availability of financial resources, the lack of legislation and national policies on water and sanitation continued to impede progress. In some areas, the absence of water treatment facilities posed an obstacle to environmental management and the provision of safe drinking water. Greater investment in water supply and sanitation and IWRM—in particular by national Governments, the private sector and through official development assistance (ODA)—was required, as well as support to further strengthen local institutional capacities and the use of technologies suited to local conditions.

International Year of Sanitation, 2008

The General Assembly, by resolution 61/192 [YUN 2006, p. 1419], proclaimed 2008 the “International Year of Sanitation” to increase awareness of the importance of sanitation and promote action at all levels. The goals of the year were to stimulate dialogue and create a context for political leadership, leading to the allocation of greater resources to sanitation for the poor. UN-Water supported the Year, and its Task Force on sanitation produced a publication entitled Tackling a global crisis: International Year of Sanitation 2008, jointly undertaken by the United Nations Human Settlements Programme (UN-Habitat) and UNICEF on behalf of UN-Water. The report stated that 2.6 billion people around the world, mainly from rural areas, had no sanitation. The Year provided an opportunity to examine the needs of over one third of the world's population for the most basic of services, and to promote the message that sanitation was vital for health, contributed to social development, was a good economic investment, helped the environment and could be achieved. The report indicated that progress towards the 2015 Sanitation Goal was slow and called for political will, financial investment, popular participation, and affordable technological and hygiene education approaches towards achieving the target. It emphasized that disease control and poverty eradication could not be achieved without sanitation, and called for accelerated progress towards meeting the 2015 Sanitation Goal.

Communication. By a 28 November letter [A/63/598-E/2009/7], Spain transmitted to the Secretary-General the “2008 Zaragoza Charter”, adopted at the 2008 Zaragoza International Exhibition (Zaragoza, Spain, 14 June–14 September), which focused on the theme “Water and Sustainable Development.”

Standardization of geographical names

On 23 July, the Economic and Social Council took note of the report of the ninth United Nations Conference on the Standardization of Geographical Names [YUN 2007, p. 1044], and endorsed the recommendation that the tenth Conference be convened in 2012. The Council also recommended that the twenty-fifth session of the United Nations Group of Experts on Geographical Names be convened in the first half of 2009 (decision 2008/241).

On 12 September, the Council decided that the twenty-fifth session of the Group of Experts would be held at the United Nations Office at Nairobi from 5 to 12 May 2009, to facilitate and prepare the work of the tenth Conference on the Standardization of Geographical Names. The Council requested the Secretary-General to take measures, as appropriate, to implement the decision (decision 2008/260).

On 23 July, the Council took note of the report of the UN Group of Experts on Geographical Names at its twenty-fourth session [ibid.] (decision 2008/242).

Environment and human settlements

In 2008, the United Nations and the international community continued to work towards protecting the environment through legally binding instruments and the activities of the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP).

The tenth special session of the UNEP Governing Council/Global Ministerial Environment Forum discussed the emerging policy themes of globalization and the environment—mobilizing finance to meet the climate challenge, and international environmental governance and UN reform. The Executive Director developed the UNEP Medium-term Strategy 2010–2013, which set out the vision and strategic direction for UNEP activities for that period. The Council authorized the Executive Director to use the Strategy in formulating the strategic frameworks and programmes of work and budgets for the 2010–2011 and 2012–2013 periods. In October, the Executive Director submitted the final review of the first UNEP long-term Tunza strategy (2003–2008) for engaging young people in environmental issues, and proposed a second long-term strategy (2009–2014).

In February, the General Assembly held a thematic debate on “Addressing Climate Change: The United Nations and the World at Work”. The UNEP Governing Council invited the Economic and Social Council to consider a proposal for proclaiming an international decade for addressing climate change for the 2010–2020 period. In a decision on the sustainable development of the Arctic region, the Governing Council requested the Governments of Arctic States and other stakeholders to implement measures to facilitate adaptation to climate change, including by indigenous communities. The twenty-eighth session of the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change, held in April in Budapest, Hungary, decided to produce a fifth assessment report on climate change, to be finalized in 2014. A global strategy was initiated to follow up on the Millennium Ecosystem Assessment, which was completed in 2005.

In August, the Secretary-General recommended the establishment of the Eastern Mediterranean Oil Spill Restoration Trust Fund. The Fund would provide assistance and support to the States adversely affected by the oil slick that resulted from the destruction by Israel of oil storage tanks in Lebanon in 2006, following the outbreak of hostilities between Israel and the paramilitary group Hizbullah. The General Assembly established the Fund in December.

The ninth meeting of the Conference of the Parties to the Convention on Biological Diversity, which took place in May in Bonn, Germany, adopted a roadmap for negotiating an international regime for access to and sharing the benefits of genetic resources.

The United Nations Human Settlements Programme (UN-Habitat) continued to support the implementation of the 1996 Habitat Agenda and the Millennium Development Goals. A new Global Campaign for Sustainable Urbanization merged two previous campaigns on secure tenure and urban governance, and addressed the adaptation and mitigation challenges of climate change. In December, the UN-Habitat Committee of Permanent Representatives endorsed an action plan for implementing the 2008–2013 Medium-term Strategic and Institutional Plan.

UN Environment Programme

Governing Council/Ministerial Forum

The tenth special session of the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP) Governing Council (GC)/Global Ministerial Environment Forum (GMEF) was held in Monaco from 20 to 22 February [A/63/25].

Ministerial-level consultations (20–22 February) discussed the emerging policy themes of international environmental governance and UN reform, and globalization and the environment—mobilizing finance to meet the climate challenge and international environmental governance. The Council/Forum had before it a background paper [UNEP/GCSS.X/9] including policy options emanating from the President’s summary of the ministerial consultations held during the twenty-fourth (2007) GC/GMEF session [YUN 2007, p. 1045].

The Committee of the Whole [UNEP/GCSS.X/10], established by the Council/Forum on 20 February, considered policy issues, including the state of the environment; environment and development; and follow-up to and implementation of the outcomes of UN summits and major intergovernmental meetings, including Governing Council decisions. The policy statement by UNEP Executive Director Achim Steiner was also annexed to the report on the proceedings.

On 23 July (decision 2008/242), the Economic and Social Council took note of the Governing Council's report on its tenth special session.

The General Assembly took note of the report in resolution 63/220 of 19 December (see below).

Subsidiary body

International environmental governance

In November [UNEP/GC.25/3], the UNEP Executive Director submitted to the Governing Council a report summarizing actions taken or proposed on international environmental governance. The report discussed the follow-up to the 2005 World Summit Outcome [YUN 2005, p. 48], in which Governments agreed to explore the possibility of a more coherent institutional framework, including a more integrated structure, for UN system environmental activities, among other measures. Pursuant to the Outcome, the General Assembly established an informal consultative process on the institutional framework for UN environmental activities. Following consultations in 2007, the co-chairs of the process—Mexico and Switzerland—presented an option paper. In July 2008, the co-chairs prepared a draft resolution on international environmental governance for consideration by Member States. The report also dealt with the Bali Strategic Plan for Technology Support and Capacity-building [YUN 2004, p. 1040]; strengthening the UNEP scientific base and financing; issues related to multilateral environmental agreements; and enhanced coordination across the UN system, including the Environment Management Group.

A December note by the Executive Director [UNEP/GC.25/INF/33] contained the 2008 report of the Joint Inspection Unit on the management review of environmental governance within the UN system [JIU/REP/2008/3].

Ministerial meeting. On 30 July [A/62/922], Costa Rica transmitted to the Secretary-General the final document of the Ministerial Meeting on International Environmental Governance (New York, 13 May). The objective of the Meeting, which was chaired by the Minister of Environment and Energy of Costa Rica, was to continue the dialogue on international environmental governance that had taken place in various forums over the previous year, and to elaborate proposals to strengthen UNEP as part of UN reform.

UNEP activities

Monitoring and assessment

In a decision of 22 February [A/63/25, dec. SS.X/5], the UNEP Governing Council expressed its continued concern over the evidence presented in the Global Environment Outlook 4 report (GEO-4), published by UNEP in 2007 [YUN 2007, p. 1056], of unprecedented environmental changes at all levels. It acknowledged that environmental degradation represented a challenge for human well-being and sustainable development, and, in some cases, peace and security. The Council requested the Executive Director to encourage and support the efforts of national bodies to conduct assessments of environmental change and its implications for development within the framework of the Bali Strategic Plan [YUN 2004, p. 1040], which was adopted by the Governing Council in 2005 [YUN 2005, p. 1135]. It also asked the Executive Director, in consultation with the Committee of Permanent Representatives, to present to the Council an overview of the international environmental assessment landscape, identifying possible gaps and duplications, as well as options for the possible development of a scientifically credible and policy-relevant global assessment of environmental change and its implications for development, including a cost analysis and an indicative benefit analysis for each option.

In response to the Council's decision, the Executive Director in November submitted a report [UNEP/GC.25/4/Add.1], which provided a synthesis of the main findings of studies of the environmental assessment landscape at the national level, detailed in a November note [UNEP/GC.25/INF/12/Add.1], and at the global and regional levels, set out in a December note by the Executive Director [UNEP/GC.25/INF/12]. In the 15 years since the 1992 United Nations Conference on Environment and Development (UNCED) [YUN 1992, p. 670], environmental reporting had become a well-established process at the national level. The national-level study found broad differences in environmental assessment and reporting approaches. Of the 196 countries and territories examined, 161 (82 per cent), were involved in state-of-the-environment reporting, producing at least one such report since 1992 or having a first report in process; 35 (18 per cent) demonstrated no evidence of such reporting; 50 (26 per cent) published reports at regular intervals; and 11 countries and territories (6 per cent) no longer prepared reports. Current integrated environmental assessments were broader and more policy-relevant than previous reports, and they sought to provide scenarios that explored the consequences of possible policy options.

As to the regional and global assessment landscape, the report stated that regional assessments were often conducted within global assessment processes, including regional chapters in GEO-4 and the reports of the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change. There was, however, considerable overlap concerning the issues covered in the assessments, most notably in the area of biodiversity. The main gaps in the regional and global assessment process occurred less in the coverage and more in the awareness of the importance of designing a salient, credible and legitimate process to ensure that the assessment was influential. Progress was made in linking environmental change and changes in ecosystem services to human well-being in GEO-4 and the Millennium Ecosystem Assessment, which was launched in 2001 [YUN 2001, p. 961] and completed in 2005 [YUN 2005, p. 1154]. The assessments of impacts and adaptations to climate change and GEO-4 also advanced the use of vulnerability assessment as a way to consider the impacts of multiple stresses, the differential exposure of individuals and societal groups and the importance of adaptive capacity. The science-policy interface in assessment processes varied widely, and it was often difficult to identify clearly the influence of particular assessments on policymaking. More attention to the design and documentation of assessment processes was needed to enhance their credibility, relevance and legitimacy. The goal of any assessment process was to influence policy and action, and much had been learned about the best ways to deliver the assessment results and most significant messages to target audiences. The overview study found a significant problem in gaining access to state of the environment information. While information technology provided easy access, few countries maintained a website storing a complete collection of their state of environment reports. In the case of printed reports, distribution was the limiting factor for reasons of cost, but electronic media were particularly fragile, as older information could be lost when websites were redesigned or abandoned. It was important for assessment processes to learn from the experience of others, which required the processes to be documented and stored in a central repository.

UNEP would work with countries in which environmental assessment was weak or non-existent to build their reporting capacity until it became self-sustaining. It would encourage regional cooperation in assessment and reporting and seek opportunities to join with multilateral environmental agreements and other partners to simplify reporting requirements and make them more coherent. UNEP and its partners would maintain web-based assessment databases with links to national assessment processes and review their content for significant regional and global trends. UNEP global environmental assessments had to provide an overview of the world environmental situation and an objective means to help policymakers set priorities. Future assessments should continue to be framed in the broader context of sustainable development. The report outlined guiding principles and best practices for future global assessments of environmental change. It also presented five options for the possible development of a future global assessment of environmental change, together with a cost and indicative benefit analysis for each. The options included updating global integrated environmental assessments to use information technology better (option 1); providing objective, expert outsourced assessments (option 2); providing a coherent set of integrated and thematic UNEP assessments (option 3); adopting an indicator-based approach (option 4); and undertaking targeted assessments on thematic priority areas supported by a 'UNEP-Live' enabling framework (option 5). The report stated that option 3 was the preferred option in the near term, and that the online and interactive characteristics of that option should be targeted as a model for the long term.

In November [UNEP/GC.25/4], the Executive Director submitted to the Governing Council a report on the state of the environment and the UNEP contribution to addressing substantive environmental challenges. The report summarized issues emanating from UNEP activities in the area of assessment, monitoring and early warning. It also summarized services that UNEP provided to Governments and other stakeholders to build capacity in scientific environmental assessment and information for decision-making through the implementation of the Bali Strategic Plan for Technology Support and Capacity-building, adopted by the Council in 2005 [YUN 2005, p. 1135], and the "Delivering as one" approach [YUN 2006, p. 1584] within UN development assistance frameworks. The report discussed the findings of global assessments conducted since the twenty-fourth (2007) Governing Council session [YUN 2007, p. 1045], including GEO-4 (see below); the Global Outlook for Ice and Snow; Global Glacier Changes: Facts and Figures; the International Assessment of Agricultural Knowledge, Science and Technology for Development; the report World Resources 2008: Roots of Resilience—Growing the Wealth of the Poor; the World's Protected Areas report; and the report of the United Nations Scientific Committee on the Effects of Atomic Radiation [A/63/46] (see p. 694).

A global strategy was initiated to follow up on the Millennium Ecosystem Assessment. The four components of the strategy were to: build the knowledge base; integrate the ecosystem service approach into decision-making at all levels; enhance outreach and dissemination of the Assessment; and explore the needs and options for future global ecosystem services assessments. Together with follow-up partners, UNEP was implementing the strategy through a three-year project on implementing the Assessment's findings and recommendations, focusing primarily on sub-global assessments; the first project meeting was held in April. UNEP also facilitated consultations with Governments and other stakeholders on the proposed intergovernmental science-policy platform on biodiversity and ecosystem services. At the first platform meeting (Putrajaya, Malaysia, 10–12 November), UNEP was requested to undertake a gap analysis and prepare a second meeting to explore and discuss mechanisms to improve the science-policy interface for biodiversity and ecosystem services.

A November note by the Executive Director [UNEP/GC.25/INF/11] contained a synthesis report of global environmental assessments, prepared by the Netherlands Environmental Assessment Agency at the request of UNEP. It reviewed key messages of recent global environmental assessments and examined their policy messages in terms of: trends in persistent environmental problems, including the costs and benefits of early action and costs of inaction; policy options with regard to interlinked, persistent environmental problems; and effective policy-making.

Environment Watch strategy

In response to a 2007 Governing Council decision [YUN 2007, p. 1048], the Executive Director, in a November note [UNEP/GC.25/INF/20], presented the updated Environment Watch strategy: Vision 2020, first outlined in 2006 [YUN 2006, p. 1211], as an integral component of the implementation of the UNEP medium-term strategy (see p. 1153). The revised strategy was designed to achieve enhanced institutional, scientific and technological infrastructures and capacities for cooperation in keeping the state of the environment under review and providing timely, accurate and consistent environmental data and information across the six priorities of the medium-term strategy. It was based on five components: capacity-building and technology support; assessment; early warning, monitoring and observation; environmental indicators, data support and information-sharing; and networking and partnerships. Time-bound targets for each component were outlined in the note. Implementation of the Environment Watch strategy required a collective commitment by Governments and partners. National implementation would be monitored through the annual UN development assistance framework review and evaluation processes, as well as the evaluation of UNEP subprogrammes. Monitoring and evaluation of the overall strategy would be conducted through GC/GMEF and UNEP internal programme and project monitoring procedures. Targets to be met within time frames from 2009 to 2020 were outlined in an annex to the note. The note set out the expected benefits and added value of the strategy. The strategy would be implemented by the Executive Director in close cooperation with Governments, UN partners and a consortium of international organizations and financial institutions. The total estimated cost of implementation within the 2010–2011 UNEP programme of work was $123.3 million. It was anticipated that UNEP would have to contribute 20 per cent of the estimated cost of delivery of any given service package.

Global Environment Outlook

By a December note [UNEP/GC.25/INF/13], the Executive Director transmitted a report setting out the findings of the review of the initial impact of the fourth Global Environmental Outlook: Environment for Development report (GEO-4), published in 2007 [YUN 2007, p. 1056]. The report, prepared by a team of independent evaluation specialists, assessed the extent to which GEO-4 and its summary for decision-makers had reached their intended target groups, and examined the use and influence of GEO-4 in the 10 months following its launch. The review team found that GEO continued to fill an important niche in the global assessment landscape by being relevant and useful, and by adding value to most of its primary environmental constituencies. It concluded that more could be done to increase the use and influence of GEO assessments among stakeholders. More attention could also be given to maximizing the potential of GEO to ensure that environmental problems and emerging issues of wide international significance received appropriate and timely consideration by key stakeholders, particularly with respect to human and ecosystem well-being and the role of the private sector in global sustainable development. The report outlined the review's findings related to the use, utility and value, salience, and targeting and reach of GEO-4, as well as lessons learned in the review and the findings of the GEO-4 self-assessment survey.

UNEP Year Book

UNEP published its fifth annual report on the changing environment, the UNEP Year Book 2008 (formerly known as the GEO Year Book), which highlighted the increasing complexity and interconnections of climate change, ecosystem integrity, human well-being and economic development. The Year Book, produced in collaboration with world environmental experts, examined the emergence and influence of economic mechanisms and market-driven approaches for addressing environmental degradation. It described recent findings and policy decisions that affected the response to changes in the global environment.

Support to Africa

In response to a 2007 Governing Council decision [YUN 2007, p. 1048], the Executive Director in October submitted a report [UNEP/GC.25/7] on support to Africa in environmental management and protection. The report summarized UNEP activities in Africa related to climate change, minimizing threats from the environmental causes and consequences of conflict and disaster, ecosystem management, environmental governance, alleviating the environmental and health impacts of harmful substances and hazardous wastes, and sustainable consumption and production. Under the project on capacity development for the Clean Development Mechanism, UNEP worked towards building the skills and knowledge of countries and companies to design, submit and secure cleaner energy schemes. The project's second phase (2007–2009) included Algeria, Mauritius and the United Republic of Tanzania. UNEP supported and provided substantive inputs to the twelfth session of the African Ministerial Conference on the Environment (AMCEN) (Johannesburg, South Africa, 7–12 June), which adopted a decision on developing a common negotiating position on a comprehensive international climate change regime beyond 2012 and a comprehensive framework of African climate change programmes. UNEP launched activities on environmental legislation, post-conflict assessment and capacity-building for the conservation and management of environmental resources in the Democratic Republic of the Congo. The activities would provide environmental support to the UN country team and the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo. UNEP was working to promote an integrated approach to ecosystem management to reverse the decline in ecosystem services and improve ecosystem resilience to external impacts. In Kenya, UNEP initiated a project to reduce emissions from deforestation in developing countries. The project also aimed to alleviate poverty and maintain water supplies in rivers leading into the Masai Mara National Reserve in Kenya and the Serengeti National Park in Tanzania. An Africa-wide rainwater harvesting programme was developed and presented for peer review at the first African Water Week (Tunis, Tunisia, 26–28 March). UNEP initiated a $2.3 million project on improving water management and governance in African countries through support for developing and implementing integrated water resource management plans partially funded by the European Union; implementation began in 2008 and would continue for three years. The first inter-ministerial conference on health and environment in Africa (Libreville, Gabon, 26–29 August), organized jointly by the World Health Organization (WHO) and UNEP, focused on health security through healthy environments. The Atlas of Africa's Changing Environment was launched during the twelfth AMCEN session; the Atlas complemented the Africa Environment Outlook report and provided a graphical presentation of environmental change in the 53 countries of Africa using satellite images of selected sites. UNEP was working to support the goals of the United Nations Decade of Education for Sustainable Development 2005–2014, proclaimed by the General Assembly in resolution 57/254 [YUN 2002, p. 826]; beginning in February, it was engaged in establishing the Kenya e-Learning Centre and its environmental component. The fifth African round table on sustainable consumption and production, organized as a pre-session event to the twelfth AMCEN session, reviewed progress made in the African Programme to facilitate Africa's participation in the Marrakech Process on sustainable consumption and production [YUN 2003, p. 840] and identified follow-up actions and future directions, which were endorsed by AMCEN. UNEP, the United Nations Human Settlements Programme (UN-Habitat) and the United Nations Economic Commission for Africa produced The State of African Cities 2008, a report examining trends in urban growth, productivity, governance and environmental sustainability.

The UNEP programme in Africa continued to face challenges in its delivery. The lack of funding from the UNEP Environment Fund posed a threat to achieving the expected results, and more importantly, to fulfilling the expectations of Governments and other key stakeholders. Another major challenge was fragmentation and lack of coherence in delivery—a programmatic approach was needed with sufficient resources for its implementation. Coordination and collaboration, including with multilateral environmental agreement secretariats, were critical in the delivery of the UNEP programme in the region. Integration of the work of the UNEP divisions and the regional offices had to be enhanced.

Water policy and strategy

In response to a 2007 Governing Council decision [YUN 2007, p. 1050], the Executive Director in October submitted a report [UNEP/GC.25/9 & Corr.1] on implementation in 2007 and 2008 of the UNEP water policy and strategy, adopted by the Council in 2007 [ibid.]. The report discussed progress in implementing the three components of the strategy: assessment, management and coordination. Under the assessment component, UNEP undertook water vulnerability assessments for Central Asia, North-East Asia, South Asia and South-East Asia to support decision-making, and supported Nepal in developing a comprehensive and integrated action plan for the Bagmati River. Through the Africa-Asia project on vulnerability assessment of freshwater resources to environmental change, UNEP examined integrated impacts of potential environmental changes on water resources. The Global Environment Monitoring System Water Programme network grew to more than 3,100 stations with more than 4 million data points. In follow-up to the Sudan post-conflict assessment [YUN 2007, p. 1052] on freshwater, UNEP was providing technical advice on sustainable groundwater extraction in camps for internally displaced persons, and supporting the re-establishment of the water governance framework at the state level with its integrated water resources management project. UNEP and the World Glacier Monitoring Service jointly launched the report Global Glacier Changes: Facts and Figures at the twenty-ninth session of the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change (Geneva, 1 September) (see p. 1164).

The management component of the water policy and strategy followed the three integrated water resources management pillars: strengthening the enabling environment; strengthening institutional functions; and improving access to management instruments. UNEP conducted a survey on integrated water resources management planning to support the international community in monitoring the development of the integrated water resources management plans. The results provided the basis of the UN-Water Status Report on Integrated Water Resources Management and Water Efficiency Plans, presented to the Commission on Sustainable Development at its sixteenth (2008) session (see p. 915). As a strategic partner of the African Union (AU) Commission and the African Ministers' Council on Water, UNEP provided technical support and policy advice in the preparatory process of the eleventh AU summit (Sharm el-Sheikh, Egypt, 24 June–1 July), which focused on accelerating progress toward the 2015 Millennium Development Goal (MDG) targets on water and sanitation. UNEP provided technical support to the African Ministers' Council on Water in the implementation of key regional initiatives, including the rural water supply and sanitation initiative; the programme on water and sanitation for African cities; the integrated water resources management initiative; and the networking of water basin organizations and transboundary water initiatives.

The UN mechanism for inter-agency coordination on water resources improved cooperation between UN agencies. During the 2007–2008 period, UNEP clarified its priorities, which were based on its 2010–2013 medium-term strategy (see p. 1153). As a result, the water policy and strategy would be implemented through the six cross-cutting thematic priority areas, which comprised the six sub-programmes in the 2010–2011 programme of work. Gender equality and equity would be integrated in all activities.

A December note by the Executive Director [UNEP/GC.25/INF/31] summarized major outputs and results from the implementation of the UNEP water policy and strategy.

Environment and sustainable development

The Commission on Sustainable Development, at its sixteenth session (New York, 5–16 May) [E/2008/29], considered, for its 2008–2009 implementation cycle, the thematic cluster issues of agriculture, rural development, land, drought, desertification and Africa (see p. 1166). The Commission had before it reports of the Secretary-General on the review of implementation of Agenda 21 [YUN 1992, p. 672] and the Johannesburg Plan of Implementation [YUN 2002,

p. 822] with regard to drought [E/CN.17/2008/6] and desertification [E/CN.17/2008/7]; the integrated review [E/CN.17/2008/9] of the thematic cluster of agriculture, rural development, land, drought, desertification and Africa in small island developing States (see below); and the review [E/CN.17/2008/11] of progress in implementing the 2005 Commission decision [YUN 2005, p. 1130] on water and sanitation (see p. 1139).

Small island developing States

In October [UNEP/GC.25/6], the Executive Director submitted a report reviewing progress made in implementing a 2007 Governing Council decision on small island developing States (SIDS) [YUN 2007, p. 1050]. UNEP undertook activities aimed mainly at supporting SIDS in the implementation of the Mauritius Strategy for the Further Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States [YUN 2005, p. 946], following the tailored and regional approach called for in a 2005 Council decision [ibid., p. 1138]. UNEP was implementing a Global Environment Facility-funded project on coastal resilience to climate change for assessing vulnerability and adaptation of mangroves and associated ecosystems. It implemented projects on integrating the management of watersheds and coastal areas in Caribbean SIDS—supporting 13 such States—and on sustainable integrated water resource and wastewater management in the Pacific Island countries—supporting 14 SIDS. Projects related to the recovery and recycling of ozone-depleting substances were under way in all regions, benefitting 9 Pacific, 14 Caribbean and 6 Atlantic and Indian Ocean SIDS. UNEP was supporting financially and technically the assessment of the economic, social and environmental impacts of trade-related policies in the agricultural sector, focusing on biodiversity impacts. It was implementing a regional project demonstrating and capturing best practices and technologies for the reduction of land-sourced impacts of coastal tourism. The report described UNEP activities according to the thematic areas outlined in the Mauritius Strategy, including activities related to climate change and sea-level rise; natural and environmental disasters; waste management; coastal and marine resources; freshwater, land, energy, tourism and biodiversity resources; science and technology; sustainable capacity development and education for sustainable development; sustainable production and consumption; national and regional enabling environments; knowledge management and information for decision-making; and South-South cooperation. The report also provided information on specific UNEP actions in Caribbean and Pacific SIDS. An October note by the Executive Director [UNEP/

GC.25/INF/18] provided additional information on the activities covered in the report.

Reports of Secretary-General. In February, the Secretary-General issued a report [E/CN.17/2008/9] on the integrated review of the thematic cluster of agriculture, rural development, land, drought, desertification and Africa in SIDS, which described the continuing challenges faced by SIDS in their effort to advance implementation of the Mauritius Strategy.

In a report issued in August [A/63/296], the Secretary-General reviewed efforts of the UN system, the international community and SIDS to operationalize the Mauritius Strategy, and described initiatives to promote the integration of the Strategy in the sustainable development plans of SIDS.

(For further information on the sustainable development of SIDS, see p. 945).

South-South cooperation

In response to a 2007 Governing Council decision [YUN 2007, p. 1050], the Executive Director in October submitted a report [UNEP/GC.25/8] which summarized UNEP activities to promote South-South cooperation for sustainable development and outlined planned activities. The Bali Strategic Plan for Technology Support and Capacity-building, adopted by the Council in 2005 [YUN 2005, p. 1135] established South-South cooperation as a key mechanism for implementing the Plan. In response to the Council's 2007 decision, UNEP adopted a strategic approach that focused on conducting internal and external consultations to advance the integration of South-South cooperation into its work, and in developing partnerships and alliances in support of its capacity-building and technology support activities. A major component of the approach comprised promoting the application of a comprehensive set of strategic and operational guidelines, which served as the reference document for guiding the integration of South-South cooperation into existing and proposed activities. Other key components included further developing and refining the guidelines; holding consultations with UNEP divisions to promote the application of the guidelines and the integration of South-specific approaches in the capacity-building activities of the divisions; consulting with the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) special unit for South-South cooperation, other UN agencies, multilateral environmental agreement secretariats, regional cooperation mechanisms and South-South cooperation initiatives to establish strategic partnerships and develop joint activities; coordinating the development of a clearing-house mechanism for South-South cooperation; and developing and implementing effective outreach. The report described key UNEP activities and achievements related to South-South cooperation, including technical training and capacity-building. The implementation of South-South cooperation faced challenges related to internal funding support; the lack of a systematic approach to UNEP capacity-building activities; matching expertise to expressed needs; and effective outreach and related promotional impacts.

An October note by the Executive Director [UNEP/GC.25/INF/19] detailed other South-South cooperation activities implemented by UNEP.

Sustainable development of the Arctic region

On 22 February, the Governing Council adopted a decision on the sustainable development of the Arctic region [dec. SS.X/2]. Recalling its 2003 decision on the topic [YUN 2003, p. 1042], and expressing its concern over the impact of climate change on the polar regions, the Council urged the Governments of Arctic States and other stakeholders to continue to apply the precautionary approach as set forth in principle 15 of the Rio Declaration on Environment and Development [YUN 1992, p. 671], adopted at the 1992 United Nations Conference on Environment and Development [ibid., p. 670], in connection with their activities potentially affecting the Arctic environment, including its biodiversity; and to continue to conduct environmental impact assessments. It requested Governments, together with the International Council for Science and the World Meteorological Organization (WMO), the sponsoring agencies of the International Polar Year 2007–2008, and other bodies, including UNEP and the Arctic Council, to enhance the scientific basis for informed decision-making by promoting international scientific collaboration and coordination to better track, understand and predict Arctic change as a key International Polar Year legacy activity. It also requested the Governments of Arctic States and other stakeholders to implement measures to facilitate adaptation to climate change at all levels, including by indigenous and other communities. UNEP was encouraged to join with other organizations and programmes to seek means to sustain and enhance Arctic observing networks beyond the Year's research phase.

Coordination and cooperation

Environmental emergencies

In 2008, UNEP continued to assist vulnerable or crisis-affected countries and communities by providing environmental expertise for assessments, and integrating environmental concerns in emergency response, post-crisis reconstruction, recovery projects, and long-term sustainable development.

On 12 May, an 8.0 magnitude earthquake struck the Sichuan Province of China, affecting approximately 70 million people. As at December, the death toll had reached more than 100,000; more than 374,643 were injured and 17,923 were missing. As the primary international environmental actor on the ground, UNEP coordinated the environmental response to the earthquake. It provided rapid assessment and advisory support for the prevention and control of secondary disasters and assisted the Chinese Government in integrating environmental considerations into long-term recovery and reconstruction. UNEP strengthened its office in Beijing with technical experts in domestic, industrial and hazardous waste management, enabling UNEP to provide environmental expertise to the UN country team and Chinese authorities. At China's request, UNEP facilitated training workshops on post-disaster environmental management for Chinese civil servants, environmental experts, Government representatives and Beijing-based international organizations.

In Myanmar, UNEP supported the environmental recovery from the impact of Cyclone Nargis, which struck the country on 2 May. The cyclone affected an estimated 2.4 million people; official figures indicated that more than 77,000 people were killed and almost 56,000 were missing. From 16 to 21 May the Joint Environment Unit of UNEP and the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs (OCHA) conducted an assessment of the immediate risks stemming from environmental damage, following which UNEP deployed an environmental expert to work on the UN disaster recovery programme as part of the country team. The Joint Unit and its partners responded to several other events, such as the environmental impact of Hurricane Ike, which affected the Turks and Caicos Islands in September; toxic pesticides carried aboard a capsized ferry in the Philippines in June; and landslides triggered by heavy rainfall in Honduras in September and October.

In cooperation with the United Nations International Strategy for Disaster Reduction, UNEP established the Partnership for Environment and Disaster Reduction to advance an integrated approach to climate change, disaster reduction and ecosystem services.

Oil slick in Lebanon

In August [A/63/225], the Secretary-General reported on progress in implementing General Assembly resolutions 61/194 [YUN 2006, p. 1215] and 62/188 [YUN 2007, p. 1053] related to the oil slick on Lebanese shores that resulted from the 2006 destruction by Israel of oil storage tanks in Lebanon following the outbreak of hostilities between Israel and the paramilitary group Hizbullah [YUN 2006, p. 574]. The release of 15,000 tons of fuel oil into the Mediterranean Sea led to the contamination of 150 kilometre of coastline in Lebanon and the Syrian Arab Republic. The report reiterated and updated the overall assessment, presented in the Secretary-General's 2006 report on the issue [ibid., p. 1052], of the impact of the oil spill on human health, biodiversity, fisheries and tourism, and the implications for livelihoods and the economy of Lebanon. It also reviewed progress made in cleaning up and rehabilitating Lebanon's polluted shores and sea.

The Secretary-General noted that Israel had yet to assume responsibility for providing compensation to the Government of Lebanon and other countries for the costs of repairing the environmental damage caused by the destruction of the oil storage tanks, including the restoration of the marine environment, as called for in resolutions 61/194 and 62/188. A response in that regard was formally sought by the UNEP Post-Conflict and Disaster Management Branch in a letter of 16 August 2007 to the Permanent Mission of Israel to the United Nations Office at Geneva, and in a further letter of 5 June 2008 from the UNEP Executive Director to the Permanent Representative of Israel to UNEP. No response to either communication had been received.

By June 2008, approximately 500 cubic meters of liquid and 3,120 cubic meters of semi-solid and solid waste had been collected during a two-phase clean-up operation implemented by the Lebanese Ministry of the Environment in partnership with several Member States and organizations. As at June 2008, total financial assistance received by Lebanon in support of its clean-up efforts amounted to about 10 per cent of the average upper limit range of between $137 million and $205 million, as recommended by the Experts Working Group for Lebanon, and about 24 per cent of the minimum value of $77.8 million. No progress was made towards creating an eastern Mediterranean oil spill restoration fund, as called for in resolution 62/188.

The Secretary-General urged Member States, international organizations, international and regional financial institutions, non-governmental organizations (NGOs) and the private sector to continue their support for Lebanon in addressing the impact of the oil spill, in particular for rehabilitation activities on the Lebanese coast, as well as in the broader recovery effort. The international effort should be intensified, as Lebanon was still engaged in oil removal, waste treatment and recovery monitoring. The spill was not covered by any of the international oil-spill compensation funds and thus merited special consideration. In that context, the Secretary-General recommended establishing the eastern Mediterranean oil spill restoration fund.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December [meeting 72], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/63/414 & Corr.1], adopted resolution 63/211 by recorded vote (165-7-2) [agenda item 49].

Oil slick on Lebanese shores

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 61/194 of 20 December 2006 and 62/188 of 19 December 2007 on the oil slick on Lebanese shores,

Reaffirming the outcome of the United Nations Conference on the Human Environment, especially principle 7 of the Declaration of the Conference, in which States were requested to take all possible steps to prevent pollution of the seas,

Emphasizing the need to protect and preserve the marine environment in accordance with international law,

Taking into account the 1992 Rio Declaration on Environment and Development, especially principle 16, in which it was stipulated that the polluter should, in principle, bear the cost of pollution, and taking into account also chapter 17 of Agenda 21,

Noting again with great concern the environmental disaster caused by the destruction by the Israeli Air Force on 15 July 2006 of the oil storage tanks in the direct vicinity of El-Jiyeh electric power plant in Lebanon, resulting in an oil slick that covered the entirety of the Lebanese coastline and extended to the Syrian coastline,

Noting again with appreciation the assistance offered by donor countries and international organizations for the early recovery and reconstruction of Lebanon through bilateral and multilateral channels, including the Athens Coordination Meeting on the response to the marine pollution incident in the Eastern Mediterranean, held on 17 August 2006, as well as the Stockholm Conference for Lebanon's Early Recovery, held on 31 August 2006,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of General Assembly resolution 62/188 on the oil slick on Lebanese shores;

2. Reiterates the expression of its deep concern about the adverse implications of the destruction by the Israeli Air Force of the oil storage tanks in the direct vicinity of the Lebanese El-Jiyeh electric power plant for the achievement of sustainable development in Lebanon;

3. Considers that the oil slick has heavily polluted the shores of Lebanon and partially polluted Syrian shores and consequently has had serious implications for livelihoods and the economy of Lebanon, owing to the adverse implications for natural resources, biodiversity, fisheries and tourism, and for human health, in the country;

4. Requests the Government of Israel to assume responsibility for prompt and adequate compensation to the Government of Lebanon and other countries directly affected by the oil slick, such as the Syrian Arab Republic whose shores have been partially polluted, for the costs of repairing the environmental damage caused by the destruction, including the restoration of the marine environment;

5. Expresses its appreciation for the efforts of the Government of Lebanon and those of the Member States, regional and international organizations, regional and international financial institutions, non-governmental organizations and the private sector in the initiation of clean-up and rehabilitation operations on the polluted shores, and encourages the Member States and above-mentioned entities to continue their financial and technical support to the Government of Lebanon towards achieving the completion of clean-up and rehabilitation operations, with the aim of preserving the ecosystem of Lebanon and that of the Eastern Mediterranean Basin;

6. Decides to establish an Eastern Mediterranean Oil Spill Restoration Trust Fund, based on voluntary contributions, to provide assistance and support to the States directly adversely affected in their integrated environmentally sound management, from clean-up to safe disposal of oily waste, of this environmental disaster resulting from the destruction of the oil storage tanks at El-Jiyeh electric power plant, and requests the Secretary-General to implement this decision before the end of the sixty-third session of the General Assembly;

7. Invites States, intergovernmental organizations, non-governmental organizations and the private sector to make voluntary financial contributions to the Trust Fund, and, in this regard, requests the Secretary-General to mobilize international technical and financial assistance in order to ensure that the Trust Fund has sufficient and adequate resources;

8. Recognizes the multidimensionality of the adverse impact of the oil slick, and requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its sixty-fourth session a report on the implementation of the present resolution under the item entitled "Sustainable development".

Memorandums of understanding

A December note by the Executive Director [UNEP/GC.25/INF/8] summarized the two memorandums of understanding (MOUs) concluded between UNEP and other UN bodies since his last report on the subject [YUN 2006, p. 1216]. In June, UNEP signed a corporate MOU with the United Nations Office for Project Services (UNOPS) that covered projects implemented from 1 July; it would remain in effect until 31 December 2011. In December, UNEP concluded an MOU with UNDP under which the two Programmes would cooperate in areas of common interest, including climate change, the Poverty and Environment Initiative and other environmental endeavours.

Participation of civil society

The ninth Global Civil Society Forum (Monaco, 19 February) [UNEP/GCSF/9/1] discussed civil society engagement during the tenth (2008) GC/GMEF special session; guidelines for improving the Forum cycle; globalization and the environment: mobilizing finance to meet the climate challenge; and the UNEP Medium-term Strategy 2010–2013 (see p. 1153). A dialogue was held between Forum participants and the UNEP Executive Director.

A note by the Executive Director [UNEP/GCSS.X/INF/5] contained regional civil society statements to the tenth (2008) special session of the Governing Council.

In response to a 2003 Governing Council decision [YUN 2003, p. 1046], the Executive Director in October submitted a report [UNEP/GC.25/10] presenting the final review of the first UNEP long-term Tunza strategy (2003–2008) for the engagement of and involvement of young people in environmental issues [YUN 2002, p. 1040] as well as the proposed second long-term strategy (2009–2014). Under the first Tunza strategy, UNEP established regional and sub-regional environmental networks and organized 13 conferences and workshops annually for young people. Through the networks, UNEP was able to reach out with environmental information to over 30,000 young people's organizations. UNEP organized six Tunza international conferences between 2003 and 2008 and published 23 issues of Tunza magazine. The 2008 Tunza International Children's Conference was held in Stavanger, Norway, from 17 to 21 June. UNEP also facilitated and supported the participation of young leaders in GC/GMEF and the Global Civil Society Forum, meetings of conferences of the parties to environmental conventions and other international environmental discussions. The lack of adequate financial and human resources greatly limited UNEP work with young people. Nevertheless, the Tunza programme was able to achieve most of its planned activities for the first strategy through private sector funding. UNEP received substantial funding for the Tunza programme from the Bayer company, which provided €1 million annually from 2004 to 2007 and €1.2 million in 2008 to support children and youth in environmental activities. The main challenge for UNEP in its work with young people was the lack of access to environmental information at the national level. An October note by the Executive Director [UNEP/GC.25/INF/17] reviewed the implementation of the first Tunza strategy.

The proposed 2009–2014 strategy was developed in line with the recommendations from the midterm independent evaluation of the first strategy, released in 2006 [YUN 2006, p. 1216], and received inputs from children and young people's focal points in UNEP divisions and regional offices, partner organizations, the Tunza Youth Advisory Council and Junior Board, participants in the 2008 Tunza International Conference and others. Under the overall Tunza concept, the second strategy was designed to increase the participation of young people in environmental issues. It sought to promote a global movement through which children and young people would engage in environmental activities and influence politicians, leaders and society to make environmental changes. The second strategy also sought to enhance, inspire and enable the involvement of children and young people in sustainable development, particularly in the six thematic priorities identified in the UNEP medium-term strategy for the 2010–2013 period.

Cooperation with UN-Habitat

The Governing Council considered a note by the Executive Director [UNEP/GC.25/INF/10], which contained the joint report of the Executive Directors of UNEP and UN-Habitat on progress made in the 2007–2008 period to strengthen cooperation between the Programmes. Cooperation between UNEP and UN-Habitat was expanded and institutionalized. The Partnership Framework 2008–2013 was adopted by the senior management of both Programmes. A joint implementation plan for 2008–2009 focused on: cities and climate change, with a special focus on Africa; the Global Alliance for Ecomobility, a partnership aimed at reducing people's dependency on private automobiles; integrated waste management; city biodiversity and ecosystems; and joint outreach activities. The overall goal of cooperation between UNEP and UN-Habitat was to integrate the environmental perspective into local, national and global urban policymaking; incorporate urban perspectives into environmental policymaking; and highlight the local-global linkages of environmental issues.

General Assembly issues

The Executive Director in February provided information on issues arising from resolutions adopted by the General Assembly in 2007 that called for action by, or were of relevance to, UNEP [UNEP/GCSS.X/INF/3].

Administrative and budgetary matters

Budget execution

A February note by the Executive Director [UNEP/GCSS.X/INF/4] contained information on the execution of the UNEP 2006–2007 biennial budget. Total provisional resources for the biennium, including the UN regular budget, the Environment Fund, trust funds, earmarked contributions and trust fund support, amounted to $414.4 million, including a balance as at 1 January 2006 of $90.5 million. Total claims on resources were estimated at $303 million. The estimated total year-end balance of funds as at 31 December 2007 was projected to be $111.4 million.

Board of Auditors report

A note by the Executive Director [UNEP/GC/25/INF/6] contained the report of the Board of Auditors, which included the financial report and audited financial statements of UNEP for the biennium ended 31 December 2007 [A/63/5/Add.6]. UNEP financial statements covered the major funds, including the Environment Fund, general trust funds, the Multilateral Fund for the Implementation of the Montreal Protocol on Substances that Deplete the Ozone Layer, technical cooperation trust funds and other trust funds. The Environment Fund reported a total income of $122 million in 2006–2007, $6 million for the Fund's programme reserve activities and $16 million for its biennial support budget. The total approved programme budget for the biennium was $144 million. Resources were shifted from contractual services to cover increased staffing costs in order to meet the commitments of the Environment Fund within the projected funding. On 31 December 2007, contributions represented $2.3 million for the Environment Fund and $18.5 million for all general trust funds.

At the end of the biennium, there was a net excess of income over expenditure before adjustments of $36.8 million as compared to $8.3 million in 2004–2005. Contributions to technical cooperation trust funds, earmarked contributions and Professional Officer trust funds were accounted for when received in cash. Overall, total reserves and fund balances decreased by $4 million (1.7 per cent) to $237.4 million. That was mainly due to non-budgeted expenditure in respect of the accrual of end-of-service benefits. The Multilateral Fund reported a net deficit of $37.7 million, while in 2004–2005, the deficit amounted to $44.6 million. Nevertheless, the Fund's financial statements showed a positive total reserves and fund balances of $480.5 million as at 31 December 2007.

The Board made recommendations relating to travel costs; the level of UNEP liquidity and the progress of its projects; liabilities for end-of-service and post-retirement benefits, particularly health insurance; disclosure of financial statements received from the regular budget and the related expenditure and regarding advances paid to implementing partners; the establishment of a working group for both the International Public Sector Accounting Standards and the enterprise resource planning system; the review of its service agreement with the United Nations Office at Nairobi (UNON); improvement of its internal control procedures; payment of long-outstanding contributions to multilateral environment agreements; justification of the amount of non-expendable property disclosed in the financial statements; and options for reducing the manual processing of financial statements to a minimum.

Medium-term Strategy (2010–2013)

In response to a 2007 Governing Council decision [YUN 2007, p. 1057], the Executive Director developed the proposed UNEP Medium-term Strategy for 2010–2013, which was outlined in a note by the Executive Director [UNEP/GCSS.X/8]. The Strategy set out the vision and strategic direction for UNEP activities for the 2010–2013 period, including results to be delivered through the UNEP biennial programmes of work for 2010–2011 and 2012–2013; the UNEP GEF portfolio for 2010–2014; and UNEP earmarked contributions. For the 2010–2013 period, UNEP would focus on exercising environmental leadership on six cross-cutting thematic priorities: climate change; disasters and conflicts; ecosystem management; environmental governance; harmful substances and hazardous waste; and resource efficiency, sustainable consumption and production. Each priority included an objective and expected accomplishments. In line with the priorities, UNEP objectives under the Medium-term Strategy were to: strengthen the ability of countries to integrate climate change responses into national development processes; minimize environmental threats to human well-being from the environmental causes and consequences of conflicts and disasters; ensure that countries utilized the ecosystem approach to enhance human well-being; ensure that environmental governance at the country, regional and global levels was strengthened to address agreed environmental priorities; minimize the impact of harmful substances and hazardous waste on the environment and human beings; and ensure that natural resources were produced, processed and consumed in a more environmentally sustainable way. The vision for the medium-term was for UNEP to set the global environmental agenda; promote the coherent implementation of the environmental dimension of sustainable development within the UN system; and serve as an authoritative advocate for the global environment. The Strategy was developed by UNEP in consultation with the Committee of Permanent Representatives, the secretariats of UNEP-administered multilateral environmental agreements, and representatives of civil society and the private sector. Its priorities emerged from a review of scientific evidence; the comparative advantage and mandate of UNEP; priorities emerging from global and regional forums; and an assessment of areas in which UNEP could make a transformative difference. UNEP would monitor progress against the objectives and expected accomplishments contained in the Strategy and programmes of work, and would report to the Committee of Permanent Representatives every six months.

On 22 February [dec. SS.X/3], the Governing Council authorized the Executive Director to use the Medium-term Strategy 2010–2013 in formulating the strategic frameworks and programmes of work and budgets for 2010–2011 and for 2012–2013, and as a means to encourage coordination among UNEP divisions. It noted that any budgetary issues arising from the Medium-term Strategy would be addressed through the programmes of work and budgets for 2010–2011 and 2012–2013 that would be approved by the Council. The Executive Director was encouraged to strengthen results-based management in UNEP and, working within the approved programme of work for 2008–2009, use that period to begin the transition to a fully results-based organization. The Council requested the Executive Director to inform Governments about the implementation of the Medium-term Strategy 2010–2013 at regular intervals and to submit to the Council in 2011 a progress report on implementation.

The Strategy's six thematic cross-cutting priorities constituted the six proposed subprogrammes of the proposed UN strategic framework for the period 2010–2011 for programme 11, Environment, which was submitted to the General Assembly in March [A/63/6(Prog.11)]. The forty-eighth session of the Committee for Programme and Coordination (CPC) (New York, 9 June–3 July) [A/63/16] (see p. 1527) recommended that the General Assembly approve the narrative of programme 11. The Assembly, in resolution 63/247 of 24 December (see p. 1563), endorsed the Committee's recommendations.

Global Environment Facility

The Global Environment Facility (GEF) was established in 1991 as a joint programme of UNDP, UNEP and the World Bank [YUN 1991, p. 505] to help solve global and environmental problems. In 2008, GEF united 178 member Governments—in partnership with international institutions, NGOs and the private sector—to address global environmental issues. An independent financial organization, GEF provided grants to developing countries and countries with economies in transition for projects related to biodiversity, climate change, international waters, land degradation, the ozone layer and persistent organic pollutants (POPs). The GEF partnership included 10 agencies: UNDP, UNEP, the World Bank, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO), the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, the African Development Bank, the Asian Development Bank, the European Bank for Reconstruction and Development, the Inter-American Development Bank and the International Fund for Agricultural Development. GEF functioned as the financial mechanism for the 1992 Convention on Biological Diversity [YUN 1992, p. 683] (see p. 1158), the 1992 United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change [ibid., p. 681] (see p. 1155), the 1994 United Nations Convention to Combat Desertification in Those Countries Experiencing Serious Drought and/or Desertification, Particularly in Africa [YUN 1994, p. 944] (see p. 1161) and the 2001 Stockholm Convention on Persistent Organic Pollutants [YUN 2001, p. 971] (see p. 1173).

From 1 July 2007 to 20 June 2008, GEF financed 185 projects worth $4.05 billion, investing $634 million in GEF resources and mobilizing $3.4 billion in co-financing. Biodiversity accounted for 59 projects, climate change for 33, POPs for 23, international waters for 22, land degradation for 10, and ozone depletion for 1, in addition to 37 multi-focal area projects.

During the reporting period, the GEF Council approved 33 new projects in the climate change focal area; total GEF allocation was approximately $154 million, supplemented by an additional $1.2 billion generated in co-financing from partners, including the GEF agencies, bilateral agencies, recipient countries, NGOs and the private sector. The Council approved 59 new projects in the area of biological diversity and biosafety, with grants totalling approximately $154 million, supplemented by an additional $734 million generated in co-financing from partners. Twenty-three new projects were approved in the POPs focal area; total GEF allocation was approximately $86.7 million, supplemented by an additional $191.8 million in co-financing. A medium-sized project in the ozone depletion focal area was approved, with an allocation of $740,000, supplemented by an additional $500,000 in co-financing. The Council approved 10 new projects in the land degradation focal area, with an allocation of approximately $15.8 million, supplemented by an additional $53.1 million in co-financing. ### International conventions and mechanisms

In response to General Assembly resolutions 62/86 [YUN 2007, p. 1060], 62/193 [ibid., p. 1065] and 62/194 [ibid., p. 1063], the Secretary-General, by an August note [A/63/294], transmitted reports submitted by the secretariats of the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change (see p. 1155), the United Nations Convention to Combat Desertification in Those Countries Experiencing Serious Drought and/or Desertification, Particularly in Africa (see p. 1161) and the Convention on Biological Diversity (see p. 1158), respectively.

A November report by the UNEP Executive Director [UNEP/GC.25/3] discussed issues concerning multilateral environmental agreements. The UNEP multilateral environmental agreements management team met in April to enhance effective administration and communication and ensure greater cohesion in tackling substantive issues of common interest among UNEP and UNEP-administered multilateral environmental agreements. The Ad Hoc Joint Working Group on Enhancing Cooperation and Coordination

Among the 1989 Basel Convention on the Control of Transboundary Movements of Hazardous Wastes and their Disposal [YUN 1989, p. 420], the 1998 Rotterdam Convention on the Prior Informed Consent Procedure for Certain Hazardous Chemicals and Pesticides in International Trade [YUN 1998, p. 997] and the 2001 Stockholm Convention on Persistent Organic Pollutants [YUN 2001, p. 971] met three times since March 2007 and concluded its work at its third meeting (Rome, 25–28 March) [UNEP/FAO/CHW/RC/POPS/JWG.3/3]. It adopted a set of recommendations that identified the general direction and practical course of action for the three Conferences of the Parties to improve cooperation and coordination, enhance implementation of the Conventions and improve effectiveness and efficiency in administering the Conventions through joint arrangements and services. It was also recommended that simultaneous extraordinary meetings of the Conferences of the Parties to the Conventions should be held in conjunction with the eleventh (2010) special session of the Governing Council/Global Ministerial Environment Forum. The ninth meeting of the Conference of the Parties to the Basel Convention (see p. 1173) and the fourth meeting of the Conference of the Parties to the Rotterdam Convention (see p. 1170) adopted the recommendations of the Ad Hoc Joint Working Group.

A December note by the UNEP secretariat [UNEP/GC.25/INF/16] contained a preliminary compilation of internationally agreed environmental goals and objectives that were drawn from the outcome documents of relevant UN summits and conferences, General Assembly resolutions, decisions of other global intergovernmental conferences, multilateral environmental agreements and decisions of their governing bodies.

A December note by the Executive Director [UNEP/GC.25/INF/16/Add.1] on efforts to meet internationally agreed environmental goals and objectives presented highlights of a preliminary study of demands and outputs of selected multilateral environmental agreements from 1992 to 2007. The note provided information on ratification of agreements, institutional arrangements, the number of meetings held, decisions taken by governing bodies, and budgets for the agreements.

Climate change convention

At year's end, 183 States and the EU were parties to the Kyoto Protocol to the Convention [YUN 1997, p. 1048], which entered into force in 2005 [YUN 2005, p. 1146]. There were 11 Parties to the 2006 amendment to annex B of the Protocol [YUN 2006, p. 1220], which had not yet entered into force.

The fourteenth session of the Conference of the Parties to UNFCCC (Poznań, Poland, 1–12 December) [FCCC/CP/2008/7 & Add.1] decided to continue the pilot phase for activities implemented jointly by developed country parties and other parties included in annex I of the Convention to reduce greenhouse gases or enhance their removal. It also adopted decisions on advancing the Bali Action Plan, launched in 2007 [YUN 2007, p. 1060] to enable implementation of the Convention through long-term, cooperative action up to and beyond 2012; the development and transfer of environmentally sound technologies; the fourth review of the Convention's financial mechanism; additional guidance to GEF; further guidance for the operation of the Least Developed Countries Fund; capacity-building for developing countries under the Convention; and administrative and financial matters.

The fourth session of the Conference of the Parties serving as the meeting of the parties to the Kyoto Protocol, held concurrently with the fourteenth UNFCCC Conference session [FCCC/KP/CMP/2008/11 & Add.1], adopted decisions related to the Adaptation Fund; further guidance relating to the clean development mechanism; advancing the work of the Ad Hoc Working Group on Further Commitments for annex I parties under the Protocol; the work of the Compliance Committee; guidance on implementation of article 6 of the Protocol; capacity-building for developing countries; privileges and immunities for individuals serving on constituted bodies established under the Protocol; and administrative and financial matters.

In November, the Executive Board of the Protocol's clean development mechanism issued its annual report [FCCC/KP/CMP/2008/4], covering its work from 20 October 2007 to 24 October 2008.

In 2008, the Subsidiary Body for Scientific and Technological Advice (SBSTA) [FCCC/SBSTA/2008/6] and the Subsidiary Body for Implementation (SBI) [FCCC/SBI/2008/8 & Add.1] held their twenty-eighth sessions (Bonn, Germany, 4–13 June). SBSTA [FCCC/SBSTA/2008/13] and SBI [FCCC/SBI/2008/19] also held their twenty-ninth sessions (Poznań, 1–10 December).

Convention to Combat Desertification

As at 31 December, the total number of parties to the 1994 United Nations Convention to Combat Desertification in Those Countries Experiencing Serious Drought and/or Desertification, Particularly in Africa (UNCCD) [YUN 1994, p. 944], which entered into force in 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 958], stood at 193 States and the EU.

The seventh session of the Committee for the Review of the Implementation of the Convention (CRIC) (Istanbul, Turkey, 3–14 November) [ICCD/CRIC(7)/5], a subsidiary body of the Conference of the Parties to the Convention, discussed, among other issues, the 10-year strategic plan and framework to enhance the implementation of the Convention 2008–2018 (the Strategy). The report of the session contained conclusions and recommendations to further the implementation of the Strategy, which was adopted by the eighth (2007) session of the Conference of the Parties [YUN 2007, p. 1064]. The Committee on Science and Technology, another subsidiary body of the Conference, held its first special session in Istanbul concurrently with CRIC [ICCD/CST(S-1)/5].

15. Urges the Committee on Science and Technology to accelerate its efforts to establish links with scientific communities in order to make full use of relevant initiatives in areas relating to sustainable land and water management;

16. Requests all States parties to the Convention to promote awareness among local populations, particularly women, youth and civil society organizations, of, and to include them in, the implementation of the ten-year strategic plan and framework, and encourages affected States parties and donors to take into account the issue of participation of civil society in Convention processes when setting priorities in national development strategies;

17. Stresses the need to accelerate the ongoing process of adopting the euro as the budgetary and accounting currency of the Convention secretariat, and in this regard requests the Secretary-General, taking into account the institutional linkage and related administrative arrangements between the Convention secretariat and the United Nations Secretariat, to facilitate the implementation of decisions of the Conference of the Parties related to the protection of the Convention budget against the negative effects of currency fluctuations;

18. Invites the Conference of the Parties to the Convention, when setting the dates of its meetings, to take into consideration the schedule of meetings of the General Assembly and the Commission on Sustainable Development so as to help to ensure the adequate representation of developing countries at those meetings;

International Conference on Combating Desertification

In a letter of 14 March [E/CN.17/2008/15], China transmitted to the Secretary-General the report of the International Conference on Combating Desertification (Beijing, China, 22–24 January). The Conference was jointly organized by the State Forestry Administration of China and the UN Department of Economic and Social Affairs (DESA), with support from the Beijing Municipal Bureau of Parks and Forestry and the UNCCD secretariat. It brought together some 240 participants from 55 countries and 40 UN organizations and international and regional institutions. Thematic discussions were held on the barriers and constraints faced by countries in combating desertification and land degradation, and on lessons learned and best practices in addressing those challenges. The Conference adopted the Beijing Statement on Combating Desertification and Promoting Sustainable Development, which set out the key points highlighted during the Conference.

Report of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 62/8 [YUN 2007, p. 1067], the Secretary-General in January submitted a report [A/62/644] which reviewed UN system activities related to climate change. The report was based on written submissions from members of the United Nations Chief Executives Board for Coordination (CEB) and consultations in the framework of the CEB High-level Committee on Programmes. It described activities related to science, assessment, monitoring and early warning, and support of global, regional and national action on climate change. It outlined UN activities in the sectors of adaptation to, and mitigation of climate change, as well as technology and financing for climate change responses. Cross-cutting sectors included education, advocacy and awareness-raising.

The report contained a paper prepared by CEB on coordinated UN system action on climate change. Under the Secretary-General's leadership, CEB was aligning its strengths to achieve a coordinated approach to climate change. The objective was to support the process for an international agreement within the 1992 United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change (UNFCCC) [YUN 1992, p. 681] (see p. 1155), as well as the efforts of Member States to tackle the challenges presented by climate change. The paper defined key areas of action and an effective coordination structure for the UN system. It highlighted the critical role of the UN system in the areas of science, assessment, monitoring and early warning as a basis for informed action, and articulated its contribution in supporting global, regional and national action on climate change. The paper also outlined the means by which the UN system could coordinate its substantive work in the key sectors of energy, agriculture and fisheries, water, oceans, forestry, health, transport, disaster risk reduction, population and human settlements, education, and raising public awareness.

It also discussed the UN system's efforts for establishing climate-neutrality in its own work. The Secretary-General tasked the Environment Management Group, under the leadership of the UNEP Executive Director, to develop approaches on how to best make the United Nations climate-neutral. The Group proposed to CEB a framework for guiding efforts on climate-neutrality, a strategic approach on achieving a climate-neutral United Nations and a commitment from all agencies to implement the initiative. The UN system would seek to reduce energy consumption at UN Headquarters, conduct an environmental audit of procurement and renovations at Headquarters, calculate emissions from air travel, and lead by example in individual institutions. The report also listed areas of potential UN system support to the implementation of climate change negotiation results.

General Assembly thematic debate. The resumed sixty-second (2008) session of the General Assembly held a thematic debate entitled "Addressing Climate Change: The United Nations and the World at Work" from 11 to 13 February, with plenary meetings on 12 and 13 February [A/62/PV.80–84]. The Assembly President, in his opening statement, said that the Assembly had a unique role to play on climate change, but in order to contribute most effectively, it needed to create more effective partnerships with a common vision and a global alliance for action. It also needed to help define a global strategy for the UN system to respond to climate change. The President emphasized that climate change was a sustainable development issue as well as an environmental one.

The Secretary-General, in a statement made at the opening session, said that the international community was armed with a combination of authoritative and compelling science on climate change, a rising tide of public concern and declarations of political will voiced at the 2007 Bali Climate Change Conference [YUN 2007, p. 1060]. The UN system was committed to supporting Member States as an effective, inclusive and credible partner in mitigating and adapting to climate change. Success was only possible if all countries acted, but developed countries needed to take the lead. Representatives of 101 countries and seven international organizations spoke in the ensuing debate.

Governing Council action. On 22 February [dec. SS.X/4], the UNEP Governing Council reaffirmed its commitment to support efforts to mitigate and adapt to climate change, which were interlinked with efforts to reduce the loss of biodiversity, control desertification, eradicate extreme poverty and famine, promote sustainable development and improve the lives of affected or vulnerable populations. It invited the Economic and Social Council to consider a proposal for the proclamation of an International Decade for addressing Climate Change for the period 2010–2020 and inform the General Assembly prior to its sixty-third (2008) session.

Communication. A letter of 14 March [A/63/66] from the Sudan to the Assembly President contained the Arab Ministerial Declaration on Climate Change, adopted by the Council of Arab Ministers Responsible for the Environment at its nineteenth session (Cairo, Egypt, 5–6 December 2007). The Declaration reflected the Arab position on addressing climate change and constituted a basis for future action.

High-Level Conference. The Beijing High-Level Conference on Climate Change: Technology Development and Technology Transfer (Beijing, 7–8 November) issued a statement in which the ministers and Government representatives participating in the Conference reaffirmed their commitment to UNFCCC and the 2007 Bali Action Plan for implementing the Convention [YUN 2007, p. 1060].

Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change

The twenty-eighth session of the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change (IPCC) (Budapest, Hungary, 9–10 April) decided to produce a fifth assessment report, to be finalized in 2014, with a target date of early 2013 for the release of the Working Group I report. The current structure of IPCC Working Groups would be retained, with Groups dealing with the physical science basis; impacts, adaptation and vulnerability; and climate change mitigation. The Panel agreed to organize the new assessment work around a revised set of scenarios of socio-economic, climate and environmental conditions. It decided to prepare a special report on renewable energy sources and climate change mitigation, to be delivered in 2010.

IPCC also discussed the review of the principles governing its work; the use of funds from the Nobel Peace Prize 2007, won jointly with former United States Vice President Albert Arnold Gore, Jr. [YUN 2007, p. 1067]; admission of observer organizations; outreach activities; and progress reports of IPCC Working Groups and Task Forces.

The twenty-ninth IPCC session (Geneva, 31 August–4 September) commemorated the Panel's twentieth anniversary. It adopted its 2009 budget and took note of the indicative budgets for 2010 and 2011, and for the three following years up to the end of the Fifth Assessment cycle. The Panel, having considered proposals for the use of the funds from the Nobel Peace Prize 2007, decided to set up a scholarship fund for young post-graduate or post-doctoral students in climate change sciences from developing countries, especially least developed countries, as described in a report to the session [IPCC-XXIX/Doc.8, Rev.1]. IPCC elected its Bureau and the Task Force Bureau, and discussed procedural matters, future activities and other issues.

Terrestrial ecosystems

Deforestation and forest degradation

The United Nations Forum on Forests (UNFF) did not meet in 2008. In accordance with Economic and Social Council decision 2007/274 [YUN 2007, p. 1068], the eighth session of UNFF would be held in 2009.

In September [E/CN.18/2008/2], the Secretariat issued a note on financing for sustainable forest management: mobilizing financial resources to support the implementation of the non-legally binding instrument on all types of forests [YUN 2007, p. 1069], adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 62/98 [ibid., p. 1072], and to promote sustainable forest management. The note was prepared to facilitate discussions at the meeting of the Open-ended Ad Hoc Expert Group to Develop Proposals for the Development of a Voluntary Global Financial Mechanism/Portfolio Approach/Forest Financing Framework (Vienna, 10–14 November) [E/CN.18/2009/11]. The meeting reviewed the instrument and major forest and finance issues; discussed the role of the private sector; reviewed recent international financial cooperation; described emerging issues; and presented conclusions for consideration by the Ad Hoc Expert Group.

Illicit trafficking in forest products

The seventeenth session of the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice (Vienna, 14–18 April) [E/2008/30] (see p. 1222) considered the report of the meeting of the Open-ended Expert Group on International Cooperation in Preventing and Combating Illicit International Trafficking in Forest Products, including Timber, Wildlife and Other Forest Biological Resources (Jakarta, Indonesia, 26–28 March) [E/CN.15/2008/20]. The report, prepared pursuant to Commission resolution 16/1 [YUN 2007, p. 1148], reflected the views of the experts on ways and means of fostering international cooperation to combat illicit international trafficking in forest products through the use of the 2000 United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime [YUN 2000, p. 1048] and the 2003 United Nations Convention against Corruption [YUN 2003, p. 1127], and of enhancing the capacity of law enforcement and forestry authorities to enforce the rule of law in the forest sector. The Expert Group noted the serious economic, social and environmental consequences of illicit international trafficking in forest products. Such trafficking exacerbated unsustainable forest practices; increased the cost of forest management and distorted the marketplace; and had an adverse environmental impact on forest ecosystems and on the conservation of forest resources and biodiversity. The Group emphasized the social consequences of forest crime for local communities and vulnerable groups that were heavily dependent upon forests for their livelihoods and security.

The Expert Group stressed the need to expand knowledge of the scope and scale of the problems created by illicit international trafficking in forest products, including the severe economic, environmental and social impact of such crime. Gaining a common understanding of such problems was a prerequisite for more coherent and consistent action at the national level and to enhancing bilateral, regional and interregional cooperation. It was also important to ensure that countries had common perceptions of the definition of legality and the conceptualization of legal and illegal acts in the forest sector. Rationalizing and streamlining national laws and regulations was essential for effective forest law enforcement and governance. Forest law enforcement responses could best be enhanced by improving detection methods, establishing specialized enforcement units, allowing direct channels of communication and creating networks for information-sharing. Preventive policies in the field of forest crime should include educational campaigns and the development of public information material to raise awareness among the public and ensure their support for forest law enforcement action. Implementation of national strategies and policies should foster inter-agency coordination and promote synergies and partnerships with NGOs and the private sector.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 24 July [meeting 42], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice [E/2008/30], adopted resolution 2008/25 without vote [agenda item 14 (c)].

International cooperation in preventing and combating illicit international trafficking in forest products, including timber, wildlife and other forest biological resources

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolutions 2001/12 of 24 July 2001 and 2003/27 of 22 July 2003 on illicit trafficking in protected species of wild flora and fauna, and its resolutions 2000/35 of 18 October 2000 and 2006/49 of 28 July 2006 concerning the international arrangements on forests,

Bearing in mind the relevance of international instruments such as the Convention on Biological Diversity and the Convention on International Trade in Endangered Species of Wild Fauna and Flora,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 62/98 of 17 December 2007, by which the Assembly adopted the non-legally binding instrument on all types of forests, contained in the annex to that resolution,

Recalling also resolution 16/1 adopted by the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice at its sixteenth session,

Noting with concern that illicit international trafficking in forest products, including timber, wildlife and other forest biological resources, constitutes a major source of concern because such activities have an adverse environmental, social and economic impact on many countries,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the meeting of the Open-ended Expert Group on International Cooperation in Preventing and Combating Illicit International Trafficking in Forest Products, including Timber, Wildlife and Other Forest Biological Resources, held in Jakarta from 26 to 28 March 2008;

2. Encourages Member States to continue to provide the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime with information on measures taken pursuant to Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice resolution 16/1, taking into consideration the emphasis that the Open-ended Expert Group, in its report, placed on, inter alia, the need for holistic and comprehensive national multisectoral approaches to preventing and combating illicit international trafficking in forest products, including timber, wildlife and other forest biological resources, as well as for international coordination and cooperation in support of such approaches, including through technical assistance activities to build the capacity of relevant national officials and institutions;

3. Requests the Executive Director of the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime to make the text of the present resolution and the report of the Open-ended Expert Group available to the Conference of the Parties to the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime at its fourth session;

4. Also requests the Executive Director to report on the implementation of the present resolution and to provide a brief summary of the mandates and the work of other relevant organizations in this area to the Commission at its eighteenth session.

Drought and desertification

The Commission on Sustainable Development, at its sixteenth session (New York, 5–16 May) [E/2008/29] (see p. 915), considered a February report of the Secretary-General [E/CN.17/2008/6] reviewing the implementation of the goals related to the thematic area of drought, as contained in Agenda 21 [YUN 1992, p. 672]; the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21, adopted by the nineteenth special session of the General Assembly in resolution S/19-2 [YUN 1997, p. 792]; and the Johannesburg Plan of Implementation [YUN 2002, p. 822]. The report discussed facts and figures on drought, issues related to drought management and early warning and climate and weather information. It stated that projected climatic changes were likely to further exacerbate the frequency and severity of droughts, with adverse impacts on food production and food security, in particular in Africa. The challenge was to reduce the vulnerability of the agricultural sector to climate variability and the projected changes in extreme weather events. Improved access to appropriate and affordable technologies and related field training and capacity-building to grow resilient crops proved to be important in maintaining soil productivity and increasing food production in drought-affected drylands. The projected persistence and severity of droughts underscored the urgency of gradually shifting priority in drought management of affected countries and regions from essentially sector-specific strategies and policies to those that integrated management of natural resources and ecosystems with social and economic development strategies and action plans. A proactive, risk-based approach to drought management proved to be effective in preventing or reducing the physical and economic losses associated with drought. Inadequate financial resources and technical capacities often hampered the implementation of programmes and projects on drought risk management. The lack of systematic collection and analysis of drought-relevant data in many affected countries also hampered effective drought impact assessment.

The Commission also had before it the February report of the Secretary-General [E/CN.17/2008/7] reviewing the implementation of Agenda 21, the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21, and the Johannesburg Plan of Implementation with regard to desertification. The report discussed facts and figures on desertification and the correlation between land use, land productivity and livelihoods in drylands. It addressed issues related to the conservation of dryland vegetation; maintaining freshwater bodies and groundwater resources; and various means of combating desertification. The level of rural poverty in many developing countries affected by desertification and drought, which was particularly high in Africa, continued to be the overarching challenge in the fight against desertification. The projected intensification of freshwater scarcity would cause greater stresses in drylands and, if left unmitigated, would further exacerbate desertification. Weak institutional and legal structures and capacities, poor coordination and collaboration among stakeholders involved in combating desertification and poor enforcement of legislation to guarantee clear legal ownership and access rights to land, water and other natural resources hampered the implementation of effective interventions. Providing economic and non-economic incentives to national stakeholders to encourage investments in the sustainable management of land, forests and other ecosystems could play a critical role in mobilizing financial resources. Dissemination of new and emerging technologies to field application in affected developing countries also remained a challenge. The 10-year strategic plan and framework adopted by the Conference of the Parties to the United Nations Convention to Combat Desertification at its eighth (2007) session [YUN 2007, p. 1064] had strengthened the international commitment to combat desertification, mitigate the effects of drought and combat climate change. The Convention offered a platform for adaptation, mitigation and resilience.

Marine ecosystems

Oceans and seas

In response to General Assembly resolutions 61/222 [YUN 2006, p. 1557] and 62/215 [YUN 2007, p. 1402], the ninth meeting of the United Nations Open-ended Informal Consultative Process on Oceans and Law of the Sea (New York, 23–27 June) [A/63/174 & Corr.1] focused on maritime security and safety. The meeting reached agreement on elements relating to that issue, which were proposed by the Co-Chairpersons of the Consultative Process for consideration by the Assembly. The Assembly took action with regard to maritime safety and security and the Consultative Process in sections VIII and XIV of resolution 63/111 of 5 December (see pp. 1503 & 1510).

Assessment of assessments

The Group of Experts for the start-up phase of the “assessment of assessments” [YUN 2004, p. 1332] of the regular process for the global reporting and assessment of the state of the marine environment, including socio-economic aspects, held its third meeting (Copenhagen, Denmark, 15–17 April) [GRAME/GOE/3/2]. The meeting agreed on the outlines for the “assessment of assessments” report, and agreed that the first draft of the Introduction and Part II, along with the outlines for Parts I and III, would be submitted for peer review by the end of May.

UNEP and the Intergovernmental Oceanographic Commission of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO), the lead agencies for the “assessment of assessments”, prepared a progress report on the “assessment of assessments” that was issued in June.

The third meeting of the Ad Hoc Steering Group for the “assessment of assessments” (New York, 19–20 June) [GRAME/AHSG/3/2] discussed the approach for presenting the final “assessment of assessments” report to the General Assembly’s sixty-fourth (2009) session, as well as a new resource mobilization strategy to ensure adequate financial resources for completing scheduled activities.

The fourth meeting of the Group of Experts (London, 4–6 November) focused on finalizing the chapters of the “assessment of assessments” report so that they could be submitted for Government and expert peer review, which was scheduled to take place from 1 December 2008 to 31 January 2009. The Group of experts also discussed the procedures of the peer review process and proposed a list of reviewers to be invited to participate in that process. The Group agreed on the production schedule of the report and the summary for decision makers.

The General Assembly, in section XII of resolution 63/111 of 5 December (see p. 1509) took note of the report of the third meeting of the Ad Hoc Steering Group and the “assessment of assessments” progress report, endorsed by the Steering Group. It urged all members of the Steering Group to participate in the review of the completed “assessment of assessments” report and the summary for decision makers at the Group’s meeting in 2009.

Regional Seas Programme

The tenth Global Meeting of the Regional Seas Conventions and Action Plans (Guayaquil, Ecuador, 25–27 November) discussed climate change and the regional seas programme; ecosystem management and the regional seas programmes; cooperation with multilateral environmental agreements; sustainable financing and legal instruments to further the implementation of the Regional Seas Work Programme; and enhancing communication.

Caribbean Sea management

In response to General Assembly resolution 61/197 [YUN 2006, p. 1243], the Secretary-General submitted an August report [A/63/297] that described regional and national activities undertaken in the Caribbean region to ensure the protection of the Caribbean Sea from degradation, pollution and loss of marine biodiversity. It also provided an update on regional and international support extended to the promotion of the sustainable development of the resources of the Caribbean Sea for present and future generations. The Association of Caribbean States (ACS) remained engaged in supporting the ongoing initiative of the region to have the Caribbean Sea declared a special area in the context of sustainable development.

To that end, the Caribbean Sea Commission was established in September 2006 to provide a structure for political oversight, technical resources and research support for the Caribbean Sea initiative, and promote regional efforts for achieving the preservation and sustainable use of the Caribbean Sea. Regional experts working through a technical advisory group created by ACS provided technical support for the Commission's work.

Annexed to the Secretary-General's report was the report on the work of ACS, submitted in response to resolution 61/197. ACS provided details on its activities related to sustainable tourism and disaster reduction. The outcome of the High-level Conference on Disaster Reduction of the Association of Caribbean States (Saint-Marc, Haiti, 14–16 November 2007), known as the Saint-Marc Plan of Action, was endorsed by the ACS Ministerial Council as a 27-point document that would inform the ACS work programme in the area of disaster risk reduction. The report also outlined the Commission's Plan of Action, which, along with its programme of activities, was finalized at the Commission's July 2008 meeting.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December [meeting 72], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/63/414/Add.2], adopted resolution 63/214 without vote [agenda item 49 (b)].

Towards the sustainable development of the Caribbean Sea for present and future generations

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the principles and commitments enshrined in the Rio Declaration on Environment and Development, the principles embodied in the Declaration of Barbados, the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States, the Johannesburg Declaration on Sustainable Development and the Plan of Implementation of the World Summit on Sustainable Development ("Johannesburg Plan of Implementation"), as well as other relevant declarations and international instruments,

Recalling the Declaration and review document adopted by the General Assembly at its twenty-second special session,

Taking into account all other relevant General Assembly resolutions, including resolutions 54/225 of 22 December 1999, 55/203 of 20 December 2000, 57/261 of 20 December 2002, 59/230 of 22 December 2004 and 61/197 of 20 December 2006,

Taking into account also the Mauritius Strategy for the Further Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States,

Recalling the 2005 World Summit Outcome,

Recalling also the Convention for the Protection and Development of the Marine Environment of the Wider Caribbean Region, signed at Cartagena de Indias, Colombia, on 24 March 1983, and the protocols thereto, which contain the definition of the wider Caribbean region of which the Caribbean Sea is part,

Reaffirming the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea, which provides the overall legal framework for ocean activities, and emphasizing its fundamental character, conscious that the problems of ocean space are closely interrelated and need to be considered as a whole through an integrated, interdisciplinary and intersectoral approach,

Emphasizing the importance of national, regional and global action and cooperation in the marine sector as recognized by the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development in chapter 17 of Agenda 21,

Recalling the relevant work done by the International Maritime Organization,

Considering that the Caribbean Sea area includes a large number of States, countries and territories, most of which are developing countries and small island developing States that are ecologically fragile and socially and economically vulnerable and are also affected, inter alia, by their limited capacity, narrow resource base, need for financial resources, high levels of poverty and the resulting social problems and the challenges and opportunities of globalization and trade liberalization,

Recognizing that the Caribbean Sea has unique biodiversity and highly fragile ecosystems,

Recognizing also that the Caribbean has been shown to be the most tourism-dependent region in the world relative to its size,

Noting that the Caribbean Sea, when compared to all other large marine ecosystems, is surrounded by the largest number of countries in the world,

Emphasizing that the Caribbean countries have a high degree of vulnerability occasioned by climate change, climate variability and associated phenomena, such as the rise in sea level, the El Niño phenomenon and the increase in the frequency and intensity of natural disasters caused by hurricanes, floods and droughts, and that they are also subject to natural disasters, such as those caused by volcanoes, tsunamis and earthquakes,

Bearing in mind the heavy reliance of most of the Caribbean economies on their coastal areas, as well as on the marine environment in general, to achieve their sustainable development needs and goals,

Acknowledging that the intensive use of the Caribbean Sea for maritime transport, as well as the considerable number and interlocking character of the maritime areas under national jurisdiction where Caribbean countries exercise their rights and duties under international law, present a challenge for the effective management of the resources,

Noting the problem of marine pollution caused, inter alia, by land-based sources and the continuing threat of pollution from ship-generated waste and sewage, as well as from the accidental release of hazardous and noxious substances in the Caribbean Sea area,

Taking note of the relevant resolutions of the General Conference of the International Atomic Energy Agency on safety of transport of radioactive materials,

Mindful of the diversity and dynamic interaction and competition among socio-economic activities for the use of the coastal areas and the marine environment and their resources,

Mindful also of the efforts of the Caribbean countries to address in a more holistic manner the sectoral issues relating to the management of the wider Caribbean Sea region and, in so doing, to promote integrated management of the wider Caribbean Sea region in the context of sustainable development, through a regional cooperative effort among Caribbean countries,

Welcoming the continued efforts of the States members of the Association of Caribbean States to develop and implement regional initiatives to promote the sustainable conservation and management of coastal and marine resources, and recognizing in this regard the firm commitment by Heads of State and Government of the Association to take the steps necessary to ensure the recognition of the Caribbean Sea as a special area within the context of sustainable development, without prejudice to relevant international law,

Taking note of the creation by the Association of Caribbean States of the Caribbean Sea Commission, and welcoming its ongoing work,

Cognizant of the importance of the Caribbean Sea to present and future generations and to the heritage and the continuing economic well-being and sustenance of people living in the area, and the urgent need for the countries of the region to take appropriate steps for its preservation and protection, with the support of the international community,

1. Recognizes that the Caribbean Sea is an area of unique biodiversity and a highly fragile ecosystem that requires relevant regional and international development partners to work together to develop and implement regional initiatives to promote the sustainable conservation and management of coastal and marine resources, including, inter alia, the consideration of the concept of the Caribbean Sea as a special area in the context of sustainable development, including its designation as such without prejudice to relevant international law;

2. Takes note of the efforts of the Caribbean States and the work undertaken by the Caribbean Sea Commission of the Association of Caribbean States, including, inter alia, the development of their concept of the designation of the Caribbean Sea as a special area within the context of sustainable development, and invites the international community to support such efforts;

3. Welcomes the plan of action adopted by the Caribbean Sea Commission, including its scientific and technical components and governance and outreach components, and invites the international community and the United Nations system to support, as appropriate, Caribbean countries and their regional organizations in their efforts to implement the plan of action;

4. Recognizes the efforts of Caribbean countries to create conditions leading to sustainable development aimed at combating poverty and inequality, and in this regard notes with interest the initiatives of the Association of Caribbean States in the focal areas of sustainable tourism, trade, transport and natural disasters;

5. Calls upon the United Nations system and the international community to assist, as appropriate, Caribbean countries and their regional organizations in their efforts to ensure the protection of the Caribbean Sea from degradation as a result of pollution from ships, in particular through the illegal release of oil and other harmful substances, and from illegal dumping or accidental release of hazardous waste, including radioactive materials, nuclear waste and dangerous chemicals, in violation of relevant international rules and standards, as well as pollution from land-based activities;

6. Invites the Association of Caribbean States to submit a report to the Secretary-General on the progress made in the implementation of the present resolution, for consideration during the sixty-fifth session of the General Assembly;

7. Calls upon all States to become contracting parties to relevant international agreements to enhance maritime safety and promote the protection of the marine environment of the Caribbean Sea from pollution, damage and degradation from ships and ship-generated waste;

8. Supports the efforts of Caribbean countries to implement sustainable fisheries management programmes and to meet the principles of the Code of Conduct for Responsible Fisheries of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations;

9. Calls upon States, taking into consideration the Convention on Biological Diversity, to develop national, regional and international programmes to halt the loss of marine biodiversity in the Caribbean Sea, in particular fragile ecosystems such as coral reefs and mangroves;

14. Acknowledges the pivotal role of the Association of Caribbean States in regional dialogue and in the consolidation of a wider Caribbean cooperation zone in the field of disaster risk reduction, as well as the importance of the international community in deepening existing cooperation and consolidating new initiatives with that regional mechanism within the context of the outcomes of the High-level Conference on Disaster Reduction of the Association of Caribbean States, held in Saint-Marc, Haiti, from 14 to 16 November 2007, and the plan of action approved by the

Ministerial Council of the Association upon the recommendation of the Conference;

15. Invites Member States, international and regional organizations and other relevant stakeholders to consider training programmes for the development of a human resource capacity at different levels and to developing research aimed at enhancing the food security of Caribbean countries, as well as the sustainable management of renewable marine and coastal resources;

Protection against harmful products and waste

Chemical safety

As at 31 December, 126 States and the EU were parties to the 1998 Rotterdam Convention on the Prior Informed Consent Procedure for Certain Hazardous Chemicals and Pesticides in International Trade [YUN 1998, p. 997], which entered into force in 2004 [YUN 2004, p. 1063].

The Chemical Review Committee, a subsidiary body of the Conference of the Parties to the Rotterdam Convention, at its fourth meeting (Geneva, 10–13 March) [UNEP/FAO/RC/CRC.4/11], agreed to consider the notifications of final regulatory action scheduled for review by the Committee in line with the priorities suggested in a secretariat note [UNEP/FAO/RC/CRC.4/3]; and reviewed notifications of final regulatory action to ban or severely restrict six chemicals. The Committee also discussed its role and mandate, which were described in a secretariat note [UNEP/FAO/RC/CRC.4/4], as well as its intersessional work, working papers and policy guidance.

The fourth meeting of the Conference of the Parties to the Rotterdam Convention (Rome, 27–31 October) [UNEP/FAO/RC/COP.4/24] adopted a decision on enhancing cooperation and coordination among the Rotterdam Convention, the 1989 Basel Convention on the Control of Transboundary Movements of Hazardous Wastes and their Disposal [YUN 1989, p. 420] and the 2001 Stockholm Convention on Persistent Organic Pollutants [YUN 2001, p. 971]. In accordance with that decision, the Conference of the Parties adopted—as an extraordinary, one-time measure—a three-year budget cycle for the 2009–2011 period to facilitate synchronization with the budget cycles of the Basel and Stockholm Conventions, UNEP and FAO; and approved the programme activities and operational programme budget for the triennium. The Conference of the Parties amended annex III of the Convention to list all tributyltin compounds and decided that the amendment would enter into force on 1 February 2009. Other decisions dealt with the inclusion of chrysotile asbestos and endosulfan in annex III; progress in implementing the Convention; confirmation of the appointments of Government-designated experts as members of the Chemical Review Committee; nomination of Governments to designate experts for the Committee; compliance procedures and mechanisms; options for lasting and sustainable financial mechanisms; national and regional delivery of technical assistance; and cooperation with the World Trade Organization.

IFCS session. The sixth session of the Intergovernmental Forum on Chemical Safety (IFCS) (Dakar, Senegal, 15–19 September) [IFCS/FORUM-VI/07w] focused on the role of partnerships for chemical safety in achieving the goal of the 2002 World Summit on Sustainable Development [YUN 2002, p. 821] that, by 2020, chemicals had to be used and produced in ways that minimized significant adverse effects on human health and the environment [ibid., p. 822]. IFCS adopted the Dakar Resolution on the future of the Forum, in which it invited the International Conference on Chemicals Management (ICCM) to integrate IFCS into the Conference by establishing the Forum as an ICCM advisory body. IFCS also adopted a resolution for eliminating lead in paints; a statement on manufactured nanomaterials; and recommendations on the substitution and alternatives to hazardous substances in products and processes, and on key elements of pesticide risk reduction strategies.

International chemicals management

On 22 February [dec. SS.X/1], the UNEP Governing Council decided to consider at its twenty-fifth (2009) session the programme-related matters raised in the reports of the Executive Director on waste management (see p. 1174); progress of the ad hoc open-ended working group on mercury (see p. 1171); and efforts of the secretariat of the Strategic Approach to International Chemicals Management (SAICM) [YUN 2006, p. 1247] to explore more effective use of funding provisions of the Approach and the implementation of SAICM by the Inter-Organization Programme for the Sound Management of Chemicals (IOMC) [YUN 2007, p. 1077]. It requested the Executive Director to continue to implement its 2007 multi-part decision on chemicals management [YUN 2007, p. 1077] and its 2007 decision on waste management [ibid., p. 1080].

In response to the Council's decision, the Executive Director in November submitted a report [UNEP/GC.25/5], which described UNEP activities to support SAICM implementation; IOMC efforts to implement SAICM; the second (2009) session of the International Conference on Chemicals Management; and UNEP activities related to lead, cadmium and mercury (see below). UNEP activities on chemicals contributed to the SAICM policy framework for efforts to attain the 2020 goal of the Plan of Implementation of the 2002 World Summit on Sustainable Development [YUN 2002, p. 821] related to chemicals [ibid., p. 822]. UNDP and UNEP developed a partnership to facilitate the integration of the sound management of chemicals into development planning to support sustainable development in developing countries and countries with economies in transition. With funding support secured through the Quick Start Programme Trust Fund under SAICM, the partnership initiative was launched in the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia and Uganda; activities in Belarus, Belize, Ecuador, Honduras, Liberia and Mauritania would begin in 2009.

Lead and cadmium

In response to a 2007 Governing Council decision [YUN 2007, p. 1078], the Executive Director, in his November report on chemicals management [UNEP/GC.25/5], provided information on UNEP activities related to lead and cadmium. The Partnership for Clean Fuels and Vehicles continued to support countries in eliminating the use of leaded gasoline and reducing sulphur levels in fuels. At the beginning of 2008, 19 countries were still using leaded gasoline. During the year, three countries—Jordan, the Lao People's Democratic Republic and Mongolia—and the Occupied Palestinian Territory ceased using leaded gasoline. Afghanistan and Morocco were expected to phase out its use at the end of 2008. Tunisia committed itself to phasing out leaded gasoline in the near future. Leaded gasoline phase-out was a major component of three subregional events coordinated by the Partnership in the Eastern Europe, Caucasus and Central Asia region in January; the Gulf region in March; and North Africa in August. Through the events, countries were assisted in setting timelines and strategies to end the use of such gasoline. Sweden contributed approximately $180,000 to support the development of a study on the effects of trade in products containing lead, cadmium and mercury in Africa. The study [UNEP/GC.25/INF/23/Add.1] was presented at an inter-governmental workshop in December.

Notes by the Executive Director [UNEP/GC.25/INF/23 & UNEP/GC.25/INF/24] contained reviews of scientific information on lead and cadmium, an overview of legislation and an inventory of risk management measures.

Mercury

The ad hoc open-ended working group on mercury held its second meeting (Nairobi, Kenya, 6–10 October) [UNEP(DTIE)/Hg/OEWG.2/13] to finalize the report on how to respond to the challenges presented by mercury. In response to the Governing Council's 2007 decision on mercury [YUN 2007, p. 1078], the report was to be submitted to the Council in 2009. In reviewing and assessing options for enhanced voluntary measures and new or existing international legal instruments dealing with mercury, the meeting considered possible elements of a mercury framework [UNEP(DTIE)/Hg/OEWG.2/8] and discussed capacity-building and financial mechanisms for the framework and modalities for the Working Group's report to the Governing Council. It also discussed progress in developing a study on atmospheric emissions of mercury and strengthening the UNEP Global Mercury Partnership (see below).

A November note by the Executive Director [UNEP/GC.25/5/Add.1] contained the Working Group's final report, in which the Group recommended that the Governing Council adopt a policy framework for addressing the global challenges posed by mercury at its twenty-fifth (2009) session. Possible elements of such a framework, which were outlined in an annex to the report, included priorities identified by the Council in its 2007 decision on mercury; the range of possible response measures identified by the Working Group; and other actions related to the implementation and administration of the framework. The elements reflected the special needs and situations of developing countries and countries with economies in transition. The Working Group identified two options for implementing the elements of the mercury policy framework: adoption by Governments of a new, legally binding mercury convention, and enhanced voluntary measures. Possible components of such measures would build on existing activities, including the UNEP mercury programme and Global Mercury Partnership; existing legal instruments; SAICM; and a proposed new voluntary instrument, the Programmatic and Organizational Structure on Mercury.

In response to a 2007 Governing Council decision on mercury [YUN 2007, p. 1078], the December report of the Executive Director on chemicals management [UNEP/GC.25/5] contained information on UNEP activities related to mercury. Switzerland and the United States provided funding for a project to investigate the possibility of closing the last exporting primary mercury mine, located in Kyrgyzstan. The UNEP Chemicals Branch, together with the United Nations Institute for Training and Research and the UNEP Global Resource Information Database office, located in Arendal, Norway, assisted in preparing a technical report on the mine. Information on the market and social and economic effects of the control of mercury pollution was collected and analysed by a project conducted by the Nordic Council of Ministers. The project report [UNEP(DTIE)/Hg/OEWG.2/INF/7] was considered by the second meeting of the Ad Hoc Open-ended Working Group on Mercury (see below). Norway supported a pilot project to investigate suitable sites for the sound storage of mercury in Asia and Latin America. The export of mercury and mercury compounds from the European Union would be prohibited from 15 March 2011. In the United States, the federal sale and export of elemental mercury was banned with immediate effect, and all exports of elemental mercury would be banned as at 1 January 2013.

The UNEP secretariat prepared a report on the supply of and demand for mercury. The report analysed the projected demand for mercury until 2020 and potential limitations on supply over that period. UNEP, with the support of Sweden and the United States, undertook a number of country-level projects to develop inventories of mercury uses and emissions. The inventories enabled countries to develop national action plans to tackle issues related to mercury. The Executive Director's report also described progress in strengthening the UNEP Global Mercury Partnership.

A December note by the Executive Director [UNEP/GC.25/INF/27] provided additional information on activities undertaken to strengthen the Global Mercury Partnership. UNEP, in consultation with Governments and stakeholders, developed an overarching framework for the Partnership, which was finalized at a Partnership meeting (Geneva, 1–3 April). The meeting report and the overarching framework were annexed to the note. The framework established an overall goal for the Partnership: to protect human health and the global environment from the release of mercury and its compounds by minimizing and, where feasible, ultimately eliminating global anthropogenic mercury releases to air, water and land. It also established a partnership advisory group to encourage the work of the partnership areas; review the partnership area business plans; report to the Executive Director on progress; communicate overarching issues and lessons learned while promoting synergy and collaboration; and report on Partnership activities. Business plans were drafted for six partnership areas: artisanal and small-scale gold mining; mercury cell chlor-alkali production; mercury air transport and fate research; mercury-containing products; mercury releases from coal combustion; and mercury waste management. The note highlighted activities in each of the areas.

Harmful products

In response to Economic and Social Council decision 2007/264 [YUN 2007, p. 1079], the Secretary-General in May submitted a report [A/63/76-E/2008/54] on products harmful to health and the environment. The report presented the views of Member States and intergovernmental entities on the continued usefulness for Member States of the Consolidated List of Products Whose Consumption and/or Sale have been Banned, Withdrawn, Severely Restricted or Not Approved by Governments [YUN 1982, p. 1010]. The Secretary-General concluded that the lack of response from any intergovernmental entity dealing with the issue, except FAO, and the few responses received from Member States pointed towards the diminishing value of the List. He recommended that the Council consider recommending the elimination of the mandate of regularly updating the List, as contained in General Assembly resolution 37/137 [ibid., p. 1011].

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 23 July [meeting 41], the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 2008/13 [draft: E/2008/L.21] without vote [agenda item 13 (e)].

Protection against products harmful to health and the environment

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its decision 2007/264 of 27 July 2007, in which it requested the Secretary-General, in consultation with Member States and relevant intergovernmental entities, to evaluate the continued usefulness for the Member States of the Consolidated List of Products Whose Consumption and/or Sale Have Been Banned, Withdrawn, Severely Restricted or Not Approved by Governments and to report to the Council at its substantive session of 2008, and taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on products harmful to health and the environment,

1. Invites the United Nations Environment Programme to continue updating the chemicals volume of the Consolidated List of Products Whose Consumption and/or Sale Have Been Banned, Withdrawn, Severely Restricted or Not Approved by Governments and to report to the Economic and Social Council at its substantive session in 2010;

2. Invites the World Health Organization to continue updating the pharmaceuticals volume of the Consolidated List and to report to the Council at its substantive session of 2010.

Persistent organic pollutants

As at 31 December, 161 States and the EU were parties to the 2001 Stockholm Convention on Persistent Organic Pollutants (POPs) [YUN 2001, p. 971], which entered into force in 2004 [YUN 2004, p. 1066].

The Conference of the Parties to the Convention did not meet in 2008.

The fourth meeting of the Persistent Organic Pollutants Review Committee (Geneva, 13–17 October) [UNEP/POPS/POPRC.4/15] adopted risk management evaluations for commercial octabromodiphenyl ether; pentachlorobenzene; and alpha and beta hexachlorocyclohexane. Other decisions related to endosulfan; conflicts of interest on the part of members of the Committee; the Committee's terms of reference; and the effective participation of the parties to the Stockholm Convention in the Committee's work. The Committee made recommendations to the Conference of the Parties pertaining to commercial pentabromodiphenyl ether; chlordecone; hexabromobiphenyl; lindane, alpha hexachlorocyclohexane and beta hexachlorocyclohexane; perfluorooctane sulfonate; commercial octabromodiphenyl ether; and pentachlorobenzene.

Hazardous wastes

As at 31 December, 171 States and the EU were parties to the 1989 Basel Convention on the Control of Transboundary Movements of Hazardous Wastes and their Disposal [YUN 1989, p. 420], which entered into force in 1992 [YUN 1992, p. 685]. The 1995 amendment to the Convention [YUN 1995, p. 1333], not yet in force, had been ratified, accepted or approved by 64 parties. The number of parties to the 1999 Basel Protocol on Liability and Compensation for Damage Resulting from Transboundary Movements of Hazardous Wastes and their Disposal [YUN 1999, p. 998] rose to nine.

The second meeting of the Expanded Bureau of the eighth (2006) meeting [YUN 2006, p. 1248] of the Conference of the Parties to the Convention (Geneva, 26–27 February) [UNEP/SBC/BUREAU/8/2/5] discussed the draft 2009–2010 programme budget and financial matters; the status of preparations for the ninth (2008) Conference of the Parties; commemoration of the twentieth anniversary of the adoption of the Convention in 2009; implementation of decisions adopted at the eighth meeting of the Conference of the Parties; and administrative and other matters.

The ninth meeting of the Conference of the Parties to the Convention (Bali, Indonesia, 23–27 June) [UNEP/CHW.9/39] adopted the Bali Declaration on Waste Management for Human Health and Livelihood, in which ministers and other heads of delegations from the parties to the Convention and other States reaffirmed their commitment to the principles and purposes of the Convention and to sustainable development, including the principles set out in Agenda 21 [YUN 1992, p. 672], adopted by the 1992 United Nations Conference on Environment and Development [ibid., p. 670]. They also called on international and regional partners to support and enhance the implementation of the Basel Convention at the bilateral, regional and global levels.

The Secretary-General, in his message to the ninth meeting of the Conference of the Parties at its high-level segment (26–27 June), said that the Convention, by establishing the principle of environmentally sound management of hazardous and other wastes, was a key to pursuing environmental sustainability and the MDGs. In order to reach those targets, all States should provide the necessary political commitment and resources to the Convention, and integrate efforts to carry out its provisions into the broader campaign for sustainable development. The United Nations would continue to take an active role in meeting the global waste challenge.

The Conference of the Parties invited the parties to take into consideration the statement of the President of the ninth meeting of the Conference. It adopted—as an extraordinary, one-time measure—a three-year budget cycle for the 2009–2011 period in order to facilitate synchronization of the budget cycle of the Basel Convention with those of the 1998 Rotterdam Convention [YUN 1998, p. 997] and the 2001 Stockholm Convention [YUN 2001, p. 971]; and approved programme activities and the programme budget for the Basel Convention Trust Fund for 2009, 2010 and 2011. It also approved the membership and work programme for 2009–2011 of the Committee for Administering the Mechanism for Promoting Implementation and Compliance of the Basel Convention. The Conference adopted the Convention's workplan for the environmentally sound management of electrical and electronic waste (e-waste); the Convention Partnership Programme workplan for 2009–2011; and the work programme of the Open-ended Working Group for 2009–2011. The Conference also adopted decisions on the Strategic Plan and new strategic framework for the implementation of the Convention; the review of the operation of the Convention's regional and coordinating centres; a proposal for establishing a regional centre for South Asia in the South Asia Cooperative Environment Programme; the Mobile Phone Partnership Initiative; the Partnership for Action on Computing Equipment; cooperation and coordination among the Basel, Rotterdam and Stockholm Conventions; international cooperation and coordination; cooperation between the Basel Convention and the International Maritime Organization; national reporting of data on transboundary movements of hazardous wastes and other wastes; the environmentally sound management of used tyres; technical guidelines on the environmentally sound management of mercury wastes; POPs; the review of technical guidelines on the environmentally sound management of hazardous wastes; and the review of work on the guidance papers on hazard characteristics H10 and H11. Further decisions dealt with cooperation with the World Customs Organization and its Harmonized System Committee; harmonization and coordination; national classification and control procedures for the import of wastes contained in annex IX to the Convention; the Trust Fund to Assist Developing and Other Countries in Need of Assistance in the Implementation of the Convention; national legislation and other measures to implement the Convention and combat illegal traffic; the Protocol on Liability and Compensation; interpretation of article 17 of the Convention; national definitions of hazardous wastes; agreements and arrangements under article 11 of the Convention; the designation of competent authorities and focal points for the Convention; the dismantling of ships; and administrative matters.

Waste management

The UNEP Governing Council, at its tenth special session in February, had before it a report of the Executive Director on waste management [UNEP/GCSS.X/7], submitted in response to a 2007 Council decision [YUN 2007, p. 1080]. The report stated that the rapid increase in the volume and types of solid waste and hazardous waste generation, due mainly to economic growth, urbanization and industrialization, represented a growing problem for national and local governments, as well as municipal authorities. UNEP, in collaboration with its partners, intended to intensify and strengthen its waste management activities. In support of the Bali Strategic Plan for Technology Support and Capacity-building [YUN 2004, p. 1040], adopted by the Council in 2005 [YUN 2005, p. 1135], UNEP activities would focus on capacity-building and support for technology identification, assessment and implementation. The report reviewed work being carried out or planned by relevant organizations, institutions, forums and processes in the field of waste management, and aimed to identify needs and gaps. The activities and programmes of international organizations were assessed to identify areas requiring further work to assist countries in improving their waste management systems. The analysis addressed needs at the policy and regulatory, technical, financial, social and institutional levels, and generally referred to situations in developing countries. Nuclear and space wastes and wastes linked to chemical weapons were not covered in the analysis, as special management systems for such wastes were set up and strictly controlled by Governments. The report provided recommendations on how to bridge gaps in waste management and outlined the outcomes of the process of cooperation between UNEP and other organizations.

An addendum [UNEP/GC.25/5/Add.2] to the November report of the Executive Director on chemicals management (see p. 1171) contained a report on waste management, submitted in response to the Governing Council's February decision on chemicals management (see p. 1170). The report reviewed work by organizations that carried out or were planning waste management activities, set out recommendations and provided information on cooperation between UNEP and other organizations.

Notes by the Executive Director [UNEP/GCSS.X/INF/6, UNEP/GC.25/INF/29] contained information on the waste management activities and programmes of the Asian Development Bank (ADB), the European Bank for Reconstruction and Development (EBRD), OECD, the secretariat for the Basel Convention, UNDP, UNEP, UN-Habitat, the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO) and the World Bank.

Environmental Law

The meeting of senior government officials expert in environmental law to prepare a fourth Programme for the Development and Periodic Review of Environmental Law (Montevideo Programme IV) (Nairobi, 29 September–3 October) [UNEP/Env.Law/MTV4/IG/2/2] adopted the draft fourth Programme [UNEP/GC.25/INF/15], which was annexed to the meeting's report. The draft fourth Programme contained 27 programme areas. It proposed objectives, strategies and actions to increase the effectiveness of environmental law, including in the areas of implementation, compliance and enforcement; capacity-building; prevention and mitigation of and compensation for environmental damage; avoidance and settlement of international disputes; the strengthening and development of international environmental law; harmonization, coordination and synergies of relevant institutions; public participation and access to information; information technology; governance; and other means. The draft programme also addressed issues related to conservation, management and sustainable use of natural resources; challenges for environmental law; and relationships between the environment and other fields, including human rights, trade, security and military activities. The draft programme was developed by UNEP in conjunction with senior advisers and reviewed by the consultative meeting of Government officials and experts on the Programme (Nairobi, 26–30 November 2007) [UNEP/Env.Law/MTV4/IG/1/4].

In an October report [UNEP/GC.25/11], the Executive Director submitted to the Governing Council information for its consideration in 2009 and suggested action on the draft fourth Programme.

An October note by the Executive Director [UNEP/GC.25/INF/15/Add.2] contained the report of the consultative meeting of Government officials and experts to review and further develop the draft guidelines for developing national legislation on access to information, public participation and access to justice in environmental matters (Nairobi, 20–21 June), and the draft guidelines on the topic. An addendum [UNEP/GC.25/11/Add.1] contained information and suggested action on the draft guidelines.

A November note by the Executive Director [UNEP/GC.25/INF/15/Add.3] contained the report of the consultative meeting of Government officials and experts to review and further develop draft guidelines for developing national legislation on liability, response action and compensation for damage caused by activities dangerous to the environment (Nairobi, 18–19 June), and the draft guidelines on the topic. An addendum [UNEP/GC.25/11/Add.2] contained information and suggested action on the draft guidelines.

Follow-up on the 1996 UN Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II)

In August [A/63/291], the Secretary-General, in response to General Assembly resolution 62/198 [YUN 2007, p. 1083], reported on the implementation the Habitat Agenda [YUN 1996, p. 994], adopted by the 1996 United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II) [ibid., p. 992], and on the strengthening of the United Nations Human Settlements Programme (UN-Habitat). In 2008, the increasing importance of the human settlements dimension of sustainable development was underscored by a rapid rise in food and energy prices; growing awareness of the consequences of climate change; the financial crisis associated with the collapse of the sub-prime mortgage market; and devastating natural disasters in a number of countries. UN-Habitat studies showed that levels of inequality in cities were rising across the globe. Levels of urbanization and city size were not the key determinants of the quantity of greenhouse gas emissions; rather, consumption patterns and lifestyles with regard to land-use and urban sprawl played a more critical role.

In December, the Committee of Permanent Representatives—the subsidiary body of the UN-Habitat Governing Council—endorsed an action plan for implementing the 2008–2013 UN-Habitat Medium-term Strategic and Institutional Plan, which was approved by the Governing Council in 2007 [YUN 2007, p. 1086]. The anticipated outcomes of the Plan's start-up phase included: a revised and updated set of substantive policies and strategies spearheaded by a global campaign on sustainable development; an enhanced normative and operational framework to provide policy and operational support services to Member States in attaining the human settlements-related MDGs; and a series of institutional reforms for the progressive realization of excellence in management. The new Global Campaign for Sustainable Urbanization merged two previous campaigns on secure tenure and urban governance, and addressed the adaptation and mitigation challenges of climate change. It was conceived as an advocacy tool to help UN-Habitat raise awareness of the need to include the urbanization and urban poverty agendas in national development plans and priorities, and disseminate a set of policy recommendations to Member States in support of socially inclusive and environmentally sound human settlements development. The Campaign was accompanied by a normative and operational framework that combined policy recommendations and tools emanating from the Campaign for Sustainable Urbanization with services to support the efforts of Member States, UN country teams and the United Nations Development Assistance Framework in attaining the human settlements-related MDGs.

UN-Habitat developed a methodology and proposed integrated approaches to slum upgrading and water and sanitation, including working with international and regional financial institutions, the private sector and domestic financial institutions. Collaboration with the African Development Bank (AfDB) was instrumental in facilitating investment flows into African cities for basic infrastructure and services; joint activities generated over $250 million in pipeline investments. A partnership with AfDB and the East African Community provided a framework of collaboration to expand the Lake Victoria Region Water and Sanitation Initiative in an additional 15 towns in five countries. In India, four cities of Madhya Pradesh state benefited from a $181 million loan from the Asian Development Bank (ADB) based on the role of UN-Habitat in supporting reforms in the water and sanitation sector. In Asia, UN-Habitat was engaged in 47 towns and cities in five countries and was expanding its activities to Indonesia and Cambodia. In China, UN-Habitat forged a partnership with the city of Nanjing for a diagnostic study that became the basis for follow-up investment by ADB to improve the city's water and sanitation sector. In Iraq, it partnered with the International Finance Corporation to study and address local housing supply constraints. In Latin America and the Caribbean, UN-Habitat formed a strategic partnership with the Inter-American Development Bank to support the Water for Cities programme.

The UN-Habitat Slum Upgrading Facility continued to field-test innovative financing mechanisms in four pilot countries: Ghana, Indonesia, Sri Lanka and the United Republic of Tanzania. UN-Habitat and the Committee of Permanent Representatives approved a set of operational procedures for engaging in the experimental reimbursable seeding operations activities approved by the Governing Council in 2007 [YUN 2007, p. 1088]. The procedures would be used by a steering and monitoring committee to select pilot projects for leveraging seed capital with domestic capital to finance pro-poor housing and urban development. A micro-mortgage financing initiative for low-income housing in developing countries, starting in Latin American cities, was launched in partnership with the Global Housing Foundation and the Merrill Lynch firm. The partnership's objective was to offer the working poor segment of the world's 1 billion slum dwellers an opportunity to own a home financed through micro-mortgage instruments and, in the process, help develop the local economy.

Following the Governing Council's approval in 2007 of the guidelines on decentralization [YUN 2007, p. 1087], UN-Habitat worked closely with Habitat Agenda partners to support interested Member States in undertaking policy and institutional reform. Two meetings of the Advisory Group of Experts on Decentralization were convened in India and Norway in 2008 to develop a strategic framework for launching support services for the implementation of the guidelines. The resulting implementation strategy consisted of four major components: advocacy and norm-setting; capacity-building and institutional development; networking and synergy building with key stakeholders; and monitoring and assessment.

The UN-Habitat Executive Director was appointed to the WHO Commission on the Social Determinants of Health. UN-Habitat and WHO developed a framework for collaboration, focusing on generating evidence on urban health inequities; setting up urban thematic groups at the national level; establishing a city-to-city learning facility on urban health; and working jointly towards a global forum on urban health in 2010. In 2008, the Province of Gangwon, Republic of Korea, and UN-Habitat launched the International Urban Training Centre. The Centre was established to build the capacity of cities and towns nationally and in the Asian and Pacific region in support of sustainable urbanization. UN-Habitat was implementing an approach whereby populations affected by disasters were placed at the centre of the recovery and reconstruction process. In the Asia and Pacific region, a seamless process between disaster relief and recovery was implemented in a number of countries, including Afghanistan, Indonesia, Maldives, Sri Lanka and Pakistan. In Somalia, interventions by UN-Habitat and an inter-agency group helped more than 50,000 internally displaced persons regain a permanent home, access basic services and begin to restore their livelihoods.

Contributions to the United Nations Habitat and Human Settlements Foundation reached an all-time high of $153.3 million in 2007 as compared to $126.0 million in 2006. Non-earmarked contributions increased by over 70 per cent, from $10.2 million in 2006 to $17.6 million received from 36 Governments in 2007. Earmarked contributions—funding intended for a theme, a region, a country or a project—amounted to $135.7 million. The imbalance between earmarked and non-earmarked contributions remained a challenge. In April 2008, an initial contribution of $2.9 million was received for experimental reimbursable seeding operations as at 31 December 2007.

The Secretary-General stated that the Habitat Agenda was important for addressing some of the underlying causes of global trends such as climate change and the rise in food and fuel prices and for mitigating their social, economic and environmental consequences. The experimental reimbursable seeding operations would take place simultaneously with the 2008–2013 Medium-term Strategic and Institutional Plan and over a similar period of time. The Human Settlements Foundation offered a unique opportunity for Member States to reduce urban poverty. Voluntary contributions to the Foundation would enable local partners to combine grants for technical assistance with reimbursable seeding operations. In that regard, the adoption of the principle of assessed voluntary indicative scale of contributions would facilitate the mobilization of resources and the broadening of the donor base. Governments and other entities were encouraged to contribute to the capitalization of UN-Habitat and the Human Settlements Foundation as an effective means of providing financial and seed capital to slum upgrading, slum prevention and pro-poor water and sanitation in urban areas.

A progress report of the Executive Director [HSP/GC/22/2/Add.2] reviewed progress made in implementing the Medium-Term Strategic and Institutional Plan for 2008–2013.

Coordinated implementation of Habitat Agenda

In response to a 2007 Economic and Social Council decision [YUN 2006, p. 1251], the Secretary-General submitted a May report [E/2008/64] on the coordinated implementation of the Habitat Agenda. The report highlighted major new developments and milestones in the implementation of the Agenda and underscored the increasing awareness on the part of the international community of the issues and challenges associated with rapid urbanization, including the consequences for attaining the MDGs. It discussed the decisions of the twenty-first (2007) session of the UN-Habitat Governing Council, including the approval of the 2008–2013 Medium-term Strategic and Institutional Plan [YUN 2007, p. 1086]; emerging responses to the challenges of rapid urbanization; human settlements and crises; and the participation and contribution of UN-Habitat to “Delivering as one” at the country level, in response to the recommendations contained in the 2006 report of the High-level Panel on United Nations System-wide Coherence in the Areas of Development, Humanitarian Assistance and the Environment [YUN 2006, p. 1584].

The Secretary-General concluded that the robust response to the coordinated implementation of the Habitat Agenda and related MDGs was a strong indication of the coming of age of the urban agenda. The unprecedented increase in collaboration, coordination, partnerships and networking covered all aspects of the Agenda at all levels, including advocacy and knowledge generation, capacity-building and resource mobilization to expand pilot initiatives and prepare for follow-up investment. The key contributing factors to the growing awareness and recognition were rooted in the realization that the urbanization of poverty and social exclusion was becoming a major challenge to the attainment of internationally agreed development goals and to sustainable development itself. Major global challenges underscored the importance of addressing the social, economic and environmental consequences of urbanization. Trends in rapid urbanization would place further pressure on the demand for energy, including biofuels, thus affecting the pricing of both energy and food. A concerted and integrated approach to the social, economic and environmental challenges of rapid urbanization was required. For such an approach to become effective, it was proposed that the Council include sustainable urbanization, with a major focus on urban poverty, as a cross-cutting issue to complement and reinforce follow-up within the social, economic and environmental pillars of sustainable development.

On 23 July, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 2008/239, took note of Secretary-General's report; decided to transmit it to the General Assembly for consideration at its sixty-third (2008) session; and requested the Secretary-General to submit a report on the coordinated implementation of the Habitat Agenda to the Council in 2009.

In response to the Council's decision, the Secretary-General, by a September note [A/63/353], transmitted his May report to the Assembly.

UN Human Settlements Programme

Governing Council

In accordance with General Assembly resolution 56/206 [YUN 2001, p. 987], the Governing Council of the United Nations Human Settlements Programme (UN-Habitat), which met biennially, did not meet in 2008. The twenty-second session of the Governing Council would take place in 2009.

Committee of Permanent Representatives

The Committee of Permanent Representatives, the intersessional body of the UN-Habitat Governing Council, met four times in 2008 (3 April, 11 June, 24 September and 3 December). The Committee discussed the implementation of the Medium-term Strategic and Institutional Plan for the period 2008–2013, adopted by the Council in 2007 [YUN 2007, p. 1086], including the experimental reimbursable seeding operations [YUN 2007, p. 1088]; preparations for and the outcome of the fourth session of the World Urban Forum (see p. 1181) and the sixty-third (2008) session of the General Assembly; preparations for the twenty-second (2009) session of the Governing Council; the efficiency and effectiveness of the UN-

Habitat governance structure; and the UN-Habitat financial situation.

Board of Auditors report

In June, the Board of Auditors transmitted to the General Assembly its report on the UN-Habitat financial statements for the biennium ended 31 December 2007 [A/63/5/Add.8]. Total income amounted to $289.9 million, compared with $228.4 million for the previous biennium, representing a 27 per cent increase. Total expenditure increased by 48 per cent to $250.4 million, compared with $169.2 million for the previous biennium; the increase resulted in an excess of income over expenditure of $39.5 million, compared with an excess of $59.2 million in the previous biennium. Taking into consideration non-budgeted accrued expenses of $8 million acknowledged for end-of-service liabilities, the funding of which had not yet been provided, and after the prior-period adjustment, the adjusted net result as at 31 December 2007 represented an excess of $32 million; reserves and funds totalled $116.7 million at the end of the period, compared to $85.1 million for the previous biennium.

The Board recommended, among other measures, that UN-Habitat: conduct an inventory of expendable items as at the end of the biennium and account for and disclose them pursuant to the UN system accounting standards; monitor regularly its level of liquidity, in order to eliminate any potential for unnecessary delay in the implementation of projects; set up specific funding for end-of-service and after-service health insurance liabilities; disclose in its financial statements its resources from the UN regular budget and the related expenditure; establish a working group for implementing the International Public Sector Accounting Standards and the enterprise resource planning system; justify amounts relating to non-expendable property and reconcile them with values provided by physical inventories; and consider options for minimizing the manual processing done in the course of preparing financial statements.

UN-Habitat activities

In 2008, UN-Habitat continued to implement the key components of its work programme in line with Governing Council resolutions and the goals of the UN system and the international community. Under the Medium-term Strategic and Institutional Plan, approved by the Council in 2007 [YUN 2007, p. 1086], UN-Habitat focused on six key areas: effective advocacy, monitoring and partnerships; the promotion of participatory planning, management and governance; the promotion of pro-poor land and housing; environmentally sound basic infrastructure and services; strengthened human settlements finance systems; and excellence in management. Cooperation programmes and projects were being conducted in 50 countries, most of which were least developed countries. More than 20 other countries were benefitting from UN-Habitat global programmes.

During the year, the Advisory Group of Experts on decentralization met to develop a strategy for the implementation and follow-up to the guidelines on decentralization and the strengthening of local authorities, which were approved by the Governing Council in 2007 [YUN 2007, p. 1087]. UN-Habitat held regional consultative meetings with ministers for local government from Africa (Yaoundé, Cameroon, June) and Latin America and the Caribbean (Quito, Ecuador, July). With the support of France, and through close collaboration with the organization United Cities and Local Governments (UCLG), UN-Habitat continued to work with the UCLG Global Observatory of Local Democracy and Decentralization, focusing on the compilation of country profiles, which would enable countries to exchange information on their respective laws and local government. In response to a 2007 Council decision [YUN 2007, p. 1087], UN-Habitat established a group comprising experts and stakeholders to solicit inputs to the draft guidelines on access to basic services for all. A series of regional consultations culminated in a global meeting held on the occasion of the fourth session of the World Urban Forum (Nanjing, China, 3–6 November) (see p. 1181). The Opportunities Fund for Urban Youth-led Development was launched at the Forum. Under the UN-Habitat Youth Empowerment Programme, work continued in the Kibera slum and the Mavoko informal settlement in Nairobi to provide on-the-job training for youth through the construction of their own youth training centre. The centre would serve as a regional hub in Eastern Africa for innovative and appropriate technologies for building affordable housing.

Working relationships with the private sector marked a shift in 2008 as a result of the 2008–2013 Medium-term Strategic and Institutional Plan. UN-Habitat initiated new forms of global and national partnerships and cooperation with, among others, water utility companies and the real estate sector to develop new concepts for products and service delivery. Work intensified on the Human Settlements Financing Tools and Best Practices initiative, which documented and disseminated financing tools such as social investment funds, community-based housing finance and community mortgage programmes. UN-Habitat's joint activities with private sector companies sought to make use of the core competencies and comparative advantages of those companies. The objectives of such activities were to improve the living conditions of the urban poor and harness private sector capacity, knowledge and technology in support of actions aimed at mitigating and adapting to climate change.

The Slum Upgrading Facility pilot programme made progress in the selected pilot countries: Ghana, Indonesia, Sri Lanka and the United Republic of Tanzania. Innovative approaches in mobilizing formal commercial credit were being implemented to finance slum upgrading and low-income housing projects. UN-Habitat provided technical and substantive support for the second African Ministerial Conference on Housing and Urban Development (Abuja, Nigeria, 28–30 July); the Conference adopted the Abuja Resolution and an action plan that provided guidelines on financing housing, slum upgrading and urban development. UN-Habitat continued to provide technical assistance and advisory services to women's land access trusts in Ghana, Kenya, Uganda and Tanzania, and supported the formation of new land access trusts in Burundi, Ethiopia, Mozambique and Rwanda. Through its Global Land Tool Network, UN-Habitat worked with the International Federation of Surveyors to advocate the development of pro-poor and gender responsive land tools.

UN-Habitat continued to facilitate cooperation between domestic banks, municipal authorities and urban poor organizations to mobilize domestic capital, public investment and community savings for slum upgrading. Those efforts were supported by the establishment of the experimental reimbursable seeding operations facility in 2007 [YUN 2007, p. 1088]. UN-Habitat further expanded its partnerships with financial institutions, leveraging investment in basic urban infrastructure and services by aligning its pre-investment capacity-building services with the lending portfolios of international and regional development banks. In 2008, it concluded an arrangement with the Inter-American Development Bank to promote water quality, sanitation and hygiene education; the arrangement called for leveraging $10 million in technical assistance and institutional reform to yield up to $1 billion in annual investments.

The State of the World's Cities 2008/2009 report, published by UN-Habitat in 2008, adopted the concept of "harmonious cities" as a theoretical framework for understanding the urban world and as an operational tool for confronting the most important challenges facing urban areas and their development. It focused on the key areas of spatial or regional harmony, social harmony and environmental harmony. The report stated, among other findings, that Governments played a critical role in determining the prosperity and growth of cities; high levels of urban inequality could be socially destabilizing and economically unsustainable; focused and targeted investments could significantly improve the lives of slum dwellers; and cities provided opportunities to mitigate or even reverse the effects of global climate change, as they provided the economies of scale needed to reduce per capita costs and demand for resources.

Report to Permanent Forum on Indigenous Issues. In response to recommendations made by the Permanent Forum on Indigenous Issues at its fourth [YUN 2005, p. 881], fifth [YUN 2006, p. 935] and sixth [YUN 2007, p. 798] sessions, UN-Habitat issued a February report [E/C.19/2008/4/Add.7] on its activities related to the rights and needs of indigenous peoples. In response to an invitation made by the 2007 International Expert Group Meeting on Urban Indigenous People and Migration [ibid., p. 1090], UN-Habitat began to coordinate the elaboration of policy guidelines for Governments and local authorities to assist in developing public policies related to the challenges faced by indigenous peoples in urban areas, as agreed by the Permanent Forum and the Inter-Agency Support Group on Indigenous Issues in 2007. The policy guidelines would be developed for the following thematic areas: employment and local economic development; education; health; transition/settlement services; cultural and linguistic continuity/identities/ethnic mobility; human security, particularly for indigenous women and youth; and housing. The first of the planned series of policy guides—on housing—was expected to contribute to the realization of indigenous peoples' housing rights and secure tenure in the urban setting. Several UN-Habitat policy instruments and programme activities were relevant to the area of indigenous peoples, climate change challenges and mitigation. Those included the Global Campaign for Sustainable Urbanization and the advocacy work of the Sustainable Urban Development Network. In response to the 2007 decision of the UN-Habitat Governing Council on the sustainable development of Arctic cities [YUN 2007, p. 1087], UN-Habitat was exploring partnerships with the Arctic Council and other stakeholders on climate change issues and impacts on Arctic communities, which were largely made up of indigenous peoples.

World Urban Forum. UN-Habitat convened the fourth session of the World Urban Forum (Nanjing, China, 3–6 November) [HSP/GC/22/INF/2] on the theme “harmonious urbanization”. Attended by approximately 8,000 participants from 155 countries, the Forum underscored the need for policies and interventions to ensure that the growing numbers of urban poor were not left behind, and stressed the link between overcoming urban poverty and addressing climate change. There was wide agreement that attaining the MDGs would greatly contribute to improvements in the area of affordable housing and that Governments had to provide better support for cities and local authorities in the quest for safer, cleaner, greener and inclusive cities with affordable housing for all. The private sector needed to be encouraged to do more for the urban communities in which it operated. The Forum reinforced and firmly established several of the main pillars of the UN-Habitat 2008–2013 Medium-term Institutional and Strategic Plan, including the centrality of partnerships, governance, affordable housing and services, and strengthening housing finance systems for sustainable urbanization. Accordingly, the Forum's recommendations were to be used to guide UN-Habitat activities under the Plan. The fifth session of the Forum would be held in Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, in 2010.

Cooperation with UNEP

A report of the Executive Director [HSP/GC/22/2/Add.4] contained the joint report of the Executive Directors of UN-Habitat and UNEP on progress made in the 2007–2008 period to strengthen cooperation between the Programmes.

Other matters

OIOS report

In response to a decision of the twenty-second (1982) session of the Committee for Programme and Coordination (CPC) [YUN 1982, p. 1441], the Office of Internal Oversight Services (OIOS) in March submitted a report [E/AC.51/2008/3] on the triennial review of the implementation of recommendations made in its 2005 report on the in-depth evaluation of UN-Habitat [YUN 2005, p. 1172], as endorsed by CPC [ibid.] and by the General Assembly in resolution 60/257 [YUN 2006, p. 1639]. OIOS found that UN-Habitat had implemented all 12 endorsed recommendations. Many of the recommendations were addressed, either entirely or in part, through the UN-Habitat comprehensive strategic planning process and the development of the 2008–2013 Medium-term Strategic and Institutional Plan, approved by the Governing Council in 2007 [YUN 2007, p. 1086].

Population

In 2008, world population stood at 6.8 billion, and was projected to reach 9 billion in 2045 if fertility levels continued to decline in developing countries. While 53 developed countries had fertility below that needed to ensure the replacement of generations, 42 developing countries—many of them least developed—had total fertility above 4.0 children per woman. In addition, population was shifting. For the first time in history, there were more urban dwellers than rural inhabitants, and urban dwellers were likely to compose 70 per cent of the world population by 2050.

UN population activities continued to be guided by the Programme of Action adopted at the 1994 International Conference on Population and Development (ICPD) and the key actions for its implementation adopted at the twenty-first special session of the General Assembly in 1999. The Commission on Population and Development—the body responsible for monitoring, reviewing and assessing implementation of the Programme of Action—considered as its special theme “Population distribution, urbanization, internal migration and development”. The Population Division continued to analyse and report on world demographic trends and policies and to make its findings available in publications and on the Internet.

The United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA) assisted countries in implementing the ICPD agenda and the Millennium Development Goals through their use of population data to formulate sound policies and programmes. In 2008, UNFPA provided assistance to 158 countries, areas and territories, with emphasis on increasing the availability and quality of reproductive health services, fighting gender discrimination and gender-based violence, formulating effective population policies and intensifying HIV prevention.

Follow-up to 1994 Conference on Population and Development

Implementation of Programme of Action

Commission on Population and Development

At its forty-first session (New York, 13 April 2007 and 7–11 April 2008) [E/2008/25], the Commission on Population and Development considered as its special theme “Population, distribution, urbanization, internal migration and development.” It discussed follow-up actions to the recommendations of the 1994 International Conference on Population and Development (ICPD) [YUN 1994, p. 955], and adopted a resolution [E/2008/25 (res. 2008/1)] on national, regional and international action relating to its special theme.

Documents before the Commission included the report of its Bureau on its intersessional meetings (New York, 16 October and 11 December 2007 and Sofia, Bulgaria, 14–15 January 2008) [E/CN.9/2008/2], and reports by the Secretary-General on: world population monitoring [E/CN.9/2008/3 & Corr.1] (see p. 1183); monitoring of population programmes [E/CN.9/2008/4] (see p. 1189); and flow of financial resources for assisting in the implementation of the ICPD Programme of Action, [E/CN.9/2008/5] (see p. 1184). It also had before it statements by three non-governmental organizations (NGOs) in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council: International Planned Parenthood Federation [E/CN.9/2008/NGO/1]; World Youth Alliance [E/CN.9/2008/NGO/2]; and Population Action International [E/CN.9/2008/NGO/3].

The Commission adopted and brought to the Economic and Social Council’s attention a resolution on population distribution, urbanization, internal migration and development [E/2008/25 (res. 2008/1)] (see p. 1184). The Commission decided that the special theme for its forty-third (2010) session would be “Health, morbidity, mortality and development” [dec. 2008/101].

The Commission took note [dec. 2008/102] of the Secretary General’s report on programme implementation and progress of work in the field of population in 2007: Population Division of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs [E/CN.9/2008/6], and of his note on the proposed strategic framework for the period 2010–2011 with respect to population [E/CN.9/2008/7]. It also recommended to the Council the draft provisional agenda for its forty-second (2009) session.

By decision 2008/240 of 23 July, the Economic and Social Council took note of the report of the Commission on Population and Development on its forty-first (2008) session and approved the provisional agenda for the Commission’s forty-second (2009) session.

In preparation for its forty-second session, the Commission’s Bureau held two meetings in 2008 (New York, 21 October and 15 December) [E/CN.9/2009/2].

Population distribution, urbanization, internal migration and development

The Secretary-General's report on world population monitoring, focusing on population distribution, urbanization, internal migration and development [E/CN.9/2008/3 & Corr.1] reviewed trends in and prospects for urban and rural population growth and changes in the population of cities. It found that between 1920 and 2007, the world's urban population increased from about 270 million to 3.3 billion, with 1.5 billion urban dwellers added to Asia, 750 million to the more developed regions, just under 450 million to Latin America and the Caribbean, and just over 350 million to Africa. Between 2007 and 2050, the urban population was expected to increase almost as much as it did from 1920 to 2007: up to 3.1 billion additional urban dwellers by 2050, including 1.8 billion in Asia and 900 billion in Africa.

By one estimate, 80 per cent of the world's gross domestic product (GDP) was generated by urban areas. As cities attracted businesses and jobs, they became magnets for migrants seeking better opportunities, bringing together both the human and the entrepreneurial resources to generate new ideas, innovations and increasingly productive uses of technology. At the macro level, there was a positive correlation between per capita income and level of urbanization, and all the evidence indicated that people benefited from living in urban areas. Average urban incomes were generally higher than those in rural areas. However, despite its many positive facets, urbanization was not without its ills. Large cities, in particular, were prone to suffer from environmental contamination stemming from traffic congestion, the concentration of industry and inadequate waste disposal systems. In addition, income inequality in the cities of developing countries was stark, and it was increasing. According to the United Nations Human Settlements Programme (UN-Habitat), 840 million people lived in slums in 2005. In 2004, more than 600 million urban dwellers lacked access to improved sanitation and 180 million lacked access to an improved water source.

In 2007, 19 urban agglomerations qualified as megacities, having at least 10 million inhabitants. The most populous, Tokyo, had nearly 36 million inhabitants. Asia had 10 other megacities, while Latin America had four, North America two and Africa and Europe one each. The next tier of large cities, with populations ranging from 5 million to just under 10 million, numbered 31 in 2005 and was expected to number 48 in 2025, while accounting for just 7 per cent of the urban population. Cities with fewer than 5 million inhabitants but more than a million were considerably more numerous (361 in 2005, increasing to 526 in 2025) and accounted for 22 per cent of the urban population in 2005. All those categories together accounted for 48 per cent of the urban population, implying that smaller cities comprised over half of that population.

At the world level, poverty remained concentrated in rural areas, with 75 per cent of the poor living in rural areas in 2002. Although there were important regional differences, overall, the percentage of poor living at under $1 a day in urban areas declined from 14 per cent in 1993 to 13 per cent in 2002, whereas it declined from 37 to 30 per cent in rural areas. In general, the prevalence of poverty tended to be lower at higher levels of urbanization, and the difference between urban and rural poverty tended to decline with rising urbanization. Thus, by contributing to aggregate economic growth, urbanization played a positive role in overall poverty reduction.

Infant and child mortality were on average higher in rural than in urban areas, owing in large part to better urban public infrastructure, higher levels of maternal education and better access to health care in cities. Urban children overall were healthier on average than rural children. However, those in poor urban families were generally worse off than other urban children and, in some cases, even worse off than rural children.

A subsequent report of the Secretary-General [E/CN.9/2009/6] reviewed world demographic trends and prospects. It noted that as at 2008, world population was 6.8 billion, and was projected to reach 9 billion by 2045 if fertility levels continued to decline in developing countries. As a consequence of varying levels, high population growth was expected in several developing countries, while the population of developed countries would grow little, if at all. In 2008, 86 countries, including 53 developed countries, had fertility below that needed to ensure the replacement of generations, while 42 developing countries, many of which were least developed countries (LDCs), had total fertility above 4.0 children per woman. Because of the prevailing low fertility in the more developed regions, international migration accounted for 75 per cent of population growth in those regions in 2000–2005. If current trends continued, net migration would account for virtually all their growth from 2010 to 2030.

In most of the world, longevity continued to increase, and life expectancy was estimated at 67.2 years globally—averaging 76.5 years in the more developed regions and 65.4 in the less developed regions. In LDCs, two thirds of which were severely affected by the HIV/AIDS epidemic, life expectancy averaged a low 54.6 years. In the future, the population would be older and more urban, and, globally, the number of persons aged 60 or over would almost triple, reaching 2 billion in 2050.

Another later report of the Secretary-General [E/CN.9/2009/3] monitored world population, focusing on the contribution of the ICPD Programme of Action to the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals (MDGs). It reviewed the goals related to population and health (in particular to reducing child and maternal mortality, ensuring reproductive health, combating malaria, and controlling the HIV/AIDS epidemic) and also considered the other main development goals—eradicating extreme poverty and hunger; achieving universal education; ensuring reproductive health; promoting gender equality and empowering women; and ensuring environmental sustainability. The report noted that the Programme of Action could make a significant contribution to the achievement of the Goals. However, gaps in its implementation were particularly common in LDCs, especially in sub-Saharan Africa, and population growth remained high in many low-income countries, imposing increasing demands on resources and reducing the capacity of Governments to respond to new challenges.

Commission action. The Commission brought its resolution on national, regional and international action on the subject of population, distribution, urbanization, internal migration and development [E/2008/25 (res. 2008/1)] to the attention of the Economic and Social Council. It recognized that the world population was undergoing an unprecedented transformation from being mostly rural to predominantly urban, with major disparities in the level of urbanization remaining among regions and countries; and that the rapid urbanization required integrated and participatory approaches to spatial management, including coordinated action between national Governments and local authorities with the support of the international community.

The Commission urged Governments to promote linkages between urban and rural areas in recognition of their economic, social and environmental interdependence and to take prompt, forward-looking and sustained action to ensure that urban growth and internal migration had a positive impact on economic growth, poverty eradication and environmental sustainability. It urged Governments to improve the plight of the urban poor and promote the integration of internal migrants form rural to urban areas, and called upon the international community to support the efforts of developing countries to build their capacities to respond to the challenges and opportunities of migration and urban growth.

Financial resources

In accordance with General Assembly resolutions 49/128 [YUN 1994, p. 963] and 50/124 [YUN 1995, p. 1094], the Secretary-General submitted to the Commission a report [E/CN.9/2009/5] on the flow of financial resources for assisting in the implementation of the ICPD Programme of Action. The report examined expected levels of donor and domestic expenditures for population activities in developing countries for 2007, and provided estimates for population expenditures in 2008 and projections for 2009. It stated that donor assistance had been increasing steadily over the past few years, reaching $7.4 billion in 2006, and that it was expected to surpass $8 billion in 2007 and further increase to $11 billion over the following two years.

A rough estimate of resources mobilized by developing countries, as a group, was projected at $18.5 billion for 2007. However, given the global financial crisis, it was uncertain whether countries would continue to increase funding levels for population. Overall funding was still significantly less than necessary to meet the ICPD targets agreed upon in 1994, when no one had foreseen the escalation of the AIDS pandemic. The challenge before the international community was to continue to mobilize sufficient resources to meet needs with respect to family planning services; reproductive health services; sexually transmitted diseases, including HIV/AIDS; and basic research, data and population and development policy analysis.

Fifteenth anniversary of ICPD

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 3 November [meeting 36], the General Assembly adopted resolution 63/9 [draft: A/63/L.15 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 44].

Commemoration of the fifteenth anniversary of the International Conference on Population and Development

The General Assembly,

Considering that 2009 will mark the fifteenth anniversary of the International Conference on Population and Development, held in Cairo from 5 to 13 September 1994,

Decides to devote one day, during its sixty-fourth session, to the commemoration of the fifteenth anniversary of the International Conference on Population and Development.

International migration and development

In response to General Assembly resolution 61/208 [YUN 2006, p. 1262], the Secretary-General submitted an August report on international migration and development [A/63/265 & Corr.1] to provide a basis for the consideration of possible options for the follow-up to the 2006 High-level Dialogue on International Migration and Development [YUN 2006, p. 1261]. The report, prepared by the Population Division, assessed the activities of all relevant bodies, agencies, funds and programmes of the UN system and other international and regional organizations in addressing international migration and development, and included an evaluation of cooperation mechanisms among Governments with respect to including development considerations in their regional and interregional mechanisms.

Global Forum meeting. The second Global Forum on Migration and Development (Manila, Philippines, 27–30 October) was held on the theme “Protecting and Empowering Migrants for Development”. It included a meeting of civil society (27–28 October), followed by an intergovernmental meeting (29–30 October). At the former, 220 representatives of civil society—including NGOs, trade unions, faith-based organizations and academics—adopted recommendations to the latter. Those included considering the benefits of migration and resisting the temptation to cut migrant numbers in the current economic circumstances; recognizing the need to develop a global architecture, ensuring a rights-based approach to migration; and reaffirming the commitment to development through realizing the MDGs and giving priority to full employment and decent work.

The intergovernmental meeting gathered 1,130 delegates representing 163 Member States and UN observers. Round tables considered migration, development and human rights; secure, regular migration to achieve a stronger development impact; and policy and institutional coherence and partnerships. The ensuing deliberations yielded 33 practical recommendations and possible follow-up actions.

Seventh Meeting on International Migration and Development. The UN Population Division, in response to Assembly resolution 58/208 [YUN 2003, p. 1087], held the Seventh Coordination Meeting on International Migration and Development on 20–21 November in New York. Its main objectives included discussing the follow-up to the High-level Dialogue on International Migration and Development, assessing the consequences of the financial and economic crisis, and exchanging information on current and planned activities. Other conferences, meetings and forums on the subject included an Expert Group Meeting on Emerging Issues on International Migration and Development in Asia and the Pacific (Bangkok, Thailand, 20–21 September), and an Asia-Pacific High-level Meeting on International Migration and Development (Bangkok, 22–23 September).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 June [meeting 109], the General Assembly adopted resolution 62/270 [draft: A/62/L.25/Rev.2 & Add.1] by recorded vote (86–2–55) [agenda item 116].

United Nations Population Fund

2008 activities

Reports of Executive Director. A report by the Executive Director of the United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA) [DP/FPA/2009/2 (Part I)] reviewed major initiatives undertaken by UNFPA in 2008 in implementing its strategic plan for 2008–2011. In analysing progress made and challenges encountered in helping countries implement the Programme of Action of the International Conference on Population and Development (ICPD), the report used both a development results framework and a management results framework. It focused on the Fund's efforts to help countries achieve their nationally owned development objectives in the interrelated areas of population and development, reproductive health and rights, and gender equality.

The year 2008 was marked by an extraordinary outbreak of food, fuel and financial crises that disproportionately affected the most vulnerable groups, particularly women and girls. The financial crisis resulted in a significant economic downturn worldwide. It was estimated that one third of all developing countries, mostly in Africa and Asia, were highly exposed to its effects on poverty. In this context, UNFPA continued to contribute to a better understanding of the links between population, poverty, environment and climate change. Climate change and poverty, in particular, had increased the potential for both in-country and cross-border migration, since affected populations were often forced to move to less disaster-prone and more productive areas to seek new opportunities.

The year also marked the transition of UNFPA to its new organizational structure in support of more effective country operations, including the establishment of subregional and regional offices in Africa, Asia and the Pacific, and Latin America and the Caribbean. The Arab States regional office and the office for Eastern Europe and Central Asia were temporarily operating out of UNFPA headquarters while their premises were made ready to open in 2009.

As to management, 88 per cent of UNFPA country offices reported that at least 75 per cent of the year's work plan outputs were achieved. Country offices reported numerous knowledge-sharing initiatives, as well as 189 South-South initiatives. All 121 country reports cited strategic partnerships and collaboration with a broad range of partners, including women's and human rights institutions, parliamentarians and the private sector, as well as youth, faith-based and community organizations. The Fund participated in 224 joint programmes with UN agencies covering all the UNFPA strategic plan outcome areas. The top three areas of those programmes were HIV/AIDS, gender-based violence and maternal health.

Significant measures were adopted to improve accountability, including the establishment of an Ethics Office and the introduction of mandatory ethics training for all staff. At the global level, UNFPA exceeded its resource mobilization target by $13 million for regular resources raised and $122 million for co-financing. Overall, the Fund's reorganization helped UNFPA become a stronger field-focused organization.

An addendum to the Executive Director's report [DP/FPA/2009/2 (Part I)/Add.1] provided a statistical and financial review for the year. It stated that from 2007 to 2008, total UNFPA income increased by $93.1 million, or 12.4 per cent, to $845.3 million. UNFPA resources surpassed the $500 million level for the fifth sequential year, including $469.5 million in regular resources—the highest total ever in the Fund's history. Regular resource contribution income increased by $9.8 million, or 2.3 per cent, and total expenditures by $72.9 million, or 11.6 per cent, to $701.9 million. Of that increase, $51.4 million (70.5 per cent) was attributable to increased programme activities. UNFPA closed the year in robust financial health.

UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board. The UNFPA Executive Director reported, jointly with the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), to the Economic and Social Council on the Organization's triennial comprehensive policy review of operational activities for development [E/2009/5]. They said that an unprecedented UN system-wide collaboration at the country and regional levels was used to respond to the knowledge-sharing and management endeavours envisaged in the triennial comprehensive policy review, 2007.

By encouraging eight pilot country teams to implement agreed reforms, and allowing broad latitude to innovate "as one United Nations team" [YUN 2006, p. 1584], the pilot countries accelerated the pace of change and demonstrated the potential for a more coherent UN system. UNDP and UNFPA supported the design of a local area network and a wide area network for a "Delivering as one" pilot initiative in Mozambique, and the same design was proposed for Tanzania. The result was a decrease in fragmentation, duplication and internal UN competition for resources, and strengthened Government leadership, ownership and alignment with national priorities. The programmes also ensured that Governments had full access to the experience and expertise of the wider UN system.

A key initiative of 2008 was the harmonization of financial regulations and rules among UNDP, the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF), UNFPA, the World Food Programme (WFP) and the United Nations. Drafts had been considered, and the final harmonized regulations and rules were to be reviewed by the governing bodies in 2009. UNDP, UNFPA and UNICEF also worked to increase harmonization in the areas of cost classification and results-based budgeting, and agreed on classifying costs as either programme (development) or support (management). UNDP, UNFPA, UNICEF and WFP continued implementing their harmonized approach to cash transfers across country offices, to the extent that 13 countries were fully compliant with that approach and many others were partially compliant.

UNFPA strengthened its South-South cooperation initiatives in census and population surveys, the delivery of reproductive health services, development of training modules, and research in population and development. The Fund took the lead, with the Joint United Nations Programme on HIV/AIDS (UNAIDS) and the UN Department of Peacekeeping Operations, drafting guidelines on HIV/AIDS with respect to disarmament, demobilization and reintegration. It also led efforts to ensure that reproductive health and gender issues were incorporated in all disarmament, demobilization and reintegration guidelines.

On 20 June [E/2008/35 (dec. 2008/9)], the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board, at its annual session (Geneva, 16–27 June), took note of the reports of the UNFPA Executive Director for 2007 [DP/FPA/2008/5 (Part I & Add.1, Part II)]. It urged UNFPA to continue to improve results-based management indicators and baselines.

By decision 2008/215 of 18 July, the Economic and Social Council took note of the annual report of the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board [E/2007/35] and of the joint report of the UNDP Administrator and the UNFPA Executive Director to the Economic and Social Council [E/2008/5].

Report of Secretary-General. The Secretary-General in January submitted to the Commission on Population and Development a report on monitoring population programmes, focusing on population distribution, urbanization, internal migration and development [E/CN.9/2008/4]. The report covered the unprecedented transformation of world population from rural to urban, its economic, social, demographic and environmental implications, and UNFPA activities to assist countries in responding to the challenges of rapid urbanization.

The Fund's aim was to influence public policy in order to respond to these challenges, and to meet the needs of all persons, especially the poor and most vulnerable. To that end, it encouraged the inclusion of the urban poor in decision-making in matters that concerned them; advocated for the empowerment of women and their participation in sustainable urban development; and supported activities promoting access to basic social services, including health care, education, nutrition, water, sanitation and shelter for all.

UNFPA offered assistance in policy formulation—for example, in Benin, Ethiopia, Nigeria and Rwanda, where it supported the formulation of national population policies; in Sierra Leone, where it provided support for the review of its national policy, and in the Lao People's Democratic Republic, where it supported the revision of its national policy; in Cambodia, where it participated as an observer on a recently established inter-ministerial task force on migration; and in Burkina Faso, where it provided technical and financial support for convening a national symposium on migration.

UNFPA supported the collection of data and research for evidence-based policy formulation and programme implementation. Those included a League of Arab States project aimed at providing health ministries with an up-to-date databank on population, health and development, and technical and financial support for a study on internal migration in Bolivia. It supported Eritrea in conducting an urban census in 19 areas of the country, and Honduras in research on internal migration and its effects on labour market participation and poverty.

The Fund also promoted capacity-building by supporting training institutions and by providing technical assistance, which included training courses in Brazil for Government officials, academia and civil society relating to internal migration; scholarships in Mozambique for the Centre for Population Studies to build capacity in the area of migration and urbanization; and training for National Statistical Office staff and university researchers in Mauritania.

In its advocacy role, UNFPA promoted in the Caribbean the inclusion of population issues, including urbanization and internal migration, in development plans, strategies and frameworks. In Brazil, Eritrea, Honduras, Mauritania, the Russian Federation and Rwanda, it launched its State of World Population 2007 to raise awareness about urbanization and migration. In Viet Nam, it supported the Parliament in conducting policy advocacy workshops for senior Government officials on the effect of current policies on migrants' rights and the linkages between migration and poverty reduction.

Population, development and poverty reduction

In 2008, UNFPA programme assistance in population and development totalled $68.9 million from regular resources and $55.1 million from other resources. The goal of UNFPA work in population and development was to improve quality of life and reduce poverty through the systematic use of population dynamics analyses to guide increased investments in the areas of gender equality, youth development, reproductive health and HIV/AIDS.

Among its activities, in Cameroon, Chad, the Congo and Côte d'Ivoire, UNFPA provided support to review their poverty reduction strategy papers. It also supported review of Armenia's poverty reduction strategy, and contributed to the development of socio-demographic information and analysis for Mexico's national population policy. In Honduras, UNFPA cooperated with other agencies in providing technical support for the national youth policy and for the strengthening of youth institutions. It provided technical and financial support for psychosocial services to young people in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, and supported implementation of an integrated sexual and reproductive health programme in a refugee camp in Namibia. In Myanmar, the Fund mobilized youth volunteers to help assemble and distribute hygiene kits to women and girls in the areas affected by Cyclone Nargis.

Support to 2010 census operations was a key priority area during 2008, including that for post-crisis census work in Botswana, the Congo, the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Kenya and Tajikistan. In Asia, support was provided in key areas such as census maps in Bangladesh, training of national statistics programmers in Indonesia, capacity-building for data analysis in the Lao People's Democratic Republic, and information technology and mapping software in Mongolia. In Latin America, UNFPA supported the presentation of population estimates and projections based on census data in Brazil, and the updating of rural digital cartography in the Dominican Republic.

The Fund provided technical support for the development and establishment of integrated national databases. In collaboration with the United Nations Programme on Ageing, regional training workshops were organized to strengthen the capacity of national focal points on ageing. In Albania and Ukraine, UNFPA collaborated with NGOs and private sector partners in developing an action plan in line with the 2002 Madrid International Plan of Action on Ageing [YUN 2002, p. 1194]. In Mongolia, it provided technical assistance in establishing a regional institute on ageing.

UNFPA chaired the Global Migration Group and coordinated its contribution to the Global Forum on Migration and Development. It also prepared the Secretary-General's report on the monitoring of population programmes. Together with the International Organization for Migration (IOM), it convened an Economic and Social Council ministerial roundtable meeting on migration, environment and climate change: the gender perspective. In several countries, it supported policy round tables and policy dialogues on climate change and population ageing.

Reproductive health and rights

In 2008, UNFPA programme assistance in the area of reproductive health totalled $165 million from regular resources and $135.5 million from other resources. Its efforts to address unmet need for family planning included policy dialogue and advocacy; communications; programming support, particularly for repositioning family planning; procurement and logistics management and information systems for contraceptives; training; and capacity development. Among its activities, UNFPA supported demand generation for family planning through a national campaign in Angola, and an initiative for working with religious communities to reach people at the grass-root levels in Kyrgyzstan.

During the year, global and regional initiatives contributed to strengthening capacity for the integration of demographic, gender and reproductive health issues into emergency preparedness, humanitarian response and transition. To that end, the ICPD Programme of Action was integrated into humanitarian assistance funding frameworks, including the Central Emergency Response Fund. In Albania, UNFPA supported the Government in developing antenatal standards and protocols; in Bangladesh, it supported the training of community-level skilled birth attendants with midwifery skills; and in Ethiopia, a country with one of the lowest rates of skilled birth attendance, it supported midwifery schools.

UNFPA collaborated with Columbia University to form an alliance to build capacity in national and regional institutions, focusing on emergency obstetric and newborn care. In the Sudan, it supported the creation of core teams of trainers to accelerate capacity-building; and in Azerbaijan, specialized centres for neonatal care were established at the community level through a UNFPA-brokered partnership between civil society, the Government and the private sector. With respect to modern contraceptive methods, the Fund, together with its partners, supported contraceptive procurement in several countries, including Madagascar, Panama and Turkmenistan. It also supported guidelines development and staff training for the provision of various contraceptive methods in Lesotho, Mongolia, Namibia, Nepal, Nigeria, Rwanda, Senegal, South Africa, Uganda and Zambia.

With respect to HIV prevention among young women and men, the Fund continued to strengthen support for youth participation and most-at-risk adolescents through various strategies. It supported data collection in Brazil, Iran, Pakistan, Syria and Ukraine, and youth-friendly service centres for young people on sexual and reproductive health in Nigeria, Tanzania and ten island countries in the Pacific region. In Ghana and Haiti, support continued for in- and out-of-school youth programmes. With gender inequality and unequal power relations between women and men continuing to be major drivers of HIV transmission, global and regional efforts did not sufficiently catalyse expanded country action. UNFPA supported work to reduce the overall vulnerability of women to HIV in more than 45 countries.

In Azerbaijan, Bangladesh, Burundi, Haiti, Kenya, Lesotho, Mali, Mozambique, Nigeria, Thailand, Uganda and Zambia, UNFPA and its partners provided support to the prevention of mother-to-child HIV transmission. The Fund supported family life education at secondary schools in the Niger, and adolescent sexual and reproductive health education programmes in all schools under the central board of secondary education in India. In the Russian Federation, it collaborated with UNAIDS and the Government on developing and piloting a curriculum on HIV prevention in secondary schools.

Gender equality and women's empowerment

In 2008, UNFPA continued to develop and implement policies and support programming for women's empowerment and gender equality by integrating human rights, gender mainstreaming and cultural sensitivity throughout its work. That three-pronged approach allowed for a more comprehensive strategy that was better able to take account of the socio-cultural realities that populations faced. UNFPA programme assistance in the area of gender totalled $35.6 million from regular resources and $23.5 million from other resources.

The Fund continued to follow up on Security Council resolution 1325 [YUN 2000, p. 1113] on women, peace and security in conflict and post-conflict situations. In Côte d'Ivoire, it supported an action plan to improve the health condition of women in post-conflict situations. In the Occupied Palestinian Territory, it formed women's coalitions and networks to improve the protection of women and girls. With other UN agencies, it supported Government efforts to implement the recommendations of the 1979 Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women [YUN 1979, p. 895], particularly those on reproductive rights and gender-based violence. In Nepal and Pakistan, it supported sensitization and advocacy efforts with members of the Constituent Assembly/Parliament.

Given the demonstrated value of encouraging men's positive roles in building gender equality and improving men's and women's health, UNFPA was active in promoting such involvement. It was a member of the steering committee of the Men Engage Alliance—a global alliance of NGOs and UN agencies that sought to engage boys and men to achieve gender equality—and was engaged in mobilizing faith-based organizations to that end. In Bangladesh, Ethiopia and Guatemala there were several instances where the capacity-building of faith-based organizations and advocacy with religious leaders led to noticeable changes in discourse around sexual and reproductive health issues, and in efforts to enhance related legislation.

In collaboration with UNICEF and other partners, UNFPA supported Governments in creating national mechanisms for accelerated abandonment of female genital mutilation/cutting. Those included the development of a national strategy and action plan in the Sudan, and the strengthening of legislation against the practice in Egypt. The Fund co-chaired the inter-agency task force on violence against women, and supported training and capacity development initiatives on gender-based violence in several countries, including Cambodia, Sudan, Swaziland and Turkey.

The Fund also supported efforts to strengthen the health sector's response to gender-based violence. Working with a number of partners, its initiatives included the development of manuals, protocols, guidelines and curricula on the issue in Albania, Botswana, China, Rwanda and Uganda; training service providers in Côte d'Ivoire, Mongolia, Nepal, South Africa and Zambia; advocacy and policy dialogue on integrating gender-based violence issues in health plans and programmes in Jordan; and medical kits to treat survivors in Guatemala. In Honduras, a model of integrated care for victims of gender-based violence was developed and implemented in 26 centres.

Country and intercountry programmes

UNFPA project expenditures for country, global and regional activities in 2008 totalled $340.5 million, compared to $273.6 million in 2007, according to the Executive Director's statistical and financial review [DP/FPA/2009/2 (Part I)/Add.1]. The 2008 figure included $197.7 million for country programmes and $48 million for global and regional programmes. In accordance with the Executive Board's procedure for allocating resources [YUN 1996, p. 989], total expenditures in 2008 for countries most in need of assistance to realize ICPD goals amounted to $197.2 million, compared to $150.1 million in 2007.

Africa. Provisional data for UNFPA expenditures for programmes in sub-Saharan Africa gave a total of $141.3 million in 2008, compared to $95.3 million in 2007. Most of that amount went to reproductive health and family planning (64.7 per cent), followed by population and development (34.1 per cent), programme coordination and assistance (29 per cent) and gender equality and women's empowerment (13.5 per cent).

On 24 January [E/2008/35 (dec. 2008/8)], the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board, at its first regular session of 2008 (New York, 21–28 January), approved UNFPA country programmes for the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Equatorial Guinea, Lesotho, Liberia, Madagascar, Rwanda and Togo. On 27 June [dec. 2008/25], it took note of the draft country programme documents for Benin, the Congo, the Niger and Nigeria, and approved the second one-year extension of the country programme for Burundi. On 19 September [dec. 2008/38], the Executive Board, at its second regular session of 2008 (New York, 8–12 and 19 September), approved the country programmes for Benin, the Congo, the Niger and Nigeria on a no-objection basis, and took note of the draft country programme documents for Angola, Côte d'Ivoire, Kenya and Mauritania.

Arab States. Provisional expenditures for UNFPA programmes in the Arab States totalled $26.2 million in 2008. Most of that amount was spent on reproductive health (47.7 per cent), followed by programme coordination and assistance (18.3 per cent), population and development (20.3 per cent), and gender equality and women's empowerment (13.7 per cent). In 2007, the combined expenditures for Arab States, Europe and Central Asia was $34.3 million. On 27 June [dec. 2008/25], the Executive Board approved the UNFPA country programme for Somalia and took note of the draft country programme document for the Sudan. On 19 September [dec. 2008/38], it approved the country programme for the Sudan on a no-objection basis and the third one-year extension of the country programme for Lebanon.

Eastern Europe and Central Asia. Provisional expenditures for UNFPA programmes in Eastern Europe and Central Asia totalled $15.1 million. Most of that amount was spent on reproductive health (47.7 per cent), followed by programme coordination and assistance (24.5 per cent), population and development (19.2 per cent), and gender equality and women's empowerment (8.6 per cent). On 27 June [dec. 2008/25], the Executive Board approved the two-year extension of the country programme for Pakistan and took note of the one-year extensions of the country programmes for Afghanistan, Ecuador and Guatemala.

Asia and the Pacific. Provisional expenditures for UNFPA programmes in Asia and the Pacific amounted to $85 million, compared to $79.5 million in 2007. Most of them went to reproductive health (66.7 per cent), followed by population and development (13.9 per cent), programme coordination and assistance (11.4 per cent), and gender equality and women's empowerment (8 per cent). On 24 January [dec. 2008/8], the Executive Board approved UNFPA country programmes for Nepal and the Pacific Island countries. On 19 September [dec. 2008/38], it took note of the draft country programme document for Timor-Leste.

Latin America and the Caribbean. Provisional expenditures for UNFPA programmes in Latin America and the Caribbean totalled $34.3 million, compared to $25.4 million in 2007. Most of the total went to reproductive health (43.4 per cent), followed by programme coordination and assistance (21.6 per cent), population and development (21.3 per cent), and gender equality and women's empowerment (13.7 per cent). On 24 January [dec. 2008/8], the Executive Board approved UNFPA country programmes for Colombia, Costa Rica, Mexico and Nicaragua. On 19 September [dec. 2008/38], it took note of the draft country programme documents for Haiti and Venezuela.

Global programme. Provisional expenditures for the UNFPA global programme totalled $40.9 million in 2008, compared to $42.3 million in 2007. Most of the total went to reproductive health (90.5 per cent), followed by gender equality and women's empowerment (5.4 per cent), and population and development (4.1 per cent).

Financial and management questions

Financing

UNFPA income from all sources totalled $845.3 million in 2008, compared to $752.2 million in 2007 [DP/FPA/2009/2 (Part I)/Add.1], comprising $428.8 million from regular resources, $366.1 million from other contributions, interest income of $23.6 million and other income of $26.8 million. Expenditures totalled $701.9 million, up from $629 million in 2007, comprising $452.4 million related to regular resources and $249.5 million related to other resources, resulting in a net excess of $141.3 million after adjustments were made for prior periods.

On 24 January [E/2008/35 (dec. 2008/6)], the Executive Board approved gross resources in the amount of $259.8 million, representing the total UNFPA biennial support budget for 2008–2009 [DP/FPA/2008/1]. It also noted that, after offsetting an indirect cost recovery amount of $24 million, the estimated net resources totalled $235.8 million. Comments on the budget were made by the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) [DP/FPA/2008/2].

Internal audit and oversight

The Executive Director submitted to the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board a report [DP/FPA/2008/3] on UNFPA follow-up to recommendations by the UN Board of Auditors for the 2004–2005 biennium [A/61/5/Add.7]. UNFPA reported that it had completed action on 33 recommendations and expected to complete implementation of all 42 recommendations by January 2010. On 24 January [E/2008/35 (dec. 2008/8)], the Executive Board took note of the report.

The Executive Director reported on the internal audit and oversight activities carried out by UNFPA in 2007 [DP/FPA/2008/11]. Those included: management audits of 17 offices (nine in Africa, four in Latin America and the Caribbean, two in the Arab States, Europe and Central Asia, and two in the Asia and Pacific region). Based on the analysis of risks and the recurring types of audit recommendations, the main areas needing attention were business processes, national execution and human resource management. In other respects, the conclusions of the previous year's report [YUN 2007, p. 1100] remained valid.

On 26 June [E/2008/35 (dec. 2008/13)], the Executive Board, taking note of that report, welcomed the focus on key and recurrent management issues, the clarity and format of the recommendations, and the risk-based audit planning in the report, and requested that future such reports provide additional explanations of the significant audit results and their causes, identify the systemic issues of concern, and provide more information on quality improvements in the oversight systems of UNFPA.

The Executive Director reported to the Board on the Fund's oversight policy on 28 November 2007 [DP/FPA/2008/4] and 7 August 2008 [DP/FPA/2008/14]. On 24 January [E/2008/35 (dec. 2008/8)], the Board requested that the Executive Director revert to it on that matter at its second regular session in September, after consultations with the Board and taking into account the concerns of Member States. On 19 September [dec. 2008/37], the Board took note of the August 2008 report and approved the oversight policy contained therein, subject to the provisions of its decision.

Evaluation

In his biennial report on evaluation activities undertaken within UNFPA in 2006–2007 [DP/FPA/2008/10], the Executive Director stated that during that biennium, the Fund conducted 170 evaluations—159 at the country level, five at the regional level and six at the global level. Forty-five per cent of the evaluations were in the area of reproductive health, including adolescent reproductive health; 21 per cent were multisectoral, including country programme evaluations; and 13 per cent concerned gender themes.

Several evaluations reported successful interventions on improving the coverage and quality of reproductive health services and resulting increases in condom use and contraceptive prevalence rates (for example, in Kyrgyzstan, Mongolia, Thailand and Senegal). A pilot literacy project targeting the poorest of Bolivia's indigenous population—mostly women—succeeded in making 16 per cent of the illiterates in the country literate. Initiatives on adolescent reproductive health services in Asia (Bangladesh, Cambodia, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Nepal, Pakistan, Sri Lanka and Viet Nam) and Africa (Botswana, Ghana, Uganda and the United Republic of Tanzania) resulted in marked improvement in young people's reproductive health knowledge, attitudes and behaviours. Evaluation of the humanitarian programme for internally displaced adolescents in seven countries/territories (Burundi, Colombia, Democratic Republic of the Congo, Liberia, the Occupied Palestinian Territory, Rwanda and Sierra Leone) found that the interventions had multiple positive impacts on the adolescents, their parents and communities. Some 40 per cent of the evaluations conducted in the area of gender dealt with gender-based violence. With regard to specific vulnerable groups, an example of success was found in Ethiopia, which introduced the use of female condoms among commercial sex workers, allowing them to negotiate safe sex.

In early 2007, an external assessment of the effectiveness of the UNFPA multi-year funding framework (MYFF), 2004–2007, as a strategic planning tool concluded that it had provided an overview of the mission and strategic direction of UNFPA which had hitherto been missing, while being flexible enough to allow country-level interventions to be tailored to national priorities. A review of the UNFPA intercountry programme, 2004–2007, comprising 348 regional and interregional projects with funding of $255 million, was completed in 2007. It found a number of successful projects and initiatives, including the obstetric fistula campaign, global advocacy with parliamentarians, the reproductive health commodity security programme, adolescent reproductive health initiatives in Africa and Asia, and the publication of the report State of World Population 2008 [Sales No. E.08.III.H.1].

Three fourths of UNFPA country offices reported that they had implemented most of the recommendations made by project, country programme and thematic evaluations from 2006. In response to the evaluations of adolescent and youth reproductive health interventions, UNFPA developed an assessment tool to identify gaps in programming for young people, and was developing a conceptual framework on sexual and reproductive health programming for adolescents and youth. Following up on the recommendations on the effectiveness of the MYFF, 2004–2007, UNFPA took several actions, including implementation of a planning system that provided real time financial and substantive data to all managers in the Fund.

On 20 June [E/2008/35 (dec. 2008/12)], the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board took note of the biennial report on evaluation activities and welcomed the steps taken and planned by UNFPA to strengthen evaluation at all levels.

Joint UN Programme on HIV/AIDS

A July report presented by UNFPA and UNDP [DP/2008/54-DP/FPA/2008/13] focused on actions taken by those organizations in support of UNAIDS, as at April 2008. It noted that UNFPA led the UNAIDS response in the provision of information and education, condom programming, prevention efforts for young people outside schools, and prevention efforts targeting vulnerable groups, including sex workers.

Over the preceding year, UNFPA had chaired inter-agency task teams on young people and on comprehensive condom programming. It had co-convened two key areas of work within the Global Coalition on Women and AIDS: preventing HIV in young women and girls, and female-controlled prevention methods. At the 2006 high-level meeting on HIV/AIDS [YUN 2006, p. 1410], it had led support for the panel focusing on “Making the Response to AIDS Work for Women and Girls”, together with the United Nations Development Fund for Women (UNIFEM), the UNAIDS secretariat and UNDP.

UNFPA country-level report cards on women and AIDS were available for 23 countries, and advocacy guidance for HIV prevention among women and girls was slated for completion in 2008. At the end of 2007, 47 country offices cited major efforts to expand partnership and build the capacities of networks involving women, young people, sex workers and people living with HIV. The Fund was also in the process of commissioning an evaluation of the effectiveness of strengthening its country offices in the area of HIV over the past 18–24 months.

In the Dominican Republic, UNFPA provided support to Ministries, NGOs and groups of people living with HIV for developing a national strategy to address linkages between HIV and gender-based violence. It strengthened efforts to assist migrant women crossing the border between the Dominican Republic and Haiti, including through a strategy to provide women with education on HIV prevention, gender-based violence prevention and human rights, and to improve health service delivery and coordination between border hospitals in both countries.

Other financial issues

In a report on funding commitments to UNFPA [DP/FPA/2008/9], the Executive Director analysed contributions by States for 2008 and future years. General Assembly resolution 62/208 [YUN 2007, p. 877] on operational activities for development had stressed that core resources, due to their untied nature, remained the bedrock of those UN system activities. UNFPA considered a stable base of regular resources as critical to enabling it to support countries in implementing the ICPD Programme of Action and achieving the MDGs.

The approved requirements for all resources under the UNFPA strategic plan for 2008–2011 amounted to $2.6 billion. The 2008–2011 framework increased the proportion and amount of resources directed to country programmes over the previous framework. If UNFPA was to succeed in implementing its country programmes and supporting countries in achieving the MDGs and the ICPD goals, its regular resources would need to exceed the $450 million level annually, and its other resources the $200 million level. All countries were encouraged to translate their commitments to achieving those goals into increased contributions to the Fund, through regular and other resources, including thematic funding and multi-year pledges.

On 20 June [E/2008/35 (dec. 2008/10)], the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board took note of the report on funding commitments to UNFPA, and encouraged all countries in a position to do so to make contributions early in the year and to make multi-year pledges.

On 11 September [dec. 2008/26], the Board, recognizing the substantial increase in the number and gravity of attacks and threats against UN personnel, decided to revise the UNFPA Financial Regulations with respect to cases in which, at the discretion of the Executive Director, immediate ex gratia payments were necessary for humanitarian reasons (in instances such as injury or death suffered in connection with UNFPA activities). That followed a report on the matter by the Executive Director [DP/FPA/2008/15 & Corr.1] and comments by ACABQ [DP/FPA/2008/16].

United Nations Population Award

The 2008 United Nations Population Award was presented to Dame Billie Miller of Barbados in the individual category, and to Family Care International of the United States in the institutional category.

The Award was established by General Assembly resolution 36/201 [YUN 1981, p. 792], to be presented annually to individuals or institutions for outstanding contributions to increasing awareness of population problems and to their solutions. In August, the Secretary-General transmitted to the Assembly the report of the UNFPA Executive Director on the Population Award [A/63/255].

UN Population Division

In a report on programme implementation and progress of the UN Population Division in 2008

[E/CN.9/2009/7], the Secretary-General described the Division's activities dealing with the analysis of fertility, mortality and international migration, world population estimates and projections, the monitoring of population policies, the interrelations between population and development, the monitoring and dissemination of population information, and technical cooperation.

The Division's work in fertility and family planning included compiling and revising two databases, World Fertility Data 2008 and World Marriage Data 2008, which contained indicators on fertility and marriage for 224 countries or areas, including all 192 Member States. Addressing the MDGs target of universal access to reproductive health, the Division produced indicators on contraceptive prevalence rate, adolescent birth rate and unmet need for family planning—the latter in collaboration with the United Nations Population Fund.

A wall chart and an Excel data set issued on CD-ROM provided the most recent national data available on contraceptive use and unmet need for family planning for 169 countries or areas, accounting for 99.7 per cent of women aged 15–49 who were married or in union worldwide. They showed that contraceptive prevalence among married women of reproductive age had reached 63 per cent at the world level, although it remained low—usually below 20 per cent—in the majority of the least developed countries (LDCs) for which data were available.

On mortality and health, the Division convened the second Coordination Meeting on the Estimation of Adult Mortality (New York, 31 July), which reviewed progress in methodological developments for estimating mortality in countries with deficient data, and identified future directions for research and collaboration. The Division also collaborated in organizing and servicing a high-level event on the MDGs (New York, 25 September), which reaffirmed both the political and financial commitments to MDGs, particularly those relating to health and education.

The Division continued to participate in the Inter-agency Group for Child Mortality Estimation, and it also undertook an analysis of sex differentials in child mortality, producing estimates by sex of infant mortality, child mortality, and under-five mortality for as many countries as possible. Preliminary results revealed that due to biological factors, boys in most countries were subject to higher risks of dying in childhood than girls, with considerable variations worldwide. The analysis was expected to yield information for guiding policy development towards attainment of MDG 4 concerning the reduction of infant and under-five mortality.

The Division also prepared the Secretary-General's report on international migration and development

[A/63/265 & Corr.1] (see p. 1184), which presented options for follow-up to the 2006 High-level Dialogue on International Migration and Development [YUN 2006, p. 1261]. With the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific, the Division organized a High-level Meeting on International Migration and Development in Asia and the Pacific (Bangkok, Thailand, 22–23 September), which comprised round tables on remittances in development; migration and development in countries with special needs; the social dimensions of migration; and data and research. In November, it organized the seventh Coordination Meeting on International Migration (see p. 1185).

To meet the growing demand for data on international migrants, the Division developed the United Nations Global Migration Database. It included the most complete set of data on the stock of international migrants and allowed users to download information by country of origin or destination. The Division also issued the 2008 Revision of Trends in Total Migrant Stock on CD-ROM.

The preparation of biennial population estimates and projections for all countries and areas remained a key part of the Division's mandate. Analytical reports prepared using that information included World Population Ageing, the World Fertility Report, the World Mortality Report and the World Migration Report. In 2008, the Division issued the publication Highlights of World Urbanization Prospects: the 2007 Revision. The data was also made available via an online database, as well as in two wall charts: Urban and Rural Areas 2007 and Urban Agglomerations 2007. According to the 2007 Revision, world urban population would likely increase by 3.1 billion between 2007 and 2050, to 6.4 billion, surpassing the 2.5 billion increase in total world population over that period. Rural population would begin decreasing in about a decade, resulting in 0.6 billion fewer rural inhabitants by 2050—a drop from 3.4 billion in 2007 to 2.8 billion in 2050. Urban areas would absorb all the population growth expected over the next four decades, as well as some of the rural population through rural-urban migration or the transformation of rural settlements into urban centres.

On population policies, the Division developed a framework for describing the potential interactions between Government entities and international migrants, including the issuance of visas and permits; granting of asylum and citizenship; preparation of migrants for emigration; and managing the social and economic aspects of migration. It compiled and would analyse information on Government entities involved in managing migration in over 100 countries, to improve coherence in that process for the benefit of development.

The Division organized an expert panel on “The contribution of population policy to the achievement of the internationally agreed development goals, including the MDGs” (New York, 15 December), which documented global population trends. It noted that high population growth was prevalent in most LDCs, and that if such were to continue, it would remain an obstacle for the attainment of key development goals, especially the reduction of poverty and hunger.

On population and development, a United Nations Expert Group Meeting on Population Distribution, Urbanization, Internal Migration and Development (New York, 21–23 January) discussed the unprecedented scale of urbanization, including the policy implications of the fact that in most developing countries, urban population growth was driven mostly by natural increase and not, as usually thought, by rural-urban migration. It also produced estimates of urban and rural populations in the 175 countries with more than 300,000 inhabitants in 2005, for the beginning of each five-year period from 1950 to 2005. The estimates were issued as a CD-ROM entitled “Urban and Rural Population by Age and Sex, 1950–2005”.

The Population Division also issued a CD-ROM entitled “World Population Ageing 2007” that included a digital version of the printed volume of the same title published in 2007 and contained files with all the data from the regional and country profiles in the published report. In order to provide information on the impact of urbanization and the challenges faced by rural populations, the Division published two wall charts in 2008: Urban Population, Development and the Environment 2007 and Rural Population, Development and the Environment 2007.

The Division’s work on monitoring population trends and policies included the production of the annual world population monitoring report, devoted to population distribution, urbanization, internal migration and development. With respect to dissemination, the Division’s website provided access to most of its publications and included highlights, key findings, papers presented at meetings, proceedings of meetings, population reports, wall charts, data sets and interactive databases. The Division also maintained a website focusing exclusively on international migration.

The Population Division’s regular programme of technical cooperation focused on building and strengthening capacity in developing countries to analyse demographic information needed to guide the formulation and implementation of population policy. During 2008, the Division conducted a survey among Governmental units engaged in demographic analysis which indicated that many developing countries lacked the human resources to conduct in-depth demographic analysis. The results of the survey were being used to develop a cost-effective strategy for supporting the building of analytical capacity in developing countries.

Social policy, crime prevention and human resources development

In 2008, the United Nations continued to promote social, cultural and human resources development, and to strengthen its crime prevention and criminal justice programme.

The Commission for Social Development, in February, again considered as its priority theme “Promoting full employment and decent work for all”. It also reviewed UN plans and programmes of action pertaining to the situation of social groups and discussed the issue of incorporating disability in the development agenda.

In December, the General Assembly—having considered the implementation of the Copenhagen Declaration on Social Development and the Programme of Action, adopted at the 1995 World Summit for Social Development, and further initiatives for social development adopted at its twenty-fourth (2000) special session—recognized the relevance of the Declaration on Social Justice for a Fair Globalization, adopted by the International Labour Organization in June to promote an integrated approach to the decent work agenda and respond to the growing challenges of globalization. In July, the Economic and Social Council, following discussions on the promotion of full employment and decent work for all, reaffirmed the issue’s central importance to poverty eradication and social integration and requested members of the UN system and financial institutions to integrate the goals of full and productive employment and decent work for all in their policies, programmes and activities.

With regard to persons with disabilities, UN bodies continued to monitor the implementation of the 1982 World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons and the 1993 Standard Rules on the Equalization of Opportunities for Persons with Disabilities. The 2006 Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities entered into force on 3 May. In July, the Council renewed the mandate of the Special Rapporteur on Disability of the Commission for Social Development until 31 December 2011.

In the area of cultural development, the Assembly, in December, invited Member States to promote a culture of peace and non-violence, and, following a two-day high-level meeting on a culture of peace, affirmed that mutual understanding and interreligious dialogue constituted important dimensions of the dialogue among civilizations and of the culture of peace. In other action, the Assembly urged States and the UN system to foster peace and accelerate the attainment of the Millennium Development Goals through sport-based initiatives, and to promote the integration of sport for development and peace in the development agenda.

In April, the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice considered, among other things, the preparations for the Twelfth (2010) United Nations Congress on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice; protection against trafficking in cultural property; strengthening prevention of urban crime; and international cooperation in preventing and combating illicit international trafficking in forest products, including timber, wildlife and other forest biological resources. It also held a thematic discussion on aspects of violence against women.

The Assembly, in December, urged Governments to criminalize trafficking in persons in all its forms, and encouraged Member States that had not yet done so to ratify or accede to the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime and its Protocol to Prevent, Suppress and Punish Trafficking in Persons, Especially Women and Children. The Assembly also condemned corruption in all its forms and urged Governments to combat and penalize corruption and to enhance international cooperation.

As to human resources development, the Assembly recognized that a renewed collective commitment would be needed to meet the objectives of the International Plan of Action for the United Nations Literacy Decade (2003–2012). It called on Member States to give literacy higher priority within their educational planning and budgeting, and to devise strategies for reaching groups disproportionately affected by illiteracy.

The Assembly proclaimed 2011 the International Year of Chemistry.

Follow-up to 1995 World Summit and to General Assembly special session

In response to General Assembly resolution 62/131 [YUN 2007, p. 1107], the Secretary-General submitted a July report [A/63/133] on the implementation of the Copenhagen Declaration on Social Development and the Programme of Action, adopted at the 1995 World Summit for Social Development [YUN 1995, p. 1113], and of the further initiatives for social development adopted by the Assembly's twenty-fourth (2000) special session [YUN 2000, p. 1012]. The report provided an overview of the discussions during the forty-sixth session of the Commission for Social Development (see p. 1204) on the priority theme "Promoting full employment and decent work for all" and on issues pertaining to social groups. It also addressed extending social protection; promoting youth employment; and mainstreaming disability in the development agenda.

With regard to the policy framework for employment and decent work, the report stated that the 2008 International Labour Conference (Geneva, 28 May–13 June) had adopted the Declaration on Social Justice for a Fair Globalization, designed to strengthen the capacity of the International Labour Organization (ILO) to promote its Decent Work Agenda and forge a response to the growing challenges of globalization (see p. 1203). The report stated that achieving full employment and decent work would require a major policy commitment; the failure of globalization to create quality jobs deserved priority attention. At the international level, policies should focus on the challenges posed by trade and financial market liberalization, foreign direct investment, fiscal policy and labour market reforms, and international migration. At the national level, policy efforts should address economic growth, employment generation and productivity growth while maintaining focus on the promotion of the decent work agenda. Strategies for employment creation should address income inequality, social exclusion and discrimination, and extending labour standards and social protection programmes. Stronger systems for guaranteeing a minimum wage were also needed. As to the role of the UN system, it noted that advancing full employment and decent work as part of the development agenda required a coherent approach and collaboration between UN entities. It highlighted the importance of ILO's decent work country programmes to support national development efforts and urged UN system entities to implement the ILO toolkit for mainstreaming employment and decent work; provide support in developing projects aimed at generating employment opportunities and capacity-building; and strengthen the employment content of poverty reduction strategies.

With reference to issues pertaining to social groups, the report noted that women, youth, older persons, persons with disabilities, indigenous peoples, migrants and other disadvantaged groups were often subjected to social and economic exclusion in the labour market, education and health care. Policies to achieve full employment and decent work for all should include measures to promote gender equality and foster social integration, including by providing disadvantaged groups with equal access to employment opportunities and social protection and ensuring their full participation in the workforce. With regard to violence against women in the work environment, the report stressed the need to ensure the coherence of existing laws from a gender perspective and to design policy interventions targeting all types of discrimination. As to ageing and development, it urged Governments to include the concerns of older persons in their policy agenda and to consult with older persons and their organizations in planning, implementing and evaluating policies on ageing, poverty eradication and social protection.

The Secretary-General observed that three emerging issues—extending social protection and establishing universal, basic social protection in all countries; promoting youth employment; and mainstreaming disability in the development agenda—had gained increasing attention in the context of social development. ILO estimated that 80 per cent of the world population had no adequate social protection, while 50 per cent had no coverage at all. Under its decent work agenda, ILO was exploring ways to operationalize basic universal social protection programmes worldwide as part of global efforts to eradicate poverty and achieve internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals (MDGs). Extending social security at the national level required a multi-pronged approach, including expanding and reforming statutory social insurance programmes, promoting community-based social insurance schemes and improving cost-effective tax-financed social benefits. At the international level, advocacy efforts were necessary to place social protection at the top of the development agenda and to strengthen technical assistance and knowledge development.

With regard to youth, the report noted that unemployment of that population group stood at 85 million in 2005; a quarter of all youth in sub-Saharan Africa, a third in Central and Eastern Europe, and one in seven in developed countries were neither in education nor in employment. The challenge in the volatile global economic environment was to create opportunities for young people to participate in the world of work in ways that promoted economic and social development. The Secretary-General urged States to give priority to promoting youth employment through national action plans, and to join the Youth Employment Network, a 2001 initiative [YUN 2001, p. 1100] of the United Nations, ILO and the World Bank to support the commitment contained in the United Nations Millennium Declaration [YUN 2000, p. 49] to develop strategies to promote youth employment.

Concerning incorporating disability in the development agenda, the Secretary-General stressed that it was a strategy for achieving equality of opportunities for persons with disabilities, which required improved awareness and involvement of relevant stakeholders, broadened participation of persons with disabilities at all levels of decision-making, and their involvement in formulating and monitoring the implementation of policies aimed at benefiting them directly. Policies and programme design was crucial and should: identify barriers, including societal attitudes, that hindered persons with disabilities from participating in and benefiting from public policies and programmes; assess the costs and benefits of specific actions to remove those barriers; and review national legal and regulatory frameworks and ensure that laws and regulations were non-discriminatory and complied with the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 61/106 [YUN 2006, p. 785].

The report concluded that in order to reduce poverty and promote social integration, it was critical to expand employment and decent work opportunities for all. That goal should be placed at the centre of economic and social policymaking at both national and international levels; it was important to integrate economic and social policies to ensure that social objectives were part of macroeconomic policies. In promoting employment and decent work, priority had to be placed on: encouraging agricultural development and small and medium-sized enterprises, and entrepreneurship; investing in education, training and skills development; strengthening social protections systems; and extending labour standards. Programmes aimed at integrating women, young people, persons with disabilities, older persons, indigenous peoples and other groups into the labour market and overcoming discrimination in employment had to be developed. The report recommended that social protection systems be more effective and responsive to economic changes. Governments should provide workers in the informal economy with basic social protection; and, in developing countries, expanding basic social protection programmes should become an integral part of national development and poverty reduction strategies.

By decision 2008/257 of 25 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted the theme “Current global and national trends and their impact on social development, including public health” for its 2009 thematic discussion.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December [meeting 70], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee [A/63/424], adopted resolution 63/152 without vote [agenda item 55 (a)].

Implementation of the outcome of the World Summit for Social Development and of the twenty-fourth special session of the General Assembly

The General Assembly,

Recalling the World Summit for Social Development, held at Copenhagen from 6 to 12 March 1995, and the twenty-fourth special session of the General Assembly entitled “World Summit for Social Development and beyond: achieving social development for all in a globalizing world”, held at Geneva from 26 June to 1 July 2000,

Reaffirming that the Copenhagen Declaration on Social Development and the Programme of Action and the further initiatives for social development adopted by the General Assembly at its twenty-fourth special session, as well as a continued global dialogue on social development issues, constitute the basic framework for the promotion of social development for all at the national and international levels,

Recalling the United Nations Millennium Declaration and the development goals contained therein, as well as the commitments made at major United Nations summits, conferences and special sessions, including the commitments made at the 2005 World Summit,

Recalling also its resolution 57/270 B of 23 June 2003 on the integrated and coordinated implementation of and follow-up to the outcomes of the major United Nations conferences and summits in the economic and social fields,

Recalling further its resolution 60/209 of 22 December 2005 on the implementation of the first United Nations Decade for the Eradication of Poverty (1997–2006),

Noting with appreciation the ministerial declaration adopted at the high-level segment of the substantive session of 2006 of the Economic and Social Council, on “Creating an environment at the national and international levels conducive to generating full and productive employment and decent work for all, and its impact on sustainable development”,

Noting that the decent work agenda of the International Labour Organization, with its four strategic objectives, has an important role to play, as reaffirmed in the International Labour Organization Declaration on Social Justice for a Fair Globalization, in achieving the objective of full and productive employment and decent work for all,

Emphasizing the need to enhance the role of the Commission for Social Development in the follow-up and review of the World Summit for Social Development and the outcome of the twenty-fourth special session of the General Assembly,

Recognizing that a people-centred approach must be at the centre of economic and social development,

Expressing deep concern that attainment of the social development objectives can be hindered by instability in global and national financial markets as well as challenges brought about by the ongoing food and energy crises,

Affirming its strong support for fair globalization and the need to translate growth into eradication of poverty and commitment to strategies and policies that aim to promote full, freely chosen and productive employment and decent work for all and that these should constitute a fundamental component of relevant national and international policies as well as national development strategies, including poverty reduction strategies, and reaffirming that employment creation and decent work should be incorporated into macroeconomic policies, taking fully into account the impact and social dimension of globalization, the benefits and costs of which are often unevenly shared and distributed;

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Welcomes the reaffirmation by Governments of their will and commitment to continue implementing the Copenhagen Declaration on Social Development and the Programme of Action, in particular to eradicate poverty, promote full and productive employment and foster social integration to achieve stable, safe and just societies for all;

3. Recognizes that the implementation of the Copenhagen commitments and the attainment of the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals, are mutually reinforcing and that the Copenhagen commitments are crucial to a coherent people-centred approach to development;

4. Reaffirms that the Commission for Social Development continues to have the primary responsibility for the follow-up and review of the World Summit for Social Development and the outcome of the twenty-fourth special session of the General Assembly and that it serves as the main United Nations forum for an intensified global dialogue on social development issues, and calls upon Member States, the relevant specialized agencies, funds and programmes of the United Nations system and civil society to enhance their support for its work;

5. Recognizes that the broad concept of social development affirmed by the World Summit for Social Development and the twenty-fourth special session of the General Assembly has been weakened in national and international policymaking and that, while poverty eradication is a central part of development policy and discourse, further attention should be given to the other commitments agreed to at the Summit, in particular those concerning employment and social integration, which have also suffered from a general disconnect between economic and social policymaking;

6. Acknowledges that the first United Nations Decade for the Eradication of Poverty (1997–2006), launched after the World Summit for Social Development, has provided the long-term vision for sustained and concerted efforts at the national and international levels to eradicate poverty;

7. Recognizes that the implementation of the commitments made by Governments during the first Decade has fallen short of expectations, and welcomes the proclamation of the Second United Nations Decade for the Eradication of Poverty (2008–2017) by the General Assembly in its resolution 62/205 of 19 December 2007 in order to support, in an efficient and coordinated manner, the internationally agreed development goals related to poverty eradication, including the Millennium Development Goals;

8. Emphasizes that the major United Nations conferences and summits, including the Millennium Summit and the 2005 World Summit, as well as the International Conference on Financing for Development, in its Monterrey Consensus, have reinforced the priority and urgency of poverty eradication within the United Nations development agenda;

9. Also emphasizes that poverty eradication policies should attack poverty by addressing its root and structural causes and manifestations, and that equity and the reduction of inequalities need to be incorporated in those policies;

10. Stresses that an enabling environment is a critical precondition for achieving equity and social development and that, while economic growth is essential, entrenched inequality and marginalization are an obstacle to the broad-based and sustained growth required for sustainable, inclusive, people-centred development, and recognizes the need to balance and ensure complementarity between measures to achieve growth and measures to achieve economic and social equity in order for there to be an impact on overall poverty levels;

11. Also stresses that stability in global financial systems and corporate social responsibility and accountability, as well as national economic policies that have an impact on other stakeholders, are essential in creating an enabling international environment to promote economic growth and social development;

12. Recognizes the need to promote respect for all human rights and fundamental freedoms in order to address the most pressing social needs of people living in poverty, including through the design and development of appropriate mechanisms to strengthen and consolidate democratic institutions and governance;

13. Reaffirms the commitment to the empowerment of women and gender equality, as well as to the mainstreaming of a gender perspective into all development efforts, recognizing that these are critical for achieving sustainable development and for efforts to combat hunger, poverty and disease and to strengthen policies and programmes that improve, ensure and broaden the full participation of women in all spheres of political, economic, social and cultural life, as equal partners, and to improve their access to all resources needed for the full exercise of all their human rights and fundamental freedoms by removing persistent barriers, including ensuring equal access to full and productive employment and decent work, as well as strengthening their economic independence;

14. Also reaffirms the commitment to promote opportunities for full, freely chosen and productive employment, including for the most disadvantaged, as well as decent work for all, in order to deliver social justice combined with economic efficiency, with full respect for fundamental principles and rights at work under conditions of equity, equality, security and dignity, and further reaffirms that macroeconomic policies should, inter alia, support employment creation, taking fully into account the social impact and dimension of globalization;

15. Takes note with interest of the adoption by the International Labour Conference on 10 June 2008 of the International Labour Organization Declaration on Social Justice for a Fair Globalization, which acknowledges the particular role of the Organization in promoting a fair globalization and its responsibility to assist its members in their efforts;

16. Reaffirms that there is an urgent need to create an environment at the national and international levels that is conducive to the attainment of full and productive employment and decent work for all as a foundation for sustainable development and that an environment that supports investment, growth and entrepreneurship is essential to the creation of new job opportunities, and also reaffirms that

opportunities for men and women to obtain productive work in conditions of freedom, equity, security and human dignity are essential to ensuring the eradication of hunger and poverty, the improvement of economic and social well-being for all, the achievement of sustained economic growth and sustainable development of all nations and a fully inclusive and equitable globalization;

17. Stresses the importance of removing obstacles to the realization of the right of peoples to self-determination, in particular of peoples living under colonial or other forms of alien domination or foreign occupation, which adversely affect their social and economic development, including their exclusion from labour markets;

18. Reaffirms that violence, in its many manifestations, including domestic violence, especially against women, children, older persons and persons with disabilities, is a growing threat to the security of individuals, families and communities everywhere; total social breakdown is an all too real contemporary experience; organized crime, illegal drugs, the illicit arms trade, trafficking in women and children, ethnic and religious conflict, civil war, terrorism, all forms of extremist violence, xenophobia, and politically motivated killing and even genocide present fundamental threats to societies and the global social order; they also present compelling and urgent reasons for action by Governments individually and, as appropriate, jointly to foster social cohesion while recognizing, protecting and valuing diversity;

19. Calls upon the organizations of the United Nations system to commit to mainstreaming the goal of full and productive employment and decent work for all in their policies, programmes and activities;

20. Requests the United Nations funds, programmes and agencies and invites financial institutions to support efforts to mainstream the goals of full and productive employment and decent work for all in their policies, programmes and activities;

21. Recognizes that promoting full employment and decent work also requires investing in education, training and skills development for women and men, and girls and boys, strengthening social protection and health systems and applying labour standards;

22. Also recognizes that full and productive employment and decent work for all, which encompass social protection, fundamental principles and rights at work and social dialogue, are key elements of sustainable development for all countries and are therefore a priority objective of international cooperation;

23. Stresses that policies and strategies to achieve full employment and decent work for all should include specific measures to promote gender equality and foster social integration for social groups such as youth, persons with disabilities, and older persons, as well as migrants and indigenous peoples;

24. Also stresses the need to allocate adequate resources for the elimination of all forms of discrimination against women in the workplace, including unequal access to labour market participation and wage inequalities, as well as reconciliation of work and private life for both women and men;

25. Encourages States to promote youth employment by, inter alia, developing and implementing action plans in collaboration with all relevant stakeholders;

26. Also encourages States to pursue efforts to promote the concerns of older persons and persons with disabilities and their organizations in the planning, implementing and evaluating of all development programmes and policies;

27. Stresses that policies and programmes designed to achieve poverty eradication, full employment and decent work for all should include specific measures to foster social integration, including by providing marginalized socio-economic sectors and groups with equal access to opportunities and social protection;

28. Acknowledges the important nexus between international migration and social development, and stresses the importance of enforcing labour law effectively with regard to migrant workers' labour relations and working conditions, inter alia, those related to their remuneration and conditions of health, safety at work and the right to freedom of association;

29. Reaffirms that social integration policies should seek to reduce inequalities, promote access to basic social services, education for all and health care, increase the participation and integration of social groups, particularly youth, older persons and persons with disabilities, and address the challenges posed by globalization and market-driven reforms to social development in order for all people in all countries to benefit from globalization;

30. Urges Governments, with the cooperation of relevant entities, to develop systems of social protection and to extend or broaden, as appropriate, their effectiveness and coverage, including for workers in the informal economy, recognizing the need for social protection systems to provide social security and support labour-market participation, and invites the International Labour Organization to strengthen its social protection strategies, and policies on extending social security coverage, and also urges Governments, while taking account of national circumstances, to focus on the needs of those living in, or vulnerable to, poverty and give particular consideration to universal access to basic social security systems;

31. Reaffirms the commitment to promote the rights of indigenous peoples in the areas of education, employment, housing, sanitation, health and social security, and also notes the attention paid to those areas in the United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples;

32. Recognizes the need to formulate social development policies in an integral, articulated and participative manner, recognizing poverty as a multidimensional phenomenon, calls for interlinked public policies on this matter, and underlines the need for public policies to be included in a comprehensive development and well-being strategy;

33. Acknowledges the important role that the public sector can play as an employer and in developing an environment that enables the effective generation of full and productive employment and decent work for all;

34. Also acknowledges the vital role that the private sector can play in generating new investments, employment and financing for development and in advancing efforts towards full employment and decent work;

35. Recognizes that the majority of poor people live and work in rural areas, that priority should be given to agricultural and non-farm sectors and that steps should be taken to anticipate and offset the negative social and economic consequences of globalization and to maximize its benefits for poor people living and working in rural areas;

36. Also recognizes the need to give priority to investing in and further contributing to sustainable agricultural development and microenterprises, small and medium-sized enterprises and entrepreneurship cooperatives and other forms of social enterprises and the participation and entrepreneurship of women as means to promote full productive employment and decent work for all;

37. Reaffirms the commitments made in respect of "Meeting the special needs of Africa" at the 2005 World Summit, underlines the call of the Economic and Social Council for enhanced coordination within the United Nations system and the ongoing efforts to harmonize the current initiatives on Africa, and requests the Commission for Social Development to continue to give due prominence in its work to the social dimensions of the New Partnership for Africa's Development;

38. Also reaffirms that each country has the primary responsibility for its own economic and social development and that the role of national policies and development strategies cannot be overemphasized, and underlines the importance of adopting effective measures, including new financial mechanisms, as appropriate, to support the efforts of developing countries to achieve sustained economic growth, sustainable development, poverty eradication and the strengthening of their democratic systems;

39. Further reaffirms, in this context, that international cooperation has an essential role in assisting developing countries, including the least developed countries, in strengthening their human, institutional and technological capacity;

40. Stresses that the international community shall enhance its efforts to create an enabling environment for social development and poverty eradication through increasing market access for developing countries, technology transfer on mutually agreed terms, financial aid and a comprehensive solution to the external debt problem;

41. Also stresses that international trade and stable financial systems can be effective tools to create favourable conditions for the development of all countries and that trade barriers and some trading practices continue to have negative effects on employment growth, particularly in developing countries;

42. Acknowledges that good governance and the rule of law at the national and international levels are essential for sustained economic growth, sustainable development and the eradication of poverty and hunger;

43. Urges developed countries that have not yet done so in accordance with their commitments, to make concrete efforts towards meeting the targets of 0.7 per cent of their gross national product for official development assistance to developing countries and 0.15 to 0.2 per cent of their gross national product to least developed countries, and encourages developing countries to build on the progress achieved in ensuring that official development assistance is used effectively to help to meet development goals and targets;

oping countries on a sustainable and predictable basis, such as the International Drug Purchase Facility, UNITAID, as well as other initiatives, such as the International Finance Facility for Immunization and the Advance Market Commitments for Vaccines, and notes the New York Declaration of 20 September 2004, which launched the Action against Hunger and Poverty initiative and called for further attention to raise funds urgently needed to help meet the Millennium Development Goals and to complement and ensure the long-term stability and predictability of foreign aid;

45. Reaffirms that social development requires the active involvement of all actors in the development process, including civil society organizations, corporations and small businesses, and that partnerships among all relevant actors are increasingly becoming part of national and international cooperation for social development, and also reaffirms that, within countries, partnerships among the Government, civil society and the private sector can contribute effectively to the achievement of social development goals;

46. Underlines the responsibility of the private sector, at both the national and the international levels, including small and large companies and transnational corporations, regarding not only the economic and financial but also the development, social, gender and environmental implications of their activities, their obligations towards their workers and their contributions to achieving sustainable development, including social development, and emphasizes the need to take concrete actions on corporate responsibility and accountability, including through the participation of all relevant stakeholders, inter alia, for the prevention or prosecution of corruption;

47. Stresses the importance of promoting corporate social responsibility and accountability, encourages responsible business practices, such as those promoted by the Global Compact, and invites the private sector to take into account not only the economic and financial but also the development, social, human rights, gender and environmental implications of its undertakings, and underlines the importance of the International Labour Organization Tripartite Declaration of Principles concerning Multinational Enterprises and Social Policy;

48. Invites the Secretary-General, the Economic and Social Council, the regional commissions, the relevant specialized agencies, funds and programmes of the United Nations system and other intergovernmental forums, within their respective mandates, to continue to integrate into their work programmes and give priority attention to the Copenhagen commitments and the Declaration on the tenth anniversary of the World Summit for Social Development, to continue to be actively involved in their follow-up and to monitor the achievement of those commitments and undertakings;

50. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its sixty-fourth session the sub-item entitled “Implementation of the outcome of the World Summit for Social Development and of the twenty-fourth special session of the General Assembly”, and requests the Secretary-General to submit a report on the question to the Assembly at that session.

Social Justice for a Fair Globalization

Communication. By a 21 October letter to the Secretary-General [A/63/538-E/2009/4], Norway and the United Republic of Tanzania transmitted the ILO Declaration on Social Justice for a Fair Globalization, unanimously adopted on 10 June by the ILO General Conference at its ninety-seventh session (Geneva, 28 May–13 June). The Declaration reflected a wide consensus on the need for a strong social dimension to globalization in achieving improved and fair outcomes for all. It also provided a clear direction to accelerate progress in implementing the decent work agenda, as called for in various UN resolutions, including the 2005 World Summit Outcome, contained in General Assembly resolution 60/1 [YUN 2005, p. 48], and other regional agreements.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December [meeting 72], the General Assembly adopted resolution 63/199 [draft: A/63/L.29/Rev.1 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 44].

International Labour Organization Declaration on Social Justice for a Fair Globalization

The General Assembly,

Recalling the outcomes of the major United Nations conferences and summits in the economic, social and related fields, including the development goals and objectives contained therein, and recognizing the vital role played by these conferences and summits in shaping a broad development vision and in identifying commonly agreed objectives, which have contributed to the improvement of human life in different parts of the world,

Reaffirming the commitment made in the 2005 World Summit Outcome to full and productive employment and decent work for all, including for women and young people, as a central objective of relevant national and international policies as well as national development strategies, including poverty reduction strategies, as part of the efforts to achieve the Millennium Development Goals,

Recalling its resolution 59/57 of 2 December 2004 on the report of the World Commission on the Social Dimension of Globalization entitled A Fair Globalization: Creating Opportunities for All,

Recalling also its resolution 62/208 of 19 December 2007 on the triennial comprehensive policy review of operational activities for development of the United Nations system,

Recognizing that full and productive employment and decent work for all is one of the key elements of poverty reduction strategies that facilitate the achievement of the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals, and that it requires a multidimensional focus that incorporates Governments, the private sector, civil society, non-governmental organizations, representatives of employers and workers, international organizations and, in particular, the agencies of the United Nations system and the international financial institutions,

Reaffirming that development is a central goal in and of itself and that sustainable development in its economic, social and environmental aspects constitutes a key element of the overarching framework of United Nations activities,

1. Takes note with interest of the adoption of the Declaration on Social Justice for a Fair Globalization and its accompanying resolution at the ninety-seventh session of the International Labour Conference, and calls for their implementation;

2. Recognizes that in the present context of globalization, achieving an improved and fair outcome for all has become even more necessary in order to meet the universal aspiration for social justice, reach full employment, ensure the sustainability of open societies and the global economy, achieve social cohesion and combat poverty and rising inequalities;

3. Also recognizes that the social impact of the current economic crisis may disproportionately affect the weakest and most vulnerable segments of society, through increased poverty, underemployment, growth in inequality and difficult social conditions;

4. Reiterates its support for a fair globalization, and resolves to make the goals of full and productive employment and decent work for all, including for women and young people, a central objective of relevant national and international policies, including poverty reduction strategies, as well as other measures which may be developed in response to the current economic crisis, as appropriate, with the aim of achieving the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals;

5. Supports the call of the Declaration to promote and contribute to the implementation of an integrated approach to the decent work agenda, based on the four inseparable, interrelated and mutually supportive strategic objectives of employment creation, fundamental principles and rights at work, social dialogue and social protection;

6. Reiterates that the Toolkit for Mainstreaming Employment and Decent Work, as adopted by the United Nations System Chief Executives Board for Coordination and endorsed by the Economic and Social Council, provides a practical method for advancing coherence in policy-making and implementation on these issues within the United Nations system;

7. Requests the United Nations funds, programmes, specialized agencies and financial institutions to continue to mainstream the goals of full and productive employment and decent work for all in their policies, programmes and activities through promotion of an integrated approach, including the application of the Toolkit;

8. Encourages Member States to consider applying the principles set out in the Toolkit at the national level in an effort to promote policy coherence around the promotion of full and productive employment and decent work for all;

9. Recognizes the particular relevance of the International Labour Organization Declaration on Social Justice for a Fair Globalization in the light of the World Day of Social Justice, and encourages active dialogue and collaboration among the various funds, programmes and specialized agencies of the United Nations system, as well as at the national level, including civil society and non-governmental organizations;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to duly take into account the International Labour Organization Declaration on Social Justice for a Fair Globalization when considering related reports in the economic and social fields.

Commission for Social Development

The Commission for Social Development, at its forty-sixth session (New York, 16 February 2007, 6–15 February and 22 February 2008) [E/2008/26], considered its priority theme “Promoting full employment and decent work for all”. A panel discussion was held on the theme and the Commission recommended to the Economic and Social Council for adoption a policy-oriented resolution by which the Council would decide to keep full and productive employment and decent work for all under review and would request the Secretary-General to submit a report on implementation of the resolution to the Commission in 2009 and to the General Assembly later that year as part of the report on the implementation of the 1995 World Summit for Social Development and of the Assembly’s twenty-fourth (2000) special session. The Commission also held a discussion on the theme “Full employment and decent work: intensification of efforts to eliminate all forms of discrimination against women”; a summary of the discussion was transmitted to the Secretary-General for his annual report to the Assembly, as requested in Assembly resolution 61/143 [YUN 2006, p. 1334]. The Commission recommended to the Council for adoption a resolution on the social dimensions of the New Partnership for Africa’s Development (NEPAD) [YUN 2001, p. 900], in which the Commission would be asked to continue to give prominence to and raise awareness of the social dimensions of NEPAD and the Secretary-General would be asked to submit a report on the subject to the Commission in 2009 (see p. 1007). In connection with its review of plans and programmes of action pertaining to the situation of social groups, the Commission held a panel discussion on the regional review and appraisal of the Madrid International Plan of Action on Ageing, 2002 [YUN 2002, p. 1194] and adopted a resolution on the Plan of Action’s first review and appraisal (see p. 1300). The Commission also adopted a resolution on further promotion of equalization of opportunities by, for and with persons with disabilities and protection of their human rights, in which the Council would renew the mandate of the Commission’s Special Rapporteur on Disability until 31 December 2011. It also held a panel discussion on the theme “Mainstreaming disability in the development agenda” as an emerging issue and adopted a resolution in which the Council would encourage Member States, the UN system and other international entities to ensure that issues affecting persons with disabilities were incorporated into the formulation of policies aiming at their full and effective participation in development. In addressing its future organization and methods of work, the Commission recommended to the Council that “Social integration” be the priority theme for the 2009–2010 review and policy cycle, taking into account the relation with poverty eradication and full employment and decent work for all.

For its consideration of its priority theme, the Commission had before it a November 2007 report of the Secretary-General [E/CN.5/2008/4] prepared in response to Council resolution 2006/18 [YUN 2006, p. 1277]. The report examined labour market trends and challenges and addressed a policy framework for achieving full employment and decent work, focusing on macroeconomic policies, enterprise and rural development, education, training and skills, and social protection, as well as standards and regulatory policies. It stressed that achieving the goals of full and productive employment and decent work was an integral part of the efforts to meet the internationally agreed development goals, including the MDGs, and the broader UN development agenda. Those goals should be made a central objective of economic and social policies and incorporated into national development strategies, including poverty reduction strategies. Governments should promote enterprise development, and measures should be directed at increasing investment, improving access to market and infrastructure and facilitating diversification from agriculture to other economic activities. Training and skills enhancement should be provided to increase the employability of the workforce and its adaptability to changing labour markets. Social protection systems should adapt to labour-market conditions in order to provide economic security. Greater attention should be given to developing appropriate institutions and regulation for the effective and fair functioning of labour markets. National regulatory frameworks should be reviewed and strengthened in order to ensure that core labour standards were fully enforced in both the formal and informal sectors. The UN system should incorporate more effectively the goals of full employment and decent work into its policies and programmes in support of national development efforts.

Also before the Commission were Secretariat notes on: the future organization and methods of work of the Commission [E/CN.5/2008/5] (see p. 1208); mainstreaming disability in the development agenda [E/CN.5/2008/6] (see p. 1213); and the intensification of efforts to eliminate all forms of violence against women [E/CN.5/2008/8] [YUN 2007, p. 1158]. The Commission also considered a report by the Secretary-General on the first review and appraisal of the Madrid International Plan of Action on Ageing, 2002: preliminary assessment [E/CN.5/2008/7 & Corr.1], and a note transmitting the report of the regional commissions on the regional implementation of the Madrid Plan of Action [E/CN.5/2008/2] (see p. 1300). It also had before it notes by the Secretary-General on: monitoring the implementation of the Standard Rules on the Equalization of Opportunities for Persons with Disabilities [E/CN.5/2008/3] (see p. 1211); and the proposed strategic framework for the biennium 2010–2011: sub-programme 3, social policy and development [E/CN.5/2008/9].

On 24 July, the Council took note of the Commission's report on its forty-sixth session and approved the provisional agenda and documentation for its forty-seventh (2009) session (decision 2008/244).

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 24 July [meeting 42], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission for Social Development [E/2008/26], adopted resolution 2008/18 without vote [agenda item 14 (b)].

Promoting full employment and decent work for all

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling the outcomes of the World Summit for Social Development and the twenty-fourth special session of the General Assembly,

Reaffirming that the Copenhagen Declaration on Social Development and the Programme of Action of the World Summit for Social Development and the further initiatives for social development adopted by the General Assembly at its twenty-fourth special session, and a continued global dialogue on social issues, constitute the basic framework for the promotion of social development for all at the national and international levels,

Recognizing that a people-centred approach must be at the centre of economic and social development,

Recalling the United Nations Millennium Declaration and the 2005 World Summit Outcome,

Recalling also the ministerial declaration adopted by the Economic and Social Council at the high-level segment of its substantive session of 2006,

Recalling further its resolution 2007/2 of 17 July 2007 and the theme of the coordination segment of its 2007 substantive session, "The role of the United Nations system in promoting full and productive employment and decent work for all",

Recognizing that approximately 1.5 billion people, or one third of the working-age population worldwide, were either unemployed or underemployed in 2006, that of this number about 200 million were unemployed, and that the remaining 1.3 billion constituted the working poor who are unable to earn enough to lift themselves and their family members out of poverty, and hence emphasizing the dual challenge of creating new productive jobs and improving the quality of existing ones,

Recognizing also that the decent-work agenda of the International Labour Organization is an important instrument for achieving the objective of full and productive employment and decent work for all through the promotion and realization of the fundamental principles and rights at work, creation of greater and equal opportunities for women and men to secure decent employment and income, and enhancement of the coverage and effectiveness of social protection for all and the strengthening of social dialogue,

1. Reaffirms the central importance of full and productive employment and decent work to poverty eradication and social integration;

2. Also reaffirms that the goals of full and productive employment and decent work are crucial to poverty eradication and should be made a central objective of relevant national and international policies as well as national development strategies, including poverty reduction strategies, as part of the efforts to achieve the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals;

3. Calls upon Governments as a matter of priority to continue efforts towards ratifying, where Member States have not done so, and fully implementing the International Labour Organization conventions concerning respect for fundamental principles and rights at work, namely, freedom of association and the effective recognition of the right to organize and bargain collectively, and the elimination of all forms of forced or compulsory labour, as well as the effective elimination of child labour and discrimination in respect of employment and occupation, and to consider also the ratification and full implementation of other International Labour Organization conventions concerning the employment rights of women, youth, persons with disabilities, migrants and indigenous peoples;

4. Affirms its strong support for fair globalization and the need to translate growth into eradication of poverty and commitment to strategies and policies that aim to promote full, freely chosen and productive employment and decent work for all and that these should constitute a fundamental component of relevant national and international policies as well as national development strategies, including poverty reduction strategies, and reaffirms that employment creation and decent work should be incorporated into macroeconomic policies, taking fully into account the impact and social dimension of globalization, the benefits and costs of which are often unevenly shared and distributed;

5. Reaffirms that there is an urgent need to create an environment at the national and international levels that is conducive to the attainment of full and productive employment and decent work for all as a foundation for sustainable development and that an environment that supports investment, growth and entrepreneurship is essential to the creation of new job opportunities, and also reaffirms that opportunities for men and women to obtain productive work in conditions of freedom, equity, security and human dignity are essential to ensuring the eradication of hunger and poverty, the improvement of economic and social well-being for all, the achievement of sustained economic growth and sustainable development of all nations and a fully inclusive and equitable globalization;

6. Stresses the importance of removing obstacles to the realization of the right of peoples to self-determination, in particular people living under colonial or other forms of alien domination or foreign occupation, which adversely affect their social and economic development, including their exclusion from labour markets;

7. Reaffirms that violence, in its many manifestations, including domestic violence, especially against women, children, older persons and persons with disabilities, is a growing threat to the security of individuals, families and communities everywhere; that total social breakdown is an all-too-real contemporary experience; that organized crime, illegal drugs, the illicit arms trade, trafficking in women and children, ethnic and religious conflict, civil war, terrorism, all forms of extremist violence, xenophobia, and politically motivated killing and even genocide present fundamental threats to societies and the global social order; and that they also present compelling and urgent reasons for action by Governments individually and, as appropriate, jointly to foster social cohesion while recognizing, protecting and valuing diversity;

8. Also reaffirms that each country has the primary responsibility for its own economic and social development and that the role of national policies and development strategies cannot be overemphasized, and underlines the importance of adopting effective measures, including new financial mechanisms, as appropriate, to support the efforts of developing countries to achieve sustained economic growth, sustainable development, poverty eradication and the strengthening of their democratic systems;

9. Calls upon the international community to enhance its efforts to create an enabling environment for social development and poverty eradication through increasing market access for developing countries, technology transfer on mutually agreed terms, financial aid and a comprehensive solution to the external debt problem;

10. Welcomes the increased resources that are becoming available as a result of the establishment of timetables by many developed countries for achieving the target of 0.7 per cent of gross national product for official development assistance to developing countries, as well as the target of 0.15 to 0.20 per cent of gross national product of developed countries for official development assistance to least developed countries, and urges those developed countries that have not yet done so to make concrete efforts in this regard in accordance with their commitments;

11. Acknowledges that good governance and the rule of law at the national and international levels are essential for sustained economic growth, sustainable development and the eradication of poverty and hunger;

13. Also stresses that policies should be devised through which to pursue both economic efficiency and equity;

14. Urges Governments, with the cooperation of relevant entities, to develop systems of social protection and to extend or broaden, as appropriate, their effectiveness and coverage, including for workers in the informal economy, recognizing the need for social protection systems to provide social security and support labour-market participation; invites the International Labour Organization to strengthen its social protection strategies and policies on extending social security coverage; and also urges Governments, while taking account of national circumstances, to focus on the needs of those living in, or vulnerable to, poverty and give particular consideration to universal access to basic social security systems;

15. Invites the International Labour Organization to continue to assist States, as appropriate and upon request, in the strengthening of their social protection strategies and policies on extending social security coverage;

16. Calls upon the public sector to continue to play its important role in developing an environment that enables the effective generation of full and productive employment and decent work for all, while acknowledging its role as an employer;

17. Calls upon the private sector to continue to exercise its vital role in generating new investments, employment and financing for development and in advancing efforts towards full employment and decent work;

18. Encourages Governments to continue to pursue the creation of a conducive environment for enterprise development in both rural and urban areas, including by giving particular attention to policies that promote microenterprises, small and medium-sized enterprises, cooperatives and other forms of social enterprises and the participation and entrepreneurship of women, including rural women, through, inter alia, improved administrative regimes for the registration of small businesses, access to microcredit, social security systems and information on markets and new technology, as well as improved regulations;

19. Stresses that policies and strategies for achieving full employment and decent work for all should include specific measures to promote gender equality and foster social integration of social groups, such as youth, persons with disabilities, and older persons, as well as migrants and indigenous peoples;

20. Also stresses that these policies and strategies should promote gender equality, empowerment of women and better possibilities for all to reconcile work and private and family life;

21. Encourages Governments, the private sector, non-governmental organizations and other actors of civil society to promote and protect the rights of women workers, to take action to remove structural and legal barriers as well as stereotypic attitudes towards gender equality at work, and to initiate positive steps to promote equal pay for equal work or work of equal value;

22. Reaffirms that social integration policies should seek to reduce inequalities, promote access to basic social services, education for all and health care, and increase the participation and integration of social groups;

23. Also reaffirms the commitment to develop and implement strategies that give persons with disabilities everywhere equal opportunities to secure full access to productive employment and decent work on an equal basis with others and without any kind of discrimination, including by promoting a labour market and a work environment that are open, inclusive and accessible to all and by ensuring just and favourable conditions of work;

24. Urges the development and implementation of integrated policies and strategies that promote opportunities for youth, including those living in rural areas, to prepare for, access and retain full and productive employment and decent work, and for mainstreaming youth employment into national development strategies, as well as encourage young people's entrepreneurship, inter alia, through entrepreneurship education; at the same time, also urges that Governments should promote access to work through integrated policies that enable the creation of new and quality jobs for young people and facilitate access to those jobs; and stresses the importance of the Youth Employment Network as a peer exchange mechanism at the national, regional and international levels;

25. Stresses the importance of creating an enabling environment for social dialogue by ensuring effective representation and participation of workers' organizations in order to contribute to the development of policies for achieving broad-based social progress, in particular for promoting full and productive employment and decent work for all;

26. Also stresses that non-discrimination against older persons, especially in the labour market, is crucial;

27. Acknowledges the important nexus between international migration and social development, and stresses the importance of effectively enforcing labour laws applicable to migrant workers and members of their families, including any related to remuneration, conditions of health, safety at work and the right of freedom of association, and reaffirms that migrants, regardless of their immigration status, should be accorded the protection of all human rights;

28. Recognizes the importance of the International Labour Organization Declaration on Fundamental Principles and Rights at Work;

29. Reaffirms the critical role of both formal and non-formal education in the achievement of full employment and decent work for all, in particular basic education and training for eradicating illiteracy; and in this regard also reaffirms the need to intensify efforts to implement effectively the International Plan of Action for the United Nations Literacy Decade and to integrate substantially those efforts in the Education for All process and other activities of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, as well as other literacy initiatives within the framework of the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals;

38. Decides to keep full and productive employment and decent work for all under review, and requests the Secretary-General to submit a report on the implementation of the present resolution to the Commission for Social Development at its forty-seventh session and to the General Assembly at its sixty-fourth session as part of the report on the outcome of the implementation of the World Summit for Social Development and of the twenty-fourth special session of the Assembly.

Future organization and methods of work of the Commission for Social Development

In response to Economic and Social Council resolutions 2005/11 [YUN 2005, p. 1192] and 2006/18 [YUN 2006, p. 1277], the Secretariat submitted a November 2007 note on future organization and methods of work of the Commission on Social Development [E/CN.5/2008/5]. The note provided background on the review of the Commission’s methods of work and stated that since the Commission had taken up the issue of poverty eradication at its 2006 session and full employment and decent work at its 2007 and 2008 sessions, the Secretariat, in consultation with the Bureau of the Commission, proposed “Social integration” as the priority theme for its 2009–2010 review and policy cycle.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 24 July [meeting 42], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission for Social Development [E/2008/26], adopted resolution 2008/19 without vote [agenda item 14 (b)].

Future organization and methods of work of the Commission for Social Development

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolution 2005/11 of 21 July 2005 on the future organization and methods of work of the Commission for Social Development, in which the Economic and Social Council decided that the Commission should review the functioning of the two-year review and policy cycle in order to ensure that that approach enhanced its effectiveness and functioning,

Recalling also its resolution 2006/18 of 26 July 2006, in which the Council noted the usefulness of identifying the themes for the 2009–2010 review and policy cycle during the forty-sixth session of the Commission,

Noting that the Commission discussed the priority theme of “Promoting full employment and decent work for all” at its forty-fifth and forty-sixth sessions, as the first of the core themes of the World Summit for Social Development addressed under the two-year review and policy cycle,

1. Reaffirms that discussing one core issue as presented in the outcome document of the World Summit for Social Development over a two-year period allows the Commission for Social Development to go into greater depth by also addressing related cross-cutting issues, emerging issues and linkages with other issues relevant to the theme under discussion;

2. Decides that the priority theme for the 2009–2010 review and policy cycle should be “Social integration”, taking into account its relationship with poverty eradication and full employment and decent work for all;

3. Takes note of its decision in resolution 2005/11, as recalled in resolution 2006/18, that the Commission should discuss each of the core themes of the World Summit for Social Development, namely, poverty eradication, full employment and social integration, under the two-year review and policy cycle;

4. Notes the usefulness of identifying the theme for the 2011–2012 review and policy cycle during the forty-eighth session of the Commission;

5. Decides that the Commission should maintain the two-year review and policy cycle until its fiftieth session and that it should continue to keep its methods of work under review.

Follow-up to International Year of Volunteers (2001)

In General Assembly resolution 63/153 (see p. 987) of 18 December, the Assembly invited the Commission for Social Development to consider “volunteerism for development” in the context of its theme of social integration at its forty-seventh (2009) and forty-eighth (2010) sessions. It also decided that, on or around 5 December 2011—the International Volunteer Day for Economic and Social Development—two plenary meetings of the Assembly’s sixty-sixth session should be devoted to follow-up to the International Year and the commemoration of its tenth anniversary, under the item entitled “Social development”.

United Nations Research Institute for Social Development

During 2008, the United Nations Research Institute for Social Development (UNRISD) continued to conduct research into social and economic development, promoting a multidisciplinary approach that emphasized the social effects of development policies and the factors and contexts that shape decision-making processes.

A November report by the UNRISD Board [E/CN.5/2009/8] described the Institute's activities in 2007 and 2008, carried out under the programme designed for 2005–2009, which focused on social policy, poverty reduction and equity. Research was carried out on the flagship project, Poverty Reduction and Policy Regimes, and on 15 other projects under five programme areas: social policy and development; gender and development; markets, business and regulation; civil society and social movements; and identities, conflict and cohesion. During the reporting period, UNRISD issued 55 publications and two CD-ROM libraries of publications issued from the mid-1980s through 2007; it also tracked nearly 80 references to its work in the official documents and publications of UN bodies and the specialized agencies. The Institute's core funding came from voluntary contributions from seven Governments in 2007 and 2008. It also received project-specific contributions from Governments, international agencies and foundations.

Persons with disabilities

World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons

In response to General Assembly resolution 62/127 [YUN 2007, p. 1116], the Secretary-General submitted a July report [A/63/183] on the fifth quinquennial review and appraisal of the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons, adopted by Assembly resolution 37/52 [YUN 1982, p. 981]. The report, based on the contributions of 36 Governments, 17 UN system entities and other data available to the Secretariat, noted that major developments since the fourth review and appraisal [YUN 2003, p. 1105] included the 2006 adoption by the Assembly, in resolution 61/106 [YUN 2006, p. 785], of the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities and its Optional Protocol, and their entry into force on 3 May (see p. 749), and the emergence of a new international architecture concerning the advancement of persons with disabilities. The report considered the international disability architecture; international norms and standards concerning the advancement of persons with disabilities; and progress and challenges in implementing the World Programme of Action in the context of development. The Secretary-General stressed the need to address the absence of more than 10 per cent of the world's population in the implementation, review and evaluation of the MDGs, and noted that the lack of a disability perspective undermined the objective of the Goals, which was to measure human development benchmarks on the way to more inclusive and equitable global development. He concluded that while the outcomes of major UN conferences and summits addressed advancement of persons with disabilities in their policy recommendations, such persons were yet to obtain recognition as agents and beneficiaries in furthering the development goals of the Millennium Declaration, in particular in progress on achieving on a sustainable and equitable basis: reduction of poverty and extreme hunger; access to universal primary education; gender equality; reduction of child mortality and improvements in maternal health; and action on HIV/AIDS, malaria and other diseases.

Recommendations to the General Assembly included: linking the international disability architecture with the MDG processes; developing and evaluating policies, plans and programmes based on the international disability architecture; disability-inclusive development cooperation; promoting capacity-building of all stakeholders, Governments, organizations of persons with disabilities and other civil society organizations; encouraging national collection of data and statistics on persons with disabilities; and making UN services more accessible to persons with disabilities. Annexed to the report were proposed updates of the World Programme of Action and examples of and guidelines for incorporating disability in monitoring and evaluating the MDGs.

Communication. In a 7 July note verbale to the Secretary-General [A/63/142], the Philippines proposed the inclusion in the provisional agenda of the Assembly's sixty-third (2008) session, under the item entitled "Social development", of a sub-item entitled "Review and appraisal of the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons".

Standard Rules on the Equalization of Opportunities for Persons with Disabilities

In response to Economic and Social Council resolution 2005/9 [YUN 2005, p. 1196], the Secretary-General submitted to the Commission for Social Development the annual report [E/CN.5/2008/3] of its Special Rapporteur on Disability on the monitoring of the implementation of the Standard Rules on the Equalization of Opportunities for Persons with Disabilities, adopted by General Assembly resolution 48/96 [YUN 1993, p. 977]. The Special Rapporteur stated that her activities over the previous 12 months had focused on: urging the proper and more intensive implementation of the Standard Rules; advocating for the issues of persons with disabilities and deepening awareness of their rights; developing strong national disability legislation; increasing interregional cooperation; supporting the activities of international disability organizations and federations; ensuring that the work of international development agencies was targeted to persons with disabilities; and urging Governments to sign and ratify the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities and sustaining the spirit of cooperation and collaboration that prevailed during its negotiation and drafting. Work also continued on the second phase of the Global Survey on government action in implementing the Standard Rules. The second phase looked at the discrepancies and similarities in implementation across the globe and the extent and coverage of the implementation of each of the rules. It also included a comparative analysis between the responses obtained from organizations of persons with disabilities and Governments from a sample of 28 countries or areas in which Governments and organizations responded to the Survey. The results revealed a great discrepancy in implementation between regions as well as between Governments and organizations. However, the results were consistent with the social, economic and developmental realities of each region.

The Special Rapporteur emphasized that the legally binding nature of the Convention and the procedural and methodological nature of the Standard Rules were essential elements in the struggle for rights and recognition of persons with disabilities, and recommended that the Standard Rules co-exist alongside the Convention in all activities relating to the enjoyment and exercise of their rights. All States parties to the Convention should begin setting up systems and mechanisms to monitor implementation and remedy violations, while at the same time raising awareness of the Convention and its articles; the monitoring systems and structures should include persons with disabilities who themselves were the best experts on what constituted violations of their rights. The importance of accurate disaggregated information on the size, scope, types, causes, geographical distribution and concentration of disability and division by age, gender and socio-economic conditions was emphasized. National censuses should include detailed information on disability and persons with disabilities, and Governments should make efforts to obtain the information upon which they could base policy decisions, make financial allocations, and deliver services. The Special Rapporteur stressed the importance of international cooperation in implementing and universalizing a new international culture based on non-discrimination and respect for all human beings, regardless of ability. She recommended that countries commit to the exchange of ideas, practices and expertise, and to international financial aid. Cooperation should also take place at the interregional level where countries should include Governments and organizations of persons with disabilities.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 24 July [meeting 42], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission for Social Development [E/2008/26], adopted resolution 2008/20 without vote [agenda item 14 (b)].

Further promotion of equalization of opportunities by, for and with persons with disabilities and protection of their human rights

Noting with grave concern that persons with disabilities are subject to multiple or aggravated forms of discrimination, and recognizing the critical need to address the negative impact of poverty affecting the majority of persons with disabilities, who continue to be excluded from the benefits of development, such as education and access to gainful and productive employment and decent work as well as appropriate health care and accessible social services,

(b) Create awareness of the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities, including for the purpose of ensuring its wider signature and ratification by Member States;

(c) Act as a catalyst to promote international and technical cooperation on disability issues, including by identifying strategic areas for the exchange and sharing of expertise, best practices, knowledge, information and relevant technologies, in order to enhance the capacity-building of Member States;

(d) Collaborate, in the fulfilment of the above tasks, with all relevant stakeholders, including organizations of persons with disabilities;

4. Calls upon all Governments to continue to cooperate and engage in direct dialogue with the Special Rapporteur and to provide him or her with all the relevant information needed to fulfil the mandate effectively;

5. Calls upon those States and regional integration organizations that have not yet signed or ratified the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities and the Optional Protocol thereto to consider doing so as a matter of priority;

6. Urges Governments, the Secretary-General, inter-governmental organizations and non-governmental organizations, and invites relevant human rights treaty bodies, relevant bodies and organizations of the United Nations system, including the Bretton Woods institutions, multi-lateral development agencies and regional commissions, in accordance with their mandates, to create greater awareness and support for the further implementation of the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons, the Standard Rules on the Equalization of Opportunities for Persons with Disabilities and the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities, and to promote the enjoyment of all human rights and fundamental freedoms as well as the equalization of opportunities and the well-being of persons with disabilities, and to improve consultation, exchange of information and coordination;

9. Requests the Special Rapporteur to submit to the Commission for Social Development an annual report on his or her activities in implementing the present resolution.

Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities

The Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities and its Optional Protocol, adopted by General Assembly resolution 61/106 [YUN 2006, p. 785], entered into force on 3 May (see p. 749).

By resolution 63/192 of 18 December (see p. 750), the Assembly welcomed the entry into force, the holding of the first session of the Conference of States Parties to the Convention on 31 October and 3 November, and the establishment of the Committee on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities. The Assembly invited the Secretary-General to assist States in becoming parties to the Convention and the Optional Protocol, to continue the progressive implementation of standards and guidelines for the accessibility of facilities and services of the UN system, and to promote the rights of persons with disabilities in the UN system.

By resolution 63/263 of 24 December (see p. 1545), the Assembly took note of the report of the Secretary-General on revised estimates resulting from the Convention's entry into force.

Mainstreaming disability in the development agenda

In response to Economic and Social Council resolution 2006/18 [YUN 2006, p. 1277], the Secretariat submitted to the Commission for Social Development a November 2007 note [E/CN.5/2008/6] that reviewed the background, practicalities and resources related to mainstreaming disability in the development agenda in the context of the 2006 adoption of the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities [YUN 2006, p. 785]. The Secretariat noted that there were some 650 million persons with disabilities in the world, or 10 per cent of the global population. It stated that the Convention offered an opportunity to consolidate disability-related activities and to develop policies and structures that ensured that persons with disabilities were mainstreamed within the UN system. Lessons learned from gender and HIV/AIDS mainstreaming could provide guidance in that regard. The adoption of the Convention was also an opportunity for human rights and development actors to combine and integrate those two areas. As a human rights and development instrument, the Convention identified practical measures to create development programmes that were inclusive of, and accessible to, persons with disabilities. The note stated that halfway to the MDG target date of 2015, persons with disabilities remained absent from programming and discourse on achievement of the Goals. An estimated 80 per cent of those persons were living in developing countries, and the failure to integrate them in development activities would mean failure to achieve the MDGs. Ensuring that persons with disabilities could access decent work was of critical importance in order for them to be represented in the development agenda on an equal basis with others, and the involvement of civil society, including organizations of persons with disabilities, in national and international mechanisms would guide the development agenda towards integrating and including persons with disabilities.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 24 July [meeting 42], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission for Social Development [E/2008/26], adopted resolution 2008/21 without vote [agenda item 14 (b)].

Mainstreaming disability in the development agenda

The Economic and Social Council,

Reaffirming that the Copenhagen Declaration on Social Development and the Programme of Action of the World Summit for Social Development and the further initiatives for social development adopted by the General Assembly at its twenty-fourth special session, as well as a continued global dialogue on social development issues, constitute the basic framework for the promotion of social development for all at the national and international levels,

Recalling its previous resolutions concerning persons with disabilities and the relevant resolutions adopted by the General Assembly,

Acknowledging that the majority of the 650 million persons with disabilities in the world live in conditions of poverty, and in this regard recognizing the critical need to address the negative impact of poverty on persons with disabilities,

Acknowledging also that persons with disabilities, in particular women and children with disabilities, are subject to aggravated and multiple forms of discrimination,

Convinced that addressing the profound social, cultural and economic disadvantage experienced by many persons with disabilities and that promoting the progressive removal of barriers to their full and effective participation in all aspects of development will further the equalization of opportunities and contribute to the realization of a "society for all" in the twenty-first century,

Welcoming the adoption of the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities and the Optional Protocol thereto on 13 December 2006 and the fact that since their opening for signature on 30 March 2007, one hundred and twenty-five States have signed and thirty States have ratified the Convention and seventy-one States have signed and eighteen States have ratified the Optional Protocol,

Recognizing the importance of the forthcoming fifth review and appraisal of the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons, including its updating, to be conducted by the General Assembly in 2008,

Concerned that halfway to the target date of 2015, the situation of persons with disabilities has not been adequately considered, including in the discussions and reports on the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals,

1. Calls upon those States that have not yet done so to consider signing and ratifying the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities and the Optional Protocol thereto as a matter of priority;

2. Expresses concern about the persistent gap between policy and practice regarding mainstreaming the perspective of persons with disabilities, including their rights and well-being, into the work of the United Nations in realizing the Millennium Development Goals;

3. Encourages States, entities of the United Nations system and other members of the international community to take advantage of the range of international normative and policy instruments on disability, including the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons, the Standard Rules on the Equalization of Opportunities for Persons with Disabilities, and the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities, in guiding their efforts to ensure that the issues related to persons with disabilities, including the perspective of persons with disabilities, are incorporated into the formulation of policies, the conduct of their mandate and missions and their budget allocations, aiming at the full and effective participation and inclusion of persons with disabilities in development, both as beneficiaries and as agents;

4. Invites States, relevant entities of the United Nations system, including the agencies, funds and programmes, as well as regional and international financial and development institutions, civil society and the private sector, to take into account and include mainstreaming of the issues related to persons with disabilities, including the perspective of persons with disabilities, when developing their work strategies and action plans to promote the education and training of personnel so as to foster increased sensitivity, knowledge and skills in respect of understanding how to address issues related to persons with disabilities in their respective mandates and work;

5. Requests relevant entities of the United Nations system, including the agencies, funds and programmes, as well as regional and international financial institutions, to include issues related to persons with disabilities, including the perspective of persons with disabilities, when planning country offices in accordance with their mandates;

6. Urges States, relevant entities of the United Nations system, including the agencies, funds and programmes, regional and international financial and development institutions, civil society and the private sector, to give priority to the promotion of full and productive employment and decent work for persons with disabilities, as a key factor in ensuring that persons with disabilities benefit from development on an equal basis with others, and fully enjoy all human rights, including the right to work, and the opportunity to gain a living by work freely chosen or accepted, including by providing access to education and training, access to microcredit schemes and entrepreneurial opportunities, fostering a labour market and work environment that is open, inclusive and accessible to persons with disabilities, and promoting inclusive employment and human resources policies and reasonable accommodation in the workplace;

7. Also urges States, relevant entities of the United Nations system, including the agencies, funds and programmes, as well as regional and international financial and development institutions, civil society and the private sector, to promote the participation of persons with disabilities on an equal basis with others in decision-making and their involvement in the formulation, implementation and evaluation of strategies, plans and programmes pertaining to them;

8. Stresses the need to enhance the accountability of all actors, including at the highest levels of decision-making, in the work of mainstreaming disability in the development agenda, including in the assessment of the impact of development efforts on the situation of persons with disabilities;

9. Recognizes the strategic importance of complementing efforts towards the mainstreaming of the issues related to persons with disabilities, including the perspective of persons with disabilities, inter alia, while considering the allocation of resources;

10. Encourages all States, concerned intergovernmental organizations and international organizations, civil society, in particular organizations of persons with disabilities, and the private sector to engage in cooperative arrangements that aim at providing the necessary technical and expert assistance to enhance capacities in mainstreaming issues related to persons with disabilities, including the perspective of persons with disabilities, in development efforts, and in this regard encourages the Secretariat and other relevant bodies to find improved ways to enhance international technical cooperation;

11. Encourages States to mainstream disability in poverty eradication policies and strategies to ensure their accessibility, and in this regard encourages the international community to provide support and assistance;

12. Urges all States, international and regional organizations and civil society, in particular organizations of persons with disabilities, to ensure that international cooperation, including international development programmes, is inclusive of and accessible to persons with disabilities;

13. Urges States, relevant entities of the United Nations system, including the agencies, funds and programmes, and invites international and regional development organizations and financial institutions, to take concrete measures to incorporate issues related to persons with disabilities, including the perspective of persons with disabilities, and accessibility requirements into development cooperation and development finance activities;

14. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare a report on the implementation of the present resolution for submission to the Commission for Social Development at its forty-eighth session.

Cultural development

Culture of peace

Report of UNESCO Director-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 62/89 [YUN 2007, p. 1119], the Secretary-General transmitted a July report [A/63/127] of the Director-General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) on the International Decade for a Culture of Peace and Non-Violence for the Children of the World, 2001–2010, proclaimed in Assembly resolution 53/25 [YUN 1998, p. 639]. The report, which followed on from the UNESCO 2007 annual progress report on the Decade [YUN 2007, p. 1119], provided an overview of the activities carried out by UNESCO and other UN entities to promote and implement the Programme of Action on a Culture of Peace [YUN 1999, p. 594]. Eight actions were defined in the Programme of Action: fostering a culture of peace through education; promoting sustainable economic and social development; promoting respect for all human rights; ensuring equality between women and men; fostering democratic participation; advancing understanding, tolerance and solidarity; supporting participatory communication and the free flow of information; and promoting international peace and security. Also addressed were the role of civil society, and communication and networking arrangements.

The Director-General encouraged UN agencies, funds and programmes to continue focusing their programmes on the various dimensions of the culture of peace, especially at the country level. States were encouraged to: increase educational efforts to remove hate messages, distortions, prejudice, and negative bias from textbooks and other educational media, and ensure a basic knowledge and understanding of the world's main cultures, civilizations and religions; update and revise education and cultural policies to reflect a human rights-based approach, cultural diversity, intercultural dialogue and sustainable development; revise national laws and policies that were discriminatory against women, and adopt legislation that addressed domestic violence, the trafficking of women and girls and gender-based violence; eliminate the practice of female genital mutilation, including through legal and policy reforms, national capacity-building and work at the community level; ensure that the gender dimension was integrated into all national development plans; and expand access to information and communications technologies to bring the benefits of all levels and means of education to girls and women, the excluded, the poor, the marginalized and those with special needs.

The Director-General's report was considered at the Assembly's high-level meeting on the culture of peace (12–13 November) (see p. 1217).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 5 December [meeting 64], the General Assembly adopted resolution 63/113 [draft: A/63/L.23 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 45].

Report of Secretary-General. In accordance with the above resolution, the Secretary-General submitted an October report on sport for development and peace: building on the foundations [A/63/466].

The report reviewed initiatives by both Member States and UN funds, programmes and specialized agencies during the second year of the three-year United Nations Action Plan on Sport for Development and Peace [YUN 2006, p. 1283], particularly measures implemented within the framework of the Games of the XXIX Olympiad and the XIII Paralympic Games in Beijing, China, in August and September. It also addressed the Olympic Truce (see p. 1221) and the work of the Sport for Development and Peace International Working Group, and focused on the contribution of sport to achieving the MDGs.

The report stated that, during the reporting period, Member States and the UN system, while recognizing that sport alone could not resolve complex economic and social challenges, had continued to draw on its power to promote education, health, development and peace. Renewed efforts to coordinate activities throughout the world had been undertaken following the appointment by the Secretary-General of a new Special Adviser on Sport for Development and Peace in April. The Beijing Olympic and Paralympic Games brought together the UN system and China to create improvements for the Chinese people, particularly in the areas of environment, HIV/AIDS awareness, the benefits of volunteer work and labour rights. While the global framework referred to in the Action Plan required greater investment and conceptualizing, numerous measures had been undertaken to ensure co-ordinated and coherent international responses. The second year of the Action Plan showed that support was required from the Sport for Development and Peace International Working Group to assist Governments in implementing the Working Group's policy recommendations in order to consolidate sport in cross-cutting development strategies and incorporate sport and physical education in international, regional and national development policies and programmes. Greater resources were needed to enhance the implementation of the Action Plan. A diverse funding base was required for the United Nations Office of Sport for Development and Peace that would make use of multi-stakeholder arrangements and creative partnership arrangements, on a voluntary basis, to ensure its position within the UN system. Efforts were also required to encourage aid agencies to refer to sport and physical education in their policy documents as a tool that could attract funding from Government aid budgets. In addition, a more comprehensive monitoring and evaluation framework should be developed and reinforced with systematic and scientific monitoring tools; sports celebrities should be encouraged to serve as spokespersons and goodwill ambassadors; and Member States should be urged to ratify the International Convention against Doping in Sport, adopted by UNESCO in 2005 and welcomed by the Assembly in resolution 60/9 [YUN 2005, p. 1207], and to increase international coordination for a more effective fight against doping.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 11 December [meeting 68], the General Assembly adopted resolution 63/135 [draft: A/63/L.51 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 42].

Reaffirming also its resolution 2004/34 of 21 July 2004 entitled "Protection against trafficking in cultural property", and resolution 2003/29 of 22 July 2003 entitled "Prevention of crimes that infringe on the cultural heritage of peoples in the form of movable property",

Recalling the deliberations of the Eleventh United Nations Congress on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice, and the Bangkok Declaration on Synergies and Responses: Strategic Alliances in Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice, in which the Congress took note of the increased involvement of organized criminal groups in the theft of and trafficking in cultural property and reaffirmed the fundamental importance of the implementation of existing instruments and the further development of national measures and international cooperation in criminal matters, calling upon Member States to take effective action to that end,

Expressing concern about the demand for cultural property, which leads to its loss, destruction, removal, theft and trafficking,

Alarmed at the growing involvement of organized criminal groups in all aspects of trafficking in cultural property,

Expressing regret that the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime could not convene the expert group meeting envisaged in Economic and Social Council resolution 2004/34, mainly because of the lack of extrabudgetary resources,

Stressing the importance of fostering international law enforcement cooperation to combat trafficking in cultural property and, in particular, the need to increase the exchange of information and experiences in order for competent authorities to operate in a more effective manner,

Stressing also that the entry into force of the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime has created a new impetus to international cooperation in countering and curbing transnational organized crime, which will in turn lead to innovative and broader approaches to dealing with the various manifestations of such crime, including trafficking in cultural property,

Expressing the need, where appropriate, to strengthen and fully implement mechanisms for the return or restitution of cultural property after it has been stolen or trafficked and for its protection and preservation,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General on protection against trafficking in cultural property;

2. Welcomes national, regional and international initiatives for the protection of cultural property, in particular the work of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and its Intergovernmental Committee for Promoting the Return of Cultural Property to its Countries of Origin or its Restitution in Case of Illicit Appropriation;

3. Reiterates its request that the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime, in close cooperation with the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, convene an open-ended intergovernmental expert group meeting, with interpretation in all the official languages of the United Nations, to submit to the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice at its eighteenth session relevant recommendations on protection against trafficking in cultural property, including ways of making more effective the model treaty for the prevention of crimes that infringe on the cultural heritage of peoples in the form of movable property, and invites Member States and other donors to provide extrabudgetary contributions for these purposes in accordance with the rules and procedures of the United Nations;

4. Encourages Member States asserting State ownership of cultural property to consider means of issuing statements of such ownership with a view to facilitating the enforcement of property claims in other States;

5. Urges Member States and relevant institutions, as appropriate, to strengthen and fully implement mechanisms to strengthen international cooperation, including mutual legal assistance, in order to combat trafficking in cultural property, including trafficking committed through the use of the Internet, and to facilitate the recovery, return or restitution of cultural property;

6. Urges Member States to protect cultural property and prevent trafficking in such property by introducing appropriate legislation, including, in particular, procedures for the seizure, return or restitution of cultural property, promoting education, launching awareness-raising campaigns, mapping and carrying out inventories of cultural property, providing adequate security measures, developing the capacities and human resources of monitoring institutions such as the police, customs services and the tourism sector, involving the media and disseminating information on the theft and pillaging of cultural property;

7. Also urges Member States to take effective measures to prevent the transfer of illicitly acquired or illegally obtained cultural property, especially through auctions, including through the Internet, and to effect its return or restitution to its rightful owners;

8. Further urges Member States to continue to strengthen international cooperation and mutual assistance for the prevention and prosecution of crime against cultural property that forms part of the cultural heritage of peoples, and to ratify and implement the Convention on the Means of Prohibiting and Preventing the Illicit Import, Export and Transfer of Ownership of Cultural Property and other relevant international instruments;

9. Requests the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime to develop its relations with the cooperative network established among the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the International Council of Museums, the International Criminal Police Organization (INTERPOL), the International Institute for the Unification of Private Law and the World Customs Organization in the areas of trafficking in cultural property and its return or restitution;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice at its nineteenth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Preparations for Twelfth (2010) United Nations Crime Congress

The Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice, at its seventeenth session [E/2008/30], considered a February report by the Secretary-General [E/CN.15/2008/14] on the follow-up to the Eleventh United Nations Congress on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice [YUN 2005, p. 1208] and preparations for the Twelfth Congress, scheduled for 2010 in Brazil. The report, prepared in response to General Assembly resolution 62/173 [YUN 2007, p. 1125], stated that the Secretariat had initiated consultations with the Government of Brazil to discuss a possible venue and dates for the Twelfth Congress. The informal open-ended working group on Congress preparations had agreed that the theme would be “Comprehensive strategies for global challenges: crime prevention and criminal justice systems and their development in a changing world”. It had also identified a number of topics for possible inclusion in the draft provisional agenda of the Congress and several issues that could be considered by the workshops to be held within the Congress framework. The Twelfth Congress would adopt a single declaration for consideration by the Commission at its twentieth (2011) session, in accordance with Assembly resolution 56/119 [YUN 2001, p. 1030]. Within the programme budget for the 2008–2009 biennium, resources had been allocated for the holding of four regional preparatory meetings (in Africa, Asia and the Pacific, Latin America and the Caribbean, and Western Asia), including necessary resources for the participation of the least developed countries. Following the finalization of the programme for the Twelfth Congress, including the selection of the theme, agenda items and workshop topics, the discussion guide would be prepared for consideration and approval by the Commission at its eighteenth (2009) session.

The report requested the Commission to take action in 2009 on: a decision on possible amendment of the rules of procedure for UN crime congresses, if required; recommendations on the documentation for the Twelfth Congress; and a recommendation on public information activities that should be undertaken in a timely manner in order to ensure that Governments and civil society were fully aware of and participated in the Congress and its preparations. It also recommended that the Commission, at its seventeenth session, take into consideration the action that would be required in 2009 regarding the rules of procedure, documentation and public information activities; and make its final recommendations, through the Economic and Social Council to the Assembly, on the theme of the Twelfth Congress and on the organization of round tables and workshops to be held by panels of experts.

Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice

The Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice, at its seventeenth session (Vienna, 30 November 2007 and 14–18 April 2008) [E/2008/30], recommended to the Economic and Social Council one draft resolution on preparations for the Twelfth (2010) United Nations Congress on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice (see above), for adoption by the General Assembly, and three draft resolutions and two draft decisions for adoption by the Council. The three draft resolutions for adoption by the Council related to: protection against trafficking in cultural property (see p. 1221); strengthening prevention of urban crime: an integrated approach (see p. 1227); and international cooperation in preventing and combating illicit international trafficking in forest products, including timber, wildlife and other forest biological resources (see p. 1244). It also adopted two resolutions and two decisions, which it brought to the attention of the Council.

In addition to a thematic discussion on aspects of violence against women that pertained directly to the Commission, the following matters were considered: world crime trends and responses; integration and co-ordination of efforts by the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime (UNODC) and by Member States in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice; UN congresses on crime prevention and criminal justice; use and application of UN standards and norms in crime prevention and criminal justice; policy directives for UNODC's crime programme and the role of the Commission as its governing body, including administrative, strategic management and budgetary questions; and the provisional agenda for its eighteenth (2009) session. A workshop on the theme "Eliminating violence against women: forms, strategies and tools" also took place.

On 24 July (decision 2008/245), the Council took note of the Commission's report on its seventeenth session and decided that the topics for the thematic discussion at its eighteenth (2009) session would be: "Economic fraud and identity-related crime" and "Penal reform and reduction of prison overcrowding, including the provision of legal aid in criminal justice systems". It decided that the discussion on each of the themes would last one day and approved the provisional agenda and documentation for the eighteenth session.

Administrative and budgetary questions

In response to Commission on Narcotic Drugs resolution 50/14 [YUN 2007, p. 1300] and Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice resolution 16/6 [ibid., p. 1128], the UNODC Executive Director submitted to the two Commissions a 7 February report [E/CN.7/2008/12-E/CN.15/2008/16] on the programmes and initiatives to be implemented by UNODC in the bienniums 2008–2009 and 2010–2011 and on how they conformed with the UNODC strategy for the period 2008–2011, approved by Economic and Social Council resolution 2007/12 [YUN 2007, p. 1301], as reflected in the proposed strategic framework of the United Nations for 2010–2011. The report reviewed the programmes and initiatives to be pursued in 2008 and supplemented the information provided in the 2008–2009 consolidated budget [ibid., p. 1128].

Also in response to the 2007 resolutions of the two Commissions, the Executive Director submitted the first annual report on financial issues and difficulties faced by UNODC in implementing its mandates and an initial assessment of ways and means of improving the financial situation [E/CN.7/2008/11-E/CN.15/2008/15]. The report provided an overview of the programmes and initiatives to be pursued in 2008, in addition to the information provided in the 2008–2009 consolidated budget. It described some of the financial difficulties faced by UNODC in implementing its mandates, outlined measures taken to cope with them and presented proposals to address those problems. The Executive Director concluded that, in order to meet UNODC's financial challenges, Member States should: acknowledge and maintain the increasingly strong support provided to UNODC from many countries and institutions; stress the importance of stable and predictable multilateral core resources; and establish an informal open-ended working group to explore ways and means to address the Office's financial challenges. The working group could be co-chaired by the chairmen of the two Commissions, along the lines of the process that led to the 2008–2011 strategy for UNODC. He also recommended that UNODC continue to align, under the UN strategic framework, the consolidated budget with the 2008–2011 strategy, thereby ensuring integrated planning and budgeting as a basis for better result-based reporting to States and compliance with their policy directives.

In accordance with the same 2007 resolutions of the Commissions, the Executive Director submitted a 14 March report on deviations from the standard programme support charge of 13 per cent during the 2005–2007 period [E/CN.7/2008/14-E/CN.15/2008/19]. The report described exemptions and reductions provided to donors in respect of the 13 per cent charge and the basis for them. It provided information on the UN policy on programme support costs and on the application and evolution of that policy, on the definition and purpose of the programme support charge and on UNODC experience in that regard. It stated that, in 2008 and 2009, UNODC would continue to apply the UN policies and procedures with respect to the programme support charge and to ensure the application of clear and consistent criteria in the granting of exceptions to the standard 13 per cent rate. UNODC would also ensure the application of the programme support charge policies developed under the One United Nations initiative [YUN 2006, p. 1584].

A 20 March note by the Secretariat [E/CN.7/2008/18], prepared in response to Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice resolution 16/6 [YUN 2007, p. 1128], provided information on the implementation status and resource requirements of resolutions and decisions relating to the crime prevention and criminal justice programme adopted by the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council and the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice in the period 2003–2007 in which action by UNODC was requested.

On 18 April [E/2008/30 (dec. 17/2)], the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice took note of the three reports cited above. It decided to establish an open-ended intergovernmental working group to discuss and prepare recommendations, to be submitted to the Commission's eighteenth (2009) session, on how to ensure political ownership by Member States and on how to improve the UNODC governance structure and financial situation. The Office was requested to assist the working group.

Crime prevention programme

At its seventeenth session, the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice considered the UNODC Executive Director's report on the Office's 2007 activities [E/CN.7/2008/3-E/CN.15/2008/3], which focused on how drug control, crime prevention, terrorism prevention and criminal justice interacted with peace, security, development and the rule of law. During the period under review, UNODC supported Member States in their efforts to achieve a world safe from crime, drugs and terrorism through the three pillars of its work programme: research to increase knowledge and understanding of drug and crime issues and to expand the evidence base for policy and operational decisions; normative work to assist States in the ratification and implementation of international treaties, the development of domestic legislation on drugs, crime and terrorism and the provision of substantive and secretariat services to treaty-based and governing bodies; and field-based technical cooperation projects. The report also contained the information requested by Economic and Social Council resolution 2006/21 [YUN 2006, p. 1315] concerning implementation of the Programme of Action, 2006–2010, on strengthening the rule of law and criminal justice systems in Africa.

With regard to transnational organized crime, the report noted that a UNODC priority was to promote the ratification and implementation of the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime [YUN 2000, p. 1048] (see p. 1233) and its three supplementary Protocols (Protocol to Prevent, Suppress and Punish Trafficking in Persons, Especially Women and Children [ibid., p. 1063]; Protocol against the Smuggling of Migrants by Land, Sea and Air [ibid., p. 1067]; Protocol against the Illicit Manufacturing of and Trafficking in Firearms, Their Parts and Components and Ammunition [YUN 2001, p. 1036]). UNODC helped States implement the provisions of the Protocol to Prevent, Suppress and Punish Trafficking in Persons in order to prevent human trafficking, protect the victims and bring the traffickers to justice. It identified shortcomings in the implementation of the Protocol against the Smuggling of Migrants, and stressed that policies to reduce smuggling of migrants should be regional in scope and comprehensive, consistent and anticipatory, while upholding human rights and protecting the safety and lives of migrants should be central elements. UNODC also emphasized the development of ways to prevent trafficking, protect victims and prosecute offenders. In March, the United Nations Global Initiative to Fight Human Trafficking (UN.GIFT) was launched, with support from the United Arab Emirates, to increase awareness of human trafficking, promote rights-based responses, build the capacity of state and non-state actors, and foster partnerships for joint action. During the year, the Office prepared a draft model law against trafficking in persons and developed a draft legislative checklist of complementary measures, including legal measures to facilitate an effective response to trafficking in persons. UNODC continued to be the custodian of the 2003 United Nations Convention against Corruption [YUN 2003, p. 1127].

In the area of international cooperation against terrorism, the Office reinforced its technical assistance work on the legal and related aspects of counter-terrorism, pursuant to the United Nations Global Counter-Terrorism Strategy, adopted by General Assembly resolution 60/288 [YUN 2006, p. 66]. It also helped countries ratify and implement the international instruments related to terrorism, worked closely with the Counter-Terrorism Committee of the Security Council and its Executive Directorate, and contributed to the work of the multi-agency Counter-Terrorism Implementation Task Force. As to emerging policy issues, the report highlighted the increase in the transnational occurrence and range of offences of economic fraud and identity-related crime; cybercrime, including the use of the Internet for child exploitation, Internet pharmacies and money-laundering; and environmental crime, noting that international trafficking in forest products had a particularly adverse environmental, social and economic impact in many countries. UNODC carried out research and analysis on laws, resolutions and recommendations on the prevention of trafficking in protected species in connection with organized criminal groups. With regard to justice reform, the report noted that strengthening criminal justice institutions was central to UNODC work and that the Office had led more than 12 justice reform missions in transitional, post-conflict and developing countries in 2007, including 5 large judicial programmes, mainly in Africa.

During the year, the Office published an updated edition of the Compendium of United Nations Standards and Norms in Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice in the six official languages of the Organization; the report Crime and Development in Central America: Caught in the Crossfire; and a joint study with the World Bank entitled Crime, Violence and Development: Trends, Costs and Policy Options in the Caribbean.

The report recommended that the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice: provide financial resources for the establishment and maintenance of an online information-sharing system concerning technical assistance activities for both donor and beneficiary States and international organizations; strengthen UNODC work on counter-terrorism; give higher priority to the development of sustainable forensic science services and of networks of laboratories and scientists with a view to ensuring a more effective exchange of expertise; strengthen drug and crime data collection activities; encourage Member States to use manuals and handbooks showing how the standards and norms could be applied and assist developing countries, countries with economies in transition and those in post-conflict situations in applying standards and norms and introducing criminal justice reform; keep apprised of emerging policy issues and possible responses in the areas of cybercrime, child sexual exploitation, fraud and identity theft, and environmental crime; and emphasize the importance of providing regular and adequate financial resources to UNODC.

In resolution 63/197 (see p. 1348), the General Assembly urged States that had not yet done so to ratify or accede to, and States parties to implement, as a matter of priority, the provisions of the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime and the Protocols thereto and the United Nations Convention against Corruption.

Strengthening urban crime prevention

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 24 July [meeting 42], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice [E/2008/30], adopted resolution 2008/24 without vote [agenda item 14 (c)].

Strengthening prevention of urban crime: an integrated approach

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 62/175 of 18 December 2007 on strengthening the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme, in particular its technical cooperation capacity, in which the Assembly reaffirmed the importance of the Programme in promoting effective action to strengthen international cooperation in crime prevention and criminal justice, as well as of the work of the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime in the fulfilment of its mandate in crime prevention and criminal justice, including providing to Member States, upon request and as a matter of high priority, technical cooperation, advisory services and other forms of assistance, and coordinating with and complementing the work of all relevant and competent United Nations bodies and offices, and recalling also that, in that resolution, the Assembly drew attention to urban crime as an emerging policy issue,

Recalling also its resolution 2007/12 of 25 July 2007 on the strategy for the period 2008–2011 for the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime, in which community-centred crime prevention was designated a result area,

Mindful of its resolution 1995/9 of 24 July 1995, in which it adopted guidelines for cooperation and technical assistance in the field of urban crime prevention, as contained in the annex to that resolution, and its resolution 2002/13 of 24 July 2002, in which it accepted the Guidelines for the Prevention of Crime, contained in the annex to that resolution,

Recalling its resolution 2005/22 of 22 July 2005 on action to promote effective crime prevention and resolution 2006/20 of 27 July 2006 on United Nations standards and norms in crime prevention, in which it acknowledged the need to achieve a balanced approach between crime prevention and criminal justice responses,

Considering that the fight against crime can effectively reach its objectives through a combination of national policies on criminal justice and crime prevention to address the causes of crime and violence, bearing in mind that allocating resources to crime prevention can greatly reduce the financial and social costs of crime,

Recognizing the importance of the engagement between civil society and law enforcement authorities in the planning and implementation of crime prevention activities,

Recalling the commitments made by the international community in the United Nations Millennium Declaration, in particular regarding the fight against crime and the objective of making the right to development a reality for everyone,

1. Encourages Member States to adopt and strengthen, as appropriate, effective urban crime prevention responses, with a view to achieving an appropriate balance with criminal justice actions;

2. Also encourages Member States to integrate crime prevention considerations into all relevant social and economic policies and programmes in order to effectively address the conditions in which crime and violence can emerge;

3. Requests the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime to explicitly address the crime prevention component in its programme of work and reporting, where relevant, including good practices that integrate crime prevention and criminal justice;

4. Invites Member States and other donors to provide extrabudgetary contributions to the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime to support technical assistance activities in this area, in accordance with the rules and procedures of the United Nations.

Strengthening technical cooperation

In response to General Assembly resolution 62/175 [YUN 2007, p. 1130], the Secretary-General submitted a July report on strengthening the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme, in particular its technical cooperation capacity [A/63/99], which summarized UNODC work in supporting Member States in countering transnational organized crime, corruption and terrorism, and in preventing crime and strengthening criminal justice systems. It also provided information on efforts to strengthen the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme, with a focus on the role of the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice as its governing body, and on the financial situation of the Office and the funding structure of the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Fund. In addition, it highlighted emerging policy issues and possible responses and, as requested in Assembly resolution 62/173 [ibid., p. 1125], described preparations for the Twelfth United Nations Congress on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice. The report also contained recommendations aimed at further enhancing the Programme on: organized crime; fighting human trafficking; countering the smuggling of migrants; curbing corruption; countering terrorism; UN standards and norms in crime prevention and criminal justice; violence against women; data collection, research and analysis; emerging policy issues; and financial support.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December [meeting 71], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/63/431], adopted resolution 63/195 without vote [agenda item 97].

Strengthening the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme, in particular its technical cooperation capacity

The General Assembly,

Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme network

In a January report [E/CN.15/2008/8] to the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice, the Secretary-General summarized the activities carried out in 2007 by the institutions comprising the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme network, which included the United Nations Interregional Crime and Justice Research Institute (UNICRI); 13 regional and affiliated institutes; and the International Scientific and Professional Advisory Council.

United Nations Interregional Crime and Justice Research Institute

In a January note [E/CN.15/2008/13], the Secretary-General submitted to the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice the report of the Board of Trustees of UNICRI on its sixteenth session (Turin, Italy, 4–5 October 2007), in accordance with the statute of the Institute, annexed to Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/56 [YUN 1989, p. 637]. The report considered the work programme and related budget proposals for 2008–2009 and reviewed and evaluated the Institute's activities in 2006–2007.

In a February note [E/CN.15/2008/17], the Secretary-General drew the Commission's attention to the expiry, on 30 November, of the five-year terms of office of two members of the UNICRI Board of Trustees and provided background information on candidates nominated to fill those positions.

The Commission [E/2008/30] recommended to the Council the adoption of a draft decision by which it would endorse the appointment of two members to the UNICRI Board of Trustees.

By decision 2008/246 of 24 July, the Council endorsed those appointments.

United Nations African crime prevention institute

In response to General Assembly resolution 62/174 [YUN 2007, p. 1132], the Secretary-General submitted a July report on the United Nations African Institute for the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders (UNAFRI) [A/63/87]. He described UNAFRI's substantive programme and the activities developed to support African States in crime prevention and criminal justice. He also examined the governance and management of UNAFRI and measures taken to initiate and maintain international cooperation and partnerships with other agencies, and identified further opportunities for funding and support. He also addressed the future of the Institute as a unique regional promoter of socio-economic development through crime prevention initiatives and suggested measures to ensure its sustainability. Information available to UNAFRI showed the difficulties faced by African countries in managing their criminal justice systems; in most African States, the rule of law and good governance were compromised by conflict or its aftermath. Because of limited human resources, insufficient infrastructure and inappropriate equipment, viable investments in effective crime prevention and criminal justice systems, in particular in the fight against organized criminal groups, remained a challenge in Africa. Nonetheless, efforts were increasingly being made to build capacity in crime prevention and criminal justice administration.

UNAFRI continued to: promote crime prevention through the incorporation into the action plans of States of the provisions of relevant international instruments and good practices; consolidate information-sharing capacity through awareness-raising programmes and collaboration with partner agencies; and encourage the upgrading of skills through research, knowledge-sharing, the encouragement of professionalism and the exchange of expertise. Efforts were made to incorporate international instruments in national legislation, while taking into consideration the needs and realities of each country and exposing officials to selected traditions relating to crime prevention and criminal justice administration.

Thanks to the pivotal role of UNODC, UNAFRI continued to cooperate with other members of the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme Network. It also established contacts with organizations in countries that promoted crime prevention programmes, and maintained close links with regional and subregional political entities, such as the Commission of the African Union, the East African Community, the Economic Commission of West African States, the Intergovernmental Authority on Development and the Southern African Development Community.

UNAFRI's income for 2007 totalled $344,422, a drastic drop from the $826,106 received in 2006. The decline was attributed to the low level of contributions received from States. The sources of the funds were: assessed contributions from States (13 per cent); a UN grant (67 per cent); and other income received from rental of the Institute's premises and facilities, as well as interest on deposits (20 per cent). For the period January–May 2008, resources amounted to $356,935, consisting of the 2008 portion of the UN grant for 2008–2009, and income received from the rental of UNAFRI premises.

The report concluded that the impact of crime was imposing an escalating cost on social development in Africa, and the complex nature of transnational organized crime posed unprecedented challenges to the existing competences, weak facilities and scarce resources available for combating crime. Those challenges increased vulnerability and the need for concerted strategies, specialized technical support for capacity-building, the sharing of good practices based on regional and international initiatives and research to facilitate the development of policies and the implementation of remedial measures. As a mechanism for harnessing the available potential at local, regional and international levels, UNAFRI continued to design programmes that were mindful of the needs of African countries for the development of effective crime prevention measures and the establishment of suitable criminal justice administrations.

11. Also requests the Secretary-General to continue his efforts to mobilize the financial resources necessary to maintain the Institute with the core professional staff required to enable it to function effectively in the fulfilment of its mandated obligations;

12. Calls upon the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime to continue to work closely with the Institute;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to enhance the promotion of regional cooperation, coordination and collaboration in the fight against crime, especially in its transnational dimension, which cannot be dealt with adequately by national action alone;

Crime data collection

In a January note on world crime trends and responses [E/CN.15/2008/7], the Secretariat submitted to the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice a summary of UNODC's work in the area of crime data collection, through the analysis of the Ninth and Tenth United Nations Surveys of Crime Trends and Operations of Criminal Justice Systems, and a number of international data sources. It also provided an overview of studies and activities carried out in 2007 in crime and development, trafficking in persons and corruption. The United Nations survey on crime trends and operations of criminal justice systems was the Organization's main data-collection instrument, collecting police and judicial statistics from all Member States. Nine surveys had been concluded, representing data for the period 1976–2004; the questionnaires for the tenth survey were disseminated in 2007. In accordance with the recommendations of the 2006 expert group on ways of improving crime data collection, research and analysis [YUN 2006, p. 1296], UNODC developed a plan to increase and facilitate country responses to the survey, including an analysis of response patterns and a survey of users of the results. The questionnaire for the tenth survey was revised, with most changes relating to crime definitions and the establishment of a system aimed at eliminating ambiguities of interpretation and solving problems of data consistency. New crime categories were added and the definitions of others slightly changed to align them with international instruments or other international data collections.

UNODC contributed to building capacity for crime data collection and reporting, including by promoting crime and victimization surveys. During 2007, preparations for several surveys in African countries were carried out and activities within UNODC's Data for Africa initiative were closely coordinated with UNAFRI. UNODC worked on the identification of core indicators of conventional crime and on developing indicators of transnational organized crime. It also cooperated with UN entities and non-governmental organizations (NGOs) on initiatives to improve crime data and national capacities to collect data. In particular, it engaged in the UN system-wide process of developing indicators to measure violence against women and emphasized the importance of developing indicators on such violence that related well to existing work in the assessment and monitoring of crime trends. Following the publication of the Manual for the Measurement of Juvenile Justice Indicators, UNODC continued to explore with the United Nations Children's Fund ways to support Member States in gathering systematic data on children in conflict with the law.

The Secretariat recommended that the Commission urge Member States to engage in regular reporting of data on crime trends at the national, regional and international levels, including through systematic participation in the United Nations survey on crime trends and operations of criminal justice systems and crime victim surveys. In particular, it should encourage States to participate in the tenth and subsequent surveys. The Commission might also support and encourage States in developing national capacity for the generation and collection of criminal justice statistics, including by the police, prosecutors, courts and penal systems, and the development of population-based surveys. It might also wish to explore ways to enhance statistical and research capacity for the collection of data on the issues of trafficking in persons, corruption, children in conflict with the law, violence against women and transnational organized crime.

Transnational organized crime

United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime

In response to Economic and Social Council resolution 2005/17 [YUN 2005, p. 1224] and General Assembly resolution 61/181 [YUN 2006, p. 1293], the Secretary-General submitted to the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice a February report on international cooperation in combating transnational organized crime and corruption [E/CN.15/2008/4] (see also below, under "Corruption"). The report reviewed UNODC activities and complemented the report of the Conference of the Parties to the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime on its third session [YUN 2007, p. 1134] and of the Conference of the States Parties to the United Nations Convention against Corruption at its second session (see p. 1239). The United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime, adopted by Assembly resolution 55/25 [YUN 2000, p. 1048], and its three supplementary Protocols (Protocol to Prevent, Suppress and Punish Trafficking in Persons, Especially Women and Children [ibid., p. 1063]; Protocol against the Smuggling of Migrants by Land, Sea and Air [ibid., p. 1067]; Protocol against the Illicit Manufacturing of and Trafficking in Firearms, Their Parts and Components and Ammunition, adopted by the Assembly in resolution 55/255 [YUN 2001, p. 1036]) continued to attract adherence. As at 31 December, 147 States were parties to the Convention, 124 were parties to the trafficking-in-persons Protocol, 117 were parties to the migrants Protocol and 77 were parties to the firearms Protocol. UNODC made it a priority to promote universal ratification of those instruments and provide assistance to States seeking to ratify and implement them.

The report recommended that the Commission support the work of the Conference of the Parties to the Convention. In particular, it might urge States to make financial contributions in support of technical assistance activities and explore ways to maintain and strengthen the political momentum necessary for the Conference to perform its mandated functions. The Commission might also urge States that had not yet done so to ratify or accede to the Convention and the Protocols, invite them to pursue efforts for implementation and take advantage of the wide array of tools and assistance that UNODC continued to offer in the fight against transnational organized crime.

Conference of Parties to the Convention

The Conference of the Parties to the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime, at its fourth session (Vienna, 8–17 October) [CTOC/COP/2008/19], adopted eight decisions on: possible mechanisms to review implementation of the Convention and the Protocols thereto; implementation of the provisions on international cooperation of the Convention; implementation of the provisions on technical assistance of the Convention; trafficking in human beings; implementation of the Protocol against the Smuggling of Migrants by Land, Sea and Air, supplementing the Convention; implementation of the Protocol against the Illicit Manufacturing of and Trafficking in Firearms, Their Parts and Components and Ammunition, supplementing the Convention; amendment of rule 18 of the rules of procedure for the Conference of the Parties to the Convention; and reorganization of the work of the fifth (2010) session of the Conference of the Parties to the Convention.

Trafficking in persons

Commission action. In response to Economic and Social Council resolution 2006/27 [YUN 2006, p. 1297], the Secretary-General submitted to the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice a January report on strengthening international cooperation in preventing and combating trafficking in persons and protecting victims of such trafficking [E/CN.15/2008/6]. The report contained an analysis of replies received by UNODC, as at 24 January, from 23 States and one regional organization on their efforts to implement that resolution in the areas of: ratification of the Protocol to Prevent, Suppress and Punish Trafficking in Persons, Especially Women and Children and legal provisions; enforcement; training and seminars; prevention and awareness-raising; assistance to and protection of victims; national coordination mechanisms; and international cooperation. It provided an account of UNODC technical assistance in 2007, in particular through its Inter-Agency Cooperation Group against Trafficking in Persons (ICAT), which fostered coordination and cooperation among UN agencies and other international organizations to assist States in preventing and combating human trafficking. ICAT also promoted the effective use of resources and shared information, experiences and good practices on anti-trafficking activities of the partner agencies with Governments, international and regional organizations, NGOs and other relevant bodies. The report concluded that national coordination mechanisms and plans were valuable in developing a multi-agency response to prevent and counter human trafficking, and well-planned, comprehensive and effectively delivered awareness-raising and information campaigns were important components of national strategies. It encouraged States to consider providing training programmes and courses for law enforcement officers and other professionals and to consider introducing measures to ensure the protection of victims of trafficking. Continued efforts were also needed to promote cooperation between law enforcement agencies and legal authorities at the bilateral, regional and international levels. In light of the lack of information available with respect to trafficking in persons in post-conflict situations and regions of natural disaster, States might wish to consider that issue further.

In a February report to the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice [E/CN.15/2008/10], the UNODC Executive Director provided an overview of the activities of the United Nations Global Initiative to Fight Human Trafficking (UN.GIFT), launched by UNODC in 2007 [YUN 2007, p. 1141], with the financial support of the United Arab Emirates, to raise awareness, stimulate international action and implement the Protocol to Prevent, Suppress and Punish Trafficking in Persons, Especially Women and Children, supplementing the UN Convention against Transnational Organized Crime. The report, based on information available as at 31 January, noted that, in accordance with the Commission's 2007 decisions 16/1 [ibid.] and 16/2 [ibid.], UNODC had held consultative meetings at which Member States provided guidance for the Global Initiative and for the Vienna Forum to Fight Human Trafficking, to be held from 13 to 15 February 2008. In addition, a Steering Committee met regularly to coordinate UN.GIFT's activities. The Executive Director recommended that UNODC should prepare a report on the Vienna Forum and on progress of the Global Initiative for submission to the Conference of the Parties to the UN Convention against Transnational Organized Crime at its fourth session (see above), with further reporting to the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice. The Steering Committee was urged to review the results of the Vienna Forum and coordinate any further action. Member States were encouraged to ratify and implement the trafficking-in-persons Protocol and to promote the use of the wide array of tools and assistance offered by UNODC to prevent and counter trafficking.

The Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice, in April [E/2008/30 (res.17/1)], welcomed the holding of the Vienna Forum (see p. 1235) as a part of the awareness-raising efforts to fight human trafficking, and requested UNODC to continue consultations with Member States, to ensure that the Global Initiative was carried out as a technical assistance project and to brief States on the UN.GIFT workplan, to be executed before the end of the project in 2009. It also requested UNODC to use the Conference of the Parties to the UN Convention against Transnational Organized Crime and other relevant intergovernmental mechanisms to raise public awareness, increase knowledge, facilitate cooperation and partnerships and implement actions to combat human trafficking. States that had not yet done so were urged to ratify or accede to the Convention, particularly the trafficking in persons Protocol, and all States were encouraged to strengthen their national policies and cooperation with the UN system and to discourage the demand that fostered exploitation, in accordance with the trafficking-in-persons Protocol. UNODC, in its capacity as ICAT coordinator, was requested to report to the Commission's eighteenth (2009) session, and States were invited to provide voluntary contributions to UNODC for technical assistance activities and to participate in the General Assembly's 2008 thematic debate on human trafficking (see below).

Vienna Forum to Fight Human Trafficking

The Vienna Forum to Fight Human Trafficking (Vienna, 13–15 February) [CTOC/COP/2008/CRP.1], convened by UN.GIFT, aimed to raise awareness about human trafficking, forge new partnerships and facilitate cooperation. Three main themes were discussed in panels and workshops: vulnerability to trafficking in persons; its impact on individuals and society; and action against it. The various dimensions of human trafficking were considered in relation to security, development and human rights, and the Forum set the path for future anti-trafficking efforts. The Chairperson emphasized the need to address aggressively all forms of exploitation, including forced labour, and underscored UN.GIFT's critical role.

The Forum emphasized the need for adequate national legislation to cover all aspects of trafficking and for a victim-centred, human rights approach to preventing and combating trafficking in persons, with an understanding that supporting victims could positively impact criminal justice actions. It also highlighted the importance of increased research and awareness-raising and of increased cooperation among agencies, civil society and the private sector within countries and on an international level. The Forum called for a greater effort to confront all aspects of trafficking, including sexual exploitation and forced labour, and recommended that monitoring and evaluation mechanisms should be developed and implemented, and the nature of appropriate monitoring mechanisms should be addressed. It was agreed that the root causes of human trafficking should be confronted using a balanced approach, but that increased attention should be placed on how to reduce demand for trafficked persons in destination countries.

General Assembly thematic debate. On 3 June, the General Assembly held a thematic debate on human trafficking. Two panels considered the issues of: enhancing multilateral cooperation to prevent trafficking in persons; and protecting victims of trafficking and cross-border cooperation in prosecuting traffickers in persons.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

Report of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 61/180 [YUN 2006, p. 1299], the Secretary-General transmitted a July report on improving the coordination of efforts against trafficking in persons [A/63/90] that contained information on mechanisms utilized and activities carried out by UNODC to implement its coordination functions, through its own research, technical assistance and legal advisory services, as well as its inter-agency coordination and cooperation activities. It described data collection; collaboration between UNODC and other international bodies; and UN.GIFT activities. The Secretary-General noted that during the thematic debate on human trafficking held by the Assembly on 3 June (see p. 1235), several States had called for the elaboration of a global action plan in support of the implementation of the trafficking in persons Protocol. Such an action plan could spell out concrete measures for Member States to take in addressing the conditions that made people vulnerable to trafficking, to prevent and combat trafficking, to protect victims and to assist all partners. The framework could be based on the three "Ps" of efforts against human trafficking:

prevention, prosecution and protection; and a fourth “P”, on partnership, could also be considered. The Assembly played an important role in coordinating international action against trafficking in persons and facilitating the implementation of the trafficking-in-persons Protocol and the Protocol against the Smuggling of Migrants by Land, Sea and Air.

Strategies for crime prevention

Corruption

United Nations Convention against Corruption

In response to Economic and Social Council resolution 2006/24 [YUN 2006, p. 1301] and General Assembly resolution 61/181 [ibid., p. 1293], the Secretary-General submitted to the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice a February report on international cooperation in combating transnational organized crime and corruption [E/CN.15/2008/4] (see also above, under "Transnational organized crime"). The report described UNODC activities to promote ratification and implementation of the UN Convention against Corruption, adopted by Assembly resolution 58/4 [YUN 2003, p. 1127], and complemented the report of the Conference of the Parties to the Convention on its second session (see below).

The report suggested that the Commission urge States that had not yet done so to ratify or accede to the Convention and to ensure its implementation. In particular, States might be urged to provide financial and material contributions for the convening of working groups and workshops for the Convention's implementation.

As at 31 December, 129 States were parties to the Convention.

Conference of States Parties to the Convention

In response to General Assembly resolution 62/202 [YUN 2007, p. 1135], the Secretary-General, by a June note [A/63/86], transmitted to the Assembly the report of the Conference of the States Parties to the United Nations Convention against Corruption on its second session (Nusa Dua, Indonesia, 28 January–1 February) [CAC/COSP/2008/15].

The Conference adopted five resolutions on: review of implementation; appeal to States parties and invitation to signatories to the Convention to continue to adapt their legislation and regulations; asset recovery; strengthening coordination and enhancing technical assistance for the Convention's implementation; and consideration of the issue of bribery of officials of public international organizations. It also adopted one decision on the venue for its third (2009) session.

Assets of illicit origin

In response to General Assembly resolution 62/202 [YUN 2007, p. 1135], the Secretary-General submitted a June report on preventing and combating corrupt practices and transfer of assets of illicit origin and returning such assets, in particular to the countries of origin, consistent with the UN Convention against Corruption [A/63/88]. The report provided information on the outcome of the second session of the Conference of the States Parties to the Convention (see above) and on preparations for its third session, and described measures taken by States to prevent and combat corruption and to work for the prompt return of assets of illicit origin. It also provided an overview of international action being taken against corruption and for asset recovery, reviewed UNODC work carried out individually and in partnership with other entities, and presented information on matters related to resources.

The report recommended that the Assembly encourage Member States to ratify or accede to the Convention and support its implementation. It also stressed the need to consolidate the achievements made at the first and second sessions of the Conference of the States Parties and to ensure appropriate preparations for the third (2009) session, noting that an important challenge facing the third session would be to reach agreement on the terms of reference of the mechanism for reviewing the Convention's implementation. To that end, the working groups of the Conference needed to engage in dialogue on the possible terms of reference for such a mechanism and discuss steps for the implementation of chapter V of the Convention, on asset recovery, and the technical assistance to be provided. Success in the priority area of asset recovery would depend on the ability of the Conference to focus on substantive issues and the implementation of the relevant provisions of the Convention. The report concluded that more financial and human resources would be required to enable UNODC to promote the implementation of the Convention and discharge its functions as the secretariat of the Conference. It suggested that the Assembly might wish to give early consideration to the needs of UNODC and explore ways of addressing them in the 2010–2011 biennium.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December [meeting 72], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/63/416/Add.4], adopted resolution 63/226 without vote [agenda item 51 (d)].

Terrorism

In a January report to the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice on assistance in implementing the universal conventions and protocols related to terrorism [E/CN.15/2008/5], the Secretary-General reviewed progress made by UNODC in delivering technical assistance on legal and related capacity-building in the area of counter-terrorism, in particular by its Terrorism Prevention Branch. The report also addressed the challenges ahead, especially in the implementation of the United Nations Global Counter-Terrorism Strategy, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 60/288 [YUN 2006, p. 66], and emphasized the need for enhanced governmental support in that regard.

The scope of specialized technical assistance in the legal and related capacity-building areas provided by UNODC had grown consistently since 2003 in terms of geographical reach, the number of countries receiving assistance and its substantive content, and partnerships had been developed with international, regional and subregional organizations. The increased number of requests for assistance had to be met expeditiously to sustain and increase the momentum for action at the national level and to ensure effective long-term follow-up. As more States ratified the relevant international legal instruments, enhanced implementation assistance was needed, especially to strengthen the capacity of national criminal justice systems to apply the provisions of the legal regime against terrorism in conformity with the principles of the rule of law and human rights. In that regard, sustained services and follow-up needed to be ensured, new specialized tools developed and existing tools refined. Moreover, in response to the United Nations Global Counter-Terrorism Strategy, UNODC had to promote legal co-operation at the regional and subregional levels, good practices, legal research and academic training in the area of counter-terrorism. It should also strengthen its network of field-level experts and integrate counter-terrorism aspects into all substantive areas of its mandates and work, such as money-laundering, transnational organized crime, drug trafficking, corruption and criminal justice reform. The Commission could provide guidance with regard to the reinforcement of UNODC's technical assistance work on counter-terrorism and on the strengthening of its network of field-level experts. UNODC would contribute to the work of the Counter-Terrorism Implementation Task Force to assist States in their implementation of the Global Counter-Terrorism Strategy, and would continue to establish and reinforce partnerships with other organizations, both within and outside the UN system, to enhance the impact of its technical assistance. It was suggested that the Commission might wish to invite international, regional and subregional organizations to enhance their cooperation with UNODC on counter-terrorism. While acknowledging that donor countries had provided invaluable voluntary contributions towards UNODC work in counter-terrorism, it was noted that the resource level was inadequate to meet the increasing number of requests for technical assistance and the corresponding expansion in operational activities and initiatives. Increased and multi-year voluntary contributions by donors and cost-sharing arrangements with assisted countries were essential. It was also necessary to provide from the regular budget the minimum core capacity required in terms of the specialized expertise and secretariat functions needed to deliver the expanded programme.

In accordance with General Assembly resolution 62/172 [YUN 2007, p. 1138], the Secretary-General submitted a June report on assistance in implementing the universal conventions and protocols related to terrorism [A/63/89], in which he focused on activities carried out by UNODC, in particular by its Terrorism Prevention Branch, with regard to delivery of technical assistance between 1 June 2007 and 31 May 2008. He updated the information contained in his January report to the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice (see above). The Secretary-General suggested that the Assembly might wish to provide further guidance with regard to the reinforcement of the technical assistance delivered by UNODC on counter-terrorism issues, covering both the specialized services for strengthening the legal regime against terrorism and the services for addressing the cross-cutting issues of drug control and crime and terrorism prevention. The Assembly might also reiterate its call with regard to UNODC involvement in the work of the Counter-Terrorism Implementation Task Force, urge relevant organizations to enhance their cooperation with the Office on counter-terrorism issues, and invite States to increase the level of extrabudgetary and regular budget resources for UNODC activities in the area of terrorism prevention. Given the ongoing potential threat posed by terrorism, it was imperative to continue to provide support to efforts to strengthen the legal regime against terrorism and enhance related national capacities.

Communications. By a 16 April letter [E/CN.15/2008/21], the Russian Federation and the United States transmitted to the UNODC Executive Director the United States-Russian Strategic Framework Declaration, adopted in Sochi, Russian Federation, on 6 April. A significant part of the Declaration concerned the rule of law and combating global terrorism.

On 17 June [A/62/884], Uzbekistan conveyed to the Secretary-General information about the existing system in that country on opposing the legalization of income derived from criminal activity and countering the financing of terrorism.

By a 15 August letter [A/62/947-S/2008/585], Panama transmitted to the Secretary-General the Panama Declaration, adopted by Colombia, Costa Rica, the Dominican Republic, El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras, Mexico, Nicaragua, Panama and Peru at the Second Ministerial Conference on International Cooperation against Terrorism and Transnational Organized Crime (Panama City, Panama, 26–29 May).

On 11 December, the Assembly, in resolution 63/129 (see p. 1441), requested the UNODC Terrorism Prevention Branch to continue its efforts to enhance UN capabilities in preventing terrorism and recognized UNODC's role in assisting States in becoming parties to and implementing the relevant international conventions and protocols relating to terrorism and in strengthening internal cooperation mechanisms in criminal matters related to terrorism, including through national capacity-building.

The Assembly, on 18 December, took note of the Secretary-General's report on assistance in implementing the universal conventions and protocols related to terrorism (above) (decision 63/536).

Violence against women and girls

In response to Economic and Social Council resolution 2006/29 [YUN 2006, p. 1338], the Secretary-General submitted to the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice a February report on crime prevention and criminal justice responses to violence against women and girls [E/CN.15/2008/2] (see also p. 1263). The report provided an overview of the development of UNODC's technical assistance programme and contained information received from Member States on their response to the problem of violence against women and girls. All of those countries that had provided information reported that efforts were being made to ensure that national strategies, action plans and legislative frameworks included provision and/or guidelines for ensuring effective criminal justice responses to violence against women. They recognized that efforts should be made in the areas of: national action plans; legislation and judicial procedures; the police; victim support and assistance; training; awareness-raising/information campaigns; research and data collection; ensuring effective criminal justice responses to violence against women and girls; and special considerations on children. UNODC continued to expand its technical assistance programme for strengthening criminal justice system responses to gender-based violence, and had made efforts to build partnerships with other UN entities, regional organizations and NGOs and to include the criminal justice system as part of a holistic response. However, there was a need to expand its work in the context of overall UN efforts in that regard.

The Secretary-General recommended that the Commission might wish to encourage Member States to provide extrabudgetary resources for continuing the development and implementation of field-based projects and programmes, with a focus on victims and witnesses; encourage UNODC to continue to assist States in the area of criminal justice system responses to violence against women and girls; and urge States to support the use of UN indicators on violence against women and girls through population-based surveys and the collection of administrative information. The Commission might also wish to enhance national statistical and research capacity for data collection; emphasize the importance of UNODC incorporating the issue of gender more broadly into its programmes and projects in the justice sector; and urge UNODC to provide assistance to States, with a particular focus on: access to justice for women victims of violence; access to health and other services for female victims of violence; strengthening data collection on all forms of violence against women and girls; and the situation of women in detention, as well as children residing in prison with their mothers.

The Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice, in April [E/2008/30 (dec. 17/1)], condemned all acts of violence against women and girls, including violence against women migrants and women migrant workers, whether those acts were perpetrated by the State, by private persons or by non-State actors, and called for the elimination of all forms of gender-based violence in the family, in the community and where perpetrated or condoned by the State. It stressed that violence against women meant any act of gender-based violence that resulted in, or was likely to result in, physical, sexual or psychological harm or suffering to women, including the threat of such acts, coercion or arbitrary deprivation of liberty, whether occurring in public or private life. The Commission requested UNODC to convene an intergovernmental group of experts, in cooperation with the institutes of the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme Network, the Commission on the Status of Women and the Special Rapporteur on violence against women, its causes and consequences, to review and update the Model Strategies and Practical Measures on the Elimination of Violence against Women in the Field of Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice, taking into account developments, research, tools and the outcome of the Commission's deliberations at its seventeenth session, and to make recommendations on addressing violence against women and girls, to be considered by the Commission at its nineteenth (2010) session. Member States and other donors were invited to provide extrabudgetary contributions for those purposes, and the offer of Thailand to act as host to the meeting of the intergovernmental group of experts, to be held in 2008, was welcomed. The Commission requested UNODC's Executive Director to submit a report to its nineteenth (2010) session.

UN standards and norms

Guidelines on justice for child victims and witnesses

In response to Economic and Social Council resolution 2005/20 [YUN 2005, p. 1236], the Secretary-General submitted to the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice a January report on implementation of the Guidelines on Justice in Matters Involving Child Victims and Witnesses of Crime [E/CN.15/2008/11], which were annexed to the resolution. The report, based on information received from 27 Member States on legislation procedures, policies and practices relating to child victims and witnesses of crime, provided a summary of measures taken by States in relation to the rights established in the Guidelines: to be treated with dignity and compassion; to be protected from discrimination; to be informed; to be heard and to express views and concerns; to effective assistance; to privacy; to be protected from hardship during the justice process; to safety; to reparation; and to special preventive measures. It also contained an overview of UNODC activities to assist countries in the use and application of the Guidelines.

The replies indicated that most of the respondent countries had taken measures to implement, at least to a certain extent, the rights contained in the Guidelines. Most respondent States provided information on existing legislative measures in line with the Guidelines' provisions; however, only very few submitted information on court decisions and judgements that could provide a more comprehensive overview of effective implementation of the rights. Moreover, the right to receive reintegration and rehabilitation assistance was one of the least established in national legal frameworks. The Secretary-General noted that the information received highlighted the different degree of implementation from country to country. While some countries had developed comprehensive measures dealing with child victims and witnesses, others had adopted only basic or general provisions. The report suggested that the Commission might wish to encourage States to draw on the Guidelines in developing legislation, procedures, policies and practices for child victims and witnesses. In particular, it might draw the attention of countries to the need to develop rehabilitation and reintegration programmes. It might also invite States to draw on some of the legislation, policies and practices cited by some States, including the preparation of child witnesses and the use of audio-visual means for children to provide their testimony in order to avoid the stress and possible trauma associated with their appearance in the courtroom. Further, the Commission might invite States to make voluntary contributions to the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Fund to support UNODC in providing technical assistance and advisory services to requesting countries, in order to strengthen and improve their national capacities to protect and assist child victims and witnesses of crime.

Strengthening the rule of law

The Secretary-General submitted to the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice a February report [E/CN.15/2008/12] on strengthening justice, integrity and the rule of law through technical assistance in developing, transitional and post-conflict societies, with a focus on Africa. The report reviewed activities and programmes carried out in accordance with Economic and Social Council resolutions 2006/22 [YUN 2006, p. 1316], 2006/25 [ibid., p. 1291] and 2007/22 [YUN 2007, p. 1146], and provided a framework for an integrated UNODC programme for the period 2008–2011 in the area of justice and integrity in accordance with the UNODC strategy. The reporting period saw a strong emphasis in the UN system on assistance to developing countries, in particular post-conflict States, in rule of law and justice reform, as well as increased attention to UN system-wide coordination and cooperation.

In his conclusions, the Secretary-General noted the strong increase in UNODC technical assistance in the area of judicial integrity and criminal justice reform. The implementation of projects and programmes provided evidence that: technical assistance in the areas of justice and integrity reform depended on national ownership through long-term interventions; it was not sufficient to strengthen only one aspect of the system or one of its institutions, and reform initiatives aimed only at one aspect had shown not to be sustainable; in the area of integrity and accountability, it was also necessary to address law enforcement and prosecution services in support of efforts to strengthen the integrity of the judiciary; interventions relating to technical or administrative aspects such as case management could have a significant impact on the efficiency of justice systems and human rights of prisoners; assessments and data collection were essential components of such programmes; and UNODC technical expertise and mandates were in greater demand both by Member States and other agencies, including in post-conflict settings. He suggested that the Commission might wish to recommend that UNODC continue designing and implementing technical assistance projects in the areas of access to justice and penal reform, the integrity of the justice sector, and urban security and youth crime prevention; and continue its efforts towards integration in peacekeeping missions and other joint UN missions. The Commission might also recommend that Member States provide support to such integrated programmes on justice and integrity, in particular those in post-conflict and transitional States.

The Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice, in April [E/2008/30 (res.17/2)], requested UNODC to circulate the Standards of Professional Responsibility and Statement of the Essential Duties and Rights of Prosecutors—annexed to its resolution—to Member States for their consideration and comments. It also requested UNODC to prepare, by the third quarter of 2008, a structured, verbatim compilation of the comments received from States, as an addendum to the Standards and Statement, and to provide technical assistance to allow States to strengthen the integrity and capacity of their prosecution services. The Commission invited States to encourage their prosecution services to take into consideration the Standards and Statement and the above-mentioned addendum when reviewing or developing rules with respect to the professional and ethical conduct of members of prosecution services, and also invited States and other donors to provide extrabudgetary contributions. The Secretary-General was requested to report to the Commission at its twentieth (2011) session.

Other crime prevention and criminal justice issues

Trafficking in forest products

The Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice, in April [E/2008/30], had before it a February report by the UNODC Executive Director on international cooperation in preventing and combating illicit international trafficking in forest products, including timber, wildlife and other forest biological resources [E/CN.15/2008/9]. The report, submitted in response to Commission resolution 16/1 of 2007 [YUN 2007, p. 1148], provided an overview and brief analysis of replies received from Member States on their efforts to implement that resolution and to combat illicit trafficking in forest products, harvested in contravention of national laws. It also contained information on matters related to forest law enforcement and governance, as provided by the secretariat of the United Nations Forum on Forests.

The information received from States confirmed the importance that they attached to the fight against the illicit international trade in forest products. In order to better target that crime, national laws and regulations should be adopted, regional instruments and mechanisms set up and international law enforcement cooperation strengthened. The information received also mentioned efforts to counter money-laundering and corruption, strengthen border controls and address organized crime in general as contributions to combating illicit trade in forest products. Input from the Forum on Forests secretariat echoed the Commission's call to increase synergies on matters related to forest law enforcement and for action to address illegal trade and, in particular, to prosecute significant offenders, leaders of organized criminal groups and financiers of forest-related crime. In accordance with Commission resolution 16/1, UNODC would organize an open-ended expert group meeting, explore the possibility of obtaining extrabudgetary resources for that purpose, and invite States, UN bodies and other intergovernmental bodies to increase synergies between the work of those involved in combating illicit trade in forest products and the criminal justice work of UNODC.

The Commission also considered the report of the meeting of the Open-ended Expert Group on International Cooperation in Preventing and Combating Illicit International Trafficking in Forest Products, including Timber, Wildlife and Other Forest Biological Resources (Jakarta, Indonesia, 26–28 March) [E/CN.15/2008/20], prepared in response to Commission resolution 16/1. The report described the Expert Group's discussions on the economic, social and environmental impact of the crimes under consideration and on appropriate legal and law enforcement responses. It reflected the views of the experts on ways and means of fostering international cooperation, through the use, where applicable, of the UN Convention against Transnational Organized Crime [YUN 2000, p. 1048] and the UN Convention against Corruption [YUN 2003, p. 1127], and of enhancing the institutional capacity of law enforcement and forestry authorities to enforce the rule of law in the forest sector. The report contained the conclusions of the Expert Group for further consideration by the Commission.

The Commission recommended to the Economic and Social Council for adoption a draft resolution on international cooperation in preventing and combating illicit international trafficking in forest products, including timber, wildlife and other forest biological resources.

By resolution 2008/25 of 24 July (see p. 1165), the Council encouraged Member States to continue to provide UNODC with information on measures taken pursuant to Commission resolution 16/1, taking into consideration the emphasis placed by the Expert Group on the need for holistic and comprehensive national multisectoral approaches to preventing and combating illicit international trafficking in forest products, as well as for international coordination and cooperation in support of such approaches. It requested the UNODC Executive Director to make available the resolution and the report of the Expert Group to the Conference of the Parties to the UN Convention against Transnational Organized Crime at its fourth session in October, and to report in 2009.

United Nations Institute for Training and Research

In response to General Assembly resolution 62/210 [YUN 2007, p. 1150], the Secretary-General submitted a June report [E/2008/72] on the United Nations Institute for Training and Research (UNITAR), which focused on the financial aspects of the UNITAR core training activities—diplomatic training—in distinction to its training and capacity-development activities in other fields. The report described the particularities of core diplomatic training and provided information on the increasing demand for it, the complexities of funding such a service and what the impact would be if the service were no longer offered to diplomats. It examined its implementation costs and financial implications involved in maintaining the service, outlined the comprehensive financial situation of UNITAR, including the levels of voluntary contributions, and provided details of how core diplomatic training had been supported in the past, the actual expenditures incurred in the previous biennium and forecasted expenditures for the current and future bienniums. It also presented a cost/benefit analysis of the service, the costs per beneficiary and a market survey of comparable services offered outside the UN context. It further reviewed the positive and negative aspects of options other than recourse to the UN regular budget, most notably that of a fee-based system.

The Secretary-General recommended that multilateral training on diplomacy should continue to be offered in a multilateral setting. The burden of covering its costs should fall on the collective membership of the United Nations, and support from the UN regular budget would be a show of solidarity for continuous learning and for reform efforts to make the United Nations a venue for effective and efficient decision-making. He recommended that the Assembly's Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee reconsider financing UNITAR core training activities from the regular budget, and that Member States increase or resume their contributions to UNITAR. Specifically, the Secretary-General recommended that an annual subvention of $600,000, or half the costs of core diplomatic training, be granted from the regular budget.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 25 July [meeting 44], the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 2008/35 [draft: E/2008/L.37] without vote [agenda item 15].

United Nations Institute for Training and Research

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolutions 51/188 of 16 December 1996, 52/206 of 18 December 1997, 53/195 of 15 December 1998, 54/229 of 22 December 1999, 55/208 of 20 December 2000, 56/208 of 21 December 2001, 57/268 of 20 December 2002, 58/223 of 23 December 2003, 59/252 of 22 December 2004, 60/213 of 22 December 2005 and 62/210 of 19 December 2007 and Assembly decision 61/542 of 20 December 2006,

Welcoming the decision to streamline the reporting arrangements of the United Nations Institute for Training and Research in accordance with Assembly resolution 62/210,

Recalling in particular paragraph 9 of Assembly resolution 62/210,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General,

Noting that the Institute is self-funded to date, not receiving any kind of subsidies from the United Nations regular budget, and delivers, free of charge, training courses to diplomats and delegates accredited to United Nations Headquarters in New York and to the United Nations Offices at Geneva, Vienna and Nairobi,

Stressing that core diplomatic training offered by the Institute is a service accessible to diplomats of the entire membership of the United Nations and strengthens capacities of diplomats to perform their multilateral duties,

Noting the solid overall financial situation of the Institute, with a projected increase in funding of at least 26 per cent between the previous and current bienniums, and expressing its appreciation to the Governments and private institutions that have made or pledged financial and other contributions to the Institute,

Noting also that, despite the growing need for training and capacity development, voluntary contributions remain at a low level, putting at risk the training courses that the Institute delivers to diplomats and delegates accredited to United Nations Headquarters in New York and to the United Nations Offices at Geneva, Vienna and Nairobi,

Reiterating that training and capacity-development activities should be accorded a more visible and larger role in support of the management of international affairs, and in the execution of the economic and social development programmes of the United Nations system,

1. Acknowledges the progress made by the United Nations Institute for Training and Research, in the light of the strategic reforms introduced by its Executive Director and endorsed by its Board of Trustees, for the Institute to be a centre of excellence;

2. Also acknowledges the work of the Board of Trustees, and welcomes the contributions of its newly reconstituted membership with respect to guiding the Institute through its reforms;

3. Considers that the core diplomatic training offered by the Institute is unique in its beneficiary base and its reliance on United Nations expertise;

4. Notes with concern that a lack of voluntary contributions could lead to a cessation of this service, which is particularly important for the training of delegates from developing and least developed countries;

5. Appeals, in this regard, to the Institute to continue its fund-raising strategy and to all Governments, in particular those of developed countries, and to private institutions that have not yet contributed financially or otherwise to the Institute, to give it their generous financial and other support, and urges the States that have interrupted their voluntary contributions to consider resuming them in view of the Institute's strategic reforms;

6. Requests, in this regard, the Secretary-General to submit a report to the General Assembly at its sixty-third session on the issue of financing the core diplomatic training activities of the Institute.

In response to Council resolution 2008/35 (above), the Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly a December report on financing of the core diplomatic training activities of UNITAR [A/63/592]. The Secretary-General provided information on UNITAR's financial situation in respect of core diplomatic training, its cost-effectiveness, the demand for it by Member States and the potential impact of its reduction or cessation on the overall performance of diplomats, in particular those from developing and least developed countries, in carrying out their duties. The Secretary-General recommended that in order to maintain the current level of core diplomatic training activities, the Assembly might wish to provide UNITAR with an annual subvention of $600,000, or half of the $1,200,000 annual cost of core diplomatic training, in the context of the proposed programme budget for the 2010-2011 biennium, taking into account the concern expressed by the Council in resolution 2008/35 that a lack of voluntary contributions could lead to a cessation of that service. He also suggested that the Assembly might request the Secretary-General to amend, after consultation with the UNITAR Board of Trustees, the statute of UNITAR in order to include a subvention from the regular budget.

On 24 December, the Assembly decided that the agenda items on the report of the Economic and Social Council and on the programme budget for the 2008–2009 biennium would remain for consideration at its resumed sixty-third (2009) session (decision 63/552).

University for Peace

By resolution 63/132 of 11 December (see p. 1538), the General Assembly decided to invite the University for Peace to participate in its sessions and work in the capacity of observer.

Education for all

In response to General Assembly resolution 61/140 [YUN 2006, p. 1326], the Secretary-General transmitted a July report by the UNESCO Director-General on the implementation of the International Plan of Action for the United Nations Literacy Decade (2003–2012) [A/63/172], proclaimed by the Assembly in resolution 56/116 [YUN 2001, p. 1052]. The report reviewed the status, trends and challenges of literacy at the mid-point of the Decade, focusing on non-literate youth and adults (those having no or low literacy skills), and provided a framework for the second half of the Decade. It recognized that the right to education included to that literacy—an essential condition of learning and human development. It remained a grave concern that one in five adults in the world (774 million in total) had no literate access to written communication, that 75 million children were not attending school, and that millions more young people left school without a level of literacy adequate for productive and active participation in their societies.

The Director-General observed that at the global level, the challenge of literacy inequalities remained undiminished since the beginning of the Decade; progress on adult literacy was halting and funding insufficient. In addition, provision for women, young people and rural populations was often inadequate. Ensuring adequate provision to diverse population groups would require that improvements in mass literacy not be accompanied by decreasing linguistic and cultural diversity of minority and indigenous groups. The delivery and management of literacy programmes included three main challenges: to improve national-level literacy development strategies and coordination to ensure adequate coverage and targeting; to ensure quality programmes based on the needs of the learner; and to improve monitoring and financial planning mechanisms. He recommended that: Member States give literacy higher priority within their educational planning and budgeting; UNESCO strengthen its coordinating role and develop a strategic framework for renewed action in literacy, in cooperation with international partners, including the UN system agencies; the international community deepen its commitment to literacy, with greater integration into international development targets, such as the Millennium Development Goals, and intensify efforts to implement the International Plan of Action of the Decade. The remaining five years of the Decade had to focus on:

stronger commitment, with particular concern to issues of gender, young people and marginalization; more effective programme design and delivery on the ground, with a determination to orient national and international support to the needs and characteristics of communities; and new resources—in particular, increased allocation of funds and strengthened institutional mechanisms for financing adult literacy and the development of new models and databases on literacy programme costs.

On 25 July, by decision 2008/258, the Economic and Social Council adopted the theme “Implementing the internationally agreed goals and commitments in regard to education” for its 2011 annual ministerial-level substantive review.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December [meeting 70], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/63/424], adopted resolution 63/154 without vote [agenda item 55 (d)].

United Nations Literacy Decade: education for all

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 56/116 of 19 December 2001, by which it proclaimed the ten-year period beginning on 1 January 2003 the United Nations Literacy Decade, its resolution 57/166 of 18 December 2002, in which it welcomed the International Plan of Action for the United Nations Literacy Decade, and its resolutions 59/149 of 20 December 2004 and 61/140 of 19 December 2006,

Recalling also the United Nations Millennium Declaration, in which Member States resolved to ensure that, by 2015, children everywhere, boys and girls alike, will be able to complete a full course of primary schooling and that girls and boys will have equal access to all levels of education, which requires a renewed commitment to promote literacy for all,

Reaffirming the emphasis placed by the 2005 World Summit on the critical role of both formal and non-formal education in the achievement of poverty eradication and other development goals as envisaged in the Millennium Declaration, in particular basic education and training for achieving universal literacy, and the need to strive for expanded secondary and higher education as well as vocational education and technical training, especially for girls and women, the creation of human resources and infrastructure capabilities and the empowerment of those living in poverty,

Reaffirming also that quality basic education is crucial to nation-building, that literacy for all is at the heart of basic education for all and that creating literate environments and societies is essential for achieving the goals of eradicating poverty, reducing child mortality, curbing population growth, achieving gender equality and ensuring sustainable development, peace and democracy,

Convinced that literacy is crucial to the acquisition by every child, youth and adult of the essential life skills that will enable them to address the challenges that they can face in life and represents an essential condition of lifelong learning, which is an indispensable means for effective participation in the knowledge societies and economies of the twenty-first century,

Affirming that the realization of the right to education, especially for girls, contributes to the promotion of gender equality and the eradication of poverty,

Welcoming the considerable efforts that have been made so far by Member States and the international community to address the objectives of the Decade and to implement the International Plan of Action,

Reaffirming the right of indigenous peoples, in particular children, to have non-discriminatory access to all levels and forms of education provided by States,

Noting with deep concern that 774 million adults do not have basic literacy skills, 75 million children remain out of school, and millions more young people leave school without a level of literacy adequate for productive and active participation in their societies, that the issue of literacy may not be sufficiently high on national agendas to generate the kind of political and economic support required to address global literacy challenges and that the world is unlikely to meet those challenges if the present trends continue,

Deeply concerned about the persistence of the gender gap in education, which is reflected by the fact that nearly two thirds of the world's adult illiterates are women,

1. Takes note of the report of the Director-General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization on the implementation of the International Plan of Action for the United Nations Literacy Decade;

2. Takes note also of the summary outcomes of the Regional Conferences in Support of Global Literacy, held in Azerbaijan, China, India, Mali, Mexico and Qatar in 2007 and 2008, which indicate that the second half of the Decade should develop appropriate networks for greater regional collaboration;

3. Recognizes that a renewed collective commitment will be needed if the objectives of the Decade are to be met;

4. Calls upon Member States to further reinforce political will, giving literacy higher priority within their educational planning and budgeting;

5. Appeals to all Governments to develop reliable literacy data and information and more inclusive policymaking environments and to devise innovative strategies for reaching the groups disproportionately affected by illiteracy, in particular the poorest and most marginalized groups, and for seeking alternative formal and non-formal approaches to learning with a view to achieving the goals of the Decade;

6. Appeals to Governments to take full account of the use of languages in different contexts by promoting multilingual approaches to literacy, through which learners may acquire initial literacy in the language they know best and in additional languages as needed;

7. Urges all Governments to take the lead in coordinating the activities of the Decade at the national level, bringing all relevant national actors together in a sustained dialogue and collaborative action on policy formulation, implementation and evaluation of literacy efforts;

8. Appeals to all Governments to strengthen national and subnational professional institutions in their countries and to foster greater collaboration among all literacy partners with a view to developing greater capacity to design and deliver high-quality literacy programmes for youth and adults;

9. Appeals to all Governments and to economic and financial organizations and institutions, both national and international, to lend greater financial and material support to the efforts to increase literacy and achieve the goals of Education for All and those of the Decade;

10. Takes note of the three priority areas for the remaining years of the Decade identified through the mid-Decade review, namely, mobilizing stronger commitment to literacy, reinforcing more effective literacy programme delivery and harnessing new resources for literacy;

11. Requests the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization to reinforce its coordinating and catalysing role in the fight against illiteracy and to develop, in cooperation with other international partners, in particular the specialized agencies and organizations of the United Nations system, a strategic framework for renewed cooperation and action, on the basis of the mid-Decade review and the outcomes of the Regional Conferences in Support of Global Literacy, including the above-mentioned three priorities;

12. Invites Member States, the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system, as well as relevant intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, to support the implementation of the above priorities within the framework of the internationally agreed development goals, including those contained in the United Nations Millennium Declaration;

13. Calls upon Member States, in the implementation of the International Plan of Action in the second half of the Decade, to give adequate attention to the cultural diversity of minorities and indigenous peoples;

14. Requests all relevant entities of the United Nations system, in particular the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, in cooperation with national Governments, to take immediate, concrete steps to address the needs of countries with high illiteracy rates and/or with large populations of illiterate adults, with particular regard to women, including through programmes that promote low-cost and effective literacy provisions;

15. Requests the Secretary-General, in cooperation with the Director-General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, to seek the views of Member States on the progress achieved in implementing their national programmes and plans of action for the Decade and to submit the next progress report on the implementation of the International Plan of Action to the General Assembly in 2010;

16. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its sixty-fifth session, under the item entitled "Social development", the sub-item entitled "United Nations Literacy Decade: education for all".

International years

International Year of Chemistry (2011)

On 17 April, in follow-up to General Assembly resolution 61/185 [YUN 2006, p. 1608] on the proclamation of international years, and a 2007 resolution of the International Union of Pure and Applied Chemistry, the UNESCO Executive Board endorsed the proposal for proclamation by the United Nations of 2011 as the International Year of Chemistry.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December [meeting 72], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/63/414 & Corr.1], adopted resolution 63/209 without vote [agenda item 49].

International Year of Chemistry

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 61/185 of 20 December 2006 on the proclamation of international years,

Recognizing that humankind's understanding of the material nature of our world is grounded, in particular, in our knowledge of chemistry,

Stressing that education in and about chemistry is critical in addressing challenges such as global climate change, in providing sustainable sources of clean water, food and energy and in maintaining a wholesome environment for the well-being of all people,

Considering that the science of chemistry and its applications produce medicines, fuels, metals and virtually all other manufactured products,

Being aware that the year 2011 provides the opportunity to celebrate the contributions of women to science on the one-hundredth anniversary of the awarding of the Nobel Prize in Chemistry to Maria Skłodowska-Curie,

Being aware also that the year 2011 provides the opportunity to highlight the need for international scientific collaboration on the one-hundredth anniversary of the founding of the International Association of Chemical Societies,

Noting the adoption by the Executive Board of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization at its one hundred and seventy-ninth session of a proposal for the proclamation by the United Nations of 2011 as the International Year of Chemistry, and noting also the unanimous resolution of the International Union of Pure and Applied Chemistry, at its 2007 Council meeting, to have 2011 proclaimed the International Year of Chemistry,

Recognizing the leading role of the International Union of Pure and Applied Chemistry in coordinating and promoting chemistry activities at the national and regional levels around the world,

1. Decides to proclaim 2011 the International Year of Chemistry;

3. Encourages all Member States, the United Nations system and all other actors to take advantage of the Year to promote actions at all levels aimed at increasing awareness among the public of the importance of chemistry and promoting widespread access to new knowledge and to chemistry activities.

International Year of Languages

In response to General Assembly resolution 61/266 [YUN 2007, p. 1515], the Secretary-General transmitted, in September, the interim report [A/63/349] by the UNESCO Director-General on the impact of activities carried out by UNESCO during the International Year of Languages, which was launched on 21 February. The report stated that the International Year had raised awareness of and contributed to a shift in practices and policies towards languages and multilingualism. Languages should be considered as an interdisciplinary domain and a factor for analysis and action in different policy areas. Many multilateral projects in international cooperation, peace and development could be better planned, implemented and achieved if linguistic factors were taken into account and if such projects were delivered in the languages of their beneficiaries. To overcome the difficulties encountered in the field for the effective development of multilingual society, UNESCO called upon Member States, the UN Secretariat and UN specialized agencies to develop common initiatives. A further report would be transmitted following the conclusion of the Year on 21 February 2009.

Women

In 2008, United Nations efforts to advance the status of women worldwide continued to be directed by the principles and guidelines of the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action, adopted at the Fourth (1995) World Conference on Women, and the outcome of the General Assembly's twenty-third (2000) special session (Beijing+5), which reviewed progress in their implementation.

The Commission on the Status of Women, at its fifty-second session in March, adopted conclusions on financing for gender equality and the empowerment of women, which the Economic and Social Council transmitted to the Assembly as input to the preparations for the follow-up international conference on financing for development. The Commission recommended to the Council for adoption a draft resolution on the situation of and assistance to Palestinian women, which the Council adopted in July. The Council also took action on mainstreaming a gender perspective into all UN system policies and programmes. The Commission adopted and brought to the attention of the Council resolutions on women and children taken hostage in armed conflict; women, the girl child and HIV/AIDS; ending female genital mutilation; and strengthening of the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women (INSTRAW).

The General Assembly adopted resolutions on eliminating violence against women; trafficking in women and girls; supporting efforts to end obstetric fistula; and the future operation of INSTRAW. The United Nations Development Fund for Women continued to focus on women's economic security and rights, ending violence against women, reducing the prevalence of HIV/AIDS, and advancing gender justice in democratic governance. The United Nations continued efforts to strengthen and revitalize INSTRAW. The Executive Board approved the Institute's strategic framework for 2008–2011.

Follow-up to the Fourth World Conference on Women and Beijing+5

During 2008, the Commission on the Status of Women, the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly considered follow-up to the 1995

Fourth World Conference on Women, particularly the implementation of the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action [YUN 1995, p. 1170] and the political declaration, and further actions and initiatives to implement both instruments, adopted at the twenty-third (2000) special session of the Assembly (Beijing+5) by resolution S/23-2 [YUN 2000, p. 1084]. The Declaration had reaffirmed the commitment of Governments to the goals and objectives of the Fourth World Conference and to the implementation of the 12 critical areas of concern outlined in the Platform for Action: women and poverty; education and training of women; women and health; violence against women; women and armed conflict; women and the economy; women in power and decision-making; institutional mechanisms for the advancement of women; human rights of women; women and the media; women and the environment; and the girl child. The issue of mainstreaming a gender perspective into UN policies and programmes continued to be addressed.

Report of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 62/137 [YUN 2007, p. 1153], the Secretary-General, in an August report [A/63/217], provided information on the follow-up to the Fourth World Conference on Women, which examined the extent to which intergovernmental bodies had paid attention to gender perspectives in their work, focusing on the advances made during the sixty-second (2007) session of the Assembly; the 2007 substantive session of the Economic and Social Council; and the work of its functional commissions, including the fifty-first (2007) session of the Commission on the Status of Women. It also assessed, pursuant to Economic and Social Council resolution 2006/9 [YUN 2006, p. 1356], the impact of the Commission's input in deliberations within the UN system.

The Secretary-General concluded that while the Assembly had advanced global policy on gender equality in a number of areas, attention to gender perspectives was not systematically included in all outcomes of the Assembly or documentation before it. However, the Assembly paid some attention to gender perspectives in the preparation of and follow-up to major international conferences and summits, and high-level dialogues and events. A noticeable gap in the area of climate change was identified. Overall, more than a quarter of the resolutions analysed in preparation for the report (as at 25 May 2008) included gender equality issues. As in previous years, resolutions submitted by the Second (Economic and Social) and Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committees, as well as those adopted without reference to a Main Committee, paid greater attention to gender perspectives than other Assembly Committees. The Economic and Social Council paid explicit attention to gender equality in some of its segments and during high-level meetings. Gender perspectives were also reflected in some of the Secretary-General's reports before the Council and in Council outcomes, including the Ministerial Declaration of the Council's high-level segment, "Strengthening efforts to eradicate poverty and hunger, including through the global partnership for development" [YUN 2007, p. 833], which reaffirmed that gender equality and promotion and protection of human rights for all were essential to eradicate poverty and hunger. Most of the functional commissions took gender perspectives into account, to some extent, in their deliberations. However, apart from the Commission on the Status of Women, only three functional commissions of the Council paid attention to gender perspectives in their outcomes across a range of policy areas, including population ageing, crime prevention, social development and population.

The Secretary-General recommended to the Assembly that efforts to mainstream gender perspectives in preparation for and follow-up to major UN conferences and summits should be strengthened, including, for example, the incorporation of gender perspectives in documentation, interactive activities and outcomes of the Follow-up International Conference on Financing for Development to Review Implementation of Monterrey Consensus in 2008 (see p. 1076) and the Durban Review Conference in 2009, as well as in other high-level dialogue events of the Assembly. He said that greater efforts were needed to facilitate more systematic attention to gender perspectives in the work of all the Council's functional commissions, including through increased consultation with the Commission on the Status of Women. In order to enhance the Commission's role in promoting and monitoring the implementation of the gender mainstreaming strategy, its outcomes should be systematically transmitted through the Council to the Assembly, the functional commissions of the Council and other relevant intergovernmental bodies. The outcomes should also be disseminated to UN entities to ensure effective support to States. In addition, regular reporting on intergovernmental outcomes on gender equality and their impact on the work of intergovernmental bodies and UN entities could help advance the global policy agenda on gender equality and women's empowerment and ensure follow-up and implementation at the national level.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December [meeting 70], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/63/425], adopted resolution 63/159 without vote [agenda item 56].

Follow-up to the Fourth World Conference on Women and full implementation of the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action and the outcome of the twenty-third special session of the General Assembly

The General Assembly,

Recalling its previous resolutions on the question, including resolution 62/137 of 18 December 2007,

Deeply convinced that the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action and the outcome of the twenty-third special session of the General Assembly entitled "Women 2000: gender equality, development and peace for the twenty-first century" are important contributions to the achievement of gender equality and the empowerment of women, and must be translated into effective action by all States, the United Nations system and other organizations concerned,

Reaffirming the commitments to gender equality and the advancement of women made at the Millennium Summit, the 2005 World Summit and other major United Nations summits, conferences and special sessions, and reaffirming also that their full, effective and accelerated implementation are integral to achieving the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals,

Welcoming progress made towards achieving gender equality, but stressing that challenges and obstacles remain in the implementation of the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action and the outcome of the twenty-third special session,

Recognizing that the responsibility for the implementation of the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action and the outcome of the twenty-third special session rests primarily at the national level and that strengthened efforts are necessary in this respect, and reiterating that enhanced international cooperation is essential for full, effective and accelerated implementation,

Welcoming the work of the Commission on the Status of Women in reviewing the implementation of the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action, and noting with appreciation the agreed conclusions on financing for gender equality and the empowerment of women, adopted by the Commission at its fifty-second session,

Reaffirming that gender mainstreaming is a globally accepted strategy for promoting the empowerment of women and achieving gender equality by transforming structures of inequality, and reaffirming also the commitment to actively promote the mainstreaming of a gender perspective in the design, implementation, monitoring and evaluation of policies and programmes in all political, economic and social spheres, as well as the commitment to strengthen the capabilities of the United Nations system in the area of gender equality,

Bearing in mind the challenges and obstacles to changing discriminatory attitudes and gender stereotypes, and stressing that challenges and obstacles remain in the implementation of international standards and norms to address the inequality between men and women,

Expressing serious concern that the urgent goal of 50/50 gender balance in the United Nations system, especially at senior and policymaking levels, with full respect for the principle of equitable geographical distribution, in conformity with Article 101, paragraph 3, of the Charter of the United Nations, remains unmet, and that the representation of women in the United Nations system has remained almost static, with negligible improvement in some parts of the system, and in some cases has even decreased, as reflected in the report of the Secretary-General on the improvement of the status of women in the United Nations system,

Acknowledging its resolution 62/277 of 15 September 2008, in particular its gender-specific provisions, and in this context encouraging the ongoing work on gender equality and the empowerment of women,

Reaffirming the important role of women in the prevention and resolution of conflicts and in peacebuilding,

Reaffirming also the Declaration of Commitment on HIV/AIDS and the Political Declaration on HIV/AIDS adopted at the High-level Meeting on HIV/AIDS, held from 31 May to 2 June 2006, which, inter alia, acknowledged the feminization of the pandemic, organizations, as well as all women and men, to fully commit themselves and to intensify their contributions to the implementation of the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action and the outcome of the twenty-third special session;

5. Calls upon States parties to comply fully with their obligations under the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women and the Optional Protocol thereto and to take into consideration the concluding comments as well as the general recommendations of the Committee, urges States parties to consider limiting the extent of any reservations that they lodge to the Convention, to formulate any reservations as precisely and narrowly as possible, and to regularly review such reservations with a view to withdrawing them so as to ensure that no reservation is incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention, also urges all Member States that have not yet ratified or acceded to the Convention to consider doing so, and calls upon those Member States that have not yet done so to consider signing, ratifying or acceding to the Optional Protocol;

6. Encourages all actors, inter alia, Governments, the United Nations system, other international organizations and civil society, to continue to support the work of the Commission on the Status of Women in fulfilling its central role in the follow-up to and review of the implementation of the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action and the outcome of the twenty-third special session, and, as applicable, to carry out its recommendations, and welcomes in this regard the revised programme and methods of work of the Commission adopted at its fiftieth session, which give particular attention to the sharing of experiences, lessons learned and good practices in overcoming challenges to full implementation at the national and international levels as well as to the evaluation of progress in the implementation of priority themes;

7. Calls upon Governments, and the relevant funds and programmes, organs and specialized agencies of the United Nations system, within their respective mandates, and invites the international financial institutions and all relevant actors of civil society, including non-governmental organizations, to intensify action to achieve the full and effective implementation of the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action and the outcome of the twenty-third special session, through, inter alia:

(a) Sustained political will and commitment at the national, regional and international levels to take further action, inter alia, through the mainstreaming of gender perspectives, including through the development and use of gender equality indicators, as applicable, in all policies and programmes and the promotion of full and equal participation and empowerment of women, and enhanced international cooperation;

(g) Providing technical assistance to women, particularly in developing countries, to ensure the continuing promotion of human resources development and the development of environmentally sound technologies and of women's entrepreneurship;

(o) Eliminating gender inequalities, gender-based abuse and violence; increasing the capacity of women and adolescent girls to protect themselves from the risk of HIV infection, principally through the provision of health care and services, including sexual and reproductive health, and the provision of full access to comprehensive information and education; ensuring that women can exercise their right to have control over, and decide freely and responsibly on, matters related to their sexuality in order to increase their ability to protect themselves from HIV/AIDS infection, including their sexual and reproductive health, free of coercion, discrimination and violence; and taking all necessary measures to create an enabling environment for the empowerment of women and to strengthen their economic independence, while, in this context, reiterating the importance of the role of men and boys in achieving gender equality;

8. Reaffirms that States have an obligation to exercise due diligence to prevent violence against women and girls, provide protection to the victims and investigate, prosecute and punish the perpetrators of violence against women and girls, and that failure to do so violates and impairs or nullifies the enjoyment of their human rights and fundamental freedoms, and calls upon Governments to elaborate and implement laws and strategies to eliminate violence against women and girls;

Critical areas of concern

Women and health

Women, the girl child and HIV/AIDS

In a March resolution on women, the girl child and HIV/AIDS [E/2008/27 (res.52/4)], the Commission on the Status of Women, expressing concern that the HIV/AIDS pandemic reinforced gender inequalities and disproportionately affected women and girls as they bore the burden to support and care for those affected by the disease, stressed that the crisis required urgent action in all fields and at all levels. It called on Governments and the international donor community to integrate a gender perspective in all international assistance matters and ensure that resources concomitant with the effect of HIV/AIDS on women and girls were made available, especially funding for national HIV/AIDS programmes to promote and protect the human rights of women and girls in the context of the epidemic. The Commission requested the Secretariat, the Joint United Nations Programme on HIV/AIDS (UNAIDS), and other UN entities responding to the pandemic, including the Global Fund to Fight AIDS, Tuberculosis and Malaria [YUN 2002, p. 1217], to mainstream a gender and human rights perspective throughout their HIV/AIDS-related operations. It requested the Secretary-General to invite States to work with the Global Coalition on Women and HIV/AIDS [YUN 2004, p. 1219] to mobilize and support a wide range of national actors, including women's groups and networks of women living with HIV/AIDS, in order to ensure that national HIV/AIDS programmes were better able to respond to the specific needs of women, girls and adolescents. The Commission also requested the Secretary-General to consider the gender dimensions of the HIV/AIDS epidemic when preparing the report requested in General Assembly resolution 62/178 [YUN 2007, p. 1262] and in the preparations for the 2008 High-level meeting on HIV/AIDS (see p. 1329).

Elimination of obstetric fistula

In response to General Assembly resolution 62/138 [YUN 2007, p. 1169], the Secretary-General in August submitted a report [A/63/222] on supporting efforts to end obstetric fistula, a devastating childbirth injury that made women incontinent and often isolated from their communities, and one that could also result in maternal death. The condition was an example of poor maternal and reproductive health and an indication of unacceptably high levels of maternal death and disability. Obstetric fistula disproportionately affected impoverished women and girls living in rural communities in developing countries and was almost entirely preventable through access to quality maternal health care. The report outlined efforts to end obstetric fistula at international, regional and national levels, including by the UN system.

The Secretary-General observed that significant progress had been achieved over the last two decades in focusing attention on maternal death and disability, and more recently on obstetric fistula in particular, due to increased evidence on effective interventions, enhanced data collection and analysis, advocacy programmes, partnerships, and stronger political and financial commitments. Awareness of the problem had grown exponentially and countries were increasingly investing in and promoting the prevention, treatment and reintegration of affected women as part of efforts to advance maternal health. Despite those positive developments, serious challenges remained. There was a need to intensify interventions to prevent the more than 500,000 deaths and 9 million morbidities that occurred annually due to the complications of pregnancy and childbirth. Recommendations for action included: greater investment in health systems; focused attention on areas with the highest maternal mortality and morbidity, particularly sub-Saharan Africa and South Asia; investments supporting national health plans and addressing health-care coverage inequities among socio-economic and age groups; mobilization and empowerment of communities to facilitate their involvement in supporting women and addressing maternal health needs; strengthened interventions to keep adolescent girls in school, stop child marriages and promote positive health-seeking behaviours; strengthened research, monitoring and evaluation to guide implementation of maternal health programmes; and the maintenance of partnerships and coordination among various stakeholders at local, national, regional and global levels to address the multifaceted determinants of maternal mortality and morbidity. The Secretary-General, estimating that support for priority countries would require $1.2 billion for family planning and $6 billion for maternal health care annually, recommended that continued support be provided to countries' national plans, UN entities—including the global Campaign to End Fistula [YUN 2002, p. 1078] and the Thematic Fund for Maternal Health [YUN 2007, p. 1169]—and other global initiatives.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December [meeting 70], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/63/425], adopted resolution 63/158 without vote [agenda item 56 (a)].

Supporting efforts to end obstetric fistula

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 62/138 of 18 December 2007 on supporting efforts to end obstetric fistula,

Reaffirming the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action, the outcome of the twenty-third special session of the General Assembly entitled “Women 2000: gender equality, development and peace for the twenty-first century”, and the declaration adopted at the forty-ninth session of the Commission on the Status of Women,

Reaffirming also the international commitments in the field of social development and to gender equality and the advancement of women made at the World Conference on Human Rights, the International Conference on Population and Development, the World Summit for Social Development and the World Conference against Racism, Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia and Related Intolerance, as well as those made in the United Nations Millennium Declaration and at the 2005 World Summit,

Reaffirming further the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women and the Convention on the Rights of the Child, and urging States that have not done so to consider, as a matter of priority, signing, ratifying or acceding to those Conventions and the Optional Protocols thereto,

Taking note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General on supporting efforts to end obstetric fistula, and welcoming the conclusions and recommendations contained therein,

Stressing the interlinkages between poverty, malnutrition, lack of or inadequate or inaccessible health services, early childbearing, early marriage of the girl child, violence against young women and girls and gender discrimination as root causes of obstetric fistula, and that poverty remains the main social risk factor,

Recognizing that the difficult socio-economic conditions that exist in many developing countries, in particular the least developed countries, have resulted in the acceleration of the feminization of poverty,

Recognizing also that early pregnancy and early childbearing entail complications during pregnancy and delivery and a much higher risk of maternal mortality and morbidity, and deeply concerned that early childbearing and limited access to the highest attainable standard of health, including sexual and reproductive health, including in the area of emergency obstetric care, cause high levels of obstetric fistula and other maternal morbidities as well as maternal mortality,

Recognizing further the serious immediate and long-term implications for health, including sexual and reproductive health, as well as increased vulnerability to HIV/AIDS, and the negative impact on psychological, social and economic development, that violence against the girl child and adolescent girls represents for individuals, families, communities and States,

Deeply concerned about discrimination against the girl child and the violation of the rights of the girl child, which often result in less access by girls to education, nutrition and physical and mental health and in enjoyment by girls of fewer of the rights, opportunities and benefits of childhood and adolescence compared with boys and their often being subjected to various forms of cultural, social, sexual and economic exploitation and to violence and harmful practices,

Welcoming the contribution by Member States, the international community and civil society to the global

Campaign to End Fistula, bearing in mind that a people-centred approach to social and economic development is fundamental for protecting and empowering individuals and communities,

Welcoming also ongoing partnerships between stakeholders at all levels to address the multifaceted determinants of maternal mortality and the commitments announced at the 2008 high-level event on the Millennium Development Goals to accelerate progress on millennium development goal 5,

1. Recognizes the interlinkages between poverty, malnutrition, lack of or inadequate or inaccessible health services, early childbearing, early marriage of the girl child and gender discrimination as root causes of obstetric fistula, that poverty remains the main social risk factor, that the eradication of poverty is critical to meeting the needs and protecting and promoting the rights of women and girls and that continued urgent national and international action is required to eliminate it;

2. Stresses the need to address the social issues that contribute to the problem of obstetric fistula, such as early marriage of the girl child, early pregnancy, lack of access to sexual and reproductive health, lack of or inadequate education of women and girls, poverty and low status of women and girls;

3. Also stresses that States have the obligation to promote and protect all human rights and fundamental freedoms of women and girls, that they must exercise due diligence in order to prevent, investigate and punish the perpetrators of violence against women and girls and to provide protection to the victims, and that failure to do so violates and impairs or nullifies the enjoyment of their human rights and fundamental freedoms;

4. Calls upon States to take all necessary measures to ensure the right of women and girls to the enjoyment of the highest attainable standard of health, including sexual and reproductive health, and develop sustainable health systems and social services, with a view to ensuring access to such systems and services without discrimination, while paying special attention to adequate food and nutrition, water and sanitation, family planning information, increasing knowledge and awareness and securing appropriate prenatal and post-natal care for the prevention of obstetric fistula;

5. Also calls upon States to ensure that women and girls have equal access to free and compulsory primary education of good quality and that they complete their education at that level, and to renew their efforts to improve and expand girls' and women's education at all levels, including at the secondary and higher levels, as well as vocational education and technical training, in order to, inter alia, achieve gender equality, the empowerment of women and poverty eradication;

6. Urges States to enact and strictly enforce laws to ensure that marriage is entered into only with the free and full consent of the intending spouses and, in addition, to enact and strictly enforce laws concerning the minimum legal age of consent and the minimum age for marriage, and to raise the minimum age for marriage where necessary;

7. Calls upon the international community to support the activities of the United Nations Population Fund and other partners in the global Campaign to End Fistula, including the World Health Organization, in establishing and financing regional fistula treatment and training centres by identifying and supporting health facilities that have the potential to serve as centres for treatment, training and convalescent care;

8. Calls upon States and/or the relevant funds and programmes, organs and specialized agencies of the United Nations system, within their respective mandates, and invites the international financial institutions and all relevant actors of civil society, including non-governmental organizations, and the private sector:

(a) To redouble their efforts to meet the internationally agreed goal of improving maternal health by making maternal health services and obstetric fistula treatment geographically and financially accessible, including by increasing access to skilled attendance at birth and emergency obstetric care, and appropriate prenatal and post-natal care;

(b) To develop, implement and support national and international prevention, care and treatment and reintegration and support strategies, as appropriate, to address effectively the condition of obstetric fistula and to develop further a multisectoral, multidisciplinary, comprehensive and integrated approach in order to bring about lasting solutions and put an end to obstetric fistula, maternal mortality and related morbidities, including through ensuring access to affordable, comprehensive, quality maternal health-care services, including skilled birth attendance and emergency obstetric care;

(c) To strengthen the capacity of health systems, in particular public health systems, to provide the essential services needed to prevent obstetric fistula and to treat those cases that do occur by providing the continuum of services, including family planning, prenatal care, skilled birth attendance, emergency obstetric care and post-partum care, to young women and girls, including those living in poverty and in underserved rural areas where obstetric fistula is most common;

(d) To strengthen research, monitoring and evaluation systems, including community-based notification of obstetric fistula cases and maternal and newborn deaths, to guide the implementation of maternal health programmes;

(e) To provide essential health services, equipment and supplies and skills training and income-generating projects to women and girls so that they can break out of a cycle of poverty;

(f) To mobilize funding to provide free or subsidized fistula repairs, including through encouraging more networking among providers and the sharing of new treatment techniques and protocols;

(g) To provide health education, rehabilitation and reintegration counselling, including medical counselling, as key components of post-operative care;

(h) To bring obstetric fistula to the attention of policymakers and communities, thereby reducing the stigma and discrimination associated with it and helping women and girls suffering from obstetric fistula so that they can overcome abandonment and social exclusion together with the psychosocial implications thereof, inter alia, through the support of social reintegration projects;

(i) To educate individual women and men, girls and boys, communities, policymakers and health professionals about how obstetric fistula can be prevented and treated and increase awareness of the needs of pregnant women and girls, including their right to the highest attainable standard of health, through working with community and religious leaders, traditional birth attendants, media, radio stations, influential public figures and policymakers, support the training of doctors, midwives, nurses and other health workers in lifesaving obstetric care, and include training on fistula repair, treatment and care as a standard element of health professionals' training curricula;

(j) To develop means of transportation and financing that enable women and girls to access obstetric care and treatment, and provide incentives and other means to secure the presence in rural areas of qualified health professionals who are able to perform interventions to prevent obstetric fistula;

9. Encourages communication and networking among existing fistula centres to facilitate training, research, advocacy and fund-raising and the development and application of relevant standards, including Obstetric Fistula: Guiding Principles for Clinical Management and Programme Development, published in 2006 by the World Health Organization, which provides background information along with principles for developing fistula prevention and treatment strategies and programmes;

10. Urges the international community to address the shortages of doctors, midwives, nurses and other health workers trained in lifesaving obstetric care, and of space and supplies, which limit the capacity of most of the fistula centres;

11. Urges multilateral donors, and invites international financial institutions, within their respective mandates, and regional development banks to review and implement policies to support national efforts to ensure that a higher proportion of resources reaches young women and girls, in particular in rural and remote areas;

12. Invites Member States to contribute to efforts to end obstetric fistula, including, in particular, the United Nations Population Fund global Campaign to End Fistula, with the goal of eliminating obstetric fistula by 2015, in line with the targets of the millennium development goal of improving maternal health;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its sixty-fifth session on the implementation of the present resolution under the item entitled "Advancement of women".

Traditional practices affecting the health of women and girls

Female genital mutilation

In response to Commission on the Status of Women resolution 51/2 [YUN 2007, p. 1171], the Secretary-General submitted a report [E/CN.6/2008/3] on ending female genital mutilation, a practice with harmful health consequences. Each year, approximately 3 million girls and women were subjected to female genital mutilation, and the World Health Organization (WHO) estimated that between 100 and 140 million girls and women had undergone some form of female genital mutilation in more than 28 countries in Africa and in some countries in Asia and the Middle East.

Since the prevalence of female genital mutilation remained high after nearly three decades of efforts by countries to eradicate the practice, new approaches continued to be developed that were both culturally sensitive and addressed the practice as a human rights violation. The report outlined key issues on female genital mutilation addressed by intergovernmental and human rights treaty bodies, and activities undertaken by 27 States and 13 UN entities to end the practice. It indicated that partnerships between Governments, UN entities, civil society, and other stakeholders had enhanced awareness and strengthened efforts towards ending female genital mutilation. There was greater understanding of the practice as a violation of human rights and of its harmful consequences. Many actions had been taken to end female genital mutilation, including legal reforms; the development of policies, strategies and action plans; the training of health-care professionals, law enforcement agents, and other relevant professional groups; and advocacy and awareness-raising campaigns at the national and local levels. However, challenges were also identified, such as the lack of enforcement of policies and legislation; insufficient awareness and commitment; persistence of norms that encouraged continuation of the practice; lack of data to facilitate monitoring of progress; and limited resources for sustained programmes.

The Secretary-General made recommendations for, among others, policies and programmes to be guided by a human rights-based approach; the establishment and enforcement of laws to prohibit and criminalize female genital mutilation; the development of strategies to enhance awareness among communities, families and the general public on the human rights of girls; improved access for women and girls to education and health care; the establishment of safe houses to protect girls from the practice; the involvement of religious leaders and young people in awareness-raising campaigns; and action-oriented research on the socio-cultural dimensions of female genital mutilation, including why women as well as men continued to support the practice despite its harmful consequences.

Commission action. In a March resolution [E/2008/27 (res. 52/2)], the Commission called on States to develop and implement integrated strategies for the prevention of female genital mutilation; strengthen advocacy and awareness-raising programmes; mobilize girls and boys to take part in developing preventive and elimination programmes to address harmful traditional practices, especially female genital mutilation; engage communities and religious leaders, educational institutions, the media and families; and increase financial support to end those practices. It called on the international community, UN system entities and civil society to support innovative programmes and to disseminate best practices that addressed the needs and priorities of girls in vulnerable situations. In that connection, it welcomed the 27 February commitment of 10 UN agencies to continue working towards the elimination of female genital mutilation. The Commission also requested the Secretary-General to ensure that all relevant UN entities took into account the protection and promotion of the rights of girls against female genital mutilation in their country programmes.

Violence against women

In response to General Assembly resolution 61/143 [YUN 2006, p. 1334], the Secretary-General in August submitted a report [A/63/214 & Corr.1] on intensification of efforts to eliminate all forms of violence against women that reviewed measures taken by States, as well as intergovernmental bodies, to address violence against women. Based on the inputs of 44 States, the report summarized measures taken to strengthen gender equality frameworks; develop policy frameworks and provide resources to address violence against women; end impunity for perpetrators and protect women against violence; prevent violence against women; provide services and support for victims and survivors; build the capacity of stakeholders; and enhance data collection. It also provided information on measures taken by UN bodies to implement resolution 61/143, including setting priorities for future work programmes to address the issue, and efforts towards the development of indicators on violence against women. In that regard, the Commission on the Status of Women and the Statistical Commission convened a joint dialogue that discussed the proposal for a set of global indicators to measure the scope, prevalence and incidence of violence against women. The Statistical Commission subsequently approved the formation of a “friends of the chair” group to conduct an in-depth technical review of the proposed indicators.

The report concluded that States had taken measures to promote gender equality and the elimination of discrimination against women, including a growing number of States that had established new or strengthened legislation on violence against women. Other efforts by States included the establishment of national action plans on violence against women; the increased availability of integrated services—medical, psychological, social and legal—for victims and survivors of violence; and increased attention paid to the protection of women in situations of increased risk. However, data and information on all forms of violence against women, from different sources, remained inadequate, which constituted a challenge to effective prevention and response. The Secretary-General made recommendations for States to intensify efforts to evaluate and assess the impact of legislation, rules and procedures; ensure that national action plans incorporated measurable goals and timetables, as well monitoring measures; take concrete steps to strengthen women’s awareness of their rights and legal remedies; provide leadership at the highest levels to enhance prevention of violence against women; intensify data-collection efforts and fully integrate data into national data-collection systems; and evaluate the impact of all initiatives on violence against women.

The Special Rapporteur on violence against women submitted the second thematic report on violence against women, its causes and consequences [A/HRC/7/6] to the Human Rights Council (see p. 846).

UNIFEM activities. In compliance with General Assembly resolution 50/166 [YUN 1995, p. 1188], the Secretary-General transmitted a report [A/HRC/10/43-E/CN.6/2009/10] of the United Nations Development Fund for Women (UNIFEM) on its 2008 activities to eliminate violence against women, including management of the UN Trust Fund in Support of Actions to Eliminate Violence against Women. Implementation of the 2005–2008 Trust Fund continued in accordance with its five pillars: enhancing impact, deepening involvement, ensuring efficiency, generating knowledge and developing capacities, and mobilizing resources. With the involvement of more than 20 UN entities, UNIFEM convened 16 inter-agency programme appraisal committees, at the regional level, on eliminating violence against women. Although the Trust Fund had $22 million to offer for grant-making during the year, annual contributions fell short of demand, with the Fund only meeting 4 per cent of the $525 million in requests that were received in 2008. Grant-making during the year focused on supporting the implementation of laws, policies and action plans on ending violence against women under two categories: “Meeting the implementation and up-scaling challenge” and “Catalytic, innovative and learning initiatives”. Under the thirteenth grant-making cycle, the Trust Fund provided $22 million to 28 initiatives in 38 countries and territories, which meant that since its inception in 1997 the Trust Fund had awarded more than $44 million in grants to 291 initiatives in 119 countries.

Moving forward, UNIFEM would continue efforts to bridge the implementation and accountability gap by supporting intensified country-level action through technical assistance; intensified capacity-development; broadened advocacy and awareness-raising endeavours; strengthened partnerships within and outside the UN system; intensified mobilization of resources; and provision of new and innovative learning and knowledge-sharing opportunities and products.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December [meeting 70], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/63/425], adopted resolution 63/155 without vote [agenda item 56 (a)].

Intensification of efforts to eliminate all forms of violence against women

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 61/143 of 19 December 2006 and 62/133 of 18 December 2007, and all its previous resolutions on the elimination of violence against women,

Reaffirming the obligation of all States to promote and protect all human rights and fundamental freedoms, and reaffirming also that discrimination on the basis of sex is contrary to the Charter of the United Nations, the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women and other international human rights instruments, and that its elimination is an integral part of efforts towards the elimination of all forms of violence against women,

Reaffirming also the Declaration on the Elimination of Violence against Women, the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action, the outcome of the twenty-third special session of the General Assembly entitled “Women 2000: gender equality, development and peace for the twenty-first century”, and the declaration adopted at the forty-ninth session of the Commission on the Status of Women,

Reaffirming further the international commitments in the field of social development and to gender equality and the advancement of women made at the World Conference on Human Rights, the International Conference on Population and Development, the World Summit for Social Development and the World Conference against Racism, Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia and Related Intolerance, as well as those made in the United Nations Millennium Declaration and at the 2005 World Summit, and noting the attention paid to the elimination of all forms of violence against indigenous women in the United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples adopted by the General Assembly in its resolution 61/295 of 13 September 2007,

Recalling the inclusion of gender-related crimes and crimes of sexual violence in the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court, as well as the recognition by the ad hoc international criminal tribunals that rape can constitute a war crime, a crime against humanity or a constitutive act with respect to genocide or torture,

Recalling also Security Council resolution 1325(2000) of 31 October 2000, and welcoming the adoption of Council resolution 1820(2008) of 19 June 2008 on women and peace and security,

Deeply concerned about the pervasiveness of violence against women and girls in all its different forms and manifestations worldwide, and reiterating the need to intensify efforts to prevent and eliminate all forms of violence against women and girls throughout the world,

Recognizing that violence against women is rooted in historically unequal power relations between men and women and that all forms of violence against women seriously violate and impair or nullify the enjoyment by women of all human rights and fundamental freedoms and constitute a major impediment to the ability of women to make use of their capabilities,

Recognizing also that women’s poverty and lack of empowerment, as well as their marginalization resulting from their exclusion from social policies and from the benefits of sustainable development, can place them at increased risk of violence, and that violence against women impedes the social and economic development of communities and States, as well as the achievement of the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals,

Recognizing further that the empowerment of women, by ensuring their full representation and full and equal participation at all levels of decision-making, is important in eliminating violence against women and girls,

Acknowledging the need to address violence against women holistically, including through the recognition of linkages between violence against women and other issues such as HIV/AIDS, poverty eradication, food security, peace and security, humanitarian assistance, health and crime prevention,

Expressing its appreciation for the high number of activities undertaken by States to eliminate all forms of violence against women, such as enacting or amending legislation relating to acts of violence against women and adopting comprehensive national action plans to combat such violence,

Recognizing the important role of civil society, in particular women’s organizations, in the efforts to eliminate all forms of violence against women,

1. Stresses that “violence against women” means any act of gender-based violence that results in, or is likely to result in, physical, sexual or psychological harm or suffering to women, including threats of such acts, coercion or arbitrary deprivation of liberty, whether occurring in public or in private life;

2. Recognizes that violence against women and girls persists in every country in the world as a pervasive violation of the enjoyment of human rights and a major impediment to achieving gender equality, development, peace and the internationally agreed development goals, in particular the Millennium Development Goals;

3. Expresses its concern about the continuing level of impunity for acts of violence against women worldwide;

4. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General on the intensification of efforts to eliminate all forms of violence against women, and takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on eliminating rape and other forms of sexual violence in all their manifestations, including in conflict and related situations;

5. Welcomes also the efforts and important contributions at the local, national, regional and international levels to eliminate all forms of violence against women, including by the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women and the Special Rapporteur on violence against women, its causes and consequences, in particular the second thematic report on violence against women, its causes and consequences submitted by the Special Rapporteur to the Human Rights Council in 2008;

6. Recognizes the important role of the family in preventing and combating violence against women and girls and the need to support its capacity to prevent and combat violence against women;

7. Welcomes the launch of the Secretary-General's campaign to end violence against women "UNiTE to End Violence against Women", supported, inter alia, by the United Nations Development Fund for Women advocacy campaign "Say NO to violence against women" and the United Nations inter-agency initiative "Stop Rape Now: United Nations Action against Sexual Violence in Conflict", stresses the need to ensure that concrete follow-up activities will be undertaken by the United Nations system to intensify action to end violence against women, in close consultation with existing system-wide activities on violence against women, and requests the Secretary-General to identify, announce and report on the basis of the expected results of his campaign;

8. Strongly condemns all acts of violence against women and girls, whether these acts are perpetrated by the State, by private persons or by non-State actors, and calls for the elimination of all forms of gender-based violence in the family, within the general community and where perpetrated or condoned by the State;

9. Stresses that it is important that States strongly condemn all forms of violence against women and refrain from invoking any custom, tradition or religious consideration to avoid their obligations with respect to its elimination as set out in the Declaration on the Elimination of Violence against Women;

10. Stresses also that States have the obligation to promote and protect all human rights and fundamental freedoms of women and girls and must exercise due diligence to prevent, investigate, prosecute and punish the perpetrators of violence against women and girls and to provide protection to the victims, and that failure to do so violates and impairs or nullifies the enjoyment of their human rights and fundamental freedoms;

11. Urges States to end impunity for violence against women by investigating, prosecuting with due process and punishing all perpetrators, by ensuring that women have equal protection of the law and equal access to justice and by holding up to public scrutiny and eliminating those attitudes that foster, justify or tolerate all forms of violence against women and girls;

12. Reaffirms that the persistence of armed conflicts in various parts of the world is a major impediment to the elimination of all forms of violence against women, and, bearing in mind that armed and other types of conflicts and terrorism and hostage-taking still persist in many parts of the world and that aggression, foreign occupation and ethnic and other types of conflicts are an ongoing reality affecting women and men in nearly every region, calls upon all States and the international community to place particular focus on and give priority attention and increased assistance to the plight and suffering of women and girls living in such situations and to ensure that, where violence is committed against them, all perpetrators of such violence are duly investigated and, as appropriate, prosecuted and punished in order to end impunity, while stressing the need to respect international humanitarian law and human rights law;

13. Stresses the need for the exclusion of the killing and maiming of women and girls, as prohibited under international law, and sexual violence crimes from amnesty provisions in the context of conflict resolution processes;

14. Stresses also that States should take measures to ensure that all officials responsible for implementing policies and programmes aimed at preventing violence against women, protecting and assisting the victims, and investigating and punishing violence against women, receive proper training to sensitize them to the different and specific needs of women, in particular women who have been subjected to violence, so that women are not revictimized when seeking justice and redress;

15. Stresses further that States should take all possible measures to empower women and inform them of their rights in seeking redress through mechanisms of justice, inform everyone of women's rights and of the existing penalties for violating those rights, and engage men and boys, as well as families, as agents of change in preventing and condemning violence against women;

16. Urges States to continue to develop their national strategy and a more systematic, comprehensive, multisectoral and sustained approach aimed at eliminating all forms of violence against women, including by achieving gender equality and the empowerment of women, and by using best practices to end impunity and a culture of tolerance towards violence against women, inter alia, in the fields of legislation, prevention, law enforcement, victim assistance and rehabilitation, such as:

(a) Establishing, in partnership with all relevant stakeholders, a comprehensive integrated national plan dedicated to combating violence against women in all its aspects, which includes data collection and analysis, prevention and protection measures, as well as national information campaigns using resources to eliminate in the media gender stereotypes that lead to violence against women and girls;

(b) Reviewing and, where appropriate, revising, amending or abolishing all laws, regulations, policies, practices and customs that discriminate against women or have a discriminatory impact on women, and ensuring that the provisions of multiple legal systems, where they exist, comply with international human rights obligations, commitments and principles, including the principle of non-discrimination;

(c) Evaluating and assessing the impact of current legislation, rules and procedures regarding violence against women, including the reasons for low reporting, and, where necessary, reinforcing criminal law and procedure relating to all forms of violence against women and, where necessary, incorporating into law measures aimed at preventing violence against women;

(d) Ensuring that there is sufficient knowledge, including expertise in effective legal approaches to eliminating violence against women, awareness and coordination in the legal system and, to that end, where appropriate, appointing a focal point in the legal system for cases of violence against women;

(e) Ensuring the systematic collection and analysis of data to monitor all forms of violence against women, while ensuring and maintaining the privacy and confidentiality of the victims, including with the involvement of national statistical offices and, where appropriate, in partnership with other actors;

(f) Establishing appropriate national mechanisms for monitoring and evaluating the implementation of national measures, including national action plans, taken to eliminate violence against women and girls, including through the use of national indicators;

(g) Providing adequate financial support for the implementation of national action plans to end violence against women and other relevant activities;

(h) Allocating adequate resources to promote the empowerment of women and gender equality and to prevent and redress all forms and manifestations of violence against women;

(i) Adopting all appropriate measures, especially in the field of education, to modify the social and cultural patterns of conduct of men and women and to eliminate prejudices, customary practices and all other practices based on the idea of the inferiority or superiority of either of the sexes and on stereotyped roles for men and women;

(j) Empowering women, in particular women living in poverty, through, inter alia, social and economic policies that guarantee them full and equal access to all levels of quality education and training and to affordable and adequate public and social services, as well as equal access to financial resources and full and equal rights to own land and other property, and taking further appropriate measures to address the increasing rate of homelessness or inadequate housing for women in order to reduce their vulnerability to violence;

(k) Treating all forms of violence against women and girls as a criminal offence, punishable by law, and ensuring penalties commensurate with the severity of the crimes and sanctions in domestic legislation to punish and redress, as appropriate, the wrongs caused to women who are subjected to violence;

(l) Taking effective measures to prevent the victim's consent from becoming an impediment to bringing perpetrators of violence against women to justice, while ensuring that appropriate safeguards to protect the victim are in place;

(m) Ensuring that effective legal assistance is available to all female victims of violence so that they can make informed decisions regarding, inter alia, legal proceedings and issues relating to family law, and also ensuring that victims have access to just and effective remedies for the harm that they have suffered, including through the adoption of national legislation where necessary;

(n) Ensuring that all relevant public officials coordinate effectively in the prevention, investigation, prosecution and punishment of all forms of violence against women, and provide protection and support to victims;

(o) Developing or improving and disseminating specialized training programmes, including practical tools and good practices guidelines on how to identify, prevent and deal with cases of violence against women and on how to assist victims, for police officers, the judiciary, health workers, law enforcement personnel and other relevant public authorities;

(p) Strengthening national health and social infrastructure to reinforce measures to promote women's equal access to public health and address the health consequences of all forms of violence against women, including by providing support to victims;

(q) Establishing or supporting integrated centres through which shelter, legal, health, psychological, counselling and other services are provided to victims of all forms of violence against women and, where such centres are not yet feasible, promoting collaboration and coordination among agencies, in order to make remedies more accessible and to facilitate the physical, psychological and social recovery of victims, and ensuring that victims have access to such services;

(r) Ensuring adequate and comprehensive rehabilitation and reintegration of victims of violence into society;

(s) Ensuring that the prison system and probation services provide appropriate rehabilitation programmes for perpetrators, as a preventive tool to avoid recidivism;

(t) Supporting and engaging in partnerships with non-governmental organizations, in particular women's organizations, and other relevant actors and the private sector to end violence against women;

17. Calls upon the international community, including the United Nations system and, as appropriate, regional and subregional organizations, to support national efforts to promote the empowerment of women and gender equality in order to enhance national efforts to eliminate violence against women and girls, including, upon request, in the development and implementation of national action plans on the elimination of violence against women and girls, through, inter alia, and taking into account national priorities, official development assistance and other appropriate assistance, such as facilitating the sharing of guidelines, methodologies and best practices;

18. Stresses the contribution of the ad hoc international criminal tribunals in ending impunity through ensuring accountability and punishing perpetrators of violence against women, as well as the contribution the International Criminal Court can make, and urges States to consider ratifying or acceding as a matter of priority to the Rome Statute, which entered into force on 1 July 2002;

19. Welcomes the steps taken by several United Nations bodies to discuss, within their respective mandates, the question of violence against women in all its forms and manifestations, and encourages all relevant bodies to continue to address this issue in their future efforts and work programmes;

20. Reiterates its request to the Inter-Agency Network on Women and Gender Equality to consider ways and means to enhance the effectiveness of the United Nations Trust Fund in Support of Actions to Eliminate Violence against Women as a system-wide funding mechanism for preventing and redressing all forms of violence against women and girls, and in this regard stresses the importance of new and increased contributions from all States to the Fund in order to achieve the target set by the United Nations Development Fund for Women;

21. Calls upon all United Nations bodies, entities, funds and programmes and the specialized agencies and invites the Bretton Woods institutions to intensify their efforts at all levels to eliminate all forms of violence against women and girls and to better coordinate their work, inter alia, through the Task Force on Violence against Women of the Inter-Agency Network on Women and Gender Equality;

22. Requests the Secretary-General to submit:

(a) To the General Assembly at its sixty-fourth session a report with information provided by the United Nations bodies, funds and programmes and the specialized agencies on their follow-up activities to implement Assembly resolutions 61/143 and 62/133 and the present resolution, including on their assistance to States in their efforts to eliminate all forms of violence against women;

(b) To the General Assembly at its sixty-fifth session a report with information provided by States on their follow-up activities to implement the present resolution;

23. Also requests the Secretary-General to present an oral report to the Commission on the Status of Women at its fifty-third session with information provided by the United Nations bodies, funds and programmes and the specialized agencies on recent follow-up activities to implement resolutions 61/143 and 62/133, including on the progress made in enhancing the effectiveness of the United Nations Trust Fund in Support of Actions to Eliminate Violence against Women as a system-wide United Nations mechanism and on the progress of the Secretary-General's campaign to end violence against women, and urges United Nations bodies, entities, funds and programmes and the specialized agencies to contribute promptly to that report;

24. Decides to continue the consideration of the question at its sixty-fourth session under the item entitled "Advancement of women".

Elimination of rape and other forms of sexual violence

In response to General Assembly resolution 62/134 [YUN 2007, p. 1159], the Secretary-General in August submitted a report [A/63/216 & Corr.1] on eliminating rape and other forms of sexual violence in all their manifestations, including in conflict situations, which provided information on the measures taken by States and other stakeholders to address those issues. The report, which was based on input from 29 States and 16 UN system entities, summarized initiatives undertaken by States with regard to: human rights instruments, constitutional frameworks and follow-up to resolution 1325(2000) [YUN 2000, p. 1113]; protection measures; measures pertaining to the justice system; services and support to victims; strategies for prevention, prosecution and monitoring; and resources to prevent and respond to rape and sexual violence. Measures taken by UN system entities were related to support for efforts to eliminate rape; integrating the needs of victims into UN humanitarian assistance programmes; and resources for the elimination of violence against women. The report also complemented the Secretary-General's 2007 report on the intensification of efforts to eliminate all forms of violence against women [YUN 2007, p. 1157].

In his conclusions, the Secretary-General indicated that the Security Council had taken action on the question of sexual violence and would continue to consider the issue in the context of situations on its agenda, including resolution 1820(2008) (see p. 1265). He also made recommendations for States to establish or strengthen and effectively implement legal and policy frameworks to protect women and girls from rape, including marital rape, and sexual violence, and to end impunity for perpetrators. Since only a small percentage of such crimes were reported to the police, and a smaller number resulted in convictions, it was critical for States to create an environment that encouraged victims of rape and sexual violence to seek and obtain justice and redress; to ensure that criminal justice systems responded effectively to sexual offences and achieved higher reporting and conviction rates; and to establish protocols in all relevant services to ensure consistent professionalism and standards of treatment of victims. Specialized training for all professionals who came into contact with victims was critical. States should also consider adopting plans that specifically targeted the prevention of and response to sexual violence, expanded monitoring and evaluation of their efforts, and disseminated lessons learned and good practices in order to facilitate the sharing of experiences.

Crime prevention and criminal justice responses to violence against women and girls

In response to Economic and Social Council resolution 2006/29 [YUN 2006, p. 1338], the Secretary-General in February submitted to the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice a report [E/CN.15/2008/2] on crime prevention and criminal justice responses to violence against women and girls, which reviewed Secretariat efforts to implement the resolution, including the work of the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime (UNODC). The report also presented information received from 26 States on efforts to address the problem of violence against women and girls, outlining initiatives undertaken to ensure that national strategies, action plans and legislative frameworks were established, and discussed other issues, such as the role of the police, victim support and assistance, training, awareness-raising and information campaigns, research and data collection, ensuring effective criminal justice responses, and special measures concerning child victims of violence. During the reporting period, UNODC expanded its programmes of technical assistance for strengthening criminal justice system responses to gender-based violence and made efforts to build effective partnerships with other UN entities and regional and non-governmental organizations (NGOs) active in the field. The Secretary-General made a series of recommendations for consideration by the Commission (see p. 1243).

On 15 April [E/2008/30], the Commission held a thematic discussion on aspects of violence against women pertaining directly to the Commission and considered the Secretary-General's report. By its decision 17/1 of 18 April, the Commission requested UNODC to convene an intergovernmental group of experts to review and update the Model Strategies and Practical Measures on the Elimination of Violence against Women in the Field of Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice.

Women and armed conflict

Women, peace and security

Report of Secretary-General. In response to the request by the Security Council in presidential statement S/PRST/2007/40 [YUN 2007, p. 1167] for a follow-up report on the implementation of resolution 1325(2000) [YUN 2000, p. 1113], the Secretary-General in September submitted a report [S/2008/622] on women, peace and security which covered critical areas and concerns related to the impact of armed conflict on women. The report also reviewed progress and challenges in the implementation of that resolution by States, UN entities and civil society, including best practices to improve the capacities of States. The report was based on information and data provided by 30 States and 28 UN system entities, as well as civil society and NGO partners. Initiatives had been taken by a broad range of actors, whose efforts included: developing policies, action plans, guidelines and indicators, increasing access to gender expertise, providing training, promoting consultation with, and the participation of women, increasing attention to human rights, and supporting the initiatives of women's groups. Although slower than desired, a culture of gender equality and women's empowerment in the area of peace and security was increasingly taking hold.

The Secretary-General observed that important progress had been made towards developing and pursuing more comprehensive approaches towards full implementation of resolution 1325(2000), including through a more well-defined role of the Security Council. The cumulative effect of those efforts was particularly visible in peacekeeping and humanitarian assistance and, increasingly, in peacebuilding. However, a noticeable gap between policies and their effective implementation needed to be closed. More needed to be done at the country level to integrate gender perspectives into every stage of conflict prevention, resolution and management, as well as in peacebuilding, which would include security sector reform; preventing and ending sexual and gender-based violence; increasing women's representation in decision-making bodies and security institutions; increasing resources and technical support for women's organizations; and ensuring stronger UN capacity to support States in implementing resolution 1325(2000). The Secretary-General also proposed recommendations for future action to accelerate implementation of the resolution.

Security Council debate. On 29 October [meeting 6005], the Security Council held a discussion on the implementation of resolution 1325(2000) and had before it a concept paper [S/2008/655] submitted by China. The Under-Secretary-General for Peacekeeping Operations presented an update on progress regarding the contribution of women to the prevention and resolution of conflicts and peacebuilding. The Council was also briefed by the Special Adviser on Gender Issues and Advancement of Women (OSAGI) on the Secretary-General's report. On the same date, the Council called upon the Secretary-General to appoint more women to pursue good offices on his behalf.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 29 October [meeting 6005], following consultation among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2008/39 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council reaffirms its commitment to the full and effective implementation of its resolutions 1325(2000) and 1820(2008) on women and peace and security and recalls the relevant statements by its President.

The Council takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on women and peace and security.

The Council remains concerned about the underrepresentation of women at all stages of peace processes and in peacebuilding, and recognizes the need to facilitate the full and effective participation of women in these areas, given the vital role of women in the prevention and resolution of conflicts and in peacebuilding.

The Council urges Member States and international, regional and subregional organizations to take measures to increase the participation of women in conflict prevention, conflict resolution and peacebuilding and to strengthen the role of women as decision-makers in these areas. The Council calls upon the Secretary-General to appoint more women to pursue good offices on his behalf, particularly as Special Representatives and Special Envoys.

The Council strongly condemns all violations of international law committed against women and girls during and after armed conflicts, urges the complete cessation by all parties of such acts with immediate effect, and also urges Member States to bring to justice those responsible for crimes of this nature.

The Council requests the Secretary-General to provide a report on the implementation of resolution 1325(2000) over the coming year, including information on the impact of armed conflict on women and girls in situations of which the Council is seized; and on the obstacles and challenges to strengthening the participation of women in conflict prevention, conflict resolution and peacebuilding, and recommendations to address those issues, to be submitted to the Council by October 2009.

Sexual violence and armed conflict

On 19 June [meeting 5916], the Security Council held a high-level debate on “Women and peace and security: sexual violence in situations of armed conflict”. In its consideration of the topic, the Council had before it a concept paper [S/2008/364] submitted by the United States, and a summary report [S/2008/402] of the conference “Women targeted or affected by armed conflict: what role for military peacekeepers?” (Sussex, United Kingdom, 27–29 May) submitted by the United Kingdom. The Secretary-General and Deputy Secretary-General briefed the Council on efforts made by UN system entities to address all forms of violence against women and girls, including sexual violence in armed conflict. The Secretary-General indicated that he was eager to deploy more women as police, military and civilian personnel, including at the highest levels of mission leadership, and reaffirmed the UN zero-tolerance policy against sexual exploitation or abuse by UN personnel.

On the same date, the Council requested that the Secretary-General develop guidelines and strategies to enhance the ability of UN peacekeeping operations to protect civilians and prevent sexual violence against women and girls in conflict and post-conflict situations. It also affirmed its intention, when establishing and renewing State-specific sanctions regimes, to consider the appropriateness of targeted and graduated measures against parties to situations of armed conflict committing rape and other forms of sexual violence against women and girls.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 19 June [meeting 5916], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1820(2008). The draft [S/2008/403] was submitted by Armenia, Australia, Austria, Belgium, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Canada, Chile, Costa Rica, Croatia, Cyprus, Czech Republic, Democratic Republic of the Congo, Denmark, Estonia, Finland, France, Germany, Greece, Hungary, Iceland, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Latvia, Lichtenstein, Lithuania, Luxembourg, Malta, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nigeria, Norway, Panama, Poland, Portugal, Republic of Korea, Romania, San Marino, Slovakia, Slovenia, South Africa, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland, United Republic of Tanzania, United Kingdom and United States.

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its commitment to the continuing and full implementation of its resolutions 1325(2000) of 31 October 2000, 1612(2005) of 26 July 2005 and 1674(2006) of 28 April 2006, and recalling the statements by its President of 31 October 2001, 31 October 2002, 28 October 2004, 27 October 2005, 26 October 2006, 7 March 2007 and 23 October 2007,

Guided by the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations,

Reaffirming the resolve expressed in the 2005 World Summit Outcome to eliminate all forms of violence against women and girls, including by ending impunity and by ensuring the protection of civilians, in particular women and girls, during and after armed conflicts, in accordance with the obligations that States have undertaken under international humanitarian law and international human rights law,

Recalling the commitments contained in the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action as well as those contained in the outcome documents of the twenty-third special session of the General Assembly entitled “Women 2000: gender equality, development and peace for the twenty-first century”, in particular those concerning sexual violence and women in situations of armed conflict,

Reaffirming the obligations of States parties to the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, the Optional Protocol thereto, the Convention on the Rights of the Child and the Optional Protocols thereto, and urging States that have not yet done so to consider ratifying or acceding to them,

Noting that civilians account for the vast majority of those adversely affected by armed conflict; that women and girls are particularly targeted by the use of sexual violence, including as a tactic of war to humiliate, dominate, instill fear in, disperse and/or forcibly relocate civilian members of a community or ethnic group; and that sexual violence perpetrated in this manner may in some instances persist after the cessation of hostilities,

Recalling its condemnation in the strongest terms of all sexual and other forms of violence committed against civilians in armed conflict, in particular women and children,

Reiterating its deep concern that, despite its repeated condemnation of violence against women and children in situations of armed conflict, including sexual violence in situations of armed conflict, and despite its calls addressed to all parties to armed conflict for the cessation of such acts with immediate effect, such acts continue to occur, and in some situations have become systematic and widespread, reaching appalling levels of brutality,

Recalling the inclusion of a range of sexual violence offences in the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court and the statutes of the ad hoc international criminal tribunals,

Reaffirming the important role of women in the prevention and resolution of conflicts and in peacebuilding, and stressing the importance of their equal participation and full involvement in all efforts for the maintenance and promotion of peace and security, and the need to increase their role in decision-making with regard to conflict prevention and resolution,

Deeply concerned about the persistent obstacles and challenges to the participation and full involvement of women in the prevention and resolution of conflict as a result of violence, intimidation and discrimination, which erode women’s capacity and legitimacy to participate in post-conflict public life, and acknowledging the negative impact this has on durable peace, security and reconciliation, including post-conflict peacebuilding,

Recognizing that States bear the primary responsibility to respect and ensure the human rights of their citizens, as well as all individuals within their territory, as provided for by relevant international law,

Reaffirming that parties to armed conflict bear the primary responsibility to take all feasible steps to ensure the protection of affected civilians,

Welcoming the ongoing coordination of efforts within the United Nations system, marked by the inter-agency initiative "United Nations Action against Sexual Violence in Conflict," to create awareness about sexual violence in armed conflicts and post-conflict situations and, ultimately, to put an end to it,

1. Stresses that sexual violence, when used or commissioned as a tactic of war in order to deliberately target civilians or as a part of a widespread or systematic attack against civilian populations, can significantly exacerbate situations of armed conflict and may impede the restoration of international peace and security, affirms in this regard that effective steps to prevent and respond to such acts of sexual violence can significantly contribute to the maintenance of international peace and security, and expresses its readiness, when considering situations on the agenda of the Security Council, to, where necessary, adopt appropriate steps to address widespread or systematic sexual violence;

2. Demands the immediate and complete cessation by all parties to armed conflict of all acts of sexual violence against civilians with immediate effect;

3. Demands also that all parties to armed conflict immediately take appropriate measures to protect civilians, including women and girls, from all forms of sexual violence, which could include enforcing appropriate military disciplinary measures and upholding the principle of command responsibility, training troops on the categorical prohibition of all forms of sexual violence against civilians, debunking myths that fuel sexual violence, vetting armed and security forces to take into account past actions of rape and other forms of sexual violence, and evacuation of women and children under imminent threat of sexual violence to safety; and requests the Secretary-General, where appropriate, to encourage dialogue to address this issue in the context of broader discussions of conflict resolution between appropriate United Nations officials and the parties to the conflict, taking into account, inter alia, the views expressed by women of affected local communities;

4. Notes that rape and other forms of sexual violence can constitute a war crime, a crime against humanity, or a constitutive act with respect to genocide, stresses the need for the exclusion of sexual violence crimes from amnesty provisions in the context of conflict resolution processes, and calls upon Member States to comply with their obligations for prosecuting persons responsible for such acts and to ensure that all victims of sexual violence, particularly women and girls, have equal protection under the law and equal access to justice, and stresses the importance of ending impunity for such acts as part of a comprehensive approach to seeking sustainable peace, justice, truth and national reconciliation;

5. Affirms its intention, when establishing and renewing State-specific sanctions regimes, to take into consideration the appropriateness of targeted and graduated measures against parties to situations of armed conflict who commit rape and other forms of sexual violence against women and girls in situations of armed conflict;

6. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Council, the Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations and its Working Group and relevant States, as appropriate, to develop and implement appropriate training programmes for all peacekeeping and humanitarian personnel deployed by the United Nations in the context of missions as mandated by the Council to help them to better prevent, recognize and respond to sexual violence and other forms of violence against civilians;

7. Also requests the Secretary-General to continue and strengthen efforts to implement the policy of zero tolerance of sexual exploitation and abuse in United Nations peacekeeping operations, and urges troop- and police-contributing countries to take appropriate preventative action, including predeployment and in-theatre awareness training, and other action to ensure full accountability in cases of such conduct involving their personnel;

8. Encourages troop- and police-contributing countries, in consultation with the Secretary-General, to consider steps they could take to heighten awareness and the responsiveness of their personnel participating in United Nations peacekeeping operations to protect civilians, including women and children, and prevent sexual violence against women and girls in conflict and post-conflict situations, including, wherever possible, the deployment of a higher percentage of women peacekeepers or police;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to develop effective guidelines and strategies to enhance the ability of relevant United Nations peacekeeping operations, consistent with their mandates, to protect civilians, including women and girls, from all forms of sexual violence and to systematically include in his written reports to the Council on conflict situations his observations concerning the protection of women and girls and recommendations in this regard;

10. Requests the Secretary-General and relevant United Nations agencies, inter alia, through consultation with women and women-led organizations, as appropriate, to develop effective mechanisms for providing protection from violence, including, in particular, sexual violence, to women and girls in and around United Nations-managed refugee and internally displaced persons camps, as well as in all disarmament, demobilization and reintegration processes, and in justice and security sector reform efforts assisted by the United Nations;

11. Stresses the important role that the Peacebuilding Commission can play by including in its advice and recommendations for post-conflict peacebuilding strategies, where appropriate, ways to address sexual violence committed during and in the aftermath of armed conflict, and ensuring consultation and effective representation of women's civil society in its country-specific configurations, as part of its wider approach to gender issues;

12. Urges the Secretary-General and his Special Envoys to invite women to participate in discussions pertinent to the prevention and resolution of conflict, the maintenance of peace and security, and post-conflict peacebuilding, and encourages all parties to such talks to facilitate the equal and full participation of women at decision-making levels;

13. Urges all parties concerned, including Member States, United Nations entities and financial institutions, to support the development and strengthening of the capacities of national institutions, in particular of judicial and health systems, and of local civil society networks in order to provide sustainable assistance to victims of sexual violence in armed conflict and post-conflict situations;

14. Urges appropriate regional and subregional bodies, in particular, to consider developing and implementing policies, activities and advocacy for the benefit of women and girls affected by sexual violence in armed conflict;

15. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to the Council by 30 June 2009 on the implementation of the present resolution in the context of situations which are on the agenda of the Council, utilizing information from available United Nations sources, including country teams, peacekeeping operations and other United Nations personnel, which would include information on situations of armed conflict in which sexual violence has been widely or systematically employed against civilians; analysis of the prevalence and trends of sexual violence in situations of armed conflict; proposals for strategies to minimize the susceptibility of women and girls to such violence; benchmarks for measuring progress in preventing and addressing sexual violence; appropriate input from United Nations implementing partners in the field; information on his plans for facilitating the collection of timely, objective, accurate and reliable information on the use of sexual violence in situations of armed conflict, including through improved coordination of United Nations activities on the ground and at Headquarters; and information on actions taken by parties to armed conflict to implement their responsibilities as described in the present resolution, in particular by immediately and completely ceasing all acts of sexual violence and taking appropriate measures to protect women and girls from all forms of sexual violence;

16. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Women and children taken hostage

Report of Secretary-General. In response to Commission on the Status of Women resolution 50/1 [YUN 2006, p. 1341], the Secretary-General submitted a report [E/CN.6/2008/7] on the release of women and children taken hostage, including those subsequently imprisoned, in armed conflicts, which included information provided by six Member States, 12 UN system entities and one international organization. Only one State provided information on women taken hostage or imprisoned in armed conflict and little information was provided on the release of women taken hostage or imprisoned. Most of the input drew attention to support provided to children demobilized from situations of forced recruitment into armed forces. Much of the information from UN entities focused on the follow-up to Security Council resolution 1325(2000). The Secretary-General proposed that the Special Representative for children and armed conflict take into account the release of children taken hostage, including those subsequently imprisoned, in armed conflicts, and provide sex-disaggregated data, where available, when preparing the reports requested by the General Assembly.

Commission action. In a March resolution [E/2008/27 (res. 52/1)], the Commission requested the Secretary-General to facilitate the immediate release of civilian women and children who had been taken hostage, to ensure the widest possible dissemination of relevant material, in particular material related to Security Council resolution 1325(2000), and to submit to the Commission, at its fifty-fourth (2010) session, a report on the implementation of resolution 52/1.

Women in power and decision-making

Financing for gender equality and the empowerment of women

In response to Economic and Social Council resolution 2006/9 [YUN 2006, p. 1356], the Secretary-General submitted a report [E/CN.6/2008/2] on financing for gender equality and the empowerment of women, which analysed progress achieved and remaining gaps and challenges in financing for gender equality and the empowerment of women, including information on the Monterrey Consensus [YUN 2002, p. 953], innovative sources of funding, financing critical stakeholders, and measurement challenges. On implementation of global commitments, there had been limited assessment of resource allocations to translate global commitments into national action, and it was estimated that the financing gap for achieving Goal 3 of the MDGs—promote gender equality and empower women—in low-income countries ranged from $8.6 billion in 2006 to what would be $23.8 billion in 2015. In addition, the 10-year review of the implementation of the Platform for Action [YUN 2005, p. 1247] indicated that there was a significant gap between policy and practice in many countries and that a lack of resources was a key obstacle to effective implementation at the national level.

In follow-up to the Monterrey Consensus, the Secretary-General observed that the most significant achievements had been made in the area of gender-responsive budgets. However, further efforts were needed to ensure a shift from analysis to implementation, as well as to broaden the focus to include both revenue and expenditures and ensure the full involvement of all stakeholders. Insufficient budgetary resources continued to undermine the effectiveness and sustainability of both national mechanisms for the advancement of women and women's organizations in their efforts towards supporting and monitoring implementation of the Platform for Action. Although some progress had been made in reporting on resource allocations, monitoring and reporting remained insufficient. Further development of sex-disaggregated data and indicators was required in order to measure progress more systematically and effectively. The Secretary-General proposed a series of recommendations that the Commission might wish Governments, the UN system and other actors to undertake, which included ensuring that gender perspectives were fully incorporated in the preparations for and the outcome of the Follow-up International Conference on Financing for Development to Review the Implementation of the Monterrey Consensus (see p. 1076), to be held in Doha, Qatar, from 29 November to 2 December.

Report of Secretary-General. In response to Economic and Social Council resolution 2006/9 and General Assembly resolution 61/145 [YUN 2006, p. 1330], the Secretary-General submitted a report [E/CN.6/2008/5] on progress in mainstreaming a gender perspective in the development, implementation and evaluation of national policies and programmes, with a particular focus on financing for gender equality and the empowerment of women, which was to be read in conjunction with his report on the same topic. The report summarized national initiatives undertaken on financing for gender equality and the empowerment of women in the areas of public finance management, including gender-responsive budgeting; national economic policies, plans and programmes; mechanisms and instruments on gender equality; financing for national mechanisms for the advancement of women; financing for women's organizations; development cooperation; and new aid modalities and strengthened delivery mechanisms.

The Secretary-General observed that although gender-responsive budget initiatives had been implemented by a large number of States, many initiatives had not been adequately linked to overall public finance management or moved beyond the analysis of expenditures. Other obstacles to progress included the failure to assess the cost of, and secure resources for, the implementation of gender equality policies, strategies and plans, including the gender mainstreaming strategy, and the fact that gender equality was not seen as a central goal in all national economic policies, plans and programmes. The report concluded with recommendations for consideration by the Commission.

Commission action. In February [E/2008/27], the Commission held parallel high-level round tables on the theme "Financing for gender equality and the empowerment of women", as well as panel discussions on key policy initiatives and on capacity-building on mainstreaming a gender perspective in the development, implementation and evaluation of national policies and programmes. On 13 March, the Commission adopted its agreed conclusions on financing gender equality and the empowerment of women, which made recommendations for actions to be taken by Governments, UN system entities, international financial institutions, civil society, NGOs and the private sector.

On 23 July, the Economic and Social Council transmitted the agreed conclusions to the General Assembly as an input to the preparations for the follow-up international conference (decision 2008/235). On 25 July, the Council adopted "Implementing the internationally agreed goals and commitments in regard to gender equality and the empowerment of women" as the theme for its 2010 annual ministerial-level substantive review (decision 2008/258).

Institutional mechanisms for the advancement of women

Inter-Agency Network. The United Nations Inter-Agency Network on Women and Gender Equality (IANWGE), at its seventh annual session (New York, 19–21 February) [IANWGE/2008/Report], reviewed progress in the implementation of the Economic and Social Council agreed conclusions 1997/2 on mainstreaming a gender perspective into all UN system policies and programmes [YUN 1997, p. 1186] and followed up on various inter-sessional activities. It focused on matters for consideration by the High-level Committees on Management (HLCM) and on Programmes (HLCP) of the United Nations System Chief Executives Board for Coordination (CEB), discussing issues related to UN reform; integration of a gender perspective into the ongoing intergovernmental processes, including financing for development, development and trade, and mid-term review of the MDGs; emerging trends and challenges, including climate change and rape; and the Secretary-General's campaign to end violence against women and girls [YUN 2007, p. 1157].

The report also summarized the oral reports provided by task force managers. On gender and the MDGs, the World Bank's Global Monitoring Report 2007 found that data on all the official indicators of the MDG on gender equality and empowering women were available for only 59 out of 154 countries, and even fewer countries had time series data that would allow tracking over time. On gender mainstreaming, a concept note of evaluation guidance was prepared by the Office of Internal Oversight Services (OIOS), and the International Labour Organization (ILO) developed its gender equality action plan for the 2008–2009 biennium in a results-based format, comprising outcomes, indicators, targets and activities, as well as roles and responsibilities in the areas of staffing, programmes and institutional arrangements. The Network decided to intensify its work on the operationalization of the system-wide action plan on gender mainstreaming by tasking its Ad Hoc Working Group on the action plan to prepare a concept paper and a road map on the draft action plan by July. IANWGE also decided to establish five new task forces to address the following issues: capacity-building for gender mainstreaming; the development of a programme of action for the Secretary-General's campaign to end violence against women and girls; climate change; the tracking of gender-related resources within the UN system; and the implementation of General Assembly resolution 62/134 [ibid., p. 1159] on eliminating rape and other forms of sexual violence in all their manifestations, including in conflict and related situations. The Network expressed concern regarding the funding of its activities, and agreed that system-wide fundraising must be undertaken and that greater inter-agency financial support at the level of CEB activities carried out by IANWGE should be explored.

Report of Secretary-General. In response to Economic and Social Council resolution 2007/33 [YUN 2007, p. 1186], the Secretary-General in May submitted a report [E/2008/53] on mainstreaming a gender perspective into all UN system policies and programmes. The report—based on the responses from 32 UN system entities to a questionnaire designed by OSAGI and approved by IANWGE—indicated that many entities had developed or strengthened entity-specific policies, strategies and action plans on gender equality and had undertaken a range of activities to incorporate gender perspectives into country programming. Most entities reported using results-based management frameworks as one of the key actions in improving gender mainstreaming and reducing the gap between policy and practice. Entities were increasingly setting concrete targets and indicators, at country programme levels, to be monitored on a systematic basis. However, as indicated in the agreed conclusions adopted by the Commission at its 2008 session (see p. 1268), under-resourcing of gender equality activities persisted throughout the UN system, and in particular in the gender-specific entities, namely OSAGI, UNIFEM, the Division for the Advancement of Women (DAW) and the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women (INSTRAW). On implementation of resolution 2006/36 [YUN 2006, p. 1350], most entities had developed generic gender-mainstreaming training, as well as training and resource materials for various categories of staff. There had also been some promising initiatives and increased attention to capacity-building, but no entity had yet established an effective systematic capacity-building programme on gender equality. Stronger efforts were needed to address identified constraints, including lack of conceptual clarity, inadequate resources, lack of leadership and accountability, the ad hoc nature of many training programmes, and weak follow-up.

The Secretary-General concluded that UN entities needed to strengthen their efforts to implement the gender-mainstreaming strategy in support of States' efforts at the national level for gender equality and the empowerment of women. In most entities, gender-equality policies, strategies and action plans included concrete actions to develop capacity and improve accountability and monitoring and reporting on the implementation of gender mainstreaming. A wide range of effective methodologies, tools and resources had been developed and applied across the UN system. Nonetheless, in many entities, lack of responsibility for gender mainstreaming among staff and managers remained a challenge. The overall low number of gender specialists at all levels and the continued problems with gender focal point systems at the country level were significant constraints to the systematic and effective implementation of gender mainstreaming. The Secretary-General made recommendations for the Council to encourage UN entities to strengthen leadership on gender mainstreaming by requiring more explicit attention to the strategy at the highest levels; establishing the responsibilities of resident coordinators vis-à-vis gender mainstreaming at the country level; requiring senior management to report regularly on gender equality results; and substantially increasing resources for gender mainstreaming activities, including capacity-building and inter-agency collaboration.

UNDP consideration. In January [E/2008/35], during the first regular session of the United Nations Development Programme/United Nations Population Fund (UNDP/UNFPA) Executive Board, the Director (Gender Team, Bureau for Development Policy) presented an oral report on the 2007 gender action plan and the gender equality strategy for 2008–2011. She noted that UNDP had enhanced its role as a knowledge broker in the field, while acknowledging ongoing challenges in developing capacity, increasing accountability, monitoring progress and building partnerships. Delegations commended UNDP on the progress made with respect to women's empowerment, supported the gender equality strategy and encouraged UNDP to implement relevant elements of the triennial comprehensive policy review.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 25 July [meeting 44], the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 2008/34 [draft: E/2008/L.32] without vote [agenda item 14 (a)].

Mainstreaming a gender perspective into all policies and programmes in the United Nations system

The Economic and Social Council,

Reaffirming its agreed conclusions 1997/2 of 18 July 1997 on mainstreaming a gender perspective into all policies and programmes in the United Nations system, and recalling its resolutions 2001/41 of 26 July 2001, 2002/23 of 24 July 2002, 2003/49 of 24 July 2003, 2004/4 of 7 July 2004, 2005/31 of 26 July 2005, 2006/36 of 27 July 2006 and 2007/33 of 27 July 2007,

Reaffirming also the commitment made at the 2005 World Summit to actively promote the mainstreaming of a gender perspective in the design, implementation, monitoring and evaluation of policies and programmes in all political, economic and social spheres and to further undertake to strengthen the capabilities of the United Nations system in the area of gender,

Acknowledging that enhancing the opportunities, potential and activities of women requires a dual focus, namely, programmes aimed at meeting the basic and specific needs of women for capacity-building, organizational development and empowerment, together with gender mainstreaming in all programme formulation and implementation activities,

Recognizing that gender equality and the empowerment of women make an essential contribution to the work of the United Nations,

Noting the ongoing discussions in the General Assembly on the report of the Secretary-General on the recommendations contained in the report of the High-level Panel on United Nations System-wide Coherence in the areas of development, humanitarian assistance and the environment,

Reaffirming that gender mainstreaming is a globally accepted strategy for achieving gender equality and constitutes a critical strategy in the implementation of the Beijing Platform for Action and the outcome of the twenty-third special session of the General Assembly,

Recognizing that training is critical for increasing the awareness, knowledge, commitment and capacity of staff to mainstream a gender perspective into United Nations policies and programmes and that the provision of effective gender training requires adequate financial and human resources,

Underlining the catalytic role played by the Commission on the Status of Women, as well as the important role played by the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly, in promoting and monitoring gender mainstreaming within the United Nations system,

Expressing serious concern that the urgent goal of achieving 50/50 gender balance in the United Nations system, especially at senior and policymaking levels, with full respect for the principle of equitable geographical distribution, in conformity with Article 101, paragraph 3, of the Charter of the United Nations, remains unmet and that the representation of women in the United Nations system has remained almost static, with negligible improvement in some parts of the system, and in some cases has even decreased, as reflected in the report of the Secretary-General on the improvement of the status of women in the United Nations system,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General and the recommendations contained therein;

2. Recognizes that the Inter-Agency Network on Women and Gender Equality remains an important forum for the exchange and cross-fertilization of ideas on gender mainstreaming within the United Nations system, and takes note of the ongoing discussions on the implementation of the policy and strategy for gender mainstreaming within the United Nations system;

3. Encourages all United Nations entities to continue investing in capacity development, including through mandatory training for all staff and personnel and training for senior managers, as a critical means of increasing the awareness, knowledge, commitment and competencies of staff with regard to mainstreaming a gender perspective in all United Nations policies and programmes;

4. Recognizes that a large gap remains between policy and practice and that building United Nations staff capacities alone is not sufficient for the Organization to meet its commitments and obligations with respect to gender mainstreaming, and requests the United Nations system, including the agencies, funds and programmes of the United Nations system within their organizational mandates:

(a) To strengthen institutional accountability mechanisms, including through a more effective monitoring and evaluation framework for gender mainstreaming based on common United Nations evaluation standards;

(b) To strengthen accountability systems for both management and staff, through, inter alia, the inclusion of objectives and results related to gender mainstreaming in personnel workplans and appraisals;

(c) To continue efforts to achieve gender balance in appointments within the United Nations system at the Headquarters and country levels in positions that affect operational activities, including resident coordinator appointments and other high-level posts, with due regard to representation of women from developing countries and keeping in mind the principle of equitable geographical representation, in conformity with Article 101, paragraph 3, of the Charter of the United Nations;

(d) To ensure that programmes, plans and budgets visibly mainstream gender perspectives and allocate adequate financial and human resources for gender mainstreaming commensurate with the organizational gender equality goals, including for mandatory training on gender mainstreaming, especially gender analysis, for all staff and for the implementation of strategies, policies and action plans;

(e) To share and disseminate good practices, tools and methodologies electronically and through regular meetings on gender mainstreaming, including through the Inter-Agency Network on Women and Gender Equality and its task forces, as well as the United Nations country teams;

(f) To address gaps by strengthening coordination and synergy between policy and practice in mainstreaming a gender perspective in their respective fields of work;

(g) To enhance collaboration and coordination in the work of gender specialists and gender focal points working, inter alia, in the areas of peace and security, humanitarian affairs and economic and social development;

(h) To provide specific ongoing capacity-building, inter alia, through training for gender specialists and gender focal points, including in the field;

(i) To promote a United Nations system-wide common understanding of a results-based management framework with benchmarks and indicators for measuring progress in the application of the gender mainstreaming strategy to achieve gender equality;

(j) To include clear gender equality results and gender-sensitive indicators in their strategic frameworks;

(k) To assess the gaps in gender mainstreaming and unify methodologies for evaluation after the implementation of gender mainstreaming policies and programmes within the United Nations system;

(l) To strengthen collaboration between United Nations country teams on gender equality programmes, including through joint activities and the strengthening of the capacity of gender theme groups to support such activities;

(m) To mainstream a gender perspective and pursue gender equality in their country programmes, planning instruments and sector-wide programmes and articulate specific country-level goals and targets in this field in accordance with national development strategies;

(n) To collaborate with the resident coordinator system to provide gender specialist resources in support of gender mainstreaming in country-level activities in all sectors in which they operate, working closely with relevant national counterparts;

(o) To promote inter-agency cooperation through the Inter-Agency Network on Women and Gender Equality and the United Nations System Chief Executives Board for Coordination, through its High-level Committee on Programmes, the United Nations Development Group and its High-level Committee on Management, in order to ensure consistency and synergy in the implementation of the United Nations system-wide policy and strategy on gender mainstreaming;

(p) To promote the collection, analysis and use of data disaggregated by sex during programme development and evaluation of gender mainstreaming to assess progress towards achieving gender equality and the empowerment of women;

5. Requests all relevant United Nations entities to maintain their efforts to raise awareness of gender issues within their organizations and across the United Nations system;

6. Stresses the important role that senior management plays in creating an environment that actively supports gender mainstreaming, and calls upon it to perform that role;

7. Requests the Inter-Agency Network on Women and Gender Equality to continue to provide practical support to its members in gender mainstreaming, explore possibilities for developing an accessible and consolidated database of trained facilitators at the country and regional levels, in consultation with Member States, and report regularly to the United Nations System Chief Executives Board for Coordination in order to facilitate the incorporation of gender mainstreaming perspectives into their work;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the Economic and Social Council at its substantive session of 2009 a detailed report on progress made in the implementation of the present resolution, including updated information on the implementation of paragraph 4 of Council resolution 2006/36.

Strengthening of UN gender equality architecture

During 2008, United Nations efforts towards strengthening the gender architecture of the Organization continued. Informal consultations of the General Assembly were convened on 16 May, 16 June and 8 September by the Co-Chairs for system-wide coherence. The second meeting had before it a 5 June note submitted by the Deputy Secretary-General, which guided the deliberations. The note outlined achievements, gaps and challenges, and highlighted the increasing demand on the UN system to support countries in advancing implementation of their commitments on gender equality and women's empowerment. During the consultations, there was a broad-based momentum to address the manifest weaknesses of the UN system. There was also an agreement that the Secretary-General should be requested to provide a paper by mid-July presenting a range of institutional options on how to reorganize the gender-related bodies of the Organization with a view to improving performance in the area of gender equality and the empowerment of women.

Report of Co-Chairs. On 21 July, the Co-Chairs on system-wide coherence released a report [A/63/362] which summarized the extensive process of consultations conducted with the UN membership in New York and in the pilot countries visited, and set out a direction for moving forward. On gender equality and empowerment, the report indicated that critical gaps had been identified in the way the UN system assisted States in implementing globally agreed mandates and their own internationally made commitments. The Co-Chairs recommended that the Assembly be invited to address the matter in early September and pointed out that the report, taken together with the forthcoming institutional options paper from the Secretary-General, would complete the substantive picture for Member States and equip them for decision-making.

Institutional options paper. In a letter dated 23 July, the Deputy Secretary-General transmitted a document entitled, "Institutional Options to Strengthen United Nations Work on Gender Equality and the Empowerment of Women", which provided information on the existing intergovernmental and institutional arrangements and presented three non-prescriptive options in order to facilitate the consultations of Member States. Two approaches were presented. The first involved maintaining the status quo, which would not require any structural change, with institutional arrangements being strengthened through consolidation of the four existing gender-related entities: OSAGI, DAW, UNIFEM and INSTRAW. The second approach entailed establishing an entity following three possible organizational options: an autonomous fund/programme consolidating the four existing entities into a single entity; a department of the Secretariat; or a composite entity that would combine normative and operational work. The Deputy Secretary-General invited Member States to consider the options and stated that decisive action was critical to achieving progress in gender equality and women's empowerment.

Following informal consultations convened by the Co-Chairs on 8 September, by resolution 62/277 of 15 September (see p. 1516) the General Assembly welcomed the Deputy Secretary-General's paper and requested that the Secretary-General provide a further, detailed modalities paper in respect of the institutional options set out in the Deputy Secretary-General's paper. As specified, the Secretary-General's paper would cover funding, governance structure, staffing, specific functions, and the relationship with the Commission on the Status of Women and other relevant bodies. Particular focus would be given to the "composite entity" option.

Status of women in the United Nations

In response to General Assembly resolution 62/137 [YUN 2007, p. 1153], the Secretary-General submitted a report [A/63/364] on progress made in the representation of women in the organizations and agencies of the UN system from 1 January 2005 to 31 December 2007, and in the UN Secretariat from 1 July 2006 to 30 June 2008.

In resolution 63/159 of 18 December (see p. 1251), the Assembly requested the Secretary-General to review and redouble his efforts to make progress towards the goal of achieving a 50/50 gender balance at all levels in the Secretariat and throughout the UN system.

Women and human rights

Division for the Advancement of Women and OHCHR activities

During the year, cooperation continued between the UN Division for the Advancement of Women and the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR) with the aim of achieving equality between women and men and promoting and protecting women's human rights. In December, the Secretary-General transmitted a report [A/HRC/10/42-E/CN.6/2009/7] on implementation of the 2008 joint work plan of the Division and OHCHR, which summarized the major activities that were carried out and contained the joint workplan for 2009.

Special Rapporteur on laws discriminating against women

In response to the ongoing review of the question on the advisability of appointing a special rapporteur on laws discriminating against women [YUN 2007, p. 1177] OHCHR released in March an analytical study on such laws and the usefulness of creating a new mechanism to address the issue. The study, entitled "Project on a mechanism to address laws that discriminate against women", aimed to obtain national data on such laws and review UN mechanisms to ascertain the extent to which they addressed the issue of discriminatory laws. The report also presented arguments for and against the appointment of a special rapporteur, as well as a possible mandate for the rapporteur.

Trafficking in women and girls

In response to General Assembly resolution 61/144 [YUN 2006, p. 1342], the Secretary-General in August submitted a report [A/63/215] on trafficking in women and girls, which provided information on measures taken by 40 States and 10 UN system entities to combat the practice. The report described initiatives taken by States with regard to international instruments; legislation and the justice system; national action plans, strategies and national coordination mechanisms; bilateral, regional and international agreements and co-operation; prevention measures, including awareness-raising and capacity-building; the role of the business sector and media providers; services and support for victims; and data collection and research. Efforts by States included strengthening legal frameworks, establishing strategies for better coordination and co-operation with different stakeholders, and reinforcing prevention action and efforts to prosecute perpetrators and protect and support victims.

UN system activities focused on analysis, studies and initiatives in support of national and regional efforts. Emphasis was placed on improving cooperation and collaboration and on strengthening a multi-stakeholder, holistic approach to combating trafficking, in particular by providing support for the development of strategic partnerships among government actors, civil society organizations, the private sector and other stakeholders. In March, the Human Rights Council adopted resolution 7/29 on the rights of the child (see p. 738), which addressed the issue of trafficking in children. UNODC organized the first global forum to fight human trafficking (Vienna, 13–15 February) [E/CN.15/2008/CRP.2], which brought together over 1,500 government officials, business leaders, NGOs, academics, UN system representatives and victims of trafficking. In addition, the General Assembly convened a thematic debate on human trafficking (New York, 3 June) that focused on the way forward in the global fight against trafficking.

The Secretary-General said that many actions had been taken at the national, regional and international levels to prevent and combat trafficking in persons, especially women and girls, and the number of States parties to relevant international instruments had increased considerably. Many States had introduced a specific criminal offence of human trafficking in their laws; in others, a number of related offences were applicable to trafficking. Despite those developments, trafficking in persons persisted, as it was a crime that was often transboundary, took place in multiple settings, and involved perpetrators at different levels. A comprehensive, coordinated and gender-sensitive approach was required to address the root causes and risk factors that made women and girls vulnerable to being trafficked and ensured prosecution of the perpetrators and protection and support for victims. He observed that reliable data on the scope and nature of trafficking in women and girls was lacking and that there was a need for more and better-quality data to guide the development of national policies and programmes, monitor their impact and assess progress. He recommended that data collection and analysis be accelerated and qualitative research be intensified to facilitate improved understanding and more efficient and effective responses. The report concluded with a series of recommendations for consideration by States.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY RESOLUTION

On 18 December [meeting 70], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/63/425] adopted resolution 63/156 without vote [agenda item 56 (a)]

Trafficking in women and girls

The General Assembly,

Recalling all international conventions that deal specifically with the problem of trafficking in women and girls, such as the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women and the Optional Protocol thereto, the Convention on the Rights of the Child and the Optional Protocol thereto on the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography, the Convention for the Suppression of the Traffic in Persons and of the Exploitation of the Prostitution of Others and the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime and the Protocols thereto, in particular the Protocol to Prevent, Suppress and Punish Trafficking in Persons, Especially Women and Children, supplementing the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime and the Protocol against the Smuggling of Migrants by Land, Sea and Air, supplementing the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime, as well as previous resolutions of the General Assembly and its subsidiary body the Human Rights Council, and the Economic and Social Council and its functional commissions on the issue,

Reaffirming the provisions pertaining to trafficking in women and girls contained in the outcome documents of relevant international conferences and summits, in particular the strategic objective on the issue of trafficking contained in the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action adopted by the Fourth World Conference on Women,

Reaffirming also the commitment made by world leaders at the Millennium Summit and the 2005 World Summit to devise, enforce and strengthen effective measures to combat and eliminate all forms of trafficking in persons to counter the demand for trafficked victims and to protect the victims,

Recalling the reports of the Special Rapporteur on the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography, the Special Rapporteur on trafficking in persons, especially women and children, and the Special Rapporteur on violence against women, its causes and consequences, as well as the information that deals with trafficking in women and girls contained in the report of the Secretary-General on the in-depth study on all forms of violence against women,

Recalling also the report of the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime entitled "Trafficking in Persons: Global Patterns" of April 2006 and the attention paid in it to the situation of trafficked women and girls,

Taking note of the Vienna Forum to Fight Human Trafficking, held from 13 to 15 February 2008, within the framework of the Global Initiative to Fight Human Trafficking, and of the thematic debate on the issue of trafficking in persons, held on 3 June 2008, within the framework of the General Assembly,

Taking note also of the renewal of the mandate of the Special Rapporteur on trafficking in persons, especially women and children, and of the fact that part of her task is to integrate a gender- and age-specific perspective throughout the work of her mandate, inter alia, through the identification of gender- and age-specific vulnerabilities in relation to the issue of trafficking in persons,

Acknowledging the inclusion of gender-related crimes in the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court, which entered into force on 1 July 2002,

Bearing in mind that all States have an obligation to exercise due diligence to prevent, investigate and punish perpetrators of trafficking in persons, and to rescue victims as well as provide for their protection, and that not doing so violates and impairs or nullifies the enjoyment of the human rights and fundamental freedoms of the victims,

Seriously concerned that an increasing number of women and girls from some developing countries and countries with economies in transition are being trafficked to developed countries, as well as within and between regions and States, and that men and boys are also victims of trafficking, including for sexual exploitation,

Recognizing that certain efforts against trafficking in persons lack the gender and age sensitivity needed to address effectively the situation of women and girls, who are particularly vulnerable to trafficking for the purposes of sexual exploitation, forced labour, services and other forms of exploitation, thus highlighting the need to incorporate a gender- and age-sensitive approach in all anti-trafficking efforts,

Recognizing also the need to address the impact of globalization on the particular problem of trafficking in women and children, in particular girls,

Recognizing further the challenges to combating trafficking in women and girls owing to the lack of adequate legislation and implementation of existing legislation, the lack of availability of reliable sex-disaggregated data and statistics, and the lack of resources,

Concerned about the use of new information technologies, including the Internet, for purposes of exploitation of the prostitution of others, for trafficking in women as brides, for sex tourism exploiting women and children and for child pornography, paedophilia and any other forms of sexual exploitation of children,

Concerned also about the increasing activities of transnational criminal organizations and others that profit from international trafficking in persons, especially women and children, without regard to dangerous and inhuman conditions and in flagrant violation of domestic laws and international standards,

Recognizing that victims of trafficking are particularly exposed to racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance and that women and girl victims are often subject to multiple forms of discrimination and violence, including on the grounds of their gender, age, ethnicity, culture and religion, as well as their origins, and that these forms of discrimination themselves may fuel trafficking in persons,

Noting that some of the demand for prostitution and forced labour is met by trafficking in persons in some parts of the world,

Acknowledging that women and girl victims of trafficking, on account of their gender, are further disadvantaged and marginalized by a general lack of information or awareness and recognition of their human rights and by the stigmatization often associated with trafficking, as well as by the obstacles they meet in gaining access to information and recourse mechanisms in cases of violation of their rights, and that special measures are required for their protection and to increase their awareness,

Reaffirming the importance of bilateral, subregional, regional and international cooperation mechanisms and initiatives, including information exchanges on best practices, of Governments and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to address the problem of trafficking in persons, especially women and children,

Reaffirming also that global efforts, including international cooperation and technical assistance programmes, to eradicate trafficking in persons, especially women and children, demand the strong political commitment, shared responsibility and active cooperation of all Governments of countries of origin, transit and destination,

Recognizing that policies and programmes for prevention, rehabilitation, repatriation and reintegration should be developed through a gender- and age-sensitive, comprehensive and multidisciplinary approach, with concern for the security of the victims and respect for the full enjoyment of their human rights and with the involvement of all actors in countries of origin, transit and destination,

Convinced of the need to protect and assist all victims of trafficking, with full respect for the human rights of the victims,

1. Welcomes the efforts of Governments, United Nations bodies and agencies and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to address the particular problem of trafficking in women and girls, and encourages them to enhance their efforts and cooperation, including by sharing their knowledge, technical expertise and best practices as widely as possible;

2. Calls upon Governments to discourage, with a view to eliminating, the demand that fosters the trafficking of women and girls for all forms of exploitation, and in this regard to enhance preventive measures, including legislative measures, to deter exploiters of trafficked persons, as well as ensure their accountability;

3. Also calls upon Governments to take appropriate measures to address the factors that increase vulnerability to being trafficked, including poverty and gender inequality, as well as other factors that encourage the particular problem of trafficking in women and girls for prostitution and other forms of commercialized sex, forced marriage and forced labour, in order to prevent and eliminate such trafficking, including by strengthening existing legislation with a view to providing better protection of the rights of women and girls and to punishing perpetrators, through both criminal and civil measures;

4. Calls upon Governments, the international community and all other organizations and entities that deal with conflict and post-conflict, disaster and other emergency situations to address the heightened vulnerability of women and girls to trafficking and exploitation, and associated gender-based violence;

5. Urges Governments to devise, enforce and strengthen effective gender- and age-sensitive measures to combat and eliminate all forms of trafficking in women and girls, including for sexual and economic exploitation, as part of a comprehensive anti-trafficking strategy that integrates a human rights perspective, and to draw up, as appropriate, national action plans in this regard;

6. Urges Governments, in cooperation with intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, to support and allocate resources to strengthen preventive action, in particular education for women and men, as well as for girls and boys, on gender equality, self-respect and mutual respect, and campaigns, carried out in collaboration with civil society, to increase public awareness of the issue at the national and grass-roots levels;

7. Encourages Governments to take appropriate measures to eliminate sex tourism demand, especially of children, through all possible preventive actions;

8. Urges Governments to develop educational and training programmes and policies and consider, as appropriate, enacting legislation aimed at preventing sex tourism and trafficking, giving special emphasis to the protection of young women and children;

9. Also urges Governments to consider signing and ratifying and States parties to implement relevant United Nations legal instruments, such as the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime and the Protocols thereto, in particular the Protocol to Prevent, Suppress and Punish Trafficking in Persons, Especially Women and Children, supplementing the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime, the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women and the Optional Protocol thereto and the Convention on the Rights of the Child and the Optional Protocol thereto on the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography, as well as the Convention concerning Forced or Compulsory Labour, 1930 (Convention No. 29), the Convention concerning Discrimination in respect of Employment and Occupation, 1958 (Convention No. 111) and the Convention concerning the Prohibition and Immediate Action for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labour, 1999 (Convention No. 182), of the International Labour Organization;

10. Encourages Member States to strengthen national programmes and to engage in bilateral, subregional, regional and international cooperation, including by forging regional initiatives or plans of action, to address the problem of trafficking in persons through, inter alia, the enhancement of information-sharing, gender- and age-specific data collection and other technical capacities, and mutual legal assistance, as well as the combating of corruption and laundering of proceeds derived from trafficking, including for purposes of commercial sexual exploitation, and to ensure that such agreements and initiatives are particularly responsive to the problem of trafficking as it affects women and girls;

11. Calls upon all Governments to criminalize all forms of trafficking in persons, recognizing its increasing occurrence for purposes of sexual exploitation, commercial sexual exploitation and abuse, sex tourism and forced labour, and to bring to justice and punish the offenders and intermediaries involved, whether local or foreign, through the competent national authorities, either in the country of origin of the offender or in the country in which the abuse occurs, in accordance with due process of law, as well as to penalize persons in authority found guilty of sexually assaulting victims of trafficking in their custody;

12. Urges Governments to take all appropriate measures to ensure that victims of trafficking are not penalized for being trafficked and that they do not suffer from revictimization as a result of actions taken by government authorities, and encourages Governments to prevent, within their legal framework and in accordance with national policies, victims of trafficking in persons from being prosecuted for their illegal entry or residence;

13. Invites Governments to consider setting up or strengthening a national coordinating mechanism, for example, a national rapporteur or an inter-agency body, with the participation of civil society, including non-governmental organizations, to encourage the exchange of information and to report on data, root causes, factors and trends in violence against women, in particular trafficking, and to include data disaggregated by sex and age;

14. Encourages Governments and relevant United Nations bodies, within existing resources, to take appropriate measures to raise public awareness of the issue of trafficking in persons, particularly women and girls; to discourage, with a view to eliminating, the demand that fosters all forms of exploitation, including sexual exploitation and forced labour; to publicize the laws, regulations and penalties relating to this issue; and to emphasize that trafficking is a serious crime;

15. Calls upon concerned Governments to allocate resources, as appropriate, to provide comprehensive programmes for the physical, psychological and social recovery of victims of trafficking, including through job training, legal assistance in a language that they can understand and health care, including for HIV/AIDS, and by taking measures to cooperate with intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to provide for the social, medical and psychological care of the victims;

16. Encourages Governments, in cooperation with intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, to undertake or strengthen campaigns aimed at clarifying opportunities, limitations and rights in the event of migration, as well as information on the risks of irregular migration and the ways and means used by traffickers, so as to enable women to make informed decisions and to prevent them from becoming victims of trafficking;

17. Encourages Governments to intensify collaboration with non-governmental organizations to develop and implement gender- and age-sensitive programmes for effective counselling, training and reintegration into society of victims of trafficking and programmes that provide shelter and helplines to victims or potential victims;

18. Urges Governments to provide or strengthen training for law enforcement, judicial, immigration and other relevant officials in the prevention and combating of trafficking in persons, including the sexual exploitation of women and girls, and in this regard calls upon Governments to ensure that the treatment of victims of trafficking, especially by law enforcers, immigration officers, consular officials, social workers and other first-response officials, is conducted with full respect for the human rights of those victims and with gender and age sensitivity, and observes the principles of non-discrimination, including the prohibition of racial discrimination;

19. Invites Governments to take steps to ensure that criminal justice procedures and witness protection programmes are sensitive to the particular situation of trafficked women and girls and that they are supported and assisted, as appropriate, in making complaints to the police or other authorities without fear and being available when required by the criminal justice system, and to ensure that during this time they have access to gender- and age-sensitive protection and, as appropriate, social, medical, financial and legal assistance, including the possibility of obtaining compensation for damages suffered;

20. Also invites Governments to encourage media providers, including Internet service providers, to adopt or strengthen self-regulatory measures to promote the responsible use of media, particularly the Internet, with a view to eliminating the exploitation of women and children, in particular girls, which could foster trafficking;

21. Invites the business sector, in particular the tourism and telecommunications industries, including mass media organizations, to cooperate with Governments in eliminating trafficking in women and children, in particular girls, including through the dissemination by the media of information regarding the dangers of trafficking, the rights of trafficked persons and the services available to victims of trafficking;

22. Stresses the need for the systematic collection of sex- and age-disaggregated data and comprehensive studies at both the national and the international levels and the development of common methodologies and internationally defined indicators to make it possible to develop relevant and comparable figures, and encourages Governments to enhance information-sharing and data-collection capacity as a way of promoting cooperation to combat the trafficking problem;

23. Invites Governments, United Nations bodies, agencies and special mechanisms, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and the private sector to undertake collaborative and joint research and studies on trafficking in women and girls that can serve as a basis for policy formulation or change;

24. Invites Governments, with the support of the United Nations, when necessary, and other intergovernmental organizations, taking into account best practices, to formulate training manuals and other informational materials and provide training for law enforcement, judicial and other relevant officers, and medical and support personnel, with a view to sensitizing them to the special needs of women and girl victims;

25. Encourages Governments, relevant intergovernmental bodies and international organizations to ensure that military, peacekeeping and humanitarian personnel deployed in conflict, post-conflict and other emergency situations are provided training on conduct that does not promote, facilitate or exploit trafficking in women and girls, including for sexual exploitation, and to raise the awareness of such personnel of the potential risks to victims of conflict and other emergency situations, including natural disasters, of being trafficked;

26. Invites States parties to the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, the Convention on the Rights of the Child and the International Covenants on Human Rights to include information and statistics on trafficking in women and girls as part of their national reports to their respective committees and to work towards developing a common methodology and statistics to obtain comparable data;

27. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its sixty-fifth session a report that compiles successful interventions and strategies, as well as the gaps, in addressing the gender dimensions of the problem of trafficking in persons, and provides recommendations on the strengthening of gender- and age-sensitive approaches within the various aspects of efforts to address trafficking in persons.

Women in Afghanistan

In response to Economic and Social Council resolution 2006/7 [YUN 2006, p. 1346], the Secretary-General incorporated a gender perspective into his reports on the situation in Afghanistan (see p. 354). In his March report [A/62/722-S/2008/159], the Secretary-General said that tangible improvement in the status of women remained a challenge, despite numerous Government policies and programmes addressing gender issues. Implementation of the National Action Plan for the Women of Afghanistan had begun through pilot projects; progress on women's economic advancement was achieved, with women constituting 66 per cent of microfinance borrowers and 38 per cent of the participants in the National Skills Development Programme; and the Independent Administrative Reform and Civil Service Commission adopted a gender equity policy to strengthen women's participation in the civil service. Nonetheless, violence and harmful practices against women and girls remained a concern. In 2007, the United Nations Assistance Mission in Afghanistan received over 2,000 complaints of gender-based violence. A special fund for the protection of women at risk was established by UNIFEM with support from the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees.

Progress reported in September [A/63/372-S/2008/617] included the adoption of the National Action Plan by the Cabinet in May and the commitment of both the Government and the international community to support its implementation. With the aim of capacity-building in the area of gender integration, the UNDP Gender Equality Project was active in seven ministries. Still, sexual and gender-based violence against women and children was common. In the justice system, the criminalization of women who had been victims of gender-based violence and gender discrimination in the application of customary law continued to be a concern. Two convicted perpetrators of a 2005 gang rape in Sar-i-Pul were released in May, allegedly as a result of corruption in the justice system. The high incidence of sexual assault was denounced by the President and the Ministry of the Interior in August, and initiatives by UN agencies and programmes along with the corresponding ministries and civil society groups had increased the visibility of serious violations of women's rights.

Palestinian women

In response to Economic and Social Council resolution 2007/7 [YUN 2007, p. 460], the Secretary-General reported [E/CN.6/2008/6] to the Commission on the Status of Women on the situation of and assistance to Palestinian women during the period from October 2006 to September 2007 (see p. 514).

On 23 July, the Council took action on the situation of and assistance to Palestinian women in resolution 2008/11 (see p. 514).

The girl child

Forced marriage of the girl child

In response to Commission on the Status of Women resolution 51/3 [YUN 2007, p. 1171], the Secretary-General submitted a report [E/CN.6/2008/4] on forced marriage of the girl child, which reviewed consideration of the issue at the international level and the evolving approach for addressing it, as well as information on legal and policy measures implemented by 32 States and activities undertaken by nine UN system entities. Legislative action taken by States included establishing: a minimum legal age for marriage; laws requiring the free and full consent of the intending spouses; and procedures pertaining to birth and marriage registration, which facilitated monitoring of the age of marriage and supported implementation of laws protecting the girl child from forced marriage. A number of UN entities focused on the promotion and protection of the rights of girls. Efforts from the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF), the World Bank and the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) in the field of education contributed to delaying the marriage of girls and young women, thereby enhancing their capacity to claim their rights. UNICEF issued a publication entitled Early Marriage: A Harmful Traditional Practice: A Statistical Exploration, which analysed the effects of and life-cycle characteristics of child marriage.

The Secretary-General observed that while many States had established policies and legislation to address the issue, forced marriage of the girl child persisted. Challenges included limited compliance with the legislation, insufficient resources for monitoring and enforcing laws and procedures, and lack of knowledge about the scope and prevalence of the practice. He made recommendations for States to establish strategies aimed at changing discriminatory social and cultural patterns of conduct and creating a supportive environment for girls and young women to exercise their rights, and to ensure that there was awareness among the general public, especially girls and young women, of their marriage rights. He urged States to strengthen training and capacity-building measures for government officials, community leaders and other professionals likely to come into contact with victims of forced marriage; establish measures of protection and support for victims of forced marriage, including access to safe shelters, counselling and legal aid; implement legislation placing a minimum age on marriage for boys and girls; consider enacting a specific provision in the penal code on forced marriage with adequate penalties; and ratify international instruments protecting the rights of women and girls. Attention should also be given to ensuring reintegration, after armed conflicts, of the girl child, particularly those who had been subjected to forced marriage and sexual exploitation, as well as to enhancing the knowledge base on forced marriage and on practices for preventing such marriages.

In March [E/2008/27 (dec. 52/102)], the Commission took note of the Secretary-General's report.

Convention on the elimination of discrimination against women

As at 31 December, 185 States were parties to the 1979 Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 34/180 [YUN 1979, p. 895]. During the year, Azerbaijan and Cuba acceded to the Convention. At year's end, 53 States had accepted the amendment to article 20, paragraph 1, of the Convention in respect of the meeting time of the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women, which was adopted by States parties in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 1178]. The amendment would enter into force when accepted by a two-thirds majority of States parties.

The Optional Protocol to the Convention, adopted by the Assembly in resolution 54/4 [YUN 1999, p. 1100] and which entered into force in 2000 [YUN 2000, p. 1123], had 96 States parties as at 31 December.

CEDAW

In 2008, the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW), established in 1982 [YUN 1982, p. 1149] to monitor compliance with the 1979 Convention, held three regular sessions in New York [A/63/38 & A/64/38].

At its fortieth session (14 January–1 February), CEDAW reviewed the initial or periodic reports of Bolivia, Burundi, France, Lebanon, Luxembourg, Morocco, Saudi Arabia and Sweden on measures taken to implement the Convention. CEDAW considered a Secretariat report on ways and means of expediting its work [CEDAW/C/2008/I/4 & Add.1] and a report on the status of submission of reports by States parties under article 18 of the Convention [CEDAW/C/2008/I/2]. Two specialized agencies—the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO) and UNESCO—had submitted reports in accordance with article 21 of the Convention [CEDAW/C/2008/I/3 & Add.1,3]. The Committee adopted Convention-specific reporting guidelines to be applied in conjunction with the harmonized guidelines on a common core document. Consequently, reports of States parties on implementation of the Convention constituted two parts: a common core document containing information of a general and factual nature, and a document that specifically related to implementation of the Convention [A/63/38 (dec. 40/I)]. As the Committee and independent national human rights institutions shared the common goals of protecting, promoting and fulfilling the human rights of women and girls, the Committee was exploring ways to create further interaction and links with those institutions. It adopted a statement on its relationship with national human rights institutions [A/63/38 (dec. 40/II)], and in line with efforts to harmonize the working methods of the human rights treaty bodies, the Committee decided to change the title of its “Concluding comments” to “Concluding observations” [A/63/38 (dec. 40/III)]. It also decided to request States parties that reported at the fortieth session to present their subsequent two reports as combined reports [A/63/38 (dec. 40/IV)].

At its forty-first session (30 June–18 July), CEDAW reviewed the initial or periodic reports of Finland, Iceland, Lithuania, Nigeria, Slovakia, the United Kingdom, the United Republic of Tanzania and Yemen. The Committee considered a report on the status of submission of reports by States parties under article 18 of the Convention [CEDAW/C/2008/II/2]. It also considered the report on ways and means of expediting its work [CEDAW/C/2008/II/4] and the reports of specialized agencies [CEDAW/C/2008/II/3 & Add.1,2], including the International Labour Organization [CEDAW/C/2008/II/3/Add.4], on the implementation of the Convention in areas that fell within the scope of their activities. On the issue of the compatibility of reservations with the object and purpose of the Convention, the Committee decided that the determination of that issue, and therefore the permissibility of reservations, not only fell within its function in relation to the reporting procedure under article 18 of the Convention, but also in relation to the individual communications and inquiry procedures under the Optional Protocol [A/63/38 (dec. 41/I)]. In other action, the Committee decided to adopt the practice of including titles (subject headings) in its concluding observations [A/63/38 (dec. 41/II)], and to introduce a follow-up procedure whereby it would request, in the concluding observations of its reports, information from individual States parties on steps taken to implement specific recommendations contained in those observations [A/63/38 (dec. 41/III)]. The Committee further decided that requests by States parties to utilize technology, such as video-links, during the presentation of reports and constructive dialogue with the Committee must be submitted well in advance [A/63/38 (dec. 41/IV)].

At its forty-second session (20 October–7 November), CEDAW reviewed the initial or periodic reports of Bahrain, Belgium, Cameroon, Canada, Ecuador, El Salvador, Kyrgyzstan, Madagascar, Mongolia, Myanmar, Portugal, Slovenia and Uruguay. It also considered reports on ways and means of expediting the Committee's work [CEDAW/C/2008/III/4]; the status of submission of reports by States parties under article 18 of the Convention [CEDAW/C/2008/III/2]; and on implementation of article 21 of the Convention by specialized agencies [CEDAW/C/2008/III/3 & Add.1,2]. On the issue of migrant women, the Committee decided to adopt general recommendation No. 26, on some categories of women migrant workers who might be at risk of abuse and discrimination [A/64/38 (dec. 42/I)]. That recommendation intended to contribute to the fulfilment of the obligations of States parties to respect, protect and fulfil the human rights of women migrant workers, alongside the legal obligations contained in other treaties, the commitments assumed under plans of action of world conferences and the work of migration-focused treaty bodies. The Committee also adopted a statement on the commemoration of the sixtieth anniversary of the adoption of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights [A/64/38 (dec. 42/II)] (see p. 726).

In other action, the Committee, in respect of issues arising under article 2 of the Optional Protocol, decided to discontinue the examination of communications 9/2005, 14/2007 and 16/2007; endorsed the reports of the Working Group on Communications under the Optional Protocol on its eleventh, twelfth and thirteenth sessions (annexed to the reports); and adopted a note on the formulation and format of individual opinions on Committee decisions. The Committee took action on communication 15/2007, deciding that it was inadmissible under article 4, paragraph 1, of the Optional Protocol on the basis that all available domestic remedies had not yet been exhausted; a dissenting opinion was included with that decision. CEDAW also adopted a report on the follow-up to its views on individual communications.

On 25 July, by decision 2008/256, the Economic and Social Council took note of the Secretariat's note [E/2008/91] on the results of the fortieth session of CEDAW.

Commission on the Status of Women

The Commission on the Status of Women, at its fifty-second session (New York, 25 February–7 March and 13 March) [E/2008/27] recommended to the Economic and Social Council the adoption of a draft resolution on the situation of and assistance to Palestinian women (see p. 514), as well as a draft decision on the report of the Commission's fifty-second session and the provisional agenda and documentation for its fifty-third (2009) session (see below). The Commission also adopted and brought to the Council's attention resolutions on the release of women and children taken hostage, including those subsequently imprisoned, in armed conflicts; women, the girl child and HIV/AIDS; ending female genital mutilation; strengthening of the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women; and its agreed conclusions on financing gender equality and the empowerment of women, which was also the priority theme of the session. It further adopted and brought to the Council's attention decisions on the future work of the Working Group on Communications [dec. 52/101] and on documents before the Commission, of which it took note [dec. 52/102]. Among those documents were the UNIFEM report on its activities to eliminate violence against women [A/HRC/7/53-E/CN.6/2008/9] and the joint work plan of the Division for the Advancement of Women and OHCHR [A/HRC/7/52-E/CN.6/2008/8]. By decision 2008/236 of 23 July, the Economic and Social Council took note of the Commission's report on its fifty-second session and approved the provisional agenda for its fifty-third (2009) session.

Communication. In a letter to the Commission dated 3 December [E/CN.6/2009/9], the Council detailed the outcome of its 2008 substantive session and attached a list of resolutions adopted by the Council calling for action by the functional commissions.

Communications on the status of women

Working Group. At a closed meeting in March [E/2008/27], the Commission considered the report of the Working Group on Communications on the Status of Women, established in 1993 [YUN 1993, p. 1050], which considered 21 confidential communications received by the Division for the Advancement of Women. No non-confidential communications were received. The Group noted that Governments had replied to five of the 21 communications received by the Division. One Government had sent a reply to a communication on the previous year's list of confidential communications and replies by Governments. The Group discerned that communications were most frequently submitted on sexual violence against women, including rape and gang rape against women and girls, committed by private individuals, law enforcement personnel, military personnel and paramilitaries, including in armed conflict and related situations, as well as on the failure by the State to prevent such violations, provide adequate protection and medical and psychological care to victims, bring perpetrators to justice and provide adequate compensation; other forms of violence against women and girls, with a lack of due diligence by States to adequately investigate, prosecute and punish the perpetrators; abuse of power, impunity, bribery and corruption, lack of due process, arbitrary detention, and failure to grant a fair trial; trafficking in women, inhumane treatment in detention and inadequate conditions of imprisonment for women; the impact of armed conflict and situations of insecurity, in particular on women and girls belonging to vulnerable groups, such as elderly women, indigenous women, rural women and women with disabilities and the failure of States to abide by international humanitarian law as well as international human rights law and to protect and assist them; serious violations of the human rights of women and girls, including torture, killings and extrajudicial executions; physical and psychological threats and pressuring of victims of violence, their families and witnesses by Government officials in order to force retraction of complaints or testimony; differential application of punishments in law based on sex, including cruel, inhuman or degrading forms of punishment; and impact of legislation and practices discriminating against women in the areas of civil and political rights, procedural guarantees and personal status, including religious and minority status, as well as equal recognition before the law.

The Working Group expressed its concern about rape and other forms of sexual violence against women and girls; the mistreatment of women human rights defenders; the climate of impunity, the abuse of power and corruption in many cases where violence against women, especially sexual violence, was perpetrated or condoned by law enforcement personnel and military personnel; the failure by States to exercise due diligence to prevent acts of violence against women, in particular girls, and adequately investigate such crimes and punish perpetrators; and the continued existence of legislation or practices intended to discriminate, or with the effect of discriminating against women, despite States' international obligations and commitments and constitutional provisions to outlaw such discrimination.

From the replies received, the Working Group noted that some Governments had improved services provided to women, carried out awareness-raising activities, enacted new legislation and taken other steps to promote gender equality and the advancement of women.

UN Development Fund for Women (UNIFEM)

During 2008 [A/64/164], the activities of the United Nations Development Fund for Women (UNIFEM) continued to focus on four key goals: enhancing women's economic security and rights; ending violence against women; reducing the prevalence of HIV/AIDS among women and girls; and advancing gender justice in democratic governance, which were guided by its 2008–2011 strategic plan, approved by the UNDP/UNFPA Executive board in 2007 [YUN 2007, p. 1195]. The strategic plan was comprised of elements of the UNIFEM accountability framework, against which UNIFEM measured its contributions to progress on gender equality at the national, regional and global levels; performance, on the basis of the outputs and corresponding indicators in its development results framework; and progress towards mobilizing, allocating and expending the financial resources required to implement its programme, as laid out in its integrated resources framework.

Over the 2008–2011 period, UNIFEM contributed to enhancing women's economic and security rights in 71 countries; ending violence against women by giving support in aligning national and local laws, policies and programmes in 56 countries; and supporting gender-responsive budgeting in 45 countries. UNIFEM worked with national AIDS councils to advocate for gender-sensitive responses to the HIV/AIDS pandemic in 13 countries. It also aided the advancement of gender justice in democratic governance in 70 countries, including by supporting the passage of 15 laws and 13 policies to strengthen women's participation in democratic governance. Despite progress achieved, gaps and challenges were also identified, such as the absence of agreed standards on what constituted a national development strategy or plan that was fully aligned with gender equality, which made it difficult to assess the extent of results generated. Programme guidance was needed to strengthen public-sector reform efforts, and UNIFEM needed to invest in a rigorous, systematic evaluation of successful strategies to prevent, respond to and end impunity for violence against women. Two events that would help address the deficit in women's participation in peace processes over the next year were the Secretary-General's report on implementation of resolution 1820(2008) (see p. 1265) and the forthcoming tenth anniversary of resolution 1325(2000) [YUN 2000, p. 1113]. UNIFEM was building partnerships and capacities to make the most of those opportunities.

On the management results framework, while demand exceeded its ability to respond, UNIFEM was able to respond to requests for programming and technical support in 82 countries. UNIFEM support aligned with national development priorities and the overall programme framework of the UN country teams, yet the range of support UNIFEM provided varied. In 42 of those countries, UNIFEM supported a relatively small programme, while in 40 countries it supported multidimensional strategies with a broad range of partners and focused on contributing to a range of interlinked outcomes related to national development priorities. There was a need for enhanced systems and knowledge for improving performance in a number of areas.

In 2008, UNIFEM increased its total contributions by 18 per cent, with total resources received amounting to $121 million, including regular (core) resources of $51 million and $5 million in contributions to UNIFEM trust funds. During the year, UNIFEM instituted the practice of reporting separately on the UNIFEM-administered UN Trust Fund in Support of Actions to Eliminate Violence Against Women, which received $18.3 million (compared with $15.9 million the previous year). The number of countries that contributed to regular and other UNIFEM resources increased from 49 in 2007 to 80 in 2008. Contributions from UNIFEM national committees increased in 2008 by 191 per cent over 2007. Expenditure of regular resources in 2008 amounted to $42.3 million, representing an increase of $20.9 million—almost double the expenditure and delivery of the previous year.

In August [A/63/205], the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly a report on UNIFEM activities in 2007 [YUN 2007, p. 1193], of which the Assembly took note on 19 December in resolution 63/232 (see p. 962).

UNDP/UNFPA Board action. In January, the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board [E/2008/35 (dec. 2008/2)] took note of the functions, management results, indicators and resource requirements in the estimated budget for the 2008–2009 biennium [DP/2008/4]; approved gross appropriations in the amount of $23,044,000; decided that future biennial support budgets should aim at progressive decrease as a proportion of overall resources; and requested that the UNIFEM Executive Director continue to harmonize and improve the methodology of results-based budgeting. The Board also took note of the Administrator's report on the UNIFEM cost-recovery policy [DP/2008/11] and requested the UNIFEM management to report, at the annual session, on the implementation of the cost-recovery policy [E/2008/35 (dec. 2008/3)].

In June [E/2008/35 (dec. 2008/23)], the Board took note of the annual report of the UNIFEM Executive Director [DP/2008/35]; requested UNIFEM to avoid using core resources to cover costs related to the management of extrabudgetary resources; and decided that a recovery rate of 7 per cent be adopted for the recovery of indirect support costs and for new third-party contributions and a rate of 5 per cent on programme country cost-sharing contributions. The Board also urged UNIFEM to continue harmonizing its cost classification and cost-recovery policy with other UN funds and programmes.

International Research and Training Institute (INSTRAW)

The Executive Board of INSTRAW, at its fifth session (New York, 21 February–22 May) [E/2008/73], considered the implementation of the programme of work during the period October 2007–April 2008; the implementation of the INSTRAW networking strategy for the period October 2007–February 2008; activities undertaken in the implementation of the Institute's action plan—fund-raising strategy, advocacy and image enhancement 2008–2009 during the period February–April 2008; the Institute's staffing situation; the proposed workplan and operational budget for 2009; and the directorship of the Institute.

The Executive Board adopted a decision that requested the Secretary-General to continue providing administrative assistance and support to the Institute through several measures; ensure continuity in the Institute's directorship; and seek the possibility of upgrading the position of Social Affairs Officer. It also requested the Director to intensify coordination with stakeholders and continue with fund-raising efforts. The Board instructed the Institute to implement its work programme in accordance with the Institute's Strategic Framework for the period 2008–2011; approved the workplan and operational budget for 2009 on the understanding that sufficient funds would be available to finance the activities; and compiled a shortlist of candidates for the post of Director, to be submitted to the Secretary-General as stipulated in the statute of the Institute. It took note of the Institute's networking strategy for 2008–2009, the work undertaken by the Institute in implementing its programme of work during the period October 2007–April 2008, and the progress made in the implementation of the action plan. The Board made several recommendations, which included expanding the Institution's outreach to other gender mechanisms at the regional and international levels, expanding collaborations with other UN entities and international organizations, increasing its partnerships and networking activities, proceeding with implementation of the Institute's new accounting and financial system, and pursuing fund-raising activities and undertaking capacity-building activities.

On 25 July, the Economic and Social Council took note of the report of the INSTRAW Executive Board (decision 2008/256).

Future of INSTRAW

In response to Economic and Social Council resolution 2007/37 [YUN 2007, p. 1198], the Secretary-General submitted a report [E/2008/62] on future work to strengthen INSTRAW, which summarized the Institute's efforts to strengthen and expand its training and research activities in the following areas: gender, migration and development; governance and women's political participation at the local level; and gender, peace and security, in accordance with its strategic frameworks for 2004–2007 and 2008–2011. The report also described INSTRAW efforts to mobilize resources for its core budget from donors, which resulted in the raising of sufficient funds to finance its activities and reimburse the subvention allocated from the UN budget earlier in the year.

The report concluded that the successful completion of the 2004–2007 strategic framework positioned the Institute to contribute to the goals set out in the three pillars of the United Nations: development, peace and security, and human rights. The strategic framework for 2008–2011 would carry forward the priorities established in 2004—to consolidate the Institute's research and training programmes and enhance its knowledge management capacity to ensure that research results had a concrete impact on policy and programme development and implementation.

Children, youth and ageing persons

In 2008, the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) continued its work to ensure that every child received the best possible start in life; was fully immunized and protected from disease, including HIV/AIDS, and disability; had access to a quality primary school education; and was protected from violence, abuse, exploitation and discrimination.

Progress was achieved in realizing the commitments set out in "A world fit for children", the final document of the twenty-seventh special session of the General Assembly on children, held in 2002. Many countries had incorporated the commitments into their planning by developing plans of action for children's issues.

UNICEF continued its focus on five areas for 2006–2009: young child survival and development; basic education and gender equality; HIV/AIDS and children; child protection from violence, exploitation and abuse; and policy advocacy and partnerships for children's rights. In 2008, UNICEF cooperated with 155 countries and responded to emergencies in 78 countries.

Progress and constraints with respect to the well-being of youth and their role in society were recorded in implementing the 1995 World Programme of Action for Youth to the Year 2000 and Beyond.

The United Nations continued its action to implement the 2002 Madrid International Plan Action on Ageing. In February, the Commission for Social Development completed the first review and appraisal of the International Plan. In July, the Secretary-General provided the outline of a strategic implementation framework for the Plan. In December, the Assembly encouraged Governments to build capacity to eradicate poverty among older persons by integrating ageing issues into poverty eradication strategies and national development plans. The Assembly also stressed the need for additional national capacity-building.

Follow-up to 2002 General Assembly special session on children

In his sixth report [A/63/308] on the follow-up to the General Assembly's twenty-seventh (2002) special session on children [YUN 2002, p. 1168], submitted in response to Assembly resolution 58/282 [YUN 2004, p. 1175], the Secretary-General reviewed progress achieved in realizing the commitments relating to children and young people set out in the Declaration and Plan of Action contained in the session's final document entitled "A world fit for children", adopted in resolution S-27/2 [YUN 2002, p. 1169]. Those commitments focused on promoting healthy lives; providing quality education; protecting against abuse, exploitation and violence; and combating HIV/AIDS.

Progress had been achieved in promoting healthy lives and in other health-related goals, but not at the required pace, said the Secretary-General. Child mortality was declining globally, but the proportion of fully immunized children was far from the 2010 target of 90 per cent set at the 2002 special session. There were concerns about several other child health issues such as diarrhoeal diseases and undernutrition. The number of deaths due to measles had continued to fall, and sub-Saharan Africa had achieved the UN goal of cutting measles deaths by 90 per cent well before the target date of 2010. Advances had been made in eliminating maternal and neonatal tetanus. Vaccination coverage through at least two doses of tetanus toxoid vaccine or tetanus-diphtheria toxoid vaccine was estimated at 69 per cent in 2006, while an estimated 81 per cent of newborns were protected against neonatal tetanus through immunization—up from 79 per cent in 2005. Coverage rates increased in a number of countries through routine immunization systems and campaigns.

About half of all countries had early childhood care and education programmes for children under three. Sub-Saharan Africa had made significant progress in expanding primary school enrolment. Some 91 developing countries had achieved gender parity in primary enrolment. Yet some 50 million girls were still not attending primary school, of whom nearly three quarters belonged to excluded groups. Girls continued to be excluded from education more often than boys. In most developing countries, girls continued to face discrimination with regard to access to school. As a result, they comprised about 57 per cent of all out-of-school children. As many countries had limited capacity for the provision of education beyond the primary level, it was estimated that 185 million children of secondary school age were missing out on secondary education, and that 127 million of them were still attending primary school.

As for improvements in child protection since the special session, nearly 60 countries had produced national child labour statistics, and special efforts were being made to collect data on children engaged in hazardous work. A total of 29 countries had collected data on child discipline, and 27 on female genital mutilation/cutting, by the end of 2007. Many countries were strengthening their overall child protection capacities, including legislative and enforcement systems. There was a growing understanding of the significance of systematic approaches to protection, primarily through legal and social welfare systems and through addressing social norms. Progress had been considerable in data gathering, birth registration and reduction of child labour, and many countries were implementing plans to address violence against children. However, despite those successes, challenges persisted in protecting children against abuse, exploitation and violence. Sub-Saharan Africa had the highest proportion of children under five who were not registered at birth—two out of three. The largest number of unregistered children was in South Asia—nearly 23 million. National child protection capacities remained weak overall, and funding was inconsistent and unpredictable.

Progress continued to be made towards the goals of the special session relating to HIV and children, albeit at a pace slower than desired. Globally, children under the age of 15 accounted for 2.1 million of the estimated 33.2 million people living with HIV in 2007. Some 420,000 children were newly infected with HIV, and 290,000 had died of AIDS in 2007 alone. Sub-Saharan Africa was home to nearly 90 per cent of all children living with HIV. There had been progress in combating the HIV pandemic since the special session. By the end of 2006, 21 low- and middle-income countries were on track to meet the 80 per cent antiretroviral coverage target for prevention of mother-to-child transmission of HIV by 2010. There was also progress in many countries in the protection and care of children affected by AIDS and in access for those children to social services.

Many challenges remained, including inadequate attention to the rights of children in the most vulnerable and marginalized sections of society. Emergencies resulting from both man-made and natural causes posed huge constraints on the achievement of international development goals. Measures to ensure and coordinate disaster prevention as well as rapid humanitarian response and reconstruction needed to be expedited.

Measures suggested by the Secretary-General included the implementation of high-impact interventions, as well as sustained efforts for developing education and health care systems. Filling funding gaps required attention by Governments and the international community. Recent advancements in resource mobilization, such as for combating HIV, indicated the importance of the timely provision of resources for achieving the goals of the special session. At the same time, a renewed focus on communication for development should be pursued. The journey to 2010 and 2015, the years in which most targets for children converged, would be demanding. Achieving the goals would require a greater sense of urgency to address surmountable obstacles.

The Secretary-General noted that failure to achieve the goals adopted at the special session on children would undermine efforts towards realizing the aspirations of the Millennium Declaration. He called for scaled-up responses by Governments, increased commitments from the international community and broader and more focused partnerships to achieve the goals of the special session.

General Assembly action. Taking note of the Secretary-General's report, the General Assembly, in resolution 63/241 (see p. 739), called upon States to create an environment in which the well-being of the child was ensured, including by strengthening international cooperation. By resolution 63/113 (see p. 1215), the Assembly invited States to expand their activities in the framework of the International Decade for a Culture of Peace and Non-violence for the Children of the World, 2001–2010 [YUN 2001, p. 609].

United Nations Children's Fund

In 2008, UNICEF remained committed to achieving the Millennium Development Goals (MDGs) [YUN 2000, p. 51] and the goals contained in the document "A world fit for children", adopted by the General Assembly in resolution S-27/2 [YUN 2002, p. 1169], at its twenty-seventh (2002) special session on children (see above). UNICEF's work was also guided by the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child, adopted by the Assembly in resolution 44/25 [YUN 1989, p. 560], and its Optional Protocols (see p. 737). Its mission was to defend children's rights, help meet their basic needs, ensure their survival and increase their opportunities to flourish. It was also mandated to rally political will and resources to invest in children's well-being; respond to emergencies to protect children; work with partners to provide a rapid response for those in need; and ensure special protection for the most disadvantaged children, such as victims of war, disasters, extreme poverty, violence and exploitation and those with disabilities. The Fund further aimed to promote equal rights for women and girls and encourage their full participation in developing their communities, and work towards the human development goals adopted by the world community.

In line with its 2006–2009 medium-term strategic plan (MTSP) [YUN 2005, p. 1284], UNICEF continued to focus its work on five priorities—young child survival and development; basic education and gender equality; HIV/AIDS and children; child protection from violence, exploitation and abuse; and policy advocacy and partnerships for children's rights.

The annual UNICEF flagship publication, The State of the World's Children 2008 [Sales No. E.08.XX.1], focused on child survival, observing that child mortality was a sensitive indicator of a country's development. Investing in the health of children and their mothers was not only a human rights imperative: it was a sound economic decision and one of the surest ways for a country to set its course towards a better future. Thus, it was central in achieving MDG 4, which sought to reduce the global under-five mortality rate by two thirds between 1990 and 2015. Examining the survival rates and health of children, the report outlined what needed to be done to reduce the number of child death from 9.7 million in 2006 to around 4 million by 2015. That would require accelerated action on multiple fronts: reducing poverty and hunger; improving maternal health; combating HIV/AIDS, malaria and other major diseases; increasing the usage of improved water and sanitation; and providing affordable essential drugs on a sustainable basis. It would also require a re-examination of strategies to reach the poorest, most marginalized communities.

In 2008, UNICEF cooperated with 155 countries, areas and territories: 44 in sub-Saharan Africa, 35 in America and the Caribbean, 35 in Asia, 20 in the Middle East and 21 in Central and Eastern Europe and the Commonwealth of Independent States.

Total expenditures were $3,081 million in 2008, an 11 per cent increase from $2,782 million in 2007. Expenditures on programme assistance rose from $2,517 million in 2007 to $2,808 million in 2008, an increase of 12 per cent. Combined expenditures on programme support at $167 million, management and administration at $74 million, and centrally shared cost at $10 million, amounted to $251 million, an increase of $1 million or 0.4 per cent compared to 2007. UNICEF operations in 2008 were described in the UNICEF Annual Report 2008, the UNICEF annual report to the Economic and Social Council [E/2009/6] and the annual report of the Executive Director on progress and achievements against the Fund's extended 2006–2013 MTSP [E/ICEF/2009/9 & Corr.1].

In 2008, the UNICEF Executive Board held its first regular session (29 January–1 February), its annual session (3–5 June) and its second regular session (15–18 September), all in New York [E/2008/34/Rev.1], during which it adopted 23 decisions.

By decision 2008/215 of 18 July, the Economic and Social Council took note of the annual report of UNICEF to the Council covering the year 2007 [E/2008/6 & Corr.1]; the Board's report on the work of its first regular session of 2008 and on the joint meeting of the Executive Boards of UNICEF, United Nations Development Programme (UNDP)/United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA) and World Food Programme (WFP) [E/2008/34/Rev.1]; and the extract from the Board's report on its 2008 annual session [E/2008/L.8].

On 18 September, the Executive Board adopted the programme of work for its 2009 sessions [E/2008/34/Rev.1 (dec. 2008/13)].

Programme policies

In her annual report to the Economic and Social Council covering 2008 [E/2009/6], the Executive Director described action taken by UNICEF to promote child rights and ensure that sustainable results for children were achieved in close partnership with Governments, the UN system and non-governmental organization (NGOs). The report provided information on funding for operational activities for development of the UN system; contribution to national capacity development and development effectiveness; and improved functioning of the UN development system. It addressed policies and initiatives to foster South-South cooperation, gender equality and the transition from relief to development. The UNICEF action plan in response to the triennial comprehensive policy review (TCPR) of operational activities for development of the UN system [YUN 2007, p. 874] would be periodically reviewed. A senior-level steering committee was overseeing progress in implementing the TCPR recommendations and reported regularly to the Executive Director.

Medium-term strategic plan (2006–2009)

A report of the Executive Director [E/ICEF/2008/18] provided information on the midterm review of the medium-term strategic plan (MTSP) 2006–2009. The review, carried out during the first half of 2008, drew on a wide range of sources, including the latest available data on child-related indicators for the MDGs, information on progress towards MTSP targets, as well as major evaluations undertaken during the reporting period.

Extensive consultations were undertaken on the validity, use and relevance of the MTSP. A questionnaire generated responses from 32 Member States, including 9 Executive Board members and 16 programme countries. A vast majority (90 per cent) of respondents indicated that the MTSP significantly contributed to improving their understanding of UNICEF's work. Most respondents agreed that the MTSP assisted in monitoring the work of the organization and enhanced their understanding of the strategic objectives of UNICEF. A majority (58 per cent) of the 12 national committees that provided feedback indicated that the design of the MTSP helped them communicate UNICEF's work to supporters, partners and the general public. A survey of all UNICEF country offices confirmed the usefulness of the MTSP for working with partners to design, focus and review planned results for children. UNICEF assumed significant responsibilities as the global lead for the nutrition and water, sanitation and hygiene (WASH) clusters and as co-lead for the education and the emergency telecommunications clusters. Water safety plans had been introduced by key countries in Asia, while home drinking water treatment helped contain the spread of cholera in Africa. The Unite for Children, Unite against AIDS campaign [YUN 2005, p. 1290] had provided a platform for UNICEF to put children at the centre of the global fight against AIDS. Major areas of progress in basic education and gender equality included standard-setting and policy development for early learning, parent education programmes and the launch of a global child-to-child approach, aimed at providing cost-effective school-readiness interventions for young children. As for collecting and analysing information on the situation of children and women, UNICEF provided data dissemination through the database system DevInfo, used by 103 countries as their national platform for MDG monitoring. The Fund also piloted in several countries EmergencyInfo, a decision-support system for emergency response.

Yet a range of new challenges had become apparent. Capacity for sanitation and hygiene remained weak and sustainability remained a concern. Much remained to be done for vulnerable children and families in building national justice systems, laws and policies; strengthening social norms and values to prevent violence, abuse and exploitation; promoting school readiness; integrating prevention of mother-to-child transmission of HIV and paediatric AIDS treatment into health systems; strengthening HIV/AIDS services in emergencies; and improving the contribution of UNICEF to gender equality.

The report suggested extending the MTSP by two years, to the end of 2011. As explained in a UNICEF background note [E/ICEF/2008/25], such extension would allow the MTSP cycle to be harmonized with the cycles of the strategic plans of UNDP and UNFPA, and would bring the following MTSP (2012–2015) in line with the 2015 deadline for achieving the MDGs.

On 18 September [dec. 2008/14], the Executive Board endorsed the general conclusions of the mid-term review, including the adjustments envisaged for the remaining period and the implications identified for preparing the next plan. Recognizing the benefits of extending the period of the MTSP in order to align it with the strategic planning cycles of UNDP and UNFPA, and align the subsequent UNICEF strategic planning cycle, covering the 2012–2015 period, with the target date for the MDGs, the Board extended the period of the current MTSP by two years, until the end of 2011. The Executive Director was requested to report at the Board's 2010 session on the MTSP performance and results. A discussion on the end-of-cycle review of the extended MTSP would be held at the first regular session of 2011.

On 5 June [dec. 2008/11], the Board took note of the Executive Director's report on progress and achievements against the MTSP, covering 2007 [YUN 2007, p. 1206]. It requested UNICEF to give high priority in the annual report to information and analysis on key challenges in achieving results in each focus area to support progress towards critical goals and targets for children.

MTSP support strategies

At its February session, the Executive Board had before it the UNICEF child protection strategy [E/ICEF/2008/5] for endorsement as the official strategy documents for programmes of protection and for achieving the MDGs within the context of the MTSP. The strategy addressed issues such as building national protection systems, supporting social change, strengthening child protection in conflict and natural disasters and leveraging results through the strategic use of resources.

On 1 February [dec. 2008/1], the Board took note of the draft and acknowledged the need for further consultations.

On 5 June [dec. 2008/12], the Board endorsed the UNICEF child protection strategy [E/ICEF/2008/5/Rev.1] as the support strategy document for programmes and actions in support of child protection, developed for the implementation of the MTSP.

Medium-term financial plan (2008–2011)

In September, the Executive Board considered the planned financial estimates for the period 2008–2011 [E/ICEF/AB/L.5]. The UNICEF secretariat recommended that the Board approve the framework of planned financial estimates for 2008–2011 and the preparation of programme expenditures submitted to the Board of up to $915 million from regular resources in 2009, subject to the availability of resources and the continued validity of those planned financial estimates. The Board was also requested to approve the annual transfer of $30 million to the reserve for after-service health insurance for the period 2010–2011.

The Board approved those recommendations on 18 September [dec. 2008/20].

Global strategy for collaborative relationships and partnerships

In response to a 2007 request [YUN 2007, p. 1208] of the Executive Board, the UNICEF secretariat submitted in June a preliminary concept note [E/ICEF/2008/12 & Corr.1] on a global strategy for collaborative relationships and partnerships. The note outlined the rationale, proposed content and process for developing such a strategy. It noted that UNICEF had been working with partners to improve the lives of children since its inception. Those partnerships were of various kinds: programmatic partnerships to achieve better outcomes for children in programme countries; partnerships in global policy development; partnerships in resource mobilization; and partnerships in advocacy for promoting child rights. UNICEF country programmes of cooperation were implemented with national and local partners. Also important were partnerships and collaborative relationships for resource mobilization at all levels, many of which were forged and maintained at country level. From IKEA in India to the Nakumatt supermarket chain in Kenya, the private sector was making significant social investments to support child survival, protection, education and other areas critical for children. In Latin America and the Caribbean, UNICEF was working with Nickelodeon to use a charismatic cartoon character to inspire positive change in the lives of children. UNICEF also engaged in a wide range of partnerships with humanitarian NGOs to provide critical assistance to children in times of emergencies.

The strategy would help to guide the organization's engagement with others. It would help to address the rapidly evolving external landscape to position UNICEF as a partner of choice to deliver results for children. The guiding principles in developing the strategy would be: ensuring that collaborations and partnerships, individually and collectively, were making the maximum possible contribution to achieving outcomes for children; ensuring that children were consistently at the centre of the national and international socio-economic policy and development agendas; and supporting UNICEF efforts to expand interventions and leverage resources for children.

The report concluded that a consultative process for developing the strategy would be pursued, for discussion at the annual session of the Executive Board in 2009. The strategy would build on the global mandate of UNICEF as well as on the diversity of experience that covered different regional and country levels, and on the range of stakeholders and partners for children.

The Executive Board in June requested UNICEF to hold consultations with the Board in autumn 2008 and spring 2009 to provide updates on progress in developing the strategy and to consult on outstanding issues.

Evaluation system

In response to a 2006 Executive Board decision [YUN 2006, p. 1366], the UNICEF secretariat submitted a report on its evaluation policy [E/ICEF/2008/4] to ensure that UNICEF had timely, strategically focused and objective information on the performance of its policies, programmes and initiatives. The report noted that UNICEF conducted evaluations at five institutional levels, reflecting the organizational accountability framework: local or project, country programme of cooperation, regional, global strategic, and institutional performance. At the global level, evaluation served to assess UNICEF performance against the objectives and targets set in the MTSP. Evaluation was also conducted to analyse the contribution of UNICEF to global strategies in collaboration with key partners, particularly the achievement of the objectives of the Millennium Declaration and MDGs. Regarding the evaluation with partners, UNICEF would need to seize the growing opportunities to participate in multi-partite evaluations, thereby drawing attention to results and impact for children on the evaluation agendas of other organizations. The implementation of the evaluation policy and the evaluation function would be reviewed periodically to draw lessons and make improvements. The first such review would take place in 2010.

On 1 February [dec. 2008/4], the Executive Board approved the evaluation policy as outlined in the report and called upon UNICEF to conduct evaluations of operations at the country level in close consultation with Governments, also assisting them in developing national evaluation capacities. UNICEF should also submit a biennial work plan to the Board and report annually on the evaluation function and evaluation findings and recommendations. The Executive Director was requested to safeguard the integrity and independence of the evaluation function and to submit a review of the evaluation policy at the second regular session in 2009.

In accordance with that decision, the UNICEF secretariat in July submitted a report on its evaluation function and major evaluations in UNICEF [E/ICEF/2008/21], which provided information on the state of evaluation functions in UNICEF at country, regional and global levels and strategic orientations for its strengthening. The report noted that, in 2006–2007, 495 evaluations had been conducted in the five focus areas of MTSP, as well as in other areas.

The UNICEF Evaluation Office provided leadership and management of the evaluation system. The Office, in cooperation with the UNICEF Office of Internal Audit, was developing a new tool—the Programme Performance Assessment—to measure the contribution of country offices to national development and humanitarian efforts. The approach was being developed in a number of pilot countries and would be reviewed after 18 months.

In the context of the 2006–2009 MTSP, UNICEF would strengthen its evaluation function in six main areas: national capacity-building and strengthened national leadership in country-level evaluations; strengthened evaluation within the UN system and with other partners; evaluation in humanitarian crises; evaluations related to MTSP focus areas, strategies and operational effectiveness; strengthened organizational capacity in evaluation; and heightened management attention to the evaluation function.

On 18 September [dec. 2008/22], the Executive Board took note of the report on the evaluation function and major evaluations in UNICEF; noted the steps taken and planned by UNICEF to strengthen evaluation; expressed concern that a key recurrent finding of the internal audit report was UNICEF's weakness in prioritizing evaluation and research activities at field level; and requested UNICEF to report back to the Board in its review of the evaluation policy at the second regular session in 2009 on measures taken to address that finding as well as on additional steps to improve the evaluation function. The UNICEF Evaluation Office was urged to submit to the Board a biennial work plan at its second regular session in 2009.

Concerning the evaluation of gender policy implementation in UNICEF, the Executive Board in June had before it a paper on the topic [E/ICEF/2008/CRP.12]. On 5 June [dec. 2008/10], the Board requested UNICEF to present to the Board at its first regular session of 2009 a management response to all recommendations of the evaluation of gender policy implementation in UNICEF, including actions and timeframes for completion. It also requested UNICEF to ensure and track timely implementation of the evaluation recommendations in accordance with the management response, develop a tracking and monitoring framework to measure progress in implementation, and track and monitor allocations and expenditures for gender equality results. The Board further requested that the annual report of the Executive Director include reporting on progress in achieving gender equality results as an integral element, particularly at the outcome and impact levels.

Emergency assistance

In 2008, UNICEF responded to emergencies in 78 countries. Interventions covered complex emergencies and natural disasters, with continued assistance in chronic crises, from the global rise in food prices to natural disasters in Myanmar and China. The revolving internal Emergency Programme Fund (EPF) loan facility continued to be the fastest, most reliable and flexible funding mechanism available to UNICEF and served as a bridge to other mechanisms. In 2008, $83.3 million in EPF loans was released to help 38 country responses. Emergency preparedness and response planning remained a central strategy to ensure that staff members were ready to implement a UNICEF response in all humanitarian crises. Eighty-seven per cent of country offices and four regional offices updated their plans in 2008. To address the global rise in food prices, UNICEF allocated $55 million in additional funds to 60 countries with high levels of nutrition insecurity to address some of the immediate response.

UNICEF served as global cluster lead in nutrition and in water, sanitation and hygiene, as co-lead in education with the International Save the Children Alliance, and as co-lead in emergency telecommunications with WFP and the United Nations Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs (OCHA). UNICEF continued to support the provision of clean water, especially in underserved rural areas and among indigenous communities. The sustainability of services was a high priority. UNICEF focused on strengthening local capacities for operation and maintenance, while also emphasizing the protection of water resources, especially in areas facing water stress. UNICEF also supported the expansion of household water treatment and safe storage, particularly in countries where cholera was endemic. Support continued for national efforts to detect arsenic in drinking water and mitigate its impact on children and families in affected parts of Asia, Africa and the Americas. More than 50,000 water sources were tested in 2008.

In north Sudan, Sri Lanka and the Philippines, UNICEF contributed to new agreements on child soldier disarmament, demobilization and reintegration. In countries in transition, it contributed to the social reintegration of demobilized child soldiers. UNICEF continued to collaborate with partners to provide trauma counselling and psychosocial support to help children and their families cope with the long-term impact of armed conflict and natural disasters. Common activities included recreation and play, parent discussion groups, training of community workers and the provision of psychosocial support to specific groups of children. Child-friendly spaces were also commonly used, and a challenge was to ensure that they provided integrated services for children beyond psychosocial support.

UNICEF continued to respond to the humanitarian needs of conflict-affected people in the Democratic Republic of the Congo (DRC) and Sierra Leone, which were among the countries in which UNICEF had supported gender-based violence prevention and response programmes in the areas of medical, psychosocial, legal and socio-economic assistance. It also led the development of an inter-agency training package called “Caring for survivors” and the development of a research study in the DRC on children born of sexual violence in conflict. UNICEF was the co-chair of United Nations Action against Sexual Violence in Conflict [YUN 2007, p. 1157], and co-led with the NGO V-Day an advocacy campaign against rape in the DRC, “Stop raping our greatest resource”.

Ending Child Hunger and Undernutrition Initiative

In response to a 2007 request [YUN 2007, p. 1208] of the Executive Board, the UNICEF secretariat submitted in June a report [E/ICEF/2008/11] on the implementation of the Ending Child Hunger and Undernutrition Initiative (ECHUI), an effort to promote sustained actions to address that challenge, based on interventions of proven effectiveness. The report pointed out that 143 million children under the age of five years continued to suffer from undernutrition. Some 51 developing countries, representing nearly half of the countries for which data was available, were not making sufficient progress towards the ‘hunger target’ of MDG 1 as measured by the prevalence of underweight in children under five years of age. Some 18 of those countries were making no progress at all or were regressing in terms of that indicator.

The report noted that maternal and child undernutrition was a contributing cause of more than a third of child deaths and some 10 per cent of global disease burden. While nutrition interventions of proven effectiveness needed to be more widely available to children and families, long-term investments in empowering women, in education and in reducing inequities needed to work in tandem with technical solutions. Nutrition interventions were most effective in the period from pregnancy to two years of age. Although undernutrition occurred widely, four fifths of all undernourished children lived in just 20 countries, with the largest number living in South Asia. Intensified nutrition action in those countries would help to accelerate the achievement of health-related MDGs and greatly contribute to the Goals relating to poverty and hunger reduction, education and gender equality.

The report also noted that ECHUI partners should focus their country support and country-level and global advocacy efforts on four critical areas: increasing coverage of early initiation and continued exclusive breastfeeding; improving micronutrient intakes of mothers and children as well as dietary intake, especially during pregnancy and the first two years of life; preventing and treating severe acute malnutrition through the expanded use of ready-to-use therapeutic foods, such as Plumpy’nut; and reducing rates of diarrhoea by improving hygiene and parasite control.

Regarding monitoring and evaluation, UNICEF would continue to be one of the lead partners in the initiative, while WFP, as part of its partnership contribution, was expected to continue to host the inter-agency team. Given the food price increases, the focus of the initiative would be adjusted to provide more proactive support to national monitoring of and responses to the impact of the food crisis in vulnerable countries and communities.

UNICEF programmes by region

In 2008 [E/ICEF/2009/9 & Corr.1], UNICEF programme assistance expenditure totalled $2,808 million, of which $1,557.9 million (55.5 per cent) went to sub-Saharan Africa; $775.4 million (27.6 per cent) to Asia; $135.0 million (4.8 per cent) to the Middle East and North Africa; $148.5 million (5.3 per cent) to the Americas and the Caribbean; and $105.0 million (3.7 per cent) to interregional programmes.

Programme expenditures were highest in countries with low income and high under-five mortality rates. The 51 low-income countries—defined as those with a per capita gross national income of $935 or less—which had a total child population in 2007 of 595 million, or 30 per cent of all children worldwide, received 57 per cent of programme expenditures. Countries with high under-five mortality rates accounted for 64 per cent of total assistance.

In September [E/2008/34/Rev.1], the Executive Board had before it the summaries of the mid-term reviews and major evaluations of country programmes in Eastern and Southern Africa [E/ICEF/2008/P/L.14], Latin America and the Caribbean [E/ICEF/2008/P/L.15 & Corr.1], East Asia and the Pacific [E/ICEF/2008/P/L.16], and Central and Eastern Europe and the Commonwealth of Independent States [E/ICEF/2008/P/L.17]. The reports reviewed progress made, resources used and constraints faced in country programmes.

Field visits

The visit of members of the Bureau of the Executive Board to the Lao People’s Democratic Republic (9–16 February) [E/ICEF/2008/13] sought to gain a first-hand understanding of UNICEF work at the country level and demonstrate concrete examples of UNICEF co-operation with the Government and other partners, including the UN country team. The UNICEF programme of cooperation in the country had five main elements: young child survival and development, water, sanitation and hygiene, basic education, child protection and HIV/AIDS and children. Challenges included limited investment in the social sector, limited human resources capacity, the relatively small number of implementing partners and dependency on official development assistance. Noting the Government policy on resettlement, the delegation highlighted the need to ensure the protection of children's rights in such moves, and recommended that the UN country team and UNICEF monitor how the relocation of communities from remote areas to resettled villages affected children. The delegation noted the sense of rapid change in the country, as well as the growing regionalization, and underlined the importance of giving adequate attention to the possible negative side effects of the increased cross-border movement of persons and goods and services. The delegation invited UNICEF to monitor the situation to determine the possible impact on children, and to continue its advocacy and information work about the possible risks and threats to children and youth and their families.

In a joint visit to Haiti (1–9 March) [DP-FPA/2008/CRP.1-E/ICEF/2008/CRP.11], 20 members of the Executive Boards of UNDP/UNFPA, UNICEF and WFP sought to witness first-hand the operations of the four organizations, including inter-agency collaboration and cooperation. They also sought to gain insight into the contributions the organizations were making to assist Haiti in attaining its national development goals. The delegation found that after four years of crisis, the country was slowly but increasingly gaining in stability and confidence with the help of the United Nations Stabilization Mission in Haiti (MINUSTAH), the UN development system and the international donor community. Given the challenges the country faced, predictable funding was crucial for humanitarian and recovery programmes. Core funding and funding with low levels of earmarking, such as thematic trust funds, remained the most effective and preferred means for delivering UN programmes. The delegation recommended greater international engagement in supporting the Government in promoting decentralization efforts. The UN country team was encouraged to support South-South cooperation initiatives to meet Haiti's development needs.

During a visit to Niger (29 March–4 April) [E/ICEF/2008/15], members of the UNICEF Executive Board observed the UNICEF field operations and the work of the UN country team in order to understand the relationship of the Niger-UNICEF country programme of cooperation to national development priorities, the United Nations Development Assistance Framework (UNDAF) and bilateral development assistance. They observed that like many other least developed countries, Niger faced a critical time as the MDGs target date of 2015 drew closer. The Government recognized the challenges and obstacles facing the country, as well the measures needed to overcome them, but that recognition was not uniformly present at all levels of government. The delegation observed that resource constraints and low level of capacity experienced by Niger amplified the importance of promoting greater coherence, cooperation and collaboration among the members of the UN country team. A full scaling-up of UNICEF programmes would benefit the children of Niger. For resource reasons, the UNICEF-supported multi-sectoral programmatic interventions were carried out only in a handful of communes. It was therefore intended that similar interventions in other communes would be supported by other development partners, while ensuring that the same standards were applied.

UNICEF programmes by sector

In 2008, UNICEF programme expenditures, which were linked to the five organizational priorities established in 2005 under the 2006–2009 MTSP [YUN 2005, p. 1284], totalled $2,808 million [E/ICEF/2009/9 & Corr.1], a 12 per cent increase over 2007. The largest share of expenditure, $1,418.5 million (50.5 per cent), went to young child survival and development, followed by basic education and gender equality ($597.8 million, or 21.3 per cent), child protection from violence, exploitation and abuse ($307.6 million, or 11.0 per cent), policy advocacy and partnerships for children's rights ($267.6 million, or 9.5 per cent) and HIV/AIDS and children ($187.2 million, or 6.7 per cent). Some $29.7 million (1.1 per cent) was expended in other areas. Programme support costs amounted to an additional $167 million.

Programme expenditures increased substantially in 2008 in all five MTSP focus areas compared to 2007. Overall shares in total expenditure remained stable except for a 2 percentage point fall in the share of young child survival and development, due mainly to trends in other resources. The share of HIV/AIDS and children continued to be well below the amount projected when the MTSP was adopted in 2005. Despite the crisis that occurred in world financial markets, UNICEF was able to protect its investment portfolio and produce a healthy return.

Young child survival and development

In 2008, UNICEF continued to work with partners to scale up a package of low-cost, high-impact child survival interventions through support for integrated child health events and routine health services. The number of countries supporting Child Health Days, integrating the delivery of immunization with other interventions, increased to more than 50. Furthermore, 138 countries had introduced the Haemophilus influenzae type B vaccine into their infant immunization schedules by the end of 2008. The number of measles deaths worldwide fell from an estimated 750,000 to 197,000 (74 per cent) from 2000 to 2007. The number of deaths from measles in sub-Saharan Africa also declined dramatically, from an estimated 395,000 in 2000 to 45,000 in 2007. Maternal and neonatal tetanus were eliminated in Bangladesh and in two additional states in India in 2008. As a core partner of the Polio Eradication Initiative, UNICEF provided leadership in vaccine procurement in all polio-affected countries. In 2008, more than 2 billion doses of oral polio vaccines were delivered through UNICEF. Wild polio virus transmission continued in the four endemic countries: Afghanistan, India, Nigeria and Pakistan. UNICEF support to polio eradication also included intensified communication designed to increase community demand for vaccination.

Full coverage (two doses) of vitamin A supplementation in the least developed countries had increased to an average of over 80 per cent. That progress was largely due to integrated delivery strategies and improved coverage in hard-to-reach areas. Thirty-two countries, almost half of them in sub-Saharan Africa, had reached the goal of at least 80 per cent coverage. In 2008, UNICEF supplied over 800 million capsules, representing an increase of nearly 31 per cent over 2007.

In its efforts to combat malaria, UNICEF procured about 4 million diagnostic test kits and over 19 million insecticide-treated mosquito nets for 48 countries in 2008. All sub-Saharan African countries with available data had shown good progress in increasing the use of those nets among children under five. With regard to malaria case management, 45 countries in sub-Saharan Africa had changed their treatment policies, with 38 of them implementing the more effective artemisinin-based combination therapies. UNICEF procured 31 million combination therapy treatments; globally, procurement of such treatments increased to around 130 million.

Although progress had been made in preventing mother-to-child transmission of HIV and in paediatric treatment for HIV and AIDS, only 4 per cent of HIV-exposed children began cotrimoxazole prophylaxis within two months of birth. Child Health Days had emerged as the common platform to deliver those interventions and services.

With regard to child survival and development, UNICEF supported targeted complementary feeding programmes for young children, either in selected communities or through integrated campaigns, which resulted in significant increases in local practice of appropriate complementary feeding. It also supported the scaling-up of community-based child nutrition initiatives in several countries. Multiple indicator cluster survey data were used to advocate for increased resources and heightened priority for young child feeding initiatives, including through new national nutrition policies and protocols. Significant progress was achieved in increasing the rate of exclusive breastfeeding. Thirteen countries, including several in sub-Saharan Africa, achieved gains of more than 20 percentage points between 1996 and 2007, using a comprehensive approach to improving infant feeding practices. Worldwide, 71 countries had national legislation or regulatory provisions in force to protect breastfeeding based on the International Code of Marketing of Breastmilk Substitutes. Increased use was being made, with UNICEF support, of evidence-based communication campaigns that featured exclusive breastfeeding along with other key messages. Those were being integrated with programmes addressing HIV in high-prevalence settings.

The number of countries with national programmes that promoted good parenting rose slightly in 2008. The health extension programme of Ethiopia, rolled out with UNICEF support in 2008, included community-based therapeutic feeding centres in over 100 districts. Similar centres and referral systems were established or strengthened in other parts of Africa and Asia.

UNICEF supported WASH activities in 101 countries, including 57 of the 60 countries with both low water and sanitation coverage and high under-five mortality rates. Its cooperation increasingly focused on policies and community efforts for expanding high-impact, cost-effective interventions: hand-washing with soap, sanitation promotion and home drinking-water treatment. Those areas—an essential part of child survival and development strategies—were increasingly integrated with health, nutrition and early childhood interventions. The percentage of programme countries that incorporated into their national development plans measures for achieving the MDGs target on sustainable access to safe drinking water and basic sanitation increased from 58 per cent in 2005 to 73 per cent in 2008.

Under the Core Commitments for Children in Emergencies, revised in 2003 [YUN 2003, p. 1205], UNICEF was a strong contributor to humanitarian reforms, serving as the global cluster lead in nutrition and in water, sanitation and hygiene. Emergencies in Ethiopia and Zimbabwe and large-scale natural disasters, such as the China earthquake and the Myanmar cyclone, received significant funding.

Basic education and gender equality

Progress continued in many countries towards achieving the education- and gender-related MDGs. The progress made in increasing primary school enrolment rates in Africa and Asia was undermined by low retention and completion rates. Too many children started school at a later age than that prescribed for the first grade. Many of them repeated grades. That resulted in a high proportion of over-aged children in primary school and the crowding out of other children. Social exclusion often was a major barrier to education access. Children from disadvantaged and minority populations, as well as working children and children living in remote areas, added to the numbers of those excluded. Girls within those groups often faced a double disadvantage. In 2008, UNICEF supported capacity development of national partners in major areas: improving quality through child-friendly schools; education policy and reform; and education in emergencies, post-conflict and transition.

UNICEF assisted programmes in all regions to reduce disparities in relation to access to, participation in, and completion of quality basic education. The number of countries with national education plans that included measures to reduce gender disparities had increased rapidly, from 58 in 2005 to 87 in 2008. The number of countries with national education plans that included measures to reduce disparities due to poverty, ethnicity and disability also increased significantly, to 110 in 2008 from 74 in 2005. Measures implemented by countries included free public elementary education, provision of free school supplies, and incentives for girls who performed well. UNICEF support to national sector plans included advocacy for human rights-based planning criteria using information on gender and other disparities, and the co-ordination of funding proposals. UNICEF direct support and contributions to national capacity-building helped to increase girls' enrolment rates significantly in parts of Afghanistan, Burkina Faso, Mozambique and other countries. A study of the UNICEF-supported integrated districts programme in India, reaching 4.6 million households, showed an increase in girls' completion rates from 53 per cent in 2005 to 72 per cent in 2008.

There was strong evidence that investment in early childhood development (ECD) prepared children for school, helped to sustain their performance well into the primary cycle and reduced inequalities. Since 2005, the number of programme countries that had national standards for monitoring school or developmental readiness had increased, from 37 to 69. Some 45 programme countries used assessment tools for monitoring school readiness, which in some cases had been developed with UNICEF support. Fifty programme countries had a national policy on universal school readiness. The child-to-child approach for school readiness, which offered new possibilities for improving quality in education, was implemented on a pilot basis in six countries. However, widespread problems persisted, including low investment in ECD and weak links between health and early learning initiatives. In some countries, a narrow view that upheld kindergartens as the only means of ECD continued to impede progress.

To improve education and address problems of retention and achievement, 78 countries had incorporated life skills-based education in the primary national curriculum, compared to 49 in 2005. Some 47 programme countries had included environmental education or climate change into their primary school curriculum, and 51 had done so at the secondary level. Some 79 programme countries had a national policy against corporal punishment in schools. Governments were also increasingly recognizing the importance of WASH for education quality and achievement. The number of programme countries that developed national plans to provide WASH education to all primary schools increased to 75 in 2008 from 50 in 2005, in many cases with long-term support from UNICEF. The Fund also continued to support the construction of water and sanitation facilities in schools through pilot projects or in emergency situations, benefiting an estimated 3.6 million children in 2008.

An estimated 3.1 million children in emergencies were reached in 2008 through interventions in education, with UNICEF assistance. Those included back-to-school programmes involving large-scale mobilization, which resulted, for example, in a 20.4 per cent increase in primary enrolment in the DCR, as well as continued enrolment gains in Afghanistan and the Sudan.

HIV/AIDS

HIV/AIDS had caused an estimated 25 million deaths since HIV was first identified, severely affecting child survival and development, school attendance and livelihoods. It continued to strain health and welfare systems as well as communities and families who were supporting people affected by the epidemic. The call of the Unite for Children, Unite against AIDS initiative [YUN 2005, p. 1290] to place children "more front and centre" in the global response had produced tangible results and strengthened partnerships for action. Evidence for advocacy, policy and action at country level had been strengthened by improved knowledge management tools; leadership at the Implementers Meeting of the Joint United Nations Programme on HIV/AIDS (UNAIDS), held in Uganda; the focus on children at the international AIDS conferences in Mexico and Senegal; and expansion of academic partnerships in the Inter-Agency Task Teams on Preventing mother-to-child transmission (PMTCT), Paediatrics, Orphans and Vulnerable Children, and HIV and Young People.

UNICEF continued to expand its support to paediatric HIV reduction programmes, working in 102 countries in 2008. The proportion of HIV-positive pregnant women requiring antiretrovirals who actually received them increased from 10 per cent in 2004 to 33 per cent in 2007. Children also benefited, as indicated by an increase in the number of HIV-positive children on antiretroviral therapy from 75,000 in 2005 to nearly 200,000 in 2007. PMTCT service coverage, however, remained far below the medium-term strategic plan target of 80 per cent access to antiretrovirals for PMTCT. UNICEF procurement for HIV/AIDS commodities totalled $68.7 million in 2008. Antiretrovirals represented 81 per cent by value of the total commodities procured, followed by HIV rapid diagnostic test kits (16 per cent, or 12 million) and tests for sexually transmitted infections (3 per cent). Paediatric treatments still accounted for less than 5 per cent of antiretrovirals; some 95 per cent of antiretrovirals procured in 2008 were for PMTCT.

Regarding the proportion of children orphaned or made vulnerable by HIV/AIDS, worldwide in 2007 there were an estimated 15 million children who had lost one or both parents to AIDS, including nearly 12 million in sub-Saharan Africa. Many millions more were orphaned due to other causes: household survey data in 47 countries showed that orphanhood from all causes exceeded 5 per cent in many countries, and was over 20 per cent in Lesotho, Rwanda, Swaziland and Zimbabwe. Weaknesses persisted in monitoring the situation of orphans and other vulnerable children and in evaluating the response. Fragmented efforts and weak coordination were common. Some countries, such as Uganda, had developed quality standards for the care and support of orphans and vulnerable children.

The number of programme countries that integrated HIV/AIDS education into the national secondary curriculum rose to 79 in 2008. UNICEF continued to work with partners to improve awareness among schoolchildren on HIV prevention, with encouraging progress in countries such as Ghana and Mozambique. However, reaching marginalized children, including displaced children and refugees, continued to pose significant challenges for outreach programmes and information campaigns. Studies in several countries highlighted the need to better tailor education and outreach campaigns towards women and girls.

UNAIDS programme coordination

At its second regular session in September, the Executive Board considered a report [E/ICEF/2008/24] on recommendations and decisions of relevance to UNICEF adopted at recent meetings of the UNAIDS Programme Coordinating Board. Issues addressed in the report included the status of implementation of the Global Task Team (GTT) recommendations and follow-up to the GTT independent assessment; collaboration with the Global Fund to Fight AIDS, Tuberculosis and Malaria; gender sensitivity of AIDS responses; the cycle of UNAIDS unified budget and workplan; the Second Independent Evaluation of UNAIDS; and the process for nominating the UNAIDS Executive Director.

Child protection from violence, exploitation and abuse

Improved protection of children in 2008 resulted from greater political commitment and the strengthening of national policies, international standards and guidance. Continued efforts were made throughout the year to enhance the evidence base of child protection through gender analysis of key child protection issues; inclusion of disaggregated data on child protection in national reports to the Committee on the Rights of the Child; support to multiple indicator cluster surveys, demographic and health surveys and other household surveys; community-based child protection networks; specialized databases on child protection violations; and the expansion of the Monitoring and Reporting Mechanism in accordance with Security Council resolution 1612(2005) [YUN 2005, p. 863].

The Fund promoted devoting greater attention to issues such as gender-based violence and the recruitment of children, and played a leadership role in the expansion of inter-agency initiatives under the cluster system for emergencies. Through participation in major international forums, UNICEF also ensured that children's issues were highlighted in relation to landmines and other indiscriminate or illicit weapons. Psychosocial support was more systematically included in UNICEF emergency response. However, the poor availability of sex-disaggregated data continued to constrain child protection advocacy and programme development. Only 14 programme countries had sex-disaggregated data on child protection indicators for all age groups.

UNICEF supported programmes to end female genital mutilation/cutting (FGM/C) in 14 countries. UNICEF and UNDP started a Joint Programme and Trust Fund for the accelerated abandonment of FGM/C within a generation in 17 countries in Africa, with initial implementation in eight countries. Several African countries demonstrated progress following efforts to mobilize influential leaders as partners for change.

Over one third of programme countries (46 countries) had incorporated child protection related to emergency preparedness and response into national planning mechanisms by 2008, and 30 other countries had made partial progress. UNICEF support helped to strengthen national capacity for monitoring child rights violations and for protecting children in emergencies. In countries with declared emergencies in 2008, 62 per cent of UNICEF offices supported training for government and non-government partners on child protection in emergencies, and 59 per cent supported national systems for monitoring and reporting violations in accordance with Security Council resolution 1612(2005).

Important progress was made in all regions in establishing legal and policy frameworks in line with international standards promoting deprivation of liberty as a measure of last resort. In many countries, UNICEF facilitated broad consultative processes, including with children. In cooperation with the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime (UNODC), UNICEF developed guidance for juvenile justice legislative reform and a model law for justice in matters involving child victims and witnesses of crimes. The Fund also promoted due process and protection of the rights of former child soldiers who had come in contact with the law.

UNICEF offices in some 50 countries reported progress on alternative care in 2008, including the development of comprehensive reintegration plans and the piloting of “small group homes”—family-like environments for children without suitable parental care. Efforts to improve national social work capacity increased, with over 35 countries reporting significant progress. UNICEF, particularly in Central and Eastern Europe and the Commonwealth of Independent States, worked with ministries of labour and universities to recognize social work as a profession and to create capacity to train personnel. The Fund also supported the establishment of community-based networks for child protection in several African countries. In India, UNICEF facilitated the creation of an Internet-based tracking system for separated children in 36 cities, working with over 55 national NGOs.

Policy advocacy and partnerships for children's rights

UNICEF continued to work with partners to strengthen capacities to design and implement social and economic policies, child-focused legislative measures and budgetary allocations that enabled countries to meet their obligations under the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child [YUN 1989, p. 560] and the 1979 Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women [YUN 1979, p. 895]. To that end, the Fund supported the collection of data and information on children and women to inform strategic decision-making; supported participation by children and young people; promoted research and policy analysis on children and women; and engaged in advocacy and policy dialogue with decision-makers.

The UNICEF-supported DevInfo, a database system for compiling and disseminating data on human development, had been critical in making key data available to Governments, UN and bilateral partners, and international NGOs to help them make informed decisions on policy and programmes for children. During 2008, UNICEF supported 63 countries in consolidating DevInfo implementation in the field. That resulted in more than 2,000 national and UN professionals being trained in the use of the system. Some 121 countries were using DevInfo, and 221 databases had been published by countries and organizations. In addition, UNICEF launched a child mortality database that informed users on how estimates were calculated and the data underlying the adjusted annual inter-agency estimates of under-five mortality.

The Fund supported programme countries in conducting participatory Situation Analyses of the rights of children and women. In addition to Situation Analysis reports, the UNICEF website hosted an increasing number of staff working papers. In 2008, seven working papers were added on migration and remittances, four on legislative reforms for child rights, and two on food prices and the financial crisis. Overall, UNICEF sponsored 76 major thematic studies related to children and women in 2008, in addition to comprehensive Situation Analyses. Over two thirds of those used a human rights framework, and over half used a gender analysis framework.

UNICEF also supported national sector-wide approaches in 44 countries, compared to 38 in 2005, and in an increasing number of countries (13) contributed directly to basket funding mechanisms. The continuing strategic engagement with the World Bank helped to leverage significant levels of new funding for programmes for children in countries around the world, notably through the Education for All Fast Track Initiative, and also for early childhood development, nutrition and HIV prevention.

The Fund worked with other UN agencies and partners in coordinating advocacy and programme support for achieving global commitments for adolescents. That included a Joint Programming Framework on Adolescent Girls and ‘most-at-risk adolescents’ tools developed as part of a UNAIDS prevention toolkit.

Operational and administrative matters

UNICEF finances

In 2008, UNICEF income totalled $3,390 million, an increase of $377 million (13 per cent) over 2007 and 10 per cent higher than forecast in the financial plan. Income to regular resources decreased by 2 per cent to $1,085 million, and fell behind the 2008 financial plan by $51 million (5 per cent). UNICEF derived its incomes mainly from Governments, which contributed $2,040 million (60.2 per cent), and from private sector sources, which contributed $986 million (29.1 per cent). The balance came from inter-organizational arrangements, with contributions of $256 million (7.6 per cent), and other sources, with contributions of $108 million (3.2 per cent).

Budget appropriations

On 1 February [dec. 2008/7], the Executive Board approved a regular resources programme budget for the 2008–2009 biennium [E/ICEF/2008/P/L.1 & Corr.1] in the amount of $28,750,000 (other than the Emergency Programme Fund). It authorized UNICEF to transfer, if necessary, between programme fields an amount not exceeding 10 per cent of the approved budget of the fund to which the transfer was made. The Board also approved a programme budget ceiling of $456,826,000 for other resources for the 2008–2009 biennium, subject to the availability of specific-purpose contributions. Funds in excess of indicated amounts for specific programme areas and regions could be received, provided that the total amount of funds received was within the approved limit.

The Executive Board also considered the biennial support budget for 2008–2009 [E/ICEF/2008/AB/L.1] and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) [E/ICEF/2008/AB/L.2]. On 1 February [dec. 2008/2], it approved a gross appropriation of $912.8 million for the biennial support budget, to be offset by estimated income of $223 million, resulting in an estimated net appropriation of $689.8 million. It requested the Executive Director to include in future budget submissions an annex on budget estimates by cost category for major objects of expenditure, with information on cost efficiencies achieved against targets and indicators therein, and to report on the estimates and efficiency targets in the annual financial reporting. The Board approved the amount of $26.2 million from regular resources for covering the UN mandated central-shared security cost. It also requested the Executive Director to present the 2010–2011 biennial support budget for Executive Board approval at the second regular session of 2009.

On the same day, on the basis on a UNICEF report [E/ICEF/2008/P/L.2], the Executive Board approved [dec. 2008/5] additional regular resources for 14 country programmes totalling $42.7 million. It also approved [dec. 2008/6], on the basis of a UNICEF report [E/ICEF/2008/P/L.3], $246,100,000 in additional resources for 13 country programmes.

On 5 June [dec. 2008/8], the Executive Board approved the aggregate indicative budget for 9 country programmes, amounting to the following totals for regular and other resources, respectively, by region: Africa, $266,373,900 and $444,590,000; Americas and the Caribbean, $1,492,200 and $9,619,500; South Asia, $58,851,900 and $147,584,000; Middle East and North Africa, $30,427,000 and $240,000,000.

According to a July report [E/ICEF/2008/AB/L.4], an amount of $5,891,211 from regular resources would be used to cover those overexpenditures for completed projects financed from other resources for which no additional support had been forthcoming. The report noted that the allocation of regular resources would allow UNICEF to finalize the accounting for other resources for the period to 31 December 2005.

On 18 September [dec. 2008/16], the Executive Board approved the aggregate indicative budget for 10 country programmes, amounting to the following totals of regular and other resources, respectively, by region: East and Southern Africa, $83,577,500 and $298,282,000; West and Central Africa, $34,387,200 and $124,500,000; the Americas and the Caribbean, $10,864,800 and $59,640,000; Central and Eastern Europe and Commonwealth of Independent States, $600,000 and $3,500,000; East Asia and the Pacific, $5,063,000 and 55,000,000; the Middle East and North Africa, $600,000 and $2,000,000. Additionally, the Board on the same date [dec. 2008/17], having considered the draft country programme documents presented to the Board at its second regular session of 2008, requested the UNICEF Executive Director to ensure that country programme results and performance data consolidated over the programme duration were made available on the UNICEF website at the end of the country programme cycle. It urged UNICEF to increase its efforts to present draft country programme documents for discussion at the annual session of the Executive Board and requested UNICEF to provide at the annual session a short explanation of the reasons for deferring draft country programme documents to the second regular session.

In response to a 2003 Executive Board decision [YUN 2003, p. 1212], the UNICEF secretariat in September submitted a report [E/ICEF/2008/20] on implementation of the modified system for allocation for regular resources for programmes. The report informed the Board on lessons learned since 2003, and proposed modifications to the system. In line with Board decisions, UNICEF continued to review the situation of the countries near or at the established graduation level, where regular resource assistance would cease, as well as the level and types of engagement required for children in those countries. Concerns regarding the extent of disparities in development indicators and their implications for children had increased in both least developed countries and middle-income countries. It was also increasingly evident that many of the most common factors that threatened children's rights and created vulnerabilities among children, such as violence, marginalization and effects of migration, were not confined to low-income countries alone. In 2008, allocations for cooperation in upper middle-income countries amounted to 2 per cent of total regular resources allocations, or $13.9 million. The secretariat would pursue innovative and effective options for cooperation modalities to further benefit the children of such countries. The secretariat would also monitor and review the implications for children of implementing the regular resource allocation system, including those modifications, and to advise the Executive Board of any issues arising from the review.

On 18 September [dec. 2008/15], the Executive Board endorsed the report on the implementation of the modified system, decided to maintain the system with a number of modifications, and requested a report on the topic at its second regular session in 2012.

On the same date [dec. 2008/21], the Executive Board, on the basis of a UNICEF secretariat report [E/ICEF/2008/AB/L.8], approved $21.4 million as an additional requirement from regular resources to cover security measures mandated by the UN. The Board also authorized the UNICEF Executive Director, on an exceptional basis, to access up to an additional 20 per cent ($4.3 million) of that amount during 2008–2009. UNICEF would limit the use of those funds to new and emerging security mandates, as defined in the UN Department of Safety and Security directives, and would report to the Board on the use of those funds in its annual report of the Executive Director on progress and achievements against the medium-term strategic plan.

Audits

In the annual report to the Executive Board on internal audit activities in 2007 [E/ICEF/2008/AB/L.7 & Corr.1], the Director of the Office of the Internal Audit (OIA) stated that OIA had completed 23 country office audits, one zone office audit and one audit of a joint UN office. Two of the audits were related to the response to the 2004 Indian Ocean tsunami. All completed audits met OIA's performance standards for planning, implementation and reporting. Each of the audits included a risk statement that described why the finding were important and should be addressed, a statement of the facts found in the audit, and one or more recommendations to establish adequate control over the identified risk. In 2007, OIA issued 444 risk observations and 75 positive practice observations. A positive observation was made when all aspects of a particular work process step in an audited area were found to function as expected. OIA issued 51 high-risk observations to field offices, in the areas of programme management (31 per cent), supply management (22 per cent), financial controls (18 per cent), cash transfers to implementing partners (16 per cent) and implementation of prior audit recommendations (10 per cent).

On 18 September [dec. 2008/23], the Executive Board took note of that report and requested that UNICEF closely consult with the Board in preparing the accountability framework foreseen for the first regular session of 2009, including by presenting a draft of the framework prior to the session. The Board expressed concern about the high percentage of unsatisfactory ratings by audited field offices, especially in the areas of programme management, cash assistance and supply assistance. It called upon the UNICEF management to address those issues by following up closely with country offices that had unsatisfactory ratings and by implementing measures to strengthen the performance of all country offices and to report back in 2009. The Board requested the UNICEF management to report on progress made and lessons learned in implementing the harmonized approach to cash transfers, including in connection with the development of procedures and reporting mechanisms, in conjunction with the annual report on internal audit at the second regular session in 2009.

In a July report [E/ICEF/2008/AB/L.9], the UNICEF secretariat described steps taken to implement the recommendation of the Board of Auditors on the Fund accounts for the 2004–2005 biennium. The report focused on those recommendations that either were not implemented or only partially implemented at the time of the previous report [YUN 2007, p. 1218].

Report of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 48/216 B [YUN 1993, p. 1207], the Secretary-General in September transmitted to the Assembly a report [A/63/327/Add.1] on the implementation of the recommendations of the Board of Auditors contained in the Board's report on UNICEF [A/63/5/Add.2 & Corr.1] for the biennium ended 31 December 2007. The Secretary-General provided information on the status of implementation, the office responsible, the estimated completion date and the priority for each recommendation.

Resource mobilization

UNICEF continued to collaborate with Governments to mobilize regular and other resources. By the ninth pledging event in January, 48 countries had committed $383.8 million for 2008 regular resources. By year's end, 109 Governments had contributed to UNICEF resources. Total income from public sector donors (Governments, intergovernmental organizations and inter-organizational arrangements) amounted to $2,295 million—an increase of 17 per cent over 2007. Out of that amount, $616 million was received from public sector donors for regular resources, $1,057 million for other resources-regular, and $623 million for other resources-emergency. While regular resource contributions from the private sector and NGOs declined by 8 per cent, from $392 million to $361 million, contributions to other resources in those categories increased by 32 per cent, from $476 million to $626 million. The lower level of regular resources income classified as "other income" was largely caused by unfavourable exchange rate movements that affected the valuation of outstanding payments and income from investments.

The United States remained the largest donor to UNICEF ($301 million), followed by the United Kingdom ($213 million), Norway ($197 million), the Netherlands ($196 million) and Sweden ($170 million). Overall thematic funding in 2008 increased by 17 per cent, due to the increase in the humanitarian category, from $294 million to $343 million. In addition to contributions from 18 Governments and 32 national committees, thematic funding was also provided by the European Commission for the first time. The public sector contributed 68 per cent of all thematic funds in 2008. The top 10 donors to thematic funds contributed $178,881,000.

UNICEF overall income for humanitarian assistance was $735 million. Funding included 75 appeals and requests for humanitarian assistance. Consolidated appeals were relatively well funded, receiving 63 per cent of requirements. Flash appeals attracted 68 per cent of the requirements. The other crises were the least funded, with 43 per cent of their financial needs met.

International Public Sector Accounting Standards

In September, the Executive Board had before it a note [E/ICEF/2008/AB/L.10] on developments in implementation by UNICEF of the International Public Sector Accounting Standards (IPSAS), as called for in General Assembly resolution 60/283 [YUN 2006, p. 1580]. The note proposed that UNICEF report periodically to the Executive Board on progress towards IPSAS adoption.

Private Fundraising and Partnerships

The Executive Board in January had before it a report on the 2008 Private Fundraising and Partnerships (PFP) workplan and budget [E/ICEF/2008/AB/L.3], according to which PFP in 2008 would generate a projected sum of $746.4 million in net consolidated income, of which $395.3 million would be for regular resources and $351.1 million for other resources. That would be achieved with expenditures of $124.3

million. PFP incorporated the functions of the previous Private Sector Division, elements of fund-raising and national committee for UNICEF support of the Regional Office for Europe, the entire Office of Public Partnerships, and management of the UNICEF International Goodwill Ambassador programme. Core work regarding partnership and advocacy remained financed through the UNICEF biennial support budget [E/ICEF/2008/1]. For 2007, the total net consolidated income was estimated at $694.9 million. The actual result for 2006 was $734.9 million, which included the 2004 Indian Ocean tsunami emergency funds of about $50.0 million.

On 1 February [dec. 2008/3], the Executive Board approved budgeted expenditures of $124.3 million for the 2008 PFP work plan. It authorized UNICEF to re-deploy resources between the various budget lines up to a maximum of 10 per cent of the amounts approved and to spend an additional amount between Executive Board sessions, when necessary, up to the amount caused by currency fluctuations, to implement the 2008 approved work plan. The Board also renewed investment funds with $21.4 million established for 2008. It authorized UNICEF to incur expenditures in the 2008 fiscal period related to cost of goods delivered (production and purchase of raw materials, cards and other products) for the 2009 fiscal year up to $34.1 million, as indicated in the PFP medium-term fundraising plan. It approved an interim one-month allocation of $11.0 million for January 2009, to be absorbed in the annual PFP budget for 2009, and also approved the PFP medium-term fundraising plan for 2009–2012.

Country programme approval process

The Executive Board had before it an April report [E/ICEF/2008/P/L.13] containing recommendations to increase the other resources ceiling for country programmes previously approved by the Board, as the contributions to other resources for country programmes had exceeded, or were expected to exceed, the planning levels originally approved by the Board. The Fund recommended that the Board approve $251,230,050 in other resources for approved country programmes for 27 countries. On 5 June [dec. 2008/9], the Executive Board approved additional other resources in that amount for the remaining periods of those programmes, subject to the availability of other resources contributions.

At the September session, UNICEF requested [E/ICEF/2008/P/L.28] that the Executive Board approve $98,064,270 in additional regular resources to allow uninterrupted implementation of 24 country programmes previously approved.

On 18 September [dec. 2008/18], the Executive Board approved additional regular resources in that amount to fund the approved country programmes of the 24 countries for 2009, whose regular resources planning levels, based on the modified allocation system and estimated global levels of programmable regular resources, were higher than the levels originally approved by the Board.

Joint programming

The joint meeting of the Executive Boards of UNICEF, UNDP/UNFPA and WFP (New York, 29 January–1 February) discussed progress towards achieving the MDGs. Introducing the background paper and discussion on behalf of the four participating organizations, the UNICEF Deputy Executive Director highlighted the uneven picture of progress given by recent data and said that a collective sense of urgency was needed if the MDGs were to be met. Various delegations noted progress made but expressed concern that several countries, particularly in sub-Saharan Africa, were not on track.

Recommendations made by delegations to accelerate progress, included: emphasizing Government leadership and national ownership as well as increased support from multilateral organizations in scaling up efforts; taking more “bottom-up” approaches so that marginalized groups benefited from scaling-up; ensuring the availability of UN staff to support country efforts; reaching out to the private sector and NGOs; and encouraging South-South cooperation in sharing and implementing good practices. More attention should be given to addressing debt relief for poor countries, the fulfilment of aid promises by donor countries, unequal trade relations, gender inequality and the degradation of the environment.

The joint meeting also discussed feedback from “Delivering as one” pilots. The UNFPA Executive Director noted that feedback from the pilots showed that the UNDAF formed the foundation of the “One United Nations” approach and was derived from national development priorities. Joint programming and programmes had received positive reviews. The strategic alignment of UN support to national development would reduce duplication and transaction costs, and the initiative’s overall direction was positive.

On disaster risk reduction, the WFP Deputy Executive Director emphasized adaptation and the need to mitigate the risks of natural disasters and build resilience among those most likely to be hardest hit. There was an urgent need to engage fully in disaster risk reduction, and UN organizations could do more to mitigate risks and build resilience. A stronger link between humanitarian and development efforts was needed to reduce the impact of disasters on vulnerable communities.

JIU reports

In January, the Executive Board considered a secretariat note [E/ICEF/2008/6] on reports of the Joint Inspector Unit (JIU) of relevance to UNICEF. The note provided information on reports prepared between October 2006 and October 2007, action taken by UNICEF and views held on the issues raised by the inspectors. During that period, JIU issued five reports of interest to UNICEF on age structure of human resources in UN system [JIU/REP/2007/4]; Goodwill Ambassadors in the UN system [JIU/NOTE/2006/1]; lessons learned from the Indian Ocean tsunami disaster [JIU/REP/2006/5]; voluntary contributions in UN system organizations [JIU/REP/2007/1]; and UN system staff medical coverage [JIU/REP/2007/2]. The Board took note of the report at its January session.

Innocenti Research Centre

In July, UNICEF submitted to the Executive Board a progress report [E/ICEF/2008/23] on the work of the Innocenti Research Centre (IRC) (Florence, Italy) in strengthening the capacity of UNICEF, partner Governments and institutions to respond to the needs of children and to promote a strong global ethic for children. The report reviewed implementation by IRC of its 2006–2008 programme of work and proposed a one-year extension of the programme. The 2006–2008 work programme had enhanced the role of IRC in the generation and brokering of knowledge, and strengthened its partnerships with organizations and research institutions in the various regions, with an emphasis on developing countries.

In September [dec. 2008/19], the Executive Board, following the recommendation of the report, authorized the extension of the Centre’s programme until the end of 2009 to ensure its alignment with the UNICEF strategic planning process, with the programme of work for the Office of Research 2010–2011, and with the UNICEF biennial support budget for 2010–2011. It also authorized an increase in the other resources ceiling of $7 million, for a total other resources ceiling of $24 million for the period 2006–2009. The Board invited all donors to contribute to the Centre’s programme activities. The UNICEF Executive Director was requested to inform the Executive Board, through informal consultations in the first half of 2009, on the future direction, focus and details of the organizational arrangements for the research function, in view of the discussions on that function for the preparation of the biennial support budget for 2010–2011.

Youth

World Programme of Action for Youth

In 2008, United Nations policies and programmes on youth continued to focus on efforts to implement the 1995 World Programme of Action for Youth to the Year 2000 and Beyond, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 50/81 [YUN 1995, p. 1211]. The Programme of Action addressed problems faced by youth worldwide and identified ways to enhance youth participation in national and international policy- and decision-making.

The Programme of Action identified 10 priority issues for youth: education, employment, hunger and poverty, health, environment, drug abuse, juvenile delinquency, leisure-time activities, girls and young women, and participation in society and decision-making. In resolution 60/2 [YUN 2005, p. 1296], the General Assembly added five additional issues of concern to young people: globalization, the increased use of information and communication technology, HIV/AIDS, the increased participation of young people in armed conflict as both victims and perpetrators, and the growing importance of intergenerational relations in an ageing global society. The World Youth Report 2005 [YUN 2005, p. 1295] and a related report of the Secretary-General [ibid.] suggested that the 15 priority areas of the Programme of Action be grouped into three clusters—youth in the global economy, youth in civil society and youth and their well-being. By resolution 60/2, the Assembly took note of those three clusters and requested their use in future analyses of the implementation programme.

Youth and their well-being

Expert group meeting. A report of the Secretary-General [A/64/61-E/2009/3] summarized the conclusions of the expert group meeting on goals and targets for the World Programme of Action for Youth (New York, 19–21 May), which suggested numerous goals and targets for the cluster “Youth and their well-being”, one of the three clusters of the World Programme of Action. The meeting was attended by representatives from Member States, youth-led organizations and other NGOs, as well as UN programmes, regional commissions and specialized agencies. The goals and targets were chosen for their global relevance, scope and measurability.

The goals and targets for health highlighted the need to have access to affordable and comprehensive health information and services, including on diseases related to lifestyle choices. They aimed at minimizing the prevalence of reproductive health morbidities and mortality, promoting training for health professionals in identifying and treating common sexually transmitted infections, and ensuring that health facilities had adequate resources for providing youth-friendly care and counselling.

Halting and reversing the spread of HIV/AIDS could not be achieved without a specific focus on youth, and that would require that all young people were knowledgeable about HIV and how to prevent it. Thus, the recommended goals and targets sought to ensure that those most vulnerable to infection were reached, and that their social and economic vulnerability was given attention. The availability of opportunities for testing was also important in stemming the spread of HIV/AIDS.

Proposed goals and targets on reducing substance abuse by young people focused on both supply and demand reduction. Attention was given to youth access to substance abuse treatment and rehabilitation programmes, as well as the need to include in those programmes alternative income-earning strategies and skills training.

In the area of juvenile justice, the goals and targets recognized that the first key step was to reduce the involvement of youth in crime. Access to education and training, as well as increased employment opportunities, were seen as key in achieving that end. Protection of youth offenders in the justice system was emphasized, in particular by ensuring the separation of juvenile from adult judicial and penal systems and by reducing the number of juveniles committed to locked institutions.

Regarding gender, the goals and targets highlighted the need to ensure the availability of facilities and services required for the full engagement of girls and young women in society, and the need to engage boys and young men in promoting gender equality. The goals and targets also sought to eliminate violence against women and girls, including by addressing gender-based violence in all basic education curricula, and by ensuring that every case of violence against girls and young women was investigated and prosecuted.

Interventions to address the engagement of youth in armed conflict should, above all, focus on building a culture of peace. That required the involvement of education systems, as well as reducing the prevalence of light weapons. Also addressed was the need to engage youth in conflict prevention and reconstruction.

Youth employment

Commission for Social Development action. The Commission for Social Development, at its February session [E/2008/26] (see p. 1204), discussed trends in youth employment under its priority theme “Promoting full employment and decent work for all”.

Economic and Social Council action. As recommended by the Commission, the Economic and Social Council, by resolution 2008/18 (see p. 1205), urged the development and implementation of integrated policies and strategies that promoted full employment and decent work opportunities for youth, including those living in rural areas; integrating youth employment into national development strategies; and encouraging young people’s entrepreneurship, including through entrepreneurship education. The Council called on Governments to promote access to work through policies that enabled the creation of new quality jobs for young people and facilitated access to those jobs; and stressed the importance of the Youth Employment Network [YUN 2001, p. 1100] as a national, regional and international peer exchange mechanism.

Follow-up to Second World Assembly on Ageing (2002)

Commission for Social Development. The Commission for Social Development, at its forty-sixth session (6–15 and 22 February) [E/2008/26], completed the first review and appraisal of the Madrid International Plan of Action on Ageing, 2002 [YUN 2002, p. 1194], which was adopted by the Second World Assembly on Ageing [ibid., p. 1193]. In 2004 [YUN 2004, p. 1192], the Commission, decided to review and appraise the Plan of Action every five years; in 2006 [YUN 2006, p. 1382], the Commission decided to start the first global cycle of review and appraisal in 2007 and to conclude it in 2008. The global theme for the first review and appraisal was “Addressing the challenges and opportunities of ageing”.

In response to a 2007 request of the Commission [YUN 2007, p. 1231], the Secretary-General submitted a report [E/CN.5/2008/7 & Corr.1] on the preliminary assessment of the first review and appraisal of the Plan of Action. The report addressed a range of socio-economic issues, such as income security, intergenerational solidarity and care provision, human resources development in health care, research on ageing and policy action, and age-friendly cities. It noted that since the Second World Assembly, Governments had introduced a wide range of policies and programmes aimed at addressing challenges stemming from population ageing.

The Secretary-General recommended that the Commission invite Governments and other major stakeholders to continue their cooperation with the UN Department of Economic and Social Affairs (DESA), as the UN global focal point on ageing, in implementing the Madrid Plan of Action, including by contributing to the development of the strategic framework for implementing the Plan. The Commission might request the Secretary-General, in preparing that framework, to consult Governments, inter-governmental organizations, UN bodies, academia and NGOs on its substantive and practical content. The Secretary-General might also be requested to improve the institutional capacity of the UN system, including maintaining and strengthening the focal points on ageing, so that they might further the implementation of the Plan of Action and the elaboration of its framework. Finally, The Commission might emphasize that the framework should include proposals for improving international cooperation on ageing to support implementation of the Plan of Action.

The Commission had before it the report [E/CN.5/2008/2] of the regional commissions on the regional implementation of the Madrid Plan of Action, which provided regional perspectives on the activities related to the implementation of the Plan, underlined challenges in the regions and offered recommendations for consideration by the Commission. On 8 February, the Commission held a panel discussion, with the participation of the executive secretaries of the regional commissions, on the regional review and appraisal of the Plan of Action.

On 22 February, the Commission adopted a resolution [E/2008/26 (res. 46/1)] on the first review and appraisal of the Plan of Action, in which it recognized the successful conclusion of the first review and appraisal of the Plan of Action and its results at the international, regional and national levels. The Commission encouraged Governments to integrate the concerns of older persons into their policy agendas and to participate in the implementation of the Madrid Plan of Action, including by improving data collection and sharing ideas, information and good practices. Member States were invited to develop their national capacity to address the national implementation priorities identified during the review and appraisal exercise. The Secretary-General was requested to submit to the Commission’s 2009 session a report on the analysis of the conclusions of the first review and appraisal exercise, including a strategic implementation framework based on the analysis of national activities since 2002. The framework was to identify future policy priorities, including measures for international cooperation to support national implementation activities.

Report of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 62/130 [YUN 2007, p. 1232], the Secretary-General in July submitted a report [A/63/95] on follow-up to the Second World

Assembly on Ageing, which summarized the results of the first review and appraisal of the Madrid Plan of Action and outlined a strategic implementation framework, requested by the Assembly.

Member States had made considerable strides in implementing policies that benefited older persons, said the report. Policy efforts made by Governments were often wide-ranging and innovative, and focused on: establishing new social protection mechanisms, such as social pensions in some developing countries or reforms to stabilize retirement and pension schemes in the more developed regions; extending health-care benefits to older persons; adjusting labour markets and care systems to correspond to accelerated population ageing; increasing the participation of older persons in various areas of society, including promoting the employment of older persons; giving attention to training in geriatrics and gerontology; preventing discrimination against and abuse of older persons; establishing intergenerational solidarity programmes; and enhancing the awareness of ageing-related issues.

Several UN entities carried out capacity development in the follow-up to the Second World Assembly, such as data collection and analysis (Population Division of DESA, United Nations Statistics Division, UNFPA); formulation of national population policies and programmes on issues related to demographic ageing and training of personnel (UNFPA); provision of recommendations to individual Member States on how to strengthen their employment and labour-market policies (International Labour Organization) and how to promote the participation of older persons in rural development and food security strategies (Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations). The World Health Organization focused on capacity-building for primary health-care services for older persons, support for active ageing in urban areas and integration of health and social care policies. The World Bank provided support for countries undertaking reforms of their pension systems.

Since the adoption of the Madrid Plan of Action, DESA assisted several Member States in their implementation of the Plan. As a result of a joint DESA-UNFPA advisory mission to Armenia in 2007, the Government decided to develop a national strategy on ageing based on evidence obtained from a national survey, which was completed in June 2008. DESA needs assessment missions to Moldova in April and to Kazakhstan in June helped those Governments to identify priorities for further action on ageing. A stakeholder workshop in June assisted the Government of Saint Kitts and Nevis to revise and finalize a draft policy on ageing.

Turning to the proposed strategic framework, the report said that it would focus on two major dimensions of the implementation process: determining key priority areas to focus on in the second half of its first decade; and building national capacity on ageing issues. Although the focus would be on national implementation activities, another objective of the framework was to improve international cooperation on ageing, including the institutional capacity of the UN system to support national policy efforts on ageing.

The Secretary-General proposed that the General Assembly recommend that Member States devise strategies for overcoming obstacles to the implementation of the Madrid Plan of Action based on life-course and intergenerational solidarity approaches in order to increase the likelihood of success in the years ahead. Member States were encouraged to choose national priorities that were realistic, feasible and achievable; to develop targets and indicators to measure progress in implementation; and to present their views on the outline of the strategic implementation framework so that they could be reflected in the final draft, to be presented to the Commission for Social Development in February 2009. The Assembly might also recommend that Member States raise greater awareness of the Plan of Action; reaffirm the role of UN focal points on ageing; increase technical cooperation efforts; expand the role of the regional commissions on ageing issues; facilitate the coordination of national and international NGOs on ageing; and enhance cooperation with academia on a research agenda on ageing.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December [meeting 70], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee [A/63/424] adopted resolution 63/151 without vote [agenda item 55 (c)].

Refugees and displaced persons

In 2008, there were 34.4 million people of concern to the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR), including 10.5 million refugees. The number of identified stateless persons stood at 6.6 million and the number of stateless persons worldwide was estimated at 12 million. The number of people displaced remained high, at an estimated 26 million, with 14.4 million benefiting from UNHCR protection assistance. The latter figure constituted an increase of more than 600,000 compared to the previous year. More than 1.3 million internally displaced persons (IDPs) were able to go back to their places of origin, and more than 600,000 refugees were able to return to their homes.

During the year, UNHCR exercised its protection mandate more effectively in relation to statelessness, and progress was made in that area, with encouraging developments taking place in countries as diverse as Bangladesh, Ukraine and the United Arab Emirates. UNHCR helped more than 150,000 refugees in Central Africa and the Great Lake region find a durable solution through voluntary repatriation and reintegration in their home countries, including 40,000 refugees who repatriated to the Democratic Republic of the Congo (DRC), 95,000 to Burundi and some 8,600 to Rwanda. UNHCR provided international protection and material assistance to some 676,000 refugees, of whom 68,300 were Congolese in camps in Burundi, Rwanda and the United Republic of Tanzania.

The Office also protected and assisted 2,700 Burundians in Rwanda, 112,000 Angolans in the DRC, more than 8,500 refugees from Chad, the Sudan and the DRC in the Central African Republic (CAR) and some 81,000 refugees in Cameroon, of whom almost 63,000 were from the CAR. UNHCR led the efforts of the protection cluster to improve the safety and security of IDPs in the CAR and the DRC.

The volatile situations in Afghanistan and Pakistan, ongoing conflicts in the Darfur region of the Sudan and Colombia, and violence in Georgia, the DRC and Somalia continued to generate forced movements within and across borders. The continued conflict in Somalia caused massive displacement of populations, and the IDP population rose from 450,000 to approximately 1.1 million people. Clashes in Ethiopia's Ogaden region triggered the internal displacement of thousands of Ethiopians; there were some 200,000 conflict-induced IDPs, living mainly in So-mal, Oromiya, Gambella and Tigray regional states. In Kenya, post-election violence that erupted in late 2007 led to the displacement of between 350,000 and 500,000 people to camps and host communities, especially in the Rift Valley.

Fighting between Government forces and irregular armed groups severely affected civilians in the north of the CAR, and the number of IDPs rose to 197,000. The total number of Central African refugees stood at 104,000. The situation in eastern Chad worsened markedly along the volatile border with Darfur. Cross-border movements of armed groups, militia clashes, acts of banditry and general impunity affected the safety and security of 250,000 refugees from Darfur, 186,000 Chadian IDPs and the host communities. South Africa was hit by a wave of unprecedented xenophobic violence targeting Zimbabweans and other foreign nationals, which displaced up to 100,000 people.

Despite States' obligations to extend cooperation under the 1951 Convention relating to the Status of Refugees [YUN 1951, p. 520], the Office was often denied access to detention centres to determine international protection needs. UNHCR also continued to face challenges in all aspects of beneficiary and staff safety.

In October, the Executive Committee adopted general conclusions on international protection, which called upon States to scrupulously respect the principle of non-refoulement. It also called on States to take steps to prevent acts of violence against refugees and other persons of concern.

In January, the African Union (AU) Executive Council adopted two decisions on the situation of refugees, returnees and IDPs in Africa. The Council called upon the international community to redouble its assistance to victims of forced displacement in Africa.

In December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 63/149 on assistance to refugees, returnees and displaced persons in Africa. The Assembly emphasized that States had the primary responsibility for the protection of, and assistance to, refugees on their territory. The Assembly also emphasized the need to redouble efforts to develop and implement comprehensive durable solution strategies, in cooperation with the international community.

Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees

Programme policy

Executive Committee action. At its fifty-ninth session (Geneva, 6–10 October) [A/63/12/Add.1], the Executive Committee of the UNHCR Programme, in a conclusion on international protection, called upon States to scrupulously respect the principle of non-refoulement; to take steps to prevent acts of violence against refugees and other persons of concern; to facilitate their access without discrimination to effective legal remedies; to safeguard their physical safety; to strengthen justice systems; and to bring perpetrators of such violence to justice. The Committee commended UNHCR for pursuing its age, gender and diversity mainstreaming approach aimed at ensuring gender equality and equal enjoyment of rights, regardless of age, gender or background.

In other actions, the Committee adopted a conclusion on international protection, as well as decisions on programme budgets and funding, on the UNHCR programme in the UN proposed strategic framework for the 2010–2011 biennium and on administrative, financial and programme matters.

In his opening statement to the Committee [A/AC.96/SR.618], the High Commissioner said that adverse economic trends, financial turmoil and the unforeseen consequences of globalization and climate change had increased the number of people on the move in search of security and opportunities. Likewise, rapid population growth, urbanization, lack of employment and rising prices had created tensions, which were compounded by conflicts that increasingly involved competition over scarce resources. The result was that the number of refugees and IDPs worldwide was rising, especially in urban areas. Those trends, which generated an increasing number of emergency deployments, had important implications for UNHCR and its capacity and resources. He noted that spending from the operational reserve in 2008 would be almost double what it was in 2007 and global expenditure in 2008 was set to increase by around 50 per cent over 2006. In a drive to base its planning process on beneficiaries' rights and needs, and mainstream that approach in all its operations, UNHCR launched the Global Needs Assessment process in eight countries. Efficiency savings released additional resources for field operations, which made a real difference to beneficiaries. In 2008, savings of $7 million were freed up for new projects to address critical water and sanitation problems and high levels of anaemia among women and children in refugee camps. UNHCR approved an additional $13.25 million for a water and sanitation project covering 16 countries, and the Budget Committee was deciding on an anaemia reduction programme. The Office had also taken further steps to strengthen field operations. The High Commissioner noted that the new budget structure and resource allocation framework demonstrated the commitment of UNHCR to achieving results. In that regard, the Global Needs Assessment and the Global Accountability Framework would lay the foundations for a results-based management system. The field review had made good progress, and new policies would be introduced on expanding the use of national officers, improving work with implementing partners and attracting more senior staff to deep field locations. Moreover, comprehensive and much-needed reforms in human resources were under way, in close consultation with the Staff Council, with a new emphasis on training that would be supported by the establishment of a learning centre in Budapest.

Regarding protection, UNHCR had drawn up a list of five priority issues, including refugee protection in the context of international migration and mixed population movements. It continued to work with the International Organization for Migration (IOM) to implement the 10-Point Plan of Action on Refugee Protection and International Migration [YUN 2006, p. 1386], while promoting improvements in asylum legislation and procedures. The High Commissioner noted that UNHCR had just completed a global evaluation of its work to prevent and respond to sexual and gender-based violence, and that it intended to establish a concerted strategy for the protection of women and girls. Some progress had been made in protecting stateless persons, and UNHCR had strengthened its commitment to protecting IDPs in the framework of the Guiding Principles on Internal Displacement [YUN 1998, p. 675]. The preparation of an African Union convention on IDPs was viewed as an encouraging development in that regard.

The High Commissioner said that in 2007, with support from UNHCR, some 700,000 refugees and 2 million IDPs had voluntarily returned home in safety. Local initiatives in the United Republic of Tanzania, Latin America and the Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS) region had provided refugees with access to the labour market and education and fostered positive relationships with host communities, thus contributing to their successful reintegration upon return.

UNHCR was also engaged in advocacy to promote sustainable reintegration with States, institutional partners and UN agencies through the Delivering as one initiative [YUN 2006, p. 1060]. He noted UNHCR's strong commitment to the initiative, which it saw as a key opportunity to engage the entire UN system in finding durable solutions for the challenges included in its mandate. However, while good results had been achieved in the past year, UNHCR did not have the resources or capacity to provide all the essential elements of successful reintegration. The Office had recently evaluated its reintegration operations in Angola and Southern Sudan and had adopted a new reintegration policy, emphasizing the strategic role of UNHCR, the importance of partnerships and the need to build on the capacities of returnees and to support Governments in reassuming their responsibilities towards their citizens. The policy also stressed the need for return and reintegration to be built into national recovery strategies, development frameworks and peacebuilding processes.

The High Commissioner was encouraged by the progress made in strengthening humanitarian financing. The Central Emergency Response Fund had already provided valuable support to a number of UNHCR operations, although the experience with country-level pooled funds had been more mixed. UNHCR and other humanitarian organizations encountered complex dilemmas when engaging with integrated UN missions. While UNHCR recognized the important role of those missions and continued to work closely with them, particularly in the context of return and reintegration, it was also aware of the importance of preserving the autonomy of the humanitarian space and safeguarding the humanitarian principles of neutrality, impartiality and independence, particularly in countries where a durable peace settlement had yet to be reached. UNHCR was determined to establish a full strategic partnership with its sister UN agencies, the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement and the NGO community. The Office's cooperation with the World Food Programme (WFP) had helped avert disaster for many of its beneficiaries during recent food crises, and UNHCR had some 650 NGO partners through which it was channelling increasingly significant levels of expenditure.

The High Commissioner highlighted concerns, including about 2009 funding, which was insufficient to meet the global needs of beneficiaries and cope with growing demands. He also called for a systematic debate on the international response to the growing scale of forced displacement, in which the following questions would be addressed: what impact would climate change and other adverse trends have on forced displacement; and could the international community address those challenges with the current legal and normative framework, or would it be necessary to develop new standards and instruments. He concluded by saying that those questions formed the basis of an important and necessary debate, and called on Member States to assume leadership. Only by thinking and acting together, said the High Commissioner, would it be possible to preserve the rights of the people who fell under the UNHCR mandate.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

30. Requests the High Commissioner to report on his activities to the General Assembly at its sixty-fourth session.

Strengthening UNHCR

Oral report of UNHCR. In response to General Assembly resolution 58/153 [YUN 2003, p. 1226] on strengthening UNHCR capacity to carry out its mandate, a UNHCR representative on 24 July provided an oral report to the Economic and Social Council [E/2008/SR.42]. In the framework of the “Delivering as one” initiative [YUN 2006, p. 1060], UNHCR was involved in five pilot countries—Albania, Mozambique, Pakistan, Rwanda and the United Republic of Tanzania—and supported the goal of coherence in country-level policy development and implementation.

The representative said that under its revised policy framework and implementation strategy for reintegration, UNHCR was committed to establishing early, strategic cooperation with key partners and to situating its reintegration interventions in the context of mid- and longer-term development frameworks developed under national leadership. It was also working with other UN entities to address the humanitarian consequences of climate change. It supported the work of the Inter-Agency Standing Committee (IASC) and the High Level Committees on Management and Programmes (HLCP) within the mechanisms established by the Secretary-General and was considering the impact of climate change on human displacement and UNHCR operations. In support of the campaign for the sixtieth anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, its June 2008 annual consultations with NGOs had taken place under the theme of human rights.

Non-United Nations organizations with which UNHCR worked included the International Organization for Migration (IOM), the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) and the International Federation of Red Cross and Red Crescent Societies (IFRC).

On 25 July, the Economic and Social Council took note of the UNHCR oral report (decision 2008/256).

Coordination of emergency humanitarian assistance

In 2008 [A/64/12], UNHCR continued to participate in initiatives to reform the UN system and improve the global humanitarian response capacity, particularly in the area of inter-agency cooperation. It strengthened its strategic partnerships with a wide variety of actors, including governments, the European Commission, UN agencies, international and regional organizations, and the International Red Cross and Red Crescent movement. The Office also bolstered collaboration with NGOs, academic institutions, financial institutions, bilateral donor agencies, corporations, and individuals from the private sector. In the Inter-Agency Standing Committee, UNHCR contributed to formulating policies on humanitarian reform, managing the Central Emergency Response Fund (CERF), and redefining and improving the humanitarian coordinator system. UNHCR was fully engaged in the cluster approach—a humanitarian coordination structure aimed at enhancing the predictability and accountability of humanitarian response—and prioritized its cluster-led responsibilities both at the global and field levels, in the areas of protection, emergency shelter, and camp coordination and management. Significant emphasis was placed on the issue of humanitarian space, and access to beneficiaries in particular.

As bilateral relations with a large number of agencies remained a key feature of implementation of the UNHCR mandate, the Office continued to work closely with WFP to include people of concern in food assistance programmes. In 2008, some 30 countries received WFP food assistance. Other UN system entities that UNHCR collaborated with included the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF), the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), the Joint United Nations Programme on HIV/AIDS (UNAIDS), and the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO). In 2008, one fourth of UNHCR's budget was channelled through 635 NGOs—163 international and 472 national—which remained the Office's largest group of partners.

Evaluation activities

In a July report [A/AC.96/1058], UNHCR described the activities of its Policy Development and Evaluation Service (PDES), which focused on issues and operations that were of particular interest to UNHCR and the Executive Committee. At the same time, the Service made continued efforts to strengthen and integrate the policy development and evaluation functions; ensured the effective dissemination and utilization of evaluation findings and recommendations; and promoted the principles of transparency and accountability within the Office. In that context, the High Commissioner requested PDES to lead UNHCR's involvement in a peer review on accountability to disaster-affected populations.

The other components of the PDES work programme focused on: refugee protection and international migration; the return and reintegration of displaced populations; protection and solutions for persons of concern to UNHCR; humanitarian and United Nations reform; and strengthening the UNHCR policy development and evaluation function.

On refugee protection and international migration, PDES published a study on international protection for trafficked persons and those who feared being trafficked and initiated an evaluation of UNHCR's role in relation to human trafficking. The Service completed a review of State practice in relation to the treatment of unaccompanied and separated children in mixed movements and also planned to evaluate UNHCR's operational role in a number of those movements, focusing initially on the Mediterranean region. Regarding the return and reintegration of displaced populations, PDES continued to work on the reformulation and articulation of UNHCR policy on the issue, in consultation with the Executive Committee. In order to ensure that the policymaking process was empirically well-founded, the Service initiated a series of evaluations of UNHCR return and reintegration programmes, beginning with those in Angola and Southern Sudan. In association with the Division of Operational Support, PDES convened an inter-agency workshop on the use of cash grants in voluntary repatriation programmes. On the protection and solutions for persons of concern to UNHCR, PDES managed an independent evaluation of UNHCR's role in preventing and responding to sexual and gender-based violence in situations of human displacement. PDES also published an analysis of UNHCR's role in the refugee protection regime, focusing on the means and methods that the Office could employ in encouraging States to respect the founding principles of that regime; another PDES study examined the protection of forced migrants in Islamic law. PDES completed an initial study on IDPs in urban areas and was assisting the Division of Protection Services in the finalization of a new UNHCR policy on refugees in urban areas. It also played a central role in the formulation of the High Commissioner's Initiative on Protracted Refugee Situations, and prepared a Standing Committee paper on the issue. On humanitarian and UN reform, PDES completed a stocktaking of UNHCR's engagement with the Delivering as one initiative and was reviewing the role and experience of the Office in integrated UN missions. On strengthening the UNHCR policy development and evaluation function, it continued to represent UNHCR in relation to the United Nations Evaluation Group (UNEG) and the Active Learning Network on Accountability and Performance in Humanitarian Action (ALNAP). The Service also acted as UNHCR's focal point for a number of external or inter-agency evaluation initiatives—an Office of Internal Oversight Services (OIOS) review on strengthening the role of evaluation and the application of evaluation findings to programme design, delivery and policy directives; an OIOS thematic evaluation of lessons-learned protocols and practices in the UN system; and a Swiss Agency for Development and Cooperation (SDC) evaluation of the UNHCR programme for internally displaced persons in Georgia.

Inspections

During 2008 [A/64/12], the UNHCR Inspector General's Office (IGO) carried out 10 standard inspections, two compliance missions, and two ad hoc inquiries. Three scheduled standard inspections had to be postponed to 2009 due to resource limitations. IGO received 274 complaints and opened 113 investigations into alleged misconduct. The number of investigations represented a 3.5 per cent reduction compared with 2007. In the context of UNHCR's own reform process, the High Commissioner requested the Anti-Fraud Office of the European Commission (OLAF) to undertake a periodic independent review of IGO during 2008. The OLAF panel presented its findings and recommendations in November, and a Working Group was established to prepare a road map for implementing the report's recommendations. That implementation had already resulted in improvements in the procedures used by IGO for conducting inspections, investigations and ad hoc inquiries. A report [A/AC.96/1057] on the activities of the Inspector General's Office was transmitted to the UNHCR Executive Committee in July.

OIOS activities. The UN Office of Internal Oversight Services (OIOS), which provided the internal audit function for UNHCR, conducted 16 audits in 2008. In August, OIOS submitted to the UNHCR Executive Committee a report [A/AC.96/1056] on its internal audit of UNHCR for the period from 1 July 2007 to 30 June 2008, which focused on areas such as internal control; programme management, including implementing partners; procurement and asset management; human resources management; travel and transportation; and safety and security. OIOS issued 13 audit reports during the period, including 201 recommendations to improve internal controls, governance processes and organizational efficiency and effectiveness.

Enlargement of Executive Committee

On 25 July, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 2008/255, took note of requests from Djibouti [E/2008/63] and Moldova [E/2008/84] for membership in the UNHCR Executive Committee and recommended that the General Assembly take a decision at its sixty-third (2008) session on the question of enlarging the Committee's membership from 76 to 78 States.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December [meeting 70], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/63/423], adopted resolution 63/146 without vote [agenda item 39].

Enlargement of the Executive Committee of the Programme of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees

The General Assembly,

Taking note of Economic and Social Council decision 2008/255 of 25 July 2008 concerning the enlargement of the Executive Committee of the Programme of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees,

Taking note also of the requests regarding the enlargement of the Executive Committee contained in the letter dated 29 February 2008 from the Permanent Representative of Djibouti to the United Nations addressed to the Secretary-General and the letter dated 30 May 2008 from the Chargé d'affaires a.i. of the Permanent Mission of the Republic of Moldova to the United Nations addressed to the Secretary-General,

1. Decides to increase the number of members of the Executive Committee of the Programme of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees from seventy-six to seventy-eight States;
2. Requests the Economic and Social Council to elect the additional members at its resumed organizational session for 2009.

Financial and administrative questions

The Executive Committee set the UNHCR initial annual programme budget for 2008 at $919.2 million [A/AC.96/1055]. Total income for 2008 amounted to $1,755 million, comprising $1,070.8 million in contributions, transfers and miscellaneous income (including currency exchange gains) towards the annual programme budget and $565.6 million towards supplementary programmes, $19.6 million for the Junior Professional Officer (JPO) programme and $33.9 million from the regular UN budget. Expenditures totalled $1,628 million, of which Africa accounted for $650.0 million; the Middle East and North Africa $268.7 million; Europe $124.4 million; Asia and the Pacific $221.8 million; and the Americas $47.5 million.

In an October decision [A/63/12/Add.1], the Executive Committee approved the revised annual programme budget for 2008, amounting to $1,163.2 million, which, with the provisions for JPOS of $10 million and $577.2 million for supplementary programmes, brought total requirements in 2008 to $1,750.4 million. The Committee authorized the High Commissioner, within those total appropriations, to effect adjustments in regional programmes, global programmes and headquarters budgets.

The Committee approved $1,265.5 million for the 2009 annual programme budget, which included the UN regular budget contribution, an operational reserve of $108.2 million, or 10 per cent of programme activities, $75 million for new or additional mandate-related activities, and $63.5 million for the global needs assessment identified by UNHCR in eight pilot countries. Those provisions, together with $10 million for JPOS, brought total requirements in 2009 to $1,275.5 million. The Committee authorized the High Commissioner, within those total appropriations, to effect adjustments in regional programmes, global programmes and headquarters budgets. The Committee requested the High Commissioner, within the resources available, to respond flexibly and efficiently to the needs indicated for the 2008–2009 biennial programme budget. The Committee authorized the High Commissioner, in case of additional new emergency needs that could not be fully met from the operational reserve, to create supplementary programmes and issue special appeals.

Accounts (2007)

The audited financial statements of voluntary funds administered by UNHCR for the year ending 31 December 2007 [A/63/5/Add.5] showed a total expenditure of $1,345.8 million and total available funds of $300.8 million, with a reserve balance of $178.1 million.

The UN Board of Auditors coordinated with the Office of Internal Oversight Services in the planning of the UNHCR audit in order to avoid duplication of efforts. It also reviewed the internal audit coverage of the operations of UNHCR so as to assess the extent to which reliance could be placed on its work. With regard to the follow-up on previous recommendations, as requested by the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) and in accordance with General Assembly resolution 59/264 [YUN 2004, p. 1398], the Board evaluated previous recommendations that had not yet been fully implemented and indicated the financial periods in which such recommendations were first made.

It reported on the overall financial overview for the year ended 31 December 2007, in which the total income amounted to $1,333 million, compared with $1,151 million for the previous year, which represented a 15.8 per cent increase. Total expenditure amounted to $1,352 million, which, compared with $1,104 million for the previous year, was a 22.4 per cent increase. The result was a $19 million shortfall of income over expenditure, compared with a $47 million surplus of income over expenditure in 2006. After prior-period adjustments were taken into account, the gross deficit of $19 million increased to a net deficit of $382 million. The deficit did not result from a sudden deterioration in the financial situation of UNHCR, but rather from the disclosure for the first time of accrued end-of-service and post-retirement liabilities, notably those for after-service health insurance benefits. Previously, those liabilities were only indicated in notes to the financial statements. Funding for the liabilities had not yet been decided upon by the General Assembly. The current expenditure reduction trend observed in 2006 did not continue in 2007. UNHCR expenditures increased by 22.4 per cent, while income rose by 15.8 per cent. On the other hand, the deficit resulting from the provision for end-of-service and post-retirement liabilities without appropriate funding resulted in a negative balance of $178 million in funds and reserves as at 31 December 2007.

There was progress towards implementation of the International Public Sector Accounting Standards (IPSAS) in a plan which UNHCR had prepared. The plan was adopted in June and the key players in charge were appointed. The total cost for the implementation of IPSAS was estimated at $3.2 million for the period 2007–2009, but that amount needed to be reviewed. The Board found that certain current accounts remained inactive without being closed, and discovered accounting errors in the petty cash accounts. The Board also discovered that the total amount of accrued liabilities for after-service health insurance benefits, estimated by actuarial valuation, amounted to $308 million as at 31 December 2007, out of a total $374.1 million in liabilities for all the end-of-service benefits. It had validated the after-service health insurance liabilities reported in the financial statements.

UNHCR pursued its efforts to clean up its non-expendable property database, as recommended by the Board in previous reports. However, the total value of non-expendable property as at 31 December 2007, as calculated by the Board, was different from the value disclosed in note 15 to the financial statements, illustrating that the clean-up of the database had not been completed. UNHCR made progress compared with previous years in receiving monitoring subproject reports from its implementing partners, as well as audit certificates. As at 25 June 2008, 352 audit certificates were received, representing $150.5 million, or 49 per cent of the total due. In June 2007, only 22 audit certificates were received from project independent auditors, totalling $9.9 million, or 3.3 per cent of 2006 expenditure. The Board made several recommendations based on its audit.

UNHCR, in a September report [A/AC.96/1054 & Add.1] described measures taken or proposed in response to the Board's recommendations.

ACABQ, in October [A/63/474], concurred with the Board that any outstanding inter-fund balances should be resolved expeditiously. It noted that while the Board's comments indicated an overall improvement in the United Nations Office for Project Services (UNOPS) operations, further measures were required. ACABQ stressed the importance of continued review by the Board, particularly in respect of the recent partial merger of UNOPS with the Inter-Agency Procurement Services Office. It further noted that it was essential for all organizations to develop comprehensive funding strategies and principles to guide their fundraising policies in order to support the objectives set by their governing bodies, and that it shared the Board's views that UN system organizations should develop effective funding strategies and diversify funding sources. On the implementation of IPSAS, it recommended that the General Assembly keep the matter of consolidation of the UN financial statements under review as the Organizations moved towards migration to IPSAS.

The Executive Committee, in an October decision [A/63/12/Add.1], requested that it be kept regularly informed on the measures taken to address the recommendations and the observations raised by the Board of Auditors and ACABQ.

Management and administrative change

Lump-sum arrangement

Report of Secretary-General. Under paragraph 23.20, Sect. 23, of the proposed programme budget for the 2002–2003 biennium [YUN 2001, p. 1296], UNHCR was to review, after three bienniums, the lump-sum arrangement which began in the biennium 2002–2003 to fund a portion of the Office's management- and administration-related costs under the UN regular budget. In compliance with that provision, the Secretary-General in November submitted a report [A/63/537] on the review of the UNHCR lump-sum arrangement. The report reviewed the budgetary process prior to the lump-sum arrangement, lump-sum grant arrangement, and the proposed retention of the lump-sum grant arrangement. The Secretary-General concluded that the arrangement to provide a lump sum from the UN regular budget to UNHCR had streamlined the budgetary presentation and simplified the work of the Office by eliminating the need for separate administrative procedures in respect of the management and administration posts funded under the UN regular budget. Recommending that the arrangement be maintained, the Secretary-General requested that the General Assembly take note of the report and endorse the maintenance of the arrangement in future budget presentation of the proposed programme budget.

In December [A/63/616], ACABQ endorsed the Secretary-General's recommendations.

General Assembly action. On 24 December, by section VII of resolution 63/263 (see p. 1547), the General Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's report and endorsed the recommendations of ACABQ.

Standing Committee

The UNHCR Standing Committee held three meetings in 2008 (4–6 March [A/AC.96/1052 & Corr.1]; 24–26 June [A/AC.96/1060]; and 23–24 September [A/AC.96/1061]). It considered issues relating to UNHCR programme budgets and funding; international protection; regional activities and global programmes; programme/protection policy; coordination; management, financial control, administrative oversight and human resources; governance; and consultations.

In October [A/63/12/Add.1], the Executive Committee called upon its members to ensure that debate at the Executive Committee and its Standing Committee be of a substantive and interactive nature, yielding practical guidance and clear advice to the High Commissioner, in keeping with the Committee's statutory functions; and called on UNHCR to be explicit and analytical in its reports and presentations to the Committee and to submit documentation in a timely manner. It also called on UNHCR to consult with the Committee with regard to ongoing reform measures and the consequent structural and management changes within the organization, including the proposed new budget structure, through informal consultative meetings as well as at Standing Committee meetings. It requested the Standing Committee to report on its work in 2009. The Executive Committee approved applications by six Government delegations to participate as observers in Standing Committee meetings, as well as a list of intergovernmental and international organizations to be invited to participate as observers in relevant meetings of its Standing Committee from October 2008 to October 2009. It adopted the provisional agenda for its sixtieth session.

Staff safety

At the June meeting of the Standing Committee [A/AC.96/1060], the Deputy Director of the UNHCR Division of Operational Services presented an update on staff safety and security issues [EC/59/SC/CRP.17], which described efforts to implement the recommendations of the UNHCR Security Policy and Policy Implementation Review, as well as new initiatives in support of the security of beneficiaries and other security-related activities. He noted that over 40 per cent of UNHCR staff worked in high-risk security environments and that since 2004 additional resources had been allocated to security-related activities. UNHCR was working closely with other UN departments and agencies to ensure adequate coordination of security management. The Office welcomed a stronger inter-agency security mechanism, but cautioned that the UN security management system needed to give more consideration to the specific organizational and mandate-related concerns of UNHCR, notably the physical protection of people of concern. The Deputy Director also informed the meeting of the global assessment on vulnerability to explosions that had been carried out following the bombing of the UN premises in Algiers in December 2007 [YUN 2007, p. 61]. Delegations welcomed UNHCR's efforts to increase security for staff and people of concern, notably in respect of Minimum Operating Security Standards compliance and the inclusion of partners in security training. They also took note of the corresponding increase in costs and the need for additional support. UNHCR confirmed that great importance was placed on working on security with non-UN partners through information-sharing and joint training. Although it was often difficult to quantify requirements to mitigate constantly evolving risks and manage security standards, the Office was in the process of calculating current and additional costs, which would be shared with the Committee. In that context, a renewed focus on local risk assessments was needed.

Refugee protection and assistance

Protection issues

In his annual report covering 2008 [A/64/12], the High Commissioner said that the provision of protection and humanitarian assistance to refugees, stateless persons and IDPs had become increasingly challenging. He noted that forced population displacement had grown in size and complexity. Major challenges included the reduction of humanitarian space, restrictions on access for humanitarian workers, more emphasis by States on sovereignty, increasing urbanization, extreme poverty and poor governance. In addition, environmental factors such as climate change, drought, and declining resources and inequitable access to them, were having a greater impact on displacement than ever before. Finding durable solutions for assisting the estimated 5.7 million refugees who had been living in exile for more than five years remained a serious concern for the Office. At the end of 2008, there were 34.4 million people of concern to UNHCR, including some 10.5 million refugees. The numbers of people displaced in their own country as a result of conflicts remained high at an estimated 26 million, with 14.4 million of them benefiting from UNHCR protection and assistance activities. The latter constituted an increase of more than 600,000 compared to the previous year (13.7 million) and that was the highest figure ever recorded by UNHCR. By the end of the year, developing countries were hosting 8.4 million refugees, or 80 per cent of the global refugee population. Pakistan again topped the list, hosting nearly 1.8 million, most of whom were refugees from Afghanistan. Afghan and Iraqi refugees accounted for almost half of the refugee population under UNHCR's responsibility. During 2008, at least 839,000 applications for asylum or refugee status were submitted to Governments or UNHCR offices in 154 countries. UNHCR made operational the concept of an evacuation transit facility to provide a temporary safe haven for refugees, pending final resettlement to a third country. The first evacuation facility opened in Romania in 2008 and further initiatives in other regions of the world were being explored.

With regard to refugee protection in the context of international migration, UNHCR received credible accounts of hundreds of Eritreans being detained and deported, despite repeated appeals to the authorities to refrain from forcible return. The Office was often denied access to detention centres to determine international protection needs, despite States' obligations to extend cooperation under the 1951 Convention relating to the Status of Refugees [YUN 1951, p. 520]. On a positive note, the hospitality extended by major refugee-hosting countries in the Middle East, notably Jordan and the Syrian Arab Republic, to large numbers of Iraqi refugees in addition to hundreds of thousands of Palestinian refugees, was noteworthy. Yemen had also been a positive example, generously granting prima facie refugee recognition to Somalis fleeing hostilities in their country.

The second meeting of the High Commissioner's Dialogue on Protection Challenges (Geneva, 10–11 December), attended by 135 delegations representing some 90 States and more than 50 national, international, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, focused on protracted refugee situations and the need for durable solutions. Participants examined various approaches aimed at finding solutions for the 6 million refugees in some 30 different situations worldwide who had been in exile for at least five years—many of them for decades—and examined the challenges and opportunities for refugees and other stakeholders in camps, rural and urban contexts. In particular, the Dialogue examined instruments that could unlock protracted refugee situations: those included providing resettlement places; ensuring that voluntary repatriation and reintegration were sustainable; supporting self-reliance activities; and fostering local integration. Participants emphasized the importance of providing education and training as ways of building self-reliance. However, repatriation remained the preferred solution whenever feasible.

In October [A/63/12/Add.1], the Executive Committee encouraged States to prevent and reduce statelessness by adopting and implementing safeguards in nationality laws and policies, consistent with fundamental principles of international law, and by facilitating birth registration as a means of providing an identity. The Committee stressed the importance of safeguarding the right of every child to acquire a nationality, particularly where the child might otherwise be stateless. States should consider facilitating the naturalization of habitually and lawfully residing stateless persons in accordance with national legislation. It also requested UNHCR to continue to provide technical advice and operational support to States.

In March [A/AC.96/1052], the Director of the International Protection Services briefed the Standing Committee on the first meeting of the High Commissioner's Dialogue on Protection Challenges [YUN 2007, p. 1243], which focused on refugee protection, durable solutions and international migration.

In a June note on international protection [A/AC.96/1053], the High Commissioner examined developments from mid-2007 to mid-2008 and outlined protection measures taken to address them, including the right to seek asylum; the legal framework established by the 1951 Convention relating to the Status of Refugees [YUN 1951, p. 520] and its 1967 Protocol [YUN 1967, p. 477]; the right to enjoy asylum; the right to a nationality; the rights of internally displaced persons; and durable solutions. The note showed how the Universal Declaration of Human Rights provided the underlying framework supporting persons of concern to secure non-discriminatory enjoyment of their rights, including the rights to seek and enjoy asylum, to a nationality, and to return to one's country. It also highlighted examples of how UNHCR and its partners used international human rights and refugee law in complementary ways to support States in securing the rights of persons of concern, including by using a rights-based approach; by drawing on international human rights law standards in legal interventions; and by using the human rights machinery to reinforce initiatives. In bringing out the linkages between international refugee law and international human rights law, the note pointed towards the value of developing that interface in mutually reinforcing ways. Mainstreaming human rights throughout the UN system, including UNHCR, and strengthening cooperation among UN bodies, including the Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights, could only reinforce the protection of persons of concern. Likewise, the integration of issues relevant to persons of concern into the work of the human rights mechanisms, including the Universal Periodic Review, affirmed the applicability of that framework to the subject of protection.

In October [A/63/12/Add.1], the UNHCR Executive Committee adopted conclusions on: general international protection; age, gender and diversity mainstreaming approach; refugees and others of concern with disabilities; protracted refugee situations; resettlement; internal displacement; and statelessness. It welcomed UNHCR's initiative to commence a review of achievements under the Agenda for Protection, to identify outstanding challenges and assist States to devise national plans of action in consultation with relevant stakeholders and actors so as to enhance the international protection of refugees and others of concern.

International instruments

In 2008, the numbers of parties to the 1951 Convention relating to the Status of Refugees [YUN 1951, p. 520] and its 1967 Protocol [YUN 1967, p. 477] remained at 144, while the number of State parties to one or both instruments increased to 149. The number of States parties to the 1954 Convention relating to the Status of Stateless Persons [YUN 1954, p. 416] increased to 63. With the accession of Finland, the number of States parties to the 1961 Convention on the Reduction of Statelessness [YUN 1961, p. 533] increased to 35.

In October, the UNHCR Executive Committee welcomed the entry into force of the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities and its Optional Protocol [YUN 2006, p. 785]; and, for State parties, the Committee underlined that refugees and others of concern to UNHCR with disabilities were entitled on the same basis as others to the full enjoyment of the rights and standards set forth in those instruments.

Assistance measures

The global population of concern to UNHCR increased to 34.4 million in 2008 from 31.7 million in 2007. The number of IDPs receiving UNHCR assistance rose from 13.7 million in 2007 to 14.4 million in 2008 due to the outbreak, renewal and prolongation of armed conflicts in many regions of the world such as Afghanistan and Pakistan, ongoing conflict in the Darfur region of the Sudan and in Colombia, and violence in Georgia, Somalia and the DRC, which continued to generate forced movements within and across borders. Improvements in the security situation in Iraq brought tempered optimism, but conditions were not yet sufficiently stable to envisage voluntary return and the sustainable reintegration of the displaced. The number of identified stateless people stood at almost 6.6 million; however, the actual number of stateless people worldwide was estimated to be closer to 12 million. During 2008, over 839,000 individual applications for asylum or refugee status were submitted to Governments or UNHCR offices in 154 countries, which constituted a 28 per cent increase compared to the previous year (635,800).

Situations of concern included the escalating conflict and the deliberate targeting of aid workers in Afghanistan, which limited access by humanitarian organizations to approximately half of the country, as well as the plight of some 2.7 million Afghans who remained in exile in Iran and Pakistan, deterred from returning by the ongoing violence. While the overall security situation improved in Iraq at the beginning of the year, some 1.6 million Iraqis remained in exile in Jordan and the Syrian Arab Republic and some 2.6 million Iraqis remained displaced within the country. In the Sudan's Darfur region, some 2.7 million people remained internally displaced. In the Central African Republic, some 25,000 refugees were forced to flee to Chad and Cameroon during 2008, bringing the total number of refugees from the Central African Republic in those two countries to almost 124,000. Hostilities in the DRC, particularly in the eastern provinces, aggravated the humanitarian situation there and provoked renewed displacement. The estimated 1.4 million IDPs in the country were often subject to armed attacks, sexual and gender-based violence (SGBV), and the recruitment, including of children, by armed groups. In Somalia, where UNHCR coordinated protection and shelter activities for 1.3 million displaced people, the security situation remained volatile. In Colombia, an estimated 3 million people were internally displaced, with nearly 300,000 in a refugee-like situation in neighbouring countries. In Georgia, out of the more than 130,000 people who fled the South Ossetia conflict in August, some 14,000 were still displaced.

The main countries which saw voluntary repatriation in 2008 included Afghanistan (278,500), Angola (13,100), Burundi (95,400), the DRC (54,000), Iraq (25,600) and the Sudan (90,100). An estimated 1.3 million IDPs protected/assisted by UNHCR returned to their places of origin, including some 700,000 within Uganda and 350,000 inside Kenya. More than 600,000 refugees were also able to return to their homes. UNHCR provided cash and transport assistance for Sierra Leonean refugees who wished to be repatriated. Furthermore, UNHCR's repatriation operation for Burundian refugees living in the United Republic of Tanzania, which began in 2002, reached the 300,000 mark in March. More than 30,000 refugees from old settlements established after the 1972 influx were included in the return figures for 2008. The repatriation movements included 14,000 Mauritanian refugees who repatriated with UNHCR's assistance, and nearly 11,000 Liberian refugees, mainly from Ghana. More than 121,000 resettlement submissions and 65,800 departures in 2008 represented a 22 per cent and 32 per cent increase, respectively, compared to 2007. In Asia, the naturalization of around 3,000 former Cambodian refugees in Viet Nam also represented progress. In Latin America, the "Cities of Solidarity" and "Borders of Solidarity" programmes through the Mexico Plan of Action [YUN 2004, p. 1210] aimed to facilitate self-sufficiency and local integration. In Asia, more than 16,000 refugees from Myanmar left Thailand and over 13,000 Bhutanese left Nepal in major resettlement efforts.

Refugees and the environment

During the year, UNHCR continued to implement its environmental policy and activities, based on the four principles outlined in the 2005 revision [YUN 2005, p. 1310] of its Environmental Guidelines: prevention, integrated approach, cost-effectiveness and local participation. That was in line with the Office's broader objective to defend the institution of asylum, as widespread damage to the environment or depletion of natural resources could be a source of conflict and affect States' willingness to provide asylum. The Office continued to work together with other agencies concerned with environmental management, particularly in the context of cluster arrangements, Delivering as one [YUN 2006, p. 1060], and other coordination mechanisms to promote the sustainable conservation and rehabilitation of areas affected by the presence of displaced populations.

Refugees and HIV/AIDS

During 2008, in accordance with its HIV/AIDS Strategic Plan 2008–2009, UNHCR continued to combat HIV/AIDS among refugees and other persons of concern and ensure that the basic rights of those affected by HIV/AIDS were respected. Close collaboration with the World Health Organization (WHO) Department for Mental Health and Substance Abuse enabled the Office to undertake rapid assessments and programmatic interventions on alcohol and substance abuse and their linkages to HIV transmission and prevention, as well as other health and social issues, among refugees and IDPs in selected countries in Africa and Asia. In the Asian region, UNHCR worked closely with the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime (UNODC) on HIV transmission among injection drug users, refugees and returnees. In partnership with the United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA), UNHCR worked more comprehensively on HIV and sex work in eastern Africa and eastern Europe. That was carried out through a series of capacity-building workshops and programmatic reviews of the extent of access for sex workers and their families and clients to HIV protection, prevention, care and treatment. UNHCR continued to work closely with the UNAIDS co-sponsors and secretariat, as well as with other UN agencies, on all HIV policies and programmes related to HIV and conflict and displacement. Under the UNAIDS Inter-Agency Task Team for Young People, UNHCR helped develop a global guidance brief on HIV and young people in humanitarian emergency settings.

Significant improvements were made to the quality of public health programmes by involving local authorities and people of concern. To make those programmes sustainable, the Office focused on capacity development at the national level and among the populations concerned. UNHCR and its operational partners carried out training programmes in primary health care, including reproductive and child health. UNHCR strove to ensure universal access to HIV prevention, care, treatment and support programmes. By the end of 2008, more than 90 per cent of UNHCR's refugee operations had access to culturally and linguistically appropriate education and information on HIV/AIDS. The Office focused on developing prevention materials targeting young people and reducing discrimination against those with the disease. It continued to advocate for the inclusion of refugees and IDPs in national HIV plans and policies. At the end of 2008, refugees had equal access to antiretroviral treatment where it was available to surrounding host communities in 85 per cent of UNHCR operations. The Office also expanded its programmes in Africa to prevent mother-to-child transmission.

Refugee women

In 2008, UNHCR completed the introduction of the age, gender and diversity mainstreaming (AGDM) strategy to all operations and developed the AGDM Action Plan. The Plan established responsibility for supporting field operations in implementing the AGDM strategy across the organization in a corporate manner.

During the year, the Office undertook an analysis of the AGDM Accountability Framework, which provided field operations with a mechanism to measure progress in implementing policies specifically related to the protection of women and children, as well as a community-based approach to operations management. The Framework placed accountability on senior management and aimed to identify gaps in compliance with relevant policies and standards. The analysis revealed that progress in compliance varied by region. Operations in Africa reported the highest rates of compliance with SGBV prevention, response actions, and AGDM activities. Operations in Asia reported the highest levels of compliance on activities targeting the enhanced protection of children, women and girls. The analysis also revealed constraints related to staffing, socio-cultural obstacles and the engagement of partners. In 2008, the Framework was expanded to countries in Europe, North America and Asia, where the main focus of UNHCR's work was advocacy. Gender equality was addressed from the perspectives of both leadership and livelihoods. Women were encouraged to participate in camp committees and food and non-food item distribution. They were also assisted in organizing women's groups and in communicating with UNHCR, as well as other organizations and relevant authorities. In some operations, displaced women's groups established contacts with local women's organizations that supported their work and, at times, their local integration. In all operations, UNHCR continued to strive to reach the targets for the participation of refugee women in refugee management and leadership committees. UNHCR was committed to women's economic self-reliance and promoted livelihood strategies that included gender analysis and design. That also included targeting training and vocational capacity-building to the specific needs of women and men. To that end, an important initiative was the Women Leading for Livelihoods project, aimed at the economic self-sufficiency of displaced women through a range of activities focusing on computer literacy, language and vocational training, innovative farming and market access, micro-credit and small business centres. At the beginning of 2008, the UNHCR Handbook for the Protection of Women and Girls was published and distributed widely within and outside the Office.

Refugee children

In 2008, UNHCR continued to emphasize education, nutrition and protection from violence in addressing the needs of refugee children. It started drafting guidelines on effective child protection systems in accordance with the 2007 Executive Committee conclusion on children at risk [YUN 2007, p. 1234], which called for children's non-discriminatory access to such systems. It also recommended improvements in identifying children at risk and the mechanisms for monitoring, reporting and referral; strengthening strategic partnerships; and giving greater attention to prevention, family support and early intervention. Testing of the approach began in five operations in late 2008.

In May, UNHCR finalized its Guidelines on Determining the Best Interests of the Child, which recommended that a best interest determination (BID) be conducted under strict procedural safeguards for particularly important decisions affecting a child, such as durable solutions for unaccompanied and separated children; temporary care arrangements for unaccompanied or separated children in exceptional situations; and the involuntary separation of a child from his or her parents.

In 2008, UNHCR also reviewed minimum standards for education in emergencies, chronic crises and early recovery, and aligned its Education Field Guidelines with other policies and standards. A comprehensive report analysing UNHCR's progress in education highlighted that 67 per cent of refugee children aged 6–17 were enrolled in primary and secondary schooling.

Regional activities

Africa

In 2008, persons of concern to UNHCR in Africa, excluding North Africa, decreased from 10.5 million in 2007 to 10.2 million. The total comprised some 2.1 million refugees, 6.3 million IDPs, 305,620 asylum-seekers, and 1.3 million returned refugees and IDPs and others of concern.

Report of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 62/125 [YUN 2007 p. 1250], the Secretary-General submitted an August report [A/63/321] on assistance to refugees, returnees and displaced persons in Africa, covering 2007 and the first half of 2008. He stated that displacement by armed conflict and other situations of violence in Africa increased during 2007, with the total number of uprooted people growing by approximately 1 million. At the end of 2007, the total population of concern to the Office stood at 15.2 million, with IDPs outnumbering refugees by a wide margin. The estimated 12.7 million IDPs in Africa made up almost half the worldwide total. African nations hosted 2.3 million refugees in 2007, continuing the trend of decreasing numbers observed since 2001. Underlying those broad trends were both the significant progress made in achieving durable solutions and the impact of several new population movements across the continent. More than 2 million displaced people found solutions to their plight. In 2007, an estimated 300,000 refugees and 1.7 million IDPs made the decisive step of returning home, often after years of exile. Significant progress was made in the local integration of residual refugee groups in Central, Southern and West Africa. For some 19,000 refugees across the continent, third-country resettlement provided the most appropriate long-term solution. At the same time, conflict in the north of the Central African Republic, Chad, North Kivu Province of the DRC, Somalia and the Darfur region of the Sudan caused new displacement within and across international borders and exacerbated already dire humanitarian situations. Providing assistance and protection was challenging and frequently dangerous, yet vital for millions of people fleeing insecurity, political unrest and persecution. African countries continued to require the bulk of international funding for humanitarian emergencies and operations. Between January 2007 and July 2008, humanitarian activities in Africa identified in 36 inter-agency appeals of the United Nations and its partners received over $5.5 billion. The Central Emergency Response Fund (CERF) contributed to ensuring a more predictable response to emergencies, including grants for Africa of over $398 million against global disbursements of $613 million. In addition, several donors continued to pool humanitarian resources for the Sudan and the DRC, giving the humanitarian coordinators in those countries a strategic funding mechanism to ensure early support for critical activities. UN entities and NGOs received significant funding through emergency response funds in the Central African Republic, the DRC, Somalia, the Sudan and Zimbabwe. The report also described humanitarian response and inter-agency cooperation in the context of UN reform, promotion of international protection principles, ending forced displacement, delivery of assistance and special needs and partnerships with non-UN entities.

East Africa and the Horn of Africa were hit hard by conflict and natural disasters, particularly Ethiopia, Kenya, Somalia and the Sudan, which resulted in additional population displacements. Overall, the number of refugees in that region increased by 15 per cent in 2007 despite improvements in Southern Sudan that allowed a significant number of refugees and IDPs to return to their places of origin. The Sudan was the site of the largest humanitarian operation in Africa. That situation included handling the biggest IDP crisis, with 5.8 million persons affected, as well as the largest refugee repatriation operations. The Sudan was also the largest refugee-producing country on the continent in 2007, with its refugees numbering some 523,000. Darfur remained in a state of humanitarian emergency as a result of unabated violence and deteriorating security. New displacement occurred within Darfur and into neighbouring Chad and the Central African Republic. In Somalia, the continued conflict in south and central Somalia caused the massive displacement of populations. During the reporting period, the IDP population rose from 450,000 to approximately 1.1 million people. Clashes in the Ogaden region, coupled with drought, floods and food insecurity in southern Ethiopia, triggered the internal displacement of thousands of Ethiopians. There were some 200,000 conflict-induced IDPs, living mainly in Somali, Oromiya, Gambella and Tigray regional states. In Kenya, post-election violence that erupted in late 2007 led to the displacement of between 350,000 and 500,000 people to camps and host communities, especially in the Rift Valley. In addition, some 12,000 Kenyans sought refuge in Uganda. In Uganda, Southern Sudanese refugees showed strong interest in returning home, and between January and June 2008, some 41,000 Sudanese were assisted to repatriate. The consolidation of security, the lifting of restrictions on freedom of movement and ongoing development efforts in northern Uganda allowed over 1.1 million IDPs to begin returning and re-establishing their livelihoods.

In Central Africa and the Great Lakes region, deteriorating security in parts of the Central African Republic, Chad and the DRC caused more suffering and displacements. On a positive note, progress in achieving durable solutions for refugees in the camps in the north-west of the United Republic of Tanzania had led to a decrease in the refugee population from 285,000 to 160,000 in the previous 18 months, as well as to the closure of seven camps. In Burundi, while clashes between Government forces and rebel groups continued in the north-west, at times limiting humanitarian access, the recent return of the leader of the Forces nationales de libération (FNL) and the start of the cantonment process of FNL troops gave hope for further stabilization of the country. Refugees continued to repatriate to Burundi, almost exclusively from the United Republic of Tanzania. Since January 2007, almost 80,000 refugees had returned home. In the Central African Republic, fighting between Government forces and irregular armed groups, combined with widespread banditry, severely affected civilians in the north of the country and the number of IDPs rose to 197,000. Tens of thousands of civilians also sought asylum in neighbouring Chad, Cameroon and the Sudan. The total number of refugees from the Central African Republic stood at 104,000. The situation in eastern Chad worsened markedly along the volatile border with Darfur, where cross-border movements of armed groups, militia clashes, acts of banditry and general impunity affected the safety and security of 250,000 refugees from Darfur, 186,000 Chadian IDPs and the host communities. In the DRC, fighting continued in eastern parts of the country, particularly in North Kivu and certain parts of South

Kivu. Insecurity caused the internal displacement of about half a million people in 2007. Congolese IDPs totalled 1.3 million. In total, some 158,700 Congolese refugees had returned home since the repatriation operation started in 2004.

In Southern Africa, repatriation efforts were completed for Angolan refugees and launched for Congolese refugees in Zambia, contributing to the achievement of durable solutions and reducing the number of refugees in the subregion. Another encouraging trend was the growing willingness of Governments to consider the possibility of local integration for remaining refugee groups. Zimbabwe slipped deeper into turmoil as the human rights situation worsened in the aftermath of the March 2008 presidential and parliamentary elections. Politically motivated violence resulted in significant new internal displacement, adding to the victims of forced evictions and displacing farm workers—who constituted the majority of those previously displaced. In May, South Africa was hit by a wave of unprecedented xenophobic violence targeting Zimbabweans and other foreign nationals, resulting in some 60 deaths and displacing up to 100,000 people. About 25,000 displaced foreign nationals were accommodated at temporary sites where they received physical protection and assistance. By the end of June, the number of people in those sites had decreased by almost half.

West Africa remained relatively stable in 2007, with the consolidation of peace and strengthening of constitutional order in previously war-ravaged countries such as Liberia and Sierra Leone. In 2007, West Africa had 175,000 refugees—30 per cent fewer compared to 2006—owing to successful voluntary repatriation operations and positive achievements in terms of resettlement to third countries. By the end of the assisted repatriation operation in June 2007, over 158,000 refugees had returned to Liberia. In 2008, repatriation continued on a case-by-case basis. In Côte d'Ivoire, the signing of the Ouagadougou Peace Agreement in March 2007 between the Government and the Forces nouvelles improved prospects for stability and the return of refugees and an estimated 700,000 IDPs. By the end of May 2008, some 61,000 IDPs had returned to their areas of origin, mainly in western and central Côte d'Ivoire.

The Secretary-General said that while certain post-conflict situations had stabilized, millions more Africans were still forcibly displaced. He concluded that African States, which remained the primary bearers of the responsibility to protect and assist victims of forced displacement, should redouble their efforts to develop and implement strategies for durable solutions, including by expanding opportunities for local integration for refugees. In addition, States, the AU, subregional organizations and the international community should enhance their collaboration and interventions to ensure that peace would be sustainable in countries emerging from conflict. The recovery process and bridging the gap between humanitarian relief and longer-term development continued to be real and problematic challenges to that goal. He noted that, in particular, the international donor community must abide by its commitment to increase its post-conflict and development aid to Africa. It was recommended that the AU conclude the draft convention for the protection and assistance of internally displaced persons in Africa. Once adopted, that convention would be a groundbreaking achievement as the first international treaty focusing on IDPs. The Secretary-General said that humanitarian workers were at times faced with grave security problems and limited access to displaced populations. States and other parties to conflicts must ensure safe, timely and unhindered access to displaced populations. Troop-contributing countries and donors must provide the necessary resources and capacities to peacekeeping operations that were mandated to protect civilians, including displaced people.

Subregional developments

UNHCR report. According to the UNHCR Global Report 2008, UNHCR helped more than 150,000 refugees in Central Africa and the Great Lakes region find a durable solution through voluntary repatriation and reintegration in their home countries, including 40,000 refugees who repatriated to the DRC, 95,000 to Burundi and some 8,600 to Rwanda. The Office strengthened its resettlement capacity and almost 2,400 refugees departed for third countries. UNHCR provided international protection and material assistance to some 676,000 refugees, of whom 68,300 Congolese were in camps in Burundi, Rwanda and the United Republic of Tanzania. UNHCR also protected and assisted 2,700 Burundians in Rwanda, 112,000 Angolans in the DRC, more than 8,500 refugees from Chad, Sudan and the DRC in the Central African Republic and some 81,000 refugees in Cameroon, of whom almost 63,000 were from the Central African Republic. The Office led the efforts of the protection cluster to improve the safety and security of IDPs in the Central African Republic and the DRC. Among other challenges, refugees in the Central African Republic did not live in camps but were scattered across more than 70 settlements along the border. Their mobility and dispersion over a vast swathe of territory, in addition to bad road conditions, hindered humanitarian access. Access to IDPs in the country remained a challenge given the lack of security in some areas.

In East Africa and the Horn of Africa, continuing conflicts in Somalia in 2008 prompted large-scale displacements. More than 70,000 Somali refugees sought asylum in neighbouring countries, with more than 60,000 entering Kenya. In Somalia, the deteriorating security situation and the shrinking humanitarian space compelled most aid agencies, including UNHCR, to withdraw staff from the central and southern parts of the country. The Head of UNHCR's Mogadishu office was abducted in June and was released in late August. UNHCR could not implement planned activities in Somalia due to insecurity in the country. In December, Ethiopian forces ended their two-year intervention in Somalia. The decommissioning of the United Nations Mission in Ethiopia and Eritrea and the termination of the mandate of the Boundary Commission heightened tensions between Ethiopia and Eritrea. Nevertheless, UNHCR carried out participatory assessments in all refugee and IDP sites. The absence of a peace accord between the Lord's Resistance Army and the Government of Uganda had a negative impact on UNHCR activities. The protracted nature of the refugee situation in Uganda was exacerbated by the lack of a comprehensive policy on local integration. UNHCR advocated that acceptable standards of treatment for all refugees be maintained and that newly enacted refugee legislation be implemented in Kenya. The Office registered all newly arrived refugees in Kenya in three camps in Dadaab, including some 20,000 who arrived before 2008. The successful repatriation to Southern Sudan from Ethiopia led to the closure of two camps hosting Sudanese refugees from Bonga and Dimma in the Gambella region of Ethiopia, and to the dramatic downsizing of the Sherkole camp in Benshangul-Gumuz. However, the ongoing influx from Eritrea and Somalia required the opening of two new camps in Mayani and Shedar, respectively. In Eritrea, UNHCR continued to face restrictions in movement which affected its ability to monitor the condition of deportees. The protection environment in Djibouti continued to be challenging throughout 2008. More than 19,000 refugees, about half of them from Ethiopia, were referred for resettlement from the region.

In West Africa, UNHCR's Regional Office in Dakar protected and assisted some 65,500 refugees and nearly 5,000 asylum-seekers in the Gambia, Guinea-Bissau, Mali and Senegal. The agreement reached between Senegal and Mauritania in 2007 allowed the repatriation of some 7,000 Mauritanian refugees from Senegal in 2008. A re-profiling exercise boosted the number of candidates for return among refugees in Senegal and Mali from some 25,000 to 35,000. The Dakar Office conducted a verification exercise for Sierra Leonean refugees in preparation for invocation of the cessation clause. Some 1,900 refugees applied for local integration and would be assisted in 2009 with documentation and livelihood support. The Office in Benin coordinated activities for Benin, Burkina Faso, Niger and Togo until the end of 2008. Some 4,650

Togolese refugees were repatriated, more than 4,250 of them from Ghana. In Nigeria, the UNHCR Office assisted more than 10,100 refugees and some 1,200 asylum-seekers. Some 300 Liberian refugees and 70 Sierra Leonean refugees were repatriated in 2008. However, the challenging socio-economic situation in the region was restricting progress in the areas of local integration and livelihood. High expectations of resettlement led some 800 Sierra Leonean refugees in the Gambia, Guinea-Bissau and Nigeria to apply for exemptions to the cessation clause. Resettlement from Benin and Nigeria also affected the voluntary repatriation of Togolese and Liberian refugees. Difficulties rose in mobilizing development agencies to support durable solutions and in promoting the local integration of smaller and dispersed groups in urban areas.

In Southern Africa, UNHCR assisted 350 Congolese refugees from Mozambique in returning home in 2008. The UNHCR Office in the subregion referred more than 1,340 people for resettlement, and some 560 refugees departed for various third countries during the year. UNHCR in Southern Africa provided support and guidance to Governments in the region to enable them to properly conduct refugee status determination and handle registration and data management for refugees and asylum-seekers. That support aided Government authorities in clearing backlogs of pending refugee status applications and gradually assuming responsibility for registration. UNHCR also encouraged the Governments of Botswana, Mozambique, Namibia and Zambia to adopt the legal frameworks needed to facilitate access to local integration. Following the outbreak of xenophobic violence against foreigners in South Africa, as well as the mixed outflow of Zimbabweans to the country, UNHCR's Regional Office in Pretoria devoted much of its attention and resources towards meeting the needs of displaced populations. By the end of 2008, the majority had returned to local communities, although many continued to experience problems with reintegration and a few hundred persons remained in temporary sites established for the displaced. The huge challenges in South Africa taxed the capacity of the Pretoria Office, hampered its regional support functions and slowed progress in meeting some of its objectives. Despite those constraints, UNHCR trained more than 100 employees of Governments and implementing partners in Botswana, Mozambique, South Africa and Zambia to conduct registration in both emergencies and continuous asylum environments. While the organized repatriation of Angolan refugees ended in 2007, new opportunities emerged to bring home some of the remaining Angolan refugees in the region, particularly from Zambia, Namibia and Botswana. The Angolan Government affirmed its readiness to welcome the remaining Angolan refugees home and a series of tripartite meetings with neighbouring countries and UNHCR were scheduled to take place in order to prepare for their return.

By subregion, UNHCR assisted 3.2 million persons in Central Africa and the Great Lakes region, which received $273 million in agency expenditures. In East Africa and the Horn of Africa, $260 million was spent on 5.7 million persons of concern, while some $75 million was spent on programmes assisting 910,000 persons in need in West Africa. In Southern Africa, $42 million was spent on 418,000 persons of concern.

Other developments. The African Union (AU) Executive Council, at its twelfth ordinary session (Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, 25–29 January), adopted two decisions (EX.CL/Dec.381(XII) and EX.CL/Dec.382(XII)) on the situation of refugees, returnees and internally displaced persons in Africa. In decision EX.CL/Dec.381(XII), the Council called upon the international community to redouble its assistance to victims of forced displacement in Africa. It requested the AU Commission, together with the Permanent Representatives Committee's Sub-Committee on Refugees and the AU partners, in particular UNHCR, ICRC, WFP and IOM, to continue monitoring the problem of forced displacement in Africa. It further requested the AU Commission to develop a mechanism for verifying the statistics provided on victims of forced displacement. The Council, in decision EX.CL/Dec.382(XII), adopted the revised Rules of Procedure of the Revitalized African Union Coordinating Committee on Assistance and Protection to Refugees, Returnees and IDPs in Africa and the Terms of Reference of its Working Group, as amended by the Permanent Representatives Committee. It requested the Commission to reactivate the Coordinating Committee as soon as possible so as to enable it to address the challenges of forced displacement in Africa.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December [meeting 70], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/63/423], adopted resolution 63/149 without vote [agenda item 39].

Assistance to refugees, returnees and displaced persons in Africa

The General Assembly,

Recalling the Organization of African Unity Convention governing the specific aspects of refugee problems in Africa of 1969 and the African Charter on Human and Peoples' Rights,

Reaffirming that the 1951 Convention relating to the Status of Refugees, together with the 1967 Protocol thereto, as complemented by the Organization of African Unity Convention of 1969, remains the foundation of the international refugee protection regime in Africa,

Recognizing the particular vulnerability of women and children among refugees and other persons of concern, including exposure to discrimination and sexual and physical abuse,

Recognizing also that refugees, internally displaced persons and, in particular, women and children are at an increased risk of exposure to HIV/AIDS, malaria and other infectious diseases,

Expressing its appreciation for the decision of the African Union to convene the Special Summit of Heads of State and Government of the African Union on Refugees, Returnees and Internally Displaced Persons in Africa, and welcoming the ongoing process to elaborate a draft African Union convention for the protection and assistance of internally displaced persons in Africa,

Noting with appreciation the Pact on Security, Stability and Development in the Great Lakes Region and its instruments, in particular two of the Protocols to the Pact which are relevant to the protection of displaced persons, namely, the Protocol on Protection and Assistance to Internally Displaced Persons and the Protocol on the Property Rights of Returning Persons,

Recognizing that host States have the primary responsibility for the protection of and assistance to refugees on their territory, and the need to redouble efforts to develop and implement comprehensive durable solution strategies, in appropriate cooperation with the international community, and burden- and responsibility-sharing,

Emphasizing that States have the primary responsibility to provide protection and assistance to internally displaced persons within their jurisdiction, as well as to address the root causes of the displacement problem in appropriate cooperation with the international community,

1. Takes note of the reports of the Secretary-General and the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees;

2. Notes the need for African States to address resolutely root causes of all forms of forced displacement in Africa and to foster peace, stability and prosperity throughout the African continent so as to forestall refugee flows;

3. Notes with great concern that, despite all of the efforts made so far by the United Nations, the African Union and others, the situation of refugees and displaced persons in Africa remains precarious, and calls upon States and other parties to armed conflict to observe scrupulously the letter and spirit of international humanitarian law, bearing in mind that armed conflict is one of the principal causes of forced displacement in Africa;

4. Welcomes decision EX.CL/Dec.423(XIII) on the situation of refugees, returnees and displaced persons in Africa adopted by the Executive Council of the African Union at its thirteenth ordinary session, held in Sharm el-Sheikh, Egypt, on 27 and 28 June 2008;

5. Expresses its appreciation for the leadership shown by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, and commends the Office for its ongoing efforts, with the support of the international community, to assist African countries of asylum and to respond to the protection and assistance needs of refugees, returnees and displaced persons in Africa;

6. Notes the initiatives taken by the African Union and the African Commission on Human and Peoples' Rights, in particular the role of its Special Rapporteur on Refugees, Asylum Seekers, Migrants and Internally Displaced Persons in Africa;

7. Notes with appreciation the general conclusion on international protection adopted by the Executive Committee of the Programme of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees at its fifty-ninth session, held in Geneva from 6 to 10 October 2008;

8. Acknowledges the important contribution of the age, gender and diversity mainstreaming strategy in identifying, through a participatory approach, the protection risks faced by the different members of the refugee community, in particular the non-discriminatory treatment and protection of refugee women and refugee children and minority groups of refugees;

9. Affirms that children, because of their age, social status and physical and mental development, are often more vulnerable than adults in situations of forced displacement, recognizes that forced displacement, return to post-conflict situations, integration in new societies, protracted situations of displacement and statelessness can increase child-protection risks, taking into account the particular vulnerability of refugee children to forcible exposure to the risks of physical and psychological injury, exploitation and death in connection with armed conflict, and acknowledges that wider environmental factors and individual risk factors, particularly when combined, may generate different protection needs;

10. Recognizes that no solution to displacement can be durable unless it is sustainable, and therefore encourages the Office of the High Commissioner to support the sustainability of return and reintegration;

11. Also recognizes the importance of early registration and effective registration systems and censuses as a tool of protection and as a means to the quantification and assessment of needs for the provision and distribution of humanitarian assistance and to implement appropriate durable solutions;

12. Recalls the conclusion on registration of refugees and asylum-seekers adopted by the Executive Committee at its fifty-second session, notes the many forms of harassment faced by refugees and asylum-seekers who remain without any form of documentation attesting to their status, recalls the responsibility of States to register refugees on their territories and, as appropriate, the responsibility of the Office of the High Commissioner or mandated international bodies to do so, reiterates in this context the central role that early and effective registration and documentation can play, guided by protection considerations, in enhancing protection and supporting efforts to find durable solutions, and calls upon the Office, as appropriate, to help States to conduct this procedure should they be unable to register refugees on their territory;

13. Calls upon the international community, including States and the Office of the High Commissioner and other relevant United Nations organizations, within their respective mandates, to take concrete action to meet the protection and assistance needs of refugees, returnees and displaced persons and to contribute generously to projects and programmes aimed at alleviating their plight and facilitating durable solutions for refugees and displaced persons;

14. Reaffirms the importance of timely and adequate assistance and protection for refugees, returnees and displaced persons, also reaffirms that assistance and protection are mutually reinforcing and that inadequate material assistance and food shortages undermine protection, notes the importance of a rights- and community-based approach in engaging constructively with individual refugees, returnees and displaced persons and their communities so as to achieve fair and equitable access to food and other forms of material assistance, and expresses concern in regard to situations in which minimum standards of assistance are not met, including those in which adequate needs assessments have yet to be undertaken;

15. Also reaffirms that respect by States for their protection responsibilities towards refugees is strengthened by international solidarity involving all members of the international community and that the refugee protection regime is enhanced through committed international cooperation in a spirit of solidarity and burden- and responsibility-sharing among all States;

16. Further reaffirms that host States have the primary responsibility to ensure the civilian and humanitarian character of asylum, calls upon States, in cooperation with international organizations, within their mandates, to take all necessary measures to ensure respect for the principles of refugee protection and, in particular, to ensure that the civilian and humanitarian nature of refugee camps is not compromised by the presence or the activities of armed elements or used for purposes that are incompatible with their civilian character, and encourages the High Commissioner to continue efforts, in consultation with States and other relevant actors, to ensure the civilian and humanitarian character of camps;

17. Condemns all acts that pose a threat to the personal security and well-being of refugees and asylum-seekers, such as refoulement, unlawful expulsion and physical attacks, calls upon States of refuge, in cooperation with international organizations, where appropriate, to take all necessary measures to ensure respect for the principles of refugee protection, including the humane treatment of asylum-seekers, notes with interest that the High Commissioner has continued to take steps to encourage the development of measures to better ensure the civilian and humanitarian character of asylum, and encourages the High Commissioner to continue those efforts, in consultation with States and other relevant actors;

18. Deplores the continuing violence and insecurity which constitute an ongoing threat to the safety and security of staff members of the Office of the High Commissioner and other humanitarian organizations and an obstacle to the effective fulfilment of the mandate of the Office and the ability of its implementing partners and other humanitarian personnel to discharge their respective humanitarian functions, urges States, parties to conflict and all other relevant actors to take all measures necessary to protect activities related to humanitarian assistance, prevent attacks on and kidnapping of national and international humanitarian workers and ensure the safety and security of the personnel and property of the Office and that of all humanitarian organizations discharging functions mandated by the Office, and calls upon States to investigate fully any crime committed against humanitarian personnel and bring to justice the persons responsible for such crimes;

19. Calls upon the Office of the High Commissioner, the African Union, subregional organizations and all African States, in conjunction with agencies of the United Nations system, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and the international community, to strengthen and revitalize existing partnerships and forge new ones in support of the protection system for refugees, asylum-seekers and internally displaced persons;

20. Calls upon the Office of the High Commissioner, the international community and other entities concerned to intensify their support to African Governments through appropriate capacity-building activities, including training of relevant officers, disseminating information about refugee instruments and principles, providing financial, technical and advisory services to accelerate the enactment or amendment and implementation of legislation relating to refugees, strengthening emergency response and enhancing capacities for the coordination of humanitarian activities, in particular those Governments that have received large numbers of refugees and asylum-seekers;

21. Reaffirms the right of return and the principle of voluntary repatriation, appeals to countries of origin and countries of asylum to create conditions that are conducive to voluntary repatriation, and recognizes that, while voluntary repatriation remains the pre-eminent solution, local integration and third-country resettlement, where appropriate and feasible, are also viable options for dealing with the situation of African refugees who, owing to prevailing circumstances in their respective countries of origin, are unable to return home;

22. Also reaffirms that voluntary repatriation should not necessarily be conditioned on the accomplishment of political solutions in the country of origin in order not to impede the exercise of the refugees' right to return, recognizes that the voluntary repatriation and reintegration process is normally guided by the conditions in the country of origin, in particular that voluntary repatriation can be accomplished in conditions of safety and dignity, and urges the High Commissioner to promote sustainable return through the development of durable and lasting solutions, particularly in protracted refugee situations;

23. Calls upon the international donor community to provide financial and material assistance that allows for the implementation of community-based development programmes that benefit both refugees and host communities, as appropriate, in agreement with host countries and consistent with humanitarian objectives;

24. Appeals to the international community to respond positively, in the spirit of solidarity and burden- and responsibility-sharing, to the third-country resettlement needs of African refugees, notes in this regard the importance of using resettlement strategically, as part of situation-specific comprehensive responses to refugee situations, and to this end encourages States, the Office of the High Commissioner and other relevant partners to make full use of the Multilateral Framework of Understandings on Resettlement, where appropriate;

25. Calls upon the international donor community to provide material and financial assistance for the implementation of programmes intended for the rehabilitation of the environment and infrastructure affected by refugees in countries of asylum;

26. Urges the international community, in the spirit of international solidarity and burden-sharing, to continue to fund generously the refugee programmes of the Office of the High Commissioner and, taking into account the substantially increased needs of programmes in Africa, inter alia, as a result of repatriation possibilities, to ensure that Africa receives a fair and equitable share of the resources designated for refugees;

27. Encourages the Office of the High Commissioner and interested States to identify protracted refugee situations which might lend themselves to resolution through the development of specific, multilateral, comprehensive and practical approaches to resolving such refugee situations, including improvement of international burden- and responsibility-sharing and realization of durable solutions, within a multilateral context;

28. Expresses grave concern about the plight of internally displaced persons in Africa, notes the efforts of African States in strengthening the regional mechanisms for protection of and assistance to internally displaced persons, calls upon States to take concrete action to pre-empt internal displacement and to meet the protection and assistance needs of internally displaced persons, recalls in that regard the Guiding Principles on Internal Displacement, takes note of the current activities of the Office of the High Commissioner related to protection of and assistance to internally displaced persons, including in the context of inter-agency arrangements in this field, emphasizes that such activities should be consistent with relevant General Assembly resolutions and should not undermine the refugee mandate of the Office and the institution of asylum, and encourages the High Commissioner to continue his dialogue with States on the role of his Office in this regard;

29. Invites the Representative of the Secretary-General on the human rights of internally displaced persons to continue his ongoing dialogue with Member States and the intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations concerned, in accordance with his mandate, and to include information thereon in his reports to the Human Rights Council and the General Assembly;

30. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a comprehensive report on assistance to refugees, returnees and displaced persons in Africa to the General Assembly at its sixty-fourth session, taking fully into account the efforts expended by countries of asylum, under the item entitled "Report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, questions relating to refugees, returnees and displaced persons and humanitarian questions".

The Americas

In North America and the Caribbean, UNHCR advocated for the political and financial support of the Governments of the United States and Canada and sought their backing for protection and durable solutions programmes for refugees. The United States resettled some 65,000 refugees in 2008. Of those, some 49,000 (or 75 per cent) were referred by UNHCR. That represented the highest number and proportion of UNHCR referrals in that country for the past 20 years. With national security concerns affecting domestic asylum policies in the United States, the Department of Homeland Security continued to emphasize enforcement, including more use of detention and stricter border controls. In 2008, Canada resettled over 10,000 refugees, some 7,300 through its Government assisted programme and more than 3,500 through its Private Sponsorship of Refugees scheme. Since 2006, UNHCR had been urging the Canadian Government to fill vacant posts in the Immigration and Refugee Board (IRB) to avoid the re-emergence of a backlog. The number of asylum-seekers awaiting a decision at IRB had increased from a low of 20,000 in mid-2006 to more than 54,000 in 2008. The IRB did not have the resources to address the caseload. In the Caribbean, where systematic interception, detention and return policies were widely implemented, returns were often carried out through bilateral agreements which lacked specific asylum safeguards. Most of the Caribbean States and territories did not have adequate procedures to address existing gaps. UNHCR also faced resource constraints, including limited programme funding and human resources and an insufficient travel budget, which made it difficult to achieve its objectives.

In Latin America, UNHCR witnessed a rise in the number of regional and extra-regional asylum-seekers and refugees travelling within broader migratory movements. Mexico appointed child protection officers within its National Migration Institute to protect unaccompanied minors trapped in massive mixed migratory flows in Central America. The Regional Solidarity Resettlement Programme of the Mexico Plan of Action was revamped and confirmed as a key strategy in providing durable solutions to Colombian refugees in the southern cone. A resettlement programme for women at risk began in Argentina and Chile. After receiving 225 Palestinian refugees for resettlement, Brazil and Chile began taking steps to assist in their local integration. Nevertheless, the global economic crisis caused a decline in remittances to the region, especially to the Central American countries whose economies were highly dependent on them. In Mexico and Central America, north-bound migratory movements faced tightened border security, influenced by the fight against terrorism and human and narcotics trafficking. Interception, detention and deportation practices intensified, and there was an increase in human rights violations against undocumented immigrants. The mixed migration flow included asylum-seekers from elsewhere in the region, principally from Central America and the Caribbean, as well as migrants and asylum-seekers from Africa, the Middle East and Asia. They also included thousands of unaccompanied children who were particularly vulnerable to human rights violations and were often the victims of smugglers or traffickers.

The crisis in Colombia, which also involved or affected Costa Rica, Ecuador, Panama, Peru and Venezuela, remained UNHCR's major concern and largest operation in Latin America. Nevertheless, the Mexico Plan of Action (MPA) [YUN, 2004, p. 1210] confirmed its value as a strategic framework for protection and durable solutions. In line with the Plan, UNHCR offices in the region sought to influence legislation affecting refugees and promoted differentiated asylum procedures. In Chile, UNHCR continued to advocate for the adoption of comprehensive refugee legislation. In Brazil, despite the positive attitudes expressed by central and local governments, a vast majority of the 3,800 refugees and 427 asylum-seekers in the country still depended on some kind of UNHCR assistance. Refugees and asylum-seekers in the southern cone received UNHCR's help with local integration and the promotion of self-sufficiency. At the end of 2008, the population of concern in the region stood at some 7,100. In the course of 2008, some 1,900 people filed asylum applications. Approximately 140 individuals were resettled in the region under the Regional Solidarity Resettlement Programme of the MPA: 78 in Argentina, 19 in Brazil and 45 in Chile. The majority were Colombian refugees from urban and rural backgrounds in Costa Rica and Ecuador. In Nicaragua, the National Assembly in July passed one of the most advanced asylum laws in the region. The right to asylum was also incorporated into the new Constitution of Bolivia.

Total UNHCR expenditure in the Americas and the Caribbean for the year was $47.5 million for a population of concern of 4.0 million.

Asia and the Pacific, the Middle East and North Africa

In 2008, UNHCR spent $221.8 million on activities in Asia and the Pacific for a population of concern of 10.1 million. Expenditures for operations in the Middle East and North Africa amounted to $268.7 million for a population of concern of 6.1 million.

South Asia

In 2008, UNHCR led the collective humanitarian response in a difficult security environment in Sri Lanka, which saw considerable displacement in the north of the country as military operations there were intensified. By the end of the year, the progress of the Sri Lankan Army and the retreat of the Liberation Tigers of Tamil Eelam (LTTE) to a smaller geographical area aggravated the situation. An estimated 150,000 civilians were trapped by the hostilities, with limited access to humanitarian aid and no chance to move to safer locations. At the same time, in the east UNHCR monitored the protection of 20,000 IDPs and assisted them in returning to their homes. Throughout the year, the total number of IDPs in Sri Lanka stood at more than 500,000. In Nepal, the cooperation of the Government and the support of a core group of countries committed to finding durable solution for refugees allowed for the start of a large-scale resettlement of camp-based refugees. Some 8,000 refugees left for third countries in 2008. The Government's proactive engagement allowed for a secure environment in the camps. That enabled refugees to access information on settlement and other durable solutions provided by UNHCR and its partners, and to make free and informed decisions. In India, the rise in the number of arrivals of asylum-seekers stretched UNHCR's capacity to address their concerns in a timely and efficient manner, compelling the Office to initiate a review of its procedures. At the end of 2008 there were almost 3,800 pending applications. In Bangladesh, the living conditions started to improve for 28,300 refugees from Myanmar living in two camps, particularly in the areas of shelter, health, skills training, education and community mobilization. UNHCR and its partners completed projects to improve water supply and sanitation in both camps. They also ensured better access to primary and secondary health care. The construction of new shelters for refugees in Kutupalong camp was completed and, subject to continued funding, rehabilitation in Nayapara, which started in 2008, was expected to be finished by the end of 2009.

East Asia and the Pacific

During 2008, UNHCR focused on the search for durable solutions. In Malaysia, the Office submitted a landmark 9,000 resettlement submissions during the year, and saw 6,000 refugees departing for third countries. Approximately 17,000 persons of concern were registered by UNHCR in 2008, bringing the total number of those registered in Malaysia to over 45,400. In addition, in Malaysia UNHCR was able to enhance awareness of refugees' issues through dialogue with the national authorities and by strengthening ties with civil societies. In Thailand, the large-scale resettlement process reduced the number of registered refugees in the border camps to some 111,100 by the end of 2008, down from some 124,000 in the previous year. However, the arrival in Thailand of people from Myanmar and their informal settlement in refugee camps resulted in an unregistered population of some 30,000 to 40,000. To address that concern, the Office and the Government agreed at the end of 2008 to take steps to ensure screening of the unregistered population. UNHCR's continued cooperation with the authorities to prepare for Indonesia's accession to the international refugees instruments helped promote asylum issues. The Office's enhanced capacity in Indonesia contributed to more efficient protection and helped develop the capacity of stakeholders. In China, the Government revived discussions on the development of national refugee legislation during the second half of the year. In Hong Kong, the Government and UNHCR finalized a Memorandum of Understanding (MOU) on enhanced cooperation, through which the training of immigration officers on screening procedures would be improved. In December, the Government of Japan announced its decision to pilot a three-year resettlement programme for 90 refugees from Myanmar, starting in 2010, which made Japan the first country on the Asian continent to adopt a resettlement programme. Asylum applications increased multi-fold, from 384 in 2005 to an estimated 1,600 by the end of 2008. In the Republic of Korea, UNHCR and the Korea Immigration Service signed an Exchange of Letters aimed at enhancing the quality and sustainability of refugee status determination (RSD) in the country. Australia's resettlement programme continued in 2008 and provided durable solutions for approximately 6,000 UNHCR-referred refugees. In Cambodia, following the Government's decision to assume responsibility for RSD, a Refugee Office was established under the Ministry of the Interior in October. There was significant progress in the search for solutions for Montagnard refugees in Cambodia following implementation of the MOU signed by UNHCR, Cambodia and Viet Nam in 2005 [YUN 2005, p. 1317]. At the end of 2008, only 236 Montagnards remained at UNHCR-assisted sites awaiting a durable solution. In Viet Nam, UNHCR was able to travel to the Central Highlands to observe the situation of Montagnards who had returned from Cambodia. Further strides were made in the prevention and reduction of statelessness as the naturalization process for some 9,500 former Cambodian refugees began to take effect in September.

*Central Asia, South-West Asia,
North Africa and the Middle East*

In 2008, South-West Asia saw more than 278,000 registered Afghans return to their country with UNHCR assistance. All benefited from a $100 per person return and reintegration cash grant to meet their basic needs during the first months after return. The Government of Afghanistan and the international community endorsed the incorporation of returnee reintegration needs in the Afghanistan National Development Strategy at the Kabul Conference in November. That was expected to lead to increased support for returnees in national development programmes. In Iran, the authorities completed the online Amayesh III re-registration project, which provided some level of continued protection for the approximately 936,000 Afghan refugees who were included in the process. The issuance of work permits to registered Afghan refugees in Iran had commenced. Towards the end of the year, the Government of Pakistan indicated that the Three-Year Plan, which foresaw all registered Afghans returning to their home country in advance of the 2009 expiration of their proof of residence cards, would be reviewed.

In Central Asia, the number of new Afghan asylum-seekers in Tajikistan increased by 80 per cent. All new arrivals, with UNHCR's support, were registered. However, the recognition rate fell significantly in 2008. The majority of those arrivals were in great need of care, straining the UNHCR and the Government assistance programmes. The Office revised its social assistance policy and programmes to target refugees with specific needs. UNHCR also advocated for refugees and asylum issues to be included in training activities for Border Security and Ministry of the Interior officials. With UNHCR support and advocacy, the Government of Kazakhstan developed a draft national refugee legislation and presented it to Parliament at the end of the year. In line with its regionalization priorities, UNHCR established a Regional Office for Central Asia in the capital, Almaty. In Turkmenistan, an inter-ministerial working group was established to review the refugee and citizenship laws. The Government also agreed to take over RSD from UNHCR in accordance with its international and national obligations. The Kyrgyz Government provided citizenship to the remaining Tajik refugees in the country. Uzbekistan was not a signatory to either the 1951 Refugee Convention or the 1967 Protocol, nor had it adopted refugee legislation. Under those circumstances, resettlement remained the most viable solution for refugees and in 2008 UNHCR resettled 238 people to third countries. The Office was committed to finding solutions for the approximately 750 refugees remaining in the country, primary through resettlement. UNHCR operations in Central Asia focused on improving the quality of asylum in accordance with international standards, preventing refoulement, providing access to appropriate durable solutions, reducing and preventing statelessness, and strengthening emergency preparedness and contingency planning. Sustained advocacy efforts by UNHCR and its NGO partners led to an improved draft of the refugee law in Kazakhstan. However, in some Central Asian countries, access to asylum procedures was selective and based on political and economic issues and perceived national security concerns. That resulted in a decline in the recognition of certain groups of refugees and asylum-seekers. UNHCR was obliged to establish or maintain parallel systems to ensure RSD and provide the necessary protection and assistance to people of concern.

In 2008, UNHCR worked to protect and assist large numbers of refugees and others of concern throughout North Africa. The large mixed migration movements in North Africa were straining the capacities of national migration management structures and challenging UNHCR's ability to protect and assist refugees and other people of concern in the region. The Office provided monthly subsidies and education and housing allowances to the most vulnerable among the urban refugees. UNHCR's advocacy and capacity-building efforts had generated support for its 10-Point Plan of Action on Refugee Protection and International Migration and forged partnerships aimed at protecting people of concern moving to and through North Africa. The establishment of a national asylum procedure or process in Mauritania, and the Moroccan Government's interest in creating a national asylum system resulted from those efforts. In the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, UNHCR's partnership with the authorities resulted in the drafting of a national refugee law and the conclusion of a partnership agreement with the National Association of Youth Voluntary Work, as well as improved access to refugees and asylum-seekers in detention. In collaboration with WFP and other partners, UNHCR provided the Sahrawi refugees in the Tindouf camps in Algeria with food, shelter, water, sanitation, health care and education. In order to improve the refugees' nutritional status and address rampant anaemia among women and children, UNHCR widened the range of foodstuffs provided to the refugees by including more fresh meat, fruits and vegetables. In Tunisia, UNHCR conducted RSD under its mandate and ensured respects for the rights of refugees and asylum-seekers. The Office also promoted refugees' self reliance through vocational training. Tunisia expressed readiness to prepare asylum legislation as part of a comprehensive asylum system.

In the Middle East, UNHCR faced a complicated picture of displacement. That included millions of Iraqis who had fled their homes to seek safety in other parts of their country and hundred of thousands more who found refuge in Jordan, the Syrian Arab Republic and other countries in the region and beyond. Both Syria and Jordan remained particularly generous in their treatment of Iraqis despite already bearing the burden of large numbers of Palestinians and other refugees. There was some improvement in the situation in Iraq, however, with many parts of the country seeing a notable reduction in the number of security incidents. Furthermore, there was a rise in the numbers of people returning to their home areas, especially among IDPs. In anticipation of such returns, UNHCR developed an individual case management mechanism to respond to the returnees' protection and assistance needs. However, the security situation in Iraq remained fragile and was not conducive to large-scale returns. The humanitarian crisis in Gaza dominated events in the region in late 2008. Although hostilities between Israel and the Hamas Government in Gaza did not lead to significant external displacements, UNHCR provided non-food items and logistical support to the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA). The High Commissioner issued a public statement reiterating the need to protect civilians fleeing the violence. In Israel, a strengthened UNHCR presence helped to build the Government's capacity to protect and assist refugees. The Office supported the Government's efforts to establish responsive national asylum systems consistent with international standards. It also intervened in detention and other protection cases. In 2008, UNHCR recorded a 70 per cent increase in the number of asylum-seekers and immigrants arriving in Yemen from the Horn of Africa, with more than 50,000 people making the dangerous journey across the Gulf of Aden on smugglers' boats. Some 950 individuals were reported to have drowned or gone missing during the voyage. The traditionally positive protection climate in Egypt was negatively affected by an increase in the number of asylum-seekers and migrants attempting to cross the Sinai desert to Israel. Several asylum-seekers and migrants were returned by the Israeli authorities, without prior assessments of their protection needs. Also, hundreds of Eritreans were detained and deported from Egypt, despite UNHCR's appeals to the authorities of both countries to refrain from forcible return and grant the Office access to detention centres. With the exception of a group detained in the Aswan prison in Egypt, UNHCR was not permitted access to detained Eritrean asylum-seekers, nor did it receive any verifiable information about them.

Europe

In 2008, UNHCR expenditures for activities in Europe totalled $124.4 million, for a population of concern of 4.1 million. More than one third of that amount ($47.9 million) was for the 1.2 million persons of concern in Eastern Europe, while $39.5 million was for the 598,620 persons of concern in South-Eastern Europe.

West, Central and Eastern Europe

In 2008, the number of asylum applications in Western Europe increased by some 6 per cent over the previous year. Some western European States like Italy, Norway, the Netherlands and Switzerland had to deal with massive increases in the number of asylum applications. Cyprus, Greece and Sweden, which had been major recipients of new asylum-seekers in 2007, saw a considerable decline. The change in asylum policy in Sweden, especially towards Iraqis in 2008, had immediate repercussions in the Nordic countries, with the number of asylum-seekers sharply rising in Finland and Norway. While the number of individuals requesting refugee status continued to decrease in most of the industrialized countries in 2008, the Nordic countries recorded an increase of about 2 per cent. Mixed migration flows at the southern borders of Europe continued to grow during the year. Greece reported 146,000 arrivals of irregular migrants, while Spain saw a decrease in arrivals over the same period, with some 13,000 individuals reaching its shores. In Ireland, the Office supported the revision of the new refugee bill. In Portugal, the newly adopted law on asylum incorporated most of UNHCR's recommendations. In the United Kingdom, the Government endorsed recommendations made by UNHCR on improving the asylum system, as part of the European Quality Initiative project aimed at promoting a fair and efficient asylum system. The Office advocated in several multilateral and national forums for the creation of a Common European Asylum System that adhered to the spirit of the 1951 Refugee Convention. UNHCR followed the transposition of the European Union (EU) Qualification and Procedures Directives in a number of EU member States. It signed an exchange of letters with Frontex, the EU External Border Agency, including on protection training in the context of border management. The Office collaborated closely with the European Commission, the European Council and the European Parliament, the Council of Europe, the European Court of Justice and the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe (OSCE), as well as national counterparts. It continued its effective partnerships with competent national authorities in Spain, Italy and to some degree in Greece and Malta to identify people in need of international protection or with special needs. In the Nordic countries, working relationships with civil society were strengthened through NGOs. France, Switzerland and Germany responded to UNHCR's call to resettle vulnerable refugees for whom no other solution could be found. They joined the traditional (Sweden, Norway, Finland, Denmark, the Netherlands and the United Kingdom), new (Ireland and Portugal) and ad hoc (Italy, Spain) resettlement countries. Malta continued to be the only western European country from where resettlement took place. The Office advocated with European States for the eventual naturalization of refugees who had no perspective of return.

In Central Europe and the Baltic States, the number of asylum applications decreased in 2008 compared to 2007. The only exception was Romania, where the number of applications surged by some 70 per cent over the same period. The Office's main goals in Central Europe and the Baltic States included: access to territory and RSD procedures; advocacy for better reception conditions in line with international standards; promotion of durable solutions for refugees and stateless persons; advocacy for fair and efficient asylum procedures; and promotion of external relations and partnership. The Office had redoubled its efforts to promote resettlement as a tool. In that respect, a recent innovation in Europe was the establishment of an Emergency Transit Centre in Romania. The Centre provided a temporary safe location for refugees who were at risk or could not remain in their host country while their resettlement was finalized. In September the Office formally launched the Asylum System Quality Assurance and Evaluation Mechanism, also known as the Quality Initiative project. The project covered Austria, Bulgaria, Germany, Hungary, Poland, Romania, Slovakia and Slovenia. Based on UNHCR's mandated responsibilities, the project would also play a key role in the development of fair and efficient asylum procedures. While UNHCR continued to advocate that Europe remain a continent of asylum, a number of States had security concerns about asylum-seekers. In Bulgaria, cases of refoulement were observed in 2008. The detention of asylum-seekers, including those with specific needs, was reported. In the Czech Republic, an increase in the detention of those applying for international protection was of concern to the Office. The prospects for durable solutions in Central Europe and the Baltic States remained a challenge. Meanwhile, States in the region had shown increasing interest in establishing national resettlement programmes. In the Baltic States (Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania), the year ended without a clear indication that they would consider adhering to the 1954 and 1961 Statelessness Conventions.

In Eastern Europe, the conflicts over South Ossetia in August displaced 134,000 people. Some 102,800 returned by the end of 2008, leaving some 21,000 IDPs in need of humanitarian assistance. In response to the August crisis, UNHCR provided some 65,000 new IDPs in Georgia with basic non-food items and winterization packages, including stoves and firewood. The adoption by the Government in July of a National IDP Action Plan, which provided UNHCR with a legal basis for its interventions for durable solutions, was a major step towards resolving the situation of long-term IDPs. Although the Plan was suspended due to the August events, the Government adapted it to the new circumstances and expressed a strong commitment to finding durable solutions for people in protracted displacement. With UNHCR's support, national legislation in the region was brought closer to international standards. Under the 10-point Plan of Action, border monitoring was discussed within the Söderköping/Cross-Border Cooperation Process and improved in Belarus, Moldova, and Ukraine, with particular focus on protection-sensitive entry systems. In addition, Belarus, Moldova and Ukraine strove to align their policies, legislation and governance within EU standards. Belarus made substantial progress in the areas of border management, immigration and asylum. Moldova finalized the implementation of the Moldova-EU Action Plan under the European Neighbourhood Policy. For Ukraine, the signature on 9 September of the Association Agreement with the EU was an important step towards its closer cooperation with the latter. The Government of the Russian Federation took steps to improve migration legislation. Several legal acts became effective, among them amendments to the federal law, On Registration of Foreign Nations and Stateless Persons Temporarily Residing in the Russian Federation, which streamlined registration procedures and allowed UNHCR to focus on building national capacity to deal with refugee matters. In 2008, the UNHCR shelter programme in the Russian Federation completed 37 houses in Ingushetia and 29 in the Chechen Republic, allowing IDPs to return to their places of origin. UNHCR accorded priority to IDPs in temporary collective shelters who did not have alternative shelter, met the vulnerability criteria and were from rural areas where the Government's shelter programme had not begun. Hostile attitudes by the local population towards foreigners in Ukraine and the Russian Federation posed a risk to people of concern to UNHCR. The Office worked with international partners, Government authorities and civil society to promote tolerance, acceptance of diversity and law enforcement action to combat racially motivated crimes. In Azerbaijan, UNHCR promoted a fair and efficient asylum regime that complied with minimum international standards in the provision of protection and assistance to asylum-seekers and recognized refugees. In December, the Parliament of Moldova adopted a new law on asylum that was drawn up with the participation of UNHCR, NGOs and other experts.

South-Eastern Europe

In 2008, UNHCR protected and assisted some 133,000 refugees and some 354,000 IDPs in South-Eastern Europe. Some countries, such as Serbia and Croatia, saw internal divisions linked to the elections. In February, the unilateral declaration of independence by Kosovo (see p. 435) affected regional relations.

UNHCR's efforts to find durable solution for persons of concern resulted in a decline in the total number of refugees and IDPs in the region to some 486,000 by the end of the year. Political developments in Serbia and Kosovo cut IDP returns to Kosovo drastically in 2008. The Office sought durable solutions by facilitating returns to Kosovo. During the year, some 122 individuals were repatriated to Serbia and Kosovo, either with UNHCR's assistance or spontaneously. In Croatia, the Office sought sustainable solutions for the returnees and helped the authorities establish a fair and efficient asylum and immigration system. It monitored the implementation of the Housing Care programme, which aimed to provide accommodation to returnees and foster developments in private property repossession. It also cooperated with the Government and NGOs in setting up a border monitoring project. Some refugees in Serbia hesitated to opt for local integration and linked their eventual decision to a resolution of the occupancy/tenancy rights issue still pending in Croatia. That issue also affected the naturalization process in Serbia. Certain minority IDP groups faced additional difficulties upon returning to their places of origin. In some areas of potential return, security remained a concern. The Roma, Ashkali and so-called Egyptian communities were the most disadvantaged in that respect. In Montenegro, four new laws were passed that had a direct bearing on populations of concern to UNHCR. Additionally, UNHCR continued to pursue durable solutions, facilitating returns to Serbia and Kosovo. In the Former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, there were 1,772 persons of concern to UNHCR, mostly Roma from Kosovo. In December, UNHCR's advocacy activities translated into the adoption by the Government of a strategy for the integration of refugees and foreigners in the country, which provided a policy framework for integration. Refugee repatriation and IDP returns stagnated in the region in 2008, and the Sarajevo Declaration [YUN 2005, p. 1320] had yet to be fully implemented. In December, the High Commissioner's Dialogue on Protracted Refugee Situations brought the issue of durable solutions to the fore. It gave new momentum to efforts to resolve long-standing issues affecting repatriation to Croatia and local integration of refugees in Serbia.

Health, food and nutrition

In 2008, the United Nations continued to promote human health and food security, coordinate food aid and support research in nutrition.

At the end of the year, about 33.4 million people were living with HIV/AIDS, and an estimated 2.7 million people had become infected with the virus. Deaths due to AIDS-related illnesses were estimated at 2 million. The Joint United Nations Programme on HIV/AIDS (UNAIDS) issued the 2008 Report on the global AIDS epidemic—the most comprehensive global assessment of the HIV/AIDS response ever assembled. The report confirmed that out of the 147 countries which had documented their progress in implementing the 2001 Declaration of Commitment on HIV/AIDS, many had made considerable gains in addressing their national epidemics. Increases in financing for HIV programmes in low- and middle-income countries resulted in progress in reducing AIDS deaths and preventing new infections. In June, the General Assembly held a high-level meeting to review the progress achieved in realizing the Declaration of Commitment and the Political Declaration on HIV/AIDS.

In 2008, the United Nations focused on sickle-cell anaemia as a public health issue. According to World Health Organization (WHO) estimates, some 100 million people carried the sickle-cell trait, and at least 500,000 children were born each year with the most severe form of the disease. Major disparities persisted between countries of the North and countries of the South with respect to management of the disease. In a December resolution, the General Assembly urged Member States and the UN system to promote health-care services, training and technology-transfer programmes to improve the lives of those affected, and to raise awareness of the disease on 19 June of each year.

The Conference of the Parties to the WHO Framework Convention on Tobacco Control, at its third session in November, established a working group to develop guidelines for implementation of article 14, dealing with demand reduction. The Intergovernmental Negotiating Body on a Protocol on Illicit Trade in Tobacco Products held its first and second sessions, at which it negotiated the objectives, scope and outline of a draft protocol. In May, the Secretary-General advised the United Nations to take a strong stance on the issue of second-hand smoke, and in a November resolution the General Assembly banned smoking and tobacco sales at UN Headquarters.

A WHO report to the General Assembly on the Decade to Roll Back Malaria in Developing Countries, Particularly in Africa (2001–2010) noted that at least 29 out of 109 countries around the world were on course to meet targets for reducing the burden caused by malaria by 2010. In February, the Secretary-General appointed Ray Chambers (United States) as his first Special Envoy for Malaria. The Assembly in a December resolution expressed concern about the continued morbidity and mortality attributed to malaria. It noted that more efforts were needed if the malaria and MDG targets for 2010 and 2015 were to be reached.

In May, the World Health Assembly adopted a resolution urging Member States, international organizations and stakeholders to prioritize the implementation of a global strategy and plan of action on public health, innovation and intellectual property. Also adopted were resolutions on monitoring the achievement of the health-related MDGs and implementation of the International Health Regulations.

The General Assembly debated the issue of global road safety in March. During the deliberations, the Russian Federation presented an initiative to host the first global high-level conference on road safety in 2009 in Moscow. In a related resolution, the Assembly commended WHO for working with the UN regional commissions to coordinate road safety issues in the UN system and the World Bank for establishing the Global Road Safety Facility—the first funding mechanism to support capacity-building for road safety.

In 2008, the World Food Programme (WFP) distributed 3.9 million metric tons of food aid, assisting 102.1 million hungry people in 78 countries. During the year, WFP faced challenges such as turmoil in international financial systems, extreme weather, political upheaval and complex emergencies in Afghanistan, Somalia and the Sudan. WFP succeeded in scaling up assistance to vulnerable populations hit by soaring food and fuel prices. The complexity of WFP emergency operations was exemplified by its response to Cyclone Nargis in Myanmar, for which WFP provided $154 million of relief for 1.1 million victims. Donor contributions in 2008 reached a record $5 billion.

In 2008, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO) continued to address the world food crisis. In June, FAO held a high-level conference on “World Food Security: the Challenges of Climate Change and Bioenergy”. The conference adopted a Declaration that called on the international community to increase assistance for developing countries, in particular the least developed countries and those most negatively affected by high food prices. In April, the Secretary-General established the High-level Task Force on the Global Food Security Crisis, which brought together relevant parts of the UN system and Bretton Woods institutions to produce a unified response to the food price crisis.

AIDS prevention and control

Comprehensive review of implementation of the Declaration of Commitment on HIV/AIDS

General Assembly 2008 high-level meeting on HIV/AIDS. In accordance with resolution 60/262 [YUN 2006, p. 1410], the General Assembly, during its high-level meeting on HIV/AIDS (10–12 June) [A/62/895], undertook a comprehensive review of progress achieved in realizing the 2001 Declaration of Commitment on HIV/AIDS, adopted at its twenty-sixth special session by resolution S-26/2 [YUN 2001, p. 1126]. In addition to discussing progress and challenges in the global AIDS response, the review focused on universal access to HIV prevention, treatment, care and support by considering key findings and recommendations. Among other outcomes, the meeting determined that successes must be built upon to ensure sustained progress towards full achievement of the international HIV/AIDS goals.

The meeting consisted of plenary sessions in the General Assembly with statements from 158 delegates, including 152 Member States and six observers. In addition to five panel discussions, there was an interactive hearing with civil society on the theme “Action for universal access: myths and realities”.

The meeting had before it the report of the Secretary-General entitled “Declaration of Commitment on HIV/AIDS and Political Declaration on HIV/AIDS: Midway to the Millennium Development Goals” (see below), which provided the basis for deliberations.

The Secretary-General, in his statement at the opening session, emphasized the need to build on recent successes to bridge gaps in the global AIDS response. Observing that 2008 marked the sixtieth anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights [YUN 1948–49, p. 543], he said that continued discrimination against people living with HIV and groups at high risk represented an unacceptable reality. He expressed particular gratitude to Dr. Peter Piot, who would leave UNAIDS as its Executive Director at the end of 2008.

The UNAIDS Executive Director noted in his address that progress had been made in almost every region, but the pace of change was not enough to achieve universal access in most low- and middle-income countries by 2010. AIDS remained the leading cause of death in Africa and the seventh highest cause of mortality worldwide. He said that unless efforts to prevent new HIV infections were strengthened, treatment queues would lengthen, dooming efforts to achieve universal access to antiretroviral therapy. He also stressed that long-term success in the AIDS response required improved HIV prevention for young people, effective action to address gender inequality and other human rights violations, and substantial increases in funding.

Report of Secretary-General. As requested in General Assembly resolution 60/262 [YUN 2006, p. 1410], the Secretary-General submitted to the high-level meeting a report [A/62/780] entitled “Declaration of Commitment on HIV/AIDS and Political Declaration on HIV/AIDS: Midway to the Millennium Development Goals”, which reviewed progress in implementing the 2001 Declaration of Commitment on HIV/AIDS [YUN 2001, p. 1126] and the 2006 Political Declaration on HIV/AIDS [YUN 2006, p. 1411].

The Secretary-General observed that, as at 10 March, 147 Member States had reported national information against 25 core indicators that were developed to track implementation of the 2001 Declaration of Commitment. The core indicators covered a broad array of variables, such as HIV prevalence among young people aged 15–24; coverage of antiretroviral therapy and key HIV prevention interventions; services to support children orphaned or made vulnerable by HIV; and national adoption of recommended HIV policies. He also noted that in nearly all countries, civil society groups were involved in monitoring and reporting progress on the core indicators for the Declaration of Commitment. In addition to having provided data to supplement national reports, those groups had engaged in national reporting workshops and produced shadow reports. More than 80 per cent of countries, including 85 per cent of those in sub-Saharan Africa, had policies in place to ensure equal access for women to HIV prevention, treatment, care and support. Women in sub-Saharan Africa had equal or greater access to antiretrovirals, but the reverse was true for women in concentrated epidemics. Although most countries had strategic frameworks that addressed the epidemic’s burden on women, only 53 per cent provided budgeted support for women-focused programmes. Funding for HIV-related activities in low-income and middle-income countries reached $10 billion in 2007, a 12 per cent increase over 2006 and a tenfold increase in less than a decade. In low-income and lower middle-income countries, per capita domestic spending on HIV more than doubled between 2005 and 2007.

Worldwide, reported the Secretary-General, gender parity seemed to exist in terms of coverage with antiretrovirals. In a number of countries with generalized epidemics, however, coverage was significantly higher among females. By contrast, women in need were significantly less likely to be on antiretrovirals in several countries with concentrated epidemics. Notwithstanding the considerable achievements in expanding access to life-preserving HIV treatments, substantial progress would be required to achieve universal access to HIV treatment and care. In that regard, the Secretary-General noted that if the current trajectory of treatment scale-up continued, 4.6 million people in need would be on antiretrovirals in 2010 and 8 million in 2015. Those figures fell short of projected need: in 2007, an estimated 9.8 million people living with HIV were medically eligible to be put on antiretrovirals, and that number was certain to rise as the disease progressed among the more than 33 million people who were living with HIV.

The Secretary-General recommended that senior political leaders, with the assistance of donors, technical agencies and civil society, lead the implementation of HIV policies. He also recommended that national leaders and Governments, donors, researchers, non-governmental organizations (NGOs) and other stakeholders engaged in the HIV response begin planning for the long-term, building into their efforts strategies to ensure the sustainability of the robust, adaptable and enduring collective effort that would be required over generations.

On 24 December, the General Assembly decided that the item on the implementation of the Declaration of Commitment on HIV/AIDS and the Political Declaration on HIV/AIDS would remain for consideration during its resumed sixty-third (2009) session (decision 63/552).

Civil society participation. On 29 April, prior to the high-level meeting, the General Assembly approved for participation in that meeting the list of civil society representatives drawn up by the Assembly President [A/62/CRP.1], pursuant to resolution 62/178 [YUN 2007, p. 1262] (decision 62/548).

JIU review

The Secretary-General in July transmitted to the General Assembly the report [A/63/152] of the Joint Inspection Unit (JIU) entitled "Review of the progress made by the UN system organizations in achieving Millennium Development Goal 6, Target 7, to combat HIV/AIDS". The review focused on the role and involvement of the UNAIDS secretariat and the co-sponsors and other stakeholders in the achievement of Goal 6, Target 7: to have halted by 2015 and begun to reverse the spread of HIV/AIDS. The review also assessed the effectiveness of coordination and cooperation among the various UN entities and other stakeholders involved in combating HIV/AIDS.

JIU recommended that the Economic and Social Council review and strengthen the mandate of UNAIDS, including by enhancing the authority of the secretariat so that it may effectively lead, coordinate and monitor the fight against HIV/AIDS and ensure proper accountability of the co-sponsors to the joint programme. As part of the review, the number of co-sponsors should be restricted to the six original organizations/cosponsors, namely, the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), the World Health Organization (WHO), the United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA), the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF), the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) and the World Bank. Other organizations could participate through the co-sponsors on the basis of a memorandum of understanding. The Economic and Social Council should also review and revise the authority, role and responsibility of the UNAIDS Programme Coordinating Board to enable it to have supervisory responsibility over the UNAIDS secretariat and the co-sponsors in relation to the joint programme on HIV/AIDS.

Joint UN Programme on HIV/AIDS

UNAIDS, which became fully operational in 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 1121] continued to serve as the main advocate for global action on HIV/AIDS. In 2008, UNAIDS had ten co-sponsors: the International Labour Organization (ILO); UNDP; UNESCO; UNICEF; the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR); the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime (UNODC); WHO; the World Food Programme (WFP); UNFPA; and the World Bank.

Reports on the global AIDS epidemic

UNAIDS issued the 2008 Report on the global AIDS epidemic at the halfway mark between the 2001 Declaration of Commitment on HIV/AIDS [YUN 2001, p. 1126] and the 2015 target of MDG Goal 6: to have halted by 2015 and begun to reverse the spread of HIV/AIDS. Based on information from 147 countries, which documented their progress in implementing the 2001 Declaration of Commitment, the report provided the most comprehensive global assessment of the response to HIV/AIDS ever assembled. By joining with their government counterparts, unprecedented numbers of civil society groups participated in the reporting process.

The HIV response was critical to fostering progress across the breadth of the global development agenda, said the report. A six-fold increase in financing for HIV programmes in low- and middle-income countries was beginning to achieve results, with many countries making major progress in lowering AIDS deaths and preventing new infections. However, progress remained uneven and the epidemic's future was still uncertain, which underscored the need for intensified action to move towards universal access to HIV prevention, treatment, care and support.

Monitoring and evaluation systems were being improved, largely with external funding, as countries began to take advantage of the standard provision that up to 10 per cent of programme funds could be directed to strengthening such systems.

Subsequently, UNAIDS and WHO issued the 2009 AIDS epidemic update, which contained key data on the global epidemiology of HIV/AIDS as at December 2008. That report estimated that the number of persons living with HIV worldwide in 2008 totalled 33.4 million, representing a slight increase over the 2007 estimate of 33.2 million. The estimated number of people newly infected with HIV in 2008 was 2.7 million.

The rise in the number of people living with HIV reflected the combined effects of continued high rates of new HIV infections and the beneficial impact of antiretroviral therapy. As at December 2008, the number of people in low- and middle-income countries receiving antiretroviral therapy was approximately 4 million, indicating a ten-fold increase in access to such treatment over five years.

The epidemic appeared to have stabilized in most regions, although prevalence continued to increase in Eastern Europe and Central Asia and in other parts of Asia due to a high rate of new HIV infections. Sub-Saharan Africa remained the most heavily affected region, accounting for 71 per cent of all new HIV infections in 2008. The resurgence of the epidemic among men who had sex with men in high-income countries was increasingly well-documented. Differences were apparent in all regions, with some national epidemics continuing to expand even as the overall regional HIV incidence stabilized.

The estimated number of AIDS-related deaths in 2008 was 2 million worldwide. Seventy-two per cent of those deaths occurred in sub-Saharan Africa, where the epidemic continued to have an enormous impact on households, communities, businesses, public services and national economies, with women and girls continuing to be disproportionately affected. In 2008, sub-Saharan Africa accounted for 67 per cent of HIV infections worldwide, 68 per cent of new HIV infections among adults and 91 per cent of new HIV infections among children.

UNAIDS activities

In 2008, UNAIDS continued to promote universal access to comprehensive programmes of prevention, treatment, care and support, and advocate on behalf of people living with HIV, their families, their loved ones and the communities in which they lived. Working with Governments and civil society, and engaging with parliamentarians, UNAIDS sought to address stigma and discrimination and champion a global AIDS response that was evidence-informed and grounded in human rights.

UNAIDS and the Global Fund to Fight HIV/AIDS, Tuberculosis and Malaria entered into a comprehensive framework to improve the coordination of their efforts to aid countries in moving towards universal access to HIV prevention, treatment, care and support. Under the agreed division of responsibilities, UNAIDS would help countries develop evidence-informed funding proposals, support the Global Fund's technical review process, and provide countries with focused technical assistance to accelerate the implementation of programmes approved by the Global Fund. The Global Implementation Support Team (GIST)—a collaboration between the Global Fund, UNAIDS, UNFPA, UNICEF, WHO, the World Bank, UNDP, the German Agency for Technical Cooperation (GTZ), the United States Government, the AIDS Alliance, the International Council of AIDS Service Organizations (ICASO), the Interagency Coalition on AIDS and Development (ICAD) of Canada, and the International Centre for Technical Cooperation (ICTC) of Brazil—worked together to reduce barriers inhibiting the provision of universal access to HIV prevention, treatment, care and support services.

Programme Coordinating Board. The UNAIDS Programme Coordinating Board (PCB), at its twenty-second meeting (Chiang Mai, Thailand, 23–25 April), requested that the UNAIDS secretariat and WHO establish mechanisms for accountability of HIV programmes to prevent, diagnose and treat tuberculosis (TB) in people living with HIV, through the incorporation of relevant indicators in national AIDS action frameworks, which included the goal of reducing TB mortality in people living with HIV. PCB also requested that the UNAIDS secretariat work with WHO and other co-sponsoring organizations, as well as Governments, to expand the coverage of voluntary counselling and testing to achieve early diagnosis and treatment of HIV so that opportunistic infection, including TB, could be prevented. UNAIDS approved the new memorandum of understanding between UNAIDS and the Global Fund to Fight AIDS, Tuberculosis and Malaria, taking into account the comments from the floor. It endorsed, based on a review, the development of the next unified budget and workplan, as well as the extension to 2011 of the UNAIDS 2007–2010 strategic framework. It confirmed a four-year planning framework and a two-year budget cycle for the unified budget and workplan. It also endorsed the Executive Director's proposal for the utilization of $16 million of the available fund balance to cover priorities and investments that were not included in the 2008–2009 unified budget and workplan.

A July report [DP/2008/54], presented jointly by the Executive Boards of UNDP and UNFPA, provided an update on the implementation of decisions of PCB from its twenty-first and twenty-second meetings, held in December 2007 and April 2008, respectively. Key issues from those meetings that were of relevance to UNDP and UNFPA included: advancing implementation of the recommendations of the Global Task Team on Improving HIV/AIDS Coordination among Multilateral Institutions and International Donors; intensifying action on gender and HIV/AIDS; strengthening partnerships with the Global Fund to Fight AIDS, Tuberculosis and Malaria; extending the UNAIDS unified budget and workplan to a four-year planning cycle; and preparations for the second five-year independent evaluation of UNAIDS. UN country teams had established joint UN teams on HIV/AIDS in 89 countries, as recommended by the Global Task Team and as directed by the Secretary General in December 2005 [YUN 2005, p. 1327]. Fifty-six of those teams reported having developed a joint programme for more effective support to countries.

PCB in 2007 had requested UNAIDS to assist countries in planning, programming and implementing interventions in contexts that addressed diverse sexualities and women, girls and gender inequality, including through country pilots and other activities. In follow-up to the PCB decision, UNDP, along with the United Nations Development Fund for Women (UNIFEM), UNESCO, UNFPA, WHO and the UNAIDS secretariat, was establishing an expert group to assist in the design and oversight of a gender and HIV/AIDS pilot process in four countries. The pilot process would focus on assisting countries in planning, programming and implementing interventions that addressed women, girls and gender inequality, while a parallel process would be initiated to address male sexuality.

In April, PCB endorsed the extension of the unified budget work (UBW) planning period from a two-year cycle to four years, while maintaining a two-year budget cycle. In addition to reducing transaction costs, the four-year framework was expected to facilitate longer-term planning and a more effective monitoring of results. As a result, the 2008–2009 UBW would be extended to 2011.

PCB held an extraordinary meeting on 2 October and its twenty-third meeting from 15 to 17 December, both in Geneva.

Sickle-cell anaemia

In 2008, the United Nations focused on sickle-cell anaemia as a public health issue. By a 6 October letter [A/63/233] to the Secretary-General, the Congo requested that an item on the recognition of sickle-cell anaemia as a public health priority be included in the agenda of the General Assembly's sixty-third session. An explanatory memorandum annexed to the letter described sickle-cell anaemia as the most widespread genetic blood disorder in the world. According to WHO estimates, some 100 million people carried the sickle-cell trait and at least 500,000 children were born each year with the most severe form of the disease (Hb ss), mostly in Africa, the Caribbean and the Americas. Major disparities persisted between countries of the North and countries of the South with respect to management of the disease, including lack of access to appropriate health-care services for children in areas where it was most prevalent. Despite the seriousness of the issue, sickle-cell anaemia continued to receive little attention and remained unknown among the general public. Its pathology, however, had been the focus at various meetings of international organizations between 2000 and 2007. Those meetings concluded that there was need for a framework to promote care, research and training of health personnel to benefit those affected; greater recognition by the United Nations of sickle-cell anaemia as a public health priority; more public education aimed at increasing the life expectancy of affected persons; and that 19 June of each year be proclaimed the international day to combat sickle-cell anaemia.

In December, by resolution 63/237 (see below), the General Assembly recognized sick-cell anaemia as a public health problem and encouraged support for efforts to combat the disease.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December [meeting 73], the General Assembly adopted resolution 63/237 [draft: A/63/L.63 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 155].

Tobacco

The WHO Framework Convention on Tobacco Control (FCTC), adopted by the World Health Assembly in 2003 [YUN 2003, p. 1251], entered into force in 2005. At the end of 2008, 162 States and the European Union were parties to the Convention.

The third session of the Conference of the Parties to the Convention (Durban, South Africa, 17–22 November) [FCTC/COP/3/REC/1] took note of the recommendations of the working group on tobacco advertising on measures that would contribute to the elimination of cross-border advertising, promotion and sponsorship (article 13) [YUN 2007, p. 1267] and decided to further consider those recommendations at its fourth (2010) session. It also requested that the Convention secretariat assess the recommendations, propose options for further work, and report on its findings at the fourth session.

The session established a working group to elaborate guidelines for implementation of article 14 (demand reduction measures concerning tobacco dependence and cessation) of the Convention. The working group should prepare a report or, if possible, draft guidelines for consideration by the Conference of the Parties at its fourth session. In so doing, the working group should take into account the 2008 Convention secretariat report in relation to article 14 [FCTC/COP/3/10], which was presented to the third session for consideration. The session also requested the Convention secretariat to invite relevant intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to participate in the working group.

It decided further that the third session of the Intergovernmental Negotiating Body on a Protocol on Illicit Trade in Tobacco Products (see below) would be held from 28 June to 5 July 2009 in Geneva. In that regard, it requested the Convention secretariat to facilitate the participation of low-income and lower-middle-income parties in the work of that body.

Intergovernmental Negotiating Body on a Protocol on Illicit Trade in Tobacco Products. The second (2007) session of the Conference of the Parties to the FCTC established the Intergovernmental Negotiating Body on a Protocol on Illicit Trade in Tobacco Products [YUN 2007, p. 1267], which held its first (11–15 February) and second (20–25 October) sessions in Geneva [FCTC/COP/INB-IT/2/4 Rev.1]. The first session, which was attended by representatives of 132 parties, 20 States non-parties, three intergovernmental organizations and nine NGOs, discussed the objectives, scope and outline for a protocol. The Chairperson of the Body subsequently drafted a preliminary text, using as a basis the discussions from the first session, as well as existing international agreements, the provisions of the FCTC, and support from the Convention secretariat and other experts. The second session, which was attended by representatives of 133 parties, 16 States non-parties, two intergovernmental organizations and nine NGOs, accepted that text as a basis for negotiations and examined it through plenary, committee and working group deliberations. The third session of the Negotiating Body, to be held in Geneva from 28 June to 5 July 2009, would consider a revised text to be prepared by the Chairperson.

Ad Hoc Inter-Agency Task Force

In May, the Secretary-General submitted to the Economic and Social Council, in accordance with its decision 2006/248 [YUN 2006, p. 1421], a report on progress made by the Ad Hoc Inter-Agency Task Force on Tobacco Control [E/2008/59] in implementing multisectoral collaboration on tobacco or health. Using data from the WHO Report on the Global Tobacco Epidemic, 2008, the report described the burden of tobacco consumption and focused on areas of concern where inter-agency collaboration could be important. Those included issues related to tobacco growing and alternatives to tobacco; the link between tobacco and development; gender and tobacco; tobacco industry activities and corporate social responsibility; and exposure to second-hand smoke, particularly the issue of smoking on UN premises. The report also provided an update on the WHO Framework Convention on Tobacco Control and its implementation.

The Secretary-General recommended that exposure to second-hand smoke be strictly regulated in order to protect the health of workers. He also advised the United Nations to take a strong stance on the issue and adopt a resolution on smoke-free premises in accordance with Economic and Social Council resolution 2006/42 [YUN 2006, p. 1421].

On 22 July, the Council requested the Secretary-General to submit a report on the work of the Ad Hoc Inter-Agency Task Force on Tobacco Control to the Council at its substantive session of 2010 (decision 2008/232). Also on 22 July, the Council, recalling its resolution 2006/42 of July 2006 on smoke-free UN premises, recommended that the General Assembly, at its sixty-third session, consider the recommendations set out in that resolution (decision 2008/231).

On 3 November, by resolution 63/8 (see below), the General Assembly decided to implement a complete ban on smoking and the sale of tobacco products at UN Headquarters indoor premises. It also recommended that the same ban be implemented at all UN indoor premises, including regional and country offices.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 3 November [meeting 36], the General Assembly adopted resolution 63/8 [draft: A/63/L.14 & Add.1,] without vote [agenda item 40].

Smoke-free United Nations premises

The General Assembly,

Recalling Economic and Social Council resolution 2006/42 of 27 July 2006 and Council decision 2008/231 of 22 July 2008,

Noting with concern the serious harmful impact of second-hand smoke on the health of non-smokers, which can lead to disease, disability and death,

Acknowledging that second-hand smoke at the workplace is a fully preventable occupational health hazard,

Emphasizing the importance of protecting the well-being of individuals in their working environments,

1. Decides to implement a complete ban on smoking at United Nations Headquarters indoor premises and on sales of tobacco products at United Nations Headquarters premises;

2. Recommends the implementation of a complete ban on smoking at all United Nations indoor premises, including regional and country offices throughout the United Nations system, and the implementation of a complete ban on sales of tobacco products at all United Nations premises;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its sixty-fourth session a report on the measures for the implementation of the present resolution.

Malaria

In August, the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly a report [A/63/219] on the Decade to Roll Back Malaria in Developing Countries, Particularly in Africa (2001–2010), prepared by WHO pursuant to General Assembly resolution 62/180 [YUN 2007, p. 1268]. The Decade was proclaimed by the General Assembly in resolution 55/284 [YUN 2001, p. 1139]. The report was based on data collected for the World Malaria Report 2008, which would be published in September. It highlighted progress made in meeting the goals concerning malaria to be achieved by 2010.

Funding and availability of key products for malaria prevention and treatment had started to increase in Africa starting in 2005, and by 2006, 26 African countries had spent $688 million on malaria. The targets for use of insecticide-treated nets, prompt and appropriate use of antimalarial treatments, and use of intermittent preventive therapy in pregnant women in Africa were 80 per cent or more. Average usage of treated nets across 18 countries where surveys were conducted in 2006 was well below that target: 34 per cent of houses owned an insecticide-treated net, and 23 per cent of children under 5 years of age and 27 per cent of pregnant women slept under a treated net. Although that was much below the 2010 target, it was much higher than in previous years and represented a significant achievement. Among 18 national household surveys carried out in Africa in 2006, relatively high ownership and usage of insecticide-treated nets was found in Ethiopia, the Niger, Sao Tome and Principe and Zambia.

Between 2001 and 2006, national malaria control programmes in Africa reported large increases in the number of courses of antimalarial medicines supplied through public health services. In particular, dispensing of artemisinin-based combination therapy treatments increased from 6 million doses in 2005 to 45 million doses in 2006. Those figures probably underestimated usage, and the exact consumption of artemisinin-based treatments was not known. In 2006, the average percentage of children under 5 years of age receiving any type of antimalarial treatment for fever in the past two weeks was 38 per cent. The use of artemisinin-based combination therapy was much lower: just 3 per cent of children, on average. Therefore, access to that therapy remained inadequate. Coverage of pregnant women with two doses of intermittent preventive treatment was also low (18 per cent) compared to the target of above 80 per cent.

From an Africa-wide perspective, there was no evidence that malaria had declined from 2000 to 2006. However, there were two reasons for optimism. First, data available to WHO included data only until 2006; rapid increases in use of insecticide-treated nets and artemisinin-based combination therapy in 2006 and 2007 would not be expected to show their full impact by 2006. Secondly, four low-income countries (or parts of countries) with high coverage of insecticide-treated nets and antimalarial medicines—and indoor residual spraying of insecticide in some cases—showed dramatic declines in malaria. In Eritrea, Rwanda, Sao Tome and Principe and Zanzibar, United Republic of Tanzania, the burden caused by malaria appeared to be reduced by 50 per cent or more between 2000 and 2006–2007, thus achieving the morbidity reduction targets. Three other higher-income African countries (Namibia, South Africa and Swaziland) also had significant declines in reported malaria cases. Within Africa, the large increase in availability of products to prevent and treat malaria in 2006 and 2007 had a reasonable probability of yielding an impact in 2007 and 2008.

In regions outside of Africa, malaria cases fell by 50 per cent over the period 2000–2006 in at least 22 out of 64 countries. Thus, routine surveillance data indicated that at least 29 out of 109 countries were on course to meet targets for reducing the burden caused by malaria by 2010.

Plasmodium falciparum malaria parasites that had a reduced susceptibility to artemisinins, possibly heralding resistance, had been detected at the Cambodia/Thailand border, and malaria vectors in several countries had displayed some degree of resistance to pyrethroids. Therefore, the continuous monitoring of their efficacy and adoption of measures to mitigate the risk of resistance were considered priorities for malaria control.

The report made a number of recommendations. Member States should increase funding for financing long-lasting insecticide-treated nets, artemisinin-based combination therapy and indoor residual spraying. Countries and partners needed to ensure that drug- and insecticide-resistance testing was fully operational in order to protect insecticides and artemisinin-based combination therapy, and needed to strengthen health information systems so that data were monitored continuously at national, district and health-facility levels. Malaria partners needed to resolve financial and delivery bottlenecks that were responsible for stock-outs of long-lasting insecticide-treated nets, artemisinin-based combination therapy treatments, and rapid diagnostic tests. Malaria programme management at the country level needed to be strengthened to address low use of insecticide-treated nets, as well as stock-outs of long-lasting insecticide-treated nets, artemisinin-based combination therapy treatments and rapid diagnostic tests at health facilities.

Special Envoy for Malaria. On 14 February, the Secretary-General announced the appointment of Ray Chambers (United States) as his first Special Envoy for Malaria [SG/A/1118], charged with raising the issue of malaria on the international political and developmental agendas and doing all in his power to reduce child deaths from the disease. In December, by resolution 63/234 (see below), the General Assembly welcomed the designation of a Special Envoy for Malaria.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December [meeting 73], the General Assembly adopted resolution 63/234 [draft: A/63/L.62 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 43].

On 24 May, the World Health Assembly (WHA), at its sixty-first session (Geneva, 19–24 May) [WHA61/2008/REC/1], adopted a resolution [WHA61.21] on a global strategy and plan of action on public health, innovation and intellectual property. The Assembly adopted the strategy, which was annexed to the resolution, and urged members States, international organizations and stakeholders to prioritize and consider providing resources towards implementation of the strategy and plan of action. It also requested the Director-General to finalize outstanding components of the plan concerning timeframes, progress indicators and funding needs, and submit the final plan of action for consideration by the sixty-second WHA; to prepare a quick-start programme and begin to implement those elements of the strategy and plan which fell under the responsibility of WHO; to establish a working group to examine financing and coordination of research and development and submit a progress report to the sixty-second WHA and a final report to the sixty-third WHA; and to monitor progress in implementation of the strategy and plan and report progress to the sixty-third WHA.

The Assembly also adopted a resolution [WHA61.18] on monitoring the achievement of the health-related MDGs. It urged States to continue sustaining their high-level political commitments and to work with development partners towards strengthening national health systems, including health information systems for monitoring progress towards achievement of the MDGs. It requested the Director-General to submit annually a report on the status of progress made in the achievement of the health-related MDGs according to the new monitoring framework.

Another WHA resolution [WHA61.2] concerned the implementation of the 2005 International Health Regulations (IHR) [YUN 2005, p. 1331]. It urged States to ensure that the contact details of the IHR Focal Points were up to date; to ensure that the core national capacity requirements specified in Annex 1 (surveillance and response) to the Regulations were developed, strengthened and maintained; and to designate an expert for the IHR Roster of Experts. It requested the Director-General to support States with vulnerable health systems in strengthening core capacity requirements, and to submit, on an annual basis, a report including information provided by States parties and about the secretariat's activities, to enhance communication between national IHR Focal Points and to encourage information-sharing on actual outbreaks.

Further resolutions addressed the subjects of climate change and health; global immunization strategy; infant and young child nutrition; prevention and control of non-communicable diseases; and strategies to reduce the harmful use of alcohol.

Economic and Social Council action. On 25 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted the following theme for its 2009 thematic discussion: "Current global and national trends and their impact on social development, including public health" (decision 2008/257).

Oslo Ministerial Declaration. By a 4 December letter [A/63/591] to the Secretary-General, Brazil transmitted the text of the Oslo Ministerial Declaration: "Global health—a pressing foreign policy issue of our time", and the Oslo Agenda for Action: "Foreign policy taking up the challenges of global health", adopted by the Ministers of Foreign Affairs of Brazil, France, Indonesia, Norway, Senegal, South Africa and Thailand in Oslo on 20 March 2007.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

During the Assembly's deliberations, the Russian Federation presented an initiative to host the first global high-level (ministerial) conference on road safety in 2009 in Moscow, together with other actors interested in international cooperation in the area of road safety. That conference, in addition to providing a forum for information-sharing, would be an opportunity to discuss progress in implementing the recommendations of the World Report on Road Traffic Injury Prevention [YUN 2004, p. 1223] and General Assembly resolutions on improving global road safety.

Food aid

World Food Programme

At its 2008 substantive session in July, the Economic and Social Council had before it two reports pertaining to the World Food Programme (WFP): the annual report of the Executive Director for 2007 [E/2008/14], and the report of the WFP Executive Board [E/2008/36] containing the decisions and recommendations of its 2007 sessions. By decision 2008/215 of 18 July, the Council took note of those reports.

The WFP Executive Board, at its 2008 sessions—first regular session (4–6 February); annual session (9–12 June); and second regular session (27–30 October)—all of which were held in Rome, decided on organizational and programme matters and approved a number of projects. In October, the Board approved the Biennial Programme of Work of the Executive Board for 2009–2010 [WFP/EB.2/2008/11].

WFP activities

According to the Annual Performance Report for 2008 [WFP/EB.A/2009/4], WFP distributed 3.9 million metric tons (MT) of food aid in 2008, compared with 3.3 million MT in 2007. A total of 102.1 million hungry people were assisted in 78 countries during the year, compared with 86.1 million in 80 countries in 2007. Of the total number of people assisted in 2008, 17.6 million (23.8 million in 2007) were helped through development projects; 25 million (15.3 million in 2007) through emergency operations; and 59.4 million (47 million in 2007) through protracted relief and recovery operations.

During the year, WFP faced particular challenges stemming from dramatically rising food and fuel prices and turmoil in international financial systems. Progress towards achieving the MDGs was suddenly reversed. In March, WFP launched an extraordinary appeal for $755 million to cover estimated additional food and fuel costs. By May, new contributions had passed that target and eventually totalled $1 billion, including a historic contribution of $500 million from Saudi Arabia. Donor contributions for all of 2008 totalled $5 billion, more resources per annum than in any other year.

For the first time in a number of years, contributions for development projects increased substantially, reaching $406 million, the highest amount since 2000. Nevertheless, due to the elevated cost of the WFP food basket caused by high food prices, the actual number of beneficiaries of development assistance decreased to 17.6 million in 2008. The proportion of multilateral contributions also increased, from less than 10 per cent in recent years to 18 per cent in 2008.

Extreme weather continued to affect the work of WFP, which launched 23 relief operations for victims of floods, earthquakes and windstorms. The targeting of humanitarian and UN staff was a growing concern, with four WFP staff killed and 17 injured as a result of malicious acts. An increase in incidents targeting WFP contractors and partners led to an additional 13 fatalities.

Administrative and financial matters

In 2008, with the help of donor contributions and staff in the field and at headquarters, WFP scaled up assistance for hungry people affected by extreme weather, political turmoil, and complex emergencies such as those found in Afghanistan, Somalia and the Sudan, but also for vulnerable populations hit by soaring global food and fuel prices. Throughout the food price crisis, WFP increased food purchases for developing countries to $1.1 billion, thereby helping to break the cycle of hunger.

High food prices in 2008 affected WFP food procurement. WFP spent a record $1.4 billion on procurement in 2008, 30 per cent more than the previous record in 2004. Greater demand for assistance meant that WFP purchased 2.8 million MT of food, the second highest tonnage on record, but the high price of food in local markets meant that it procured a smaller proportion of food from low-income countries—26 per cent, compared with 55 per cent in 2007—and a greater proportion from middle-income countries—50 per cent, compared with 24 per cent in 2007.

WFP began to deploy new hunger solutions, informed by analysis of the causes of hunger and shaped by market conditions and people's needs. The WFP strategic plan (2008–2011), approved in June, aimed to support nations in meeting emergency needs and identifying longer-term solutions to hunger. The Plan's strategic objectives repositioned WFP from a food aid agency to a food assistance agency. More flexible approaches were set out, including cash and voucher programmes and Purchase for Progress (P4P) proposals to enable small-scale farmers to access new markets and to encourage increased production.

Vulnerability analysis and mapping, one of WFP's core strengths, was particularly important in the response to natural disasters and the food crisis in 2008, when the number of those assessments increased by 80 per cent. WFP widened the net of its assessment data, factoring in economic impact, food security issues, nutrition analyses and urban populations.

Building staff capacity was a focus in 2008, as WFP repositioning would have implications for staff capacity and adaptability in view of its changing needs. In that regard, the Executive Board adopted the policy paper "Preparing for Tomorrow Today: WFP Strategy for Managing and Developing Human Resources (2008–2011)" [WFP/EB.2/2008/4-C]. WFP also established an Ethics Office in 2008, as well as a Division of Performance and Accountability Management.

In 2008, the WFP financial statements were prepared for the first time in accordance with International Public Sector Accounting Standards, which introduced the presentation of revenues and expenses on a full accrual basis.

Private-sector partnerships were strong. The year ended with companies and foundations contributing $145.5 million in cash and $48.8 million in kind, double the value of private donations in 2007. The Bill and Melinda Gates Foundation provided a significant donation to help alleviate the effects of high food prices in West Africa. In conjunction with the Howard G. Buffett Foundation, it contributed a $66 million grant to the P4P initiative, designed to ensure that WFP procurements benefited small farmers.

In 2008, partnership with the World Bank increased as it rolled out its $1.2 billion Global Food Crisis Response Programme. Some funds from that programme were directly channelled to WFP, such as in the Central African Republic, Guinea Bissau and Liberia, and through Governments in Burundi and Nepal.

Resources and financing

In 2008, WFP operational expenditures exceeded $3.5 billion, an increase over the 2007 figure of approximately $2.8 billion. Confirmed contributions reached $5 billion, an increase from the 2007 figure of $2.7 billion. Of the total contributions, $2.3 billion went to protracted relief and recovery operations, $406.2 million to development activities, $172.0 million to special operations, $1.4 billion to emergency operations, including $60 million to the Immediate Response Account, and $131.8 million to other activities.

Food security

Food and Agriculture Organization

In 2008, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO) continued to address the world food crisis. FAO held a high-level conference on “World Food Security: the Challenges of Climate Change and Bioenergy” (Rome, 3–5 June), in which 181 member countries participated. Forty-two Heads of State attended the event, as well as 100 ministers and 60 non-governmental and civil society organizations. Issues addressed by the conference forums included the causes, consequences and solutions to high food prices; and the challenges that climate change, bioenergy, and transboundary pests and diseases posed to world food security.

The conference discussed the issue of high food prices in the context of an information paper entitled “Soaring food prices: facts, perspectives, impacts and actions required” [HLC/08/INF/1]. As noted in that document, agricultural commodity prices rose sharply in 2006 and 2007 and continued to rise even more sharply in the first three months of 2008. While the FAO food price index rose, on average, by 8 per cent in 2006 compared with the previous year, it increased by 24 per cent in 2007 compared to 2006. The increase in the average of the index for the first three months of 2008 compared to the same three months in 2007 stood at 53 per cent. The continuing surge in prices was led by vegetable oils, which on average increased by more than 97 per cent during the same period, followed by grains with 87 per cent, dairy products with 58 per cent and rice with 46 per cent. The prices of sugar and meat products also rose, but not to the same extent. Large increases in some commodity prices pointed to increased volatility and uncertainty in the market environment.

The conference concluded with the adoption of the Declaration of the High-Level Conference on World Food Security: the Challenges of Climate Change and Bioenergy, which reaffirmed the conclusions of the 1996 World Food Summit, including the Rome Declaration on World Food Security and the World Food Summit Plan of Action [YUN 1996, p. 1129]. The Declaration called on the international community to increase assistance for developing countries, in particular the least developed countries and those that were most negatively affected by high food prices. The Declaration underscored the need to help developing countries and countries in transition to expand agriculture and food production, and increase investment in agriculture, agribusiness and rural development, from both public and private sources. It noted that, in view of the challenges posed by climate change, the question of how to increase the resilience of food production systems was all the more essential.

Committee on World Food Security. At its one hundred and thirty-fifth session (Rome, 17–18 November), the FAO Council considered the report [CL 135/10] of the thirty-fourth session of the Committee on World Food Security (CFS) (Rome, 14–17 October), as well as several other CFS-issued reports, including the “Follow-Up to the World Food Summit: Report on Progress in the Implementation of the Plan of Action” [CFS:2008/3]; the report on “Proposals to Strengthen the Committee on World Food Security to Meet New Challenges” [CFS:2008/6]; and the report on the “Assessment of the World Food Security and Nutrition Situation” [CFS:2008/2].

High-level Task Force on Food Security Crisis.

In April, the Secretary-General established a High-level Task Force (HLTF) on the Global Food Security Crisis under his chairmanship. The HLTF brought together relevant parts of the UN Secretariat, UN agencies, funds and programmes, and the Bretton Woods institutions (the World Bank Group and the International Monetary Fund) to produce a unified response to the food price crisis. To that end, it developed a strategy and action plan—the Comprehensive Framework for Action (CFA). The CFA comprised a twin-track approach: one set of actions aimed to meet the immediate needs of food-insecure populations; the second set aimed to build resilience and contribute to longer-term global food and nutrition security. In December, by resolution 63/235 (see below), the General Assembly acknowledged the establishment of the HLTF by the Secretary-General.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December [meeting 73], the General Assembly adopted resolution 63/235 [draft: A/63/L.64 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 107].

Agriculture development and food security

The General Assembly,

Recalling the Rio Declaration on Environment and Development, Agenda 21, the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21, the Johannesburg Declaration on Sustainable Development and the Plan of Implementation of the World Summit on Sustainable Development (“Johannesburg Plan of Implementation”), the Monterrey Consensus of the International Conference on Financing for Development, the 2005 World Summit Outcome and the Doha Declaration on Financing for Development: outcome document of the Follow-up International Conference on Financing for Development to Review the Implementation of the Monterrey Consensus,

Reaffirming the goal set out in paragraph 19 of the United Nations Millennium Declaration, to halve, by 2015, the proportion of the world's people whose income is less than one dollar a day and the proportion of people who suffer from hunger,

Recalling the Rome Declaration on World Food Security and the World Food Summit Plan of Action, the Declaration of the World Food Summit: five years later, including the goal of achieving food security for all through an ongoing effort to eradicate hunger in all countries, with an immediate view to reducing by half the number of undernourished people by no later than 2015, as well as the commitment to achieving the Millennium Development Goals,

Recognizing that agriculture plays a crucial role in addressing the needs of a growing global population and is inextricably linked to poverty eradication, especially in developing countries, and stressing that integrated and sustainable agriculture and rural development approaches are therefore essential to achieving enhanced food security and food safety in an environmentally sustainable way,

Emphasizing the urgent need to increase efforts at the national, regional and international level to address food security and agriculture development as part of the international development agenda,

Remaining concerned that high and volatile food prices and the global food crisis pose a serious challenge to the fight against poverty and hunger, as well as to the efforts of developing countries to attain food security and achieve the objective of reducing by half the number of undernourished people by no later than 2015 as well as other internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals, and reiterating that the global food crisis has multiple and complex causes and that its consequences require a comprehensive and coordinated response in the short, medium and long term by national Governments and the international community,

Welcoming the holding of the High-level Conference on World Food Security: the Challenges of Climate Change and Bioenergy, from 3 to 5 June 2008 in Rome, and acknowledging the initiative of the Secretary-General in establishing the High-level Task Force on the Global Food Security Crisis, which has produced the Comprehensive Framework for Action, as well as other multilateral, regional and national initiatives,

Taking note with appreciation of the work undertaken by relevant international bodies and organizations, including the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the International Fund for Agricultural Development and the World Food Programme, on agriculture development and enhancing food security and by the Commission on Sustainable Development on the thematic cluster of issues on agriculture, rural development, land, drought, desertification and Africa,

Emphasizing that the United Nations can play an effective role in building a global consensus in addressing agriculture development and food security,

1. Reiterates the need to adequately and urgently address agriculture development and food security in the context of national and international development policies;

2. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its sixty-fourth session an item entitled "Agriculture development and food security", to be taken up by the Second Committee;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its sixty-fourth session a report on national, regional and international efforts within the context of the present resolution, under the item entitled "Agriculture development and food security", in close cooperation and coordination with United Nations relevant bodies and organizations.

Nutrition

Standing Committee on Nutrition

The thirty-fifth session of the United Nations System Standing Committee on Nutrition (SCN) (Hanoi, Viet Nam, 3–6 March) conducted a symposium on "Accelerating the Reduction of Maternal and Child Undernutrition". The Committee considered reports from its working groups on nutrition in emergencies; nutrition and HIV/AIDS; nutrition, ethics and human rights; breastfeeding and complementary feeding; household food security; nutrition of school age children; capacity development in food and nutrition; micronutrients; and nutrition throughout the life cycle.

Among other actions, SCN participants agreed that the Lancet Nutrition Series, launched in January, brought an important new body of evidence to address the enormous burden and consequences of maternal and child undernutrition that inhibited global development. That Series also provided important new evidence for the benefit of a set of specific nutrition interventions which, in addition to other poverty reduction efforts, could help accelerate the reduction of maternal and child undernutrition and, in doing so, contribute to achieving the MDGs. Participants, including the SCN constituencies (UN agencies, bilateral partners and non-governmental and civil society organizations) and thematic working groups, discussed how the Series would help move the agenda forward in their respective working areas and the role of SCN in making that happen. They also agreed to draw together the conclusions from those discussions and prepare a set of recommendations.

UNU activities

The United Nations University, through its Food and Nutrition Programme for Human and Social Development (UNU-FNP), assisted developing regions in enhancing individual, organizational and institutional capacities, carried out coordinated global research activities and served as an academic arm for the UN system in areas of food and nutrition that were best addressed in a non-regulatory, non-normative environment.

UNU-FNP, together with Cornell University—a UNU-associated institution—and the UNU Office at the United Nations in New York, held a series of four public symposia aiming to identify the gaps in knowledge and policy which limited sub-Saharan Africa in achieving the MDGs for the alleviation of hunger, malnutrition and poor health. Since more Africans were suffering from those conditions in 2008 than in 1990—the beginning of the MDG period—the problem was severe and the trends continued to worsen. Knowledge about food systems and health and nutrition in Africa was abundant, but understanding of the interaction between food systems and health and nutrition was deficient, and the potential health gains from changes in the food system were frequently overlooked in policy design and implementation. The series began in 2007, but the latter two symposia, entitled “The Governance Dimension of the MDGs in Africa” (New York, 21 May) and “HIV/AIDS and Public Health” (New York, 19 September), took place in 2008. Results informed the General Assembly’s high-level meeting on “Africa’s Development Needs” (see p. 1007).

Further UNU activities, as indicated by its annual report for 2008, included an Africa Day Symposium at the UNU Centre, Tokyo (Tokyo, 9 September), held in conjunction with the African Diplomatic Corps, entitled “Africa’s Food Situation: Crisis to Opportunities; New Perspectives for Africa”. UNU-FNP conducted two training courses (Potchefstroom, South Africa, 11–21 March and Ouarzazate, Morocco, 23–30 June) as part of its African Nutrition Leadership Programme. The UNU World Institute for Development Economics Research (UNU-WIDER), located in Helsinki, Finland, conducted a project on health inequalities and development that aimed to provide a better understanding of the factors that underpin health status in developing and transitional countries, particularly for children. UNU-WIDER also published a policy brief entitled “Can We Eradicate Hunger?” that addressed the topic of hunger from economic, social and political perspectives, drawing upon academic research of the experiences of international organizations and civil society.

International drug control

In 2008, the United Nations, through the Commission on Narcotic Drugs, the International Narcotics Control Board (INCB) and the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime (UNODC), continued to strengthen international cooperation in countering the world drug problem. Activities focused on carrying out the 1998 Action Plan against Illicit Manufacture, Trafficking and Abuse of Amphetamine-type Stimulants and Their Precursors; the 1998 Action Plan on International Cooperation on the Eradication of Illicit Drug Crops and on Alternative Development; and the 1999 Action Plan for the Implementation of the Declaration on the Guiding Principles of Drug Demand Reduction.

UNODC provided technical assistance, legal advice and research to the main UN policymaking bodies in the field of drug control and assisted Member States in developing domestic legislation on drugs and in ratifying and implementing the international drug control conventions. It developed and promoted field-based technical cooperation projects with a view to enhancing the capacity of States to counteract illicit drugs, and supported States in illicit crop monitoring and alternative development programmes in the framework of poverty reduction and sustainable development strategies. It also expanded its initiatives to promote drug supply and demand reduction, and to prevent and treat drug abuse and dependence. States were assisted in improving border control practices and promoting the integration of drug control approaches and strategies into a broader development agenda.

The Commission on Narcotic Drugs—the main UN policymaking body dealing with drug control—recommended two draft resolutions to the Economic and Social Council for adoption and adopted resolutions on the follow-up to the General Assembly's twentieth (1998) special session on: countering the world drug problem; demand reduction and the prevention of drug abuse; HIV/AIDS and other blood-borne diseases; illicit cultivation, manufacture and trafficking; West Africa; and Afghanistan.

INCB reviewed the origins of international drug control and how it had evolved in the twentieth century. It discussed the challenges facing the international community in applying the drug conventions, how Governments were responding to them and what action they might wish to take. It continued to oversee the implementation of the three major international drug control conventions, analyse the global drug situation and draw the attention of Governments to weaknesses in national control and treaty compliance, making suggestions and recommendations for improvements at the national and international levels.

In July, the Council emphasized that illicit production of narcotic drugs was often related to development problems—in particular poverty, poor health conditions and illiteracy—and should be tackled in a larger development context through a holistic and integrated approach. It agreed on the relevance of enhancing alternative development, focusing on improving people's livelihoods, and recognized the role played by developing countries with extensive expertise in those areas and the importance of outreach activities aimed at promoting best practices and lessons learned. In another July resolution, the Council noted that the illicit cultivation of opium poppy and production of opiates in Afghanistan had increased and that the bulk of the illicit drugs originating in Afghanistan were smuggled through Iran, Pakistan and other neighbouring countries before reaching their countries of destination. The Council therefore encouraged cross-border cooperation, enhanced coordination and information exchange among Afghanistan, Iran and Pakistan, and called on States and UNODC to provide technical assistance and support for strengthening their initiatives and efforts to fight drug trafficking. In December, the General Assembly adopted a resolution on international cooperation against the world drug problem that addressed the follow-up to the twentieth special session and action by the UN system. It recognized that countering the world drug problem was a common and shared responsibility that should be dealt with through sustained and collective efforts, and reaffirmed the importance of a balanced approach between demand and supply reduction.

Follow-up to twentieth special session

Report of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolutions 55/65 [YUN 2000, p. 1175], 56/124 [YUN 2001, p. 1144] and 62/176 [YUN 2007, p. 1277], the Secretary-General submitted a July report [A/63/111] on international cooperation against the world drug problem: progress achieved in meeting the goals and targets set out in the Political Declaration adopted by the Assembly at its twentieth special session in resolution S-20/2 [YUN 1998, p. 1136]. The report described action taken by the Commission on Narcotic Drugs and the UN system to counter the world drug problem, including demand reduction; supply reduction and law enforcement; alternative livelihoods; data collection, research and monitoring of drug trends; and strengthening of the drug programme of UNODC.

The Secretary-General stated that Member States had an obligation to reaffirm the commitments that they had assumed by adopting the Political Declaration, noting that progress continued to be made in all areas addressed therein; despite an apparent increase in the absolute numbers of cannabis, cocaine and opiate users, the annual prevalence levels remained stable in all drug markets. He observed that, even if a country had developed a national drug control strategy and established a national authority to coordinate its implementation, there might still be a need to strengthen that strategy or authority politically or in terms of its technical, institutional or human resource capacity. The impact of the world drug problem on the social, economic, health, political and governance aspects of societies remained significant and States had an obligation to consider their commitments, review achievements and develop new actions. He recommended that States call for UNODC to be provided with adequate regular budget resources, and encouraged them to continue and increase their financial and political support for its work. The Secretary-General also made recommendations in the areas of demand reduction; amphetamine-type stimulants (ATS) and their precursors; judicial cooperation; money-laundering; and illicit crop eradication and alternative development.

Commission on Narcotic Drugs. In response to Commission on Narcotic Drugs resolutions 49/1 [YUN 2006, p. 1431] and 50/12 [YUN 2007, p. 1277], the UNODC Executive Director submitted a report on the collection and use of complementary drug-related data and expertise to support the global assessment by Member States of the implementation of the declarations and measures adopted at the twentieth special session [E/CN.7/2008/8]. He summarized work undertaken by UNODC to engage with experts from all geographical regions and from relevant international organizations on the collection and use of data and expertise, and to obtain supplementary information.

The report also reflected the outcome of informal expert consultations (Vienna, 6–8 February and 18–20 September 2007) organized by UNODC, with the financial support of the European Commission. The experts made observations and recommendations relevant to the 10-year assessment of the outcome of the Assembly's twentieth special session and to the period beyond the assessment. With regard to possible action beyond 2008, the experts made suggestions on such areas as: demand reduction; eradicating illicit crop cultivation and alternative development; judicial cooperation; ATS and their precursors; control of precursors; and money-laundering.

In February, the UNODC Executive Director submitted to the Commission his fifth report on the world drug problem [E/CN.7/2008/2 & Add.1–6], prepared pursuant to Commission resolutions 42/11 [YUN 1999, p. 1191] and 50/12 [YUN 2007, p. 1277]. The report reviewed progress achieved by Member States in implementing the goals and targets set at the twentieth special session, based on responses received from Governments to the questionnaire for each of the five reporting periods, from 1998 to 2007. The information covered the subjects addressed in the action plans: national drug control strategies; demand reduction; eradication of illicit crops and alternative development; judicial cooperation; ATS and their precursors; control of precursors; and countering money-laundering. By 6 November 2007, 108 States had returned their responses for the reporting period 2006–2007.

The report showed that States had made significant progress over the preceding 10 years in implementing the goals and targets set at the twentieth special session. Most responding States had adopted balanced and comprehensive national drug control strategies and established central coordination bodies to guide national drug control policies. In relation to the drug abuse situation, consumption pointed towards stabilization at the global level, and a decline was generally occurring in countries that had implemented long-term and sustained demand reduction strategies. Most States had made progress in establishing national demand reduction strategies, assessing the abuse problem and providing prevention, treatment and rehabilitation services. Progress achieved in reducing opium poppy cultivation in South-East Asia was offset by an increase in cultivation and illicit opium production in Afghanistan. In Bolivia, Colombia and Peru, the area under coca bush cultivation had declined between 1998 and 2006; however, higher crop yields had resulted in an increase in cocaine manufacture during that period. Since 1998, States had developed and improved national plans and strategies to address illicit crop cultivation, including alternative development and eradication measures. Nevertheless, financial constraints continued to pose difficulties for the sustainability of alternative development programmes. Progress had been made in judicial cooperation, and adherence to the international drug control treaties was virtually universal. Measures relating to extradition, mutual legal assistance, controlled delivery and law enforcement cooperation had registered a high rate of implementation. Progress had also been achieved in implementing the Action Plan against Illicit Manufacture, Trafficking and Abuse of ATS and Their Precursors, contained in resolution S-20/4A [YUN 1998, p. 1139], adopted at the Assembly's special session. The percentage of countries that had carried out precursor control measures increased substantially. Most States had placed under control the substances listed in the 1988 United Nations Convention against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances [ibid., p. 690], and major successes were noted in the area of international cooperation. Compliance with measures to combat money-laundering had increased since 1998, with most Member States having put in place legislation and measures to counter drug-related money-laundering.

On 14 March [E/2008/28 (res. 51/4)], the Commission on Narcotic Drugs established open-ended, intergovernmental expert working groups to work in a coordinated manner on the topics corresponding to the subjects of the action plans, declarations and measures adopted at the Assembly's twentieth special session. Each of the groups would assess both the achievement of the goals and targets set at the special session and areas requiring further action, and draw conclusions for further intersessional discussions. UNODC was asked to organize the meetings of the working groups back-to-back with each other, and States were urged to ensure the participation of experts and practitioners and invited to provide resources for the attendance of experts from developing countries. The Commission decided that intersessional meetings should be held during the second half of 2008 to prepare recommendations for the decisions to be adopted at its fifty-second (2009) session. The Commission resolved that a political declaration and other declarations and measures to enhance international cooperation should be considered and adopted at the high-level segment, identifying future priorities and areas requiring further action, as well as goals and targets to be set in countering the world drug problem beyond 2009. It also resolved that the outcome of the high-level segment should be submitted to the Assembly, and called on States and observers to ensure representation at the highest possible level.

International Narcotics Control Board. In its report covering 2008 [Sales No. E.09.XI.1], INCB considered follow-up to the Assembly's twentieth special session. In accordance with Commission resolution 51/4 (above), the Board had been involved in the preparations for the high-level segment of the Commission's fifty-second session. It participated in and contributed to the five open-ended intergovernmental expert working groups, providing papers on: demand reduction; supply reduction; countering money-laundering and promoting judicial cooperation; international cooperation on illicit drug crop eradication and on alternative development; and control of precursors and ATS. The Board underlined that the goals set for 2008 by the Assembly's twentieth special session continued to be relevant and that new challenges to international drug control had emerged. It called on Governments and the international community to achieve further progress in addressing the world drug problem. INCB would continue to work with Governments and international organizations towards the adoption, at the Commission's 2009 high-level segment, of a political declaration and action plans.

The Report of INCB on Follow-up to the Twentieth Special Session of the General Assembly [Sales No. E.09.XI.7] outlined the activities undertaken by the Board and progress made. It also identified remaining challenges and presented recommendations on further action to be taken by Governments and international organizations.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December [meeting 71], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee [A/63/432], adopted resolution 63/197 without vote [agenda item 98].

International cooperation against the world drug problem

The General Assembly,

Recalling the United Nations Millennium Declaration, the provisions of the 2005 World Summit Outcome addressing the world drug problem, its resolution 62/176 of 18 December 2007 and its other previous relevant resolutions,

Reaffirming the Political Declaration adopted by the General Assembly at its twentieth special session and the importance of meeting the objectives targeted for 2008,

Reaffirming also the joint ministerial statement adopted at the ministerial segment of the forty-sixth session of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs, the Action Plan for the Implementation of the Declaration on the Guiding Principles of Drug Demand Reduction and the Action Plan on International Cooperation on the Eradication of Illicit Drug Crops and on Alternative Development adopted by the General Assembly at its twentieth special session,

Recalling that, in its resolution 62/176, it welcomed the decision by the Commission on Narcotic Drugs to convene a high-level segment, during its fifty-second session, in order to allow time to assess the implementation of the declarations and measures adopted by the General Assembly at its twentieth special session,

Gravely concerned that, despite continued increased efforts by States, relevant organizations, civil society and non-governmental organizations, the world drug problem continues to constitute a serious threat to public health and safety and the well-being of humanity, in particular children and young people and their families, and to the national security and sovereignty of States, and that it undermines socio-economic and political stability and sustainable development,

Concerned by the serious challenges and threats posed by the continuing links between illicit drug trafficking and terrorism and other national and transnational criminal activities and transnational criminal networks, inter alia, trafficking in human beings, especially women and children, money-laundering, financing of terrorism, corruption, trafficking in arms and trafficking in chemical precursors, and reaffirming that strong and effective international cooperation is needed to counter these threats,

Recalling Commission on Narcotic Drugs resolution 51/10 of 14 March 2008, in which the Commission emphasized the importance of further national and international measures to counter trafficking in substances used as precursors in the illicit manufacture of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances, including synthetic drugs,

Recalling also Commission on Narcotic Drugs resolution 51/11 of 14 March 2008, in which the Commission recognized the increasing links between illicit drug trafficking and illicit manufacturing of and trafficking in firearms,

Underlining the value of objective, scientific, balanced and transparent assessment by Member States of the global progress achieved and of the difficulties encountered in meeting the goals and targets set by the General Assembly at its twentieth special session,

Reaffirming that countering the world drug problem in all its aspects requires a political commitment to reducing supply, as an integral component of a balanced and comprehensive drug control strategy under the principles enshrined in the Political Declaration adopted by the General Assembly at its twentieth special session and in the measures to enhance international cooperation to counter the drug problem, including the Action Plan on International Cooperation on the Eradication of Illicit Drug Crops and on Alternative Development, adopted at that session,

Reaffirming equally that reducing illicit drug use and its consequences requires a political commitment to efforts to reduce demand, which must be demonstrated by sustained widespread demand reduction initiatives that integrate a comprehensive public health approach spanning the spectrum of prevention, education, early intervention, treatment, recovery support, rehabilitation and reintegration efforts in accordance with the Declaration on the Guiding Principles of Drug Demand Reduction adopted by the General Assembly at its twentieth special session,

Recognizing the importance of the effective evaluation of comprehensive strategies, including alternative development programmes, at the national and international levels to combat the world drug problem,

Recognizing also that international cooperation in countering drug abuse and illicit production and trafficking has shown that positive results can be achieved through sustained and collective efforts, and expressing its appreciation for the initiatives in this regard,

Bearing in mind the important role that civil society, including non-governmental organizations, plays in combating the world drug problem, and noting that there are various initiatives at all levels undertaken in this regard, in particular the "Beyond 2008" process, which provided an opportunity for non-governmental organizations to contribute to the review of the twentieth special session of the General Assembly,

Conventions

International efforts to control narcotic drugs were governed by three global conventions: the 1961 Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs [YUN 1961, p. 382], which, with some exceptions of detail, replaced earlier narcotics treaties and was amended by the 1972 Protocol [YUN 1972, p. 397] to strengthen the role of INCB; the 1971 Convention on Psychotropic Substances [YUN 1971, p. 380]; and the 1988 United Nations Convention against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances [YUN 1988, p. 690].

As at 31 December, 183 States were parties to the 1961 Convention, as amended by the 1972 Protocol. Afghanistan, Chad and the Lao People's Democratic Republic continued to be parties to the 1961 Convention in its unamended form only.

The number of parties to the 1971 Convention remained at 183 as at 31 December.

At year's end, 182 States and the European Union (EU) were parties to the 1988 Convention.

Commission action. In March [E/2008/28], the Commission on Narcotic Drugs reviewed implementation of the international drug control treaties. It had before it the INCB report covering its 2007 activities [YUN 2007, p. 1283] and the 2007 INCB technical report on the implementation of Article 12 of the 1988 Convention, dealing with precursors and chemicals frequently used in the illicit manufacture of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances [E/INCB/2007/4].

On 14 March [E/2008/28 (res. 51/9)], the Commission urged Governments to contribute to maintaining a balance between the licit supply of and demand for opiate raw materials used for medical and scientific purposes, supporting traditional and established supplier countries, and to prevent the proliferation of production sources. It also urged producer countries to adhere strictly to the provisions of the 1961 Convention, as amended by the 1972 Protocol, and to prevent the illicit production or diversion of opiate raw materials to illicit channels, and encouraged improvements in opium poppy cultivation and the production of opiate raw materials. Consumer countries were urged to assess their licit requirements for opiate raw materials realistically on the basis of actual consumption and utilization of those raw materials and the opiates derived from them, and to communicate those requirements to INCB in order to ensure effective supply; countries cultivating opium poppy should limit its cultivation to the estimates confirmed by the Board, in accordance with the 1961 Convention; and producer countries, in providing estimates of such cultivation, should consider the actual demand requirements of importing countries. The Commission endorsed the concern expressed by the Board in 2005 regarding the advocacy by a non-governmental organization of legalization of opium poppy cultivation in Afghanistan and urged Governments to oppose such proposals and strengthen control in compliance with their treaty obligations. It urged countries where opium poppy had not been cultivated for the licit production of opiate raw materials to refrain from engaging in the commercial cultivation of opium poppy, in order to avoid the proliferation of supply sites, and to enact legislation to prevent and prohibit the proliferation of sites used for the production of opiate raw materials. It also urged countries where opium poppy was cultivated for the extraction of alkaloids to implement and maintain control mechanisms in accordance with the 1961 Convention, as amended by the 1972 Protocol. INCB was commended for its efforts in monitoring the implementation of the relevant Economic and Social Council resolutions and was requested to continue its efforts.

Also on 14 March [res. 51/17], the Commission called on States to ensure national restrictions on narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances in relation to cannabis, and to comply fully with the provisions of the international conventions with regard to cannabis.

On the same date [res. 51/12], the Commission adopted a resolution on strengthening cooperation between UNODC and other UN entities for the promotion of human rights in the implementation of the international drug control treaties. It reaffirmed that countering the world drug problem was a common and shared responsibility that should be addressed in a multilateral setting. This required an integrated and balanced approach to be carried out in conformity with the UN Charter and other provisions of international law and, in particular, with respect for the sovereignty and territorial integrity of States, the principle of non-intervention in their internal affairs and all human rights and fundamental freedoms, and on the basis of the principles of equal rights and mutual respect. It requested that UNODC continue to work closely with the competent UN entities, including the UN human rights agencies, and requested the UNODC Executive Director to report to the Commission at its fifty-third (2010) session.

INCB action. In its report covering 2008 [Sales No. E.09.XI.1], INCB reiterated its request to those States that were not parties to one or more of the international drug control treaties to accede to them without delay and called on Governments to furnish in a timely manner all statistical reports required under the conventions and to allocate adequate resources to their competent authorities for reporting purposes. Governments were asked to identify the causes for deficiencies in reporting statistics and/or estimates. The Board encouraged Governments to review and update on a regular basis the assessments of their actual medical and scientific requirements for psychotropic substances and to introduce the requirement of import and export authorizations for substances in Schedules III and IV of the 1971 Convention. It further encouraged Governments to revise the annual estimates of their legitimate requirements for four precursor chemicals used in the manufacture of synthetic drugs and to provide accurate information. States that had not done so were urged to provide information on substances used in the illicit manufacture of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances, pursuant to article 12 of the 1988 Convention.

Distribution of internationally controlled drugs on the unregulated market

On 14 March [E/2008/28 (res. 51/13)], the Commission, responding to the threat posed by the distribution of internationally controlled drugs on the unregulated market, a problem addressed by INCB in 2006 [YUN 2006, p. 1438], requested that Member States offer co-operation and support to affected States through the provision of human and material resources and urged States that were parties to the international conventions to fully implement their mandatory provisions, including by adopting laws prohibiting the illicit distribution of internationally controlled substances on the unregulated market and by enforcing those laws. The Commission encouraged affected States to adopt measures to enable the swift detection of new forms of illicit distribution of internationally controlled drugs, requested States to implement the applicable 2006 INCB recommendations, and encouraged concerned States to increase the availability of drugs through legitimate channels, particularly in areas where there was little or no access. It invited UNODC to explore ways to cooperate with the World Health Organization (WHO), the World Customs Organization (WCO), the International Criminal Police Organization (INTERPOL) and other international bodies in assisting States in implementing INCB's recommendations.

INCB shared the Commission's concern over the fact that the distribution of internationally controlled substances in the unregulated market was increasingly characterized by the involvement of organized criminal networks and by the expansion of the range of products containing narcotic drugs or psychotropic substances on the market. It emphasized the need for all parties to strictly enforce the applicable control requirements and the need for States to enforce legislation. The Board stated that the elimination of the unregulated market should be done through a concerted effort involving Governments and relevant parties such as the pharmaceutical industry, professional associations and international organizations.

Centennial of the convening of the International Opium Commission

On 14 March [E/2008/28 (res. 51/8)], the Commission decided to commemorate on 26 February 2009 the centennial of the convening of the International Opium Commission. It noted with appreciation that China would host an event to celebrate the centennial and encouraged other Governments, organizations and civil society to hold celebrations to mark it. China was invited to report on the event and the Secretary-General was requested to transmit the Commission's resolution to Governments and relevant international organizations.

International Narcotics Control Board

The 13-member International Narcotics Control Board held its ninety-first (4–8 February), ninety-second (19–30 May) and ninety-third (28 October–14 November) sessions, all in Vienna.

In accordance with the tasks assigned to it under the international conventions, the Board monitored the implementation of the international drug control treaties and maintained a permanent dialogue with Governments. The information received from Governments was used to identify the enforcement of treaty provisions requiring them to limit to medical and scientific purposes the licit manufacture of, trade in and distribution and use of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances. The Board, which was requested by the treaties to report annually on the drug control situation worldwide, noted weaknesses in national control and treaty compliance and made recommendations for improvements at the national and international levels.

The Board's 2008 report [Sales No. E.09.XI.1] reviewed the historical development of international drug control, describing its origins and outlining how it had evolved over the course of the twentieth century. It discussed the challenges facing the international community in applying the conventions, how Governments were responding and what action they should take. Some of those challenges, which were not envisaged at the time the conventions were drawn up and yet affected the capacity of Governments to implement them, included: health-related challenges; legal challenges; the challenge of prevention; and the challenge of globalization. The Board stated that the international control system for narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances could be considered one of the twentieth century's most important achievements in international cooperation: over 95 per cent of the UN membership (representing 99 per cent of the world's population) were States parties to the three conventions, and the number of substances controlled under the 1961 and 1971 Conventions had risen steadily over the years. At the same time, demand for narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances had soared: global consumption of morphine had grown from less than 5 tons in 1987 to 39.2 tons in 2007. In the period 1998–2007, the number of countries affected by illicit drug crop cultivation was reduced; however, where such cultivation continued to occur, the problems had become more acute for the population as a whole. To ensure more effective implementation of the three international drug treaties, the Board invited Governments to consider how best to ensure their efficient functioning; to make greater investments in prevention, especially with regard to youth and vulnerable groups; and to study the discrepancies between international and domestic law with a view to fulfilling their obligations under the conventions. The Board encouraged Governments of countries where the consumption of opioid analgesics was low to stimulate their rational use through measures promoted by the Access to Controlled Medications Programme, a WHO initiative in which the Board was an active participant, and to ensure that such incentives were accompanied by measures to prevent the diversion of such drugs. Governments might work with the pharmaceutical industry with a view to making high-quality opioid analgesics more affordable in the poorest countries, and international aid programmes might donate essential drugs as part of their aid programmes. The Board recommended that Governments study the Fairtrade model with a view to improving the trading position and market access for products from alternative development projects in areas affected by illicit cultivation, taking into consideration the appropriateness and feasibility in each case. Governments were also encouraged to support multilateral initiatives against cybercrime and to use the Guidelines for Governments on Preventing the Illegal Sale of Internationally Controlled Substances through the Internet. The Guidelines were developed by INCB and included recommendations promoting measures to facilitate national and multilateral co-operation on legal steps such as the registration and licensing of Internet pharmacies, and on campaigns to raise awareness of the risks involved in online purchases.

INCB stated that the diversion from licit distribution channels and abuse of pharmaceutical preparations containing narcotic drugs were taking place in an increasing number of countries. In some countries, the extent of their abuse surpassed that of illicit drugs. The narcotic drugs most often diverted and abused included codeine, dextropropoxyphene, dihydrocodeine, fentanyl, hydrocodone, methadone, morphine, oxycodone, pethidine and tramperidine. The Board invited Governments to remain vigilant with regard to the abuse of pharmaceutical preparations containing narcotic drugs and of preparations containing substances not internationally controlled.

The Board called on countries that produced and/or utilized opiate raw materials to ensure that their estimates and statistics were of a high quality and to keep INCB informed of any new developments. Global stocks of opiate raw materials should cover global demand for about one year to ensure the availability of opiates for medical and scientific purposes. The Board called on Governments to contribute to the maintenance of a balance between the licit supply of and demand for opiate raw materials and to prevent the proliferation of sources of their production. It appealed to them to comply with Commission resolution 51/9 (see p. 1353). Global consumption of opioid analgesics for the treatment of moderate to severe pain had increased during the preceding decade, mainly in Europe and North America. However, consumption remained low in many developing countries. INCB urged Governments concerned to identify the impediments to their adequate use and to improve their availability for medical purposes.

The diversion of psychotropic substances—mainly stimulants, benzodiazepines and the analgesic buprenorphine—from licit domestic distribution channels continued, and the non-medical use of prescription drugs containing psychotropic substances remained a serious and growing problem in many countries. The diversion and abuse of preparations containing buprenorphine remained a cause for concern; abuse had increased in countries where it was used for the treatment of opioid addicts. The Board requested countries and territories that authorized its licit consumption to inform it of the control measures applicable to it.

The Board called on Governments to increase their vigilance regarding trafficking in and abuse of preparations containing buprenorphine and to enhance control measures applied to the domestic distribution of such preparations and their use for the treatment of addicts. It also requested Governments to monitor the consumption levels of prescription drugs containing psychotropic substances, with a view to identifying possible diversions, and to raise awareness about the consequences of their abuse. It noted that the diversion of preparations containing controlled psychotropic substances through illegally operating Internet sites continued. Mail was used for trafficking to a considerable extent in many countries. Improved cooperation between postal, customs and police authorities at the national and international levels was therefore required.

As to precursors, the Board noted that, as at 1 November, 98 countries and territories had registered to use the Pre-Export Notification Online (PEN Online) system, the automated electronic system for exchanging pre-export notifications, introduced in 2006 [YUN 2006, p. 1439]. INCB encouraged Governments that had not done so to register with and utilize the system, which was instrumental in identifying suspicious transactions and preventing diversion.

INCB continued to support Project Cohesion and Project Prism, initiatives that yielded results in identifying trafficking in non-scheduled substances, weaknesses in control mechanisms, and diversion methods and routes. While mechanisms, for controlling and monitoring trade in ephedrine and pseudoephedrine were strengthened in some countries, traffickers were exploring new means of supplying illicit laboratories; new substances were being used as precursors and new distribution routes utilized. In addition, traffickers were placing orders through licit pharmaceutical companies and using them to divert preparations containing those precursors, particularly in Africa and West Asia. Measures introduced by Mexico to prohibit the import of ephedrine and pseudoephedrine continued to have an impact on the movement of precursors in Central America, where their imports had increased significantly. Trafficking networks in Central and South America were obtaining precursors and establishing illicit laboratories. INCB therefore encouraged countries to strengthen their mechanisms for monitoring precursor chemicals and to provide information to help identify all the stages of ATS' illicit manufacture. The diversion and smuggling of chemicals for the illicit manufacture of heroin in Afghanistan continued to pose problems. INCB was concerned that the existing control mechanisms were not sufficient and urged Afghanistan to take additional measures, such as strengthening precursor control measures and investigating and reporting all seizures of chemicals. The Board also continued to be concerned about the origins of diverted potassium permanganate in South America, as well as the methods used to divert it. It urged Governments to strengthen their controls over domestic distribution channels and invited countries in the Americas to take advantage of the experience acquired during Project Cohesion, focusing on acetic anhydride, and to design similar strategies to combat the diversion of chemicals used in the illicit manufacture of cocaine.

To address the illegal sale and purchase through the Internet of pharmaceutical preparations containing internationally controlled substances, the Board developed the Guidelines for Governments on Preventing the Illegal Sale of Internationally Controlled Substances through the Internet, whose aim was to assist Governments in formulating national legislation and policies and in identifying the control measures most appropriate for their countries. The Guidelines included recommendations for international and national action and were divided into three parts: legislative and regulatory provisions; general measures; and national and international cooperation. The Board invited Governments to use the Guidelines and to provide information on their experience in implementing them. A format had also been developed to be used by countries to report in a standardized manner on seizures of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances illegally sold through the Internet and delivered through the mail. Governments were invited to use the format, which would be brought to their attention in 2009, in reporting information to INCB and to continue to inform the Board of legislation regarding the sale of internationally controlled substances through the Internet, national cooperative mechanisms and practical experience in the control of such sales, as well as details of national focal points for activities related to illegal Internet pharmacies.

The misuse of courier services for drug trafficking occurred in all regions. The drugs smuggled included illicitly manufactured drugs as well as pharmaceutical preparations containing narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances that had been diverted from licit distribution channels. The Board encouraged Governments that had not done so to establish legislative and administrative measures to ensure adequate safeguards against the misuse of postal and courier services for trafficking, and invited them to take similar measures against the shipment of cannabis seeds and drug paraphernalia.

The INCB report was supplemented by: the Report of INCB on Follow-up to the Twentieth Special Session of the General Assembly [E/INCB/2008/1/Supp.1]; Narcotic Drugs: Estimated World Requirements for 2009; Statistics for 2007 [E/INCB/2008/2]; Psychotropic Substances: Statistics for 2007; Assessments of Annual Medical and Scientific Requirements for Substances in Schedules II, III and IV of the Convention on Psychotropic Substances of 1971 [E/INCB/2008/3]; and Precursors and Chemicals Frequently Used in the Illicit Manufacture of Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances: Report of INCB for 2008 on the Implementation of Article 12 of the United Nations Convention against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances of 1988 [E/INCB/2008/4].

By decision 2008/248 of 24 July, the Economic and Social Council took note of the INCB report for 2007 [YUN 2007, p. 1283].

World drug situation

---

In its 2008 report [Sales No.E.09.XI.1], INCB presented a regional analysis of world drug abuse trends and control efforts, to keep Governments aware of situations that might endanger the objectives of international drug control treaties.

Africa

Cannabis production, trafficking and abuse continued in Africa, which remained the world's second largest producer of cannabis herb after the Americas, accounting for an estimated 26 per cent of global production. Most of the illicitly produced cannabis was abused locally. However, in a limited number of countries—mainly Ghana, Morocco, Nigeria and South Africa—it was also smuggled to destinations outside Africa, notably in Europe and, to a lesser extent, East Asia. Morocco remained the world's largest producer of cannabis resin, supplying the illicit markets in Western Europe and North Africa. In 2007, owing to intensified interdiction efforts, seizures of both cannabis resin and herb increased, with cannabis resin seizures increasing to 118 tons in 2007 from 89 tons in 2006. Seizures continued to increase during the first half of 2008. Most of the cannabis resin from Morocco destined for Europe was trafficked through Spain, France and Italy. Resin destined for Europe or West Asia passed through Mauritania, Mali, the Niger, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya and Chad to Egypt. In 2006, large seizures were reported in Libya (14.8 tons), Algeria (10 tons), Senegal (8.4 tons) and Egypt (5.1 tons). About 42 million people in Africa were abusers of cannabis; the highest prevalence rates were found in West and Central Africa (12.6 per cent), where States reported large increases, followed by Southern Africa (8.4 per cent).

Although cocaine was not manufactured in Africa, consignments destined mainly for illicit markets in Europe were increasingly being smuggled through the region, which had become an important transit and stockpiling area for consignments from South America. Between 2005 and 2007, at least 33 tons were seized en route to Europe from West Africa, especially off the coast of the Canary Islands, Cape Verde and Guinea-Bissau, as well as in countries along the Gulf of Guinea, including Benin, Côte d'Ivoire, Ghana, Nigeria, Togo and, farther west, Guinea, Liberia, Mauritania, Senegal and Sierra Leone. About 27 per cent of the cocaine abused in Europe passed through West Africa. The drug was mostly transported by sea in large quantities to West Africa, where it was stockpiled, repackaged into smaller consignments and transported to Europe and the United States, usually by air couriers or, also in large quantities, through checked-in luggage. Consignments transiting West Africa also originated in East Africa and were also transported by both land and air from West Africa to North Africa before being smuggled into Europe. In addition, some cocaine continued to be smuggled into Southern Africa, mainly through Angola into South Africa, the only country reporting a relatively high level of seizures. The increase in its trafficking resulted in increased abuse in the region and was particularly noticeable in West and Southern Africa and along the Atlantic coast of North Africa. About 1.1 million people in Africa abused cocaine, and its increasing abuse and that of crack cocaine was reported in some Southern African countries, such as Namibia and South Africa.

East Africa was the major conduit for smuggling heroin from South-West Asia, mainly through the major airports of Addis Ababa (Ethiopia) and Nairobi (Kenya). From East Africa, large quantities were transported across the continent to countries in West Africa, especially Côte d'Ivoire, Ghana and Nigeria, and from there to Europe and the United States. Seizures continued in Côte d'Ivoire, Kenya, Mauritius, Nigeria and the United Republic of Tanzania. About 1.4 million people in the region abused opiates, mostly heroin, and increased abuse was reported in East and Southern Africa. Egypt constituted the largest market for opiates, and illicit opium poppy cultivation continued on the Sinai peninsula. However, the opium derived from that cultivation was consumed locally and not used for the illicit manufacture of heroin.

Illicitly manufactured pharmaceutical preparations or prescription drugs containing narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances that had been diverted from licit distribution channels continued to be available on the unregulated markets in many countries in West and Central Africa. The situation remained unresolved because of inadequate legislative frameworks, ineffective administrative mechanisms and insufficient resources for enforcement of controls. Illicit manufacture of amphetamines occurred in South Africa and, on a small scale, in Egypt. Methcathinone ("cat") was manufactured clandestinely and was widely available in South Africa. The growing abuse of crystal methamphetamine (locally dubbed "tik") in the Cape Town area became a cause for concern. Methaqualone (Mandrax) illicitly manufactured in China or India continued to enter South Africa, mainly through Mozambique, Swaziland and Zimbabwe; it was also manufactured in clandestine laboratories in Southern Africa. From South Africa, regarded as the largest market for methaqualone in the world, some of the drug was smuggled into countries in the subregion, where it was also abused. Africa continued to be a major area for the diversion of ephedrine and pseudoephedrine to be used in the illicit manufacture of methamphetamine in the Americas and elsewhere. Traffickers took advantage of weaknesses in precursor control mechanisms in many African countries. In view of the increasing abuse of khat in Madagascar, the Government prohibited its cultivation, sale and consumption as at January 2008. Khat was grown mainly in East Africa and on the Arabian peninsula and was abused locally. The total amount seized globally had increased significantly and the largest seizures in 2007 were made by Canada (13 tons), Germany (7 tons), Sweden (6 tons), Denmark (1.6 tons) and Switzerland (1.4 tons), where it was abused by expatriates with origins in East Africa and the Arabian peninsula.

In the area of regional cooperation, the third session of the African Union (AU) Conference of Ministers for Drug Control and Crime Prevention (Addis Ababa, 3–7 December 2007) endorsed the Revised Plan of Action on Drug Control and Crime Prevention (2007–2012), subsequently adopted at the meeting of the AU Heads of State (Addis Ababa, 30 January–2 February). Within the framework of the Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS), West African countries were involved in joint efforts to combat the increasing transit traffic in drugs, particularly cocaine from Latin America passing through West Africa to Europe. The ECOWAS Conference on Drug Trafficking as a Security Threat to West Africa (Praia, Cape Verde, 26–29 October) adopted a political declaration on the prevention of abuse, trafficking and organized crime in West Africa and a regional action plan listing regional initiatives to be undertaken by the ECOWAS Commission.

At the national level, in response to the urgent problems confronting Guinea-Bissau in combating cocaine trafficking through its territory, UNODC and the Ministry of Justice of Guinea-Bissau prepared an integrated multidisciplinary programme aimed at combating drug trafficking and organized crime, which began in April. Ghana took legislative and administrative measures to address the increase in drug trafficking and developed a national control strategy for the period 2008–2010. Ethiopia took steps to address trafficking through the international airport at Addis Ababa, and Nigeria strengthened control measures at several airports. Nigeria's National Agency for Food and Drug Administration and Control strengthened the regulatory framework, improved drug registration and closed down many companies importing counterfeit medicines destined for unregulated markets in Nigeria and beyond. In April, South Africa strengthened its precursor control legislation by including ephedrine and pseudoephedrine in its Medicines and Related Substances Act of 1965.

In March, an INCB mission to Ethiopia examined steps taken against cannabis cultivation and abuse. It encouraged the Government to carry out periodic studies on the prevalence of drug abuse and to strengthen its capacity for the treatment of drug addicts. INCB invited the Government to promote the rational use of opioid analgesics. In October, an INCB mission to Mauritius—where drug abuse by injection, particularly heroin, was a problem—encouraged the Government to set up a mechanism for sharing information, as well as coordinating machinery involving all bodies, services and agencies involved in drug control activities. INCB commended the Government for offering a large variety of demand reduction services to abusers and recommended that more psychosocial support be provided to abusers.

West Africa

On 14 March [E/2008/28 (res. 51/18)], the Commission on Narcotic Drugs reaffirmed its commitment to confronting the world drug problem in all its manifestations, including in the area of new emerging trends such as the increasing use of West Africa as a transit area for cocaine consignments destined for international markets, mainly in Europe. It called on Member States and international organizations, in coordination with ECOWAS, to strengthen initiatives and programmes, in particular those designed and developed by West African States and ECOWAS. It also called on Member States to facilitate the development of other programmes considered appropriate by the States concerned, in order to combat trafficking through West Africa by providing technical and financial assistance, including strengthening support for subregional law enforcement initiatives—such as the West African Joint Operations initiative and the interregional initiative financed by the EU for the sharing of intelligence among States in the Caribbean, Latin America and West Africa. The Commission invited Member States and international organizations to support those West African States most affected by the problem of trafficking, particularly Guinea-Bissau, and to strengthen their coordination in support of the efforts of West African States, in collaboration with ECOWAS and other stakeholders. The ECOWAS Commission was invited to finalize and implement its subregional action plan against trafficking. The Commission called on States, especially the main countries of destination of illicit drug consignments—particularly cocaine—smuggled through West Africa, to reduce demand in line with the provisions of the international drug control treaties. It urged West African States to combat trafficking and adopt demand reduction measures, including the provision of treatment and rehabilitation for abusers, and to address the drug problem in a balanced and integrated manner within their development priorities. Member States and international organizations were called on to provide assistance to West African States with regard to both supply and demand reduction measures. The Commission requested the UNODC Executive Director to facilitate the coordination of efforts, in consultation with West African States and international partners, to address cocaine smuggling through West Africa, within the framework of the drug control component of the Programme of Action, 2006–2010, which emanated from the Round Table for Africa held in 2005, pursuant to Council decision 2005/248 [YUN 2005, p. 1220]. He was also requested to report to the Commission in 2010.

Americas

Central America and the Caribbean

Corruption, poorly funded judiciary systems, lack of public trust and weak law enforcement undermined efforts to strengthen drug control policy in Central America and the Caribbean. Its geographical location made it an important transit and storage area for South American consignments en route to Mexico and destined for North America and Europe. Drug trafficking had an impact on both abuse and drug-related crime and led to increased money-laundering activities, especially in the Caribbean. About 18 per cent of the cocaine smuggled into Mexico entered through Belize and Guatemala; trafficking along that route increased and Belize was used as a transshipment area for cocaine consignments entering Europe via the West Africa route. Mexican criminal organizations were increasingly making use of Belizean territory for stockpiling illicit drugs and coordinating trafficking operations. Since maritime routes were increasingly monitored, traffickers were using low-flying light aircraft, in addition to other aircraft, and speedboats continued to be used to smuggle drugs across the Caribbean. Illicit consignments were usually concealed in personal luggage, canned food or industrial containers; however, the use of “mules” (people who smuggled drugs by ingesting them) continued.

Jamaica remained the main producer and exporter of cannabis in the region. Despite eradication efforts and significant seizures and arrests, it was illicitly cultivated in most parts of the country and consignments from Jamaica were sent through the Bahamas, the Dominican Republic and Haiti to North America or Europe. Cannabis was produced for domestic consumption in other countries in the Caribbean, such as Barbados, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, and Trinidad and Tobago. Guatemala was the only country in the region with a significant illicit opium poppy cultivation, which increased in 2008. Guatemalan authorities reported that the amount of cocaine seized in the first quarter of 2008 was more than the amount seized in 2006 and 2007 combined. In Costa Rica, seizures of cocaine and heroin increased, mainly on maritime routes. Colombian traffickers continued to hire fishermen from Costa Rica and use their vessels in their operations. The majority of the seizures that originated in Costa Rica were reported by Spain, followed by the Netherlands, Germany and Belgium; most of them involved mail shipments. In Honduras, drug trafficking increased in the north and along its border with Nicaragua, while Haiti was used as a major trans-shipment area for consignments of South American cocaine bound for the United States, and trafficking increased along its border with the Dominican Republic. The availability of drugs in the streets of the Dominican Republic was rising, with concomitant increased drug abuse. Instead of receiving money, traffickers were paid in drugs, thus expanding local networks and increasing local demand. The growing market mainly affected the poorest segment of the population and was reflected in increasing violence and criminal activity. In Trinidad and Tobago, cannabis was the most abused drug and cannabis plants were mainly cultivated locally, although more potent varieties were brought into the country from Saint Vincent and the Grenadines.

The abuse of methylenedioxymethamphetamine (MDMA), commonly known as ecstasy, increased, particularly in El Salvador and Guatemala. Abuse was also rising in Jamaica, especially in the tourist areas of Montego Bay and Negril. MDMA found in the region continued to be smuggled from Europe or, more recently, from Canada. The Dominican Republic was the Caribbean country with the highest annual prevalence of abuse of amphetamines (excluding MDMA).

Reports indicated that methamphetamine laboratories were being established in Central America. In Mexico, measures adopted to limit the availability of pseudoephedrine had an impact on trafficking in precursors in Central America. Honduras and El Salvador reported an increase in demand for pharmaceutical preparations containing pseudoephedrine. In Central America, measures were taken to address the increasing diversion of precursors used in illicit manufacture. Some Caribbean countries, such as Antigua and Barbuda, Barbados and Grenada, had mechanisms for regulating the use and distribution of controlled chemicals. In the region as a whole, however, their movement was poorly monitored and regulated due to weak infrastructure and insufficient funding.

With regard to regional cooperation, the demand reduction programme of the Inter-American Drug Abuse Control Commission (CICAD) started in 2008 a professional certificate programme in Haiti. Antigua and Barbuda, Dominica, the Dominican Republic and Panama received technical assistance from CICAD for the drafting of their national drug control plans and strategies. The first interregional forum of CICAD and the EU twin-city initiative (Santo Domingo, Dominican Republic, April) aimed to improve strategies for drug abuse treatment. As part of the Merida Initiative, an initiative of Mexico and the United States that was incorporated into law in June 2008, the United States would provide $65 million in 2008 to the Dominican Republic, Haiti and countries in Central America, to be used for equipment and training in drug control. Member States of the Caribbean Community (CARICOM) strengthened cooperation mechanisms for security and recognized drug trafficking as a major threat.

North America

The major challenge in North America was the domination of illicit drug production and trafficking by organized crime and the growing violence in fighting among drug cartels and between traffickers and law enforcement officers, particularly in Mexico. The strong presence of Mexican drug syndicates was being felt in Mexico and the United States and the increasing influence of Asian organizations was noticeable in Canada and the United States. Colombian organizations continued to focus their operations on cocaine and heroin trafficking, but Mexican syndicates had taken over their smuggling and distribution from South America to the United States. In addition, Mexican organizations were heavily involved in the distribution of methamphetamine from Mexican-operated illicit drug manufacture and cannabis cultivation and trafficking within and into the United States. Asian trafficking organizations operating from Canada were involved in the illicit cultivation of high-potency cannabis and illicit methamphetamine manufacturing in Canada and the United States.

North America remained one of the main areas of illicit cannabis production and abuse, with Mexico, the United States and Canada producing 7,400, 4,700 and 3,500 tons, respectively. Despite eradication efforts, the area under illicit cultivation increased in Mexico, while in Canada illicit cultivation continued to thrive and growers utilized advanced cultivation methods to meet the high demand in Canada and the United States. One cause for concern in both countries was the very high tetrahydrocannabinol content of cannabis grown indoors under hydroponic conditions. In the United States, cannabis remained the most commonly abused drug and its illicit market was supplied by an increasing number of domestic indoor and outdoor cultivation sites. It was also smuggled out of Canada, Colombia, Jamaica and Mexico.

Cocaine continued to be easy to obtain in Canada, where the total amount seized increased slightly. It was mostly smuggled over land routes, leading through Central America, Mexico and the United States, and on direct flights from South America, as well as through various transit countries in the Caribbean. Cocaine was also smuggled through Canada into other countries such as Australia. Crack cocaine continued to be abused throughout Canada, where cocaine laced with methamphetamine was also identified as an emerging trend. In 2007, domestic and international efforts resulted in large cocaine seizures in the Eastern Pacific, which contributed to a cocaine shortage in the United States and to the decline in its annual prevalence rate. In addition, cocaine deliveries across the border to the United States declined due to intensive efforts by the Mexican authorities. However, the estimated amount of cocaine smuggled from South America into the United States remained significant, with about 90 per cent of it passing through the Central America corridor.

In Canada, heroin abuse remained low and was partly replaced by the abuse of prescription opiates. Most of the heroin in Canada was smuggled by air passengers or through postal or courier services and was mostly supplied by countries in South-West Asia, with India continuing to be the primary source or transit country. India was also the primary source of the opium seized, which increased considerably from 16 kg in 2005 to about 124 kg in 2006. In Canada, opium was mainly abused by older members of some ethnic groups. In the United States, heroin abuse was stable at a relatively low level, despite the fact that it was easily available in most large urban areas and some suburban and rural areas, mostly in the north-eastern part of the country, where its abuse increased among young adults (persons aged 25–34). The concentration of its abuse in the north-east was partly the result of abusers of prescription opiates switching to heroin because of its lower cost and higher purity. In the United States, a combination of Mexican “black tar” heroin and over-the-counter medication containing diphenhydramine hydrochloride was sold under the street name “cheese heroin”. Most of the heroin abused in the United States was illicitly manufactured in Colombia or Mexico. Mexico experienced a continuous decline in opium poppy eradication levels, the total area eradicated dropping from 21,609 hectares in 2005 to 7,784 hectares in 2007, partly as the result of unfavourable climate conditions and the realignment of responsibilities for aerial eradication.

In the United States, the abuse of prescription drugs was higher than the abuse of cocaine, heroin, hallucinogens, MDMA and/or inhalants, and second only to cannabis. In 2007, about 16.3 million people reported having abused prescription drugs (6.6 per cent of the population aged 12 and above), compared with 14.8 million in 2002. One matter of concern was the high rate of their abuse among youth. While legislation allowing prescription drug monitoring programmes was adopted in 38 of the 50 states in the United States, Florida had still not adopted such legislation due to privacy concerns. In the United States, the number of Internet pharmacies selling controlled prescription drugs without the required prescription increased by 70 per cent between 2006 and 2007. In Canada, diverted prescription drugs were mostly obtained from domestic sources, and the abuse of oxycodone remained a cause for concern. It continued to be smuggled out of Canada and into the United States.

Methamphetamine abuse remained a problem in Canada and traffickers continued to adulterate MDMA and cannabis with methamphetamine in order to increase methamphetamine demand. In the United States, the abuse of methamphetamine in 2007 was slightly less than in previous years, with Mexico remaining the primary source. Canada, traditionally an MDMA importer and consumer, became a major manufacturer and exporter, as reflected in the unprecedented quantities seized in other countries, such as Australia and the United States. As the smuggling of MDMA from Canada into the United States increased, the importance of European sources decreased. In the United States, the illicit manufacture of MDMA remained limited. Gamma-hydroxybutyric acid (GHB) continued to be abused in Canada, mostly supplied by clandestine laboratories, while lysergic acid diethylamide (LSD) and psilocybin continued to be abused in the United States, where LSD abuse among youth was low and psilocybin was the most widely abused hallucinogen. Organized criminal groups in Canada smuggled ephedrine from China and India, while traffickers in Mexico responded to the restrictions on the import and sale of precursors of methamphetamine by smuggling them using new routes leading from China and India, importing non-restricted chemical derivatives instead of those precursors and using alternative manufacturing methods, which ensured a stable level of illicitly manufactured and smuggled methamphetamine in the United States.

As to substances not under international control, while the main transit countries used for smuggling khat into Canada remained the Netherlands and the United Kingdom, seizures of khat smuggled into Canada from France, Germany, Italy and the United States increased slightly. In Canada, it was mainly used by members of ethnic communities. Ketamine continued to be abused in Canada, where it had gained popularity as a new “club drug”. In the United States, the over-the-counter cough and cold medicines that were abused mostly contained dextromethorphan, and the abuse of inhalants by youth had risen since 2003.

A new major step in regional cooperation in 2008 was the Merida initiative, an example of security co-operation involving Mexico and the United States, as well as the countries in Central America, to combat drug trafficking, transnational crime and terrorism. The United States law enforcement agencies supported their Mexican counterparts by providing training in precursor detection, investigative techniques and methamphetamine investigations in the main areas of illicit methamphetamine manufacturing in Mexico. Cooperation between Canada and the United States progressed and bilateral forums, such as the Cross-Border Crime Forum and Project North Star, increased information-sharing and joint training among law enforcement officers. United States law enforcement agencies and the Royal Canadian Mounted Police stepped up their intelligence-sharing and coordinated law enforcement operations to fight criminal organizations manufacturing MDMA.

South America

The annual illicit production of cannabis in South America was estimated at about 10,000 tons, almost 25 per cent of global production in 2006; Paraguay was the main producer. Most illicit cultivation occurred in remote and inaccessible areas. Brazil continued to report the largest seizures in the region.

In 2007, the total area of coca bush cultivation increased in all three of the main countries in which it was illicitly grown (Bolivia, Colombia, Peru) to 181,600 hectares, 16 per cent more than in 2006. Colombia accounted for 55 per cent of the area under cultivation, Peru 29 per cent and Bolivia 16 per cent. That overall increase in coca cultivation was offset by decreased yields in some areas; thus potential global manufacture of cocaine increased by only 10 tons over 2006. In 2007, potential cocaine manufacture in Colombia decreased by 10 tons compared to 2006.

Some 67,000 hectares of illicitly cultivated coca bush were eradicated manually in Colombia in 2007 and a further 153,000 hectares were subjected to aerial spraying. In Peru, coca bush cultivation increased by 4 per cent in 2007 and estimated cocaine manufacture totalled 290 tons. In 2007, eradication in Peru decreased by 5 per cent to 12,072 hectares. In Bolivia, coca bush cultivation increased slightly in 2007 for the second consecutive year, amounting to 28,900 hectares. In September 2008, the Bolivian Government signed an agreement with coca growers of the Yungas region allowing them to cultivate coca bush in that area. In Bolivia, potential cocaine manufacture in 2007 increased by 9 per cent, to 104 tons. The world's main cocaine trafficking routes continued to run from countries in the Andean subregion, notably Colombia, to the United States. In recent years, the amount of cocaine from South America smuggled via West Africa into Europe had increased dramatically.

In 2006, the region accounted for 45 per cent of cocaine seizures worldwide; large seizures continued to be concentrated in a few countries. In 2007, seizures increased in Bolivia, Brazil and Colombia and decreased in Ecuador and Peru. In Bolivia, seizures of cocaine hydrochloride doubled in 2007 over the previous year and seizures of cocaine base tripled compared with 2002. Cocaine seizures increased by one third in the first half of 2008 compared with the same period in 2007. In Colombia, seizures of cocaine hydrochloride and cocaine base increased slightly in 2007; about 80 per cent of the illicit drugs leaving the country were smuggled by sea through the Mexico–Central American corridor, the Euro–African corridor and the Caribbean corridor, in that order. Most of the drugs were trafficked by sea and the use of submersible vessels was reported. More illicit drugs were trafficked by sea than by air, and were smuggled across borders by air rather than by land. Ecuador was affected not only by drug trafficking, but also by stockpiling, the diversion of precursor chemicals and, to some extent, illicit production. Venezuela continued to be used as a major departure area for drugs destined for Europe; between 2002 and 2007, an average of 35 tons of cocaine was seized each year. In Colombia, traditional use of coca leaf was marginal and statistically insignificant; virtually the entire coca leaf production was destined for illicit cocaine manufacture. Colombian farmers processed half of their coca leaf production into cocaine base to gain a higher income per hectare, and the last step in the process of manufacturing cocaine hydrochloride was usually carried out by traffickers in clandestine laboratories. In recent years, most South American countries had reported increasing abuse of cocaine, probably a spillover effect of its trafficking throughout the region. Several countries in the southern part of South America previously used as transit areas had been used more and more for drug processing, resulting in the increased availability of inexpensive semi-refined cocaine derivatives, such as cocaine base and coca paste, in the local markets. Changes in drug abuse patterns, including increased abuse of paco (coca paste), were reported by Argentina, Brazil, Chile and Uruguay. The average past-year prevalence of cocaine abuse in South America was 1.4 per cent, 0.3 per cent higher than the global average. It was highest in Argentina, followed by Uruguay, Chile, Bolivia, Peru and Ecuador.

Illicit opium poppy cultivation in South America accounted for less than 1 per cent of cultivation worldwide. The highest annual prevalence of abuse of opiates was found in Brazil, the lowest in Bolivia and Suriname. Most of the abuse in the region involved opioids diverted from licit sources. Contrary to the situation in other South American countries, in Uruguay the relative number of females who abused drugs by injection was high.

Several countries in South America reported an increase in the non-medical use of psychotropic substances, in particular sedatives and tranquillizers, and expressed their concern at the increased abuse of so-called “date rape drugs”, mainly GHB, flunitrazepam and ketamine (a substance not under international control). Although some countries in the region, including Argentina, Chile and Peru, reported increased abuse of MDMA in 2006, seizures continued to be low. Large-scale diversion of precursor chemicals continued, with over 90 per cent of potassium permanganate seizures being made in Colombia. Imports of ephedrine and pseudoephedrine in some South American countries, including Argentina, increased significantly.

With regard to regional cooperation, CICAD remained the main forum for coordinating drug control issues in the Americas. In a 2007 report, it summarized progress made by each country and in the region as a whole regarding the development of policies and programmes to combat illicit drugs between 1997 and 2007. The report highlighted the importance of established national drug control authorities and drug observatories to assist Governments in implementing their national drug control strategies. South American countries participated in the Drug Treatment City Partnership initiative, focusing on the establishment of a network between cities in Latin America and the Caribbean and in Europe to facilitate the exchange of information and best practices regarding drug control policies, in order to improve treatment and rehabilitation programmes for abusers and demand reduction programmes. At the Tenth High-Level Specialized Dialogue on Drugs between the Andean Community and the EU (Bogota, Colombia, 1–2 November 2007), Bolivia, Colombia and Peru presented their national strategies for alternative development and illicit crop eradication, while Ecuador reported on preventive alternative development programmes implemented in the northern areas along its borders with Colombia. In July 2008, Bolivia, Colombia, Ecuador and Peru, in cooperation with the EU, launched a project to provide support to the Andean Community in the area of synthetic drugs. At the Regional Summit on the World Drug Problem, Security and Cooperation (Cartagena de Indias, Colombia, 30 July–1 August), representatives of 25 countries of Central America, the Caribbean and South America adopted the Cartagena Declaration, which emphasized the importance of a balanced approach to implementing drug supply and demand strategies.

Asia

East and South-East Asia

The illicit cultivation of cannabis continued in East and South-East Asia, including in Indonesia and Thailand; Viet Nam reported an increase in cannabis cultivation in some provinces in 2007 and 2008. States in the region continued to report significant seizures. Cambodia, Malaysia and the Philippines reported the highest annual prevalence of abuse of cannabis. Cannabis was the second most commonly abused substance (after solvents) among persons aged 15 and older in Japan.

Preliminary data on the total area under illicit opium poppy cultivation in Myanmar indicated a slight increase between 2007 and 2008. In 2007, Myanmar eradicated 3,598 of the 27,700 hectares under illicit cultivation, while in the Lao People's Democratic Republic, which reported a decrease in opium abuse, 779 of 1,500 hectares were eradicated. Illicitly cultivated opium poppy was also eradicated in Thailand and Viet Nam. In Thailand, the total area under cultivation stood at 231 hectares, mainly in remote northern areas. In China, the decreasing trend in heroin seizures continued; the decrease in its availability in the illicit market was largely attributed to efforts by drug control authorities. However, in China, Malaysia and Viet Nam, heroin continued to be the most commonly abused drug.

An increase in the illicit manufacture of ATS was reported, particularly in China and Indonesia, and the illicit manufacture of methamphetamine continued in China, Indonesia, Myanmar and the Philippines. China (including the Hong Kong Special Administrative Region (SAR)), Japan, the Republic of Korea, Thailand and Viet Nam continued to report significant seizures of methamphetamine. During 2007, there was an increase in ATS seizures, mainly methamphetamine originating in China (including the Hong Kong SAR) and destined for Indonesia, while China (including the Hong Kong SAR), Japan and the Republic of Korea continued to report seizures of MDMA. The Philippines had the highest annual prevalence of abuse of amphetamines in the world (6 per cent), and other countries in the region, including Cambodia, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Malaysia and Thailand, also had a high abuse rate. Countries in East and South-East Asia continued to report seizures of significant amounts of precursor chemicals.

Ketamine was the most commonly abused psychotropic substance in China, including in the Hong Kong SAR, where it was the drug of choice for 73 per cent of abusers under the age of 21. Its abuse was also reported in Cambodia and its illicit manufacture was a growing problem in China. The Hong Kong SAR, Myanmar, the Philippines, Singapore and Taiwan Province of China continued to report significant seizures, and trafficking and seizures were also reported in Viet Nam.

Regionally, the countries in East and South-East Asia continued to cooperate in the field of drug control through bilateral, multilateral and regional organizations. The fifth meeting of the Association of Southeast Asian Nations (ASEAN) Inter-Parliamentary Assembly Fact-Finding Committee to Combat the Drug Menace (Singapore, 22–25 June) agreed to continue cooperation to address common threats related to drug control. The eighth ministerial meeting of signatory countries of the 1993 Memorandum of Understanding on Drug Control was held in Vientiane, Lao People's Democratic Republic, in June. The fifteenth ASEAN Regional Forum (Singapore, 24 July) adopted the Statement Promoting Collaboration on the Prevention of Diversion of Precursors into Illicit Drug Manufacture.

In October, an INCB mission to Japan invited the Government to share with the international community the measures carried out to prevent drug abuse, to monitor all types of substance abuse, including the abuse of pharmaceutical preparations containing controlled substances, and to expand services for treatment of abusers to cover all segments of the population, with a view to facilitating rehabilitation and social reintegration.

South Asia

India was one of the largest illicit producers of cannabis herb and resin in South Asia. Although law enforcement authorities regularly eradicated large areas of illicitly cultivated plants, a significant amount of cannabis found its way onto the illicit market in that country. Nepal was the most important producer of cannabis resin in the region, and the increase in seizures in the country accounted for the fact that the amount seized in the entire region in 2006 was twice the amount in 2003. In addition to being abused locally, cannabis resin in Nepal was smuggled into other countries in Asia and the Pacific—mainly to India, where 40–50 per cent of the resin seized in recent years had originated in Nepal. Seizures of cannabis resin from Nepal were also regularly reported in China, including in the Hong Kong SAR, Japan and Thailand. Cannabis remained the most abused drug in Sri Lanka, where it was cultivated in the eastern and southern provinces.

Every year, Indian counter-narcotics forces eradicated areas in which opium poppy grew wild or was illicitly cultivated. On average, about 2,000 kg of opium derived from illicit cultivations were seized annually. However, the proportion of the seized opium of Indian origin was unclear, since opium was still smuggled out of neighbouring countries where opium poppy was illicitly cultivated. Heroin and morphine continued to be among the substances most commonly abused in India. A significant portion of the heroin seized in India originated in neighbouring countries. The amount of heroin smuggled into Maldives had increased in recent years. The increase indicated that the country was becoming an important transit area for smuggling operations. Heroin continued to be widely abused in Sri Lanka; it was not produced locally but brought into the country from India and Pakistan. Small quantities were smuggled by airline passengers and on fishing boats coming from the west coast of India.

Small quantities of cocaine had begun to be smuggled into India, and investigations into seizures made in 2008 suggested that it was being smuggled out of West Africa.

Pharmaceutical preparations diverted from licit manufacture in India continued to feed their widespread abuse in South Asia. Drugs smuggled into neighbouring countries included pethidine and codeine-based cough syrups. A popular form of methamphetamine abused in Asia was a tablet known as “yaba”, containing a mixture of caffeine and about 30 per cent methamphetamine. Increasingly large seizures of “yaba” tablets were reported in Bangladesh, where the drug—most of which was smuggled out of neighbouring countries such as Myanmar—had gained popularity among young people. Several seizures of LSD were reported in India in 2007. Trafficking in ATS and their precursor chemicals increased throughout the region. Since the start of 2008, several seizures of ATS had been made in India, where they were illicitly manufactured and also smuggled into the country from South-East Asia. In spite of efforts to curb the clandestine manufacture of methaqualone in India, seizures were reported every year. Nepal was used as a new transit area for ATS consignments destined for the increasingly lucrative illicit markets on the Arabian peninsula. Nepal remained a common destination for consignments of pharmaceutical pre-arations smuggled out of India. Some of the acetic anhydride licitly produced on an industrial scale in India was subject to diversion for the illicit manufacture of methaqualone and heroin. The diversion of ephedrine, pseudoephedrine and norephedrine, precursor chemicals used in ATS manufacture, was also a matter of concern in India.

With regard to regional cooperation, the First Asian Consultation on the Prevention of HIV Related to Drug Use (Goa, India, 23–31 January) focused on various issues related to drug abuse in Asia. The fifteenth summit meeting of the South Asian Association for Regional Cooperation (Colombo, Sri Lanka, August) recognized the interlinkages between terrorism and trafficking in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances and reiterated the commitment to fostering regional cooperation to combat those problems.

West Asia

Illicit opium poppy cultivation in Afghanistan dropped from its record level of 193,000 hectares in 2007 to 157,000 in 2008. The number of provinces free of opium poppy increased from 13 to 18, and about 98 per cent of the illicit cultivation in the country took place in just seven provinces. However, Afghanistan continued to account for by far the largest share of the world's illicit cultivation and, due to the higher crop yield, actual opium production dropped by only 6 per cent, from 8,200 tons in 2007 to 7,700 in 2008. The link between security conditions and illicit opium poppy cultivation was strong; in the southern provinces of Afghanistan, security was weak and the overwhelming majority of villages were involved in illicit cultivation. Moreover, eradication efforts in Afghanistan were hampered by lack of security, poor planning and inadequate equipment and funding. Inadequate security, ineffective Government control and problems in ensuring the rule of law were major factors contributing to illicit cultivation in other countries in the region as well; it increased in the Bekaa valley in Lebanon, and took place in Pakistan, though on a much smaller scale than in Afghanistan and mainly in remote areas near the Afghan border, where the Government had difficulties in enforcing laws. The large-scale smuggling of Afghan opiates resulted in a wide range of social ills, including organized crime, corruption and a high demand for opiates. Afghan opiates were smuggled mainly through Iran, Pakistan and Central Asian countries into Eastern and Western Europe. In Afghanistan, significant seizures were made, though small in comparison with the amount of illicit production in the country. More opiates were seized in Iran than in any other country in the world; in 2007, seizures increased by 51 per cent compared with 2006. Pakistan continued to be used as a major transit area for Afghan opiates, though to a lesser extent than Iran; about 35 per cent of Afghan opiates were smuggled through Pakistan. In Central Asia, heroin seizures in 2007 fell slightly (by 9 per cent) compared with 2006, mainly because of the significant decrease in Tajikistan and Uzbekistan. In contrast, in Kyrgyzstan and Turkmenistan, heroin seizures increased by over 60 per cent. Seizures of opium increased significantly in many countries in Central Asia, indicating a possible shift in trafficking patterns. Trafficking organizations increasingly exploited the situation in Iraq to smuggle drugs, including heroin, from countries outside of West Asia, mainly into the Arabian peninsula. New routes led through Jordan, the Syrian Arab Republic and the United Arab Emirates. Jordan and Syria were increasingly used as trans-shipment points for trafficking: cannabis from Lebanon was smuggled into Jordan; heroin was smuggled through Syria and then Jordan on its way to Israel; and counterfeit Captagon tablets were smuggled through Syria and then Jordan on their way to the Arabian peninsula. Trafficking in Yemen also increased, as evidenced by more drug-related offences and drug seizures, mainly of cannabis.

The large amount of opiates from Afghanistan continued to cause major abuse problems in the region. Nearly all the countries neighbouring Afghanistan had high rates of abuse: Iran had the world's highest rate of abuse of opiates (estimated prevalence at 2.8 per cent), and Pakistan and many countries in Central Asia also had high rates. Heroin was the main opiate abused in Central Asian countries and injection was the main method used; HIV/AIDS transmission through the sharing of needles continued. Cannabis was the most commonly seized type of drug in Central Asia, partly because the plants grew wild in Kazakhstan and Kyrgyzstan. A worrying development was the increase in illicit cannabis cultivation in Afghanistan, which became an important producer: 70,000 hectares were cultivated in 2007, compared with 50,000 in 2006. Cannabis was also illicitly cultivated in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, in the Bekaa valley in Lebanon and in many countries in Central Asia.

Although cocaine trafficking was spreading in West Asia, it was still abused in small quantities. In May, Israel seized 104 kg of cocaine in Haifa. In 2007, seizures totalled 114 kg in Turkey, compared with 3 kg in 2003. Kazakhstan seized a consignment of 555 grams in 2007, the largest seizure ever made there. It had apparently been brought into the country from Germany, Lithuania and Poland via the Russian Federation.

The Arabian peninsula continued to be faced with a long-standing problem of ATS abuse, in particular of counterfeit Captagon tablets, which continued to be smuggled in large amounts into many countries on the peninsula. The world's largest seizures of counterfeit Captagon took place in Saudi Arabia, increasing to 13.9 tons in 2007. Seizures of amphetamines also rose sharply in Saudi Arabia, suggesting a surge in the abuse of illicit stimulants. The amount of Captagon seized in Turkey rose significantly in 2007. Precursor chemicals, acetic anhydride in particular, continued to be available for heroin manufacture in Afghanistan, where more than 3 tons of precursor chemicals, including ammonium chloride and sodium carbonate, were seized in July. In Turkey, the total amount of acetic anhydride seized increased nearly threefold in 2007 compared with 2006.

With regard to regional cooperation, the international community continued to provide support and assistance to Afghanistan under the umbrella of the Afghanistan Compact, adopted in 2006 [YUN 2006, p. 363]. In April, the Afghanistan National Development Strategy for 2008–2013 was finalized; it outlined the steps to be taken to achieve the Afghanistan Compact benchmarks regarding security, governance and development. Countries in West Asia continued to take joint measures against trafficking. In particular, they increased their bilateral and multilateral cooperation in reducing illicit drug supply and demand, precursor control, border management, countering the spread of HIV/AIDS, and fighting organized crime and money-laundering. They also participated in regional projects and international operations. Cooperation among Central Asian countries improved. In February, Kazakhstan, the Russian Federation, Tajikistan and Uzbekistan launched Operation Typhoon, which targeted one of the largest trafficking groups in Central Asia. Operation Channel, conducted under the auspices of the Collective Security Treaty Organization (CSTO), also contributed to countering trafficking in the region. Azerbaijan, Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, the Russian Federation, Tajikistan, Turkmenistan and Uzbekistan continued to cooperate towards the establishment of the Central Asia Regional Information and Coordination Centre (CARICC). Countries in West Asia worked to establish the Gulf Centre for Criminal Intelligence in Doha, Qatar, which would serve as a focal point for international cooperation in information collection and intelligence development to counter trafficking and other forms of organized crime. In a meeting held in Dubai, United Arab Emirates, drug control agencies from countries on the Arabian peninsula, as well as the Council of Arab Ministers of the Interior, adopted the Dubai statement on strategic planning and cooperation in drug control. Afghanistan, Iran and Pakistan held a meeting in Tehran in May to appoint border liaison officers on each of their countries' borders to plan joint operations targeting the smuggling of opiates out of Afghanistan. Countries on the Arabian peninsula and in other subregions adopted the Tripoli Action Plan on Combating Trafficking and Money-Laundering through the Mail, while Israeli and Palestinian officials continued to explore methods of improving cooperation. A meeting hosted by Turkmenistan led to the initiation of two international projects against trafficking in West Asia: the Caspian Sea initiative and the Turkmen border initiative.

In January, INCB sent a mission to the United Arab Emirates, where the implementation of controls over drugs and precursor chemicals in the free trade zones continued to face difficulties. The Board urged the Government to take measures against trafficking in all areas under its jurisdiction, including the free trade zones. It noted that there were no comprehensive activities aimed at identifying the drug abuse situation in the country and recommended that the Government take measures to collect data on the extent and nature of the drug problem.

Afghanistan

In response to Commission on Narcotic Drugs resolution 50/1 [YUN 2007, p. 1295], the UNODC Executive Director submitted a report on follow-up to the Second Ministerial Conference on Drug Trafficking Routes from Afghanistan [E/CN.7/2008/10]; that Conference was held in 2006 [YUN 2006, p. 1450]. The Executive Director reviewed key achievements and measures taken during the first operational year of the second phase of the Paris Pact initiative [YUN 2003, p. 1263], stating that the second three-year phase of the project, launched in January 2007, included six new elements: improving the operational focus of the expert round tables; following up the Paris Pact recommendations more effectively; ensuring the wider use and sustainability of the Automated Donor Assistance Mechanism (ADAM); strengthening counter-narcotic analytical capacities; advocating a balanced approach to drug issues; and fostering partnerships with sub-regional, regional and international players. In 2007, in order to make the Paris Pact more action-oriented, UNODC grouped the outcomes and recommendations of the Paris Pact expert round tables into seven action plans known as the "Rainbow Strategy". Since the inception of the second phase of the initiative, three round-table meetings of senior experts in counter-narcotic enforcement and drug demand reduction had been organized, each with a separate geographical or thematic focus. An important element of the second phase was the explicit inclusion of demand reduction issues.

To improve inter-agency cooperation between law enforcement agencies at the national, regional and international levels, the five Central Asian States (Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, Tajikistan, Turkmenistan and Uzbekistan), the Russian Federation and Azerbaijan participated in a UNODC project to establish CARICC. The purpose of CARICC was to facilitate information exchange, analyse and develop information, provide support and assist in the coordination of the operational activities of law enforcement agencies in the region. A six-month pilot phase of CARICC started on 1 November 2007. The report noted that ADAM, an Internet-based tool for coordinating counter-narcotics technical assistance in countries along the main trafficking routes from Afghanistan, underwent a number of improvements in 2007.

On 14 March [E/2008/28 (res. 51/1)], the Commission called on Paris Pact partners to promote initiatives against trafficking in opiates from Afghanistan and to strengthen cooperation with ongoing operations in the region. It commended the input provided by training centres and institutions in enhancing the capacities of drug law enforcement agencies, and underscored the importance of exploring additional possibilities and modalities for organizing training courses for officers from Afghanistan, neighbouring States and States in Central Asia and other subregions. The Commission welcomed the launch, under the guidance of UNODC and the Project Cohesion Task Force, of the Targeted Anti-trafficking Regional Communication, Expertise and Training initiative, targeting precursors used in heroin manufacture in Afghanistan, and urged Paris Pact partners to cooperate with it. It encouraged time-bound operations focusing on trafficking in precursors, in particular acetic anhydride. Paris Pact partners were invited to strengthen control over the transnational movement of monetary proceeds of trafficking in illicit crops cultivated or drugs produced in Afghanistan, money-laundering and other transnational criminal activities related to such proceeds, as well as the financing of terrorist activities. The Commission called on the partners to implement prevention, treatment and rehabilitation initiatives and exchange best practices in demand reduction. It expressed its satisfaction with the beginning of the pilot phase in the implementation of the initiative to establish CARICC and noted the importance of ADAM in coordinating counter-narcotics technical assistance in countries along the main trafficking routes from Afghanistan. The UNODC Executive Director was requested to report on the issue in 2009.

Security Council action. On 11 June, the Security Council adopted resolution 1817(2008) (see p. 359), in which it called on States to increase international and regional cooperation in order to counter illicit drug production and trafficking in Afghanistan, including by strengthening the monitoring of the international trade in precursor chemicals, notably but not limited to acetic anhydride. It also invited States, in particular those producing precursor chemicals, Afghanistan, its neighbouring countries and all countries on the trafficking routes, to increase their cooperation with INCB.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 24 July [meeting 42], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs [E/2008/28], adopted resolution 2008/27 without vote [agenda item 14 (d)].

Provision of international assistance to the most affected States neighbouring Afghanistan

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolutions 2001/16 of 24 July 2001, 2002/21 of 24 July 2002, 2003/34 and 2003/35 of 22 July 2003 and 2005/27 of 22 July 2005 and other relevant resolutions on international assistance to States affected by the transit of illicit drugs,

Taking note with concern of the report of the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime entitled “Afghanistan Opium Survey 2007”, in which the Office emphasized that, in 2007, Afghanistan had produced 8,200 tons of opium, representing 93 per cent of global production,

Noting the progress that Afghanistan has made in implementing the National Drug Control Strategy of the Government of Afghanistan, including the fact that the number of its provinces free of opium poppy more than doubled, from six to thirteen, in 2007,

Reaffirming the commitments assumed by Member States in the Political Declaration adopted by the General Assembly at its twentieth special session and the measures to enhance international cooperation to counter the world drug problem,

Welcoming the Paris Pact initiative on assistance to States affected by the transit of illicit drugs,

Acknowledging the ongoing efforts of the Government of Afghanistan and the international community, including States neighbouring Afghanistan, to counter the scourge of illicit drugs, despite the continuing increase in the illicit cultivation of opium poppy and the illicit production of opiates in Afghanistan,

Emphasizing that international drug traffickers are constantly changing their modus operandi, rapidly reorganizing and gaining access to modern technology,

Acknowledging that transit States are faced with multifaceted challenges related to the increasing amount of illicit drugs transiting through their territory as a result of the increasing supply and demand on illicit drug markets,

Keeping in mind that the bulk of the illicit drugs originating in Afghanistan is smuggled through the Islamic Republic of Iran, Pakistan and other countries neighbouring Afghanistan before reaching countries of destination,

Considering that a large number of transit States, in particular the States neighbouring Afghanistan, are developing countries or countries with economies in transition and are faced with multifaceted challenges, including rising levels of drug-related crime and increased prevalence of drug abuse,

Bearing in mind that the constantly changing tactics of drug traffickers and the introduction of new varieties of illicit drugs increase the challenges and harm that they cause in Afghanistan, in the States neighbouring Afghanistan and in other parts of the world,

1. Reaffirms its commitment, in accordance with the principle of shared responsibility, to counter the world drug problem in all its manifestations, in a coordinated manner, in particular by providing technical assistance and support to the transit States most affected by drug trafficking;

2. Calls upon the Government of Afghanistan to intensify, with the support of the international community, its efforts to continue implementing, in particular, the eight pillars of the National Drug Control Strategy, to identify and dismantle laboratories illicitly manufacturing heroin and morphine and to trace and curb the illicit supply of precursors;

13. Requests the Executive Director of the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime to report to the Commission on Narcotic Drugs at its fifty-second session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Europe

Cannabis remained the most widely abused drug in Europe, but there were indications that its abuse was stabilizing or declining at a fairly high level. Illicit cultivation continued to be reported in many countries in Western Europe; in Central and Eastern Europe most of the cannabis herb originated in Albania, Moldova, Montenegro, Serbia, the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia and Ukraine. In Albania, cannabis plants were cultivated on public land. Europe was the region with the largest illicit market for cannabis resin. The amount of cannabis resin seized in the region increased in 2007, with more cannabis resin seized in Spain than in any other country in the world. A large amount was also seized in Belgium, France and Portugal. In European countries, lifetime prevalence of cannabis abuse ranged from 2 to 37 per cent, the lowest rates being in Bulgaria, Malta and Romania and the highest in Denmark, France, Italy and the United Kingdom.

Europe continued to be the second largest market for cocaine in the world. Large consignments from South America were smuggled into Europe by sea, often through West African countries. However, cocaine smuggling through Eastern Europe had significantly increased in recent years. The total amount of cocaine seized in Europe remained high and increased dramatically in Eastern European countries in 2007. The increased number of cocaine shipments from South America to countries in Eastern Europe was part of a new development; cocaine arriving in Western Europe was increasingly smuggled into Eastern Europe and then transported back into Western Europe via the Balkan route, the route traditionally used for trafficking in opiates. Cocaine abuse became more prevalent in some parts of Western Europe; in France, lifetime prevalence was 2.6 per cent among the adult population and had more than doubled over the preceding 10 years.

Europe also remained the region with the second largest illicit market for opiates, which continued to expand in Eastern Europe. Their abuse remained stable or declined in Central and Western Europe, but increased in the Russian Federation and other countries in Eastern Europe, particularly in member States of the Commonwealth of Independent States and in countries in South-Eastern Europe along the Balkan route. Most of the laboratories illicitly producing opiates continued to be located in Eastern Europe. The Russian Federation was the largest illicit market for opiates in Europe, while the second largest illicit market in Eastern Europe was Ukraine. Almost all the heroin available on illicit markets in Europe originated in Afghanistan. The traditional (northern) Balkan route, passing through Turkey, Bulgaria, Romania, Hungary and then Austria, was used for smuggling heroin more frequently in 2007, as evidenced by the more than 2.5 tons of heroin seized on that route. The alternative (southern) Balkan route through Greece, Albania and then the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia to Italy, was used less often in 2007 than in previous years. With opium production shifting towards the southern provinces of Afghanistan, it became less convenient for traffickers to ship opiates via the so-called silk route, via Central Asia into the Russian Federation and from there to countries in Europe; therefore, trafficking along that route declined in 2007. Train connections between the Russian Federation and its western neighbouring countries (Belarus, Poland, Ukraine) were increasingly used for heroin smuggling into Western Europe. Heroin was also increasingly trafficked by air from Eastern and Central Europe to Western Europe. Major heroin seizures were reported in Bulgaria, the Russian Federation and Serbia, and seizures increased in some Western European countries, such as Germany and Spain.

The illicit manufacture of synthetic drugs continued to rise in Central and Eastern Europe, while Western Europe remained a major source of ATS, particularly MDMA. However, as MDMA was increasingly manufactured in other parts of the world, seizures in Western Europe declined. Belgium and the Netherlands were the main exporters of amphetamine and substances in the MDMA group. Most MDMA seizures were reported in France, Germany, the Netherlands and the United Kingdom. The main source of methamphetamine was the Czech Republic, which also reported the largest number of dismantled laboratories. Annual prevalence of amphetamine abuse among the general population in the United Kingdom, the largest market for amphetamine in Europe, decreased significantly in 2007. Seizures of precursor s of amphetamine increased in Eastern European countries, which also continued to be used as a transit area for consignments of acetic anhydride destined for Afghanistan; almost 80 per cent of the precursor chemicals required for illicit drug laboratories in Afghanistan was smuggled through South-Eastern and Eastern Europe.

With regard to regional cooperation, the Paris Pact expert round table for the Black Sea area (Bucharest, Romania, 9–11 July) discussed ways to support and utilize existing communication and information networks to achieve maximum law enforcement coverage of the routes used for trafficking in opiates from Afghanistan. In September, the European Commission proposed a new European Union Drugs Action Plan for 2009–2012. CSto and the Federal Drug Control Service of the Russian Federation carried out the second stage of operation Channel 2007 in November and December 2007, with the participation of Armenia, Belarus, Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, the Russian Federation, Tajikistan and Uzbekistan. The goal of the operation was to build a system of enhanced collective security to prevent trafficking from Afghanistan.

In October, an INCB mission to Romania noted that the mechanism for the monitoring and control of internationally controlled substances was neither sufficient nor functioning adequately; it requested the Government to put in place legislation and provide resources and personnel to enable drug regulatory authorities to perform their control functions. It also urged the Government to strengthen customs and border control activities, determine the national medical and/or scientific requirements for narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances and ensure that those substances were available for medical purposes. In May, a Board mission visited Ukraine, where the transit traffic in heroin and cocaine posed serious drug control problems. Although a mechanism had been established to coordinate efforts to fight trafficking, problems continued to exist, largely because of lack of cooperation among authorities involved in drug control; the Board recommended that the Government should define clearly the lines of responsibility between the law enforcement agencies and improve the coordination of their activities.

Oceania

Drug smuggling from Canada to Australia increased. While comprehensive seizure data for Australia and New Zealand were available, limited data were available for other countries in the region. However, illicit substances including cannabis, cocaine, heroin and precursor chemicals were seized in Fiji, Papua New Guinea and Vanuatu during 2007, confirming concerns that countries in Oceania other than Australia and New Zealand were also vulnerable to drug trafficking. States in Oceania continued to report cocaine seizures. Australia reported the seizure of 634 kg of cocaine in the period 2006–2007, compared with 46 kg in 2005–2006. An additional 610 kg were seized at the Australian border in 2006–2007, more than seven times the amount seized in 2005–2006. Although parcel post continued to be the preferred method of smuggling cocaine into Australia, an increase in smuggling by sea was noted.

Cannabis continued to be illicitly cultivated throughout the region, with Australia being the largest producer. Fiji reported a significant decrease in the number of cannabis plants eradicated during 2007. Cannabis continued to be the most abused drug in the region. A particularly high incidence of abuse was reported in Australia, Micronesia, New Zealand and Papua New Guinea. Nonetheless, the annual prevalence of its abuse among the Australian population aged 14 and above gradually decreased from its high level of 17.9 per cent in 1998 to 9.1 per cent in 2007. In contrast, the annual prevalence of cocaine abuse in Australia for the same age group increased from 0.5 per cent in 1993 to 1.6 per cent in 2007, the highest prevalence recorded in all surveyed years.

In Australia and New Zealand, ATS continued to be supplied predominantly by clandestine manufacturers operating there. However, the fact that methamphetamine and tablets made of a combination of MDMA and methamphetamine were also regularly seized at those countries' borders indicated that ATS were also smuggled into Oceania. While the incidence of abuse of amphetamines among the Australian population aged 14 and above declined from 3.7 per cent in 1998 to 2.3 per cent in 2007, MDMA abuse surpassed that of other ATS, making it the second most abused substance in Australia and New Zealand. Oceania continued to report seizures of ephedrine and pseudoephedrine. Traffickers smuggled large amounts of the substances in air and sea cargo and smaller amounts through the postal system. Seizures of substances not under international control continued to be reported in the region. In 2007, Australian customs authorities seized 45 consignments of gamma-butyrolactone, a precursor of GHB, totalling approximately 68 litres. The primary method of transportation continued to be through the postal system. Sixty per cent of the seized consignments originated in the United Kingdom.

The Pacific Islands Forum continued to bring countries in Oceania together to address drug control issues. Australia and New Zealand remained active in supporting capacity-building initiatives in drug control in the region.

UN action to combat drug abuse

UN Office on Drugs and Crime

The United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime implemented the Organization's drug and crime programmes in an integrated manner, addressing the interrelated issues of drug control, crime prevention and international terrorism in the context of sustainable development and human security (see also Economic and Social Questions, Chapter IX). The drug programme continued to be implemented in accordance with General Assembly resolution 45/179 [YUN 1990, p. 874]. The Office was responsible for coordinating all UN drug control activities and was the repository of technical expertise in international drug control for the UN Secretariat. It acted on behalf of the Secretary-General in fulfilling his responsibilities under the terms of international treaties and resolutions relating to drug control, and provided services to the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council, and committees and conferences dealing with drug control matters.

The UNODC Executive Director described the Office's 2008 activities in a report to the Commission on Narcotic Drugs and to the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice [E/CN.7/2009/3-E/CN.15/2009/3]. With regard to sustainable livelihoods, the Office assisted States by supporting illicit crop monitoring and alternative development programmes within the framework of poverty eradication and sustainable development. It conducted monitoring surveys in Afghanistan, Bolivia, Colombia, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Myanmar and Peru, and was developing a monitoring system in Ecuador. In Afghanistan, the Office strengthened the capacity of the Ministry of Counter Narcotics and supported the Government in building institutions and capacity for alternative livelihoods, criminal justice, cross-border operations and illicit crop monitoring. In Bolivia, Colombia and Peru, UNODC supported alternative development programmes that focused on poverty alleviation. In Peru, it supported conservation efforts and provided assistance to enable farmers to engage in commercially viable and sustainable licit activities. It supported Colombia's alternative development programme, which expanded the family forest warden initiative and assisted farmers to engage in commercially viable and sustainable licit activities. In Myanmar, in the framework of its project "Global partnership on alternative development", UNODC addressed poverty reduction issues related to opium poppy cultivation.

As to supply reduction, the Office strengthened the rule of law and helped States to improve border control practices, introduce witness protection programmes and address issues relating to the proceeds of crime, corruption and the countering of money-laundering. In Haiti, it provided advice in support of legislative reform, ratification of the UN conventions on drugs, crime and terrorism, institution-building and the preparation of a new statute on judicial officers. It prepared a regional programme for promoting the rule of law and human security in the Caribbean for 2009–2011. With a view to strengthening regional cooperation among law enforcement authorities, a number of meetings of subsidiary bodies of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs were held. In addition, UNODC assisted States in Central Asia and in the Persian Gulf area in the establishment of agencies to counter cross-border trafficking.

UNODC expanded its initiatives in drug abuse prevention, treatment and rehabilitation. In partnership with the Vienna Non-Governmental Organization (NGO) Committee on Narcotic Drugs, it facilitated a series of regional and online consultations with NGOs that culminated in a global forum entitled “Beyond 2008” (Vienna, 7–9 July). With regard to synthetic drugs, the global Synthetics Monitoring: Analyses, Reporting and Trends (SMART) programme was launched, along with a report to address the scarcity of data and enhance the capacity of States and authorities in priority regions to generate, manage, analyse and report synthetic drug information and apply the knowledge to policy design and operational programme interventions.

As to law enforcement, UNODC supported the Central Asian Regional Information and Coordination Centre (CARICC), a subregional drug control initiative implemented in cooperation with Azerbaijan, Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, the Russian Federation, Tajikistan, Turkmenistan and Uzbekistan. During the pilot stage, CARICC established operational cooperation among the States of the subregion, and law enforcement agencies achieved results in the area of drug control. Under the UNODC Container Control Programme and the World Customs Organization (WCO), special operational units to profile containers for inspection were established in Ghana, Pakistan and Senegal. The Programme was expanded to include other seaports and dry ports in Central Asia, and regional concept notes were developed for the Caribbean, the Caspian Sea, Central America and South America.

During the year, the Office analysed the situation in West Africa in the report Drug Trafficking as a Security Threat in West Africa; launched a study on the threat of transnational trafficking in Afghan opiates; and published Amphetamines and Ecstasy: 2008 Global ATS Assessment [Sales No. E.08.XI.12]. It also published the World Drug Report 2008 [Sales No.

E.08.XI.1], which, in addition to providing an in-depth trend analysis of world drug markets, traced the history of international drug control since its inception a century earlier in response to the Chinese opium epidemic. Illicit opium survey reports were published for South-East Asia (Lao People's Democratic Republic, Myanmar and Thailand) and new data on coca bush cultivation in the Andean countries in 2007 were issued. In response to Commission resolution 50/4 on improving the quality and performance of drug analysis laboratories [YUN 2007, p. 1299], UNODC supported institutions and individuals from over 85 States in the form of quality assurance support, guidelines and best practice manuals, reference samples and field identification test kits. It also completed a manual on the implementation of quality management systems in drug testing laboratories.

Administrative and budgetary matters

In response to Commission on Narcotic Drugs resolution 50/14 [YUN 2007, p. 1300] and Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice resolution 16/6 [ibid., p. 1128], the Executive Director submitted a February report on programmes and initiatives to be implemented by UNODC in the bienniums 2008–2009 and 2010–2011 [E/CN.7/2008/12-E/CN.15/2008/16]. The report also addressed how the programmes and initiatives conformed with the strategy for the period 2008–2011 for UNODC, approved by the Economic and Social Council in resolution 2007/12 [YUN 2007, p. 1301]. The report provided an overview of the programmes and initiatives to be pursued in 2008 and supplemented the information provided in the 2008–2009 consolidated budget.

In accordance with the same resolutions, the Executive Director submitted a February report on financial issues and difficulties faced by UNODC in implementing its mandates and an initial assessment of ways and means of improving its financial situation [E/CN.7/2008/11-E/CN.15/2008/15]. The report provided an overview of the programmes and initiatives to be pursued in 2008, in addition to the information provided in the 2008–2009 consolidated budget; outlined measures taken to cope with the financial difficulties faced by the Office; and presented a number of proposals to address those problems. The Executive Director suggested that States should acknowledge and maintain the increasingly strong support provided to UNODC from many countries and institutions, stress the importance of stable and predictable multilateral core resources, and consider establishing an informal open-ended working group to explore ways and means to address UNODC's financial challenges. The working group could be co-chaired by the chairmen of the two Commissions, in line with the process that led to the 2008–2011 strategy for the Office. He also suggested that UNODC continue to align the consolidated budget with the 2008–2011 strategy, thereby ensuring integrated planning and budgeting as a basis for better result-based reporting to States and compliance with their policy directives.

Further in response to the same resolutions, the Executive Director submitted to the Commissions a March report on deviations from the standard programme support charge of 13 per cent during the period 2005–2007 [E/CN.7/2008/14-E/CN.15/2008/19]. He gave an account of the exemptions and reductions provided to donors in respect of that charge and the basis for them. The Executive Director stated that UNODC would continue to apply UN policies and procedures with respect to the programme support charge in 2008 and 2009 and would ensure the application of clear and consistent criteria in the granting of exceptions to the standard 13 per cent rate.

A March Secretariat note [E/CN.7/2008/13], prepared in response to Commission on Narcotic Drugs resolution 50/14 [YUN 2007, p. 1300], provided information on the implementation status and resource requirements of resolutions and decisions relating to the UNODC drug programme adopted by the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council and the Commission on Narcotic Drugs in the period 2003–2007 in which action by the Office was requested.

On 14 March [E/2008/28 (dec. 51/1)], the Commission established an open-ended intergovernmental working group to discuss and prepare recommendations—taking into account the above reports of the Executive Director and the Secretariat note—to be presented to the Commission's fifty-second (2009) session on how to ensure political ownership by Member States and on how to improve the governance structure and the financial situation of UNODC.

Commission on Narcotic Drugs

The Commission on Narcotic Drugs held its fifty-first session in Vienna from 10 to 14 March, during which it recommended two resolutions and two decisions for adoption by the Economic and Social Council. It also adopted 18 resolutions and one decision, which it brought to the attention of the Council.

Following the closure of its fifty-first session on 14 March, the Commission opened its fifty-second session to elect the new chairperson and other bureau members.

By decision 2008/247 of 24 July, the Council took note of the Commission's report on its fifty-first session [E/2008/28] and approved the provisional agenda and documentation for the fifty-second (2009) session.

Drug demand reduction and drug abuse

The Commission on Narcotic Drugs had before it a January report by the Secretariat [E/CN.7/2008/4] that reviewed trends in the abuse of the main types of illicit drugs over the period 1998–2006, based on a review of key indicator data and the informed opinion of national experts in each region. Although national experts reported largely increasing trends in illicit drug abuse for 1998–2004, some positive developments were reported more recently regarding global trends. Overall, abuse of two main types of drug (opioids and cocaine) stabilized or decreased, in particular in countries where consumption was high (cocaine in North America and heroin in Central and Western Europe). The prevalence of heroin injection remained high in Central Asia and Eastern Europe, where increased efforts in treatment and rehabilitation were needed. Increases in the use of amphetamine-type stimulants (ATS) were tapering off, with trends in their consumption showing a decrease or stabilization in Central and Western Europe, East and South-East Asia, North America and Oceania. Cannabis consumption remained globally widespread and increasing experimentation by youth underlined the need for more investment in preventive action, using evidence-based approaches.

The report noted that, despite marked improvements in the quality and reliability of drug abuse data since 1998, up-to-date information regarding the most vulnerable population groups—in particular youth, women and injecting drug users—was not available. Large differences in data collection capacity among regions and the lack of periodically collected data remained a cause for concern in many countries, where only partial progress had been made in establishing the principles, structures and indicators necessary for effective drug information systems. It was necessary, said the report, to enhance the information base for a comprehensive and harmonized assessment. As part of the work undertaken by the Global Assessment Programme on Drug Abuse, UNODC helped lay the foundation for evidence-based responses in partnership with national counterparts and in coordination with other agencies. It was suggested that the Commission might wish to encourage the international community and relevant regional and national entities to work together to enhance drug abuse monitoring mechanisms so as to facilitate the exchange of information and expertise in order to strengthen responses, in particular in regions where activities for demand reduction could not affect abuse prevalence due to lack of resources or expertise.

On 14 March [E/2008/28 (res. 51/2)], the Commission appealed to Member States and relevant international organizations to raise awareness of the health risks of cannabis use among youth and adults and invited States to share effective, evidence-based strategies and best practices for preventing cannabis use by children and youth. States were encouraged to: implement programmes preventing the onset of cannabis use, targeting youth, especially children under the age of 12, to maximize the impact of such programmes; urge the health and social research community to continue to study both prevention and treatment practices addressing the health risks and other related risks of cannabis use; and implement comprehensive prevention and treatment approaches focusing on individuals and their relationships with their peers, families, schools and communities. The Commission requested States to raise awareness among pregnant women of the risks involved in smoking cannabis, to carry out studies on cannabis use by youth, and to examine the scientific and medical data available on the health consequences of its use.

Also on 14 March [res. 51/3], the Commission—noting the relationship between substance abuse and health, social and economic consequences—acknowledged the value of using the techniques of early detection, brief intervention and linking people to treatment by integrating substance abuse prevention and intervention into general health- and social-care settings. It supported the use of those techniques as a means of reducing any stigma associated with substance abuse in the field of health, and encouraged their implementation as a set of preventive measures to be applied in health- and social-care settings. The Commission invited States to: educate health- and social-care providers; raise awareness and build capacity by training health- and social-care providers in the use of those techniques as tools for identifying at-risk populations and urge providers to encourage early intervention; share with each other and with relevant international organizations their research findings and best practices; and adopt legislation to safeguard the voluntary participation of patients and to protect privacy and confidentiality in communications between providers and patients. The World Health Organization was invited to promote worldwide the practices of early detection, brief intervention and linking people to treatment and to work closely with UNODC.

HIV/AIDS and other blood-borne viruses

A January report by the UNODC Executive Director [E/CN.7/2008/7], submitted in response to Commission resolution 49/4 [YUN 2006, p. 1456], provided an update on progress in responding to the prevalence of HIV/AIDS and other blood-borne diseases among drug users. It discussed action by States and coordination among multilateral institutions and international donors—including follow-up on the recommendations of the Global Task Team on Improving AIDS Coordination among Multilateral Institutions and International Donors—and described technical assistance provided by UNODC as a co-sponsor of the Joint United Nations Programme on HIV/AIDS (UNAIDS) and as the lead UN agency for HIV prevention and care associated with injecting drug use and in prison settings. During 2006–2007, many States had demonstrated increased awareness and interest in addressing HIV/AIDS among drug users, in particular injecting drug users (IDUs). They established legal, policy and institutional frameworks and adapted policies specifically addressing HIV/AIDS prevention, treatment and care for IDUs. Projects and programmes providing services to IDUs commenced for the first time in many countries, and States expanded components of the comprehensive package of HIV/AIDS prevention, treatment and care services for IDUs recommended by UNAIDS. However, service provision was still inadequate as just 13 per cent of reporting States provided all the measures recommended in the package.

The report concluded that, despite marked increases in financing for the global HIV response, the gap between the resources available and the amounts needed to achieve universal access to HIV services by 2010 had widened. Changes in the legal and policy fields had not been rapid enough and many States had yet to develop a strategic vision. In some countries the development of effective programmes continued to be inhibited by policy choices and legislation that did not facilitate the implementation of all components of the UNAIDS package. Structural issues continued to limit the effectiveness of the response. Even in countries where the national legal and policy framework facilitated the provision of all measures of the package, regulations and guidelines for implementation were often lacking. A more sustained effort was needed to prevent the transition from non-injecting to injecting use, to address the needs of female IDUs and to deal with HIV in prison settings. Management challenges were especially difficult in resource-limited countries, such as many in sub-Saharan Africa, and the continuing lack of reliable data presented a particular problem. The challenge for UNODC was to engage Governments, local programmes and policymakers to develop favourable legislation and policies that would support implementation of effective responses to the HIV epidemic among drug users. The Office continued to address the issues of ignorance, stigma and discrimination, which were often the only identifiable reasons for limited or non-response. Overcoming those challenges required sustained political and financial support (including for UNODC), increased national capacity and upgrading of proven, evidence-informed strategies.

On 14 March [E/2008/28 (res. 51/14)], the Commission called for collaboration among States represented both in the Commission and on the UNAIDS Programme Coordinating Board in promoting better coordination and alignment of the HIV/AIDS response in order to scale up towards the goal of universal access to comprehensive prevention, care, treatment and support services for drug users. It requested the UNODC Executive Director to share relevant decisions of the UNAIDS Programme Coordinating Board with States at each session of the Commission held in the first half of the year, starting with the fifty-second (2009) session, and to transmit relevant resolutions of the Commission each year to the Chairman of the Programme Coordinating Board. The UNODC Executive Director was requested to report to the Commission in that regard.

Illicit cultivation, manufacture and trafficking

On 14 March [E/2008/28 (res. 51/5)], the Commission on Narcotic Drugs emphasized the importance of taking measures to facilitate cross-border cooperation in the area of drug control, in accordance with bilateral and multilateral agreements, and recommended that States that shared common borders enter into bilateral agreements so that cross-border cooperation could take place within an established legal framework consistent with their respective legal and administrative systems. It requested States to ensure that channels of communication among them were effective and efficient for exchanging information and urged them to conduct joint investigations of transnational criminal groups involved in illicit drug production and trafficking.

Also on 14 March [res. 51/7], the Commission called on transit States, countries of destination and countries of origin to enhance bilateral, regional and international cooperation in the areas of border control, mutual legal assistance, law enforcement, information exchange and demand reduction, and called on all States to support and promote such cooperation. It urged States and UNODC to strengthen initiatives to provide assistance and technical support to States affected by the transit of illicit drugs, especially developing countries and countries with economies in transition, and invited States and other donors to provide extrabudgetary contributions. It also urged international financial institutions to provide financial support. The UNODC Executive Director was requested to report to the Commission in 2010.

On the same date [res. 51/10], the Commission adopted a resolution on strengthening international cooperation for the control of precursor chemicals used in the manufacture of synthetic drugs, in which it recognized the important work of INCB as the principal body and global focal point for the international control of precursors. It invited Governments to contribute to the Board's efforts, particularly with regard to the Pre-Export Notification (PEN) Online system, Project Prism, Project Cohesion and related operations such as Operation Crystal Flow. It called on INCB to reinforce communication with States and work with them in identifying opportunities for more effective precursor control, and urged States to strengthen, update or establish national legislation and mechanisms relating to the control of precursors used in the illicit manufacture of drugs, pursuant to the 1988 Convention. Member States were invited to: consider applying measures to control substances used as precursors; strengthen the control of preparations containing substances that could be easily used or recovered for the illicit manufacture of drugs; further strengthen controls on the importation of precursors to ensure their legal use; and provide INCB with information on any new substances replacing precursors. The Commission also invited States to continue to notify INCB and Member States concerned of any new routes and methods being used in the diversion of precursors, such as the Internet and other delivery systems. It encouraged States to consider precursor control as one of the central questions to be discussed at the high-level segment of the Commission's fifty-second (2009) session.

Also on the same date [res. 51/16], the Commission called on INCB to request States to provide to the Board available information on alternate precursors and on methods of illicit manufacture of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances, and to collate and share such information through special alerts. It invited States to continue to exchange, on a bilateral and regional basis, information relating to the use of alternate precursors and new methods of manufacture of illicit drugs.

Secretariat report. A report by the Secretariat [E/CN.7/2009/4] provided an overview of trends in illicit drug production and trafficking worldwide, focusing on seizure statistics for 2006–2007 and on cultivation and production for 2006–2008. Information on cultivation and production of plant-based drugs was drawn from UNODC's illicit crop-monitoring surveys; information on trafficking was based on replies by Governments to the annual questionnaire relating to illicit supply, submitted for 2007 and previous years. Other sources included reports on significant seizures, the World Drug Report 2008 [Sales No. E.08.XI.11] and other reports received by UNODC or submitted to the Commission and its subsidiary bodies.

Cannabis continued to be the most widely produced, trafficked and consumed plant-based drug worldwide. Global seizures of cannabis resin increased significantly in 2007, in particular in Western and Central Europe; preliminary data also suggested a moderate increase in seizures of cannabis herb. The total area under cannabis cultivation in 2007 in Afghanistan was estimated to be comparable to that in Morocco. The total area under opium poppy cultivation in Afghanistan decreased by almost one fifth in 2008. Nonetheless, Afghanistan continued to account for the vast majority of the world's production of opium. Opium seizures continued to rise in 2007, driven mainly by seizures in Iran, which also contributed significantly to a moderate increase in global heroin seizures. Cultivation of coca bush and manufacture of cocaine continued to be concentrated in Colombia, Peru and Bolivia (in that order). While the total area under coca bush cultivation increased, the stable trend in manufacture of recent years was sustained into 2007. Data for 2007, while incomplete, suggested that such stability was reflected in global seizures of cocaine. Information on individual drug seizures confirmed the growing role of Africa as a transit area for cocaine trafficking. Seizures of ATS worldwide stabilized in 2006, but in 2007 increased quantities of MDMA were seized at the global level and increases in amphetamine seizures were recorded in Central and Western Europe. Estimated global manufacture of ATS remained largely unchanged in 2006.

The report noted that most of the global illicit opium production occurred in Afghanistan, where illicit opium poppy cultivation and opium production continued to be matters of concern, and recommended that international efforts to assist the country be strengthened. In Afghanistan, the area under cannabis cultivation in 2007 was more than one third of the area under opium poppy cultivation, and the country accounted for almost one third of global production of cannabis resin in 2006. As the cultivation of cannabis plant was becoming as lucrative as that of opium poppy, the report stressed that the scale of opium trade in Afghanistan should not detract attention from the growing problem of cannabis. The volume of cocaine trafficked via the African continent, in particular to Western Europe, had increased. As many law enforcement agencies in Africa lacked the necessary technical equipment, trained personnel and access to forensic services, further international support was required. Trafficking in ATS remained a matter of concern, in particular in Central and Western Europe and in the Near and Middle East/South-West Asia. Governments in the latter subregion in particular needed to address Captagon and counterfeit captagon trafficking in a coordinated manner with the assistance of international organizations such as INTERPOL, INCB and WCO.

Statistical analysis could be useful in developing a global strategy against drug trafficking. However, such an analysis was subject to the availability of quality data from States; serious gaps in seizure data had arisen in those subregions that were at the forefront of the latest developments, such as the Near and Middle East and West Africa. The report recommended that States submit their comprehensive responses to the annual reports questionnaire in a regular and timely fashion.

Control of international trade in poppy seeds

On 14 March [E/2008/28 (res. 51/15)], the Commission urged States: to endeavour, consistent with their domestic laws and regulations and applicable international regulations, to import poppy seeds derived from licitly grown opium poppy crops; to be vigilant and to ensure that poppy seeds traded for food purposes were not derived from illicitly cultivated opium poppy plants; and to strengthen their resolve to implement Economic and Social Council resolution 1999/32 [YUN 1999, p. 1166]. INCB was requested to gather information regarding implementation of that resolution by States, with a view to strengthening the control of international movement of poppy seeds obtained from illicitly grown plants and to share that information with States. The Commission asked INCB and UNODC to ensure the full implementation of article 22 of the 1961 Convention by the States concerned.

Illicit drug and firearms trafficking

On 14 March [E/2008/28 (res. 51/11)], the Commission on Narcotic Drugs recognized the increasing links between drug trafficking and the illicit manufacturing of and trafficking in firearms in some regions, and the need to prevent the spread of that problem to other regions. It noted that reducing illicit firearms manufacturing and trafficking was a major component of the efforts to reduce the illicit drug supply in some regions and encouraged States to take adequate measures to prevent the acquisition and use of firearms and ammunition by criminal organizations involved in drug trafficking. It emphasized the need for cooperation among States in reinforcing border control and urged States to allocate resources and provide training and capacity-enhancing measures for intelligence, law enforcement, customs and related authorities responsible for fighting drug trafficking in order to assist in the prevention, detection and investigation of cases involving firearms manufacturing and trafficking, and to identify and dismantle networks and links between those illicit activities.

Noting that efforts to combat drug trafficking could be complemented by providing training in fighting firearms trafficking for law enforcement personnel responsible for investigating such activities, the Commission urged States to promote and increase bilateral and multilateral cooperation, including through programmes administered by UNODC, focused on capacity-building and training and to exchange experiences and best practices.

The Commission also encouraged States to exchange information and provide judicial cooperation in order to identify and investigate links between drug trafficking and firearms and ammunition manufacturing and trafficking, and to provide information to UNODC linking patterns in firearms trafficking and drug-related trafficking. The Executive Director was asked to report to the Commission at its fifty-third (2010) session on information received from States, and UNODC was requested to take into consideration the information provided by States on the relation between drug trafficking and firearms and ammunition trafficking when preparing the World Drug Report and other reports on the world drug problem.

Alternative development

In a report on using alternative development programmes to reduce the cultivation of cannabis plants [E/CN.7/2008/9], prepared in response to Economic and Social Council resolution 2006/31 [YUN 2006, p. 1459], the Executive Director presented a summary of the work undertaken by Member States in implementing both that resolution and General Assembly resolution 59/160 [YUN 2004, p. 1252]. Topics covered included: international cooperation and the sharing of experience and expertise on illicit crop eradication and alternative development; large-scale cannabis cultivation; and integration of alternative development into other drug control measures. It also outlined activities carried out by UNODC in the implementation of Assembly resolution 59/160; knowledge-sharing and feasibility studies; and the global strategy for alternative development.

The report concluded that only a few States had provided information on efforts made to implement Council resolution 2006/31 and only four African countries had responded to a note verbale sent in 2007, in which States were invited to provide such information. The efforts reported by responding States with respect to the implementation of the resolution were commendable. In particular, the efforts of Morocco, a country affected by large-scale cannabis plant cultivation, deserved the support of the international community. It was noted that, prior to formulating or designing alternative development interventions in any geographical area, a thorough analysis of the situation and a technical assessment of the extent of cannabis plant cultivation were required.

The international community was urged to provide technical and financial support to those States engaged in alternative development for areas affected by cannabis plant cultivation; and donor States were encouraged to enable UNODC to assist the affected States. States should review ambiguous drug laws and recognize that they impeded efforts by other States to address the elimination of illicit cannabis plant cultivation and fuelled crime and violence in countries where cannabis plants were cultivated. States affected by large-scale cannabis plant cultivation should incorporate development-oriented illicit crop reduction programmes within a wider framework of traditional development programmes and include them in poverty reduction strategy papers, as well as country assistance strategies, in their negotiations with international financial institutions. The report stressed that progress in alternative development should be measured through development indicators and not solely in terms of illicit crop production figures. Any future international action plans should include baseline indicators and well-targeted questionnaires related to development.

On 14 March [E/2008/28 (res. 51/6)], the Commission on Narcotic Drugs requested UNODC to support the establishment or strengthening of national strategies and action plans to eliminate illicit cannabis cultivation, and invited States and other donors to provide extrabudgetary contributions for those purposes. It urged Member States to provide affected States with support in the area of alternative development, including by funding research on crops that were alternatives to cannabis, and in the areas of environmental protection and technical assistance. It also encouraged States that had technical experience in eliminating the illicit cultivation of drug crops and in implementing alternative development programmes to share that experience with affected States.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 24 July [meeting 42], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs [E/2008/28], adopted resolution 2008/26 without vote [agenda item 14 (d)].

Promoting sustainability and integrality in alternative development as an important part of drug control strategy in States where illicit crops are grown to produce drugs

The Economic and Social Council,

Bearing in mind the provisions of the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs of 1961, that Convention as amended by the 1972 Protocol, the Convention on Psychotropic Substances of 1971 and the United Nations Convention against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances of 1988,

Recalling the Political Declaration adopted by the General Assembly at its twentieth special session, in which Member States recognized that action against the world drug problem was a common and shared responsibility,

Reaffirming the United Nations Millennium Declaration, in particular the Millennium Development Goals of eradicating extreme poverty and hunger and ensuring environmental sustainability,

Reaffirming also its resolutions 2003/37 of 22 July 2003 and 2006/33 of 27 July 2006 and Commission on Narcotic Drugs resolutions 45/14 of 15 March 2002 and 48/9 of 11 March 2005,

Taking into consideration the report of the International Narcotics Control Board for 2005 and the report entitled Alternative Development: A Global Thematic Evaluation, prepared by the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime,

Convinced that, in the review of the progress achieved in meeting the goals and targets set in the Political Declaration adopted by the General Assembly at its twentieth special session, there is a genuine need for the international community to assess the way alternative development has been practised in the past and ensure that, overall, the approaches to alternative development are fully implemented,

Recognizing the significant achievements and efforts of countries in South-East Asia in recent decades towards eliminating the illicit cultivation of opium poppy and cannabis, and recognizing also the commitment of the Association of Southeast Asian Nations to making South-East Asia free of illicit drugs by 2015,

Recognizing also the significant achievements of the Andean countries in the implementation of alternative development and preventive alternative development programmes, as presented in the fifth report of the Executive Director of the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime on the world drug problem, and noting that those achievements were attained in accordance with national specificities, with significant national resources and with the support of international cooperation,

Recognizing further the success of the long-term, holistic and integrated approach to solving the problem of opium poppy cultivation, including its correlation with poverty, that has been applied for forty years in national and international programmes in Thailand, which led the United Nations Development Programme in May 2006 to present the first Human Development Lifetime Achievement Award to King Bhumibol Adulyadej of Thailand as the initiator of that approach,

Acknowledging that the success of alternative development and preventive alternative development, as appropriate, may be dependent upon, inter alia, the following essential elements:

(a) Long-term investments by Governments and international donors,

(b) The efficiency of national institutions responsible for drug control policies and of institutions related to the promotion of alternative development,

(c) Synergy and trust among the Government, local administrations and communities in building local ownership,

(d) An adequate response to human needs and dignity in the context of sustainable rural development and community self-reliance,

(e) The creation of a value chain by utilizing local wisdom, capacity-building, marketing and entrepreneurship,

(f) Broader market access for alternative development products consistent with national and international obligations and consideration of measures to facilitate access and positioning in markets for alternative development products, taking into account applicable multilateral trade rules,

1. Recalls the Action Plan on International Cooperation on the Eradication of Illicit Drug Crops and on Alternative Development, which continues to have practical relevance and in which it is stated that alternative development is an important component of a balanced and comprehensive illicit crop eradication strategy and is intended to promote lawful and sustainable socio-economic options for those communities and population groups that have resorted to illicit cultivation as their only viable means of obtaining a livelihood, contributing in an integrated way to the eradication of poverty;

2. Emphasizes that the problem of illicit production of narcotic drugs is often related to development problems, in particular poverty, poor health conditions and illiteracy, and that it must be tackled in a larger development context through a holistic and integrated approach;

3. Agrees on the relevance of enhancing alternative development and preventive alternative development, as appropriate, in a manner focusing on the sustainability and integrality of uplifting people's livelihood, and recommends that such elements be considered by relevant bodies in the United Nations system;

4. Recognizes the significant role played by developing countries with extensive expertise in alternative development and preventive alternative development and the importance of outreach activities aimed at promoting a set of best practices and lessons learned in that area and sharing those best practices and lessons learned with States affected by illicit crop cultivation, including those emerging from conflict, with a view to using them, where appropriate, in accordance with the national specificities of each State;

5. Urges donor Governments, as well as multilateral, international and regional financial institutions, in conformity with the principle of shared responsibility and as a sign of their commitment to fighting illicit drugs in a comprehensive and balanced manner, to redouble their efforts to enhance international cooperation, especially trilateral cooperation aimed at utilizing the expertise of developing countries and the financial support of developed countries in assisting other developing countries in reducing illicit drug crops through alternative development and preventive alternative development, as appropriate, and to consider increasing their financial and material support and technical assistance and providing a flexible and sufficiently long-term commitment to States affected by illicit crop cultivation;

6. Commends the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime for its continued and progressive work on alternative development, described in its report entitled Alternative Development: A Global Thematic Evaluation, especially the lessons learned and the recommendations contained therein, and acknowledges the need to consider providing the Office with additional funding in that area;

7. Calls upon Member States, consistent with their national and international obligations, and relevant international organizations to consider measures to enable products of alternative development to have easier access to markets, taking into account applicable multilateral trade rules;

8. Encourages Member States, in the context of the review of the progress achieved in meeting the goals and targets set in the Political Declaration adopted by the General Assembly at its twentieth special session, to consider developing a set of international guiding principles on alternative development, based on the sharing of best practices and lessons learned in different countries and regions, and acknowledging the best practices and lessons learned in sustainable alternative livelihood development of Thailand, annexed to the present resolution;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit the text of the present resolution to multilateral, international and regional financial institutions and to all Governments for consideration and implementation;

10. Requests the Executive Director of the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime to report to the Commission on Narcotic Drugs at its fifty-second session on the implementation of the present resolution.

ANNEX

Best practices and lessons learned in sustainable alternative livelihood development of Thailand

1. The first and foremost, alternative development, which in the context of the Thai experience is referred to as “sustainable alternative livelihood development”, must be people-centred. The Doi Tung development project in Thailand served as the model for the present set of best practices and lessons learned. The outlook, design and implementation were developed taking into account a fundamental question: how will people benefit from this project? That became the key performance indicator for the project.

2. The main objective of sustainable alternative livelihood development is to transform poor and vulnerable communities, especially in rural areas, from social and economic dependency or sub-sufficiency to full socio-economic sufficiency, in a participatory manner and at a pace appropriate to each stage, to allow the changes to be accepted and introduced by the communities. Keeping in mind the goal of sustainability, development practitioners should see their role as facilitators of progress and should plan their exit strategy to enable the communities to continue the activities without external intervention.

3. Sustainability in this context means that the communities have sufficient economic capacity in their factors of production and marketing and are able to maintain equitable social and cultural integrity and live in harmony with their natural environment (coexist with nature). With this definition in mind, sufficient health care must be made available because sick people cannot be economically productive. Ideally, an income-generating mechanism should be employed that allows people and a healthy natural environment to benefit greatly from one another. Continuous education will ensure that future generations will be able to pursue legitimate livelihoods, cope with the pressures of globalization and create for themselves opportunities for growth.

4. When applying sustainable alternative livelihood development in the context of drug control, the eradication of illicit crops should not be the only immediate goal. The progressive introduction of viable alternative livelihoods in the broader context of rural development is needed to tackle the root cause of illicit crop cultivation—poverty—without severely curtailing the only available means of survival of the people involved.

5. Activities that provide people with alternative cash income and/or produce immediate health or social benefits within the first few months or days (so-called quick hits) are vital to building trust and enabling an immediate transition from illegitimate to legitimate sources of income, which can begin to transform the economic prospects of a community. Successful quick hits build confidence and strengthen cooperation among stakeholders at all levels, from people at the grassroots level and local authorities to leaders at the national level.

6. Medium-term and long-term activities are introduced simultaneously in order to ensure that the economic and social benefits are long-lasting and that the areas concerned remain free of illicit drug cultivation for a long time. Development activities must be based on continuity: each activity should lead into another, build on the success of previous initiatives and, over time, increase the hope and capabilities of the persons involved.

7. It is necessary to achieve a balance between a bottom-up and a top-down approach. Strong and committed leadership is required to ensure that development policies and activities are based on a true understanding of the needs and concerns of the target communities at the grass-roots level. Clear and constant communication is critical, especially at the beginning, for knowledge and experiences to be transferred not only from development practitioners but also to them.

8. Viable livelihoods should be available to all members of the community: the young and the elderly; the fit and the infirm; and men and women alike. Having a variety of income-generating activities may serve as a safeguard against weakened interests in an individual product or activity. Livelihood diversification is in fact a major success factor in sustainable alternative livelihood development (single-crop solutions are rarely sustainable).

9. Combining local wisdom and available resources with a market-driven product development approach and effective management will lead to the creation of a viable value chain at the local level. Revenue from value-added goods locally manufactured by such an enterprise must contribute to the social benefits of the target communities and society in general. Such social entrepreneurship—the practice of using business profits to generate social goods—can lead to real socio-economic sustainability.

10. To ensure that development objectives are realized as expected, mechanisms must be in place to allow frequent assessments and necessary adjustments, starting with comprehensive census baseline data captured through both qualitative and quantitative development indicators. Project monitoring and evaluation hold development practitioners accountable for their action, and that is crucial, as people's lives depend on the performance of those practitioners and imprudent and uncaring development often has adverse effects.

11. Ultimately, the key to sustainable alternative livelihood development is community ownership, where capacities and economic activities have been developed to such an extent that the communities can become owners in their ventures instead of serving only as contract farmers or employees. Community ownership means not only physical ownership of the enterprises but also emotional ownership, on the part of the community, of its own development and future, from the very start.

12. Since the issue of sustainability envisages the long-term commitment of all parties involved, it also calls for longer-term and sufficiently flexible funding from a variety of sources, including Governments, international organizations, multilateral financial institutions and other donors and development partners.

Regional cooperation

A Secretariat report [E/CN.7/2009/5] described action taken by regional subsidiary bodies of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs in 2008. Following a review of drug trafficking trends and regional and subregional cooperation, each subsidiary body addressed drug law enforcement issues of priority in its region and made recommendations. The eighteenth meeting of Heads of National Drug Law Enforcement Agencies (HONLEA), Africa (Yamoussoukro, Côte d'Ivoire, 8–12 September) [UNODC/HONLAF/2008/5] considered managing the investigation of major drug cases and the professional handling of exhibits; developing successful strategies to address trafficking in cannabis; and the issue of trafficking in ATS and associated problems of precursor control. The eighteenth meeting of HONLEA, Latin America and the Caribbean (Tegucigalpa, Honduras, 13–17 October) [UNODC/HONLAC/2008/5] examined the region's response to trafficking in cocaine; strengthening information exchange and operational cooperation at the inter-agency, cross-border and regional levels; and law enforcement's role in supporting demand-reduction policies. The forty-third session of the Subcommission on Illicit Drug Traffic and Related Matters in the Near and Middle East (Tehran, Iran, 16–20 November) [UNODC/SUBCOM/2008/5] considered the use and effectiveness of special investigative techniques, including controlled delivery as an operational response to dismantle drug trafficking groups; ensuring the efficient exchange of information and extending operational cooperation against drug trafficking groups at the inter-agency, cross-border and regional levels; and controlling the manufacture of and addressing trafficking in synthetic drugs and associated problems in the area of precursor control.

Statistics

In 2008, the United Nations statistical work programme was conducted mainly through the activities of the Statistical Commission and the United Nations Statistics Division. In February, the Commission adopted the International Recommendations for Tourism Statistics 2008, the International Recommendations for Distributive Trade Statistics 2008 and part I of the International Recommendations for Industrial Statistics 2008. It also adopted, in principle, volume 1 of the updated System of National Accounts as the international standard for national accounts statistics. The Commission welcomed the completion of the 2005 round of the International Comparison Programme and endorsed the Programme's continuation, with a target year of 2011 for the next round. The Commission also approved its multi-year programme of work for 2008–2011.

The Commission reviewed the work of groups of countries and international organizations in various areas of economic, social, demographic and environmental statistics and made specific recommendations and suggestions.

Work of Statistical Commission

The Statistical Commission held its thirty-ninth session in New York from 26 to 29 February [E/2008/24] and brought to the attention of the Council 17 decisions adopted during the session. It commended the high-quality programme review report on labour statistics prepared by the United Kingdom. It also took note of the recommendations and welcomed the commitments made by the International Labour Organization (ILO), as well as the work done by the ILO Conference of Labour Statisticians. The Commission reinforced the importance of the Task Force on Education Statistics as a forum for discussion to elaborate on a general framework for international education statistics and to provide recommendations on mechanisms for improved coordination among international agencies mandated to work in education statistics. The Commission welcomed the completion of the 2005 round of the International Comparison Programme (ICP) [YUN 2005, p. 1369] and endorsed the continuation of ICP with a target year of 2011 for the next round in order to sustain the momentum of the 2005 round in terms of accumulated experience and enhanced capacity at the country level and to link ICP more effectively with the Organisation for Economic Cooperation and Development (OECD)/Eurostat Programme. It requested the World Bank to continue hosting the ICP Global Office and endorsed the establishment of an interim executive board.

The Commission adopted, in principle, volume 1 of the updated System of National Accounts (SNA) as the international standard for national accounts statistics, and recognizing that the time required to evaluate volume 1 of SNA as a whole was insufficient, endorsed the proposal of the Intersecretariat Working Group on National Accounts to extend the review period by two months. The Commission agreed with the finding and recommendations of the Friends of the Chair report on integrated economic statistics and agreed that there might be a need to develop a framework for establishing guidelines for countries in the process of implementing an integrated approach in their national statistical systems. It adopted the International Recommendations for Tourism Statistics 2008 and requested the World Tourism Organization (UNWTO) and the Statistics Division to develop an implementation programme in collaboration with supranational and regional organizations.

The Commission adopted the International Recommendations for Distributive Trade Statistics 2008 and agreed on the implementation programme. It also adopted part I and endorsed part II of the International Recommendations for Industrial Statistics 2008; endorsed the initiative and strategy to revise the recommendations for international merchandise trade statistics; underscored the importance of the Human Development Report (see p. 935) as a source of information on development issues and emphasized the need for the Human Development Report Office to further improve transparency in the process of preparing the Report. On data collection, dissemination and exchange, the Commission encouraged the Statistics Division to make data available free of charge to facilitate their dissemination and use; continue its initiatives to reduce the reporting burden on countries, including through joint data-collection agreements; and facilitate the exchange of experiences among countries with respect to dissemination policies and practices. It welcomed the report on the Statistical Data and Metadata Exchange initiative. The Commission expressed satisfaction with the establishment of the African Centre for Statistics and the proposed recommendations aimed at addressing the challenges facing African national statistical systems. It considered the Secretary-General's report on the indicators for monitoring the Millennium Development Goals (MDGs), commended the efforts of the Inter-Agency and Expert Group on Millennium Development Goal Indicators in implementing some of the recommendations contained in Economic and Social Council resolution 2006/6 [YUN 2006, p. 1472] on statistical capacity-building and requested that the Group and all bodies involved increase efforts to further improve the indicators of all MDGs through methodological and technical refinements. It also expressed its support for the ongoing work of the Intersecretariat Working Group on Health Statistics to improve the coordination of health statistics and the proposed development of a framework; and in compliance with General Assembly resolution 62/133 [YUN 2007, p. 1158] approved the formation of a Friends of the Chair group on indicators to measure violence against women.

On 23 July, the Economic and Social Council took note of the Commission's report, decided that the fortieth session would be held in New York from 24 to 27 February 2009 and approved the provisional agenda and documentation for the session (decision 2008/238).

Economic statistics

National accounts

The Secretary-General submitted the report of the Intersecretariat Working Group on National Accounts (ISWGNA) [E/CN.3/2008/5], which provided an overview of the preparation of the updated System of National Accounts (SNA) [YUN 1993, p. 1112], including the drafting and review of volume 1 and the next steps in preparation of volume 2. The report also presented a strategy for implementing the updated SNA, described actions taken to establish a high-level group on development of the SNA and provided points for discussion by the Commission. On the drafting and review of volume 1 of the SNA, the 10 chapters drafted in 2007 and posted on the project website, with invitations to countries (national statistical offices and interested central banks) to comment received, on average, 17 sets of comments on each chapter [YUN 2007, p. 1314]. Some 31 statistical offices, central banks and individual experts submitted comments in addition to the Intersecretariat Working Group Organizations. The drafting and review of volume 2 would proceed following the Commission's 2008 session; the list of chapters planned for that volume were annexed to the report. The latest assessments indicated that the level of implementation of the 1993 SNA by developing countries had risen sharply in recent years with 90 per cent of countries in regions other than Africa reporting national accounts statistics to the Statistics Division. In Africa, the response rate was somewhat lower; 33 out of 53 countries reported national accounts statistics. The report also identified impediments to SNA implementation that needed to be addressed when developing the SNA implementation strategy. On the high-level group on national accounts, a final proposal about its composition and work programme would be submitted at the Commission's fortieth (2009) session.

In February [E/2008/24], the Commission adopted, in principle, volume 1 of the updated SNA as the international standard for national accounts statistics, and encouraged member States and regional and international organizations to implement the standard and support all aspects of their implementation, including the national and international reporting of national accounts statistics based on the updated SNA. The Commission recognized that the time required to evaluate volume 1 of the updated SNA was insufficient, and endorsed the ISWGNA proposal to introduce an additional two-month period, until the end of April 2008, for completing its review. That would allow all stakeholders to examine the conceptual coherence and consistency of the System with the recommendations on the 44 issues adopted by the Commission in 2007 [YUN 2007, p. 1314]. During the review period, countries and international organizations would be invited to submit their observations to ISWGNA. The Commission requested the Working Group to take appropriate measures to ensure that volume 2 of the updated SNA was completed and submitted for adoption to the Commission at its fortieth (2009) sessions and to submit at that session a strategy for implementation of the updated SNA that would take into account the inputs of the Conference on international outreach and coordination in national accounts for sustainable growth and development, to be held in May 2008.

Service statistics

The Secretary-General transmitted to the Statistical Commission the report of the Inter-agency Task Force on Statistics of International Trade in Services [E/CN.3/2008/19], which outlined activities undertaken since its previous report in 2005 [YUN 2005, p. 1369], including the planning and management of the revision of the Manual on Statistics of International Trade in Services; the contribution to the revision of related frameworks, such as the Balance of Payment Manual of the International Monetary Fund (IMF); and the completion of the work of the Task Force's technical subgroup on movement of natural persons. The report also provided information on other areas, such as technical cooperation and expert meetings; the Task Force website and other communication media utilized in its work; and cross-cutting issues between trade in goods and trade in services. In that connection, a joint meeting of the Task Force and the Task Force on International Merchandise Trade Statistics to discuss common issues would be held in March, leading to new outputs.

In February [E/2008/24], the Commission took note of the report.

International Comparison Programme

The Statistical Commission had before it the Secretary-General's note [E/CN.3/2008/33] transmitting the World Bank report on the International Comparison Programme (ICP), which reviewed the Programme's achievements and outlined remaining steps to complete the ICP 2005 round [YUN 2005, p. 1370]. Significant achievements had been made since the round started in 2003 [YUN 2003, p. 1291]. The statistical system, which included a network of expertise in place for gathering data and establishing regional and global purchasing power parities (PPPs), provided a sound basis for the future rounds of ICP. The launch of the global data results on 17 December 2007 brought together the data of two separate PPP programmes. The first was the global ICP programme conducted by the ICP Global Office within the World Bank, which had provided overall coordination for the collection of data and calculation of PPPs in more than 100 (mostly developing) economies. In parallel, the Statistical Office of the European Communities (Eurostat) and OECD had conducted their own 2005 PPP programme, which covered 46 countries. The ICP Global Office combined the results into an overall global comparison so that the results for all participating countries could be compared directly.

Other achievements included the release of regional data throughout 2007; the participation of 18 "ring comparison" countries in conducting special price collections using a global product list; the use of data validation and handling of special data issues; approval of a data revision policy by the ICP Executive Board; the sharing of knowledge gained from the ICP round through various media; and the introduction of innovative software tools. On steps remaining to complete the 2005 round since the preliminary data release in December 2007, the Global Office maintained its focus on releasing the final data in the first quarter of 2008. The ICP Handbook would be published in final form at the same time. The report concluded that the round was near completion, with a number of regional reports and the preliminary global report released in December 2007, marking the successful outcome of one of the largest international statistical programmes. The Statistical Commission was requested to comment on areas that still needed to be addressed by the ICP 2005 round.

The Commission also had before it the report of the Friends of the Chair on the review of the ICP 2005 round [E/CN.3/2008/4], which presented the results of its evaluation and assessment of the scope, activities and lessons learned from the current round of ICP; provided recommendations where improvements could be made; and proposed the continuation of the programme, drawing on the main elements of the current governance structure and the experiences obtained during the 2005 round.

In February [E/2008/24], the Commission took note of the Friends of the Chair report; supported its conclusions and recommendations; and endorsed the continuation of ICP with a target year of 2011 for the next round and the establishment of an interim executive board. Concerned that 2011, the proposed benchmark year for the next round, might present difficulties in several countries since the year overlapped with the conduct of population censuses, the Commission requested that the ICP organizers consider a suitable strategy to deal with the matter and encouraged ICP partners to continue their capacity-building efforts in developing countries to increase the quality of the data available for the next round.

Other economic statistics

Price indexes and statistics

The Secretary-General transmitted to the Statistical Commission the report of the Ottawa Group on Price Indexes [E/CN.3/2008/20], which indicated that, since its 2005 report to the Commission [YUN 2005, p. 1370], it had met twice—in London (14–16 May 2006) and in Ottawa (10–12 October 2007). Fundamental problems of price measurement, particularly at the micro level, had been recurring themes of recent meetings, as were discussions on the price index manuals. At its 2007 meeting, the Ottawa Group discussed a progress report on the development of a supplementary handbook entitled "Practical guide to compiling consumer price indexes". In other activities, the Ottawa Group steering committee concurred with the descriptions developed by the Intersecretariat Working Group on Price Statistics of the respective roles of the Working Group, the Ottawa Group and the joint United Nations Economic Commission for Europe (ECE)/ILO consumer price index meetings, which were annexed to the report. The next meeting of the Group was scheduled to be held in Neuchâtel, Switzerland, in 2009.

In February [E/2008/24], the Commission took note of the report.

Tourism statistics

The Statistical Commission had before it a joint report of the Secretary-General and the World Tourism Organization (UNWTO) [E/CN.3/2008/7] on tourism statistics, which described activities undertaken to revise the international recommendations for tourism statistics, including progress on the six components of the revision process: the creation and work of the Inter-Agency Coordination Group on Tourism Statistics; the holding of the UNWTO electronic forum; the conduct of the International Workshop on Tourism Statistics; the organization of the dedicated meetings of the UNWTO Committee on Statistics and Macroeconomic Analysis of Tourism; a meeting of the UN Expert Group on Tourism Statistics to review and endorse the provisional draft of the International Recommendations on Tourism Statistics 2008; and the conduct of a worldwide consultation with national statistical offices and national tourism administrations.

In February [E/2008/24], the Commission adopted the International Recommendations for Tourism Statistics 2008 and requested that the final text be edited to reflect the Commission's suggestions. It also requested UNWTO and the Statistics Division to develop an implementation programme, including preparation of a compilation guide and organization of training workshops, in collaboration with supranational and regional organizations. The Commission took note of the updated version of the Tourism Satellite Account: Recommended Methodological Framework 2008 and requested that the Recommendations and the Tourism Satellite Account be made available in all of the six UN official languages.

Statistics of science and technology

The Secretary-General transmitted to the Statistical Commission the report of the Directorate for Science, Technology and Industry of OECD and the Institute for Statistics of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) [E/CN.3/2008/21], which elaborated on current and future plans in the area of science and technology statistics. The report indicated that statistics on science and technology were fundamental to an understanding of the processes by which development had an impact on societies and their economies—an impact which was uneven across the world. It discussed science and technology statistics on research and development, innovation, human resources for science and technology, patents and general-purpose technologies such as biotechnology and nanotechnology. It recommended that concepts, classifications and methodologies employed in science and technology statistics be regularly updated to capture emerging scientific fields and technologies which might not easily fit into existing frameworks and might be multidisciplinary. In its conclusion, the report noted that in many countries, increased resources were needed for collecting timely and relevant science and technology statistics of high quality, based on international methodologies. In that connection, the community of statisticians needed to work together to make a better case for the importance and relevance of such data.

In February [E/2008/24], the Commission took note of the report.

Business surveys and informal sector statistics

The Statistical Commission had before it the report of the Round Table on Business Survey Frames [E/CN.3/2008/17], which focused on the Round Table's most recent meetings and their outcomes. At the twentieth International Round Table on Business Survey Frames (Wiesbaden, Germany, 21–26 October 2007), some 70 experts from 40 countries and international organizations exchanged their experiences in the methodological developments of business registers and discussed the possibilities of register-based business statistics. Participating countries presented their progress reports, with each country describing its problems and highlighting its key activities. In the concluding session, the future of the Group was discussed and participants reached an agreement on changing the name of the forum to “Wiesbaden Group on Business Registers”, in accordance with the practice of similar expert groups. Participants also agreed that beginning in 2008, the meetings would be held biannually, alternating with the joint meeting of ECE, OECD and Eurostat, scheduled for 2009. OECD offered to host the 2008 meeting and several potential hosts had shown interest in holding the 2010 meeting. Following the conference, a special workshop for developing countries brought together experts from 18 developing and developed countries to discuss the prospects of supporting other countries in their developments in the field of business registers and register-based business statistics. In the future, a session within the official agenda of the conference would deal with the needs of the countries starting up business registers and register-based business statistics.

Also before the Commission was the report of the Delhi Group on informal sector statistics [E/CN.3/2008/22], which summarized the ninth (New Delhi, India, 11–12 May 2006) and tenth (Geneva, 8–10 October 2007) meetings held by the Group. At the 2006 meeting, the Group discussed the informal sector in the updated System of National Accounts, 1993 [YUN 1993, p. 1112]; measuring the contribution of the informal sector to gross domestic product and informal employment; measuring the links between poverty and informal employment; and the data quality of surveys on the informal sector and informal employment. The meeting also brought the Delhi Group and the Advisory Expert Group on National Accounts together to discuss issues related to the updating of 1993 SNA in respect to the informal sector. Another important achievement was the drawing up of the road map for the release of the manual on surveys of the informal sector and informal employment. The Group looked forward to the identification of good practices in the prospective manual and in the chapter on the informal sector in the updated 1993 SNA. At the 2007 meeting, the Group considered the progress report on the manual, draft chapters 1–5 and 10 of the manual, and the draft chapter of the updated 1993 SNA on the informal sector. The other four chapters would be drafted by June 2008 and the complete manual would be placed before the Delhi Group at its eleventh meeting in 2010.

In February [E/2008/24], the Commission took note of both reports.

Environment statistics

The Statistical Commission had before it a report of the Intersecretariat Working Group on Environment Statistics [E/CN.3/2008/24], which reviewed the Group's activities and work accomplished in 2006–2007 and presented the planned outputs and programme of work for 2008 and 2009. The focus of methodological work in 2006 and 2007 remained on water statistics, which was carried out by the Subgroup on Water Statistics, established in 2005. The Subgroup reviewed the questionnaires used by international organizations engaged in the collection of water statistics, such as the Statistical Division of the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP), Eurostat, OECD and the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO), and worked out a comparison and concordance of the terms, definitions and classifications applied. The System of Environmental Economic Accounts for Water (SEEAW) was used in the review as the reference framework. Meanwhile, the questionnaires of the UNEP Statistical Division and OECD/Eurostat were being revised as part of the preparations for the 2008 data-collection cycle; the revision would improve consistency between the questionnaires, as well as with SEEAW standard tables. The activities of the Subgroup also contributed to ongoing work by the Statistics Division in developing international recommendations for the compilation of water statistics and accounts. On data collection activities, the 2006 cycle was implemented by the UNEP Statistical Division, OECD and Eurostat in a coordinated manner and the Working Group agreed in June 2007 on coordination mechanisms for data collection in 2008. The revision of questionnaires for the 2008 data-collection cycle was under way, with the circulation of UNEP questionnaires scheduled for the end of March and OECD/Eurostat questionnaires for May. With regard to training and capacity-building, the UNEP Statistical Division and the Economic Commission for Africa (ECA) co-organized a training workshop on environment statistics in July 2007 in Ethiopia, with FAO providing a resource person to the workshop. In addition, resource persons from the Statistical Division contributed to workshops organized within the environmental component of the Euro-Mediterranean Statistical Co-operation Programme (MEDSTAT) in 2006 and 2007.

The 2008–2009 work programme of the Working Group would focus on: continuing methodological and harmonization work in the subject area of water; finalizing work on the joint glossary of environment statistics; working on a proposal for harmonized metadata guidelines for environment statistics; and establishing the subgroup on land use and land cover statistics. Other activities would include the organization of a joint international work session on land-use and land-cover statistics; implementation of the 2008 data collection and dissemination programme; and the pooling of resources by joint training and capacity-building actions.

Report of Secretary-General. The Commission also had before it the report of the Secretary-General on the Committee of Experts on Environmental-Economic Accounting [E/CN.3/2008/25], which described its work progress, including the status of the project management framework for the revision of the Handbook of National Accounting: Integrated Environmental-Economic Accounting 2003; presented the implementation strategy for SEEAW; and reported on the progress of phase II of the Global Assessment of Environment Statistics and Environmental-Economic Accounting.

Industrial statistics

The Statistical Commission considered the report of the Secretary-General [E/CN.3/2008/9] on industrial statistics, which described activities undertaken in response to Commission requests and outlined future work. The Expert Group on Industrial Statistics, which was established to provide guidance in reviewing the work programme on industrial statistics and in revising of the International Recommendations for Industrial Statistics, the manual on Index Numbers of Industrial Production and the UN list of industrial products, held a meeting (New York, 16–19 July) in which it reviewed the revised draft of the International Recommendations for Industrial Statistics 2008; provided guidance on issues that had emerged during its drafting between 2005 and 2007; and amended the document for submission to the Commission in 2008. A major goal of the meeting was to ensure consistency between the revised International Recommendations for Industrial Statistics 2008 and the International Recommendations for Distributive Trade Statistics 2008, which were discussed at a parallel meeting of the Expert Group on Distributive Trade Statistics. The Expert Group on Industrial Statistics also reviewed progress on the revision of the manual on Index Numbers of Industrial Production and endorsed the outline of the manual and the timetable of work. The Statistics Division continued to carry out a number of activities in the area of industrial statistics. Future work included the organization of training workshops on industrial statistics and the development of a knowledge-based platform on country practices for basic economic statistics.

In February [E/2008/24], the Commission, adopted part I of the International Recommendation for Industrial Statistics 2008, containing the recommendations for statistical units, characteristics of statistical units, data items and their definitions and the data items for international reporting as the international recommendations for industrial statistics. It endorsed part II of the document, containing guidance on performance indicators, data sources and data compilation methods, data collection strategies, data quality and metadata and dissemination of industrial statistics, as supplementary guidance for implementing the Recommendations. It agreed to the proposal for implementing the Recommendations through regional capacity-building workshops in cooperation with the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO) and the development of a knowledge-based platform on basic economic statistics. The Commission took note of the proposed future work of the Statistics Division on industrial statistics and requested that implementation concerns expressed by the Commission be taken into account.

International trade statistics

The Secretary-General transmitted to the Statistical Commission a report on international merchandise trade statistics [E/CN.3/2008/10], which stressed the need for a revision of the Commission's recommendations for international merchandise trade statistics, outlined the Statistics Division strategy on the organization of the revision process, described actions undertaken, and provided a summary of the Division's 2008–2011 action plan. The Secretary-General made recommendations for the Commission to endorse the Division's initiative to revise the recommendations and request that the draft revised recommendations be submitted to the Commission for adoption at its forty-first (2010) session. He added that the draft revised recommendations should provide an updated conceptual framework of international merchandise trade statistics and guidance on data compilation and dissemination in the context of an integrated approach to economic statistics. In February [E/2008/24], the Commission welcomed the report.

Report of Secretary-General. The Commission also had before it the report of the Inter-Agency Task Force on International Merchandise Trade Statistics [E/CN.3/2008/18], which discussed follow-up actions related to the development of a manual on international trade indices and the fourth revision of the Standard International Trade Classification; summarized the Task Force's activities since the Commission's 2006 session; and presented new issues and related activities, as well as the updated terms of reference of the Task Force.

In February [E/2008/24], the Commission took note of the report, endorsed the Statistics Division's initiative and strategy to revise the recommendations and requested submission of the draft for adoption at its forty-first (2010) session. It requested that the revised recommendations provide an updated conceptual framework, as well as guidance on data compilation and dissemination, and be harmonized with the updated recommendations for statistics of international trade in services, the system of national accounts and the balance of payments statistics.

Distributive trade statistics

The Statistics Commission had before it the Secretary-General's report on distributive trade statistics [E/CN.3/2008/8], which summarized activities undertaken by the Statistics Division in response to decisions taken by the Commission at its 2006 session [YUN 2006, p. 1470] in the area of distributive statistics, including the revision of the International Recommendations on Statistics of the Distributive Trades and Services. Regarding progress in the revision of the Recommendations, the report provided information on activities related to the initial assessment of country practices in the compilation of distributive trade statistics; the work of the Expert Group on Distributive Trade Statistics; the creation of an electronic discussion forum/password-protected website; and global country consultations on the recommendations for distributive trade statistics.

A background document, entitled draft International Recommendations for Distributive Trade Statistics 2008, contained the full text of the revised recommendations, endorsed by the Expert Group on Distributive Trade Statistics.

In February [E/2008/24], the Commission adopted the International Recommendations for Distributive Trade Statistics 2008, as contained in the background document, and agreed to the implementation programme of the Recommendations as outlined in the report.

Integrated economic statistics

The Statistical Commission considered the report of the Friends of the Chair on integrated economic statistics [E/CN.3/2008/6], which presented a concept paper on modalities of an integrated approach to economic statistics and discussed three components of work for the integration of economic statistics programmes: the use of a common conceptual framework; the statistical production issues; and legal, institutional, organizational and statistical conditions across countries. It also addressed aspects related to the production of integrated economic statistics and institutional arrangements for managing integrated economic statistics.

The Friends of the Chair group concluded that the integration of economic statistics was mainly driven by demand for data consistency and coherence; that institutional arrangements at both national and international levels were important for the management of integrated economic statistics and should be part of the corresponding reform programmes; and that it was neither possible nor desirable to propagate one single and detailed implementing approach towards integrated economic statistics because national statistics systems were different. It also made recommendations for strengthening coordination among international institutions working in the field of economic statistics and on the role of the 1993 SNA as a coordinating framework for economic statistics, as well as for developing more extensive and practical guidelines that would include case studies on practices of integrated economic statistics.

In February [E/2008/24], the Commission agreed with the findings and recommendations of the Friends of the Chair report on integrated economic statistics, including the need to collect and disseminate case studies and develop other practical knowledge material to share experiences and guide countries in implementing an integrated approach in their national statistical systems. The Commission made recommendations for guidance on practical aspects of integration to focus on the need for cooperation with users and data suppliers; the development of central business registers and use of administrative data; conceptual harmonization of data content across surveys; strong and centralized coordination of survey operations within the national statistical institution; the need for an entity—within a national statistical institution—specialized in preparing administrative data to be matched to survey data; and a sampling strategy that took into account the burden of the reporting entities.

Agricultural statistics

The Secretary-General transmitted the report of the Wye Group on statistics on rural development and agriculture household income [E/CN.3/2008/23], which provided information on the Group's first meeting to be held in York, England, in April. The Group was formed as the successor to the Intersecretariat Working Group on Agriculture Statistics (IWG.AGRI) task force, which held its final meeting in June 2006. The Wye Group would include 20 to 30 statistics and economics experts from national statistics offices, ministries of agriculture, universities and research institutes, who had a shared interest in improving methods for collecting data on rural environment, communities and farm and non-farm households. Its first meeting would discuss the Group's objectives and intended outputs and would consist of three half-day sessions with a focus on rural statistics, agriculture household income and developing nations.

In February [E/2008/24], the Commission took note of the report.

Regional statistical development

The Secretary-General transmitted to the Statistical Commission a report of the Economic Commission for Africa (ECA) on regional statistical development in Africa [E/CN.3/2008/14], which highlighted issues and challenges facing African countries in enhancing their statistical capacity; reviewed ongoing initiatives by African stakeholders to overcome those challenges, including the establishment of a statistical commission for Africa (Statcom-Africa) and the African Statistical Coordination Committee; and elaborated on a way forward and on the role ECA could play in addressing the challenges.

In February [E/2008/24], the Commission expressed satisfaction with the re-establishment of an ECA focal point on statistics activities and endorsed the report's recommendations to address the challenges facing African national statistical systems. It called upon African countries to intensify efforts to develop their national capacities to produce timely and reliable statistics in support of their development efforts; noted the provision of technical and financial support for statistical capacity-building in the African region by various agencies and development partners; and urged international agencies and the donor community to strengthen their support for statistical development in Africa.

Demographic and social statistics

Population and housing censuses

The Statistical Commission had before it the Secretary-General's report on population and housing censuses [E/CN.3/2008/16], which presented activities completed in respect of the implementation of the 2010 World Programme on Population and Housing Censuses, including the conduct of expert group meetings and training workshops; finalization of the Principles and Recommendations for Population and Housing Censuses, Rev.2; and the development of a website to serve as a census knowledge base. It also contained future activities related to the 2010 World Programme.

The Commission took note of the report in February [E/2008/24].

Human Development Report

The Secretary-General transmitted to the Statistical Commission the report of the Human Development Report Office of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) [E/CN.3/2008/11], which discussed issues such as data quality assurance, country coverage and data gaps, and the use of international data, as they pertained to the Human Development Report. It also indicated that the Report, which explored in depth a different topic each year relevant to the field of human development, contained an extensive statistical annex of the latest human development indicators, some of which were summarized in four composite indices of which the Human Development Index was the most widely known and quoted.

In February [E/2008/24], the Commission supported the steps being taken to enhance data quality assurance and actions taken to ensure the quality of data and indicators published in the Human Development Report, including the creation of a statistical advisory panel, the institution of a statistical peer review process and the initiative on holding regular consultations with member States. It emphasized the need for the Human Development Report Office to further improve transparency in the process of preparing the Report; took note of the initiative by the Committee for the Coordination of Statistical Activities to compile information on regional training institutions that would help to assess statistical training needs and capacities across regions; and invited the Statistics Division and the World Bank to explore the feasibility of developing an electronic platform that could house information on demand for training, potential training providers and funding options.

Health statistics

The Statistics Commission considered the report of the Intersecretariat Working Group on Health Statistics [E/CN.3/2008/15], which described projects in the area of health statistics that were of interest to national statistical offices, illustrated work under development by the Health Metric Network on health surveys, and indicated that a detailed report of the meeting of the Working Group, to be held in December 2007, would be circulated at the Commission's 2008 session.

In February [E/2008/24], the Commission took note of the Working Group's report on health statistics and the report of the Group's December 2007 meeting. It expressed support for the ongoing work to improve coordination of health statistics and the proposed development of a framework.

Labour statistics

The Statistical Commission considered a report prepared by the Office for National Statistics of the United Kingdom [E/CN.3/2008/2] on labour statistics, which focused on areas where improvements could be made in the future. The report outlined the mandate and approach of the programme review of employment statistics, which was completed in November 2007; identified the successes and gaps in the work of different organizations involved in labour statistics; presented the findings of an August 2007 international survey of UN Member States on labour statistics; and discussed the challenges of obtaining a complete picture of the labour market despite the large amount of labour market data available. Problems encountered were related to incomplete coverage, contradictory results between data sources, difficulties and limitations in describing labour market dynamics, and the absence of links between labour market statistics and other social and economic statistics. The Commission was requested to recommend that ILO: prioritize the activities required to improve the harmonization of concepts and methods that supported the production, transmission and dissemination of comparable labour statistics, as well as produce an action plan and coordinate its implementation; develop a coordinated system for providing technical assistance to help countries provide high-quality labour statistics; establish working groups to discuss each of the five topics identified for development work in the review; develop an updated version of the labour statistics framework; and work with the Statistics Division, OECD and Eurostat to improve the process of setting international standards.

In February [E/2008/24], the Commission emphasized the need for better coordination to improve the quality and coherence of national and global labour statistics, which should be done in consultation with the Committee for the Coordination of Statistical Activities. It welcomed the work done by the ILO Conference of Labour Statisticians and recommended that the Conference review its methods of operation, in particular the frequency and duration of its sessions. It also requested ILO to report to the Commission in 2009 on the Conference outcomes and other actions taken in implementing the recommendations of the review report.

At the eighteenth International Conference of Labour Statisticians (Geneva, 24 November–5 December) [ICLS/18/2008/1], participants discussed, among other proposals, the future work of ILO in labour statistics (2009–2013) and options for the organization, frequency and duration of the Conference.

Education statistics

The Statistical Commission had before it the report of the UNESCO Institute for Statistics on the work of the Task Force on Education Statistics [E/CN.3/2008/3], which reviewed the main measurement frameworks in the field of education being used for data collection at the international, regional or national levels and how those frameworks affected the production and use of statistics. The review discussed coordination mechanisms among relevant agencies with respect to different stages of the statistical production and dissemination cycle. The report proposed ways to improve coordination with regard to data collection and production and dissemination; presented a timeline for the preparation of the Task Force's final report; and requested the Commission to advise on the future direction of the Task Force's work.

In February [E/2008/24], the Commission took note of the proposed method of work in producing the final report of the Task Force, requested the Task Force to broaden its regional representation in terms of national statistical offices to better reflect the diverse realities in different parts of the world, and requested the Institute, on behalf of the Task Force, to report to the Commission's 2009 session.

Other statistical activities

International economic and social classifications

The Statistical Commission had before it an ILO report on updating the International Standard Classification of Occupations (ISCO-88) [E/CN.3/2008/28]. The work was scheduled for completion to allow sufficient time for the updated classification, or national adaptations of it, to be available for use in the 2010 round of national population censuses. ILO convened in December 2007 a meeting of experts [MELS/2007/2], which evaluated an updated classification structure, made a small number of amendments to it and adopted a draft resolution endorsing the structure, which was annexed to the draft resolution. The updated classification, known as the International Standard Classification of Occupations 2008 (ISCO-08), would be available at the Commission's 2008 session as a background document. ILO would provide support for implementing the updated ISCO from 2008 to ensure that ISCO-08 could be used in the round of national population censuses to be conducted beginning in 2010.

In February [E/2008/24], the Commission took note of the ILO report.

Standards for data dissemination and exchange

The Commission considered the Secretary-General's report on collection and dissemination of statistics by the Statistics Division [E/CN.3/2008/12], which described ongoing activities and recent developments in the work programme of the Division with respect to data collection and dissemination. It discussed the Division's initiatives to better coordinate data-collection activities by international agencies for easy access to the UN system data and to facilitate the exchange of experience among developing countries with respect to data dissemination policies and practices.

In February [E/2008/24], the Commission encouraged the Division to make data available free of charge so as to facilitate their dissemination and use, continue initiatives for reducing the reporting burden on countries, including joint data-collection agreements, and facilitate the exchange of experiences among countries with respect to dissemination policies and practices. The Commission congratulated the Division for the development of the data portal UNdata and urged it to accelerate implementation of the portal to develop its full potential by bringing together sectoral global, regional and national databases.

Statistical data and metadata exchange

The Secretary-General transmitted to the Statistical Commission a report on common open standards for the exchange and sharing of data and metadata [E/CN.3/2008/13], which reviewed activities related to the Statistical Data and Metadata Exchange (SDMX) initiative and included a proposal for its recognition as the international standard for data and metadata exchange. The goal of the SDMX initiative was to foster standards and guidelines that allowed national and international organizations to gain efficiencies and avoid duplication of work in the area of data and metadata exchange through the use of modern technology. The report concluded that SDMX technical standards and content-oriented guidelines had demonstrated their potential for improving the exchange and sharing of statistical data and metadata using modern technology. A number of implementations were in progress and a widening range of international and national statistical agencies was endorsing SDMX.

In February [E/2008/24], the Commission recognized and supported SDMX as the preferred standard for the exchange and sharing of data and metadata, requested the sponsors to continue their work on the initiative, and encouraged its further implementation by national and international statistical organizations. It also emphasized the need to further involve national and international agencies in the initiative by enabling opportunities for collaboration with the sponsoring organizations and underlined the importance of capacity-building and outreach. The Commission requested the sponsors of the initiative to continue fostering the development of freely available tools and software to benefit statistical systems in interchanges of data and metadata and took note of the list of applications and projects at the national and international levels, which were making use of SDMX as a standard.

Statistical capacity-building

The Secretary-General transmitted to the Statistical Commission the report of the Partnership in Statistics for Development in the Twenty-first Century (PARIS21) on statistical capacity-building [E/CN.3/2008/27], which outlined PARIS21 efforts to promote the use of better statistics as a central part of the enabling environment for development progress, as well as PARIS21 activities in 2007 in the following areas: advocacy and the development of statistical advocacy tools; regional programmes; the promotion of donor collaboration; the development of national strategies methodology; and satellite programmes. The report also discussed future plans, including PARIS21 partnering with international institutions, regional organizations and bilateral donors in a scaling-up of investment in national statistical systems.

In February [E/2008/24], the Commission took note of the report.

Follow-up to UN conferences and summits

The Statistics Commission had before it the report of the Secretary-General [E/CN.3/2008/29 & Corr.1] on the indicators for monitoring the Millennium Development Goals (MDGs) [YUN 2000, p. 51], which described the work of the Inter-Agency and Expert Group on MDGs Indicators in 2007 and the Statistics Division, in its capacity as coordinator of the Group, in the areas of improvement of the coverage, transparency and reporting on all indicators as presented in the database on all MDGs; implementation of the recommendations contained in Economic and Social Council resolution 2006/6 [YUN 2006, p. 1472] on strengthening statistical capacity; coordination of data collection at the global level; and preparation of the yearly analysis and reports on progress towards the MDGs. Annexed to the report were the revised MDGs monitoring framework, including new targets and indicators, an assessment of country data availability in the MDGs indicators database, and the summary of the recommendations by the Inter-Agency and Expert Group at its twelfth meeting in November 2007. The report concluded with proposals on the way forward.

In February [E/2008/24], the Commission commended the efforts by the Inter-Agency and Expert Group on MDGs Indicators to implement resolution 2006/6 and include an increasing number of States in its deliberations. It took note of the Group's deliberations and recommendations on the way forward and the concerns expressed by States about the quality of the measurement of indicators, and requested the submission of an updated report to the Commission at its 2009 session. It further requested the Group to give greater consideration to the need for improving the capacity of countries to produce the indicators, develop recommendations on ways to improve statistical capacity-building in countries for submission to the Commission's 2009 session, and increase efforts to further improve the indicators of all MDGs through methodological and technical refinements.

Coordination and integration of statistical programmes

The Secretary-General transmitted to the Statistical Commission a report on the work of the Committee for the Coordination of Statistical Activities (CCSA) [E/CN.3/2008/26], which summarized the main conclusions of the ninth and tenth sessions of CCSA, held in New York on 26 February 2007, and in Madrid on 10 and 11 September 2007, respectively. It also provided information on the work of the Committee in areas such as statistical training for staff of international agencies; an assessment of the costs and benefits of adopting SDMX; the work of the Inter-Agency and Expert Group on MDGs Indicators on implementing Economic and Social Council resolution 2006/6; data imputations by international agencies; the use of population estimates; the modalities of data-sharing among international organizations; the CCSA special session on the implementation of quality assurance frameworks; coordination of technical cooperation activities; and the review of CCSA functions.

The Commission also had before it a CCSA information note on implementation of principles governing international statistical activities [E/CN.3/2008/31], which summarized the main findings and highlighted examples of action taken to implement the ten principles governing international statistical activities: relevance, impartiality and equal access to high-quality international statistics; professional standards and ethics; accountability and transparency; prevention of misuse of concepts; sources of official statistics; confidentiality in individual data collection; regulation of erroneous interpretation and misuse of statistics; regional coordination of standards for national and international statistics; the use of international standards in statistics; and international cooperation. The report also mentioned the areas where, in the view of some agencies, further work was needed.

In February [E/2008/24], the Commission took note of the report and the information note.

Follow-up to Economic and Social Council policy decisions

The Statistical Commission had before it a note by the Secretary-General on policy decisions of the Economic and Social Council adopted in 2007 that were relevant to the Commission's work [E/CN.3/2008/30]. The note covered actions related to the follow-up to major UN conferences and summits, the reform of the Economic and Social Council, mainstreaming gender perspectives, strengthening national capacity in statistics, and the 2010 World Programme on Population and Housing Censuses.

In February [E/2008/24], the Commission took note of the Secretary-General's note.

Programme and institutional questions

The Commission approved its 2008–2011 multi-year programme of work [E/CN.3/2008/32], as orally amended, and approved the provisional agenda and documentation for its fortieth session, to be held in New York from 24 to 27 February 2009.

PART FOUR

Legal questions

International Court of Justice

In 2008, the International Court of Justice (ICJ) delivered three Judgments, made nine Orders, and had 17 contentious cases and one request for an advisory opinion pending before it. In a 30 October address to the General Assembly, the ICJ President, Judge Rosalyn Higgins, noted that the period from 1 August 2007 to 31 July 2008 marked the Court's most productive year in its history and that the cases decided during the previous year had involved States from every UN regional group. The universal character of the Court was also reflected in the wide range of subjects addressed in those cases, which included human rights, territorial sovereignty, mutual legal assistance, maritime delimitation, and the interpretation of an earlier Judgment.

Judicial work of the Court

During 2008, the Court delivered its Judgment on the merits in the cases concerning Sovereignty over Pedra Branca/Pulau Batu Puteh, Middle Rocks and South Ledge (Malaysia/Singapore) and Certain Questions of Mutual Assistance in Criminal Matters (Djibouti v. France); and a Judgment on the preliminary objections raised by Serbia in the case concerning Application of the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide (Croatia v. Serbia).

During the year, the Court was seized of six new cases: Maritime Dispute (Peru v. Chile); Aerial Herbicide Spraying (Ecuador v. Colombia); *Request for Interpretation of the Judgment of 31 March 2004 in the Case concerning Avena and Other Mexican Nationals (Mexico v. United States) (Mexico v. ### Contentious proceedings

Ahmadou Sadio Diallo (Guinea v. Democratic Republic of the Congo)

In 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 1190], Guinea instituted proceedings against the Democratic Republic of the Congo (DRC) by an "Application with a view to diplomatic protection", in which it requested the Court to condemn the DRC for the grave breaches of international law perpetrated upon the person of a Guinean national, Ahmadou Sadio Diallo.

According to Guinea, Mr. Diallo, a businessman who had been a resident of the DRC for 32 years, was “unlawfully imprisoned by the authorities of that State” for two and a half months, “divested from his important investments, companies, bank accounts, movable and immovable properties, then expelled”. The expulsion took place on 2 February 1996, as a result of his attempts to recover sums owed to him by the DRC (especially by Gécamines, a State enterprise and mining monopoly) and by oil companies operating in that country (Zaire Shell, Zaire Mobil and Zaire Fina), by virtue of contracts concluded with businesses owned by him, namely Africom-Zaire and Africontainers-Zaire.

As a basis of the Court’s jurisdiction, Guinea invoked its own declaration of acceptance of the compulsory jurisdiction of the Court of 11 November 1998 and a declaration of the DRC of 8 February 1989. Guinea filed its Memorial within the time limit as extended by the Court by an Order of 8 September 2000 [YUN 2000, p. 1213]. On 3 October 2002, within the time limit for the deposit of its Counter-Memorial, the DRC filed preliminary objections to the Court’s jurisdiction and the admissibility of Guinea’s Application; the proceedings on the merits were accordingly suspended [YUN 2002, p. 1266].

By an Order of 7 November 2002 [ibid.], the Court fixed 7 July 2003 as the time limit within which Guinea might present a written statement of its observations and submissions on the preliminary objections raised by the DRC; the written statement was filed within the time limit [YUN 2003, p. 1303].

Public hearings on the preliminary objections were held from 27 November to 1 December 2006 [YUN 2006, p. 1479], during which the Parties presented final submissions to the Court. The DRC requested the Court to adjudge and declare that the Application of Guinea was inadmissible on the grounds that Guinea had no status to exercise diplomatic protection in the proceedings, since its Application sought essentially to secure reparation for injury suffered on account of the violation of rights of companies which did not possess its nationality, and, in any event, neither the companies in question nor Mr. Diallo had exhausted the effective local remedies available in the DRC. Guinea requested the Court to reject the preliminary objections raised by the DRC; declare its Application admissible; and fix time limits for further proceedings.

On 24 May 2007 [YUN 2007, p. 1327], the Court rendered its Judgment on the preliminary objections. The Court unanimously rejected the preliminary objection to admissibility raised by the DRC for lack of standing by Guinea to exercise diplomatic protection in the case, insofar as it concerned protection of

Mr. Diallo’s direct rights as associé in Africom-Zaire and Africontainers-Zaire. By 14 votes to 1, it upheld the objection insofar as it concerned protection of Mr. Diallo in respect of alleged violations of rights of Africom-Zaire and Africontainers-Zaire. On the preliminary objection to admissibility raised by the DRC on account of non-exhaustion by Mr. Diallo of local remedies, the Court unanimously rejected the objection insofar as it concerned protection of Mr. Diallo’s rights as an individual. By 14 votes to 1, the Court rejected the objection insofar as it concerned protection of Mr. Diallo’s direct rights as associé in Africom-Zaire and Africontainers-Zaire. Consequently, it unanimously declared the Application of Guinea to be admissible insofar as it concerned protection of Mr. Diallo’s rights as an individual. By two separate votes of 14 to 1, the Court declared the Application of Guinea to be admissible insofar as it concerned protection of Mr. Diallo’s direct rights as associé in Africom-Zaire and Africontainers-Zaire; and declared it to be inadmissible insofar as it concerned protection of Mr. Diallo in respect of alleged violations of rights of Africom-Zaire and Africontainers-Zaire.

By an Order of 27 June 2007 [ibid., p. 1328], the Court fixed 27 March 2008 as the time limit for the filing of a Counter-Memorial by the DRC, which was filed within the time limit.

By an Order of 5 May 2008, the Court authorized the submission of a reply by Guinea and a rejoinder by the DRC. It fixed 19 November 2008 and 5 June 2009 as the respective time limits for the filing of those written pleadings. Guinea filed the reply on 19 November.

Application of the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide (Croatia v. Serbia)

Croatia instituted proceedings against Serbia and Montenegro, then known as the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (FRY), on 2 July 1999 [YUN 1999, p. 1210] for alleged violations of the 1948 Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 260 A(III) [YUN 1948–49, p. 959], said to have been committed between 1991 and 1995. In its Application, Croatia contended that by “directly controlling the activity of its armed forces, intelligence agents, and various paramilitary detachments, on the territory of ... Croatia, in the Knin region, eastern and western Slovenia, and Dalmatia, [Serbia and Montenegro] is liable [for] the ‘ethnic cleansing’ of Croatian citizens from these areas ... and is required to provide reparation for the resulting damage”. It further alleged that, “by directing, encouraging, and urging Croatian citizens of Serb ethnicity in the Knin region to evacuate the area in 1995, as ... Croatia reasserted its legitimate governmental authority ... [Serbia and Montenegro] engaged in conduct amounting to a second round of 'ethnic cleansing'. Croatia invoked the jurisdiction of the Court based on Article 36, paragraph 1, of the Statute and on article IX of the Convention. Croatia reserved the right to introduce to the Court at a future date a precise evaluation of the damages.

By an Order of 14 September 1999, the Court took account of an agreement of the Parties expressed on 13 September and fixed 14 March 2000 as the time limit for the filing of the Memorial of Croatia and 14 September 2000 for the filing of the Counter-Memorial of Serbia and Montenegro.

In 2000 [YUN 2000, p. 1219], at Croatia's request, the President of the Court twice extended the time limits, which finally were set at 14 March 2001 for the Memorial of Croatia and at 16 September 2002 for the Counter-Memorial of Serbia and Montenegro. The Memorial of Croatia was filed within the time limit thus extended. On 11 September 2002 [YUN 2002, p. 1268], within the extended time limit for filing its Counter-Memorial, Serbia and Montenegro filed certain preliminary objections to jurisdiction and admissibility. The proceedings on the merits were suspended, in accordance with Article 79 of the Rules of the Court.

On 25 April 2003, within the time limit fixed by an Order of the Court of 14 November 2002 [ibid.], Croatia filed a written statement of its observations and submissions on the preliminary objections raised by Serbia and Montenegro [YUN 2003, p. 1304].

Public hearings on the preliminary objections on jurisdiction and admissibility were held from 26 to 30 May 2008. At the conclusion of those hearings, the Parties presented final submissions to the Court. Serbia requested the Court to adjudge and declare that the Court lacked jurisdiction, or, in the alternative, that claims based on acts or omissions which took place prior to 27 April 1992 were beyond the jurisdiction of the Court and inadmissible; and that claims referring to submission to trial of certain persons within the jurisdiction of Serbia, providing information regarding the whereabouts of missing Croatian citizens, and the return of cultural property were beyond the jurisdiction of the Court and were inadmissible.

Croatia requested the Court to reject the first, second and third preliminary objection of Serbia, with the exception of that part of the second preliminary objection which related to the claim concerning the submission to trial of Slobodan Milošević; and accordingly to adjudge and declare that it had jurisdiction to adjudicate upon the Application filed by Croatia.

In its Judgment of 18 November 2008, the Court, by 10 votes to 7, rejected the first preliminary objection submitted by Serbia insofar as it related to its capacity to participate in the proceedings instituted by the Application of Croatia. By 12 votes to 5, it rejected the first preliminary objection submitted by Serbia insofar as it related to the jurisdiction ratione materiae of the Court under article IX of the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide to entertain the Application of Croatia. By 10 votes to 7, the Court found that subject to paragraph 4 of the present operative clause, it had jurisdiction to entertain the Application of Croatia. By 11 votes to 6, it found that the second preliminary objection submitted by Serbia did not, in the circumstances of the case, possess an exclusively preliminary character. By 12 votes to 5, the Court rejected the third preliminary objection submitted by Serbia.

Appended to the Judgment was a declaration by Judge Bennouna; a joint declaration by Judges Ranjeva, Shi, Koroma, and Parra-Aranguren; separate opinions by Vice-President Al-Khasawneh, Judges Tomka and Abraham, and Judge ad hoc Vukas; and dissenting opinions by Judges Ranjeva, Owada, Skochnikov and Judge ad hoc Kreća.

Territorial and Maritime Dispute (Nicaragua v. Colombia)

In 2001 [YUN 2001, p. 1195], Nicaragua instituted proceedings against Colombia in respect of a dispute concerning "a group of related legal issues subsisting" between the two States "concerning title to territory and maritime delimitation". In its Application, Nicaragua requested the Court to adjudge and declare, first, that Nicaragua had sovereignty over the islands of Providencia, San Andrés and Santa Catalina and all the appurtenant islands and keys, and also over the Roncador, Serrana, Serranilla and Quitasueño keys (insofar as they were capable of appropriation); and, second, in the light of the determinations concerning the title requested above, asked the Court to determine the course of the single maritime boundary between the areas of the continental shelf and the exclusive economic zone appertaining respectively to Nicaragua and Colombia, in accordance with equitable principles and relevant circumstances recognized by general international law as applicable to such a delimitation of a single maritime boundary. Nicaragua reserved the right to claim compensation for elements of unjust enrichment consequent upon Colombian possession of the islands of San Andrés and Providencia, as well as the keys and maritime spaces up to the 82nd meridian, in the absence of lawful title. It also reserved the right to claim compensation for interference with fishing vessels of Nicaraguan nationality or vessels licensed by Nicaragua.

By an Order of 26 February 2002 [YUN 2002, p. 1271], the Court fixed 28 April 2003 and 28 June 2004, respectively, as the time limits for the filing of a Memorial by Nicaragua and of a Counter-Memorial by Colombia. The Memorial of Nicaragua was filed within the time limit [YUN 2003, p. 1305].

On 21 July 2003 [ibid.], Colombia filed preliminary objections to the jurisdiction of the Court; under Article 79 of the Rules of Court, proceedings on the merits were suspended accordingly. Nicaragua filed a written statement of its observations and submissions on the preliminary objections raised by Colombia within the time limit of 26 January 2004 [YUN 2004, p. 1268], fixed by the Court by an Order of 24 September 2003.

Public hearings were held on the preliminary objections from 4 to 8 June 2007 [YUN 2007, p. 1329]. At the conclusion of those hearings, the Parties presented their final submissions to the Court. Colombia requested the Court to adjudge and declare that under the 1948 American Treaty on Pacific Settlement (Pact of Bogotá), and in particular in pursuance of articles VI and XXXIV, the Court was without jurisdiction to hear the controversy submitted to it by Nicaragua under article XXXI, and to declare the controversy ended; that under Article 36, paragraph 2, of the Statute of the Court, the Court had no jurisdiction to entertain Nicaragua's Application; and that its Application was dismissed. Nicaragua asked the Court to adjudge and declare that the preliminary objections submitted by Colombia were invalid both in respect of the jurisdiction based upon the Pact of Bogotá, and upon Article 36, paragraph 2, of the Statute of the Court. In the alternative, Nicaragua asked the Court to adjudge and declare, in accordance with the provisions of Article 79, paragraph 7, of the Rules of Court, that the objections submitted by Colombia did not have an exclusively preliminary character, and to reject the request of Colombia to declare the controversy submitted to it by Nicaragua under article XXXI of the Pact of Bogotá 'ended', in accordance with articles VI and XXXIV of the same instrument.

On 13 December 2007 [ibid., p. 1330], the Court rendered its Judgment on the preliminary objections. By 13 votes to 4, the Court upheld the objection to its jurisdiction raised by Colombia on the basis of articles VI and XXXIV of the Pact of Bogotá, insofar as it concerned sovereignty over the islands of San Andrés, Providencia and Santa Catalina. It unanimously rejected the objection to its jurisdiction insofar as it concerned sovereignty over the other maritime features in dispute between the Parties and the maritime delimitation between the Parties. By 14 votes to 3, the Court upheld the second preliminary objection to jurisdiction raised by Colombia relating to the declarations made by the Parties recognizing the compulsory jurisdiction of the Court insofar as it concerned sovereignty over the islands of San Andrés, Providencia and Santa Catalina. By 16 votes to 1, it found that it was not necessary to examine the objection to its jurisdiction insofar as it concerned sovereignty over the other maritime features in dispute between the Parties and the maritime delimitation between the Parties. With regard to its own jurisdiction, the Court unanimously found that it had jurisdiction, on the basis of article XXXI of the Pact of Bogotá, to adjudicate upon the dispute concerning sovereignty over the maritime features claimed by the Parties other than the islands of San Andrés, Providencia and Santa Catalina, and upon the dispute concerning the maritime delimitation between the Parties.

Appended to the Judgment were declarations by Judges Parra-Aranguren, Simma, Keith and Tomka and Judge ad hoc Gaja; separate opinions by Judges Ranjeva and Abraham; and dissenting opinions by Vice-President Al-Khasawneh and Judge Bennouna.

By an Order of 11 February 2008, the President of the Court fixed 11 November 2008 as the time limit for the filing of the Counter-Memorial of Colombia, which was filed within that time limit.

By an Order of 18 December, the Court directed Nicaragua to submit a Reply and Colombia to submit a Rejoinder, and fixed 18 September 2009 and 18 June 2010 as the respective time limits for the filing of those written pleadings.

Communication. On 29 February [A/62/733], Colombia transmitted to the Secretary-General the text of a note sent to the President of Nicaragua on 25 February 2008 in reference to the judgment on preliminary objections handed down by the Court on 13 December 2007.

Sovereignty over Pedra Branca/Pulau Batu Puteh, Middle Rocks and South Ledge (Malaysia/Singapore)

On 24 July 2003 [YUN 2003, p. 1308], Malaysia and Singapore jointly notified the Court of a Special Agreement, which was signed between them on 6 February 2003 at Putrajaya, Malaysia, and entered into force on 9 May 2003. In article 2 of the Special Agreement, the Parties requested the Court to determine whether sovereignty over Pedra Branca/Pulau Batu Puteh, Middle Rocks and South Ledge belonged to Malaysia or Singapore. In article 6, the Parties agreed to accept the judgment of the Court as final and binding upon them. The Parties further set out their views on the procedure to be followed.

By an Order of 1 September 2003 [ibid., p. 1309], the Court, taking into account the provisions of article 4 of the Special Agreement, fixed 25 March 2004 and 25 January 2005 as the respective time limits for the filing, by each of the Parties, of a Memorial and of a Counter-Memorial. The Memorial [YUN 2004, p. 1271] and Counter-Memorial [YUN 2005, p. 1385] were filed within the time limit.

By an Order of 1 February 2005, the Court fixed 25 November 2005 as the time limit for the filing of a Reply by each of the Parties, which were filed within the time limit [ibid.].

By a joint letter of 23 January 2006, the Parties informed the Court that they had agreed there was no need for an exchange of Rejoinders in the case. The Court itself subsequently decided that no further pleadings were necessary, and that the written proceedings were accordingly closed [YUN 2006, p. 1480].

Public hearings were held from 6 to 23 November 2007 [YUN 2007, p. 1330]. At the conclusion of those hearings, the Parties presented their final submissions to the Court. Singapore requested the Court to adjudge and declare that Singapore had sovereignty over Pedra Branca/Pulau Batu Puteh, Middle Rocks and South Ledge. Malaysia asked the Court to adjudge and declare that Malaysia had sovereignty over the disputed islands.

In its Judgment delivered on 23 May 2008, the Court, by 12 votes to 4, found that sovereignty over Pedra Branca/Pulau Batu Puteh belonged to Singapore. By 15 votes to 1, it found that sovereignty over Middle Rocks belonged to Malaysia. By 15 votes to 1, it found that sovereignty over South Ledge belonged to the State in the territorial waters of which it was located.

Appended to the Judgment were declarations by Judges Ranjeva and Bennouna; separate opinions by Judge Parra-Aranguren and Judge ad hoc Sreenivasa Rao; a joint dissenting opinion by Judges Simma and Abraham; and a dissenting opinion by ad hoc Judge Dugard.

Maritime Delimitation in the Black Sea (Romania v. Ukraine)

On 16 September 2004 [YUN 2004, p. 1271], Romania filed an Application instituting proceedings against Ukraine in respect of a dispute concerning the establishment of a single maritime boundary between the two States in the Black Sea, thereby delimiting the continental shelf and the exclusive economic zones appertaining to them. Romania requested the Court to draw, in accordance with international law, and specifically the criteria laid down in article 4 of the Additional Agreement to the June 1997 Treaty on Relations of Co-operation and Good Neighbourliness between Romania and Ukraine, a single maritime boundary between the continental shelf and the exclusive economic zone of the two States in the Black Sea.

As a basis for the Court's jurisdiction, Romania invoked article 4 (b) of the Additional Agreement, which provided that, if the negotiations should not determine the conclusion of an agreement on the delimitation of the continental shelf and the exclusive economic zones in the Black Sea in a reasonable period of time, no later than two years after their initiation, Romania and Ukraine would agree that the delimitation problem would be solved by ICJ, at their request, provided that the treaty on the regime of the State border between Romania and Ukraine had entered into force. However, should ICJ consider that the delay of the entry into force of the treaty on the border regime was the result of the other Party's fault, it might examine the request concerning the delimitation before the entry into force of the treaty.

Romania contended that the two conditions set out in article 4 (b) of the Additional Agreement had been fulfilled, since the negotiations had by far exceeded two years and the Treaty on the Romanian-Ukrainian State Border Régime had entered into force on 27 May 2004.

In its Application, Romania further provided an overview of the applicable law for solving the dispute, citing a number of provisions of the Additional Agreement of 1997, as well as the 1982 United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea [YUN 1982, p. 181], to which both Ukraine and Romania were parties, together with other relevant instruments binding the two countries.

On 19 November 2004 [YUN 2004, p. 1272], the Court fixed 19 August 2005 and 19 May 2006, respectively, as the time limits for the filing of a Memorial by Romania and a Counter-Memorial by Ukraine, which were filed within the time limit.

By an Order of 30 June 2006 [YUN 2006, p. 1480], the Court authorized the filing of a Reply by Romania and a Rejoinder by Ukraine, and fixed 22 December 2006 and 15 June 2007 as the respective time limits for the filing of those pleadings. Romania filed its Reply within the time limit. On 8 June 2007 [YUN 2007, p. 1331], the Court extended the time limit for the filing of the Rejoinder by Ukraine to 6 July 2007, which was filed within the extended time limit.

Public hearings were held from 2 to 19 September 2008.

Certain Questions of Mutual Assistance in Criminal Matters (Djibouti v. France)

On 9 January 2006 [YUN 2006, p. 1480], Djibouti filed an Application instituting proceedings against France regarding the alleged violation by the latter of its international obligations in respect of mutual assistance in criminal matters in the context of the investigation into the death of the French Judge Bernard Borrel in Djibouti in 1995. Djibouti explained that the dispute concerned the refusal by the French governmental and judicial authorities to execute an international letter rogatory regarding the transmission to the Djiboutian judicial authorities of the record relating to the investigation in the case against X for the murder of Judge Borrel. Djibouti maintained that the refusal constituted a violation of France's international obligations under the 1977 Treaty of Friendship and Co-operation signed by the two States and the 1986 Convention on Mutual Assistance in Criminal Matters between France and Djibouti. Djibouti further asserted that, in summoning certain internationally protected nationals of Djibouti, including the Head of State, as témoins assistés (legally assisted witnesses) in connection with a criminal complaint for subornation of perjury against X in the Borrel case, France had violated its obligation to prevent attacks on the person and on the freedom or dignity of persons enjoying such protection. Djibouti sought to found the jurisdiction of the Court on Article 38, paragraph 5, of the Rules of Court. In accordance with that Article, the Application by Djibouti was transmitted to the French Government.

In a 25 July 2006 letter [ibid., p. 1481], France informed the Court that it consented to the jurisdiction of the Court to entertain the Application filed by Djibouti, pursuant to Article 38, paragraph 5, of its Rules. That consent made it possible to enter the case in the Court's General List on 9 August 2006 and to open the proceedings.

By an Order of 15 November 2006 [ibid.], the Court fixed 15 March 2007 as the time limit for the filing of a Memorial by Djibouti and 13 July 2007 as the time limit for the filing of a Counter-Memorial by France, which were filed within the prescribed time limits [YUN 2007, p. 1332].

Public hearings were held from 21 to 29 January 2008. At the conclusion of the hearings, the Parties presented final submissions to the Court. Djibouti requested the Court to adjudge and declare that France had violated its obligations under the 1986 Convention by not acting upon its undertaking of 27 January 2005 to execute the letter rogatory addressed to it by Djibouti dated 3 November 2004; in the alternative, by not performing its obligation pursuant to article 1 of the aforementioned Convention following its wrongful refusal given in the letter of 6 June 2005; in the further alternative, by not performing its obligation pursuant to Article 1 of the aforementioned Convention following its wrongful refusal given in the letter of 31 May 2005. Djibouti further requested the Court to adjudge and declare that France should immediately, after the delivery of the judgment by the Court, transmit the 'Borrel file' in its entirety to Djibouti, or, in the alternative, transmit the 'Borrel file' to Djibouti within the terms and conditions determined by the Court; that France had violated its obligation pursuant to the principles of customary and general international law not to attack the immunity, honour and dignity of the President of Djibouti by issuing a witness summons to the President on 17 May 2005; by repeating such attack or by attempting to repeat such attack on 14 February 2007; by making both summonses public by immediately circulating the information to the French media; and by not responding appropriately to the two letters of protest from the Ambassador of Djibouti in Paris dated 18 May 2005 and 14 February 2007, respectively; that France had violated its obligation pursuant to the principles of customary and general international law to prevent attacks on the immunity, honour and dignity of the President of Djibouti; that France should immediately after the delivery of the judgment by the Court, withdraw the witness summons dated 17 May 2005 and declare it null and void; that France had violated its obligation pursuant to the principles of customary and general international law not to attack the person, freedom and honour of the Procureur général of Djibouti and the Head of National Security of Djibouti; that France had violated its obligation pursuant to the principles of customary and general international law to prevent attacks on the person, freedom and honour of the Procureur général of Djibouti and the Head of National Security of Djibouti; that France should immediately after the delivery of the judgment by the Court, withdraw the summonses to attend as témoins assistés and the arrest warrants issued against the Procureur général of Djibouti and the Head of National Security of Djibouti and declare them null and void; that France, by acting contrary to or by failing to act in accordance with articles 1, 3, 4, 6 and 7 of the Treaty of Friendship and Cooperation of 1977 individually or collectively, had violated the spirit and purpose of that Treaty, as well as the obligations deriving therefrom; that France should cease its wrongful conduct and abide strictly by the obligations incumbent on it in the future; and that France should provide Djibouti with specific assurances and guarantees of non-repetition of the wrongful acts as complained by Djibouti.

France requested the Court to declare that it lacked jurisdiction to rule on those claims presented by Djibouti upon completion of its oral argument, which went beyond the subject of the dispute as set out in its Application, or to declare them inadmissible, or, in the alternative, to declare those claims to be unfounded; and to reject all the other claims made by Djibouti.

In its Judgment of 4 June, the Court, unanimously found that it had jurisdiction to adjudicate upon the dispute concerning the execution of the letter rogatory addressed by Djibouti to France on 3 November 2004. By 15 votes to 1, it found that it had jurisdiction to adjudicate upon the dispute concerning the summons as witness addressed to the President of Djibouti on 17 May 2005, and the summonses as témoins assistés addressed to two senior Djiboutian officials on 3 and 4 November 2004 and 17 June 2005. By 12 votes to 4, it found that it had jurisdiction to adjudicate upon the dispute concerning the summons as witness addressed to the President of Djibouti on 14 February 2007. By 13 votes to 3, it found that it had no jurisdiction to adjudicate upon the dispute concerning the arrest warrants issued against two senior Djiboutian officials on 27 September 2006. On the final submissions of Djibouti on the merits, the Court unanimously found that France, by not giving Djibouti the reasons for its refusal to execute the letter rogatory presented by the latter on 3 November 2004, failed to comply with its international obligation under article 17 of the 1986 Convention on Mutual Assistance in Criminal Matters between the two Parties and that its finding of that violation constituted appropriate satisfaction. By 15 votes to 1, the Court rejected all other final submissions by Djibouti.

Appended to the Judgment were declarations by Judges Owada, Keith, Skotnikov and Judge ad hoc Guillaume; and separate opinions by Judges Ranjeva, Koroma, Parra-Aranguren, Tomka, and Judge ad hoc Yusuf.

Maritime Dispute (Peru v. Chile)

On 16 January 2008, Peru filed an Application instituting proceedings against Chile concerning a dispute in relation to “the delimitation of the boundary between the maritime zones of the two States in the Pacific Ocean, beginning at a point on the coast called Concordia, ... the terminal point of the land boundary established pursuant to the Treaty ... of 3 June 1929”, and also to recognition in favour of Peru of a “maritime zone lying within 200 nautical miles of the Coast of Peru, and thus appertaining to Peru, but which Chile considered to be part of the high seas”.

In its Application, Peru claimed that the “maritime zones between Chile and Peru have never been delimited by agreement or otherwise” and that, accordingly, “the delimitation is to be determined by the Court in accordance with customary international law”. Peru stated that, since the 1980s, it had consistently endeavoured to negotiate the various issues in dispute, but had “constantly met a refusal from Chile to enter into negotiations”. It asserted that a note of 10 September 2004 from the Minister for Foreign Affairs of Chile to the Minister for Foreign Affairs of Peru made further attempts at negotiation impossible.

Peru consequently requested the Court to determine the course of the boundary between the maritime zones of the two States in accordance with international law, and to adjudge and declare that Peru possessed exclusive sovereign rights in the maritime area situated within the limit of 200 nautical miles from its coast, but outside Chile’s exclusive economic zone or continental shelf.

As basis for the Court’s jurisdiction, Peru invoked article XXXI of the Pact of Bogotá of 30 April 1948, to which both States were parties without reservation.

By an Order of 31 March, the Court fixed 20 March 2009 and 9 March 2010 as the respective time limits for the filing of a Memorial by Peru and a Counter-Memorial by Chile.

Aerial Herbicide Spraying (Ecuador v. Colombia)

On 31 March 2008, Ecuador filed an Application instituting proceedings against Colombia with respect of a dispute concerning the alleged “aerial spraying by Colombia of toxic herbicides at locations near, at and across its border with Ecuador”. Ecuador maintained that the spraying had already caused serious damage to people, crops, animals and the environment on the Ecuadorian side of the frontier, and posed a grave risk of further damage over time. It further contended that it had made “repeated and sustained efforts to negotiate an end to the fumigations” but that “those negotiations had proved unsuccessful”.

Ecuador requested the Court to adjudge and declare that Colombia had violated its obligations under international law by causing or allowing the deposit of toxic herbicides on the territory of Ecuador that had caused damage to human health, property and the environment; that Colombia should indemnify Ecuador for any loss or damage caused by its internationally unlawful acts, namely the use of herbicides, including by aerial dispersion, and in particular the death or injury to the health of any person or persons arising from the use of such herbicides, any loss of or damage to the property or livelihood or human rights of such persons, environmental damage or the depletion of natural resources, the costs of monitoring to identify and assess future risks to public health, human rights and the environment resulting from Colombia’s use of herbicides, and any other loss or damage. It further requested the Court to adjudge and declare that Colombia should respect the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Ecuador; and forthwith take all steps necessary to prevent, on any part of its territory, the use of any toxic herbicides in such a way that they could be deposited onto the territory of Ecuador, and to prohibit the use, by means of aerial dispersion, of such herbicides in Ecuador, or on or near any part of its border with Ecuador.

As basis for the Court’s jurisdiction, Ecuador invoked article XXXI of the 1948 Pact of Bogotá, to which both States were parties. Ecuador also relied on article 32 of the United Nations Convention against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances [YUN 1988, p. 688], to which both countries were parties.

In its Application, Ecuador reaffirmed its opposition to the export and consumption of illegal narcotics, but stressed that the issues it presented to the Court related exclusively to the methods and locations of Colombian operations to eradicate illicit coca and poppy plantations—and the harmful effects in Ecuador of such operations.

By an Order of 30 May, the Court fixed 29 April 2009 and 29 March 2010 as the respective time limits for the filing of a Memorial by Ecuador and a Counter-Memorial by Colombia.

Interpretation of the Judgment of 31 March 2004 in the Case concerning Avena and Other Mexican Nationals (Mexico v. United States)

On 5 June 2008, Mexico filed a request for interpretation of the Judgment delivered on 31 March 2004 [YUN 2004, p. 1270] by the Court in the case concerning Avena and Other Mexican Nationals (Mexico v. United States) [YUN 2003, p. 1306].

Mexico invoked Article 60 of the Statute of the Court, which provided that “in the event of dispute as to the meaning or scope of the judgment, the Court shall construe it upon the request of any party”. A request for interpretation opened a new case.

Mexico noted that the Court had ruled in previous cases that its jurisdiction to provide an interpretation of one of its own judgments “[was] a special jurisdiction deriving directly from Article 60 of the Statute”.

In its request, Mexico recalled that in the Avena Judgment, the Court, inter alia, had found “that the United States had breached article 36 of the Vienna Convention on Consular Relations in the cases of 51 of the Mexican nationals by failing to inform them ... of their rights to consular access and assistance” and that the Court had determined, in paragraph 153(9) of the Judgment, the remedial obligations incumbent upon the United States. Mexico contended that a fundamental dispute had arisen between the parties as to the scope and meaning of paragraph 153(9) and that the Court needed to provide guidance to the parties. It therefore sought the interpretation of said paragraph, which indicated that by 14 votes to 1, the Court found that the appropriate reparation in the case consisted in the obligation of the United States to provide, by means of its own choosing, review and reconsideration of the convictions and sentences of the Mexican nationals referred to in subparagraphs (4), (5), (6) and (7), by taking account both of the violation of the rights set forth in article 36 of the Vienna Convention on Consular Relations and of paragraphs 138 to 141 of the Judgment.

The Request of Mexico for interpretation was accompanied by a request for the indication of provisional measures on the ground that such measures “are clearly justified in order both to protect Mexico’s paramount interest in the life of its nationals and to ensure the Court’s ability to order the relief Mexico seeks”. Public hearings were held on 19 and 20 June 2008 in order to hear the oral arguments of the Parties regarding the request for the indication of provisional measures.

By an Order of 16 July, the Court, by 7 votes to 5, found that the submission by the United States seeking the dismissal of the application filed by Mexico could not be upheld. With regard to provisional measures, by 7 votes to 5, it indicated that the United States should take all measures necessary to ensure that José Ernesto Medellín Rojas, César Roberto Fierro Reyna, Rubén Ramírez Cárdenas, Humberto Leal García and Roberto Moreno Ramos were not executed pending judgment on the request for interpretation submitted by Mexico, unless and until those five Mexican nationals received review and reconsideration consistent with paragraphs 138 to 141 of the Court’s Judgment delivered on 31 March 2004 in the case concerning Avena and Other Mexican Nationals (Mexico v. United States). By 11 votes to 1, it indicated that the Government of the United States should inform the Court of the measures taken to implement the Order. By 11 votes to 1, it decided that until the Court had rendered its judgment on the Request for interpretation, it would remain seized of the matters which formed the subject of the Order.

After ascertaining the views of the Parties, the Court, pursuant to Article 98, paragraph 3, of the Rules of Court, fixed 29 August 2008 as the time limit for the filing by the United States of written observations on Mexico’s Request for interpretation, which was filed within the prescribed time limit.

On 28 August, Mexico, informing the Court of the execution on 5 August 2008 of José Ernesto Medellín Rojas in the state of Texas, United States, and referring to Article 98, paragraph 4 of the Rules of Court, requested the Court to afford Mexico the opportunity of furnishing further written explanations for the purpose, on the one hand, of elaborating on the merits of the Request for interpretation in the light of the written observations which the United States was due to file, and on the other, of amending its pleading to state a claim based on the violation of the Order of 16 July 2008.

On 2 September, the Court authorized Mexico and the United States to furnish further written explanations, pursuant to Article 98, paragraph 4, of the Rules of Court and fixed 17 September and 6 October 2008, respectively, as the time limits by which they were to be filed. Those written explanations were filed within the fixed time limits.

Application of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination (Georgia v. Russian Federation)

On 12 August 2008, Georgia instituted proceedings against the Russian Federation on the grounds of “its actions on and around the territory of Georgia” in breach of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination (CERD) [YUN 1965, p. 433]. In its Application, Georgia also sought to ensure that the individual rights under the Convention of all persons on the territory of Georgia were fully respected and protected.

Georgia claimed that the “Russian Federation, through its State organs, State agents, and other persons and entities exercising governmental authority, and through the South Ossetian and Abkhaz separatist forces and other agents acting on the instructions of, and under the direction and control of the Russian Federation, is responsible for serious violations of its fundamental obligations under [the] Convention, including articles 2, 3, 4, 5 and 6”, and that the Russian Federation had “violated its obligations under [the] Convention during three distinct phases of its interventions in South Ossetia and Abkhazia” in the period from 1990 to August 2008.

Georgia requested the Court to order the Russian Federation to take all steps necessary to comply with its obligations under the Convention. As a basis for the jurisdiction of the Court, Georgia relied on article 22 of the Convention. It also reserved its right to invoke, as an additional basis of jurisdiction, article IX of the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide, to which Georgia and the Russian Federation were parties.

Georgia’s Application was accompanied by a request for the indication of provisional measures, in order to preserve its rights under the Convention, “to protect its citizens against violent discriminatory acts by Russian armed forces, acting in concert with separatist militia and foreign mercenaries”.

In its request, Georgia reiterated its contention that “beginning in the early 1990s and acting in concert with separatist forces and mercenaries in the Georgian regions of South Ossetia and Abkhazia, the Russian Federation had engaged in a systematic policy of ethnic discrimination directed against the ethnic Georgian population and other groups in those regions”. It further stated that “on 8 August 2008, the Russian Federation launched a full-scale military invasion against Georgia in support of ethnic separatists in South Ossetia and Abkhazia”, and that the “military aggression had resulted in hundreds of civilian deaths, extensive destruction of civilian property, and the displacement of virtually the entire ethnic Georgian population in South Ossetia”. Georgia claimed that

“despite the withdrawal of Georgian armed forces and the unilateral declaration of a ceasefire, Russian military operations continued beyond South Ossetia into territories under Georgian government control” and that “the continuation of those violent discriminatory acts constituted an extremely urgent threat of irreparable harm to Georgia’s rights under the Convention in dispute in this case”.

Georgia requested the Court, as a matter of utmost urgency, to order the following measures to protect its rights pending the determination of the case: that the Russian Federation should give full effect to its obligations under the Convention; the Russian Federation should immediately cease and desist from any and all conduct that could result, directly or indirectly, in any form of ethnic discrimination by its armed forces, or other organs, agents, and persons and entities exercising elements of governmental authority, or through separatist forces in South Ossetia and Abkhazia under its direction and control, or in territories under the occupation or effective control of Russian forces; and that the Russian Federation should, in particular, immediately cease and desist from discriminatory violations of the human rights of ethnic Georgians, including attacks against civilians and civilian objects, murder, forced displacement, denial of humanitarian assistance, extensive pillage and destruction of towns and villages, and any measures that would render permanent the denial of the right to return of internally displaced persons, in South Ossetia and adjoining regions of Georgia, and in Abkhazia and adjoining regions of Georgia, and any other territories under Russian occupation or effective control.

On 15 August, having considered the gravity of the situation, the President of the Court, acting under Article 74, paragraph 4, of the Rules of the Court, urgently called upon the Parties “to act in such a way as will enable any order the Court may take on the request for provisional measures to have its appropriate effects”.

Public hearings were held from 8 to 10 October to hear the oral observations of the Parties on the request for the indication of provisional measures.

By an Order of 15 October, the Court, reminding the Parties of their duty to comply with their obligations under the Convention, indicated, by 8 votes to 7, the provisional measures that both Parties, within South Ossetia and Abkhazia and adjacent areas in Georgia, should refrain from any act of racial discrimination against persons, groups of persons or institutions; abstain from sponsoring, defending or supporting racial discrimination by any persons or organizations; do all in their power, whenever and wherever possible, to ensure, without distinction as to national or ethnic origin: security of persons, the right of persons to freedom of movement and residence within the border of the State, and the protection of the property of displaced persons and of refugees; and do all in their power to ensure that public authorities and public institutions under their control or influence did not engage in acts of racial discrimination against persons, groups of persons or institutions.

By 8 votes to 7, the Court indicated that both Parties should facilitate and refrain from placing any impediment to humanitarian assistance in support of the rights to which, under the Convention, the local populations were entitled. By 8 votes to 7, it indicated that each Party should refrain from any action which might prejudice the rights of the other Party in respect of whatever judgment the Court might render in the case, or which might aggravate or extend the dispute before the Court or make it more difficult to resolve. By 8 votes to 7, it indicated that each Party should inform the Court as to its compliance with the provisional measures.

Appended to the Order was a declaration by Judge ad hoc Gaja and a joint dissenting opinion by Vice-President Al-Khasawneh and Judges Ranjeva, Shi, Koroma, Tomka, Bennouna and Skotnikov.

By an Order of 2 December, the President fixed 2 September 2009 as the time limit for the filing of a Memorial by Georgia and 2 July 2010 as the time limit for the filing of a Counter-Memorial by the Russian Federation.

Application of the Interim Accord of 13 September 1995 (The former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia v. Greece)

On 17 November 2008, the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia (FYROM) instituted proceedings against Greece for what it described as “a flagrant violation of its obligations under article 11” of the Interim Accord signed by the Parties on 13 September 1995.

In its Application, FYROM requested the Court to protect its rights under the Interim Accord and to ensure that it was allowed to exercise its rights as an independent State acting in accordance with international law, including the right to pursue membership of international organizations. It contended that in accordance with article 11, paragraph 1, of the Interim Accord, Greece had undertaken a binding obligation under international law not to object to the application by, or the membership of, FYROM in international, multilateral and regional organizations and institutions of which Greece was a member. However, Greece reserved the right to object to any membership referred to above, if and to the extent FYROM was to be referred to in such organization or institution differently than in paragraph 2 of UN Security Council resolution 817(1993) [YUN 1993, p. 208], i.e. as “the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia”.

FYROM contended in its Application that Greece violated its rights under the Interim Accord by objecting, in April 2008, to its application to join the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO). It contended, in particular, that Greece vetoed its application to join NATO because Greece desired “to resolve the difference between the Parties concerning the constitutional name of the Applicant as an essential precondition” for such membership.

FYROM argued that it had met its obligations under the Interim Accord not to be designated as a member of NATO with any designation other than “the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia” and affirmed that “the subject of this dispute did not concern—either directly or indirectly—the difference that had arisen between Greece and itself over its name”.

FYROM requested the Court to order Greece to immediately take all necessary steps to comply with its obligations under article 11, paragraph 1 of the Interim Accord and “to cease and desist from objecting in any way, whether directly or indirectly, to its membership in NATO and/or of any other ‘international, multilateral and regional organizations and institutions’ of which [Greece] was a member”.

As a basis for the jurisdiction of the Court, FYROM invoked article 21, paragraph 2, of the Interim Accord, which provided that “any difference or dispute that arises between the Parties concerning the interpretation or implementation of the Accord may be submitted by either of them to ICJ, except for the differences referred to in article 5, paragraph 1”.

Jurisdictional Immunities of the State (Germany v. Italy)

On 23 December 2008, Germany instituted proceedings against Italy, alleging that “through its judicial practice ... Italy has infringed and continues to infringe its obligations towards Germany under international law”.

In its Application, Germany contended that “in recent years, Italian judicial bodies have repeatedly disregarded the jurisdictional immunity of Germany as a sovereign State. The critical stage of that development was reached by the judgment of the Corte di Cassazione of 11 March 2004 in the Ferrini case, where that court declared that Italy held jurisdiction with regard to a claim ... brought by a person who during World War II had been deported to Germany to perform forced labour in the armaments industry”. After that judgment had been rendered, numerous other proceedings were instituted against Germany before Italian courts by persons who had also suffered injury as a consequence of the armed conflict. The Ferrini judgment having been recently confirmed “in a series of decisions delivered on 29 May 2008 and in a further judgment of 21 October 2008”, Germany was concerned “that hundreds of additional cases may be brought against it”.

Germany recalled that enforcement measures had already been taken against German assets in Italy: a “judicial mortgage” on Villa Vigoni, the German-Italian centre for cultural exchange, had been recorded in the land register. In addition to the claims brought against it by Italian nationals, Germany also cited “attempts by Greek nationals to enforce in Italy a judgment obtained in Greece on account of a ... massacre committed by German military units during their withdrawal in 1944”. Germany concluded its Application by requesting the Court to adjudge and declare that Italy, by allowing civil claims based on violations of international humanitarian law by the German Reich during World War II from September 1943 to May 1945 to be brought against Germany, committed violations of obligations under international law in that it had failed to respect the jurisdictional immunity which Germany enjoyed under international law; by taking measures of constraint against Villa Vigoni, German State property used for government non-commercial purposes, also committed violations of Germany’s jurisdictional immunity; and by declaring Greek judgments based on occurrences similar to those defined above enforceable in Italy, committed a further breach of Germany’s jurisdictional immunity. Accordingly, Germany requested the Court to adjudge and declare that Italy’s international responsibility was engaged; that Italy must, by means of its own choosing, take any and all steps to ensure that all the decisions of its courts and other judicial authorities infringing Germany’s sovereign immunity became unenforceable; and that Italy must take any and all steps to ensure that in the future Italian courts would not entertain legal actions against Germany founded on the occurrences described in the request above. Germany reserved the right to request the Court to indicate provisional measures in accordance with Article 41 of the Statute of the Court, “should measures of constraint be taken by Italian authorities against German State assets, in particular, diplomatic and other premises that enjoy protection against such measures pursuant to general rules of international law”.

As the basis for the jurisdiction of the Court, Germany invoked article 1 of the European Convention for the Peaceful Settlement of Disputes of 29 April 1957, ratified by Italy on 29 January 1960 and by Germany on 18 April 1961. That article stated that “The High Contracting Parties shall submit to the judgment of ICJ all international legal disputes which may arise between them including, in particular, those concerning the interpretation of a treaty; any question of international law; the existence of any fact which, if established, would constitute a breach of an international obligation; and the nature or extent of the reparation to be made for the breach of an international obligation”. Germany asserted that, although the present case was between two Member States of the European Union, the Court of Justice of the European Communities in Luxembourg had no jurisdiction to entertain it, since the dispute was not governed by any of the jurisdictional clauses in the treaties on European integration. It added that outside of that “specific framework” the Member States “continue to live with one another under the regime of general international law”.

The Application by Germany was accompanied by a Joint Declaration adopted on the occasion of German-Italian Governmental Consultations in Trieste on 18 November 2008, whereby both Governments declared that they “share the ideals of reconciliation, solidarity and integration, which form the basis of the European construction”. In the declaration, Germany “fully acknowledges the untold suffering inflicted on Italian men and women” during World War II. Italy, for its part, “respects Germany’s decision to apply to ICJ for a ruling on the principle of state immunity [and] is of the view that the ICJ’s ruling on State immunity will help to clarify this complex issue”.

Advisory proceedings

Accordance with International Law of the Unilateral Declaration of Independence by the Provisional Institutions of Self-Government of Kosovo

In response to General Assembly resolution 63/3 of 8 October 2008 (see p. 1404), which referred to Article 65 of the ICJ Statute and requested the Court to render an advisory opinion on the question of whether the unilateral declaration of independence by the Provisional Institutions of Self-Government of Kosovo was in accordance with international law, the Court, by an Order of 17 October 2008, decided that the United Nations and its Member States were considered likely to be able to furnish information on the question submitted to the Court for an advisory opinion. It fixed 17 April 2009 as the time limit within which written statements on the question could be presented to the Court, and 17 July 2009 as the time limit within which States and organizations having presented written statements could submit written comments on the other statements. The Court further decided that since the unilateral declaration of independence by the Provisional Institutions of Self-Government of Kosovo of 17 February 2008 was the subject of the question submitted to the Court for an advisory opinion, the authors of the declaration were considered likely to be able to furnish information on the question and were invited to make written contributions to the Court within the time limits.

Functioning and organization of the Court

Conditions of service and compensation

In a 12 March report [A/62/7/Add.36] on the conditions of service and compensation for officials other than Secretariat officials, the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ), with regard to standards of travel and the assignment grant, recommended that no changes be made in the provisions of articles 1 and 2, and article 3, paragraph 1 (a)(ii) of the travel and subsistence regulations of ICJ. ACABQ noted the concern expressed by the ICJ President in April 2007 [YUN 2007, p. 1333] regarding members' emoluments and the inequalities among judges that would be created by the General Assembly's proposed action, which took effect with the adoption of resolution 61/262 [ibid., p. 1499], as well as a letter dated 29 May 2007. Therein, the ICJ President notified the Secretary-General that an ad hoc judge appointed to sit in the case concerning the territorial and maritime dispute between Nicaragua and Colombia following the adoption of resolution 61/262 would receive the same emolument as the ad hoc judge appointed prior to the adoption of the resolution. The Committee noted that such action was incompatible with the decision of the Assembly in resolution 61/262 and upon inquiry, was informed that a similar situation could arise in a limited number of other cases pending before the Court. ACABQ stated that the Assembly might wish to examine the impact of the implementation of resolution 61/262 on the position of ad hoc judges sitting in those cases. As the UN Legal Counsel largely concurred with the arguments pertaining to resolution 61/262 presented by the ICJ President, the Committee noted that the interpretation could affect the exercise of the Assembly's mandate under Article 32 of the Statute of the Court. The Committee further noted the financial implications of two options proposed by the Secretary-General to address the issue and, on retirement benefits for members of the Court, recommended that the Assembly defer consideration of that issue pending receipt of the pension study.
