(b) To ensure for journalists the free and effective performance of their professional tasks and condemn resolutely all attacks against them;

(c) To provide support for the continuation and strengthening of practical training programmes for broadcasters and journalists from public, private and other media in developing countries;

(d) To enhance regional efforts and cooperation among developing countries, as well as cooperation between developed and developing countries, to strengthen communications capacities and to improve the media infrastructure and communications technology in the developing countries, especially in the areas of training and dissemination of information;

(e) To aim at, in addition to bilateral cooperation, providing all possible support and assistance to the developing countries and their media, public, private or other, with due regard to their interests and needs in the field of information and to action already adopted within the United Nations system, including:

- (i) The development of the human and technical resources that are indispensable for the improvement of information and communications systems in developing countries and support for the continuation and strengthening of practical training programmes, such as those already operating under both public and private auspices throughout the developing world;
- (ii) The creation of conditions that will enable developing countries and their media, public, private or other, to have, by using their national and regional resources, the communications technology suited to their national needs, as well as the necessary programme material, especially for radio and television broadcasting;
- (iii) Assistance in establishing and promoting telecommunication links at the subregional, regional and interregional levels, especially among developing countries;
- (iv) The facilitation, as appropriate, of access by the developing countries to advanced communications technology available on the open market;

(f) To provide full support for the International Programme for the Development of Communication of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, which should support both public and private media.

United Nations public information policies and activities

The General Assembly,

Emphasizing the role of the Committee on Information as its main subsidiary body mandated to make recommendations to it relating to the work of the Department of Public Information of the Secretariat,

Reaffirming its resolution 13(I) of 13 February 1946, establishing the Department of Public Information, which states in paragraph 2 of annex I that “the activities of the Department should be so organized and directed as to promote to the greatest possible extent an informed understanding of the work and purposes of the United Nations among the peoples of the world”,

Emphasizing that the contents of public information and communications should be placed at the heart of the strategic management of the United Nations and that a culture of communications and transparency should permeate all levels of the Organization, as a means of fully informing the peoples of the world of the aims and activities of the United Nations, in accordance with the purposes and principles enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations, in order to create broad-based global support for the United Nations,

Stressing that the primary mission of the Department of Public Information is to provide, through its outreach activities, accurate, impartial, comprehensive, timely and relevant information to the public on the tasks and responsibilities of the United Nations in order to strengthen international support for the activities of the Organization with the greatest transparency,

Recalling the comprehensive review of the work of the Department of Public Information, requested by the General Assembly in its resolution 56/253 of 24 December 2001, as well as the report of the Secretary-General entitled “Strengthening of the United Nations: an agenda for further change” and Assembly resolutions 57/300 of 20 December 2002 and 60/109 B of 8 December 2005, which provided an opportunity to take due steps to enhance the efficiency and effectiveness of the Department and to maximize the use of its resources,

Expressing its concern that the gap in information and communications technology between the developed and the developing countries has continued to widen and that vast segments of the population in developing countries are not benefiting from the present information and communications technologies, and, in this regard, underlining the necessity of rectifying the imbalances in the present development of information and communications technologies in order to make it more just, equitable and effective,

Recognizing that developments in information and communications technologies open vast new opportunities for economic growth and social development and can play an important role in the eradication of poverty in developing countries, and, at the same time, emphasizing that the development of these technologies poses challenges and risks and could lead to the further widening of disparities between and within countries,

Recalling its resolution 61/266 of 16 May 2007 on multilingualism, and emphasizing the importance of making appropriate use of the official languages of the United Nations in the activities of the Department of Public Information, with the aim of eliminating the disparity between the use of English and the five other official languages,

Welcoming Antigua and Barbuda and Zambia to membership in the Committee on Information,

I

Introduction

1. Reaffirms its resolution 13(I), in which it established the Department of Public Information, and all other relevant resolutions of the General Assembly related to the activities of the Department, and requests the Secretary-General, in respect of the public information policies and activities of the United Nations, to continue to implement fully the recommendations contained in paragraph 2 of its resolution 48/44 B of 10 December 1993 and other mandates as established by the General Assembly;

2. Also reaffirms that the United Nations remains the indispensable foundation of a peaceful and just world and that its voice must be heard in a clear and effective manner, and emphasizes the essential role of the Department of Public Information in this context;

3. Stresses the importance of the clear, timely, accurate and comprehensive provision of information by the Secretariat to Member States, upon their request, within the framework of existing mandates and procedures;

4. Reaffirms the central role of the Committee on Information in United Nations public information policies and activities, including the prioritization of those activities, and decides that recommendations relating to the programme of the Department of Public Information shall originate, to the extent possible, in the Committee and shall be considered by the Committee;

5. Requests the Department of Public Information, following the priorities laid down by the General Assembly in its resolution 61/235 of 22 December 2006, and guided by the United Nations Millennium Declaration and reaffirming the 2005 World Summit Outcome, to pay particular attention to peace and security, development and human rights and to major issues such as the eradication of poverty, including the global food crisis, conflict prevention, sustainable development, the HIV/AIDS epidemic, combating terrorism in all its forms and manifestations and the needs of the African continent;

6. Also requests the Department of Public Information to pay particular attention to progress in implementing the internationally agreed development goals, including those contained in the Millennium Declaration, and the outcomes of the major related United Nations summits and conferences in carrying out its activities;

7. Further requests the Department of Public Information and its network of United Nations information centres to play an active role in raising public awareness of the global challenge of climate change, and encourages the Department to pay particular attention to the actions taken in the framework of the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change, in accordance with the principles of common but differentiated responsibilities, especially in the context of the forthcoming sessions of the Conference of the Parties and of the Meetings of the Parties to the Kyoto Protocol to be held in Poznan, Poland, from 1 to 12 December 2008 and in Copenhagen from 30 November to 11 December 2009;

8. Reaffirms the need to enhance the technological infrastructure of the Department of Public Information on a continuous basis in order to widen its outreach and to continue to improve the United Nations website;

II

General activities of the Department of Public Information

9. Takes note of the reports of the Secretary-General on the activities of the Department of Public Information;

10. Requests the Department of Public Information to maintain its commitment to a culture of evaluation and to continue to evaluate its products and activities with the objective of improving their effectiveness, and to continue to cooperate and coordinate with Member States and the Office of Internal Oversight Services of the Secretariat;

11. Reaffirms the importance of more effective coordination between the Department of Public Information and the Office of the Spokesperson for the Secretary-General, and requests the Secretary-General to ensure consistency in the messages of the Organization;

12. Encourages continued collaboration between the Department of Public Information and the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization in the promotion of culture and in the fields of education and communication, bridging the existing gap between the developed and the developing countries;

13. Reaffirms that the Department of Public Information must prioritize its work programme, while respecting existing mandates and in line with regulation 5.6 of the Regulations and Rules Governing Programme Planning, the Programme Aspects of the Budget, the Monitoring of Implementation and the Methods of Evaluation, to focus its message and better concentrate its efforts and to match its programmes with the needs of its target audiences, on the basis of improved feedback and evaluation mechanisms;

14. Notes the efforts of the Department of Public Information to continue to publicize the work and decisions of the General Assembly, and requests the Department to continue to enhance its working relationship with the Office of the President of the General Assembly;

15. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to exert all efforts to ensure that publications and other information services of the Secretariat, including the United Nations website and the United Nations News Service, contain comprehensive, objective and equitable information in all official languages about the issues before the Organization and that they maintain editorial independence, impartiality, accuracy and full consistency with resolutions and decisions of the General Assembly;

16. Requests the Department of Public Information and content-providing offices of the Secretariat to ensure that United Nations publications are produced in a cost-effective manner and to continue to coordinate closely with all other entities, including all other departments of the Secretariat and funds and programmes of the United Nations system, in order to avoid duplication, within their respective mandates, in the issuance of United Nations publications;

17. Emphasizes that the Department of Public Information should maintain and improve its activities in the areas of special interest to developing countries and where appropriate, other countries with special needs, and that the activities of the Department should contribute to bridging the existing gap between the developing and the developed countries in the crucial field of public information and communications;

18. Notes the issuance of daily press releases, and requests the Department of Public Information to continue to improve their production process and streamline their format, structure and length, keeping in mind the views of Member States, including their views on expanding them to the other official languages;

19. Notes with appreciation the efforts of the Department of Public Information to work at the local level with other organizations and bodies of the United Nations system to enhance the coordination of their communications activities, and requests the Secretary-General to report to the Committee on Information at its thirty-first session on progress achieved in this regard and on the activities of the United Nations Communications Group;

20. Calls upon the Department of Public Information, recognizing the importance of audio-visual archives in preserving our common heritage, to continue to examine its policies and activities regarding the durable preservation of its radio, television and photographic archives and to take action within existing resources in ensuring that such archives are preserved and are accessible, and encourages the Department to work further with all interested partners in order to reach that objective;

Multilingualism and public information

21. Emphasizes the importance of making appropriate use and ensuring equitable treatment of all the official languages of the United Nations in all the activities of the Department of Public Information, including in presentations to the Committee on Information, with the aim of eliminating the disparity between the use of English and the five other official languages;

22. Reiterates its request to the Secretary-General to ensure that the Department of Public Information has appropriate staffing capacity in all the official languages of the United Nations to undertake all its activities and to include this aspect in future programme budget proposals for the Department, bearing in mind the principle of parity of all six official languages, while respecting the workload of each official language;

23. Welcomes the ongoing efforts of the Department of Public Information to enhance multilingualism in all its activities, and stresses the importance of fully implementing its resolution 61/266 by ensuring that the texts of all new public documents in all six official languages and information materials of the United Nations are made available daily through the United Nations website and are accessible to Member States without delay;

24. Requests the Secretary-General to continue towards completion of the task of uploading all important older United Nations documents on the United Nations website in all six official languages on a priority basis, so that these archives are also available to Member States through that medium;

Bridging the digital divide

25. Recalls with satisfaction its resolution 60/252 of 27 March 2006, in which it endorsed the Tunis Commitment and the Tunis Agenda for the Information Society, as adopted at the second phase of the World Summit on the Information Society, held in Tunis from 16 to 18 November 2005, and proclaimed 17 May annual World Information Society Day, recalls the adoption of the Declaration of Principles and the Plan of Action at the first phase of the World Summit on the Information Society, held in Geneva from 10 to 12 December 2003, and in this regard requests the Department of Public Information to contribute to the celebration of this event and to play a role in raising awareness of the possibilities that the use of the Internet and other information and communications technologies can bring to societies and economies, as well as of ways to bridge the digital divide;

26. Calls upon the Department of Public Information to contribute to raising the awareness of the international community of the importance of the implementation of the outcome documents of the World Summit on the Information Society;

Network of United Nations information centres

27. Emphasizes the importance of the network of United Nations information centres in enhancing the public image of the United Nations and in disseminating messages on the United Nations to local populations, especially in developing countries;

28. Welcomes the work done by the network of United Nations information centres in favour of the publication of United Nations information materials and the translation of important documents in languages other than the official languages of the United Nations, with a view to reaching the widest possible spectrum of audiences and extending the United Nations message to all the corners of the world in order to strengthen international support for the activities of the Organization, and encourages the continuation of efforts in this regard;

29. Stresses the importance of rationalizing the network of United Nations information centres, and, in this regard, requests the Secretary-General to continue to make proposals in this direction, including through the redeployment of resources where necessary, and to report to the Committee on Information at its successive sessions;

30. Reaffirms that the rationalization of United Nations information centres must be carried out on a case-by-case basis in consultation with all concerned Member States in which existing information centres are located, the countries served by those information centres and other interested countries in the region, taking into consideration the distinctive characteristics of each region;

31. Recognizes that the network of United Nations information centres, especially in developing countries, should continue to enhance its impact and activities, including through strategic communications support, and calls upon the Secretary-General to report on the implementation of this approach to the Committee on Information at its successive sessions;

32. Encourages the Department of Public Information, through the information centres, to strengthen its cooperation with all other United Nations entities at the country level, in order to enhance coherence in communications and to avoid duplication of work;

33. Stresses the importance of taking into account the special needs and requirements of developing countries in the field of information and communications technology for the effective flow of information in those countries;

34. Also stresses that the Department of Public Information, through the network of United Nations information centres, should continue to promote public awareness of and mobilize support for the work of the United Nations at the local level, bearing in mind that information in local languages has the strongest impact on local populations;

35. Further stresses the importance of efforts to strengthen the outreach activities of the United Nations to those Member States remaining outside the network of United Nations information centres, and encourages the Secretary-General, within the context of rationalization, to extend the services of the network of United Nations information centres to those Member States;

36. Stresses that the Department of Public Information should continue to review the allocation of both staff and financial resources to the United Nations information centres in developing countries, emphasizing the needs of the least developed countries;

37. Encourages the network of United Nations information centres to continue to develop web pages in local languages, encourages the Department of Public Information to provide necessary resources and technical facilities, and encourages host countries to respond to the needs of the information centres;

38. Takes note of the proposal by the Secretary-General to work closely with the Governments concerned to explore the possibility of identifying rent-free premises, while taking into account the economic condition of the host countries and bearing in mind that such support should not be a substitute for the full allocation of financial resources for the information centres in the context of the programme budget of the United Nations;

39. Also takes note of the strengthening of the information centres in Cairo, Mexico City and Pretoria, and encourages the Secretary-General to explore the strengthening of other centres, especially in Africa, in cooperation with the Member States concerned and within existing resources;

40. Recalls the offer made by the Government of Angola to host a United Nations information centre in Luanda to address the special needs of Portuguese-speaking African countries, through the provision of rent-free premises, and regrets the lack of progress in this regard, and requests the Secretary-General to report to the Committee on Information at its thirty-first session on the measures necessary, including the budgetary requirements, to accommodate those needs, as well as any proposal to move this process forward;

III

Strategic communications services

41. Reaffirms the role of the strategic communications services in devising and disseminating United Nations messages by developing communications strategies, in close collaboration with the substantive departments, United Nations funds and programmes and the specialized agencies, in full compliance with their legislative mandates;

Promotional campaigns

42. Appreciates the work of the Department of Public Information in promoting, through its campaigns, issues of importance to the international community, such as the United Nations Millennium Declaration and the progress made in implementing the internationally agreed development goals, United Nations reform, the eradication of poverty, conflict prevention, sustainable development, disarmament, decolonization, human rights, including the rights of women and children and of persons with disabilities, strategic coordination in humanitarian relief, especially in natural disasters and other crises, HIV/AIDS, malaria, tuberculosis and other diseases, the needs of the African continent and combating terrorism in all its forms and manifestations, as well as dialogue among civilizations, the culture of peace and tolerance and the consequences of the Chernobyl disaster;

43. Commends the role of the Department of Public Information in observing the first International Day of Remembrance of the Victims of Slavery and the Transatlantic Slave Trade, and looks forward to its further work in promoting the establishment of the permanent memorial to the victims of slavery and the transatlantic slave trade;

44. Requests the Department, in this regard, in cooperation with the countries concerned and with the relevant organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, to continue to take appropriate measures to enhance world public awareness of these and other important global issues;

45. Stresses the need to continue the renewed emphasis in support of Africa's development, in particular by the Department of Public Information, in order to promote awareness in the international community of the nature of the critical economic and social situation in Africa and of the priorities of the New Partnership for Africa's Development;

46. Recognizes the role of the Department of Public Information and its network of United Nations information centres in commemorating the sixtieth anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights;

Role of the Department of Public Information in United Nations peacekeeping operations

47. Commends the role of the Department of Public Information and its network of United Nations information centres in commemorating the sixtieth anniversary of United Nations peacekeeping;

48. Requests the Secretariat to continue to ensure the involvement of the Department of Public Information from the planning stage of future peacekeeping operations through interdepartmental consultations and coordination with other departments of the Secretariat, in particular with the Department of Peacekeeping Operations and the Department of Field Support;

49. Stresses the importance of enhancing the public information capacity of the Department of Public Information in the field of peacekeeping operations and its role, in close cooperation with the Department of Peacekeeping Operations and the Department of Field Support, in the process of selecting public information staff for United Nations peacekeeping operations or missions, and, in this regard, invites the Department of Public Information to second public information staff who have the necessary skills to fulfil the tasks of the operations or missions, taking into account the principle of equitable geographical distribution in accordance with Chapter XV, Article 101, paragraph 3, of the Charter of the United Nations, and to consider views expressed, especially by host countries, when appropriate, in this regard;

50. Emphasizes the importance of the peacekeeping gateway on the United Nations website, and requests the Department of Public Information to continue its efforts in supporting the peacekeeping missions to further develop their websites;

51. Requests the Department of Public Information, the Department of Peacekeeping Operations and the Department of Field Support to continue their cooperation in raising awareness of the new realities, far-reaching successes and challenges faced by peacekeeping operations, especially multidimensional and complex ones, and the recent surge in United Nations peacekeeping activities, and welcomes efforts by the three Departments to develop and implement a comprehensive communications strategy on current challenges facing United Nations peacekeeping;

52. Requests the Department of Public Information and the Department of Peacekeeping Operations to continue to cooperate in implementing an effective outreach programme to explain the zero-tolerance policy of the Organization regarding sexual exploitation and abuse and to inform the public of the outcome of all such cases involving peacekeeping personnel, including cases where allegations are ultimately found to be legally unproven, and also to inform the public of the adoption by the General Assembly of the United Nations Comprehensive Strategy on Assistance and Support to Victims of Sexual Exploitation and Abuse by United Nations Staff and Related Personnel;

Role of the Department of Public Information in strengthening dialogue among civilizations and the culture of peace as means of enhancing understanding among nations

53. Recalls its resolutions on dialogue among civilizations and the culture of peace, requests the Department of Public Information, while ensuring the pertinence and relevance of subjects for promotional campaigns under this issue, to continue to provide the necessary support for the dissemination of information pertaining to dialogue among civilizations and the culture of peace, as well as the initiative on the Alliance of Civilizations, and to take due steps in fostering the culture of dialogue among civilizations and promoting cultural understanding, tolerance, respect for and freedom of religion or belief and effective enjoyment by all of all human rights and civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights, including the right to development, recognizes the efforts made by the High Representative of the Secretary-General for the Alliance of Civilizations, and takes note of the initiatives launched at the first Alliance of Civilizations Forum, held in Madrid on 15 and 16 January 2008;

IV

News services

54. Stresses that the central objective of the news services implemented by the Department of Public Information is the timely delivery of accurate, objective and balanced news and information emanating from the United Nations system in all four mass media, namely, print, radio, television and the Internet, to the media and other audiences worldwide, with the overall emphasis on multilingualism, and reiterates its request to the Department to ensure that all news-breaking stories and news alerts are accurate, impartial and free of bias;

55. Emphasizes the importance of the Department of Public Information continuing to draw the attention of world media to stories that do not obtain prominent coverage, through the initiative entitled “10 Stories the World Should Hear More About” and through video and audio coverage by United Nations Television and United Nations Radio;

Traditional means of communication

56. Welcomes the initiative of United Nations Radio, which remains one of the most effective and far-reaching traditional media available to the Department of Public Information and an important instrument in United Nations activities, to enhance its live radio broadcasting service by making more frequently updated reports in all six official languages and features available to broadcasters on a daily basis on all United Nations activities, and requests the Secretary-General to continue to make every effort to achieve parity in the six official languages in United Nations Radio productions;

57. Notes the efforts being made by the Department of Public Information to disseminate programmes directly to broadcasting stations all over the world in the six official languages, with the addition of Portuguese and Kiswahili, as well as in other languages where possible;

58. Requests the Department of Public Information to continue building partnerships with local, national and regional broadcasters to extend the United Nations message to all the corners of the world in an accurate and impartial way, and requests the Radio and Television Service of the Department to continue to take full advantage of the technological infrastructure made available in recent years;

United Nations website

59. Reaffirms that the United Nations website is an essential tool for the media, non-governmental organizations, educational institutions, Member States and the general public, and, in this regard, reiterates the continued need for efforts by the Department of Public Information to maintain and improve it;

60. Recognizes the efforts made by the Department of Public Information to implement the basic accessibility requirements for persons with disabilities to access the United Nations website, and calls upon the Department to continue to work towards compliance with accessibility requirements on all new and updated pages of the website, with the aim of ensuring its accessibility for persons with different kinds of disabilities;

61. Takes note of the fact that the multilingual development and enrichment of the United Nations website has improved, and, in this regard, requests the Department of Public Information, in coordination with content-providing offices, to further improve the actions taken to achieve full parity among the six official languages on the United Nations website, and especially reiterates its request to ensure the adequate distribution of financial and human resources within the Department of Public Information allocated to the United Nations website among all official languages, taking into consideration the specificity of each official language;

62. Welcomes the cooperative arrangements undertaken by the Department of Public Information with academic institutions to increase the number of web pages available in some official languages, and requests the Secretary-General to extend those arrangements to all the official languages of the United Nations;

63. Recalls paragraph 74 of its resolution 60/109 B, and in this regard reiterates that all content-providing offices in the Secretariat should continue their efforts to translate into all official languages all English-language materials and databases posted on the United Nations website and to make them available on the respective language websites in the most practical, efficient and cost-effective manner;

64. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to take full advantage of new developments in information technology in order to improve, in a cost-effective manner, the expeditious dissemination of information on the United Nations, in accordance with the priorities established by the General Assembly in its resolutions and taking into account the linguistic diversity of the Organization;

65. Recognizes that some official languages use non-Latin and bidirectional scripts and that technological infrastructures and supportive applications in the United Nations are based on Latin script, which leads to difficulties in processing non-Latin and bidirectional scripts, and urges the Information Technology Services Division of the Department of Management to further collaborate with the Department of Public Information and to continue its efforts to ensure that technological infrastructures and supportive applications in the United Nations fully support Latin, non-Latin and bidirectional scripts in order to enhance the equality of all official languages on the United Nations website;

66. Welcomes the continuing growth in the popularity of the e-mail news alerts service provided by the Department of Public Information on the United Nations News Centre portal in English and French, and encourages the Department to consult with the Information Technology Services Division of the Department of Management and to explore, as a matter of priority, ways of upgrading the technical capabilities of the service and providing it in all official languages;

V

Library services

67. Calls upon the Department of Public Information to continue to lead the Steering Committee for the Modernization and Integrated Management of United Nations Libraries and further commends the steps taken by the Dag Hammarskjöld Library and the other member libraries of the Steering Committee to align their activities, services and outputs more closely with the goals, objectives and operational priorities of the Organization;

68. Reiterates the need to maintain a multilingual collection of books, periodicals and other materials in hard copy, accessible to Member States, ensuring that the Library continues to be a broadly accessible resource for information about the United Nations and its activities;

69. Takes note of the initiative taken by the Dag Hammarskjöld Library, in its capacity as the focal point, to expand the scope of the regional training and knowledge-sharing workshops organized for the depository libraries in developing countries to include outreach in their activities;

70. Acknowledges the role of the Dag Hammarskjöld Library, in enhancing knowledge-sharing and networking activities to ensure access to the vast store of United Nations knowledge for delegates, permanent missions of Member States, the Secretariat, researchers and depository libraries worldwide, takes note of the proposal to rename the library the Dag Hammarskjöld Library and Knowledge-Sharing Centre, reflecting its new direction, and also takes note of the proposal to change the designation of the depository libraries to partner libraries;

71. Notes with appreciation the Personal Knowledge Management initiative to assist representatives of Member States and Secretariat staff in the use of information products and tools as a complement to the traditional training programmes;

72. Encourages the Secretariat to develop and implement cost-neutral measures to provide Member States with secure access to the information currently accessible only on the Intranet of the Secretariat (iSeek), taking note that Member States have access to iSeek only through the facilities of the Dag Hammarskjöld Library;

VI

Outreach services

73. Acknowledges that the outreach services provided by the Department of Public Information continue to work towards promoting awareness of the role and work of the United Nations;

74. Welcomes the educational outreach activities of the Department of Public Information, through the United Nations Works programme and the Global Teaching and Learning Project, to reach educators and young people worldwide via a range of multimedia platforms, and encourages the United Nations Works programme to continue to develop further its partnerships with global media networks and celebrity advocates and the Global Teaching and Learning Project to further expand its activities to teachers and students in primary, intermediate and secondary schools;

75. Notes the importance of the continued implementation by the Department of Public Information of the ongoing programme for broadcasters and journalists from developing countries and countries with economies in transition, as mandated by the General Assembly, and requests the Department to consider how best to maximize the benefits derived from the programme by extending, inter alia, its duration and the number of its participants;

76. Welcomes the movement towards educational outreach and the orientation of the UN Chronicle, both print and online editions, and, to this end, encourages the UN Chronicle to continue to develop co-publishing partnerships, collaborative educational activities and events, including the "Unlearning Intolerance" seminar series, with civil society organizations and institutions of higher learning;

77. Takes note of the intention of the Department of Public Information to have the UN Chronicle magazine evolve into a journal called "UN Affairs", and requests, for further consideration, a comprehensive and detailed report on the progress of the project in due course;

78. Considers it necessary for the Department of Public Information to clearly identify practical improvements intended by the change from the UN Chronicle to "UN Affairs", taking into account parity of languages, editorial policy, potential qualitative gains and other improvements and urges that the Department, while considering these aspects, place emphasis on cost-effective measures and the present budgetary constraints, and welcomes any other alternative in line with the mandate of the Department for the consideration of Member States;

79. Requests the Department of Public Information to continue the UN Chronicle until a decision is taken on "UN Affairs" or any other alternative in line with the mandate of the Department;

80. Reaffirms the important role that guided tours play as a means of reaching out to the general public, and takes note of the efforts undertaken by the Department of Public Information in organizing exhibitions on important United Nations-related issues within existing mandates at United Nations Headquarters and at other United Nations offices as a useful tool for reaching out to the general public;

81. Requests the Department of Public Information to strengthen its role as a focal point for two-way interaction with civil society relating to those priorities and concerns of the Organization identified by Member States;

82. Commends, in a spirit of cooperation, the United Nations Correspondents Association for its ongoing activities and for its Dag Hammarskjöld Memorial Scholarship Fund, which sponsors journalists from developing countries to come to the United Nations Headquarters and report on the activities during the General Assembly, and further encourages the international community to continue its financial support for the Fund;

83. Expresses its appreciation for the efforts and contribution of United Nations Messengers of Peace, Goodwill Ambassadors and other advocates to promote the work of the United Nations and to enhance international public awareness of its priorities and concerns, and calls upon the Department of Public Information to continue to involve them in its communications and media strategies and outreach activities;

VII

Final remarks

84. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Committee on Information at its thirty-first session and to the General Assembly at its sixty-fourth session on the activities of the Department of Public Information and on the implementation of all recommendations and requests contained in the present resolution;

85. Also requests the Secretary-General to make every effort to ensure that the level of services provided by the Department of Public Information is maintained throughout the period of the implementation of the capital master plan;

86. Strongly urges the Secretary-General to accede to the request by Member States to provide additional passes to press officers of Member States to gain access to areas that are deemed restricted, in order to effectively and comprehensively report on high-level meetings that include officials of delegations of Member States;

87. Requests the Committee on Information to report to the General Assembly at its sixty-fourth session;

88. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its sixty-fourth session the item entitled "Questions relating to information".

DPI activities

In response to General Assembly resolution 62/111 B [YUN 2007, p. 648], the Secretary-General submitted an August report [A/63/258] on questions relating to information, covering DPI's activities since his February reports to the Committee on Information.

DPI continued to address the Organization's key thematic priorities, including issues related to peace and security, development and human rights. It paid particular attention to promoting the sixtieth anniversary of the adoption of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the sixtieth anniversary of United Nations peacekeeping. The network of UN information centres, services and components played a key role in that effort and was increasingly integrated with UN country teams. The Department further expanded its media services, widening the daily delivery of news and information products via radio, television and print media. A marked increase in the use of the UN website over the previous six months was reported, and the Department worked in close cooperation with non-governmental organizations (NGOs) and civil society to expand its outreach and promotional activities, and utilized the Internet and videoconferencing to connect with an increasing number of young people.

Regarding its strategic communication services, DPI cooperated with the Department of Peacekeeping Operations (DPKO) and the Department of Field Support on activities to mark the sixtieth anniversary of UN peacekeeping. The global year-long observance was launched on 29 May, the International Day of United Nations Peacekeepers. The Departments created policy and best practices for UN radio stations in peacekeeping operations—of which there were five—and helped 12 peace operations create content management system websites. They also produced and disseminated around the world coordinated products, exhibitions and events on historical and contemporary issues in peacekeeping, highlighting the role of major troop-contributing countries. DPI and DPKO continued to raise awareness on progress in ending sexual exploitation and abuse by UN personnel by means of public information materials and press briefings. To mark the sixtieth anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, DPI co-sponsored, with the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, the New Human Rights Dialogue Series, a monthly series of discussions at UN Headquarters on human rights issues. Many UN national and regional information centres organized events in support of the year-long campaign.

DPI-supported projects included the display of multilingual versions of the exhibition "Lessons from Rwanda", which focused on the history of the Rwandan genocide and its impact on survivors, at two universities in Rwanda and several other national and international locations. DPI also prepared and launched the "Lessons from Rwanda" website in all six official languages. With DPI's assistance, the Secretary-General launched his system-wide campaign to end violence against women on 25 February. Information materials were developed in six languages, a logo and website were created, and several information centres mobilized public awareness through country-specific seminars and events.

As for climate change issues, DPI convened a communication task force of 17 UN entities working on climate change with a view to implementing a system-wide strategy, and maintained a website detailing the UN system's work. DPI's efforts to raise public awareness of the New Partnership for Africa's Development resulted in broader dissemination of information on its goals, challenges and achievements. In that regard, particularly notable was the role played by its quarterly magazine Africa Renewal. DPI also sought to raise awareness on Africa's special needs in relation to climate change. The focus of the Department's communication work for the Millennium Development Goals (MDGs) was the planning for the High-level Event of 25 September (see p. 926), which was coordinated by DPI through a UN Communications Group Task Force.

The Department increased its promotion of the work of the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council. Through its outreach services and programmes, DPI continued to expand its association with journalists, schools, the general public, advocacy groups, UN entities, NGOs and cultural organizations. The number of NGOs associated with the Department as at July 2008 was 1,664. Programme subjects for which communications activities took place included the International Day of Commemoration in memory of the victims of the Holocaust, World Environment Day and the Programme of Remembrance of the Victims of Slavery and the Transatlantic Slave Trade.

In sales and marketing, DPI introduced a new pricing policy for UN publications. The three-tier policy retained the current level of pricing in developed countries, but featured more affordable pricing in developing and least developed countries, where sales prices were reduced by 50 and 75 per cent, respectively. DPI also completed a major renovation of the bookshop in the Palais des Nations in Geneva, and the new store reopened on schedule in May. In an initiative to increase dissemination of the Organization's legal publications, the Department established a co-publishing venture with a major international legal publisher.

To maintain a culture of evaluation, DPI increased the number of evaluation projects it would complete each year, improved its data-collection tools and continued to provide staff training on survey research, polling data and media analysis. It also strengthened its partnership with an international polling organization to ensure that it regularly received global polling data on a pro bono basis. The Department used its annual programme impact review to evaluate specific programmes and, from that evaluation, derived lessons and action points for application by managers.

UN website

In response to General Assembly resolution 62/111 B [YUN 2007, p. 648], the Secretary-General included in his February report to the Committee on Information [A/AC.198/2008/3] a section on the developments and progress made by DPI towards parity among the official languages on the UN website, as well as its accessibility and content management.

The report acknowledged the Department's continued efforts in addressing the challenge of language parity and the progress in adding new pages to the website. However, it noted that the number of new pages added in English continued to exceed that in other languages, and progress towards parity remained a difficult challenge. DPI, through its Web Services Section, handled the bulk of the languages other than English and French. Agreements with universities for pro bono translations resulted in the addition of 2,552 new pages to the website in Chinese, Russian and Spanish, and DPI continued to enlist the support of an institution of higher learning for pro bono translations into Arabic. The Department also enhanced the multilingual nature of the UN website. Websites created by the network of UNICs provided information in 28 non-official languages.

Regarding accessibility, all new web projects were designed to meet accessibility requirements and comply with the World Wide Web Consortium standards, which were the only standards with global recognition and acceptance. As to content management, DPI faced challenges involved with establishing a governance scheme for management of the public website that allowed author offices the flexibility to meet the needs of their respective audiences and ensured a unified technical infrastructure. To that end, it worked with the Chief Information Technology Officer and the Information Technology Services Division (ITS) to link the implementation of a content management system with the gradual adoption of a more robust governance system.

In his August report [A/63/258] on questions relating to information, the Secretary-General described a marked increase in the use of the UN website during the first half of the year, with a growing number of visitors viewing it as a resource for news and information in various languages and forms. He also highlighted an upsurge in the use of video materials: an average of over 32,000 video clips were viewed every 24 hours, representing a 116 per cent increase in the number of video clips viewed per day. Between January and June, 23 multilingual websites were created or redesigned in response to an array of new developments or special events. There was a related growth of interest in the live and archived videos produced by UN webcast (www.un.org/webcast), the alert system for which gained 1,000 new subscribers who had access to coverage of several major UN conferences.

The report noted that DPI continued efforts to ensure accessibility of the UN website in the six official languages by persons with disabilities. In order to assist other departments and offices in producing accessible web content, the Department created a special website (www.un.org/webaccessibility) that contained a set of guidelines aimed at promoting compliance with accessibility requirements, monitoring progress and serving as a teaching aid for webmasters and related staff. In another effort to enhance website performance in all official languages, the Department launched a redesigned French version of the UN News Centre website in April, while work continued on the development of similar redesigns in other official languages. There was steady growth in the number of visitors to the site, as well as in the number of users of the UN News Centre Really Simple Syndication feeds and the number of subscribers to the associated e-mail news alerts service.

In his August report on questions relating to information [A/63/258], the Secretary-General considered DPI's activities in providing radio, television and photo services. To make use of advances in communications and Internet technologies, DPI continued to pursue a two-pronged approach aimed at delivering its radio programming to the broadest possible range of audiences. It expanded partnerships with international broadcasters in the six official languages, as well as in Portuguese and Kiswahili, while also relying on the Internet as a means of bringing audio content to its listeners in the six official languages and Portuguese.

In June, the Department launched the UNifeed service on the Web, enabling television broadcasters to download video for immediate use. The initiative opened up a new means to distribute UN television clips from Headquarters, agencies and peacekeeping missions with suggested story lines and shot lists. Feedback from major broadcasters and press agencies since deployment of UNifeed confirmed the growing interest in the service. To capitalize on trends in online distribution of video content, the Department formed a partnership with YouTube/Google, leading to the creation of a UN Television channel.

The Department installed high-definition electronic photo and video displays in several high-traffic areas of the Secretariat building. The electronic boards included UNifeed programmes, themed slideshows, wrap-ups of the latest news developments and public service announcements.

Library and knowledge services

DPI, through its Personal Knowledge Management programme and the research support services of the Dag Hammarskjöld Library, continued to address the information needs of Secretariat and mission staff in a way that aimed to be user-customized. The Personal Knowledge Management initiative helped individuals understand how to better create, manage and access information and improve their utilization of technological tools. The training programmes of the Library were revised in 2008 to address the changing needs of clients. To prepare for implementation of the capital master plan, DPI provided consultations with Secretariat offices needing assistance in organizing their UN document collections. Providing access to important historic UN documentation remained a priority, including the objective of completing the digitization of all major Security Council documents by the end of March 2009.

Further progress was made in implementing the One United Nations initiative through the promotion of internal communications designed for the Secretariat. The Secretariat intranet, iSeek, was launched as the default homepage at most major duty stations, including Addis Ababa, Bangkok, Geneva, Nairobi, New York, Santiago and Vienna.

The depository library programme continued to coordinate a series of regional workshops, focusing on information-sharing, outreach and new roles for libraries as UN partners. One such programme (Saint Petersburg, Russian Federation, June) brought together national and depository library directors from 11 countries in the Commonwealth of Independent States and staff of the UN Information Centre, Moscow and the UN Office, Minsk to encourage the promotion and sharing of information on and knowledge of the United Nations.

UN information centres

In response to General Assembly resolution 62/111 B [YUN 2007, p. 648], the Secretary-General included in his February report to the Committee on Information [A/AC.198/2008/3] a section on the network of UN information centres (UNICs). The report summarized its activities in the areas of communications campaigns, media outreach, partnership building with civil society, multilingualism, library services, regional interaction, consultations with Member States and capacity-building, particularly through staff development and training, expansion of Internet services and the provision of new equipment.

The UNICs network included 63 information centres, services and information components around the world. They served as DPI field offices, providing a public information presence for the Organization in countries around the world, enhancing the UN public image and disseminating messages on the United Nations to local populations, especially in developing countries. Guided by the decisions of the Committee on Information, DPI further strengthened the work of UNICs by expanding partnerships with UN system organizations, Governments, civil society and the private sector, making better use of new information and communications technologies, bolstering their presence in key locations by reallocating resources, and strengthening professional staffing. The overall objective was to provide a structure and support base that made possible more efficient service to a larger audience. UNICs supported UN country teams through the United Nations Communications Group (UNCG), which contributed to higher visibility for the work of the country teams and increased coherence in communications work at the country level.

Discussion on improvements in the information and communications technology infrastructure of UNICs led to the introduction of an e-mail hosting solution that produced coherent e-mail addresses for the UNIC network, thereby alleviating problems associated with the use of multiple and varied e-mail systems. In December 2007, the UNIC in Lagos, Nigeria, became the first to use the new system, which expanded in 2008 with the establishment of unic.org e-mail accounts for information centre staff worldwide.

In his August report to the General Assembly on questions relating to information [A/63/258], the Secretary-General said that nine librarians and seven webmasters from information centres attended workshops on project management in New York, conducted by the Dag Hammarskjöld Library and under the UN external training programme, respectively. By including staff from information centres that had been given a greater regional role, namely those at Brussels, Cairo, Mexico City and Pretoria, DPI sought to “train the trainers” and enhance their ability to provide guidance to other centres in their regions. To strengthen communication infrastructure and enhance the use of information and communications technology, DPI, in cooperation with ITSD, provided 152 computers and related equipment to 26 information centres in developing countries. Internet corners were set up at information centres in 20 countries to provide journalists, researchers, students and the public with Internet access and information on the United Nations.

UN Communications Group

The Secretary-General’s report on DPI activities [A/AC.198/2008/2] included information on UNCG, which, since its establishment in 2002 [YUN 2002, p. 589], had evolved into a communication platform for the entire UN system. The Group was widely considered to be an effective means for ensuring coordinated communications on key issues, and its membership and number of annual meetings continued to grow. The Group created several communications task forces on specific issues, including climate change, the MDGs, the Arab region, human and avian influenza and public opinion polling. Additionally, the establishment of over 80 country-level communications groups enabled national communicators to pool their resources and combine efforts to achieve common goals.

The Secretary-General, in his August report on questions relating to information [A/63/258], summarized the outcomes of the Group’s seventh annual meeting (Paris, 16–17 June). Discussions and points of agreement focused on UNCG collaboration in the implementation of a climate change communications work programme for 2008–2009; transmission to the UN country teams of a standard operating procedure on cooperative communication in times of crisis; establishment of a working group on communications aspects of “Delivering as one” UN pilots, with a view to increasing internal and inter-agency communications in that area; and continued support for the United Nations Human Settlements Programme as the lead organizing agency for the United Nations Pavilion at Expo 2010 in Shanghai, China.

PART TWO

Human rights

Promotion of human rights

Efforts to promote human rights were boosted in 2008 by several notable developments. The new machinery of the Human Rights Council, created in 2006, began working in earnest with the launch of the Universal Periodic Review mechanism (UPR). Under UPR, the Council examined the human rights record of 48 countries—the first step in reviewing the record of all Member States every four years. Several countries under review undertook firm commitments to better implement human rights, ratify human rights instruments and strengthen their cooperation with the Council's special procedures. Moreover, the Advisory Committee, established to provide expertise to the Council, held its first session and submitted 13 recommendations, while the Council's new complaint procedure, made up of the Working Group on Communications and the Working Group on Situations, addressed consistent patterns of gross and reliably attested violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms throughout the world. Human rights were also promoted through the work of the committees of experts (treaty bodies) monitoring compliance with the legally binding human rights instruments, as well as by the network of human rights defenders in individual countries operating within the framework of the 1998 Declaration on Human Rights Defenders. During the year, the Council held three regular sessions (seventh, eighth and ninth) and three special sessions (sixth, seventh and eighth).

On 10 December, the General Assembly held a plenary meeting to mark the sixtieth anniversary of the adoption of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. On the same day, it adopted the Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, which established a procedure of individual communications for cases of alleged violations of economic, social and cultural rights. Also in December, the Assembly stressed the role of the Ombudsman, the mediator and other human rights institutions in promoting and protecting human rights. The year also marked the sixtieth anniversary of the 1948 Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide.

The Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities and its Optional Protocol entered into force in May. In November, the Conference of States Parties to the Convention, at its first session, elected the 12 members of the Committee on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities—the body of independent experts to help monitor implementation of the Convention.

The Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights strengthened its country engagement and expanded its presence at the country and regional levels. It continued to support the work of the Council and its mechanisms, including the special procedures. In July, the Assembly approved the appointment by the Secretary-General of Navanethem Pillay (South Africa) to replace Louise Arbour (Canada) as United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights for a four-year term of office beginning on 1 September.

Human Rights Council

Council sessions

During the year, the Human Rights Council held its seventh (3–28 March and 1 April) [A/HRC/7/78], eighth (2–18 June) [A/HRC/8/52] and ninth (8–24 September) [A/HRC/9/28] regular sessions. Its second organizational meeting was held on 19 and 20 June.

The Council also held three special sessions: its sixth (23–24 January) [A/HRC/S-6/2] on human rights violations emanating from Israeli military attacks and incursions in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, particularly in the Gaza Strip (see p. 893); its seventh (22 May) [A/HRC/S-7/2] on the negative impact of the worsening world food crisis on the realization of the right to food for all (see p. 835); and its eighth (28 November and 1 December) [A/HRC/S-8/2] on the human rights situation in the eastern Democratic Republic of the Congo (DRC) (see p. 863). All sessions were held in Geneva. The Council held a commemorative session on 12 December to mark the sixtieth anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights (see p. 726).

The Council adopted 71 resolutions, 35 decisions and six president's statements. It recommended one draft resolution [A/63/53 (res. 8/2)] on the Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights for adoption by the General Assembly. The resolutions, decisions and president's statements adopted at those sessions were contained in the Council's report to the Assembly [A/63/53 & Add.1].

The General Assembly addressed revised estimates resulting from resolutions and decisions adopted by the Council in section I of resolution 62/245 of 3 April (see p. 1550) and in section V of resolution 63/263 of 24 December (see p. 1547).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December [meeting 70], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee [A/63/435/Add.1], adopted resolution 63/160 by recorded vote (121-7-58) [agenda item 58].

Report of the Human Rights Council

The General Assembly,

Having considered the recommendations contained in the report of the Human Rights Council,

Takes note of the report of the Human Rights Council, and acknowledges the recommendations contained therein.

In favour: Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Armenia, Azerbaijan, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belarus, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Botswana, Brunei Darussalam, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Cambodia, Cameroon, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Djibouti, Dominica, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, Eritrea, Ethiopia, Gabon, Gambia, Ghana, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Jamaica, Jordan, Kazakhstan, Kenya, Kuwait, Kyrgyzstan, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Myanmar, Namibia, Nepal, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Qatar, Russian Federation, Rwanda, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, South Africa, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Syrian Arab Republic, Tajikistan, Thailand, Timor-Leste, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Turkmenistan, Uganda, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uzbekistan, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Australia, Canada, Israel, Marshall Islands, Micronesia, Palau, United States.

Abstaining: Albania, Andorra, Argentina, Austria, Belgium, Bolivia, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Brazil, Bulgaria, Costa Rica, Croatia, Cyprus, Czech Republic, Denmark, El Salvador, Estonia, Fiji, Finland, France, Georgia, Germany, Greece, Hungary, Iceland, Ireland, Italy, Japan, Latvia, Liechtenstein, Lithuania, Luxembourg, Malta, Mexico, Moldova, Monaco, Montenegro, Nauru, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Poland, Portugal, Republic of Korea, Romania, Samoa, San Marino, Serbia, Slovakia, Slovenia, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland, The former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Tonga, Ukraine, United Kingdom, Uruguay, Vanuatu.

Election of Council members

On 21 May, by decision 62/415, the General Assembly, in accordance with resolution 60/251 [YUN 2006, p. 757], elected Argentina, Bahrain, Brazil, Burkina Faso, Chile, France, Gabon, Ghana, Japan, Pakistan, the Republic of Korea, Slovakia, Ukraine, the United Kingdom and Zambia as members of the Human Rights Council for a three-year term of office beginning on 19 June. They would fill the vacancies occurring on the expiration of the terms of office of Brazil, France, Gabon, Ghana, Guatemala, Japan, Mali, Pakistan, Peru, the Republic of Korea, Romania, Sri Lanka, Ukraine, the United Kingdom and Zambia.

On 24 December, the Assembly decided that the item on the election of 18 members of the Human Rights Council would remain for consideration during its resumed sixty-third (2009) session (decision 63/552).

Conference facilities and financial support

Human Rights Council action (June). On 18 June [A/63/53 (res. 8/1)], the Human Rights Council reaffirmed the need to ensure the provision of financial resources to the Council and its working groups for it to discharge its mandate fully, as stipulated in General Assembly resolution 60/251 [YUN 2006, p. 757] and implemented by Council resolution 5/1 [YUN 2007, p. 662].

The Council, concerned at the delays in the submission of documents, in particular their translation into the six official UN languages, requested the Office of the UN High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR) and the Conference Services Division (later the Division of Conference Management) of the United Nations Office at Geneva to propose measures for addressing the situation at the Council's ninth (September) session. It also requested the Department of Public Information (DPI) in Geneva to establish a permanent capacity for webcasting all public proceedings of the Council and its working groups.

OHCHR report. In September [A/HRC/9/18], in response to the Council's request, OHCHR reported that, to meet the increased documentation requirements of the Council and its subsidiary machinery, especially urgent and unforeseen requests for meetings, the Division of Conference Management would require an estimated $7,500,000 annually in additional staff resources. The establishment of editor posts in OHCHR would also provide for the editing of documents. DPI would need an additional $2,500,000 for infrastructure and $1,700,000 in related staffing and other recurring costs for information work.

Human Rights Council action (September). On 24 September [A/63/53/Add.1 (dec. 9/103)], the Human Rights Council took note of the OHCHR report (see above) and requested the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly during the main segment of its sixty-third (2008) session a report detailing the resources required to ensure the provision of the services indicated in that report. It recommended that the Assembly establish an Office of the President of the Human Rights Council, with adequate staffing resources and equipment.

The Secretary-General, in response to that request, reported on those requirements [A/63/541/Add.1] to the Assembly, which took action on them in section V of resolution 63/263 of 24 December (see p. 1547).

Institutional mechanisms

Universal Periodic Review

The Universal Periodic Review mechanism (UPR) was established by the Human Rights Council in 2007 [YUN 2007, p. 663], as an instrument for assessing every four years the human rights records of all Member States. Each review, to be conducted by the Working Group on the Universal Periodic Review, would be facilitated by groups of three States, or “troikas”, acting as rapporteurs.

Modalities and practices

Human Rights Council action. In a 9 April president’s statement [A/63/53 (PRST/8/1)], the Council President outlined the modalities and practices of the review process. States wishing to raise issues with the State under review might do so through the troika, which would relay them to the Secretariat for submission to that State before consideration by the Working Group on UPR, made up of the 47 Council members. The State under review was sovereign in addressing the questions and/or issues it chose to answer of those transmitted to it by the troika members or raised during the Working Group sessions.

During an interactive dialogue in the Working Group, the State under review would present its national report, reply to written questions and those raised during the dialogue, and make concluding comments. The Working Group’s report of its proceedings, to be drafted by the troika, with the involvement of the State under review, would summarize the dialogue and reflect the recommendations and conclusions made by delegations. The State under review would examine the recommendations and identify those it supported. Other recommendations, together with the comments of the State under review, would be noted. Both would be included in the Working Group’s report, to be adopted by the Council in plenary through a standardized decision. The State under review was expected to follow up on the recommendations it supported, as well as on voluntary commitments and pledges, and inform the Council about its views concerning the recommendations, conclusions and voluntary commitments.

The review process would end with the Council’s adoption of the outcome of the review, consisting of the Working Group’s report; the views of the State under review on the recommendations and/or conclusions; its voluntary commitments; and its replies to questions or issues not sufficiently addressed during the interactive dialogue. The Council’s report would also include the views of all parties on the review’s outcome.

In a follow-up president’s statement [A/63/53/Add.1 (PRST/9/2)] of 24 September, the Council President said that, to ensure the smooth adoption of future review reports, the Council’s report on its sessions would comprise a summary of the views expressed by the State under review in plenary before the adoption of the outcome, its replies to questions and issues not sufficiently addressed during the interactive dialogue, its views on conclusions and recommendations, its voluntary commitments and concluding remarks, the summary of the views expressed by Council Member and observer States, and a summary of comments made by other stakeholders.

Working Group activities and UPR results

Working Group sessions. The Working Group on UPR held its first (7–18 April), second (5–19 May) and third (1–15 December) sessions in Geneva. It reviewed 48 countries in the order of consideration determined by the Council in 2007 [YUN 2007, p. 663]. As provided for in Council resolution 5/1 [ibid.], the review was based on a national report prepared by the State under review; a compilation by OHCHR of information relating to the human rights situation in the concerned State, as reported by treaty bodies and special procedures; and a summary by OHCHR of credible information from other stakeholders.

The Working Group submitted reports on the States reviewed during its first session: Bahrain [A/HRC/8/19 & Corr.1], Ecuador [A/HRC/8/20 & Corr.1], Tunisia [A/HRC/8/21 & Corr.1], Morocco [A/HRC/8/22 & Corr.1], Indonesia [A/HRC/8/23 & Add.1 & Corr.1], Finland [A/HRC/8/24 & Add.1], the United Kingdom [A/HRC/8/25 & Add.1], India [A/HRC/8/26 & Add.1], Brazil [A/HRC/8/27], the Philippines [A/HRC/8/28 & Corr.1 & Add.1,2], Algeria [A/HRC/8/29], Poland [A/HRC/8/30 & Add.1], the Netherlands [A/HRC/8/31 & Add.1], South Africa [A/HRC/8/32], the Czech Republic [A/HRC/8/33 & Add.1] and Argentina [A/HRC/8/34]. The reports summarized the proceedings, presentation, interactive dialogue and responses by the State under review, as well as its conclusions and/or recommendations, and voluntary commitments. Each review consisted of the views expressed by the State under review on the recommendations and conclusions, as well as on its voluntary commitments; views expressed by member and observer States of the Council on the review outcome; general comments made by other stakeholders, including human rights non-governmental organizations (NGOs); and views expressed by the State under review on the outcome and concluding remarks.

Views on conclusions and/or recommendations, voluntary commitments and replies were submitted by Bahrain [A/HRC/8/19/Add.1 & Corr.1], Indonesia [A/HRC/8/23/Add.1 & Corr.1], the United Kingdom [A/HRC/8/25/Add.1] and Brazil [A/HRC/8/27/Add.1 & Corr.1]. Responses to the recommendations received during the interactive dialogue were submitted by the Philippines [A/HRC/8/28/Add.1,2 & Add.2/Corr.1] and the Netherlands [A/HRC/8/31/Add.1,2 & Add.2/Corr.1].

Responses to the recommendations and conclusions included in the Working Group's report were submitted by the Czech Republic [A/HRC/8/33/Add.1,2 & Add.2/Corr.1], Finland [A/HRC/8/24/Add.1,2 & Add.2/Corr.1], India [A/HRC/8/26/Add.1,2 & Add.2/Corr.1] and Poland [A/HRC/8/30/Add.1,2 & Add.2/Corr.1].

At its second session, the Working Group reviewed the reports of Gabon [A/HRC/8/35], Ghana [A/HRC/8/36], Peru [A/HRC/8/37], Guatemala [A/HRC/8/38], Benin [A/HRC/8/39], the Republic of Korea [A/HRC/8/40], Switzerland [A/HRC/8/41], Pakistan [A/HRC/8/42], Zambia [A/HRC/8/43], Japan [A/HRC/8/44], Ukraine [A/HRC/8/45 & Corr.1], Sri Lanka [A/HRC/8/46], France [A/HRC/8/47], Tonga [A/HRC/8/48], Romania [A/HRC/8/49] and Mali [A/HRC/8/50].

Views on conclusions and/or recommendations, voluntary commitments and replies were presented by Peru [A/HRC/8/36/Add.1 & Corr.1], Ghana [A/HRC/8/37/Add.1 & Corr.1], Guatemala [A/HRC/8/38/Add.1 & Corr.1] and Japan [A/HRC/8/44/Add.1,2 & Corr.1]. Responses to the recommendations made during the review were submitted by the Republic of Korea [A/HRC/8/40/Add.1], Switzerland [A/HRC/8/41/Add.1], Zambia [A/HRC/8/43/Add.1,2 & Add.2/Corr.1], Sri Lanka [A/HRC/8/46/Add.1], France [A/HRC/8/47/Add.1] and Mali [A/HRC/8/50/Add.1]. Pakistan submitted a statement [A/HRC/8/42/Add.1] on the outcome report and Romania provided additional information [A/HRC/8/49/Add.1].

The States reviewed during the Working Group's third session were: Botswana [A/HRC/10/69], the Bahamas [A/HRC/10/70 & Corr.1], Burundi [A/HRC/10/71], Luxembourg [A/HRC/10/72], Barbados [A/HRC/10/73], Montenegro [A/HRC/10/74], the United Arab Emirates [A/HRC/10/75], Israel [A/HRC/10/76], Liechtenstein [A/HRC/10/77], Serbia [A/HRC/10/78], Turkmenistan [A/HRC/10/79], Burkina Faso [A/HRC/10/80 & Corr.1], Cape Verde [A/HRC/10/81], Colombia [A/HRC/10/82], Uzbekistan [A/HRC/10/83] and Tuvalu [A/HRC/10/84].

Views on conclusions and/or recommendations, voluntary commitments and replies were presented by Botswana [A/HRC/10/69/Add.1], the Bahamas [A/HRC/10/70/Add.1], Luxembourg [A/HRC/10/72/Add.1], Barbados [A/HRC/10/73/Add.1], Montenegro [A/HRC/10/74/Add.1], Liechtenstein [A/HRC/10/77/Add.1], Serbia [A/HRC/10/78/Add.1], Turkmenistan [A/HRC/10/79/Add.1], Colombia [A/HRC/10/82/Add.1] and Uzbekistan [A/HRC/10/83/Add.1].

Human Rights Council action. The Human Rights Council [A/63/53], through standardized decisions, adopted the outcomes of UPR.

On 9 June, the Council adopted the outcomes on Bahrain [dec. 8/101], Ecuador [dec. 8/102], Tunisia [dec. 8/103], Morocco [dec. 8/104] and Finland [dec. 8/105]. On 10 June, it adopted the outcomes on Indonesia [dec. 8/106], the United Kingdom [dec. 8/107], India [dec. 8/108], Brazil [dec. 8/109], the Philippines [dec. 8/110], Algeria [dec. 8/111] and Poland [dec. 8/112]. On 11 June, it adopted the outcomes on the Netherlands [dec. 8/113], South Africa [dec. 8/114], the Czech Republic [dec. 8/115], Argentina [dec. 8/116], Gabon [dec. 8/117], Ghana [dec. 8/118] and Guatemala [dec. 8/119]. On 12 June, it adopted the outcomes on Peru [dec. 8/120], Benin [dec. 8/121], Switzerland [dec. 8/122], the Republic of Korea [dec. 8/123], Pakistan [dec. 8/124], Zambia [dec. 8/125], Japan [dec. 8/126] and Ukraine [dec. 8/127]. On 13 June, it adopted the outcomes on Sri Lanka [dec. 8/128], France [dec. 8/129], Tonga [dec. 8/130], Romania [dec. 8/131] and Mali [dec. 8/132].

Reports of High Commissioner. In her annual report [A/63/36], the High Commissioner noted that the launch of UPR was a major achievement of the Council in ensuring the universality of all human rights and their equal and impartial application to all States. The Review was aimed at overcoming criticisms of the former Commission on Human Rights—that held its final session in 2006 [YUN 2006, p. 755]—in terms of politicization and narrow focus, and at enhancing universality, impartiality, objectivity and non-selectivity. The experience in reviewing the first group of countries was largely successful. OHCHR support of UPR was appreciated by Member States and other stakeholders, and the involvement of civil society and other stakeholders was welcome. Although a final review was not due until the end of the four-year cycle, OHCHR anticipated some fine-tuning, in particular some form of independent expertise for the process so that it could evolve into an implementation-oriented mechanism, with targeted and prioritized recommendations addressed to the States under review.

In a later report [A/HRC/10/31], the High Commissioner stated that UPR had reinforced the cooperation between States, the Council and UN human rights mechanisms. The review of the first 48 States showed that States had assumed their responsibility seriously, engaging in the preparation of national reports through broad consultation, and participating in the Review at all levels. Some countries reviewed had made firm commitments to strengthen their cooperation with the special procedures, ratify human rights instruments and take initiatives to better implement human rights. The Review permitted the assessment of the human rights situation in all States, including those that had not come under the scrutiny of the former Commission, and revealed that all States faced challenges in implementing their human rights obligations and commitments. Good practices were emerging in various States. The mechanism might also serve as a tool for strengthening human rights protection on the ground.

Human Rights Council Advisory Committee

The Human Rights Council Advisory Committee, established in 2007 [YUN 2007, p. 664] as a think-tank for the Council and composed of 18 experts serving in their personal capacity, held its first session in Geneva (4–15 August) [A/HRC/10/2]. The Committee, which replaced the Subcommission on the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights [YUN 2006, p. 762], adopted 13 recommendations for submission to the Council. It recommended that the Council authorize that all reports and working papers completed by OHCHR, pursuant to the resolutions and decisions of the Subcommission at its fifty-eighth session [ibid.], should be sent to the Council [rec. 1/10]. The Council should also decide on follow-up to all pending studies commissioned by the Subcommission, including those on discrimination in the criminal justice system, corruption and its impact on the full enjoyment of human rights, discrimination based on work and descent, and the role of States in the guarantee of human rights with reference to the activities of transnational corporations and other business enterprises [rec. 1/13].

The Committee recommended that the Council and the Secretary-General make available their good offices to extend the right to non-refoulement to hunger refugees fleeing famine-hit countries [rec. 1/6]. Noting the large numbers of underfed refugees and displaced persons in many camps run by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees due to the shortfall in voluntary contributions, constituting a violation of the right to food, the Committee suggested that the Council launch an appeal to Member States to increase their voluntary contributions substantially so as to enable the Office to discharge its mandate [rec. 1/7]. The Committee also recommended that the Council approve the preparation by the drafting group on the right to food of studies on hunger refugees and the rights of peasants [rec. 1/8]. The Committee decided to consider the matter of the right of all peoples, including indigenous peoples, to self-determination, only if requested by the Council [rec. 1/12]. It recommended entrusting a drafting group with the preparation of a draft declaration on human rights education and training [rec. 1/1]. The Committee asked one of its members to formulate draft principles and guidelines for eliminating discrimination against persons affected by leprosy and their families [rec. 1/5], and two other members to participate in the Council's panel discussion on missing persons and to report to the Committee at its next session [rec. 1/3]. Five Committee members were asked to prepare for its next session draft guidelines for operationalizing gender mainstreaming, and to identify proposals for action in specific areas, special procedures or further measures to enhance gender equality throughout the UN system [rec. 1/4]. Two Committee members were designated to follow the work of the Social Forum [YUN 1999, p. 657] and to brief the Committee at its next session on issues of relevance to its work [rec. 1/11]. The Council should request OHCHR to provide official summary records of all Committee plenary meetings, and webcasting should be made available to enhance public access to its proceedings [rec. 1/9].

Complaint Procedure

The new Complaint Procedure of the Human Rights Council, established in 2007 by Council resolution 5/1 [YUN 2007, p. 664] on the basis of Economic and Social Council resolution 1503(XLVIII) (1503 procedure) [YUN 1970, p. 530] and revised in resolution 2000/3 [YUN 2000, p. 595], comprised the Working Group on Communications to decide on the admissibility of communications of alleged violations, and assess their merits, and the Working Group on Situations, which, on the recommendation of the Working Group on Communications, would report to the Council on consistent patterns of gross violations and recommend a course of action. During the year, 13,404 communications were examined under the Complaint Procedure.

Working Group on Communications. The five-member Working Group on Communications held its first session (Geneva, 19–23 November 2007) [A/HRC/7/WG.5/R.2 & Add.1–9], in accordance with Human Rights Council resolution 5/1 [YUN 2007, p. 664] and decision 6/101 [ibid., p. 665]. It considered 80 files concerning 37 countries. A total of 90 responses relating to those files were received from Governments. The Working Group also examined 55 files relating to pending communications concerning 29 countries, for which 127 responses had been received from Governments. It referred to the Working Group on Situations communications concerning Botswana, Maldives, Nepal, Peru, Spain and Syria, and decided to keep under review until its next session communications relating to Colombia and Greece. It also decided to keep communications processed between June 2006 and May 2007, in compliance with Council decision 1/102 [YUN 2007, p. 663], from Cameroon, Colombia, the DRC, Egypt, Eritrea, Guinea, India, Iran, Nigeria, Peru, the Philippines, and Sri Lanka under review until its next session and to request further information. The Working Group dismissed consideration of communications that were left pending by the former working group under the 1503 procedure [YUN 1970, p. 530] relating to Ecuador, Guatemala, Indonesia, Iran, Japan, Kyrgyzstan, Mexico, Nepal, Togo and the United States. It also dismissed consideration of communications concerning Cameroon, Ethiopia, Greece, India, Indonesia, Malaysia, the Philippines and Viet Nam.

In light of the establishment of the new Complaint Procedure and the transitional nature of its mandate, the Working Group agreed that its Chairperson should provide members at the Group's second session with a list of all communications rejected after an initial screening. It noted that communications and responses by Governments submitted to the working group of the 1503 procedure were not translated in other languages, posing difficulties for the Working Group and creating inequality among the languages. It requested the High Commissioner to take measures to remedy the situation. It also decided to continue during the period of transition, and until the end of its second session, the same working methods followed in recent years; to keep available for consideration and decision of the Working Group communications in the roster submitted by the Secretariat for the current session and on which no decision had been taken, as well as communications kept under review at the current session and those received and considered admissible on 14 December 2007; and to conclude consideration of all those communications at its April 2008 session (see below).

At its second session (Geneva, 14–18 April) [A/HRC/WG.5/2/R.2], the Working Group had before it 23 new files containing communications and Government replies thereto relating to 15 countries. A total of 17 replies relating to 16 files were received from Governments. The Working Group also had 17 files relating to pending communications concerning 13 countries, and 89 files relating to 38 countries, which the Working Group had decided to keep available for possible further consideration. A total of 193 replies were received from concerned Governments in relation to those communications. The Working Group adopted 44 decisions. It referred to the Working Group on Situations communications in relation to human rights situations in the DRC, Greece, Guinea, Nigeria and Peru, and decided to keep under review until its next session communications relating to Argentina, Cambodia, Cameroon, Colombia, the Gambia, India, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, the Philippines, Portugal, the Sudan and the United States. The Working Group discontinued consideration of communications relating to Bangladesh, Bhutan, Chile, Colombia, Iran, Mexico, Pakistan and Sri Lanka.

At its third session (Geneva, 20–24 October) [A/HRC/WG.5/3/R.2], the Working Group had before it 44 files of communications relating to 25 countries, comprising 28 new files relating to 20 countries, and 16 files relating to 11 countries that the Working Group had decided previously to keep under review. A total of 24 replies were received from concerned Governments in relation to those communications. The Working Group decided to refer to the Working Group on Situations (see below) communications concerning Cambodia, Cameroon, Colombia and the Gambia and to keep under review until its next session communications concerning Bulgaria, Colombia, India, Iraq, Japan, Libya, the Philippines, the Republic of Korea, Romania, the Sudan, Tajikistan, Thailand, Tunisia and the United States. It discontinued consideration of communications from Argentina, Bangladesh, India, Malaysia, the Philippines, Portugal, Sri Lanka, the Sudan, the United States and Viet Nam.

The Working Group expressed its appreciation to Governments that had replied to communications examined under the Complaint Procedure, especially those that had provided detailed and comprehensive replies. It encouraged Governments to provide not only procedural arguments in their replies, but to address the allegations raised on their merits. The Secretary-General would inform the Governments of Cambodia, Cameroon, Colombia and the Gambia, as well as the authors of the respective communications, of the relevant decisions of the Working Group. The Working Group noted with concern the number of communications received relating to alleged forced displacement and evictions, often affecting large numbers of persons, as well as communications with respect to alleged human rights violations committed by transnational corporations.

Members expressed concern over the unavailability on many occasions of translations of communications and Government replies into UN working languages, and requested that effective measures be taken to ensure their timely translation.

Working Group on Situations. The Working Group on Situations, established by the Human Rights Council in 2007 [YUN 2007, p. 664] and composed of five members serving in their personal capacity, held its first (28–31 January) [A/HRC/WG.1/1/R.1] and second (23–24 June and 2 July) [A/HRC/WG.1/2/R.3] sessions in Geneva.

At its first session, the Working Group had before it dossiers relating to human rights situations in Botswana, Iran, Maldives, Nepal, Nigeria, Peru, Spain, Syria and Turkmenistan. The Working Group decided, by a vote of 4 to 1, to refer the human rights situation in Turkmenistan to the Human Rights Council at its seventh session, based on the unsatisfactory nature and reliability of the replies provided by that Government. It also decided to dismiss the cases of Nepal, Nigeria, Peru and Spain, and to keep under review until its next session the cases of Botswana, Iran, Maldives, Nigeria, Peru and Syria.

At its second session, the Working Group had before it the dossiers relating to the human rights situation in Botswana, the DRC, Greece, Guinea, Iran, Maldives, Nigeria, Peru and Syria. Regretting that no reply had been received from the Government of Maldives, despite repeated communications by both Working Groups, it decided to refer the matter to the Council with a recommendation that the Council keep the matter under review and request the Government to provide further information, and requested the Secretary-General to communicate that decision to the Government. The Working Group also decided to dismiss the cases of Greece, Iran and Peru, and to keep under review until its next session the cases of Botswana, the DRC, Guinea, Nigeria and Syria.

Human Rights Council action. On 25 March, by a recorded vote of 46 to 1, the Human Rights Council decided to keep the human rights situation in Turkmenistan under review and to request the Government to provide further information. It decided to further consider the situation at its ninth (September 2008) session in light of the new information received, and requested the Secretary-General to communicate that decision to the Government. On 23 September, the Council decided to keep the situation under review and requested Turkmenistan to provide further information at the Council's tenth (2009) session.

Also on 23 September, the Council decided to discontinue consideration of the human rights situation in Maldives following the replies received from the Government and Government efforts to respond to the complaints.

Special procedures

Report of Secretary-General. In response to Human Rights Council decision 2/102 [YUN 2006, p. 760], the Secretary-General submitted, in March [A/HRC/7/49], a report listing references to the conclusions and recommendations of special procedures in their annual reports submitted to the Council's sixth and seventh sessions. The reports were available on the OHCHR website.

In her annual report [A/63/36], the High Commissioner noted that, as a result of the exercise (review, rationalization and improvement) launched in June 2006 [YUN 2006, p. 761], all thematic mandates had been extended, one country mandate terminated and two new thematic mandates established—those of the Special Rapporteur on contemporary forms of slavery [YUN 2007, p. 784] and the Special Rapporteur on the right to access to safe drinking water and sanitation (see p. 844). The exercise reaffirmed the standing of the special procedures before the Human Rights Council, and the new selection procedure was designed to uphold the highest standards of competence and integrity among mandate holders.

Human Rights Council action. In an 18 June president's statement [A/63/53 (PRST/8/2)] on the terms of office of special procedures mandate holders, the Human Rights Council President said that, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 60/251 [YUN 2006, p. 757] and Council resolution 5/1 [YUN 2007, p. 662], a special procedures mandate holder's tenure would not exceed six years in a particular position (two terms of three years for thematic procedures). The Council guaranteed the integrity and independence of the system of special procedures, and would follow up on the implementation of the Code of Conduct for special procedures mandate holders, as contained in Council resolution 5/2 [ibid., p. 666]. In that regard, the President would convey to the Council any information brought to his or her attention, including by States and/or by the coordination committee of special procedures, concerning cases of persistent non-compliance by a mandate holder with the Code of Conduct, especially prior to the renewal of mandate holders' terms of office. In the absence of such information, the Council would extend the terms of office for a second three-year term.

Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights

Appointment of High Commissioner. On 28 July, the General Assembly approved the appointment by the Secretary-General [A/62/913] of Navanethem Pillay (South Africa) as United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights for a four-year term of office beginning on 1 September and expiring on 31 August 2012 (decision 62/420).

Reports of High Commissioner. In her annual report to the Human Rights Council [A/HRC/7/38 & Add.1,2], the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, Louise Arbour (Canada), outlined the efforts of her Office to implement its mandate. She detailed the support given to the Council, reviewed efforts to strengthen country engagement and proposed activities to mark the sixtieth anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights (see p. 726). The report also focused on the commitment to the fight against racism, in particular through the Durban Review process, and highlighted the support for human rights instruments and the role of UPR in promoting their universal application. Obstacles to the full realization of human rights included impunity, poverty, discrimination, armed conflict, democratic deficits and weak institutions. The report described OHCHR activities to address those problems, including technical cooperation, advisory services and support.

The annual report of the High Commissioner to the Economic and Social Council [E/2008/76] considered the principles of equality between men and women and non-discrimination against women in promoting and implementing economic, social and cultural rights under international human rights law. The report also focused on efforts to clarify the scope of States parties' obligations to eliminate discrimination and ensure equality between women and men in relation to those rights. It also illustrated the relevance of women's economic, social and cultural rights in the context of post-conflict reconstruction and democratization policies.

According to the High Commissioner, women suffered disproportionately from inequality and discrimination in the protection and enjoyment of their economic, social and cultural rights, and the gap between de jure and de facto discrimination against them was pervasive and often concealed. The private sector continued to impose norms, rules and practices that prevented the enjoyment by women of their rights, in developed and developing societies alike. Direct and indirect discrimination was widespread, despite the adoption of international human rights norms prohibiting discrimination against women. In post-conflict transition, ensuring meaningful participation by women and women's organizations and the inclusion of specific concerns in relation to women's economic, social and cultural rights were paramount. In the design of legislation, programmes and policies at all levels, a human rights approach increased the likelihood that women's rights would be best served by any measure adopted. Post-conflict societies had to make an effort to incorporate measures founded on equality between women and men and non-discrimination against women in the realm of economic, social and cultural rights in order to redress conflict-related violations, build sustainable peace and rectify prior inequalities.

On 25 July, the Economic and Social Council took note of the High Commissioner's report (decision 2008/256).

In her annual report to the General Assembly [A/63/36], covering activities since the previous report [YUN 2007, p. 667], the High Commissioner said that OHCHR continued to support Member States in meeting their human rights obligations, while empowering rights-holders, in particular through country engagement and work with national partners, civil society and UN country teams. Priorities included supporting the Human Rights Council, treaty bodies and special procedures, as well as national protection systems. OHCHR capacity to support country engagement had increased significantly, particularly its rapid response capacity, allowing the Office to initiate and support emergency and technical missions. Support for national human rights institutions was also reinforced. As at August, OHCHR was operating and supporting 53 field presences, including nine regional presences, seven country offices, human rights components in 17 UN peace missions and human rights advisers in 16 UN country teams. The Regional Office for West Africa was established in January in Senegal and, in May, an agreement was signed with Kyrgyzstan for the opening of a Regional Office for Central Asia.

OHCHR capacity to react promptly to critical human rights situations continued to develop through its Peace Missions Support and Rapid Response Unit. The Office deployed a fact-finding mission to Kenya in February to look into allegations of grave human rights violations following the December 2007 elections, and a rapid-response mission in March to Armenia to advise the UN resident coordinator in the wake of violent clashes following presidential elections. In June, it supported the OHCHR country office in Bolivia in monitoring the human rights situation in the context of regional referendums.

OHCHR support of national human rights institutions had a significant impact. It advised some 100 such institutions worldwide on a continuing basis, in collaboration with its field offices, as well as peace missions and the United Nations Development Programme. It also provided technical advice on the establishment and responsibilities of such institutions to Azerbaijan, Bangladesh, Burundi, Cambodia, Chile, Côte d'Ivoire, the DRC, Ethiopia, France, Indonesia, Italy, Japan, Lesotho, Madagascar, Mauritania, Mauritius, Palau, Sierra Leone, the Sudan, Swaziland, Tajikistan, Timor-Leste and Uganda.

The Office supported the activities of human rights special procedures through over 50 country visits, and provided more than 1,000 communications to Governments concerning alleged violations and more than 100 reports to the Human Rights Council or the General Assembly. In the area of partnerships, OHCHR, the Department of Peacekeeping Operations and the Department of Political Affairs issued in July a joint policy directive for public reporting by human rights components of peace operations to improve that key aspect of human rights work. The report also highlighted OHCHR efforts in addressing issues in strategic thematic areas, such as equality and non-discrimination; development, poverty and the Millennium Development Goals [YUN 2000, p. 51]; economic, social and cultural rights; indigenous peoples; minorities; migration and trafficking; the rule of law and democracy; the Global Compact and the human rights responsibilities of businesses; human rights education and training; climate change and human rights and women's rights and gender work.

The General Assembly took note of the High Commissioner's report on 18 December (decision 63/534).

Composition of staff

Report of High Commissioner. Pursuant to Human Rights Council decision 2/102 [YUN 2006, p. 760], the High Commissioner submitted a February report [A/HRC/7/57] updating information on the composition of OHCHR staff, including data on staff members in posts subject to geographical distribution, as well as on staff members in temporary posts funded from extrabudgetary resources or in technical cooperation project posts. The report described measures taken by the High Commissioner to address the geographical imbalances identified by the Commission on Human Rights in resolution 2005/72 [YUN 2005, p. 716], and efforts to achieve equitable geographical representation. It concluded that the success of such efforts was apparent in the improved geographical diversity of OHCHR staff, and that the additional measures developed in consultation with the Office of Human Resources Management would further strengthen those efforts.

Human Rights Council action. On 27 March [A/63/53 (res. 7/2)], the Human Rights Council, by a recorded vote of 34 to 10, with 3 abstentions, requested the High Commissioner to undertake all measures needed to redress the imbalance in geographical distribution of OHCHR staff.

General Assembly action. As requested by the General Assembly in resolution 61/159 [YUN 2006, p. 764], the Secretary-General transmitted, by a September note [A/63/290], the High Commissioner's report to the Assembly, which took note of it on 18 December (decision 63/534).

Report of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 62/236 [YUN 2007, p. 1441], the Secretary-General submitted a July report on measures to improve the imbalance in the geographical distribution of OHCHR staff [A/63/204].

The Secretary-General reported a substantial improvement in the overall geographic diversity of OHCHR during the previous 18 months. OHCHR continued to vigorously implement the measures identified in the Secretary-General's 2007 report [YUN 2007, p. 668], including the High Commissioner's procedures and framework for improving geographical diversity. Another round of the national competitive recruitment examinations was held at the beginning of the year, especially for Member States that were underrepresented or underrepresented in the Secretariat. Forty-one of the 49 Member States invited to participate attracted 845 applicants. Of the 326 candidates selected to participate, 236 or 72.4 per cent sat for the examination in February. The examinations were expected to result in a larger pool of successful candidates on the roster for selection against vacant, regular-budget P-2 and P-3 positions from Member States requiring geographical improvement in OHCHR. In addition to advertising vacancies through established procedures, OHCHR continued to ensure the widest possible circulation of vacancy notices, using the mailing list of over 1,200 governmental institutions, non-governmental human rights organizations, national human rights institutions and academic institutions. It also shared vacancy notices with its offices in the field. Those efforts were yielding positive results. Of the 122 selection decisions for Professional posts taken since the introduction of the High Commissioner's procedures and framework for improving geographical diversity, 72 (59 per cent) were made in favour of candidates from regions requiring improved representation in OHCHR. On the other hand, of the 50 selections from the regions well represented in OHCHR, 32 (64 per cent) were in respect of internal staff transferred or promoted, thus having no net impact on the geographical balance of the Office. Similar progress was made with regard to senior posts at the P-5 and higher levels. Some 28 selection decisions were made for senior posts since the procedures were introduced, 16 (57 per cent) of which were in favour of candidates from regions requiring improved representation.

On 24 December, the Assembly, in section XIII of resolution 63/250 (see p. 1616), took note of the Secretary-General's 2007 report [YUN 2007, p. 668] on the subject.

OHCHR funding and staffing

JIU report. In May [A/62/845], the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly a report of the Joint Inspection Unit (JIU) on OHCHR funding and staffing. The report said that OHCHR had taken action to improve its management and organization in response to recommendations by oversight bodies. However, the Office should link the budget and planning process to results and managerial performance, in line with a results-based management approach. The Trust Fund for the Support to the Activities of OHCHR, one of the eight funds managed by the Office, represented 78 per cent of its total extrabudgetary resources. However, the Fund did not have a board of trustees to review and approve projects and activities, and approval was granted solely by an internal body consisting of senior managers and chaired by the Deputy High Commissioner. OHCHR total resource requirements for the 2006–2007 biennium were estimated at $265.3 million, 35.3 per cent of which would be funded from the UN regular budget and 64.7 per cent from extrabudgetary resources. Although Member States at the 2005 World Summit had called for a doubling of the regular budget resources over the ensuing five years, that target might not be reached. Additionally, OHCHR depended heavily on voluntary contributions to fund core and mandated activities, which were often subject to conditionalities imposed by Member States. The dependency on voluntary contributions was compounded by the reliance on a relatively small number of donors. In 2006, 97.6 per cent of pledged voluntary contributions came from 20 donors, 80.8 per cent of which came from just 10 countries. The donor base should be broadened by encouraging non-traditional donor countries to make contributions. Moreover, donors earmarked a large percentage of the funding for specific purposes: 63 per cent of the total funds from the top 20 donors in 2006 had been earmarked. There was no mechanism for Member States to review or approve individual voluntary contributions made to OHCHR, nor were they informed of the conditions imposed when individual contributions were being made. The Human Rights Council should be informed of such contributions above a significant level, as well as the conditionalities that might be attached to them.

The issue of the imbalance in the geographical distribution of the OHCHR staff had been repeatedly raised by the former Commission on Human Rights and the Human Rights Council (see p. 719). However, the situation had not significantly improved, as evidenced from the figures for Professional staff: staff from the Group of Western European and Other States accounted for 61.7 per cent, the highest representation. Although figures as at 30 June 2007 showed a slight improvement, the serious and continuing imbalance in the geographical distribution of the Professional and higher staff could diminish the effectiveness and credibility of OHCHR work if it was perceived to be culturally biased and unrepresentative of the United Nations.

The report recommended, among other things, that the Assembly: instruct the High Commissioner to seek the advice and the views of the Human Rights Council in preparing the proposed strategic framework and the associated budget requirements prior to finalizing those documents; establish a reasonable balance between the OHCHR regular budget and voluntary contributions; and instruct OHCHR to convince donors to reduce earmarked funding or enhance the flexibility of funds, applying principles such as the Good Humanitarian Donorship principles [YUN 2003, p. 916]. The Assembly should also introduce a temporary maximum level on the recruitment of new Professional staff from overrepresented regions.

Note by Secretary-General. Also in May [A/62/845/Add.1], the Secretary-General transmitted to the Assembly his comments on the JIU recommendations. He concluded that OHCHR had policies and procedures in place to ensure the effective management of its resources, using results-based management principles, as well as the effective management of its trust funds. The High Commissioner fully recognized the role of the Human Rights Council in accordance with UN regulations and rules, policies and procedures. In that regard, submission of the biennial strategic framework to the Council prior to its submission to the Committee for Programme and Coordination for review and subsequent approval by the Assembly should be considered. In respect of human resources management, every effort would be made to build on the improvements already achieved and to attain geographic diversity of the OHCHR staff in line with the system of desirable ranges mandated by the Assembly.

Human rights defenders

Reports of Special Representative. In her annual report to the Human Rights Council [A/HRC/7/28], the Secretary-General's Special Representative on human rights defenders, Hina Jilani (Pakistan), focused on follow-up activities in the implementation of her recommendations and highlighted her work in the three main areas of activities: communications, country visits and thematic reports. The Special Representative showed that the follow-up on cases included not only individual situations, but the identification of general trends. The quantitative and thematic analysis of communications made it possible to identify challenges and achievements in the implementation of the 1998 Declaration on the Right and Responsibility of Individuals, Groups and Organs of Society to Promote and Protect Universally Recognized Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms (Declaration on Human Rights Defenders) [YUN 1998, p. 608] and to formulate recommendations addressing implementation gaps. The Representative proposed methodological tools to facilitate follow-up activities, in particular to assess the situation of human rights defenders on the ground and a matrix for undertaking follow-up visits.

The Special Representative recommended that States respond in a timely, systematic and comprehensive manner to her communications, and invited them to consider the communications procedure as an opportunity to redress situations and correct structural gaps. The role of regional and international networks and organizations, which often acted as interfaces between the Special Representative and sources on the ground, should be strengthened. The situation of human rights defenders should be one of the elements to be reviewed in the Universal Periodic Review, while stronger collaboration and joint initiatives among international and regional mechanisms for the protection of human rights defenders would reinforce the system overall.

The Special Representative visited Guatemala (18–22 February) [A/HRC/10/12/Add.3] to evaluate the implementation of the recommendations issued following her visit in 2002 [YUN 2002, p. 620]. While acknowledging some progress, particularly in the establishment of institutions and the self-protection initiatives of defenders, the Representative was concerned at the deteriorating environment in which human rights defenders operated, characterized by endemic impunity for crimes and violations committed against them. Guatemala was the third most unequal country in Latin America in terms of wealth distribution, and the worst in the region's human development index. The level of violence and killings was extremely high, and journalists who reported on organized crime, drug trafficking, corruption and other criminal activities faced death threats, physical and verbal attacks, and even murder. Trade unionists were the target of many attacks. While impunity remained pervasive, steps had been taken to increase police performance and protection, including the establishment in January of the new Unit on Human Rights of the Criminal Investigation Division of the National Civil Police.

Stressing that the human rights situation was unlikely to improve without a clear turning point on impunity, the Special Representative recommended that the Government: turn the commitment to human rights into a political agenda permeating Government action; adopt a policy on the protection of human rights defenders and report on its implementation; and condemn attacks against defenders and acknowledge the importance of their work. The Government should also ensure coordination among institutions responsible for the investigation of cases, reform measures for witness protection, and tackle the flaws and weaknesses of the police, including the need to gain the trust of the population.

Human Rights Council action. On 26 March, the Human Rights Council appointed Margaret Sekaggya (Uganda) as Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights defenders. Ms. Sekaggya assumed her functions on 1 May.

On 27 March [A/63/53 (res. 7/8)], the Council extended the special procedure on the situation of human rights defenders as a Special Rapporteur for a three-year period. The Rapporteur was requested to report regularly to the Council and the General Assembly.

Reports of Special Rapporteur. In accordance with Assembly resolution 62/152 [YUN 2007, p. 670], the Secretary-General, in an August note [A/63/288], transmitted to the Assembly the report of the Special Rapporteur on human rights defenders, which focused on her vision and priorities with regard to her mandate. Priority areas for future action included the analysis of trends and challenges concerning defenders; attention to defenders most exposed to attacks and violations; analysis of the obstacles and challenges to defenders' exercise of their rights; the development of enhanced protection measures for defenders; enhancing collaboration with stakeholders; and formulating recommendations to make UPR an effective mechanism for assessing the situation of defenders. The establishment and strengthening of regional mechanisms for the protection of defenders—including the African Commission on Human and Peoples' Rights, the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights, the Council of Europe and the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe—were fundamental to improving their situation. The Special Rapporteur intended to place greater emphasis on the promotion aspect of her role by focusing on good practices for protecting defenders and popularizing the Declaration on Human Rights Defenders.

On 18 December, the Assembly took note of the Special Rapporteur's report on human rights defenders (decision 63/534).

Following her visit to Togo (28 July–4 August) [A/HRC/10/12/Add.2], the Special Rapporteur said that, since 2005, the country had been engaged in a political transition, and the prospects for human rights promotion and protection had improved. The Rapporteur welcomed initiatives for ensuring an environment conducive to the work of human rights defenders, but regretted that insufficient funds had been allocated to the institutions undertaking such initiatives. Human rights defenders continued to face several challenges, including the achievement of unity and coordination within the defenders' community; the stigmatization of defenders by the authorities, who associated them with the political opposition; the plight of women defenders and the difficulties inherent in their work; unjustified delays in delivering registration certificates to NGOs; restrictions on the exercise of the rights to freedom of peaceful assembly and freedom of opinion and expression; and impunity for abuses against defenders.

The Special Rapporteur recommended that the Government and relevant State actors take steps to give legitimacy to human rights defenders by removing the stigmatization of being accused of affiliation to political parties; speed up the delivery of registration certificates to NGOs so as to facilitate their activities; recognize the legitimate work of women human rights defenders, remove obstacles impeding their work and take proactive measures to support such work; sensitize the police, gendarmerie and military officers, as well as judicial and prosecution officials, on the role and activities of defenders; and make the fight against impunity for violations against defenders a priority. The Special Rapporteur recommended that human rights defenders end the fragmentation of their community, improve coordination networks to strengthen the protection of defenders and expand the capacity among defenders to make full use of national, regional and international human rights mechanisms and institutions.

Other aspects

Sexual orientation and gender identity

Communications. By an 18 December letter [A/63/635] to the General Assembly President, Argentina, Brazil, Croatia, France, Gabon, Japan, the Netherlands and Norway transmitted a statement on human rights, sexual orientation and gender identity, signed by 66 countries. The signatories expressed concern at human rights violations based on sexual orientation or gender identity, and at violence, harassment, discrimination, exclusion, stigmatization and prejudice directed against them in all countries. The signatories urged States to take measures, in particular legislative or administrative, to ensure that sexual orientation or gender identity might under no circumstances be the basis for criminal penalties, in particular executions, arrests or detention; and that violations based on sexual orientation or gender identity were investigated and perpetrators brought to justice.

On 19 December [A/63/663], Syria transmitted to the Secretary-General a declaration in relation to the above statement on “the so-called notions” of sexual orientation and gender identity, on behalf of 59 Member States. The signatory States expressed concern at the attempt to introduce in the United Nations notions that had no legal foundation in international human rights instruments, and to focus on certain persons on the grounds of sexual interests and behaviours, while ignoring intolerance and discrimination on the basis of colour, race, gender or religion. They deplored all forms of stereotyping, exclusion, stigmatization, prejudice, intolerance, discrimination and violence directed against peoples, communities and individuals on any grounds whatsoever. They also reaffirmed article 29 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, establishing the right of Member States to enact laws that met “just requirements of morality, public order and the general welfare in a democratic society”, and expressed concern at attempts to create “new rights” or “new standards” by misinterpreting the Declaration and international treaties to include notions that were never articulated or agreed by the general membership. Those attempts jeopardized the entire international human rights framework.

The signatories called on States to refrain from attempting to give priority to the rights of certain individuals, which could result in positive discrimination at the expense of others’ rights, in contradiction with the principles of non-discrimination and equality.

Good governance

Human Rights Council action. On 27 March [A/63/53 (res. 7/11)], the Human Rights Council, by a recorded vote of 41 to none, with 6 abstentions, welcomed the High Commissioner’s note transmitting the report on the 2006 United Nations conference on anti-corruption, good governance and human rights [YUN 2006, p. 767]. The Council invited States to consider ratifying or acceding to the United Nations Convention against Corruption [YUN 2003, p. 1128], and to promote transparency, accountability, prevention and enforcement as key principles of anti-corruption efforts. It requested OHCHR to prepare a publication on anti-corruption, good governance and human rights, and decided to continue its consideration of the role of good governance, including the issue of the fight against corruption in the promotion and protection of human rights, at a future session.

Human rights instruments

General aspects

In 2008, eight UN human rights instruments were in force, with expert bodies monitoring their implementation. Those instruments and their treaty bodies were: the 1965 International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination [YUN 1965, p. 440, GA res. 2106 A (XX)] (Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination); the 1966 International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the Optional Protocol thereto [YUN 1966, p. 423, GA res. 2200 A (XXI)] and the Second Optional Protocol aiming at the abolition of the death penalty [YUN 1989, p. 484, GA res. 44/128] (Human Rights Committee); the 1966 International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights [YUN 1966, p. 419, GA res. 2200 A (XXI)] and the Optional Protocol thereto, adopted by General Assembly resolution 63/117 of 10 December (see p. 729) (Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights); the 1979 Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women [YUN 1979, p. 895, GA res. 34/180] and Optional Protocol [YUN 1999, p. 1100, GA res. 54/4] (Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women); the 1984 Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment [YUN 1984, p. 813, GA res. 39/46] and 2002 Optional Protocol [YUN 2002, p. 631, GA res. 57/199] (Committee against Torture and Subcommittee on Prevention); the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child [YUN 1989, p. 560, GA res. 44/25] and Optional Protocols on the involvement of children in armed conflict and on the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography [YUN 2000, pp. 616 & 618, GA res. 54/263] (Committee on the Rights of the Child); the 1990 International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families [YUN 1990, p. 594, GA res. 45/158] (Committee on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families); and the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities and its Optional Protocol [YUN 2006, p. 785, GA res. 61/106] (Committee on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities).

Note by Secretariat. To facilitate access to information relating to the status of the International Covenants on Civil and Political Rights and on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, and on the Conventions against Torture, on the Rights of the Child and on the Protection of the Rights of Migrant Workers, the Secretariat, in January [A/HRC/7/60], informed the Human Rights Council that such information was available on the OHCHR website and was updated regularly.

Report of Secretary-General. Pursuant to Assembly resolutions 52/118 [YUN 1997, p. 594] and 53/138 [YUN 1998, p. 612], the Secretary-General, in May, submitted a report [HRI/GEN/2/Rev.5] containing a compilation in a single volume of guidelines regarding the form and content of reports to be submitted by States parties to the Human Rights Committee, the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women, the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination, the Committee on the Rights of the Child and the Committee against Torture. In addition, the updated compilation contained guidelines for reports to be submitted to the Committee on Migrant Workers, and harmonized guidelines on reporting under international human rights treaties.

Human rights treaty body system

Meeting of chairpersons. In an August note [A/63/280], the Secretary-General submitted the report on the twentieth meeting of chairpersons of human rights treaty bodies (Geneva, 26–27 June), which considered follow-up to the recommendations of the nineteenth meeting [YUN 2007, p. 673] and reviewed developments relating to the work of the treaty bodies. Participants also discussed the reform of the treaty body system, including the harmonization of working methods and the UPR mechanism, as well as the work of the Human Rights Council. They met with representatives of States parties and the Council President.

The meeting had before it reports on: the implementation of recommendations of the sixth inter-committee meeting and the nineteenth meeting of chairpersons [HRI/MC/2008/2]; indicators for promoting and monitoring the implementation of human rights [HRI/MC/2008/3]; working methods of the human rights treaty bodies relating to the State party reporting process [HRI/MC/2008/4]; and States' parties reservations to human rights treaties [HRI/MC/2008/5].

The meeting endorsed the points of agreement concluded at the seventh inter-committee meeting of human rights treaty bodies (see below) and called on those bodies to follow up on those recommendations and report on their implementation in 2009. Concerning the relationship with special procedure mandate holders, the chairpersons and the special procedures agreed to organize future joint meetings in a more structured fashion and requested the Secretariat to prepare a list of common procedural and thematic issues to be discussed at their eleventh joint meeting. The meeting also recommended that a one-day meeting be allocated for informal consultations with States parties at its twenty-first (2009) meeting. It recognized the need for developing effective cooperation between treaty bodies and the Council and for strengthening the institutional links between them. The meeting recommended that treaty body secretaries prioritize documents to ensure their timely translation.

Annexed to the Secretary-General's note was the report of the seventh inter-committee meeting of human rights treaty bodies (Geneva, 23–25 June), which decided on points of an agreement on the revised harmonized reporting guidelines [HRI/GEN/2/Rev.5]; follow-up to concluding observations; and decisions on individual complaints, consideration of a State party in the absence of a report, the independence of treaty-body experts, cooperation with NGOs, and business and human rights, among other issues.

The tenth joint meeting of treaty body chairpersons with mandate holders of the Council's special procedures was held on 26 June. Participants discussed follow-up to the recommendations of special procedures and treaty bodies, and agreed on the need for stronger cooperation between the two groups. They underlined the importance of building on each other's recommendations.

Meeting of special rapporteurs, independent experts and chairpersons. In November [A/HRC/10/24], the High Commissioner transmitted to the Council the report on the fifteenth meeting of special rapporteurs/representatives, independent experts and chairpersons of working groups of the Council's special procedures (Geneva, 23–27 June). Participants adopted the draft revised Manual of special procedures mandate holders, presented by the task force appointed in 2007 [YUN 2007, p. 674]. Substantive changes related to the appointment of mandate holders, the criteria for taking action on communications and the transmission of urgent appeals to Governments, Government responses appended to mission reports, and the sharing of public statements with concerned Governments in advance of their release. The meeting agreed that the Manual should be updated as necessary. It also adopted the internal advisory procedure, annexed to the High Commissioner's note, for facilitating implementation of the Code of Conduct for Special Procedures Mandate Holders, adopted by the Council in 2007 [ibid., p. 666], and the Manual of the human rights special procedures. It was noted that, even though the system of communication had evolved over the years, some issues needed further reflection, such as the low rate of responses by Governments, the protection of witnesses, feedback to sources and the issuance of a common report on communications. The proposal that a common report on communications collated on a country-by-country basis should be issued was widely supported. Participants also discussed the development of a common approach to crisis situations, and stressed that the special procedures were uniquely placed to act as an early warning system in situations involving serious human rights violations. General comments or guidelines by mandate holders on human rights requirements in humanitarian crises should be elaborated. Participants further discussed cooperation with regional human rights mechanisms and with the UN system, integrating human rights approaches and mechanisms into the work of the special procedures, cooperation with human rights treaty bodies, and consultations with NGOs and national human rights organizations.

Membership of human rights treaty bodies

On 18 December [meeting 70], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/63/430/Add.1], adopted resolution 63/167 by recorded vote (128-55-2) [agenda items 64 (a) & (b)].

Equitable geographical distribution in the membership of the human rights treaty bodies

The General Assembly,

Recalling its previous resolutions on this question,

Reaffirming the importance of the goal of universal ratification of the United Nations human rights instruments,

Welcoming the significant increase in the number of ratifications of United Nations human rights instruments, which has especially contributed to their universality,

Reiterating the importance of the effective functioning of treaty bodies established pursuant to United Nations human rights instruments for the full and effective implementation of those instruments,

Recalling that, with regard to the election of the members of the human rights treaty bodies, the General Assembly as well as the Commission on Human Rights recognized the importance of giving consideration in their membership to equitable geographical distribution, gender balance and representation of the principal legal systems and of bearing in mind that the members shall be elected and shall serve in their personal capacity, and shall be of high moral character, acknowledged impartiality and recognized competence in the field of human rights,

Reaffirming the significance of national and regional particularities and various historical, cultural and religious backgrounds, as well as of different political, economic and legal systems,

Recognizing that the United Nations pursues multilingualism as a means of promoting, protecting and preserving diversity of languages and cultures globally and that genuine multilingualism promotes unity in diversity and international understanding,

Recalling that the General Assembly as well as the Commission on Human Rights encouraged States parties to United Nations human rights treaties, individually and through meetings of States parties, to consider how to give better effect, inter alia, to the principle of equitable geographical distribution in the membership of treaty bodies,

Expressing concern at the regional imbalance in the current composition of the membership of some of the human rights treaty bodies,

Noting in particular that the status quo tends to be particularly detrimental to the election of experts from some regional groups,

Convinced that the goal of equitable geographical distribution in the membership of human rights treaty bodies is perfectly compatible and can be fully realized and achieved in harmony with the need to ensure gender balance and the representation of the principal legal systems in those bodies and the high moral character, acknowledged impartiality and recognized competence in the field of human rights of their members,

1. Encourages the States parties to the United Nations human rights instruments to consider and adopt concrete actions, inter alia, the possible establishment of quota distribution systems by geographical region for the election of the members of the treaty bodies, thereby ensuring the paramount objective of equitable geographical distribution in the membership of those human rights bodies;

2. Calls upon the States parties to the United Nations human rights instruments to include in their work a debate on ways and means to ensure equitable geographical distribution in the membership of the human rights treaty bodies, based on previous recommendations of the Commission on Human Rights and the Economic and Social Council and the provisions of the present resolution;

3. Recommends, when considering the possible establishment of a quota by region for the election of the membership of each treaty body, the introduction of flexible procedures that encompass the following criteria:

(a) Each of the five regional groups established by the General Assembly must be assigned a quota of the membership of each treaty body in equivalent proportion to the number of States parties to the instrument that it represents;

(b) There must be provision for periodic revisions that reflect the relative changes in the geographical distribution of States parties;

(c) Automatic periodic revisions should be envisaged in order to avoid amending the text of the instrument when the quotas are revised;

4. Stresses that the process needed to achieve the goal of equitable geographical distribution in the membership of human rights treaty bodies can contribute to raising awareness of the importance of gender balance, the representation of the principal legal systems and the principle that the members of the treaty bodies shall be elected and shall serve in their personal capacity, and shall be of high moral character, acknowledged impartiality and recognized competence in the field of human rights;

5. Requests the chairpersons of the human rights treaty bodies to consider at their next meeting the content of the present resolution and to submit, through the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, specific recommendations for the achievement of the goal of equitable geographical distribution in the membership of the human rights treaty bodies;

6. Requests the High Commissioner to submit concrete recommendations on the implementation of the present resolution to the General Assembly at its sixty-fourth session;

7. Decides to continue its consideration of the question at its sixty-fourth session under the item entitled "Promotion and protection of human rights".

RECORDED VOTE ON RESOLUTION 63/167:

In favour: Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Azerbaijan, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belarus, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brunei Darussalam, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Cambodia, Cameroon, Central African Republic, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Djibouti, Dominica, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, Eritrea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Gabon, Gambia, Ghana, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Jamaica, Jordan, Kazakhstan, Kenya, Kuwait, Kyrgyzstan, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Marshall Islands, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Myanmar, Namibia, Nauru, Nepal, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Qatar, Russian Federation, Rwanda, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, South Africa, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Syrian Arab Republic, Tajikistan, Thailand, Timor-Leste, Togo, Tonga, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkmenistan, Tuvalu, Uganda, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Uzbekistan, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Effective implementation of international human rights instruments

Human Rights Council action. On 24 September [A/63/53/Add.1 (res. 9/8)], the Human Rights Council took note of the Secretary-General's 2007 report on the effective implementation of international human rights instruments [YUN 2007, p. 674]. It welcomed the measures taken by the human rights treaty bodies to improve their functioning and encouraged continuing efforts to further improve their effectiveness by reducing duplication of reporting required under the different instruments, harmonizing general guidelines on the form and content of reports across all treaty bodies, coordinating the schedule for the consideration of reports, limiting the length of reports, providing practical concluding observations addressed to States parties, and harmonizing practices for the publication and reporting of responses and practices for inviting comments from States and other stakeholders.

The Council urged States to consider signing and ratifying or acceding to international human rights instruments and accepting the individual communications procedures under applicable instruments; meet their reporting obligations, in particular by submitting initial and overdue reports; submit common-core documents and take into consideration reporting guidelines; provide effective follow-up to concluding observations of the treaty bodies on their reports and disseminate their full text; consider carefully the views of the treaty bodies on individual communications relating to them and provide adequate follow-up; encourage the involvement of civil society in the report preparation process; avail themselves of technical assistance; and when nominating their candidates to treaty bodies, consider the principle of non-accumulation of UN human rights mandates. The Council encouraged OHCHR to enhance its use of modern technologies, such as webcasts, with a view to strengthening the treaty body system. It emphasized the need to ensure financing and adequate staff and information resources for the operation of human rights bodies. The Secretary-General was requested to report to the Council annually on the implementation of the resolution, including recommendations for further improving the effectiveness of, harmonizing and reforming the treaty body system, and seek the views of States and other stakeholders.

Reservations to human rights treaties

A May report on reservations to human rights treaties [HRI/MC/2008/5] recalled that the International Law Commission, during its fifty-ninth session [YUN 2007, p. 1356], had convened a meeting with UN human rights experts, including representatives from human rights treaty bodies, to discuss issues relating to reservations [ibid., p. 674]. A report on the outcome of the meeting was prepared by the Special Rapporteur on reservations to treaties [ILC(LIX)/RT/CRP.1]. The Commission had revised the wording of several guidelines (3.1.8 to 3.1.10) relating to reservations and provisionally adopted them in 2007 [YUN 2007, p. 1356]. At the request of the General Assembly, the Secretary-General, in January, issued a summary of the debate on the report of the Commission during the Assembly's sixty-second session [A/CN.4/588], which included discussion related to reservations.

During the first session of the Working Group on UPR (see p. 713), the issue of reservations was raised with States under review, with several being urged to withdraw their reservations to international human rights treaties. Annexed to the report was a summary of the practice of human rights treaty bodies with respect to reservations—concluding observations/comments relating to the Committee on the Rights of the Child, the Human Rights Committee, the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination, the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women and the Committee on Migrant Workers. Also annexed to the report was a table of reservations, interpretative declarations, objections and withdrawals.

The Special Rapporteur also issued his twelfth report on the formulation and withdrawal of acceptances and objections to treaties [YUN 2007, p. 1371].

Universal Declaration of Human Rights

Human rights voluntary goals

The Human Rights Council initiated in 2007 [YUN 2007, p. 673] an open-ended intergovernmental process to elaborate a set of human rights voluntary goals to promote the realization of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights [YUN 1948–49, p. 535], to be launched on 10 December 2008 in celebration of the Declaration's sixtieth anniversary. A high-level panel discussion on human rights voluntary goals was held on 5 March, during the Council's seventh session [A/HRC/7/78].

Human Rights Council action. On 24 September [A/63/53/Add.1 (res. 9/12)], the Human Rights Council encouraged States to accomplish progressively a set of human rights voluntary goals, namely: universal ratification of the core international human rights instruments and universalization of the international human rights obligations of States; strengthening of national legal, institutional and policy frameworks to ensure the promotion and protection of human rights; establishment of national human rights institutions; elaboration of national human rights programmes and plans of action to strengthen States' capacity to promote and protect human rights; definition and implementation of national programmes of action promoting the realization of the rights and goals set forth in the Universal Declaration to eliminate discrimination of any kind and all forms of violence; adoption and implementation of programmes of human rights education in all learning institutions, including capacity-building programmes for law enforcement professionals; increased cooperation with all mechanisms of the UN human rights system; strengthening of mechanisms to facilitate human rights international cooperation; creation of favourable conditions at all levels to ensure the full and effective enjoyment of all human rights, including the right to development; and strengthening the capacity to fight hunger and poverty through additional forms of international cooperation.

States were invited to report on the progressive implementation of the voluntary goals, including in the context of UPR, and on the occasion of the seventieth (2018) anniversary of the Declaration. The Council welcomed the convening of a commemorative session on the sixtieth anniversary of the Declaration (see below) and the launch of the human rights voluntary goals.

Sixtieth anniversary of Universal Declaration

Human Rights Council action. On 24 September [A/63/53/Add.1 (dec. 9/102)], the Human Rights Council decided to convene a one-day session to commemorate the sixtieth anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, to be held during the week of 8 December, for the presentation of national, regional and international initiatives launched on the occasion of the anniversary. The Council invited the Secretary-General and the High Commissioner to address the Council.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 24 November [meeting 57], the General Assembly adopted resolution 63/25 [draft: A/63/L.31] without vote [agenda item 64].

Commemoration of the sixtieth anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights

The General Assembly,

Guided by the purposes, principles and provisions of the Charter of the United Nations, which include the promotion of, and respect for, human rights and fundamental freedoms for all,

Recalling its resolution 62/171 of 18 December 2007 entitled "International Year of Human Rights Learning", in which it decided to commemorate the sixtieth anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights at a plenary meeting to be held on 10 December 2008,

Recalling also its resolution 2217 A (XXI) of 19 December 1966, in which it decided to award at five-year intervals

the United Nations award for outstanding achievements in the field of human rights,

1. Reaffirms its decision to commemorate the sixtieth anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights on 10 December 2008;

2. Decides that the commemorative event will comprise a plenary meeting, including the award ceremony for the United Nations prize in the field of human rights, and two consecutive informal interactive panel discussions;

3. Encourages all Member States and observers to participate at the highest level possible;

4. Decides that the President of the General Assembly, the President of the Human Rights Council, the Secretary-General and the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights will address the commemorative plenary meeting;

5. Invites intergovernmental organizations and entities that have observer status with the General Assembly, relevant entities of the United Nations system and non-governmental organizations in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council to be represented at the commemorative event;

6. Requests the President of the General Assembly, in consultation with Member States and with the technical support of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, to draw up, no later than 30 November 2008, a list of two representatives of pertinent non-governmental organizations for each of the informal interactive panel discussions who will speak on behalf of civil society, and to circulate the list to Member States to be considered on a no-objection basis;

7. Also requests the President of the General Assembly, in consultation with Member States and with the technical support of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, to finalize the organizational arrangements for the commemorative event, including the identification of themes and the assignment of panellists for the informal interactive panel discussions;

8. Further requests the President of the General Assembly to hold open consultations with Member States and observers in order to prepare a brief declaration reaffirming the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the commitment for its full implementation, to be adopted by consensus at the commemorative plenary meeting.

Commemorative meetings. On 10 December [A/63/PV.65], the General Assembly marked the sixtieth anniversary of the adoption of the Universal Declaration with a half-day plenary meeting. Assembly President Miguel d'Escoto Brockmann, Human Rights Council President Martin Ihoeoghian Uhoimobhi, High Commissioner for Human Rights Navanethem Pillay and 15 other speakers addressed the meeting. The Secretary-General, who was attending the United Nations Climate Change Conference in Poznań, Poland (see p. 1155), addressed the meeting by video. A ceremony for the award of the United Nations Prizes in the Field of Human Rights for 2008 recognized individuals and organizations that had made outstanding contributions to the promotion and protection of human rights. The prizes were awarded to former High Commissioner Louise Arbour; veteran human rights defender Ramsey Clark; Dr. Carolyn Gomes, co-founder of Jamaicans for Justice; Dr. Denis Mukwege, co-founder of the General Referral Hospital of Panzi, DRC; and Human Rights Watch. Two special posthumous awards recognized former Pakistani Prime Minister Benazir Bhutto and Sister Dorothy Stang, human rights defender of the indigenous population of the Anapu region of Brazil, who was murdered in 2005.

The Human Rights Council held a commemorative session on 12 December, which was addressed by the Human Rights Council President, the Secretary-General, the High Commissioner and speakers representing States, international organizations and civil society.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 10 December [meeting 65], the General Assembly adopted resolution 63/116 [draft: A/63/L.54] without vote [agenda item 64].

Sixtieth anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights

Adopts the following Declaration:

Declaration on the sixtieth anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights

We, the States Members of the United Nations, celebrate today the sixtieth anniversary of the adoption of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, which is a common standard of achievement for all peoples and all nations in the field of human rights. Since its adoption, it has inspired the world and empowered women and men around the globe to assert their inherent dignity and rights without discrimination on any grounds. It is and will remain a source of progressive development of all human rights.

The Universal Declaration of Human Rights calls upon us to recognize and respect the dignity, freedom and equality of all human beings. We applaud the efforts undertaken by States to promote and protect all human rights for all. We must strive to enhance international cooperation and the dialogue among peoples and nations on the basis of mutual respect and understanding towards this goal.

In an ever-changing world, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights remains a relevant ethical compass that guides us in addressing the challenges we face today. The living, driving force of all human rights unites us in our common goal to eradicate the manifold ills that plague our world. We remain committed to development and to the internationally agreed development goals, and are convinced that their fulfilment will be instrumental to the enjoyment of human rights.

We deplore that human rights and fundamental freedoms are not yet fully and universally respected in all parts of the world. In no country or territory can it be claimed that all human rights have been fully realized at all times for all. Human beings continue to suffer from the neglect and violation of their human rights and fundamental freedoms. We laud the courage and commitment of all women and men around the world who have devoted their lives to promoting and protecting human rights.

We all have the duty to step up our efforts to promote and protect all human rights and to prevent, stop and redress all human rights violations. We must give everybody a chance to learn about and better understand all human rights and fundamental freedoms. We must continue to strengthen the human rights pillar of the United Nations, as we undertook with the creation of the Human Rights Council.

Today, we, the States Members of the United Nations, reiterate that we will not shy away from the magnitude of this challenge. We reaffirm our commitment towards the full realization of all human rights for all, which are universal, indivisible, interrelated, interdependent and mutually reinforcing.

Communications. On 3 June [A/62/858], Australia, Honduras, Mali, Slovenia, Ukraine and the United States, on behalf of 63 countries, transmitted to the Secretary-General a Declaration of Prisoners of Conscience on the occasion of the sixtieth anniversary of the Universal Declaration.

On 10 December [A/63/627], Cuba, as Chair of the Coordinating Bureau, transmitted to the Secretary-General the Declaration of the Coordinating Bureau of the Non-Aligned Movement on the commemoration of the sixtieth anniversary of the Universal Declaration.

Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and Optional Protocols

Accessions and ratifications

As at 31 December, parties to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the Optional Protocol thereto, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 2200A (XXI) [YUN 1966, p. 423], numbered 164 and 111, respectively. During the year, the Bahamas, Papua New Guinea, Samoa and Vanuatu became parties to the treaty, and Moldova became party to the Optional Protocol.

The Second Optional Protocol, aimed at the abolition of the death penalty, adopted by the Assembly in resolution 44/128 [YUN 1989, p. 484], was ratified or acceded to by Argentina, Chile, Honduras, Rwanda and Uzbekistan, bringing the number of States parties to 70 as at 31 December.

Implementation

Monitoring body. The Human Rights Committee, established under article 28 of the Covenant, held three sessions in 2008: its ninety-second (New York, 17 March–4 April); ninety-third (Geneva, 7–25 July) [A/63/40, vol. I]; and ninety-fourth (Geneva, 13–31 October) [A/64/40, vol. I]. Under article 40, it considered reports from 13 States—Botswana, Denmark, France, Ireland, Japan, Monaco, Nicaragua, Panama, San Marino, Spain, the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Tunisia and the United Kingdom—and adopted concluding observations on them. The Committee adopted views on communications from individuals alleging violations of their rights under the Covenant, and decided that other such communications were inadmissible. Those views and decisions were annexed to the Committee's reports [A/63/40, vol. II; A/64/40, vol. II].

Within the framework of article 14 of the Covenant, aimed at ensuring the effective administration of justice, the Committee adopted, on 28 October, General Comment No. 33 on the obligations of States parties under the Optional Protocol.

By notifications of 2 January, 21 February, 7 and 29 August, 17 September, 12 November and 12 December, Peru stated that it had declared a state of emergency in certain provinces, during which certain rights covered by the Covenant would be suspended. On 2 September, Peru notified other States parties, through the Secretary-General, that the state of emergency in certain districts and several provinces had been declared null and void.

On 9 May, Guatemala notified other States parties, through the Secretary-General, that it had declared a state of emergency throughout the country, and specified the restriction placed on certain rights and freedoms. On 9 October, Guatemala notified other States parties, through the Secretary-General, of the declaration of a state of emergency for a 15-day period in part of the country, specifying the restriction placed on certain rights and freedoms. On 24 October, Guatemala notified other States of the prorogation of the state of emergency for 15 days.

On 18 October, Colombia notified other States, through the Secretary-General, of the declaration of a 90-day nationwide state of internal disturbance.

(For the Organization's efforts to protect civil and political rights, within the framework established by the Covenant, see p. 772.)

Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights

Accessions and ratifications

As at 31 December, there were 160 parties to the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 2200A (XXI) [YUN 1966, p. 419]. During the year, the Bahamas, Pakistan and Papua New Guinea became parties to the Covenant.

Implementation

Monitoring body. The Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights held its fortieth (28 April–16 May) and forty-first (3–21 November) sessions in Geneva [E/2009/22]. Its pre-sessional working group met in Geneva from 19 to 23 May and from 24 to 28 November to identify issues to be discussed with reporting States. The Committee examined reports submitted under articles 16 and 17 of the Covenant by Angola, Benin, Bolivia, France, India, Kenya, Nicaragua, the Philippines, Sweden and the United Nations Interim Administration Mission in Kosovo, and adopted concluding observations on them. On 17 November, the Committee discussed draft General Comment No. 20 on non-discrimination and economic, social and cultural rights.

In a statement on the world food crisis, adopted on 16 May [E/C.12/2008/1], the Committee urged States to: ensure freedom from hunger through the provision of emergency humanitarian aid without discrimination; limit the rapid rise in food prices by encouraging production of local staple food products for local consumption instead of diverting prime arable land for the production of agrofuels; introduce measures to combat speculation in food commodities; and establish an international coordination mechanism to oversee responses to the food crisis and to ensure that the policy measures adopted would fulfil the realization of the right to adequate food. The Committee also urged States to: revise the global trade regime to ensure that global agricultural trade rules promoted, rather than undermined, the right to adequate food; implement strategies to combat climate change; invest in small-scale agriculture, small-scale irrigation and other appropriate technologies; and apply human rights principles, especially those relating to the right to adequate food, by assessing the impact of their financial, trade and development policies.

The Economic and Social Council, on 5 February, took note of the Committee's report on its thirty-sixth and thirty-seventh sessions [YUN 2006, p. 772] (decision 2008/202), and on 25 July, it took note of the reports on its thirty-eighth and thirty-ninth sessions [YUN 2007, p. 677] (decision 2008/256).

Optional Protocol

The Open-ended Working Group to consider options for elaborating an optional protocol to the Covenant, at its fifth session (Geneva, 4–8 February and 31 March–4 April) [A/HRC/8/7 & Corr.1,2], finalized the text of the protocol and transmitted it to the Human Rights Council for consideration. The Protocol established a procedure of individual communications for cases of alleged violations of economic, social and cultural rights.

Human Rights Council action. On 18 June [A/63/53 (res. 8/2)], the Human Rights Council adopted the Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, annexed to the resolution, and recommended its adoption by the General Assembly (see below).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 10 December [meeting 66], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/63/435], adopted resolution 63/117 without vote [agenda item 58].

Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights

The General Assembly,

Taking note of the adoption by the Human Rights Council, by its resolution 8/2 of 18 June 2008, of the Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights,

1. Adopts the Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the text of which is annexed to the present resolution;
2. Recommends that the Optional Protocol be opened for signature at a signing ceremony to be held in 2009, and requests the Secretary-General and the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to provide the necessary assistance.

ANNEX

Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights Preamble

The States Parties to the present Protocol,

Considering that, in accordance with the principles proclaimed in the Charter of the United Nations, recognition of the inherent dignity and of the equal and inalienable rights of all members of the human family is the foundation of freedom, justice and peace in the world,

Noting that the Universal Declaration of Human Rights proclaims that all human beings are born free and equal in dignity and rights and that everyone is entitled to all the rights and freedoms set forth therein, without distinction of any kind, such as race, colour, sex, language, religion, political or other opinion, national or social origin, property, birth or other status,

Recalling that the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the International Covenants on Human Rights recognize that the ideal of free human beings enjoying freedom from fear and want can only be achieved if conditions are created whereby everyone may enjoy civil, cultural, economic, political and social rights,

Reaffirming the universality, indivisibility, interdependence and interrelatedness of all human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Recalling that each State Party to the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights (hereinafter referred to as “the Covenant”) undertakes to take steps, individually and through international assistance and co-operation, especially economic and technical, to the maximum of its available resources, with a view to achieving progressively the full realization of the rights recognized in the Covenant by all appropriate means, including particularly the adoption of legislative measures,

Considering that, in order further to achieve the purposes of the Covenant and the implementation of its provisions, it would be appropriate to enable the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights (hereinafter referred to as “the Committee”) to carry out the functions provided for in the present Protocol,

Have agreed as follows:

Article 1

Competence of the Committee to receive and consider communications

1. A State Party to the Covenant that becomes a Party to the present Protocol recognizes the competence of the Committee to receive and consider communications as provided for by the provisions of the present Protocol.

2. No communication shall be received by the Committee if it concerns a State Party to the Covenant which is not a Party to the present Protocol.

Communications

Communications may be submitted by or on behalf of individuals or groups of individuals, under the jurisdiction of a State Party, claiming to be victims of a violation of any of the economic, social and cultural rights set forth in the Covenant by that State Party. Where a communication is submitted on behalf of individuals or groups of individuals, this shall be with their consent unless the author can justify acting on their behalf without such consent.

Admissibility

1. The Committee shall not consider a communication unless it has ascertained that all available domestic remedies have been exhausted. This shall not be the rule where the application of such remedies is unreasonably prolonged.

2. The Committee shall declare a communication inadmissible when:

(a) It is not submitted within one year after the exhaustion of domestic remedies, except in cases where the author can demonstrate that it had not been possible to submit the communication within that time limit;

(b) The facts that are the subject of the communication occurred prior to the entry into force of the present Protocol for the State Party concerned unless those facts continued after that date;

(c) The same matter has already been examined by the Committee or has been or is being examined under another procedure of international investigation or settlement;

(d) It is incompatible with the provisions of the Covenant;

(e) It is manifestly ill-founded, not sufficiently substantiated or exclusively based on reports disseminated by mass media;

(f) It is an abuse of the right to submit a communication; or when

(g) It is anonymous or not in writing.

Article 4

Communications

not revealing a clear disadvantage

The Committee may, if necessary, decline to consider a communication where it does not reveal that the author has suffered a clear disadvantage, unless the Committee considers that the communication raises a serious issue of general importance.

Interim measures

1. At any time after the receipt of a communication and before a determination on the merits has been reached, the Committee may transmit to the State Party concerned for its urgent consideration a request that the State Party take such interim measures as may be necessary in exceptional circumstances to avoid possible irreparable damage to the victim or victims of the alleged violations.

2. Where the Committee exercises its discretion under paragraph 1 of the present article, this does not imply a determination on admissibility or on the merits of the communication.

Transmission of the communication

1. Unless the Committee considers a communication inadmissible without reference to the State Party concerned, the Committee shall bring any communication submitted to it under the present Protocol confidentially to the attention of the State Party concerned.

2. Within six months, the receiving State Party shall submit to the Committee written explanations or statements clarifying the matter and the remedy, if any, that may have been provided by that State Party.

Article 7

Friendly settlement

1. The Committee shall make available its good offices to the parties concerned with a view to reaching a friendly settlement of the matter on the basis of the respect for the obligations set forth in the Covenant.

2. An agreement on a friendly settlement closes consideration of the communication under the present Protocol.

Article 8

Examination of communications

1. The Committee shall examine communications received under article 2 of the present Protocol in the light of all documentation submitted to it, provided that this documentation is transmitted to the parties concerned.

2. The Committee shall hold closed meetings when examining communications under the present Protocol.

3. When examining a communication under the present Protocol, the Committee may consult, as appropriate, relevant documentation emanating from other United Nations bodies, specialized agencies, funds, programmes and mechanisms, and other international organizations, including from regional human rights systems, and any observations or comments by the State Party concerned.

4. When examining communications under the present Protocol, the Committee shall consider the reasonableness of the steps taken by the State Party in accordance with part II of the Covenant. In doing so, the Committee shall bear in mind that the State Party may adopt a range of possible policy measures for the implementation of the rights set forth in the Covenant.

Article 9

Follow-up to the views of the Committee

1. After examining a communication, the Committee shall transmit its views on the communication, together with its recommendations, if any, to the parties concerned.

2. The State Party shall give due consideration to the views of the Committee, together with its recommendations, if any, and shall submit to the Committee, within six months, a written response, including information on any action taken in the light of the views and recommendations of the Committee.

3. The Committee may invite the State Party to submit further information about any measures the State Party has taken in response to its views or recommendations, if any, including as deemed appropriate by the Committee, in the State Party's subsequent reports under articles 16 and 17 of the Covenant.

Article 10

Inter-State communications

1. A State Party to the present Protocol may at any time declare under the present article that it recognizes the competence of the Committee to receive and consider communications to the effect that a State Party claims that another State Party is not fulfilling its obligations under the Covenant. Communications under the present article may be received and considered only if submitted by a State Party that has made a declaration recognizing in regard to itself the competence of the Committee. No communication shall be received by the Committee if it concerns a State Party which has not made such a declaration. Communications received under the present article shall be dealt with in accordance with the following procedure:

(a) If a State Party to the present Protocol considers that another State Party is not fulfilling its obligations under the Covenant, it may, by written communication, bring the matter to the attention of that State Party. The State Party may also inform the Committee of the matter. Within three months after the receipt of the communication, the receiving State shall afford the State that sent the communication an explanation, or any other statement in writing clarifying the matter, which should include, to the extent possible and pertinent, reference to domestic procedures and remedies taken, pending or available in the matter;

(b) If the matter is not settled to the satisfaction of both States Parties concerned within six months after the receipt by the receiving State of the initial communication, either State shall have the right to refer the matter to the Committee, by notice given to the Committee and to the other State;

(c) The Committee shall deal with a matter referred to it only after it has ascertained that all available domestic remedies have been invoked and exhausted in the matter. This shall not be the rule where the application of the remedies is unreasonably prolonged;

(d) Subject to the provisions of subparagraph (c) of the present paragraph, the Committee shall make available its good offices to the States Parties concerned with a view to a friendly solution of the matter on the basis of the respect for the obligations set forth in the Covenant;

(e) The Committee shall hold closed meetings when examining communications under the present article;

(f) In any matter referred to it in accordance with subparagraph (b) of the present paragraph, the Committee may call upon the States Parties concerned, referred to in subparagraph (b), to supply any relevant information;

(g) The States Parties concerned, referred to in subparagraph (b) of the present paragraph, shall have the right to be represented when the matter is being considered by the Committee and to make submissions orally and/or in writing;

(h) The Committee shall, with all due expediency after the date of receipt of notice under subparagraph (b) of the present paragraph, submit a report, as follows:

- (i) If a solution within the terms of subparagraph (d) of the present paragraph is reached, the Committee shall confine its report to a brief statement of the facts and of the solution reached;
- (ii) If a solution within the terms of subparagraph (d) is not reached, the Committee shall, in its report, set forth the relevant facts concerning the issue between the States Parties concerned. The written submissions and record of the oral submissions made by the States Parties concerned shall be attached to the report. The Committee may also communicate only to the States Parties concerned any views that it may consider relevant to the issue between them.

In every matter, the report shall be communicated to the States Parties concerned.

2. A declaration under paragraph 1 of the present article shall be deposited by the States Parties with the Secretary-General of the United Nations, who shall transmit copies thereof to the other States Parties. A declaration may be withdrawn at any time by notification to the Secretary-General. Such a withdrawal shall not prejudice the consideration of any matter that is the subject of a communication already transmitted under the present article; no further communication by any State Party shall be received under the present article after the notification of withdrawal of the declaration has been received by the Secretary-General, unless the State Party concerned has made a new declaration.

Article 11

Inquiry procedure

1. A State Party to the present Protocol may at any time declare that it recognizes the competence of the Committee provided for under the present article.

2. If the Committee receives reliable information indicating grave or systematic violations by a State Party of any of the economic, social and cultural rights set forth in the Covenant, the Committee shall invite that State Party to cooperate in the examination of the information and to this end to submit observations with regard to the information concerned.

3. Taking into account any observations that may have been submitted by the State Party concerned as well as any other reliable information available to it, the Committee may designate one or more of its members to conduct an inquiry and to report urgently to the Committee. Where warranted and with the consent of the State Party, the inquiry may include a visit to its territory.

4. Such an inquiry shall be conducted confidentially and the cooperation of the State Party shall be sought at all stages of the proceedings.

5. After examining the findings of such an inquiry, the Committee shall transmit these findings to the State Party concerned together with any comments and recommendations.

6. The State Party concerned shall, within six months of receiving the findings, comments and recommendations transmitted by the Committee, submit its observations to the Committee.

7. After such proceedings have been completed with regard to an inquiry made in accordance with paragraph 2 of the present article, the Committee may, after consultations with the State Party concerned, decide to include a summary account of the results of the proceedings in its annual report provided for in article 15 of the present Protocol.

8. Any State Party having made a declaration in accordance with paragraph 1 of the present article may, at any time, withdraw this declaration by notification to the Secretary-General.

Article 12

Follow-up to the inquiry procedure

1. The Committee may invite the State Party concerned to include in its report under articles 16 and 17 of the Covenant details of any measures taken in response to an inquiry conducted under article 11 of the present Protocol.

2. The Committee may, if necessary, after the end of the period of six months referred to in article 11, paragraph 6, invite the State Party concerned to inform it of the measures taken in response to such an inquiry.

Article 13

Protection measures

A State Party shall take all appropriate measures to ensure that individuals under its jurisdiction are not subjected to any form of ill-treatment or intimidation as a consequence of communicating with the Committee pursuant to the present Protocol.

Article 14

International assistance and cooperation

1. The Committee shall transmit, as it may consider appropriate, and with the consent of the State Party concerned, to United Nations specialized agencies, funds and programmes and other competent bodies, its views or recommendations concerning communications and inquiries that indicate a need for technical advice or assistance, along with the State Party's observations and suggestions, if any, on these views or recommendations.

2. The Committee may also bring to the attention of such bodies, with the consent of the State Party concerned, any matter arising out of communications considered under the present Protocol which may assist them in deciding, each within its field of competence, on the advisability of international measures likely to contribute to assisting States Parties in achieving progress in implementation of the rights recognized in the Covenant.

3. A trust fund shall be established in accordance with the relevant procedures of the General Assembly, to be administered in accordance with the Financial Regulations and Rules of the United Nations, with a view to providing expert and technical assistance to States Parties, with the consent of the State Party concerned, for the enhanced implementation of the rights contained in the Covenant, thus contributing to building national capacities in the area of economic, social and cultural rights in the context of the present Protocol.

4. The provisions of the present article are without prejudice to the obligations of each State Party to fulfil its obligations under the Covenant.

Article 15

Annual report

The Committee shall include in its annual report a summary of its activities under the present Protocol.

Article 16

Dissemination and information

Each State Party undertakes to make widely known and to disseminate the Covenant and the present Protocol and to facilitate access to information about the views and recommendations of the Committee, in particular, on matters involving that State Party, and to do so in accessible formats for persons with disabilities.

Article 17

Signature, ratification and accession

1. The present Protocol is open for signature by any State that has signed, ratified or acceded to the Covenant.

2. The present Protocol is subject to ratification by any State that has ratified or acceded to the Covenant. Instruments of ratification shall be deposited with the Secretary-General of the United Nations.

3. The present Protocol shall be open to accession by any State that has ratified or acceded to the Covenant.

4. Accession shall be effected by the deposit of an instrument of accession with the Secretary-General of the United Nations.

Article 18*Entry into force

1. The present Protocol shall enter into force three months after the date of the deposit with the Secretary-General of the United Nations of the tenth instrument of ratification or accession.

2. For each State ratifying or acceding to the present Protocol after the deposit of the tenth instrument of ratification or accession, the Protocol shall enter into force three months after the date of the deposit of its instrument of ratification or accession.

Article 19*Amendments

1. Any State Party may propose an amendment to the present Protocol and submit it to the Secretary-General of the United Nations. The Secretary-General shall communicate any proposed amendments to States Parties, with a request to be notified whether they favour a meeting of States Parties for the purpose of considering and deciding upon the proposals. In the event that, within four months from the date of such communication, at least one third of the States Parties favour such a meeting, the Secretary-General shall convene the meeting under the auspices of the United Nations. Any amendment adopted by a majority of two thirds of the States Parties present and voting shall be submitted by the Secretary-General to the General Assembly for approval and thereafter to all States Parties for acceptance.

2. An amendment adopted and approved in accordance with paragraph 1 of the present article shall enter into force on the thirtieth day after the number of instruments of acceptance deposited reaches two thirds of the number of States Parties at the date of adoption of the amendment. Thereafter, the amendment shall enter into force for any State Party on the thirtieth day following the deposit of its own instrument of acceptance. An amendment shall be binding only on those States Parties which have accepted it.

Article 20*Denunciation

1. Any State Party may denounce the present Protocol at any time by written notification addressed to the Secretary-General of the United Nations. Denunciation shall take effect six months after the date of receipt of the notification by the Secretary-General.

2. Denunciation shall be without prejudice to the continued application of the provisions of the present Protocol to any communication submitted under articles 2 and 10 or to any procedure initiated under article 11 before the effective date of denunciation.

Article 21*Notification by the Secretary-General

The Secretary-General of the United Nations shall notify all States referred to in article 26, paragraph 1, of the Covenant of the following particulars:

- (a) Signatures, ratifications and accessions under the present Protocol;
- (b) The date of entry into force of the present Protocol and of any amendment under article 19;
- (c) Any denunciation under article 20.

Article 22*Official languages

1. The present Protocol, of which the Arabic, Chinese, English, French, Russian and Spanish texts are equally authentic, shall be deposited in the archives of the United Nations.

2. The Secretary-General of the United Nations shall transmit certified copies of the present Protocol to all States referred to in article 26 of the Covenant.

Convention against racial discrimination*Accessions and ratifications

As at 31 December, the number of parties to the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 2106A (XX) [YUN 1965, p. 440], stood at 173.

The Secretary-General reported on the status of the Convention as at 15 August [A/63/473].

A Secretariat note [A/HRC/8/15], submitted in April in response to a Human Rights Council request [YUN 2006, p. 760], described OHCHR efforts towards universal ratification of the Convention and listed six States that had signed but not ratified the instrument, and 16 others that had neither signed nor ratified it. OHCHR wrote to the 22 States that had yet to become parties, encouraging them to take the necessary action.

Pursuant to Human Rights Council resolution 6/21 [YUN 2007, p. 678], the Ad Hoc Committee on the Elaboration of Complementary Standards held the first (11–21 February) and second (15–19 December) parts of its first session in Geneva [A/HRC/10/88]. The Committee was established in 2006 [YUN 2006, p. 774] to elaborate complementary standards to the International Convention, in the form of either a convention or an additional protocol, filling gaps in the Convention and providing new normative standards.

In February, the Committee recommended that the Human Rights Council refer to the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination proposals regarding the elaboration of an optional protocol as contained in its “Study of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination on possible measures to strengthen implementation through optional recommendations or the update of its monitoring procedures” [A/HRC/4/WG.3/7]. The Ad Hoc Committee expressed its readiness to further review the proposals included in the suggested protocol, and acknowledged that disagreements remained on whether substantial protection gaps needed to be addressed through complementary standards.

In conclusions and recommendations adopted in December, the Committee agreed on a road map for its future work, including the preparation of complementary international standards in the field of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance, the scope, form and nature of which could vary according to the gap to be filled. The Committee Chairperson would solicit contributions from Member States; compile, integrate and structure them; and consult Member States on the outcome, which should be submitted to Member States by 31 July 2009, as the basis for the work of the Committee in October 2009.

Implementation

Monitoring body. The Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination (CERD), established under article 8 of the Convention, held its seventy-second (18 February–7 March) and seventy-third (28 July–15 August) sessions in Geneva [A/63/18]. The Committee considered reports submitted by 15 countries—Austria, Belgium, the Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Fiji, Germany, Italy, Moldova, Namibia, Nicaragua, the Russian Federation, Sweden, Switzerland, Togo and the United States—and adopted concluding observations on them.

With regard to the Convention's implementation by States parties whose reports were seriously overdue, the Committee noted that 20 of them were at least 10 years late in submitting their reports, and 30 were at least five years late. The review of the Convention's implementation continued for those States parties on the basis of the last reports submitted, in addition to information prepared by UN organs and other sources, including NGOs. Of those States with seriously overdue reports scheduled for review at the Committee's seventy-third session, Peru reconfirmed its intention to submit its report by the end of 2008 and requested that the review be postponed. The Committee postponed the review of the situation in Belize, in light of that country's request for technical assistance in the reporting process.

Under article 14 of the Convention, CERD considered communications from individuals or groups claiming violation by a State party of their rights as enumerated in the Convention. Fifty-three States parties had recognized CERD competence to do so (Algeria, Andorra, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Azerbaijan, Belgium, Bolivia, Brazil, Bulgaria, Chile, Costa Rica, Cyprus, Czech Republic, Denmark, Ecuador, Finland, France, Georgia, Germany, Hungary, Iceland, Ireland, Italy, Kazakhstan, Liechtenstein, Luxembourg, Malta, Mexico, Monaco, Montenegro, Morocco, Netherlands, Norway, Peru, Poland, Portugal, Republic of Korea, Romania, Russian Federation, San Marino, Senegal, Serbia, Slovakia, Slovenia, South Africa, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland, the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Ukraine, Uruguay, Venezuela).

Pursuant to article 15 of the Convention, which empowered the Committee to consider petitions, reports and other information relating to Trust and Non-Self-Governing Territories, CERD noted, as it had in the past, the difficulty in fulfilling its functions in that regard, owing to the lack of copies of relevant petitions and the scant information relating directly to the Convention's principles and objectives in the reports received.

The Committee considered a number of situations under its early warning and urgent action procedure, including situations in Belize, Brazil, Canada, Chile, China, the Czech Republic, Ethiopia, India, Italy, Kenya, Panama, Peru and the Philippines. It decided to hold at its next session a thematic discussion on special measures within the meaning of articles 1 (4) and 2 (2) of the Convention, with a view to elaborating a general comment on the subject.

Financial situation. In August [A/63/306], the Secretary-General reported that outstanding arrears by States parties for the functioning of the Committee totalled $141,810 as at 30 June. As at 31 December, 43 States parties had accepted an amendment to article 8 of the Convention regarding the financing of CERD [YUN 1992, p. 714]. The amendment was to enter into force when accepted by a two-thirds majority of States parties, comprising approximately 115 of the 173 States parties to the Convention.

(For information on the Organization's activities to combat racial discrimination, including contemporary forms of racism, in accordance with the Convention and under the Programme of Action of the 2001 World Conference against Racism, Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia and Related Intolerance, see p. 761.)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 24 December [meeting 74], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/63/428], adopted resolution 63/243 without vote [agenda item 62 (a)].

International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination

The General Assembly,

Recalling its previous resolutions on the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, most recently resolution 61/148 of 19 December 2006,

Bearing in mind the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights on 25 June 1993, in particular section II.B of the Declaration, relating to equality, dignity and tolerance,

Reiterating the need to intensify the struggle to eliminate all forms of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance throughout the world,

Reiterating also the importance of the Convention, which is one of the most widely accepted human rights instruments adopted under the auspices of the United Nations,

Reaffirming that universal adherence to and full implementation of the Convention are of paramount importance for promoting equality and non-discrimination in the world, as stated in the Durban Declaration and Programme of Action adopted by the World Conference against Racism, Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia and Related Intolerance on 8 September 2001,

Mindful of the importance of the contributions of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination to the effective implementation of the Convention and to the efforts of the United Nations to combat racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance,

Emphasizing the obligation of all States parties to the Convention to take legislative, judicial and other measures to secure full implementation of the provisions of the Convention,

Recalling its resolution 47/111 of 16 December 1992, in which it welcomed the decision, taken on 15 January 1992 by the Fourteenth Meeting of States Parties to the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, to amend paragraph 6 of article 8 of the Convention and to add a new paragraph, as paragraph 7 of article 8, with a view to providing for the financing of the Committee from the regular budget of the United Nations, and reiterating its deep concern that the amendment to the Convention has not yet entered into force,

Stressing the importance of enabling the Committee to function smoothly and to have all necessary facilities for the effective performance of its functions under the Convention,

I

Reports of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination

1. Takes note of the reports of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination on its seventieth and seventy-first and its seventy-second and seventy-third sessions;

2. Commends the Committee for its contributions to the effective implementation of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, especially through the examination of reports under article 9 of the Convention, action on communications under article 14 of the Convention and thematic discussions, which contribute to the prevention and elimination of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance;

3. Calls upon States parties to fulfil their obligation, under article 9, paragraph 1, of the Convention, to submit their periodic reports on measures taken to implement the Convention in due time;

4. Expresses its concern at the fact that a great number of reports are overdue and continue to be overdue, in particular initial reports, which constitutes an obstacle to the full implementation of the Convention;

5. Encourages States parties to the Convention whose reports are seriously overdue to avail themselves of the advisory services and technical assistance that the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights can provide, upon their request, for the preparation of the reports;

6. Encourages the Committee to continue to cooperate and exchange information with United Nations bodies and mechanisms, in particular with the Human Rights Council, its Advisory Committee and the Special Rapporteur on contemporary forms of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance, and with intergovernmental organizations, as well as with non-governmental organizations;

7. Encourages States parties to the Convention to continue to include a gender perspective in their reports to the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination, and invites the Committee to take into account a gender perspective in the implementation of its mandate;

8. Notes with appreciation the engagement of the Committee in the follow-up to the Durban Declaration and Programme of Action;

9. Expresses its appreciation for the efforts made so far by the Committee to improve the efficiency of its working methods, including with a view to further harmonizing the working methods of the treaty bodies, and encourages the Committee to continue its activities in this regard;

10. Welcomes, in this regard, measures taken by the Committee to follow up on its concluding observations and recommendations, such as the appointment of a follow-up coordinator and the adoption of the guidelines on follow-up;

11. Encourages the continued participation of members of the Committee in the annual inter-committee meetings and meetings of chairpersons of the human rights treaty bodies, especially with a view to a more coordinated approach to the activities of the treaty body system and standardized reporting as well as to solving the problem of the backlog of reports of States parties in an effective manner, including by identifying efficiencies and maximizing the use of their resources as well as learning and sharing best practices and experiences in this regard;

12. Notes the persistent backlog of reports of States parties awaiting consideration, which prevents the Committee from considering the periodic reports of States parties in a timely manner and without undue delay, as well as the request of the Committee that the General Assembly authorize an extension of its meeting time, which is currently only six weeks per year;

13. Decides to authorize the Committee to meet for an additional week per session, as a temporary measure, with effect from August 2009, until 2011;

14. Also decides to assess the situation regarding the meeting time of the Committee at its sixty-fifth session on the basis of an evaluation made by the Office of the High Commissioner, taking into account a more comprehensive approach to the backlog of human rights treaty bodies and the increasing number of reports of States parties to the human rights conventions;

II

Financial situation of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination

15. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the financial situation of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination;

16. Expresses its profound concern at the fact that a number of States parties to the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination have still not fulfilled their financial obligations, as shown in the report of the Secretary-General, and strongly appeals to all States parties that are in arrears to fulfil their outstanding financial obligations under article 8, paragraph 6, of the Convention;

17. Strongly urges States parties to the Convention to accelerate their domestic ratification procedures with regard to the amendment to the Convention concerning the financing of the Committee and to notify the Secretary-General expeditiously in writing of their agreement to the amendment, as decided upon at the Fourteenth Meeting of States Parties to the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination on 15 January 1992, endorsed by the General Assembly in its resolution 47/111 and further reiterated at the Sixteenth Meeting of States Parties on 16 January 1996;

18. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to ensure adequate financial arrangements and to provide the necessary support, including an adequate level of Secretariat assistance, in order to ensure the functioning of the Committee and to enable it to cope with its increasing amount of work;

19. Also requests the Secretary-General to invite those States parties to the Convention that are in arrears to pay the amounts in arrears, and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its sixty-fifth session;

III

Status of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination

20. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the status of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination;

21. Expresses its satisfaction at the number of States that have ratified or acceded to the Convention, which now stands at one hundred and seventy-three;

22. Urges States parties to comply fully with their obligations under the Convention and to take into consideration the concluding observations and general recommendations of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination;

23. Reaffirms its conviction that ratification of or accession to the Convention on a universal basis and the implementation of its provisions are necessary for the effectiveness of the fight against racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance and for the implementation of the commitments undertaken under the Durban Declaration and Programme of Action, and expresses its disappointment that universal ratification of the Convention was not achieved by the targeted date of 2005;

24. Urges all States that have not yet become parties to the Convention to ratify or accede to it as a matter of urgency;

25. Urges States to limit the extent of any reservation they lodge to the Convention and to formulate any reservation as precisely and as narrowly as possible in order to ensure that no reservation is incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention, to review their reservations on a regular basis with a view to withdrawing them, and to withdraw reservations that are contrary to the object and purpose of the Convention;

26. Notes that the number of States parties to the Convention that have made the declaration provided for in article 14 of the Convention now stands at fifty-three, and requests States parties that have not yet done so to consider making that declaration;

27. Invites the Chairperson of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination to present an oral report on the work of the Committee and to engage in an interactive dialogue with the General Assembly at its sixty-fifth session under the item entitled "Elimination of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance";

28. Decides to consider, at its sixty-fifth session, under the item entitled "Elimination of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance", the reports of the Committee on its seventy-fourth and seventy-fifth and its seventy-sixth and seventy-seventh sessions, the report of the Secretary-General on the financial situation of the Committee and the report of the Secretary-General on the status of the Convention.

Convention against torture

Accessions and ratifications

As at 31 December, 146 States were parties to the 1984 Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 39/46 [YUN 1984, p. 813]. Rwanda became a party to the Convention in 2008.

During the year, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Chile, France, Germany, Guatemala, Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan and Lebanon became parties to the Optional Protocol to the Convention, bringing the total number of parties to 42. The Protocol, which established an international inspection system for places of detention, was adopted in Assembly resolution 57/199 [YUN 2002, p. 631] and entered into force in 2006 [YUN 2006, p. 776]. As at 16 May, 56 parties had made the required declarations under articles 21 and 22, in which a party recognized the competence of the Committee against Torture to receive and consider communications by which a State party claimed that another party was not fulfilling its obligations under the Convention, and from or on behalf of individuals who claimed to be victims of a violation of the Convention's provisions by a State party. Four parties had made the declaration under article 21, concerning inter-State communications, bringing the total number of declarations under that article to 60, while five had done so under article 22, concerning individual communications, bringing the total under that article to 61. Amendments to articles 17 and 18, adopted in 1992 [YUN 1992, p. 735], had been accepted by 27 States parties as at year's end.

Implementation

Monitoring body. During the year, the Committee against Torture, established as a monitoring body under the Convention, held its fortieth (28 April–16 May) [A/63/44] and forty-first (3–21 November) [A/64/44] sessions in Geneva. Under article 19 of the Convention, it considered reports submitted by 15 countries—Algeria, Australia, Belgium, China (including the Hong Kong and Macao Special Administrative Regions), Costa Rica, Kazakhstan, Kenya, Iceland, Indonesia, Lithuania, Montenegro, Serbia, Sweden, the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia and Zambia—and adopted concluding observations on them.

The Committee continued, in accordance with article 20, to study reliable information that appeared to contain well-founded indications that torture was systematically practised by a State party. In the framework of its follow-up activities, the Rapporteur on article 20 continued to encourage those States parties on which enquiries had been conducted to implement the Committee's related recommendations. Under article 22, the Committee considered communications submitted by individuals claiming that their rights under the Convention had been violated by a State party and who had exhausted all available domestic remedies.

Subcommittee on Prevention. The 10-member Subcommittee on Prevention of Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment (Subcommittee on Prevention), established in 2006 [YUN 2006, p. 776] to carry out the functions laid down in the Optional Protocol adopted by resolution 57/199 [YUN 2002, p. 631], held its fourth (11–15 February) [A/63/44, annex VII], fifth (23–28 June) and sixth (17–21 November) sessions [CAT/C/42/2 & Corr.1] in Geneva. In 2008, the Subcommittee visited Benin [CAT/OP/BEN/1], Mexico [CAT/OP/MEX/1] and Sweden [CAT/OP/SWE/1 & Add.1], focusing on the development of national preventive mechanisms and the protection of people held in places of deprivation of liberty. The Subcommittee had various contacts with national preventive mechanisms and with organizations, including national human rights institutions and NGOs involved in the development of such mechanisms. It also maintained contact with the International Committee of the Red Cross, the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights, the European Committee for the Prevention of Torture and Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe, and international and national NGOs engaged in strengthening protection against torture.

The Subcommittee's first annual report [CAT/C/40/2], covering the period from February 2007 to March 2008, was submitted to the Committee against Torture at its fortieth session. The report noted that the full mandate envisaged in the Optional Protocol had not yet been realized owing to limited budgetary resources. It looked to the United Nations to provide the financial and human resources necessary for the fulfilment of its mandate.

(For the protection of the right not to be subjected to torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, see the work of the Special Rapporteur on the question of torture on p. 808.)

Convention on elimination of discrimination against women and Optional Protocol

(For details on the status of the Convention and on the Optional Protocol, see p. 1277. For insight on the activities designed to protect the rights of women and girls worldwide, in accordance with the provisions of the Convention, see the work of the Special Rapporteur on Violence against Women, Its Causes and Consequences on p. 846.)

Convention on the Rights of the Child

Accessions and ratifications

As at 31 December, the number of States parties to the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 44/25 [YUN 1989, p. 560], stood at 193. States parties to the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the involvement of children in armed conflict, adopted in Assembly resolution 54/263 [YUN 2000, p. 615], rose to 126, with Albania, Burundi, China, Iraq, the Russian Federation, Singapore and Uzbekistan becoming parties in 2008. The Optional Protocol on the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography, also adopted by resolution 54/263, had 130 States parties, with Albania, Greece, Iraq, Israel, Monaco and Uzbekistan becoming parties in 2008.

The Secretary-General reported on the status of the Convention and its Optional Protocols as at 1 July [A/63/160].

Implementation

Monitoring body. The Committee on the Rights of the Child (CRC) held its forty-seventh (14 January–1 February) [CRC/C/47/3], forty-eighth (19 May–6 June) [CRC/C/48/3] and forty-ninth (15 September–3 October) [CRC/C/49/3] sessions in Geneva. Each session was preceded by a working group meeting to review State party reports and identify the main questions to be discussed with representatives of the reporting States.

Under article 44 of the Convention, CRC considered initial or periodic reports submitted by Austria, Bhutan, Bulgaria, Chile, Djibouti, the Dominican Republic, Eritrea, Georgia, Germany, Ireland, Kuwait, Lithuania, the Philippines, Republic of Korea, Serbia, Sierra Leone, the Timor-Leste, Uganda, the United Kingdom, the United Republic of Tanzania and the United States, and adopted concluding observations on them.

On 19 September, the Committee held its annual day of general discussion on “The right to education in situations of emergency”. It also discussed the drafts of its two forthcoming general comments, on the right of the child to express views and be heard, and on the rights of indigenous children.

The Committee submitted to the General Assembly its biennial report covering activities from its forty-second to forty-seventh sessions [A/63/41].

On 25 July, the Economic and Social Council took note of the Committee’s report (decision 2008/256).

Human Rights Council action. On 28 March [A/63/53 (res. 7/29)], the Human Rights Council addressed implementation of the Convention and other instruments. The Council called on States parties to implement the Convention and its Optional Protocols fully by putting in place effective national legislation, policies and action plans, complying with their reporting obligations in a timely manner, and taking into account the Committee’s recommendations. They should designate, establish or strengthen governmental structures for children and ensure adequate training in the rights of the child for professional groups working with and for children; and develop and assess social programmes so that economic and social resources were sufficiently developed for the full realization of the rights of the child.

The Council reaffirmed the findings in General Assembly resolution 62/141 [YUN 2007, p. 681] and the importance of promoting appropriate parental care and family preservation where possible. It encouraged States to adopt laws to protect children growing up without parents or caregivers; where alternative care was necessary, decision-making should be in the best interests of the child. It also encouraged the advancement of the draft UN guidelines for the appropriate use and conditions of alternative care for children, to which further attention should be given at the Council’s future sessions.

On 24 September [A/63/53/Add.1 (res. 9/13)], the Council took note of the draft UN guidelines for the appropriate use and conditions of alternative care for children, requested the High Commissioner to circulate them, and invited States to work towards taking action on the guidelines at the Council’s tenth (2009) session. The initial draft guidelines for the protection of children without parental care were reviewed at an intergovernmental meeting of experts in Brasilia, Brazil, in August 2006.

(For information on the Organization’s efforts to protect the rights of the child everywhere in the world, in accordance with the provisions outlined in the Convention, see the work of the Special Rapporteur on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography on p. 849. See also the activities of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Children and Armed Conflict on p. 851.)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 24 December [meeting 74], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/63/430/Add.2], adopted resolution 63/244 without vote [agenda item 64 (b)].

Committee on the Rights of the Child

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the Convention on the Rights of the Child and the Optional Protocols thereto,

Noting the report of the Secretary-General on the status of the Convention and the report of the Committee on the Rights of the Child,

1. Notes, while welcoming the entry into force of the Optional Protocols to the Convention on the Rights of the Child, that a backlog of more than eighty reports exists related to the submission by States parties of their initial reports under the Optional Protocols in conformity with their obligations, and notes with concern that if this backlog is not addressed, it will impede the ability of the Committee on the Rights of the Child to consider reports in a timely manner, and in this regard takes note of the request of the Committee to meet in parallel chambers to address this backlog in an effective and timely manner;

2. Decides, as an exceptional and temporary measure, to authorize the Committee to meet in parallel chambers, of nine members each, for ten working days of each of its three regular sessions and the five working days of each of its three presessional working group meetings between October 2009 and October 2010, for the purposes of considering the reports of the States parties submitted under article 44 of the Convention, article 8 of the Optional Protocol thereto on the involvement of children in armed conflict and article 12 of the Optional Protocol thereto on the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography, taking due account of equitable geographical distribution and the principal legal systems;

3. Also decides to assess the situation regarding the meeting time of the Committee at its sixty-fifth session on the basis of an evaluation made by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, taking into account a more comprehensive approach towards the backlog of human rights treaty bodies and the increasing number of reports of States parties to the human rights conventions;

4. Requests the Committee to intensify its review of its working methods in order to enhance the efficiency and quality of its proceedings, with the aim of achieving timely consideration of reports submitted by States parties, and also requests the Committee to review and assess its progress in order to provide an update on this question in its report to the General Assembly at its sixty-fourth session and inputs to the evaluation to be made by the Office of the High Commissioner, taking into account the wider context of treaty body reform.

Also on 24 December [meeting 74], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/63/426], adopted resolution 63/241 by recorded vote (159-1-0) [agenda item 60 (a)].

Rights of the child

The General Assembly,

Recalling its previous resolutions on the rights of the child, the most recent of which is resolution 62/141 of 18 December 2007, and its resolution 62/140 of 18 December 2007, as well as Human Rights Council resolution 7/29 of 28 March 2008,

Emphasizing that the Convention on the Rights of the Child must constitute the standard in the promotion and protection of the rights of the child, and bearing in mind the importance of the Optional Protocols to the Convention, as well as other human rights instruments,

Reaffirming the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, the United Nations Millennium Declaration and the outcome document of the twenty-seventh special session of the General Assembly on children, entitled “A world fit for children”, and recalling the Copenhagen Declaration on Social Development and the Programme of Action, the Dakar Framework for Action adopted at the World Education Forum, the Declaration on Social Progress and Development, the Universal Declaration on the Eradication of Hunger and Malnutrition, the Declaration on the Right to Development and the Declaration of the commemorative high-level plenary meeting devoted to the follow-up to the outcome of the special session on children, held in New York from 11 to 13 December 2007,

Recognizing the link between an improved situation for children and achieving the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals, in particular those related to education, poverty eradication, gender equality, reduction of child mortality and global partnership for development, and welcoming in this context the outcomes of the high-level event on the Millennium Development Goals, held in New York on 25 September 2008,

Recognizing also the importance of the integration of child rights issues into the follow-up of the outcome documents of all major United Nations conferences, special sessions and summits,

Taking note with appreciation of the reports of the Secretary-General on progress made towards achieving the commitments set out in the outcome document of the twenty-seventh special session of the General Assembly and on the status of the Convention on the Rights of the Child and the issues raised in Assembly resolution 62/141, as well as the report of the Committee on the Rights of the Child,

Recognizing the importance of incorporating a child-protection perspective across the human rights agenda, as highlighted in the 2005 World Summit Outcome,

Welcoming the entry into force of the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities, and the attention paid to children in this international instrument,

Noting with appreciation the attention paid to children in the International Convention for the Protection of All Persons from Enforced Disappearance, and stressing the importance of its entry into force,

Noting with appreciation also the attention paid to children in the United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples,

Profoundly concerned that the situation of children in many parts of the world remains critical, in an increasingly globalized environment, as a result of the persistence of poverty, social inequality, inadequate social and economic conditions, pandemics, in particular HIV/AIDS, malaria and tuberculosis, environmental damage, natural disasters, armed conflict, foreign occupation, displacement, violence, terrorism, abuse, trafficking in children and their organs, all forms of exploitation, commercial sexual exploitation of children, child prostitution, child pornography and child sex tourism, neglect, illiteracy, hunger, intolerance, discrimination, racism, xenophobia, gender inequality, disability and inadequate legal protection, and convinced that urgent and effective national and international action is called for,

Reiterating that eradicating poverty is the greatest global challenge facing the world today and an indispensable requirement for sustainable development, in particular for developing countries, and recognizing that chronic poverty remains the single biggest obstacle to meeting the needs of and promoting and protecting the rights of children, and that urgent national and international action is therefore required to eliminate it,

Reaffirming that democracy, development, peace and security, and the full and effective enjoyment of all human rights and fundamental freedoms are interdependent and mutually reinforcing and contribute to the eradication of extreme poverty,

Reaffirming also the need for mainstreaming a gender perspective in all policies and programmes relating to children, and recognizing the child as a rights holder in all policies and programmes relating to children,

Bearing in mind that 2009 marks the twentieth anniversary of the adoption of the Convention on the Rights of the Child and the fiftieth anniversary of the adoption of the Declaration of the Rights of the Child, which provided a foundation for the Convention, and considering that these anniversaries are suitable occasions for strengthening the efforts of Member States to promote the rights of the child,

I

Implementation of the Convention on the Rights of the Child and the Optional Protocols thereto

1. Reaffirms that the general principles of, inter alia, the best interests of the child, non-discrimination, participation and survival and development provide the framework for all actions concerning children, including adolescents;

2. Urges States that have not yet done so to become parties to the Convention on the Rights of the Child and the Optional Protocols thereto as a matter of priority and to implement them fully by, inter alia, putting in place effective national legislation, policies and action plans, strengthening relevant governmental structures for children and ensuring adequate and systematic training in the rights of the child for all those working with and for children, as well as ensuring child rights education for children themselves;

3. Urges States parties to withdraw reservations that are incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention or the Optional Protocols thereto and to consider reviewing regularly other reservations with a view to withdrawing them in accordance with the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action;

4. Calls upon States to designate, establish or strengthen governmental structures for children, including, where appropriate, ministers in charge of child and youth issues and independent ombudspersons for children or other institutions for the promotion and protection of the rights of the child;

5. Welcomes the work of the Committee on the Rights of the Child, and calls upon all States to strengthen their cooperation with the Committee, to comply in a timely manner with their reporting obligations under the Convention and the Optional Protocols thereto, in accordance with the guidelines elaborated by the Committee, and to take into account its recommendations on the implementation of the Convention;

6. Takes note with appreciation of the initiatives undertaken by the Committee aimed at promoting a better understanding of and fuller compliance with the rights enshrined in the Convention, namely, through the organization of days of general discussion and the adoption of general comments;

7. Requests all relevant organs and mechanisms of the United Nations system regularly and systematically to incorporate a strong child rights perspective throughout all activities in the fulfilment of their mandates, as well as to ensure that their staff are trained in child rights matters, and calls upon States to continue to cooperate closely with all those organs and mechanisms, in particular the special rapporteurs and special representatives of the United Nations system;

8. Encourages States to strengthen their national statistical capacities and to use statistics disaggregated, inter alia, by age, gender and other relevant factors that may lead to disparities and other statistical indicators at the national, subregional, regional and international levels to develop and assess social policies and programmes so that economic and social resources are used efficiently and effectively for the full realization of the rights of the child;

II

Promotion and protection of the rights of the child and non-discrimination against children

Non-discrimination

9. Calls upon all States:

(a) To ensure the enjoyment by children of all their civil, cultural, economic, political and social rights without discrimination of any kind;

(b) To provide special support and ensure equal access to services for all children, noting with concern the large number of children who are among the victims of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance, and stressing the need to incorporate special measures, in accordance with the principles of the best interests of the child and respect for his or her views and the child's gender-specific needs, in education programmes and programmes to combat such practices;

(c) To take all necessary and effective measures, including legal reforms where appropriate, to eliminate all forms of discrimination against girls and all forms of violence, including female infanticide and prenatal sex selection, rape, sexual abuse and harmful traditional or customary practices, including female genital mutilation, early marriage, marriage without the free and full consent of the intending spouses and forced sterilization, by enacting and enforcing legislation and, where appropriate, by formulating comprehensive, multidisciplinary and coordinated national plans, programmes or strategies to protect girls;

(d) To ensure the full and equal enjoyment of all human rights and fundamental freedoms by children with disabilities, in both the public and the private spheres, including by ensuring that the principle of the best interests of the child and the rights of children with disabilities are integrated into policies and programmes for children, including their rights to education, to the highest attainable standard of physical and mental health and to protection from violence, abuse and neglect, and to develop and, where it already exists, enforce legislation to prohibit discrimination against them in order to ensure their inherent dignity, to promote their self-reliance and to facilitate their full and active participation and inclusion in their communities, taking into account the particular situation of children with disabilities who may be subject to multiple or aggravated forms of discrimination, including girls with disabilities and children with disabilities living in poverty;

10. Urges all States to respect and promote the right of girls and boys to express themselves freely, to ensure that their views are given due weight, in accordance with their age and maturity, in all matters affecting them and to involve children, including children with special needs, in decision-making processes, taking into account the evolving capacities of children and the importance of involving children's organizations and child-led initiatives;

11. Also urges all States in particular to strengthen the participation of children and adolescents in planning and implementation relating to matters that affect them, such as health, environment, education, social and economic welfare and protection against violence, abuse and exploitation;

Registration, family relations and adoption or other forms of alternative care

12. Once again urges all States parties to intensify their efforts to comply with their obligations under the Convention on the Rights of the Child to preserve the child's identity, including nationality, name and family relations, as recognized by law, to allow for the registration of the child immediately after birth, to ensure that registration procedures are simple, expeditious and effective and provided at minimal or no cost and to raise awareness of the importance of birth registration at the national, regional and local levels;

13. Encourages States to adopt and enforce laws and improve the implementation of policies and programmes to protect children growing up without parents or caregivers, recognizing that, where alternative care is necessary, family- and community-based care should be promoted over placement in institutions, and in this context invites States to dedicate all their efforts, in a transparent process, with a view to possible action on the draft United Nations guidelines for the appropriate use and conditions of alternative care for children at the tenth session of the Human Rights Council;

14. Calls upon States to guarantee, to the extent consistent with the obligations of each State, the right of a child whose parents reside in different States to maintain, on a regular basis, save in exceptional circumstances, personal relations and direct contact with both parents by providing enforceable means of access and visitation in both States and by respecting the principle that both parents have common responsibilities for the upbringing and development of their children;

15. Also calls upon States to address and pay particular attention to cases of international parental or familial child abduction, and encourages States to engage in multilateral and bilateral cooperation to resolve those cases, preferably by accession to or ratification of the Hague Convention on the Civil Aspects of International Child Abduction, and to comply fully with the Convention, and to facilitate, inter alia, the return of the child to the country in which he or she resided immediately before the removal or retention;

16. Further calls upon States to take all necessary measures to prevent and combat illegal adoptions and all adoptions that are not in the best interests of the child;

Economic and social well-being of children

17. Calls upon States and the international community to create an environment in which the well-being of the child is ensured, including by strengthening international cooperation in this field;

Eradication of poverty

18. Calls upon States to cooperate, support and participate in the global efforts for poverty eradication at the global, regional and country levels, recognizing that strengthened availability and effective allocation of resources are required at all these levels, in order to ensure that all the internationally agreed development and poverty eradication goals, including those set out in the United Nations Millennium Declaration, are realized within their time framework, and reaffirms that investments in children and the realization of their rights are among the most effective ways to eradicate poverty;

19. Reaffirms that the primary responsibility for ensuring an enabling environment for securing the well-being of children, in which the rights of each and every child are promoted and respected, rests with each individual State;

20. Calls upon all States and the international community to mobilize all necessary resources, support and efforts to eradicate poverty, according to national plans and strategies and in consultation with national Governments, including through an integrated and multifaceted approach based on the rights and well-being of children, and to continue their efforts to realize the internationally agreed development and poverty eradication goals, including the Millennium Development Goals;

Right to education

21. Recognizes the right to education on the basis of equal opportunity and non-discrimination by making primary education compulsory and available free to all children, ensuring that all children have access to education of good quality, as well as making secondary education generally available and accessible to all, in particular through the progressive introduction of free education, bearing in mind that special measures to ensure equal access, including affirmative action, contribute to achieving equal opportunity and combating exclusion, and ensuring school attendance, in particular for girls and children from low-income families in order to achieve the objectives of Education for All, with the aim of realizing the millennium development goal aimed at achieving universal primary education;

22. Welcomes the work of the Special Rapporteur on the right to education, takes note of his report on the right to education in emergency situations, recognizes that the right to education is to be respected at all times, and calls upon Member States to adopt legal and other measures to ensure that education is included in emergency preparedness plans;

23. Urges Member States to implement strategies for the realization of the right to education as an integral element in the context of humanitarian assistance, with the support of the international community, the United Nations system, donors, multilateral agencies, the private sector, civil society and non-governmental organizations;

Right to the enjoyment of the highest attainable standard of health

24. Calls upon States:

(a) To take all necessary measures to ensure the right of the child to the enjoyment of the highest attainable standard of health and to develop sustainable health systems and social services, ensuring access to such systems and services without discrimination, paying special attention to adequate food and nutrition and combating disease and malnutrition, to access to safe drinking water and sanitation, to the special needs of male and female adolescents and to reproductive and sexual health, and securing appropriate prenatal and post-natal care for mothers, including measures to prevent mother-to-child transmission of HIV, and in this context to realize the millennium development goals aimed at reducing child mortality, improving maternal health and combating HIV/AIDS, malaria and other diseases;

(b) To assign priority to developing and implementing activities and programmes aimed at treating and preventing addictions, in particular addiction to alcohol and tobacco, and the abuse of narcotic drugs, psychotropic substances and inhalants;

(c) To support adolescents to be able to deal positively and responsibly with their sexuality in order to protect themselves from HIV/AIDS infection and to implement measures to increase their capacity to protect themselves from HIV/AIDS through, inter alia, the provision of health care, including for sexual and reproductive health, and through preventive education that promotes gender equality;

(d) To develop and implement strategies, policies and programmes that identify and address those factors that make individuals particularly vulnerable to HIV infection in order to complement prevention programmes that address activities that place individuals at risk for HIV infection, such as risky and unsafe behaviour and injecting drug use;

(e) To promote initiatives aimed at reducing the prices of antiretroviral drugs, especially second-line drugs, available to boys and girls, including bilateral and private sector initiatives, as well as initiatives on a voluntary basis taken by groups of States, including those based on innovative financing mechanisms that contribute to the mobilization of resources for social development, especially those that aim to provide further access to drugs at affordable prices to children in developing countries on a sustainable and predictable basis, and in this regard takes note of the International Drug Purchase Facility, UNAIDS;

(f) To design and implement programmes to provide social services and support to pregnant adolescents and adolescent mothers, in particular by enabling them and also the adolescent fathers to continue and complete their education;

Right to food

25. Expresses grave concern at the worsening of the world food crisis, which seriously undermines the realization of the right to food for all, including mothers and children, and also expresses grave concern that this crisis threatens to further undermine the achievement of the Millennium Development Goals and stresses that solutions need a comprehensive and multifaceted approach requiring short-, medium- and long-term and sustained actions;

26. Calls upon all States to take immediate steps to eliminate child hunger, including through the adoption or strengthening of national programmes to address food security and adequate livelihoods, as well as nutritional security, especially regarding vitamin A, iron and iodine deficiencies, the promotion of breastfeeding, as well as programmes, for example, school meal programmes, that should ensure adequate nutrition for all children;

Elimination of violence against children

27. Condemns all forms of violence against children, and urges all States:

(a) To take effective and appropriate legislative and other measures or, where it exists, to strengthen legislation to prohibit and eliminate all forms of violence against children in all settings;

(b) To respect fully the rights, human dignity and physical integrity of children and to prohibit and eliminate any emotional or physical violence or any other humiliating or degrading treatment;

(c) To give priority attention to the prevention of all forms of violence against children and to addressing its underlying causes and its gender dimension through a systematic, comprehensive and multifaceted approach, recognizing that witnessing violence, including domestic violence, also causes harm to children;

(d) To protect children from all forms of violence or abuse by all those who work with and for children, including in educational settings, as well as by Government officials, such as the police, law enforcement authorities and employees and officials in detention centres or welfare institutions;

(e) To establish complaint mechanisms that are confidential, age-appropriate, gender-sensitive and accessible to all children and to undertake thorough and prompt investigations of all acts of violence and discrimination;

(f) To take measures to ensure that all those who work with and for children protect children from bullying and implement preventive and anti-bullying policies in order to ensure a safe and supportive environment free from harassment and violence;

(g) To strive to change attitudes that condone or normalize any form of violence against children, including cruel, inhuman or degrading forms of discipline, harmful traditional practices and all forms of sexual violence;

(h) To take measures to promote constructive and positive forms of discipline and child development approaches in all settings, including the home, schools and other educational settings, and throughout care and justice systems;

(i) To end impunity for perpetrators of crimes against children and to investigate and prosecute such acts of violence and impose appropriate penalties, recognizing that persons convicted of violent offences against children, including sexual abuse, who continue to pose a risk of harm to children should be prevented from working with children;

(j) To establish and develop safe, well-publicized, confidential and accessible mechanisms to enable children, their representatives and others to report violence against children as well as to file complaints in cases of violence against children, and to ensure that all victims of violence have access to appropriate confidential, child-sensitive health and social services, paying special attention to the gender-specific needs of girls and boys who are victims of violence;

(k) To address the gender dimension of all forms of violence against children and incorporate a gender perspective in all policies adopted and actions taken to protect children against all forms of violence, acknowledging that girls and boys face varying risks from different forms of violence at different ages and in different situations, and in this context recalls the agreed conclusions on the elimination of all forms of discrimination and violence against the girl child adopted by the Commission on the Status of Women at its fifty-first session;

28. Expresses deep concern about the impact of all forms of sexual violence in situations of armed conflict and about the harm caused by witnessing sexual violence, reaffirms in this regard relevant resolutions of the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council and the Human Rights Council, and notes with appreciation the attention paid to this issue in Security Council resolution 1820(2008) of 19 June 2008;

29. Condemns all kinds of abduction of children, in particular extortive abduction and abduction of children in situations of armed conflict, including for their recruitment and use in armed conflict, and urges States to take all appropriate measures to secure their unconditional release, rehabilitation and reintegration and their reunification with their families;

30. Urges all States to strengthen international cooperation and mutual assistance to prevent and protect children from all forms of violence and to end impunity for crimes against children;

31. Recognizes the contribution of the International Criminal Court in ending impunity for the most serious crimes against children, including genocide, crimes against humanity and war crimes, and calls upon States not to grant amnesties for such crimes;

32. Encourages all States and requests United Nations entities, regional organizations and civil society, including non-governmental organizations, to continue to widely disseminate and follow up on the study on violence against children by the independent expert appointed by the Secretary-General and to cooperate with the Special Representative of the Secretary-General on violence against children, once appointed, in promoting the implementation of the recommendations of the study, while promoting and ensuring country ownership and national plans and programmes in this regard;

33. Expresses deep concern about the delay in the appointment of the new mandate-holder as requested by the General Assembly in its resolution 62/141, and requests the Secretary-General to comply fully with the request and to take urgent action to appoint, in accordance with the above-mentioned resolution, at the highest possible level and without delay, a Special Representative on violence against children;

Promoting and protecting the rights of children, including children in particularly difficult situations

34. Calls upon all States to prevent violations of the rights of children working and/or living on the street, including discrimination, arbitrary detention and extrajudicial, arbitrary or summary executions, torture and all kinds of violence and exploitation, and to bring the perpetrators to justice, to adopt and implement policies for the protection, social and psychosocial rehabilitation and reintegration of those children and to adopt economic, social and educational strategies to address the problems of children working and/or living on the street;

35. Also calls upon all States to protect refugee, asylum-seeking and internally displaced children, taking into account their gender-specific needs, in particular those who are unaccompanied, who are particularly exposed to violence and risks in connection with armed conflict, such as recruitment, killing, maiming, sexual violence and exploitation, as well as trafficking, stressing the need for States as well as the international community to continue to pay more systematic and in-depth attention to the special assistance, protection and development needs of those children through, inter alia, programmes aimed at rehabilitation and physical and psychological recovery, and to programmes for voluntary repatriation and, where appropriate and feasible, local integration and resettlement, to give priority to family tracing and family reunification and, where appropriate, to cooperate with international humanitarian and refugee organizations, including by facilitating their work;

36. Further calls upon all States to ensure, for children belonging to minorities and vulnerable groups, including migrant children and indigenous children, the enjoyment of all human rights as well as access to health care, social services and education on an equal basis with others and to ensure that all such children, in particular victims of violence and exploitation, receive special protection and assistance;

37. Calls upon all States to ensure that any migration policies, including repatriation mechanisms, are in accordance with the best interests of the child and to take all necessary actions to ensure that unaccompanied migrant children and those who are victims of violence and exploitation receive special protection and assistance in accordance with international law;

38. Also calls upon all States to address, as a matter of priority, the vulnerabilities faced by children affected by and living with HIV, by providing support and rehabilitation to those children and their families, women and the elderly, particularly in their role as caregivers, promoting child-oriented HIV/AIDS policies and programmes and increased protection for children orphaned and affected by HIV/AIDS, pursuing all necessary efforts towards the goal of universal access to comprehensive prevention programmes, treatment, care and support by 2010 and intensifying efforts to develop new treatments for children, and building, where needed, and supporting the social security systems that protect them;

39. Further calls upon all States to protect, in law and in practice, the inheritance and property rights of orphans, with particular attention to underlying gender-based discrimination, which may interfere with the fulfilment of these rights;

40. Encourages States to promote actions, including through bilateral and multilateral technical cooperation and financial assistance, for the social reintegration of children in difficult situations, considering, inter alia, views, skills and capacities that those children have developed in the conditions in which they lived and, where appropriate, with their meaningful participation;

41. Calls upon States to protect all human rights of children in particularly difficult situations and to ensure that the best interests of the child are accorded primary consideration, and encourages the Committee on the Rights of the Child, the United Nations Children's Fund, other relevant United Nations bodies and mandate-holders, within their respective mandates, to pay particular attention to the conditions of these children in all States and, as appropriate, to make recommendations to strengthen their protection;

42. Recognizes that the mass media and their organizations have a key role to play in raising awareness about the situation of children and the challenges facing them and that they should also play a more active role in informing children, parents, families and the general public about initiatives that promote and protect the rights of children and should also contribute to educational programmes for children;

Children alleged to have infringed or recognized as having infringed penal law

43. Calls upon all States:

(a) To abolish by law and in practice the death penalty and life imprisonment without possibility of release for those under the age of 18 years at the time of the commission of the offence, including by taking all necessary measures to comply with their obligations assumed under relevant provisions of international human rights instruments, including the Convention on the Rights of the Child and the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights; and

(b) To keep in mind the safeguards guaranteeing protection of the rights of those facing the death penalty and the guarantees set out in United Nations safeguards adopted by the Economic and Social Council;

44. Encourages all States to develop and implement a comprehensive juvenile justice policy that includes, where appropriate, the introduction of alternative measures allowing for responses to juvenile delinquency without resorting to judicial procedures;

45. Urges States to take special measures to protect juvenile offenders, including the provision of adequate legal assistance, the training in juvenile justice of judges, police officers and prosecutors, as well as specialized defenders or other representatives who provide legal or other appropriate assistance, such as social workers, the establishment of specialized courts, the promotion of universal birth registration and age documentation and the protection of the right of juvenile offenders to maintain contact with their families through correspondence and visits, save in exceptional circumstances;

46. Calls upon all States to ensure that no child in detention is sentenced to forced labour or any form of cruel or degrading punishment or is deprived of access to and provision of health-care services, hygiene and environmental sanitation, education, basic instruction and vocational training;

Children of persons alleged to have infringed
or recognized as having infringed penal law

47. Also calls upon all States to give attention to the impact of parental detention and imprisonment on children and, in particular:

(a) To give priority consideration to non-custodial measures when sentencing or deciding on pre-trial measures for a child's sole or primary caretaker, subject to the need to protect the public and the child, and bearing in mind the gravity of the offence;

(b) To identify and promote good practices in relation to the needs and physical, emotional, social and psychological development of babies and children affected by parental detention and imprisonment;

Prevention and eradication of the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography

48. Welcomes the extension of the mandate of the Special Rapporteur on the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography by the Human Rights Council;

49. Also welcomes the convening of the World Congresses against Sexual Exploitation of Children and Adolescents, including the Third World Congress, held from 25 to 28 November 2008 in Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, aimed at stimulating debate and mobilizing the efforts of the international community to eradicate the sexual exploitation of children and adolescents;

50. Expresses deep concern about the persistence of the practices of the sale of children, child slavery, commercial sexual exploitation of children, child prostitution and child pornography in many parts of the world, and calls upon all States:

(a) To criminalize and penalize effectively all forms of sexual exploitation and sexual abuse of children, including all acts of paedophilia, including within the family or for commercial purposes, child pornography and child prostitution, child sex tourism, trafficking in children, the sale of children and the use of the Internet and other information and communications technologies for these purposes, and to take effective measures against the criminalization of children who are victims of exploitation;

(b) To ensure the prosecution and punishment of offenders, whether local or foreign, by the competent national authorities, either in the country in which the crime was committed, in the country of which the offender is a national or resident, in the country of which the victim is a national, or on any other basis permitted under domestic law, and for these purposes to afford one another the greatest measure of assistance and the necessary collaboration for prevention, detection, investigations or criminal or extradition proceedings;

(c) To criminalize and penalize effectively the sale of children, including for the purposes of transfer of organs of the child for profit, to increase cooperation at all levels to prevent and dismantle networks trafficking in or selling children and their organs and, for those States that have not yet done so, to consider signing and ratifying or acceding to the Protocol to Prevent, Suppress and Punish Trafficking in Persons, Especially Women and Children, supplementing the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime;

(d) To give due consideration to the recommendations made by the Special Rapporteur on the human rights aspects of the victims of trafficking in persons, especially women and children, in her report, devoted to the subject of forced marriage in the context of trafficking in persons;

(e) In cases of trafficking in children, the sale of children, child prostitution, child pornography and child sex tourism, to address effectively the needs of victims, including their safety, legal assistance and protection, physical and psychological recovery and full reintegration into society, paying particular attention to their gender-specific needs, including through bilateral and multilateral technical cooperation and financial assistance;

(f) To combat the existence of a market that encourages such criminal practices against children, including through the adoption, effective application and enforcement of preventive, rehabilitative and punitive measures targeting customers or individuals who sexually exploit or sexually abuse children, as well as by ensuring public awareness;

(g) To give priority to the identification of norms and standards on the responsibilities of transnational corporations and other business enterprises, particularly those involved in information and communications technologies, related to respect for the rights of children, including the right to be protected from sexual abuse and exploitation, particularly in the virtual realm, as set out in the relevant legal instruments, and to outline basic measures to be taken for implementation;

(h) To mobilize public awareness, involving families and communities, with the participation of children, concerning the protection of children against all forms of sexual exploitation and abuse;

(i) To contribute to the prevention and elimination of the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography by adopting a holistic approach, addressing the contributing factors, including underdevelopment, poverty, economic disparities, inequitable socio-economic structures, dysfunctional families, lack of education, urban-rural migration, gender discrimination, criminal or irresponsible adult sexual behaviour, child sex tourism, organized crime, harmful traditional practices, armed conflicts and trafficking in children;

(j) To take measures to eliminate the demand that fosters all forms of exploitation that leads to trafficking, including sexual exploitation and the sex tourism demand;

Children affected by armed conflict

51. Strongly condemns any recruitment or use of children in armed conflict contrary to international law, as well as other violations and abuses committed against children affected by armed conflict, and urges all States and other parties to armed conflict that are engaged in such practices to end them;

52. Recalls, in accordance with international humanitarian law, that indiscriminate attacks against civilians, including children, are prohibited and that they shall not be the object of attack, including by way of reprisal or excessive use of force, condemns such practices resulting in the killing and maiming of children, and demands that an end be immediately put to them;

53. Urges States, United Nations agencies, funds and programmes, other relevant international and regional organizations and civil society to give serious attention to all violations and abuses committed against children in situations of armed conflict;

54. Calls upon all States, relevant United Nations bodies and agencies and regional organizations to mainstream the rights of the child into all activities in conflict and post-conflict situations, to ensure adequate child protection training of their staff and personnel, including through the drafting and dissemination of codes of conduct, and to facilitate the participation of children in the development of strategies in this regard, inter alia, by ensuring that there are opportunities for children's voices to be heard and given due weight in accordance with the age and maturity of the child;

55. Calls upon States:

(a) To enhance complementarity and coordination of national policies and strategies related to security, development, human rights and humanitarian issues with a view to addressing the short-, medium- and long-term impacts of armed conflict on children in an effective, sustainable and comprehensive manner;

(b) When ratifying the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the involvement of children in armed conflict, to raise the minimum age for voluntary recruitment of persons into the national armed forces from that set out in article 38, paragraph 3, of the Convention, bearing in mind that under the Convention persons under 18 years of age are entitled to special protection, and to adopt safeguards to ensure that such recruitment is not forced or coerced;

(c) To take all feasible measures to ensure the demobilization and effective disarmament of children used in armed conflicts and to implement effective measures for their rehabilitation, physical and psychological recovery and reintegration into society, in particular through educational measures, taking into account the rights and the specific needs and capacities of girls;

(d) To ensure timely and adequate funding for national disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programmes for children and for settlement, rehabilitation and reintegration efforts for all children associated with armed forces and groups, including detained children, particularly in support of national initiatives, to secure the long-term sustainability of such efforts, including through the use of a multisectoral and community-based approach that is inclusive of all children, family-based care arrangements, as also highlighted in the Principles and Guidelines on Children Associated with Armed Forces or Armed Groups (the Paris Principles), and the mobilization of financial resources and technical assistance from international cooperation for rehabilitation and reintegration programmes for children, including by making use of all international forums and conferences related to this matter, including the meetings in follow-up to the "Free Children from War" conference, held in Paris on 5 and 6 February 2007;

(e) To undertake measures to ensure that children in situations of armed conflict enjoy all the rights enshrined in relevant international instruments, and that national authorities, with the support of the international community, as appropriate, take steps to ensure the delivery of basic services necessary for the survival of children in different areas, including health, education, nutrition, water, sanitation and psychosocial recovery;

(f) To encourage the involvement of young people in activities concerning the protection of children affected by armed conflict, including programmes for reconciliation, peace consolidation, peacebuilding and children-to-children networks;

(g) To protect children affected by armed conflict, in particular from violations of international humanitarian law and human rights law, and to ensure that they receive timely, effective humanitarian assistance, in accordance with international humanitarian law, including the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949, and calls upon the international community to hold those responsible for violations accountable, inter alia, through the International Criminal Court;

(h) To take all feasible measures, in accordance with international humanitarian law and human rights law, as a matter of priority, to prevent the recruitment and use of children by armed groups, as distinct from the armed forces of a State, including the adoption of policies that do not tolerate such practices and legal measures necessary to prohibit and criminalize them;

(i) To support relevant existing internationally agreed mechanisms established to address the issue of children in armed conflict that contribute to the roles, responsibilities and capacities of national Governments in this field;

56. Takes note of the updating of the Cape Town Principles on child soldiers, which led to the Paris Principles, encourages Member States to consider using the Paris Principles to inform their work in protecting children from the effects of armed conflicts, and requests the relevant entities of the United Nations system, within their mandates, and invites civil society to assist Member States in this field;

57. Calls upon all States and relevant United Nations bodies to continue to support, as appropriate, national and international mine action efforts, including with regard to cluster munitions and other unexploded ordnance;

58. Condemns in the strongest terms rape and sexual violence committed against children in armed conflict, expresses deep concern at mass and systematic rape and sexual violence committed against children in armed conflict, in some instances calculated to humiliate, dominate, instil fear and disperse and/or forcibly relocate a population, calls upon all States and relevant United Nations bodies and agencies and regional organizations to address this issue, as well as the issue of sexual exploitation and abuse of children in United Nations peacekeeping operations, and urges States to adopt appropriate national legislation and to ensure rigorous investigation and prosecution of such crimes;

59. Reaffirms the essential roles of the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council and the Human Rights Council for the promotion and protection of the rights and welfare of children, including children affected by armed conflict, and notes the increasing role played by the Security Council in ensuring protection for children affected by armed conflict;

60. Notes with appreciation the steps taken regarding Security Council resolution 1612(2005) of 26 July 2005 and the efforts of the Secretary-General to implement the monitoring and reporting mechanism on children and armed conflict in accordance with that resolution, with the participation of and in cooperation with national Governments and relevant United Nations and civil society actors, including at the country level, as well as the work carried out by United Nations child protection advisers in peacekeeping operations;

61. Takes note with appreciation of the work of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Children and Armed Conflict, recognizes the increased level of activity of her office and the progress achieved since the establishment of the mandate of the Special Representative, and, bearing in mind its resolution 60/231 of 23 December 2005, recommends that the Secretary-General extend the mandate of the Special Representative for a further period of three years;

62. Also takes note with appreciation of the report of the Special Representative and of the significant developments and achievements in the protection of children in armed conflict at the national and international levels, and emphasizes the contribution of her field visits conducted with the consent of the State concerned in situations of armed conflict as an important element in the implementation of her mandate;

63. Recognizes the need for discussion on the issues raised in the report of the Special Representative, calls upon Member States and observers and invites relevant entities of the United Nations system as well as civil society, as appropriate, to carefully study the recommendations contained therein, and stresses the need for the views of Member States to be fully taken into account in this regard;

III

Child labour

64. Expresses deep concern about the fact that about 218 million children in the world today are involved in child labour, and that more than half of those children are involved in hazardous work that is damaging to their safety, mental and physical health or moral development, including in hazardous activities in agriculture, mining and domestic labour, or in the worst forms of child labour, such as child pornography and sexual exploitation, sale and trafficking in children, forced or compulsory labour, including forced or compulsory recruitment of children for use in armed conflict, and different forms of slavery or practices similar to slavery;

65. Recognizes that a comprehensive and coherent approach to preventing and eradicating child labour must aim at poverty eradication, sustainable development and the provision of quality education and social protection measures, including protection against economic exploitation; special attention should be given to preventing any work that is likely to be hazardous, to interfere with the child's education or to be harmful to the child's health or physical, mental, spiritual, moral or social development so as to respond to the multidimensional reality of child labour;

66. Also recognizes that the prevention and eradication of child labour and action towards the achievement of the Millennium Development Goals, in particular those related to education, poverty eradication, gender equality and global partnership for development, mutually reinforce each other;

67. Further recognizes that, given the role of the family environment in the full and harmonious development of the child and in preventing and eradicating child labour, children and their families should be entitled to receive comprehensive protection and support;

68. Recognizes that child labour contributes to the perpetuation of poverty and remains a central obstacle to realizing the right of all children to education and to protection from violence, abuse and exploitation and that education, at the same time, including literacy and adult education initiatives within the framework of international and regional cooperation, is a key element in preventing and eradicating poverty and child labour;

69. Takes note with appreciation of the establishment of the Global Task Force on Child Labour and Education for All by a number of relevant organizations of the United Nations system and civil society representatives and of the effort to integrate more closely work on tackling child labour and promoting education for all children;

70. Urges all States that have not yet ratified the Convention concerning Minimum Age for Admission to Employment, 1973 (Convention No. 138) and the Convention concerning the Prohibition and Immediate Action for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labour, 1999 (Convention No. 182) of the International Labour Organization to consider doing so as a matter of priority;

71. Recognizes the decisive role of employers' and workers' organizations in the prevention and eradication of child labour and that their continuous commitment and engagement remain essential;

72. Also recognizes the prevalence of violence against children in many work settings, including physical punishment, humiliation and sexual harassment, including in the context of unregulated domestic work, and encourages the International Labour Organization to pay particular attention to violence against children in work settings, including the issue of domestic work;

73. Calls upon all States to translate into concrete action their commitment to the progressive and effective elimination of child labour that is likely to be hazardous or to interfere with the child's education or to be harmful to the child's health or physical, mental, spiritual, moral or social development, to eliminate immediately the worst forms of child labour, to promote education as a key strategy in this regard, including the creation of vocational training and apprenticeship programmes and the integration of working children into the formal education system, and to examine and devise economic policies, where necessary, in cooperation with the international community, that address factors contributing to these forms of child labour;

74. Also calls upon all States:

(a) To elaborate and implement strategies for the prevention and elimination of child labour contrary to accepted international standards, including time-bound strategies for the immediate elimination of the worst forms of child labour, and for the protection of children from all forms of economic exploitation, giving special attention to specific dangers faced by girls and by boys;

(b) To increase the focus on access to quality education as a way to help attract and keep children in school, including by emphasizing the goal of a well-trained teaching force with appropriate salaries and working and living conditions and ongoing professional support for children in educational settings, as well as increasing access to information and communications technologies for schools, and calls upon the international community to provide cooperation in these fields;

(c) To assess and systematically examine the magnitude, nature and causes of child labour and to strengthen the collection and analysis of data on child labour, giving special attention to specific dangers faced by girls;

(d) To take concrete measures for the rehabilitation and social integration of children removed from situations involving the worst forms of child labour by, inter alia, ensuring access to education and social services;

(e) To take appropriate steps to assist one another in the elimination of the worst forms of child labour through enhanced international cooperation and/or assistance, including support for social and economic development, poverty eradication programmes and universal education;

(f) To promote policies and legislation aimed at addressing national priorities relating to the prevention and eradication of child labour through family-centred components of policies and programmes as part of an integrated comprehensive approach to development, bearing in mind equality between women and men;

(g) To ensure that the applicable requirements of the International Labour Organization for the employment of girls and boys are respected and effectively enforced, to ensure also that girls who are employed have equal access to decent work and equal pay and remuneration, and are protected from economic exploitation, discrimination, sexual harassment, violence and abuse in the workplace, are aware of their rights and have access to formal and non-formal education, skills development and vocational training, and to raise government and public awareness as to the nature and scope of the special needs of girls, including migrant girls, employed as domestic workers and of those performing excessive domestic chores in their own households;

(h) To put in place programmes and social protection systems, guided by the principle of the best interests of the child, to support and protect migrant children, especially the girl child, who are vulnerable to child labour, including the worst forms of child labour;

(i) To develop gender-sensitive measures, including national action plans, where appropriate, to eliminate child labour, including the worst forms of child labour, including commercial sexual exploitation, slavery-like practices, forced and bonded labour, trafficking and hazardous forms of child labour, and to ensure that children have access to education and vocational training, health services, food, shelter and recreation;

75. Urges all States to pursue a national policy designed to ensure the effective eradication of child labour, and encourages those States that have not yet done so to raise progressively the minimum age for admission to employment or work to a level consistent with the fullest physical and mental development of young persons;

76. Calls upon all States and the United Nations system to strengthen international cooperation as a means of assisting Governments in ensuring the realization of the rights of the child and in attaining the objective of eradicating child labour contrary to accepted international standards;

77. Calls upon all States to protect children from all forms of economic exploitation by mobilizing national partnerships and international cooperation, to improve the conditions of children by, inter alia, providing working children with free basic education and vocational training and integrating them into the education system in every way possible, and to encourage support for social and economic policies aimed at poverty eradication and at providing families, particularly women, with employment and income-generating opportunities;

78. Calls upon the international community to promote international cooperation to assist developing countries, upon request, in addressing child labour and its root causes, inter alia, through social and economic policies aimed at poverty eradication, while stressing that labour standards should not be used for protectionist trade purposes;

79. Calls upon States and the international community to mainstream action relating to child labour into national poverty eradication and development efforts, especially in policies and programmes in the areas of health, education, employment and social protection;

80. Welcomes the efforts of the Committee on the Rights of the Child in the area of child labour, and encourages the Committee, as well as other relevant human rights treaty bodies, within their respective mandates, to continue to monitor this growing problem when examining the reports of States parties;

IV Follow-up

81. Decides:

(a) To request the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its sixty-fourth session a report on the rights of the child containing information on the status of the Convention on the Rights of the Child and the issues addressed in the present resolution, with a focus on international efforts and national progress in tackling child labour and progress towards meeting the target of eliminating the worst forms of child labour by 2016, as agreed in the context of the International Labour Organization;

(b) To request the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Children and Armed Conflict to continue to submit reports to the General Assembly and the Human Rights Council on the activities undertaken in discharging her mandate, including information on her field visits, and on the progress achieved and the challenges remaining on the children and armed conflict agenda;

(c) To invite the Chairperson of the Committee on the Rights of the Child to present an oral report on the work of the Committee to the General Assembly at its sixty-fourth session as a way to enhance communication between the Assembly and the Committee;

(d) To invite all Member States, organizations of the United Nations system, non-governmental organizations and individuals to observe the twentieth anniversary of the adoption of the Convention and to request the Secretary-General to take the measures necessary, within existing resources, for the observance of this anniversary by the United Nations;

(e) To continue its consideration of the question at its sixty-fourth session under the item entitled "Promotion and protection of the rights of children", focusing section III of the resolution on the rights of the child on "The right of the child to express his or her views freely in all matters affecting him or her".

Convention on migrant workers

Accessions and ratifications

As at 31 December, the number of parties to the International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 45/158 [YUN 1990, p. 594] and which entered into force in 2003 [YUN 2003, p. 676], rose to 40, with Jamaica, Paraguay and Rwanda becoming parties in 2008.

Implementation

Monitoring body. The Committee on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families held its eighth (14–25 April) [A/63/48] and ninth (24–28 November) [A/64/48] sessions in Geneva. Under article 74 of the Convention, the Committee considered the reports of Bolivia, El Salvador and Syria, and adopted concluding observations on them. The Committee noted with concern that many initial reports from States parties under article 73 of the Convention requiring them to report on the measures they had taken to give effect to the provisions of the Convention, had not yet been received. It decided to send reminders to those States whose reports were overdue. The Committee adopted its guidelines for the submission of periodic reports by States parties, which were annexed to its report. It also adopted a proposal on the topic of migration, development and human rights in preparation for the Global Forum on Migration and Development 2008 (see p. 1185).

Convention on genocide

As at 31 December, 140 States were parties to the 1948 Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 260 A (III) [YUN 1948–49, p. 959].

Report of Secretary-General. Pursuant to a Human Rights Council request [YUN 2007, p. 689], the Secretary-General submitted in March an updated report [A/HRC/7/37] on the implementation of the Five-Point Action Plan to prevent genocide [YUN 2006, p. 784] and on the activities of the Special Adviser on the Prevention of Genocide. In terms of the implementation of the Action Plan, some progress was made in developing a culture of prevention within the UN system, including improved coordination in the response of different UN entities. However, UN system capacity for effective and timely prevention needed further strengthening. The report also covered the responsibility to protect populations from genocide, war crimes, ethnic cleansing and crimes against humanity, as embodied in the 2005 World Summit Outcome [YUN 2005, p. 48]. In February, the Secretary-General appointed as Special Adviser Edward Luck (United States) to develop ideas contained in the Outcome that would assist the Assembly in its consideration of the responsibility to protect.

Within the context of his mandate, the activities of the Special Adviser on the Prevention of Genocide focused on the importance of adapting his work to the challenges of prevention on the ground, including the interrelated areas of protecting populations at risk, accountability, humanitarian assistance and addressing the underlying causes of conflict. In that regard, the Special Adviser was developing a strategy and methodology to identify and address gaps between those responsibilities and responses to conditions on the ground, and to utilize opportunities in the UN response to specific country situations. The Special Adviser's activities also related to individual countries. Activities with regard to post-electoral violence in Kenya included dispatching staff to the country and making recommendations to the Secretary-General following the missions to that country. He also engaged with governmental, intergovernmental and non-governmental actors to strengthen collaboration. Concerning challenges and opportunities for the prevention of genocide, the report noted the difficulty experienced by the United Nations in recognizing the risks of large-scale violence and in acting early enough to ensure timely and effective prevention. It was suggested that the Special Adviser could contribute to improving that situation by ensuring that risks of large-scale violence were promptly recognized and opportunities provided for UN agencies, departments and programmes to play a preventive role.

Human Rights Council action. On 28 March [A/63/53 (res. 7/25)], the Human Rights Council, considering the sixtieth anniversary of the Convention, reiterated the responsibility of each State to protect its population from genocide, and called on States that had not become parties to the Convention to do so as a matter of priority. States should cooperate in strengthening collaboration among mechanisms that contributed to the early detection and prevention of massive, serious and systematic violations of human rights that led to genocide. The Council welcomed the decisions of the Secretary-General and of the Assembly in resolution 62/238 [YUN 2007, p. 1451] to retain the mandate of the Special Adviser, to upgrade the position to the level of Under-Secretary-General and to strengthen the office. The Council requested the High Commissioner to circulate the Secretary-General's reports to obtain views, and to report to the Council at its tenth (2009) session. The High Commissioner should elaborate and implement commemorative events to mark the sixtieth anniversary of the Convention, including a seminar on the prevention of genocide. The Secretary-General should submit to the Council's tenth session an updated report on UN system efforts to prevent genocide and on the activities of the Special Adviser.

Convention on rights of persons with disabilities

Accessions and ratifications

As at 31 December, the number of States parties to the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 61/106 [YUN 2006, p. 785], stood at 46. During the year the Convention was ratified or acceded to by Argentina, Australia, Austria, Brazil, Chile, China, Costa Rica, Ecuador, Egypt, Guinea, Honduras, Jordan, Kenya, Lesotho, Mali, New Zealand, the Niger, Paraguay, Peru, the Philippines, Qatar, the Republic of Korea, Rwanda, San Marino, Saudi Arabia, Slovenia, Sweden, Thailand, Tunisia, Turkmenistan, Uganda and Vanuatu. The Optional Protocol, which established an individual complaints mechanism, was ratified during the year by Argentina, Austria, Bangladesh, Brazil, Chile, Costa Rica, Ecuador, Guinea, Mali, the Niger, Paraguay, Peru, Rwanda, San Marino, Saudi Arabia, Slovenia, Sweden, Tunisia and Uganda, bringing the number of States parties to 27 as at 31 December. The Convention and its Optional Protocol entered into force on 3 May.

In August, the Secretary-General reported on the status of the Convention and its Optional Protocol [A/63/264 & Corr.1].

Conference of States Parties. The Conference of States Parties to the Convention, at its first session (New York, 31 October and 3 November) [CRPD/CSP/2008/4], elected, in accordance with article 34 of the Convention, the 12 members of the Committee on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities—the body of independent experts that would monitor implementation of the Convention by States parties. Six experts were selected to serve a two-year term, beginning on 1 January 2009, while the other six experts would serve for four years, beginning on 1 January 2009. In accordance with article 40 of the Convention, an interactive panel discussion focused on “The Convention of the Rights of Persons with Disabilities as a human rights instrument and a tool for achieving the Millennium Development Goals”.

UN Inter-Agency Support Group. The United Nations Inter-Agency Support Group for the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities, formed to coordinate UN system support to the Convention, issued a statement articulating UN system commitment to promote, protect and ensure the full and equal enjoyment of all human rights and fundamental freedoms by all persons with disabilities and to promote respect for their dignity as laid out in the Convention.

Human Rights Council action. On 27 March [A/63/53 (res. 7/9)], the Human Rights Council called upon Governments to prevent and prohibit all forms of discrimination against persons with disabilities, and to ensure their full and effective participation and inclusion, as well as respect for their autonomy, independence and equality of opportunity. It encouraged States to raise awareness about the rights of persons with disabilities and promote positive perceptions and greater social awareness. It requested OHCHR to prepare a study to enhance awareness and understanding of the Convention, to be made available on the OHCHR website in an accessible format prior to the Council’s tenth (2009) session. It decided to hold an annual interactive debate on the rights of persons with disabilities; the first debate, to be held at its tenth session, would focus on key legal measures for ratification and effective implementation of the Convention.

(For information on the Organization’s efforts to protect the rights of persons with disabilities, see p. 856.)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December [meeting 71], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/63/430/Add.5], adopted resolution 63/192 without vote [agenda item 64 (e)].

Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities and the Optional Protocol thereto

The General Assembly,

Recalling its previous relevant resolutions, the most recent of which was resolution 62/170 of 18 December 2007, as well as relevant resolutions of the Human Rights Council, the Commission for Social Development and the Commission on Human Rights,

1. Welcomes the entry into force of the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities and the Optional Protocol thereto on 3 May 2008;

2. Also welcomes the fact that, since the opening for signature of the Convention and the Optional Protocol on 30 March 2007, one hundred and thirty-seven States have already signed and forty-five States have ratified the Convention and eighty States have signed and twenty-seven States have ratified the Optional Protocol, and that one regional integration organization has signed the Convention;

3. Calls upon those States that have not yet done so to consider signing and ratifying the Convention and the Optional Protocol as a matter of priority;

4. Welcomes the holding of the first session of the Conference of States Parties to the Convention on 31 October and 3 November 2008, and the establishment of the Committee on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities;

5. Also welcomes the report of the Secretary-General;

6. Further welcomes the Joint Statement of Commitment to the Convention of the Inter-Agency Support Group on the Convention;

7. Invites the Secretary-General to intensify efforts to assist States to become parties to the Convention and the Optional Protocol, including by providing assistance with a view to achieving universal adherence;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the staff and facilities necessary to support the effective performance of the functions of the Conference of States Parties and of the Committee established under the Convention and the Optional Protocol, as well as for the dissemination of information on the Convention and the Optional Protocol, taking into account the provisions of the Convention, in particular on accessibility;

9. Also requests the Secretary-General to continue the progressive implementation of standards and guidelines for the accessibility of facilities and services of the United Nations system, taking into account relevant provisions of the Convention, in particular when undertaking renovations, including interim arrangements;

10. Further requests the Secretary-General to take further actions to promote the rights of persons with disabilities in the United Nations system in accordance with the Convention, including the retention and recruitment of persons with disabilities;

11. Requests United Nations agencies and organizations, and invites intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, to continue to strengthen efforts undertaken to disseminate accessible information on the Convention and the Optional Protocol, including to children and young people to promote their understanding, and to assist States parties in implementing their obligations under those instruments;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its sixty-fourth session a report on the status of the Convention and the Optional Protocol and the implementation of the present resolution.

International Convention for protection from enforced disappearance

Accessions and ratifications

As at 31 December, the International Convention for the Protection of All Persons from Enforced Disappearance, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 61/177 [YUN 2006, p. 800], had seven States parties. In 2008, Bolivia, France, Honduras, Mexico and Senegal became parties to the Convention, which would enter into force when ratified or acceded to by 20 States.

Human Rights Council action. On 28 March [A/63/53 (res. 7/26)], the Human Rights Council encouraged States that were in the process of becoming parties to the Convention to complete their internal procedures towards that end as expeditiously as possible; and those States that had not done so to become parties. It invited States to join the campaign for the sharing of information on best practices and to work towards the early coming into force of the Convention.

(For insight on the operation of the Organization's mechanism to protect all persons from enforced disappearances, see the work of the Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances on p. 807.)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December [meeting 70], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/63/430/Add.2], adopted resolution 63/186 without vote [agenda item 64 (b)].

International Convention for the Protection of All Persons from Enforced Disappearance

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its resolution 61/177 of 20 December 2006, by which it adopted and opened for signature, ratification and accession the International Convention for the Protection of All Persons from Enforced Disappearance,

Recalling its resolution 47/133 of 18 December 1992, by which it adopted the Declaration on the Protection of All Persons from Enforced Disappearances as a body of principles for all States,

Recalling also Human Rights Council resolution 7/12 of 27 March 2008, by which the Council extended the mandate of the Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances for a further period of three years,

Deeply concerned, in particular, by the increase in enforced or involuntary disappearances in various regions of the world, including arrest, detention and abduction, when these are part of or amount to enforced disappearances, and by the growing number of reports concerning harassment, ill-treatment and intimidation of witnesses of disappearances or relatives of persons who have disappeared,

Acknowledging that acts of enforced disappearance are recognized in the Convention as crimes against humanity, in certain circumstances,

Recognizing that the entry into force of the Convention, as soon as possible, through its ratification by twenty States, will be a significant event,

1. Welcomes the adoption on 20 December 2006 of the International Convention for the Protection of All Persons from Enforced Disappearance, and looks forward to its entry into force at an early date;

2. Also welcomes the fact that since the signing ceremony for the Convention, on 6 February 2007, eighty States have signed the Convention and seven have ratified it, and calls upon States which have not yet done so to consider signing and ratifying the Convention as a matter of priority, as well as to consider the option provided for in articles 31 and 32 of the Convention regarding the Committee on Enforced Disappearances;

3. Requests the Secretary-General and the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to intensify efforts to assist States to become parties to the Convention, with a view to achieving universal adherence;

4. Requests United Nations agencies and organizations, and invites intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and the Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances, to continue undertaking efforts to disseminate information on the Convention, to promote understanding of it, to prepare for its entry into force and to assist States parties in implementing their obligations under this instrument;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its sixty-fourth session a report on the status of the Convention and the implementation of the present resolution.

Other activities

Follow-up to 1993 World Conference

Report of High Commissioner. In February, the High Commissioner issued a report [A/HRC/7/38 & Add.1,2] on follow-up to the World Conference on Human Rights [YUN 1993, p. 908], which created the basis for the establishment of OHCHR. The report elaborated on the themes identified in the Strategic Management Plan for 2006–2007 [YUN 2006, p. 766] and their implementation. It reviewed efforts to strengthen country engagement, as well as activities for the sixtieth anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights (see p. 726). The report focused on the commitment to fight racism, particularly within the Durban Review process (see p. 762); the preparation of the OHCHR Strategic Management Plan for 2008–2009; support for human rights instruments; and the potential role of the Universal Periodic Review in promoting their universal application.

On 18 December, the General Assembly took note of the Third Committee's report [A/63/430/Add.4] on the implementation of and follow-up to the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, adopted at the 1993 World Conference (decision 63/535).

Human rights education

Public information

Progress report. A joint progress report of the Secretary-General and OHCHR, submitted in February [A/HRC/7/34], covered public information activities in human rights and global activities carried out for the sixtieth anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, carried out by OHCHR and DPI, including the UN information services in Geneva and Vienna, and other UN information centres. It described a variety of information products, services and activities, with an emphasis on the use of modern communication tools.

World programme for human rights education

Report of High Commissioner. In July [A/HRC/9/4 & Corr.1], the High Commissioner reported on OHCHR activities from January 2007 to June 2008 to implement the World Programme for Human Rights Education, proclaimed by the General Assembly in 2004 [YUN 2004, p. 678]. In 2005, the Assembly had adopted the plan of action for the World Programme's first phase (2005–2007) [YUN 2005, p. 745], which focused on primary and secondary school systems. Activities centred on promoting and assisting national implementation of the plan of action, as well as on coordinating related international efforts. OHCHR devoted a section of its website to the World Programme, supported the collection and documentation of good practices on human rights education in regional school systems, and was developing a compendium of good practices for Central Asia, Europe and North America. OHCHR contributed to the implementation of the World Programme and its plan of action by facilitating information-sharing and networking among all actors; supporting national capacities for human rights education and training; as well as grass-roots human rights education initiatives; developing and disseminating human rights training and education materials; and globally disseminating the Universal Declaration of Human Rights.

Human Rights Council action. On 24 September [A/63/53/Add.1 (res. 9/12)], the Human Rights Council encouraged States to adopt and implement programmes of human rights education, such as the World Programme for Human Rights Education, in all learning institutions, including capacity-building programmes for law enforcement professionals, in order to advance a culture of respect for human rights.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December [meeting 70], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/63/430/Add.2], adopted resolution 63/173 without vote [agenda item 64 (b)].

International Year of Human Rights Learning

The General Assembly,

Recalling that the purposes and principles contained in the Charter of the United Nations include promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all,

Recalling also its resolution 60/251 of 15 March 2006, in which it decided that the Human Rights Council should, inter alia, promote human rights education and learning as well as advisory services, technical assistance and capacity-building,

Recalling further the 2005 World Summit Outcome, in which Heads of State and Government expressed their support for the promotion of human rights education and learning at all levels, including through the implementation of the World Programme for Human Rights Education, as appropriate, and encouraged all States to develop initiatives in that regard,

Recalling its resolution 62/171 of 18 December 2007, by which it proclaimed the year commencing on 10 December 2008 the International Year of Human Rights Learning,

Considering that the sixtieth anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights in 2008 is a suitable occasion for the United Nations to increase its efforts to promote a human rights culture worldwide through human rights learning as a way of life, at all levels,

Reaffirming the complementarities between the World Programme for Human Rights Education and the International Year of Human Rights Learning,

Recognizing human rights learning as encompassing the acquisition and internalization of knowledge and understanding of one's own and others' human dignity,

Reaffirming that activities undertaken during the International Year of Human Rights Learning should broaden and deepen human rights learning on the basis of the principles of universality, indivisibility, interdependency, impartiality and objectivity, and on non-selectivity, constructive dialogue and cooperation, with a view to enhancing the promotion and protection of all human rights and fundamental freedoms, bearing in mind the duty of the State, regardless of its political, economic or cultural system, to promote and protect all human rights and fundamental freedoms, and the significance of national and regional particularities and various historical, cultural and religious backgrounds,

Acknowledging that civil society, academia, the private sector, where appropriate, and parliamentarians can play an important role at the national, regional and international levels in the promotion and protection of human rights, including in the development of ways and means to promote and implement learning about human rights as a way of life at the community level,

1. Reaffirms its conviction that every woman, man, youth and child can realize his or her full human potential through learning about all human rights and fundamental freedoms, including the ability to act on that knowledge in order to ensure the effective realization of human rights and fundamental freedoms for all;

2. Urges Member States to develop throughout the International Year of Human Rights Learning and beyond, in coordination with civil society, the private sector, academia and parliamentarians and regional organizations, including the appropriate specialized agencies, funds and programmes of the United Nations system, international strategies and/or regional, national and local programmes of action aimed at broad-based and sustained human rights learning at all levels, bearing in mind the complementary efforts undertaken within the framework of the World Programme for Human Rights Education;

3. Calls upon the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and the Human Rights Council to support, cooperate and collaborate with civil society, the private sector, academia, regional organizations and other relevant stakeholders, as well as with organizations, programmes and funds of the United Nations system, in efforts to develop, in particular, the design of international strategies and/or regional, national and local programmes of action aimed at broad-based and sustained human rights learning for all, including seminars and workshops for community leaders, keeping in mind a long-term multi-year process involving several countries in all regions;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to include the implementation of the present resolution in the report to the General Assembly at its sixty-fourth session, in accordance with its resolution 62/171.

National institutions

Reports of Secretary-General. In a January report [A/HRC/7/69], the Secretary-General reviewed OHCHR activities in 2007 to establish and strengthen national human rights institutions; measures taken by Governments and such institutions in that regard; and cooperation between such institutions and international human rights mechanisms. Information was also provided on the work of specific national human rights institutions in respect of thematic issues.

The Secretary-General concluded that national human rights institutions compliant with the principles relating to the status of national institutions for the promotion and protection of human rights (Paris Principles), adopted by the General Assembly in 1993 [YUN 1993, p. 898], were key elements of strong and effective national human rights protection systems. They could support Governments in ensuring that international human rights norms were applied at the national level. Ensuring their independence and autonomy was a priority. The accreditation process of the International Coordinating Committee of National Institutions for the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights (icc) had become more rigorous and thorough to ensure the independence and effectiveness of those institutions. OHCHR enhanced its support to icc and its newly established Bureau, as well as its accreditation procedure, so that national human rights institutions could ensure that international human rights norms were translated into consistent national laws and practices. OHCHR would provide secretariat support to icc in upholding the Paris Principles and ensure the review of compliance by those institutions. The process had resulted in an increase in applications for accreditation and the rise in the number of institutions with “A status” (compliance with the Paris Principles), as well as in the access recognized for such institutions by international human rights mechanisms.

Also in January [A/HRC/7/70], the Secretary-General reported on the icc process for accrediting national human rights institutions, and on ways of enhancing the participation of those institutions in the work of the Human Rights Council. An annex to the report listed 60 national institutions that were in compliance with the Paris Principles (“A status”); 3 institutions accredited that status with reserve, as the documentation submitted was insufficient to confer “A status”; 12 institutions not fully in compliance or which had provided insufficient information (“B status”); 9 institutions that were non-compliant (“C Status”); and 1 institution that had been suspended.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December [meeting 70], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/63/430/Add.2], adopted resolution 63/172 without vote [agenda item 64 (b)].

National institutions for the promotion and protection of human rights

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions and those of the Commission on Human Rights concerning national institutions for the promotion and protection of human rights,

Welcoming the rapidly growing interest throughout the world in the creation and strengthening of independent, pluralistic national institutions for the promotion and protection of human rights,

Recalling the principles relating to the status of national institutions for the promotion and protection of human rights (“the Paris Principles”),

Reaffirming the important role that such national institutions play and will continue to play in promoting and protecting human rights and fundamental freedoms and in developing and enhancing public awareness of those rights and freedoms,

Recognizing the important role of the United Nations in assisting the development of independent and effective national human rights institutions, guided by the Paris Principles, and recognizing also in this regard the potential for strengthened and complementary cooperation between the United Nations and those national institutions in the promotion and protection of human rights,

Recalling the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights on 25 June 1993, which reaffirmed the important and constructive role played by national human rights institutions, in particular in their advisory capacity to the competent authorities and their role in remedying human rights violations, in disseminating information on human rights and in education in human rights,

Recalling also the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action, in which Governments were urged to create or strengthen independent national institutions for the promotion and protection of human rights, including the human rights of women,

Reaffirming that all human rights are universal, indivisible, interrelated, interdependent and mutually reinforcing, and that all human rights must be treated in a fair and equal manner, on the same footing and with the same emphasis,

Bearing in mind the significance of national and regional particularities and various historical, cultural and religious backgrounds, and that all States, regardless of their political, economic and cultural systems, have the duty to promote and protect all human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Recalling the programme of action adopted by national institutions, at their meeting held in Vienna in June 1993 during the World Conference on Human Rights, for the promotion and protection of human rights, in which it was recommended that United Nations activities and programmes should be reinforced to meet the requests for assistance from States wishing to establish or strengthen their national institutions for the promotion and protection of human rights,

Noting the valuable role played and contributions made by national institutions in United Nations meetings dealing with human rights and the importance of their continued appropriate participation,

Welcoming the strengthening in all regions of regional cooperation among national human rights institutions and between national human rights institutions and other regional human rights forums,

Taking note with appreciation of the reports of the Secretary-General to the Human Rights Council on national institutions for the promotion and protection of human rights and on the accreditation process of the International Coordinating Committee of National Institutions for the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights,

Noting with satisfaction the strengthening of the accreditation procedure of the International Coordinating Committee of National Institutions,

Noting with appreciation the continuing work of the regional human rights networks in Europe, the Network of National Institutions for the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights in the Americas, the Asia Pacific Forum of National Human Rights Institutions and the Network of African National Human Rights Institutions,

Welcoming the strengthening of international cooperation among national human rights institutions, including through the International Coordinating Committee of National Institutions,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Reaffirms the importance of the development of effective, independent and pluralistic national institutions for the promotion and protection of human rights, in accordance with the principles relating to the status of national institutions for the promotion and protection of human rights ("the Paris Principles");

3. Recognizes the role of independent national institutions for the promotion and protection of human rights in working together with Governments to ensure full respect for human rights at the national level, including by contributing to follow-up actions, as appropriate, to the recommendations resulting from the international human rights mechanisms;

4. Welcomes the increasingly important role of national institutions for the promotion and protection of human rights in supporting cooperation between their Governments and the United Nations for the promotion and protection of human rights;

5. Recognizes that, in accordance with the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, it is the right of each State to choose the framework for national institutions that is best suited to its particular needs at the national level in order to promote human rights in accordance with international human rights standards;

6. Also recognizes that national institutions have a crucial role to play in promoting and ensuring the indivisibility and interdependence of all human rights, and calls upon States to ensure that all human rights are appropriately reflected in the mandate of their national human rights institutions when established;

7. Encourages Member States to establish effective, independent and pluralistic national institutions or, where they already exist, to strengthen them for the promotion and protection of human rights, as outlined in the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action;

8. Welcomes the growing number of States establishing or considering the establishment of national institutions for the promotion and protection of human rights;

9. Encourages national institutions for the promotion and protection of human rights established by Member States to continue to play an active role in preventing and combating all violations of human rights as enumerated in the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action and relevant international instruments;

10. Recognizes the role played by national institutions for the promotion and protection of human rights in the Human Rights Council, including its universal periodic review mechanism and the special procedures, as well as in the human rights treaty bodies, in accordance with Human Rights Council resolutions 5/1 and 5/2 of 18 June 2007 and Commission on Human Rights resolution 2005/74 of 20 April 2005;

11. Notes with satisfaction the efforts of those States that have provided their national institutions with more autonomy and independence, including by giving them an investigative role or enhancing such a role, and encourages other Governments to consider taking similar steps;

12. Acknowledges the role of national institutions in the strengthening of the rule of law and the promotion and protection of human rights in all sectors, and encourages cooperation, where appropriate, with the United Nations system, international financial institutions, and non-governmental organizations;

13. Urges the Secretary-General to continue to give high priority to requests from Member States for assistance in the establishment and strengthening of national human rights institutions;

14. Commends the high priority given by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to work on national institutions, encourages the High Commissioner, in view of the expanded activities relating to national institutions, to ensure that appropriate arrangements are made and budgetary resources provided to continue and further extend activities in support of national human rights institutions, and invites Governments to contribute additional voluntary funds to that end;

15. Welcomes the national institutions website as an important vehicle for the delivery of information to national institutions and also the launch of a database of comparative analysis of procedures and methods of complaint-handling by national human rights institutions;

16. Notes with appreciation the increasingly active and important role of the International Coordinating Committee of National Institutions for the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights, in close cooperation with the Office of the High Commissioner, in assisting Governments and national institutions, when requested, to follow up on relevant resolutions and recommendations concerning the strengthening of national institutions;

17. Also notes with appreciation the holding of regular meetings of the International Coordinating Committee of National Institutions and the arrangements for the participation of national human rights institutions in the sessions of the Human Rights Council;

18. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to provide the necessary assistance for holding meetings of the International Coordinating Committee of National Institutions during the sessions of the Human Rights Council, in cooperation with the Office of the High Commissioner;

19. Encourages national institutions to seek accreditation status through the International Coordinating Committee of National Institutions, and notes with satisfaction the strengthening of the accreditation procedure and the continued assistance of the Office of the High Commissioner in this regard, as well as the assistance of the Office to the conferences of the International Coordinating Committee;

20. Welcomes the continuation of the practice of national institutions convening regional meetings in some regions, and its initiation in others, and encourages national institutions, in cooperation with the High Commissioner, to organize similar events with Governments and non-governmental organizations in their own regions;

21. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to provide the necessary assistance for holding international and regional meetings of national institutions;

22. Recognizes the important and constructive role that the judiciary, parliament and civil society can play, in cooperation with national institutions, for better promotion and protection of human rights;

23. Encourages all Member States to take appropriate steps to promote the exchange of information and experience concerning the establishment and effective operation of national institutions;

24. Encourages all United Nations human rights mechanisms as well as agencies, funds and programmes to work within their respective mandates with Member States and national institutions in the promotion and protection of human rights with respect to, inter alia, projects in the area of good governance and rule of law, and in this regard welcomes the efforts made by the Office of the High Commissioner to develop partnerships in support of national institutions;

25. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its sixty-fourth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Also on 18 December [meeting 70], the Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/63/430/Add.2], adopted resolution 63/169 without vote [agenda item 64 (b)].

The role of the Ombudsman, mediator and other national human rights institutions in the promotion and protection of human rights

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its commitment to the principles and purposes of the Charter of the United Nations and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights,

Reaffirming the commitment of Member States, in accordance with the Charter, to promote and ensure the respect of human rights and fundamental freedoms, without distinction of any kind, such as race, colour, sex, language, religion, political or other opinion, national or social origin, property, birth or other status,

Recalling the principles relating to the status of national institutions for the promotion and protection of human rights, welcomed by the General Assembly in its resolution 48/134 of 20 December 1993 and annexed thereto,

Recognizing the role of the existing Ombudsman, whether a male or female, mediator and other national human rights institutions in the promotion and protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Underlining the importance of the autonomy and independence of the Ombudsman, mediator and other national human rights institutions, where they exist, in order to enable them to consider all issues related to the field of their competences,

Considering the role of the Ombudsman, mediator and other national human rights institutions in promoting good governance in public administrations, as well as improving their relations with citizens, and in strengthening the delivery of public services,

Considering also the important role of the existing Ombudsman, mediator and other national human rights institutions in contributing to the effective realization of the rule of law and respect for the principles of justice and equality,

Stressing that these institutions, where they exist, can have an important role in advising the Government with respect to bringing national legislation and national practices in line with their international human rights obligations,

Stressing also the importance of international cooperation in the field of human rights, and recalling the role played by regional and international associations of the Ombudsman, mediator and other national human rights institutions in promoting cooperation and sharing best practices,

1. Encourages Member States:

(a) To consider the creation or the strengthening of independent and autonomous Ombudsman, mediator and other national human rights institutions;

(b) To develop, where appropriate, mechanisms of cooperation between these institutions, where they exist, in order to coordinate their action, strengthen their achievements and enable the exchange of lessons learned;

2. Also encourages Member States:

(a) To consider conducting communication campaigns, with other relevant actors, in order to enhance public awareness on the importance of the role of the Ombudsman, mediator and other national human rights institutions;

(b) To give serious consideration to implementing the recommendations and proposals of their Ombudsman, mediator and other national human rights institutions, with the aim of addressing claims of the complainants, consistent with the principles of justice, equality and rule of law;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its sixty-fifth session on the implementation of the present resolution;

4. Decides to consider this issue at its sixty-fifth session.

Regional arrangements

Workshop on regional arrangements. As requested by the Human Rights Council in 2007 [YUN 2007, p. 699], a workshop (Geneva, 24–25 November) [A/HRC/11/3], attended by 28 representatives of regional and subregional mechanisms, national human rights institutions and NGOs, as well as diplomats, addressed regional arrangements for human rights promotion and protection. The workshop examined human rights commissions and similar mechanisms, including emerging mechanisms; human rights courts; and the relationship of regional human rights mechanisms with the UN human rights system. Participants concluded that regional human rights commissions and courts played an invaluable role in promoting and protecting international human rights standards. The High Commissioner should appoint a focal point to facilitate networking and information-sharing among the Human Rights Council, regional and subregional human rights mechanisms and OHCHR. The focal point should act as a clearing house of best practices and lessons learned in the experience of regional and subregional human rights mechanisms, including in the implementation of human rights standards at the regional level, and facilitate the provision of training to emerging regional and subregional mechanisms. The workshop should be held on a regular basis to promote the sharing of information and proposals for strengthening cooperation between the United Nations and human rights regional arrangements, and the identification of strategies for overcoming obstacles to human rights promotion and protection at the regional and international levels.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December [meeting 70], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/63/430/Add.2], adopted resolution 63/170 without vote [agenda item 64 (b)].

Regional arrangements for the promotion and protection of human rights

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 32/127 of 16 December 1977 and its subsequent resolutions concerning regional arrangements for the promotion and protection of human rights,

Recalling also Commission on Human Rights resolution 1993/51 of 9 March 1993 and its subsequent resolutions in this regard, and Human Rights Council resolution 6/20 of 28 September 2007,

Bearing in mind the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights on 25 June 1993, which reiterates, inter alia, the need to consider the possibility of establishing regional and subregional arrangements for the promotion and protection of human rights where they do not already exist,

Recalling that the World Conference recommended that more resources should be made available for the strengthening of regional arrangements for the promotion and protection of human rights under the programme of technical cooperation in the field of human rights of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights,

Reaffirming that regional arrangements play an important role in promoting and protecting human rights and should reinforce universal human rights standards, as contained in international human rights instruments,

Welcoming the fact that the Office of the High Commissioner has been systematically pursuing a regional and subregional approach through a variety of complementary means and methods, in order to maximize the impact of the activities of the United Nations at the national level, and that the Office intends to establish new regional offices,

1. Welcomes the continuing cooperation and assistance of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights in the further strengthening of the existing regional arrangements and regional machinery for the promotion and protection of human rights, in particular through technical cooperation aimed at national capacity-building, public information and education, with a view to exchanging information and experience in the field of human rights;

2. Also welcomes, in that respect, the close cooperation of the Office of the High Commissioner in the organization of regional and subregional training courses and workshops in the field of human rights, high-level governmental expert meetings and regional conferences of national human rights institutions;

3. Recognizes, therefore, that progress in promoting and protecting all human rights depends primarily on efforts made at the national and local levels, and that the regional approach should imply intensive cooperation and coordination with all partners involved, while bearing in mind the importance of international cooperation;

4. Welcomes the growing exchanges between the United Nations and the United Nations human rights treaty bodies, on the one hand, and regional organizations and institutions, such as the African Commission on Human and Peoples' Rights, the Community of Portuguese-speaking Countries, the Council of Europe, the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights, the International Organization of la Francophonie, the League of Arab States, the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe and other regional institutions, on the other;

5. Also welcomes the placement by the Office of the High Commissioner of regional representatives in subregions and in regional commissions;

6. Further welcomes the progress achieved in the establishment of regional and subregional arrangements for the promotion and protection of human rights, and, in this regard, notes with interest:

(a) The increasing cooperation between the Office of the High Commissioner and African organizations and suborganizations, in particular the African Union, the Economic Community of Central African States, the Economic Community of West African States and the Southern African Development Community;

(b) The support provided by the Office of the High Commissioner to the African Union for the strengthening of the promotion and protection of human rights in Africa, and welcomes in this regard the establishment of the African Court on Human and Peoples' Rights;

(c) The convening of the fourteenth annual Workshop on Regional Cooperation for the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights in the Asia-Pacific Region, held in Bali, Indonesia, from 10 to 12 July 2007, which, inter alia, included a discussion on future challenges for the Regional Framework for the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights in the Asia-Pacific Region and adopted a comprehensive set of points for follow-up action entitled the "Bali Action Points";

(d) The ongoing consultations among Governments aimed at the possible establishment of regional human rights arrangements held in the context of the Regional Framework, with the support and advice of national human rights institutions and civil society organizations of the Asia-Pacific region;

(e) The recent decision by the Association of the Southeast Asian Nations (ASEAN) to develop a mechanism for the promotion and protection of human rights;

(f) Activities undertaken within the framework of the regional project of the Office of the High Commissioner for the promotion and protection of human rights in the Latin American and Caribbean region and the strengthening of the cooperation between the Office of the High Commissioner, the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights and the Organization of American States;

(g) Ongoing initiatives to further develop arrangements for the promotion and protection of human rights by the Common Market of the South (MERCOSUR);

(h) Activities undertaken within the framework of cooperation between the Office of the High Commissioner and the League of Arab States;

(i) The continued cooperation towards the realization of universal standards between the Office of the High Commissioner and regional organizations in Europe and Central Asia, namely, the Council of Europe, and its various human rights bodies and mechanisms, the European Union and the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe, in particular for activities at the country level;

7. Invites States in areas in which regional arrangements in the field of human rights do not yet exist to consider, with the support and advice of national human rights institutions and civil society organizations, concluding agreements with a view to establishing, within their respective regions, suitable regional machinery for the promotion and protection of human rights;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to strengthen exchanges between the United Nations and regional intergovernmental organizations dealing with human rights and to make available adequate resources from within the regular budget of technical cooperation to the activities of the Office of the High Commissioner to promote regional arrangements;

9. Requests the Office of the High Commissioner to continue to pay special attention to the most appropriate ways of assisting countries of the various regions, at their request, under the programme of technical cooperation and to make, where necessary, relevant recommendations, and in this regard welcomes the decision of the Office to strengthen national protection systems in accordance with action 2 of the reform programme of the Secretary-General;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its sixty-fifth session a report on the state of regional arrangements for the promotion and protection of human rights, formulating concrete proposals and recommendations on ways and means to strengthen cooperation between the United Nations and regional arrangements in the field of human rights, and to include therein the results of action taken in pursuance of the present resolution;

11. Decides to consider the question further at its sixty-fifth session.

Africa

Report of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 62/221 [YUN 2007, p. 699], the Secretary-General submitted, in September [A/63/367], a report reviewing the activities of the Yaoundé-based Subregional Centre for Human Rights and Democracy in Central Africa from September 2007 to August 2008. The report detailed activities in capacity-building carried out by Governments and civil society organizations; technical cooperation and advisory activities; democracy, peace and security support; public information and dissemination of documentation; commemorative activities, including those relating to the sixtieth anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights; and the strengthening of partnerships with Governments, subregional organizations, civil society organizations and UN agencies.

The Secretary-General said that the strategy undertaken by the Centre in 2006 [YUN 2006, p. 699] had started to bear fruit. The Centre had become very visible and was trusted by national and regional organizations to provide input, advice and expertise. Relationships with Governments had been enhanced, and counterparts in relevant ministries had been identified. The Centre did not have the capacity to respond to all the requests it received for technical cooperation, training and legal advice. In 2008, four Governments and one subregional network expressed interest in technical cooperation with the Centre. The Centre advanced implementation of the memorandum of understanding with the Economic Community of Central African States, in particular regarding child rights, peace and security and general human rights training. It planned to further develop its democracy and transitional justice programmes to make them useful tools in political peacebuilding processes and transitions in Central Africa, and continued to broaden its impact on gender-based discrimination and violence.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December [meeting 70], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/63/430/Add.2], adopted resolution 63/177 without vote [agenda item 64 (b)].

Subregional Centre for Human Rights and Democracy in Central Africa

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 55/105 of 4 December 2000 concerning regional arrangements for the promotion and protection of human rights,

Recalling also its resolutions 55/34 B of 20 November 2000 and 55/233 of 23 December 2000, section III of its resolution 55/234 of 23 December 2000, its resolution 56/253 of 24 December 2001, and its resolutions 58/176 of 22 December 2003, 59/183 of 20 December 2004, 60/151 of 16 December 2005, 61/158 of 19 December 2006 and 62/221 of 22 December 2007 on the Subregional Centre for Human Rights and Democracy in Central Africa,

Recalling further that the World Conference on Human Rights recommended that more resources be made available for the strengthening of regional arrangements for the promotion and protection of human rights under the programme of technical cooperation in the field of human rights of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights,

Recalling the report of the High Commissioner,

Taking note of the holding of the twenty-seventh ministerial meeting of the United Nations Standing Advisory Committee on Security Questions in Central Africa, in Luanda from 13 to 15 May 2008,

Taking note also of the report of the Secretary-General,

Welcoming the 2005 World Summit Outcome, in particular the decision confirmed therein to double the regular budget of the Office of the High Commissioner over the next five years,

1. Welcomes the activities of the Subregional Centre for Human Rights and Democracy in Central Africa at Yaoundé;

2. Notes with satisfaction the support provided for the establishment of the Centre by the host country;

3. Takes note of the implementation of the new three-year strategy for the Centre, which aims to reinforce its activities;

4. Notes the efforts of the Secretary-General and the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to ensure the full implementation of the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly in order to provide sufficient funds and human resources for the missions of the Centre;

5. Requests the Secretary-General and the High Commissioner to continue to provide additional funds and human resources within the existing resources of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to enable the Centre to respond positively and effectively to the growing needs in the promotion and protection of human rights and in developing a culture of democracy and the rule of law in the Central African subregion;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its sixty-fourth session a report on the implementation of the present resolution.

Asia and the Pacific

Report of High Commissioner. In January [A/HRC/7/35], the High Commissioner submitted to the Human Rights Council the conclusion of the Fourteenth Annual Workshop on Regional Cooperation for the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights in the Asia-Pacific Region, held in Bali, Indonesia, in July 2007 [YUN 2007, p. 700]. The Workshop reviewed progress under the Tehran Framework of Regional Technical Cooperation Programme for Asia and the Pacific and discussed the theme of human rights and extreme poverty, as well as future challenges for the Asia-Pacific Regional Framework. The Workshop adopted the Bali Action Points for follow-up action.

Strengthening action to promote human rights

International cooperation in the field of human rights

Report of High Commissioner. Pursuant to a Human Rights Council request [YUN 2007, p. 700], the High Commissioner, in February, submitted a report [A/HRC/7/31] on the enhancement of international cooperation in the field of human rights, which summarized replies received, in response to a request for information, from Belarus, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Cuba, Guatemala, Iran, Japan, Oman, the Russian Federation and Switzerland, as well as from two human rights organizations—the Asia Pacific Forum of National Human Rights Institutions and the Commonwealth Human Rights Initiative.

Human Rights Council action. On 27 March [A/63/53 (res. 7/3)], the Human Rights Council reaffirmed the importance of enhancing international cooperation for the promotion and protection of human rights and for the achievement of the objectives of the fight against racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance. Considering that international human rights cooperation should contribute to preventing human rights violations, it requested the High Commissioner to consult States, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs on ways to enhance international cooperation and dialogue within the UN human rights machinery, and to report to the Council in 2009.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December [meeting 70], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/63/430/Add.2], adopted resolution 63/180 without vote [agenda item 64 (b)].

Enhancement of international cooperation in the field of human rights

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its commitment to promoting international cooperation, as set forth in the Charter of the United Nations, in particular Article 1, paragraph 3, as well as relevant provisions of the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights on 25 June 1993, for enhancing genuine cooperation among Member States in the field of human rights,

Recalling its adoption of the United Nations Millennium Declaration on 8 September 2000 and of its resolution 62/160 of 18 December 2007, Human Rights Council resolution 7/3 of 27 March 2008 and the resolutions of the Commission on Human Rights on the enhancement of international cooperation in the field of human rights,

Recalling also the World Conference against Racism, Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia and Related Intolerance, held at Durban, South Africa, from 31 August to 8 September 2001, and its role in the enhancement of international cooperation in the field of human rights,

Recognizing that the enhancement of international cooperation in the field of human rights is essential for the full achievement of the purposes of the United Nations, including the effective promotion and protection of all human rights,

Recognizing also that the promotion and protection of human rights should be based on the principle of cooperation and genuine dialogue and aimed at strengthening the capacity of Member States to comply with their human rights obligations for the benefit of all human beings,

Reaffirming that dialogue among religions, cultures and civilizations in the field of human rights could contribute greatly to the enhancement of international cooperation in this field,

Emphasizing the need for further progress in the promotion and encouragement of respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms through, inter alia, international cooperation,

Underlining the fact that mutual understanding, dialogue, cooperation, transparency and confidence-building are important elements in all activities for the promotion and protection of human rights,

Recalling the adoption of resolution 2000/22 of 18 August 2000, on the promotion of dialogue on human rights issues, by the Subcommission on the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights at its fifty-second session,

1. Reaffirms that it is one of the purposes of the United Nations and the responsibility of all Member States to promote, protect and encourage respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms through, inter alia, international cooperation;

2. Recognizes that, in addition to their separate responsibilities to their individual societies, States have a collective responsibility to uphold the principles of human dignity, equality and equity at the global level;

3. Reaffirms that dialogue among cultures and civilizations facilitates the promotion of a culture of tolerance and respect for diversity, and welcomes in this regard the holding of conferences and meetings at the national, regional and international levels on dialogue among civilizations;

4. Urges all actors on the international scene to build an international order based on inclusion, justice, equality and equity, human dignity, mutual understanding and promotion of and respect for cultural diversity and universal human rights, and to reject all doctrines of exclusion based on racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance;

5. Reaffirms the importance of the enhancement of international cooperation for the promotion and protection of human rights and for the achievement of the objectives of the fight against racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance;

6. Considers that international cooperation in the field of human rights, in conformity with the purposes and principles set out in the Charter of the United Nations and international law, should make an effective and practical contribution to the urgent task of preventing violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms;

7. Reaffirms that the promotion, protection and full realization of all human rights and fundamental freedoms should be guided by the principles of universality, non-selectivity, objectivity and transparency, in a manner consistent with the purposes and principles set out in the Charter;

8. Calls upon Member States, the specialized agencies and intergovernmental organizations to continue to carry out a constructive dialogue and consultations for the enhancement of understanding and the promotion and protection of all human rights and fundamental freedoms, and encourages non-governmental organizations to contribute actively to this endeavour;

9. Invites States and relevant United Nations human rights mechanisms and procedures to continue to pay attention to the importance of mutual cooperation, understanding and dialogue in ensuring the promotion and protection of all human rights;

10. Requests the Secretary-General, in collaboration with the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, to consult States and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations on ways and means to enhance international cooperation and dialogue in the United Nations human rights machinery, including the Human Rights Council;

11. Decides to continue its consideration of the question at its sixty-fourth session.

Advisory services and technical cooperation

Report of Secretary-General. A report of the Secretary-General [A/HRC/10/57 & Corr.1] provided information on human rights advisory services and technical cooperation. In Africa, most activities were carried out by the 22 OHCHR entities in the region, including support to 11 UN peace operations. The OHCHR Africa programme helped Governments, institutions and civil society organizations to incorporate human rights principles into their efforts to respond to the human rights needs of their people, reduce poverty, fight impunity and address discrimination, especially against women.

In Asia, the Office's capacity to implement technical cooperation was facilitated by the expansion of field presences, including the deployment of four human rights advisers in Indonesia, Maldives, Papua New Guinea and Sri Lanka. OHCHR also maintained two country offices in Cambodia and Nepal, two components of peacekeeping missions in Afghanistan and Timor-Leste and two regional offices in Bangkok, Thailand and Suva, Fiji. The Office worked with Member States, UN country teams and regional partners, including the Association of Southeast Asian Nations, the Pacific Islands Forum and the Asia Pacific Forum of National Human Rights Institutions.

In the Europe, North America and Central Asia region, the Office was increasingly engaged in Central Asia, where a regional office was established in Kyrgyzstan. The Office was also represented by human rights advisers to the UN country teams in the Russian Federation and the south Caucasus. Technical assistance and policy advocacy work in the region focused on impunity, weak institutions, women's rights, restrictions on freedom of expression and association, human rights in the fight against terrorism, racism and xenophobia, the treatment of asylum-seekers, irregular migrants and Roma, as well as poverty and the right to housing.

Technical cooperation activities in Latin America were mainly implemented through the regional office for Latin America in Panama; the four country offices in Bolivia, Colombia, Guatemala and Mexico; two human rights advisers in Ecuador and Nicaragua; and the human rights component in the United Nations Stabilization Mission in Haiti. Priorities included addressing impunity and weak institutions; discrimination, particularly against Afro-descendants and indigenous persons; poverty and inequality; and violence, mainly against women and children.

In the Middle East and North Africa, the Office had a regional office in Beirut, Lebanon, and a country office in the Occupied Palestinian Territory. It also supported the Human Rights Office of the United Nations Assistance Mission for Iraq. Thematic priorities included freedom of expression, association and assembly; the fight against impunity; attending to the needs of countries in conflict; and the human rights of non-citizens, namely refugees, stateless persons and migrant workers.

Voluntary Fund

During the year, the Board of Trustees of the UN Voluntary Fund for Technical Cooperation in the Field of Human Rights held its twenty-eighth (May) and twenty-ninth (November) sessions in Geneva [A/HRC/10/57 & Corr.1]. At the sessions, the Board examined various components of the United Nations Human Rights Programme on Technical Cooperation funded by the Voluntary Fund. In November, the annual OHCHR consultation with heads of field presences gave the Board the opportunity to learn first-hand from field representatives about the implementation of technical cooperation activities on the ground. Activities were implemented by OHCHR advisers in UN country teams in 12 countries; by Human Rights Units of peace missions in eight such missions; and by OHCHR field presences in six countries and territories.

As at 31 December, the estimated balance of the Fund was $12,108,096. Income in 2008 was $14,674,741 and total expenditures $13,573,336.

Cooperation with human rights bodies

Report of Secretary-General. In a February report [A/HRC/7/45 & Corr.1], submitted in accordance with a 2006 Human Rights Council request [YUN 2006, p. 760], the Secretary-General described situations in which individuals or members of NGOs had allegedly suffered intimidation or reprisal for having cooperated with UN human rights bodies regarding human rights violations. The report summarized related cases in Fiji, Indonesia, the Philippines and the Russian Federation, and underlined the seriousness of the alleged reprisals. Many other cases had not been recorded in the report due to security concerns or because the victims had requested that their cases not be publicized. Victims suffered violations of the most fundamental human rights, including the right to liberty and security of person and the right to freedom from torture and cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment. The report observed that the gravity of those reprisals reinforced the need for all representatives of UN human rights bodies, in cooperation with States, to continue to take urgent steps to help prevent the occurrence of such acts.

Protection of human rights

In 2008, the United Nations continued to protect human rights worldwide through several mechanisms. Its main organs—the Economic and Social Council, the General Assembly and the Security Council—remained actively engaged in protecting those rights. The Assembly’s Human Rights Council carried out its task as the central United Nations intergovernmental body responsible for promoting and protecting all human rights and fundamental freedoms. It addressed human rights violations, worked to prevent abuses, provided overall policy guidance, monitored the observance of human rights around the world and assisted States in fulfilling their human rights obligations.

The special procedures mandate-holders—special rapporteurs, working groups, independent experts and special representatives—monitored, examined, advised and publicly reported on human rights situations in specific countries or on major human rights violations worldwide. In 2008, 30 thematic mandate-holders reported on adequate housing, people of African descent, arbitrary detention, children and armed conflict, the sale of children, education, enforced or involuntary disappearances, extralegal executions, effects of foreign debt on human rights, extreme poverty, the right to food, freedom of opinion and expression, freedom of religion or belief, physical and mental health, human rights defenders, independence of the judiciary, indigenous peoples, internally displaced persons, human rights and international solidarity, mercenaries, migrants, minority issues, racism and racial discrimination, slavery, human rights protection while countering terrorism, torture, the illicit movement and dumping of toxic and dangerous products and wastes, trafficking in persons, transnational corporations, and violence against women. During the year, mandate-holders sent 911 communications to 118 countries regarding 2,206 individuals; two thirds were joint communications sent by two or more mandates. They also conducted 53 fact-finding missions to 48 countries, issued 177 statements and press releases, and submitted 135 reports to the Human Rights Council (120 by thematic mandate-holders), including 79 annual reports and 56 country visit reports, and 19 reports to the General Assembly. In June, the Council created the mandate of the independent expert on the issue of human rights obligations related to access to safe drinking water and sanitation.

In May, the Council held a special session to take action on the negative impact on the realization of the right to food of the worsening world food crisis, caused by soaring food prices, among other things.

The rights of minorities continued to be a major focus. The Forum on Minority Issues, created by the Council in 2007, met for the first time in December under the guidance of the independent expert on minority issues. The Permanent Forum on Indigenous Issues addressed indigenous concerns relating to economic and social development, culture, education, the environment, health and human rights, and helped to coordinate related UN activities. The Expert Mechanism on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples, at its first session, discussed participation of indigenous peoples in its work, as well as issues related to discrimination and the rights of indigenous peoples to education.

Preparations continued for the Durban Review Conference, scheduled for 2009, whose objectives included a review of the progress made in implementing the 2001 Durban Programme of Action and an assessment of the effectiveness of mechanisms and instruments for tackling racial discrimination.

Racism and racial discrimination

Follow-up to 2001 World Conference

Intergovernmental Working Group. The Intergovernmental Working Group on the effective implementation of the Durban Declaration and Programme of Action (DDPA), adopted by the 2001 World Conference against Racism, Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia and Related Intolerance [YUN 2001, p. 615], held its sixth session in two parts (Geneva, 21 January–1 February and 18 December) [A/HRC/10/87].

The Working Group discussed its contribution to the work of the Preparatory Committee for the Durban Review Conference (see p. 762) and its future work. The Working Group adopted a compilation of conclusions and recommendations adopted at its five previous sessions [A/CONF.211/PC.2/7], which was submitted to the Preparatory Committee as part of the Working Group’s contribution. The recommendations covered, among other issues, education, poverty, racism and health, racism and the Internet, globalization and racism and the migration dimension. A Secretariat note [A/HRC/10/WG.3/2] provided updated information on the Working Group’s sixth session.

In September [A/HRC/9/5], the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR) reported on actions it had taken to implement the recommendations made by the Working Group at its fifth session [YUN 2007, p. 706].

Report of Secretary-General. Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 62/220 [ibid., p. 708], the Secretary-General, in October, submitted a report [A/63/366] on activities undertaken between August 2006 and July 2007 by States, human rights mechanisms and OHCHR to implement DDPA. The report, which built on the Secretary-General's 2006 report on the topic [YUN 2007, p. 707], concluded that, since the adoption of DDPA, many countries had demonstrated commitment to combating racism and related phenomena. Nearly all constitutions guaranteed the principle of equality, and many countries had reformed their laws to eliminate those that were discriminatory. At the regional level, harmonization of national laws with European Union (EU) human rights principles, including the prohibition of racism and discrimination, had indirectly benefited the implementation of DDPA.

Working Group on people of African descent. At its seventh session (Geneva, 14–18 January) [A/HRC/7/36], the Working Group of Experts on People of African Descent, established by the defunct Commission on Human Rights in 2002 [YUN 2002, p. 661] to consider problems of racial discrimination affecting people of African descent, in accordance with DDPA, reviewed the recommendations made at previous sessions in order to distil its contribution to the Review Conference. After reviewing those recommendations, the Working Group, as part of its contribution to the Preparatory Committee, called upon States that had not yet elaborated national plans of action to combat racism to do so, preferably before the Conference, and those that had should implement them fully and report thereon at the Conference. States should identify factors resulting in the over-representation in arrests, sentencing and incarceration of people of African descent, particularly young men, and take measures to eliminate those factors and adopt crime-prevention strategies and programmes that included alternatives to incarceration. They should also address the disproportionately low levels of representation of people of African descent in the judiciary and other areas of the justice system. States should implement mechanisms for effectively collecting disaggregated information on health, education, access to housing, employment, treatment in the criminal justice system and political participation and representation as regards people of African descent, which should be the basis for creating and monitoring policies and practices that addressed any discrimination found. OHCHR should provide guidelines on the collection of disaggregated information to States requesting them. A code of conduct for the media should be drawn up that, taking into account such issues as the right to freedom of expression, combated racial discrimination against people of African descent by elaborating compulsory standards. The aim would be to eliminate the projection and perpetuation, through the media and new technologies, of negative images and stereotypes of Africa and people of African descent. The code should also include provisions to address and combat incitement to racial hatred. States and international and regional organizations should establish independent bodies, where they did not already exist, to receive complaints by people of African descent of discrimination in accessing housing, education, health, employment and other fundamental rights. The Human Rights Council should request OHCHR to produce best practices in areas such as access to housing, education, health, employment and institutional and legal frameworks pertaining to people of African descent, as well as in combating stereotyping against that group in the media.

The Working Group recommended that the issue of reparations for people of African descent should be considered at the Durban Review Conference. The United Nations should also create a UN fellowship programme for people of African descent.

Human Rights Council action. On 28 March [A/63/53 (res. 7/33)], the Council, by a recorded vote of 34-0-13, saluted the positive developments in the fight against racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance, and urged all Governments to summon the political will to take decisive steps to combat racism in all its forms and manifestations. It acknowledged the report of the Working Group of Experts on People of African Descent on its seventh session (above) and decided to invite the Group to address the Council at its tenth (2010) session.

On 24 September [A/63/53/Add.1 (res. 9/14)], the Council extended the mandate of the Working Group for three years and requested it to report on progress in elaborating its mandate. It recommended that States ensure adequate representation of people of African descent in the judiciary and other areas of the justice system, identify factors that had resulted in their disproportionate arrest, sentencing and incarceration, and take measures to eliminate those factors and adopt crime-prevention strategies and programmes that included alternatives to incarceration.

Preparations for Durban Review Conference

Preparatory Committee session (April–May). The Preparatory Committee for the Durban Review Conference held its first substantive session (Geneva, 21 April–2 May and 26 May) [A/63/112], in accordance with General Assembly resolution 61/149 [YUN

2006, p. 824] and Human Rights Council resolutions 3/2 [ibid.] and 6/23 [YUN 2007, p. 706]. Among the documents before the Committee were the OHCHR questionnaire to Member States [A/CONF.211/PC.2/2], in accordance with a decision adopted at its first session [YUN 2007, p. 706], to facilitate the Durban Review process. The questionnaire consisted of six core questions drafted on the basis of the objectives of the Durban Review Conference [YUN 2007, p. 706], and replies to the questionnaire by States [A/CONF.211/PC.2/CRP.6], the Special Rapporteur on the right to education [A/CONF.211/PC.2/CRP.3], and the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination [A/CONF.211/PC.2/CRP.5]; proposals by the Committee's Bureau and Chairperson [A/CONF.211/PC.2/4 & Add.1]; a compilation of contributions submitted by UN system specialized agencies and bodies, other intergovernmental organizations, and non-governmental organizations (NGOs) [A/CONF.211/PC.2/CRP.2]; and a compilation of the conclusions and recommendations adopted by the Intergovernmental Working Group on the Effective Implementation of the Durban Declaration and Programme of Action [A/CONF.211/PC.2/CRP.4].

The Committee decided that the Durban Review Conference, which would include a high-level segment, would be convened in Geneva from 20 to 24 April 2009 [A/63/112 (dec. PC.2/13)] under the theme "United against Racism: Dignity and Justice for All" [dec. PC.2/14]. It adopted the provisional agenda of the Conference [dec. PC.2/11], and decided [dec. PC.2/8] on the structure of the draft outcome document, which would be based on the review of progress and assessment on implementation of DDPA [YUN 2001, p. 615] by all stakeholders at all levels, including the assessment of contemporary manifestations of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance; assessment of the effectiveness of Durban follow-up mechanisms and other UN mechanisms in order to enhance them; promotion of the universal ratification and implementation of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination [YUN 1965, p. 433] and consideration of the recommendations on the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination; identification and sharing of best practices achieved at national, regional and international levels in the fight against racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance; and identification of further measures and initiatives for fostering the implementation of DDPA and addressing challenges and impediments thereto, including in light of developments since its adoption. The Committee also took decisions on the accreditation of NGOs, the participation of observers, an information strategy for the Conference and its logo.

It established an intersessional open-ended intergovernmental working group to follow up on its work, including through reviewing contributions and starting negotiations on the draft outcome document [dec. PC.2/4].

Intersessional working group. The intersessional open-ended working group to follow up the work of the Preparatory Committee held two sessions in Geneva: the first from 26 to 28 May, and the second on 5 and 29 September [A/CONF.211/PC.3/2]. At its first session, the working group had before it a "non-paper" submitted by the Chairperson-Rapporteur, containing an inventory of issues corresponding to the structure of the draft outcome document. The working group established an informal "Group of friends of the Chair" to meet during the intersessional period to facilitate work at the second session. At its second session, the working group considered a working document submitted by the Chairperson-Rapporteur entitled "Certain indicative elements in relation to the outcome document", and a set of draft recommendations on the modalities of the organization of work and negotiations on the draft outcome document at the second session of the Preparatory Committee. On 29 September, the working group adopted recommendations on the organization of work and negotiations on the draft outcome document at the second session of the Preparatory Committee.

Preparatory Committee session (October). At its second substantive session (Geneva, 6–17 October) [A/CONF.211/PC.3/11 & Corr.1], the Preparatory Committee considered the report of the intersessional open-ended working group (above), the draft outcome document of the Durban Review Conference, and the organization of work of the Conference. The Preparatory Committee adopted one resolution and nine decisions. It decided to commence negotiation on and the drafting of the outcome document on the basis of the working document entitled "Certain indicative elements in relation to the outcome document" [A/63/112/Add.1 (res. PC.3/1)]. It invited the High Commissioner for Human Rights to report on the implementation of DDPA [YUN 2001, p. 615] and make proposals for enhancing its implementation, as well as for implementation of relevant decisions and resolutions of the Assembly and the Council [dec. PC.3/103]. The Preparatory Committee established an intersessional open-ended intergovernmental working group to finalize the drafting of the outcome document. The working group would meet on 27 November, and 19–23 January and 6–9 April 2009 [dec. PC.3/108]. It requested the Assembly to allocate resources for the participation of relevant human rights treaty bodies, and thematic special procedures and mechanisms in the Review Conference [dec. PC.3/109]. It also adopted decisions on the accreditation of NGOs.

Intersessional working group. At its first meeting (27 November) [A/CONF.211/PC.4/2], the reconvened intersessional working group reviewed the compilation of proposals submitted by delegations at the Preparatory Committee's second substantive session corresponding to the structure of the draft outcome document [A/CONF.211/PC/WG.2/CRP.1]. The working group agreed that its Chairperson should be entrusted with undertaking a technical review of the proposals with a view to shortening and streamlining the document.

Regional preparatory meetings. Regional preparatory meetings for the Durban Review Conference were held for Latin America and the Caribbean (Brasilia, Brazil, 17–19 June) [A/CONF.211/PC.3/3] and Africa (Abuja, Nigeria, 24–26 August) [A/CONF.211/PC.3/4].

Communications. On 13 September [A/CONF.211/PC.3/10], Pakistan submitted to the High Commissioner for Human Rights the contribution of the Organization of the Islamic Conference to the Review Conference. On 8 October [A/CONF.211/PC.3/5], Sri Lanka submitted the contribution of the Asian region. On 7 October [A/CONF.211/PC.3/6], France submitted the contribution of the EU.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 24 December [meeting 74], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee [A/63/428], adopted resolution 63/242 by recorded vote (109-13-35) [agenda item 62 (b)].

Global efforts for the total elimination of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance and the comprehensive implementation of and follow-up to the Durban Declaration and Programme of Action

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 52/111 of 12 December 1997, in which it decided to convene the World Conference against Racism, Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia and Related Intolerance, and its resolutions 56/266 of 27 March 2002, 57/195 of 18 December 2002, 58/160 of 22 December 2003, 59/177 of 20 December 2004 and 60/144 of 16 December 2005, which guided the comprehensive follow-up to and effective implementation of the World Conference, and in this regard underlining the importance of their full and effective implementation,

Noting its resolution 61/149 of 19 December 2006, in which it decided to convene in 2009 a review conference on the implementation of the Durban Declaration and Programme of Action, hereinafter referred to as the Durban Review Conference, to be conducted within the framework of the General Assembly, and its resolution 62/220 of 22 December 2007,

Noting also, in the above context, the decisions adopted by the Preparatory Committee for the Durban Review

Conference at its organizational session and its first and second substantive sessions, including decision PC.1/13 on the objectives of the Durban Review Conference and decision PC.2/8 on the structure of the outcome document,

Noting further all the relevant resolutions and decisions of the Commission on Human Rights and of the Human Rights Council on this subject, and calling for their implementation,

Noting Human Rights Council decision 3/103 of 8 December 2006, by which, heeding the decision and instruction of the 2001 World Conference, the Council established the Ad Hoc Committee of the Human Rights Council on the Elaboration of Complementary Standards,

Reiterating that all human beings are born free and equal in dignity and rights and have the potential to contribute constructively to the development and well-being of their societies, and that any doctrine of racial superiority is scientifically false, morally condemnable, socially unjust and dangerous and must be rejected, together with theories that attempt to determine the existence of separate human races,

Convinced that racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance manifest themselves in a differentiated manner for women and girls and may be among the factors leading to a deterioration in their living conditions, poverty, violence, multiple forms of discrimination and the limitation or denial of their human rights, and recognizing the need to integrate a gender perspective into relevant policies, strategies and programmes of action against racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance in order to address multiple forms of discrimination,

Underlining the primacy of political will, international cooperation and adequate funding at the national, regional and international levels for the successful implementation of the Durban Programme of Action,

Alarmed at the increase in racist violence and xenophobic ideas in many parts of the world, in political circles, in the sphere of public opinion and in society at large, inter alia, as a result of the resurgent activities of associations established on the basis of racist and xenophobic platforms and charters, and the persistent use of those platforms and charters to promote or incite racist ideologies,

Underlining the importance of urgently eliminating continuing and violent trends involving racism and racial discrimination, and conscious that any form of impunity for crimes motivated by racist and xenophobic attitudes plays a role in weakening the rule of law and democracy, tends to encourage the recurrence of such crimes and requires resolute action and cooperation for its eradication,

Welcoming the continued determination of the former United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to profile and increase the visibility of the struggle against racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance and the intention of the High Commissioner to make this a cross-cutting issue in the activities and programmes of her Office,

I

General principles

1. Acknowledges that no derogation from the prohibition of racial discrimination, genocide, the crime of apartheid or slavery is permitted, as defined in the obligations under the relevant human rights instruments;

2. Expresses its profound concern about and its unequivocal condemnation of all forms of racism and racial discrimination, including related acts of racially motivated violence, xenophobia and intolerance, as well as propaganda activities and organizations that attempt to justify or promote racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance in any form;

3. Expresses deep concern at the attempts to establish hierarchies among emerging and resurgent forms of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance, and urges States to adopt measures to address these scourges with the same emphasis and vigour with a view to preventing this practice and protecting victims;

4. Stresses that States and international organizations have a responsibility to ensure that measures taken in the struggle against terrorism do not discriminate in purpose or effect on grounds of race, colour, descent or national or ethnic origin, and urges all States to rescind or refrain from all forms of racial profiling;

5. Recognizes that States should implement and enforce appropriate and effective legislative, judicial, regulatory and administrative measures to prevent and protect against acts of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance, thereby contributing to the prevention of human rights violations;

6. Also recognizes that racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance occur on the grounds of race, colour, descent or national or ethnic origin and that victims can suffer multiple or aggravated forms of discrimination based on other related grounds, such as sex, language, religion, political or other opinion, social origin, property, birth or other status;

7. Reaffirms that any advocacy of national, racial or religious hatred that constitutes incitement to discrimination, hostility or violence shall be prohibited by law;

8. Emphasizes that it is the responsibility of States to adopt effective measures to combat criminal acts motivated by racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance, including measures to ensure that such motivations are considered an aggravating factor for the purposes of sentencing, to prevent those crimes from going unpunished and to ensure the rule of law;

9. Urges all States to review and, where necessary, revise their immigration laws, policies and practices so that they are free of racial discrimination and compatible with their obligations under international human rights instruments;

10. Calls upon all States, in accordance with the commitments undertaken in paragraph 147 of the Durban Programme of Action, to take all necessary measures to combat incitement to violence motivated by racial hatred, including through the misuse of print, audio-visual and electronic media and new communication technologies, and, in collaboration with service providers, to promote the use of such technologies, including the Internet, to contribute to the fight against racism, in conformity with international standards of freedom of expression and taking all necessary measures to guarantee that right;

11. Encourages all States to include in their educational curricula and social programmes at all levels, as appropriate, knowledge of and tolerance and respect for all cultures, civilizations, religions, peoples and countries, as well as information on the follow-up to and implementation of the Durban Declaration and Programme of Action;

12. Stresses the responsibility of States to mainstream a gender perspective in the design and development of prevention, education and protection measures aimed at the eradication of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance at all levels, to ensure that they effectively target the distinct situations of women and men;

II

International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination

13. Reaffirms that universal adherence to and full implementation of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination are of paramount importance for the fight against racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance, including contemporary forms of racism and racial discrimination, and for the promotion of equality and non-discrimination in the world;

14. Expresses grave concern at the fact that universal ratification of the Convention was not attained by 2005 in accordance with commitments under the Durban Declaration and Programme of Action, and calls upon those States that have not yet done so to accede to the Convention as a matter of urgency;

15. Urges, in the above context, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to maintain on its website and issue regular updates on a list of countries that have not yet ratified the Convention and to encourage such countries to ratify it at the earliest;

16. Expresses its concern at the serious delays in the submission of overdue reports to the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination, which impedes the effectiveness of the Committee, makes a strong appeal to all States parties to the Convention to comply with their treaty obligations, and reaffirms the importance of the provision of technical assistance to the requesting countries in the preparation of their reports to the Committee;

17. Invites States parties to the Convention to ratify the amendment to article 8 of the Convention on the financing of the Committee, and calls for adequate additional resources from the regular budget of the United Nations to enable the Committee to discharge its mandate fully;

18. Urges all States parties to the Convention to intensify their efforts to implement the obligations that they have accepted under article 4 of the Convention, with due regard to the principles of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and article 5 of the Convention;

19. Recalls that the Committee holds that the prohibition of the dissemination of ideas based on racial superiority or racial hatred is compatible with the right to freedom of opinion and expression as outlined in article 19 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and in article 5 of the Convention;

20. Welcomes the emphasis placed by the Committee on the importance of follow-up to the World Conference and the measures recommended to strengthen the implementation of the Convention as well as the functioning of the Committee;

III

Comprehensive implementation of and follow-up to the Durban Declaration and Programme of Action

21. Expresses its appreciation for the commitment of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to contribute to the successful outcome of the Durban Review Conference, including her appeal to all Member States and other stakeholders to participate in the Durban Review Conference;

22. Acknowledges that the outcome of the World Conference against Racism, Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia and Related Intolerance is on an equal footing with the outcomes of all the major United Nations conferences, summits and special sessions in the human rights and social fields;

23. Also acknowledges that the World Conference, which was the third world conference against racism, was significantly different from the previous two conferences, as evidenced by the inclusion in its title of two important components relating to contemporary forms of racism, namely, xenophobia and related intolerance;

24. Emphasizes that the basic responsibility for effectively combating racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance lies with States, and to this end stresses that States have the primary responsibility to ensure full and effective implementation of all commitments and recommendations contained in the Durban Declaration and Programme of Action;

25. Reaffirms its commitment to eliminating all forms of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and other forms of related intolerance against indigenous peoples, and in this regard notes the attention paid to the objectives of combating prejudice and eliminating discrimination and promoting tolerance, understanding and good relations among indigenous peoples and all other segments of society in the United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples;

26. Emphasizes the fundamental and complementary role of national human rights institutions, regional bodies or centres and civil society, working jointly with States towards the achievement of the objectives of the Durban Declaration and Programme of Action;

27. Welcomes the steps taken by numerous Governments, in particular the elaboration and implementation of national action plans to combat racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance, and steps taken by national human rights institutions and non-governmental organizations, towards the full implementation of the Durban Declaration and Programme of Action, and affirms this trend as a demonstration of commitment to the elimination of all scourges of racism at the national level;

28. Calls upon all States that have not yet elaborated their national action plans on combating racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance to comply with their commitments undertaken at the World Conference;

29. Calls upon all States to formulate and implement without delay, at the national, regional and international levels, policies and plans of action to combat racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance, including their gender-based manifestations;

30. Welcomes the adoption of the laudable initiative led by the States members of the Caribbean Community and other Member States for the establishment of a permanent memorial at the United Nations to the victims of slavery and the transatlantic slave trade as a contribution towards the fulfilment of paragraph 101 of the Durban Declaration, expresses its appreciation for contributions made to the voluntary fund established in this regard, and urges other countries to contribute to the fund;

31. Urges States to support the activities of existing regional bodies or centres that combat racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance in their respective regions, and recommends the establishment of such bodies in all regions where they do not exist;

32. Recognizes the fundamental role of civil society in the fight against racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance, in particular in assisting States to develop regulations and strategies, in taking measures and action against such forms of discrimination and through follow-up implementation;

33. Reaffirms that the General Assembly is the highest intergovernmental mechanism for the formulation and appraisal of policy on matters relating to the economic, social and related fields, in accordance with Assembly resolution 50/227 of 24 May 1996, and that, together with the Human Rights Council, it shall constitute an intergovernmental process for the comprehensive implementation of and follow-up to the Durban Declaration and Programme of Action, and further reaffirms that the Council shall continue to have a central role in the follow-up to the implementation of the Declaration and Programme of Action within the United Nations system;

34. Expresses its appreciation for the continuing work of the mechanisms mandated to follow up the World Conference, bearing in mind the assessment of the effectiveness of those mechanisms to be undertaken at the Durban Review Conference;

35. Acknowledges Human Rights Council resolution 9/14 of 24 September 2008, by which the Council decided to extend for three years the mandate of the Working Group of Experts on People of African Descent;

36. Takes note of the convening of the first part of the first session of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Elaboration of Complementary Standards from 11 to 21 February 2008, and requests the Ad Hoc Committee to comply with the mandate contained in Human Rights Council decision 3/103;

37. Acknowledges the centrality of resource mobilization, effective global partnership and international cooperation in the context of paragraphs 157 and 158 of the Durban Programme of Action for the successful realization of commitments undertaken at the World Conference, and to this end emphasizes the importance of the mandate of the group of independent eminent experts on the implementation of the Durban Declaration and Programme of Action, especially in mobilizing the necessary political will for the successful implementation of the Declaration and Programme of Action;

38. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the necessary resources for the effective fulfilment of the mandates of the Intergovernmental Working Group on the Effective Implementation of the Durban Declaration and Programme of Action, the Working Group of Experts on People of African Descent, the group of independent eminent experts on the implementation of the Durban Declaration and Programme of Action and the Ad Hoc Committee on the Elaboration of Complementary Standards;

39. Expresses its concern at the increasing incidence of racism in various sporting events, while noting with appreciation the efforts made by some governing bodies of the various sporting codes to combat racism, and in this regard invites all international sporting bodies to promote, through their national, regional and international federations, a world of sport free from racism and racial discrimination;

40. Welcomes, in this context, the initiative of the Fédération internationale de football association to introduce a visible theme on non-racism in football, and invites the Fédération to continue with this initiative at the 2010 soccer World Cup tournament to be held in South Africa;

41. Calls upon those States that have not yet done so to consider signing and ratifying or acceding to the instruments enumerated in paragraph 78 of the Durban Programme of Action, including the International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families of 1990;

IV

Special Rapporteur on contemporary forms of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance and follow-up to his visits

42. Expresses its appreciation for the work done by the former Special Rapporteur on contemporary forms of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance, and welcomes Human Rights Council resolution 7/34 of 28 March 2008, by which the Council decided to extend the mandate of the Special Rapporteur for a period of three years;

43. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Special Rapporteur, and encourages Member States and other relevant stakeholders to consider implementing the recommendations contained in his report;

44. Reiterates its call to all Member States, intergovernmental organizations, relevant organizations of the United Nations system and non-governmental organizations to co-operate fully with the Special Rapporteur, and calls upon States to consider responding favourably to his requests for visits so as to enable him to fulfil his mandate fully and effectively;

45. Recognizes with deep concern the increase in anti-Semitism, Christianophobia and Islamophobia in various parts of the world, as well as the emergence of racial and violent movements based on racism and discriminatory ideas directed against Arab, Christian, Jewish and Muslim communities, as well as all religious communities, communities of people of African descent, communities of people of Asian descent, communities of indigenous people and other communities;

46. Encourages closer collaboration between the Special Rapporteur and the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, in particular the Anti-Discrimination Unit;

47. Urges the High Commissioner to provide States, at their request, with advisory services and technical assistance to enable them to implement fully the recommendations of the Special Rapporteur;

48. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the Special Rapporteur with all the human and financial assistance necessary to carry out his mandate efficiently, effectively and expeditiously and to enable him to submit a report to the General Assembly at its sixty-fourth session;

49. Requests the Special Rapporteur to continue giving particular attention to the negative impact of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance on the full enjoyment of civil, cultural, economic, political and social rights by national or ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities, immigrant populations, asylum-seekers and refugees;

50. Invites Member States to demonstrate greater commitment to fighting racism in sport by conducting educational and awareness-raising activities and by strongly condemning the perpetrators of racist incidents, in cooperation with national and international sports organizations;

V

Convening of the Durban Review Conference

51. Welcomes the reports of the Preparatory Committee for the Durban Review Conference on its organizational session and its first and second substantive sessions, and endorses the decisions contained therein;

52. Calls upon all Member States to participate in the Durban Review Conference;

53. Expresses its appreciation for the convening of the regional preparatory meeting for the Durban Review Conference for Latin America and the Caribbean in Brasilia from 17 to 19 June 2008 and the regional preparatory meeting for Africa in Abuja from 24 to 26 August 2008;

54. Takes note of the contributions by Member States, regional groups and all other relevant stakeholders consistent with the objectives of the Durban Review Conference, in accordance with decision PC.1/10 of the Preparatory Committee;

55. Reaffirms that the Durban Review Conference will be undertaken on the basis of and with full respect for the Durban Declaration and Programme of Action and that there will be no renegotiation of the existing agreements therein, and that the issues raised will be in conformity with the contents of the Declaration and Programme of Action;

56. Requests the Secretary-General and the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to undertake initiatives to encourage contributions to the voluntary fund established pursuant to decision PC.1/12 of the Preparatory Committee, including the decision to appeal for contributions from extrabudgetary resources to cover the costs of participation of representatives of the least developed countries in the Durban Review Conference;

General

57. Recommends that the meetings of the Human Rights Council focusing on the follow-up to the World Conference and the implementation of the Durban Declaration and Programme of Action be scheduled in a manner that allows broad participation and that avoids overlap with the meetings devoted to the consideration of this item in the General Assembly;

58. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report with recommendations on the implementation of the present resolution to the General Assembly at its sixty-fourth session;

59. Decides to remain seized of this important matter at its sixty-fourth session under the item entitled "Elimination of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance".

Contemporary forms of racism

In a February report [A/HRC/7/19], submitted pursuant to a Human Rights Council request [YUN 2007, p. 662], the Special Rapporteur on contemporary forms of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance stated that efforts to combat those phenomena were encountering major challenges, such as the erosion of the political will, as shown by the non-implementation of the Durban Programme of Action; the resurgence of racist and xenophobic violence; the political trivialization of racism and xenophobia, demonstrated by the spread of racist and xenophobic political platforms and their implementation through government alliances with democratic parties; the legitimization of racist and xenophobic discourse through ethnic or racial interpretation of social and political problems and immigration issues; the increase in racial and religious hatred and intolerance, reflected in anti-Semitism and Christianophobia and, more especially, Islamophobia; and the increasing importance in identity constructs of a rejection of diversity and resistance to multiculturalism. To reverse those trends, the Special Rapporteur promoted the development of a dual strategy: political and legal, aimed at strengthening the political will of Governments to combat racism and xenophobia and acquire the legal and administrative instruments for that purpose; and cultural, intellectual and ethical, targeting the root causes of those trends, in particular the value systems which legitimized them, the identity constructs supporting them, and the rejection of diversity and multiculturalism which sustained them. The report also dealt with discrimination on the grounds of caste in Asia and Africa.

The Special Rapporteur called on the Council to encourage Member States to adopt legislation against racism, racial discrimination and xenophobia; promote the fight against the defamation of religion, anti-Semitism, Christianophobia and Islamophobia; fight racial and religious hatred by maintaining a careful balance between the defence of secularism and respect for religious freedom; and adopt an approach to questions relating to immigration, asylum and the situation of foreigners and minorities on the basis of international law. He recommended the establishment within OHCHR of a permanent centre for monitoring racist phenomena that would report to the Council and the General Assembly. The Rapporteur's reports and recommendations should be submitted to all bodies involved in the Durban Review Conference and to regional meetings held as part of that process.

An addendum to the report [A/HRC/7/19/Add.1] summarized communications sent to 12 Governments between 1 May and 31 December 2007 on cases of racism and related phenomena and replies received thereto.

As requested by the Human Rights Council in March (see p. 782), the Special Rapporteur in September submitted a report [A/HRC/9/12] on the manifestations of defamation of religions and, in particular, on the serious implications of Islamophobia for the enjoyment of all rights. The Rapporteur stressed that the report did not imply the establishment of any hierarchy in the forms of discrimination to which different religions were subject, and strategies to combat anti-Semitism, Christianophobia and Islamophobia should treat those phobias in the same way and avoid establishing any priorities in combating discrimination. The Rapporteur stressed that political and ideological polarization on the question of the defamation of religions was artificial. Analysis of international, regional and national human rights instruments showed that provisions against incitement to racial or religious hatred were almost universal. However, shifting the debate away from the sociological concepts of defamation of religions towards the legal concept of incitement to national, racial or religious hatred was not only a way of refocusing on human rights but also a strategy for depolarizing and depoliticizing the discussion. He drew attention to recommendations made in previous reports to the Council for promoting measures to combat racism, racial discrimination and xenophobia.

The Special Rapporteur recommended that the Council invite Member States to accord equal treatment to combating the defamation of religions, having particular regard to: the need to avoid establishing any hierarchy in the different manifestations of discrimination, even if they varied in nature and degree depending on the context; the deep historical and cultural roots of all forms of defamation of religions and the corresponding need to combine legal measures with an intellectual, cultural and ethical approach that took account of the processes, mechanisms and representations at the origin of those manifestations of discrimination over time; the link between the different spiritual, historical and cultural forms of religious discrimination and the universal nature of their underlying causes; the need to create conditions conducive to social harmony, peace, respect for human rights and development, and to combat all forms of racism, xenophobia and discrimination relating to religious and spiritual traditions; and the need to renew the approach to defamation of religions by focusing on the principles embodied in international human rights instruments.

The Special Rapporteur visited Mauritania (20–24 January) [A/HRC/11/36/Add.2] to contribute to the elimination—in the context of the drive towards democracy—of the historical legacy of ethnic discrimination that had long characterized that society.

He concluded that while there were no manifestations of legally endorsed or State-approved racism in the country, the society had been marked by continuing ethnic and racial discriminatory practices rooted in cultural traditions and pervasively present in attitudes, social structures and State institutions, in particular the armed forces and the justice system. Some features of Mauritanian society had given substance and depth to such discrimination over time, including the central role of traditional slavery, the entrenchment of the caste system, and the use of ethnicity as a political tool, such as language policies that had contributed to the polarization of various communities. The pervasiveness of a culture of racism and discrimination was the greatest obstacle to the establishment of democracy and respect for human rights. Mauritania faced three major challenges: construction of a democratic, egalitarian and participatory society; eradication of discriminatory cultural traditions; and the correction of political, economic and social inequalities caused by discrimination.

The Special Rapporteur's recommendations to the authorities included: consistent communication to the public of a clear political will to combat all forms of racism and discrimination and to foster a democratic, egalitarian and participatory multiculturalism; recognition that the eradication of racism and discrimination was the key to the establishment of sustainable democracy; the adoption of comprehensive legislation against all forms of discrimination and recognition in the Constitution of the multicultural and multi-ethnic character of the society and of its main ethnic groups and communities, as well as their languages and cultures; the insertion of provisions on racial and ethnic discrimination in the criminal code; the creation of an independent special commission tasked with reporting on the status, root causes, manifestations and consequences of discrimination and with establishing an independent national institution responsible for upholding human rights, combating discrimination and promoting multiculturalism; and the adoption of a strategy aimed at eradicating the underlying causes of the culture of discrimination and building a spirit of partnership.

The Special Rapporteur visited the United States (19 May–6 June) [A/HRC/11/36/Add.3], where he had extensive meetings with State institutions, including the Supreme Court, civil society organizations, minority communities and victims of racism. He visited Washington, D.C., New York, Chicago, Omaha, Los Angeles, New Orleans, the Louisiana and Mississippi Gulf Coast, Miami and San Juan (Puerto Rico). He formulated several recommendations, including that: Congress establish a bipartisan commission to evaluate progress and failures in the fight against racism and the ongoing process of resegregation, particularly in housing and education, and to find responses for checking those trends; the Federal Government reassess legislation on racism and related phenomena in view of the main guidelines for addressing the overlapping nature of poverty and race or ethnicity, and linking the fight against racism to the construction of a democratic, egalitarian and interactive multiculturalism; and the Government intensify efforts to enforce federal civil rights laws, and clarify to law enforcement officials the obligation of equal treatment and the prohibition of racial profiling. To monitor trends regarding racial profiling and treatment of minorities by law enforcement officials, federal, state and local governments should collect data about police stops and searches, as well as instances of police abuse. Independent oversight bodies should be established within police agencies, with real authority to investigate complaints of racism. Mandatory minimum sentences should be reviewed to assess disproportionate impact on racial or ethnic minorities. The Government should increase funding for programmes and investigations to assess discrimination, particularly in the areas of housing and employment.

Human Rights Council action. On 28 March [A/63/53 (res. 7/34)], the Human Rights Council extended the mandate of the Special Rapporteur for a three-year period, and requested the Rapporteur to report regularly to the Council and the General Assembly.

On 18 June, the Council appointed Githu Muigai (Kenya) as Special Rapporteur.

Report by new Special Rapporteur. Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 62/220 [YUN 2007, p. 708], the Secretary-General, in August, transmitted to the Assembly the interim report [A/63/339] of the new Special Rapporteur, who outlined the main objectives for fulfilling his mandate. The International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, DDPa and other international instruments would remain the central framework for implementing the mandate. In light of the emphasis in DDPa on victim-orientation in anti-racism policies, that approach would be further strengthened in the discharge of the mandate, in cooperation with civil society organizations. The Rapporteur attached central importance to cooperation and engagement with Member States, including engaging with Governments to share expertise and advocate the implementation of anti-racism policies, while continuing to monitor and report on human rights violations. In planning and undertaking country visits, the Rapporteur would take into account the underlying principle that racism was a universal problem, and would strive to achieve geographical balance and address a wide range of situations. The Rapporteur noted the Council's request for Member States to cooperate fully with him in the discharge of his mandate, including by responding promptly to communications and providing information. He urged Governments to respond favourably to his requests to visit their countries.

Communication. On 13 March [A/HRC/7/G/10], the Dominican Republic transmitted to OHCHR its comments on the joint report of the Special Rapporteur on contemporary forms of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance and the independent expert on minority issues on their 2007 mission to the country [YUN 2007, p. 715].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December [meeting 70], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/63/428], adopted resolution 63/162 by recorded vote (129-2-54) [agenda item 62 (a)].

Inadmissibility of certain practices that contribute to fuelling contemporary forms of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance

The General Assembly,

Guided by the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination and other relevant human rights instruments,

Recalling the provisions of Commission on Human Rights resolutions 2004/16 of 16 April 2004 and 2005/5 of 14 April 2005, and relevant Human Rights Council resolutions, in particular resolution 7/34 of 28 March 2008, as well as General Assembly resolutions 60/143 of 16 December 2005, 61/147 of 19 December 2006 and 62/142 of 18 December 2007 on this issue and resolutions 61/149 of 19 December 2006 and 62/220 of 22 December 2007, both entitled "Global efforts for the total elimination of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance and the comprehensive implementation of and follow-up to the Durban Declaration and Programme of Action",

Recalling also the Charter of the Nuremberg Tribunal and the Judgement of the Tribunal, which recognized, inter alia, the SS organization and all its integral parts, including the Waffen SS, as criminal and declared it responsible for many war crimes and crimes against humanity,

Recalling further the relevant provisions of the Durban Declaration and Programme of Action adopted by the World Conference against Racism, Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia and Related Intolerance on 8 September 2001, in particular paragraph 2 of the Declaration and paragraph 86 of the Programme of Action,

Recalling equally the study undertaken by the Special Rapporteur on contemporary forms of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance, and taking note of his report,

Alarmed, in this regard, at the spread in many parts of the world of various extremist political parties, movements and groups, including neo-Nazis and skinhead groups,

1. Reaffirms the provision of the Durban Declaration in which States condemned the persistence and resurgence of neo-Nazism, neo-Fascism and violent nationalist ideologies based on racial and national prejudice and stated that those phenomena could never be justified in any instance or in any circumstances;

2. Expresses deep concern about the glorification of the Nazi movement and former members of the Waffen SS organization, including by erecting monuments and memorials and holding public demonstrations in the name of the glorification of the Nazi past, the Nazi movement and neo-Nazism, as well as by declaring or attempting to declare such members and those who fought against the anti-Hitler coalition and collaborated with the Nazi movement as participants in national liberation movements;

3. Expresses concern at recurring attempts to desecrate or demolish monuments erected in remembrance of those who fought against Nazism during the Second World War, as well as to unlawfully exhume or remove the remains of such persons, and urges States in this regard to fully comply with their relevant obligations, inter alia, under article 34 of Additional Protocol I to the Geneva Conventions of 1949;

4. Notes with concern the increase in the number of racist incidents in several countries and the rise of skinhead groups, which have been responsible for many of these incidents, as well as the resurgence of racist and xenophobic violence targeting members of ethnic, religious or cultural communities and national minorities, as observed by the

Special Rapporteur on contemporary forms of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance in his latest report;

5. Reaffirms that such acts may be qualified to fall within the scope of activities described in article 4 of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, and that they may represent a clear and manifest abuse of the rights to freedom of peaceful assembly and of association as well as the rights to freedom of opinion and expression within the meaning of those rights as guaranteed by the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination;

6. Stresses that the practices described above do injustice to the memory of the countless victims of crimes against humanity committed in the Second World War, in particular those committed by the SS organization and those who fought against the anti-Hitler coalition or collaborated with the Nazi movement, and poison the minds of young people, and that those practices are incompatible with the obligations of States Members of the United Nations under its Charter and are incompatible with the goals and principles of the Organization;

7. Also stresses that such practices fuel contemporary forms of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance and contribute to the spread and multiplication of various extremist political parties, movements and groups, including neo-Nazis and skinhead groups;

8. Emphasizes the need to take the necessary measures to put an end to the practices described above, and calls upon States to take more effective measures in accordance with international human rights law to combat those phenomena and the extremist movements, which pose a real threat to democratic values;

9. Reaffirms that, according to article 4 of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, States parties to that instrument are, inter alia, under the obligation:

(a) To condemn all propaganda and all organizations that are based on ideas of racial superiority or that attempt to justify or promote racial hatred and discrimination in any form;

(b) To undertake to adopt immediate and positive measures designed to eradicate all incitement to, or acts of, such discrimination with due regard to the principles embodied in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the rights expressly set forth in article 5 of the Convention;

(c) To declare as an offence punishable by law all dissemination of ideas based on racial superiority or hatred, and incitement to racial discrimination, as well as all acts of violence or incitement to such acts against any race or group of persons of another colour or ethnic origin, and also the provision of any assistance to racist activities, including the financing thereof;

(d) To declare illegal and prohibit organizations and organized and all other propaganda activities that promote and incite racial discrimination and to recognize participation in such organizations or activities as an offence punishable by law;

(e) To prohibit public authorities or public institutions, national or local, from promoting or inciting racial discrimination;

10. Encourages those States that have made reservations to article 4 of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination to give serious consideration to withdrawing such reservations as a matter of priority;

11. Recalls the request of the Commission on Human Rights in its resolution 2005/5 that the Special Rapporteur continue to reflect on this issue, make relevant recommendations in his future reports and seek and take into account in this regard the views of Governments and non-governmental organizations;

12. Requests the Special Rapporteur to prepare, within existing resources, for submission to the General Assembly at its sixty-fourth session and the Human Rights Council, reports on the implementation of the present resolution based on the views collected in accordance with the request of the Commission on Human Rights, as recalled by the Assembly in paragraph 11 above;

13. Urges Governments and non-governmental organizations to cooperate fully with the Special Rapporteur in the exercise of the aforementioned tasks;

14. Decides to remain seized of the issue.

RECORDED VOTE ON RESOLUTION 63/162:

Civil and political rights

Right to nationality

Human Rights Council action. On 27 March [A/63/53 (res. 7/10)], the Human Rights Council called on States to refrain from enacting or maintaining legislation that would arbitrarily deprive persons of their nationality on grounds of race, colour, gender, religion, political opinion or national or ethnic origin. It urged States to adopt and implement nationality legislation with a view to avoiding statelessness, in particular by preventing arbitrary deprivation of nationality and statelessness as a result of State succession. States were also urged to ensure that an effective remedy was available to persons who had been arbitrarily deprived of their nationality. The Secretary-General was requested to collect information on human rights and arbitrary deprivation of nationality from all relevant sources and to make it available to the Council at its tenth (2009) session.

Protection of migrants

Reports of Special Rapporteur. In a February report to the Human Rights Council [A/HRC/7/12], the Special Rapporteur on the human rights of migrants, Jorge Bustamante (Mexico), summarized his activities, including visits requested and undertaken, and communications and replies received. The report highlighted some key challenges with regard to the criminalization of irregular migration, and outlined elements for State responsibility with regard to the protection of irregular migrants. The Special Rapporteur drew attention to the increasing criminalization of irregular migration and the abuses committed as a result of persistent anti-immigration sentiments, often reflected in restrictive policies and institutional frameworks for managing migratory flows. He had received reports of the criminal justice practices used by States to combat irregular migration, including greater criminalization of migration offences and cross-national collaboration by police and other authorities resulting in violations against migrants. Within the two broad categories of the externalization of migration control policies and the criminalization of labour migration, he identified three sub-issues for examination: violations against irregular migrants pertaining to interception and rescue at sea, detention and expulsion and smuggling and trafficking. The Special Rapporteur emphasized that the report was not an excuse for irregular migration but underscored the importance of States to adhere to international human rights standards during engagement with all migrants.

The Special Rapporteur encouraged States to view irregular migration as an administrative offence, reversing the trend toward greater criminalization, and to incorporate the applicable human rights framework into their bilateral and regional arrangements for managing migration flows and protecting national security interests, as well as to harmonize their laws and policies with international human rights norms. At the core of immigration policies should be the protection of migrants, regardless of their status or mode of entry. He proposed a number of recommendations for the formation or reform of regional and bilateral cooperation mechanisms and agreements, as well as the enhancement of national training and analysis programmes and policy measures.

An addendum to the report [A/HRC/7/12/Add.1] summarized 25 communications the Special Rapporteur had sent to 22 Governments during 2007 and responses thereto. Fourteen of those communications were urgent appeals. Only 12 communications received a response.

After visiting Mexico (9–15 March) [A/HRC/11/7/Add.2], the Special Rapporteur highlighted the legal framework pertaining to the human rights of migrants at the federal level, underscoring gaps in implementation of laws and noting problematic policies. He examined groups of the Mexican migrant phenomenon and drew attention to challenges such as the detention of migrants, assistance to migrants, organized crime networks and impunity among governmental and law enforcement officials and assistance to migrants. He concluded that Mexico's progress in implementing programmes to protect the rights of migrants was evident, in terms of both the Government's capacity and willingness. The authorities had made notable efforts to improve detention centres, especially overcrowding, training of border officials, return, and protection of children. Nevertheless, many issues still warranted attention and resources. The Rapporteur recommended that Mexico: review its law regarding expulsion and formulate policies in line with international human rights standards; classify illegal entry as an administrative rather than a criminal offence; take measures against migrant child labour practices; and continue efforts to professionalize and train the police and border control officials. Mexico should improve bilateral arrangements with countries of origin regarding the return of undocumented migrants, and notify the consular or diplomatic authorities of the State of origin without delay whenever a migrant was arrested or detained. The UN Resident Coordinator, the International Organization for Migration, OHCHR and specialized agencies should review UN system programmes for the protection of migrants and integrate them for a more comprehensive approach.

During his visit to Guatemala (24–28 March) [A/HRC/11/7/Add.3], a country of origin, destination and especially transit, the Special Rapporteur noted the Government's interest in addressing some of the problems related to the human rights of migrants, but expressed concern about gaps and ambiguities in the legislative framework on migration. Those gaps led to abuses and violations of the rights of the migrant population, most of which went unreported. He noted information about cases in which, during the interception and deportation of migrants from the United States to Guatemala, various abuses were committed, including ill-treatment, and lack of medical assistance in detention centres, of information on the deportation and of communication with consular representatives. He also noted procedures for deporting undocumented migrants, which lasted longer than necessary, particularly for migrants from countries outside Central America, as their countries of origin had no diplomatic representation in Guatemala.

In his recommendations, the Special Rapporteur invited the Government to conclude regional multilateral agreements among countries of origin and destination, strengthening protection of the rights of migrants. He called upon Guatemala to bring legislation in line with international standards, step up the struggle against corruption and impunity, bring proceedings against those responsible and ensure the execution of sentences, in cooperation with the International Commission against Impunity in Guatemala.

Report of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 62/156 [YUN 2007, p. 719], the Secretary-General submitted an August report [A/63/287] summarizing information received from 12 Governments on the implementation of resolutions 62/156 and 61/165 [YUN 2006, p. 837] on the protection of migrants. The Secretary-General also reported on the status of the International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families [YUN 1990, p. 594], the activities of the Special Rapporteur on the human rights of migrants and the Committee on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families. Regretting the lack of precise statistics on migration flows and other migration-related issues, he encouraged States to create a comprehensive database on labour demand in host countries. He also encouraged States to undertake information campaigns addressed to migrants aimed at clarifying their rights and opportunities and stressing the dangers of undocumented migration.

The General Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's report on 18 December (decision 63/534).

Human Rights Council action. On 18 June [A/63/53 (res. 8/10)], the Human Rights Council extended the mandate of the Special Rapporteur for a three-year period. The Council encouraged Governments to invite the Rapporteur to visit their countries and encouraged them to cooperate fully with the Rapporteur.

On 24 September [A/63/53/Add.1 (res. 9/5)], the Council reaffirmed the duty of States to promote and protect the human rights of all migrants, regardless of their immigration status; urged that they adopt effective measures to put an end to arbitrary arrest and detention of migrants and prevent and punish illegal deprivation of the liberty of migrants; emphasized the importance of protecting vulnerable groups, especially migrant children; and stressed the importance of international, regional and bilateral cooperation in the protection of the rights of migrants.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December [meeting 70], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/63/430], adopted resolution 63/184 without vote [agenda item 64 (b)].

Protection of migrants

The General Assembly,

Recalling all its previous resolutions on the protection of migrants, the most recent of which is resolution 62/156 of 18 December 2007, and recalling also Human Rights Council resolution 9/5 of 24 September 2008,

Reaffirming, in the year of its sixtieth anniversary, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, which proclaims that all human beings are born free and equal in dignity and rights and that everyone is entitled to all the rights and freedoms set out therein, without distinction of any kind, in particular as to race, colour or national origin,

Reaffirming also that everyone has the right to freedom of movement and residence within the borders of each State, and to leave any country, including his own, and return to his country,

Recalling the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, the Convention on the Rights of the Child, the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, the Vienna Convention on Consular Relations and the International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families,

Recalling also the provisions concerning migrants contained in the outcomes of all major United Nations conferences and summits,

Underlining the importance of the Human Rights Council in promoting respect for the protection of the human rights and fundamental freedoms of all, including migrants,

Taking note of advisory opinion OC-16/99 of 1 October 1999 on the Right to Information on Consular Assistance in the Framework of the Guarantees of the Due Process of Law and advisory opinion OC-18/03 of 17 September 2003 on the Juridical Condition and Rights of Undocumented Migrants, issued by the Inter-American Court of Human Rights,

Taking note also of the Judgment of the International Court of Justice of 31 March 2004 in the case concerning Avena and Other Mexican Nationals, and recalling the obligations of States reaffirmed therein,

Recalling the High-level Dialogue on International Migration and Development, held in New York on 14 and 15 September 2006 for the purpose of discussing the multidimensional aspects of international migration and development, which recognized the relationship between international migration, development and human rights,

Noting the second meeting of the Global Forum on Migration and Development, organized and hosted by the Government of the Philippines from 27 to 30 October 2008, and recognizing the inclusion of a discussion on migration, development and human rights as one of the steps to address the multidimensional nature of international migration,

Recalling its resolution 62/270 of 20 June 2008 on the Global Forum on Migration and Development, as adopted, in which, inter alia, it recognized that exchanges of information and expertise, consultation and closer cooperation between the Global Forum and the United Nations could have a positive impact,

Noting the International Meeting on the Protection of the Rights of Children in the Context of International Migration, held in Mexico City on 30 September and 1 October 2008, and co-organized by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights,

Emphasizing the global character of the migratory phenomenon, the importance of international, regional and bilateral cooperation and dialogue in this regard, as appropriate, and the need to protect the human rights of migrants, particularly at a time in which migration flows have increased in the globalized economy and take place in a context of new security concerns,

Bearing in mind that policies and initiatives on the issue of migration, including those that refer to the orderly management of migration, should promote holistic approaches that take into account the causes and consequences of the phenomenon, as well as full respect for the human rights and fundamental freedoms of migrants,

Noting that many migrant women are employed in the informal economy and in less skilled work compared with that of men, which puts those women at greater risk of abuse and exploitation,

Concerned about the large and growing number of migrants, especially women and children, who place themselves in a vulnerable situation by attempting to cross international borders without the required travel documents, and recognizing the obligation of States to respect the human rights of those migrants,

Stressing the importance of regulations and laws regarding irregular migration being in accordance with the obligations of States under international law, including international human rights law,

Stressing also that penalties and the treatment given to irregular migrants should be commensurate with their infraction,

Recognizing the importance of having a comprehensive and balanced approach to international migration, and bearing in mind that migration enriches the economical, political, social and cultural fabric of States and the historical and cultural ties that exist among some regions,

Underlining the importance for States, in cooperation with non-governmental organizations, to undertake information campaigns aimed at clarifying opportunities, limitations and rights in the event of migration, so as to enable everyone to make informed decisions and to prevent them from utilizing dangerous means to cross international borders,

1. Calls upon States to promote and protect effectively the human rights and fundamental freedoms of all migrants, regardless of their migration status, especially those of women and children, and to address international migration through international, regional or bilateral cooperation and dialogue and through a comprehensive and balanced approach, recognizing the roles and responsibilities of countries of origin, transit and destination in promoting and protecting the human rights of all migrants, and avoiding approaches that might aggravate their vulnerability;

2. Also calls upon States to ensure that their laws and policies, including in the areas of counter-terrorism and combating transnational organized crime such as trafficking in persons and smuggling of migrants, fully respect the human rights of migrants;

3. Calls upon States that have not done so to consider signing and ratifying or acceding to the International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families as a matter of priority, and requests the Secretary-General to continue his efforts to raise awareness of and promote the Convention;

4. Urges States parties to the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime and supplementing protocols thereto, namely, the Protocol against the Smuggling of Migrants by Land, Sea and Air and the Protocol to Prevent, Suppress and Punish Trafficking in Persons, Especially Women and Children, to implement them fully, and calls upon States that have not done so to consider ratifying or acceding to them as a matter of priority;

5. Takes note of the report of the Committee on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families on its seventh and eighth sessions;

6. Requests all States, international organizations and relevant stakeholders to take into account in their policies and initiatives on migration issues the global character of the migratory phenomenon and to give due consideration to international, regional and bilateral cooperation in this field, including by undertaking dialogues on migration that include countries of origin, destination and transit, as well as civil society, including migrants, with a view to addressing, in a comprehensive manner, inter alia, its causes and consequences and the challenge of undocumented or irregular migration, granting priority to the protection of the human rights of migrants;

7. Expresses concern about legislation and measures adopted by some States that may restrict the human rights and fundamental freedoms of migrants, and reaffirms that, when exercising their sovereign right to enact and implement migratory and border security measures, States have the duty to comply with their obligations under international law, including international human rights law, in order to ensure full respect for the human rights of migrants;

8. Takes note with appreciation of the measures adopted by some States to reduce detention periods for irregular migrants in the application of domestic regulations and laws regarding irregular migration;

9. Calls upon all States to respect the human rights and the inherent dignity of migrants and to put an end to arbitrary arrest and detention and, where necessary, to review detention periods in order to avoid excessive detention of irregular migrants, and to adopt, where applicable, alternative measures to detention;

10. Urges all States to adopt effective measures to prevent and punish any form of illegal deprivation of liberty of migrants by individuals or groups;

11. Requests States to adopt concrete measures to prevent the violation of the human rights of migrants while in transit, including in ports and airports and at borders and migration checkpoints, to train public officials who work in those facilities and in border areas to treat migrants respectfully and in accordance with the law, and to prosecute, in conformity with applicable law, any act of violation of the human rights of migrants, inter alia, arbitrary detention, torture and violations of the right to life, including extrajudicial executions, during their transit from their country of origin to the country of destination and vice versa, including their transit through national borders;

12. Recalls that the Universal Declaration of Human Rights recognizes that everyone has the right to an effective remedy by the competent national tribunals for acts violating the fundamental rights granted to him or her;

13. Takes note with appreciation of the successful implementation by some States of alternative measures to detention in cases of undocumented migration as a practice that deserves consideration by all States;

14. Urges States to ensure that repatriation mechanisms allow for the identification and special protection of persons in vulnerable situations and take into account, in conformity with their international obligations and commitments, the principle of the best interest of the child and family reunification;

15. Underlines the right of migrants to return to their country of citizenship, and recalls that States must ensure that their returning nationals are duly received;

16. Reaffirms emphatically the duty of States parties to ensure full respect for and observance of the Vienna Convention on Consular Relations, in particular with regard to the right of all foreign nationals, regardless of their immigration status, to communicate with a consular official of the sending State in case of arrest, imprisonment, custody or detention, and the obligation of the receiving State to inform the foreign national without delay of his or her rights under the Convention;

17. Strongly condemns the manifestations and acts of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance against migrants and the stereotypes often applied to them, including on the basis of religion or belief, and urges States to apply and, where needed, reinforce the existing laws when xenophobic or intolerant acts, manifestations or expressions against migrants occur, in order to eradicate impunity for those who commit xenophobic and racist acts;

18. Requests all States, in conformity with national legislation and applicable international legal instruments to which they are party, to enforce labour law effectively, including by addressing violations of such law, with regard to migrant workers' labour relations and working conditions, inter alia, those related to their remuneration and conditions of health, safety at work and the right to freedom of association;

19. Encourages all States to remove obstacles that may prevent the safe, unrestricted and expeditious transfer of remittances of migrants to their country of origin or to any other countries, in conformity with applicable legislation, and to consider, as appropriate, measures to solve other problems that may impede such transfers;

20. Welcomes immigration programmes, adopted by some countries, that allow migrants to integrate fully into the host countries, facilitate family reunification and promote a harmonious, tolerant and respectful environment, and encourages States to consider the possibility of adopting these types of programmes;

21. Requests Member States, the United Nations system, international organizations, civil society and all relevant stakeholders, especially the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and the Special Rapporteur on the human rights of migrants, to ensure that the perspective of the human rights of migrants is included among the priority issues in the ongoing discussions on international migration and development within the United Nations system, bearing in mind the discussions of the High-level Dialogue on International Migration and Development held pursuant to General Assembly resolution 58/208 of 23 December 2003;

22. Invites the Chairperson of the Committee to address the General Assembly at its future sessions under the item entitled "Promotion and protection of human rights";

23. Invites the Special Rapporteur to present his reports to the General Assembly at its future sessions under the item entitled "Promotion and protection of human rights";

24. Invites Member States to strengthen their efforts to raise awareness of the important contribution of migrants to all spheres of society and to consider the development of appropriate tools to highlight the contribution of migrants to recipient countries, including through the collection of data and the development of statistics;

25. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the resources necessary, from within existing resources of the United Nations, for the Committee to meet for two separate sessions in 2009, the first session to be of two consecutive weeks' duration and the second session to be of one week's duration, for the purpose of meeting the demands of the workload arising from the increasing number of reports of States parties that have been submitted to the Committee, and invites the Committee to consider ways of further improving the effectiveness of its working sessions;

26. Also requests the Secretary-General to report on the implementation of the present resolution at its sixty-fourth session and to include in that report an analysis of the ways and means to promote the human rights of migrants, taking into account the views of the Special Rapporteur, and decides to examine the question further under the item entitled “Promotion and protection of human rights”.

Also on 18 December [meeting 70], the Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/63/430/Add.2], adopted resolution 63/188 by recorded vote (121-4-60) [agenda item 64 (b)].

Respect for the right to universal freedom of travel and the vital importance of family reunification

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 61/162 of 19 December 2006,

Reaffirming that all human rights and fundamental freedoms are universal, indivisible, interdependent and interrelated,

Recalling the provisions of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, as well as article 12 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights,

Stressing that, as stated in the Programme of Action of the International Conference on Population and Development, family reunification of documented migrants is an important factor in international migration and that remittances by documented migrants to their countries of origin often constitute a very important source of foreign exchange and are instrumental in improving the well-being of relatives left behind,

Noting with great concern that, while some positive developments have occurred during the past few years in the accomplishment of the objectives highlighted in previous resolutions adopted by the General Assembly on this matter, in particular relating to facilitating the flow of remittances across international borders to help families, in certain cases it has been reported that measures have been adopted that increased the restrictions imposed on documented migrants in relation to family reunification and the possibility of sending remittances to their relatives in the country of origin,

Recalling that the family is the basic unit of society and, as such, should be strengthened, and that it is entitled to receive comprehensive protection and support,

1. Once again calls upon all States to guarantee the universally recognized freedom of travel to all foreign nationals legally residing in their territory;

2. Reaffirms that all Governments, in particular those of receiving countries, must recognize the vital importance of family reunification and promote its incorporation into national legislation in order to ensure protection of the unity of families of documented migrants;

3. Calls upon all States to allow, in conformity with international legislation, the free flow of financial remittances by foreign nationals residing in their territory to relatives in the country of origin;

4. Also calls upon all States to refrain from enacting, and to repeal if it already exists, legislation intended as a coercive measure that discriminates against individuals or groups of legal migrants by adversely affecting family reunification and the right to send financial remittances to relatives in the country of origin;

5. Decides to continue its consideration of the question at its sixty-fifth session under the item entitled “Promotion and protection of human rights”.

RECORDED VOTE ON RESOLUTION 63/188:

In favour: Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Azerbaijan, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belarus, Belize, Bhutan, Bolivia, Brazil, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Cambodia, Cameroon, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Cuba, Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Djibouti, Dominica, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Eritrea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Gabon, Gambia, Ghana, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Jamaica, Jordan, Kazakhstan, Kenya, Kuwait, Kyrgyzstan, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Maldives, Mali, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Myanmar, Namibia, Nauru, Nepal, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Qatar, Russian Federation, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Solomon Islands, Somalia, South Africa, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Syrian Arab Republic, Tajikistan, Timor-Leste, Togo, Tunisia, Turkmenistan, Tuvalu, Uganda, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Uzbekistan, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Discrimination against minorities

Forum on minority issues. The Forum on Minority Issues, established by the Human Rights Council in 2007 [YUN 2007, p. 723] as a platform for promoting dialogue and cooperation on issues pertaining to persons belonging to national or ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities, held its inaugural session (Geneva, 15–16 December) with a thematic focus on minorities and the right to education. Discussions centred on the identification of challenges and problems facing minorities and States; identification of good practices in relation to minorities and education; and consideration of opportunities, initiatives and solutions. The Forum's recommendations, contained in the report of the independent expert on minority issues [A/HRC/10/11/Add.1], addressed core principles, essential requirements for an effective education strategy, equal access to quality education for minorities, the learning environment and the content and delivery of the curriculum. Among the recommendations were that States should take measures to implement education rights actively to the maximum of their available resources, individually and through international assistance programmes. They should review, enact and amend legislation to affirm the right to education for all; eliminate discrimination and guarantee quality education for minorities; and create conditions for institutions representing minorities to participate meaningfully in the development and implementation of policies and programmes relating to education for minorities. In drafting education budgets, clear criteria tailored to the special needs of the minority group were required. Education services should reach minority communities throughout the national territory, be adequate to address their needs, and be comparable with national standards.

Reports of Independent Expert. In her annual report [A/HRC/7/23], the Independent Expert on minority issues, Gay McDougall (United States), focused on the discriminatory denial or deprivation of citizenship as a tool for exclusion of national, ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities. Minorities often faced discrimination and exclusion as they struggled to gain access to their human rights even under conditions of full citizenship. Denying or stripping them of citizenship could be an effective method of compounding their vulnerability, and could even lead to mass expulsion. Once denied or deprived of citizenship, minorities were inevitably denied protection of their basic rights and freedoms, including minority rights. According to the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, close to 15 million people in more than 49 countries were stateless, and numbers appeared to be increasing. Many minorities lived in a precarious legal situation. Even though entitled under law to citizenship in their State of residence, they were often denied or deprived of that right and in a situation of statelessness. While many conditions gave rise to statelessness, including protracted refugee situations and State succession, most stateless persons were members of minority groups.

In her recommendations, the Independent Expert said that while States had a prerogative to establish laws governing the acquisition or loss of nationality, they should do so within the framework of international human rights law. In situations relating to constitutional amendments or changes to legislation on the conferral of citizenship, States should not revoke citizenship retroactively. They should not arbitrarily deny or deprive minorities of citizenship on the basis of colour, descent, national or ethnic origin, language, race or religion; and should not consider citizenship a condition for the enjoyment of human rights, including those belonging to minorities. States should grant nationality to children born on their territory if the child would otherwise be stateless, and in that case the immigration status of parents should be irrelevant. States should facilitate the acquisition of citizenship through naturalization or permanent residency to persons lawfully resident in the country for a period commensurate with their having created established ties in the State, and that period should not be longer than 10 years. State requirements for the granting of citizenship should be reasonable and not overly burdensome, and States should conduct information campaigns on the right to citizenship and procedures for obtaining recognition of that right, in a language and form accessible to all.

An addendum to the report [A/HRC/7/23/Add.1] summarized 26 communications the Independent Expert had sent to 19 countries and the United Nations Interim Administration Mission in Kosovo from 29 July 2005 to 25 December 2007, and to which she had received nine replies.

The Independent Expert visited Guyana (28 July–1 August) [A/HRC/10/11/Add.2], where she witnessed a societal malaise that in some instances had deepened into despair, anger and resistance. That was particularly evident among Afro-Guyanese individuals and communities that reported feeling excluded, discriminated against and criminalized. Ethnically divided political and administrative structures and failed political processes had created frustrations and distrust in the institution of government. Violent incidents in 2008 had fuelled a climate of suspicion, rumour and conspiracy theory. Two separate and conflicting narratives and perceptions of reality among Afro- and Indo-Guyanese people threatened to undermine shared values and common goals. The Government had taken steps to address issues of ethnic tensions, criminal activities and economic underdevelopment, but further action was required to restore confidence in good governance and the rule of law among all communities. Afro-Guyanese people felt excluded from having a full voice and stake in the national polity and equal enjoyment of rights in many areas, including employment and economic participation. They reported stigmatization of young males and entire African communities, with derogatory stereotypes of criminality colouring societal perceptions of Afro-Guyanese. Particular challenges affected women from minority communities, including a scarcity of employment opportunities for Afro-Guyanese women, the heavy burden of care shouldered by single mothers and a culture of domestic violence. Women felt that the criminal justice system did not treat seriously cases of domestic violence.

Anti-discrimination legislation and policies were insufficient to address discrimination, exclusion and ethnically based bias. A robust anti-discrimination and equality plan of action should be applied across all sectors of society to break down ingrained barriers.

Reforms had to be far-reaching and highly consultative, and should lead to concrete outputs ensuring non-discrimination and equality. Promises should be delivered upon, including the creation of credible human rights commissions to deliver change and build new foundations. An open, constructive dialogue on inclusive governance was an essential component of such process. The Government, political parties and religious, cultural and civil society groups should reach out beyond the ethnic divide and build bridges between communities. The Government and both political parties should take full responsibility for ensuring that decisions taken to resolve conflict were fully implemented. Decisions taken at the National Stakeholder Forum (February/March) should be implemented, including the establishment of a new Parliamentary Standing Committee on National Security with ministerial representation; the appointment of the constitutional commissions expedited; and the Parliamentary Constitutional Reform Committee convened. The Government should support and fund educational and cultural projects established by institutions and organizations within the Afro-Guyanese community. Affirmative action programmes should address the economic, educational and social inequalities comparable to those in the Indo-Guyanese communities that existed in the Afro-Guyanese communities.

The independent expert visited Greece (8–16 September) [A/HRC/10/11/Add.3] to promote the implementation of the Declaration on the Rights of Persons Belonging to National, Ethnic, Religious and Linguistic Minorities (the 1992 Declaration on Minorities) [YUN 1992, p. 722]. Greece recognized only the Muslim religious minority in Western Thrace, protected under the 1923 Treaty of Lausanne, and no other minority communities. The Government was convinced that the claims of the existence of other minorities were unsubstantiated and politically motivated. However, whether a State officially recognized a minority was not conclusive with respect to its obligations. The expert visited Roma communities, which lacked basic facilities and faced the constant threat of eviction. Many Roma children were either in segregated schools or did not have access to education owing to their identity. While commending Government efforts to develop policies through the Integrated Action Programme on Roma, the expert noted problems of implementation at the local level, particularly regarding living conditions and segregation in public schools.

The expert urged the Government to ensure that national policies were not subverted by local authorities responsive to local prejudices. It should comply with European Court judgements with respect to the segregation of Roma children. The Government should refrain from disputing whether there was a Macedonian or a Turkish minority and focus on protecting the rights to self-identification, freedom of expression and freedom of association of those communities. Their rights to minority protections should be honoured in accordance with the 1992 Declaration on Minorities and international human rights treaties. Greece should comply fully with the judgements of the European Court of Human Rights, specifically those decisions recommending that associations should be allowed to use the words “Macedonian” and “Turkish” in their names and to express their ethnic identities.

Report of Secretary-General. An August report of the Secretary-General [A/HRC/9/8], submitted in accordance with a Human Rights Council request [YUN 2006, p. 760], outlined interventions undertaken by OHCHR to promote the rights of minorities. Those activities included capacity-building, inter-agency co-operation, building thematic expertise and preparations for the Forum on Minority Issues (see above). The Council was invited to consider whether a final report and a review of relevant developments should be submitted at the Council’s tenth (2009) session. The Council might also consider grouping all reports on minorities, including that of the independent experts on minority issues, the forum on minority issues and the High Commissioner at one time of the year.

Communications. On 13 March [A/HRC/7/G/10], the Dominican Republic transmitted to OHCHR its comments on the joint report of the independent expert on minority issues and the Special Rapporteur on contemporary forms of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance on their 2007 mission to the country [YUN 2007, p. 715].

On 19 March [A/HRC/7/G/14], Turkey informed the Human Rights Council secretariat that, according to the Turkish constitutional system, the word “minorities” encompassed only groups of persons defined and recognized as such on the basis of multilateral or bilateral instruments to which Turkey was party. The country’s cooperation with the independent expert concerning Turkey would continue in relation to the minorities recognized in line with the aforementioned understanding.

Human Rights Council action. On 27 March [A/63/53 (res. 7/6)], the Human Rights Council extended the mandate of the independent expert for a three-year period and called on States to cooperate with the expert in the performance of her tasks and duties.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December [meeting 70], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/63/430/Add.2], adopted resolution 63/174 without vote [agenda item 64 (b)].

Effective promotion of the Declaration on the Rights of Persons Belonging to National or Ethnic, Religious and Linguistic Minorities

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 47/135 of 18 December 1992, by which it adopted the Declaration on the Rights of Persons Belonging to National or Ethnic, Religious and Linguistic Minorities annexed to that resolution, and bearing in mind article 27 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights as well as other relevant existing international standards and national legislation,

Recalling also its subsequent resolutions on the effective promotion of the Declaration, as well as Human Rights Council resolutions 6/15 of 28 September 2007, by which the Council established the Forum on Minority Issues, and 7/6 of 27 March 2008 on the mandate of the independent expert on minority issues,

Noting that the promotion and protection of the rights of persons belonging to national or ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities contributes to political and social stability and peace and enriches the cultural diversity and heritage of society, as reaffirmed in the 2005 World Summit Outcome,

Affirming that effective measures and the creation of favourable conditions for the promotion and protection of the rights of persons belonging to national or ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities, ensuring effective non-discrimination and equality for all, as well as full and effective participation in matters affecting them, contribute to the prevention and peaceful solution of human rights problems and situations involving them,

Expressing concern at the frequency and severity of disputes and conflicts involving persons belonging to national or ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities in many countries and their often tragic consequences, and that they often suffer disproportionately from the effects of conflict resulting in the violation of their human rights and are particularly vulnerable to displacement through, inter alia, population transfers, refugee flows and forced relocation,

Emphasizing the need for reinforced efforts to meet the goal of the full realization of the rights of persons belonging to national or ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities, including by addressing economic and social conditions and marginalization, as well as to end any type of discrimination against them,

Emphasizing also the importance of human rights education, training and learning as well as of dialogue and interaction among all relevant stakeholders and members of society on the promotion and protection of the rights of persons belonging to national or ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities as an integral part of the development of society as a whole, including the sharing of best practices such as for the promotion of mutual understanding of minority issues, managing diversity by recognizing plural identities and promoting inclusive and stable societies as well as social cohesion therein,

Emphasizing further the important role that national institutions can play in the promotion and protection of rights of persons belonging to national or ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities as well as in early warning and awareness raising for problems regarding minority situations,

Acknowledging that the United Nations has an important role to play regarding the protection of the rights of persons belonging to national or ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities by, inter alia, taking due account of, and giving effect to, the Declaration,

1. Reaffirms the obligation of States to ensure that persons belonging to national or ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities may exercise fully and effectively all human rights and fundamental freedoms without any discrimination and in full equality before the law, as proclaimed in the Declaration on the Rights of Persons Belonging to National or Ethnic, Religious and Linguistic Minorities, and draws attention to the relevant provisions of the Durban Declaration and Programme of Action, including the provisions on forms of multiple discrimination;

2. Urges States and the international community to promote and protect the rights of persons belonging to national or ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities, as set out in the Declaration, including through the encouragement of conditions for the promotion of their identity, the provision of adequate education and the facilitation of their participation in all aspects of the political, economic, social, religious and cultural life of society and in the economic progress and development of their country, without discrimination, and to apply a gender perspective while doing so;

3. Urges States to take, as appropriate, all necessary constitutional, legislative, administrative and other measures to promote and give effect to the Declaration, and appeals to States to cooperate bilaterally and multilaterally, in particular on the exchange of best practices and lessons learned, in accordance with the Declaration, in order to promote and protect the rights of persons belonging to national or ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities;

4. Welcomes in this regard the initiative of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to organize, in cooperation with the International Labour Organization and the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime, the expert meeting on integration with diversity in policing, held in Vienna on 15 and 16 January 2008, bringing together police service professionals of different regions and countries of the world in order to share good experiences and lessons learned in relation to the inclusion of persons belonging to national or ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities in law enforcement systems, and takes note of the ongoing work on the elaboration of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights guidelines on integration with diversity in policing;

5. Encourages States, in their follow-up to the World Conference against Racism, Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia and Related Intolerance, to include aspects relating to persons belonging to national or ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities in their national plans of action and, in this context, to take forms of multiple discrimination fully into account;

6. Commends the independent expert on minority issues for the work that she has undertaken so far, for the important role that she has played in raising the level of awareness of, and in giving added visibility to the rights of persons belonging to national or ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities and for her ongoing efforts to promote and protect their rights in order to ensure equitable development and peaceful and stable societies, including through close cooperation with Governments, the relevant United Nations bodies and mechanisms and non-governmental organizations, as provided for in Human Rights Council resolution 7/6;

7. Calls upon all States to cooperate with the independent expert in the performance of the tasks and duties mandated to her, and encourages the specialized agencies, regional organizations, national human rights institutions and non-governmental organizations to develop regular dialogue and cooperation with the mandate-holder;

8. Takes note with appreciation of the decision of the Human Rights Council to establish the Forum on Minority Issues, which shall provide a platform for promoting dialogue and cooperation on issues pertaining to persons belonging to national or ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities as well as thematic contributions and expertise to the work of the independent expert on minority issues and identify and analyse best practices, challenges, opportunities and initiatives for the further implementation of the Declaration;

9. Invites States, United Nations mechanisms, bodies, the specialized agencies, funds and programmes, regional, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and national human rights institutions as well as academics and experts on minority issues to participate actively in the inaugural session of the Forum on Minority Issues, to be held in Geneva in December 2008, which will be dedicated to the subject of the rights of persons belonging to minorities and the right to education;

10. Calls upon the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to promote, within her mandate, the implementation of the Declaration, to continue to engage in a dialogue with Governments for that purpose and to regularly update and disseminate widely the United Nations Guide for Minorities;

11. Welcomes the inter-agency consultation of the High Commissioner with United Nations agencies, funds and programmes on minority issues, and calls upon those agencies, funds and programmes to contribute actively to this process;

12. Also welcomes the cooperation of the independent expert on minority issues with United Nations agencies, funds and programmes, such as the United Nations Children's Fund, the United Nations Development Programme and the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, in continuing their engagement with persons belonging to national or ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities in their work in all parts of the world;

13. Requests the High Commissioner to continue her efforts to improve coordination and cooperation among United Nations agencies, funds and programmes on activities related to the promotion and protection of the rights of persons belonging to national or ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities and to take the work of relevant regional organizations active in the field of human rights into account in her endeavours;

14. Invites the human rights treaty bodies, when considering reports submitted by States parties as well as special procedures of the Human Rights Council, to continue to give attention, within their respective mandates, to situations and rights of persons belonging to national or ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities;

15. Invites the High Commissioner to continue to seek voluntary contributions to facilitate the effective participation of representatives of non-governmental organizations and persons belonging to national or ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities, in particular those from developing countries, in minority-related activities organized by the United Nations, particularly its human rights bodies, and in doing so to give particular attention to ensuring the participation of young people and women;

16. Invites the independent expert on minority issues to report to the General Assembly at its sixty-fifth session on the implementation of the present resolution;

17. Decides to continue consideration of the question at its sixty-fifth session under the item entitled "Human rights questions".

Leprosy victims

Human Rights Council action. On 18 June [A/63/53 (res. 8/13)], the Human Rights Council called upon Governments to take measures to eliminate discrimination against persons affected by leprosy and their family members, including awareness-raising. OHCHR was requested to include the issue in its human rights and awareness-raising activities, and collect information on measures taken by Governments to eliminate such discrimination and to report to the Council and the Human Rights Council Advisory Committee. The Committee was requested to examine the OHCHR report and formulate draft principles and guidelines for eliminating such discrimination for submission to the Council in 2009.

Religious intolerance

Note by OHCHR. A January Secretariat note [A/HRC/7/10] recalled that the Human Rights Council, in 2007 [YUN 2007, p. 726], had requested the Special Rapporteur on freedom of religion or belief, Asma Jahangir (Pakistan), to submit the next annual report, as well as outstanding reports, to the Council in 2009 in accordance with its annual work programme. The annual report (see below) would summarize communications sent by the Special Rapporteur from 1 December 2006 to 30 November 2007 and replies received from Governments by January 2008.

Reports of Special Rapporteur. The Special Rapporteur's report, submitted in February [A/HRC/7/10/Add.1], summarized cases transmitted to 31 Governments and replies received thereto during that period.

In July, the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly the Special Rapporteur's interim report [A/63/161], submitted in accordance with Assembly resolution 62/157 [YUN 2007, p. 728], which addressed citizenship issues and religious discrimination in administrative procedures, as well as applicable legal standards and case law. The Rapporteur noted that while most States did not openly discriminate on the basis of religion with respect to citizenship issues and administrative procedures, there were instances where State practice or legislation was inconsistent with human rights standards. Of concern were: the denial or deprivation of citizenship based on a person's religious affiliation; compulsory mentioning of selected religions on official identity cards or passports; requirements to denounce a particular faith when applying for official documents; and restricted eligibility for State functions for persons of certain faiths.

In her conclusions and recommendations, the Special Rapporteur emphasized that the legitimate interests of the State had to be balanced on a case-by-case basis with the individual's freedom of religion or belief. She highlighted some aspects that might help determine whether certain restrictions on the right to freedom of religion or belief were in contravention of human rights law.

The Special Rapporteur carried out a mission to Israel and the Occupied Palestinian Territory (20–27 January) [A/HRC/10/8/Add.2], where she focused on restricted access to places of worship; the preservation and protection of religious sites; the indication of religious affiliation on official identity cards; matters of personal status; the preferential treatment of Orthodox Judaism; the religious rights of persons deprived of their liberty; advocacy of religious hatred that constituted incitement to discrimination, hostility or violence; conversions and missionary activities; and further concerns within the Occupied Palestinian Territory. She noted that liberty of movement, including access to places of worship, was restricted, in particular for Palestinian Muslims and Christians, through the system of permits, visas, checkpoints and the Barrier. While Israel informed the Special Rapporteur that those restrictions were necessary for security reasons, any measure taken to combat terrorism should comply with States' obligations under international law.

The Rapporteur recommended, among other things, that all parties bind themselves legally to protect the rights of religious minorities and include comprehensive guarantees for equality and non-discrimination on grounds of religion or belief. Israel should issue non-selective regulations to protect and preserve religious sites on a non-discriminatory basis. Additional recommendations referred to official documents, matters of personal status and training for police, military and prison personnel. Lastly, in both the State of Israel and in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, any advocacy of religious hatred that constituted incitement to discrimination, hostility or violence should be investigated, prosecuted and punished.

The Special Rapporteur visited India (3–20 March) [A/HRC/10/8/Add.3], where she focused on the situation of religious or belief minorities; justice for victims and survivors of communal violence; freedom of religion or belief in Jammu and Kashmir; the negative impact of laws on religious conversion in several states; and implications of religion-based personal laws. The Special Rapporteur noted the religious diversity of society and the positive impact of secularism as embodied in the Constitution, as well as the high degree of human rights activism in the country. However, even though a comprehensive legal framework to protect freedom of religion or belief did exist, many interlocutors, especially from religious minorities, were dissatisfied with its implementation. Owing to the federal nature of the political system, states had wide powers, including in the field of law and order. While recognizing the efforts and achievements of the central Government, the Special Rapporteur expressed concern about intolerance and discrimination based on religion or belief, especially in certain states. Organized groups claiming adherence to religious ideologies had unleashed an all-pervasive fear of mob violence in many parts of the country. Law enforcement officials were often reluctant to take any action against individuals or groups that perpetrated violence in the name of religion or belief. She stressed the need to prevent political exploitation of communal distinctions and to address advocacy of religious hatred that constituted incitement to discrimination, hostility or violence.

In her recommendations, the Rapporteur appealed to the authorities to protect members of religious minorities from attacks and to step up efforts to prevent communal violence. Legislation on communal violence should take into account the concerns of religious minorities and should not reinforce impunity of communalized police forces at the state level. Inquiries into large-scale communal violence should be accorded the highest priority by investigation teams, the judiciary and any commission appointed to study the situation. Laws and bills on religious conversion in several states should be reconsidered since they raised human rights concerns, in particular the use of vague or extremely broad terminology and discriminatory provisions. The eligibility for affirmative action benefits should be restored to those members of scheduled castes and scheduled tribes who had converted to another religion. Religion-based personal laws should be reviewed to prevent discrimination based on religion or belief and to ensure gender equality.

The Special Rapporteur, during her mission to Turkmenistan (4–10 September) [A/HRC/10/8/Add.4], was impressed by the high level of tolerance and the climate of religious harmony. However, there was still mistrust of religious organizations and collective manifestation of religion. Over the past eight years, reports had been received of arrests, intimidation, harassment and restrictions on the religious activities of individuals and groups allegedly perpetrated by the authorities. Although the situation had much improved since 2007, individuals and religious communities remained under scrutiny and faced difficulties when manifesting their freedom of religion or belief. The Special Rapporteur was concerned about the imposition of legal or policy restrictions on registration, places of worship, religious material, religious education and proselytism. Those laws and their implementation amounted in some instances to undue limitations on freedom to manifest one's religion or belief, as well as on other rights, such as freedom of association and freedom of expression.

In her conclusions and recommendations, the Special Rapporteur emphasized that the enactment and implementation of laws unduly restricting freedom of religion or belief could not provide a long-term solution to concerns of the Turkmenistan authorities that external extremist groups might disrupt the climate of religious harmony. Law-making in the area of religion or belief was sensitive. Vague or excessive legislative provisions could create tensions and give rise to multiple problems rather than solving them. In addition, they might be subject to arbitrary interpretation by law enforcement agencies and local administration. Consequently, the Rapporteur urged the Government to review the amended law on freedom of conscience and religious organizations so that it no longer infringed on the rights of individuals and groups in their exercise of freedom of religion or belief. In particular, the prohibition on unregistered religious activities and undue restrictions on religious material, education and attire should be removed from the law. Similarly, the Government should ensure that religious communities did not encounter obstructions with regard to the building, opening, renting or use of places of worship. The Council on Religious Affairs should include representatives of religious minorities and become a facilitating rather than a monitoring mechanism. On conscientious objection, the Government should offer an alternative civilian service for those who refused to perform military service owing to their religious beliefs. It should also reform the judiciary, offering legal redress and compensation for denial of freedom of religion or belief. Law enforcement officials and local representatives should receive adequate training about international human rights standards, including on freedom of religion or belief.

Communication. On 29 February [A/62/714-S/2008/157], Pakistan, as Chair of the Organization of the Islamic Conference (oic) Group at New York, transmitted to the Secretary-General a statement by the oic Group expressing concern about the increasing manifestations of Islamophobia that encouraged incitement to hatred against Islam and Muslims around the world and posed a threat to peace and security within and among States. Those acts called for redoubling efforts to promote understanding and respect for religions, cultures and civilizations.

Human Rights Council action. On 27 March [A/63/53 (res. 7/19)], by a recorded vote of 21 to 10, with 14 abstentions, the Human Rights Council deplored attacks and assaults on businesses, cultural centres and places of worship of all religions and targeting of religious symbols. It urged States to prohibit the dissemination of racist and xenophobic ideas and material aimed at any religion or its followers that constituted incitement to racial and religious hatred, hostility or violence. They should provide adequate protection against acts of hatred, discrimination, intimidation and coercion resulting from the defamation of any religion, and take all possible measures to promote tolerance and respect for all religions and their value systems. The High Commissioner should report on the implementation of the resolution and submit a study compiling legislation and jurisprudence on defamation of and contempt for religions to the Council's ninth (2008) session.

Reports of High Commissioner. In response to that request, the High Commissioner, in September, submitted a report [A/HRC/9/7] on the implementation of Council resolution 7/19 on combating defamation of religion. The report summarized replies received from nine States, the Council of Europe and five NGOs.

Also pursuant to the Council's request, the High Commissioner submitted a study [A/HRC/9/25] compiling legislation and jurisprudence concerning defamation and contempt of religion. The study presented preliminary findings on international, regional and national legislation and relevant jurisprudence; summarized relevant provisions of international instruments and jurisprudence; highlighted the conclusions and recommendations of Special Rapporteurs and former mandate holders; and reviewed regional norms and jurisprudence on freedom of thought, conscience and religion and freedom of expression. The study concluded that further clarity was needed with regard to the demarcation line between freedom of expression and incitement to religious hatred. To protect individuals and groups, a better understanding of the permissible limitations to freedom of expression in accordance with international human rights law should be developed. OHCHR would organize, in October, an expert seminar entitled "Links between articles 19 and 20 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights: Freedom of expression and advocacy of religious hatred that constitutes incitement to discrimination, hostility or violence".

gies and parallels with other types of “incitement”; analysis of the notion of advocacy of religious hatred that constituted incitement to discrimination, hostility or violence; limits to the restrictions to freedom of expression: criteria and application; and the international legal framework and the interrelatedness between States’ obligations and articles 19 and 20 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights.

Report of Secretary-General. In accordance with General Assembly resolution 62/154 [YUN 2007, p. 726], the Secretary-General in October submitted a report [A/63/365] on measures and activities undertaken by Member States, UN bodies, regional organizations, national human rights institutions and NGOs to implement that resolution. The Assembly had requested that the report address the possible correlation between defamation of religions and the upsurge in incitement, intolerance and hatred in many parts of the world. The report concluded that a comprehensive review of trends and patterns would be required to establish how and where incidence of religious defamation and incitement to racial and religious hatred were manifested and thereby establish such a correlation. The results of such a review would help in evaluating the effectiveness of the international legal framework, as well as in determining conditions that would facilitate dialogue and joint action for combating racism, discrimination and xenophobia.

Communication. On 26 June [A/HRC/9/G/2], OIC forwarded to the High Commissioner an updated version of the OIC Observatory Report on Islamophobia as its contribution to the implementation of General Assembly resolution 62/154.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December [meeting 70], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/63/430/Add.2], adopted resolution 63/171 by recorded vote (86-53-42) [agenda item 64 (b)].

Combating defamation of religions

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the pledge made by all States, under the Charter of the United Nations, to promote and encourage universal respect for and observance of all human rights and fundamental freedoms without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion,

Recalling the relevant international instruments on the elimination of discrimination, in particular the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, the Declaration on the Elimination of All Forms of Intolerance and of Discrimination Based on Religion or Belief, the Declaration on the Human Rights of Individuals Who are not Nationals of the Country in which They Live and the Declaration on the Rights of Persons Belonging to National or Ethnic, Religious and Linguistic Minorities,

Reaffirming that all human rights are universal, indivisible, interdependent and interrelated,

Recalling the relevant resolutions of the Commission on Human Rights and the Human Rights Council in this regard,

Welcoming the resolve expressed in the United Nations Millennium Declaration adopted by the General Assembly on 8 September 2000 to take measures to eliminate the increasing acts of racism and xenophobia in many societies and to promote greater harmony and tolerance in all societies, and looking forward to its effective implementation at all levels,

Underlining in this regard the importance of the Durban Declaration and Programme of Action adopted by the World Conference against Racism, Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia and Related Intolerance, held in Durban, South Africa, in 2001, welcoming the progress achieved in implementing them, and emphasizing that they constitute a solid foundation for the elimination of all scourges and manifestations of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance,

Expressing concern at the increase in racist violence and xenophobic ideas in many parts of the world, in political circles, in the sphere of public opinion and in society at large, as a result, inter alia, of the resurgence of activities of political parties and associations established on the basis of racist, xenophobic and ideological superiority platforms and charters, and the persistent use of those platforms and charters to promote or incite racist ideologies,

Deeply alarmed at the rising trends towards discrimination based on religion or belief, including in some national policies, laws and administrative measures that stigmatize groups of people belonging to certain religions and beliefs under a variety of pretexts relating to security and irregular immigration, thereby legitimizing discrimination against them, and consequently impairing their enjoyment of the right to freedom of thought, conscience and religion, and impeding their ability to observe, practise and manifest their religion freely and without fear of coercion, violence or reprisal,

Noting with deep concern the serious instances of intolerance, discrimination and acts of violence based on religion or belief, intimidation and coercion motivated by extremism, religious or otherwise, occurring in many parts of the world, in addition to the negative projection of certain religions in the media and the introduction and enforcement of laws and administrative measures that specifically discriminate against and target persons with certain ethnic and religious backgrounds, particularly Muslim minorities following the events of 11 September 2001, and that threaten to impede their full enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Stressing that defamation of religions is a serious affront to human dignity leading to the illicit restriction of the freedom of religion of their adherents and incitement to religious hatred and violence,

Stressing also the need to effectively combat defamation of all religions, and incitement to religious hatred in general,

Reaffirming that discrimination on the grounds of religion or belief constitutes a violation of human rights and a disavowal of the principles of the Charter,

Noting with concern that defamation of religions, and incitement to religious hatred in general, could lead to social disharmony and violations of human rights, and alarmed at the inaction of some States to combat this burgeoning trend and the resulting discriminatory practices against adherents of certain religions,

Taking note of the reports of the Special Rapporteur on contemporary forms of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance submitted to the Human Rights Council at its fourth and sixth sessions, which draw attention to the serious nature of the defamation of all religions, and reiterating the call of the Special Rapporteur to all States to wage a systematic campaign against incitement to racial and religious hatred by maintaining a careful balance between the defence of secularism and respect for freedom of religion and by acknowledging and respecting the complementarity of all the freedoms embodied in internationally agreed human rights instruments, including the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights,

Recalling the proclamation of the Global Agenda for Dialogue among Civilizations, and inviting States, the organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, within existing resources, other international and regional organizations and civil society to contribute to the implementation of the Programme of Action contained in the Global Agenda,

Welcoming the efforts of the Alliance of Civilizations initiative in promoting mutual respect and understanding among different cultures and societies, as well as the forthcoming second forum of the Alliance, to be held in Istanbul, Turkey, on 6 and 7 April 2009,

Convinced that respect for cultural, ethnic, religious and linguistic diversity, as well as dialogue among and within civilizations, is essential for peace, understanding and friendship among individuals and people of the different cultures and nations of the world, while manifestations of cultural prejudice, intolerance and xenophobia towards people belonging to different cultures, religions and beliefs generate hatred and violence among peoples and nations throughout the world,

Recognizing the valuable contributions of all religions and beliefs to modern civilization and the contribution that dialogue among civilizations can make to an improved awareness and understanding of common values,

Underlining the important role of education in the promotion of tolerance, which involves acceptance by the public of, and its respect for, diversity, including with regard to religious expressions, and underlining also the fact that education should contribute in a meaningful way to promoting tolerance and the elimination of discrimination based on religion or belief,

Reaffirming the need for all States to continue their national and international efforts to enhance dialogue and broaden understanding among civilizations, cultures, religions and beliefs, and emphasizing that States, regional organizations, non-governmental organizations, religious bodies and the media have an important role to play in promoting tolerance, respect for and freedom of religion and belief,

Welcoming all international and regional initiatives aimed at promoting cross-cultural and interfaith harmony, including the international dialogue on interfaith cooperation, and the World Conference on Dialogue, held in Madrid from 16 to 18 July 2008, and their valuable efforts towards the promotion of a culture of peace and dialogue at all levels, and taking note with appreciation of the programmes led by the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization in this regard,

Underlining the importance of increasing contacts at all levels in order to deepen dialogue and reinforce understanding among different cultures, religions, beliefs and civilizations, and in this regard taking note with appreciation of the Declaration and Programme of Action adopted by the Ministerial Meeting on Human Rights and Cultural Diversity of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries, held in Tehran on 3 and 4 September 2007,

Recalling its resolution 62/154 of 18 December 2007,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General and the conclusions contained therein;

2. Expresses deep concern at the negative stereotyping of religions and manifestations of intolerance and discrimination in matters of religion or belief still evident in the world;

3. Strongly deplores all acts of psychological and physical violence and assaults, and incitement thereto, against persons on the basis of their religion or belief, and such acts directed against their businesses, properties, cultural centres and places of worship, as well as targeting of holy sites and religious symbols of all religions;

4. Expresses deep concern at the programmes and agendas pursued by extremist organizations and groups aimed at creating and perpetuating stereotypes about certain religions, in particular when condoned by Governments;

5. Notes with deep concern the intensification of the overall campaign of defamation of religions, and incitement to religious hatred in general, including the ethnic and religious profiling of Muslim minorities in the aftermath of the tragic events of 11 September 2001;

6. Recognizes that, in the context of the fight against terrorism, defamation of religions and incitement to religious hatred in general become aggravating factors that contribute to the denial of fundamental rights and freedoms of members of target groups, as well as their economic and social exclusion;

7. Expresses deep concern in this respect that Islam is frequently and wrongly associated with human rights violations and terrorism;

8. Reiterates the commitment of all States to the implementation, in an integrated manner, of the United Nations Global Counter-Terrorism Strategy, which was adopted without a vote by the General Assembly on 8 September 2006 and reaffirmed by the Assembly in its resolution 62/272 of 5 September 2008, and which clearly confirms, inter alia, that terrorism cannot and should not be associated with any religion, nationality, civilization or ethnic group, stressing the need to reinforce the international community's commitment to promote a culture of peace, justice and human development, ethnic, national and religious tolerance, and respect for all religions, religious values, beliefs or cultures and prevent the defamation of religions;

9. Deplores the use of the print, audio-visual and electronic media, including the Internet, and any other means to incite acts of violence, xenophobia or related intolerance and discrimination against any religion, as well as targeting of religious symbols;

10. Emphasizes that, as stipulated in international human rights law, everyone has the right to hold opinions without interference, and has the right to freedom of expression, the exercise of which carries with it special duties and responsibilities and may therefore be subject to limitations as are provided for by law and are necessary for respect of the rights or reputations of others, protection of national security or of public order, public health or morals;

11. Reaffirms that general recommendation XV(42) of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination, in which the Committee stipulated that the prohibition of the dissemination of all ideas based upon racial superiority or hatred is compatible with freedom of opinion and expression, is equally applicable to the question of incitement to religious hatred;

12. Welcomes the work undertaken by the Special Rapporteur on contemporary forms of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance and the Special Rapporteur on the promotion and protection of the right to freedom of opinion and expression in accordance with their mandates defined by the Human Rights Council in its resolutions 7/34 and 7/36 of 28 March 2008;

13. Strongly condemns all manifestations and acts of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance against national or ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities and migrants and the stereotypes often applied to them, including on the basis of religion or belief, and urges all States to apply and, where applicable, reinforce existing laws when such xenophobic or intolerant acts, manifestations or expressions occur, in order to eradicate impunity for those who commit xenophobic and racist acts;

14. Reaffirms the obligation of all States to enact the necessary legislation to prohibit the advocacy of national, racial or religious hatred that constitutes incitement to discrimination, hostility or violence, and encourages States, in their follow-up to the World Conference against Racism, Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia and Related Intolerance, to include aspects relating to national or ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities in their national plans of action and, in this context, to take forms of multiple discrimination against minorities fully into account;

15. Invites all States to put into practice the provisions of the Declaration on the Elimination of All Forms of Intolerance and of Discrimination Based on Religion or Belief;

16. Urges all States to provide, within their respective legal and constitutional systems, adequate protection against acts of hatred, discrimination, intimidation and coercion resulting from defamation of religions, and incitement to religious hatred in general, to take all possible measures to promote tolerance and respect for all religions and beliefs and the understanding of their value systems and to complement legal systems with intellectual and moral strategies to combat religious hatred and intolerance;

17. Also urges all States to ensure that all public officials, including members of law enforcement bodies, the military, civil servants and educators, in the course of their official duties, respect people regardless of their different religions and beliefs and do not discriminate against persons on the grounds of their religion or belief, and that any necessary and appropriate education or training is provided;

18. Underscores the need to combat defamation of religions, and incitement to religious hatred in general, by strategizing and harmonizing actions at the local, national, regional and international levels through education and awareness-raising, and urges all States to ensure equal access to education for all, in law and in practice, including access to free primary education for all children, both girls and boys, and access for adults to lifelong learning and education based on respect for human rights, diversity and tolerance, without discrimination of any kind, and to refrain from any legal or other measures leading to racial segregation in access to schooling;

19. Calls upon all States to exert the utmost efforts, in accordance with their national legislation and in conformity with international human rights and humanitarian law, to ensure that religious places, sites, shrines and symbols are fully respected and protected, and to take additional measures in cases where they are vulnerable to desecration or destruction;

20. Calls upon the international community to foster a global dialogue to promote a culture of tolerance and peace at all levels, based on respect for human rights and diversity of religion and belief, and urges States, non-governmental organizations, religious leaders and bodies and the print and electronic media to support and foster such a dialogue;

21. Affirms that the Human Rights Council shall promote universal respect for all religious and cultural values and address instances of intolerance, discrimination and incitement of hatred against members of any community or adherents of any religion, as well as the means to consolidate international efforts in order to combat impunity for such deplorable acts;

22. Welcomes the initiative by the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights on the recently held expert seminar on freedom of expression and advocacy of religious hatred that constitutes incitement to discrimination, hostility or violence, on 2 and 3 October 2008, and requests the High Commissioner to continue to build on this initiative, with a view to concretely contributing to the prevention and elimination of all such forms of incitement and the consequences of negative stereotyping of religions or beliefs, and their adherents, on the human rights of those individuals and their communities;

23. Takes note of the efforts of the High Commissioner to promote and include human rights aspects in educational programmes, particularly the World Programme for Human Rights Education proclaimed by the General Assembly on 10 December 2004, and calls upon the High Commissioner to continue those efforts, with particular focus on:

(a) The contributions of cultures, as well as religious and cultural diversity;

(b) Collaboration with other relevant bodies of the United Nations system and regional and international organizations in holding joint conferences designed to encourage dialogue among civilizations and promote understanding of the universality of human rights and their implementation at various levels, in particular the Office of the United Nations High Representative for the Alliance of

Civilizations and the unit within the Secretariat mandated to interact with various entities within the United Nations system and coordinate their contribution to the intergovernmental process;

24. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report on the implementation of the present resolution, including on the possible correlation between defamation of religions and the upsurge in incitement, intolerance and hatred in many parts of the world, to the General Assembly at its sixty-fourth session.

Against: Andorra, Australia, Austria, Belgium, Belize, Bulgaria, Canada, Cape Verde, Croatia, Cyprus, Czech Republic, Denmark, Estonia, Finland, France, Georgia, Germany, Greece, Hungary, Iceland, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Latvia, Liberia, Liechtenstein, Lithuania, Luxembourg, Malta, Marshall Islands, Micronesia, Moldova, Monaco, Montenegro, Netherlands, Norway, Palau, Poland, Portugal, Republic of Korea, Romania, Samoa, San Marino, Serbia, Slovakia, Slovenia, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland, The former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Ukraine, United Kingdom, United States.

Abstaining: Argentina, Armenia, Benin, Botswana, Brazil, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Central African Republic, Chile, Colombia, Congo, Costa Rica, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Ghana, Grenada, Guatemala, Haiti, India, Japan, Kenya, Madagascar, Malawi, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Nauru, Nepal, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Timor-Leste, Tonga, Trinidad and Tobago, Tuvalu, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Zambia.

Also on 18 December [meeting 70], the Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/63/430/Add.2], adopted resolution 63/181 without vote [agenda item 64 (b)].

Elimination of all forms of intolerance and of discrimination based on religion or belief

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 36/55 of 25 November 1981, by which it proclaimed the Declaration on the Elimination of All Forms of Intolerance and of Discrimination Based on Religion or Belief,

Recalling also article 18 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, article 18 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and other relevant human rights provisions,

Recalling further its previous resolutions on the elimination of all forms of intolerance and of discrimination based on religion or belief, including resolution 62/157 of 18 December 2007, as well as Human Rights Council resolution 6/37 of 14 December 2007, in which the Council, inter alia, extended the mandate of the Special Rapporteur on freedom of religion or belief,

Reaffirming the recognition by the 1993 World Conference on Human Rights that all human rights are universal, indivisible, interdependent and interrelated, and its call upon all Governments to take all appropriate measures in compliance with their international obligations and with due regard to their respective legal systems to counter intolerance and related violence based on religion or belief, including practices of discrimination against women and the desecration of religious sites, recognizing that every individual has the right to freedom of thought, conscience, expression and religion,

Considering that religion or belief, for those who profess either, is one of the fundamental elements in their conception of life and that freedom of religion or belief should be fully respected and guaranteed,

Considering also that the disregard for and infringement of human rights and fundamental freedoms, in particular the right to freedom of thought, conscience and religion or belief, have brought, directly or indirectly, wars and great suffering to humankind,

Recognizing the important work carried out by the Human Rights Committee in providing guidance with respect to the scope of the freedom of religion or belief,

Resolved to speed up the implementation of the Declaration on the Elimination of All Forms of Intolerance and of Discrimination Based on Religion or Belief,

Believing that further intensified efforts are therefore required to promote and protect the right to freedom of thought, conscience and religion or belief and to eliminate all forms of hatred, intolerance and discrimination based on religion or belief, as also noted at the World Conference against Racism, Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia and Related Intolerance,

Reaffirming that everyone has the right to freedom of thought, conscience and religion or belief, which includes the freedom to have or to adopt a religion or belief of one's choice and the freedom, either alone or in community with others and in public or private, to manifest one's religion or belief in teaching, practice, worship and observance,

Seriously concerned at all attacks on religious places, sites and shrines in violation of international law, in particular human rights and humanitarian law, including any deliberate destruction of relics and monuments,

Seriously concerned also at any misuse of registration procedures and at the resort to discriminatory registration procedures as a means to limit the right to freedom of religion or belief of members of certain religious communities, at the limitations placed on religious materials and at the obstacles placed in the way of construction of places of worship, inconsistent with the exercise of the right to freedom of religion or belief,

Noting that a formal or legal distinction at the national level between different kinds of religions or beliefs may, in some cases, constitute discrimination and may impinge on the enjoyment of the freedom of religion or belief,

Expressing deep concern at all forms of discrimination and intolerance, including prejudices against persons and derogatory stereotyping of persons, based on religion or belief,

Recognizing the importance of enhanced interreligious and intrareligious dialogue in promoting tolerance in matters relating to religion or belief, and welcoming different initiatives in this regard, including the Alliance of Civilizations and the programmes led by the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization,

Emphasizing that States, regional organizations, non-governmental organizations, religious bodies and the media have an important role to play in promoting tolerance and respect for religious and cultural diversity and in the universal promotion and protection of human rights, including freedom of religion or belief,

Convinced of the need to address the rise in various parts of the world of religious extremism that affects the rights of individuals, the situations of violence and discrimination that affect many women as well as other individuals on the grounds or in the name of religion or belief or in accordance with cultural and traditional practices, and the misuse of religion or belief for ends inconsistent with the Charter of the United Nations, as well as other relevant instruments of the United Nations,

Underlining the importance of education in the promotion of tolerance, which involves the acceptance by the public of, and its respect for, diversity, including with regard to religious expression, and underlining also the fact that education, in particular at school, should contribute in a meaningful way to promoting tolerance and the elimination of discrimination based on religion or belief,

Reaffirming, in this regard, that education shall be directed to the full development of the human personality and to the strengthening of respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms and shall promote understanding, tolerance and friendship among all nations and racial or religious groups and further the activities of the United Nations for the maintenance of peace,

1. Condemns all forms of intolerance and of discrimination based on religion or belief, as well as violations of freedom of thought, conscience and religion or belief;

2. Stresses that the right to freedom of thought, conscience and religion applies equally to all people, regardless of their religions or beliefs, and without any discrimination as to their equal protection by the law;

3. Emphasizes that, as underlined by the Human Rights Committee, restrictions on the freedom to manifest one's religion or belief are permitted only if limitations are prescribed by law, are necessary to protect public safety, order, health or morals, or the fundamental rights and freedoms of others, are non-discriminatory and are applied in a manner that does not vitiate the right to freedom of thought, conscience and religion;

4. Recognizes with deep concern the overall rise in instances of intolerance and violence directed against members of many religious and other communities in various parts of the world, including cases motivated by Islamophobia, anti-Semitism and Christianophobia;

5. Expresses concern over the persistence of institutionalized social intolerance and discrimination practised against many in the name of religion or belief;

6. Recalls that legal procedures pertaining to religious or belief-based groups and places of worship are not a prerequisite for the exercise of the right to manifest one's religion or belief;

7. Emphasizes that such procedures, as described in paragraph 6 above, at the national or local level, as and when legally required, should be non-discriminatory in order to contribute to the effective protection of the right of all persons to practise their religion or belief either individually or in community with others and in public or private;

8. Recognizes with concern the situation of persons in vulnerable situations, including persons deprived of their liberty, refugees, asylum-seekers and internally displaced persons, children, persons belonging to national or ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities and migrants, as regards their ability to freely exercise their right to freedom of religion or belief;

9. Urges States to step up their efforts to protect and promote freedom of thought, conscience and religion or belief, and to this end:

(a) To ensure that their constitutional and legislative systems provide adequate and effective guarantees of freedom of thought, conscience, religion and belief to all without distinction, inter alia, by the provision of effective remedies in cases where the right to freedom of thought, conscience, religion or belief, or the right to practise freely one's religion, including the right to change one's religion or belief, is violated;

(b) To ensure that no one within their jurisdiction is deprived of the right to life, liberty or security of person because of religion or belief and that no one is subjected to torture or other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, or arbitrary arrest or detention on that account and to bring to justice all perpetrators of violations of these rights;

(c) To ensure that no one is discriminated against on the basis of his or her religion or belief when accessing, inter alia, education, medical care, employment, humanitarian assistance or social benefits;

(d) To review, whenever relevant, existing registration practices in order to ensure that such practices do not limit the right of all persons to manifest their religion or belief, alone or in community with others and in public or private;

(e) To ensure that no official documents are withheld from the individual on the grounds of religion or belief and that everyone has the right to refrain from disclosing information concerning one's religious affiliation on such documents against one's will;

(f) To ensure that everyone has the right and the opportunity to have access, on general terms of equality, to public service in one's country, without any discrimination on the basis of religion or belief;

(g) To ensure, in particular, the right of all persons to worship or assemble in connection with a religion or belief and their right to establish and maintain places for these purposes and the right of all persons to write, issue and disseminate relevant publications in these areas;

(h) To ensure that, in accordance with appropriate national legislation and in conformity with international human rights law, the freedom of all persons and members of groups to establish and maintain religious, charitable or humanitarian institutions is fully respected and protected;

(i) To exert the utmost efforts, in accordance with their national legislation and in conformity with international human rights law, to ensure that religious places, sites, shrines and symbols are fully respected and protected and to take additional measures in cases where they are vulnerable to desecration and destruction;

(j) To ensure that all public officials and civil servants, including members of law enforcement bodies, the military and educators, in the course of fulfilling their official duties, respect all religions or beliefs and do not discriminate for reasons based on religion or belief, and that all necessary and appropriate education or training is provided;

10. Condemns any advocacy of religious hatred that constitutes incitement to discrimination, hostility or violence, whether it involves the use of print, audio-visual or electronic media or any other means;

11. Emphasizes that freedom of religion or belief and freedom of expression are interdependent, interrelated and mutually reinforcing;

12. Urges States to step up their efforts to eliminate intolerance and discrimination based on religion or belief, notably by:

(a) Taking all necessary and appropriate action, in conformity with international standards of human rights, to combat hatred, discrimination, intolerance and acts of violence, intimidation and coercion motivated by intolerance based on religion or belief, as well as incitement to hostility and violence, with particular regard to members of religious minorities in all parts of the world, and devoting particular attention to practices that violate the human rights of women and discriminate against women, including in the exercise of their right to freedom of thought, conscience and religion or belief;

(b) Promoting and encouraging, through education and other means, understanding, tolerance and respect in all matters relating to freedom of religion or belief and undertaking all appropriate efforts to encourage those engaged in teaching to promote mutual understanding, tolerance and respect;

13. Emphasizes that no religion should be equated with terrorism, as this may have adverse consequences on the enjoyment of the right to freedom of religion or belief of all members of the religious communities concerned;

14. Stresses the need to strengthen dialogue, inter alia, through the Alliance of Civilizations and its High Representative and the focal point within the Secretariat designated by the General Assembly, in its resolution 62/90 of 17 December 2007, to interact with various entities in the United Nations system and coordinate their contribution to dialogue;

15. Emphasizes the importance of a continued and strengthened dialogue among and within religions or beliefs, at all levels and with broader participation, including of women, to promote greater tolerance, respect and mutual understanding;

16. Invites all actors to address, in the context of inter-religious and intercultural dialogue, inter alia, the following issues within the framework of international human rights:

(a) The rise of religious extremism affecting religions in all parts of the world;

(b) The situations of violence and discrimination that affect many women as well as other individuals on the grounds or in the name of religion or belief or in accordance with cultural and traditional practices;

(c) The misuse of religion or belief for ends inconsistent with the Charter of the United Nations, as well as other relevant instruments of the United Nations;

17. Welcomes and encourages the continuing efforts of all actors in society, including non-governmental organizations and bodies and groups based on religion or belief, to promote the implementation of the Declaration on the Elimination of All Forms of Intolerance and of Discrimination Based on Religion or Belief, and further encourages their work in promoting freedom of religion or belief and in highlighting cases of religious intolerance, discrimination and persecution;

18. Recommends that States, the United Nations and other actors, including non-governmental organizations and bodies and groups based on religion or belief, in their efforts to promote freedom of religion or belief, ensure the widest possible dissemination of the text of the Declaration on the Elimination of All Forms of Intolerance and of Discrimination Based on Religion or Belief, in as many different languages as possible, and promote its implementation;

19. Welcomes the work and the interim report of the Special Rapporteur on freedom of religion or belief;

20. Urges all Governments to cooperate fully with the Special Rapporteur, to respond favourably to her requests to visit their countries and to provide all necessary information for the effective fulfilment of her mandate;

21. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure that the Special Rapporteur receives the resources necessary to fully discharge her mandate;

22. Requests the Special Rapporteur to submit an interim report to the General Assembly at its sixty-fourth session;

23. Decides to consider the question of the elimination of all forms of religious intolerance at its sixty-fourth session under the item entitled "Promotion and protection of human rights".

Conscientious objection

OHCHR report. In an August report [A/HRC/9/24] submitted in accordance with a Human Rights Council request [YUN 2006, p. 760], OHCHR addressed recent developments on conscientious objection to military service. An important development was a 2006 decision by the Human Rights Committee regarding two Jehovah's Witnesses in the Republic of Korea who had refused to be drafted on account of their religious beliefs and conscience. The Committee concluded that the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights provided certain protection against being forced to act against genuinely held religious belief. It was in practice common to conceive alternatives to compulsory military service that provided equivalent social good and made equivalent demands on the individual. In other developments, the Ibero-American Convention on Young People's Rights, which entered into force on 1 March, recognized the right to conscientious objection. OHCHR was preparing a publication on conscientious objection to military service and alternative service programmes for persons determined to be conscientious objectors, so as to consolidate in a single source applicable law and jurisprudence. The publication would also take note of resolutions and recommendations adopted by intergovernmental bodies, and contain examples of national practice. It would provide guidance to States, organizations and academics on applicable law and practice on the subject.

Right to self-determination

Report of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 62/144 [YUN 2007, p. 730], the Secretary-General, in an August report [A/63/254], summarized the Human Rights Council's consideration of the implementation of the right of peoples to self-determination. It also outlined the jurisprudence of the Human Rights Committee on the treaty-based human rights norms relating to the realization of that right.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December [meeting 70], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/63/429], adopted resolution 63/163 without vote [agenda item 63].

Universal realization of the right of peoples to self-determination

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the importance, for the effective guarantee and observance of human rights, of the universal realization of the right of peoples to self-determination enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations and embodied in the International Covenants on Human Rights, as well as in the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples contained in General Assembly resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960,

Welcoming the progressive exercise of the right to self-determination by peoples under colonial, foreign or alien occupation and their emergence into sovereign statehood and independence,

Deeply concerned at the continuation of acts or threats of foreign military intervention and occupation that are threatening to suppress, or have already suppressed, the right to self-determination of peoples and nations,

Expressing grave concern that, as a consequence of the persistence of such actions, millions of people have been and are being uprooted from their homes as refugees and displaced persons, and emphasizing the urgent need for concerted international action to alleviate their condition,

Recalling the relevant resolutions regarding the violation of the right of peoples to self-determination and other human rights as a result of foreign military intervention, aggression and occupation, adopted by the Commission on Human Rights at its sixty-first and previous sessions,

Reaffirming its previous resolutions on the universal realization of the right of peoples to self-determination, including resolution 62/144 of 18 December 2007,

Reaffirming also its resolution 55/2 of 8 September 2000, containing the United Nations Millennium Declaration, and recalling its resolution 60/1 of 16 September 2005, containing the 2005 World Summit Outcome, which, inter alia, upheld the right to self-determination of peoples under colonial domination and foreign occupation,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General,

1. Reaffirms that the universal realization of the right of all peoples, including those under colonial, foreign and alien domination, to self-determination is a fundamental condition for the effective guarantee and observance of human rights and for the preservation and promotion of such rights;

2. Declares its firm opposition to acts of foreign military intervention, aggression and occupation, since these have resulted in the suppression of the right of peoples to self-determination and other human rights in certain parts of the world;

3. Calls upon those States responsible to cease immediately their military intervention in and occupation of foreign countries and territories and all acts of repression, discrimination, exploitation and maltreatment, in particular the brutal and inhuman methods reportedly employed for the execution of those acts against the peoples concerned;

4. Deplores the plight of millions of refugees and displaced persons who have been uprooted as a result of the aforementioned acts, and reaffirms their right to return to their homes voluntarily in safety and honour;

5. Requests the Human Rights Council to continue to give special attention to the violation of human rights, especially the right to self-determination, resulting from foreign military intervention, aggression or occupation;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to report on the question to the General Assembly at its sixty-fourth session under the item entitled "Right of peoples to self-determination".

Rights of Palestinians

During the year, the General Assembly reaffirmed the right of the Palestinian people to self-determination, including the right to their independent State of Palestine, as well as the right of all States in the region to live in peace within secure and internationally recognized borders. States and UN system specialized agencies were urged to assist Palestinians in the early realization of the right.

Human Rights Council action. On 27 March [A/63/53 (res. 7/17)], the Human Rights Council reaffirmed the inalienable right of the Palestinian people to self-determination, including their right to establish their sovereign, independent, democratic and viable contiguous State; reaffirmed its support for the solution of two States—Israel and Palestine—living side by side in peace and security; and stressed the need for respect for and preservation of the territorial unity, contiguity and integrity of all of the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December [meeting 70], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/63/429], adopted resolution 63/165 by recorded vote (173-5-7) [agenda item 63].

The right of the Palestinian people to self-determination

The General Assembly,

Aware that the development of friendly relations among nations, based on respect for the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples, is among the purposes and principles of the United Nations, as defined in the Charter,

Recalling, in this regard, its resolution 2625(XXV) of 24 October 1970 entitled “Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Cooperation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations”,

Bearing in mind the International Covenants on Human Rights, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action adopted at the World Conference on Human Rights on 25 June 1993,

Recalling the Declaration on the Occasion of the Fiftieth Anniversary of the United Nations,

Recalling also the United Nations Millennium Declaration,

Recalling further the advisory opinion rendered on 9 July 2004 by the International Court of Justice on the Legal Consequences of the Construction of a Wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, and noting in particular the reply of the Court, including on the right of peoples to self-determination, which is a right erga omnes,

Recalling the conclusion of the Court, in its advisory opinion of 9 July 2004, that the construction of the wall by Israel, the occupying Power, in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, along with measures previously taken, severely impedes the right of the Palestinian people to self-determination,

Expressing the urgent need for the resumption of negotiations within the Middle East peace process on its agreed basis and for the speedy achievement of a just, lasting and comprehensive peace settlement between the Palestinian and Israeli sides,

Stressing the need for respect for and preservation of the territorial unity, contiguity and integrity of all of the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem,

Recalling its resolution 62/146 of 18 December 2007,

Affirming the right of all States in the region to live in peace within secure and internationally recognized borders,

1. Reaffirms the right of the Palestinian people to self-determination, including the right to their independent State of Palestine;

2. Urges all States and the specialized agencies and organizations of the United Nations system to continue to support and assist the Palestinian people in the early realization of their right to self-determination.

RECORDED VOTE ON RESOLUTION 63/165:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Andorra, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Armenia, Austria, Azerbaijan, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belarus, Belgium, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Cambodia, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Croatia, Cuba, Cyprus, Czech Republic, Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominica, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Eritrea, Estonia, Ethiopia, Finland, France, Gabon, Gambia, Georgia, Germany, Ghana, Greece, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kazakhstan, Kenya, Kuwait, Kyrgyzstan, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Latvia, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Liechtenstein, Lithuania, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Moldova, Monaco, Mongolia, Montenegro, Morocco, Mozambique, Myanmar, Namibia, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Republic of Korea, Romania, Russian Federation, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, San Marino, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Serbia, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Slovakia, Slovenia, Solomon Islands, Somalia, South Africa, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Switzerland, Syrian Arab Republic, Tajikistan, Thailand, The former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Timor-Leste, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Turkmenistan, Tuvalu, Uganda, Ukraine, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Uzbekistan, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Israel, Marshall Islands, Micronesia, Palau, United States.

Abstaining: Australia, Cameroon, Canada, Fiji, Nauru, Tonga, Vanuatu.

Mercenaries

In its annual report [A/HRC/7/7], issued in January, the Working Group on the use of mercenaries as a means of violating human rights and impeding the exercise of the right of peoples to self-determination presented an overview of activities undertaken during the reporting period and discussed transnational issues, including the privatization of warfare, the activities of private military and private security companies, and extraterritorial and accountability issues. The Group concluded that the proliferation of private military and security companies worldwide was a direct consequence of the outsourcing and privatization of many military and security functions. Many of those companies were the supply side for contracts granted by the United States Department of Defence or Department of State in connection with low-intensity armed conflicts or post-conflict situations, such as in Afghanistan, Colombia and Iraq. To implement their contracts and make the most profits, some of those transnational companies, through subsidiaries or hiring companies, created and fuelled demand in developing countries. Former military personnel and ex-policemen were recruited as “security guards”, but became private soldiers in low-intensity armed conflicts or post-conflict situations. Provisions in national legislation granting immunity to such personnel could easily lead to de facto impunity, with those private soldiers being accountable only to the company employing them. Those individuals were the new modalities of “mercenarism”. They often encountered contractual irregularities, poor working conditions, failures in obtaining basic needs and problems in obtaining financial compensation for injuries.

The Working Group recommended that regional and intergovernmental organizations, in particular the European Union and the Organization of American States, elaborate a common system to regulate private military and security companies exporting their services. It urged Governments of States from which private military and security companies exported military assistance, consultancy and security services to avoid granting immunity to those companies and their personnel. Governments of States from which those private companies exported such services should adopt legislation and set up regulatory mechanisms to control their activities, including a registering and licensing system for authorizing those companies to operate and to be sanctioned when norms were not respected. States outsourcing such activities should demand the authorization of States from which the security personnel were recruited before the recruitment took place.

An addendum to the report [A/HRC/7/7/Add.1] summarized communications concerning allegations transmitted to eight Governments between 1 January and 30 September 2007 and responses thereto.

In August [A/63/325], the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly, in accordance with Assembly resolution 62/145 [YUN 2007, p. 734], the Working Group’s report. The Group had three sessions: its third session (Geneva, 7–11 April), fourth (New York, 2–5 September) and fifth (Geneva, 15–19 December). During the period under review, transnational private military and security companies, mainly from the United States and the United Kingdom, but also from Australia, Canada, Israel and other countries, continued to export their services to over 50 countries, including Afghanistan, Iraq, the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Somalia and the Sudan. The industry was estimated to earn between $100 and $120 billion annually. The Working Group had started to establish a framework of principles and criteria for the elaboration of national and international regulation mechanisms to address the activities of those companies, and would continue consultations with Governments, international and regional organizations, civil society and the private military and security industry on possible complementary and new standards. The Group would focus its work on the study and legal codification of the comprehensive system of oversight and regulation of such companies, including legal and procedural means at the international, regional and national levels. The Group concluded that the activities of those companies could not be regulated only on the basis of the 1989 International Convention against the Recruitment, Use, Financing and Training of Mercenaries [YUN 1989, p. 825], even if modernized and amended. A new international legal instrument, possibly in the format of a new UN convention, might be required, supplemented by a model law that would assist Governments in elaborating their legislation.

Human Rights Council action. On 28 March [A/63/53 (res. 7/21)], the Human Rights Council, by a recorded vote of 32 to 11, with 2 abstentions, extended the Working Group’s mandate for a three-year period. States were urged to cooperate with the Working Group in fulfilment of its mandate. The Working Group was requested to report to the Council in 2009.

Mission report. The Working Group visited the United Kingdom (26–30 May) [A/HRC/10/14/Add.2], and noted that although the Government did not have any register for private military and security companies, general industry estimates indicated that there were some 40 such companies based in the country operating internationally. Their revenues were estimated to have risen from $320 million before the war in Iraq to over $1.6 billion by 2004. The Group recognized that a positive step towards better oversight was the elaboration of the United Kingdom Green Paper, which outlined six options for regulating companies operating outside of the country. However, the Government had failed to take those options forward.

The Working Group recommended making public the results of the 2005 review of the United Kingdom Green Paper or undertaking a new review, as well as conducting a comprehensive discussion among concerned bodies on the options for regulation, including the potential sharing of responsibilities and functions between national and international levels of regulation and sanctions. It also recommended that the United Kingdom consider initiating and sponsoring, within the UN system, the elaboration of an international instrument on private military and security companies to complement national regulations, and assure clear criteria and permitted limits for normal operation, as well as full compliance with international law.

Regional consultation. In accordance with General Assembly resolution 62/145 [YUN 2007, p. 734] and Human Rights Council resolution 7/21 (above), the Working Group held a regional consultation for the Eastern European Group and Central Asian Region (Moscow, 17–18 October) [A/HRC/10/14/Add.3] to gain a regional perspective about current practices related to mercenaries and private military and security companies registered, operating or recruiting personnel in the region. It discussed the role of the State as holder of the monopoly on the use of force, and shared information on steps taken by regional States to introduce legislation and other measures to regulate and monitor the activities of such companies on the international market. The Group discussed also general guidelines, norms and basic principles for the regulation and oversight of the activities of those companies to encourage human rights protection.

The Working Group elaborated principles for the legal codification of the comprehensive system of oversight and regulation for private military and security companies. In accordance with those principles, the Working Group believed that an effective vetting system for selecting employees of such companies should be developed to prevent persons posing a higher risk of human rights violations from performing those duties. A draft international convention on the regulation of private military and security companies and a draft model law were introduced.

1989 International Convention

As at 31 December, 32 States had become parties to the 1989 International Convention against the Recruitment, Use, Financing and Training of Mercenaries, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 44/34 [YUN 1989, p. 825], with Honduras and the Syrian Arab Republic acceding in 2008. The Convention entered into force in 2001 [YUN 2001, p. 632].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December [meeting 70], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/63/429], adopted resolution 63/164 by recorded vote (125-52-5) [agenda item 63].

Use of mercenaries as a means of violating human rights and impeding the exercise of the right of peoples to self-determination

The General Assembly,

Recalling all of its previous resolutions on the subject, including resolution 62/145 of 18 December 2007, and Human Rights Council resolution 7/21 of 28 March 2008, as well as all resolutions adopted by the Commission on Human Rights in this regard,

Recalling also all of its relevant resolutions in which, inter alia, it condemned any State that permitted or tolerated the recruitment, financing, training, assembly, transit and use of mercenaries with the objective of overthrowing the Governments of States Members of the United Nations, especially those of developing countries, or of fighting against national liberation movements, and recalling further the relevant resolutions and international instruments adopted by the General Assembly, the Security Council, the Economic and Social Council and the Organization of African Unity, inter alia, the Organization of African Unity Convention for the elimination of mercenarism in Africa, as well as by the African Union,

Reaffirming the purposes and principles enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations concerning the strict observance of the principles of sovereign equality, political independence, the territorial integrity of States, the self-determination of peoples, the non-use of force or of the threat of use of force in international relations and non-interference in affairs within the domestic jurisdiction of States,

Reaffirming also that, by virtue of the principle of self-determination, all peoples have the right freely to determine their political status and to pursue their economic, social and cultural development, and that every State has the duty to respect this right in accordance with the provisions of the Charter,

Reaffirming further the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Cooperation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations,

Alarmed and concerned at the danger that the activities of mercenaries constitute to peace and security in developing countries, in particular in Africa and in small States,

Deeply concerned at the loss of life, the substantial damage to property and the negative effects on the policy and economies of affected countries resulting from criminal mercenary activities,

Extremely alarmed and concerned about recent mercenary activities in Africa and other places and the threat they pose to the integrity of and respect for the constitutional order of those countries,

Concerned by the new modalities of mercenarism, and noting that the recruitment of former military personnel and ex-policemen by private military and private security companies to serve in their employ as “security guards” in zones of armed conflict seems to be continuing,

Convinced that, notwithstanding the way in which they are used or the form that they take to acquire some semblance of legitimacy, mercenaries or mercenary-related activities are a threat to peace, security and the self-determination of peoples and an obstacle to the enjoyment of all human rights by peoples,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Working Group on the use of mercenaries as a means of violating human rights and impeding the exercise of the right of peoples to self-determination, and expresses its appreciation for the work of the experts of the Working Group;

2. Reaffirms that the use of mercenaries and their recruitment, financing and training are causes for grave concern to all States and violate the purposes and principles enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations;

3. Recognizes that armed conflict, terrorism, arms trafficking and covert operations by third Powers, inter alia, encourage the demand for mercenaries on the global market;

4. Urges once again all States to take the necessary steps and to exercise the utmost vigilance against the menace posed by the activities of mercenaries and to take legislative measures to ensure that their territories and other territories under their control, as well as their nationals, are not used for the recruitment, assembly, financing, training and transit of mercenaries for the planning of activities designed to impede the right of peoples to self-determination, to destabilize or overthrow the Government of any State or to dismember or impair, totally or in part, the territorial integrity or political unity of sovereign and independent States conducting themselves in compliance with the right of peoples to self-determination;

5. Requests all States to exercise the utmost vigilance against any kind of recruitment, training, hiring or financing of mercenaries, including nationals, by private companies offering international military consultancy and security services, as well as to impose a specific ban on such companies intervening in armed conflicts or actions to destabilize constitutional regimes;

6. Encourages States that import the military assistance, consultancy and security services provided by private companies to establish regulatory national mechanisms for the registering and licensing of those companies in order to ensure that imported services provided by those private companies neither impede the enjoyment of human rights nor violate human rights in the recipient country;

7. Calls upon all States that have not yet done so to consider taking the necessary action to accede to or ratify the International Convention against the Recruitment, Use, Financing and Training of Mercenaries;

8. Welcomes the adoption by some States of national legislation that restricts the recruitment, assembly, financing, training and transit of mercenaries;

9. Condemns mercenary activities in Africa and commends the Governments of Africa on their collaboration in thwarting those illegal actions, which have posed a threat to the integrity of and respect for the constitutional order of those countries and the exercise of the right of their peoples to self-determination, and stresses the importance for the Working Group of looking into sources and root causes, as well as the political motivations of mercenaries and for mercenary-related activities;

10. Calls upon States to investigate the possibility of mercenary involvement whenever and wherever criminal acts of a terrorist nature occur and to bring to trial those found responsible or to consider their extradition, if so requested, in accordance with domestic law and applicable bilateral or international treaties;

11. Condemns any form of impunity granted to perpetrators of mercenary activities and to those responsible for the use, recruitment, financing and training of mercenaries, and urges all States, in accordance with their obligations under international law, to bring them, without distinction, to justice;

12. Calls upon Member States, in accordance with their obligations under international law, to cooperate with and assist the judicial prosecution of those accused of mercenary activities in transparent, open and fair trials;

13. Requests the Working Group to continue the work already done by the previous Special Rapporteurs on the strengthening of the international legal framework for the prevention and sanction of the recruitment, use, financing and training of mercenaries, taking into account the proposal for a new legal definition of a mercenary drafted by the Special Rapporteur in his report to the Commission on Human Rights at its sixtieth session, including the elaboration and presentation of concrete proposals on possible complementary and new standards aimed at filling existing gaps, as well as general guidelines or basic principles encouraging the further protection of human rights, in particular the right of peoples to self-determination, while facing current and emergent threats posed by mercenaries or mercenary-related activities;

14. Requests the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, as a matter of priority, to publicize the adverse effects of the activities of mercenaries on the right of peoples to self-determination and, when requested and where necessary, to render advisory services to States that are affected by those activities;

15. Welcomes the convening in Panama on 17 and 18 December 2007 of the regional governmental consultation for Latin American and Caribbean States on traditional and new forms of mercenary activities as a means of violating human rights and impeding the exercise of the right of peoples to self-determination, in particular regarding the effects of the activities of private military and security companies on the enjoyment of human rights;

16. Requests the Office of the High Commissioner to inform the Human Rights Council, in a timely manner, of the dates and places for the convening of the other regional governmental consultations on this matter, bearing in mind that this process may lead to the holding of a high-level round table of States, under the auspices of the United Nations, to discuss the fundamental question of the role of the State as holder of the monopoly of the use of force, with the objective of facilitating a critical understanding of the responsibilities of the different actors, including private military and security companies, in the current context, and their respective obligations for the promotion and protection of human rights and in reaching a common understanding as to which additional regulations and controls are needed at the international level;

17. Requests the Working Group to continue to take into account, in the discharge of its mandate, the fact that mercenary activities continue to occur in many parts of the world and are taking on new forms, manifestations and modalities, and in this regard requests its members to continue to pay particular attention to the impact of the activities of private companies offering military assistance, consultancy and security services on the international market on the enjoyment of human rights and the exercise of the right of peoples to self-determination;

18. Urges all States to cooperate fully with the Working Group in the fulfilment of its mandate;

19. Requests the Secretary-General and the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to provide the Working Group with all the necessary assistance and support for the fulfilment of its mandate, both professional and financial, including through the promotion of cooperation between the Working Group and other components of the United Nations system that deal with countering mercenary-related activities, in order to meet the demands of its current and future activities;

20. Requests the Working Group to consult States and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations in the implementation of the present resolution and to report, with specific recommendations, to the General Assembly at its sixty-fourth session its findings on the use of mercenaries to undermine the enjoyment of all human rights and to impede the exercise of the right of peoples to self-determination;

21. Decides to consider at its sixty-fourth session the question of the use of mercenaries as a means of violating human rights and impeding the exercise of the right of peoples to self-determination under the item entitled "Right of peoples to self-determination".

RECORDED VOTE ON RESOLUTION 63/164:

In favour: Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Armenia, Azerbaijan, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belarus, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Cambodia, Cameroon, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Djibouti, Dominica, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Eritrea, Ethiopia, Gabon, Gambia, Ghana, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Jamaica, Jordan, Kazakhstan, Kenya, Kuwait, Kyrgyzstan, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Myanmar, Namibia, Nepal, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Philippines, Qatar, Russian Federation, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, South Africa, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Syrian Arab Republic, Tajikistan, Thailand, Timor-Leste, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Tuvalu, Uganda, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Uzbekistan, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Administration of justice

Transitional justice

Human Rights Council action. On 24 September [A/63/53/Add.1 (res. 9/10)], the Human Rights Council underlined the urgency of national and international efforts to restore justice and the rule of law in conflict and post-conflict situations and in the context of transitional processes; and emphasized the importance of a comprehensive approach to transitional justice, incorporating judicial and non-judicial measures, including individual prosecutions, reparations, truth-seeking, institutional reform and vetting of public employees and officials to ensure accountability, serve justice, provide remedies to victims, promote healing and reconciliation, establish independent oversight of the security system, restore confidence in State institutions and promote the rule of law. OHCHR was requested to assist States to establish and implement transitional justice mechanisms from a human rights perspective, and to submit an analytical study on human rights and transitional justice.

Fundamental standards of humanity

Report of Secretary-General. A June report by the Secretary-General [A/HRC/8/14], submitted pursuant to a Human Rights Council request [YUN 2006, p. 760], outlined progress in fundamental standards of humanity and issues related to securing the practical protection of all individuals in all circumstances and by all actors. A number of developments had contributed to securing the respect for international human rights and humanitarian law standards. The General Assembly adopted the Basic Principles and Guidelines on the Right to a Remedy and Reparation for Victims of Gross Violations of International Human Rights Law and Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law [YUN 2005, p. 793], as well as the International Convention for the Protection of All Persons from Enforced Disappearance [YUN 2006, p. 800]. The work of the International Criminal Tribunals for the Former Yugoslavia and for Rwanda had elaborated on the nature and elements of certain war crimes, genocide and crimes against humanity. The work of the Special Court for Sierra Leone and the Extraordinary Chambers in the Courts of Cambodia represented a further step into incorporating standards of humanity into the work of hybrid courts. The International Court of Justice, in its 2007 decision in the case of the Application of the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide (Bosnia and Herzegovina v. Serbia and Montenegro) [YUN 2007, p. 1325], provided further clarification as to the interpretation of the scope and certain key notions of the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide [YUN 1948–49, p. 959]. That decision further clarified the interpretation of the term "ethnic cleansing" and its significance in international law within the scope of crimes against humanity, genocide and war crimes in the context of the responsibility to protect. Finally, the commencement of operations of the International Criminal Court contributed to securing the protection of victims and achieving accountability for serious violations of international humanitarian and human rights law. To build on that progress, the Council might wish to keep itself informed of relevant developments, including further international and regional case law, which contributed to the interpretation of existing standards.

Civilians in armed conflict

Security Council consideration (May). On 27 May [meeting 5898], the Security Council considered the protection of civilians in armed conflict, during which it was briefed by John Holmes, Under-Secretary-General for Humanitarian Affairs and Emergency Relief Coordinator. Mr. Holmes observed that millions of people were still trapped in the horror of war and conflict, hoping desperately to rise from the chaos surrounding them. While in Kenya, Côte d'Ivoire, Nepal, Timor-Leste and, in a more fragile way, Uganda, violence had subsided, recent upsurges in recovering areas like Burundi and Southern Sudan were of concern. The full deployment of peacekeepers in Chad, the Central African Republic and the Darfur region of the Sudan had the potential to augment efforts to protect and assist those caught in the turmoil in the region, but those missions should be given the requisite support and resources to fulfil their mandates. Despite that progress, countless civilians in conflicts throughout the world continued to see their hopes shattered by violence and displacement, as well as by physical violence, deprivation and neglect. In the first five months of the year, more than half a million people had been displaced by conflict. In Burundi, the Central African Republic, Chad, Somalia and the Sudan, over 337,000 civilians had been forced to flee violence. In the Democratic Republic of the Congo (DRC), 175,000 people were newly displaced. Continued havoc was occurring in Colombia, Somalia, southern Israel, and Sri Lanka, as well as in the Darfur region of the Sudan and Gaza. In Afghanistan and Iraq, civilians remained victims of suicide attacks, aerial bombardments and search operations against anti-Government elements. There were difficulties in conducting those operations but, nonetheless, any military response to insurgent attacks should comply with international humanitarian law. Robust action was needed against sexual violence, which continued to ravage the women of the DRC, Côte d'Ivoire and the Sudan. Humanitarian access was crucial for protecting civilians, yet millions of people in need of assistance remained beyond reach. Progress had been made in the nine years since the Council first considered the item. There was an increased awareness among Member States of the issues involved, and four resolutions on civilian protection had established an ambitious framework for action. The challenge was to realize that ambition and ensure the systematic consideration of the issue. The establishment of an informal expert group, attached to the Council, would allow for transparent, systematic and timely consultation on the protection of civilians concerns.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 27 May [meeting 5898], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2008/18 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council reaffirms its commitment to the full and effective implementation of its resolutions on the protection of civilians in armed conflict and recalls previous statements on the issue made by its President.

The Council remains committed to addressing the impact of armed conflict on civilians. The Council expresses its deepest concern that civilians continue to account for the majority of victims of acts of violence committed by parties to armed conflict, including as a result of deliberate targeting, of indiscriminate and excessive use of force and of sexual and gender-based violence. The Council condemns all violations of international law, including international humanitarian law, human rights law and refugee law committed against civilians in situations of armed conflict. The Council demands that all relevant parties immediately put an end to such practices. The Council reaffirms in this regard that parties to armed conflict bear the primary responsibility to take all feasible steps to ensure the protection of affected civilians, in particular giving attention to the specific needs of women and children.

The Council re-emphasizes the responsibility of States to comply with their relevant obligations to end impunity and to prosecute those responsible for war crimes, genocide, crimes against humanity and serious violations of international humanitarian law.

The Council underlines the importance of safe and unhindered access of humanitarian personnel to provide assistance to civilians in armed conflict in accordance with international law, and stresses the importance, within the framework of humanitarian assistance, of upholding and respecting the humanitarian principles of humanity, neutrality, impartiality and independence.

The Council recognizes the increasingly valuable role that regional organizations and other intergovernmental institutions play in the protection of civilians, and encourages the Secretary-General and the heads of regional and other intergovernmental organizations to continue their efforts to strengthen their partnership in this regard.

The Council takes note of the report of the Secretary-General of 28 October 2007 on the protection of civilians in armed conflict, and requests the Secretary-General to submit his next report on this subject by May 2009. The Council invites the Secretary-General to provide an update in that report on the implementation of protection mandates in United Nations missions as mandated by the Council. The Council encourages the Secretary-General to continue to include such updates on the protection of civilians in his regular reporting on United Nations missions.

Human Rights Council action. On 24 September [A/63/53/Add.1 (res. 9/9)], the Human Rights Council resolved to address systematic and gross violations of the human rights of civilians in conflicts in order to facilitate the work of any mechanism that the Council might decide to establish in response to such violations. It called upon States to respect the human rights of civilians in armed conflicts; stressed the importance of combating impunity; and urged States to bring perpetrators to justice. OHCHR was invited to convene an expert consultation on the issue and to report at the Council's eleventh (2009) session.

Missing persons

Human Rights Council action. On 28 March [A/63/53 (res. 7/28)], the Human Rights Council called upon States parties to an armed conflict to take all appropriate measures to prevent persons from going missing, account for persons reported missing as a result of such a situation, take all necessary measures to determine the identity and fate of persons reported missing and provide their family members with all relevant information on their fate. It decided to hold a panel discussion on the subject at its ninth (2008) session and asked the High Commissioner to prepare a report on those deliberations, with a view to charging the Council's Advisory Committee with the preparation of a study on best practices in the matter. It requested the Secretary-General to bring the resolution to the attention of Governments, UN bodies, specialized agencies, regional intergovernmental organizations and international human rights organizations, and to submit a report on its implementation at the Council's tenth (2009) session.

On 22 September [A/HRC/9/28], the Council held a panel discussion on missing persons. On 24 September [A/63/53/Add.1 (dec. 9/101)], it adopted a text welcoming that discussion and looked forward to receiving the High Commissioner's summary of the panel's deliberations. The Council requested the Advisory Committee to prepare a study on best practices in the matter of missing persons and submit it to the Council's twelfth (2009) session.

Report of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 61/155 [YUN 2006, p. 861], the Secretary-General, in August [A/63/299], summarized replies received from 10 Governments, two international humanitarian organizations and the Argentine Forensic Anthropology Team on the implementation of that resolution. The Secretary-General recommended that measures be taken to minimize the problem of missing persons in the context of armed conflict by establishing adequate identification processes and addressing it as part of peacebuilding processes. The right of families to know the fate of missing persons should be respected at all times. Forensic work should be supported as a component of the investigation of human rights violations. Access to independent forensic investigations of such violations should be improved, and mechanisms created to continue the recovery and identification process beyond the mandate of judicial and non-judicial mechanisms. Contacts should be enhanced between independent forensic experts and local judiciaries, prosecutors, judges and lawyers, and accountability for enforced disappearances ensured. States should ratify the International Convention for the Protection of All Persons from Enforced Disappearance [YUN 2006, p. 800], and bring their laws and practices into conformity with the Convention.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December [meeting 70], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/63/430/Add.2], adopted resolution 63/183 without vote [agenda item 64 (b)].

Missing persons

The General Assembly,

Guided by the purposes, principles and provisions of the Charter of the United Nations,

Guided also by the principles and norms of international humanitarian law, in particular the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 and the Additional Protocols thereto, of 1977, as well as international standards of human rights, in particular the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, the Convention on the Rights of the Child and the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights on 25 June 1993,

Acknowledging the adoption of the International Convention for the Protection of All Persons from Enforced Disappearance, and looking forward to its entry into force,

Recalling all previous relevant resolutions on missing persons adopted by the General Assembly, as well as the resolutions adopted by the Commission on Human Rights and the Human Rights Council,

Noting with deep concern that armed conflicts are continuing in various parts of the world, often resulting in serious violations of international humanitarian law and human rights law,

Noting that the issue of persons reported missing in connection with international or non-international armed conflicts, in particular those who are victims of serious violations of international humanitarian law and human rights law, continues to have a negative impact on efforts to put an end to those conflicts and causes suffering to the families of missing persons, and stressing in this regard the need to address the issue from a humanitarian perspective, among others,

Considering that the problem of missing persons may raise questions of international humanitarian law and international human rights law, as appropriate,

Being cognizant that States that are parties to an armed conflict have a responsibility for countering the phenomenon of missing persons and determining the fate of missing persons and for recognizing their accountability as regards implementing the relevant mechanisms, policies and laws,

Bearing in mind the effective search for and identification of missing persons through traditional forensic methods, and recognizing that great technological progress has been achieved in the field of DNA forensic sciences, which could significantly assist efforts to identify missing persons,

Recalling the Agenda for Humanitarian Action, in particular its general objective 1, to “respect and restore the dignity of persons missing as a result of armed conflicts or other situations of armed violence and of their families”, adopted at the Twenty-eighth International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent, held in Geneva from 2 to 6 December 2003, and resolution 3 entitled “Reaffirmation and implementation of international humanitarian law: preserving human life and dignity in armed conflict”, adopted at the Thirtieth International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent, held in Geneva from 26 to 30 November 2007,

Taking note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General of 18 August 2008 on missing persons, prepared pursuant to General Assembly resolution 61/155 of 19 December 2006,

Taking note with appreciation also of the ongoing international and regional efforts to address the question of missing persons and of the initiatives undertaken by international and regional organizations in this field,

1. Urges States strictly to observe and respect and ensure respect for the rules of international humanitarian law, as set out in the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 and, where applicable, in the Additional Protocols thereto, of 1977;

2. Calls upon States that are parties to an armed conflict to take all appropriate measures to prevent persons from going missing in connection with armed conflict and account for persons reported missing as a result of such a situation;

3. Reaffirms the right of families to know the fate of their relatives reported missing in connection with armed conflicts;

4. Also reaffirms that each party to an armed conflict, as soon as circumstances permit and, at the latest, from the end of active hostilities, shall search for the persons who have been reported missing by an adverse party;

5. Calls upon States that are parties to an armed conflict to take all necessary measures, in a timely manner, to determine the identity and fate of persons reported missing in connection with the armed conflict and, to the greatest possible extent, to provide their family members, through appropriate channels, with all relevant information they have on their fate;

6. Recognizes, in this regard, the need for the collection, protection and management of data on missing persons according to international and national legal norms and standards, and urges States to cooperate with each other and with other concerned actors working in this area, inter alia, by providing all relevant and appropriate information related to missing persons;

7. Requests States to pay the utmost attention to cases of children reported missing in connection with armed conflicts and to take appropriate measures to search for and identify those children and to reunite them with their families;

8. Invites States that are parties to an armed conflict to cooperate fully with the International Committee of the Red Cross in establishing the fate of missing persons and to adopt a comprehensive approach to this issue, including all such legal and practical measures and coordination mechanisms as may be necessary, based on humanitarian considerations only;

9. Urges States and encourages intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to take all necessary measures at the national, regional and international levels to address the problem of persons reported missing in connection with armed conflicts and to provide appropriate assistance as requested by the concerned States, and welcomes in this regard the establishment and efforts of commissions and working groups on missing persons;

10. Calls upon States, without prejudice to their efforts to determine the fate of persons missing in connection with armed conflicts, to take appropriate steps with regard to the legal situation of the missing persons and the need of their family members, in fields such as social welfare, financial matters, family law and property rights;

11. Stresses the need for addressing the issue of missing persons as a part of peacebuilding processes, with reference to all justice and rule of law mechanisms, on the basis of transparency, accountability and public involvement and participation;

12. Welcomes the panel discussion on the question of missing persons held at the ninth session of the Human Rights Council, and takes note of the request of the Council to the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to prepare a summary of the panel's deliberations;

13. Takes note of the request of the Human Rights Council to its Advisory Committee to prepare a study on the best practices in the matter of missing persons and to submit that study to the Council at its twelfth session;

14. Invites relevant human rights mechanisms and procedures, as appropriate, to address the problem of persons reported missing in connection with armed conflicts in their forthcoming reports to the General Assembly;

15. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a comprehensive report on the implementation of the present resolution, including relevant recommendations, to the Human Rights Council at its relevant session and to the General Assembly at its sixty-fifth session;

16. Also requests the Secretary-General to bring the present resolution to the attention of all Governments, the competent United Nations bodies, the specialized agencies, regional intergovernmental organizations and international humanitarian organizations;

17. Decides to consider the question at its sixty-fifth session.

Arbitrary detention

Working Group activities. The five-member Working Group on Arbitrary Detention held its fifty-first (5–9 May), fifty-second (8–12 September) and fifty-third (19–28 November) sessions, all in Geneva [A/HRC/10/21]. During the year, the Group adopted 46 opinions concerning 183 persons in 22 countries; the texts of those opinions were contained in a separate report [A/HRC/10/21/Add.1]. The Group transmitted 130 urgent appeals to 44 Governments concerning 1,256 individuals, including 57 women, 4 boys and 3 girls. Governments informed the Group that they had taken measures to remedy the situation of the detainees: in some cases, the detainees were released; in other cases, the Group was assured that the detainees concerned would enjoy fair trial guarantees. The Group engaged in a continuous dialogue with the countries it had visited, in respect of which it had recommended changes to legislation governing detention or the adoption of other measures. Information about the implementation of those recommendations was received from Belarus, Canada, China, Ecuador and Turkey.

Several issues had given rise to concern during 2008. In particular, the Working Group denounced the fact that an important proportion of the 9 million persons deprived of their liberty worldwide were unable to benefit from the legal resources and guarantees to which they were entitled for the conduct of their defence. Most did not have the means to afford expensive and complex legal procedures, and had difficulties in verifying the lawfulness of their detention and no effective control of their other rights. Detained persons suspected of terrorist activities should be immediately informed of such charges, brought before a competent judicial authority and enjoy the right to habeas corpus.

The Working Group therefore proposed that the Human Rights Council extend its mandate to include the monitoring of State compliance with their obligations concerning all human rights of detained and imprisoned persons.

The Working Group elaborated a list of principles concerning deprivation of liberty of persons accused of acts of terrorism, which it included in its report, and proposed holding a special forum on the respect of the right not to be arbitrarily deprived of liberty in the counter-terrorism context, especially in emergency situations. It noted that the corruption it had observed in some countries made the whole system of guarantees devoid of any content and reduced the credibility of the entire administration of justice system. The Group called upon States to become a party to the United Nations Convention against Corruption [YUN 2003, p. 1127]. It reiterated that immigrants in irregular situations should not be qualified or treated as criminals nor viewed only from the perspective of national security. Detention should be of the last resort, permissible only for the shortest period of time.

A Working Group delegation visited Mauritania (19 February–3 March) [A/HRC/10/21/Add.2], which was undergoing a transitional period. A number of institutional and legislative reforms had been carried out, including the establishment of a National Human Rights Commission and a general inspectorate of the judicial and penitentiary administration. The Government sought to improve the working conditions of the judiciary and to strengthen its power, reform the system of legal assistance and build new prisons. However, the legacy of the authoritarian system was still making itself felt. There were shortcomings in its legislation, but above all a gap between the legal instruments in force and actual practice. The cases of arbitrary detention that were observed stemmed mainly from dysfunction in the administration of justice, as reflected in a failure to respect the time limit for police custody; violations of the right to a fair trial; ineffective judicial oversight of the police and gendarmerie; corruption; and inconsistent interpretations of sharia.

In its conclusions and recommendations, the Working Group placed priority on guaranteeing the rights of the defence, strengthening oversight of police custody and places of detention, and training programmes for all those involved in the criminal justice system, including judges and prosecutors. The international community and OHCHR should provide technical and financial support to strengthen Mauritania's national capacity for the protection of human rights and to support the Government's reform process.

The Working Group visited Colombia (1–10 October) [A/HRC/10/21/Add.3], noting progress and setbacks in applying the new accusatorial criminal procedure for ensuring that national police officers respected the time limits on police detention, and in keeping up-to-date records. It highlighted the work of the Office of the Procurator-General within the Public Prosecutor's Office, which acted, in judicial proceedings, as guarantor of respect for due process and the right to defence. It also drew attention to the work of the judges responsible for procedural safeguards. The Group expressed satisfaction at the existence of judicial services centres and the work done in prisons by the human rights committees, which were elected by the prisoners by secret ballot.

The Working Group noted the gap between the Constitution, the law and reality. It criticized the practice of administrative pretrial detention; mass or multiple arrests by the military in rural areas; detentions in the poor areas of large cities, especially of beggars, the destitute and members of ethnic and sexual minorities; military round-ups and forced conscription; and the absence of criminal enforcement judges in prisons; prison overcrowding; and the practice of citizen's arrests. It expressed concern at the problem of "false positives", whereby, to obtain privileges, soldiers would detain innocent, vulnerable people without any valid reason, execute them and later identify such persons as guerrillas killed in combat.

The Working Group highlighted Government efforts to guarantee legislatively the protection of basic rights through such measures as the new code of criminal procedure, but criticized lapses in legislation and case law since its adoption. It noted the practice of mass detentions, as well as the lack of solid evidence required to carry out an arrest, particularly when the only evidence was the accusation of former guerrillas. The Group recommended that the Government eradicate the practice of mass arrests and administrative pretrial detention; eliminate detentions by military personnel and agents of private companies; appoint expedited procedure judges to clear cases under the old code of criminal procedure; and strengthen human rights institutions.

The Working Group visited Ukraine (22 October–5 November) [A/HRC/10/21/Add.4] and noted the reforms implemented with respect to the administration of justice since the country's independence in 1991. While commending the existence of several monitoring mechanisms, such as the Ombudsperson, mobile monitoring clinics and public councils, which worked to combat arbitrary detention, the Working Group recognized the need for strengthening them. It expressed concern about allegations of confessions obtained under torture from detainees of the Militsia (police force), which abused its arresting powers under the laws on administrative offences and on vagrants. Allegations of torture were not properly addressed by the Office of the Prosecutor General, nor were extracted confessions excluded as evidence in trials. Impunity for perpetrators of ill-treatment largely prevailed. Arbitrary detention resulted from the accumulation of powers in the Office of the Prosecutor General, which had both criminal prosecution and oversight powers, answered extradition requests and could, at the same time, challenge in court the refugee status of the person for whom extradition was sought. It also resulted from the perceived lack of an independent judiciary and an ineffective system of criminal defence and legal aid. The situation was aggravated by corruption throughout the law enforcement system. Also of concern was the high number of arrests, many of them not registered, which some sources estimated at approximately 1 million each year. Moreover, pre-trial detention and restrictions applied during detention on remand were too frequent, with courts not exercising genuine control when authorizing such detention.

The Working Group addressed 24 recommendations to the Government concerning, among other issues, allegations of torture to extract confessions; the various law enforcement institutions governing deprivation of liberty; pre-trial detention and legal aid; imprisonment, administrative offences and immigration detention; detention pending extradition; and juvenile justice and monitoring mechanisms.

The Working Group visited Italy (3–14 November) [A/HRC/10/21/Add.5] and reported numerous safeguards against illegal detention in the criminal justice system. However, the excessive duration of criminal proceedings could lead to situations of arbitrary detention, when defendants were in remand custody or when, though not detained pending trial, they were ordered to serve a prison sentence after an unreasonable amount of time had lapsed since the offence. The percentage of prisoners awaiting final judgement—and thus not serving a final sentence—was far in excess of that of other Western European countries. Immigrants were seriously over-represented in the prison population and did not benefit from access to alternatives to imprisonment to the same extent as Italian citizens.

The Government declared mafia-type organized crime, the threat of international terrorism, and crime by irregular migrants to be public security emergencies and responded by adopting extraordinary measures. The Group expressed concern about the safeguards regarding repeated extensions of detention under the law on the penitentiary system; the deportation of foreigners suspected of terrorist activities to countries where they could face arbitrary detention and torture; and norms that would increase the already disproportionate incarceration of foreigners. Limitations on the liberty of asylum-seekers in first reception centres did not have a sound legal basis. Also of concern was the detention of irregular migrants in identification and expulsion centres, including persons already having served a criminal sentence, asylum-seekers, and persons who were unlikely to be deported.

The Working Group called on the Government to take legislative and other measures to decrease the duration of criminal trials, and to reduce the share of the prison population held on remand. Judicial oversight regarding repeated extensions of detention should be strengthened. Legislation making non-compliance with immigration laws punishable by imprisonment, or as an aggravating circumstance, should be reconsidered. Limitations on the liberty of asylum-seekers should be applied on a sound legal basis and unnecessary or unreasonable detention in identification and expulsion centres of irregular migrants to be deported should be reduced.

Right to the truth

Human Rights Council action. On 24 September [A/63/53/Add.1 (res. 9/11)], the Human Rights Council, recognizing the importance of respecting and ensuring the right to the truth in order to end impunity and promote and protect human rights, welcomed the establishment in several States of judicial and non-judicial mechanisms, such as truth and reconciliation commissions, to investigate human rights violations; encouraged those States to implement the recommendations of those mechanisms; and encouraged other States to establish such mechanisms to investigate violations of international humanitarian law. OHCHR was requested to prepare a study, to be presented to the Council's twelfth (2009) session, on best practices for the effective implementation of the right to the truth, and to prepare a report, to be presented to the Council's fifteenth (2010) session, on the use of forensic experts in cases of gross human rights violations.

Independence of the judicial system

Reports of Special Rapporteur. In a May report [A/HRC/8/4], the Special Rapporteur on the independence of judges and lawyers, Leandro Despouy (Argentina), addressed the impact of states of emergency on the right to a fair trial and access to justice, and discussed recent developments in international justice. The report analysed the two most important aspects of access to justice: access to justice as a fundamental right and the conditions for its effective implementation. It examined in particular the content and scope of the right of access to justice and the different economic, social, cultural and operational barriers to the exercise of that right; how access was affected by the type and characteristics of the various courts dispensing justice and the conditions in which judicial actors carried out their work; and the impact of corruption and judicial delay. The report also indicated the main consequences of the shortcomings in access to justice and recommended, in particular, that a database of best practice be developed to help States bridge that gap.

It also warned of the consequences, for the relatives of Sergio Vieira de Mello, former Special Representative for Iraq, and 21 other staff members who lost their lives in the 19 August 2003 attack on the UN headquarters in Baghdad [YUN 2003, p. 346], of the execution of a witness who could have helped to shed light on the incident, in blatant violation of the right to the truth. The Special Rapporteur urged that a commission of eminent persons be created to establish the facts. He proposed examining more closely the impact of states of emergency on human rights and asked the Council to give the subject the attention it deserved.

An addendum to the report [A/HRC/8/4/Add.1] summarized the 138 communications sent by the Special Rapporteur to 64 Governments between 16 January 2007 and 15 March 2008, and the 59 replies received.

In an August note [A/63/271], the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly the Special Rapporteur's fourth report on the subject. The report stressed the central role of the judiciary in guaranteeing due process and safeguards against arbitrary detention, and warned of the consequences that attempts to deprive judges of that responsibility might have on the exercise of human rights. Judges had an important role in protecting human rights during states of emergency, and States should not interfere with the operation of the justice system in times of national emergency. The role of the judiciary was crucial for guaranteeing that states of emergency were declared and implemented in accordance with the principles governing them and that the measures taken in emergency situations did not interfere with the exercise of human rights, especially with rights considered non-derogable under international law. The Special Rapporteur urged States not to limit the operation of the judicial system in such circumstances and invited the Assembly to pay special attention to the issue. He recommended that a permanent list of countries in such circumstances should be maintained and continuously updated, as well as a list of the rights suspended and the starting and ending dates of the measures. An international instrument on principles for the protection of human rights during emergencies should also be drafted. In addition to states of emergency, there was a trend towards the restriction of rights in the name of defending national security, combating terrorism and controlling immigration. In such cases, the judiciary should clarify the limits of executive power where human rights were concerned. The Rapporteur undertook to explore how the underpayment of judges or linking their pay levels to the decisions they made compromised their independence and impartiality. He urged that every effort should be made to investigate the criminal attack on the UN headquarters in Baghdad in 2003, and reiterated his proposal that a panel of high-level experts should be established for that purpose.

The General Assembly took note of the report on 18 December (decision 63/534).

The Special Rapporteur visited the Russian Federation (19–29 May) [A/HRC/11/41/Add.2], where important reforms had been implemented since 1993, particularly the adoption of new legislation governing judicial proceedings and the significant improvement of working conditions of the judiciary. However, concerns remained about the practical implementation of equal access to the courts and the fact that many judicial decisions were not implemented. There was insufficient transparency in the selection process of judges and the implementation of disciplinary measures. Political and other interference had damaged the image of the justice system in the eyes of the population. The role of defence lawyers had not yet been fully recognized. However, the reform aimed at separating the functions of investigation and prosecution had the potential to give judges a stronger guiding role and to achieve a more effective and balanced system in judicial proceedings. A solid legal framework was needed to achieve a judicial system with independent courts and guaranteeing adversarial proceedings, as well as a change in attitude. Recent initiatives, in particular the setting-up of a special working group on judicial reform, were encouraging. The Government's 2007–2011 reform programme, focusing on increased transparency, accessibility and effectiveness of the courts, should be refined and expanded.

The Rapporteur recommended, among other things, establishing a mechanism for rapid and comprehensive execution of domestic and international judicial decisions; monitoring closely courts' adherence to jurisprudence established at the highest domestic instances; institutionalizing closer cooperation between bailiffs and courts; and establishing an administrative court system to fight corruption and ensure liability of state officials. Other recommendations sought to strengthen procedural legislation and practice, enhance the independent role of judges and strengthen the role of the bar.

Human Rights Council action. On 18 June [A/63/53 (res. 8/6)], the Human Rights Council extended the mandate of the Special Rapporteur for a three-year period. It called upon Governments to respond favourably to the Rapporteur's requests to visit their countries and urged them to enter into a constructive dialogue with the Rapporteur.

Capital punishment

Communications. By a January note [A/62/658] to the Secretary-General, 58 Member States referred to General Assembly resolution 62/149 [YUN 2007, p. 744], entitled "Moratorium on the use of the death penalty", which was adopted by a recorded vote. Those States wished to place on record their persistent objection to any attempt to impose a moratorium on the use of the death penalty or its abolition, in contravention to existing stipulations under international law. There was no international consensus that the death penalty should be abolished, and the issue had proven to be a divisive one. Capital punishment had been characterized as a human rights issue in the context of the right of the convicted prisoner to life. However, it was first and foremost a criminal justice issue and an important deterrent vis-à-vis the most serious crimes. It should therefore be viewed from a broader perspective and weighed against the rights of the victims and the right of the community to live in peace and security. Every State had an inalienable right to choose its political, economic, social, cultural and legal justice systems, without interference by another State. Some States had decided to abolish the death penalty, others had chosen to apply a moratorium on executions, and many others had retained the death penalty in their legislation. All sides were acting in compliance with their international obligations. Each State had decided freely to determine the path that corresponded to its own social, cultural and legal needs, in order to maintain security, order and peace. No side had the right to impose its standpoint on the other.

By a 19 March letter [A/62/761], Uzbekistan informed the Secretary-General that it had abolished the death penalty as at 1 January.

Reports of Secretary-General. Pursuant to a Human Rights Council request [YUN 2006, p. 760], the Secretary-General, in a May report [A/HRC/8/11] on the question of the death penalty, covering the period from January 2006 to May 2008, found that the trend towards abolition had continued. The number of countries that were completely abolitionist had risen from 85 to 93, and the number of retentionist countries had decreased from 65 to 60. The number of countries that had ratified international instruments providing for the abolition of the death penalty had also increased significantly.

Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 62/149, the Secretary-General, in an August report [A/63/293 & Corr.1] on moratoriums on the use of the death penalty, surveyed respect for the rights of those sentenced to death as set out in the international human rights treaties and the guidelines established by the Economic and Social Council in 1984 [YUN 1984, p. 709]. Drawing on contributions of Member States, the report examined the motivations for establishing a moratorium on or abolishing the death penalty, as well as those for retaining it. The report confirmed the global trend towards abolition; suggested that the establishment of a moratorium was a key step towards eventual abolition; and observed that for States maintaining the death penalty, the standards to safeguard the rights of those sentenced to death were crucial for ensuring that the punishment was carried out in a manner consistent with States' international legal obligations. Further work could usefully be carried out on specific restrictions on the use of capital punishment, such as the prohibition of the execution of certain groups of individuals; the prohibition of torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment; or punishment in the application of the death penalty, including the conditions of detention on death row.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December [meeting 70], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/63/430/Add.2], adopted resolution 63/168 by recorded vote (106-46-34) [agenda item 64 (b)].

Moratorium on the use of the death penalty

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its resolution 62/149 of 18 December 2007 on a moratorium on the use of the death penalty,

Welcoming the decisions taken by an increasing number of States to apply a moratorium on executions and the global trend towards the abolition of the death penalty,

1. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of resolution 62/149, and the conclusions and recommendations contained therein;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to provide a report on progress made in the implementation of resolution 62/149 and the present resolution, for consideration during its sixty-fifth session, and calls upon Member States to provide the Secretary-General with information in this regard;

RECORDED VOTE ON RESOLUTION 63/168:

In favour: Albania, Algeria, Andorra, Angola, Argentina, Armenia, Australia, Austria, Azerbaijan, Belgium, Benin, Bolivia, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Brazil, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Cambodia, Canada, Cape Verde, Chile, Colombia, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Croatia, Cyprus, Czech Republic, Denmark, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, El Salvador, Estonia, Ethiopia, Finland, France, Gabon, Georgia, Germany, Greece, Guinea-Bissau, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, Latvia, Liechtenstein, Lithuania, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Mali, Malta, Marshall Islands, Mauritius, Mexico, Micronesia, Moldova, Monaco, Montenegro, Mozambique, Namibia, Nauru, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Norway, Palau, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Romania, Russian Federation, Rwanda, Samoa, San Marino, Sao Tome and Principe, Serbia, Slovakia, Slovenia, Somalia, South Africa, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sweden, Switzerland, Tajikistan, The former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Timor-Leste, Turkey, Turkmenistan, Tuvalu, Ukraine, United Kingdom, Uruguay, Uzbekistan, Vanuatu, Venezuela.

Other issues

Extralegal executions

Reports of Special Rapporteur. The Special Rapporteur on extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions, Philip Alston (Australia), in a May report [A/HRC/8/3 & Corr.1], submitted pursuant to a Human Rights Council request [YUN 2006, p. 759], reviewed activities undertaken in 2007 to address extralegal executions worldwide. The report highlighted the Special Rapporteur's communications to and replies received from Governments [A/HRC/8/3/Add.1]. Between 1 December 2006 and 15 March 2008, the Rapporteur sent 127 communications to 46 countries, including 58 urgent appeals and 69 letters of allegation. The main issues covered in the communications were the death penalty, deaths in custody, the death penalty for minors, excessive use of force, impunity, attacks or killings, armed conflict and death threats. As in previous years, the proportion of Government replies was problematically low. In addition, 22 countries had so far not responded affirmatively to requests for a visit.

The Special Rapporteur highlighted three issues of particular importance: the role of national commissions of inquiry in impunity for extrajudicial executions; the right to seek pardon or commutation of a death sentence; and prisoners running prisons. According to the Rapporteur, Governments were obligated to hold an independent inquiry into deaths where extrajudicial execution might have taken place. Commissions of inquiry were often established as a result of concerted demands by civil society or the international community, and usually in the aftermath of major incidents in which the authorities normally relied on to investigate were feared to be reluctant or unlikely to do so adequately. However, the mere setting up of a commission of inquiry and its formal completion were often not adequate to satisfy the obligation to undertake an independent inquiry. Evidence had shown that such inquiries were frequently used to avoid meaningful accountability. The international community should scrutinize such initiatives more carefully and develop a mechanism for monitoring and evaluating their adequacy. Concerning the right to seek pardon or commutation of a death sentence, the Special Rapporteur concluded that both law and practice demanded that the right be accompanied by guarantees, if it were not to be a meaningless formality. Those procedural guarantees included the right of the condemned person to affirmatively request pardon or commutation; to make representation in support of that request; to be informed in advance of when the request would be considered; and be informed promptly thereafter of whatever decision was reached. The issue of prisoners running prisons demanded the attention of the Council. The temptation to rely on prisoners to carry out basic functions of maintaining order and imposing discipline was appealing to administrators grappling with shrinking budgets, staff shortages, overcrowded facilities, demanding gang-based populations and little public or Government support. However, there were major problems in opting for that choice. States should develop plans to reassert responsible control over prison populations and effectively protect prisoners from each other.

The Special Rapporteur recommended that the Council appoint a Special Rapporteur on the rights of detainees and address the failure of States where there were serious concerns over extrajudicial executions to respond to requests to visit by the Special Rapporteur. The Council should reconsider its action in not renewing the mandate of the Group of Experts on Darfur in December 2007, despite its conclusion that the Sudan had failed to meet many of the benchmarks that had been set, as it represented the triumph of politics over human rights.

Human Rights Council action. On 18 June [A/63/53 (res. 8/3)], the Human Rights Council noted the Special Rapporteur's report and extended the Rapporteur's mandate for a three-year period. It urged States to consider responding favourably to the Rapporteur's requests to visit their countries, and urged Governments that had not yet responded to his communications to answer without further delay.

By an August note [A/63/313], the Secretary-General transmitted the Special Rapporteur's report to the General Assembly, in response to resolution 61/173 [YUN 2006, p. 870]. The report focused on outstanding country visit requests and on visits undertaken since the previous report [YUN 2007, p. 746]. It also addressed two neglected but vital dimensions of the struggle to combat impunity for extrajudicial executions: the provision of effective witness protection arrangements; and the importance of ensuring that military justice systems were compatible with human rights standards. In many States, witness protection programmes were wholly inadequate, and military justice systems were structured in ways that promoted impunity for killings. The report surveyed best practices in both areas. The Special Rapporteur recommended that OHCHR develop policy tools to encourage and facilitate greater attention to witness protection in national level programmes to combat impunity for killings and other crimes; and that the Assembly call upon States to report on the extent to which their military justice systems complied with human rights standards.

The Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's note on 18 December (decision 63/534).

Reports on country visits. A further addendum to the Special Rapporteur's May report [A/HRC/8/3/Add.3] tracked the implementation of recommendations made by visits to Nigeria [YUN 2005, p. 808] and Sri Lanka [ibid., p. 809]. The Rapporteur stated that recommendations made with respect to Sri Lanka had not been implemented. Those directed to the Government were all but completely disregarded, and in most areas there was significant backward movement. The same was true of recommendations directed to the Liberation Tigers of Tamil Eelam. As to Nigeria, the Government had enacted some reforms in partial fulfilment of the Special Rapporteur's recommendations, but for the majority of them, Nigeria had failed to make sufficient progress, or any progress at all. Moreover, on some issues, the situation appeared to be worse. The high level of extrajudicial executions reported by the Special Rapporteur continued. However, the positive initiatives implemented by the Government over the past two and a half years were encouraging, and Nigeria should continue to promote their effective follow-through. With respect to the measures upon which there had been no progress, the Government should take action to ensure their implementation.

The Special Rapporteur visited the Central African Republic (31 January–7 February) [A/HRC/11/2/Add.3], where a low-intensity conflict continued in the north-west. Large-scale abuses had declined significantly by mid-2007 due to positive steps taken by President François Bozizé and the waning of conflict in the north-east. Since the Rapporteur's visit, there had been encouraging moves towards securing a durable peace in the north. Those steps were, however, interrupted during 2008 by sporadic fighting in the north-west and renewed rebel activity in the north-east. Overall progress in resolving that conflict had not been matched with progress in securing human rights. Killings continued, accountability for past abuses was non-existent, and a general lack of security in the north prevailed. The most pressing human rights issues remained securing the population from banditry, remedying general lawlessness, countering impunity and reforming the security forces. As fighting between the Government and the rebels ebbed, banditry took its place as the prime threat to civilians. The security forces were largely unwilling and unable to protect villagers, and were responsible for killings of suspected criminals and killings motivated by personal or corrupt ends. Killings in police custody and in detention centres were common, as were killings of persons alleged to be "witches", which were often carried out with the participation of the security forces. Investigations and prosecutions rarely occurred due to the unwillingness to tackle abuses by State actors and a lack of resources in the justice sector.

The Special Rapporteur proposed a number of recommendations for implementation so as to reduce extrajudicial executions and provide for accountability when they occurred. He recommended that the security forces should be reformed so that they could protect the people from cross-border raids and threats by rebel groups and bandits, and obey human rights norms in carrying out military and law enforcement operations. Although those reforms were extensive, the country was at an unusually favourable juncture for change. In June, the Government pledged wide-ranging security sector reform, and the President showed a willingness to take steps to reduce killings by his troops. Former rebel groups were brought into a multiparty Government. International financial institutions had re-engaged in the country, and international aid and the presence of humanitarian organizations had increased substantially. If the Government's willingness to reform was supported internationally, the country could break its long pattern of abuse and impunity.

The Special Rapporteur visited Afghanistan (4–15 May) [A/HRC/11/2/Add.4], a country engulfed in a conflict in which large numbers of civilians were killed every day. An estimated 2,118 civilians were killed in 2008, nearly 40 per cent more than in 2007. The Rapporteur's concern was to understand how and why those killings were happening, and to formulate recommendations for reducing them. The Taliban, Afghan forces and international military forces all bore responsibility, and therefore responsibility for reducing the killings. The Taliban leadership should order its fighters to respect human rights and humanitarian law, particularly by ending the use of human shields, the assassination of civilians and the use of suicide attacks. Human rights proponents should engage in dialogue with the leadership to promote those objectives. Afghan and international forces should review procedures for conducting air strikes and raids. More effective procedures for vetting targets should be developed, and the forces should ensure that their methods of attack did not result in civilian casualties that were excessive in relation to the military advantage. The international forces should pay significantly more attention to promoting transparency and accountability in their operations and investigations. Estimates of civilian casualties should be made public. International forces should ensure that Afghans could readily obtain information on the progress of investigations and prosecutions of killings. Military operations by unaccountable foreign intelligence personnel should not be permitted.

The Rapporteur also addressed other unlawful killings in a law enforcement or private context, such as by police and other armed personnel acting under the authority of Government officials, which were rarely investigated seriously. Also, a significant number of Afghans, especially women, were the victims of "honour killings". The State largely failed to investigate and prosecute those murders. Moreover, the criminal justice system was deeply flawed, and corruption and incompetence were widespread. Powerful or wealthy perpetrators were set free, while the likelihood of innocent people being sentenced to death was high. The Special Rapporteur recommended that action should be taken against serious cases of corruption by Government officials as a first step in reducing systemic corruption. The focus of police reform efforts should be on creating a truly national police force, and on breaking the links between police, militias and particular tribes and politicians. A moratorium on the death penalty should be imposed.

The Special Rapporteur visited the United States (16–30 June) [A/HRC/11/2/Add.5] and commended the country's record on extrajudicial killings: there was no lack of laws or procedures for addressing potentially unlawful killings and data were generally gathered systematically and responsibly. However, improvement was necessary in three areas to bring the Government's actions into line with its stated commitment to human rights and the rule of law. The imposition of the death penalty should comply with fundamental due process requirements: the current system's flaws increased the likelihood that innocent people would be executed. The Government should provide greater transparency in law enforcement, military and intelligence operations that resulted in potentially unlawful deaths. It should also ensure greater accountability for potentially unlawful deaths in its international operations: political expediency was never a permissible basis for any State to deviate from its obligation to investigate and punish violations of the right to life. Deficiencies that should be remedied included the lack of adequate counsel for indigent defendants and racial disparities in sentencing. Given the inadequacies of state criminal justice systems, Congress should enact legislation permitting federal court review of state and federal death penalty cases. Transparency should also be promoted in the case of potentially unlawful killings. Although the Government did well in collecting data, it failed to provide timely and meaningful information about deaths in immigration detention or arising out of law-enforcement activities. Transparency failures were far more acute in the Government's international military and intelligence operations. The Government did not track and make public the number of civilian casualties or the conditions under which deaths occurred. The military justice system did not provide ordinary people, including United States citizens and the families of Iraqi or Afghan victims, with basic information on the status of investigations and prosecutions related to civilian casualties. The Government had also refused to disclose the legal basis for targeted killings conducted in other States through drone attacks or to identify any safeguards in place to reduce collateral civilian casualties and ensure that the Government had targeted the correct person. Those transparency failures contributed to the lack of accountability for wrongful deaths.

All States had an obligation to investigate, prosecute and punish violations of the right to life, including in situations of armed conflict. While some aspects of the rule of law had been taken seriously during United States military operations, there were chronic accountability failures with respect to policies, practices and conduct that had resulted in alleged unlawful killings. The Government had failed to investigate and punish those responsible and had created a zone of impunity for private contractors and intelligence agents by failing to investigate and prosecute them. In addition to prosecuting violations of the right to life, the Government should create a national commission of inquiry to conduct an independent investigation of policies and practices that led to deaths and abuses. It should also appoint a special prosecutor independent of the pressures on the political branches of Government.

Communication. On 30 May [A/HRC/8/G/6], the Philippines replied to the Special Rapporteur's report on his 2007 visit to the country [YUN 2007, p. 746].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December [meeting 70], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/63/430/Add.2], adopted resolution 63/182 by recorded vote (127-0-58) [agenda item 64 (b)].

Extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions

The General Assembly,

Recalling the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, which guarantees the right to life, liberty and security of person, the relevant provisions of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and other relevant human rights conventions,

Reaffirming the mandate of the Special Rapporteur of the Human Rights Council on extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions, as set out in Council resolution 8/3 of 18 June 2008,

Welcoming the universal ratification of the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949, which alongside human rights law provide an important framework of accountability in relation to extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions during armed conflict,

Mindful of all its resolutions on the subject of extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions and the resolutions of the Commission on Human Rights and of the Human Rights Council on the subject,

Noting with deep concern that impunity continues to be a major cause of the perpetuation of violations of human rights, including extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions,

Acknowledging that international human rights law and international humanitarian law are complementary and mutually reinforcing,

Noting with deep concern the growing number of civilians and persons hors de combat killed in situations of armed conflict and internal strife,

Acknowledging that extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions may under certain circumstances amount to genocide, crimes against humanity or war crimes, as defined in international law, including in the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court, and recalling in this regard that each individual State has the responsibility to protect its populations from such crimes as set out in General Assembly resolution 60/1 of 16 September 2005,

Convinced of the need for effective action to prevent, combat and eliminate the abhorrent practice of extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions, which represent flagrant violations of human rights, particularly the right to life,

1. Strongly condemns once again all the extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions that continue to occur throughout the world;

2. Demands that all States ensure that the practice of extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions is brought to an end and that they take effective action to prevent, combat and eliminate the phenomenon in all its forms and manifestations;

3. Reiterates the obligation of all States to conduct exhaustive and impartial investigations into all suspected cases of extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions, to identify and bring to justice those responsible, while ensuring the right of every person to a fair and public hearing by a competent, independent and impartial tribunal established by law, to grant adequate compensation within a reasonable time to the victims or their families, and to adopt all necessary measures, including legal and judicial measures, to put an end to impunity and to prevent the further occurrence of such executions, as recommended in the Principles on the Effective Prevention and Investigation of Extralegal, Arbitrary and Summary Executions;

4. Calls upon Governments and invites intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to pay greater attention to the work of national-level commissions of inquiry into extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions with a view to ensuring the effective contribution of these commissions to accountability and to combating impunity;

5. Calls upon all States, in order to prevent extrajudicial, summary and arbitrary executions, to comply with their obligations under relevant provisions of international human rights instruments, and further calls upon those States which have not abolished the death penalty to pay particular regard to the provisions contained in articles 6, 14 and 15 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and articles 37 and 40 of the Convention on the Rights of the Child, bearing in mind the safeguards and guarantees set out in Economic and Social Council resolutions 1984/50 of 25 May 1984 and 1989/64 of 24 May 1989, and taking into account the recommendations of the Special Rapporteur of the Human Rights Council on extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions regarding the need to respect essential procedural guarantees, including the right to seek pardon or commutation of sentence;

6. Urges all States:

(a) To take all necessary and possible measures, in conformity with international human rights law and international humanitarian law, to prevent loss of life, in particular that of children, during public demonstrations, internal and communal violence, civil unrest, public emergencies or armed conflicts, and to ensure that the police, law enforcement agents, armed forces and other agents acting on behalf of or with the consent or acquiescence of the State act with restraint and in conformity with international human rights law and international humanitarian law, including the principles of proportionality and necessity, and in this regard to ensure that police and law enforcement officials are guided by the Code of Conduct for Law Enforcement Officials and the Basic Principles on the Use of Force and Firearms by Law Enforcement Officials;

(b) To ensure the effective protection of the right to life of all persons under their jurisdiction and to investigate promptly and thoroughly all killings, including those targeted at specific groups of persons, such as racially motivated violence leading to the death of the victim, killings of persons belonging to national or ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities, killings of persons affected by terrorism, hostage-taking or foreign occupation, killings of refugees, internally displaced persons, migrants, street children or members of indigenous communities, killings of persons for reasons related to their activities as human rights defenders, lawyers, journalists or demonstrators, killings committed in the name of passion or in the name of honour, all killings committed for any discriminatory reason, including sexual orientation, as well as all other cases where a person's right to life has been violated, and to bring those responsible to justice before a competent, independent and impartial judiciary at the national or, where appropriate, international level, and to ensure that such killings, including those committed by security forces, police and law enforcement agents, paramilitary groups or private forces, are neither condoned nor sanctioned by State officials or personnel;

7. Affirms the obligation of States, in order to prevent extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions, to protect the lives of all persons deprived of their liberty in all circumstances and to investigate and respond to deaths in custody;

8. Urges all States to ensure that persons deprived of their liberty are treated humanely and with full respect for their human rights and to ensure that their treatment, including judicial guarantees, and conditions conform to the Standard Minimum Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners and, where applicable, to the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 and the Additional Protocols thereto, of 8 June 1977 in relation to all persons detained in armed conflict, as well as to other pertinent international instruments;

9. Welcomes the International Criminal Court as an important contribution to ending impunity concerning extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions, and, taking note of the growing awareness of the Court worldwide, calls upon those States that are under an obligation to cooperate with the Court to provide such cooperation and assistance in the future, in particular with regard to arrest and surrender, the provision of evidence, the protection and relocation of victims and witnesses and the enforcement of sentences, and further welcomes the fact that one hundred and eight

States have already ratified or acceded to and one hundred and thirty-nine States have signed the Rome Statute of the Court, and calls upon all those States that have not ratified or acceded to the Rome Statute to give serious consideration to doing so;

10. Acknowledges the importance of ensuring the protection of witnesses for the prosecution of those suspected of extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions, and urges States to intensify efforts to establish and implement effective witness protection programmes or other measures, and in this regard encourages the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to develop practical tools designed to encourage and facilitate greater attention to the protection of witnesses;

11. Encourages Governments and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to organize training programmes and to support projects with a view to training or educating military forces, law enforcement officers and government officials in human rights and humanitarian law issues connected with their work and to include a gender and child rights perspective in such training, and appeals to the international community and requests the Office of the High Commissioner to support endeavours to that end;

12. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Special Rapporteur to the General Assembly;

13. Commends the important role that the Special Rapporteur plays towards the elimination of extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions, and encourages the Special Rapporteur to continue, within his mandate, to collect information from all concerned, to respond effectively to reliable information that comes before him, to follow up on communications and country visits and to seek the views and comments of Governments and to reflect them, as appropriate, in his reports;

14. Acknowledges the important role of the Special Rapporteur in identifying cases where extrajudicial, summary and arbitrary executions could amount to genocide and crimes against humanity or war crimes, and urges him to collaborate with the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and, as appropriate, the Special Adviser to the Secretary-General on the Prevention of Genocide, in addressing situations of extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions that are of particularly serious concern or in which early action might prevent further deterioration;

15. Welcomes the cooperation established between the Special Rapporteur and other United Nations mechanisms and procedures in the field of human rights, and encourages the Special Rapporteur to continue efforts in that regard;

16. Urges all States, in particular those that have not done so, to cooperate with the Special Rapporteur so that his mandate can be carried out effectively, including by favourably and rapidly responding to requests for visits, mindful that country visits are one of the essential tools for the fulfilment of the mandate of the Special Rapporteur, and by responding in a timely manner to communications and other requests transmitted to them by the Special Rapporteur;

17. Expresses its appreciation to those States that have received the Special Rapporteur and asks them to examine his recommendations carefully, invites them to inform him of the actions taken on those recommendations, and requests other States to cooperate in a similar way;

18. Again requests the Secretary-General to continue to use his best endeavours in cases where the minimum standards of legal safeguards provided for in articles 6, 9, 14 and 15 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights appear not to have been respected;

19. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the Special Rapporteur with adequate human, financial and material resources to enable him to carry out his mandate effectively, including through country visits;

20. Also requests the Secretary-General to continue, in close collaboration with the High Commissioner, in conformity with the mandate of the High Commissioner established by the General Assembly in its resolution 48/141 of 20 December 1993, to ensure that personnel specialized in human rights and humanitarian law issues form part of United Nations missions, where appropriate, in order to deal with serious violations of human rights, such as extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions;

21. Requests the Special Rapporteur to submit to the General Assembly at its sixty-fourth and sixty-fifth sessions a report on the situation worldwide in regard to extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions and his recommendations for more effective action to combat this phenomenon;

22. Decides to continue its consideration of the question at its sixty-fifth session.

RECORDED VOTE ON RESOLUTION 63/182:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Andorra, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Armenia, Australia, Austria, Azerbaijan, Barbados, Belarus, Belgium, Belize, Bhutan, Bolivia, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Botswana, Brazil, Bulgaria, Burundi, Cambodia, Cameroon, Canada, Cape Verde, Chad, Chile, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Croatia, Cuba, Cyprus, Czech Republic, Denmark, Dominica, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, El Salvador, Eritrea, Estonia, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, France, Gabon, Georgia, Germany, Ghana, Greece, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, India, Ireland, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, Latvia, Lesotho, Liechtenstein, Lithuania, Luxembourg, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Micronesia, Moldova, Monaco, Mongolia, Montenegro, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Norway, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Republic of Korea, Romania, Samoa, San Marino, Sao Tome and Principe, Serbia, Singapore, Slovakia, Slovenia, Somalia, South Africa, Spain, Suriname, Sweden, Switzerland, Tajikistan, Thailand, The former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Timor-Leste, Togo, Tonga, Tunisia, Ukraine, United Kingdom, Uruguay, Uzbekistan, Vanuatu, Venezuela.

Against: None.

Abstaining: Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Benin, Brunei Darussalam, Burkina Faso, Central African Republic, China, Côte d'Ivoire, Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Djibouti, Egypt, Gambia, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Israel, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Marshall Islands, Myanmar, Namibia, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Palau, Qatar, Russian Federation, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Solomon Islands, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Swaziland, Syrian Arab Republic, Trinidad and Tobago, Turkey, Tuvalu, Uganda, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, United States, Viet Nam, Yemen, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Disappearance of persons

Working Group activities. The five-member Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances held three sessions in 2008: its eighty-fourth (Geneva, 10–14 March), eighty-fifth (Buenos Aires, Argentina, 24–26 July) and eighty-sixth (Geneva, 26 November–4 December) [A/HRC/10/9]. In addition to its core mandate to act as a communication channel between families of disappeared persons and the Governments concerned, with a view to ensuring that sufficiently documented individual cases were investigated, the Working Group monitored compliance with the 1992 Declaration on the Protection of All Persons from Enforced Disappearance [YUN 1992, p. 744]. Cases under active consideration by the Group totalled 42,393, concerning 79 countries. The Working Group had clarified 1,763 cases over the past five years. Between 1 December 2007 and 30 November 2008, the Working Group transmitted 1,203 new cases of enforced disappearance to 28 Governments, 83 of which allegedly occurred during the same period. Of those, 69 were urgent action appeals sent to 14 countries. The Group also clarified 54 cases in 12 countries. The Group's report summarized information on disappearances relating to 81 countries and the Palestinian Authority.

The Working Group remained concerned that of the 79 States with outstanding cases, some Governments (Burundi, Guinea, Israel, Mozambique, Namibia, Seychelles and Timor-Leste, as well as the Palestinian Authority) had never replied to the Group's communications. Some Governments provided responses that did not contain relevant information. The Working Group urged those Governments to fulfil their obligations under international law. The Group also noted that 79 countries had signed and five had ratified the International Convention for the Protection of All Persons from Enforced Disappearance, adopted in 2006 [YUN 2006, p. 800].

Following its visit to Argentina (21–24 July) [A/HRC/10/9/Add.1], the Working Group recommended that the Government define enforced disappearance as an autonomous crime and adopt a comprehensive protection programme for witnesses, families, lawyers, prosecutors, judges and civil society organizations involved in the investigation of cases of enforced disappearance. Efforts to locate disappeared persons should be strengthened by establishing a public body with operational and financial autonomy. Government policies launched in 2007, which created the Programme of Truth and Justice, should be consolidated through legislation into State policies unaffected by Government changes. An Integral Reparation Plan should be established for the families of victims, carried out through a body established by the National Congress.

Human Rights Council action. On 27 March [A/63/53 (res. 7/12)], the Human Rights Council noted the Working Group's 2007 report [YUN 2007, p. 747], and extended its mandate for a further three-year period. It urged Governments to make provision in their legal systems for victims of enforced or involuntary disappearances, or their families, to seek fair, prompt and adequate reparation, and consider symbolic measures recognizing the suffering of victims and restoring their dignity and reputation. The Council called on Governments that had not recently provided substantive replies concerning claims of enforced disappearances to do so.

Holocaust remembrance

Report of Secretary-General. In accordance with General Assembly resolution 60/7 [YUN 2005, p. 811], the Secretary-General reported, in August [A/63/316], on the programme of outreach on the Holocaust and the United Nations, carried out by the UN Department of Public Information. Since its establishment in 2006, the outreach programme had developed an international network of civil society groups, collaborated with world-renowned institutions and garnered the support of experts in Holocaust and genocide studies to develop a multifaceted programme that included seminars for UN information officers, exhibitions, discussion papers drafted by distinguished scholars, panel discussions, a film series, innovative online information products for educators, a permanent exhibition at UN Headquarters, and the annual observance in January of the International Day of Commemoration in memory of the victims of the Holocaust. The outreach programme worked closely with survivors to ensure that their stories were heard and heeded as a warning of the consequences of anti-Semitism and other forms of discrimination. It also provided civil society with communications tools to combat Holocaust denial.

By decision 63/552 of 24 December, the General Assembly decided that the agenda item on Holocaust remembrance remained for consideration during its resumed sixty-third (2009) session.

Torture and cruel treatment

Reports of Special Rapporteur. In a 15 January report [A/HRC/7/3], the Special Rapporteur on the question of torture, Manfred Nowak (Austria), summarized his activities and focused on the protection of women from torture. With regard to a gender-sensitive definition of torture, the Special Rapporteur noted the element of discrimination contained in the definition of the 1984 Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment [YUN 1984, p. 813]. He proposed to introduce an additional element: "powerlessness", of which detention contexts were classic situations. Powerlessness could also pertain, however, to situations outside of detention or direct State control. De facto deprivation of liberty might occur in private settings, especially where fear created a situation of total control, as was the case with battered wives, victims of trafficking, and abused women prisoners. The Special Rapporteur considered that the State had a duty to prevent acts of torture in the private sphere, and recalled that the concept of due diligence should be applied to examine whether States had lived up to their obligations. To ensure a gender-inclusive approach to torture, the Special Rapporteur underlined the need to understand that stigma was an element at all stages of sexual violence. It was crucial to interpret the torture protection framework in light of a wide range of human rights guarantees, in particular the rules developed to combat violence against women. In many contexts, the criminal law system, court rules of procedure and evidence, as well as reparation and rehabilitation programmes, were not sufficiently gender-sensitive. He called upon States to ensure that women victims of torture and of ill-treatment by officials enjoyed full protection under the law and that special measures be taken to prevent sexual violence in detention. States should address stigma as an obstacle hindering women victims from seeking justice. Special measures should be taken to ensure that women reported torture and ill-treatment, and that those who received those reports secured the evidence in a gender-sensitive manner. Court rules needed to be adapted to the needs of victims of sexual violence.

An addendum [A/HRC/7/3/Add.1] summarized communications transmitted to Governments by the Special Rapporteur and the replies received thereto between 16 December 2006 and 14 December 2007. He had sent 79 letters of allegations of torture to 51 Governments and 187 urgent appeals to 59 Governments on behalf of persons who might be at risk of torture or ill-treatment.

A further addendum [A/HRC/7/3/Add.2] summarized information provided by Governments and NGOs on the implementation of the Special Rapporteur's recommendations following country visits to Azerbaijan [YUN 2000, p. 682], Brazil [ibid., p. 681], Cameroon [YUN 1999, p. 636], Chile [YUN 1995, p. 756], China [YUN 2006, p. 875], Colombia [YUN 1994, p. 1022], Georgia [YUN 2005, p. 813], Jordan [YUN 2006, p. 875], Kenya [YUN 1999, p. 636], Mexico [YUN 1997, p. 666], Mongolia [YUN 2005, p. 813], Nepal [ibid., p. 814], Pakistan [YUN 1996, p. 639], Romania [YUN 1999, p. 636], Russian Federation [YUN 1994, p. 1016], Spain [YUN 2003, p. 742], Turkey [YUN 1998, p. 681], Uzbekistan [YUN 2002, p. 712] and Venezuela [YUN 1996, p. 640].

In accordance with General Assembly resolution 62/148 [YUN 2007, p. 750], the Secretary-General, in July [A/63/175], transmitted the Special Rapporteur's interim report, which drew the Assembly's attention to the situation of persons with disabilities, who were frequently subjected to neglect, severe forms of restraint and seclusion, as well as physical, mental and sexual violence. Such practices, perpetrated in public institutions, as well as in the private sphere, remained invisible and were not recognized as torture or other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment. The anti-torture framework should be reviewed in relation to persons with disabilities. By reframing violence and abuse perpetrated against them as torture or ill-treatment, victims and advocates could be afforded stronger legal protection and redress for human rights violations.

The Special Rapporteur also examined the use of solitary confinement for detainees, with its negative impact on mental health, and accordingly should be used only in exceptional circumstances or when absolutely necessary for criminal investigations, and for the shortest period of time only. The Special Rapporteur recommended that States should adopt legislation recognizing the legal capacity of persons with disabilities; ensure that they were provided with the support needed to make informed decisions; issue clear guidelines on what constituted "free and informed consent"; and make available accessible procedures. Attention was drawn also to the Istanbul Statement on the Use and Effects of Solitary Confinement, adopted at the International Psychological Trauma Symposium (Istanbul, Turkey, 9 December 2007), as a useful tool for promoting respect for and protection of the rights of detainees.

Following his mission to Denmark (2–9 May) [A/HRC/10/44/Add.2], the Special Rapporteur noted the country's long-standing leadership in anti-torture efforts worldwide and its history of support to civil society in the rehabilitation for torture victims. While no allegations of torture and very few complaints of ill-treatment from detainees were received, he cautioned against complacency, encouraging the Government to ensure that all allegations and suspicions of torture and ill-treatment were investigated, and the perpetrators punished. Noting legislative initiatives to add torture as an aggravating circumstance of various criminal offences, he regretted that a specific crime of torture was still missing in criminal law. The Special Rapporteur noted the high standard of conditions of detention, both in terms of infrastructure and day-to-day living standards. However, the extensive recourse to the use of solitary confinement remained a concern, particularly with respect to pretrial detainees. The establishment of an inter-ministerial working group to investigate alleged Central Intelligence Agency ren-tion flights operating through Denmark and Greenland was encouraging.

The Special Rapporteur, together with the Special Rapporteur on violence against women, its causes and consequences, Yakin Ertürk (Turkey), visited Moldova, including the Transnistrian region (4–11 July) [A/HRC/10/44/Add.3]. The Rapporteur noted the Government's commitment to promoting human rights, the progress made since independence in 1991, and the initiatives to prevent torture, in particular the creation of a national preventive mechanism. However, ill-treatment during the initial period of police custody was widespread, and allegations were received of torture in some police stations and reports of ill-treatment in other institutions. While some torture cases had reached the courts, most complaints mechanisms were ineffective. Conditions in police cells did not conform to international standards and were not suited to holding people for long periods. Detention in such conditions for up to several months amounted to inhuman treatment. Within the legal framework, torture had been criminalized and legislation provided for safeguards. However, for these to be effective, the various players in the criminal law cycle should live up to their responsibilities and denounce cases of torture.

The Rapporteur recommended that the Government implement fully its obligations under international human rights law; equip the recently created national preventive mechanism with the necessary human and other resources; and ensure that the penitentiary system was truly aimed at the rehabilitation and reintegration of offenders. Accessible and confidential complaints mechanisms, as well as effective and independent criminal investigation and prosecution mechanisms against alleged perpetrators of torture, should be established. The time limits for police custody should be reduced to 48 hours. The prosecution should be required to prove beyond reasonable doubt that no unlawful means had been used to obtain evidence, rather than leave the burden of proof on the victim. The Rapporteur expressed concern about the lack of a complaints and monitoring mechanism in the Transnistrian region, and recommended extending the activities of the national preventive mechanism to the region, criminalizing torture and abolishing the death penalty. The practice of solitary confinement for persons sentenced to death or to life imprisonment should be stopped immediately. The international community should assist the Government in its fight against torture by providing financial and technical support.

Following his visit to Equatorial Guinea (9–18 November) [A/HRC/13/39/Add.4], the Special Rapporteur noted the adoption in 2006 of a comprehensive law prohibiting torture and providing for its prosecution, but found torture by the police to be systematic in the initial period after arrest and during interrogation. Neither safeguards against ill-treatment nor complaints mechanisms were effective, and perpetrators of torture and ill-treatment were not prosecuted. On the contrary, in many cases, victims of torture experienced a total lack of justice, which, combined with the physical and psychological consequences of ill-treatment and the absence of any rehabilitation or compensation mechanism, caused suffering that might amount to inhuman treatment. Conditions of detention in many prisons and police custody facilities were in need of refurbishment to fulfil international minimum standards. In one prison, persons suspected of political crimes had been held in solitary confinement for up to four years. Women and children in police and gendarmerie custody were not separated from male adults and were therefore vulnerable to sexual violence and other forms of abuse. Immigrants detained pending deportation were frequently held in police detention in poor conditions for long periods, with little access to food and water. A comprehensive institutional and legal overhaul establishing law enforcement bodies based on the rule of law, an independent judiciary, and effective monitoring and accountability mechanisms were necessary to combat torture, and comply with the country's Constitution and its obligations under international law. The international community, including transnational corporations, should ensure that, in their development cooperation and business practices, they were not complicit in violations of human rights by State authorities.

Human Rights Council action. On 18 June [A/63/53 (res. 8/8)], the Human Rights Council welcomed the report of the Special Rapporteur and extended the mandate for a further three years. It urged States to implement effective measures to prevent torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment, particularly in places of detention and other places where persons were deprived of their liberty, and to adopt a gender-sensitive approach in the fight against torture, paying special attention to violence against women. States should respond favourably to the Special Rapporteur's requests for visits to their countries and ensure follow-up to his recommendations and conclusions.

Voluntary fund for torture victims

Report of Board of Trustees (February). At its twenty-eighth session (Geneva, 6–8 February), the Board of Trustees of the United Nations Voluntary Fund for Victims of Torture allocated grants amounting to $1,219,100 to 43 projects carried out by NGOs, and recommended setting aside $665,400 for intersessional grants for 2008. It issued revised guidelines for use during 2008, including new decisions on admissibility criteria for projects. It decided that grantees should identify in-kind contributions in order to enable the secretariat to determine future policy in that regard. The Board also discussed a number of policy issues. It approved the principle of multi-year funding for a three-year period, and endorsed a secretariat suggestion on strengthening the capacity of grantees and to resume the practice of meeting with them.

Report of Secretary-General. In his annual report [A/63/220] to the General Assembly on the status of the Fund, the Secretary-General provided information on the recommendations of the Fund's Board of Trustees at its twenty-seventh [YUN 2007, p. 750] and twenty-eighth (see above) sessions. Contributions from 11 countries and three individuals from 3 October 2007 to 30 June 2008 amounted to $1,731,668, while pledges from eight countries totalled $1,116,543. The High Commissioner approved those recommendations on behalf of the Secretary-General.

Human Rights Council action. On 18 June [A/63/53 (res. 8/8)], the Human Rights Council took note of the Secretary-General's report and called on the Board of the Fund to report to the Council in accordance with the annual programme of work. It appealed to Governments, organizations and individuals to increase contributions to the Fund and encouraged contributions to the Special Fund established by the Optional Protocol to the Convention, as well as education programmes of national preventive mechanisms.

Report of Board of Trustees (October). At its twenty-ninth session (Geneva, 13–17 October) [A/HRC/10/40], the Board recommended allocating grants amounting $10,200,950 to 195 projects in more than 65 countries, which the High Commissioner approved on behalf of the Secretary-General on 27 October. Between 1 January and 3 December, the Fund received $11,397,548 from 34 countries and the Holy See. The Board also maintained its practice of financing requests for training and seminars, and recommended allocating $136,400 to nine organizations in seven countries for that purpose.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December [meeting 70], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/63/430/Add.1], adopted resolution 63/166 without vote [agenda item 64 (a)].

Torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming that no one shall be subjected to torture or to other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment,

Recalling that freedom from torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment is a non-derogable right that must be protected under all circumstances, including in times of international or internal armed conflict or disturbance, and that the absolute prohibition of torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment is affirmed in relevant international instruments,

Recalling also that the prohibition of torture is a peremptory norm of international law and that international, regional and domestic courts have held the prohibition of cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment to be customary international law,

Recalling further the definition of torture contained in article 1 of the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, without prejudice to any international instrument or national legislation which contains or may contain provisions of wider application,

Emphasizing the importance of properly interpreting and implementing the obligations of States with respect to torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, and of abiding strictly by the definition of torture contained in article 1 of the Convention,

Noting that under the Geneva Conventions of 1949 torture and inhuman treatment are a grave breach and that under the statute of the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991, the statute of the International Criminal Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Genocide and Other Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of Rwanda and Rwandan Citizens Responsible for Genocide and Other Such Violations Committed in the Territory of Neighbouring States between 1 January and 31 December 1994 and the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court acts of torture can constitute crimes against humanity and, when committed in a situation of armed conflict, constitute war crimes,

Acknowledging the adoption of the International Convention for the Protection of All Persons from Enforced Disappearance in its resolution 61/177 of 20 December 2006, and recognizing that its entry into force as soon as possible and its implementation will make a significant contribution to the prevention of torture, including by prohibiting places of secret detention,

Commending the persistent efforts of civil society organizations, including non-governmental organizations, national human rights institutions and the considerable network of centres for the rehabilitation of victims of torture, to combat torture and to alleviate the suffering of victims of torture,

Welcoming the entry into force of the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities, which reaffirms that no one shall be subjected to torture or to cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment,

1. Condemns all forms of torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, including through intimidation, which are and shall remain prohibited at any time and in any place whatsoever and can thus never be justified, and calls upon all States to implement fully the absolute prohibition of torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment;

2. Emphasizes that States must take persistent, determined and effective measures to prevent and combat torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, and stresses that all acts of torture must be made offences under domestic criminal law;

3. Welcomes the establishment of national preventive mechanisms to prevent torture and encourages all States that have not yet done so to establish such mechanisms, and calls upon States parties to the Optional Protocol to the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment to fulfil their obligation to designate or establish truly independent and effective national preventive mechanisms for the prevention of torture;

4. Emphasizes the importance of States' ensuring proper follow-up to the recommendations and conclusions of the relevant treaty bodies and mechanisms, including the Committee against Torture, the Subcommittee on Prevention of Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment and the Special Rapporteur of the Human Rights Council on torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment;

5. Condemns any action or attempt by States or public officials to legalize, authorize or acquiesce in torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment under any circumstances, including on grounds of national security or through judicial decisions;

6. Stresses that all allegations of torture or other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment must be promptly and impartially examined by the competent domestic authority, and that those who encourage, order, tolerate or perpetrate such acts must be held responsible, brought to justice and punished in a manner commensurate with the severity of the offence, including the officials in charge of the place of detention where the prohibited act is found to have been committed;

7. Takes note in this respect of the Principles on the Effective Investigation and Documentation of Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment (the Istanbul Principles) as a useful tool in efforts to prevent and combat torture and of the updated set of principles for the protection of human rights through action to combat impunity;

8. Calls upon all States to implement effective measures to prevent torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, particularly in places of detention and other places where persons are deprived of their liberty, including education and training of personnel who may be involved in the custody, interrogation or treatment of any individual subjected to any form of arrest, detention or imprisonment;

9. Also calls upon all States to adopt a gender-sensitive approach in the fight against torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, paying special attention to violence against women and girls;

10. Calls upon States to ensure that the rights of persons with disabilities, bearing in mind the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities, are fully integrated into torture prevention and protection, and welcomes the efforts of the Special Rapporteur in this regard;

11. Encourages all States to ensure that persons convicted of torture or other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment have no subsequent involvement in the custody, interrogation or treatment of any person under arrest, detention, imprisonment or other deprivation of liberty;

12. Emphasizes that acts of torture in armed conflict are serious violations of international humanitarian law and in this regard constitute war crimes, that acts of torture can constitute crimes against humanity and that the perpetrators of all acts of torture must be prosecuted and punished;

13. Strongly urges States to ensure that no statement that is established to have been made as a result of torture is invoked as evidence in any proceedings, except against a person accused of torture as evidence that the statement was made;

14. Stresses that States must not punish personnel for not obeying orders to commit or conceal acts amounting to torture or other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment;

15. Urges States not to expel, return ("refouler"), extradite or in any other way transfer a person to another State where there are substantial grounds for believing that the person would be in danger of being subjected to torture, and recognizes that diplomatic assurances, where used, do not release States from their obligations under international human rights, humanitarian and refugee law, in particular the principle of non-refoulement;

16. Recalls that, for the purpose of determining whether there are such grounds, the competent authorities shall take into account all relevant considerations, including, where applicable, the existence in the State concerned of a consistent pattern of gross, flagrant or mass violations of human rights;

17. Calls upon States parties to the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment to fulfil their obligation to submit for prosecution or extradite those alleged to have committed acts of torture, and encourages other States to do likewise, bearing in mind the need to fight impunity;

18. Stresses that national legal systems must ensure that victims of torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment obtain redress, are awarded fair and adequate compensation and receive appropriate social and medical rehabilitation, urges States to take effective measures to this end, and in this regard encourages the development of rehabilitation centres;

19. Recalls its resolution 43/173 of 9 December 1988 on the Body of Principles for the Protection of All Persons under Any Form of Detention or Imprisonment, and in this context stresses that ensuring that any individual arrested or detained is promptly brought before a judge or other independent judicial officer in person and permitting prompt and regular medical care and legal counsel as well as visits by family members and independent monitoring mechanisms are effective measures for the prevention of torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment;

20. Reminds all States that prolonged incommunicado detention or detention in secret places can facilitate the perpetration of torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment and can in itself constitute a form of such treatment, and urges all States to respect the safeguards concerning the liberty, security and dignity of the person;

21. Notes the concerns about solitary confinement expressed in the interim report of the Special Rapporteur, and highlights the importance of reflecting on this in efforts to promote respect for and protection of the rights of detainees;

22. Calls upon all States to take appropriate effective legislative, administrative, judicial and other measures to prevent and prohibit the production, trade, export and use of equipment that is specifically designed to inflict torture or other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment;

23. Urges all States that have not yet done so to become parties to the Convention as a matter of priority, and calls upon States parties to give early consideration to signing and ratifying the Optional Protocol to the Convention;

24. Invites all States parties to the Convention that have not yet done so to make the declarations provided for in articles 21 and 22 of the Convention concerning inter-State and individual communications, to consider the possibility of withdrawing their reservations to article 20 of the Convention and to notify the Secretary-General of their acceptance of the amendments to articles 17 and 18 of the Convention with a view to enhancing the effectiveness of the Committee against Torture as soon as possible;

25. Urges States parties to comply strictly with their obligations under the Convention, including, in view of the high number of reports not submitted in time, their obligation to submit reports in accordance with article 19 of the Convention, and invites States parties to incorporate a gender perspective and information concerning children and juveniles and persons with disabilities when submitting reports to the Committee;

26. Welcomes the work of the Committee and its report submitted in accordance with article 24 of the Convention, recommends that the Committee continue to include information on the follow-up by States to its recommendations, and supports the Committee in its intention to further improve the effectiveness of its working methods;

27. Invites the Chairpersons of the Committee and the Subcommittee to present oral reports on the work of the committees and to engage in an interactive dialogue with the General Assembly at its sixty-fourth session under the sub-item entitled "Implementation of human rights instruments";

28. Calls upon the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, in conformity with her mandate established by the General Assembly in its resolution 48/141 of 20 December 1993, to continue to provide, at the request of States, advisory services for the prevention of torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, including for the preparation of national reports to the Committee and for the establishment and operation of national preventive mechanisms, as well as technical assistance for the development, production and distribution of teaching material for this purpose;

29. Notes with appreciation the interim report of the Special Rapporteur, and encourages the Special Rapporteur to continue to include in his recommendations proposals on the prevention and investigation of torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, including its gender-based manifestations;

30. Requests the Special Rapporteur to continue to consider including in his report information on the follow-up by States to his recommendations, visits and communications, including progress made and problems encountered, and on other official contacts;

31. Calls upon all States to cooperate with and assist the Special Rapporteur in the performance of his task, to supply all necessary information requested by the Special Rapporteur, to fully and expeditiously respond to and follow up his urgent appeals, to give serious consideration to responding favourably to requests by the Special Rapporteur to visit their countries and to enter into a constructive dialogue with the Special Rapporteur on requested visits to their countries as well as with respect to the follow-up to his recommendations;

32. Stresses the need for the continued regular exchange of views among the Committee, the Subcommittee, the Special Rapporteur and other relevant United Nations mechanisms and bodies, as well as for the pursuance of cooperation with relevant United Nations programmes, notably the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme, with regional organizations and mechanisms, as appropriate, and civil society organizations, including non-governmental organizations, with a view to enhancing further their effectiveness and cooperation on issues relating to the prevention and eradication of torture, inter alia, by improving their coordination;

33. Recognizes the global need for international assistance to victims of torture, stresses the importance of the work of the Board of Trustees of the United Nations Voluntary Fund for Victims of Torture, appeals to all States and organizations to contribute annually to the Fund, preferably with a substantial increase in the level of contributions, and encourages contributions to the Special Fund established by the Optional Protocol to help finance the implementation of the recommendations made by the Subcommittee as well as education programmes of the national preventive mechanisms;

34. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to transmit to all States the appeals of the General Assembly for contributions to the Funds and to include the Funds on an annual basis among the programmes for which funds are pledged at the United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities;

35. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit to the Human Rights Council and to the General Assembly at its sixty-fourth session a report on the operations of the Funds;

36. Further requests the Secretary-General to ensure, within the overall budgetary framework of the United Nations, the provision of adequate staff and facilities for the bodies and mechanisms involved in preventing and combating torture and assisting victims of torture or other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment commensurate with the strong support expressed by Member States for preventing and combating torture and assisting victims of torture;

37. Calls upon all States, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and other

United Nations bodies and agencies, as well as relevant intergovernmental and civil society organizations, including non-governmental organizations, to commemorate, on 26 June, the United Nations International Day in Support of Victims of Torture;

38. Decides to consider at its sixty-fourth session the reports of the Secretary-General, including the report on the United Nations Voluntary Fund for Victims of Torture and the Special Fund established by the Optional Protocol, the report of the Committee against Torture and the interim report of the Special Rapporteur on torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment.

Freedom of expression

Report of Special Rapporteur. In a February report [A/HRC/7/14], the Special Rapporteur on the promotion and protection of the right to freedom of opinion and expression, Ambeyi Ligabo (Kenya), reviewed the main trends and issues addressed during his tenure expiring in August. He had focused on the right of access to information, safety and protection of media professionals, legal restrictions on freedom of opinion and expression, as well as the impact of freedom of expression on the realization of other human rights. The Rapporteur urged Governments to assess legislation and judicial practices related to freedom of opinion and expression and to reform processes to guarantee conformity with international human rights standards. Governments should focus on the protection and promotion of media independence as a priority, and adopt legislation prohibiting all forms of censorship in media outlets. Defamation, libel and insult charges, particularly when stemming from public figures and State authorities, did not justify any form of prior censorship. Governments should extend the measures to protect freedom of opinion and expression to the Internet, in particular to web site contributors and bloggers, who should be granted the same level of protection as any other type of media. The Human Rights Council should focus on the safety and protection of journalists, in particular in situations of armed conflict, and request the Special Rapporteur to prepare a study on the causes of violence against media professionals, including draft guidelines for their protection. Media professionals should be conscious of the potential impact their expressed ideas might have in raising cultural and religious sensitivities. The Special Rapporteur emphasized that although international instruments foresaw limitations to the right to freedom of opinion and expression to prevent incitement of hatred, those limitations were designed to protect individuals against violations of their rights, and were not intended to suppress the expression of critical views, controversial opinions or politically incorrect statements.

An addendum to the report [A/HRC/7/14/Add.1] summarized 241 communications on behalf of 623 persons sent by the Special Rapporteur in 2007 to 81 Governments and the Palestinian Authority, and replies received thereto by 15 January 2008.

Human Rights Council action. On 28 March [A/63/53 (res. 7/36)], the Human Rights Council, by a recorded vote of 32 to none, with 15 abstentions, took note of the Special Rapporteur's report, extended the mandate for three years, and requested the Rapporteur to report to the Council annually.

On 18 June, the Human Rights Council appointed Frank William La Rue (Guatemala) as Special Rapporteur.

Terrorism

Human Rights Council action. On 27 March [A/63/53 (res. 7/7)], the Human Rights Council reaffirmed that counter-terrorism measures should be implemented in full consideration of the human rights of minorities and should not be discriminatory. It called on States not to resort to profiling based on stereotypes founded on grounds of discrimination, and to comply with their obligations in respect of torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment. States should, while countering terrorism, ensure due-process guarantees. It requested the High Commissioner to continue efforts regarding the protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms while countering terrorism and to report regularly to the Council.

Report of High Commissioner. In response to that request, the High Commissioner submitted a report in June [A/HRC/8/13] highlighting the need to protect and promote all human rights and effective counter-terrorism measures. Those two complementary and mutually reinforcing objectives should be pursued together as part of States' duty to protect. Human rights should be placed at the core of international cooperation in counter-terrorism, and States had an obligation to ensure that measures taken to combat terrorism crimes complied with their obligations under international human rights law—in particular the right to recognition as a person before the law, due process and non-refoulement. Compliance with international human rights standards was essential, especially where counter-terrorism measures involved the deprivation of individual liberty. The High Commissioner expressed concern about the obstacles to truly effective international and judicial cooperation in counter-terrorism, such as unlawful interferences with privacy, search, seizure and surveillance; the insufficient remedies for human rights violations in the context of evidence-gathering and information-sharing; the transfer and admissibility of evidence gathered by unlawful means; insufficient respect for the principle of legality in relation to the definition of terrorist offences; the protection of witnesses; and inappropriate redistribution of burdens of proof in legal proceedings. Failure by States to safeguard human rights in countering terrorism would lead to increased instability and decreased legitimacy of Governments, polarization in and between societies, and increased radicalization.

Reports of Special Rapporteur. In an August note [A/63/223], the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly the report of Special Rapporteur Martin Scheinin (Finland) on the protection and promotion of human rights while countering terrorism, submitted in accordance with Assembly resolution 62/159 [YUN 2007, p. 757]. The report focused on the fundamental right to a fair trial in the context of prosecuting terrorist suspects. It reviewed the applicable legal framework as reflected in international human rights treaties, treaty and customary international law, and conventions to counter terrorism, and analysed the role of the judiciary as a legal recourse to ensure that all terrorist suspects had effective access to the courts. Also addressed were the independence and impartiality of a judicial institution, and key areas of concern regarding access to justice in the context of the listing and de-listing of individuals and groups as terrorist or associated entities. The Special Rapporteur emphasized that fundamental principles of the right to a fair trial might not be subject to derogation, and any derogation should not circumvent the protection of non-derogable rights. All aspects of counter-terrorism law and practice had to be in compliance with international human rights law, including the right to a fair trial. Having regard to emerging practices in the fight against terrorism, the Special Rapporteur emphasized a number of basic principles as elements of best practice in securing the right to a fair trial in terrorism cases.

On 18 December, the Assembly took note of the Special Rapporteur's report (decision 63/534).

The Special Rapporteur visited Spain (7–14 May) [A/HRC/10/3/Add.2] and welcomed national and international efforts promote human rights in the fight against terrorism and to foster tolerance and solidarity so as to avoid conditions conducive to terrorism. However, certain legal definitions of terrorist crimes did not ensure full respect for the principle of legality. The Special Rapporteur highlighted the positive aspects in the trial of those accused of the 11 March 2004 bombings in Madrid [YUN 2004, p. 72] carried out by members of an international terrorist cell, but expressed concerns regarding the pretrial phase and the right to review by a higher court. A successful and legitimate fight against terrorism required that provisions on terrorist offences strictly adhered to the principle of legality, so that all elements of the crime were explicitly and precisely encapsulated in the legal definitions of the crimes. The Government should therefore initiate a review of the penal code to improve the current definition.

The Special Rapporteur recommended that any proscription of illicit organizations be carried out in accordance with the law and the principles of necessity and proportionality. Spain should bring vague formulations of Organic Law on Political Parties in line with international standards on the limitation of freedom of expression to avoid the risk of applying it to non-violent political parties sharing the political orientation of a terrorist organization. The country should also revise mechanisms of appeal in terrorist cases, reduce the duration of pretrial detention for cases linked to the notion of terrorism but did not entail the intention of deadly or serious violence and eradicate the institution of incommunicado detention—an exceptional regime that entailed a risk of prohibited treatment against the detainee.

Report of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 62/159 [YUN 2007, p. 757], the Secretary-General, in August, submitted a report [A/63/337] on the protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms while countering terrorism. The report examined States' practice in protecting non-derogable rights, in particular the right to life and the absolute prohibition of torture and ill-treatment, as well as obligations concerning the transfer of persons suspected of engagement in terrorist activities or deemed to be a threat to national security. It also examined States' practice to protect human rights and the limitations placed on the exercise of fundamental freedoms and human rights in the context of counter-terrorism, particularly freedom of expression, and considered the impact on the right to a fair trial. The Secretary-General noted in his conclusions that the High Commissioner, human rights treaty bodies and special procedures mandate-holders had expressed concerns regarding extrajudicial killings and summary executions, the alleged use of secret detention centres, the practice of irregular transfers of terrorism suspects and the use of diplomatic assurances to justify the transfer of suspects to countries where they might face a risk of torture. States should ensure respect for all rights—in particular non-derogable rights, such as the right to life and the prohibition of torture. Derogation measures should be allowed only in exceptional circumstances, and should be proportional and necessary. Member States should prohibit torture and cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment in national law; prosecute those responsible for torture and ill-treatment; and prohibit the use of statements extracted under torture. Measures should be taken to ensure the access of monitoring bodies to all prisoners in all places of detention, and to abolish places of secret detention. Member States should abide by the principle of non-refoulement and refrain from returning persons to countries where they might face torture. States resorting to military or specialized courts or tribunals in countering terrorism should accord due attention to the basic standards of fair trial and the right of equality before the courts.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December [meeting 70], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/63/430/Add.2], adopted resolution 63/185 without vote [agenda item 64 (b)].

Protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms while countering terrorism

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations,

Reaffirming also the fundamental importance, including in response to terrorism and the fear of terrorism, of respecting all human rights and fundamental freedoms and the rule of law,

Reaffirming further the Universal Declaration of Human Rights,

Reaffirming that States are under the obligation to protect all human rights and fundamental freedoms of all persons,

Reiterating the important contribution of measures taken at all levels against terrorism, consistent with international law, in particular international human rights, refugee and humanitarian law, to the functioning of democratic institutions and the maintenance of peace and security and thereby to the full enjoyment of human rights, as well as the need to continue this fight, including through international cooperation and the strengthening of the role of the United Nations in this respect,

Deeply deploring the occurrence of violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms in the context of the fight against terrorism, as well as violations of international refugee law and international humanitarian law,

Recognizing that respect for all human rights, respect for democracy and respect for the rule of law are interrelated and mutually reinforcing,

Noting with concern measures that can undermine human rights and the rule of law, such as the detention of persons suspected of acts of terrorism in the absence of a legal basis for detention and due process guarantees, the deprivation of liberty that amounts to placing a detained person outside the protection of the law, the trial of suspects without fundamental judicial guarantees, the illegal deprivation of liberty and transfer of individuals suspected of terrorist activities, and the return of suspects to countries without individual assessment of the risk of there being substantial grounds for believing that they would be in danger of subjection to torture, and limitations to effective scrutiny of counter-terrorism measures,

Stressing that measures used in the fight against terrorism, including the profiling of individuals and the use of diplomatic assurances, memorandums of understanding and other transfer agreements or arrangements, must be in compliance with the obligations of States under international law, including international human rights law, international refugee law and international humanitarian law,

Recalling article 30 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, and reaffirming that acts, methods and practices of terrorism in all its forms and manifestations are activities aimed at the destruction of human rights, fundamental freedoms and democracy, threatening the territorial integrity and security of States and destabilizing legitimately constituted Governments, and that the international community should take the necessary steps to enhance cooperation to prevent and combat terrorism,

Reaffirming its unequivocal condemnation of all acts, methods and practices of terrorism in all its forms and manifestations, wherever and by whomsoever committed, regardless of their motivation, as criminal and unjustifiable, and renewing its commitment to strengthen international cooperation to prevent and combat terrorism,

Reaffirming that terrorism cannot and should not be associated with any religion, nationality, civilization or ethnic group,

Noting the declarations, statements and recommendations of a number of human rights treaty monitoring bodies and special procedures on the question of the compatibility of counter-terrorism measures with human rights obligations,

Emphasizing the importance of properly interpreting and implementing the obligations of States with respect to torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, and of abiding strictly by the definition of torture contained in article 1 of the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, in the fight against terrorism,

Recalling its resolutions 57/219 of 18 December 2002, 58/187 of 22 December 2003, 59/191 of 20 December 2004, 60/158 of 16 December 2005, 61/171 of 19 December 2006 and 62/159 of 18 December 2007, Commission on Human Rights resolutions 2003/68 of 25 April 2003, 2004/87 of 21 April 2004 and 2005/80 of 21 April 2005, and other relevant resolutions of the General Assembly, the Commission on Human Rights and the Human Rights Council, including Council resolution 7/7 of 27 March 2008, and Council decision 2/112 of 27 November 2006,

Recalling also Human Rights Council resolution 6/28 of 14 December 2007, by which the Council decided to extend the mandate of the Special Rapporteur on the promotion and protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms while countering terrorism for a period of three years,

Recalling further its resolution 48/141 of 20 December 1993 and, inter alia, the responsibility of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to promote and protect the effective enjoyment of all human rights,

Acknowledging the work of the Human Rights Council in promoting respect for the protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms in the fight against terrorism,

Recognizing the importance of the United Nations Global Counter-Terrorism Strategy, adopted on 8 September 2006, and reaffirming its relevant clauses on measures to ensure respect for human rights for all, international humanitarian law and the rule of law as the fundamental basis for the fight against terrorism,

Recalling its resolution 62/272 of 5 September 2008, in which it called upon the United Nations entities involved in supporting counter-terrorism efforts to continue to facilitate the promotion and protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms while countering terrorism,

1. Reaffirms that States must ensure that any measure taken to combat terrorism complies with their obligations under international law, in particular international human rights, refugee and humanitarian law;

2. Deeply deplores the suffering caused by terrorism to the victims and their families, expresses its profound solidarity with them, and stresses the importance of providing them with assistance;

3. Expresses serious concern at the occurrence of violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms in the context of countering terrorism;

4. Reaffirms the obligation of States, in accordance with article 4 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, to respect certain rights as non-derogable in any circumstances, recalls, in regard to all other Covenant rights, that any measures derogating from the provisions of the Covenant must be in accordance with that article in all cases, and underlines the exceptional and temporary nature of any such derogations;

5. Calls upon States to raise awareness about the importance of these obligations among national authorities involved in combating terrorism;

6. Reaffirms that counter-terrorism measures should be implemented in full consideration of the human rights of all, including persons belonging to national or ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities, and must not be discriminatory on grounds such as race, colour, sex, language, religion or social origin;

7. Calls upon States not to resort to profiling based on stereotypes founded on grounds of discrimination prohibited by international law, including discrimination on racial, ethnic and/or religious grounds;

8. Urges States, while countering terrorism, to fully comply with their obligations with regard to the absolute prohibition of torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment;

9. Also urges States to fully respect non-refoulement obligations under international refugee and human rights law and, at the same time, to review, with full respect for these obligations and other legal safeguards, the validity of a refugee status decision in an individual case if credible and relevant evidence comes to light that indicates that the person in question has committed any criminal acts, including terrorist acts, falling under the exclusion clauses under international refugee law;

10. Calls upon States to refrain from returning persons, including in cases related to terrorism, to their countries of origin or to a third State whenever such transfer would be contrary to their obligations under international law, in particular international human rights law, international humanitarian law and international refugee law, including in cases where there are substantial grounds for believing that they would be in danger of subjection to torture, or where their life or freedom would be threatened in violation of international refugee law on account of their race, religion, nationality, membership of a particular social group or political opinion, bearing in mind obligations that States may have to prosecute individuals not returned;

11. Also calls upon States to ensure that guidelines and practices in all border control operations and other pre-entry mechanisms are clear and fully respect their obligations under international law, particularly refugee law and human rights law, towards persons seeking international protection;

12. Urges States, while countering terrorism, to ensure due process guarantees, consistent with all relevant provisions of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, and their obligations under the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, the Geneva Conventions of 1949 and the Additional Protocols thereto, of 1977, and the 1951 Convention relating to the Status of Refugees and the 1967 Protocol thereto in their respective fields of applicability;

13. Urges all States to take all steps necessary to ensure that persons deprived of liberty, regardless of the place of arrest or detention, benefit from the guarantees to which they are entitled under international law, including the review of the detention and, if they are subjected to trial, fundamental judicial guarantees;

14. Opposes any form of deprivation of liberty that amounts to placing a detained person outside the protection of the law, and urges States to respect the safeguards concerning the liberty, security and dignity of the person and to treat all prisoners in all places of detention in accordance with international law, including international human rights law and international humanitarian law;

15. Acknowledges the adoption of the International Convention for the Protection of All Persons from Enforced Disappearance in its resolution 61/177 of 20 December 2006, and recognizes that the entry into force of the Convention will be an important step in support of the rule of law in countering terrorism;

16. Reaffirms that it is imperative that all States work to uphold and protect the dignity of individuals and their fundamental freedoms, as well as democratic practices and the rule of law, while countering terrorism;

17. Encourages States, while countering terrorism, to take into account relevant United Nations resolutions and decisions on human rights, and encourages them to give due consideration to the recommendations of the special procedures and mechanisms of the Human Rights Council and the relevant comments and views of United Nations human rights treaty bodies;

18. Calls upon States to ensure that their laws criminalizing acts of terrorism are accessible, formulated with precision, non-discriminatory, non-retroactive and in accordance with international law, including human rights law;

19. Recognizes the need to continue ensuring that fair and clear procedures under the United Nations terrorism-related sanctions regime are strengthened in order to enhance their efficiency and transparency, and welcomes and encourages the Security Council's continued enhancement of efforts in support of these objectives, while emphasizing the importance of these sanctions in countering terrorism;

20. Urges States, while ensuring full compliance with their international obligations, to include adequate human rights guarantees in their national procedures for the listing of individuals and entities with a view to combating terrorism;

21. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General and the report of the Special Rapporteur of the Human Rights Council on the promotion and protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms while countering terrorism submitted pursuant to resolution 62/159, and takes note of the recommendations and conclusions contained therein;

22. Welcomes the ongoing dialogue established in the context of the fight against terrorism between the Security Council and its Counter-Terrorism Committee and the relevant bodies for the promotion and protection of human rights, and encourages the Security Council and its Counter-Terrorism Committee to strengthen the links and to continue to develop cooperation with relevant human rights bodies, in particular with the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, the Special Rapporteur on the promotion and protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms while countering terrorism and other relevant special procedures and mechanisms of the Human Rights Council, giving due regard to the promotion and protection of human rights in the ongoing work pursuant to relevant Security Council resolutions relating to terrorism;

23. Calls upon States and other relevant actors, as appropriate, to continue to implement the United Nations Global Counter-Terrorism Strategy, which, inter alia, reaffirms respect for human rights for all and the rule of law as the fundamental basis of the fight against terrorism;

24. Requests the Office of the High Commissioner and the Special Rapporteur to continue to contribute to the work of the Counter-Terrorism Implementation Task Force, including by raising awareness about the need to respect human rights while countering terrorism;

25. Requests the Counter-Terrorism Implementation Task Force to continue its efforts to ensure that the United Nations can better coordinate and enhance support to Member States in their efforts to implement their obligations under international law, including international human rights law, international refugee law and international humanitarian law, while countering terrorism;

26. Calls upon international, regional and subregional organizations to strengthen information-sharing, coordination and cooperation in promoting the protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms while countering terrorism;

27. Acknowledges with appreciation the cooperation between the Special Rapporteur and all other relevant procedures and mechanisms of the Human Rights Council as well as the United Nations human rights treaty bodies, and urges them to continue their cooperation, in accordance with their mandates, and to coordinate their efforts, where appropriate, in order to promote a consistent approach on this subject;

28. Requests the Special Rapporteur, in the context of his mandate, to continue to make recommendations with regard to preventing, combating and redressing violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms in the context of countering terrorism;

29. Requests all Governments to cooperate fully with the Special Rapporteur in the performance of the tasks and duties mandated, including by reacting promptly to the urgent appeals of the Special Rapporteur and providing the information requested, as well as to cooperate with other relevant procedures and mechanisms of the Human Rights Council dealing with the promotion and protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms while countering terrorism;

30. Calls upon States to give serious consideration to responding favourably to requests by the Special Rapporteur to visit their countries;

31. Welcomes the work of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to implement the mandate given to her in 2005, in resolution 60/158, and requests the High Commissioner to continue her efforts in this regard;

32. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report on the implementation of the present resolution to the Human Rights Council and to the General Assembly at its sixty-fourth session;

33. Decides to consider at its sixty-fourth session the report of the Special Rapporteur on the promotion and protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms while countering terrorism.

Peace and security

Human Rights Council action. On 18 June [A/63/53 (res. 8/9)], the Human Rights Council, by a recorded vote of 32 to 13, with 2 abstentions, reaffirmed that all peoples had a sacred right to peace, and the preservation of that right and promotion of its implementation constituted a fundamental obligation of each State. It requested the High Commissioner to convene a workshop on the right of peoples to peace to clarify its content and scope, propose measures to raise awareness of its importance and suggest actions to mobilize States, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations in the promotion of the right. The High Commissioner should select 10 experts for the workshop and report on its outcome at the Council's eleventh (2009) session.

Economic, social and cultural rights

Report of Secretary-General. In a 15 February report [A/HRC/7/58] on the question of the realization in all countries of economic, social and cultural rights, submitted in accordance with a 2007 Human Rights Council request [YUN 2007, p. 761], the Secretary-General reviewed the activities of UN human rights mechanisms and OHCHR relating to those rights during 2007. The report also covered OHCHR assistance and technical cooperation to States, UN agencies, civil society and others. In line with the Strategic Management Plan for 2006–2007 [YUN 2006, p. 766], the report reflected a significant increase in the work on those rights, highlighting major areas of enhanced capacity and engagement. Those activities included the monitoring of violations; providing technical assistance to States to promote such rights, including the drafting of legislation; strengthening the legal protection of those rights; undertaking research into new and challenging issues, such as the right to water, climate change and human rights; following up the recommendations of treaty bodies and special procedures; and building and strengthening partnerships with UN bodies, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs.

Right to development

Working Group activities. The high-level task force of the Working Group on the Right to Development, established by the Commission on Human Rights in 2004 [YUN 2004, p. 746] to assist the Working Group in making recommendations on the implementation of that right, held its fourth session in Geneva (7–15 January) [A/HRC/4/WG.2/TF/2]. The task force considered progress made towards application to selected partnerships of the criteria for the evaluation of global partnerships for development, adopted by the Working Group in 2006 [YUN 2006, p. 886]. It revised the criteria in light of lessons learned from their application and recommended their approval. The task force recommended continued dialogue and follow-up activities with institutional partners on previously selected global development partnerships [YUN 2007, p. 762]; and, in the context of assessing additional partnerships, that priority be given to Latin America and the Caribbean in terms of geographical expansion and to access to affordable essential drugs, debt relief, and trading and financial systems in terms of thematic expansion.

The Working Group on the Right to Development, at its ninth session (Geneva, 18–22 August) [A/HRC/9/17], considered the report of the task force on its fourth session (above). The Working Group recommended that the task force improve the right-to-development criteria in light of lessons learned from their application in, and with a view to, submitting a revised list of criteria. The criteria should be analytically and methodologically rigorous, empirically oriented and cover all aspects of the Millennium Development Goal to develop a global partnership for development and other aspects not yet covered. The Group recommended a workplan for the task force covering phase II (2008) and phase III (2009). The Group recommended that the Human Rights Council extend the task force's mandate until 2010, or until it completed the tasks entrusted to it by the Council.

In September [A/63/340], the Secretary-General reported to the Assembly on the outcome of the ninth session of the Working Group.

Reports of Secretary-General. In an April report [A/HRC/8/9], submitted in accordance with General Assembly resolution 62/161 [YUN 2007, p. 763], the Secretary-General summarized OHCHR activities to implement the right to development, in particular those in support of the Working Group and its task force, as well as other activities that contributed to the implementation of that right.

Also in response to that resolution, the Secretary-General, in a 22 August note [A/63/318], reported on the work on the right to development undertaken by the former Subcommission on the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights, and the Human Rights Council Advisory Committee at its first session (4–15 August) (see p. 715).

The General Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's note on 18 December (decision 63/534).

Human Rights Council action. On 24 September [A/63/53/Add.1 (res. 9/3)], the Human Rights Council welcomed the Working Group's report (see p. 818) and endorsed the task force's work plan for 2008–2010 outlined in the report. It decided that the criteria for the periodic evaluation of global partnerships, once endorsed by the Working Group, should be used in elaborating a comprehensive set of standards for the implementation of the right to development, which could include guidelines on the implementation of the right to development and evolve into a binding international legal standard. The Council also decided to renew the mandate of the Working Group until it completed the tasks entrusted to it, as well as that of the task force until the Working Group's eleventh (2010) session.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December [meeting 70], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/63/430/Add.2], adopted resolution 63/178 by recorded vote (182–4–2) [agenda item 64 (b)].

The right to development

The General Assembly,

Guided by the Charter of the United Nations, which expresses, in particular, the determination to promote social progress and better standards of life in larger freedom, as well as to employ international mechanisms for the promotion of the economic and social advancement of all peoples,

Recalling the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, as well as the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights,

Recalling also the outcomes of all the major United Nations conferences and summits in the economic and social fields,

Recalling further that the Declaration on the Right to Development, adopted by the General Assembly in its resolution 41/128 of 4 December 1986, confirmed that the right to development is an inalienable human right and that equality of opportunity for development is a prerogative both of nations and of individuals who make up nations, and that the individual is the central subject and beneficiary of development,

Stressing that the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action reaffirmed the right to development as a universal and inalienable right and an integral part of fundamental human rights, and the individual as the central subject and beneficiary of development,

Reaffirming the objective of making the right to development a reality for everyone, as set out in the United Nations Millennium Declaration, adopted by the General Assembly on 8 September 2000,

Deeply concerned that the majority of indigenous peoples in the world live in conditions of poverty, and recognizing the critical need to address the negative impact of poverty and inequity on indigenous peoples by ensuring their full and effective inclusion in development and poverty eradication programmes,

Reaffirming the universality, indivisibility, interrelatedness, interdependence and mutually reinforcing nature of all civil, cultural, economic, political and social rights, including the right to development,

Expressing deep concern over the lack of progress in the trade negotiations of the World Trade Organization, and reaffirming the need for a successful outcome of the Doha Development Round in key areas such as agriculture, market access for non-agricultural products, trade facilitation, development and services,

Recalling the outcome of the twelfth session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, held in Accra from 20 to 25 April 2008, on the theme "Addressing the opportunities and challenges of globalization for development",

Recalling also all its previous resolutions, Human Rights Council resolution 9/3 of 24 September 2008, previous resolutions of the Council and those of the Commission on Human Rights on the right to development, in particular Commission resolution 1998/72 of 22 April 1998, on the urgent need to make further progress towards the realization of the right to development as set out in the Declaration on the Right to Development,

Welcoming the outcome of the ninth session of the Working Group on the Right to Development of the Human Rights Council, held in Geneva from 18 to 22 August 2008, as contained in the report of the Working Group and as referred to in the report of the Secretary-General on the right to development,

Recalling the Fourteenth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held in Havana on 15 and 16 September 2006, the Fifteenth Ministerial Conference of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries, held in Tehran on 29 and 30 July 2008, and the Ministerial Meeting of the Coordinating Bureau of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries, held in Putrajaya, Malaysia, on 29 and 30 May 2006,

Reiterating its continuing support for the New Partnership for Africa's Development as a development framework for Africa,

Recognizing that poverty is an affront to human dignity,

Recognizing also that extreme poverty and hunger are the greatest global threat that requires the collective commitment of the international community for its eradication, pursuant to millennium development goal 1, and therefore calling upon the international community, including the Human Rights Council, to contribute towards achieving that goal,

Recognizing further that historical injustices have undeniably contributed to the poverty, underdevelopment, marginalization, social exclusion, economic disparity, instability and insecurity that affect many people in different parts of the world, in particular in developing countries,

Stressing that poverty eradication is one of the critical elements in the promotion and realization of the right to development and that poverty is a multifaceted problem that requires a multifaceted and integrated approach in addressing economic, political, social, environmental and institutional dimensions at all levels, especially in the context of the millennium development goal of halving, by 2015, the proportion of the world's people whose income is less than one dollar a day and the proportion of people who suffer from hunger,

1. Endorses the conclusions and recommendations adopted by consensus by the Working Group on the Right to Development of the Human Rights Council at its ninth session, and calls for their immediate, full and effective implementation by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and other relevant actors;

2. Supports the realization of the mandate of the Working Group as renewed by the Human Rights Council in its resolution 9/3, with the recognition that the Working Group will convene annual sessions of five working days and submit its reports to the Council;

3. Also supports the realization of the mandate of the high-level task force on the implementation of the right to development, established within the framework of the Working Group, as renewed by the Human Rights Council in its resolution 9/3, with the further recognition that the task force will convene annual sessions of seven working days and submit its reports to the Working Group;

4. Emphasizes the relevant provisions of General Assembly resolution 60/251 of 15 March 2006 establishing the Human Rights Council, and in this regard calls upon the Council to implement the agreement to continue to act to ensure that its agenda promotes and advances sustainable development and the achievement of the Millennium Development Goals, and also in this regard, to lead to raising the right to development, as set out in paragraphs 5 and 10 of the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, to the same level and on a par with all other human rights and fundamental freedoms;

5. Notes with appreciation that the high-level task force, at its second meeting, examined millennium development goal 8, on developing a global partnership for development, and suggested criteria for its periodic evaluation with the aim of improving the effectiveness of global partnership with regard to the realization of the right to development;

6. Stresses the importance of endorsement of the workplan for the task force for the period 2008–2010, outlined in paragraph 43 of the report of the Working Group, which requires that the criteria for the periodic evaluation of global partnerships, as identified in millennium development goal 8, to be submitted by the task force to the Working Group at its eleventh session in 2010, be extended to other components of millennium development goal 8;

7. Also stresses that the above criteria, once considered, revised and endorsed by the Working Group, should be used, as appropriate, in the elaboration of a comprehensive and coherent set of standards for the implementation of the right to development;

8. Emphasizes the importance that, upon completion of the three phases of the road map, the Working Group take appropriate steps to ensure respect for and practical application of these standards, which could take various forms, including guidelines on the implementation of the right to development, and evolve into a basis for consideration of an international legal standard of a binding nature, through a collaborative process of engagement;

9. Stresses the importance of the core principles contained in the conclusions of the Working Group at its third session, congruent with the purpose of international human rights instruments, such as equality, non-discrimination, accountability, participation and international cooperation, as critical to mainstreaming the right to development at the national and international levels, and underlines the importance of the principles of equity and transparency;

10. Also stresses that it is important that the high-level task force and the Working Group, in the discharge of their mandates, take into account the need:

(a) To promote the democratization of the system of international governance in order to increase the effective participation of developing countries in international decision-making;

(b) To also promote effective partnerships such as the New Partnership for Africa's Development and other similar initiatives with the developing countries, particularly the least developed countries, for the purpose of the realization of their right to development, including the achievement of the Millennium Development Goals;

(c) To strive for greater acceptance, operationalization and realization of the right to development at the international level, while urging all States to undertake at the national level the necessary policy formulation and to institute the measures required for the implementation of the right to development as an integral part of fundamental human rights, and also urging all States to expand and deepen mutually beneficial cooperation in ensuring development and eliminating obstacles to development in the context of promoting effective international cooperation for the realization of the right to development, bearing in mind that lasting progress towards the implementation of the right to development requires effective development policies at the national level and a favourable economic environment at the international level;

(d) To consider ways and means to continue to ensure the operationalization of the right to development as a priority;

(e) To mainstream the right to development in the policies and operational activities of the United Nations and the specialized agencies, programmes and funds, as well as in policies and strategies of the international financial and multilateral trading systems, taking into account in this regard that the core principles of the international economic, commercial and financial spheres, such as equity, non-discrimination, transparency, accountability, participation and international cooperation, including effective partnerships for development, are indispensable in achieving the right to development and preventing discriminatory treatment arising out of political or other non-economic considerations, in addressing the issues of concern to the developing countries;

11. Encourages the Human Rights Council to consider how to ensure follow-up to the ongoing work of the former Subcommission on the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights on the right to development, in accordance with the relevant provisions of the resolutions General Assembly and the Commission on Human Rights, and in compliance with decisions to be taken by the Human Rights Council;

12. Invites Member States and all other stakeholders to participate actively in future sessions of the Social Forum, while recognizing the strong support extended to the Forum at its previous four sessions by the Subcommission on the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights;

13. Reaffirms the commitment to implement the goals and targets set out in all the outcome documents of the major United Nations conferences and summits and their review processes, in particular those relating to the realization of the right to development, recognizing that the realization of the right to development is critical to achieving the objectives, goals and targets set in those outcome documents;

14. Also reaffirms that the realization of the right to development is essential to the implementation of the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, which regards all human rights as universal, indivisible, interdependent and interrelated, places the human person at the centre of development and recognizes that, while development facilitates the enjoyment of all human rights, the lack of development may not be invoked to justify the abridgement of internationally recognized human rights;

15. Stresses that the primary responsibility for the promotion and protection of all human rights lies with the State, and reaffirms that States have the primary responsibility for their own economic and social development and that the role of national policies and development strategies cannot be overemphasized;

16. Reaffirms the primary responsibility of States to create national and international conditions favourable to the realization of the right to development, as well as their commitment to cooperate with each other to that end;

17. Also reaffirms the need for an international environment that is conducive to the realization of the right to development;

18. Stresses the need to strive for greater acceptance, operationalization and realization of the right to development at the international and national levels, and calls upon States to institute the measures required for the implementation of the right to development as an integral part of fundamental human rights;

19. Emphasizes the critical importance of identifying and analysing obstacles impeding the full realization of the right to development at both the national and the international levels;

20. Affirms that, while globalization offers both opportunities and challenges, the process of globalization remains deficient in achieving the objectives of integrating all countries into a globalized world, and stresses the need for policies and measures at the national and global levels to respond to the challenges and opportunities of globalization if this process is to be made fully inclusive and equitable;

21. Recognizes that, despite continuous efforts on the part of the international community, the gap between developed and developing countries remains unacceptably wide, that most of the developing countries continue to face difficulties in participating in the globalization process and that many risk being marginalized and effectively excluded from its benefits;

22. Expresses its deep concern in this regard at the negative impact on the realization of the right to development owing to the further aggravation of the economic and social situation, in particular of developing countries, as the result of the ongoing international energy, food and financial crises;

23. Underlines the fact that the international community is far from meeting the target set in the United Nations Millennium Declaration of halving the number of people living in poverty by 2015, reaffirms the commitment made to meet that target, and emphasizes the principle of international cooperation, including partnership and commitment, between developed and developing countries towards achieving the goal;

24. Urges developed countries that have not yet done so to make concrete efforts towards meeting the targets of 0.7 per cent of their gross national product for official development assistance to developing countries and 0.15 to 0.2 per cent of their gross national product to least developed countries, and encourages developing countries to build on the progress achieved in ensuring that official development assistance is used effectively to help to meet development goals and targets;

25. Recognizes the need to address market access for developing countries, including in agriculture, services and non-agricultural products, in particular those of interest to developing countries;

26. Calls for the implementation of a desirable pace of meaningful trade liberalization, including in areas under negotiation in the World Trade Organization; implementation of commitments on implementation-related issues and concerns; review of special and differential treatment provisions, with a view to strengthening them and making them more precise, effective and operational; avoidance of new forms of protectionism; and capacity-building and technical assistance for developing countries as important issues in making progress towards the effective implementation of the right to development;

27. Recognizes the important link between the international economic, commercial and financial spheres and the realization of the right to development, stresses, in this regard, the need for good governance and broadening the base of decision-making at the international level on issues of development concern and the need to fill organizational gaps, as well as to strengthen the United Nations system and other multilateral institutions, and also stresses the need to broaden and strengthen the participation of developing countries and countries with economies in transition in international economic decision-making and norm-setting;

28. Also recognizes that good governance and the rule of law at the national level assist all States in the promotion and protection of human rights, including the right to development, and agrees on the value of the ongoing efforts being made by States to identify and strengthen good governance practices, including transparent, responsible, accountable and participatory government, that are responsive and appropriate to their needs and aspirations, including in the context of agreed partnership approaches to development, capacity-building and technical assistance;

29. Further recognizes the important role and the rights of women and the application of a gender perspective as a cross-cutting issue in the process of realizing the right to development, and notes in particular the positive relationship between women's education and their equal participation in the civil, cultural, economic, political and social activities of the community and the promotion of the right to development;

30. Stresses the need for the integration of the rights of children, girls and boys alike, in all policies and programmes, and for ensuring the promotion and protection of those rights, especially in areas relating to health, education and the full development of their capacities;

31. Welcomes the Political Declaration on HIV/AIDS adopted at the High-level Meeting of the General Assembly on 2 June 2006, stresses that further and additional measures must be taken at the national and international levels to fight HIV/AIDS and other communicable diseases, taking into account ongoing efforts and programmes, and reiterates the need for international assistance in this regard;

32. Also welcomes the entry into force of the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities on 3 May 2008;

33. Stresses its commitment to indigenous peoples in the process of the realization of the right to development, and reaffirms the commitment to promote their rights in the areas of education, employment, vocational training and retraining, housing, sanitation, health and social security in accordance with recognized international human rights obligations and taking into account, as appropriate, the United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples, adopted by the General Assembly in its resolution 61/295 of 13 September 2007;

34. Recognizes the need for strong partnerships with civil society organizations and the private sector in pursuit of poverty eradication and development, as well as for corporate social responsibility;

35. Emphasizes the urgent need for taking concrete and effective measures to prevent, combat and criminalize all forms of corruption at all levels, to prevent, detect and deter in a more effective manner international transfers of illicitly acquired assets and to strengthen international cooperation in asset recovery consistent with the principles of the United Nations Convention against Corruption, particularly chapter V thereof, stresses the importance of a genuine political commitment on the part of all Governments through a firm legal framework, and in this context urges States to sign and ratify the Convention as soon as possible, and States parties to implement it effectively;

36. Also emphasizes the need to strengthen further the activities of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights in the promotion and realization of the right to development, including ensuring effective use of the financial and human resources necessary to fulfil its mandate, and calls upon the Secretary-General to provide the Office of the High Commissioner with the necessary resources;

37. Reaffirms the request to the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, in mainstreaming the right to development, to undertake effectively activities aimed at strengthening the global partnership for development between Member States, development agencies and the international development, financial and trade institutions, and to reflect those activities in detail in her next report to the Human Rights Council;

38. Calls upon the United Nations agencies, funds and programmes, as well as the specialized agencies, to mainstream the right to development in their operational programmes and objectives, and stresses the need for the international financial and multilateral trading systems to mainstream the right to development in their policies and objectives;

39. Requests the Secretary-General to bring the present resolution to the attention of Member States, United Nations organs and bodies, specialized agencies, funds and programmes, international development and financial institutions, in particular the Bretton Woods institutions, and non-governmental organizations;

40. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to the General Assembly at its sixty-fourth session and an interim report to the Human Rights Council on the implementation of the present resolution, including efforts undertaken at the national, regional and international levels in the promotion and realization of the right to development, and invites the Chairperson of the Working Group on the Right to Development to present a verbal update to the Assembly at its sixty-fourth session.

Human rights and international solidarity

Human Rights Council action (March). On 27 March [A/63/53 (res. 7/5)], the Human Rights Council, by a recorded vote of 34 to 13, extended the mandate of the independent expert on human rights and international solidarity for a three-year period. The independent expert would continue to prepare a draft declaration on the right of peoples and individuals to international solidarity and submit a report to the Council.

Report by independent expert. By a 15 August note [A/HRC/9/10], the High Commissioner transmitted the report of the Independent Expert on human rights and international solidarity, Rudi Muhammad Rizki (Indonesia), pursuant to a 2007 Human Rights Council request [YUN 2007, p. 767]. The report focused on international cooperation and outlined steps for preparing the draft declaration on the rights of peoples and individuals to international solidarity. In that regard, the independent expert intended to seek, through a questionnaire, the views and contributions from Governments, UN agencies, other relevant international organizations and NGOs on the content, scope and nature of obligations for the promotion and protection of that right.

Human Rights Council action (September). On 24 September [A/63/53/Add.1 (res. 9/2)], the Council, by a recorded vote of 33 to 13, requested the independent expert to continue his work in the preparation of the draft declaration, and in developing guidelines, standards, norms and principles to promote and protect the right to international solidarity. It also requested the Human Rights Council Advisory Committee to prepare inputs to the draft declaration and to the development of guidelines, standards, norms and principles. The independent expert was requested to submit a report to the Council's twelfth (2009) session.

Democratic and equitable international order

Human Rights Council action. On 18 June [A/63/53 (res. 8/5)], the Human Rights Council, by a recorded vote of 33 to 13 with 1 abstention, affirmed that everyone and every people had the right to a democratic and equitable international order. Such an international order required the realization of the right of all peoples to self-determination; the right of peoples and nations to permanent sovereignty over their natural wealth and resources; the right of every individual and all peoples to development; the right of all peoples to peace; and the right to an international economic order based on equal participation in decision-making, interdependence, mutual interest, international solidarity and cooperation.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December [meeting 70], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/63/430/Add.2], adopted resolution 63/189 by recorded vote (124-55-7) [agenda item 64 (b)].

Promotion of a democratic and equitable international order

The General Assembly,

Recalling its previous resolutions on the promotion of a democratic and equitable international order, including resolution 61/160 of 19 December 2006, and taking note of Human Rights Council resolution 8/5 of 18 June 2008,

Reaffirming the commitment of all States to fulfil their obligations to promote universal respect for, and observance and protection of, all human rights and fundamental freedoms for all, in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, other instruments relating to human rights and international law,

Affirming that the enhancement of international cooperation for the promotion and protection of all human rights should continue to be carried out in full conformity with the purposes and principles of the Charter and international law as set forth in Articles 1 and 2 of the Charter and, inter alia, with full respect for sovereignty, territorial integrity, political independence, the non-use of force or the threat of force in international relations and non-intervention in matters that are essentially within the domestic jurisdiction of any State,

Recalling the Preamble to the Charter, in particular the determination to reaffirm faith in fundamental human rights, in the dignity and worth of the human person and in the equal rights of men and women and of nations large and small,

Reaffirming that everyone is entitled to a social and international order in which the rights and freedoms set forth in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights can be fully realized,

Reaffirming also the determination expressed in the Preamble to the Charter to save succeeding generations from the scourge of war, to establish conditions under which justice and respect for the obligations arising from treaties and other sources of international law can be maintained, to promote social progress and better standards of life in larger freedom, to practise tolerance and good-neighbourliness, and to employ international machinery for the promotion of the economic and social advancement of all peoples,

Stressing that the responsibility for managing worldwide economic and social issues, as well as threats to international peace and security, must be shared among the nations of the world and should be exercised multilaterally, and that in this regard the central role must be played by the United Nations, as the most universal and representative organization in the world,

Considering the major changes taking place on the international scene and the aspirations of all peoples for an international order based on the principles enshrined in the Charter, including promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all and respect for the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples, peace, democracy, justice, equality, the rule of law, pluralism, development, better standards of living and solidarity,

Considering also that the Universal Declaration of Human Rights proclaims that all human beings are born free and equal in dignity and rights and that everyone is entitled to all the rights and freedoms set out therein, without distinction of any kind, such as race, colour, sex, language, religion, political or other opinion, national or social origin, property, birth or other status,

Reaffirming that democracy, development and respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms are interdependent and mutually reinforcing, and that democracy is based on the freely expressed will of the people to determine their own political, economic, social and cultural systems and their full participation in all aspects of their lives,

Emphasizing that democracy is not only a political concept but that it also has economic and social dimensions,

Recognizing that democracy, respect for all human rights, including the right to development, transparent and accountable governance and administration in all sectors of society, and effective participation by civil society are an essential part of the necessary foundations for the realization of social and people-centred sustainable development,

Noting with concern that racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance may be aggravated by, inter alia, inequitable distribution of wealth, marginalization and social exclusion,

Underlining the fact that it is imperative for the international community to ensure that globalization becomes a positive force for all the world's people, and that only through broad and sustained efforts, based on common humanity in all its diversity, can globalization be made fully inclusive and equitable,

Recognizing the complex character of the current global food, fuel and financial crises, in which the adequate enjoyment of all human rights is threatened to be violated, as a combination of several major factors, including macroeconomic and other factors, such as environmental degradation, desertification and global climate change, natural disasters and the lack of the technology necessary to confront their impact, particularly in developing countries and least developed countries,

Stressing that efforts to make globalization fully inclusive and equitable must include policies and measures, at the global level, that correspond to the needs of developing countries and countries with economies in transition and are formulated and implemented with their effective participation,

Stressing also the need for adequate financing of and technology transfer to developing countries, in particular the landlocked developing countries and small island developing States, including to support their efforts to adapt to climate change,

Having listened to the peoples of the world, and recognizing their aspirations to justice, to equality of opportunity for all, to the enjoyment of their human rights, including the right to development, to live in peace and freedom and to equal participation without discrimination in economic, social, cultural, civil and political life,

Resolved to take all measures within its power to secure a democratic and equitable international order,

1. Affirms that everyone is entitled to a democratic and equitable international order;

2. Also affirms that a democratic and equitable international order fosters the full realization of all human rights for all;

3. Calls upon all Member States to fulfil their commitment expressed in Durban, South Africa, during the World Conference against Racism, Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia and Related Intolerance to maximize the benefits of globalization through, inter alia, the strengthening and enhancement of international cooperation to increase equality of opportunities for trade, economic growth and sustainable development, global communications through the use of new technologies, and increased intercultural exchange through the preservation and promotion of cultural diversity, and reiterates that only through broad and sustained efforts to create a shared future based upon our common humanity and all its diversity can globalization be made fully inclusive and equitable;

4. Affirms that a democratic and equitable international order requires, inter alia, the realization of the following:

(a) The right of all peoples to self-determination, by virtue of which they can freely determine their political status and freely pursue their economic, social and cultural development;

(b) The right of peoples and nations to permanent sovereignty over their natural wealth and resources;

(c) The right of every human person and all peoples to development;

(d) The right of all peoples to peace;

(e) The right to an international economic order based on equal participation in the decision-making process, interdependence, mutual interest, solidarity and cooperation among all States;

(f) International solidarity, as a right of peoples and individuals;

(g) The promotion and consolidation of transparent, democratic, just and accountable international institutions in all areas of cooperation, in particular through the implementation of the principles of full and equal participation in their respective decision-making mechanisms;

(h) The right to equitable participation of all, without any discrimination, in domestic and global decision-making;

(i) The principle of equitable regional and gender-balanced representation in the composition of the staff of the United Nations system;

(j) The promotion of a free, just, effective and balanced international information and communications order, based on international cooperation for the establishment of a new equilibrium and greater reciprocity in the international flow of information, in particular correcting the inequalities in the flow of information to and from developing countries;

(k) Respect for cultural diversity and the cultural rights of all, since this enhances cultural pluralism, contributes to a wider exchange of knowledge and understanding of cultural backgrounds, advances the application and enjoyment of universally accepted human rights across the world and fosters stable, friendly relations among peoples and nations worldwide;

(l) The right of every person and all peoples to a healthy environment and to enhanced international cooperation that responds effectively to the needs for assistance of national efforts to adapt to climate change, particularly in developing countries, and that promotes the fulfilment of international agreements in the field of mitigation;

(m) The promotion of equitable access to benefits from the international distribution of wealth through enhanced international cooperation, in particular in economic, commercial and financial international relations;

(n) The enjoyment by everyone of ownership of the common heritage of mankind in connection to the public right of access to culture;

(o) The shared responsibility of the nations of the world for managing worldwide economic and social development as well as threats to international peace and security that should be exercised multilaterally;

5. Stresses the importance of preserving the rich and diverse nature of the international community of nations and peoples, as well as respect for national and regional particularities and various historical, cultural and religious backgrounds in the enhancement of international cooperation in the field of human rights;

6. Also stresses that all human rights are universal, indivisible, interdependent and interrelated and that the international community must treat human rights globally in a fair and equal manner, on the same footing and with the same emphasis, and reaffirms that, while the significance of national and regional particularities and various historical, cultural and religious backgrounds must be borne in mind, it is the duty of States, regardless of their political, economic and cultural systems, to promote and protect all human rights and fundamental freedoms;

7. Urges all actors on the international scene to build an international order based on inclusion, justice, equality and equity, human dignity, mutual understanding and promotion of and respect for cultural diversity and universal human rights, and to reject all doctrines of exclusion based on racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance;

8. Reaffirms that all States should promote the establishment, maintenance and strengthening of international peace and security and, to that end, should do their utmost to achieve general and complete disarmament under effective international control, as well as to ensure that the resources released by effective disarmament measures are used for comprehensive development, in particular that of the developing countries;

9. Recalls the proclamation by the General Assembly of its determination to work urgently for the establishment of an international economic order based on equity, sovereign equality, interdependence, common interest and cooperation among all States, irrespective of their economic and social systems, which shall correct inequalities and redress existing injustices, make it possible to eliminate the widening gap between the developed and the developing countries, and ensure steadily accelerating economic and social development and peace and justice for present and future generations;

10. Reaffirms that the international community should devise ways and means to remove the current obstacles and meet the challenges to the full realization of all human rights and to prevent the continuation of human rights violations resulting there from throughout the world;

11. Urges States to continue their efforts, through enhanced international cooperation, towards the promotion of a democratic and equitable international order;

12. Requests the Human Rights Council, the human rights treaty bodies, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, the special mechanisms extended by the Council and the Human Rights Council Advisory Committee to pay due attention, within their respective mandates, to the present resolution and to make contributions towards its implementation;

13. Calls upon the Office of the High Commissioner to build upon the issue of the promotion of a democratic and equitable international order;

14. Requests the Secretary-General to bring the present resolution to the attention of Member States, United Nations organs, bodies and components, intergovernmental organizations, in particular the Bretton Woods institutions, and non-governmental organizations, and to disseminate it on the widest possible basis;

15. Decides to continue consideration of the matter at its sixty-fifth session under the item entitled "Promotion and protection of human rights".

RECORDED VOTE ON RESOLUTION 63/189:

In favour: Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Azerbaijan, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belarus, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Cambodia, Cameroon, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Djibouti, Dominica, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Eritrea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Gabon, Gambia, Ghana, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Jamaica, Jordan, Kazakhstan, Kenya, Kuwait, Kyrgyzstan, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Myanmar, Namibia, Nepal, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Philippines, Qatar, Russian Federation, Rwanda, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, South Africa, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Syrian Arab Republic, Tajikistan, Thailand, Togo, Tonga, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkmenistan, Tuvalu, Uganda, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Uzbekistan, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Globalization

Report of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 62/151 [YUN 2007, p. 767], the Secretary-General, in an August report [A/63/259], summarized the replies received from 10 Governments and the UN Department of Economic and Social Affairs containing their views on the issue of globalization and its impact on the full enjoyment of all human rights.

The General Assembly took note of the report on 18 December (decision 63/534).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December [meeting 70], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/63/430/Add.2], adopted resolution 63/176 by recorded vote (129-54-4) [agenda item 64 (b)].

Globalization and its impact on the full enjoyment of all human rights

The General Assembly,

Guided by the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations, and expressing, in particular, the need to achieve international cooperation in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction,

Recalling the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, as well as the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights on 25 June 1993,

Recalling also the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights,

Recalling further the Declaration on the Right to Development adopted by the General Assembly in its resolution 41/128 of 4 December 1986,

Recalling the United Nations Millennium Declaration and the outcome documents of the twenty-third and twenty-fourth special sessions of the General Assembly, held in New York from 5 to 10 June 2000 and in Geneva from 26 June to 1 July 2000, respectively,

Recalling also its resolution 62/151 of 18 December 2007,

Recalling further Commission on Human Rights resolution 2005/17 of 14 April 2005 on globalization and its impact on the full enjoyment of all human rights,

Recognizing that all human rights are universal, indivisible, interdependent and interrelated and that the international community must treat human rights globally in a fair and equal manner, on the same footing and with the same emphasis,

Realizing that globalization affects all countries differently and makes them more exposed to external developments, positive as well as negative, inter alia, in the field of human rights,

Realizing also that globalization is not merely an economic process, but that it also has social, political, environmental, cultural and legal dimensions, which have an impact on the full enjoyment of all human rights,

Emphasizing the need to fully implement the global partnership for development and enhance the momentum generated by the 2005 World Summit in order to operationalize and implement the commitments made in the outcomes of the major United Nations conferences and summits, including the 2005 World Summit, in the economic, social and related fields, and reaffirming in particular the commitment contained in paragraphs 19 and 47 of the 2005 World Summit Outcome to promote fair globalization and the development of the productive sectors in developing countries to enable them to participate more effectively in and benefit from the process of globalization,

Realizing the need to undertake a thorough, independent and comprehensive assessment of the social, environmental and cultural impact of globalization on societies,

Recognizing in each culture a dignity and value that deserve recognition, respect and preservation, convinced that, in their rich variety and diversity and in the reciprocal influences that they exert on one another, all cultures form part of the common heritage belonging to all humankind, and aware that the risk of a global monoculture poses more of a threat if the developing world remains poor and marginalized,

Recognizing also that multilateral mechanisms have a unique role to play in meeting the challenges and opportunities presented by globalization,

Emphasizing the global character of the migratory phenomenon, the importance of international, regional and bilateral cooperation and the need to protect the human rights of migrants, particularly at a time in which migration flows have increased in the globalized economy,

Expressing concern at the negative impact of international financial turbulence on social and economic development and on the full enjoyment of all human rights, particularly in the light of the current international financial challenges,

Expressing deep concern at the negative impact of the rising global food and energy challenges on social and economic development and on the full enjoyment of all human rights,

Recognizing that globalization should be guided by the fundamental principles that underpin the corpus of human rights, such as equity, participation, accountability, non-discrimination at both the national and the international levels, respect for diversity, tolerance and international cooperation and solidarity,

Emphasizing that the existence of widespread extreme poverty inhibits the full and effective enjoyment of human rights, and that its immediate alleviation and eventual elimination must remain a high priority for the international community,

Strongly reiterating the determination to ensure the timely and full realization of the development goals and objectives agreed at the major United Nations conferences and summits, including those agreed at the Millennium Summit that are described as the Millennium Development Goals, which have helped to galvanize efforts towards poverty eradication,

Deeply concerned at the inadequacy of measures to narrow the widening gap between the developed and the developing countries, and within countries, which has contributed, inter alia, to deepening poverty and has adversely affected the full enjoyment of all human rights, in particular in developing countries,

Noting that human beings strive for a world that is respectful of human rights and cultural diversity and that, in this regard, they work to ensure that all activities, including those affected by globalization, are consistent with those aims,

1. Recognizes that, while globalization, by its impact on, inter alia, the role of the State, may affect human rights, the promotion and protection of all human rights is first and foremost the responsibility of the State;

2. Emphasizes that development should be at the centre of the international economic agenda and that coherence between national development strategies and international obligations and commitments is imperative for an enabling environment for development and an inclusive and equitable globalization;

3. Reaffirms that narrowing the gap between rich and poor, both within and between countries, is an explicit goal at the national and international levels, as part of the effort to create an enabling environment for the full enjoyment of all human rights;

4. Also reaffirms the commitment to create an environment at both the national and the global levels that is conducive to development and to the elimination of poverty through, inter alia, good governance within each country and at the international level, transparency in the financial, monetary and trading systems and commitment to an open, equitable, rule-based, predictable and non-discriminatory multilateral trading and financial system;

5. Recognizes that, while globalization offers great opportunities, the fact that its benefits are very unevenly shared and its costs unevenly distributed represents an aspect of the process that affects the full enjoyment of all human rights, in particular in developing countries;

6. Welcomes the report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights on globalization and its impact on the full enjoyment of human rights, which focuses on the liberalization of agricultural trade and its impact on the realization of the right to development, including the right to food, and takes note of the conclusions and recommendations contained therein;

7. Calls upon Member States, relevant agencies of the United Nations system, intergovernmental organizations and civil society to promote equitable and environmentally sustainable economic growth for managing globalization so that poverty is systematically reduced and the international development targets are achieved;

8. Recognizes that only through broad and sustained efforts, including policies and measures at the global level to create a shared future based upon our common humanity in all its diversity, can globalization be made fully inclusive and equitable and have a human face, thus contributing to the full enjoyment of all human rights;

9. Underlines the urgent need to establish an equitable, transparent and democratic international system to strengthen and broaden the participation of developing countries in international economic decision-making and norm-setting;

10. Affirms that globalization is a complex process of structural transformation, with numerous interdisciplinary aspects, which has an impact on the enjoyment of civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights, including the right to development;

11. Also affirms that the international community should strive to respond to the challenges and opportunities posed by globalization in a manner that ensures respect for the cultural diversity of all;

12. Underlines, therefore, the need to continue to analyse the consequences of globalization for the full enjoyment of all human rights;

13. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General, and requests him to seek further the views of Member States and relevant agencies of the United Nations system and to submit a substantive report on the subject to the General Assembly at its sixty-fourth session.

RECORDED VOTE ON RESOLUTION 63/176:

In favour: Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Armenia, Azerbaijan, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belarus, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brunei Darussalam, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Cambodia, Cameroon, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Djibouti, Dominica, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Eritrea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Gabon, Gambia, Ghana, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Jamaica, Jordan, Kazakhstan, Kenya, Kuwait, Kyrgyzstan, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Myanmar, Namibia, Nepal, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Qatar, Russian Federation, Rwanda, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Solomon Islands, Somalia, South Africa, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Syrian Arab Republic, Tajikistan, Thailand, Togo, Tonga, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkmenistan, Tuvalu, Uganda, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Uzbekistan, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Albania, Andorra, Australia, Austria, Belgium, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Bulgaria, Canada, Croatia, Cyprus, Czech Republic, Denmark, Estonia, Finland, France, Georgia, Germany, Greece, Hungary, Iceland, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Japan, Latvia, Liechtenstein, Lithuania, Luxembourg, Malta, Marshall Islands, Micronesia, Moldova, Monaco, Montenegro, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Palau, Poland, Portugal, Republic of Korea, Romania, San Marino, Serbia, Slovakia, Slovenia, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland, The former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Turkey, Ukraine, United Kingdom, United States.

Economic reform policies

Reports of independent expert. In a report [A/HRC/7/9] issued in February, the independent expert on the effects of economic reform policies and foreign debt on the full enjoyment of all human rights, particularly economic, social and cultural rights, Bernard Mudho (Kenya), focused on the draft general guidelines on and execution of debt payments and economic reform policies requested by the Commission on Human Rights in 2004 [YUN 2004, p. 755] and in 2005 [YUN 2005, p. 832], to be eventually implemented by States and private and financial institutions. The guidelines would guarantee that compliance with the commitments arising from foreign debt did not undermine the capacity of States to fulfil their human rights obligations, particularly those relating to economic, social and cultural rights. Among the key principles of the draft guidelines were that they should be designed to encourage countries to elaborate flexible context-specific standards, benchmarks and indicators based on the core content or minimum human rights standards. The concept and definition of debt sustainability played a major role in the discussions on the effects of foreign debt on human rights. A main challenge was to define the responsibility and obligations of national and international stakeholders in the design of analytical tools, which should combine financial parameters, measurable human rights needs and poverty reduction objectives. In his conclusions and recommendation, the independent expert noted that economic reform and foreign debt measures had gradually become components of poverty reduction strategies, raising a need for a new approach to economic management. He recommended refocusing the mandate on the impact of public finance management on the achievement of human rights. The central issue would be how to secure a sufficient fiscal space to respect human rights standards while receiving financial assistance with non-disabling repayment obligations. The new mandate-holder should collaborate with the Working Group on the Right to Development and its high-level task force to ensure synergy of their action.

An annex to the report [A/HRC/7/9/Add.1] covered the independent expert's mission to Burkina Faso (23–27 April 2007), where debt relief initiatives had substantially reduced the foreign debt burden. Debt sustainability indicators were well below the thresholds defined by international financial institutions, and foreign debt did not appear to threaten the country's capacity to comply with its human rights obligations. Burkina Faso allocated debt service savings obtained through debt relief to a special anti-poverty account. Although the expenditure priorities of that account were not explicitly human rights-based, resources had generally been used in areas such as education and health. The expert encouraged the Government to continue its prudent debt policy and called on the donor community to help by ensuring that the national development strategy was financed to the largest possible extent with grants. The accountability and participation elements within the debt planning and decision process should be strengthened, particularly through a more systematic recourse to parliamentary and civil society advice. The poverty reduction strategy paper preparation process should be strengthened through a human rights-based approach, stipulating more clearly State obligations under international human rights law and elaborating the means to implement them.

Human Rights Council action. On 27 March [A/63/53 (res. 7/4)], the Human Rights Council, by a recorded vote of 34 to 13, extended the mandate for a three-year period, and redefined the mandate, renaming it the “independent expert on the effects of foreign debt and other related international financial obligations of States on the full enjoyment of all human rights, particularly economic, social and cultural rights”. The expert was requested to seek the views of States, international organizations, UN agencies, funds and programmes, regional economic commissions, international and regional financial institutions and NGOs on the draft general guidelines [A/HRC/7/CRP.2], with a view to improving them and presenting an updated text to the Council in 2010. He should also explore further the interlinkages with trade and other issues, including HIV/AIDS, when examining the effects of foreign debt and other related international obligations of States.

On 26 March, the Council appointed Cephas Lumina (Zambia) as independent expert.

Report of independent expert. Pursuant to Human Rights Council resolution 7/4 (see above), the Secretary-General, in August, transmitted to the General Assembly the report [A/63/289] of the new independent expert, who outlined his vision and plan of implementation for the mandate. His work would be guided by the principles of the primacy of human rights, international cooperation, participation, and the responsibilities of all actors. The mandate's broad objectives were to: raise awareness of the need to consider foreign debt as a human rights issue; broaden support for the mandate through regular dialogue with all stakeholders, including States that had not traditionally supported the mandate; clarify some conceptual issues, including the linkages between foreign debt and human rights; and review, revise and develop the draft general guidelines.

The General Assembly took note of the independent expert's report on 18 December (decision 63/534).

Social Forum

Social Forum session. In accordance with a Human Rights Council request [YUN 2007, p. 769], the 2008 Social Forum (Geneva, 1–3 September) [A/HRC/10/65] brought together representatives of Member States and civil society, including grass-roots and intergovernmental organizations, to address the rising awareness and international concern regarding the problem of poverty and extreme poverty; implementable practical initiatives; technical support and capacity-building for countries and agencies in need; and the need for a more structured UN role in developing and coordinating international efforts to tackle poverty. The Forum had before it a background report of the High Commissioner [A/HRC/SF/2008/2], requested by the Human Rights Council [YUN 2007, p. 769], which addressed poverty and human rights and the work of international human rights mechanisms in the field of economic, social and cultural rights and the right to development in relation to poverty, and the social dimension of globalization.

The Forum heard expert presentations and held interactive debates on the normative framework of human rights and extreme poverty; foreign debt; international trade policies; the role and responsibility of the State, civil society and transnational corporations in poverty eradication; international assistance and cooperation in poverty reduction and eradication; decent and favourable work conditions; good governance; corruption; access to affordable essential drugs and health care; climate change; and food security, the food crisis and the right to food.

Participants recommended that the Council should ensure greater participation of grass-roots organizations, as well as of people living in poverty, particularly women, in future Forum sessions, and set up a voluntary UN fund for that purpose. The Forum should function as an instrument for dialogue and as a think-tank on a human rights-based approach to poverty reduction, and promote better interaction between developed and developing countries, particularly through concerted efforts to achieve poverty reduction. Its themes should be better defined, narrower in scope and focus on discrimination as cause and consequence of poverty. The universal periodic review mechanism should monitor national poverty reduction policies. The Council should urge States to increase their official development assistance and establish mechanisms to ensure that assistance reached the poorest. Governance indicators should be developed for the next Social Forum to serve as a point of reference for dialogue. The Council should also advance a human rights-based approach to the global fight against corruption, which was one of the main causes of poverty and human rights violations.

Transnational corporations

Reports of Special Representative. In a 7 April report [A/HRC/8/5], the Special Representative of the Secretary-General on the issue of human rights and transnational corporations (TNCs) and other business enterprises, John Ruggie (United States), presented a conceptual and policy framework to anchor the business and human rights debate and to help guide all relevant actors. The framework comprised three core principles: the State duty to protect against human rights abuses by third parties, including business; the corporate responsibility to respect human rights; and the need for more effective access to remedies. The three principles formed a complementary whole in that each supported the others in achieving sustainable progress.

The Special Representative noted that rapid market expansion had created governance gaps in numerous policy domains, including business and human rights. Those gaps were between the scope of economic activities and actors, and the capacity of political institutions to manage their adverse consequences. Progress had been made, at least in some industries and by growing numbers of firms. There had been novel initiatives, public-private hybrids combining mandatory and voluntary measures, and industry and company self-regulation. Likewise, there was an expanding web of potential corporate liability for international crimes, reflecting international standards but imposed through national courts. Governments had adopted a variety of measures to promote a corporate culture respectful of human rights. Fragments of international institutional provisions existed with similar aims. The fundamental problem was that there were too few such steps. None had reached a scale commensurate with the challenges at hand, there was little cross-learning, and they did not cohere into a systemic response. The framework of “protect, respect and remedy” was intended to address the problem. The United Nations should lead intellectually and by setting expectations and aspirations. The Human Rights Council could help close the governance gaps in business and human rights by supporting the framework, inviting its elaboration, and fostering its uptake by relevant social actors.

In an addendum to the report [A/HRC/8/5/Add.1], the Special Representative summarized the outcome of five international multi-stakeholder consultations held in 2007 concerning the conceptual and policy framework: the role of States vis-à-vis business and human rights (Copenhagen, Denmark, 8–9 November); business and human rights in conflict zones (Berlin, Germany, 5 November 2007); multi-stakeholder initiatives (The Hague, 6–7 November); accountability mechanisms for resolving complaints and disputes (Cambridge, Massachusetts, United States, 19–20 November); and corporate responsibility to respect human rights (Geneva, 4–5 December).

In a further addendum, [A/HRC/8/5/Add.2], the Special Representative summarized the scope and patterns of alleged corporate-related human rights abuse found in a sample of 320 cases posted on the Business and Human Rights Resource Centre web page from February 2005 to December 2007. An initial coding of cases showed that all industry sectors in all regions were alleged to impact human rights. Allegations of abuse were reviewed for the rights impacted. Environmental harms were also noted, as they were often connected to claims of negative impacts on human rights, and allegations of corruption recorded. Persons affected by the alleged abuses included workers, communities and end-users, such as consumers of goods or users of services.

The Special Representative, in a 15 May report [A/HRC/8/16], clarified the concepts of “sphere of influence” and “complicity” and explained how both concepts fit into the corporate responsibility to respect human rights—one of the three principles composing the strategic policy framework. As the concept of sphere of influence was considered too broad and ambiguous to define the scope of due diligence required to fulfil the responsibility to respect, the Representative set out an alternative approach to defining that scope that would depend on the potential and actual human rights impacts resulting from a company’s business activities and the relationships connected to those activities. In contrast, avoiding complicity was viewed as an essential ingredient in the due diligence carried out to respect rights because it described a subset of the indirect ways in which companies could have an adverse effect on rights through their relationships.

Human Rights Council action. On 18 June [A/63/53 (res. 8/7)], the Human Rights Council welcomed the framework contained in the Special Representative’s report (above) and recognized the need to operationalize it with a view to providing more effective protection against human rights abuses by or involving TNCs and other business enterprises, and to contribute to the consolidation of norms and standards and any future initiatives, such as a comprehensive international framework. It extended the Special Representative’s mandate for a three-year period to include promoting the framework and reporting annually to the Council and to the General Assembly. It requested OHCHR to organize a two-day consultation to discuss ways to operationalize the framework, and to submit a report on the meeting to the Council.

Report of Special Representative. Pursuant to that resolution, the Secretary-General, by a 12 August note [A/63/270], transmitted the Special Representative’s report to the Assembly, which outlined the main components of the policy framework, the anticipated work streams to be undertaken in implementing the Special Representative’s extended mandate and summarized some of his main activities. In his conclusion, the Special Representative stated that the business and human rights agenda was enormously complex, and much hung in the balance, including the rights of individuals to enjoy lives of dignity, the role of business in achieving economic development and the social sustainability of globalization itself. The Representative believed that progress would be achieved only if actions were based on careful analysis and broad social and political support. Accordingly, in planning the next phase of his work, he intended to continue employing the methodology that had served the mandate so well: objective research, inclusive consultations and the engagement of a wide range of actors whose expertise and influence could turn principles into practice.

The General Assembly took note of that report on 18 December (decision 63/534).

Coercive economic measures

Reports of Secretary-General. Pursuant to a 2007 Human Rights Council request [YUN 2007, p. 771], the Secretary-General, in a July report [A/HRC/9/2], summarized information received from seven States (Albania, Algeria, Belarus, Cuba, Ecuador, Iraq and Venezuela) on the implications and negative effects of unilateral coercive measures on their populations.

In an August report [A/63/272] submitted in accordance with General Assembly resolution 62/162 [YUN 2007, p. 772], which also requested him to collect the same information, the Secretary-General summarized responses from Belarus and the Syrian Arab Republic.

Human Rights Council action. On 24 September [A/63/53/Add.1 (res. 9/4)], the Human Rights Council, by a recorded vote of 33 to 11, with 2 abstentions, urged all States to stop adopting or implementing unilateral coercive measures not in accordance with international law and international humanitarian law, in particular those with extraterritorial effects, which hampered trade relations among States, thus impeding the full realization of human rights, in particular the right of individuals and peoples to development. The Secretary-General was requested to seek from Member States their views and information on the implications of those measures on their populations, and to report to the Council’s twelfth (2009) session.

Communication. On 8 August [A/62/929], Cuba transmitted to the General Assembly the outcome document of the fifteenth Ministerial Conference of the Non-Aligned Movement (Tehran, Iran, 27–30 July), in which Ministers urged States to refrain from recognizing, adopting or implementing extraterritorial or unilateral coercive measures or laws, including unilateral economic sanctions, other intimidating measures, and arbitrary travel restrictions, that sought to exert pressure on Non-Aligned Countries, threatening their sovereignty and independence, and their freedom of trade and investment, and preventing them from exercising their right to decide their own political, economic and social systems. They agreed to oppose and condemn those measures or laws, and urged other States to do likewise, as called for by the Assembly and other UN organs. They called on States applying those measures or laws to revoke them.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December [meeting 70], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/63/430/Add.2], adopted resolution 63/179 by recorded vote (132-54) [agenda item 64 (b)].

Human rights and unilateral coercive measures

The General Assembly,

Recalling all its previous resolutions on this subject, the most recent of which was resolution 62/162 of 18 December 2007, Human Rights Council resolution 9/4 of 24 September 2008, and previous resolutions of the Council and the Commission on Human Rights,

Reaffirming the pertinent principles and provisions contained in the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States proclaimed by the General Assembly in its resolution 3281(XXIX) of 12 December 1974, in particular article 32 thereof, in which it declared that no State may use or encourage the use of economic, political or any other type of measures to coerce another State in order to obtain from it the subordination of the exercise of its sovereign rights,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General submitted pursuant to Commission on Human Rights resolution 1999/21 of 23 April 1999, and the reports of the Secretary-General on the implementation of General Assembly resolutions 52/120 of 12 December 1997 and 55/110 of 4 December 2000,

Stressing that unilateral coercive measures and legislation are contrary to international law, international humanitarian law, the Charter of the United Nations and the norms and principles governing peaceful relations among States,

Recognizing the universal, indivisible, interdependent and interrelated character of all human rights, and in this regard reaffirming the right to development as an integral part of all human rights,

Recalling the final document of the Fourteenth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held in Havana on 15 and 16 September 2006, and the final document of the Fifteenth Ministerial Conference of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries, held in Teheran on 29 and 30 July 2008, in which the Ministers of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries agreed to oppose and condemn those measures or laws and their continued application, persevere with efforts to effectively reverse them and urge other States to do likewise, as called for by the General Assembly and other United Nations organs, and to request States applying those measures or laws to revoke them fully and immediately,

Recalling also that at the World Conference on Human Rights, held in Vienna from 14 to 25 June 1993, States were called upon to refrain from any unilateral coercive measure not in accordance with international law and the Charter that creates obstacles to trade relations among States and impedes the full realization of all human rights, and also severely threatens the freedom of trade,

Bearing in mind all the references to this question in the Copenhagen Declaration on Social Development adopted by the World Summit for Social Development on 12 March 1995, the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action adopted by the Fourth World Conference on Women on 15 September 1995, the Istanbul Declaration on Human Settlements and the Habitat Agenda adopted by the second United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II) on 14 June 1996, and their five-year reviews,

Expressing concern about the negative impact of unilateral coercive measures on international relations, trade, investment and cooperation,

Expressing its grave concern that, in some countries, the situation of children is adversely affected by unilateral coercive measures not in accordance with international law and the Charter that create obstacles to trade relations among States, impede the full realization of social and economic development and hinder the well-being of the population in the affected countries, with particular consequences for women and children, including adolescents,

Deeply concerned that, despite the recommendations adopted on this question by the General Assembly, the Human Rights Council, the Commission on Human Rights and recent major United Nations conferences, and contrary to general international law and the Charter, unilateral coercive measures continue to be promulgated and implemented with all their negative implications for the social humanitarian activities and economic and social development of developing countries, including their extraterritorial effects, thereby creating additional obstacles to the full enjoyment of all human rights by peoples and individuals under the jurisdiction of other States,

Bearing in mind all the extraterritorial effects of any unilateral legislative, administrative and economic measures, policies and practices of a coercive nature against the development process and the enhancement of human rights in developing countries, which create obstacles to the full realization of all human rights,

Reaffirming that unilateral coercive measures are a major obstacle to the implementation of the Declaration on the Right to Development,

Recalling article 1, paragraph 2, common to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, which provides, inter alia, that in no case may a people be deprived of its own means of subsistence,

Noting the continuing efforts of the open-ended Working Group on the Right to Development of the Human Rights Council, and reaffirming in particular its criteria, according to which unilateral coercive measures are one of the obstacles to the implementation of the Declaration on the Right to Development,

1. Urges all States to cease adopting or implementing any unilateral measures not in accordance with international law, the Charter of the United Nations and the norms and principles governing peaceful relations among States, in particular those of a coercive nature with all their extraterritorial effects, which create obstacles to trade relations among States, thus impeding the full realization of the rights set forth in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and other international human rights instruments, in particular the right of individuals and peoples to development;

2. Also urges all States not to adopt any unilateral measures not in accordance with international law and the Charter that impede the full achievement of economic and social development by the population of the affected countries, in particular children and women, that hinder their well-being and that create obstacles to the full enjoyment of their human rights, including the right of everyone to a standard of living adequate for his or her health and well-being and his or her right to food, medical care and the necessary social services, as well as to ensure that food and medicine are not used as tools for political pressure;

3. Strongly objects to the extraterritorial nature of those measures which, in addition, threaten the sovereignty of States, and in this context calls upon all Member States to neither recognize those measures nor to apply them, as well as to take administrative or legislative measures, as appropriate, to counteract the extraterritorial applications or effects of unilateral coercive measures;

4. Condemns the continued unilateral application and enforcement by certain Powers of unilateral coercive measures, and rejects those measures with all their extraterritorial effects as being tools for political or economic pressure against any country, in particular against developing countries, adopted with a view to preventing those countries from exercising their right to decide, of their own free will, their own political, economic and social systems, and because of the negative effects of those measures on the realization of all the human rights of vast sectors of their populations, in particular children, women and the elderly;

5. Reaffirms that essential goods such as food and medicines should not be used as tools for political coercion and that under no circumstances should people be deprived of their own means of subsistence and development;

6. Calls upon Member States that have initiated such measures to abide by the principles of international law, the Charter, the declarations of the United Nations and world conferences and relevant resolutions and to commit themselves to their obligations and responsibilities arising from the international human rights instruments to which they are party by revoking such measures at the earliest possible time;

7. Reaffirms, in this context, the right of all peoples to self-determination, by virtue of which they freely determine their political status and freely pursue their economic, social and cultural development;

8. Recalls that, according to the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Cooperation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, contained in the annex to General Assembly resolution 2625(XXV) of 24 October

1970, and the relevant principles and provisions contained in the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States proclaimed by the Assembly in its resolution 3281(XXIX), in particular article 32 thereof, no State may use or encourage the use of economic, political or any other type of measures to coerce another State in order to obtain from it the subordination of the exercise of its sovereign rights and to secure from it advantages of any kind;

9. Rejects all attempts to introduce unilateral coercive measures, and urges the Human Rights Council to take fully into account the negative impact of those measures, including through the enactment of national laws and their extraterritorial application which are not in conformity with international law, in its task concerning the implementation of the right to development;

10. Requests the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, in discharging her functions relating to the promotion, realization and protection of the right to development and bearing in mind the continuing impact of unilateral coercive measures on the population of developing countries, to give priority to the present resolution in her annual report to the General Assembly;

11. Underlines that unilateral coercive measures are one of the major obstacles to the implementation of the Declaration on the Right to Development, and in this regard calls upon all States to avoid the unilateral imposition of economic coercive measures and the extraterritorial application of domestic laws which run counter to the principles of free trade and hamper the development of developing countries, as recognized by the Intergovernmental Group of Experts on the Right to Development;

12. Recognizes that in the Declaration of Principles adopted at the first phase of the World Summit on the Information Society, held in Geneva from 10 to 12 December 2003, States were strongly urged to avoid and refrain from any unilateral measure in building the information society;

13. Supports the invitation of the Human Rights Council to all special rapporteurs and existing thematic mechanisms of the Council in the field of economic, social and cultural rights to pay due attention, within the scope of their respective mandates, to the negative impact and consequences of unilateral coercive measures;

14. Requests the Secretary-General to bring the present resolution to the attention of all Member States, to continue to collect their views and information on the implications and negative effects of unilateral coercive measures on their populations and to submit an analytical report thereon to the General Assembly at its sixty-fourth session, while reiterating once again the need to highlight the practical and preventive measures in this respect;

15. Decides to examine the question on a priority basis at its sixty-fourth session under the sub-item entitled "Human rights questions, including alternative approaches for improving the effective enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms".

Extreme poverty

Report of High Commissioner. As requested by the Human Rights Council in 2006 [YUN 2006, p. 900], the High Commissioner in February submitted a report [A/HRC/7/32] summarizing replies and contributions received from 18 Governments, as well as UN agencies, intergovernmental organizations, national human rights institutions and civil society organizations concerning the draft guiding principles on extreme poverty and human rights: the rights of the poor [YUN 2006, p. 900].

Human Rights Council action. On 28 March [A/63/53 (res. 7/27)], the Human Rights Council noted the High Commissioner's report on the draft guiding principles on the rights of persons living in extreme poverty. It invited OHCHR to consult with relevant stakeholders, including by organizing a seminar on the draft guiding principles; and to submit a report to the Council, no later than its last session of 2009, that would allow it to decide how to move forward, with a view to possibly adopting the guiding principles.

Report of independent expert. The independent expert on the question of human rights and extreme poverty, Arjun Sengupta (India), in February [A/HRC/7/15], submitted a report that took stock of the key issues raised during his tenure. He reiterated that extreme poverty should be regarded as the combination of income poverty, human development poverty and social exclusion. Attention should be focused on the intersection of those three components when formulating poverty reduction strategies. Equally important was the importance of international cooperation, which was enshrined in international human rights law. In examining the effectiveness of such cooperation, the independent expert made observations on past experiences with poverty reduction strategy papers in Africa. He emphasized the need to recognize extreme poverty as a denial of human rights, and suggested that the guiding principles on extreme poverty should become legally binding.

Human Rights Council action. On 26 March, the Human Rights Council appointed Magdalena Sepúlveda Carmona (Chile) as independent expert.

On 18 June [A/63/53 (res. 8/11)], the Council noted the independent expert proposal to define extreme poverty as a combination of income poverty, human development poverty and social exclusion. It extended the independent expert's mandate for three years and requested that the expert report to the General Assembly and to the Council annually.

Reports of independent expert. As requested by that resolution, the Secretary-General submitted to the Assembly in August [A/63/274] the interim report of the new independent expert outlining the main concerns that would guide her activities. Those included the impact of discrimination and social exclusion, the challenges faced by women, children and persons with disabilities, the lack of meaningful participation of people living in poverty, the impact of public policies on people living in extreme poverty, and the lack of awareness of poverty as a human rights issue. Eliminating extreme poverty was not a question of charity but a pressing human rights issue. States had legal obligations towards people living in extreme poverty that were linked to a whole range of civil, economic, political, cultural and social rights. Through the exercise of her mandate, the independent expert would formulate pragmatic, action-orientated guidance and recommendations on how the human rights framework could strengthen efforts to eradicate extreme poverty.

The General Assembly took note of that report on 18 December (decision 63/534).

The independent expert visited Ecuador (10–15 November) [A/HRC/11/9/Add.1], where major advances had been made in terms of a rights-based approach to public policy planning and increases in social spending. However, political and institutional instability, the global economic crisis and economic and social inequities, further deepened by the persistence of inequities between different geographical areas and ethnic groups and between men and women, were cause for concern. The State should make certain that protection and social integration programmes were accessible to groups living in extreme poverty, take steps to increase opportunities for social participation, and strengthen mechanisms for distributing information and ensuring accountability. The Bono de Desarrollo Humano (“human development voucher”) cash transfer programme had had an impact on the status of communities living in extreme poverty, but should take into account the need for full observance of human rights standards. In that connection, social protection policies should aim at the universal enjoyment of the right to social security.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December [meeting 70], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/63/430/Add.2], adopted resolution 63/175 without vote [agenda item 64 (b)].

Human rights and extreme poverty

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, the Convention on the Rights of the Child, the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities and other human rights instruments adopted by the United Nations,

Recalling its resolution 47/196 of 22 December 1992, by which it declared 17 October the International Day for the Eradication of Poverty, and its resolution 62/205 of 19 December 2007, by which it proclaimed the Second United Nations Decade for the Eradication of Poverty (2008–2017), as well as its resolution 61/157 of 19 December 2006 and its previous resolutions on human rights and extreme poverty, in which it reaffirmed that extreme poverty and exclusion from society constitute a violation of human dignity and that urgent national and international action is therefore required to eliminate them,

Recalling also its resolution 52/134 of 12 December 1997, in which it recognized that the enhancement of international cooperation in the field of human rights was essential for the effective understanding, promotion and protection of all human rights,

Reaffirming the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals,

Deeply concerned that extreme poverty persists in all countries of the world, regardless of their economic, social and cultural situation, and that its extent and manifestations, such as hunger, trafficking in human beings, disease, lack of adequate shelter, illiteracy and hopelessness, are particularly severe in developing countries, while acknowledging the significant progress made in several parts of the world in combating extreme poverty,

Deeply concerned also that gender inequality, violence and discrimination exacerbate extreme poverty, disproportionately impacting women and girls,

Stressing that special attention should be given to children, persons with disabilities and indigenous peoples who are living in extreme poverty,

Concerned by the challenges faced today, including those derived from the food crisis, the energy crisis and the financial crisis, and by their impact on the increase in the number of people living in extreme poverty and their negative effect on the capacity of all States, especially developing countries, to fight extreme poverty,

Recalling Human Rights Council resolutions 2/2 of 27 November 2006, 7/27 of 28 March 2008 and 8/11 of 18 June 2008, as well as resolution 2006/9 of 24 August 2006 of the Subcommission on the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights, and taking note of the annex thereto, containing the draft guiding principles on extreme poverty and human rights: the rights of the poor,

Welcoming the Summit of World Leaders for Action against Hunger and Poverty of 20 September 2004, convened in New York by the Presidents of Brazil, Chile and France and the Prime Minister of Spain with the support of the Secretary-General,

Recognizing that the eradication of extreme poverty is a major challenge within the process of globalization and requires coordinated and continued policies through decisive national action and international cooperation,

Stressing the necessity of better understanding the causes and consequences of extreme poverty,

Reaffirming that, since the existence of widespread extreme poverty inhibits the full and effective enjoyment of human rights and might, in some situations, constitute a threat to the right to life, its immediate alleviation and eventual eradication must remain a high priority for the international community,

Stressing that respect for all human rights, which are universal, indivisible, interdependent and interrelated, is of crucial importance for all policies and programmes to fight extreme poverty,

Reaffirming that democracy, development and the full and effective enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms are interdependent and mutually reinforcing and contribute to the eradication of extreme poverty,

1. Reaffirms that extreme poverty and exclusion from society constitute a violation of human dignity and that urgent national and international action is therefore required to eliminate them;

2. Reaffirms also that it is essential for States to foster participation by the poorest people in the decision-making process in the societies in which they live, in the promotion of human rights and in efforts to combat extreme poverty, and that it is essential for people living in poverty and vulnerable groups to be empowered to organize themselves and to participate in all aspects of political, economic and social life, in particular the planning and implementation of policies that affect them, thus enabling them to become genuine partners in development;

3. Emphasizes that extreme poverty is a major issue to be addressed by Governments, civil society and the United Nations system, including international financial institutions, and in this context reaffirms that political commitment is a prerequisite for the eradication of poverty;

4. Reaffirms that the existence of widespread absolute poverty inhibits the full and effective enjoyment of human rights and renders democracy and popular participation fragile;

5. Recognizes the need to promote respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms in order to address the most pressing social needs of people living in poverty, including through the design and development of appropriate mechanisms to strengthen and consolidate democratic institutions and governance;

6. Reaffirms the commitments contained in the United Nations Millennium Declaration, in particular the commitments to spare no effort to fight against extreme poverty and to achieve development and poverty eradication, including the commitment to halve, by 2015, the proportion of the world's people whose income is less than one United States dollar a day and the proportion of people who suffer from hunger;

7. Reaffirms also the commitment made at the 2005 World Summit to eradicate poverty and promote sustained economic growth, sustainable development and global prosperity for all, including women and girls;

8. Encourages the international community to strengthen its efforts to address challenges that are contributing to extreme poverty, including those posed by the current food, energy and financial crises in all parts of the world, especially in developing countries, by enhancing its cooperation to help build national capacities;

9. Reaffirms the critical role of both formal and informal education in the achievement of poverty eradication and other development goals as envisaged in the Millennium Declaration, in particular basic education and training for eradicating illiteracy, and efforts towards expanded secondary and higher education as well as vocational education and technical training, especially for girls and women, the creation of human resources and infrastructure capabilities and the empowerment of those living in poverty, and in this context reaffirms the Dakar Framework for Action adopted at the World Education Forum in 2000, and recognizes the importance of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization strategy for the eradication of poverty, especially extreme poverty, in supporting the Education for All programmes as a tool to achieve the millennium development goal of universal primary education by 2015;

10. Invites the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to continue to give high priority to the question of the relationship between extreme poverty and human rights, and also invites her to further pursue the work in this area;

11. Calls upon States, United Nations bodies, in particular the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and the United Nations Development Programme, intergovernmental organizations and non-governmental organizations to continue to give appropriate attention to the links between human rights and extreme poverty, and encourages the private sector and the international financial institutions to proceed likewise;

12. Invites States, as well as relevant United Nations agencies, the specialized agencies, programmes and funds, intergovernmental organizations, United Nations treaty bodies, special procedures, including the independent expert on the question of human rights and extreme poverty, national human rights institutions, within their respective mandates, and also non-governmental organizations, especially those in which people in situations of extreme poverty express their views, to contribute further to the consultations led by the High Commissioner on the draft guiding principles on extreme poverty and human rights: the rights of the poor;

13. Welcomes the efforts of entities throughout the United Nations system to incorporate the Millennium Declaration and the internationally agreed development goals set out therein into their work;

14. Also welcomes the appointment of the new independent expert on the question of human rights and extreme poverty and the renewed mandate that she has received, and takes note with appreciation of her report to the General Assembly;

15. Decides to consider the question further at its sixty-fifth session under the sub-item entitled "Human rights questions, including alternative approaches for improving the effective enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms".

Right to food

Human Rights Council special session

At the request of Cuba [A/HRC/S-7/1], on behalf of 30 other States and groups of States, the Human Rights Council held its seventh special session (Geneva, 22 May) [A/HRC/S-7/2] to consider and take action on the negative impact on the realization of the right to food of the worsening of the world food crisis, caused, inter alia, by soaring food prices. During its consideration of the issue, the Council heard statements from its members, observer States, the Special Rapporteur on the right to food, UN entities, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs.

On the same day, the Council adopted a resolution [A/63/53 (res. S-7/1)], by which it expressed concern at the worsening of the world food crisis, which undermined the realization of the right to food for all. The Council called on States, multilateral institutions and other parties to ensure the realization of that right as an essential human rights objective, and to review any policy or measure which could have a negative impact on its realization. The Council stressed that States had a primary obligation to meet the food needs of their own populations, while the international community should provide assistance for increasing food production. It called upon UN members and other stakeholders to participate in the High-level Conference on World Food Security: the Challenges of Climate Change and Bioenergy (see p. 1343). The Special Rapporteur on the right to food was requested to make a presentation to the Council's eighth (2008) session on his participation in the Conference and on his initial recommendations regarding action to promote, respect and protect the right to food and freedom from hunger. The Rapporteur should also report to the Council's ninth (2009) session, inviting comments from States and other relevant actors on the crisis and remedies from a human rights perspective.

In response to the Council's request, Special Rapporteur on the right to food Olivier de Schutter gave a presentation to the Council on 6 June, during its eighth session [A/HRC/8/52], on the High-level Conference on World Food Security.

Also in response to that resolution, the Special Rapporteur submitted in September [A/HRC/9/23] a report putting forward a human rights framework for world food and nutrition security. According to the Rapporteur, the marked increase in the price of food commodities on international markets had a severe negative impact on the right to food of the poorest households. The increase would not benefit many small producers facing steep rises in costs and lacking the infrastructure and support to increase food supply. What mattered in human rights terms was who would produce food, and for the benefit of whom. If a new global partnership for agriculture and food was to emerge from the crisis, such a partnership should not simply seek to boost supply by promoting technology-driven recipes, but also empower those who were hungry and malnourished and whose livelihoods might be threatened by a renewed interest in agricultural production. A human rights framework would contribute to keeping the search for solutions on track, because it would improve accountability and ensure that the most vulnerable would be given priority. However, such a framework was absent from current discussions.

The Special Rapporteur encouraged States to build national strategies for realizing the right to adequate food, taking into account the need to strengthen the protection of the human rights of the most vulnerable groups; to develop an international consensus on agrofuels, based on the need to ensure that agrofuel production respected human rights and did not result in distorted development in producer countries; to clarify how the private sector could contribute to a more just food production and distribution system; to request further studies on the role of international cooperation; and to examine the contribution the establishment of a global reinsurance fund could make to the realization of the right to food.

In a follow-up resolution of 24 September [A/63/53/Add.1 (res. 9/6)], the Council took note of the Special Rapporteur's recommendations. It encouraged States to incorporate the human rights perspective in their national strategies for the realization of the right to adequate food for all, which could include mapping the food insecure, adopting legislation and policies with a right to food framework, and establishing mechanisms for ensuring the participation of rights-holders in the design and monitoring of such legislation. States should promote investment in agriculture and rural infrastructure and take all necessary measures to ensure the realization of that right. The Special Rapporteur on the right to food was requested to report on the implementation of the resolution at the Council's twelfth (2009) session.

Other activities

Reports of Special Rapporteur. In a January report [A/HRC/7/5], the Special Rapporteur on the right to food, Jean Ziegler (Switzerland), said that, despite advances in various countries such as China, India, South Africa and several Latin American and Caribbean countries, there had been little progress overall in reducing the number of victims of hunger and malnutrition. The number of people suffering from hunger had increased every year since 1996, despite Government commitments to halve hunger. Yet hunger and famine were not inevitable. One of the key problems was the lack of coherence within the UN system between the positive developments in some sectors of the system, as evidenced by the right to food guidelines [YUN 2004, p. 1226] of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, and the way in which the policies and practices of other agencies, such as the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank, as well as the World Trade Organization, undermined protection of the right to food. State policies showed similar patterns of inconsistency. While States had recognized the right to food in the World Food Summit Declaration [YUN 1996, p. 1129] and more than 150 States were parties to the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, at the same time they engaged in trade policies that were detrimental to the enjoyment of human rights in other countries. Also affecting the right were transnational corporations, which were not subject to mechanisms to guard against the right-to-food violations that some of them were sometimes committing. An issue to be addressed was the exclusion and discrimination of the most vulnerable; attention should be given to the protection of the right to food for disadvantaged groups, especially women and indigenous people. Other issues requiring work in the future were desertification, biofuels and refugees from hunger.

The Rapporteur recommended that States take action to realize the right to food of all their people; ensure that their international trade agreements did not have any negative impact on the right to food in other countries; improve the international supervisory mechanisms for transnational corporations, especially those controlling the food and water system; give priority to investments in long-term development projects that reduced vulnerability to drought and desertification; establish a moratorium on initiatives to develop biofuels that aimed to convert food into fuel; and strengthen protection mechanisms for people forced to leave their homes and lands because of hunger and violations of their right to food.

In a later addendum [A/HRC/7/5/Add.1], the Special Rapporteur summarized 61 communications sent to 31 Governments and eight other actors between 2 December 2006 and 4 December 2007. Thirty-three Governments and six actors had replied.

Human Rights Council action. On 26 March, the Human Rights Council appointed Olivier de Schutter (Belgium) as Special Rapporteur.

On 27 March [A/63/53 (res. 7/14)], the Council took note of the Special Rapporteur's report on the right to food. It requested the Advisory Committee to consider recommendations for approval by the Council on further measures to enhance realization of the right to food, bearing in mind the importance of promoting the implementation of existing standards. The Council decided to convene a panel discussion on the realization of the right to food during its main session in 2009.

Reports of Special Rapporteur. In his interim report [A/63/278], transmitted by the Secretary-General to the General Assembly in accordance with resolution 62/164 [YUN 2007, p. 776], the new Special Rapporteur highlighted some of the challenges facing the realization of the right to adequate food and presented his priorities. He undertook to work with all interested parties towards developing sustainable solutions for eradicating hunger and implementing the right to food, and to devote equal attention to establishing an international environment enabling States to develop strategies for the fulfilment of that right and to developing such strategies at the domestic level. During the first year of the mandate, the focus would be on the future of food aid; the impact of trade in agricultural commodities on the right to food; the impact of the protection of intellectual property rights on agriculture; and the impact of the activities of the agribusiness sector on the right to food. As regards national strategies for fulfilling the right to food, the Rapporteur would explore the institutional tools that could best contribute to that objective, focusing on human rights relating to the use of land and on women's rights.

Communication. In February, Cuba transmitted its observations [A/HRC/7/G/5] on the Special Rapporteur's report on his 2007 visit to the country [YUN 2007, p. 775].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December [meeting 70], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/63/430/Add.2], adopted resolution 63/187 by recorded vote (184-1) [agenda item 64 (b)].

The right to food

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming all previous resolutions and decisions on the right to food adopted within the framework of the United Nations,

Recalling the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, which provides that everyone has the right to a standard of living adequate for her or his health and well-being, including food, the Universal Declaration on the Eradication of Hunger and Malnutrition and the United Nations Millennium Declaration, in particular millennium development goal 1 on eradicating extreme poverty and hunger by 2015,

Recalling also the provisions of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, in which the fundamental right of every person to be free from hunger is recognized,

Bearing in mind the Rome Declaration on World Food Security and the World Food Summit Plan of Action and the Declaration of the World Food Summit: five years later, adopted in Rome on 13 June 2002,

Reaffirming the concrete recommendations contained in the Voluntary Guidelines to Support the Progressive Realization of the Right to Adequate Food in the Context of National Food Security, adopted by the Council of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations in November 2004,

Bearing in mind paragraph 6 of its resolution 60/251 of 15 March 2006,

Reaffirming that all human rights are universal, indivisible, interdependent and interrelated, and that they must be treated globally, in a fair and equal manner, on the same footing and with the same emphasis,

Reaffirming also that a peaceful, stable and enabling political, social and economic environment, at both the national and the international levels, is the essential foundation that will enable States to give adequate priority to food security and poverty eradication,

Reiterating, as in the Rome Declaration on World Food Security and the Declaration of the World Food Summit: five years later, that food should not be used as an instrument of political or economic pressure, and reaffirming in this regard the importance of international cooperation and solidarity, as well as the necessity of refraining from unilateral measures that are not in accordance with international law and the Charter of the United Nations and that endanger food security,

Convinced that each State must adopt a strategy consistent with its resources and capacities to achieve its individual goals in implementing the recommendations contained in the Rome Declaration on World Food Security and the World Food Summit Plan of Action and, at the same time, cooperate regionally and internationally in order to organize collective solutions to global issues of food security in a world of increasingly interlinked institutions, societies and economies where coordinated efforts and shared responsibilities are essential,

Recognizing the complex character of the worsening of the current global food crisis, in which the right to adequate food is threatened to be violated on a massive scale, as a combination of several major factors, including macroecoconomic factors, exacerbated by environmental degradation, desertification and global climate change, natural disasters and the lack of the technology necessary to confront its impact, particularly in developing countries, least developed countries and small island developing States,

Resolved to act to ensure that the human rights perspective is taken into account at the national, regional and international levels in measures to address the current global food crisis,

Expressing its deep concern at the number and scale of natural disasters, diseases and pests and their increasing impact in recent years, which have resulted in massive loss of life and livelihood and threatened agricultural production and food security, in particular in developing countries,

Stressing the importance of reversing the continuing decline of official development assistance devoted to agriculture, both in real terms and as a share of total official development assistance,

Recognizing the role of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations as the key United Nations agency for rural and agricultural development and its work in supporting the efforts of Member States to achieve the full realization of the right to food, including through its provision of technical assistance to developing countries in support of the implementation of national priority frameworks,

Taking note of the final Declaration adopted at the International Conference on Agrarian Reform and Rural Development of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations in Porto Alegre, Brazil, on 10 March 2006,

Acknowledging the High-level Task Force on the Global Food Security Crisis established by the Secretary-General, and supporting the Secretary-General in his continuing efforts in this regard, including continued engagement with Member States and the Special Rapporteur of the Human Rights Council on the right to food,

1. Reaffirms that hunger constitutes an outrage and a violation of human dignity and therefore requires the adoption of urgent measures at the national, regional and international levels for its elimination;

2. Also reaffirms the right of everyone to have access to safe, sufficient and nutritious food, consistent with the right to adequate food and the fundamental right of everyone to be free from hunger, so as to be able to fully develop and maintain his or her physical and mental capacities;

3. Considers it intolerable that more than 6 million children still die every year from hunger-related illness before their fifth birthday and that the number of people who are undernourished has grown to about 923 million worldwide, including as a result of the global food crisis, while, according to the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the planet could produce enough food to feed 12 billion people, twice the world's present population;

4. Expresses its concern that women and girls are disproportionately affected by hunger, food insecurity and poverty, in part as a result of gender inequality and discrimination, that in many countries, girls are twice as likely as boys to die from malnutrition and preventable childhood diseases and that it is estimated that almost twice as many women as men suffer from malnutrition;

5. Encourages all States to take action to address gender inequality and discrimination against women, in particular where it contributes to the malnutrition of women and girls, including measures to ensure the full and equal realization of the right to food and ensuring that women have equal access to resources, including income, land and water and their ownership, as well as full and equal access to education, science and technology, to enable them to feed themselves and their families;

6. Encourages the Special Rapporteur of the Human Rights Council on the right to food to continue mainstreaming a gender perspective in the fulfilment of his mandate, and encourages the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations and all other United Nations bodies and mechanisms addressing the right to food and food insecurity to integrate a gender perspective into their relevant policies, programmes and activities;

7. Reaffirms the need to ensure that programmes delivering safe and nutritious food are inclusive of and accessible to persons with disabilities;

8. Encourages all States to take steps with a view to achieving progressively the full realization of the right to food, including steps to promote the conditions for everyone to be free from hunger and, as soon as possible, to enjoy fully the right to food, and to create and adopt national plans to combat hunger;

9. Recognizes the advances reached through South-South cooperation in developing countries and regions in connection with food security and the development of agricultural production for the full realization of the right to food;

10. Stresses that improving access to productive resources and public investment in rural development are essential for eradicating hunger and poverty, in particular in developing countries, including through the promotion of investments in appropriate small-scale irrigation and water management technologies in order to reduce vulnerability to droughts;

11. Recognizes that 80 per cent of hungry people live in rural areas and 50 per cent are small-scale farm-holders, and that these people are especially vulnerable to food insecurity, given the increasing cost of inputs and the fall in farm incomes; that access to land, water, seeds and other natural resources is an increasing challenge for poor producers; that sustainable and gender-sensitive agricultural policies are important tools for promoting land and agrarian reform, rural credit and insurance, technical assistance and other associated measures to achieve food security and rural development; and that support by States for small farmers, fishing communities and local enterprises is a key element for food security and the provision of the right to food;

12. Stresses the importance of fighting hunger in rural areas, including through national efforts supported by international partnerships to stop desertification and land degradation and through investments and public policies that are specifically appropriate to the risk of drylands, and in this regard calls for the full implementation of the United Nations Convention to Combat Desertification in Those Countries Experiencing Serious Drought and/or Desertification, Particularly in Africa;

13. Also stresses its commitments to promote and protect, without discrimination, the economic, social and cultural rights of indigenous peoples in accordance with international human rights obligations and, taking into account, as appropriate, the United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples, acknowledges that many indigenous organizations and representatives of indigenous communities have expressed in different forums their deep concerns over the obstacles and challenges they face for the full enjoyment of the right to food, and calls upon States to take special actions to combat the root causes of the disproportionately high level of hunger and malnutrition among indigenous peoples and the continuous discrimination against them;

14. Notes the need to further examine various concepts such as, inter alia, "food sovereignty" and their relation with food security and the right to food, bearing in mind the need to avoid any negative impact on the enjoyment of the right to food for all people at all times;

15. Requests all States and private actors, as well as international organizations within their respective mandates, to take fully into account the need to promote the effective realization of the right to food for all, including in the ongoing negotiations in different fields;

16. Recognizes the need to strengthen national commitment as well as international assistance, upon the request of and in cooperation with the affected countries, towards the full realization and protection of the right to food, and in particular to develop national protection mechanisms for people forced to leave their homes and land because of hunger or humanitarian emergencies affecting the enjoyment of the right to food;

17. Stresses the need to make efforts to mobilize and optimize the allocation and utilization of technical and financial resources from all sources, including external debt relief for developing countries, and to reinforce national actions to implement sustainable food security policies;

18. Calls for the early conclusion and a successful, development-oriented outcome of the Doha Round of trade negotiations of the World Trade Organization as a contribution to creating international conditions that permit the full realization of the right to food;

19. Stresses that all States should make all efforts to ensure that their international policies of a political and economic nature, including international trade agreements, do not have a negative impact on the right to food in other countries;

20. Recalls the importance of the New York Declaration on Action against Hunger and Poverty, and recommends the continuation of efforts aimed at identifying additional sources of financing for the fight against hunger and poverty;

21. Recognizes that the promises made at the World Food Summit in 1996 to halve the number of persons who are undernourished are not being fulfilled, and invites once again all international financial and development institutions, as well as the relevant United Nations agencies and funds, to give priority to and provide the necessary funding to realize the aim of halving by 2015 the proportion of people who suffer from hunger, as well as the right to food as set out in the Rome Declaration on World Food Security and the United Nations Millennium Declaration;

22. Reaffirms that integrating food and nutritional support, with the goal that all people at all times will have access to sufficient, safe and nutritious food to meet their dietary needs and food preferences for an active and healthy life, is part of a comprehensive response to the spread of HIV/AIDS, tuberculosis, malaria and other communicable diseases;

23. Urges States to give adequate priority in their development strategies and expenditures to the realization of the right to food;

24. Stresses the importance of international development cooperation and assistance, both as an effective contribution to the expansion of agriculture and food production and, in particular in activities related to emergency situations, for the realization of the right to food and the achievement of sustainable food security, while recognizing that each country has the primary responsibility for ensuring the implementation of national programmes and strategies in this regard;

25. Also stresses that States parties to the World Trade Organization Agreement on Trade-Related Aspects of Intellectual Property Rights should consider implementing that agreement in a manner supportive of food security, while mindful of the obligation of Member States to promote and protect the right to food;

26. Calls upon Member States, the United Nations system and other relevant stakeholders to support national efforts aimed at responding rapidly to the food crises currently occurring across Africa, and expresses its deep concern that funding shortfalls are forcing the World Food Programme to cut operations across different regions, including Southern Africa;

27. Invites all relevant international organizations, including the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund, to continue to promote policies and projects that have a positive impact on the right to food, to ensure that partners respect the right to food in the implementation of common projects, to support strategies of Member States aimed at the fulfilment of the right to food and to avoid any actions that could have a negative impact on the realization of the right to food;

28. Takes note with appreciation of the interim report of the Special Rapporteur and the work and commitment of the first mandate holder to achieving the realization of the right to food;

29. Supports the realization of the mandate of the Special Rapporteur, as extended by the Human Rights Council in its resolution 6/2 of 27 September 2007;

30. Requests the Secretary-General and the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to provide all the necessary human and financial resources for the effective fulfilment of the mandate of the Special Rapporteur;

31. Welcomes the work already done by the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights in promoting the right to adequate food, in particular its General Comment No. 12 (1999) on the right to adequate food (article 11 of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights), in which the Committee affirmed, inter alia, that the right to adequate food is indivisibly linked to the inherent dignity of the human person and is indispensable for the fulfilment of other human rights enshrined in the International Bill of Human Rights, and is also inseparable from social justice, requiring the adoption of appropriate economic, environmental and social policies, at both the national and the international levels, oriented to the eradication of poverty and the fulfilment of all human rights for all;

32. Recalls General Comment No. 15 (2002) of the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights on the right to water (articles 11 and 12 of the Covenant), in which the Committee noted, inter alia, the importance of ensuring sustainable water resources for human consumption and agriculture in realization of the right to adequate food;

33. Reaffirms that the Voluntary Guidelines to Support the Progressive Realization of the Right to Adequate Food in the Context of National Food Security, adopted by the Council of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations in November 2004, represent a practical tool to promote the realization of the right to food for all, contribute to the achievement of food security and thus provide an additional instrument in the attainment of internationally agreed development goals, including those contained in the Millennium Declaration;

34. Welcomes the continued cooperation of the High Commissioner, the Committee and the Special Rapporteur, and encourages them to continue their cooperation in this regard;

35. Calls upon all Governments to cooperate with and assist the Special Rapporteur in his task, to supply all necessary information requested by him and to give serious consideration to responding favourably to the requests of the Special Rapporteur to visit their countries to enable him to fulfil his mandate more effectively;

36. Requests the Special Rapporteur to submit an interim report to the General Assembly at its sixty-fourth session on the implementation of the present resolution and to continue his work, including by examining the emerging issues with regard to the realization of the right to food within his existing mandate;

37. Invites Governments, relevant United Nations agencies, funds and programmes, treaty bodies, civil society actors and non-governmental organizations, as well as the private sector, to cooperate fully with the Special Rapporteur in the fulfilment of his mandate, inter alia, through the submission of comments and suggestions on ways and means of realizing the right to food;

38. Decides to continue the consideration of the question at its sixty-fourth session under the item entitled "Promotion and protection of human rights".

RECORDED VOTE ON RESOLUTION 63/187:

Right to adequate housing

Reports of Special Rapporteur. In a February report [A/HRC/7/16], the Special Rapporteur on adequate housing as a component of the right to an adequate standard of living, and on the right to non-discrimination in this context, Miloon Kothari (India), reviewed his work and activities since his appointment in 2000. He provided recommendations to the Human Rights Council and the next mandate holder concerning the obstacles to the realization of that right: lack of legislation and implementation, homelessness, forced evictions, discrimination, lack of access to water and basic services, and affordability.

The Special Rapporteur stated that after the seven years of his mandate, there was a severe and growing global housing and land rights crisis that needed to be given priority on the global agenda and accorded greater attention. He asserted that the right to adequate housing should be interpreted on the basis of the indivisibility and universality of human rights, and the struggle against discrimination was of utmost importance in realizing that right. Various tools had been elaborated during his term: the basic principles and guidelines on development-based evictions and displacement, the questionnaires on women and adequate housing and on the right to adequate housing, and the development of indicators to monitor the progressive realization of the right. The Special Rapporteur encouraged relevant actors to employ such tools, and develop and adapt them to national and local situations. A combination of a humanitarian and human rights-based approach should be employed to address the situation of millions of people living in grossly inadequate housing conditions or facing homelessness and landlessness. Stronger support and response from States were needed to develop the mandate. Issues for further consideration included the recognition of the link between access to land and the human right to adequate housing; rural areas; natural disasters and humanitarian emergencies; climate change; and the role of civil society.

An addendum to the report [A/HRC/7/16/Add.1] summarized 50 communications sent to 25 Governments and the United Nations Interim Administration Mission in Kosovo between 1 December 2006 and 4 December 2007, and replies received thereto. The Special Rapporteur regretted that most Governments had not responded, or had done so in a selective manner.

Communication. On 13 March, Spain submitted its reply [A/HRC/7/G/13] to the Special Rapporteur's 2006 report [YUN 2006, p. 906] on his mission to the country.

Human Rights Council action. On 26 March, the Human Rights Council appointed Raquel Rolnik (Brazil) as Special Rapporteur.

Report of Special Rapporteur. In August [A/63/275], the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly the report of the new Special Rapporteur, in accordance with a 2007 Human Rights Council request [YUN 2007, p. 780]. The report reviewed the issues addressed under the mandate, including homelessness, affordability, forced evictions, discrimination in accessing adequate housing and the gender perspective. The Rapporteur urged States to include provisions on the protection, fulfilment and justiciability of that right in their national and constitutional law; to integrate the right in local and national urban planning and housing policies; to adopt and ratify the Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights; and to address the plight of the homeless and stop their criminalization.

The General Assembly took note of that report on 18 December (decision 63/534).

Cultural rights

Human Rights Council action. On 28 March [A/63/53 (res. 7/34)], the Human Rights Council reaffirmed that the establishment of a thematic procedure in cultural rights should not mean a new monitoring mechanism. It acknowledged that the process of review, rationalization and improvement of mandates represented momentum towards the establishment of an independent expert in the field of cultural rights, and requested the High Commissioner to consult States, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs on the content and scope of such a mandate. The Council underlined the importance of avoiding overlapping with the activities of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and other bodies and organizations of the UN system when establishing the mandate of the independent expert.

Right to education

Reports of Special Rapporteur. The Special Rapporteur on the right to education, Vernor Muñoz (Costa Rica), in a May report [A/HRC/8/10] focused on the right to education in emergency situations. Emergencies, whether arising out of armed conflict or natural disaster, were a source of violations of the right to education, affecting a large number of people. He urged States, donors, multilateral agencies and organizations to commit to the implementation of that right in emergencies and recommended that the right be recognized as an integral part of the humanitarian response. Action should be taken to put an end to impunity for persons and armed groups who attacked schools, students and teachers. Measures should be developed to give physical and emotional protection to girls and female adolescents to ensure that they went to school. States should develop plans for education in emergencies to include measures for continuity of education at all levels and during all phases of an emergency. They should draw up a programme of studies that was adaptable, non-discriminatory, gender-sensitive and of high quality that met the needs of children and young people throughout an emergency, and design and implement specific plans to avoid the exploitation of girls and young women in the wake of emergencies.

In an addendum [A/HRC/8/10/Add.1], the Rapporteur summarized 14 communications sent to 12 countries between 12 January 2007 and 29 February 2008, and the replies received thereto.

During his mission to Guatemala (20–28 July) [A/HRC/11/8/Add.3], the Special Rapporteur observed challenges facing the education system, including the low level of investment in education—which, at approximately 2 per cent of gross domestic product, was the lowest in the region. Indigenous peoples' right to education was confined to the issue of bilingualism, with the teaching of indigenous languages provided solely in the first three years of primary schooling in a very small number of State schools and only in some languages. The trend towards the privatization of education undermined the established principle of free education. With 80 per cent of secondary education in the hands of private schools, it was impossible to ensure education for all at the lower and upper secondary levels. Legislation, including constitutional provisions, revealed a gulf between the law and its application. Constitutional principles on education should cease to be a dead letter and become everyday practice guiding concrete actions.

The Rapporteur recommended that the Government increase investment in education and secure national political consensus on granting an adequate budget to fulfil its obligation in that regard. It should also increase the budget for intercultural bilingual education in proportion to the population served, ensure a stronger participation by the Office of the Deputy Minister for Intercultural Bilingual Education and establish criteria for multiculturalism, interculturalism and multilingualism to address the specificities of indigenous communities.

Human Rights Council action. On 18 June [A/63/53 (res. 8/4)], the Human Rights Council urged States to take measures to eliminate obstacles limiting effective access to education, notably by girls; support implementation of plans and programmes of action to ensure quality education and improved enrolment, and the elimination of gender discrimination and stereotypes in educational curricula and materials; and ensure that the right to education was respected in emergency situations. It extended the mandate of the Special Rapporteur for three years and requested him to report yearly to the Council, and to the General Assembly on an interim basis.

Report of Special Rapporteur. In accordance with that resolution, the Secretary-General, in August, transmitted the Special Rapporteur's interim report [A/63/292] to the General Assembly. Expanding on his May report on education in emergency situations, he recommended that the international community intensify its search for best practices in such situations. He called on donors to include education in all their humanitarian assistance plans, and increase their education allocation to at least 4.2 per cent of total humanitarian assistance.

The General Assembly took note of that report on 18 December (decision 63/534).

Communication. In a 20 September letter [A/C.3/63/5] to the General Assembly President, Benin, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Costa Rica, Nicaragua, Norway and Qatar conveyed their interest to convene a thematic debate during the Assembly's sixty-third session on the issue of access to education in emergency, post-crisis and transition situations caused by man-made conflicts or natural disasters.

Environmental and scientific concerns

Human rights and climate change

Human Rights Council action. On 28 March [A/63/53 (res. 7/23)], the Human Rights Council, concerned that climate change posed an immediate and far-reaching threat to people and communities around the world and had implications for the full enjoyment of human rights, requested OHCHR, in consultation with States and other stakeholders, to prepare a study on the relationship between climate change and human rights, to be submitted to the Council prior to its tenth (2009) session. It decided to consider the issue at its tenth session and to make the study available to the Conference of the Parties to the 1992 United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change [YUN 1992, p. 681].

Toxic wastes

Reports of Special Rapporteur. In a February report [A/HRC/7/21], the Special Rapporteur on the adverse effects of the illicit movement and dumping of toxic and dangerous products and wastes on the enjoyment of human rights, Okechukwu Ibeanu (Nigeria), highlighted the importance of the right to information and to participation. Those rights were both rights in themselves and essential tools for the exercise of other rights, such as the right to life and to health.

The main obligation in dealing with toxic wastes and dangerous products lay mainly with States, which should not abuse that responsibility by withholding information, given the potential risks and dangers to the health and well-being of the population and the potential impact on the environment. While developing countries were sometimes left with little choice owing to developmental needs and situations of poverty, both developing and developed States needed to find alternative solutions to the trade of toxic wastes and dangerous products. Although the income generated by such trade was attractive, States needed to take into account the future costs and long-term consequences of environmental degradation and health problems, especially those affecting women and young persons. He appealed to States to put in place adequate means for their protection.

An addendum to the report [A/HRC/7/21/Add.1] summarized communications sent by the Special Rapporteur to eight countries and the United Nations Interim Administration Mission in Kosovo between 1 January 2006 and 4 December 2007 and replies thereto.

In August [A/HRC/9/22], the Special Rapporteur summarized his activities since his February report and challenges faced in discharging his mandate. He remained discouraged by the lack of attention to the mandate and arguments by States that issues of toxic wastes management were more appropriately discussed in environmental forums than at the Human Rights Council. Implementation of the mandate was also hampered by the lack of adequate financial resources. He also proposed requesting the Council to consider enhancing the mandate by broadening it to include all types of movement and dumping of toxic and dangerous products and wastes.

An addendum [A/HRC/9/22/Add.1] summarized communications sent to France and Niger, and replies received thereto, between 15 October 2007 and 28 July 2008.

During his mission to the United Republic of Tanzania (21–30 January) [A/HRC/9/22/Add.2], the Special Rapporteur noted that there was an adequate legal framework to deal with the transboundary movement of toxic and dangerous products and wastes. However, there was a lack of regulation for both small-scale and large-scale mining activities, while as much as 1 million people were engaged in artisanal and small-scale mining.

He recommended that the Government: step up its efforts in educating the public as to the effects that artisanal and small-scale mining could have on health and livelihood; provide more resources to step up inspection of artisanal and small-scale mining areas; be mindful of the specific concerns of indigenous communities and land rights when allocating land for artisanal and small-scale or large-scale mining; pay extra attention to the situation of vulnerable groups, including women and children, due to the exposure to highly toxic substances while engaging in artisanal and small-scale mining; and set up a database of mining-related illnesses to monitor environmental and human rights impacts of mining activities. The Government should also monitor the operations of large-scale mining corporations, particularly in regard to occupational health, safety standards and compliance with environmental and other legislation.

The Special Rapporteur visited Côte d'Ivoire (4–8 August) and the Netherlands (26–28 November) [A/HRC/12/26/Add.2] to examine the effects of the movement and dumping of toxic and dangerous products and wastes from the vessel Probo Koala, in Abidjan, on and around 19 August 2006 [YUN 2006, p. 1080]. The vessel, chartered by the commodity trading company Trafigura, had docked in Amsterdam before heading to Côte d'Ivoire, where the waste from the ship was dumped in various sites in the district of Abidjan.

The visit to the Netherlands focused on events surrounding the aborted offloading of the waste from the vessel in the port of Amsterdam, the reloading of the waste and the departure of the ship. The Rapporteur assessed the actions taken by the Dutch authorities after the dumping in Côte d'Ivoire, and concluded that improved measures had been taken to avoid the recurrence of similar incidents. He encouraged public authorities to ensure the rigorous inspection and, where necessary, detention of ships. The Netherlands should also continue to support Côte d'Ivoire in monitoring and addressing possible long-term health and environmental effects of the incident.

The scope of the visit to Côte d'Ivoire included a review of procedures followed prior to and during the offloading and dumping of the waste, and an assessment of remedial action taken by the Government. There was a need to tackle outstanding issues, in particular decontamination, health care and compensation. The Ivorian authorities should take further action to protect the right to life, to health and to a healthy environment of all victims and their families.

Regarding the role of Trafigura and its responsibility to respect human rights, the Rapporteur recommended that the company should continue to fund and support outstanding remedial work in Côte d'Ivoire, ensure that timely and reliable information was disclosed regarding its activities and on their potential environment, health and safety impact. It should also balance commercial interests with human rights and environmental requirements.

Human Rights Council action. On 24 September [A/63/53/Add.1 (res. 9/1)], the Human Rights Council extended the mandate of the Special Rapporteur for a three-year period. His next report to the Council should include information on persons killed, maimed or injured in developing countries by the movement and dumping of toxic and dangerous products and wastes; human rights standards applicable to transnational corporations and other business enterprises that dumped such products and wastes; rehabilitation of and assistance to victims; the scope of related national legislation; the question of waste-recycling programmes and the transfer of polluting industries, industrial activities and technologies from developed to developing countries; and the ambiguities in international instruments.

Right to health

Reports of Special Rapporteur. In a January report [A/HRC/7/11 & Corr.1], the Special Rapporteur on the right of everyone to the enjoyment of the highest attainable standard of physical and mental health, Paul Hunt (New Zealand), said that at the heart of that right lay an effective and integrated health system, responsive to national and local priorities, and accessible to all. Such a system was an essential element of a healthy and equitable society, a core social institution, no less than a fair justice system or democratic political system. However, health systems in many countries were failing and collapsing. The report identified a general approach to strengthening health systems that should be applied consistently and systematically. As the right to a fair trial had helped to strengthen court systems, in a similar way, the right to health could help to strengthen health systems.

In an addendum [A/HRC/7/11/Add.1], the Special Rapporteur summarized cases transmitted to Governments and replies received thereto. Between 2 December 2006 and 1 December 2007, he had sent 27 communications to 22 Governments and one to the United Nations Interim Administration Mission in Kosovo (UNMIK). Replies were received from 17 Governments and from UNMIK.

In June [A/HRC/11/12/Add.2], the Special Rapporteur visited the headquarters of GlaxoSmithKline, one of the world's leading research-based pharmaceutical companies, to interview the company's senior management. Enhancing access to medicines was a shared responsibility, and the Millennium Development Goals [YUN 2000, p. 51] recognized that pharmaceutical companies had a responsibility to improve such access. A company that developed a life-saving medicine had performed a critically important social, medical, public health and right-to-health function. While the company's "reward" was the grant of a limited monopoly over the medicine, enabling it to enhance shareholder value and invest in further research and development, the company also had a right-to-health responsibility to take all reasonable steps to make the life-saving medicine accessible to all those in need. Companies should grasp their social function and right-to-health responsibilities, and do everything possible, within a viable business model, to fulfil their social function and human rights responsibilities. That would not only enhance companies' status but also pressure States, generic manufacturers and others to provide the environment that companies needed if they were to enter into arrangements, such as commercial voluntary licences, that enhanced access to medicines for all.

In accordance with a Human Rights Council request [YUN 2007, p. 783], the Secretary-General in August transmitted to the General Assembly the Special Rapporteur's interim report [A/63/263]. The annex to the report contained the Human Rights Guidelines for Pharmaceutical Companies in relation to Access to Medicines, which set out the human rights responsibilities of pharmaceutical companies. The Guidelines, prepared by the Special Rapporteur on the basis of wide-ranging discussions over five years with a stakeholders, considered issues such as transparency, management, accountability, patents, licensing and pricing. They provided detailed guidance for pharmaceutical companies on their right-to-health responsibilities, as well as on society's legitimate expectations of the pharmaceutical sector. The report also discussed the importance of effective, transparent, accessible and independent accountability mechanisms in relation to the right to health.

The General Assembly took note of the report on 18 December (decision 63/534).

Human Rights Council action. On 18 June, the Human Rights Council appointed Anand Grover (India) as Special Rapporteur.

Human rights and HIV/AIDS

In March [A/HRC/7/59], OHCHR recalled that the Secretary-General's report on the protection of human rights in the context of human immunodeficiency virus and acquired immunodeficiency syndrome (HIV/AIDS) was submitted on a biennial basis. The latest report was submitted in 2007 [YUN 2007, p. 783], and the next report would be submitted in 2009, unless otherwise decided by the Council.

Access to medication

Report of Secretary-General. In March, in accordance with a 2006 Human Rights Council request [YUN 2006, p. 911], the Secretary-General submitted a report [A/HRC/7/30] summarizing information received from 15 Governments, three UN system bodies and three NGOs on the steps they had taken to improve access to medication in the context of pandemics such as HIV/AIDS, tuberculosis and malaria. The number of people receiving treatment for those diseases had increased due to national and international efforts. In some countries, the spread of those diseases had been significantly reduced, customs duties and taxes had been revised to facilitate access to medicines, and progress towards universal access had been made. However, the large number of people that continued to live with, were affected by, and died from those diseases meant that renewed efforts were required to ensure better access to medicines, especially among vulnerable groups. Moreover, the need to overcome legal and regulatory, trade and other barriers that blocked access to prevention, treatment, care and support was critically important to the enjoyment of the right of access to medicines. The continued lack of affordable drugs, together with the unequal geographical spread of health services, continued to impede access to medicines.

Water and sanitation services

Human Rights Council action. On 28 March [A/63/53 (res. 7/22)], the Human Rights Council, concerned that over one billion people lacked access to safe drinking water and 2.6 billion lacked access to basic sanitation, appointed for a three-year period an independent expert on the issue of human rights obligations related to access to safe drinking water and sanitation. The expert's mandate would include developing dialogue with concerned stakeholders to identify, promote and exchange views on and prepare a compendium of best practices related to access to safe drinking water and sanitation. The expert would also undertake a study on the further clarification of the content of human rights obligations, including non-discrimination obligations, in relation to access to safe drinking water and sanitation, and to submit a report to the Council's tenth (2009) session.

On 24 September, the Council appointed Catarina de Albuquerque (Portugal) as independent expert.

Bioethics

Report of Secretary-General. Pursuant to Economic and Social Council decision 2007/269 [YUN 2007, p. 784], the Secretary-General, in May, submitted a report [E/2008/51] presenting the views of two Member States and three UN entities on the most appropriate forums for considering the issue of genetic privacy and non-discrimination within the UN system. The Secretary-General recommended that the Council invite the Director-General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) to consult with other UN entities on the implementation of and follow-up to Economic and Social Council resolutions 2001/39 [YUN 2001, p. 675] and 2004/9 [YUN 2004, p. 771] and related UNESCO Declarations; and to constitute an inter-agency coordination mechanism, such as an ad hoc inter-agency task force on genetic privacy and non-discrimination, which should report to the Council in 2010 and on a triennial basis thereafter.

By decision 2008/233 of 22 July, the Economic and Social Council took note of the Secretary-General's report and invited the UNESCO Director-General to consult with UN entities on the implementation of and follow-up to those resolutions and Declarations and other norms and instruments adopted by the UN system that were relevant to genetic privacy and non-discrimination, and on a possible interagency coordination mechanism. The Director-General was invited to report to the Council on relevant developments at its 2010 substantive session and on a possible inter-agency mechanism, in consultation with and taking into account the views of Member States.

Slavery and related issues

Human Rights Council action. Further to its resolution 6/14 [YUN 2007, p. 784], the Human Rights Council, on 26 March, appointed Gulnara Shahinian (Armenia) Special Rapporteur on contemporary forms of slavery, including its causes and consequences.

Report of Special Rapporteur. In her first report [A/HRC/9/20], submitted in accordance with a 2007 Human Rights Council request [YUN 2007, p. 784], the new Special Rapporteur said that contemporary forms of slavery affected the lives of millions of people around the world. Based on the 1926 Slavery Convention definition, there were an estimated 27 million enslaved people throughout the world. No country was immune to its proliferation. Of special concern was the situation of children. No other UN special procedures mandate provided an opportunity to apply a holistic approach to issues such as forced labour, which were related to slavery. The Rapporteur would focus on the causes and consequences of forced labour and its impact on men, women and children; on domestic labour and child labour as it pertained to the economic exploitation of children, as well as traditional forms of slavery, such as bonded labour and serfdom; and address the protection, prevention and restoration of human rights and dignity of victims.

Report of Secretary-General. In August [A/63/213], the Secretary-General reported to the General Assembly on the programme of educational outreach on the transatlantic slave trade and slavery, as requested by General Assembly resolution 62/122 [YUN 2007, p. 784]. Through that programme, the UN Department of Public Information (DPI) had sought to address the lack of knowledge about the slave trade and encourage study and discussion of the topic. To that end, DPI developed a diverse educational outreach strategy about the causes, consequences, lessons and legacy of the 400-year slave trade and about the dangers of racism and prejudice. The strategy comprised a series of activities that began on the International Day of Remembrance of the Victims of Slavery and the Transatlantic Slave Trade, included follow-up activities throughout the year and had, as its core, an educational programme for intermediate and high school students that built on the UNESCO Slave Route Project.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 October [meeting 29], the General Assembly adopted resolution 63/5 [draft: A/63/L.5 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 108].

Permanent memorial to and remembrance of the victims of slavery and the transatlantic slave trade

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 61/19 of 28 November 2006, entitled "Commemoration of the two-hundredth anniversary of the abolition of the transatlantic slave trade", and its resolution 62/122 of 17 December 2007, entitled "Permanent memorial to and remembrance of the victims of slavery and the transatlantic slave trade",

Recalling also the designation of 25 March as the annual International Day of Remembrance of the Victims of Slavery and the Transatlantic Slave Trade, beginning in 2008, as a complement to the existing International Day for the Remembrance of the Slave Trade and its Abolition of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization,

Noting the initiatives undertaken by States in reaffirming their commitment to implement paragraphs 101 and 102 of the Durban Declaration of the World Conference against Racism, Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia and Related Intolerance aimed at countering the legacy of slavery and contributing to the restoration of the dignity of the victims of slavery and the slave trade,

Stressing the importance of educating and informing future generations about the causes, consequences and lessons of slavery and the transatlantic slave trade,

Recognizing how little is known about the four-hundred-year-long transatlantic slave trade and its lasting consequences, felt throughout the world, and welcoming the increased attention that the General Assembly commemoration brought to the issue, including the raising of its profile in many States,

Recalling, in particular, paragraph 101 of the Durban Declaration which, inter alia, invited the international community and its members to honour the memory of the victims,

1. Welcomes the initiative of the States members of the Caribbean Community to erect, at a place of prominence at United Nations Headquarters that is easily accessible to delegates, United Nations staff and visitors, a permanent memorial in acknowledgement of the tragedy and in consideration of the legacy of slavery and the transatlantic slave trade;

2. Also welcomes the establishment of a committee of interested States to oversee the permanent memorial project, drawn from all geographical regions of the world, with Member States from the Caribbean Community and the African Union playing a primary role, in collaboration with the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, representatives of the Secretariat, the Schomburg Center for Research in Black Culture of the New York Public Library and civil society;

3. Notes that the committee will oversee the voluntary fund established for the erection of the permanent memorial to the victims of slavery and the transatlantic slave trade;

4. Expresses sincere appreciation to those Member States that have already made contributions to the fund, and invites Member States and other interested parties that have not done so to do likewise;

5. Expresses appreciation to the Secretary-General, the Secretariat and members of the committee for their invaluable support, technical advice and assistance towards implementation of the project;

6. Reiterates its request contained in resolution 61/19 for Member States that have not already done so to develop educational programmes, including through school curricula, designed to educate and inculcate in future generations an understanding of the lessons, history and consequences of slavery and the slave trade;

7. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General on the programme of outreach on the transatlantic slave trade and slavery, which highlights developments relating to a diverse educational outreach strategy to increase awareness of and to educate future generations about the causes, consequences, lessons and legacy of the four-hundred-year-long slave trade and to communicate the dangers of racism and prejudice, and encourages continued action in this regard;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its sixty-fourth session on continued action to implement the programme of educational outreach, including action by Member States;

9. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its sixty-fourth session the item entitled "Follow-up to the commemoration of the two-hundredth anniversary of the abolition of the transatlantic slave trade".

Fund on slavery

Report of Secretary-General. The Secretary-General reported [A/HRC/10/49] on the financial status of the United Nations Voluntary Trust Fund on Contemporary Forms of Slavery. At its thirteenth session (Geneva, 8–12 September), the Fund's Board of Trustees recommended 71 new project grants amounting to $733,109 to assist 71 NGO projects in 45 countries in Africa, the Americas, Asia and Europe. It also recommended a contingency list of 15 project grants amounting to $108,000 to assist 15 NGOs in India. The Board estimated that the Fund would need an additional $1,376,000 before its fourteenth session, scheduled for September 2009. The High Commissioner, on behalf of the Secretary-General, approved the Board's recommendations.

Vulnerable groups

Women

Violence against women

Note by Secretary-General. In accordance with General Assembly resolution 50/166 [YUN 1995, p. 1188], the Secretary-General submitted to the Human Rights Council and the Commission on the Status of Women the report of the United Nations Development Fund for Women regarding the Fund's activities to eliminate violence against women [A/HRC/10/43-E/CN.6/2009/10] (see p. 1259).

Reports of Special Rapporteur. In January [A/HRC/7/6], the Special Rapporteur on violence against women, its causes and consequences, Yakin Ertürk (Turkey), proposed indicators on violence against women and State response towards ending such violence. She suggested that moving the indicators from proposal to implementation should be undertaken by an expert working group with the aim of creating a technical manual. A concurrent process should build support for the management of national data systems. An addendum to the report [A/HRC/7/6/Add.5] discussed the development of the indicators on violence against women upon which the Special Rapporteur's report was built.

Another addendum [A/HRC/7/6/Add.1] summarized 59 communications which the Special Rapporteur had sent to 38 Governments in 2007, and responses thereto. Thirty-one communications were urgent appeals, and 52 had been sent jointly with other Human Rights Council mandate holders. Sixteen countries had not responded to any of the communications. The communications concerned arbitrary detention, torture or cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, summary and extrajudicial executions; rape, sexual abuse and sexual exploitation; trafficking; and other forms of violence grounded in discrimination against women.

The Rapporteur visited Saudi Arabia (4–13 February) [A/HRC/11/6/Add.3], where pressures for change had resulted in modest reforms that nonetheless had significant implications for women's rights. Positive developments, particularly in access to education, had resulted in improvements in women's literacy rates within a relatively short period, but that progress had not been accompanied by a comparable increase in women's participation in the labour force, and they remained largely excluded from decision-making processes. Sex segregation and the practice of male guardianship posed obstacles to women's autonomy, legal capacity as adults, and ability to participate in society and in the workplace. While violence against women had been recognized as a public policy issue, judicial practices pertaining to divorce and child custody, as well as women's lack of autonomy and economic independence, continued to limit their ability to escape from abusive marriages. Issues related to early or forced marriage and divorce were gaining public attention, although there were few opportunities for redress due to lack of legal clarity and the discretionary power of judges on those matters. Violence against female domestic workers was not sufficiently recognized.

The Rapporteur made recommendations concerning measures necessary to women's empowerment and increased participation in the public sphere; the elimination of violence against women and girls; judicial and legal reforms; and measures to combat abuse of migrant workers.

The Special Rapporteur visited Tajikistan (15–23 May) [A/HRC/11/6/Add.2], where, although the country had achieved political stability and entered a phase of economic growth, the situation remained fragile due to the country's transition to a market-led economy, the erosion of sources of livelihood and social services and massive poverty. Women had been especially affected by the consequences of the transition. While formal equality was guaranteed in law, socio-economic and political achievements during the Soviet era had faded away, and patriarchal practices perpetuating women's subordinate position had resurfaced, leading to their increased vulnerability to violence and exploitation. Violence against women and girls was accepted by men and women alike as part of everyday behaviour. Violence by husbands and other family members was widespread. Women and girls were also victims of sexual violence and exploitation on the streets and to trafficking inside and outside Tajikistan. Women's lack of awareness of their rights, and issues pertaining to residency registration and the rise of early, polygamous and unregistered marriages aggravated their vulnerability. While some encouraging steps had been taken, responses by State bodies to protect and support victims of violence and prosecute perpetrators were insufficient. As a result, some women perceived suicide or murder of the abuser as the only way out.

The Rapporteur called on the Government to take measures in the priority areas of women's empowerment and gender equality; elimination of violence against women and girls; statistics and data collection; marriage practices; and residency registration and housing.

The Special Rapporteur visited Moldova (4–11 July) [A/HRC/11/6/Add.4] together with the Special Rapporteur on torture and other cruel, inhuman and degrading treatment or punishment, Manfred Nowak. The country's transformation to a political democracy and market economy, following the break-up of the Soviet Union, resulted in economic and social difficulties that placed a heavy burden on women. Although gender equality was ensured by law, in practice women's subordination was exacerbated by high levels of unemployment and low-paid jobs. In addition, patriarchal and discriminatory attitudes increased women's vulnerability to violence and abuse. Domestic violence was widespread, largely condoned by society, and did not receive appropriate recognition among officials, society and women themselves, thus resulting in insufficient protective infrastructure for victims. The need to escape an abusive environment, including domestic violence, prejudice and economic deprivation, motivated women to seek work abroad. As a result, many of them fell victim to slave-like work conditions and to trafficking networks in situations that amounted to torture and ill-treatment. Moldova had come a long way in terms of institution building and human rights protection since independence. The entry into force of the law on preventing and combating family violence was promising. That law, along with the law on ensuring equal opportunities for women and men, would contribute to improved prevention, protection against and prosecution of incidents of violence. However, many gaps remained between the normative framework and practice.

The Rapporteur made recommendations concerning the elimination of violence; empowerment and equality of women; the set-up of gender sensitive database systems; institutional and public sector reforms; and international cooperation. States shared the responsibility for developing bilateral and international solutions to the problem of trafficking in women and girls.

Human Rights Council action. On 28 March [A/63/53 (res. 7/24)], the Human Rights Council, welcoming the launch by the Secretary-General in February of the campaign to end violence against women, took note of the Special Rapporteur's reports, and extended the mandate for three years. The Rapporteur was requested to report to the Council in accordance with its annual programme of work.

Integrating women's rights

Note by OHCHR. In August [A/HRC/9/6], OHCHR informed the Human Rights Council that the report on integrating the human rights of women throughout the UN system, requested by the Council in 2007 [YUN 2007, p. 787], would not be submitted to the Council's ninth (2008) session, but to the tenth (2009) session, after the annual discussion on the integration of a gender perspective in the work of the Council. That would allow all interested parties to benefit from the discussion before submitting their views.

Trafficking in women and girls

Report of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 61/144 [YUN 2006, p. 1342], the Secretary-General submitted an August report [A/63/215] on measures taken by 40 Member States and activities undertaken within the UN system to combat and eliminate trafficking in women and girls. The report concluded that despite the many actions taken at the national, regional and international levels to prevent and combat trafficking in persons, trafficking persisted. A comprehensive, coordinated, cohesive and gender-sensitive approach was required to address the root causes and risk factors, and to ensure prosecution of the perpetrators and protection of the victims. States should put in place comprehensive and multi-disciplinary anti-trafficking action plans and strategies; implement bilateral and multilateral agreements and cooperation programmes; focus on prevention and address the conditions that made women and girls vulnerable to trafficking, including poverty, unemployment, limited education and discrimination; improve data collection and analysis; and strengthen support systems for victims.

Communication. On 29 July [A/62/933], Uzbekistan transmitted to the Secretary-General information on measures it had taken since December 2006 to combat trafficking in women.

Human Rights Council action. On 18 June, the Council appointed Joy Ngozi Ezeilo (Nigeria) as Special Rapporteur on trafficking in persons, especially women and children.

On the same day, [A/63/53 (res. 8/12)], the Human Rights Council extended the mandate of the Special Rapporteur for a three-year period. The Rapporteur was requested to report annually, starting in 2009, to the Council and the General Assembly. OHCHR was requested to submit to the Council's ninth (2008) session a report on the latest developments in the United Nations relating to combating trafficking in persons, as well as on its activities on that issue, including by presenting the recommended Principles and Guidelines on Human Rights and Human Trafficking developed by OHCHR [YUN 2002, p. 748].

Note by OHCHR. In response to that request, OHCHR in August [A/HRC/9/27] informed the Council that it would submit the requested report at the Council's tenth (2009) session, to ensure that a comprehensive overview of the developments on trafficking in the UN system was provided and distributed well in advance of that session.

On 18 December, the General Assembly, in resolution 63/156 on trafficking in women and girls, took note of the renewal of the Special Rapporteur's mandate (see above).

Children

Violence against children

Note by OHCHR. In January [A/HRC/7/54], OHCHR provided information on activities undertaken in 2007 as follow-up to the final report on the study on violence against children conducted by the independent expert for the UN study on violence against children [YUN 2006, p. 918].

Human Rights Council action. On 28 March [A/63/53 (res. 7/29)], the Human Rights Council welcomed that report, as well as the establishment by the General Assembly, by resolution 62/141 [YUN 2007, p. 681], of the mandate of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General on violence against children. The Council requested the Secretary-General to take action to appoint a Special Representative and to report to the Council's eighth (2008) session.

Note by OHCHR. In response to that request, OHCHR in May [A/HRC/8/51] informed the Council that the Secretary-General had undertaken broad consultations with relevant UN actors, including through the Inter-Agency Working Group on Violence against Children, regarding the establishment of the Office of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General on Violence against Children. The terms of reference of the Special Representative had been approved. The Representative would be appointed at the Assistant Secretary-General level, reporting directly to the Secretary-General. The Office, to be located in New York, would be supported administratively by the United Nations Children's Fund. The position would be established for a three-year period and would be funded from voluntary contributions.

Note by Secretariat. In September [A/63/203], the Secretariat informed the General Assembly that a number of well-qualified candidates had applied for the position and a shortlist had been established. In addition, the chairpersons of the five regional groups had been solicited to recommend further qualified candidates. The Secretary-General had set up an interview panel to provide him with a final shortlist of recommended candidates. The interview panel had commenced its work and welcomed further recommendations of qualified candidates, even as the interview process was under way.

The General Assembly took note of Secretariat's note on 18 December (decision 63/532).

Sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography

Reports of Special Rapporteur. In his annual report [A/HRC/7/8], the Special Rapporteur on the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography, Juan Miguel Petit (Uruguay), in reviewing his mandates, stated that most States had put in place programmes and facilities for children who were victims of commercial sexual exploitation and trafficking. However, they encompassed either adult victims of commercial sexual exploitation and trafficking, or child victims of domestic abuse and violence. The Special Rapporteur was of the view that child victims of commercial sexual exploitation were in need of special, separate programmes and facilities, the absence of which made them more vulnerable to exploitation by organized criminal groups. He put forward guidelines and options to better assist child victims of trafficking and sexual commercial exploitation.

The Special Rapporteur called upon States, NGOs and civil society actors to set up rehabilitation and assistance programmes for children and minors. Such programmes and facilities might take different forms and should be adapted to the local and cultural contexts, be it a closed shelter, rehabilitation activities in the form of outpatient assistance or educational programmes. States should incorporate in their legislation and budget provisions for funding such programmes and activities, and carry out educational programmes and awareness-raising activities.

An addendum to the report [A/HRC/7/8/Add.1] summarized 12 communications which the Special Rapporteur had sent to 11 Governments between 1 January and 30 November 2007, and the replies thereto.

Human Rights Council action. On 26 March, the Human Rights Council appointed Najat M'jid Maalla (Morocco) as Special Rapporteur.

On 27 March [A/63/53 (res. 7/13)], the Council extended the mandate of the Special Rapporteur for a three-year period, and requested the Rapporteur to submit a report to the Council in accordance with its annual programme of work.

Reports of Special Rapporteur. In response to that resolution, the new Special Rapporteur outlined, in July [A/HRC/9/21], her view of the mandate and the methods by which she would discharge it. She also set out the strategic directions to be undertaken during her mandate. She stressed the many dimensions of the phenomenon, which called for cooperation from all those involved with children's issues, and the importance of implementing a comprehensive child protection system ensuring the best interest of the child and encompassing prevention and care as well as medical, psychological, social and legal support for child victims. That would require concerted national, regional and international coordination and cooperation.

The Special Rapporteur visited Estonia (20–24 October) [A/HRC/12/23/Add.2], where she noted a significant political commitment to prioritize the rights of the child. While the number of reported cases of child prostitution and child pornography was low, vigilance was required and efforts should be directed towards prevention. Actions to be implemented included adopting legislative amendments; training of the police, particularly in detecting cases of sexual exploitation of children and online child pornography; ensuring that programmes and policies were sustainable and accessible throughout the country; and strengthening of the NGO sector. The Special Rapporteur recalled the importance of a holistic approach to the fundamental rights of children, paving the way for the implementation of social policies that favoured children, youth and the family.

The Rapporteur recommended amending legislation on the rights of the child, training the police in detecting cases of sexual exploitation of children and online child pornography and training judges on the rights of the child. Child victims of offences should not be criminalized or penalized, and all possible measures should be taken to avoid their stigmatization and social marginalization. Internet service providers and telecommunications companies should become involved in initiatives to combat and prevent online child pornography. International and regional cooperation should be strengthened to combat and prevent child sex tourism and online child pornography. Sexual education programmes should also be strengthened.

tive and policy efforts had been made in protecting the rights of the child. The number of reported cases of child prostitution and trafficking of children for sexual purposes was low. However, child pornography, mainly via the Internet, was on the rise. Because of the proliferation of tourism, easy accessibility of new methods of information technology by children, increasing demand in the sex industry and the establishment of increasingly structured trafficking networks, children were increasingly vulnerable to risk of abuse, violence and exploitation. Vigilance was required, and efforts should be concentrated on prevention, including the provision of training and human and financial resources. The Rapporteur called for the implementation of social policies favouring children, youth and the family. Legislation should clearly stipulate that a child under 18 years of age was unable to consent to any form of sexual exploitation, including child pornography and child prostitution. Training should be provided to the authorities for combating cybercrime, particularly online child pornography. Internet service providers and telecommunications companies should be involved in initiatives to combat and prevent online child pornography. Complaints mechanisms should be strengthened for children placed in alternative care institutions, or who were victims of violence or abuse, while ensuring their protection and privacy.

Children and armed conflict

Security Council consideration (February). On 12 February [meeting 5834], the Security Council considered the Secretary-General's 2007 report on children and armed conflict [YUN 2007, p. 790]. Opening the meeting, the Secretary-General's Special Representative for Children and Armed Conflict, Radhika Coomaraswamy, outlined the main areas of concern, recalling that 58 offending parties in 13 situations of concern had been listed in the annex to the Secretary-General's report. In spite of impressive progress, the overall situation of children affected by conflict remained grave and unacceptable. The Security Council should move from words toward effective action against the 16 persistent violators who had been on the lists of violators for five consecutive years. Targeted measures could include the imposition of travel restrictions on leaders and their exclusion from any governance structures and amnesty provisions; the imposition of arms embargoes; a ban on military assistance; and restrictions on the flow of financial resources.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 12 February [meeting 5834], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2008/6 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council takes note with appreciation of the seventh report of the Secretary-General on children and armed conflict, and the positive developments, as well as outstanding challenges in the implementation of its resolution 1612(2005) reflected therein.

The Council, reiterating its primary responsibility for the maintenance of international peace and security, reaffirms its commitment to address the widespread impact of armed conflict on children, its determination to ensure respect for and the implementation of resolution 1612(2005) and all of its previous resolutions on children and armed conflict, as well as respect for other international norms and standards for the protection of children affected by armed conflict.

The Council stresses in this regard the need to adopt a broad strategy of conflict prevention which addresses the root causes of armed conflict in a comprehensive manner in order to enhance the protection of children on a long-term basis, including by promoting sustainable development, poverty eradication, national reconciliation, good governance, democracy, the rule of law and respect for and protection of human rights.

The Council reiterates the primary responsibility of national Governments in providing effective protection and relief to all children affected by armed conflict, and encourages further cooperation and coordination between Member States, the United Nations system and the international community, in a spirit of partnership.

The Council reiterates the importance of the full, safe and unhindered access of humanitarian personnel and goods and the delivery of humanitarian assistance to all children affected by armed conflict, and stresses the importance for all, within the framework of humanitarian assistance, of upholding and respecting the humanitarian principles of humanity, neutrality, impartiality and independence.

The Council calls for the full implementation of the monitoring and reporting mechanism on children and armed conflict as called for in paragraph 3 of resolution 1612(2005) in all situations of armed conflict listed in the annexes to the report of the Secretary-General.

In this regard the Council reiterates that the mechanism should continue to collect and provide timely, objective, accurate and reliable information on violations and abuses committed against children affected by armed conflict and to operate with the participation of and in cooperation with national Governments and relevant United Nations and civil society actors, including at the country level.

The Council commends the work carried out by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Children and Armed Conflict, Ms. Radhika Coomaraswamy, including her field activities in situations of armed conflict.

The Council also commends the work carried out by the United Nations Children's Fund and the child protection advisers of peacekeeping operations and political missions in cooperation with other relevant United Nations entities.

The Council welcomes the sustained activity of its Working Group on Children and Armed Conflict, as outlined, inter alia, in the latest report of its Chairman, and invites it to continue adopting conclusions and proposing effective recommendations for consideration and, where appropriate, implementation by the Council, including through mandates of United Nations peacekeeping operations and political missions.

The Council will continue to consider including or enhancing the presence of child protection advisers in the mandates of all relevant United Nations peacekeeping operations and political missions.

The Council strongly emphasizes the need to end impunity for violations and abuses perpetrated against children in armed conflict, and in this regard welcomes the fact that several individuals who are alleged to have committed such crimes have been brought to justice by national, international and 'mixed' criminal courts and tribunals.

The Council acknowledges that the implementation of resolution 1612(2005) has already generated progress, resulting in the release and reintegration of children in their families and communities, and in a more systematic dialogue between the United Nations country task forces on monitoring and reporting and parties to armed conflict on the implementation of time-bound action plans.

Nonetheless, the Council strongly condemns the continuing recruitment and use of children in armed conflict in violation of applicable international law, the killing and maiming of children, rape and other sexual violence, abductions, the denial of humanitarian access to children and attacks against schools and hospitals by parties to armed conflict.

The Council is concerned by the widespread and systematic use of rape and other forms of sexual violence against children, in particular girls, in situations of armed conflict, and calls upon all parties to armed conflict to take special measures to protect girls and boys from sexual and gender-based violence, particularly rape, in situations of armed conflict.

The Council expresses its concern that civilians, particularly children, continue to account for the vast majority of victims of acts of violence committed by parties to armed conflict, including killing and maiming as a result of deliberate targeting, and indiscriminate and excessive use of force in violation of applicable international law. The Council condemns these acts and demands that those parties immediately put an end to such practices.

The Council is gravely concerned by the persistent disregard of its resolutions on children and armed conflict by parties to armed conflict identified in the reports of the monitoring and reporting mechanism, including parties to whom precise, immediate and unequivocal requests have been addressed. Recalling the statement made by its President on 28 November 2006, the Council reaffirms its intention to make use of all the tools provided in resolution 1612(2005).

The Council reiterates its call upon the parties to armed conflict listed in the annexes to the report of the Secretary-General that have not already done so to prepare and implement, without further delay, concrete time-bound action plans to halt the recruitment and use of children in violation of applicable international law and to address all violations and abuses against children in close cooperation with the Special Representative of the Secretary-General, as well as with the United Nations Children's Fund and the United Nations country task forces on monitoring and reporting.

The Council expresses concern over the casualties inflicted on children in armed conflict by the indiscriminate use of landmines and cluster munitions, and in this regard calls upon all parties to armed conflict to desist from such practice.

In order to further strengthen the comprehensive framework of the protection of children in armed conflict, considering the changing nature of armed conflict and the issues raised by the Secretary-General in his report, the Council expresses its readiness to review the relevant provisions of its resolutions on children and armed conflict, building on the provisions of resolution 1612(2005), with a view to further increasing the efficiency of its actions.

The Council recognizes that a stronger focus is required on the reintegration and rehabilitation of children associated with armed forces and armed groups, and in this regard invites all parties concerned, including Member States, regional organizations, the Secretariat and other relevant United Nations entities, including the United Nations Children's Fund, the United Nations Population Fund, the United Nations Development Fund for Women, the World Health Organization, the United Nations Development Programme, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, the International Labour Organization and the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, international financial institutions, including the World Bank, as well as civil society, to enhance their exchange of information about programmes and best practices, bearing in mind the relevant provisions of international law, Council resolutions on children and armed conflict, as well as the Paris principles to protect children from unlawful recruitment by armed forces or groups, and to ensure that adequate resources and funding are available to support national strategies or action plans in the area of child protection and welfare, and community-based programmes, with a view to ensuring the long-term sustainability and success of their programmatic response to the release, rehabilitation and reintegration of all children associated with armed forces and armed groups.

The Council requests the Secretary-General to submit his next report on the implementation of its resolutions on children and armed conflict by May 2009.

Reports of Special Representative. In June, the Special Representative, in her annual report [A/HRC/9/3], submitted in response to General Assembly resolution 62/141 [YUN 2007, p. 681], noted that new developments in the field of children and armed conflict had given rise to several issues of concern. The changing nature of conflicts, the recruitment of children across borders, forced displacements, an increase in sexual violence and a greater number of children being held in detention had created new dilemmas for the protection of children. Terrorism and counter-terrorism measures also posed their own special problems. Suicide bombing sometimes resulted in child victims on both ends: children were being used as suicide bombers in certain instances, and many children were killed in those bombings.

Since the Special Representative's last report [ibid., p. 789], several significant developments had taken place in the fight to end impunity through the application of international norms and standards for the protection of children. Trials had been held and convictions rendered before national courts in the Democratic Republic of the Congo (DRC), and internationally by the International Criminal Court and the Special Court for Sierra Leone for the crime of recruitment and use of child soldiers. The application of international norms to such cases, combined with the political process in the context of Security Council resolution 1612(2005) [YUN 2005, p. 863], had strengthened the work of child protection advocates by opening dialogue on protection with parties to conflict, with significant results in Cote d'Ivoire. There had also been progress on plans of action with armed forces and groups in the Central African Republic, Myanmar, the Sudan, Sri Lanka and Uganda. Country visits by the Special Representative had also provided the opportunity for high-level advocacy; opened doors for follow-up dialogue with military and political authorities by UN country task forces on monitoring and reporting; and elicited commitments by the relevant parties to address the recruitment and use of children and their protection from other grave violations during armed conflict.

The Special Representative called on the Human Rights Council and the human rights community to make systematic use of Security Council resolution 1612(2005) as an advocacy tool, in particular the monitoring and reporting mechanism on grave violations against children in armed conflict. Since the vast majority of parties to conflict using children were non-State actors, Member States should help facilitate dialogue between the UN country task forces on monitoring and reporting and those groups, for the purposes of developing plans of action to halt the recruitment and use of children. Member States should comply with international norms and standards for the protection of children in armed conflict, and take all measures to mitigate the impact of conflict on children.

Annexed to the report was a list of parties that recruited or used children in conflict situations on the agenda of the Security Council.

In August, in response to Assembly resolution 62/141, the Special Representative submitted to the Assembly a report [A/63/227] highlighting progress made on the children and armed conflict agenda, in particular in the fight against impunity for grave child rights violations and in the incorporation of children's concerns into the mandates, policies and priorities of key UN organs, entities, processes and activities. The report recognized the changing nature and characteristics of armed conflict and the impact on children; identified priority areas for action; and outlined recommendations, including strengthening the international normative structure, strengthening monitoring and reporting, consolidating the role of UN peacekeeping in child protection, and focusing on prevention.

Working group activities. In July [S/2008/455], the Chairman of the Working Group of the Security Council on Children and Armed Conflict, established pursuant to Council resolution 1612(2005), reported on the Group's activities since the submission of its last report [YUN 2007, p. 790]. The report noted that contacts between the Secretariat, the Working Group Chairman and the countries concerned had made it possible to prepare for or establish the monitoring and reporting mechanism provided for in resolution 1612(2005) in all the conflict situations referred to in the annexes to the Secretary-General's most recent report on children and armed conflict [ibid.] and to include those situations in the Group's work programme for the May 2008 to April 2009 period. The Group sought to engage in dialogue with the countries concerned, all of which participated in the Group's consideration of their situation and made comments upon the adoption of conclusions concerning them. Varying degrees of progress had been made in a number of situations, including in the implementation of action plans, the initiation or resumption of discussions on such plans between certain armed groups and UN task forces, the release of children, the decrease in their recruitment, the establishment of focal points in Government administrations and the provision of services to children in disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programmes. The Group agreed on the need to provide it with more logistical support, particularly Secretariat services.

During the year, the Group held eight meetings (5 and 21 February, 8 May, 20 June, 25 July, 5 September, 14 November, 19 December), during which it adopted conclusions on Côte d'Ivoire [S/AC.51/2008/5 & Corr.1], Burundi [S/AC.51/2008/6], the Sudan [S/AC.51/2008/7], Myanmar [S/AC.51/2008/8], the Philippines [S/AC.51/2008/10], Sri Lanka [S/AC.51/2008/11], Nepal [S/AC.51/2008/12], Uganda [S/AC.51/2008/13], Somalia [S/AC.51/2008/14], Chad [S/AC.51/2008/15], Afghanistan [S/AC.51/2009/1] and the DRC [S/AC.51/2009/3].

On 14 January, the Security Council President sent letters to the DRC [S/AC.51/2008/2], Rwanda [S/AC.51/2008/3] and the Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 1533(2004) concerning the DRC [S/AC.51/2008/4] in follow-up to the Working Group's 2007 conclusions [YUN 2007, p. 131]. On 12 September, the Working Group Chairman addressed a statement [S/AC.51/2008/9] to the non-State armed groups in Myanmar.

Security Council consideration (July). On 17 July [meeting 5936], the Security Council considered the report of the Working Group on Children and Armed Conflict (above) and a concept paper prepared by Viet Nam [S/2008/442].

Addressing the meeting, the Secretary-General described the progress made in standard-setting over the past 12 years. He said that the international community was shifting its focus from standard-setting to an era of application. Council resolutions had focused on six grave violations: abduction, sexual violence, child soldiers, killing and maiming, attacks on schools and hospitals, and denial of humanitarian access. A monitoring and reporting mechanism was operational in 15 situations of concern. Action plans had been secured from several parties to conflict, with those parties agreeing to release children from their ranks. Once children were released, they should be fully reintegrated into society, and the international community should strengthen its support for Governments, development partners and others involved in reintegration efforts. He called on the international community to strengthen its support to Governments, development partners and others involved in such efforts. Only concerted international action involving all UN partners would be capable of meeting the needs of children living in situations of armed conflict.

The Special Representative for Children and Armed Conflict requested the Council to expand the scope of the Working Group to cover all situations of concern and all grave violations against children, especially sexual violence. As requested by Member States, her office was initiating a research project on the root causes of children being associated with armed groups, and would convene a meeting of child protection experts to identify messages and gaps to reintegrating children affected by conflict. A seminal study by the Harvard School of Public Health had shown that the impact of conflict continued even after 10 years. The younger the child recruited and the longer the association with the armed group, the more difficult the adjustment. With the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, her office would compile a manual of best practices in line with the "Paris Principles and Guidelines on Children Associated with Armed Forces or Groups", an initiative by the Government of France setting out the standards for reintegration programmes.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 17 July [meeting 5936], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2008/28 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council reiterates its commitment to address the widespread impact of armed conflict on children and its determination to ensure respect for and implementation of its resolution 1612(2005) and all its previous resolutions on children and armed conflict, and the statements by its President of 24 July and 28 November 2006 and 12 February 2008, which provide a comprehensive framework for addressing the protection of children affected by armed conflict, as well as the provisions on children contained in other resolutions, including resolutions 1325(2000), 1674(2006) and 1820(2008).

The Council reiterates its strong and equal condemnation of the continuing recruitment and use of children in armed conflict in violation of applicable international law, killing and maiming of children, rape and other sexual violence, abductions, denial of humanitarian access to children and attacks against schools and hospitals by parties to armed conflict, while acknowledging that the implementation of resolution 1612(2005) has already generated progress, resulting in the release and reintegration of children into their families and communities, through, inter alia, a more systematic dialogue between the United Nations country task forces on monitoring and reporting and parties to armed conflict on the implementation of time-bound action plans.

The Council reaffirms the need for States parties to comply with their obligations under the Convention on the Rights of the Child and the Optional Protocols thereto for armed groups distinct from the State to refrain from recruiting or using children in hostilities, and urges States that have not yet done so to consider ratifying or acceding to those instruments.

The Council welcomes the ongoing implementation of the monitoring and reporting mechanism on children and armed conflict, in particular the efforts that have made possible the implementation of the mechanism in all situations listed in the annexes to the latest report of the Secretary-General, and invites the Secretary-General, where applicable, to bring the mechanism to its full efficiency, in accordance with resolution 1612(2005).

The Council welcomes the sustained activity of its Working Group on Children and Armed Conflict, as outlined, inter alia, in the latest report of its Chairman, and as the monitoring and reporting mechanism is being implemented in a growing number of situations of armed conflict, requests the Secretary-General to provide additional administrative support in order for the Working Group to continue to fully carry out its mandate in an effective manner.

The Council invites the Working Group to continue adopting conclusions providing clear guidance to the parties to armed conflict and relevant international actors on the concrete steps that need to be taken in order to respect their obligations under international law, in particular Council resolutions on children and armed conflict, and proposing to the Council effective recommendations based on timely, objective, accurate and reliable information, with a view to promoting the protection of children affected by armed conflict, including through appropriate mandates of United Nations peacekeeping operations and political missions. The Council welcomes the efforts of the Working Group to improve its working methods and encourages it to continue to do so with a view to further improving its transparency and efficiency.

The Council commends the work carried out by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Children and Armed Conflict, Ms. Radhika Coomaraswamy, and underlines the importance of her country visits in facilitating better coordination among United Nations partners at the field level, promoting collaboration between the United Nations and Governments, enhancing dialogue with parties to conflicts in implementing applicable international law, including their obligations under resolution 1612(2005), and thereby securing concrete child protection commitments.

The Council also commends the work carried out by the United Nations Children's Fund, as well as other relevant United Nations agencies, funds and programmes, within their respective mandates, the child protection advisers of peacekeeping operations and political missions in cooperation with national Governments and relevant civil society actors, in enhancing the activities of the United Nations country task forces on monitoring and reporting and promoting child protection at the field level, including through implementation of resolution 1612(2005) and following up on the relevant conclusions of the Working Group.

The Council recognizes the important role of education in armed conflict areas as a means to achieve the goal of halting and preventing recruitment and re-recruitment of children and calls upon all parties concerned to continue to ensure that all children associated with armed forces and groups, as well as issues related to children, are systematically included in every disarmament, demobilization and reintegration process, with a particular emphasis on education.

The Council reiterates the need for stronger focus by all parties concerned, including Governments and the donor community, on the long-term effects of armed conflict on children and the impediments to their full rehabilitation and reintegration into their families and communities, by, inter alia, addressing the need for providing appropriate health care, enhancing their exchange of information about programmes and best practices, and ensuring the availability of adequate resources, funding and technical assistance to support national strategies or action plans in the area of child protection and welfare, and community-based programmes, bearing in mind the Paris principles to protect children from unlawful recruitment by armed forces or groups, with a view to ensuring the long-term sustainability and success of their programmatic response to the release, rehabilitation and reintegration of all children associated with armed forces and armed groups.

The Council looks forward to the next report of the Secretary-General on children and armed conflict, and reiterates its readiness to continue to review the relevant provisions of its resolutions on children and armed conflict, building on the provisions of resolution 1612(2005), with a view to further enhancing the comprehensive framework of the protection of children in armed conflict.

Internally displaced persons

Reports of Secretary-General's Representative.

As requested by the Human Rights Council [YUN 2007, p. 793], the Secretary-General's Representative on the human rights of internally displaced persons (IDPs), Walter Kälin (Switzerland), submitted an April report [A/HRC/8/6] reviewing the background to the mandate, major achievements and an outline of future work. He acknowledged the greater recognition of the phenomenon of internal displacement, progress in developing a normative framework, and the coordinated response. However, millions of people were still displaced, living in distress and in need of assistance and protection. Governments had the primary duty and responsibility for providing that protection and assistance at all stages of displacement. On the occasion of the tenth anniversary of the 1998 Guiding Principles on Internal Displacement [YUN 1998, p. 675], the Representative welcomed the fact that the Principles were widely accepted. In that context, Governments and regional organizations should develop national legislation and policies in keeping with the Principles and ensure that they were implemented; bring legislation into line with the Principles; and develop regional legal instruments based on the Principles and ensure that they were implemented. He expressed concern at the difficulties encountered by humanitarian personnel in gaining access to displaced persons, and called on Governments and others concerned to facilitate speedy, unhindered access. Noting that the way in which durable solutions to displacement were implemented had a considerable impact on the sustainability of peace, the Representative recommended that Governments should guarantee the safety of returnees; create an independent mechanism to monitor returns; set up machinery for the restitution of property; give returnees back their documents; and guarantee returnees access to public services, livelihoods and income-generating activities. The international community should give further thought to the machinery for financing early recovery programmes to ensure a smooth transition between the emergency phase and the development phase.

In his report to the Assembly [A/63/286], transmitted in August by the Secretary-General, in accordance with Human Rights Council resolution 6/32 and General Assembly resolution 62/153 [YUN 2007, p. 793], the Representative described activities undertaken from August 2007 to July 2008. He welcomed progress made by Governments and the international community in strengthening protection and assistance for displaced persons, particularly the drafting of national legislation and policies in countries affected by internal displacement and the entry into force of the Protocol on the Protection and Assistance to Internally Displaced Persons, adopted at the Second International Conference on the Great Lakes Region [YUN 2006, p. 124]. Non-State actors had an obligation to respect and protect the rights of displaced persons in accordance with international criminal law and international humanitarian law. Returns should be the result of an individual decision taken freely, without coercion and on the basis of adequate information. He noted the high-level international conference (16 October), organized by Norway to mark the tenth anniversary of the Guiding Principles, which would pay particular attention to incorporating those into national law and policy, and their relevance in situations in which displacement was caused by natural disaster and other environmental factors, and the prospects for elaborating legally binding instruments on the protection of and assistance to displaced persons at regional and subregional levels. The Representative would also present the legislators' handbook, intended to provide guidance on ways of incorporating the human rights of internally displaced persons into internal displacement laws and policies.

The General Assembly took note of the report on 18 December (decision 63/534).

Following his visit to the Democratic Republic of the Congo (12–22 February) [A/HRC/8/6/Add.3], the Representative concluded that the eastern part of the country was experiencing a protection and humanitarian crisis, highlighted by the very large numbers of displaced persons, estimated at over 1 million in the four eastern regions, including about 800,000 in North Kivu and over 300,000 in South Kivu. More than 500,000 persons were reported to have been displaced in 2007, the highest number since the end of the civil war in 2003. In most cases, people had been forced to leave their homes owing to clashes between the Congolese armed forces and armed groups, or between different armed groups, as well as due to the widespread insecurity, violence and human rights abuses committed by armed groups and by members of armed forces. The situation of displaced persons was cause for concern: most were living with host families and in informal camps, in situations of absolute poverty. Many had lost their voters' cards, which served as identity cards, and that increased their vulnerability. Women suffered from near-systematic sexual violence, while children were forcibly recruited into the ranks of rebel factions. The statements of commitment signed at the Conference for Peace, Security and Development in North and South Kivu (Goma, 6–23 January) offered genuine opportunities for stabilization and for a possible return home (see p. 120). Returns had occurred in some regions. Nevertheless, the situation remained unstable and displacements continued following localized clashes.

The Representative asked all those involved to implement the statements of commitment without delay. He called for political dialogue between the Government, the various armed groups and other groups concerned, as well as the boosting of assistance and protection activities for the displaced population. He also recommended the implementation of early recovery measures where returns were under way or being contemplated. To achieve durable solutions, the Government should pursue reconciliation between ethnic communities; transitional justice and efforts to combat impunity; and settlement of land-related disputes. The armed groups were under an obligation to respect international humanitarian law, in particular the distinction between combatants and civilians, and refrain from any act prohibited by international humanitarian law. The international community should provide assistance to displaced persons programmes, and embark on activities for development, economic reintegration and the relaunching of basic services.

Having visited Georgia (1–4 October) [A/HRC/10/13/Add.2], the Representative said that as a result of the hostilities in northern Georgia in August (see p. 453), some 133,000 persons were displaced within the country. The Representative welcomed the Government's prompt response to the displacement crisis and its plans to find durable solutions for all IDPs, including those in protracted displacement since the early 1990s. The Representative urged the Government to create the conditions for sustainable return, allowing IDPs to return voluntarily, in safety and with dignity. According to Government estimates, about 37,605 IDPs would not return in the foreseeable future, and the Representative commended the Government for its decision to provide durable solutions for them. However, he was concerned about the almost exclusive emphasis on infrastructure, and recommended that the Government develop a comprehensive integration policy encompassing education, health care and economic opportunities. The biggest challenge was to integrate the approximately 220,000 IDPs living in protracted displacement for more than a decade. He welcomed the adoption of the action plan aimed at integrating IDPs into mainstream society. While welcoming the policy shift away from considering local reintegration and return to be mutually exclusive, the Representative remained concerned about the lack of integration of the "old" IDPs, the rights of whom needed to be ensured in tandem with responding to the new group of IDPs on a non-discriminatory basis. Unimpeded humanitarian access to the Tskhinvali region/South Ossetia and Abkhazia continued to be a concern. He urged the Government to ensure human rights protection for all internally displaced populations.

Persons with disabilities

Report of High Commissioner. In response to a 2005 Commission on Human Rights request [YUN 2005, p. 873], the High Commissioner, in January, submitted a report [A/HRC/7/61] on progress made in implementing the recommendations of the 2002 study on the human rights of persons with disabilities [YUN 2002, p. 771] and on the related OHCHR activities in 2007. The year had seen a continuation of the strengthening of OHCHR work on the issue. The opening for signature of the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities [YUN 2006, p. 785] and its Optional Protocol had shifted focus from support for standard-setting to promotion of ratification and implementation of standards. OHCHR strengthened technical assistance and promoted partnerships with UN bodies in preparation for the entry into force of both instruments (see p. 749). The formation of a joint secretariat for the Convention with the UN Department of Economic and Social Affairs would help maximize strengths across UN departments. The first session of the Inter-Agency Support Group on the Convention had provided an opportunity to ensure that the United Nations and the World Bank would work jointly on implementation. Partnerships with civil society organizations were enhanced, and work in the area of country engagement had significantly increased. While establishing specific projects on human rights and disability, the Office also aimed to incorporate disability rights in the work of human rights bodies. In addition, OHCHR improved the accessibility of its own premises, facilities and technologies.

Human Rights Council action. On 27 March [A/63/53 (res. 7/9)], the Human Rights Council welcomed the report and invited the High Commissioner to provide support for the integration of the perspective of persons with disabilities in the Council's work, and to continue the activities of her Office that contributed to raising awareness of the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities.

Communication. On 11 January [A/62/654], Spain transmitted to the General Assembly the Declaration of Madrid, the outcome of the expert group meeting on "Making it work: civil society participation in the implementation of the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities" (Madrid, 27–29 November 2007).

Indigenous peoples

Human Rights Council action. On 26 March, the Human Rights Council appointed S. James Anaya (United States) as Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights and fundamental freedoms of indigenous people.

On 28 March [A/63/53 (res. 7/33)], the Council, by a recorded vote of 34 votes to none, with 13 abstentions, welcomed the landmark and historic formal apology by the Government of Australia for the past laws and policies that inflicted profound grief, suffering and loss on its indigenous peoples. It urged Governments that had not done so to issue formal apologies to the victims of past and historic injustices and take all necessary measures to achieve the healing and reconciliation of, and the restoration of dignity to, those victims.

Reports of Special Rapporteur. In accordance with a 2007 Human Rights Council request [YUN 2007, p. 798], the new Special Rapporteur submitted his first report [A/HRC/9/9], which analysed the United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples, [YUN 2007, p. 691] in the context of other international instruments regarding indigenous peoples and human rights instruments; the different measures required to implement and make operative the rights affirmed in the Declaration; and joint efforts by States, the UN system, indigenous peoples and civil society actors.

According to the Special Rapporteur, the Declaration did not attempt to bestow indigenous peoples with a set of special or new human rights, but elaborated general human rights principles and rights as they related to the specific circumstances of indigenous peoples. The standards affirmed in the Declaration shared a remedial character, seeking to redress the obstacles and discrimination that indigenous peoples faced in their enjoyment of basic human rights. From that perspective, the standards connected to State obligations under other human rights instruments. For the Declaration to be fully operative, States should pursue a range of affirmative, special measures in law-making and public administration, including legal and institutional reform, judicial action, specific policies and special reparations procedures. UN human rights bodies and mechanisms, specialized agencies and mechanisms with indigenous-specific mandates were central in promoting the Declaration's implementation at the local level, including with regard to development cooperation benefiting indigenous peoples. Implementing the Declaration depended also on the establishment of strong partnerships between States and indigenous peoples. Civil society organizations had a role in supporting the societal changes required to make the Declaration a living reality.

An addendum [A/HRC/9/9/Add.1 & Corr.1] summarized 39 communications on alleged human rights violations sent to 25 States between 2 September 2007 and 9 June 2008, and 19 responses thereto. Most communications had been sent jointly with other special procedures mandate-holders. An annex provided observations by the Special Rapporteur on the process of constitutional revision in Ecuador.

Report of High Commissioner. A September report of the High Commissioner [A/HRC/9/11] provided information on OHCHR activities related to indigenous peoples in the previous 18 months. To promote dissemination, understanding and implementation of the Declaration, OHCHR, in cooperation with the International Labour Office, convened a meeting of the Inter-Agency Support Group on Indigenous Peoples' Issues (26–27 September) to discuss integration of the Declaration in UN programmes and policies. A communications strategy was developed to promote the Declaration. The High Commissioner recommended that the Council consider grouping all reports on indigenous peoples, including that of the Special Rapporteur, the Expert Mechanism and the High Commissioner, at one time of the year to facilitate the work of governmental delegations and permit greater participation by indigenous peoples' organizations in the Council's work.

On 24 September [A/63/53/Add.1 (res. 9/7)], the Council welcomed the reports of the High Commissioner and the Special Rapporteur.

Expert Mechanism on the rights of indigenous peoples

Human Rights Council action. On 24 September [A/63/53/Add.1 (res. 9/7)], the Human Rights Council requested the Expert Mechanism on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples, established in 2007 [YUN 2007, p. 798], to identify proposals for the Council's consideration in 2009. It should also prepare a study on lessons learned and challenges to achieve the implementation of the right of indigenous peoples to education and conclude it in 2009.

Meeting of Expert Mechanism. The five-member Expert Mechanism on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples, at its first session (Geneva, 1–3 October) [A/HRC/10/56], discussed implementation of Human Rights Council resolution 6/36 [YUN 2007, p. 798], by which it established the mechanism, including thematic expertise. It also addressed issues related to the study on lessons learned and challenges to achieve the implementation of the rights of indigenous peoples to education, as requested by the Council (above). The Mechanism reviewed the Durban Declaration and Programme of Action [YUN 2001, p. 615] for the purpose of submitting recommendations as contributions to the outcome of the Durban Review Conference (see p. 762). The Expert Mechanism adopted five proposals for consideration and approval by the Council that related to the organization of work; the Durban Review Conference; the right of indigenous peoples to education; participation of indigenous peoples in the work of the Mechanism; and coordination with other UN bodies and mandates. In particular, it proposed that the Human Rights Council suggest to the General Assembly the broadening of the mandate of the United Nations Voluntary Fund for Indigenous Populations (below) to help indigenous peoples participate in the sessions of the Council and its treaty bodies. The Mechanism encouraged the Fund's Board of Trustees to identify beneficiaries of the Fund who could effectively contribute to the thematic agenda of the Expert Mechanism.

Voluntary Fund for Indigenous Populations

The Board of Trustees of the Voluntary Fund for Indigenous Populations, at its twenty-first session (Geneva, 4–8 February) [A/63/166], recommended 78 travel grants worth to some $209,066 to enable indigenous representatives to attend the first session of the Expert Mechanism (see above), and another 78 travel grants totalling $357,199 to enable representatives to attend the seventh session of the Permanent Forum on Indigenous Issues (see p. 858). On 15 February, the High Commissioner approved the Board's recommendations on behalf of the Secretary-General.

The General Assembly took note of that report on 18 December (decision 63/533).

Human Rights Council Action. On 24 September [A/63/53/Add.1 (res. 9/7)], the Human Rights Council suggested that the General Assembly adjust the mandate of the Voluntary Fund to take into account the creation of the expert mechanism on the rights of indigenous peoples.

Voluntary Fund for International Decade

The Voluntary Fund for the Second International Decade of the World's Indigenous People, 2005–2014, established in General Assembly resolution 59/174 [YUN 2004, p. 799] to succeed the pre-existing Fund for the First Decade, continued to promote, support and implement the goals of the Second Decade in terms of promoting indigenous peoples' culture, education, health, human rights, environment and economic development. In April, the Bureau of the United Nations Permanent Forum on Indigenous Issues (see p. 858), serving as the Advisory Group for the Fund, considered project proposals for funding received by the Secretariat, in accordance with resolution 59/174. It proposed to award grants totalling $137,779 to 14 projects being implemented by indigenous organizations and related NGOs in Africa; Asia; Central and South America and the Caribbean; Eastern Europe, the Russian Federation, Central Asia and Transcaucasia; North America; and the Pacific.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December [meeting 70], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/63/427], adopted resolution 63/161 without vote [agenda item 61].

Indigenous issues

The General Assembly,

Recalling all relevant resolutions of the General Assembly, the Human Rights Council and the Economic and Social Council relating to indigenous issues,

Recalling also that the Assembly proclaimed, in its resolution 59/174 of 20 December 2004, the Second International Decade of the World's Indigenous People,

Bearing in mind that the Assembly adopted, by its resolution 61/295 of 13 September 2007, the United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples,

Recalling that, at previous sessions of the Assembly, constructive dialogues were held with the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights and fundamental freedoms of indigenous people,

1. Requests the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights and fundamental freedoms of indigenous people to report on the implementation of his mandate to the General Assembly at its sixty-fourth session;

2. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with Member States, relevant United Nations organizations and mechanisms and other stakeholders, including indigenous organizations, to submit to the Assembly at its sixty-fifth session a midterm assessment report that evaluates progress made in the achievement of the goal and objectives of the Second International Decade of the World's Indigenous People;

3. Decides to adjust the mandate of the United Nations Voluntary Fund for Indigenous Populations so as to facilitate the participation of representatives of indigenous peoples' organizations in the expert mechanism established in accordance with Human Rights Council resolution 6/36 of 14 December 2007.

Permanent Forum on Indigenous Issues

Report of Permanent Forum. The 16-member Permanent Forum on Indigenous Issues, established by Economic and Social Council resolution 2000/22 [YUN 2000, p. 731] to address indigenous issues relating to economic and social development, the environment, health, education and culture, and human rights, at its seventh session (New York, 21 April–2 May) [E/2008/43], considered as its theme "Climate change, biocultural diversity and livelihoods: the stewardship role of indigenous peoples and new challenges". It had before it background reports relating to its work submitted by its secretariat and subsidiary mechanisms, UN system bodies and other intergovernmental organizations, Governments, NGOs and regional organizations [E/C.19/2008/INF/1/Rev.1]. The Forum recommended three draft decisions for adoption by the Economic and Social Council on: an international expert group meeting on the implementation of article 42 of the United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples; the venue and dates for the Forum's eight session; and the provisional agenda and documentation for that session. Matters brought to the Council's attention related to the ses-sion's theme; economic and social development; the environment, health, education and human rights; indigenous children and youth; the Second International Decade of the World's Indigenous People; urban indigenous peoples and migration; future work; implementation of the United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples; and dialogue with the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights and fundamental freedoms of indigenous people. The Forum held half-day discussions on indigenous languages and the situation of indigenous peoples in the Pacific.

On 25 July, the Economic and Social Council took note of the report of the Permanent Forum on its seventh session (decision 2008/256). On 24 July, it authorized a three-day expert group meeting on the implementation of article 42 of the United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples, and requested that the results of the meeting be reported to the Permanent Forum at its eighth session (decision 2008/249), which would be held at UN Headquarters from 18 to 29 May 2009 (decision 2008/250). The Council also approved the provisional agenda and documentation for that session (decision 2008/251).

Expert meetings and conferences

In response to Economic and Social Council decision 2007/244 [YUN 2007, p. 799], an international expert group meeting on indigenous languages (New York, 8–10 January) [E/C.19/2008/3] discussed linguistic diversity, the connection between language rights and other rights, the lack of urgency in the face of the threatened extinction of most indigenous languages, and proposals for revitalizing, promoting and protecting indigenous languages.

A conference (Copenhagen, 21–22 February) [E/C.19/2008/CRP.3] organized by the International Work Group for Indigenous Affairs discussed the impact of climate change on indigenous peoples and how global agreements, political processes and restrictive regulations hindered indigenous peoples in responding and adapting to climate change. The conference looked at how to secure indigenous peoples' contributions to discussions on those issues.

An international expert group meeting (Darwin, Australia, 2–4 April) [E/C.19/2008/CRP.9] also focused on indigenous people and climate change. It recognized that indigenous peoples—particularly those living in small island developing States, the Arctic region, high-altitude areas, tropical forests and coastal and desert regions—were already dealing with the impacts of climate change in their daily lives. States and other actors should therefore include indigenous peoples in decision-making to address the issue.

Human rights country situations

In 2008, human rights situations of concern in Member States, particularly regarding alleged violations and how best to assist and guide Governments and national institutions in combating them, were addressed by the General Assembly and the Human Rights Council, and by special rapporteurs, the Secretary-General's special representatives and independent experts appointed to examine those situations.

In Myanmar, the human rights situation remained grave despite some improvements as a result of political developments, according to the Special Rapporteur. In February, a draft Constitution was finalized—the fourth step in the Government's seven-step road map to democracy—and a referendum on its adoption was held on 10 May. The lack of participation in the drafting process, the small degree of transparency, the limited public knowledge about its contents, and the conditions under which the referendum was held all raised concerns from a human rights perspective. In addition, a large number of opposition leaders remained in detention. The situation of the National League for Democracy General Secretary, Daw Aung San Suu Kyi, was a matter of concern as the Government, in May, extended her house arrest with no new evidence against her. In the wake of Cyclone Nargis, the Secretary-General visited Myanmar on 22 and 23 May. Following his discussions with Government officials, some access for international aid workers was granted. In June, the Human Rights Council called on the Government to implement commitments it had made to the Secretary-General on granting access by relief workers to those in need.

The protection of human rights in the Sudan remained challenging. There were continued violations of the freedoms of expression and association that were of particular concern as the country prepared for elections in 2009. Gross violations of human rights continued to be perpetrated in the Darfur region. The Special Rapporteur said that in general, the human rights situation remained grim and violations continued to be committed by all parties. Some progress had been made in implementing the 2005 Comprehensive Peace Agreement, and by July, the National Assembly had passed 59 new bills, including acts on the armed forces, criminal procedure, elections, the police and political parties. Overall, the human rights legal and institutional framework remained weak. In September, the Council acknowledged the progress made in the implementation of the Comprehensive Peace Agreement and the steps taken by the Government to strengthen the human rights legal and institutional framework, principally in law reform. It expressed concern at the overall human rights situation and called on the Government to accelerate implementation of the Agreement, to establish the remaining commissions, in particular the national human rights commission, and to intensify efforts for promoting and protecting human rights.

The Special Rapporteur reported that the human rights situation in the Democratic People's Republic of Korea remained grave in 2008. In addition to systematic human rights violations, the country was enduring an economic crisis characterized by rampant and chronic shortages of food. Civil and political rights were severely constrained due to the repression imposed by the regime, coupled with intimidation and an extensive informant system, creating insecurity among the population. A new development during the year was the resumption of talks between the Democratic People's Republic of Korea and Japan on abducted Japanese nationals, aimed at reopening investigations on unresolved cases. The food shortages became more evident as the year progressed, with reports that millions of people were facing severe deprivations. A new agreement was reached between the authorities and the World Food Programme to assist 6.5 million people, whereby the Programme was granted access to households and warehouses that had previously been inaccessible.

The Human Rights Council held its sixth special session (23–24 January) on the human rights violations emanating from Israeli military attacks and incursions in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, and its eighth special session (28 November and 1 December) on the human rights situation in the east of the Democratic Republic of the Congo.

Also during the year, the High Commissioner for Human Rights reported on the efforts of her Office to strengthen country engagements, especially through increased activities of field representatives as the main means for promoting human rights and reducing violations. The Council, its special procedures and the Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights strengthened country engagements through advisory services, technical cooperation and monitoring activities as a means of advancing international human rights principles and preventing violations in several countries, including Afghanistan, Burundi, Cambodia, Colombia, Cyprus, the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Guatemala, Haiti, Iran, Liberia, Myanmar, Nepal, the Occupied Palestinian Territory, Sierra Leone, Somalia and the Sudan. For its part, the General Assembly took action on the human rights situation in the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Georgia, Iran and Myanmar.

General aspects

In accordance with a procedure established by Human Rights Council resolution 5/1 [YUN 2007, p. 664] to deal with communications alleging denial or violation of human rights, the Secretary-General during the year forwarded communications to the Council, giving each an indication of the article or articles of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights to which the communication related. Copies of communications were sent to the Governments concerned, so as to obtain their views on the allegations of violations.

Strengthening country engagements

Report of High Commissioner. In an 11 February report [A/HRC/7/38], the High Commissioner outlined the efforts of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR) to strengthen country engagement through increased field presences and enhanced dialogue with and capacity-building of national counterparts, as well as interaction with regional organizations. At the beginning of 2008, the Office had 47 field presences, including regional offices, country offices, human rights components in peace missions and human rights advisers in country teams. There were 11 country offices (Angola, Bolivia, Cambodia, Colombia, Guatemala, Mexico, Nepal, Togo and Uganda, and presences in Kosovo and Palestine), including the new office established in La Paz, Bolivia, in early 2007. As envisaged in the 2006–2007 Strategic Management Plan [YUN 2006, p. 766], the offices in Bosnia and Herzegovina and Serbia (Belgrade) were closed in June 2007, while the office in Kosovo was strengthened in the light of remaining human rights concerns and future challenges. In 2007, OHCHR renewed memorandums of understanding with Nepal, Colombia and Cambodia. The agreement with Cambodia, extending the OHCHR mandate for 18 months, was reached on the understanding that negotiations aimed at concluding a standard agreement for future operations of the Office would resume in 2008. At the time of the report, OHCHR was running nine regional human rights presences: those for Southern Africa (Pretoria); East Africa (Addis Ababa); South-East Asia (Bangkok); the Middle East (Beirut); the Pacific (Suva); Central America (Panama City); the liaison office for Latin America and the Caribbean (Santiago); the regional representative for Central Asia (Bishkek); and the United Nations Centre for Human Rights and Democracy in Central Africa (Yaoundé). The regional office for Central America was established early in 2007, and in November 2007, a memorandum of understanding was signed with Senegal for a regional office for West Africa in Dakar. It was expected that three new regional offices would be operational in 2008—in Central Asia (Bishkek), South-West Asia and North Africa—together with a human rights training and documentation centre for South-West Asia and the Arab region. Those offices were foreseen in the 2006–2007 Strategic Plan (except South-West Asia), but significant delays had been faced, essentially due to the complexity of the negotiations, including host country agreements and consultations on selection of the seat. Important achievements of cooperation were reached with two countries where OHCHR did not have offices—China and the Russian Federation. A framework agreement for cooperation was reached with the former, and several technical cooperation activities were completed with the latter.

The OHCHR Peace Missions Support and Rapid Response Unit, established in 2006, increased the Office's capacity to react promptly to critical human rights situations, particularly by deploying missions and mobilizing capacity in support of country or regional offices, as well as UN country teams or peace operations. For example, in response to the declaration of a state of emergency in Guinea in early 2007, OHCHR supported the UN country team and assisted a civil society initiative on documenting allegations of human rights violations committed in January 2007 to repress peaceful protests. Other activities included support for a forensic investigation in Afghanistan, assistance to the UN country team in Somalia, and surge capacity to support OHCHR offices in their response to critical situations, such as violence in the Terai region of Nepal in January 2007; the deteriorating situation in the Occupied Palestinian territories; and monitoring human rights in the context of parliamentary elections in Togo. The Unit also provided secretariat support to the high-level Fact-finding Mission to Beit Hanoun, which was reactivated in 2007 [YUN 2007, p. 826], and to the high-level mission/group of experts mandated by the Human Rights Council to assess human rights in Darfur, Sudan [ibid., p. 805]. It also assisted the Special Rapporteur on human rights in Myanmar (see p. 881).

The High Commissioner conducted visits to 18 countries in 2007, and in most countries emphasized the need to end impunity for human rights violations as well as the need for independence of the judiciary.

OHCHR also continued to assist peacekeeping missions and was involved with humanitarian organizations.

Africa

Burundi

Report of independent expert. In a 15 August report [A/HRC/9/14], the independent expert on the situation of human rights in Burundi, Akich Okola (Kenya), provided information on his ninth (2–8 December 2007) and tenth (29 June–12 July 2008) visits to the country, during which he noted that the overall human rights situation there had deteriorated. More than 4,000 cases of human right violations were committed in the first half of 2008 by law enforcement personnel and administrators of provinces, most of them relating to ill-treatment, rape, torture of suspects and violations of due process. Those issues were taken to Government officials by the Human Rights and Justice Section of the United Nations Integrated Office in Burundi (BINUB) in the context of its monitoring activities. During the reporting period, several cases of violations of the right to life were committed by law enforcement agencies and the rebel movement. The expert described the political crisis which deepened in early 2008, when opposition representatives were removed from Parliament. He felt that the executive had enlisted the Constitutional Court to serve a political objective, thereby bringing into question its independence and credibility. The expert called on the Government to open a dialogue with all political parties in order to avoid any institutional and political crisis, which would have a negative impact on the human rights and stability of the country, and he urged the international community to support the Government in reforming the justice system.

The expert noted that the situation had improved in late 2007 when the President and opposition parties had reached an agreement to form a new Government to reflect the composition of society, providing for the allocation of ministries on the basis of the number of seats in Parliament won in the 2005 elections. However, in February 2008, the situation worsened when a political crisis erupted, resulting in gridlock in Parliament. A decision by the Constitutional Court forced 22 members to leave Parliament, and the President appointed party loyalists to replace them, thus allowing the ruling party (Conseil national pour la défense de la démocratie-Forces pour la défense de la démocratie) to regain its majority. The decision, widely condemned by jurists and others as a use of the judiciary for political objectives, exacerbated the precarious political situation. The expert met representatives of all major political parties. Opposition parties complained that they faced harassment by security organs whenever they held meetings and that the Government refused to register any political party from the opposition. Freedom of expression and the right to assembly were of great concern to opposition parties. The Government appeared determined to muzzle any political party that might challenge the ruling party during the elections in 2010. The situation was further complicated by the return of the rebel movement Palipehutu-Forces nationales de libération (Palipehutu-FNL) leadership to the capital without official status. Palipehutu-FNL demanded to be registered as a political party and that their forces be integrated in the security apparatus of the country, which the Government rejected. Opposition politicians appealed to the international community for intervention to help Burundi find a solution. As the result of hostilities between Palipehutu-FNL and the national defence forces, the Government arrested more than 1,000 alleged FNL members.

Some progress had been made towards establishing the mechanisms of transitional justice since the Government and the United Nations signed an agreement on 2 November 2007 for creating a tripartite steering committee, composed of the Government, civil society and the United Nations, to organize national consultations on transitional justice mechanisms. Questions remained relating to the special tribunal and its relationship with the truth and reconciliation commission; further discussions between the United Nations and the national authorities should ensure that the most serious crimes committed during the Burundian conflicts were investigated and perpetrators brought to justice. Progress was also made towards establishing an independent national human rights commission. The workplan and budget of the proposed commission were approved in February by a technical committee composed of members of the Government and civil society, but the budget was not included in the national budget because of the absence of an enabling law. The expert was informed in June that the law on the mandate, composition and functioning of the commission was under consideration by the Government, and the expert urged the Government to send the draft law to Parliament without delay.

In regard to human rights violations, the expert noted that respect for the right to physical integrity improved slightly in late 2007, which might be the result of advocacy and training sessions organized by human rights non-governmental organizations (NGOs) and BINUB. Training sessions targeted law enforcement personnel and administrators who had allegedly been involved in physical abuse of suspects. However, in early 2008 there were allegations of ill treatment committed by the security forces and combatants of Palipehutu-FNL and cases of violation of the right to physical integrity committed by the police during operations to combat banditry. Denial of the rights to assembly and freedom of expression were reported. The expert received copies of letters from administrators of various provinces in which the authorities denied opposition parties the right to organize meetings, and the ruling party controlled all administration in the country. He called on the international community to provide technical assistance to Burundi in order to better prepare for the forthcoming elections. Sexual violence had increased since late 2007. A significant increase in gang rape had been recorded in the first half of 2008. Most cases did not reach court because the perpetrators were released during investigations or escaped; some cases occurred on police premises. The Government had made no progress in addressing the 2004 Gatumba massacre or the 2006 Muyinga massacre; in the case of the latter event, there appeared to be an attempt by the Government to use legal and administrative technicalities to prevent full disclosure of the relevant facts, and in general, the Government displayed a lack of transparency and commitment to fight impunity. Similarly, the administration of justice and judicial reform remained weak, contributing to an increase in cases of mob justice, which was prevalent in Burundi. From January to June, more than 23 cases of mob justice were reported. Lack of confidence in the police and the judiciary was a major explanation for the trend, and allegations of interference by political and executive organs in judicial functions to shield the perpetrators contributed to the judiciary's weakness. Prisons remained overcrowded and the majority of detainees had been awaiting trial for more than a year. Detention beyond the legal limit, illegal detention and detention for minor offences were among the irregularities noticed. Violations of economic, social and cultural rights remained a concern. On a positive note, a programme of free medical care for pregnant women and children under 5 years of age was launched. Many promotion and capacity-building activities were carried out by the Human Rights and Justice Section of BINUB, human rights NGOs and the Burundi Ministry for Human Rights. OHCHR organized a workshop (18–19 February) on the follow-up to the recommendations of the Committee against Torture. Participants made recommendations to the Government on legal reform, the independence of judges and lawyers, sexual violence and conditions of detention.

Among his recommendations, the expert urged the Government to allow the registration of all political parties in compliance with the Constitution, and called on the Government and Palipehutu-FNL to work in all mechanisms foreseen by the 2006 Comprehensive Ceasefire Agreement. He commended the Government for supporting the establishment of a national human rights commission. The international community was urged to help the country achieve an impartial justice system, and to ensure that the process leading to the 2010 elections and the elections themselves were free and fair. The expert encouraged the Peacebuilding Commission to continue to support the Government in disbursing funds to implement the 2007–2008 development plan.

Human Rights Council action. On 24 September [A/63/53/Add.1 (res. 9/19)], the Council called on the Government and Palipehutu-FNL to work through all mechanisms established to ensure implementation of the Comprehensive Ceasefire Agreement and welcomed the project to support national consultations on transitional justice mechanisms in the context of the peacebuilding process. It also called for the early establishment of a national human rights commission. The Council called on the international community to increase its technical and financial assistance to the Government in support of its human rights efforts, in particular in the areas of economic and social rights and justice system reform, and to assist in preparing elections. OHCHR was requested to continue its activities through its presence in Burundi and to report on its activities and the human rights situation. The Council extended the mandate of the independent expert until an independent national human rights commission was established, and invited him to report to the Council following the establishment of such a commission.

Democratic Republic of the Congo

Report of independent expert. In a 29 February report [A/HRC/7/25], the independent expert on the situation of human rights in the Democratic Republic of the Congo (DRC), Titinga Frédéric Pacéré (Burkina Faso), remarked that the human rights situation remained serious. In particular, the lack of security was worrying, especially in the east, where militias and armed groups, as well as the DRC armed forces, had committed human rights violations with impunity, and in Bas-Congo. Little progress had been made and a climate of generalized impunity seemed to persist. Several important investigations and trials had shown little progress towards resolution and remained stalled. An exception was that the convictions handed down in the trials for the 2006 Bavi massacre and the murder of two UN military observers were upheld. Many cases of human rights violations had not been investigated, despite the information sent to the judicial authorities by the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo (MONUC) and local NGOs, particularly in North Kivu, where no trials had been held for cases of serious human rights violations. The expert described two well-known cases—the Kilwa massacre and the murder of journalist Serge Maheshe—as sham trials that had provoked international condemnation. The weakness of the judiciary and its lack of independence vis-à-vis the executive, which had control over judicial decisions, were deplorable. Frequent obstructions of justice were linked to political and military interference, the judiciary was subject to corruption, and its independence and capacity were undermined by insufficient financial resources and the use of the Constitution to reassert the executive's control over the judiciary. In order to combat impunity, the expert recommended the creation of a special international tribunal for the DRC or, failing that, joint criminal chambers in the appeal courts to try crimes committed since 1993, the year when serious violations of humanitarian law were first taken up in UN resolutions.

The expert reported that the incidence of sexual violence continued to increase at an alarming rate, with almost total impunity. In the absence of a functioning judicial system, many out-of-court settlements were concluded under the authority of traditional chiefs or local administrative officials, in breach of legislation and to the detriment of the victims' basic rights. Between 2005 and 2007, 14,200 rapes were recorded by health institutions, but less than 1 per cent were reported to local authorities. Of those complaints, 56 per cent were still at the preliminary investigation stage after a year. To handle cases of sexual violence, the expert proposed that an investigating judge be appointed to specialize in such cases in each prosecutor's office in the country. Child soldiers remained a problem, and minors continued to be forcibly recruited. Civil and political rights, as well as economic, social and cultural rights, continued to be violated. On 23 January, all the armed groups operating in North and South Kivu signed a peace agreement in Goma in the presence of the Head of State (see p. 120), providing for, among other things, cessation of hostilities, observance of the rules of international human rights and the return of refugees and internally displaced persons. The expert recommended that the Goma peace agreement be implemented. Other recommendations were made to the Government concerning steps to fight against impunity, improve the administration of justice and bring to the courts complaints of sexual violence. The international community was called on to support DRC institutions to permit the establishment of the rule of law, reform of the army and security forces, and economic recovery.

Human Rights Council action. On 27 March [A/63/53 (res. 7/20)], the Human Rights Council requested OHCHR to increase its technical assistance to the country, in consultation with the authorities. It called on the international community to support the implementation of the local mechanism of cooperation between the Government, OHCHR and the human rights section of MONUC, called "Entité de liaison des droits de l'homme", and to provide the DRC with the assistance it requested for improving the human rights situation. The High Commissioner was requested to report to the Council in March 2009 on the human rights situation in the country and the activities of her Office there.

Human Rights Council special session

At the request of France on behalf of 15 other countries [A/HRC/S-8/1], the Council held its eighth special session (Geneva, 28 November and 1 December) [A/HRC/S-8/2] on the situation of human rights in the eastern DRC. During its consideration of the issue, the Council heard statements from its members, the representative of the DRC as a concerned country, non-member countries, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs.

At the conclusion of the session, the Council adopted a resolution [ibid., (res. S-8/1)] expressing concern at the deteriorating human rights and humanitarian situation in North Kivu since the resumption of hostilities on 28 August, and calling on all parties to comply with international law to ensure the protection of the civilian population and to facilitate the work of humanitarian agencies. It called for the immediate end to human rights violations, urged parties to facilitate humanitarian assistance through corridors in the area so as to allow access and free movement of people and goods, and condemned the acts of violence and human rights violations in Kivu, in particular sexual violence and the recruitment by the militia of child soldiers. Expressing support for international efforts to restore long-term peace and stability, the Council urged all parties to cooperate with the Special Envoy of the Secretary-General for the conflict in the eastern DRC, Olusegun Obasanjo. It suggested strengthening the MONUC mandate to increase its capacity to protect civilians and to restore peace and security in Kivu. The international community was called on to address the root causes of the conflict, including the illicit exploitation of natural resources and the establishment of militias, and to provide the DRC with the assistance it requested for improving the humanitarian and human rights situation. The Council invited the High Commissioner to report at its tenth (2009) session on the human rights situation in the eastern DRC and on OHCHR activities in the region.

Kenya

At the end of December 2007, widespread violence broke out in Kenya following the announcement of the results of the 27 December presidential elections. In the ensuing days, official figures stated that over 1,200 people were killed. There was massive destruction of property, and several hundred thousand people were internally displaced. In light of that situation, OHCHR deployed a fact-finding mission to Kenya from 6 to 28 February.

The report of the mission said that, in most parts of Kenya, the population had voted in a peaceful and orderly manner. However, procedural irregularities in the vote counting and tallying cast doubts on the legality of the election results. Voters who did not support the incumbent President, Mwai Kibaki, and who felt they had been deprived of their democratic rights, unleashed a wave of protests and violence that engulfed the country for weeks.

The mission observed that patterns of violence varied from one region to the next, greatly depending on region-specific dynamics. The first observed pattern of violence—the burning and looting of shops, houses and commercial outlets in the slums of Nairobi and Kisumu by youth groups—seemed spontaneous to most observers. It stemmed from the frustrations generated by poor living conditions and historical disenfranchisement, and was triggered by the anger of opposition supporters at what they saw as the theft of the election. In a second pattern of violence, perpetrators mainly targeted communities of small farmers and land-holders perceived to be Government supporters in the Rift Valley and aimed at driving them away from the region. Credible evidence suggested that the violence was partially organized by local political or traditional leaders seeking to settle long-held grievances over land issues and other real and perceived discrimination. The third pattern of violence was retaliatory: Government supporters and militias reportedly carried out reprisals targeting communities of migrant workers perceived to be opposition supporters.

The mission could not substantiate allegations of a steep increase in cases of sexual violence. OHCHR was nevertheless concerned that some 322 women and girls sought hospital treatment for sexual assaults and rape.

While the violations of democratic rights provided the trigger for the bulk of the street violence and human rights violations, underlying causes contributed to the outburst, such as lack of access to water, food, health and decent housing, together with high rates of youth unemployment and gross inequalities. The colonial legacy and mismanagement of land distribution had generated conflict over what was perceived as the most important source of wealth and power: arable land. Actual and perceived discrimination in the distribution of economic and political power among various communities, together with the absence of effective remedy, had fed serious grievances within the population. The failure to embrace constitutional, judicial, police and civil service reform had left the State with a diminished ability to tackle the root causes of violence and little credibility that it would do so.

During the crisis, the State appeared to have failed to prevent or stop the violence and the human rights violations. The mission acknowledged that the State faced limitations, including inadequate resources, and that it did provide last-resort protection to the fleeing population. However, the State had failed to take measures to protect its citizens. During the attacks, the police were often present, but were either overwhelmed or passive. In some instances, the policing of demonstrations and crowds was conducted with excessive use of force, resulting in death and injuries. According to the Government's own figures, 10 per cent of the killings were carried out by the police.

The Government and the opposition had agreed on a framework to address the violence: the Kenya National Dialogue and Reconciliation. According to the agreement, the goal of the dialogue was to achieve peace, stability and justice through the rule of law and respect for human rights. The parties had made commitments to address land reform, police and judicial reform, socio-economic inequalities, corruption, accountability and the disarmament of militias.

The mission recommended that the Government take independent prosecutorial measures to bring the perpetrators, including planners and organizers, to justice. The new Truth, Justice and Reconciliation Commission should have a clear mandate to feed into criminal prosecution of individual perpetrators. The Government should ensure the protection of all the victims and witnesses of human rights violations. Perpetrators of gross violations should under no circumstances be recommended for amnesty. Other recommendations dealt with passing a hate speech bill; securing the rights of internally displaced people to return or resettle; and carrying out the review and reform of the Constitution, the Parliament, the police and the legal and judicial system. (See also p. 326.)

Liberia

Reports of independent expert. The independent expert on technical cooperation and advisory services in Liberia, Charlotte Abaka (Ghana), reported to the Council on 14 February [A/HRC/7/67] and 15 August [A/HRC/9/15]. The latter report covered her mission to Liberia from 6 to 20 July, during which she noted that the Government, led by President Ellen Johnson Sirleaf, had brought governance to the people by periodically holding cabinet meetings in the counties. Many ministries were planning programmes taking into account the need for greater control at the county level. The Truth and Reconciliation Commission was nearing completion of its core activities, with public hearings coming to a close and an extension of its mandate to December. Draft legislation to establish the Independent National Commission on Human Rights was before the legislature, as was that for es-establishing the law reform commission, which would review the Constitution and the compatibility of domestic legislation with international human rights standards. Liberia needed to establish the rule of law and the administration of justice throughout the country. An increase in armed robbery constituted a threat to internal security, as did the resort to violence to resolve land and property disputes. Reform of the justice system needed attention, and the launching of the Judicial Training Institute was a step in that direction. Currently, however, the dysfunctional judiciary was resulting in many trials being conducted in violation of fair trial standards, and courts remained non-operational. Much work had been done in police reform, and the United Nations Mission in Liberia (UNMIL) had assisted with training 3,700 new police officers. Rape and sexual violence remained the most frequently committed serious crimes. The Government and UNMIL had launched an awareness campaign which had led to an increase in the reported incidents of rape. The national action plan on gender-based violence would be supported by a four-year joint United Nations/Government programme. In May, the decision was made to dedicate a court to hearing cases of gender and sexual violence. Harmful and discriminatory traditional and customary practices, such as trial by ordeal, female genital mutilation and early child marriage, continued to exist. The Government faced serious challenges in rebuilding the economy and in meeting its obligations to respect and fulfil human rights guarantees. Some progress had been made: for example, in June, the Government launched the Poverty Reduction Strategy, and indicators for key economic and social growth improved, with economic growth at nearly 10 per cent. The expert called on the Government to formulate a national policy on decentralization and to increase political participation at the local level. She urged Liberia to convene a national conference on the rule of law and establish the Law Reform Commission. She also recommended that the Government domesticate international and regional human rights instruments that were already ratified and eliminate harmful and discriminatory traditional practices. The expert invited donor countries to support the Government in poverty reduction and to assist it in establishing safe havens for victims of rape and domestic violence in all 15 counties. UNMIL was called on to support capacity-building in the Government and civil society.

Human Rights Council action. On 24 September [A/63/53/Add.1 (res. 9/16)], the Human Rights Council encouraged Liberia to continue its work to improve human rights promotion and protection, including in the areas highlighted by the expert, and to reinforce its commitment to establish a national human rights protection system. The Council requested OHCHR, through its presence in Liberia, to pursue its technical assistance activities in consultation with the authorities, and to report to the Council at its twelfth (2009) session on progress made in the human rights situation and relevant activities. The international community was urged to provide Liberia with assistance to enable it to consolidate human rights, peace and security.

Sierra Leone

Report of High Commissioner. In a 26 February report [A/HRC/7/66] on assistance to Sierra Leone in the field of human rights, the High Commissioner addressed related developments in 2007. Political, legislative and administrative developments had a positive impact on the human rights situation in the country. The National Human Rights Commission was established and was being operationalized. The Constitutional Review Commission to review the 1991 Constitution was established and work was in progress. Parliament passed legislation on protection of human rights, in particular women's and children's rights. The devolution of powers from the central Government to local district councils continued to increase political participation in governance and the promotion of human rights in local districts and at the community level. United Nations support for Sierra Leone under the Peacebuilding Fund was beginning to facilitate peace by addressing the root causes of the conflict. Projects to strengthen the National Human Rights Commission and the justice institutions, and to increase youth employment and empowerment were being implemented. Presidential and parliamentary elections had been successful, resulting in a change in Government and a new political leadership that appeared to be committed to respect for human rights and the rule of law. A number of challenges remained, including political tensions since the change in ruling parties, delays in judicial hearings, mismanagement of public resources, prolonged pretrial detention, poor prison conditions and increasing incidents of gender-based violence, including rape, domestic violence and female genital mutilation. No significant progress was noted in social and economic rights. Other issues included widespread corruption, environmental degradation, lawlessness among students, and the abuse of human rights by mining companies operating in the country. The law reform and the constitutional review process needed greater attention to ensure that the reforms proposed by the Truth and Reconciliation Commission were implemented. The United Nations Integrated Office in Sierra Leone continued to assist the Government in promoting and protecting human rights, particularly in supporting the National Human Rights Commission, developing a national plan of action for human rights, and strengthening the rule of law. In 2007, it assisted in monitoring the elections and found the process to be free, fair and generally peaceful.

The High Commissioner urged the Government to implement the recommendations of the Truth and Reconciliation Commission, in particular the reparations programme, and encouraged the Constitutional Review Commission to incorporate the recommendations of the Truth and Reconciliation Commission concerning constitutional reform. The Government was encouraged to provide adequate and timely funding for its Human Rights Commission, to strengthen the capacity of the courts and the Ministry of Justice, and to establish a legal aid programme in order to address the delay in trials, prolonged pretrial detentions and excessive remand and adjournment of cases. A comprehensive review of all customary laws, with a view to harmonizing practices that were inconsistent with the Constitution and international human rights standards, was also recommended. The High Commissioner encouraged the Government to take legal action to eliminate discrimination against women, implement the three gender bills passed by Parliament in 2007, reform the rape laws and embark upon national awareness-raising of women's rights and gender-based violence. Also recommended was the establishment of a ministry to coordinate human rights activities within the Government.

Somalia

Reports of independent experts. On 17 March, the independent expert on the situation of human rights in Somalia, Ghanim Alnajjar (Kuwait) submitted his last report to the Human Rights Council [YUN 2007, p. 804], covering events in 2007 and containing his recommendations. On 1 May, Shamsul Bari (Bangladesh) took up his mandate as the newly appointed independent expert and issued a preliminary report on 15 September [A/HRC/9/CRP.2], following a curtailed and restricted visit to Somalia, due to the ongoing violence there, and to the region (28 June–12 July). He stated that since 1991 there had been no central Government in Somalia and a state of lawlessness had engulfed most of the country as a result of the ongoing civil war. Hope for improvement had resulted from the signing on 18 August in Djibouti of a Peace Agreement between the Transitional Federal Government (TFG) of Somalia and the Alliance for the Re-liberation of Somalia, calling for a ceasefire, for the United Nations to deploy an international stabilization force and for the withdrawal of Ethiopian troops. Over the previous months, the human rights situation appeared to have further worsened and was characterized by indiscriminate violence and frequent attacks against civilians, including attacks against large civilian groups, arbitrary detention of human rights defenders, arbitrary arrests and extrajudicial killings of journalists, death threats against human rights defenders, and sexual and gender-based violence. The expert called on the TFG to develop laws and mechanisms for good governance and to take measures to end human rights violations, at least those caused by authorities under its control. In particular, it should safeguard the lives and property of people; end harassment and torture of innocent civilians; ensure that the TFG and Ethiopian forces avoided undue use of force against opposition forces that affected civilian populations; eliminate extortion; ensure there was no intimidation of the media; and ensure protection of human rights defenders, proper distribution of humanitarian aid and respect for humane treatment of all. Educational institutions needed to be reopened, as did medical services. The TFG should work with UN bodies to establish an independent human rights commission. Civil society should be involved in bringing about peace and reconciliation as well as social, political and economic change, including in developing a mechanism for the establishment of accountability, ending the prevailing culture of impunity, and reviewing the Somali Transitional Federal Charter and other laws. The expert recommended that the Security Council decide to deploy UN peacekeepers in Somalia as stipulated in the Djibouti Agreement, give that mission a mandate for protecting civilian populations and include a human rights component for monitoring and investigating violations. The Council should also consider establishing a commission of inquiry to investigate violations of human rights and humanitarian law in Somalia in the last two years by all parties and identify the perpetrators. The expert recommended that OHCHR reinforce the human rights capacity within the United Nations Political Office for Somalia to improve human rights monitoring and to address accountability issues. The expert made further recommendations for other UN bodies, Somali political parties, Ethiopia, the African Union, the international community and NGOs.

Human Rights Council action. On 28 March [A/63/53 (res. 7/35)], the Human Rights Council demanded that all parties reject and stop all acts of violence, abstain from engaging in hostilities and respect their obligations under international human rights law and humanitarian law. The parties were urged to work towards national reconciliation within the framework of the Transitional Federal Charter, including by holding fair, national multiparty elections in 2009. The international community was called on to support the legitimate Somali institutions and to provide development and humanitarian assistance to Somalia. The Council renewed the mandate of the independent expert for one year, and requested him/her to report to the Council in September 2008 and March 2009. The Council requested OHCHR to strengthen its presence in Somalia with a view to providing technical assistance and advisory services to the relevant institutions.

Sudan

Report of Special Rapporteur. In a 3 March report [A/HRC/7/22], the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in the Sudan, Sima Samar (Afghanistan), updated her report submitted to the General Assembly in September 2007 [YUN 2007, p. 805] and covered events from September to December 2007. Some slow progress had been made in the enormous challenge of protecting human rights in the Sudan, including the drafting of new bills, issuance of orders and new policies, but they had not yet had an effect on the situation. One year later, many of the concerns mentioned in the previous report remained the same. Despite the potential for democratic transition and optimism created by the Interim National Constitution and the Bill of Rights, violations of civil and political rights remained widespread. Delays in the implementation of the Comprehensive Peace Agreement [YUN 2005, p. 301] continued to hamper the protection and promotion of human rights, particularly economic, social and cultural rights. The Rapporteur was particularly concerned by the situation of women's rights. Early and forced marriages, violence against women and female genital mutilation were still widely practiced. Women were frequently placed in detention for non-payment of dowry. Concern was expressed at the repression of fundamental rights and freedoms, the excessive use of force, arbitrary arrest and detention, torture and ill-treatment of human rights defenders and political opponents. The measures taken by the Government of Southern Sudan to strengthen the administration of justice remained inadequate in light of the thousands of cases of people in pretrial detention. A considerable number of them were held for long periods without their cases being reviewed and without receiving legal assistance.

As Chairperson of the group of experts on Darfur, the Special Rapporteur participated in a dialogue with the Government of the Sudan to foster implementation of the group's recommendations for the protection of human rights in Darfur [YUN 2007, p. 807]. The group noted that the Government's preparation of laws and instructions could be instrumental in improving human rights; however, those efforts had not led to any actual improvement. Concerns about Darfur remained regarding the Government's use of disproportionate and indiscriminate warfare in violation of international humanitarian law. Government forces carried out aerial bombardments against dissident Arab groups and others. Civilians continued to be exposed to violence and abuses either from Government-supported militias or some of the rebel groups, or as a result of being caught between warring factions. The proliferation of weapons, the presence of armed elements inside camps and the widening divisions along tribal affiliations added to the insecurity felt by internally displaced persons. People also continued to be arbitrarily arrested and held for prolonged periods. The female population of Darfur, in particular internally displaced persons, continued to be victims of rape and sexual violence. Most incidents of sexual violence went unreported because of lack of confidence that the police would take action. Widespread impunity continued to prevail. Despite the obstacles, humanitarian services continued to be provided to the majority of the conflict-affected civilians; however, access to parts of Darfur was limited owing to increasing insecurity.

In northern Sudan, despite the potential for democratic transition, violations of civil and political rights remained widespread. There was a pattern of arbitrary arrests and prosecutions in an apparent effort to stifle community protests against the Kajbar dam project. Khartoum media were subject to restrictions on freedom of expression through censorship, imposition of public information bans and use of criminal legislation. Justice and accountability continued to be a challenge. In Southern Sudan, key laws still needed to be passed or amended so as to comply with the Comprehensive Peace Agreement, the Constitution of Southern Sudan and international human rights treaties. Mechanisms needed to be put in place for the protection of basic human rights. The Southern Sudan Human Rights Commission had not been fully operational, as the enabling law had not been passed. The demobilization and integration of opposition forces had proceeded with difficulty, and the administration of justice was challenged by interference by military and civil officials. Tribal clashes in Southern Sudan over water points, land and cattle continued.

The protection of human rights in the Sudan remained challenging, and there were continued violations of the freedoms of expression and association, which were of particular concern as the country prepared for elections in 2009. Gross human rights violations continued to be perpetrated in the Darfur region. The Special Rapporteur hoped that the deployment of the African Union-United Nations Hybrid Operation in Darfur (UNAMID) would increase security and the protection of civilians, but at the time of the report, UNAMID was still facing difficulties, including shortages in troops and assets, and the Sudanese Government was not facilitating its deployment. The Special Rapporteur called on the Government of National Unity to: intensify efforts to implement the recommendations compiled by the group of experts on Darfur [ibid., p. 806]; accelerate the implementation of the Comprehensive Peace Agreement and establish the remaining commissions, in particular the national human rights commission; revise national laws to conform with the Comprehensive Peace Agreement, the Interim National Constitution and international human rights standards; address impunity and ensure that allegations of human rights violations were investigated and perpetrators brought to justice; and facilitate the deployment of UNAMID. UNAMID was called on to provide support and technical assistance to the Government of the Sudan for implementation of its obligations under international human rights law, provide technical assistance in the area of justice and encourage the Government to ensure that there was no amnesty for war crimes and crimes against humanity. Other recommendations were addressed to the warring factions and the Government of Southern Sudan.

Human Rights Council action. On 27 March [A/63/53 (res. 7/16)], the Council, while acknowledging the Government's measures to address the human rights situation, expressed concern that their implementation had not yet led to the desired impact. It expressed concern at the seriousness of the violations in some parts of Darfur, and reiterated its call to all parties to end violence against civilians, with special focus on vulnerable groups, including women, children and internally displaced persons, as well as human rights defenders and humanitarian workers. The Council stressed the primary responsibility of the Government to protect all its citizens, including vulnerable groups. The signatories of the Darfur Peace Agreement were called upon to comply with their obligations under the Agreement, and the Government was urged to implement the recommendations of the group of experts, within the specified time frames and indicators. UN bodies and donors were invited to continue providing support and technical assistance to the Sudan for the improvement of human rights and implementation of the Comprehensive Peace Agreement. The Council called on the Government to accelerate the implementation of the Agreement and to establish the remaining commissions, in particular the national human rights commission. It also urged the Government to address the impunity issue relating to the perpetrators of past and ongoing violations of human rights and international humanitarian law in Darfur.

Communication. On 13 June [A/HRC/8/G/11], the Sudan requested OHCHR to distribute its note quoting the High Commissioner's remarks on the armed attack by the Justice and Equality Movement on the Sudanese capital on 10 May. In those remarks, the High Commissioner condemned the use of child combatants by all parties and welcomed attempts to enforce the prohibition on the recruitment of children into armed groups.

Report of Special Rapporteur. The Special Rapporteur, in a 2 September report [A/HRC/9/13], covered the January to July 2008 period, including her visits to the Sudan from 28 February to 10 March and from 29 June to 11 July. In general, the human rights situation remained grim and violations continued to be committed by all parties. Some progress had been made in implementing the Comprehensive Peace Agreement, and by July, the National Assembly had passed 59 new bills, including acts on the armed forces, criminal procedure, elections, the police forces and political parties. Among laws not passed were those on the National Intelligence and Security Services (NISS) and on establishing the national human rights commission. An amended Child Act, finalized but not yet endorsed, would prohibit female genital mutilation, raise the age of criminal responsibility to 18 years of age, and dedicate a section for juvenile trials. On 8 June, President Omar Al-Bashir issued a decree on internally displaced persons dealing with their return and security arrangements. Overall, the human rights legal and institutional framework remained weak, and some even reported a deterioration in the country. On 10 May, members of the Darfuri Justice and Equality Movement (JEM), using child soldiers, launched an attack on Khartoum, and 34 civilians were reportedly killed. Afterwards, the Government granted access to captured children to international agencies, including the Special Rapporteur. The Government responded to the attack by making numerous arrests. According to reports, hundreds of detainees, mostly of Darfuri origin, were held incommunicado. In July, anti-terrorism courts in Khartoum pronounced 30 death sentences for alleged participation in the attacks. The verdicts were reached chiefly on the basis of confessions that the defendants said were made under torture and which they retracted in court. Many arrests were reportedly carried out arbitrarily. Freedom of expression was further restricted, most likely as the result of the 10 May incident, and media organizations, NGOs and human rights defenders reported increasing harassment and censorship by the Government and NISS, which visited newspaper premises on a daily basis and demanded changes to articles about to be published. As the Sudan was preparing for a general election scheduled for 2009, it was essential that freedoms of expression, association, assembly and movement be guaranteed and respected. The lack of justice and accountability for serious crimes remained one of the most important challenges to human rights protection in the Sudan. In Darfur, despite increasing insecurity, the Government had taken some steps to implement the recommendations of the group of experts on Darfur and address human rights concerns. For example, the number of police deployed there had been increased, State committees had undertaken activities against sexual and gender-based violence, and several military personnel had been indicted, tried and found guilty of rape. More fighting by many parties, including air attacks by Government forces, had resulted in civilian casualties, widespread destruction of property and mass displacement. Many communities in Darfur described the inability of UNAMID, which suffered seven deaths when attacked on 8 July, to protect the civilian population from the conflict. Humanitarian personnel were also victims of killings, armed assaults, abductions and carjackings, thus forcing agencies to reduce activities in dangerous areas. In the transitional area of Abyei, heavy fighting broke out between 14 and 20 May between the Sudanese Armed Forces (SAF) and the Sudan People's Liberation Army (SPLA), both supported by groups of armed civilians. The battle left large areas of the town completely destroyed and looted, and an estimated 50,000 people were displaced. A political agreement was reached on 8 July to de-escalate the crisis. The United Nations Mission in the Sudan (UNMIS), without the mandate or means to halt the fighting, was limited to sheltering civilians seeking refuge and evacuating them. The transitional areas faced serious problems in the administration of justice. Frequently, local armed groups set up areas of control, and SAF and SPLA were involved in arrests and detention falling outside their legal mandates. In Southern Sudan, major human rights concerns were linked to prevailing insecurity and the proliferation of firearms, as well as the role of SPLA in law enforcement. The recently established Southern Sudan Human Rights Commission had made progress towards carrying out its role as an independent oversight mechanism, promoting human rights and raising concerns with the authorities. Numerous people in Southern Sudan were killed as a result of localized armed clashes and general insecurity. A particular security concern was the continuing presence of the Lord's Resistance Army and other armed groups across a wide area of Southern Sudan, where armed clashes between tribes commonly occurred over land, cattle and family affairs. There were continued reports of SPLA personnel enjoying impunity for their crimes, including assault, rape and arbitrary arrest.

The Special Rapporteur repeated her recommendations outlined in her earlier report for the Government of National Unity, the United Nations and the international community. The Government was also urged to cooperate fully with UNMIS and UNAMID to remove any obstacles that might hinder humanitarian efforts and to engage with civil society to develop strategies to improve human rights. The Government of Southern Sudan was called on to ensure that adequate means and resources were provided to the institutions responsible for the administration of justice and rule of law, and to ensure that its budget covered key sectors such as education, health, social services, law enforcement and the rule of law, as well as human rights.

Follow-up to report of expert group. In an addendum to her 2 September report [A/HRC/9/13/Add.1 & Corr.1], the Special Rapporteur, as requested by the Council, reported on the status of implementation of the recommendations on Darfur compiled by the group of experts mandated by the Human Rights Council in 2007 [YUN 2007, p. 806]. The Rapporteur, through dialogue with the Government of the Sudan, had worked to ensure follow-up and to foster implementation of the recommendations. She described national efforts to bring accountability and justice measures to combat impunity, as well as to monitor the implementation of the expert group's recommendations. The Rapporteur concluded that while certain recommendations were implemented, certain others were partially implemented, while others remained without implementation. Several recommendations that were prioritized as short-term and could have been implemented within a short-term time frame had not been implemented. The Government needed to engage fully in an open and constructive dialogue and take concrete steps to improve the human rights situation. Only in a few areas were necessary steps taken fully or to a significant degree to have a tangible impact. In more cases, activities were undertaken but little or no impact was reported, or only initial steps were taken towards implementation. With very few exceptions, those efforts had not led to an improvement of the human rights situation. In certain specific instances, the feasibility of full implementation could have been affected by a lack of resources and technical assistance. However, the lack of resources could not justify any acts of violence against the civilian population or the lack of action to prevent such acts.

The Rapporteur recommended that the Human Rights Council continue the process of review, in accordance with the indicators for assessing implementation developed by the group of experts, until there was full implementation, or at least significant activities, and tangible impact had been reported. Noting that the time frame for implementing the short- and medium-term recommendations had elapsed on 20 June, she suggested that the Council consider what further action was required to concretely protect the human rights of people in Darfur.

Human Rights Council action. On 24 September [A/63/53/Add.1 (res. 9/17)], the Council, taking note of the Special Rapporteur's reports on Darfur, acknowledged the progress made in the implementation of the Comprehensive Peace Agreement and the steps taken by the Government to strengthen the human rights legal and institutional framework, principally in law reform. It expressed concern at the overall human rights situation and called on the Government to accelerate implementation of the Agreement, to establish the remaining commissions, in particular the national human rights commission, and to intensify efforts for promoting and protecting human rights. Noting its initial steps, the Council urged the Government to strengthen efforts to implement the recommendations compiled by the group of experts, in accordance with the specified indicators. Calling on all parties to respect their obligations under international human rights law and humanitarian law, it stressed the primary responsibility of the Government to protect all vulnerable groups. The Council urged all parties to cooperate with UNMIS and UNAMID, and to allow humanitarian agencies to move freely throughout the Sudan. The Government was urged to cooperate with the Special Rapporteur and respond favourably to her requests to visit the Sudan. The Council extended until June 2009 the Special Rapporteur's mandate, and requested her to assess the human rights needs of the Sudan and to mobilize the necessary international technical and financial support. The Rapporteur was also requested to ensure follow-up to the implementation of the remaining recommendations of the group of experts through dialogue with the Government, and to include the information in her next report to the Council's eleventh (2009) session.

Communication. In a 29 October letter [A/HRC/10/G/1] to the Human Rights Council, the Sudan said that JEM forces in Darfur had killed four civilian Chinese nationals working on development projects in Western Kurdufan State, and it condemned four other armed attacks allegedly committed by JEM and other groups active in Darfur as acts of terrorism. The Sudan called on UN Member States to condemn the crimes.

Colombia

Report of High Commissioner. In a report on the situation of human rights in Colombia during 2008 [A/HRC/10/32], the High Commissioner described the main developments in the country within the framework of the agreement between the Government and OHCHR, which was extended in 2007 and was to remain in force until 2010. Violations of human rights and international humanitarian law by the guerrilla groups and the armed forces, as well as the activities of illegal armed groups and drug traffickers, coupled with underlying problems such as inequitable distribution of wealth, discrimination and stigmatization of vulnerable groups, impunity and difficulties in accessing justice, continued to limit full enjoyment of human rights. The Government had sought to strengthen the rule of law, mainly through increasing regional State presence in locations previously under the control of illegal armed groups. However, human rights violations continued to take place. Stigmatization of human rights defenders, opposition leaders and social activists by some Government officials continued. The Government had striven to address extrajudicial executions and those efforts should continue: the number of complaints and victims recorded showed that institutional policies adopted by the Ministry of Defence and the army High Command to combat such practices had not managed to curb violations. Recent extraordinary measures, including separating some senior military commanders from service, had reinforced the "zero tolerance" policy for human rights violations. Those measures should be accompanied by greater operational control over military units and thorough investigations of allegations of extrajudicial execution. All parties to the conflict continued to breach international humanitarian law; moreover, the Revolutionary Armed Forces of Colombia-People's Army and the National Liberation Army refused to be bound by international humanitarian law. Besides continuing to recruit children and to commit crimes of sexual violence against women and girls, guerrilla groups continued planting anti-personnel mines, taking hostages and holding kidnapped persons for long periods under inhuman conditions. The illegal armed groups that had emerged since the paramilitary demobilization presented a major challenge to the rule of law. Those groups continued to endanger the civilian population, and a comprehensive response from the authorities was required. The rights to truth, justice and reparations had been given more prominence in the political and public agendas in 2008. However, few of the victims had effectively enjoyed those rights, especially the victims of actions or omissions by State agents. The economic growth of previous years had not resulted in sufficient progress in achieving the Millennium Development Goals, and the gap had not narrowed between those who had opportunities to generate income and those who did not.

In her recommendations, the High Commissioner called on all parties to the conflict to abide by international humanitarian law, respecting the life, integrity and property of the civilian population; required members of illegal armed groups to release all kidnapped persons; and urged the Government to implement the measures announced to eliminate the practice of extrajudicial execution and to step up its cooperation with the Attorney-General's Office for the investigation, trial and punishment of those crimes. The Government should also carry out measures to protect the civilian population in the face of actions by the illegal armed groups that had emerged since the paramilitary demobilization. The High Commissioner called on the judicial authorities and supervisory bodies to strengthen investigations and oversight, with a view to increasing protection of human rights defenders and trade unionists.

Annexed to the report were several examples of human rights violations and breaches of international humanitarian law.

Communication. On 26 February [A/HRC/7/G/4], Colombia transmitted to the Human Rights Council its observations on the 2007 report of the High Commissioner [YUN 2007, p. 808]. Colombia said that recent visits to the country by the High Commissioner and high-level officials and ongoing dialogue had resulted in a clearer picture of the situation and the efforts that the State was making to promote the full enjoyment of human rights. A more extensive dialogue with civil society was achieved in 2007, during which agreements were reached on methodology, the scope of the consultation process and the ground rules for the joint elaboration of a National Human Rights Plan of Action. Colombia stated its intention to promote the implementation of the High Commissioner's recommendations; a mechanism for evaluating the implementation of those recommendations was put into operation.

Regarding allegations that human rights defenders had been tortured, Colombia said that such cases were of concern and were isolated exceptions. The Government enumerated steps it had taken to protect the human rights of the indigenous and Afro-Colombian population and to overcome racial discrimination. It had expanded human rights guarantees for victims of any type of violence, including a budget for a protection programme for victims and witnesses. A legal framework had been created for the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration process to guarantee the rights of victims to truth, justice and reparation. The Justice and Peace Act imposed conditions on anyone seeking to benefit from its provisions. These included: genuine demobilization; the renunciation of all criminal activity; confession of any incidents in which the individual might have taken part in an illegal armed group; and contribution to the reparation of victims. The claims of 126,000 victims had been registered. As at 31 December 2007, 46,127 persons had been demobilized. Colombia reiterated its commitment to combating impunity, and to that end the executive power had guaranteed conditions of security throughout the country, the presence of institutions and the weakening of illegal armed groups and their interference in the economic, social and political life of the country. To deal with such cases, the Attorney-General's Office and the judiciary had been given additional staff and resources. To tackle the problem of alleged killings of protected persons, additional prosecutors and investigators had been appointed in 2007. Regarding economic, social and cultural rights, Colombia had adopted a strategy for coordinating activities of State agencies under the Social Protection Network for Overcoming Extreme Poverty.

Guatemala

Report of High Commissioner. Reporting on the work of the OHCHR office in Guatemala during the year [A/HRC/10/31/Add.1] within the framework of the 2005 joint agreement between the Government and OHCHR [YUN 2005, p. 374], which was extended for three years in September 2008, the High Commissioner said that the office had continued to monitor the human rights situation and to provide advisory and technical assistance services to national institutions, geared towards the implementation of the recommendations contained in the previous report [YUN 2007, p. 809]. The national context was characterized by persistent and increasing violence and public insecurity. The office observed with concern the difficult situation hindering full enjoyment of the right to life, which required that the State strengthen the prevention, investigation and punishment of violations of that right. Other issues of concern included violence against women; attacks against human rights defenders; the rule of law and impunity; combating racism and discrimination; transitional justice; and economic, social and cultural rights. The office provided technical advice to various national institutions such as Congress, the Presidential Human Rights Commission, the Ministry of the Interior, the Public Prosecutor's Office, the Presidential Commission on Discrimination and Racism, the Office for the Defence of Indigenous Women, the National Reparations Programme and the Office of the Human Rights Procurator. The office carried out 50 monitoring missions in the 22 departments of Guatemala: 135 complaints were received, of which 47 were selected for follow-up as they referred to human rights violations. In addition, the office carried out 595 meetings and interviews with authorities and representatives of civil society to supplement its assessment of the human rights situation. This enabled the office to gather the information needed to analyse the human rights situation, adjust its advisory and technical cooperation services, and provide support to victims and witnesses, facilitating their cooperation with authorities.

In her recommendations, the High Commissioner urged Congress and the Government to continue to refine the legislative framework for human rights protection. The Government should improve criminal investigations carried out by the police, on the basis of an appropriate organizational structure, trained personnel, an adequate territorial deployment, and the availability of technical and scientific resources. The General Directorate of the Prisons System and the Public Prosecutor's Office should investigate the deaths of persons deprived of their liberty, prevent the recurrence of violent incidents within detention centres and protect the life and integrity of all persons. The Government and Congress should establish a national mechanism for the prevention of torture. Special measures should be adopted to overcome the conditions of inequality which impeded indigenous peoples' access to economic, social and cultural rights. Other recommendations addressed the rule of law, impunity and women's rights.

Haiti

Note by OHCHR. On 13 June [A/HRC/8/2], the Human Rights Council was informed that for personal reasons beyond his control, the independent expert on the situation of human rights in Haiti, Louis Joinet (France), had been unable to carry out his last mission to Haiti, initially planned for late 2007, and would not be able to present his report to the Council's eighth session in June 2008.

Human Rights Council action. In a 24 September president's statement [A/63/53/Add.1 (PRST/9/1)], the Council welcomed recent political developments in Haiti, marked by the installation of a new Government, and commended the reaffirmation by the authorities of their commitments and determination to improve living conditions for Haitians, with a special emphasis on human rights. The Council noted the cooperation between the police and the United Nations Stabilization Mission in Haiti in curbing violence, crime and banditry. It welcomed the adoption of regulations on the judiciary and the new Act on the High Council of the Judiciary, as well as the reopening of the Judicial Training College. It encouraged authorities to continue efforts to eliminate prolonged pretrial detention, introduce a legal aid scheme and strengthen the Office of Citizen Protection. The Council was concerned at the deterioration of living standards in recent months, partly as a result of the economic crisis and food shortage, and deplored the loss of life and material damage caused by four recent hurricanes. Aware of the many obstacles to development in Haiti and difficulties encountered by its leaders in daily governance, the Council recognized that full enjoyment of human rights was a factor of peace, stability and progress in the country. The Council encouraged the international community to step up its cooperation with the authorities for the full realization of human rights.

The Council thanked the outgoing independent expert for his contribution to consolidating the rule of law, welcomed the appointment of Michel Forst (France) as his successor and supported the Haitian authorities' request to extend the mission of the independent expert to September 2010. He was invited to continue the work undertaken and bring his experience and expertise to bear in contributing to the cause of human rights in Haiti, with a particular emphasis on economic, social and cultural rights. The Council invited him to undertake a mission to Haiti in the near future and report to it each year.

Asia

Afghanistan

Report of High Commissioner. In a 21 February report [A/HRC/7/27] on the situation of human rights in Afghanistan and on technical assistance in human rights, submitted pursuant to a Human Rights Council decision [YUN 2006, p. 948], the High Commissioner made recommendations to address ongoing human rights concerns raised in previous reports. With the intensification of armed conflict, protection of civilians had become a major human rights concern. Insurgency-related violence had cost hundreds of civilian lives and created new groups of displaced persons. Coupled with increased criminality, it had hindered aid delivery and humanitarian access. Poverty and lack of access to food, medical care and education persisted, and national institutions remained unable to deliver essential services, including security and justice. Despite some advances, women still faced social, economic and political discrimination. Efforts had been made to improve the rule of law, but the necessary institutions for protecting human rights were still lacking. Arbitrary detention remained commonplace. Impunity remained entrenched and there was little progress in transitional justice. Journalists faced increased levels of threats and intimidation.

The High Commissioner recommended that the international community ensure that international human rights and humanitarian law informed an integrated governance strategy, with Afghans in the lead. That would require promoting civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights as interdependent foundations for progress, and ensuring participation of civil society and disadvantaged groups. All parties to the conflict should take measures to ensure respect for human rights and international humanitarian law. The international military forces should be more responsive and accessible to families in ensuring redress. The international community should nurture and defend civil society and freedom of expression. The Government, with international support, should strengthen the delivery of services necessary for the enjoyment of social, economic and cultural rights, including human rights reporting mechanisms. The Government and the international community should provide the necessary political, technical and financial support for the Ministry of Justice to monitor and report on State implementation of human rights benchmarks in the Afghanistan Compact [ibid., p. 363]. They should reinstate women's rights at the top of policy and donor agendas, providing financial and policy support, in order to reverse marginalization and combat violence against women. They should act to build the rule-of-law sector, including a commitment to truth-seeking, compensation and rehabilitation. The Government was called on to provide a clear mandate for forensic experts to investigate mass graves related to past abuses. With international support, the authorities should develop initiatives to prevent arbitrary arrests and detentions, promote the role of defence counsels, and develop judicial capacity to deal with cases in a timely manner. The Government was urged to reinstate its moratorium on the death penalty. With the support of the international community, it was urged to address deficiencies in the system of administration and protection of property rights, and in particular to build on traditional mechanisms where they could be used to ensure that individuals' property rights were protected in a fair and just manner.

Azerbaijan

In a 26 February communication [A/HRC/7/NI/7] to the Human Rights Council, Azerbaijan described the steps it had taken over the previous six years to promote and protect human rights, particularly through the newly established Office of the Commissioner for Human Rights (Ombudsman), which focused on restoring human rights and liberties violated by governmental bodies and officials. The Commissioner paid close attention to the problems of human rights of women and children, the elderly, persons with disabilities, refugees and internally displaced persons, detainees and prison inmates, and military personnel. As part of its activities, the Office received and analysed complaints and defined the areas of human rights concern. A new National Action Plan for human rights protection was adopted in 2006 that outlined a strategy to strengthen human rights protection with both short- and long-term objectives.

Subsequent communications from Azerbaijan covered the protection of internally displaced persons [A/HRC/8/NI/1], persons with disabilities [A/HRC/8/NI/2] and the right to development [A/HRC/8/NI/3].

Cambodia

Reports of Secretary-General. In a February report [A/HRC/7/56] on the role of OHCHR in assisting the Government and people of Cambodia to promote and protect human rights during 2007, submitted pursuant to Human Rights Council decision 2/102 [YUN 2006, p. 760], the Secretary-General said that the OHCHR programme was structured around three areas: fundamental rights and freedoms and civil society; rule of law; and land and livelihoods. OHCHR monitored developments, conducted legal analysis relevant to the exercise of those rights, provided technical assistance to Government institutions, drew the attention of the authorities to violations or matters of concern, and worked with civil society actors involved in economic, social and legal fields, helping to protect their ability to operate.

In a later report [A/HRC/12/41], the Secretary-General covered OHCHR activities in 2008 to assist human rights in Cambodia. The Office had stepped up efforts to engage in dialogue and cooperation with the Government. It developed initiatives with Government institutions whereby human rights issues were jointly assessed and discussed with relevant authorities, solutions were explored, and support offered in the form of technical and other assistance. That approach, based on direct dialogue with Government interlocutors, aimed to build working relationships with them, while OHCHR continued to draw public attention to certain issues when avenues of dialogue were exhausted. Several Government institutions had shown willingness to cooperate, while others had demonstrated little or no interest. Meanwhile, OHCHR developed its cooperation with community-based organizations, NGOs and other civil society actors. It provided support to correctional reform through such activities as working with the Ministry of Interior to improve prison conditions and the treatment of prisoners and to strengthen prison management. It conducted seven visits to provincial prisons to provide the authorities with an independent assessment of prison conditions. The rule of law programme sought to promote adherence to international human rights standards, in particular by building an institutional framework allowing Cambodians to obtain a remedy for violations of their rights. The Office continued to advise on the establishment of a national human rights institution, but there was little progress in that regard in 2008. Technical advice was provided to strengthen national torture prevention measures, but impunity remained a major challenge to the rule of law. In the context of the implementation in early 2008 of a new anti-trafficking law, sex workers were arbitrarily arrested by the police during night-time "sweeps" in Phnom Penh. OHCHR continued its work of promoting adherence to international trial standards in domestic courts. In the effort to support the general election on 27 July, the Office monitored instances of violence. The elections were held without significant violence, a welcome change from previous elections. During the months preceding the election, OHCHR observed an organized attempt by the ruling party to pressure, intimidate and offer rewards to persuade opposition leaders to switch allegiance, as well as the use of threats and intimidation, particularly with the media. The Office also observed a growing recourse of officials to criminal defamation. A number of NGOs and community organizations, particularly those involved in the protection of land rights of the poor, natural resources management, and human rights advocacy, had come under increasing official pressure. The draft law on peaceful assembly was submitted to Parliament in early 2008, and revisions were made at the request of OHCHR and others. Land conflicts and forced evictions affected large numbers of people, and a reported 150,000 people had been evicted over the previous few years. OHCHR worked with communities and NGOs to protect their rights and seek redress, and it worked on improving legal protections pertaining to resettlement.

Report of Special Representative. In a 29 February report [A/HRC/7/42], the Secretary-General's Special Representative for human rights in Cambodia, Yash Ghai (Kenya), stated that his fourth mission to that country [YUN 2007, p. 811] had centred on the theme of the rule of law, including access to justice. The report examined how to maximize the impact of the jurisprudence and practice of the Extraordinary Chambers in the Courts of Cambodia (ECCC), which were trying those most responsible for the atrocities of the Khmer Rouge regime, on the Cambodian legal system.

The report concluded that laws, institutions and procedures critical to the rule of law were very little respected in Cambodia—especially by the State. For the most part, the Government had not attempted to deny, much less refute, those findings or to take action to address the issue. Special Representatives and others had repeatedly addressed the problems of the legal and judicial system and made numerous recommendations, to no avail. The Government had no incentives for reform, as the international community continued to make large financial contributions regardless of widespread violations of human rights.

Resignation of Special Representative. On 10 September, the Special Representative announced his resignation. On 15 September, in a statement read to the Council by the Special Rapporteur on the human rights situation in the Sudan, Sima Samar, Mr. Ghai said that he had to cancel his visit to Cambodia due to difficulties in obtaining a visa. With the help of the OHCHR Office in Cambodia and NGO reports, however, he was able to apprise himself of the situation. There were serious deficiencies in the general elections in July, and little progress had been made in other areas in which human rights continued to be violated. Allegations of irregularities in the management of ECCC continued to undermine the work of the prosecutors and judges. The Special Representative's successor should have the full support of the Human Rights Council, the United Nations and the international community.

Cambodia replied that it had made great efforts to face major challenges by engaging itself in the promotion and protection of human rights. The recent national elections were qualified by international observers as smoothly conducted in a democratic atmosphere. The new mandate holder should focus his or her work on more relevant areas, namely advisory services and technical cooperation, which reflected a genuine need for Cambodia.

Human Rights Council action. On 24 September [A/63/53/Add.1 (res. 9/15)], the Human Rights Council extended by one year the mandate on the situation of human rights in Cambodia through the appointment of a Special Rapporteur to carry out the former functions of the Special Representative, and requested the Special Rapporteur to report on implementation of his/her mandate at its twelfth (2009) session.

Taking note of the new developments, especially those associated with recent progress by the Government in promoting and protecting human rights, the Council reaffirmed the importance of ECCC, which could contribute to eradicating impunity and establishing the rule of law. It welcomed the progress of ECCC, including the detention in 2007 of five suspects and the submission of the first closing order on 8 August, and supported proceeding with the tribunal in a fair and expeditious manner, given the advanced age of those charged and the long-overdue justice for the people of Cambodia. The Council encouraged Cambodia to work with the United Nations and States providing assistance to ensure high standards of administration of ECCC. The Council welcomed: the Government's efforts in promoting legal and judicial reform under the leadership of the Council of Legal and Judicial Reform, including adopting and/or enforcing basic laws, such as the civil procedure code, the criminal procedure code and the civil code; the Government's efforts in combating corruption, including the drafting of an anti-corruption law; the Government's efforts in combating trafficking in persons, including the creation of a national anti-trafficking task force in 2007; increased law enforcement action against traffickers and complicit officials, and the promulgation of a new law on the suppression of human trafficking in 2008; the Government's efforts to resolve land issues through such measures as land demarcation and titling programmes; the Government's commitment to adhere to and implement the international human rights conventions; efforts by the Cambodian Human Rights Committee in resolving complaints from people, improving prisons and intervening in prolonged pretrial detentions; the renewal in 2007 of the memorandum of understanding between Cambodia and OHCHR on implementing a technical cooperation programme on human rights; the good administration and generally peaceful conclusion of the general elections held in July, which demonstrated the continued development of the democratic process in Cambodia. The Council noted remaining shortcomings about the conduct of the election process and the need to strengthen the enforcement capacity of the national election committee; and the Government's progress in promoting decentralization by strengthening subnational and grassroots institutions, including the local elections planned for 2009.

The Council expressed concern about some areas of human rights practices and urged the Government to: strengthen its efforts to establish the rule of law, especially to ensure the independence, impartiality, transparency and effectiveness of the judicial system; enhance efforts to combat corruption, particularly by enacting and implementing a relevant law; address the problem of impunity and prosecute all those who had perpetrated serious crimes; enhance efforts to resolve land ownership issues by strengthening the capacity of institutions such as the National Authority for Land Dispute Resolution and Cadastral Committees at national, provincial and district levels; continue to improve human rights, especially those of women and children, and to combat key problems such as human trafficking, poverty, sexual violence, domestic violence and sexual exploitation; and promote the rights of all Cambodians by providing political, economic and social freedom. The Council invited the Secretary-General, UN agencies and the international community to provide assistance to Cambodia in drafting laws, strengthening legal institutions, strengthening national institutions for criminal investigation and law enforcement, and assisting assessment of progress in human rights issues. The Council took note of the work of the Special Representative and of the re-engagement of OHCHR with the Government.

Democratic People's Republic of Korea

Communications. In a 30 January letter to the Human Rights Council President [A/HRC/7/G/3], the Democratic People's Republic of Korea (DPRK) reiterated that it opposed and rejected the mandate of the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in the DPRK. It affirmed that the mandate was a product of political confrontation, unjust manipulations, and the politicization of human rights. The DPRK called for the Council to terminate that politicized procedure.

In a 22 February note [A/HRC/7/47] to the Human Rights Council, the High Commissioner said that she had proposed to the DPRK discussions on a future technical assistance programme in the areas of treaty body reporting and ratification of core human rights treaties, and that an OHCHR mission visit the DPRK to explore such possibilities. The DPRK responded that it did not recognize the resolutions adopted by the Council and the General Assembly on the human rights situation in the DPRK, which it found to be selective, politicized and reflecting double standards. The Government was therefore unable to accept the High Commissioner's offer.

Report of Special Rapporteur. In a 15 February report [A/HRC/7/20], the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in the DPRK, Vitit Muntarbhorn (Thailand), said that the country had been in the news during the previous year due to the nuclear issue, which was being dealt with under the umbrella of the six-party talks involving China, the DPRK, Japan, the Republic of Korea, the Russian Federation and the United States. Those talks, at which agreement was reached in February and October 2007 on disabling a nuclear plant in the DPRK, provided an avenue to address some human rights issues. The human rights situation remained grave in a number of areas. The Rapporteur regretted that the authorities had declined his invitation to cooperate with him. On a positive note, the Government was party to four human rights treaties. In addition, following floods in the country in August 2007, it had allowed humanitarian agencies to have greater access to the counties affected by flooding. There was a paucity of data on economic development in the country, but the estimated per capita national income in 2004 was $914, and the growth rate of gross domestic product was estimated at 1 per cent per annum in 2006. Military expenditure was 15.6 per cent. The lack of equity was due to the highly stratified political structure, with a ruling elite who did well and the rest left at the margins in the development process. The economic crisis was illustrated by the rampant shortages of food, which had been a factor since the mid-1990s. The social safety nets that the State had offered in the past were no longer reliable. Civil and political rights were severely constrained due to the repression imposed by the regime, coupled with intimidation and an extensive informant system, creating insecurity among the general population. There was rigid control over the media, and people were not allowed to own mobile phones or computers without permission from the authorities. Access to television and radio programmes was limited. Public executions continued, despite various law reforms in 2004 and 2005. Harsh conditions were imposed by the criminal justice system and torture was committed against people in detention. The authorities had been engaged in abducting nationals of other countries, as Japanese officials had reported to the Rapporteur. The impunity factor had enabled human rights violations to exist for a long time. During the reporting period, the Rapporteur visited Mongolia (15–21 December 2007), Japan (15–19 January) and the Republic of Korea (19–24 January) to assess the impact of the human rights situation in the DPRK on those countries. In Mongolia, there had been an influx of DPRK nationals in search of asylum, and improvements had been made in the facilities sheltering asylum-seekers. Most of them were women and some ended up in exploitative situations, such as forced marriage, before reaching Mongolia, and some had been subjected to human trafficking. In Japan, the Rapporteur discussed the two key challenges facing Japan in relation to the DPRK. In regard to the denuclearization of nuclear facilities, progress had been made in disabling core nuclear facilities at Yongbyon, but not all commitments made at the six-party talks had been met. The abductions issue was also of concern, and 17 Japanese were officially listed as abducted by the DPRK. The Rapporteur called on the DPRK to show a sense of responsibility in addressing the issue of abductions, and he called on the international community to ensure accountability and to influence the country to settle the issue expeditiously. On 4 October 2007, the Republic of Korea and the DPRK adopted the Declaration on the Advancement of South-North Korean Relations, Peace and Prosperity, under which they pledged to cooperate on a variety of issues. Since the Korean war of 1950–1953, the two countries had come together periodically to facilitate the reunion of families separated by the war. There remained the issue of nationals of the Republic of Korea taken as prisoners of war and missing persons taken by the DPRK during and after the war. The Republic of Korea had provided various forms of emergency and humanitarian aid to the DPRK and accepted over 10,000 DPRK nationals for settlement in their search for refuge. The Rapporteur suggested a more comprehensive support system for those who sought refuge.

In his recommendations, the Special Rapporteur called on the DPRK to ensure a more equitable development process; overcome the disparities in access to food and other necessities; modernize its administration of the justice and prison system; help solve the issue of abductions/disappearances; abide by the rule of law; address the root causes leading to refugee outflows; address the problems which gave rise to impunity; and invite the Rapporteur to visit the country to assess the human rights situation. He invited the international community to emphasize the need for participatory and sustainable development in the DPRK while continuing to provide humanitarian aid on the basis that aid had to reach the target groups; respect the rights of refugees, particularly the principle of non-refoulement; maximize dialogue with the DPRK to promote dispute resolution; and ensure a calibrated approach within the United Nations so as to influence the DPRK to respect human rights.

Human Rights Council action. On 27 March [A/63/53 (res. 7/15)], the Human Rights Council, by a recorded vote of 22 to 7, with 18 abstentions, extended the mandate of the Special Rapporteur for one year and invited the Rapporteur to submit regular reports to the Council and the General Assembly. The Council urged the DPRK Government to cooperate fully with the Rapporteur and to respond favourably to his requests to visit the country and to provide him with all necessary information. The Government was urged to ensure safe and unhindered access of humanitarian assistance, delivered impartially on the basis of need.

Further report by Special Rapporteur. The Special Rapporteur, in a 22 August report [A/63/322] transmitted by the Secretary-General to the General Assembly, underlined the systematic nature of human rights transgressions in the country, which were highly visible and substantial. Further progress was made at the six-party talks in July, when the Government agreed to disable its principal nuclear facilities by the end of October and allow on-site inspections as part of the verification process. A cooling tower related to the nuclear reactor at Yongbyon was subsequently demolished. Another development was the resumption of talks between the DPRK and Japan on abducted Japanese nationals, aimed at reopening investigations on unresolved cases. In July, the DPRK acceded to a non-aggression pact with the Association of Southeast Asian Nations. The serious food shortage became more evident in 2008, with reports that millions of people were facing severe deprivations. A new agreement was reached between the authorities and the World Food Programme (WFP) to assist 6.5 million people. WFP reported access to a number of households and county warehouses that had previously been inaccessible, adding that it would need an estimated $500 million in food aid for the next two years to respond to the critical food situation. Following a widespread food security assessment in June, WFP reported that close to three quarters of DPRK households had reduced food intake. In delivering food, the agency was hindered by the Government's requirements of advance notice for planned food monitoring visits, limited access to field operations, and the presence of Government officials during WFP interviews in the field. In the long term, foreign food aid could not replace national food security. In a joint communication of 20 March to the DPRK, the Rapporteur on the human rights situation in the DPRK and other Special Rapporteurs expressed concern about alleged public executions of 15 nationals who were reportedly accused of planning to leave the country to receive economic assistance with the help of relatives living abroad. The DPRK did not reply to a communication of 7 April from the Rapporteur seeking clarification on the whereabouts of 22 DPRK nationals after they reportedly drifted to southern waters in the Western Sea near Yongpyong Island by accident.

The Special Rapporteur reiterated past recommendations to the DPRK and recommended that the country: ensure provision of food and cooperate with UN agencies and others on the issue; end punishment of asylum-seekers returned from abroad; terminate public executions; adopt a policy not to punish those leaving the country without permission; become a party to the conventions of the International Labour Organization and implement them; protect the rights of women, children and other groups; request technical assistance from OHCHR on human rights protection and promotion; and engage with the treaty bodies to which the DPRK was party, with follow-up and access to the country.

Report of Secretary-General. In a 26 August report [A/63/332] on the human rights situation in the DPRK, submitted pursuant to General Assembly resolution 62/167 [YUN 2007, p. 813], the Secretary-General discussed the country's cooperation and status of engagement with international human rights mechanisms such as the treaty bodies, special procedures and the Universal Periodic Review of the Human Rights Council. It outlined the role of OHCHR in assisting the Government in promoting and protecting human rights, and assistance extended by the UN system for promoting and protecting human rights there. The Secretary-General expressed concern at the lack of tangible progress by the Government in addressing the human rights issues raised in the 2007 resolution, and noted that OHCHR had not yet succeeded in engaging the Government in a substantive dialogue on the human rights situation. Regarding the food situation and its impact on the population, the Secretary-General welcomed the Government's efforts to facilitate food aid and promote food sustainability. He advocated the need for it to allocate budget resources and adopt policy measures to alleviate the impact of the food situation, and highlighted the need to prevent discrimination in the distribution of food and health services. The DPRK was urged to sustain cooperation with UN agencies and the international community to support humanitarian efforts. The Secretary-General urged the Government to safeguard fundamental rights and freedoms, fulfil its treaty obligations, comply with international standards, engage in a constructive dialogue with OHCHR, and grant access to the Special Rapporteur. He welcomed the positive developments under the six-party talks and expressed the hope that the United Nations, through gradual cooperation and incremental confidence-building measures, would be able to take on a greater role in helping promote and protect human rights in the country.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December [meeting 71], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee [A/63/430/Add.3 & Corr.1], adopted resolution 63/190 by recorded vote (94-22-63) [agenda item 64 (c)].

Situation of human rights in the Democratic People's Republic of Korea

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming that States Members of the United Nations have an obligation to promote and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms and to fulfil the obligations that they have undertaken under the various international instruments,

Mindful that the Democratic People's Republic of Korea is a party to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the Convention on the Rights of the Child and the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women,

Noting the submission by the Democratic People's Republic of Korea of its combined third and fourth periodic reports on the implementation of the Convention on the Rights of the Child as a sign of engagement in international cooperative efforts in the field of human rights,

Taking note of the concluding observations of the treaty monitoring bodies under the four treaties to which the Democratic People's Republic of Korea is a party, the most recent of which were given by the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women in July 2005,

Noting with appreciation the collaboration established between the Government of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea and the United Nations Children's Fund and the World Health Organization in order to improve the health situation in the country, and the collaboration established with the United Nations Children's Fund in order to improve the quality of education for children, as well as the recent request by the Government of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea to the World Food Programme for increased food assistance and the expanded access and improved working conditions granted,

Noting that the Democratic People's Republic of Korea and the United Nations Development Programme have started consultations regarding possible resumption of the activities of the Programme in the country,

Recalling its resolutions 60/173 of 16 December 2005, 61/174 of 19 December 2006 and 62/167 of 18 December 2007, Commission on Human Rights resolutions 2003/10 of 16 April 2003, 2004/13 of 15 April 2004 and 2005/11 of 14 April 2005, Human Rights Council decision 1/102 of 30 June 2006 and Council resolution 7/15 of 27 March 2008, and mindful of the need for the international community to strengthen its coordinated efforts aimed at achieving the implementation of those resolutions,

Taking note of the report of the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, regretting that he was not allowed to visit the country and that he received no cooperation from the authorities of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, and taking note also of the comprehensive report of the Secretary-General on the situation of human rights in the Democratic People's Republic of Korea submitted in accordance with resolution 62/167,

Noting the importance of the inter-Korean dialogue, which could contribute to the improvement of the human rights and humanitarian situation in the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, including by means of securing access,

1. Expresses its very serious concern at:

(a) The persistence of continuing reports of systematic, widespread and grave violations of civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights in the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, including:

(i) Torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, including inhuman conditions of detention, public executions, extrajudicial and arbitrary detention; the absence of due process and the rule of law, including fair

- trial guarantees and an independent judiciary; the imposition of the death penalty for political and religious reasons; and the existence of a large number of prison camps and the extensive use of forced labour;
- (ii) The situation of refugees and asylum-seekers expelled or returned to the Democratic People's Republic of Korea and sanctions imposed on citizens of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea who have been repatriated from abroad, leading to punishments of internment, torture, cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or the death penalty, and in this regard urges all States to respect the fundamental principle of non-refoulement, to treat those who seek refuge humanely and to ensure unhindered access to the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and his Office, with a view to improving the situation of those who seek refuge;
  - (iii) All-pervasive and severe restrictions on the freedoms of thought, conscience, religion, opinion and expression, peaceful assembly and association, and on equal access to information, by such means as the persecution of individuals exercising their freedom of opinion and expression, and their families;
  - (iv) Limitations imposed on every person who wishes to move freely within the country and travel abroad, including the punishment of those who leave or try to leave the country without permission, or their families, as well as punishment of persons who are returned by other countries;
  - (v) The violations of economic, social and cultural rights, which have led to severe malnutrition, widespread health problems and other hardship for the population in the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, in particular for persons belonging to vulnerable groups, inter alia, women, children and the elderly;
  - (vi) Continuing violation of the human rights and fundamental freedoms of women, in particular the trafficking of women for the purpose of prostitution or forced marriage and the subjection of women to human smuggling, forced abortions, gender-based discrimination and violence;
  - (vii) Continuing reports of violations of the human rights and fundamental freedoms of persons with disabilities, especially on the use of collective camps and of coercive measures that target the rights of persons with disabilities to decide freely and responsibly on the number and spacing of their children;
  - (viii) Violations of workers' rights, including the right to freedom of association and collective bargaining, the right to strike as defined by the obligations of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea under the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, and the prohibition of the economic exploitation of children and of any harmful or hazardous work of children as defined by the obligations of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea under the Convention on the Rights of the Child;
- (b) The continued refusal of the Government of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea to recognize the mandate of the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in the Democratic People's Republic of Korea or to extend cooperation to him, despite the renewal of the mandate by the Human Rights Council in its resolution 7/15;
2. Reiterates its very serious concern at unresolved questions of international concern relating to the abduction of foreigners in the form of enforced disappearance, which violates the human rights of the nationals of other sovereign countries, and in this regard strongly calls upon the Government of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea urgently to resolve these questions, including through existing channels, in a transparent manner, including by ensuring the immediate return of abductees;
3. Expresses its very deep concern, while noting the willingness to seek humanitarian assistance, at the precarious humanitarian situation in the country, compounded by the misallocation of resources away from the satisfaction of basic needs and by frequent natural disasters, in particular the prevalence of maternal malnutrition and of infant malnutrition, which, despite recent progress, continues to affect the physical and mental development of a significant proportion of children, and urges the Government of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, in this regard, to take preventive and remedial action;
4. Commends the Special Rapporteur for the activities undertaken so far and for his continued efforts in the conduct of his mandate despite the limited access to information;
5. Strongly urges the Government of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea to respect fully all human rights and fundamental freedoms and, in this regard:
- (a) To immediately put an end to the systematic, widespread and grave violations of human rights mentioned above, inter alia, by implementing fully the measures set out in the above-mentioned resolutions of the General Assembly, the Commission on Human Rights and the Human Rights Council, and the recommendations addressed to the Democratic People's Republic of Korea by the United Nations special procedures and treaty bodies;
  - (b) To protect its inhabitants, address the issue of impunity and ensure that those responsible for violations of human rights are brought to justice before an independent judiciary;
  - (c) To tackle the root causes leading to refugee outflows and prosecute those who exploit refugees by human smuggling, trafficking and extortion, while not criminalizing the victims, and to ensure that citizens of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea expelled or returned to the Democratic People's Republic of Korea are able to return in safety and dignity, are humanely treated and are not subjected to any kind of punishment;
  - (d) To extend its full cooperation to the Special Rapporteur, including by granting him full, free and unimpeded access to the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, and to other United Nations human rights mechanisms;
  - (e) To engage in technical cooperation activities in the field of human rights with the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and her Office, as pursued by the High Commissioner in recent years, with a view to improving the situation of human rights in the country, and to prepare for the universal periodic review of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea by the Human Rights Council, which will be conducted in 2009;

(f) To engage in cooperation with the International Labour Organization with a view to significantly improving workers' rights;

(g) To continue and reinforce its cooperation with United Nations humanitarian agencies;

(h) To ensure full, safe and unhindered access to humanitarian aid and take measures to allow humanitarian agencies to secure its impartial delivery to all parts of the country on the basis of need in accordance with humanitarian principles, as it pledged to do, and to ensure access to adequate food and implement food security policies, including through sustainable agriculture;

6. Decides to continue its examination of the situation of human rights in the Democratic People's Republic of Korea at its sixty-fourth session, and to this end requests the Secretary-General to submit a comprehensive report on the situation in the Democratic People's Republic of Korea and the Special Rapporteur to continue to report his findings and recommendations.

Iran

Report of Secretary-General. In a 1 October report [A/63/459] submitted to the General Assembly

pursuant to resolution 62/168 [YUN 2007, p. 815], the Secretary-General described the situation of human rights in Iran. The report was intended to reflect the broader patterns and trends in the human rights situation in Iran on the basis of that country's international treaty obligations and the observations made by treaty monitoring bodies and the special procedures of the Human Rights Council. It reviewed the legal and institutional framework; positive developments as well as protection gaps in economic, social and cultural rights; thematic issues in civil and political rights identified in the Assembly resolution, in particular concerns raised by the international human rights mechanisms; and an overview of the country's cooperation with OHCHR and international human rights mechanisms, including in the areas of treaty ratification and reporting and interaction with the special procedures, including in-country missions. While the 1979 Constitution guaranteed a wide range of human rights and fundamental freedoms, in practice there were a number of impediments to the full protection of human rights and the independent functioning of the different institutions of the State. Iran had made gains over the previous decade or more in economic, social and cultural rights, although significant disparities remained between urban centres and less developed regions. Its per capita income had increased, improvements had been made in education, and health care had been expanded. Human rights activists had increased their activities. The authorities had taken some steps to address discriminatory laws and restrict aspects of the death penalty. Among negative trends was an increase in rights violations targeting women, university students, teachers, workers and activist groups. The independent media had experienced tightened restrictions. The death penalty continued to be widely applied, and there were some cases of stoning and public execution despite moves by the authorities to curb such practices. Cases of flogging and amputation and suspicious deaths and suicides of prisoners in custody were also reported.

The Secretary-General encouraged the Government to address the concerns highlighted in the report and to continue to revise national laws, particularly the new Penal Code and juvenile justice laws, to ensure compliance with international human rights standards and prevent discriminatory practices against women, ethnic and religious minorities and other minority groups. The Secretary-General noted the positive achievements of Iran against many economic and social indicators and encouraged the Government to address regional disparities in the enjoyment of rights. He welcomed the Government's steps to explore cooperation on human rights and justice reform with the United Nations, including OHCHR. He encouraged Iran to ratify major international human rights treaties and to withdraw the general reservations it had made on the signature and ratification of various treaties. The Secretary-General hoped that Iran would finalize its long-outstanding periodic reports under human rights treaties to allow a systematic review of progress in implementing the related obligations. He welcomed the Government's standing invitation to the Human Rights Council special procedures mandate holders and encouraged the Government to facilitate their visits to the country in order that they might conduct more comprehensive assessments.

Communication. In a 3 November letter to the Secretary-General [A/C.3/63/6], Iran transmitted an account of its policies and practices on promoting and protecting human rights. Outlining the human rights enshrined in its Constitution, Iran stated that the rules and principles of its judicial system were equally applicable to all individuals irrespective of gender, religion or ethnicity. Those principles included the rule of law; independence of the judiciary; presumption of innocence unless guilt had been established by a competent court; the right to open trials unless the trial would be detrimental to public morality; the right to a jury trial for political and press offences; and the right to defence counsel. In addition, Iran had many laws promoting political and civil rights and had taken practical steps to implement them. It also provided for the economic, social and cultural rights of the people. In addition to having its own national human rights institutions, Iran cooperated with international human rights mechanisms and with UN treaty bodies. Iran was making unprecedented strides into the new historical stage of democracy, prosperity and the rule of law. The Government had accorded priority to human rights promotion and protection and had undertaken all necessary measures to ensure the enjoyment of all human rights.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December [meeting 71], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/63/430/Add.3 & Corr.1], adopted resolution 63/191 by recorded vote (69-54-57) [agenda item 64 (c)].

Situation of human rights in the Islamic Republic of Iran

The General Assembly,

Guided by the Charter of the United Nations, as well as the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights and other international human rights instruments,

Recalling its previous resolutions on the situation of human rights in the Islamic Republic of Iran, the most recent of which is resolution 62/168 of 18 December 2007,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General submitted pursuant to its resolution 62/168, which highlights a broad range of serious human rights violations, legal and institutional gaps and impediments to the protection of human rights and which discusses some positive developments in a few areas;

2. Expresses its deep concern at serious human rights violations in the Islamic Republic of Iran relating to, inter alia:

(a) Torture and cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, including flogging and amputations;

(b) The continuing high incidence of executions carried out in the absence of internationally recognized safeguards, including public executions and executions of juveniles;

(c) Persons in prison who continue to face sentences of execution by stoning;

(d) Arrests, violent repression and sentencing of women exercising their right to peaceful assembly, a campaign of intimidation against women's human rights defenders, and continuing discrimination against women and girls in law and in practice;

(e) Increasing discrimination and other human rights violations against persons belonging to religious, ethnic, linguistic or other minorities, recognized or otherwise, including, inter alia, Arabs, Azeris, Baluchis, Kurds, Christians, Jews, Sufis and Sunni Muslims and their defenders, and, in particular, attacks on Baha'is and their faith in State-sponsored media, increasing evidence of efforts by the State to identify and monitor Baha'is, preventing members of the Baha'i faith from attending university and from sustaining themselves economically, and the arrest and detention of seven Baha'i leaders without charge or access to legal representation;

(f) Ongoing, systemic and serious restrictions of freedom of peaceful assembly and association and freedom of opinion and expression, including those imposed on the media, Internet users and trade unions, and increasing harassment, intimidation and persecution of political opponents and human rights defenders from all sectors of Iranian society, including arrests and violent repression of labour leaders, labour members peacefully assembling and students, in particular with regard to the 2008 Majles electoral process;

(g) Severe limitations and restrictions on freedom of religion and belief, including the provision in the proposed draft penal code that sets out a mandatory death sentence for apostasy;

(h) Persistent failure to uphold due process of law rights, and violation of the rights of detainees, including the systematic and arbitrary use of prolonged solitary confinement;

3. Calls upon the Government of the Islamic Republic of Iran to address the substantive concerns highlighted in the report of the Secretary-General and the specific calls to action found in previous resolutions of the General Assembly, and to respect fully its human rights obligations, in law and in practice, in particular:

(a) To eliminate, in law and in practice, amputations, flogging and other forms of torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment;

(b) To abolish, in law and in practice, public executions and other executions carried out in the absence of respect for internationally recognized safeguards;

(c) To abolish, pursuant to its obligations under article 37 of the Convention on the Rights of the Child and article 6 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, executions of persons who at the time of their offence were under the age of 18;

(d) To abolish the use of stoning as a method of execution;

(e) To eliminate, in law and in practice, all forms of discrimination and other human rights violations against women and girls;

(f) To eliminate, in law and in practice, all forms of discrimination and other human rights violations against persons belonging to religious, ethnic, linguistic or other minorities, recognized or otherwise, to refrain from monitoring individuals on the basis of their religious beliefs, and to ensure that access of minorities to education and employment is on par with that of all Iranians;

(g) To implement, inter alia, the 1996 report of the Special Rapporteur on religious intolerance, which recommended ways in which the Islamic Republic of Iran could emancipate the Baha'i community;

(h) To end the harassment, intimidation and persecution of political opponents and human rights defenders, including by releasing persons imprisoned arbitrarily or on the basis of their political views;

(i) To uphold due process of law rights and to end impunity for human rights violations;

4. Notes the positive, though limited, gains, developments and steps discussed in the report of the Secretary-General, but remains concerned that many such steps have yet to be implemented in law or in practice;

5. Further calls upon the Government of the Islamic Republic of Iran to redress its inadequate record of co-operation with international human rights mechanisms by, inter alia, reporting pursuant to its obligations to the treaty bodies of the instruments to which it is a party and cooperating fully with all international human rights mechanisms, including facilitating visits to its territory of special procedures mandate holders, and encourages the Government of the Islamic Republic of Iran to continue exploring cooperation on human rights and justice reform with the United Nations, including the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights;

6. Requests an update from the Secretary-General on the situation of human rights in the Islamic Republic of Iran, including its cooperation with international human rights mechanisms, at its sixty-fourth session;

7. Decides to continue its examination of the situation of human rights in the Islamic Republic of Iran at its sixty-fourth session under the item entitled "Promotion and protection of human rights".

Myanmar

Reports of Special Rapporteur. The Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in Myanmar, Paulo Sérgio Pinheiro (Brazil), issued two reports on 7 March. In the first report [A/HRC/7/18], submitted in accordance with Human Rights Council resolution S-5/1 [YUN 2007, p. 663], the Rapporteur focused on the main patterns of human rights violations committed from February 2007 to February 2008. Having been denied permission by the Government to visit the country between November 2003 and November 2007, the Rapporteur was invited to conduct a five-day mission in November 2007 [ibid., p. 818], after which he reported to the Council; however, he was not permitted to return for a follow-up mission as the Council had requested. On the basis of independent and reliable sources, he reported that changes were taking place in the country as a result of political and economic developments, including the planned adoption of a new Constitution that would redefine the political structures. The Government announced on 9 February that it would hold a referendum on the new Constitution in May 2008 and multi-party democratic elections in 2010. The Special Rapporteur joined the Secretary-General in his call to the authorities to engage in a dialogue with the General Secretary of the National League for Democracy (NLD), Daw Aung San Suu Kyi, and other relevant parties to the national reconciliation process. Despite the declaration of good intentions, the detention of political opposition leaders continued. In October 2007, there were allegations of the use of force on citizens to participate in pro-Government rallies in support of the constitutional process. In November 2007, the authorities informed the Rapporteur that a 20-member human rights group had been established. According to reports, there were marked signs of deterioration in the economic and social sector in such areas as food supply, health services and education. There continued to be some reports of forced labour, mostly by local authorities for public infrastructure work. The authorities continued to impose restrictions on the freedoms of movement, expression, association and assembly. A culture of non-accountability in human rights violations obstructed the rule of law and the administration of justice, and the judiciary provided a legal basis for abuses of power and exoneration for those responsible for violations. Under vaguely worded security laws, the authorities for years had justified the imprisonment of hundreds on the basis that they were causing "unrest". Access to and control over land and natural resources had been central to the political economy, and in many areas populated by ethnic minorities, forced displacement had been a fact of life for generations. The majority of new incidents of internal displacement and forced migration were concentrated in north-east Karen State and adjacent areas of Pegu Division, which were still subject to armed conflict. In October 2007, sources estimated the number of internally displaced persons in eastern Myanmar to be 503,000, including 295,000 people in ceasefire zones, 99,000 hiding in the jungle and 109,000 elsewhere in Myanmar. The Rapporteur was concerned about the intensified military campaigns in ethnic areas and their impact on the humanitarian and human rights situation. That situation was connected with the widespread practice of land confiscation throughout the country, seemingly aimed at anchoring military control, especially in ethnic areas. It had led to forced evictions, relocations and resettlements, forced migration and internal displacement. Many ethnic minorities living along areas bordering Thailand were vulnerable; most armed ethnic groups had either agreed to ceasefires with the Government or been reduced to exhausted remnants in the jungle. As at 15 February, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees estimated the population of refugees from Myanmar in Thailand at 130,241. In Karen State, over 40,000 villagers had reportedly been internally displaced and thousands rendered homeless due to an increased army presence. In the northern Rakhine State (Arakan), Sunni Muslim returnees were subjected to political, economic, religious and social repression. The estimated 728,000 Muslim residents had been denied citizenship under the 1982 citizenship law, effectively rendering them stateless. The Government had included Muslim residents as part of its national documentation programme, initially providing 35,000 persons in northern Arakan State with identity documents (temporary registration certificates). While noting the importance of that process, the Rapporteur expressed concern that the certificates could not be used to claim citizenship, nor could they be seen as a long-term solution. He encouraged the Government to change its citizenship law. Concern was also expressed at recent reports of human rights violations in Kayin State, including killings, attacks on civilians and forced displacement.

In his recommendations, the Special Rapporteur called on the Government to: release all political prisoners at risk; resume dialogue with all political actors, with a view to including their contribution to drafting a new Constitution; secure the rights of freedom of opinion and expression, and peaceful association; end the prosecution of political and human rights activists; eliminate discriminatory practices against ethnic groups; seek international technical assistance in establishing an independent judiciary; improve prison conditions; authorize access to conflict-affected areas by the United Nations and associated personnel; put an end to the recruitment of child soldiers; and end impunity of officials who committed human rights abuses. The international community was called on to provide humanitarian assistance and support for health, education and human rights, and to engage in dialogue with the Government on an adequate response to the conflict situation in eastern Myanmar.

In his second report of 7 March [A/HRC/7/24], submitted in response to a Human Rights Council request in 2007 [ibid., p. 819], the Special Rapporteur, following up on his report on the human rights implications of the crackdown on the peaceful demonstrations in Myanmar in September 2007 [ibid., p. 818], covered the period from December 2007 to March 2008. Following the demonstrations, thousands of people were arrested in September and October, and between 500 and 1,000 were still being detained by the end of the year. There were reports of an ongoing trend to arrest individuals who had any relation with the organization of the demonstrations, and of State surveillance of monasteries and monks, many of whom had participated in the demonstrations. On 4 December, the Rapporteur transmitted to the Government a letter containing three lists—of those believed to be detained (653), killed (16 in addition to the names of 15 dead provided by the authorities) or disappeared (75), and requested information on their cases. No information was received. Some 70 individuals were reportedly arrested between 15 November 2007 and 18 February 2008 in connection with their involvement with the demonstrations, and 62 were reportedly still detained at the time of the report. Freedom of expression had been further curtailed, as seen by the arrest of journalists and the banning of media. The Rapporteur received information regarding the arrests and searching of activists. He had received the names of 718 individuals arrested between August 2007 and February 2008 who were still being detained, including the 93 individuals confirmed by the Government during the Rapporteur's mission in November 2007. The arrests ongoing since September 2007 had reportedly not been carried out in accordance with the criminal procedure. A number of people had reportedly been arrested without warrant and detained in unknown locations. After interrogation, some had been released and some sent to prison in Yangon and charged. At the time of the report, 145 detainees had been charged under various laws, while others were being unlawfully detained. The Rapporteur took note of 75 persons who were reported missing by a number of sources and were still unaccounted for. Detention conditions in Yangon's Insein prison remained appalling. The International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) had been denied access to detention centres.

Among his recommendations, the Special Rapporteur called on the Government to secure the physical and psychological integrity of all persons in custody; reveal the whereabouts of those detained or missing; provide information to the families of the deceased; bring the perpetrators of human rights violations to justice; ensure access by ICRC and other humanitarian personnel to all detainees; release all persons taken into custody for peaceful assembly or peaceful expression of political beliefs; grant amnesty to people sentenced for such charges; conduct an independent investigation into cases of killings, beatings, hostage-taking, torture and disappearance; ban militias as illegal groups; engage in a constructive dialogue with the Human Rights Council and its special procedures, especially the Rapporteur; and ensure a follow-up mission of the Rapporteur to further investigate the September events. Other recommendations concerned transitional measures for the Government: opening a channel for follow-up communications and cooperation with the Rapporteur and provision for regular access to Myanmar; the release of all political prisoners under a plan of action; pursuit of dialogue with Daw Aung San Suu Kyi through Government officials; repeal or amendment of laws in relation to the rights of peaceful assembly, freedom of expression, freedom of movement, and prison regulations; and seeking technical assistance to repeal or amend the Penal Code and Code of Criminal Procedure, and to review the rules governing the policing of demonstrations.

Communication. In a 10 March note [A/HRC/7/G/8] to the Human Rights Council, Myanmar commented on the Rapporteur's two latest reports on the country's human rights situation (see above), both of which it viewed as intrusive, highly politicized and strident. The Government found the reports neither balanced nor objective; they contained many unfounded allegations originating from insurgents and anti-Government groups. Myanmar had adopted a seven-step road map to democracy in 2003, which had been initiated in 2004 with the holding of the National Convention, an all-inclusive forum. As at 30 January, the Minister for Relations had held five meetings with Daw Aung San Suu Kyi. Thus, Myanmar was moving towards a new democratic society. Despite those achievements, the Rapporteur had been critical of the road map and political progress, thus acting beyond his mandate. Myanmar described its recent efforts in economic and social development, health, education, and reducing forced labour, and claimed that many of the allegations concerning denial of freedom of association and expression, lack of independence in the judicial system, sexual violence against women, repression of displaced persons, and forced evictions and migrations were untrue.

Human Rights Council action. On 28 March [A/63/53 (res. 7/31)], the Council, deploring the ongoing systematic violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms of the people of Myanmar, urged the Government to receive a follow-up mission by the Rapporteur, to cooperate with him, and to implement his recommendations. It called on the authorities to: make the constitutional process fully inclusive, participatory and transparent; engage in a national dialogue with all parties with a view to achieving national reconciliation, democratization and the establishment of the rule of law; ensure basic freedoms and desist from further denial of freedoms such as expression, assembly and religion; cooperate with humanitarian organizations and ensure their access to persons in need; end violations of human rights and humanitarian law, including forced displacement and arbitrary detention; and release all political prisoners. The Council also requested the Rapporteur to report on the implementation of its 2007 resolutions [YUN 2007, pp. 818 & 819] at its next session.

Also on 28 March [A/63/53 (res. 7/32)], the Council extended the Special Rapporteur's mandate for one year and requested the Rapporteur to report to the Council and the General Assembly.

Report of Special Rapporteur. On 26 March, Tomás Ojea Quintana (Argentina) was appointed as the new Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in Myanmar; he assumed the function on 1 May. As requested by the Council, he issued a 3 June report [A/HRC/8/12], which focused on the human rights issues pertinent to the constitutional process, developments with regard to the crackdown on the 2007 demonstrations, and the human rights impact of Cyclone Nargis, which struck Myanmar on 2 and 3 May, killing more than 77,000 people. On 19 February, the finalization of the draft Constitution, the fourth step in the Government's seven-step road map to democracy, was announced; a referendum on its adoption was scheduled for 10 May, and multi-party democratic elections for 2010. The people of Myanmar had not voted since 1990. Copies of the 457-article draft Constitution were made public on 9 April and put on sale in bookshops for $1 a copy, a price that was reportedly unaffordable for a significant proportion of the population. Rejecting the recommendation of the Special Adviser, Ibrahim Gambari, Myanmar declined to invite international observers for the referendum. The Government decided to go ahead as scheduled, except in 40 towns in Yangon Division and 7 towns in Irrawaddy Division, devastated by the cyclone, where the referendum would be held on 24 May. Before those 47 towns voted, the Government announced that the draft Constitution had been approved by 92.4 per cent of the 22 million eligible voters. The NLD, under the leadership of General Secretary Daw Aung San Suu Kyi, dismissed the referendum, stating that it was not inclusive and was unclear. The lack of participation in the drafting process, the small degree of transparency, the limited public knowledge about its contents, and the conditions under which the referendum was held all raised concerns. The Rapporteur received allegations regarding the arrest, detention and charges against individuals who had expressed opposition to the referendum and draft Constitution, particularly in Yangon and Mandalay. The reported number of political prisoners as at 20 May was 1,900. Detention conditions in prisons were appalling. Daw Aung San Suu Kyi, having been charged in 2003 with acts against peace and order and making speeches against the Government, remained under house arrest.

The Special Rapporteur concluded that no improvement had been made and critical issues still had to be addressed. In addition to recommendations made by the previous Rapporteur, he called on Myanmar to: set up a mechanism to establish the whereabouts of those reportedly subjected to forced disappearance during and after the crackdown of September 2007; prepare a public report on how the referendum was conducted and the lessons learned; continue to uphold the agreements made by the Secretary-General to allow international humanitarian workers and supplies unhindered access to the country and particularly to the areas affected by Cyclone Nargis; and cooperate with the Rapporteur, accepting his requests for visits.

Human Rights Council action. On 18 June [A/63/53 (res. 8/14)], the Council, condemning the systematic violations of human rights of the people of Myanmar, urged the Government to desist from further politically motivated arrests and release all political prisoners. It called on the Government to implement commitments it had made to the Secretary-General on granting access by relief workers to all those in need; to cooperate with humanitarian organizations, in particular in the Irrawaddy Delta; to refrain from sending people back to areas where they could not have access to emergency relief; and to ensure that return was voluntary. The Government was urged to end discrimination and protect civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights, and, in particular, to comply with its human rights obligations under international conventions in regard to women and children. The Council condemned the recruitment of child soldiers into Government armed forces and armed groups, and it called for an independent investigation into all reports of human rights violations. It called on the Government to engage in a real process of dialogue and national reconciliation with the participation of representatives of all parties and ethnic groups who had been excluded from the political process. The Council urged the Government to receive the Rapporteur and to cooperate fully with him, and requested the Rapporteur to report on the fulfilment of his mandate.

Report of Special Rapporteur. By a 5 September note [A/63/341], the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly the report of the Rapporteur, in accordance with resolution 62/222 [YUN 2007, p. 819]. Having requested a visit to Myanmar from 3 to 13 August, the Rapporteur received a response from the Government that he was invited to undertake a mission from 3 to 7 August. He considered the visit to be fruitful, since the objective was to establish positive working relations with the authorities and meet with civil society and with those who did not enjoy fundamental rights. Since Myanmar had conducted the referendum on the new Constitution, the next step in the road map for national reconciliation and democratic transition was the election in 2010. During his visit, the Rapporteur was informed by the Commission for Holding the Referendum that free campaigning either in favour or against the approval of the Constitution was not permitted. When he asked about the possibility of the Government issuing a report on how the referendum had been held, as recommended in his report to the Human Rights Council, the response was that all relevant information had already been released. The prospect of the country becoming a democratic State would depend on each of the remaining steps of the road map being conducted in a democratic and inclusive manner. The Rapporteur, noting that a number of domestic laws did not comply with constitutional provisions, called for the revision of such laws. The Rapporteur received reliable reports of new arrests of political and civil rights activists. As at 10 August, some 2,000 such activists were in detention. Provisions of the law on the referendum had called into question the openness of the environment in which the referendum was held, given the fact that opposition to the referendum was proscribed. In the lead-up to the 2010 election, a number of legal reforms were required for a genuine democratic election, such as ways to guarantee respect for the anonymity of voters, free campaigning by candidates and free access by voters to information. The situation of NLD General Secretary Daw Aung San Suu Kyi was a matter of concern, as the Government in May extended her house arrest beyond the five-year limit provided for by law, with no new evidence against her. In his meetings with relevant authorities, the Rapporteur reiterated the right to legal counsel. He noted that thereafter, she met with her lawyer after five years, and reportedly met her lawyer again to discuss a lawsuit against her continuing detention. During his mission, the Rapporteur met with a number of activists, and he received allegations that proceedings against prisoners of conscience did not respect basic guarantees such as the right to counsel, and that courts lacked independence and impartiality. There were still 700 individuals detained as a consequence of the crackdown on the September 2007 demonstrations. Accountability for those human rights violations was still pending, demonstrating the vulnerability of the freedoms of opinion, expression and peaceful assembly. The protection of civilians and ethnic minorities remained a concern. Information was received concerning a large number of internally displaced persons in northern Kayin State, as well as allegations about civilians being forcibly used by the military as porters, and violence against unarmed civilians. As at July, the population of refugees from Myanmar in Thailand was estimated at 131,000. Concern was also expressed about the situation of a Muslim community in the border area of Northern Rakhine State that had been deprived of citizenship. As a result of Cyclone Nargis in May, human rights problems arose related to internally displaced persons and their access to food, shelter, health care, water and sanitation facilities. Malnutrition remained a problem and the rate for children was 32 per cent. The Rapporteur continued to receive allegations of arbitrary land confiscation throughout the country.

In his recommendations to the Government, the Special Rapporteur proposed four core human rights elements to pave the road to democracy: a review of national legislation in accordance with the new Constitution and international obligations; a progressive release of prisoners of conscience; a transition from a rule by armed forces to governance by a multiparty democratic and civil government; and an independent and impartial judiciary.

Report of Secretary-General. The Secretary-General, having designated his Special Adviser, Ibrahim Gambari, to continue his good offices in promoting national reconciliation in Myanmar on his behalf (see p. 421), reported on 17 September

[A/63/356] on the human rights situation, pursuant to General Assembly resolution 62/222 [YUN 2007, p. 819]. The Special Adviser visited Myanmar three times—in November 2007 and in March and August 2008—and engaged with representatives of the Government and the opposition on reconciliation, restoration of democracy and respect for human rights. His efforts focused on five key areas: the release of all political prisoners, including Daw Aung San Suu Kyi; the need for a substantive and time-bound dialogue; an inclusive political transition to civilian and democratic government; avenues for improving socio-economic conditions; and ways to regularize mutual engagement and cooperation through the good offices process. The Secretary-General described the good offices as a process that required sustained engagement through regular visits and consultations with all concerned on political, human rights, humanitarian and socio-economic issues. The international community needed to work together in support of the goals of the good offices. The report mentioned the five meetings of Daw Aung San Suu Kyi with the Minister for Relations between November 2007 and January 2008—the first attempt at a dialogue between her and the Government since 2003. In addition, for the first time in four years, she was allowed to meet twice with the Central Executive Committee of NLD. However, by March those meetings had been discontinued. In the wake of Cyclone Nargis, following which an estimated 140,000 people were believed to be dead or missing, the Secretary-General visited Myanmar on 22 and 23 May. Following his discussions with Government officials, access for international aid workers was facilitated after Myanmar's initial reluctance to grant access. The Secretary-General and the Special Adviser had emphasized that only a credible and inclusive political process could advance the prospects of durable peace, national reconciliation, democracy and respect for human rights. In that regard, the Secretary-General welcomed the support of neighbouring countries and the Association of Southeast Asian Nations for his good offices and the work of his Special Adviser. While the spirit of cooperation between Myanmar and the United Nations had been marked by improvement in recent months, it remained a source of frustration that meaningful steps with tangible results had yet to be taken by the authorities in response to the concerns and expectations of the United Nations and the international community in the context of the good offices process. In particular, concern was expressed that the international community had not been involved in monitoring the referendum vote, nor had the Government considered the proposal to establish a broad-based national economic forum. The fact that Daw Aung San Suu Kyi did not meet with the Special Adviser during his August visit, as arranged by the Government, was a source of disappointment, although the Special Adviser did meet with the NLD Central Executive Committee. On 23 September, the Government announced the amnesty release of a number of prisoners, including several political prisoners, notably Myanmar's longest-serving prisoner of conscience, U Win Tin, and other senior NLD members. Although the Government had reached ceasefire agreements with most armed ethnic groups, those agreements had not yet been finalized to meet political and socio-economic aspirations, including formalizing disarmament plans and ensuring the full participation of ethnic nationality representatives in the national political process. Ultimately, the future of Myanmar rested with the Government and people, while the UN role was to ascertain the positions of all parties and facilitate their efforts to work together towards a mutually acceptable process of national reconciliation and democratization, in full respect of Myanmar's sovereignty. It was time for the Government and opposition alike to find ways to talk to each other and work together in the interest of the nation.

Communication. On 17 October [A/C.3/63/4], Myanmar transmitted to the Secretary-General a memorandum on the human rights situation. Outlining some political background and recent developments, Myanmar presented statistics on the relief efforts in the aftermath of Cyclone Nargis, as well as the results of the referendum on the Constitution. It listed recent visits by senior UN officials and stressed that it had consistently cooperated with the United Nations in various fields, including human rights. Myanmar asserted that although it had attempted to arrange a meeting between the Special Adviser and Daw Aung San Suu Kyi, she had refused to meet him. Myanmar continued to promote human rights, and it accorded priority to the right to development. It had long been a victim of a systematic disinformation campaign launched by anti-Government elements, funded by their foreign supporters. Myanmar described its efforts to combat and refute allegations regarding internally displaced persons, child soldiers, trafficking in persons, violence against women, forced labour and religious intolerance. It protested sanctions imposed against the country, which it said were unwarranted, unfair and immoral, as well as counter-productive. Myanmar, home to over 100 national races, felt that national unity was of paramount importance and therefore it was pursuing a policy of national reconciliation. Its efforts had resulted in the return to the legal fold of 17 armed groups, and peace and stability prevailed in almost all parts of the country. Those conditions had led to economic and social progress, and the country was proceeding on its chosen path towards democracy.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 24 December [meeting 74], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/63/430/Add.3 & Corr.1], adopted resolution 63/245 by recorded vote (80-25-45) [agenda item 64 (c)].

Situation of human rights in Myanmar

The General Assembly,

Guided by the Charter of the United Nations and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, and recalling the International Covenants on Human Rights and other relevant human rights instruments,

Reaffirming that all Member States have an obligation to promote and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms and the duty to fulfil the obligations they have undertaken under the various international instruments in this field,

Reaffirming also its previous resolutions on the situation of human rights in Myanmar, the most recent of which is resolution 62/222 of 22 December 2007, those of the Commission on Human Rights, and Human Rights Council resolutions S-5/1 of 2 October 2007, 6/33 of 14 December 2007, 7/31 of 28 March 2008 and 8/14 of 18 June 2008,

Welcoming the statements made by the President of the Security Council on 11 October 2007 and 2 May 2008,

Welcoming also the reports of the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in Myanmar and his oral presentations, as well as the agreement by the Government of Myanmar to the visit of the Special Rapporteur, for the first time in four years, in November 2007 and then again in August 2008 soon after the appointment of the new Special Rapporteur, and encouraging the continuation of such visits, welcoming further the report of the Secretary-General and his designation of a Special Adviser on Myanmar to continue to pursue the mandate of good offices, and affirming its full support for this mission,

Taking note of the cooperation of the Government of Myanmar with the international community, including the United Nations, in delivering humanitarian assistance to the people affected by Cyclone Nargis despite its initial denial of access, which resulted in widespread suffering and increased the risk of loss of lives, and calling upon the Government of Myanmar, in the interest of the people of Myanmar, to cooperate on humanitarian access in all other areas of the country where the United Nations, other international humanitarian organizations and their partners continue to experience difficulties in delivering assistance to persons in need,

Calling upon the Government of Myanmar to cooperate with the international community in order to achieve concrete progress in areas such as human rights and political processes leading to a genuine democratic transition through concrete measures,

Deeply concerned that the urgent calls contained in the above-mentioned resolutions, as well as the statements of other United Nations bodies concerning the situation of human rights in Myanmar, have not been met, and emphasizing that, without significant progress towards meeting these calls of the international community, the situation of human rights in Myanmar will continue to deteriorate,

1. Strongly condemns the ongoing systematic violations of civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights of the people of Myanmar, as described in resolution 62/222 and the previous resolutions of the General Assembly, the Commission on Human Rights and the Human Rights Council;

2. Expresses grave concern, in particular, at:

(a) The continuing practice of enforced disappearances, use of violence against peaceful demonstrators, rape and other forms of sexual violence, torture and cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment, arbitrary detentions, including those that resulted from the repression of peaceful protests in 2007, the extension, once again, of the house arrest of the General Secretary of the National League for Democracy, Daw Aung San Suu Kyi, as well as the high and increasing number of political prisoners, including other political leaders, persons belonging to ethnic nationalities and human rights defenders, despite the recent release of a small number of them, including U Win Tin;

(b) The continuing imposition of severe restrictions on the exercise of fundamental freedoms such as the freedom of movement, expression, association and assembly, in particular the lack of an independent judiciary and the use of censorship;

(c) The major and repeated violations of international humanitarian law committed against civilians;

(d) The continuing discrimination and violations suffered by persons belonging to ethnic nationalities of Myanmar, and attacks by military forces and non-State armed groups on villages in Karen State and other ethnic States in Myanmar, leading to extensive forced displacements and serious violations and other abuses of the human rights of the affected populations;

(e) The absence of effective and genuine participation of the representatives of the National League for Democracy and other political parties and some ethnic groups in a genuine process of dialogue, national reconciliation and transition to democracy; the fact that the country's political processes are not transparent, inclusive, free and fair, and that the procedures established for the drafting of the constitution resulted in the de facto exclusion of the opposition from the process; and the decision of the Government of Myanmar to proceed with the constitutional referendum in an atmosphere of intimidation and without regard to international standards of free and fair elections at a time of dire humanitarian need;

(f) Forced labour and forced displacement, as well as the continuous deterioration of the living conditions and the increase of poverty affecting a significant part of the population throughout the country, with serious consequences for the enjoyment of their economic, social and cultural rights;

(g) The climate of impunity due to the fact that perpetrators of human rights violations and abuses are not brought to justice, thereby denying the victims any effective remedy;

3. Welcomes:

(a) The visits to Myanmar of the Special Adviser to the Secretary-General on Myanmar, and expresses appreciation for the work of the good offices mission of the Secretary-General but notes only limited cooperation by the Government of Myanmar with this mission in 2008;

(b) The progress report presented by the Government of Myanmar and the steps taken so far, though limited, in implementing the supplementary understanding between the International Labour Organization and the Government of Myanmar signed in 2007 and designed to provide a mechanism to enable victims of forced labour to seek redress;

(c) The submission by the Government of Myanmar of its third periodic report on the implementation of the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women;

(d) The progress reported on the work conducted by the Government of Myanmar and international humanitarian entities on HIV/AIDS and avian influenza;

(e) The establishment of the Group of Friends of the Secretary-General on Myanmar, calls upon the Group to facilitate the work of the good offices mission of the Secretary-General, including by assisting with the preparation of his visits and by urging the Government of Myanmar to cooperate fully with the mission, and encourages the Group to do its utmost to encourage the Government to respect human rights and allow a peaceful transition to democracy;

(f) The role played by countries neighbouring Myanmar and members of the Association of Southeast Asian Nations in support of the good offices mission of the Secretary-General, and encourages the continuation and intensification of efforts in this regard;

(g) The constructive role played by the Association of Southeast Asian Nations and the United Nations in working with the Government of Myanmar to respond to the humanitarian crisis caused by Cyclone Nargis;

4. Strongly calls upon the Government of Myanmar:

(a) To ensure full respect for all human rights and fundamental freedoms, including by ending restrictions on these freedoms that are incompatible with the obligations of the Government of Myanmar under international human rights law, and to protect the inhabitants of the country;

(b) To allow a full, transparent, effective, impartial and independent investigation, primarily by the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in Myanmar, into all reports of human rights violations, including enforced disappearances, use of violence against peaceful demonstrators, arbitrary detentions, torture and cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment, rape and other forms of sexual violence, forced labour and forced displacement, and to bring those responsible to justice in order to end impunity for violations of human rights;

(c) To reveal the whereabouts of persons who are detained or missing or who have been subjected to enforced disappearance;

(d) To seize the opportunity of the good offices of the Secretary-General and to cooperate fully with the good offices mission in the fulfilment of its responsibilities as mandated by the General Assembly, namely, the release of political prisoners and the commencement of a substantive dialogue on democratic transition; such cooperation shall include facilitating the visits of the Special Adviser to the country, allowing him unrestricted access to all relevant parties, including the highest level of leadership within the regime, human rights defenders, representatives of ethnic minorities, student leaders and other opposition groups, and engaging in a genuine and fruitful process aimed at achieving tangible progress towards democratic reform and full respect for human rights;

(e) To fully implement previous recommendations of the Special Rapporteur, the General Assembly, the Human Rights Council, the Commission on Human Rights, the International Labour Organization and other United Nations bodies;

(f) To desist from further politically motivated arrests and to release without delay and without conditions those who have been arbitrarily arrested and detained, as well as all political prisoners, including Daw Aung San Suu Kyi, other leaders of the National League for Democracy, "88 Generation" group leaders, ethnic group leaders and all those detained as the result of the protests which took place in September 2007;

(g) To lift all restraints on the peaceful political activity of all persons by, inter alia, guaranteeing freedom of peaceful assembly and association and freedom of opinion and expression, including for free and independent media, and to ensure unhindered access to media information for the people of Myanmar;

(h) To cooperate fully with the Special Rapporteur, including by granting him full, free and unhindered access in his upcoming visits to Myanmar to monitor the implementation of Human Rights Council and General Assembly resolutions, and to ensure that no person cooperating with the Special Rapporteur or any international organization is subjected to any form of intimidation, harassment or punishment;

(i) To ensure timely, safe, full and unhindered access to all parts of Myanmar, including conflict and border areas, for the United Nations, international humanitarian organizations and their partners and to cooperate fully with those actors to ensure that humanitarian assistance is delivered to all persons in need throughout the country;

(j) To put an immediate end to the continuing recruitment and use of child soldiers in violation of international law, by all parties, to intensify measures to ensure the protection of children from armed conflict and to pursue its collaboration with the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Children and Armed Conflict;

(k) To take urgent measures to put an end to violations of international human rights and humanitarian law, including the targeting of civilians by military operations, rape and other forms of sexual violence persistently carried out by members of the armed forces, and the targeting of persons belonging to particular ethnic groups;

(l) To end the systematic forced displacement of large numbers of persons within their country and the violence contributing to refugee flows into neighbouring countries, and to respect ceasefire agreements;

5. Calls upon the Government of Myanmar:

(a) To permit all political representatives and representatives of ethnic nationalities to participate fully in the political transition process without restrictions and, to that end, to resume without further delay a dialogue with all political actors, including the National League for Democracy and representatives of ethnic nationalities;

(b) To pursue, through dialogue and peaceful means, the immediate suspension and permanent end of conflict with all ethnic nationalities in Myanmar and to allow the full participation of representatives of all political parties and representatives of ethnic nationalities in an inclusive and credible process of national reconciliation, democratization and the establishment of the rule of law;

(c) To allow human rights defenders to pursue their activities unhindered and to ensure their safety, security and freedom of movement in that pursuit;

(d) To refrain from imposing restrictions on access to and flow of information from the people of Myanmar, including through the openly available and accessible use of Internet and mobile telephone services;

(e) To fulfil its obligations to restore the independence of the judiciary and due process of law, the current state of which is not in compliance with international human rights law, as well as to ensure that discipline in prisons does not amount to torture or cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment and that conditions of detention otherwise meet international standards;

(f) To engage in a dialogue with the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights with a view to ensuring full respect for all human rights and fundamental freedoms;

(g) To engage more actively to eliminate the use of forced labour and to increase its efforts with the International Labour Organization towards the effective implementation of the national mechanism established to receive complaints of forced labour, including allowing the International Labour Organization to distribute informational material in Myanmar on that mechanism;

(h) To resume its humanitarian dialogue with the International Committee of the Red Cross and allow it to carry out its activities according to its mandate, in particular by granting access to persons detained and to areas of internal armed conflict;

6. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To continue to provide his good offices and to pursue his discussions on the situation of human rights, the transition to democracy and the national reconciliation process with the Government and the people of Myanmar, including democracy and human rights groups and all relevant parties, and to offer technical assistance to the Government in this regard;

(b) To give all necessary assistance to enable the Special Adviser and the Special Rapporteur to discharge their mandates fully and effectively and in a coordinated manner;

(c) To report to the General Assembly at its sixty-fourth session as well as to the Human Rights Council on the progress made in the implementation of the present resolution;

7. Decides to continue the consideration of the question at its sixty-fourth session, on the basis of the report of the Secretary-General and the interim report of the Special Rapporteur.

RECORDED VOTE ON RESOLUTION 63/245:

Nepal

Reports of High Commissioner. In an 18 February report [A/HRC/7/68] on the human rights situation and the activities of OHCHR in Nepal, the High Commissioner said that although there had been significant political developments since her previous report [YUN 2007, p. 821], including the establishment of an interim Government and Parliament, and legislative and institutional reforms aimed at strengthening human rights protection, respect for and protection of human rights had diminished. In particular, there were concerns about the lack of political will to end impunity for past and ongoing human rights abuses by the State and the Communist Party of Nepal (Maoist) (CPN(M)), and about insufficient action to address discrimination and—against a backdrop of increased violence by armed groups in the plains—the State's obligation to protect the rights of the population to life, liberty and security. There continued to be a lack of implementation of many provisions of the 2006 Comprehensive Peace Agreement and of new and existing legislation that could strengthen human rights protection. Frustration arose from long delays in resolving the question of participation of marginalized groups in the Constituent Assembly and in State institutions, and in addressing economic, social and cultural rights violations. A programme to strengthen and reform the security forces and the administration of justice was urgently needed.

In a later report [A/HRC/10/53] covering developments in 2008, the High Commissioner said that there had been significant political developments during the year, including the election of the Constituent Assembly, the declaration of a Republic and the formation of a new Government, as well as legislative and institutional reforms aimed at strengthening human rights protection. The human rights situation had improved significantly since the conflict ended. Challenges remained with regard to addressing the root causes of the conflict, which included impunity and deep-seated inequalities and discrimination. Other needs were improving public security and the protection of the population's rights to life, liberty and security, which were threatened by the proliferation of armed groups operating in the Terai (plains). OHCHR-Nepal, whose mandate had been renewed in 2007 for another two years, adjusted its monitoring and capacity-building activities to developments in the peace process. Technical assistance was extended to the Government through analysis of legislation and policies, training, consultations and reports on cases or thematic issues. In 2008, OHCHR-Nepal increasingly focused on three areas: strengthening national human rights institutions and civil society; impunity, rule of law and accountability; and discrimination and economic, social and cultural rights. It continued investigations into human rights violations in collaboration with national partners, and supported victims in their search for justice and remedial action. OHCHR-Nepal worked closely with, among others, the United Nations Mission in Nepal since its establishment in January 2007. Following national elections on 10 April, the Assembly, at its first session on 28 May, voted to end the 239-year-old monarchy and establish a republic. In August, a new Government, led by CPN(M), was formed, and it made commitments to respect human rights. The Constituent Assembly was much more reflective of Nepal's diverse society than any previous representative body: one third of its members were women, and it had a significant representation of historically marginalized groups, including Madhesi, indigenous peoples and "lower" castes. The new Government took steps to end traditional discriminatory practices, such as banning the use of bonded labour, and committed itself to eliminating "untouchability". However, long-standing discrimination based on class, caste, gender, ethnicity, geography and other considerations remained deeply rooted, and rampant inequalities persisted. Many people faced barriers to access to justice as a result of poverty and discrimination. Women in particular suffered from many forms of discrimination. Marginalized and disadvantaged groups, internally displaced persons and populations in remote areas continued to be the most affected by inequalities in land, food, health and justice. Despite efforts to end impunity and to enforce the rule of law, no visible steps were taken in 2008 to hold accountable any individual responsible for human rights violations committed during or after the conflict. Most of the estimated 1,500 cases of conflict-related disappearances remained unresolved. The OHCHR-Nepal Office received reports of frequent political interference in criminal justice processes, especially in Terai districts. The security situation remained difficult due to the presence of armed groups, resulting in a growing sense of lawlessness and a security vacuum in many areas. Some of the armed groups were connected to political parties, and there were daily reports of abductions, killings, explosion of improvised explosive devices and acts of extortion. OHCHR-Nepal documented cases of excessive use of force by the police and of torture and ill-treatment of detainees. It received reports of abuses by members of CPN(M), although the number of such incidents diminished after April. The April elections constituted an important advance in the peace process, with a voter turnout of 63 per cent, broad representation of previously marginalized groups, and the largely peaceful environment in which the election was held. Nevertheless, there were some reports of voter intimidation and violence, including 21 deaths in the month prior to the voting. The Assembly, which also functioned as the Legislature-Parliament during the transitional period, focused almost exclusively on drafting the Constitution, albeit at a slow pace. OHCHR-Nepal collaborated with the National Human Rights Commission on capacity-building activities, and provided support on the conduct of investigations into allegations of human rights violations. It provided training to Commission staff on indicators to monitor the implementation of economic, social and cultural rights. In 2008, 2,158 civil society and youth representatives participated in 60 activities organized by OHCHR-Nepal to strengthen national capacity to protect and promote human rights. Those activities focused on issues critical to advancing human rights aspects of the peace process, including the rule of law, transitional justice and addressing impunity, as well as monitoring of the Assembly election and participation of civil society in drafting the Constitution. OHCHR-Nepal offered support to the Assembly related to protection of human rights through the Constitution. It continued training and awareness-raising activities with the police, focusing on human rights standards pertaining to law enforcement and the rule of law. Many provisions of the Comprehensive Peace Agreement had yet to be implemented, including mechanisms for monitoring the peace process.

OHCHR-Nepal urged the Government to put in place mechanisms to protect human rights defenders and allow them to undertake vital human rights work free from intimidation. It also called on the Government to prosecute the perpetrators of serious human rights violations that occurred both during and after the conflict, which would require strong and independent rule-of-law institutions. Conflict over land was one of the causes of the conflict, and the establishment of a land commission was an important step forward. The Government was encouraged to ensure that the Commission was able to function in a transparent, inclusive and impartial manner.

Communications. In a 6 March note [A/HRC/7/G/7 & Rev.1] addressed to the High Commissioner, Nepal submitted its observations on her February report. Nepal rejected some of the High Commissioner's criticisms of the situation in Nepal and of the new Government's activities since it came to power. The Government was fully occupied by the overarching national objective of establishing peace in the country. It was aware of its duty to maintain law and order in all of its territory. Many more of the decisions of the Government, which were of far-reaching importance to the people of Nepal, should have found recognition in the report.

Cyprus

Note by Secretary-General. In accordance with Human Rights Council decision 2/102 [YUN 2006, p. 760] requesting the Secretary-General and the High Commissioner to update relevant reports, the Secretary-General transmitted the OHCHR report on human rights in Cyprus [A/HRC/10/37], covering the year up to 20 December. Without a field presence in Cyprus, OHCHR relied on a variety of sources for information. The persisting division of the country had consequences for human rights issues, including freedom of movement, property rights, missing persons, discrimination, freedom of religion, the right to education, human trafficking and economic rights. With regard to freedom of movement, the United Nations Peacekeeping Force in Cyprus (UNFICYP) had recorded approximately 16.5 million crossings since the opening of the four crossing points in 2003. The highly symbolic opening on 3 April of the Ledra Street crossing point in Nicosia had translated into a confidence-building factor with a positive impact on contacts between the Turkish Cypriot and Greek Cypriot communities, including a proposal at a meeting of the two sides for opening the Limnitis/Yeşilirmak crossing point. Restrictions on freedom of movement persisted, in particular with regard to villages in the military zones in the northern part of the island. Since the last report [YUN 2007, p. 824], there had been no positive change in relation to increased access to two Maronite villages. Restrictions of movement imposed upon UNFICYP by the Turkish forces had a negative impact on the delivery of its humanitarian tasks in the northern part of the island. In the context of law enforcement, particularly in relation to trafficking in human beings, organized criminals were able to benefit from the lack of contact and cooperation between the law enforcement agencies from both sides. There was concern about trafficking of women for sexual exploitation. With regard to complaints of discrimination made by the Turkish Cypriot community in Limassol, principally related to the lack of social services, adequate housing and the difficulty in obtaining identity documents, a committee comprising representatives from different local authorities had been established to improve the coordination of welfare action directed to Turkish Cypriots in the south. The bicomunal social centre established by the municipality of Limassol to address some of those concerns continued to function. Members of the Turkish Cypriot community living in the south, among them Roma, had continued to seek UNFICYP facilitation in obtaining identity documents, housing, welfare services, medical care and employment. Property rights remained a concern, and property disputes continued to be brought before the European Court of Human Rights. Meanwhile, the Committee of Ministers of the Council of Europe continued to supervise execution of the judgements of the landmark property cases brought before the Court. Respect for ownership rights remained a problem, and there were reports regarding demolition of Greek Cypriot houses in the north. Concerns continued to be received from the Government of Cyprus regarding increased construction on the Turkish Cypriot side. The Committee on Missing Persons continued its work of exhumation, identification and return of remains of missing persons. As at November, the Committee's bicomunal team of scientists had exhumed the remains of 455 individuals from sites on both sides of the buffer zone. The remains of more than 292 missing persons had undergone examination, and, following DNA analysis, the remains of 105 individuals were returned to their families. There continued to be issues between the two communities on economic rights. Although the European Union aid programme for the Turkish Cypriot community, which sought to encourage economic development in the northern part of the island, had continued, its implementation faced challenges, including the state of cooperation between the two communities. Despite the problems, the report expressed the hope that the new momentum to achieve a comprehensive settlement of the Cyprus problem would provide avenues to improve the human rights situation.

Communications. In a 28 March note [A/HRC/7/G/16] to OHCHR, Turkey transmitted a letter reflecting the Turkish Cypriot views on the Secretary-General's report [YUN 2007, p. 824] on the human rights situation in Cyprus. On 16 May [A/HRC/8/G/5], Cyprus, in a letter to the Human Rights Council, referred to Turkey's communication, rejected the reference to the "Turkish Republic of Northern Cyprus" and criticized Turkey for trying to undermine the relations between the two communities in Cyprus through such documents.

Georgia

On 15 May [A/62/PV.97], Georgia presented to the General Assembly a draft resolution [A/62/L.45] on the status of internally displaced persons and refugees from Abkhazia, Georgia. Introducing the draft, Georgia emphasized the right of those refugees and displaced persons to return to their homes, despite the lack of developments in the political settlement process. For more than 14 years, people who had fled their homes had been denied the right to live in dignity and not to be subject to arbitrary exile. More than 500,000 people of various ethnic origins were suffering a humanitarian disaster as a consequence of the conflict in Abkhazia, Georgia. There had been "complete ethnic cleansing" of the Georgian population from Abkhazia, and the people who had fled their homes were forced to live with a growing sense of hopelessness. By challenging the status quo, Georgia was striving to create new ways to bring about a lasting resolution to the conflict.

The Russian Federation said that the draft, while purporting to address a humanitarian problem, took a political approach to the conflict. It provided a distorted impression of the conflict and was silent on its background. It considered only certain consequences, neglecting the root causes of the situation. If adopted, the text would destabilize UN conflict resolution activities, because the problem of return, while important, was not the only one in achieving a comprehensive settlement of the conflict. The draft had separated the issue of return from related tasks for achieving peace in the region and made the resolution of the problem more difficult. The adoption of such a selective draft would lead to a worsening of Georgian-Abkhaz relations.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On the same day [meeting 97], the General Assembly adopted resolution 62/249 [draft: A/62/L.45] by recorded vote (14-11-105) [agenda item 16].

Status of internally displaced persons and refugees from Abkhazia, Georgia

The General Assembly,

Recalling its relevant resolutions on the protection of and assistance to internally displaced persons, including its resolution 62/153 of 18 December 2007,

Recognizing the Guiding Principles on Internal Displacement as an important international framework for the protection of internally displaced persons,

Deeply concerned about violations of human rights and international humanitarian law in Abkhazia, Georgia, particularly ethnicity-based violence,

Recalling all relevant Security Council resolutions, and noting the conclusions of the Budapest (1994), Lisbon (1996) and Istanbul (1999) summits of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe, in particular the reports of “ethnic cleansing” and other serious violations of international humanitarian law in Abkhazia, Georgia,

Deploring practices of arbitrary forced displacement and their negative impact on the enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms by large groups of people, and deeply concerned by the humanitarian situation created by the expulsion of hundreds of thousands of persons from Abkhazia, Georgia,

Deeply concerned by the demographic changes resulting from the conflict in Abkhazia, Georgia, and regretting any attempt to alter the pre-conflict demographic composition in Abkhazia, Georgia,

Emphasizing that the rights of the Abkhaz population living in Abkhazia, Georgia, have to be protected and guaranteed,

1. Recognizes the right of return of all refugees and internally displaced persons and their descendants, regardless of ethnicity, to Abkhazia, Georgia;

2. Emphasizes the importance of preserving the property rights of refugees and internally displaced persons from Abkhazia, Georgia, including victims of reported “ethnic cleansing”, and calls upon all Member States to deter persons under their jurisdiction from obtaining property within the territory of Abkhazia, Georgia, in violation of the rights of returnees;

3. Underlines the urgent need for the rapid development of a timetable to ensure the prompt voluntary return of all refugees and internally displaced persons to their homes in Abkhazia, Georgia;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its sixty-third session a comprehensive report on the implementation of the present resolution;

5. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its sixty-third session the item entitled “Protracted conflicts in the GUAM area and their implications for international peace, security and development”.

RECORDED VOTE ON RESOLUTION 62/249:

In favour: Albania, Azerbaijan, Czech Republic, Estonia, Georgia, Hungary, Latvia, Lithuania, Poland, Romania, Slovakia, Sweden, Ukraine, United States.

Against: Armenia, Belarus, Democratic People’s Republic of Korea, India, Iran, Myanmar, Russian Federation, Serbia, Sudan, Syrian Arab Republic, Venezuela.

Abstaining: Algeria, Andorra, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Belgium, Bhutan, Bolivia, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Botswana, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Canada, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Cyprus, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Finland, France, Germany, Ghana, Greece, Guatemala, Guinea, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Iceland, Indonesia, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kazakhstan, Kenya, Kuwait, Kyrgyzstan, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Liechtenstein, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malaysia, Maldives, Malta, Mauritius, Mexico, Moldova, Monaco, Mongolia, Montenegro, Morocco, Mozambique, Namibia, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Nigeria, Norway, Pakistan, Panama, Peru, Philippines, Portugal, Qatar, Republic of Korea, San Marino, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Singapore, Slovenia, South Africa, Spain, Sri Lanka, Swaziland, Switzerland, Thailand, The former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Togo, Tunisia, Turkey, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, Uruguay, Uzbekistan, Viet Nam, Yemen, Zambia.

Communications. In a 9 September note [A/HRC/9/G/4] to the Human Rights Council, the Russian Federation said that on 8 August, the Georgian leadership had commenced an armed conflict in an attempt to annex South Ossetia through the annihilation of a whole people. Reviewing the recent history and conflict of the region, the Russian Federation said that difficulties had arisen since Mikhail Saakashvili had become leader, as his rule was marked by his inability to negotiate, continuous provocations and staged incidents in the conflict areas, attacks against Russian peacekeepers, and a disparaging attitude towards democratically elected leaders of Abkhazia and South Ossetia. Having considered the appeals of South Ossetian and Abkhaz people, of the Parliaments and Presidents of both Republics, the Russian Federation decided to recognize the independence of both and to conclude treaties of friendship, cooperation and mutual assistance with them. Due to the relief efforts of Russia, refugees had started returning to their homes in South Ossetia following the outbreak of hostilities, and 29,108 refugees had returned there from Russia since 12 August.

In a 12 September note [A/HRC/9/G/5] to OHCHR, the Russian Federation transmitted information on what it called crimes against children committed by Georgian troops in South Ossetia during the Georgian-South Ossetian conflict.

Middle East

Territories occupied by Israel

In 2008, human rights questions, including cases of violations in the territories occupied by Israel following the 1967 hostilities in the Middle East, were addressed by the Human Rights Council. Political and other aspects were considered by the General Assembly, its Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Palestinian People and Other Arabs of the Occupied Territories (Committee on Israeli Practices) and other bodies (see PART ONE, Chapter VI).

Human Rights Council special session

At the request of the Syrian Arab Republic and Pakistan [A/HRC/S-6/1], backed by 21 Human Rights Council members, the Council held its sixth special session (Geneva, 23–24 January) [A/HRC/S-6/2] to consider human rights violations emanating from Israeli military attacks and incursions in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, particularly in the occupied Gaza Strip. During its consideration of the issue, the Council heard statements from its members, the representative of Palestine as a concerned country, non-member countries, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs.

On 24 January [A/HRC/S-6/2 (res. S-6/1)], by a recorded vote of 30 to 1, with 15 abstentions, the Council expressed grave concern at the repeated Israeli military attacks carried out in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, particularly in the occupied Gaza Strip, which had resulted in loss of life and injuries among Palestinian civilians, including women and children. The Council called for international action to put an immediate end to the violations committed by the occupying Power, Israel, in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including the incessant and repeated Israeli military attacks and incursions therein and the siege of the occupied Gaza Strip. It demanded that Israel lift the siege it had imposed on the Gaza Strip, restore supply of fuel, food and medicine and reopen the border crossings. Calling for protection of the Palestinian civilians in the Territory, in compliance with human rights law and international humanitarian law, the Council urged all parties to respect the rules of those laws, as well as to refrain from violence against civilians. The High Commissioner for Human Rights was requested to report to the Council, at its next session, on the progress made in implementing the resolution.

Other developments

Report of High Commissioner. In response to the 24 January resolution of the Human Rights Council (see above), the High Commissioner, in a report of 14 March [A/HRC/7/76], assessed implementation of the resolution for a one-month period from the day it was adopted. She provided the general context of the situation and focused on Gaza, particularly its closure and violence against the civilian population there, from 24 January to 24 February. As background, she outlined developments since the 2006 elections for the Palestinian Legislative Council in the West Bank and Gaza and the win of the Hamas movement over the Fatah movement, followed by Israel's imposing economic sanctions, including its withholding tax revenues collected on imports, and its introducing additional restrictions on the movement of goods to, from and within the Palestinian territory. Through international efforts, the Palestinian Government and Israel, in late 2007, agreed to work on reaching a two-State solution by the end of 2008, a commitment that was repeated on the occasion of United States President George Bush's visit to Jerusalem on 9 January 2008. The High Commissioner examined violations committed by three actors: Israel as the occupying Power; the Palestinian Authority; and the de facto authorities of the Gaza Strip under the effective control of Hamas. As a result of restrictions on the movement of goods and reduction of fuel supply and electricity to Gaza, all six crossings into Gaza had been opened only sporadically since June 2007 and, with few exceptions, all legitimate trade with Gaza had come to a halt. As a result of shortages of food and medical and relief items, the Gaza Strip was on the brink of a humanitarian disaster. According to the Israeli Ministry of Defense, electricity cuts to Gaza were made in response to rocket firings from Gaza into Israel. The electricity shortages had a significant effect on the Gazans' right to an adequate standard of living. As concerned the right to water, during the second half of January, almost half of the Gaza population of 1.4 million had no access to running water. An estimated 80 per cent of the population lived beneath the poverty line and depended on food aid from international organizations. Israeli security forces continued military incursions into Gaza and the West Bank throughout 2007, and the situation escalated in January 2008 with more Israeli incursions and air strikes, while Palestinian militants fired hundreds of mortar shells and around 210 rockets (mostly Qassam type) into western Negev, including the cities of Sderot and Ashkelon. During the reporting period, 1 Israeli and 41 Palestinians were reported killed, a decrease from the first three weeks of the year. Most of the rocket and mortar attacks carried out by Palestinian militants were indiscriminate and against civilian targets, a violation of international humanitarian law. During the reporting period, Israeli security forces conducted at least nine military incursions into Gaza and 106 into various locations of the West Bank. Over 560 blockages of various sorts prevented ordinary Palestinians from enjoying their right to freedom of movement within the West Bank. With regard to Israeli military operations, the report said that while Israel had a right to defend itself, disproportionate use of force was prohibited under international humanitarian law. Israel, as the occupying Power, bore a special responsibility under international human rights and humanitarian law to protect the civilian population. The violence of the conflict had led to the breakdown of law and order in Gaza, especially between Hamas and Fatah supporters. In view of the worsening human rights situation in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, the protection of both Palestinian and Israeli civilians required immediate action by all parties and the international community.

The High Commissioner recommended that all parties to the conflict cease actions violating international human rights and humanitarian law. Israel, the Palestinian Authority and the de facto Government of the Gaza Strip under the control of Hamas should establish accountability mechanisms providing for law-based, independent, transparent and accessible investigations of alleged breaches of such law. Such investigations must hold perpetrators to account and provide redress to victims where violations of law were found. Mechanisms that lacked impartiality or accessibility should be replaced by accountability mechanisms that met international standards. Investigations should address such allegations as indiscriminate attacks and incursions, indiscriminate firing of rockets or mortars, suicide bombings, targeted killings and torture. The international community should promote the implementation of the decisions, resolutions and recommendations of international accountability mechanisms. Urgent action was needed to end the closure of Gaza. Israel should cease all action violating international human rights and humanitarian law. The de facto Government in Gaza should take all possible measures to minimize the negative effects of the siege on the enjoyment of human rights by Gazans, and ensure that action against both Palestinian and Israeli civilians ceased, notably the indiscriminate firing of rockets into Israel. The Palestinian Authority should take all measures in its power to alleviate the situation.

Note by High Commissioner. By a 14 March note [A/HRC/7/77], the High Commissioner, pursuant to Human Rights Council resolution 6/19 [YUN 2007, p. 828] requesting her to report on the access of Palestinians to their holy sites, informed the Council that the issue had been covered briefly in her report of 14 March. She would report in greater detail to the Council's eighth session on any policies or measures taken by Israel which limited access of Palestinian residents in the Occupied Palestinian Territory (both Christians and Muslims) to their religious sites located in the Territory, including East Jerusalem.

Human Rights Council action. On 6 March [A/63/53 (res. 7/1)], the Human Rights Council, by a recorded vote of 33 to 1, with 13 abstentions, condemned the persistent Israeli military attacks and incursions in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, particularly the recent ones in Gaza, which resulted in the loss of more than 125 lives and hundreds of injuries among Palestinian civilians. It expressed shock at the Israeli bombardment of Palestinian homes and the Israeli policy of inflicting collective punishment against the civilian population, and called for bringing the perpetrators to justice. It called for the immediate cessation of all Israeli military attacks in the Territory as well as the firing of rockets, which had taken two civilian lives in southern Israel. Calling for international action to put an end to the Israeli violations, the Council reiterated its calls for immediate protection of the Palestinian people in the Territory in compliance with international human rights law and international humanitarian law. It urged all parties to respect the rule of such law and to refrain from violence against civilian populations. The Council requested the High Commissioner to report, at its next session, on progress made in implementing the resolution.

On 27 March [A/63/53 (res. 7/17)], the Council reaffirmed the inalienable, permanent and unqualified right of the Palestinian people to self-determination, including their right to live in freedom, justice and dignity and to establish their sovereign, independent, democratic and viable contiguous State. It reaffirmed its support for the solution of two States—Palestine and Israel—living side by side in peace and security. It stressed the need for respect and preservation of the territorial unity, contiguity and integrity of all of the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and urged Member States and UN bodies to support the Palestinian people in realizing their right to self-determination.

On the same day [A/63/53 (res. 7/18)], the Council, by a recorded vote of 46 to 1, deplored the recent Israeli announcements of housing construction for Israeli settlers in and around East Jerusalem, as they undermined the peace process and the creation of a contiguous Palestinian State. The Council expressed concern at: the continuing Israeli settlement, including the expansion of settlements, the expropriation of land, the demolition of houses, the expulsion of Palestinians, and the construction of bypass roads; the Israeli plan (E-1) to expand the settlement of Maale Adumim and build a wall around it, thereby further disconnecting East Jerusalem from the West Bank; Israel's announcement that it would retain major blocks in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including settlements in the Jordan Valley; the expansion of Israeli settlements and the construction of new ones in the Territory, which would be tantamount to de facto annexation; the Israeli decision to establish a tramway between West Jerusalem and the Israeli settlement of Pisgat Ze'ev; the continued closures of the Territory and the restriction of movement of people and goods, impairing the economic and social rights of the Palestinians; and the continued construction, contrary to international law, of the wall inside the Occupied Palestinian Territory. The Council urged Israel to reverse the settlement policy in the occupied territories, including East Jerusalem and the Syrian Golan, and to prevent any new installation of settlers in the territories. It urged implementation of the 2005 Access and Movement Agreement, particularly the reopening of the Rafah and Karni crossings, and the access of UN agencies to and within the Occupied Palestinian Territory. The Council called on Israel to implement measures, including confiscation of arms, to prevent violence by Israeli settlers, in order to guarantee the safety of the Palestinian civilians in Territory. The Council demanded that Israel comply with its legal obligations as mentioned in the 2004 advisory opinion by the International Court of Justice [YUN 2004, p. 1272]. It urged the parties to give impetus to the peace process in line with earlier agreements and Security Council resolutions.

On 28 March [A/63/53 (res. 7/30)], by a recorded vote of 32 to 1, with 14 abstentions, the Council called on Israel, the occupying Power, to comply with relevant resolutions of UN bodies, and determined that Israel's decision to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration on the occupied Syrian Golan was null and void. It called on Israel to desist from changing the physical character, demographic composition, institutional structure and legal status of the Golan, and emphasized that the displaced persons must be allowed to return to their homes and to recover their property. Israel was called on to desist from imposing Israeli citizenship and identity cards on the Syrian citizens in the Golan; to desist from its repressive measures against them; to allow the Syrian population of the Golan to visit their families in the Syrian motherland; and to rescind its decision to prohibit those visits, as it was in violation of the Fourth Geneva Convention and the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights. The Council further called on Israel to release the Syrian detainees in Israeli prisons, and to allow the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) to visit those prisoners to assess their physical and mental health. The Council determined that all legislative and administrative measures taken by Israel that purported to alter the character and legal status of the occupied Syrian Golan were null and void, constituted a violation of international law and had no legal effect.

Communications. The Syrian Arab Republic, in a 13 May note [A/HRC/8/G/4] to OHCHR, brought to the Office's attention the poor state of health of the Syrian citizen Beshir Almeket, who had been detained in Israeli prisons for more than 23 years. Mr. Almeket had suffered a heart attack on 24 March and his health was deteriorating. Syria called on the Council to urge Israel to allow ICRC to intervene with specialized doctors in order to save his life, which was in jeopardy as a result of the inhumane conditions in the Israeli prison where he was detained. In a response of 5 June [A/HRC/8/G/8], Israel said that the allegations were baseless and that Mr. Almeket, who was arrested in 1985, was serving a 27-year sentence for his attack on an Israeli army base. Israel denied the allegations that he was gravely ill and had been denied medical treatment. ICRC enjoyed access to all Syrian detainees and visited them regularly. In an 11 June note [A/HRC/8/G/10], Syria reiterated the information concerning Mr. Almeket and said that the state of health of Syrian prisoners was deteriorating daily, due to the inhumane conditions to which they were subjected. Syrian prisoner Saytan al-Wali, imprisoned for more than 23 years, was suffering from a tumour and a number of diseases, and Israeli procrastination and delays had led to that critical situation. Syria held the Israeli occupation authorities responsible for the deterioration in the health of all Syrian prisoners, and for all the consequences which might follow. Pressure should be brought to bear on Israel to comply with the norms of international humanitarian law and the Geneva Conventions.

Reports of High Commissioner. In response to Human Rights Council resolution 7/1 (see p. 894), the High Commissioner, on 6 June [A/HRC/8/17], reported on human rights violations emanating from Israeli military attacks and incursions in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, particularly the recent ones in the occupied Gaza Strip. The report assessed the progress made in the implementation of the resolution for a two-month period (25 February–25 April), from the end of the previous reporting period (see p. 893), and focused on the closure of Gaza and violence against the civilian populations. The Gaza Strip remained closed to the outside world during the reporting period, with the exception of limited humanitarian imports and movements of a few international visitors, patients requiring emergency care and Palestinians who received exit permits from Israel. Fuel shortages were having a profound effect on all aspects of life in Gaza, and electricity was reduced to around two thirds of its normal capacity, causing daily power outages. The activities of UN agencies working in the Gaza Strip were hampered by the fuel shortage. Fuel shortages and the absence of spare parts and equipment continued to paralyze the water, sewage and garbage networks. Food prices were rising rapidly and essential goods were increasingly hard to find, while the quality of health care was declining. It was reported that 50 per cent of the Gaza educational sector was not functioning, as students and teachers could not reach schools. The closure of Gaza also impacted on the residents' freedom of religion by preventing them from worshipping at some of the most sacred Muslim and Christian sites. During the reporting period, 221 Palestinians were killed as a result of the armed Israeli-Palestinian conflict (19 in the West Bank, 202 in Gaza) and about 460 Palestinians were injured; 10 Israeli civilians were killed and around 25 injured. The Israeli air force conducted at least 75 air strikes on the Gaza Strip during that period. Israeli security forces conducted at least 30 military incursions into Gaza and 348 into the West Bank. It was estimated that during the reporting period, Palestinian militants fired around 640 mortar shells and 450 rockets from Gaza into southern Israel, most of which were indiscriminate firings. On 6 March, eight Israeli civilians were killed when a Palestinian gunman opened fire inside a Jewish religious school in West Jerusalem. During the reporting period, around 30 Palestinians, of whom nine were allegedly civilians, were killed in intra-Palestinian violence, according to Palestinian human rights organizations. Several incidents were reported involving unidentified armed groups in Gaza, while law and order continued to deteriorate. The human rights situation in the Occupied Palestinian Territory remained grave, particularly in Gaza. The High Commissioner's previous recommendations, notably concerning the establishment of accountability mechanisms and the closure of Gaza, had not been implemented, and the actions taken by the parties continued to violate international human rights and humanitarian law. Accordingly, all previous recommendations by the High Commissioner remained valid and the parties should urgently implement them.

The High Commissioner, as requested by the Human Rights Council in resolution 6/19 [YUN 2007, p. 828], reported on 10 June [A/HRC/8/18] on religious and cultural rights in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem. In accordance with the resolution, the report assessed legislative and policy measures taken by Israel that had an adverse impact on the enjoyment of religious and cultural rights, focusing in particular on those measures that had limited the access of Palestinian residents in the Occupied Palestinian Territory to religious sites located in the Territory, including East Jerusalem. The report outlined the international legal framework applicable to the exercise of religious and cultural rights, under four international conventions, and it described developments related to the implementation of resolution 6/19. Limited access of Palestinians to religious sites was the result of physical obstacles such as the wall under construction in the Territory, checkpoints, closed areas, road barriers and trenches, as well as curfews and the permit system for Palestinians entering East Jerusalem and Israel. The justification for the closure regime cited by the Israeli authorities was the need to provide security and protection to all people within its jurisdiction. In February, the Israeli Defense Forces raided buildings and schools run by the Hebron Islamic Charity. Restrictions on freedom of movement limited the possibilities for Palestinians to enjoy the right to participate freely in the cultural life of the community and to enjoy the arts. As a consequence, all forms of cultural and educational contacts and exchange, such as theatre, cinema, fine arts and music, were limited inside the Territory. The importation of Arabic language books was subject to restrictions. International humanitarian law required that the occupying Power permit ministers of religion to give spiritual assistance to their religious communities. In that regard, Israel should ease restrictions on clergy and allow movement and access for spiritual leaders to communicate with members of their faith. Israel should consider revisiting its rules governing the importation of Arabic books to the Territory. The freedom to establish seminaries or religious schools and religious, charitable or humanitarian institutions should be respected and protected. While restrictions on such institutions might be necessary to protect public safety, any such restrictions had to be prescribed by law. As the occupying Power, Israel bore responsibility under international law for preserving the cultural and religious heritage in the Territory, and should take measures to preserve that heritage and refrain from action that could negatively affect the sites.

Report of Special Rapporteur. On 26 March, the Human Rights Council appointed Richard Falk (United States) as the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in the Palestinian territories occupied by Israel since 1967. On 25 August [A/63/326], the Secretary-General transmitted the Rapporteur's report to the General Assembly. The report, covering the period from 1 January to 31 July, examined the observance of international humanitarian and international human rights standards in the Palestinian territories, focusing on the consequences of a prolonged occupation that had ignored the directives of the United Nations with respect to upholding the legal rights of an occupied people. Recalling the undertaking associated with the revival of the peace process at the Annapolis summit of December 2007, in particular the expectation that Israel would freeze settlement expansion and ease restrictions on movement in the West Bank, the Rapporteur noted the discouraging settlement growth and the further restrictions on West Bank movement. On a positive note, secret negotiations under Egyptian auspices in Cairo between Israel and Hamas, with the objective of establishing a ceasefire agreement that would end the firing of rockets into Israel from Gaza and military incursions, and targeted assassinations by Israel in Gaza, were fruitful. On 20 June, a ceasefire was declared, and despite some infractions on both sides, it had generally held. Israel eased some restrictions on the Gazans by increasing the supply of food and medicine; nevertheless, humanitarian conditions remained dire. The report noted the abuse of international humanitarian law associated with the separation wall, and Palestinian fatalities, including children, owing to Israeli use of excessive force to quell non-violent demonstrations. Abuses by Israel at border crossings were reported, and special concern was expressed with regard to the harassment and assault of Palestinian journalists. A persistent health crisis existed in Gaza and the West Bank, and there was a risk of a collapse of the basic health system.

Among his recommendations, the Special Rapporteur emphasized that the General Assembly should ask the International Court of Justice for a legal assessment of the Israeli occupation of Palestinian territory from the perspective of the Palestinian right of self-determination. The assistance of the Security Council should be sought in implementing the Court's 2004 advisory opinion on the legal consequences of the construction of a wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory. In view of the health crisis in Gaza, the international community should resume economic assistance as a matter of priority.

The General Assembly took note of the report on 18 December (decision 63/534).

Report of fact-finding mission. The high-level fact-finding mission to Beit Hanoun, established by the Human Rights Council in resolution S-3/1 [YUN 2006, p. 969] following an Israeli military operation in the Gaza town, issued its third and final report on 1 September [A/HRC/9/26]. Led by Archbishop Desmond Tutu of South Africa, and with Professor Christine Chinkin (United Kingdom) as its other member, the mission visited the town from 27 to 29 May to inspect the site and speak to victims, travelling through Egypt after having been denied access through Israel. Its mandate was to assess the situation of victims, address the needs of survivors, and make recommendations on ways and means to protect Palestinian civilians against any further Israeli assaults. Beit Hanoun, a town in the Gaza Strip with a population of 35,000, of which 70 per cent were registered refugees, was attacked on 8 November 2006 during a period of increased military activity. Since the Palestinian Legislative Council elections in early 2006, the Israeli military had fired approximately 15,000 artillery shells and conducted more than 550 air strikes into the Gaza Strip, killing approximately 525 Gazans and injuring 1,527. According to Israel, most of its military operations in Gaza were aimed at stopping rocket-launching activity. Over the same period, at least 1,700 Qassam rockets were fired into Israel by Palestinian militants, injuring 41 Israelis. On 8 November, the heavy Israeli shelling of Beit Hanoun killed 19 civilians, including seven children and six women, and wounded 50 others. Some of the injured tried to reach Israeli hospitals for treatment but could not obtain permission to cross into Israel for some hours, and in some cases were not allowed to be accompanied by family members. Following the attack, Israel enforced a curfew and hundreds of male residents aged between 16 and 40 were taken to an Israeli holding centre north of the town for questioning. Most electricity, water and telephone services were cut, movement was restricted, and scores of homes and other buildings were destroyed. Primary health care effectively ceased to function. Following the shelling, the Israeli Prime Minister and Defense Minister expressed regret over the deaths of Palestinian civilians and offered humanitarian assistance and medical care for the wounded. The Israeli military also expressed regret, but stressed that the responsibility rested with terror organizations, which used civilians as human shields while carrying out terror attacks and firing rockets at Israel. On the same day as the attack, Israel announced an inquiry into the incident, intimating that the shells were not fired on civilians intentionally but as the result of technical error. Use of artillery in Gaza was halted after 8 November 2006. The Israeli military conducted an internal investigation which, according to a press communiqué, determined that a rare and severe failure in the firing control system caused a mistake in targeting the weapons. The report was never made public, which the mission found disturbing, and no individual was charged. The mission maintained that the use of artillery in urban areas was inappropriate and likely contrary to international humanitarian and human rights law, and it agreed with the Secretary-General and others that the blockade amounted to collective punishment contrary to international humanitarian law. The mission recognized a nation's right to self-defence, but also that self-defence was subject to the requirements of necessity and proportionality, which required careful examination of the facts. However, the mission saw no evidence of any necessity for the shelling. The mission, while recognizing that the use of force with an impact on civilians was permissible if it was directed at a legitimate military target and was proportionate to the overall threat faced, said that it had received no evidence that the shelled area was a legitimate military target and noted that it had been occupied by Israeli military earlier in the week. The firing of artillery towards Beit Hanoun was a deliberate act in the context of the long-term occupation of Gaza and the deaths of civilians and destruction of property. Taken together with further facts—such as the reduction of the safety zone for artillery use—and the obligation under international humanitarian law to protect civilian life, the mission considered that there was evidence of a disproportionate and reckless disregard for Palestinian civilian life, raising concerns about the possibility of a war crime having been committed. Human rights law was applicable in armed conflict and occupation, and the mission considered that the reckless disregard for civilian life constituted a violation of the right to life. Expressing sympathy to the victims, the mission noted that the attack took lives, inflicted horrendous physical and mental injuries, tore families apart, destroyed homes, took away livelihoods and traumatized a population, which faced incursions after the shelling. The mission also expressed sympathy to all affected by the rocket attacks in southern Israel. It regretted that Israel had withheld cooperation with the mission.

The mission concluded that the violence in Gaza and southern Israel had led to countless violations of international human rights and international humanitarian law. The lack of respect on both sides for the rules of conflict not only led to incidents such as Beit Hanoun, but also undermined respect for the laws of war and human rights in other conflicts. The people of Gaza had to be afforded protection in compliance with international law and, above all, the Fourth Geneva Convention. Without input from the Israeli military, the mission had to conclude that the shelling might constitute a war crime as defined in the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court. Similarly, the firing of rockets on the civilian population in Israel had to stop. The Israeli response of a largely secret internal investigation of the shelling was unacceptable from both legal and moral points of view, and those responsible had to be held accountable. Those firing rockets on Israeli civilians were no less accountable than the Israeli military for their actions. Accountability involved redress for victims, but none had been provided so far. Meanwhile, the situation of victims and survivors remained grim. A major barrier to the enjoyment of human rights was the blockade, which limited individuals' ability to provide an adequate standard of living for themselves and their families and the capacity of local authorities to provide essential services for the population. As for recommendations on ways to protect Palestinian civilians against any further Israeli assaults, the mission reiterated the recommendations made in its previous report [YUN 2007, p. 826], and it reaffirmed that one of the most effective ways was to insist on respect for the rule of law and accountability.

Human Rights Council action. On 24 September [A/63/53/Add.1 (res. 9/18)], by a recorded vote of 32 to 9, with 5 abstentions, the Human Rights Council welcomed the report of the high-level fact-finding mission and called on all parties to ensure implementation of its recommendations. It recommended that the General Assembly consider the report with the participation of the mission's members. The Council regretted the delay in the fulfilment of the mission owing to the non-cooperation of Israel, the occupying Power, and called on Israel to abide by its obligations under international law, international humanitarian law and international human rights law. The Council requested the Secretary-General to report on the implementation of the recommendations at its next session (2009).

PART THREE

Economic and social questions

Development policy and international economic cooperation

In 2008, the global economy was on the brink of recession, due to the fallout from the financial crisis in the United States, the bursting of the housing bubbles there and in other large economies, soaring commodity prices, increasingly restrictive monetary policies in a number of countries, and stock market volatility. In December, the General Assembly called on countries to manage their macroeconomic and financial policies in ways that contributed to global stability, sustained economic growth and sustainable development, and recognized that greater coherence was required among the macroeconomic, trade, aid, financial, environmental and gender-equality policies to ensure that globalization worked as a positive force for all. The Assembly also reaffirmed the need to continue working towards a new international economic order based on the principles of equity, sovereign equality, interdependence, common interest, cooperation and solidarity among all States.

During the year, the United Nations continued consideration of a number of development issues. The Economic and Social Council, at its high-level segment (30 June–3 July), discussed the promotion of an integrated approach to rural development in developing countries for poverty eradication and sustainable development. As part of that segment, the Council held the first biennial Development Cooperation Forum, which discussed a new vision for development cooperation in the twenty-first century and its changing landscape and dynamics, and a high-level policy dialogue with the representatives of international financial and trade institutions on developments in the world economy. It also held its annual ministerial review on “Implementing the internationally agreed goals and commitments in regard to sustainable development”, and adopted a Ministerial Declaration on the theme. In August, the development needs of middle-income countries were considered at the third Ministerial Conference on Development Cooperation with Middle-Income Countries (MICS), held in Windhoek, Namibia. The Conference adopted the Windhoek Ministerial Declaration, which recognized the importance of reflecting the development needs of MICS in the outcomes of the international economic development processes.

The Commission on Sustainable Development reviewed progress in the follow-up to the 2002 World Summit on Sustainable Development and implementation of Agenda 21, the action plan on sustainable development adopted by the 1992 United Nations Conference on Environment and Development. The Commission’s high-level segment discussed the theme “The way forward”, which focused on investing in Africa to achieve the Millennium Development Goals (MDGs) and sustainable development, and interlinkages among the issues of agriculture, rural development, land, drought, desertification and Africa, including adaptation to climate change in the context of sustainable development.

The eradication of poverty and the achievement of the MDGs continued to be a major focus of attention. The Economic and Social Council reviewed implementation of its 2007 Ministerial Declaration on strengthening efforts to eradicate poverty and hunger, and requested the UN system to adopt more comprehensive, coherent and multidimensional approaches in formulating its eradication policies, programmes and operations. During the year, the General Assembly decided that the theme for the Second United Nations Decade for the Eradication of Poverty, proclaimed in 2007, would be “Full employment and decent work for all”, and requested the Secretary-General to appoint a focal point to coordinate implementation of the Decade. The Assembly also considered the legal empowerment of the poor on the basis of the final report of the Commission on Legal Empowerment of the Poor, entitled “Making the law work for everyone”. It reaffirmed that the rule of law was essential for sustained economic growth, sustainable development and the eradication of poverty and hunger, and stressed the importance of sharing best national practices. The Assembly held a high-level event on the MDGs, the theme of which was “End poverty 2015: make it happen”. The objective was to review progress and take stock of gaps at the midway point in the global effort to achieve the MDGs by 2015, identify actions and help ensure that the goals and international targets remained on track, and that the momentum was maintained beyond 2008. In that regard, the Secretary-General and the Assembly President proposed to hold an MDG Summit in 2010 to galvanize efforts and actions in the final five years before the 2015 deadline, and to convene an informal thematic debate on “Strengthening global health: the health MDGs and beyond”.

The Commission on Science and Technology for Development considered as its priority themes development-oriented policies for a socio-economically inclusive information society; and science, technology and engineering for innovation and capacity-building in education and research. It also considered progress made in the implementation of and follow-up to the outcomes of the first (2003) and second (2005) phases of the World Summit on the Information Society at the regional and international levels.

The UN system continued to address the development problems of groups of countries in special situations. The Assembly decided to convene, in 2011, the Fourth United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries to undertake a comprehensive appraisal of the implementation of the 2001 Brussels Programme of Action and identify obstacles and constraints encountered, as well as actions and initiatives needed. It also reviewed progress in the implementation of the 1994 Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States and the 2005 Mauritius Strategy for the Further Implementation of the Programme of Action. The Assembly requested UN system agencies to intensify efforts for mainstreaming the Mauritius Strategy in their work programmes. It conducted its midterm review of the Almaty Programme of Action, adopted in 2003 by the International Ministerial Conference of Landlocked and Transit Developing Countries and Donor Countries and International Financial and Development Institutions on Transit Transport Cooperation, and called on donors and the multilateral, regional, financial and development institutions to provide landlocked and transit developing countries with technical and financial assistance for its implementation.

International economic relations

Development and international economic cooperation

International economic cooperation issues were considered in 2008 by a number of UN bodies, including the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council.

On 19 December, the Assembly took note of the report of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee [A/63/412] on its discussion of macroeconomic policy questions (decision 63/539).

High-level meeting of Economic and Social Council, Bretton Woods institutions and WTO. On 14 April, the Economic and Social Council held in New York its eleventh special high-level meeting with the Bretton Woods institutions (the World Bank Group and the International Monetary Fund (IMF)), the World Trade Organization (WTO) and the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD), in accordance with its decision 2008/203 of 5 February. The meeting discussed the theme of coherence, coordination and cooperation in the context of the implementation of the Monterrey Consensus, adopted by the International Conference on Financing for Development [YUN 2002, p. 953], including new challenges and emerging issues, and had before it a March note by the Secretary-General on the subject [E/2008/7]. A summary of the meeting by the Council President [A/63/80-E/2008/67] outlined the five sub-themes that served as the focus of the substantive discussions: new initiatives on financing for development; supporting development efforts and enhancing the role of middle-income countries, including in the area of trade; supporting development efforts of the least developed countries (LDCs), including through trade capacity-building; building and sustaining solid financial markets: challenges for international cooperation; and financing of climate change mitigation and adaptation.

High-level segment of Economic and Social Council

The Economic and Social Council, at the high-level segment of its 2008 substantive session (30 June–3 July) [A/63/3/Rev.1], discussed the theme of promoting an integrated approach to rural development in developing countries for poverty eradication and sustainable development, taking into account current challenges, in accordance with its decision 2008/208 of 8 February. It held two panel discussions on: bioenergy, sustainable livelihoods and rural poor; and harnessing the current boom in agricultural commodities for poverty eradication and sustainable development: the case of small-scale farmers. The Council had before it a May report by the Secretary-General on the subject [E/2008/68], which reviewed implementation of the Council's 2003 Ministerial Declaration [YUN 2003, p. 853] on promoting an integrated approach to rural development, discussed current challenges and proposed as a way forward the adoption by the Council of a programme on rural development (see p. 919).

Development Cooperation Forum. As part of the high-level segment, the Council held its first biennial Development Cooperation Forum on 30 June and 1 July. In preparation for the Forum, Egypt submitted the report of the second High-level Symposium (Cairo, 19–20 January) [E/2008/56], which had as its theme “Trends in development cooperation: South-South and triangular cooperation and aid effectiveness”.

The Forum discussed a new vision for international development cooperation in the twenty-first century and its changing landscape and dynamics. It considered a May report [E/2008/69] of the Secretary-General on trends and progress in international cooperation, as requested by General Assembly resolution 61/16 [YUN 2006, p. 1589]. The main findings of the report were that, despite progress in some areas of the global partnership for development, agreements on trade and investment, as well as on the participation of developing countries in international economic decision-making, were not meeting expectations. Progress was insufficient to ensure realization of the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals (MDGs). Official development assistance (ODA), excluding debt relief, had grown at less than half the rate needed. Most donors were not on track and were not planning sufficiently far ahead to meet their targets. Although increased flows from sources other than the Development Assistance Committee of the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development were helping diversify financing, aid allocation was not conducive to the achievement of internationally agreed development goals. While a higher proportion of aid was going to the poorest countries, allocations were often not adequately based on needs, results or the vulnerability of countries to exogenous shocks. Particularly significant was the decline in agricultural aid. Development cooperation in the form of budget and sector support was growing slowly. The adoption of the Paris Declaration on Aid Effectiveness [YUN 2005, p. 957] marked a change in the articulation of benchmarks for progress, yet negotiations did not engage the full range of stakeholders nor deal with issues of key concern to programme country Governments and those of other stakeholders. Primarily preoccupied with monitoring aid delivery, the Paris process had not demonstrated ability to change donor behaviour or to link the aid effectiveness agenda with sustainable development results. While the capacities of programme countries to coordinate and manage aid were growing, major gaps remained in terms of analytical, policy, strategic and evaluation capacities. The Secretary-General made a number of action-oriented recommendations, including on the possible future of the Development Cooperation Forum.

The Forum held round tables on: identifying gaps and obstacles; reviewing trends and progress; and exchanging lessons learned. Following a special presentation on key policy messages and recommendations of the Rome Stakeholder Forum, it also held a round table on aid effectiveness.

Annual ministerial review. On 2 July, the Council held its annual ministerial review on the theme “Implementing the internationally agreed goals and commitments in regard to sustainable development”. In preparation for the review, a number of countries submitted national reports: Belgium [E/2008/81], Brazil

[E/2008/87], Chile [E/2008/75], Colombia [E/2008/74], Finland [E/2008/86], Kazakhstan [E/2008/79], the Lao People’s Democratic Republic [E/2008/78], Luxembourg [E/2008/70], the United Kingdom [E/2008/85] and the United Republic of Tanzania [E/2008/89]. On 25 June [E/2008/88], Bahrain submitted the report of the Western Asia regional preparatory meeting (Manama, 1–2 June) on sustainable urbanization.

The Council held a round table on the role of ecosystem services in sustainable development. It had before it the Secretary-General’s report [E/2008/12] on the theme of the review, which stated that the three pillars of sustainable development—integrating economic growth, social development and protection of the environment—had been adopted in principle but not in practice. Although some approaches offered benefits in all three areas, costs and trade-offs were often involved. Striking an optimal balance among the three areas remained a central challenge of sustainable development. Moreover, while some progress had been achieved in building the economic and social pillars of sustainable development, greater efforts were still required. The long-term sustainability issues of climate change, deforestation, biodiversity and marine resources were in particular need of attention. There was also an urgent need to implement the global consensus on sustainable development, particularly Agenda 21, adopted at the 1992 United Nations Conference on Environment and Development [YUN 1992, p. 672], the Johannesburg Plan of Implementation adopted at the 2002 World Summit on Sustainable Development [YUN 2002, p. 821] and the MDG on ensuring environmental sustainability [YUN 2000, p. 51]. To that end, the Secretary-General made recommendations on, among other issues, strengthening governance and global cooperation, creating markets for sustainable development, increasing financial assistance and promoting the transfer of technology.

Policy dialogue. On 30 June, the Council held a high-level policy dialogue on developments in the world economy with the representatives of international financial and trade institutions.

Ministerial Declaration. On 3 July, the Council adopted the draft Ministerial Declaration entitled “Implementing the internationally agreed goals and commitments in regard to sustainable development” [E/2008/L.10].

Globalization and interdependence

In response to General Assembly resolution 62/199 [YUN 2007, p. 835], the Secretary-General submitted an August report [A/63/333] on the impact of globalization on the achievement of the internationally agreed development goals, including the MDGs. The report examined the new threats to the achievement of those goals, including the current economic outlook and the food crisis (see p. 1343), and the social and environmental impact of globalization, particularly on the eradication of poverty, hunger and education, gender equality, health and sustainable development.

According to the report, the relationship between globalization and development outcomes was complex. Each of the forces powering globalization—finance, trade, investment, technology and migration—had economic, social and environmental impacts that affected the formulation and implementation of policies at the national, regional and global levels. Among significant impacts were the reduction in national autonomy in policymaking and the need to harmonize national policy formulation with international obligations, commitments and compulsions. The realization of the MDGs was dependent on the strengthening of the global partnership for development. Buffeted by economic forces outside their control, smaller economies could not succeed by themselves in realizing the goals. The gloomy economic outlook and inflationary pressures, driven by rising food and fuel prices, pointed to a less supportive environment for meeting the internationally agreed development goals than had been the case since the Millennium Summit [YUN 2000, p. 48]. The dilemma facing policymakers in the poorest countries was particularly stark, given that the surge in fuel and food prices would likely lead to a deterioration of household incomes, reversing many of the gains made by countries in poverty reduction. While emergency support could ease the threat in the short run, the only lasting solution was to raise investment and stimulate productivity in the food-producing sector. Public spending on research and development and investment in rural infrastructure should be increased, and access to credit improved. That, in turn, would require that macroeconomic policies gave as much priority to investment, employment and economic security as to fighting inflation.

The report concluded that global forces, such as trade and cross-border flows of capital and labour, had important consequences for the achievement of internationally agreed development goals. Development, therefore, should be central to consideration of how globalization was managed, rather than viewed as a by-product of globalization. Given the nature of linkages and interdependence in driving globalization and its cumulative impact on growth and development, greater consistency should be achieved among the macroeconomic, trade, aid, financial, environmental and gender equality policies of all countries, so that they supported the common aim of making globalization work for all. More international efforts were needed to establish fair and equitable trade, investment, technology and knowledge regimes. Multilateral institutions and global governance should be reformed. Ensuring greater participation of developing countries was essential in the decision-making processes of international institutions so that their needs in managing globalization were fairly represented and addressed. Domestic resources and institutions should be strengthened and mobilized to ensure that a development strategy advanced the objectives and priorities of national development agendas and enabled country-specific responses to global trends and impacts. Safety nets and social protection schemes that sheltered the poor during crises should be given priority; statistics, including data disaggregated by sex and gender-sensitive indicators, should be improved; and monitoring and evaluation capacity should be strengthened.

Communications. On 3 October [A/63/464], Antigua and Barbuda, as the Chairman of the Group of 77, transmitted to the Secretary-General the Ministerial Declaration adopted at the thirty-second annual meeting of the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the Group of 77 and China (New York, 26 September), which reviewed progress of the world economy and challenges in the economic development and social progress of developing countries. The Declaration recognized that the global food, financial and energy crises constituted a major multidimensional challenge for development and the achievement of the internationally agreed development goals, and emphasized the need for a strengthened global partnership for development, based on the recognition of national leadership and ownership of development strategies.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December [meeting 72], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/63/416/Add.1], adopted resolution 63/222 without vote [agenda item 54 (a)].

Role of the United Nations in promoting development in the context of globalization and interdependence

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 53/169 of 15 December 1998, 54/231 of 22 December 1999, 55/212 of 20 December 2000, 56/209 of 21 December 2001, 57/274 of 20 December 2002, 58/225 of 23 December 2003, 59/240 of 22 December 2004, 60/204 of 22 December 2005, 61/207 of 20 December 2006 and 62/199 of 19 December 2007 on the role of the United Nations in promoting development in the context of globalization and interdependence,

Recalling also the 2005 World Summit Outcome and all relevant General Assembly resolutions, in particular those that have built upon the 2005 World Summit Outcome, in the economic, social and related fields, including resolution 60/265 of 30 June 2006 on follow-up to the development outcome of the 2005 World Summit, including the Millennium Development Goals and the other internationally agreed development goals,

Reaffirming that the United Nations has a central role in promoting international cooperation for development and in promoting policy coherence on global development issues, including in the context of globalization and interdependence,

Reaffirming also the resolve expressed in the United Nations Millennium Declaration to ensure that globalization works as a positive force for all,

Recognizing that all human rights are universal, indivisible, interdependent and interrelated,

Recognizing also that globalization, driven largely by economic liberalization and technology, implies that the economic performance of a country is increasingly affected by factors outside its geographical borders and that maximizing in an equitable manner the benefits of globalization requires developing responses to globalization through a strengthened global partnership for development to achieve the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals,

Expressing concern that the number of people living in poverty is higher than previously estimated, despite significant progress, and that the current financial and food insecurity crises and unpredictable energy prices may pose significant challenges for the achievement of the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals,

Recognizing that domestic economies are now interwoven with the global economy and that globalization affects all countries in different ways, and that countries on the one hand have trade and investment opportunities to, inter alia, fight poverty, while on the other hand they face constraints in the degree of flexibility they have in pursuing their national development strategies,

Reaffirming its strong support for fair and inclusive globalization and the need to translate growth into reduction of poverty and, in this regard, its resolve to make the goals of full and productive employment and decent work for all, including for women and young people, a central objective of relevant national and international policies as well as national development strategies, including poverty reduction strategies, as part of efforts to achieve the Millennium Development Goals,

Noting that particular attention must be given, in the context of globalization, to the objective of protecting, promoting and enhancing the rights and welfare of women and girls, as stated in the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action,

Reaffirming its commitment to governance, equity and transparency in the financial, monetary and trading systems and its commitment to open, equitable, rule-based, predictable and non-discriminatory multilateral trading and financial systems,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Expresses deep concern at the impact of the current financial crisis and global economic slowdown on the ability of developing countries to gain access to the financing necessary for their development objectives, and underlines the fact that developing countries and countries with economies in transition risk suffering very serious setbacks to their development objectives, in particular the achievement of the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals;

3. Recognizes the measures adopted by Governments to address the present financial crisis, and, in that regard, calls upon all countries to manage their macroeconomic and financial policies in ways that contribute to global stability and sustained economic growth and sustainable development;

4. Also recognizes that greater coherence is required among the macroeconomic, trade, aid, financial, environmental and gender-equality policies to support the common aim of ensuring that globalization works as a positive force for all;

5. Further recognizes that new and highly globalized financial instruments continue to change the nature of risks in the world economy, requiring continuing enhancement of market oversight and regulation, and underlines the fact that, to strengthen the resilience of the international financial system, reforms will need to be implemented that will strengthen the regulatory and supervisory frameworks of financial markets;

6. Underlines the fact that economies exist in a globalizing world where the emergence of rule-based regimes for international economic relations has meant that the space for national economic policy, that is to say the scope for domestic policies, especially in the areas of trade, investment and industrial development, is now often framed by international disciplines, commitments and global market considerations, that it is for each Government to evaluate the trade-off between the benefits of accepting international rules and commitments and the constraints posed by the loss of policy space, and that it is particularly important for developing countries, bearing in mind development goals and objectives, that all countries take into account the need for appropriate balance between national policy space and international disciplines and commitments, and, in this regard, notes with appreciation the outcome of the twelfth session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, held in Accra from 20 to 25 April 2008;

7. Reaffirms that good governance is essential for sustainable development, that sound economic policies, solid democratic institutions responsive to the needs of the people and improved infrastructure are the basis for sustained economic growth, poverty eradication and employment creation, and that freedom, peace and security, domestic stability, respect for human rights, including the right to development, and the rule of law, gender equality, market-oriented policies and an overall commitment to just and democratic societies are also essential and mutually reinforcing;

8. Also reaffirms that good governance at the international level is fundamental for achieving sustainable development, that, in order to ensure a dynamic and enabling international economic environment, it is important to promote global economic governance by addressing the international finance, trade, technology and investment patterns that have an impact on the development prospects of developing countries and that, to this end, the international community should take all necessary and appropriate measures, including ensuring support for structural and macroeconomic reform, a comprehensive solution to the external debt problem and increasing the market access of developing countries;

9. Further reaffirms that each country has primary responsibility for its own development, that the role of national policies and development strategies cannot be over-emphasized in the achievement of sustainable development, and that national efforts should be complemented by supportive global programmes, measures and policies aimed at expanding the development opportunities of developing countries, while taking into account national conditions and ensuring respect for national ownership, strategies and sovereignty;

10. Reaffirms the commitment to broaden and strengthen the participation of developing countries and countries with economies in transition in international economic decision-making and norm-setting, stresses, to that end, the importance of continuing efforts to reform the international financial architecture, noting that enhancing the voice and participation of developing countries and countries with economies in transition in the Bretton Woods institutions remains a continuous concern, and calls in this regard for further and effective progress;

11. Stresses the need for increased support for investment in agricultural productivity, particularly in developing countries, in order to achieve the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals;

12. Encourages all development partners to help to strengthen and support the national health and education policies and plans of developing countries by providing assistance and funding in accordance with their development needs and priorities;

13. Calls upon Governments to assign a high priority to education, including by establishing institutions, in particular for basic education and vocational training, and improving access to and the quality of primary, secondary and tertiary education, including by developing a clear vision for the long-term development of a comprehensive, diversified and well-articulated tertiary education system;

14. Calls upon countries to increase public expenditure and encourage greater private and community investment to achieve international goals and targets in the areas of health, nutrition and sanitation consistent with public policy objectives related to equitable access as well as meeting the specific health goals of reducing child and maternal mortality and reducing the spread of diseases such as HIV/AIDS, tuberculosis and malaria;

15. Calls upon all countries to promote sustainable consumption and production patterns, with the developed countries taking the lead and all countries benefiting from the process, taking into account the Rio principles, including, inter alia, the principle of common but differentiated responsibilities as set out in principle 7 of the Rio Declaration on Environment and Development;

16. Stresses the need for all countries to harness knowledge and technology and stimulate innovation if they are to improve their competitiveness and benefit from trade and investment, and in this regard underlines the importance of concrete actions to facilitate technology transfer under fair, transparent and mutually agreed terms to developing countries in support of the implementation of their sustainable development strategies;

17. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its sixty-fourth session a report on the theme "Globalization and interdependence: the role of the United Nations in poverty reduction and sustainable development" under the item entitled "Globalization and interdependence";

18. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its sixty-fourth session, under the item entitled "Globalization and interdependence", the sub-item entitled "Role of the United Nations in promoting development in the context of globalization and interdependence".

Also on 19 December, the Assembly, by decision 63/540, took note of the report of the Second Committee on its consideration of globalization and interdependence [A/63/416].

Development cooperation with middle-income countries

The third Ministerial Conference on Development Cooperation with Middle-Income Countries (MICS) was held in Windhoek, Namibia, from 4 to 6 August [A/C.2/63/3]. Previous conferences were held in Madrid, Spain [A/62/71-E/2007/46], and El Salvador [A/62/483-E/2007/90] in 2007. The Conference adopted the Windhoek Ministerial Declaration on Development Cooperation with Middle-Income Countries, which recognized the importance of reflecting the development needs of MICS, including those contained in its Declaration and in the outcomes of the international economic development processes. It invited the UN development system to enhance support to MICS and strengthen its coordination and exchange of experiences with other regional and international organizations and financial institutions. The Conference decided to present for the General Assembly's consideration, at its sixty-third (2008) session, a draft resolution mandating a comprehensive review of the practices of the international cooperation system, particularly international financial institutions associated with the UN system, its cooperation and development agencies and other international organizations regarding the development of MICS, with a view to achieving more effective cooperation and fostering international support. The Conference would continue to hold yearly follow-up conferences and other meetings on development cooperation with MICS. It also asked the UN system and other international organizations to support those endeavours and agreed to carry forward the work related to MIC issues, including the possibility of convening the next Conference at UN Headquarters in New York.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December [meeting 72], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/63/416/Add.1], adopted resolution 63/223 without vote [agenda item 51 (a)].

Development cooperation with middle-income countries

The General Assembly,

Recalling the outcomes of the United Nations major international conferences and summits, including the United Nations Millennium Declaration and the 2005 World Summit Outcome, as well as the relevant provisions of General Assembly resolutions,

Reaffirming its resolution 62/208 of 19 December 2007, entitled “Triennial comprehensive policy review of operational activities for development of the United Nations system”, in which it recognized that middle-income developing countries still face significant challenges in the area of poverty eradication and that efforts to address those challenges should be supported in order to ensure that achievements made to date are sustained, including through support to the effective development of comprehensive cooperation policies,

Emphasizing that middle-income countries must take primary responsibility for their own development, and that their national efforts should be complemented by supportive global programmes, measures and policies aimed at expanding the development opportunities of middle-income countries, while taking into account their specific national conditions,

Noting that national averages based on criteria such as per capita income do not always reflect the actual particularities and development needs of the middle-income countries, and recognizing the significant diversity of middle-income countries,

Taking note of the outcomes of the international conferences on development cooperation with middle-income countries held in Madrid, El Salvador and Windhoek, and the regional conference on the theme “Increasing the competitiveness of African middle-income countries”, held in Cairo,

1. Recognizes that middle-income countries still face significant challenges in their efforts to achieve the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals, and, in that regard, underlines the importance of international support, through various forms, that is well aligned with national priorities, to address the development needs of middle-income countries;

2. Acknowledges the efforts made and successes achieved by many middle-income countries to eradicate poverty and achieve the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals, as well as their significant contribution to global and regional development and economic stability;

3. Recognizes the solidarity of middle-income countries with other developing countries with a view to supporting their development efforts, including in the context of South-South and triangular cooperation;

4. Invites the United Nations development system to support middle-income countries, as appropriate, and to improve its coordination and exchange of experiences with other international organizations, international financial institutions and regional organizations in this field;

5. Acknowledges the initiative of middle-income countries to hold follow-up conferences and other meetings regarding their development on a yearly basis, and, in this regard, requests the United Nations system to continue supporting these endeavours in collaboration with other relevant international organizations;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a comprehensive report on the implementation of all the elements of the present resolution to the General Assembly at its sixty-fourth session under the item entitled “Globalization and interdependence”, with a focus on existing strategies and actions of the United Nations development system on development cooperation with middle-income countries, and taking into account the work of other relevant international organizations, including international financial institutions.

Industrial development

In response to General Assembly resolution 61/215 [YUN 2006, p. 980], the Secretary-General transmitted an August report [A/63/309] by the Director-General of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO) on industrial development cooperation that highlighted trends and developments in the industrial performance of developing countries, explored the challenges of industrialization and examined the response of the multilateral development system to them. The report also highlighted UNIDO’s role in meeting the challenges of industrial development in partnership with UN and non-UN entities, particularly in LDCs, and outlined its contributions to the African Union New Partnership for Africa’s Development [YUN 2001, p. 900].

According to the report, trends in industrial development showed that the manufacturing industry was shifting from developed to a number of developing countries, creating disparities in the industrial performance of various regions and within regions in the developing world. East Asia, and China in particular, far surpassed others in growth in manufactures. Other developing country regions showed a decline in growth, particularly Latin America, or continued to stagnate, as in sub-Saharan Africa. With support from international development partners, the green shoots of economic development could, as in many parts of Asia, transform Africa and the poorest countries of the world. However, the chief obstacles to doing so were: ongoing poverty in the face of an underdeveloped private sector, especially where small and medium-sized enterprises (SMEs) were concerned; barriers to international trade, which limited exports from developing countries; energy access; and climate change effects and the need for environmental protection to be built into industrial development, as well as access to information and technology.

The report concluded that, to narrow the disparities and fight poverty, private sector-led growth should be encouraged in those regions and countries left behind, particularly in LDCs. Industrial strategy should remove regulatory obstacles to economic activity and focus on building the “missing middle” by supporting the development of innovative and dynamic SMEs capable of competing locally and internationally. At the international level, equitable globalization required a multilateral trading agreement that reflected the development intentions of the Doha Round of trade negotiations (see p. 1050). Trade-related challenges facing developing-country enterprises, such as non-tariff barriers, growth in regionalism and over-reliance on primary commodity exports, should be addressed. Climate change should also be addressed, inter alia, through an international mechanism for the development and dissemination of technologies, with the aim of removing barriers and providing predictable financial resources and other incentives for scaling up investment in environmentally sound technologies, especially in developing countries. The multilateral development system, including international financial institutions and the UN system, should respond to those challenges and adapt to sudden changes or emerging needs. UNIDO should continue, in partnership with other relevant actors, to promote sustainable, private sector-led industrial development in order to help developing countries, especially LDCs, build up human and institutional capacities, enhance their international competitiveness, promote investment and technology transfer, promote small and medium-sized entrepreneurship development, develop agro-industries and strengthen its activities in energy for industry and in combating climate change.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December [meeting 72], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/63/418/Add.2], adopted resolution 63/231 without vote [agenda item 53 (b)].

Industrial development cooperation

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 46/151 of 18 December 1991, 49/108 of 19 December 1994, 51/170 of 16 December 1996, 53/177 of 15 December 1998, 55/187 of 20 December 2000, 57/243 of 20 December 2002, 59/249 of 22 December 2004 and 61/215 of 20 December 2006 on industrial development cooperation,

Recalling also the United Nations Millennium Declaration, the Monterrey Consensus of the International Conference on Financing for Development and the Plan of Implementation of the World Summit on Sustainable Development (“Johannesburg Plan of Implementation”), Recalling further the 2005 World Summit Outcome and resolution 60/265 of 30 June 2006 on the follow-up to the development outcome of the 2005 World Summit, including the Millennium Development Goals and the other internationally agreed development goals,

Recognizing that industrialization is an essential driver of sustained economic growth, sustainable development and poverty eradication in developing countries and countries with economies in transition, including through the creation of productive employment, income generation and the facilitation of social integration, including the integration of women into the development process,

Stressing the importance of international cooperation to promote equitable and sustainable patterns of industrial development,

Recognizing the role of the business community, including the private sector, in enhancing the dynamic process of the development of the industrial sector, underlining the importance of the benefits of foreign direct investment in that process, and recognizing also, in this regard, that an enabling domestic environment is vital for mobilizing domestic resources, increasing productivity, reducing capital flight, encouraging the private sector and attracting and making effective use of international investment and assistance and that efforts to create such an environment should be supported by the international community,

Recognizing also the importance of the transfer of technology on mutually agreed terms to the developing countries as well as countries with economies in transition as an effective means of international cooperation in the pursuit of poverty eradication and sustainable development,

Noting that the United Nations Industrial Development Organization was awarded the Africa Investor Award for 2007 in the category “best initiative in support of small and medium-sized enterprise development”,

Taking note of the important role played by the United Nations Industrial Development Organization in the development of the public and private sectors, productivity growth, trade capacity-building, corporate social responsibility, environmental protection, energy efficiency and the promotion of renewable energies,

1. Takes note of the note by the Secretary-General transmitting the report of the Director-General of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization;

2. Reaffirms that each country must take primary responsibility for its own industrial development and that national efforts should be complemented by supportive global programmes, measures and policies aimed at expanding the development opportunities of developing countries;

3. Also reaffirms the essential contribution of industrial development to sustained economic growth and social development and the achievement of the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals;

4. Emphasizes the importance of the creation of wealth for poverty reduction and for pro-poor growth, especially with regard to women, through the development and strengthening of productive capacities in developing countries and countries with economies in transition, including through the development of the public and private sectors and entrepreneurship and through small and medium-sized enterprises, enterprise upgrading, training, education and skills enhancement and an enabling environment for the transfer of technology on mutually agreed terms, the flow of investments and participation in global supply chains;

5. Underlines the necessity of favourable national and international measures for industrialization in developing countries and countries with economies in transition, and urges all Governments to develop and implement policies that will lead to the development of a dynamic industrial sector through, inter alia, public- and private-sector development, the diffusion of environmentally sound and emerging technologies, investment promotion and enhanced access to markets;

6. Calls for the continuing use of official development assistance for sustainable industrial development, the achievement of greater efficiency and effectiveness of official development assistance resources and industrial development cooperation between developing countries and with countries with economies in transition;

7. Underlines the importance of mobilizing resources for sustainable industrial development at the country level;

8. Calls for the continuing use of all other resources, including private and public, foreign and domestic resources, for industrial development in the developing countries as well as countries with economies in transition;

9. Recognizes the key role of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization in promoting sustainable industrial development and in industrial development cooperation, and welcomes its increased programmatic focus on three thematic priorities, namely, poverty reduction through productive activities, trade capacity-building and environment and energy;

10. Calls upon the United Nations Industrial Development Organization to take appropriate actions for the full implementation of General Assembly resolution 62/208 of 19 December 2007;

11. Recognizes that the current food crisis represents a serious and complex challenge affecting the world's poor, and looks forward to discussions and a report on how the United Nations Industrial Development Organization might best contribute to a system-wide solution to the crisis;

12. Stresses the importance of the development of agro-industries and the reduction of post-harvest losses, including through the introduction of improved technologies and the increased processing of agricultural products in developing countries and countries with economies in transition, and encourages the parties in the ongoing discussions being held in Vienna to consider how the United Nations Industrial Development Organization could best contribute to those objectives, including discussions aimed at helping to achieve global food security;

13. Notes the emphasis placed by the United Nations Industrial Development Organization on assisting developing countries and countries with economies in transition to strengthen their capacity to engage in international trade through small and medium-sized enterprise development and by helping them to meet international product and process standards;

14. Welcomes the increased cooperation of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization with the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, the International Trade Centre UNCTAD/WTO, the World Trade Organization, the United Nations Development

Programme, the United Nations Environment Programme, the World Health Organization, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations and the regional commissions, and invites the United Nations Industrial Development Organization to continue to build and strengthen its partnership with other United Nations organizations having complementary mandates and activities with a view to achieving greater effectiveness and development impact and promoting increased coherence within the United Nations system;

15. Encourages the United Nations Industrial Development Organization to continue to promote environmentally sound and sustainable production through, inter alia, its programmes on cleaner production, industrial water management and industrial energy efficiency and the utilization of renewable energy for productive uses, especially in rural areas;

16. Takes note of the increased emphasis given by the United Nations Industrial Development Organization to South-South cooperation, including triangular cooperation, and encourages it to pay particular attention to promoting industrial cooperation among developing countries, including through its centres for South-South industrial cooperation and through the promotion of various forms of public/private-sector partnerships and the exchange of experiences in public- and private-sector development, including at the regional, subregional and country levels, with regard to industrial development;

17. Welcomes the support of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization for the New Partnership for Africa's Development and other programmes of the African Union, including the Pharmaceutical Manufacturing Plan for Africa, aimed at further strengthening the industrialization process in Africa, inter alia, through its role as the convener of the industry, trade and market access cluster of the regional consultation meetings led by the Economic Commission for Africa;

18. Recognizes the importance of industrial development in post-conflict countries, particularly through employment-generating activities and energy supply, and encourages the United Nations Industrial Development Organization to assist in these efforts within its mandate, including, where applicable, by providing assistance in the implementation of the integrated peacebuilding strategies of the Peacebuilding Commission;

19. Encourages the United Nations Industrial Development Organization to develop further its global forum capacity according to its mandate, with the aim of enhancing, in the context of the globalization process, a common understanding of global and regional industrial sector issues and their impact on poverty eradication and sustainable development;

20. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its sixty-fifth session a report on the implementation of the present resolution.

Towards a New International Economic Order

On 19 December [meeting 72], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/63/416/Add.1], adopted resolution 63/224 by recorded vote (123-1-52) [agenda item 51 (a)].

Towards a New International Economic Order

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations to promote the economic advancement and social progress of all peoples,

Recalling the principles of the Declaration on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, as set out in resolutions 3201(S-VI) and 3202(S-VI), respectively, adopted by the General Assembly at its sixth special session, on 1 May 1974,

Taking into account the fact that the year 2009 marks the thirty-fifth anniversary of the adoption of the Declaration and the Programme of Action,

Reaffirming the United Nations Millennium Declaration,

Recalling the outcomes of the major United Nations conferences and summits in the economic, social and related fields, including the development goals and objectives contained therein, and recognizing the vital role played by those conferences and summits in shaping a broad development vision and in identifying commonly agreed objectives,

Concerned that the current international economic, financial, energy and food crises, as well as the challenges posed by climate change, aggravate the existing international situation and have a negative impact on the development prospects of developing countries, while threatening to further widen the gap between developed and developing countries, including the technological and income gap,

1. Reaffirms the need to continue working towards a new international economic order based on the principles of equity, sovereign equality, interdependence, common interest, cooperation and solidarity among all States;

2. Decides to consider in depth the international economic situation and its impact on development during the sixty-fourth session of the General Assembly, and in that regard requests the Secretary-General to include in his next report, under the item entitled "Globalization and interdependence", an overview of the major international economic and policy challenges for equitable and inclusive sustained economic growth and sustainable development, and of the role of the United Nations in addressing these issues, in the light of the relevant principles contained in the Declaration on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order.

RECORDED VOTE ON RESOLUTION 63/224:

In favour: Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Armenia, Azerbaijan, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Cambodia, Cameroon, Cape Verde, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Djibouti, Dominica, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Eritrea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Ghana, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Jamaica, Jordan, Kazakhstan, Kenya, Kuwait, Kyrgyzstan, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Marshall Islands, Mauri-

Sustainable development

Implementation of Agenda 21, Programme for Further Implementation of Agenda 21 and Johannesburg Plan of Implementation

In 2008, several UN bodies, including the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council and the Commission on Sustainable Development, considered the implementation of outcomes of the 2002 World Summit on Sustainable Development [YUN 2002, p. 821], particularly the Johannesburg Declaration and Plan of Implementation, which outlined actions and targets for stepping up implementation of Agenda 21—a programme of action for sustainable development worldwide, adopted at the 1992 United Nations Conference on Environment and Development [YUN 1992, p. 672]—and of the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21, adopted by the Assembly at its nineteenth special session in 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 792].

Commission on Sustainable Development consideration. As the body responsible for coordinating and monitoring implementation of the Summit outcomes, the Commission on Sustainable Development, at its sixteenth session (New York, 11 May 2007, 5–16 May 2008) [E/2008/29], discussed, in line with the multi-year programme adopted by the Council in resolution 2003/61 [YUN 2003, p. 842], the thematic cluster for the 2008–2009 implementation cycle: agriculture; rural development; land; drought; desertification; and Africa.

Intersessional events. The following intersessional events took place in preparation for the sixteenth session: Water Technologies and Environmental Control Conference (Tel Aviv, Israel, 30–31 October 2007); Seventh Global Forum on Sustainable Energy (Vienna, 21–23 November 2007); International Conference on Combating Desertification (Beijing, 22–24 January 2008); Oslo Policy Forum on Changing the Way We Develop: Dealing with Disasters and Climate Change (Oslo, Norway, 27–29 February); and High-level Round Table on International Cooperation for Sustainable Development in Caribbean Small Island Developing States (Bridgetown, Barbados, 25–27 March).

Thematic issues. For its consideration of the thematic cluster for the 2008–2009 implementation cycle, the Commission considered the Secretary-General's reports on: agriculture [E/CN.17/2008/3]; rural development [E/CN.17/2008/4]; Africa [E/CN.17/2008/8]; review of implementation on land [E/CN.17/2008/5]; review of implementation of Agenda 21 and the Johannesburg Plan of Implementation: drought [E/CN.17/2008/6] and desertification [E/CN.17/2008/7]; integrated review of the thematic cluster in small island developing States [E/CN.17/2008/9]; overview of progress towards sustainable development: a review of the implementation of Agenda 21, the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21 and the Johannesburg Plan of Implementation [E/CN.17/2008/2]; partnerships for sustainable development [E/CN.17/2008/10]; and review of progress in implementing the decision of the thirteenth session of the Commission on water and sanitation [E/CN.17/2008/11]. It also considered a note by the Secretariat on the outcomes of the regional implementation meetings [E/CN.17/2008/12]; reports on the five regional discussions [E/CN.17/2008/12/Add.1–5]; and discussion papers by major groups [E/CN.17/2008/13 & Add.1–9].

Implementation activities

In response to General Assembly resolution 62/189 [YUN 2007, p. 842], the Secretary-General submitted an August report [A/63/304] on the implementation of Agenda 21, the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21 and the outcomes of the World Summit on Sustainable Development that provided an update on actions taken by Governments, UN system organizations and major groups of civil society in advancing the implementation of sustainable development goals and targets, including through partnerships. The report reviewed new and emerging challenges, actions undertaken at the intergovernmental level, implementation by the UN system, activities undertaken by regions and special groups and the creation of partnerships to foster sustainable development. According to the report, the international community was tackling multiple interlinked challenges arising from the food and energy crises and climate change, which adversely affected the most vulnerable populations and impeded progress towards the achievement of the internationally agreed development goals. Integrated and coordinated action was therefore necessary to alleviate their impact and create global partnerships for their short- and long-term solutions. Meeting those challenges would require a more integrated and balanced approach to economic, social and environmental policies tailored to each country's needs, more space for implementing counter-cyclical macroeconomic policies, international support for broader social protection schemes, and more investment in environmental policies, multi-stakeholder dialogues, decision-making, monitoring and evaluation. It also required incorporating the three pillars of sustainable development into national strategies. As at February, 82 countries had implemented development strategies, while an additional 16 had formulated, and would soon start implementing, them. Many countries had applied the principles of sustainable development to the formulation of sector strategies, as the current crises showed the need for more investment in agriculture and rural development, together with the prevention of land degradation, the development of land tenure systems and the sustainable management of natural resources.

At the intergovernmental level, the Economic and Social Council focused on sustainable development challenges, including the state of the world economy and its implications for the achievement of UN development goals. The sixteenth session of the Commission on Sustainable Development, during its review session, focused on the thematic cluster of agriculture, rural development, land, drought, desertification and Africa. At the inter-agency level, UN-Water—the official UN mechanism for follow-up to the water-related decisions of the 2002 World Summit and the MDGs—continued its work in all aspects related to water and sanitation, including the preparation of a status report on integrated water resources management and a water efficiency plan for the Commission's sixteenth session. UN-Water also launched a status report on integrated water resources management and plans for efficient, equitable and sustainable development and management of the world's limited water resources and for coping with conflicting demands. It also continued working on the decade's central themes: scarcity, access to sanitation and health, water and gender, capacity-building, financing, valuation, integrated water resources management, environment and biodiversity, disaster prevention, food and agriculture, and coordinated activities for the International Year of Sanitation 2008. The Division for Sustainable Development of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs (DESA) organized a Caribbean workshop on sanitation, entitled "Integration of sanitation policies into national development plans in the Caribbean region” (Kingston, Jamaica, 28–29 April).

At the regional level, the UN regional commissions and offices, regional development banks and other organizations expedited the implementation of sustainable development goals and targets. The five regional commissions—for Africa, Western Asia, Asia and the Pacific, Latin America and the Caribbean, and Europe—organized ministerial-level implementation meetings and continued to integrate sustainable development into their work. The Economic Commission for Africa and the secretariat of the United Nations Convention to Combat Desertification signed a memorandum of understanding in March aimed at enhancing collaboration in implementing the Convention, notably in those countries experiencing serious drought and/or desertification. Major groups implemented innovative policies and programmes and made progress in carrying out projects related to the thematic issues addressed in the Commission’s multi-year programme of work and in addressing cross-cutting issues such as poverty eradication, education, health and gender equality.

Voluntary multi-stakeholder partnerships proved to be an important complementary outcome of the World Summit and a viable implementation mechanism. They continued to develop and grow, and their wide acceptance was embedded in the international dialogue and had become an integral part of the work of the UN system. By collaborating across all levels, pooling skills and resources, and developing innovative policy and technical and financing solutions to overcome barriers to sustainable development, partnerships contributed to the implementation of internationally agreed sustainable development goals and commitments. They were also useful as a vehicle for effecting change by catalysing Government action, engaging a wide range of stakeholders and creating new, innovative models for the implementation of goals and commitments. As at July, 344 partnerships were registered with the Commission secretariat, 102 of which had identified agriculture, drought, desertification, land, rural development and Africa as the primary focus of their activities.

The Secretary-General recommended that the Assembly call on Governments, UN system organizations and major groups to deepen their commitments to sustainable development by redoubling their efforts to implement Agenda 21, the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21 and the Johannesburg Plan of Implementation, expediting progress in implementation through the exchange of lessons learned and best practices. Governments should support the Commission and organize intersessional activities, taking into account the Commission’s 2008–2009 thematic cluster of issues, and emphasize the importance of a consensus outcome and action-oriented policy sessions; and contribute to the Commission’s trust fund in support of enhanced participation of representatives of developing countries and of major groups in the Commission’s work. The Assembly should invite the United Nations System Chief Executives Board for Coordination (CEB) to continue monitoring, through its High-level Committee on Programmes, the operational efficiency and effectiveness of inter-agency collaborative mechanisms, including UN-Energy, UN-Water and UN-Oceans. Donors should target funding support to help developing countries overcome constraints identified during the review year in the thematic cluster.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December [meeting 72], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/63/414/Add.1], adopted resolution 63/212 without vote [agenda item 49 (a)].

Implementation of Agenda 21, the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21 and the outcomes of the World Summit on Sustainable Development

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 55/199 of 20 December 2000, 56/226 of 24 December 2001, 57/253 of 20 December 2002, 57/270 A and B of 20 December 2002 and 23 June 2003, respectively, 61/195 of 20 December 2006 and 62/189 of 19 December 2007, and all other previous resolutions on the implementation of Agenda 21, the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21 and the outcomes of the World Summit on Sustainable Development,

Recalling also the Rio Declaration on Environment and Development, Agenda 21, the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21, the Johannesburg Declaration on Sustainable Development and the Plan of Implementation of the World Summit on Sustainable Development (“Johannesburg Plan of Implementation”), as well as the Monterrey Consensus of the International Conference on Financing for Development,

Reaffirming the commitment to implement Agenda 21, the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21, the Johannesburg Plan of Implementation, including the time-bound goals and targets, and the other internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals,

Recalling the 2005 World Summit Outcome,

Reaffirming the decisions taken at the eleventh session of the Commission on Sustainable Development,

Reiterating that sustainable development in its economic, social and environmental aspects is a key element of the overarching framework for United Nations activities, and reaffirming the continuing need to ensure a balance among economic development, social development and environmental protection as interdependent and mutually reinforcing pillars of sustainable development,

Noting that challenges remain in achieving the goals of the three pillars of sustainable development, particularly in the context of the current global crises,

Taking note of the proposal to convene a world summit on sustainable development in 2012,

Bearing in mind the need for further consultations on this matter, in the light of the variety of views expressed by Member States, recognizing that the preparatory process, content, modalities and timing for such a possible high-level event on sustainable development would need to be determined taking into account the work of the Commission, particularly as established in its multi-year programme of work, with a view to avoiding duplication of work,

Recalling the adoption of the Commission multi-year programme of work designed to contribute to advancing the implementation of Agenda 21, the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21 and the Johannesburg Plan of Implementation at all levels,

Reaffirming that eradicating poverty, changing unsustainable patterns of production and consumption and protecting and managing the natural resource base of economic and social development are overarching objectives of and essential requirements for sustainable development,

Recognizing that good governance within each country and at the international level is essential for sustainable development,

Recalling that the Johannesburg Plan of Implementation designated the Commission to serve as the focal point for discussion on partnerships that promote sustainable development and contribute to the implementation of intergovernmental commitments in Agenda 21, the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21 and the Johannesburg Plan of Implementation,

Recognizing that eradicating poverty is the greatest global challenge facing the world today and an indispensable requirement for sustainable development, in particular for developing countries, and that although each country has the primary responsibility for its own sustainable development and poverty eradication and the role of national policies and development strategies cannot be overemphasized, concerted and concrete measures are required at all levels to enable developing countries to achieve their sustainable development goals as related to the internationally agreed poverty-related targets and goals, including those contained in Agenda 21, the relevant outcomes of other United Nations conferences and the United Nations Millennium Declaration,

Recalling that the Economic and Social Council should increase its role in overseeing system-wide coordination and the balanced integration of economic, social and environmental aspects of United Nations policies and programmes aimed at promoting sustainable development, and reaffirming that the Commission should continue to be the high-level commission on sustainable development within the United Nations system and serve as a forum for consideration of issues related to integration of the three dimensions of sustainable development,

Recalling also that agriculture, rural development, land, drought and desertification are interlinked and should be addressed in an integrated manner, taking into account economic, social and environmental dimensions of sustainable development, related sectoral policies and cross-cutting issues including means of implementation, as identified at the eleventh session of the Commission,

Recognizing the problems and constraints that African countries are facing in the areas of agriculture, rural development, land, drought and desertification, and emphasizing that those problems and constraints should be adequately addressed during the seventeenth session of the Commission, which will be a policy session,

Recalling the decision of the Commission at its eleventh session, endorsed by the Economic and Social Council in its resolution 2003/61 of 25 July 2003, that the Commission, at its policy sessions, to be held in April/May of the second year of the cycle of the Commission's work programme, would take policy decisions on practical measures and options to expedite implementation in the selected thematic cluster of issues, taking account of the discussions of the Intergovernmental Preparatory Meeting, the reports of the Secretary-General and other relevant inputs,

Recalling also the decision of the Commission at its eleventh session that the discussions of the Intergovernmental Preparatory Meeting would be based on the outcome of the review session and reports of the Secretary-General, as well as other relevant inputs, and that, on the basis of those discussions, the Chair would prepare a draft negotiating document for consideration at the policy session,

Recognizing the importance of the Intergovernmental Preparatory Meeting in respect of discussing policy options and possible actions to address the constraints and obstacles in the process of implementation identified during the review year,

Noting with satisfaction that the Commission at its sixteenth session undertook an in-depth evaluation of progress in implementing Agenda 21, the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21 and the Johannesburg Plan of Implementation, focusing on the thematic cluster of issues on agriculture, rural development, land, drought, desertification and Africa, taking into account the interlinkages as well as addressing the cross-cutting issues, and identified best practices, constraints and obstacles in the process of implementation,

Noting with satisfaction also the review of the implementation of the Commission's decisions on water, held by the Commission at its sixteenth session,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;
2. Reiterates that sustainable development is a key element of the overarching framework for United Nations activities, in particular for achieving the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals, and those contained in the Johannesburg Plan of Implementation;
3. Calls upon Governments, all relevant international and regional organizations, the Economic and Social Council, the United Nations funds and programmes, the regional commissions and the specialized agencies, the international financial institutions, the Global Environment Facility and other intergovernmental organizations, in accordance with their respective mandates, as well as major groups, to take action to ensure the effective implementation of and follow-up to the commitments, programmes and time-bound targets adopted at the World Summit on Sustainable Development, and encourages them to report on concrete progress in that regard;

4. Calls for the effective implementation of the commitments, programmes and time-bound targets adopted at the World Summit on Sustainable Development and for the fulfilment of the provisions relating to the means of implementation, as contained in the Johannesburg Plan of Implementation;

5. Invites Member States to express their views on the possibility of convening a high-level event on sustainable development, and requests the Secretary-General, in his report on the implementation of Agenda 21, the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21 and the outcomes of the World Summit on Sustainable Development, to include the views expressed, and decides to consider this matter further at the sixty-fourth session of the General Assembly;

6. Reiterates that the Commission on Sustainable Development is the high-level body responsible for sustainable development within the United Nations system and serves as a forum for the consideration of issues related to the integration of the three dimensions of sustainable development;

7. Emphasizes the importance of a consensus outcome and action-oriented policy sessions;

8. Encourages Governments to participate at the appropriate level with representatives, including ministers, from the relevant departments and organizations working in the areas of agriculture, rural development, land, drought, desertification and Africa, as well as finance, in the seventeenth session of the Commission and its Intergovernmental Preparatory Meeting;

9. Recalls the decision of the Commission at its eleventh session that activities during Commission meetings should provide for the balanced involvement of participants from all regions, as well as for gender balance;

10. Invites donor countries to consider supporting the participation of representatives from the developing countries in the seventeenth session of the Commission and its Intergovernmental Preparatory Meeting, inter alia, through contributions to the Commission's trust fund;

11. Reaffirms the objective of strengthening the implementation of Agenda 21, including through the mobilization of financial and technological resources, as well as capacity-building programmes, in particular for developing countries;

12. Invites donor Governments and international financial institutions to support the efforts of developing countries to overcome barriers and constraints identified during the review year in the thematic cluster of issues of agriculture, rural development, land, drought, desertification and Africa;

13. Reaffirms the objective of enhancing the participation and effective involvement of civil society and other relevant stakeholders, as well as promoting transparency and broad public participation, in the implementation of Agenda 21;

14. Requests the secretariat of the Commission to coordinate the participation of the relevant major groups in the thematic discussions at the seventeenth session of the Commission and its Intergovernmental Preparatory Meeting and the reporting on the fulfilment of corporate accountability and responsibility with respect to the thematic cluster of issues, in accordance with the provisions of the Johannesburg Plan of Implementation;

15. Reaffirms the need to promote corporate responsibility and accountability as envisaged by the Johannesburg Plan of Implementation;

16. Also reaffirms the need to promote the development of microenterprises and small and medium-sized enterprises, including by means of training, education and skill enhancement, with a special focus on agro-industry as a provider of livelihoods for rural communities;

17. Requests the secretariat of the Commission to make arrangements to facilitate the balanced representation of major groups from developed and developing countries in the sessions of the Commission, and in this regard invites donor countries to consider supporting the participation of major groups from developing countries, inter alia, through contributions to the Commission's trust fund;

18. Reiterates the invitation to the relevant specialized agencies, including the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations and the International Fund for Agricultural Development, United Nations funds and programmes, the Global Environment Facility and international and regional financial and trade institutions, as well as the secretariat of the United Nations Convention to Combat Desertification in Those Countries Experiencing Serious Drought and/or Desertification, Particularly in Africa, and other relevant bodies, to actively participate, within their mandates, in the work of the Commission and its Intergovernmental Preparatory Meeting at its seventeenth session;

19. Encourages Governments and organizations at all levels, as well as major groups, to undertake results-oriented initiatives and activities to support the work of the Commission and to promote and facilitate the implementation of Agenda 21, the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21 and the Johannesburg Plan of Implementation, including through voluntary multi-stakeholder partnership initiatives;

20. Requests the Secretary-General, in reporting to the Commission at its seventeenth session, on the basis of appropriate inputs from all levels, to submit thematic reports on each of the six issues contained in the thematic cluster of issues on agriculture, rural development, land, drought, desertification and Africa, taking into account their interlinkages, while addressing the cross-cutting issues, including means of implementation identified by the Commission at its eleventh session, and also takes into account the relevant provisions of paragraphs 10, 14 and 15 of draft resolution I of the eleventh session of the Commission;

21. Underlines the importance of setting aside adequate time for all envisaged activities in the policy session, including for negotiations on policy options and possible actions, at the seventeenth session of the Commission, and in this regard notes the importance of having all required documents, including the Chair's draft negotiating document, made available for consideration prior to the beginning of the session;

22. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its sixty-fourth session the sub-item entitled "Implementation of Agenda 21, the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21 and the outcomes of the World Summit on Sustainable Development", and requests the Secretary-General, at that session, to submit a report on the implementation of the present resolution.

Sustainable development goals and climate change

CDP consideration. At its tenth session (New York, 17–20 March) [E/2008/33], the Committee for Development Policy (CDP) considered the theme “Achieving sustainable development goals in the context of climate change”. CDP addressed the key channels through which climate change could affect development and ways of protecting against those impacts, namely through adaptation and mitigation policies, international cooperation (especially in finance and technology) and policy coherence.

The Committee was of the view that, for developing countries, sustainable development confronted a three-dimensional threat from climate change: its implications for human development and prosperity, which were at the heart of the MDGs; the spillover of climate-related policies in the industrialized world; and the implications of actions by developing countries to adapt to and mitigate it, even as they avoided the previous damaging pattern to the environment of developed countries. The challenge was to ensure that a coherent approach at the national and international levels protected the momentum of development against the possible adverse impacts of the three sources of threat. Those threats would particularly affect the development prospects of LDCs and small island developing States, which had contributed the least to the emission of greenhouse gases but were the most vulnerable and had the least capacity to adapt. Over time, one likely outcome of climate change was the disappearance of some small island developing States as a result of a rise in the sea level. African countries were among the most vulnerable, owing to a low adaptive capacity caused by widespread, extreme poverty and projected changes in precipitation coming on top of an already stressed situation. Achieving the internationally agreed goals on sustainable development would not be possible without deep overall reductions in carbon emissions. The developed countries should take the lead in cutting their emissions and assisting developing countries to take action. However, reductions in developed countries alone could not be globally effective without slowing down the growth of emissions in the developing countries as well. A critical issue was whether and how developing countries could achieve such emission reductions while maintaining the economic growth needed to support their developmental efforts. To do so would require significant financial support from developed countries, and technology transfer and capacity-building in taking mitigation measures.

CDP concluded that, as adapting to climate change was critical for sustainable development, the adaptive capacity of developing countries, especially LDCs, should be strengthened. Progress in that regard would also require mainstreaming adaptation into sectoral and national planning processes, including poverty reduction strategies. Mitigation actions by both developed and developing countries to achieve sustainable development should take place in accordance with the principle of common but differentiated responsibilities. The most promising mitigation strategy for developing countries would be an investment-based approach that encouraged greater energy efficiency and renewable energy alternatives, with technological support, regulatory and fiscal instruments, and research and education, thereby fostering sustainable development. Achieving the MDGs while dealing with climate change would require access by developing countries to sufficient funds and knowledge and the development of new technologies. CDP recommended that the Economic and Social Council review the adequacy of international commitments on financing for development, particularly the resources required for achieving sustainable development. Urgent consideration should be given to the creation of large-scale global funds to finance the transfer of technology for mitigation and meeting adaptation costs.

Commission on Sustainable Development

The Commission on Sustainable Development held its sixteenth session (policy session) in New York on 11 May 2007 and from 5 to 16 May 2008 [E/2008/29]. On 16 May, it held the first part of its seventeenth session, at which it elected the members of the Bureau [E/2009/29]. The Commission's high-level segment (14–16 May) considered the topic “The way forward”. On 14 May, the Commission held parallel high-level round-table meetings on investing in Africa to achieve the MDGs and sustainable development, and interlinkages among the thematic issues, including adaptation to climate change in the context of sustainable development. On 15 May, it held an interactive discussion with UN organizations, regional commissions, specialized agencies and the Bretton Woods institutions (the World Bank Group and IMF), as well as an interactive discussion with representatives of major groups.

The Commission recommended to the Economic and Social Council for adoption one draft decision on its report on its sixteenth session and provisional agenda for its seventeenth session. It also adopted three decisions on: participation of intergovernmental organizations in the work of its sixteenth session [dec. 16/1]; the review of the Mauritius Strategy for the Further Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States [dec. 16/2] (see p. 946); and the proposed strategic framework for the period 2010–2011: subprogramme 4, Sustainable development [E/CN.17/2008/14] [dec. 16/3].

Ministers and delegations undertook negotiations on the interlinked issues of the thematic cluster: agriculture, rural development; land; drought, desertification and Africa. The Commission devoted a meeting, on 12 May, to the review of the implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States, focusing on the thematic cluster for the 2008–2009 implementation cycle (see p. 945).

On 13 and 14 May, the Commission discussed implementation of the decisions on water and sanitation and their interlinkages taken at its thirteenth session [YUN 2005, p. 917]. Various aspects were addressed, including: the importance of global and national monitoring of the sector at all levels; the need for reliable data supported by improved knowledge and research; transfer of technology and capacity-building; the importance of water governance and a participatory approach to water and sanitation; the role of partnerships, including the public-private partnership; and the importance of strengthening water utilities to extend the provision of services.

The partnerships fair (5–13 May) showcased activities focusing on agriculture, drought, desertification, land, rural development and Africa, small island developing States, and water and sanitation. The fair provided a venue for registered Partnerships for Sustainable Development to showcase progress, network with existing and potential partners, create synergies and learn from each other's experiences. It also allowed participants to gather information and discuss the contribution of innovative initiatives to supporting the implementation of internationally agreed sustainable development goals and objectives. A learning centre offered 20 courses on topics related to the themes and cross-cutting issues under review, including education, gender, decision-making tools, financing and national sustainable development strategies. Some 88 side events and related activities were organized by major groups, Governments, UN agencies and other international organizations, focusing on issues related to the thematic cluster.

The Economic and Social Council, on 23 July, took note of the Commission's report at its sixteenth session [E/2008/29] and approved the provisional agenda for its seventeenth (2009) session (decision 2008/237).

Eradication of poverty

UN Decade for the Eradication of Poverty

In response to General Assembly resolution 62/205 [YUN 2007, p. 847], the Secretary-General, in July [A/63/190], submitted a report on the implementation of the Second United Nations Decade for the Eradication of Poverty (2008–2017), proclaimed by the Assembly in 2007, which provided recommendations on how to make the Second Decade effective in support of poverty eradication-related internationally agreed development goals. The report summarized the conclusions of the review of the First United Nations Decade for the Eradication of Poverty (1997–2006); highlighted lessons learned from other current international decades proclaimed by the Assembly; summarized inputs received from Governments and civil society on how to make the Second Decade effective; and examined the UN system's role in scaling up poverty eradication efforts in support of the Second Decade. It concluded with a number of recommendations for consideration by the Assembly.

The Secretary-General considered the Second Decade as a framework for reflection and action to achieve the poverty eradication-related internationally agreed development goals, and an opportunity for strengthening social institutions and implementing public policies to generate development. Based on a review of practical examples and the experience of the First Decade, the implementation of the Second Decade would depend on national ownership of activities and should be encouraged and supported by the international community. Achievements and failures in fighting poverty during the First Decade pointed to the critical importance of productive employment and decent work. Striving to ensure basic economic security for all in the face of growing job insecurity should be part of collective efforts to make the Second Decade a success. At the dawn of the Second Decade, the theme for the First Decade had become reality: eradicating poverty was universally perceived as an ethical, social, political and economic imperative of humankind, and the onus was on Governments, civil society, including the private sector, and international organizations to respond effectively.

The Secretary-General recommended that the Assembly adopt an overall action theme for the Second Decade that would convey a sense of urgency towards implementing the commitments made to eradicate poverty and to halve poverty by 2015; and integrate the observance of the International Day for the Eradication of Poverty into the plan of action for the Second Decade to enhance the role the observance could play in raising public awareness and mobilizing stakeholders. A pragmatic plan of action in support of the Second Decade, critical to ensuring its implementation, should focus on the complementarities of efforts to support national poverty eradication strategies and programmes, and make maximum use of inter-agency mechanisms to support those activities. The plan of action would include a programme of substantive work in poverty eradication spanning the work of the United Nations in the area, and would highlight opportunities for collaboration between various other stakeholders, non-governmental organizations (NGOs) and civil society organizations engaged in poverty eradication at the national and community levels. Using as its starting point the follow-up activities to the 2005 World Summit, which recognized the need to accelerate progress in countries where current trends made the achievement of the internationally agreed development goals—especially poverty eradication—unlikely, the Second Decade should build on the implementation, support for and monitoring of such initiatives to generate greater momentum for global action. The Assembly should request the Secretary-General, in consultation with Member States, UN system organizations, NGOs, the private sector and civil society, to prepare the plan of action and submit it to the Assembly at its resumed sixty-third (2009) session.

Communication. On 6 November, the Secretary-General transmitted to the Assembly President the outcome of the Third High-level Forum on Aid Effectiveness (Accra, Ghana, 2–4 September) [A/63/539], including the Accra Agenda for Action.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December [meeting 72], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/63/418/Add.1], adopted resolution 63/230 without vote [agenda item 53 (a)].

Second United Nations Decade for the Eradication of Poverty (2008–2017)

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 47/196 of 22 December 1992, 48/183 of 21 December 1993, 50/107 of 20 December 1995, 56/207 of 21 December 2001, 57/265 and 57/266 of 20 December 2002, 58/222 of 23 December 2003, 59/247 of 22 December 2004, 60/209 of 22 December 2005, 61/213 of 20 December 2006 and 62/205 of 19 December 2007,

Recalling also the United Nations Millennium Declaration, adopted by Heads of State and Government on the occasion of the Millennium Summit, as well as the international commitment to eradicate extreme poverty and to halve, by 2015, the proportion of the world's people whose income is less than one dollar a day and the proportion of people who suffer from hunger,

Recalling further the 2005 World Summit Outcome,

Recalling its resolution 60/265 of 30 June 2006 on the follow-up to the development outcome of the 2005 World Summit, including the Millennium Development Goals and the other internationally agreed development goals,

Recalling also its resolution 61/16 of 20 November 2006 on the strengthening of the Economic and Social Council,

Welcoming the poverty-related discussions in the annual ministerial reviews held by the Economic and Social Council, which play an important supporting role in the implementation of the Second United Nations Decade for the Eradication of Poverty (2008–2017),

Recalling the outcomes of the World Summit for Social Development and the twenty-fourth special session of the General Assembly,

Expressing concern that, after the First United Nations Decade for the Eradication of Poverty (1997–2006) and midway to the 2015 Millennium Development Goals target date, while there has been progress in reducing poverty in some regions, this progress has been uneven and the number of people living in poverty in some countries continues to increase, with women and children constituting the majority of the most affected groups, especially in the least developed countries and particularly in sub-Saharan Africa,

Recognizing that rates of economic growth vary between countries and that these differences must be addressed by, among other actions, promoting pro-poor growth and social protection,

Concerned by the global nature of poverty and inequality, and underlining that the eradication of poverty and hunger is an ethical, social, political and economic imperative of humankind,

Reaffirming that eradicating poverty is one of the greatest global challenges facing the world today, particularly in Africa and in least developed countries, and underlining the importance of accelerating sustainable broad-based and inclusive economic growth, including full, productive employment-generation and decent work,

Expressing concern that the number of people living in poverty is higher than previously estimated, despite significant progress, and that the current financial and food insecurity crises and unpredictable energy prices may pose significant challenges for the achievement of the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals,

Recognizing that mobilizing financial resources for development at the national and international levels and the effective use of those resources are central to a global partnership for development in support of the achievement of the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals,

Recognizing also the contributions of South-South and triangular cooperation to the efforts of developing countries to eradicate poverty and to pursue sustainable development,

Acknowledging that good governance at national and international levels and sustained and inclusive economic growth, supported by full employment and decent work, rising productivity, and a favourable environment, including public and private investment and entrepreneurship, are necessary to eradicate poverty, achieve the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals, and realize a rise in living standards, and that corporate social responsibility initiatives play an important role in maximizing the impact of public and private investment,

Underlining the priority and urgency given by the Heads of State and Government to the eradication of poverty, as expressed in the outcomes of the major United Nations conferences and summits in the economic and social fields,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the Second United Nations Decade for the Eradication of Poverty (2008–2017);

2. Reaffirms that the objective of the Second United Nations Decade is to support, in an efficient and coordinated manner, the follow-up to the implementation of the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals, related to the eradication of poverty and to coordinate international support to that end;

3. Also reaffirms that each country must take primary responsibility for its own development and that the role of national policies and strategies cannot be overemphasized in the achievement of sustainable development and poverty eradication, and recognizes that increased effective national efforts should be complemented by concrete, effective and supportive international programmes, measures and policies aimed at expanding the development opportunities of developing countries, while taking into account national conditions and ensuring respect for national ownership, strategies and sovereignty;

4. Emphasizes the need to accord the highest priority to poverty eradication within the United Nations development agenda, while stressing the importance of addressing the causes and challenges of poverty through integrated, coordinated and coherent strategies at the national, intergovernmental and inter-agency levels;

5. Reiterates the need to strengthen the leadership role of the United Nations in promoting international cooperation for development, critical for the eradication of poverty;

6. Stresses the importance of ensuring, at the national, intergovernmental and inter-agency levels, coherent, comprehensive and integrated activities for the eradication of poverty in accordance with the outcomes of the major United Nations conferences and summits in the economic, social and related fields;

7. Emphasizes that education and training are among the critical factors in empowering those living in poverty, while recognizing the complexity of the challenge of poverty eradication;

8. Calls upon the international community to continue to give priority to the eradication of poverty and on donor countries in a position to do so to support the effective national efforts of developing countries in this regard, through adequate predictable financial resources on either a bilateral or a multilateral basis;

9. Acknowledges efforts of developed countries to increase their assistance for development, including commitments by some developed countries to increase official development assistance; notes with concern, however, the overall decline in official development assistance in 2006 and 2007, and calls for the fulfilment of all official development assistance-related commitments, including the commitments made by many developed countries to achieve the target of 0.7 per cent of gross national product for official development assistance by 2015 and to reach the target of at least 0.5 per cent of gross national product for official development assistance by 2010, as well as to achieve the target of 0.15 to 0.20 per cent of gross national product for official development assistance to least developed countries; and urges those developed countries that have not yet done so to make concrete efforts in this regard in accordance with their commitments;

10. Welcomes recent efforts and initiatives to enhance the quality of aid and to increase its impact, including the Paris Declaration on Aid Effectiveness and the Accra Agenda for Action, and the resolve to take concrete, effective and timely action in implementing all agreed commitments on aid effectiveness, with clear monitoring and deadlines, including through further aligning assistance with countries' strategies, building institutional capacities, reducing transaction costs and eliminating bureaucratic procedures, making progress on untying aid, enhancing the absorptive capacity and financial management of recipient countries and strengthening the focus on development results;

11. Recognizes that sustained and inclusive economic growth is essential for eradicating poverty and hunger, in particular in developing countries, and stresses that national efforts in this regard should be complemented by an enabling international environment;

12. Also recognizes that, for developing countries to reach the targets set in the context of national development strategies for the achievement of the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals, in particular the goal on the eradication of extreme poverty, and for such poverty eradication strategies to be effective, it is imperative that developing countries increase their efforts to be integrated into the world economy in order to share the benefits of globalization;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to appoint a focal point from within the United Nations system to coordinate the implementation of the Second United Nations Decade in close consultation with Member States;

14. Considers that a theme for the Second United Nations Decade, to be reviewed at the sixty-fifth session of the General Assembly, shall be "Full employment and decent work for all", and requests the Secretary-General to submit to the Assembly at that session a report that details the current response of the United Nations system to the theme;

15. Recognizes the need to give the highest priority to its consideration of the item on poverty eradication in its agenda, and in that regard, as a contribution to the Second United Nations Decade, decides to convene, during its sixty-eighth session, a meeting of the General Assembly at the highest appropriate political level centred on the review process devoted to the theme for the issue of poverty eradication, and stresses that the meeting and the preparatory activities should be carried out within the budget level proposed by the Secretary-General for the biennium 2012–2013 and should be organized in the most effective and efficient manner;

16. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its sixty-fourth session an item entitled "Implementation of the Second United Nations Decade for the Eradication of Poverty (2008–2017)", and requests the Secretary-General to brief Member States orally on progress in the implementation of efforts related to the theme for the Second Decade.

On 19 December, the Assembly, by decision 63/544, took note of the report of the Second Committee [A/63/418] on its consideration of the eradication of poverty and other development issues.

Rural development

Commission on Sustainable Development consideration. The Commission on Sustainable Development, at its sixteenth session [E/2008/29], discussed rural development as one of the subjects of its thematic cluster for the 2008–2009 implementation cycle. The Commission had before it a February report of the Secretary-General on the subject [E/CN.17/2008/4], which presented an updated analysis of the state of implementation of the internationally agreed framework for rural development as contained in chapter 14, “Promoting sustainable agriculture and rural development”, of Agenda 21 [YUN 1992, p. 672], the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21 [YUN 1997, p. 792], the Plan of Implementation of the World Summit on Sustainable Development (“Johannesburg Plan of Implementation”) [YUN 2002, p. 821], and various sessions of the Commission.

According to the report, overall progress in reducing rural poverty was slow, but several successful experiences showed what could work. While the main thrust of efforts remained in agriculture, reducing rural poverty through agricultural development alone would be difficult, and the challenge was to foster development in rural areas that benefited entire rural communities. The lack of broad-based investments in the rural sector for enhancing agricultural efficiency and rural infrastructure, tapping the potential of the non-farm sector and improving the management of natural resources, was a barrier to growth promotion and poverty reduction in rural areas. Further challenges included strengthening partnerships and providing technical assistance on market-oriented farming and small- and medium-scale agro-enterprise development to promote competitive rural agro-industries. Other major barriers included limited access to rural finance, improved agricultural inputs, modern energy services, local markets and market information, storage facilities, transportation, technology, education and other social services. The overexploitation of natural resources in many countries was creating a devastating impact on the living conditions of the rural poor. It was therefore crucial to secure a balance between maximizing the productivity of natural resources and ensuring their conservation. While rural development was essential to achieving sustainable development, it could not be realized without adequate community empowerment and participation. One key obstacle was the lack of education and literacy in rural communities, as investment in rural education in developing countries was often inadequate. In addition to increasing public spending on education and the participation of civil society organizations and other stakeholders, it was important to bridge the education gaps in remote rural areas and to address the social and cultural constraints to the full participation of marginalized and disadvantaged groups in the development and implementation of rural development programmes.

During the Commission’s high-level segment on rural development, Commission members were of the view that investment in infrastructure was critical to boosting agriculture and rural development. While priorities would differ according to local, national and regional circumstances, adequate rural roads and other means of transport, irrigation and water storage, electrification and telecommunications were all important, as was infrastructure for social development, including rural health-care facilities and schools. Domestic public investment would be a vital source of finance, and although many Governments had increased those investments, further resources were needed and ODA for agricultural and rural development should be substantially increased. New and innovative sources and methods of finance, including public-private partnerships, could contribute to meeting financing needs. Diversification of rural economies was a priority, including through the strengthening of productive capacity, the development of value-added agro-processing, the promotion of small- and medium-sized enterprises (SMEs) and other rural industries, rural cooperatives and the expansion of social, financial, infrastructural and tourism services in rural areas. Enhanced access to global markets, technology transfer and sharing of experiences, know-how and best practices were all important, and increased rural finance on favourable terms should be made available to small-scale entrepreneurs through a variety of means, including loan guarantees, microcredit and venture capital. Local authorities and communities played a vital role in the management of land, water and other natural resources in rural areas, and their capacities should be strengthened.

Economic and Social Council consideration.

In accordance with decision 2008/208 of 8 February, the Economic and Social Council, on 3 July, held a thematic discussion for its 2008 high-level segment on promoting an integrated approach to rural development in developing countries for poverty eradication and sustainable development, taking into account current challenges. For consideration of the theme, it held two parallel panel discussions on: bioenergy, sustainable livelihoods and rural poor; and harnessing the current boom in agricultural commodities for poverty eradication and sustainable development: the case of small-scale farmers.

In a May report on the theme [E/2008/68], the Secretary-General noted that the Ministerial Declaration on promoting an integrated approach to rural development in developing countries for poverty eradication and sustainable development, adopted by the Council in 2003 [YUN 2003, p. 853], outlined essential elements for pursuing rural development in developing countries. Since the adoption of the declaration, many developments had taken place, including greater awareness of the importance of agriculture and rural development in achieving the MDGs, in particular with respect to attacking poverty and hunger. At the regional level, notably in Africa, countries had committed themselves to strengthening agriculture and, at the national level, to eliminating poverty and hunger. The challenge of rural poverty reduction was, however, even greater than in 2003: old challenges persisted and new ones threatened to push the rural poor ever deeper into poverty. The impact of the increase in global food prices on the poorest in rural areas signalled the urgency of improving agricultural productivity and increasing food production. At the same time, the effects of climate change were undermining agricultural production. An integrated approach to rural development should be pursued, linking environmental sustainability, agricultural productivity and rural poverty, and the Council should adopt a programme on rural development in the short run, as well as in the medium-to-long term.

In the short run, the international community should protect the most vulnerable against the rapid increase in food prices, sufficient support should be given to humanitarian agencies to cover budget shortfalls and additional resources should be provided. Support should also be extended to Governments of net food-importing developing countries to ensure that social protection programmes were not cut back, but still reached those affected. The international community and Governments should ensure access by poor farmers to production inputs, to help them maintain or expand food production. In the medium-to-long term, development partners should: improve the coordination of activities for the integration of rural development initiatives into national strategies and increase investment in rural areas; improve assistance for productivity growth through the application of innovation, research and development, with more efforts directed towards bringing about the green revolution in Africa; increase assistance for improving infrastructure, and assistance to programmes enhancing the status of women and other vulnerable groups. Stakeholders should: improve the understanding of the impacts of increased biofuels on food prices, livelihoods of the poor and the environment; address the impact of climate change on the rural poor, design and develop cost-effective adaptation programmes, mobilize financial support for their implementation and improve early warning systems and vulnerability analysis to assess the risks associated with climate change; and launch actions designed to manage and use biodiversity. Governments could integrate rural development policies into national strategies; increase public funding on research and development; support policies and institutions that linked public and private research centres to farmers; improve policy and regulatory frameworks for the management of growing biofuel demand and its potential impact on food security; and intensify the application of science, technology and innovation to traditional agricultural practices.

In their Ministerial Declaration adopted on 3 July, Council members reaffirmed the importance of investing in infrastructure for rural development and agriculture and recognized the importance of non-farming economic activities in eradicating poverty in rural areas. In that regard, they recognized the discussion at the sixteenth session of the Commission on Sustainable Development (see p. 919) and looked forward to the Commission's recommendations at its seventeenth (2009) session that would advance rural development. Council members further recognized that agriculture played a crucial role in addressing the needs of a growing global population and was inextricably linked to poverty eradication, especially in developing countries. Integrated and sustainable agriculture and rural development approaches were therefore essential to achieving enhanced food security and safety in an environmentally sustainable way. They also recognized the importance of enhanced access of the rural poor to productive assets, in particular land and water, and stressed that priority attention should be given to the adoption of policies and the implementation of laws that guaranteed well-defined and enforceable land- and water-use rights and promoted legal security of tenure, while recognizing the existence of different national laws and/or systems of land access and tenure.

Microcredit and microfinance in the eradication of poverty

In July, the Secretary-General, in response to General Assembly resolution 61/214 [YUN 2006, p. 996], submitted a report [A/63/159] on the role of microcredit and microfinance in the eradication of poverty. The report reassessed their role based on recent studies and described the latest developments in microfinance, including the emergence of new providers. It examined in particular microfinance penetration and client demand, including population penetration, understanding the demand for microfinance, and emerging clients; the impact of microcredit and microfinance on the welfare of the poor, especially in income and employment, consumption smoothing and microinsurance, the impact on poor women and empowerment, and social performance audits; and developments among microfinance providers, such as the growth and transformation of microfinance and its commercialization, increased competition, innovations in microfinance, the impact of technology, the challenges faced by microfinance providers, policy-makers and regulatory authorities.

According to the report, in recent years, microfinance had experienced tremendous growth and gained wide acclaim in helping the poor, especially women, through increased incomes, self-employment and empowerment. Although there was greater awareness of its positive impact, the challenge of scaling it up remained. Its success was due in part to a growing recognition that the poor were viable customers, as well as to the entry of mainstream financial institutions into the microfinance business, which provided alternative sources of funds. By adapting new technologies, microfinance had broadened its outreach and reduced costs to both clients and providers. There was growing concern, however, about increasing commercialization and profit orientation in microfinance, which had led to the promotion of a paradigm shift from microfinance to a vision of inclusive finance.

The Secretary-General concluded that, while microfinance had contributed to alleviating the conditions of over 100 million people living in poverty, the breadth of its outreach continued to be limited and the need to broaden the institutional capacity, focus and approach of its institutions remained. Its current contribution lay in improving the lives of the poor rather than as a pathway out of poverty. Self-employment activities generated by microloans were low-productive in nature and rarely led to the development of small enterprises, because the poor, in particular the rural poor, lived in areas that typically lacked economic opportunities. Moreover, most microfinance institutions could not provide the financial services that SMEs, as opposed to microenterprises, needed. SME development was critical to the generation of productive employment, which was of central importance to poverty eradication. Catering to their financial needs should be an extension of the traditional lending rationale, and successful microfinance providers should therefore forge alliances with other financial service providers to build sound, sustainable and inclusive national financial sectors that could cater to the needs of all, from the poorest households to enterprises, and promote business opportunities and productive employment on a significant scale. Governments also played an important role in providing an enabling environment conducive to the achievement of an inclusive financial sector encompassing the poor.

The Secretary-General recommended that Member States: establish a framework for promoting the development of inclusive financial institutions that offered appropriate financial products and services to all segments of the population; adopt a coherent financial regulatory framework, in consultation with microfinance providers, that would protect the stability of the financial system and increase access of the poor and micro- and small enterprises to financial services; adopt regulatory standards that protected consumers, in particular the poor, given their limited financial literacy, against predatory and abusive lending practices; integrate financial and consumer education for the poor as part of the framework to promote awareness of microfinance programmes; and support the expansion and reach of microfinance through the promotion of entrepreneurship development programmes.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December [meeting 72], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/63/418/Add.1], adopted resolution 63/229 without vote [agenda item 53 (a)].

Role of microcredit and microfinance in the eradication of poverty

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 52/193 and 52/194 of 18 December 1997, 53/197 of 15 December 1998, 58/221 of 23 December 2003, 59/246 of 22 December 2004 and 61/214 of 20 December 2006,

Recognizing the need for access to financial services, in particular for the poor, including access to microfinance and microcredit,

Recognizing also that microfinance, in particular microcredit programmes, has succeeded in generating productive self-employment and proved to be an effective tool in overcoming poverty and reducing the vulnerability of poor people to crisis and has led to their growing participation, in particular the participation of women, in the mainstream socioeconomic and political processes of society, and bearing in mind that microfinance, in particular microcredit, has especially benefited women and has resulted in the achievement of their empowerment,

Recognizing further that the majority of the world's poor still do not have access to financial services and that microcredit and microfinance are the subject of significant demand worldwide,

Bearing in mind the importance of providing access to microfinance instruments and services, such as credit, savings, insurance, money transfers and other financial products and services, for poor people,

Recognizing that inclusive financial sectors can offer appropriate financial services and products to poor people,

Noting with appreciation the efforts of the United Nations Advisers Group on Inclusive Financial Sectors to promote the building of inclusive financial sectors to meet the needs and demands of poor people, and noting also the recommendations containing key messages to build inclusive financial sectors put forward in June 2008,

Noting events organized for the promotion of inclusive financial sectors, including the convening of the Global Microcredit Summit in Halifax, Canada, from 12 to 15 November 2006,

Welcoming the efforts made in the field of property rights, and noting that an enabling environment at all levels, including transparent regulatory systems and competitive markets, fosters the mobilization of resources and access to finance for people living in poverty,

Noting with appreciation the contribution of awards and prizes to increasing the visibility and awareness of the role of microfinance, including microcredit, in the eradication of poverty, most notably the awarding of the 2006 Nobel Peace Prize,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;
2. Welcomes the successful observance of the International Year of Microcredit, 2005, which constituted a special occasion to raise awareness and share best practices and lessons learned on microcredit and microfinance;

3. Recognizes that access to microfinance and microcredit can contribute to the achievement of the goals and targets of major United Nations conferences and summits in the economic and social fields, including those contained in the United Nations Millennium Declaration, in particular the goals relating to poverty eradication, gender equality and the empowerment of women;

4. Underlines the need for greater access to microfinance, including microcredit, in developing countries, in particular for small farmers, which can contribute to increased agricultural productivity and rural development;

5. Also underlines the importance of strengthening domestic financial sectors as a source of capital by making them inclusive, thus expanding access to financial services;

6. Recognizes that microfinance has experienced tremendous growth in the number of people served and the diversity of financial services offered, and that, along with the growth in numbers served as well as products and services offered, there has also been a large increase in the number of public and private microfinance providers, all of which share the common characteristic of providing financial services to poor and socio-economically vulnerable people, as well as micro-entrepreneurs who would not normally be served, or are underserved, by traditional financial institutions;

7. Notes that, despite progress, there is still lack of relevant statistical data on inclusive financial sectors, in particular microcredit and microfinance programmes, in particular at the national and regional levels, and in this regard invites the international community, in particular the donor community, to support developing countries in collecting and preserving necessary statistical data and information on this issue, specifically on defining and measuring access to financial services and products at the country level and measuring the type, quality and usage of such services and products over time;

8. Calls upon Member States, the United Nations system and other relevant stakeholders to fully maximize the role of microfinance instruments, including microcredit, for poverty eradication and especially for the empowerment of women and rural populations, and to ensure that best practices in the microfinance sector are widely disseminated;

9. Invites Member States, the United Nations system, the Bretton Woods institutions, regional development banks and other relevant stakeholders to support, financially and technically, in a coordinated manner, the efforts of developing countries in capacity-building for microcredit and microfinance institutions to expand their products and services, including by improving their policy and regulatory framework;

10. Invites Member States to consider adopting policies to facilitate the expansion of microcredit and microfinance institutions in order to service the large unmet demand among poor people for financial services, including the identification and development of mechanisms to promote access to sustainable financial services, the removal of institutional and regulatory obstacles, the promotion of financial literacy and the provision of incentives to microfinance institutions that meet national standards for delivering sound financial services to the poor;

11. Encourages Member States to adopt coherent financial regulatory frameworks, including in consultation with microfinance providers, that can effectively protect the stability of their national financial systems and increase access of the poor and microenterprises and small enterprises to financial services, and also to protect consumers, in particular the poor, and in this regard invites the development partners to support the efforts of developing countries in the promotion of entrepreneurship development programmes, including for microenterprises and small and medium-sized enterprises;

12. Recognizes that the current financial crisis can adversely impact financial flows to microcredit and microfinance institutions as well as the services that they provide to the poor, and emphasizes that such instruments should be protected, as appropriate, from potential credit deficiency;

13. Decides to devote one plenary meeting at its sixty-fifth session to the consideration of the outcome of and follow-up to the International Year of Microcredit, with a view to broadening and deepening the discussion about microcredit and microfinance and inclusive financial sectors;

14. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its sixty-fifth session a report on the implementation of the present resolution, under the item entitled "Eradication of poverty and other development issues".

Evaluation

CPC consideration. The Committee for Programme and Coordination (CPC), at its forty-eighth session (9 June–3 July) [A/63/16], considered the triennial review on the evaluation of linkages between Headquarters and field activities: a review of best practices for poverty eradication in the framework of the United Nations Millennium Declaration. It had before it an Office of Internal Oversight Services (OIOS) report on the triennial review of the implementation of recommendations made by the Committee at its forty-fifth session on the evaluation of linkages between Headquarters and field activities [E/AC.51/2008/4] and the comments of the Secretary-General thereon [E/AC.51/2008/4/Add.1].

According to the OIOS report, progress had been made on enhancing collaboration among inter-agency coordinating bodies, and according to CEB, the United Nations Development Group was working within the context of CEB in support of operational activities. OIOS noted, however, that the Secretary-General had not established a working group to review the roles and responsibilities of the inter-agency coordinating bodies on common policy issues on the eradication of poverty and hunger, and that a structured, facilitated and strategic approach to system-wide knowledge management networks around issues of poverty eradication had not yet been introduced. Progress was made in establishing institutional mechanisms for informing country offices about the poverty-related work of non-resident agencies, and DESA and the regional economic commissions were working with UN country teams in their respective regions. In addition, regional commissions had agreed to a cooperation framework with the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) to enable them to participate and contribute more actively in the work of country offices.

CPC recommended that the General Assembly request the Secretary-General, as CEB Chairman, to ensure enhanced collaboration among inter-agency coordinating bodies, in respect of poverty eradication within the framework of the United Nations Millennium Declaration, in light of the results already achieved by the Board, and continue implementing the remaining recommendations.

Implementation of Ministerial Declaration on eradication of poverty and hunger

Coordination segment of Economic and Social Council. At its 2008 coordination segment (7–9 and 24 July) [A/63/3/Rev.1], the Economic and Social Council considered the UN role in implementing the Ministerial Declaration on strengthening efforts to eradicate poverty and hunger, including through the global partnership for development, adopted at the Council's 2007 high-level segment [YUN 2007, p. 833]. It had before it a report of the Secretary-General on the subject [E/2008/21], submitted in response to Council decision 2007/261 [YUN 2007, p. 1425].

According to the report, the eradication of poverty and hunger had always been a central objective of UN development work, and all system organizations pursued that goal within their respective mandates. They had made progress in integrating the framework into policies, programmes and operations, with a number of initiatives under way to promote system-wide approaches, ranging from joint efforts to evaluate progress towards the achievement of the MDGs to joint studies to advance understanding of the complementarities between relevant policy areas and activities to build national capacity to formulate comprehensive development strategies and mobilize resources. Some of those initiatives were beginning to promote more integrated UN responses in line with the thrust of the 2007 Ministerial Declaration. In response to the Declaration's emphasis on the importance of the MDG framework to assess progress towards the realization of the MDG on the eradication of poverty and hunger, the Secretary-General launched a major communications and advocacy initiative to renew political momentum around the MDGs and scale up their implementation in 2007 and 2008 at the midpoint towards the target year 2015. To support that process, he established a United Nations Millennium Development Goal Gap Task Force to track international commitments made under the MDG on a global partnership for development to support the achievement of the MDGs, determine the extent to which they had been fulfilled at the international and country levels; identify gaps preventing faster progress; and suggest ways to address them. The Task Force would develop a common methodology for tracking progress and gaps and provide a common framework for monitoring the commitments. Its first report would be submitted to the intergovernmental process in mid-2008. The Secretary-General also set up the Millennium Development Goal Africa Steering Group to scale up progress to achieve the MDGs in the region and implement existing commitments.

The Secretary-General concluded that, while the UN system had made progress in developing and pursuing more comprehensive approaches for the eradication of poverty and hunger, especially in employment generation, trade and rural and agricultural development, more needed to be done to integrate sustainable development and science and technology dimensions in UN system programmes and activities in support of national efforts. Country-level experience offered lessons on how UN system support could be strengthened; harnessing its potential would require increasing UN system collaboration at the analytical, programmatic and operational levels, especially in the areas of statistics, labour, trade and information and communication technologies (ICTs). At the operational level, the UN system should make more effective use of frameworks and instruments for country-level support, such as the United Nations Development Assistance Framework (UNDAF), the poverty reduction strategy paper and the poverty and social impact analysis, to ensure that the various dimensions of poverty and hunger were taken into account in those frameworks.

The Secretary-General made the following recommendations: strengthen national capacity to analyse the social impact of rural and agricultural development, especially on employment, in order to facilitate the integration of social dimensions in such development; build national capacity to analyse the impact of natural resource management, including water, land and forestry, on the livelihoods of those depending on those resources; promote the integration of an "urban pillar", focused on the poor of populated slums, in the common country assessment and the UNDAF processes to facilitate the inclusion of sustainable urbanization and urban poverty reduction in national strategies, as well as the integration of sustainable development and science and technology in the policies, programmes and operations of all UN system organizations; promote a system-wide programme of work on science and technology, including ICTs, for poverty reduction, and joint inter-agency efforts to support the UNCTAD sixth tranche programme for strengthening implementation of internationally agreed development goals, including the MDGs, through innovation, networking and knowledge management; encourage the development of analytical tools for identifying sector imbalances in resource and investment allocations and addressing new resource needs to deal with emerging challenges, such as climate change and urban poverty; and further promote the joint assessment of aid flows and their impact on rural development social indicators. The UN system should continue to support national development strategies to ensure that all relevant dimensions of poverty and hunger were taken into account; and promote national participation in and ownership of poverty reduction strategies through its system-wide coordination mechanism and by promoting multi-stakeholder approaches to enhance the participation of local authorities, civil society organizations and the private sector.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 24 July [meeting 42], the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 2008/28 [draft: E/2008/L.22] without vote [agenda item 4].

The role of the United Nations system in implementing the Ministerial Declaration on strengthening efforts to eradicate poverty and hunger, including through the global partnership for development, adopted at the high-level segment of the substantive session of 2007 of the Economic and Social Council

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling the United Nations Millennium Declaration and the 2005 World Summit Outcome,

Recalling also the Ministerial Declaration adopted at the high-level segment of its substantive session of 2007,

Recalling further its decision 2007/261 of 27 July 2007 on the theme of the 2008 coordination segment,

Recognizing that the challenge of eradicating poverty and hunger requires a comprehensive and multidimensional response by the United Nations system, including the funds, programmes and agencies, as appropriate within their respective mandates,

Reaffirming the commitments to the global partnership for development set out in the United Nations Millennium Declaration, the Monterrey Consensus of the International Conference on Financing for Development and the Plan of Implementation of the World Summit on Sustainable Development ("Johannesburg Plan of Implementation"),

1. Requests the funds, programmes and agencies of the United Nations system, as appropriate within their mandates, to make further progress towards more comprehensive, coherent and multidimensional approaches in the formulation of their policies, programmes and operations supporting the eradication of poverty and hunger;

2. Also requests the funds, programmes and agencies of the United Nations system, as appropriate within their mandates, to strengthen their efforts to provide policy support to developing countries and assist them upon request in building their capacity to analyse the impact of a broad range of policy areas on the eradication of poverty and hunger, including through the promotion of interdisciplinary research and studies;

3. Invites all member organizations of the United Nations System Chief Executives Board for Coordination to enhance policy coherence and cooperation in areas vital to achieving the eradication of poverty and hunger;

4. Requests all member organizations of the United Nations System Chief Executives Board for Coordination to approach rural and urban development in an integrated manner and to consider ways to support countries' strategies for reducing urban poverty, as appropriate;

5. Encourages the funds, programmes and agencies of the United Nations system to promote policy coherence and cooperation on science and technology, where relevant, including information and communications technology where appropriate, for poverty reduction that should promote both the formulation of science and technology programmes and the development of national institutional capacities in science and technology in support of the eradication of poverty and hunger;

6. Also encourages the funds, programmes and agencies of the United Nations system, as appropriate within their mandates, to coordinate their assessments of the impact of development cooperation on the eradication of poverty and hunger;

7. Requests the funds, programmes and agencies of the United Nations system, as appropriate within their mandates and in consultation with Member States, to continue to promote multi-stakeholder approaches involving local authorities, civil society and the private sector, inter alia, through its system-wide coordination mechanisms for the eradication of poverty and hunger, as appropriate;

8. Encourages the United Nations system, especially its funds, programmes and agencies, to continue to accord the highest priority to the eradication of poverty and hunger, as appropriate, in developing the common country assessment and the United Nations Development Assistance Framework, or other frameworks and instruments guiding country-level operational activities, in consultation with Governments;

9. Encourages the funds, programmes and agencies of the United Nations system, as appropriate within their mandates, to continue to strengthen efforts to eradicate poverty and hunger, including through the promotion of the global partnership for development, and supporting countries in that regard.

By decision 2008/252 of the same date, the Economic and Social Council took note of the Secretary-General's report on the role of the UN system in implementing the Ministerial Declaration of the high-level segment of the 2007 substantive session of the Council.

Legal empowerment of the poor and eradication of poverty

The Commission on Legal Empowerment of the Poor held its fifth meeting (New York, 6–8 February) to finalize its report, agree on modalities for its launch and propose guidelines for implementing its recommendations. The outcome of the meeting included agreement on a plan of action to bring the legal empowerment agenda to the world's attention. The Commission comprised 21 commissioners, including former Heads of State and Government, cabinet ministers, jurists, economic researchers, and other senior policymakers. During the previous three years, it conducted 22 national consultation processes with representatives from local governments, academia, civil society and grassroots movements; launched five technical working groups, which submitted specialized reports; and debated with national and international policymakers.

In its 2008 report “Making the Law Work for Everyone” (Vol. I), the Commission argued that at least 4 billion people were robbed of the chance to better their lives and climb out of poverty because they were excluded from the rule of law. In many countries, the laws, institutions and policies governing economic, social and political affairs denied a large part of society the chance to participate on equal terms, and the outcomes of governance—the cumulative effect of policies and institutions on people—would only change if the processes of governance were fundamentally changed. As the poor lacked recognized rights, they were vulnerable to discrimination by the authorities, which had massive consequences.

The Commission emphasized that legal empowerment was a process of systemic change through which the poor and excluded were empowered to use the law and the legal system and services to protect and advance their rights as citizens and economic actors. It was not a substitute for other development initiatives—such as investing more in education, public services and infrastructure, enhancing participation in trade and adapting to climate change—but complemented such initiatives, multiplying their impact. The Commission developed a comprehensive agenda for achieving legal empowerment, encompassing four pillars that reinforced each other: access to justice and the rule of law; property rights; labour rights; and business rights. To succeed, legal empowerment had to lead to systemic change, including institutional reform. While Governments were the responsible actors in human rights terms, in a process of legal empowerment of the poor, the United Nations and the broader multilateral system could help by lending their support. More specifically, the legal empowerment agenda should be integrated as a core concern of global multilateral agencies, such as the World Bank, UNDP, the International Labour Organization, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations and the United Nations Human Settlements Programme. It should also become a core mission for regional political organizations, banks and UN institutions. Civil society and community-based organizations could contribute by connecting the poor to political institutions at every level, and the business community could smooth the way for legal empowerment through the United Nations Global Compact and by supporting local and national reform efforts. Religious communities and indigenous spiritual traditions could translate the moral imperatives of legal empowerment into action, and professional associations could gather and disseminate information and offer political support for legal empowerment and access to justice reform, as well as increased funding for legal aid and other services. Those initiatives should support efforts in individual countries; foster a regional and global political consensus; and create new instruments for supporting legal empowerment, such as a “Global Legal Empowerment Compact” as a first step in codifying core rights and spelling out a framework for their realization; mechanisms for tracking progress; a clearing-house for recording, storing and disseminating experiences and lessons learned; public-private partnerships; and a global initiative to promote grass-roots knowledge and innovation.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 11 December [meeting 68], the General Assembly adopted resolution 63/142 [draft: A/63/L.25/Rev.1 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 107].

Legal empowerment of the poor and eradication of poverty

The General Assembly,

Recalling the 2005 World Summit Outcome,

Recalling also the United Nations Millennium Declaration, the Monterrey Consensus of the International Conference on Financing for Development and the Plan of Implementation of the World Summit on Sustainable Development (“Johannesburg Plan of Implementation”),

Reaffirming the importance of the timely and full realization of the development goals and objectives agreed at the major United Nations conferences and summits, including the Millennium Development Goals,

Recognizing that empowerment of the poor is essential for the effective eradication of poverty and hunger,

Reaffirming that the rule of law at the national and international levels is essential for sustained economic growth, sustainable development and the eradication of poverty and hunger,

Reaffirming also that each country must take primary responsibility for its own development and that the role of national policies and development strategies cannot be overemphasized in the achievement of sustainable development, and recognizing that national efforts should be complemented by supportive global programmes, measures and policies aimed at expanding the development opportunities of developing countries, while taking into account national conditions and ensuring respect for national ownership, strategies and sovereignty,

1. Takes note of the final report of the Commission on Legal Empowerment of the Poor, entitled “Making the Law Work for Everyone”;

2. Stresses the importance of sharing best national practices in the area of legal empowerment of the poor;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to the General Assembly at its sixty-fourth session on the legal empowerment of the poor, under the item entitled “Eradication of poverty and other development issues”, taking into account national experiences in this regard.

Millennium Development Goals

The Millennium Development Goals Report 2008, published by DESA [Sales No. E.08.I.18], summarized progress towards the goals in each region. The single most important success had been the unprecedented breadth and depth of the commitment to the MDGs. Governments of developing countries and the international community adopted the MDGs as their framework for international development cooperation, as did the private sector and civil society in both developed and developing countries. Private foundations in developed countries had become an important source of funding for a wide range of activities intended to achieve the MDGs, and NGOs in developing countries were increasingly engaged in those activities. That global collective effort was yielding results. There had been sound progress in some MDG areas, even in some of the more challenging regions, and a number of targets were expected to be reached by their target dates. Some of those successes had been achieved by means of targeted interventions or programmes, but achieving some other goals would depend on country-wide systems of qualified and equipped personnel and an effective institutional infrastructure. Building those capacities would require strong political commitment and adequate funding over a longer period and the delivery of additional ODA.

Most developing countries’ efforts to achieve the MDGs had benefited from improved economic growth and relatively low inflation since 2000. However, the immediate prospects of reduced global growth and higher inflation threatened success in reducing poverty and making progress towards other MDGs unless there was a response from all stakeholders. A first component of that response was to ensure that action was accelerated and expanded. All stakeholders should renew their commitment to the wide range of inter-related activities. Successful policies, programmes and projects should be expanded, and Governments and the international community should respond to the lessons of experience and adjust to changing circumstances. Additional resources should be mobilized by both developed and developing countries to address long-term challenges in agriculture, rural development, infrastructure and environmental sustainability, including climate change. The current food crisis (see p. 1343) called for special attention to the potential escalation in hunger and malnutrition.

That agenda would require a sustained and wide-ranging effort beyond 2015. The task was broad and complex, but the progress achieved demonstrated that success was feasible with sound strategies and political will, which should include a greater financial commitment. Despite the potentially less favourable economic conditions, developed countries should provide substantial increases in ODA and foster an international environment more conducive to development.

General Assembly high-level event on MDGs

The General Assembly held a high-level event on the MDGs at UN Headquarters on 25 September, the theme of which was “End poverty 2015: make it happen”. Its objectives were to review progress and take stock of gaps at the midway point in the global effort to achieve the MDGs by 2015; identify actions to scale up efforts; and help ensure that the goals and international targets remained on track and that the momentum was maintained beyond 2008. Three parallel round tables on poverty and hunger, education and health, and environmental sustainability were held, with gender equality and global partnership for development as cross-cutting themes. A 25 July background note by the Secretary-General addressed each of the round-table topics, as well as the cross-cutting themes. The meeting also had before it supporting background documentation, including the report of the Millennium Development Goal Africa Steering Group, the MDG Gap Task Force Report 2008: Delivering on the Global Partnership for Achieving the Millennium Development Goals [Sales No. E.08.I.17] and The Millennium Development Goals Report 2008 (see above).

Partnership events sponsored by a variety of constituencies took place during the week of the high-level event (22–26 September), which shared success stories and lessons learned and provided opportunities to forge new partnerships and generate commitments. UN Member States, groups of States and civil society partners, including the private sector and philanthropists, made commitments and announced initiatives on concrete next steps for achieving the MDGs by 2015.

The Secretary-General, in his address to the gathering, recalled the ambitious goals set eight years before to free humankind from hunger, illiteracy, disease, disempowerment and environmental degradation, and noted the successes achieved: measles vaccinations that had prevented 7.5 million deaths; inroads made against AIDS; surging school enrolment in several African countries following the abolition of school fees; and millions of poor households risen out of extreme poverty. He declared that the world was on the way to cutting extreme poverty and hunger in half by 2015, but while things were moving in the right direction, they were not moving quickly enough. Sub-Saharan Africa had actually seen the number of poor increase between 1990 and 2005. Women and girls continued to suffer persistent bias and neglect, evidenced by gender gaps in health, education, employment and empowerment. The financial crisis threatened the well-being of billions of people, none more so than the poorest of the poor, compounding the damage being caused by much higher food and fuel prices. The Secretary-General urged States to rise to those challenges and inject new energy into the global partnership for development. He also asked participants to be bold and generous in their commitments and to agree to his proposal to hold a formal Summit in 2010 to take stock of MDG achievements.

The Assembly President, in his closing statement, said that he supported the Secretary-General's proposal to hold an MDG Summit in 2010 to galvanize efforts and actions in the final five years before the 2015 deadline, and would launch consultations to develop a resolution on its objectives and modalities. Noting that health was an area still lagging far behind, he announced that global health would be made a priority and that he would convene an informal thematic debate on "Strengthening Global Health: The Health MDGs and Beyond". The process would be advanced through a high-level debate in June 2009 and would complement the work the Economic and Social Council on global public health.

The Secretary-General announced that commitments made by participants had generated an estimated $16 billion, including some $1.6 billion to bolster food security, more than $4.5 billion for education and $3 billion to combat malaria.

Science and technology for development

Commission on Science and Technology for Development

The Commission on Science and Technology for Development held its eleventh session in Geneva from 26 to 30 May [E/2008/31] and an intersessional meeting in Santiago, Chile, from 12 to 14 November.

It considered as its priority themes: development-oriented policies for a socio-economically inclusive information society, including access, infrastructure and an enabling environment; and science, technology and engineering for innovation and capacity-building in education and research. It also considered progress made in the implementation of and follow-up to the World Summit on the Information Society (wsis) outcomes [YUN 2003, p. 857 & YUN 2005, p. 933] at the regional and international levels. The Commission had before it reports of the Secretary-General on the wsis outcomes [A/63/72-E/2008/48] (see p. 930) and on the priority themes [E/CN.16/2008/3 & E/CN.16/2008/4], a summary report by the UNCTAD secretariat on the meeting of the Commission's intersessional panel (Kuala Lumpur, Malaysia, 28–30 November 2007) [E/CN.16/2008/CRP.1], and an UNCTAD background paper on its follow-up report on wsis.

The Commission recommended a draft resolution and four draft decisions for adoption by the Economic and Social Council, and brought to the Council's attention a decision by which the Commission took note of the Secretary-General's reports on the priority themes.

On 18 July, the Council took note of the Commission's report on its eleventh session and approved the provisional agenda and documentation for its twelfth (2009) session (decision 2008/220). It also requested the Secretary-General to report to the Commission at its twelfth session on science, technology and innovation priority themes addressed during its eleventh session (decision 2008/219).

Participation in Commission work

By decision 2008/217 of 18 July, the Economic and Social Council decided, on an exceptional basis and without prejudice to the rules of procedure of its functional commissions, to invite NGOs and civil society entities that were not in consultative status with the Council but had received accreditation to wsis to participate in the Commission's work at its twelfth and thirteenth sessions. It pleaded for voluntary contributions to facilitate the participation of developing country NGOs and civil society entities and to ensure their balanced representation, including in the Commission's panels, and invited the Committee on Non-Governmental Organizations to consider the applications of such entities as expeditiously as possible.

By decision 2008/218 of the same date, the Economic and Social Council decided that academic entities accredited to wsis might participate in the work of the Commission, in accordance with the Council's rules of procedure. It requested the secretariat of the Commission to submit for the Council's consideration and approval the names of those entities, including academies of science and engineering, that had not been accredited to wsis and wished to participate in the Commission's work. The Council emphasized that its decision was taken on an exceptional basis, without prejudice to the Council's rules of procedure, in particular resolution 1996/31 [YUN 1996, p. 1360] concerning the accreditation and participation of NGOs and other major groups in the work of the Council and its subsidiary bodies, and should not be construed as creating a precedent. The Council decided to review in 2010 the list of academic entities, as well as the modalities for their participation in the Commission's work.

Information and communication technologies

During 2008, the United Nations continued to consider how the benefits of new technologies, especially information and communication technologies (ICTs), could be made available to all, in keeping with recommendations contained in the Ministerial Declaration adopted by the Economic and Social Council at its 2000 high-level segment [YUN 2000, p. 799], the Millennium Declaration [ibid., p. 49], the Geneva Declaration of Principles and Plan of Action adopted at the first phase of wsis [YUN 2003, p. 857], and the Tunis Commitment and Tunis Agenda adopted at its second phase [YUN 2005, p. 933].

In April, the Secretary-General submitted a report on progress made in the implementation of and follow-up to the wsis outcomes at the regional and international levels [A/63/72-E/2008/48] (see p. 930) and a note transmitting the report of the Director-General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) on the implementation of Assembly resolution 50/130 [YUN 1995, p. 1438], including the recommendations of the tenth United Nations Inter-Agency Round Table on Communication for Development (Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, 12–14 February 2007) [A/63/180].

The Inter-Agency Round Table reviewed communication for development coordination arrangements around the theme "Towards a common system approach for harnessing communication for development to achieve the MDGs". It focused on interventions around which UN system organizations could develop a common approach, strategy and action plan for the implementation of communication for development practice. The objectives of the meeting were to increase inter-agency collaboration at Headquarters and UN country team levels, strengthen awareness among UN system organizations on ways to measure the impact and effectiveness of communication for development, and introduce mechanisms to harmonize UN system approaches. The Round Table reiterated that communication for development was critical for the success of the MDGs, acknowledged the vital role of the media in the process, and emphasized that higher priority allocation was essential for coherent and harmonized country-level actions. It took stock of relevant UN system initiatives and activities in a number of areas.

Participants observed that the methodology of communication for development needs assessments was missing from the UN approach, particularly at the country level. UN system communication was often viewed mainly in relation to channeling information downstream to promote specific mandates, methods and policy-related agendas, and to build public image and visibility and support for fund-raising. Its public information strategies, which were consolidated through the United Nations Department of Public Information, did not necessarily equal communication for development practice. Systematic and operational linkages between the United Nations Inter-Agency Round Table and the United Nations Communications Group might improve awareness and capacity-building needs concerning communication for development practice, and help harmonize United Nations programming priorities and communication activities. Similar linkages with the United Nations Development Group might underscore the added value of communication in development planning, and integrating it in upstream policy-setting would guarantee its consideration throughout UN priorities and responses.

The general recommendations of the Round Table were to: impress upon UN specialized agencies, programmes and funds the importance of prioritizing communication for development principles and methodologies in all programmatic areas, and the need to allocate human, technical and financial resources for that effort; advise the heads of those bodies to integrate communication for development principles and methodologies into programme and project planning, execution, monitoring and evaluation; ensure incorporation of its principles and methodologies, including needs assessments, into the common country assessment/UNDAF guidelines, or equivalent exercises, so as to improve development results; call upon the UN resident coordinator system to ensure coherence and coordination of communication for development at the country level; and establish an inter-agency mechanism for promoting and enhancing communication for development within the UN system.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December [meeting 72], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/63/411], adopted resolution 63/202 without vote [agenda item 46].

Information and communication technologies for development

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 55/2 of 8 September 2000, by which it adopted the United Nations Millennium Declaration,

Recalling also its resolutions 56/183 of 21 December 2001, 57/238 of 20 December 2002, 57/270 B of 23 June 2003, 59/220 of 22 December 2004 and 62/182 of 19 December 2007, Economic and Social Council resolution 2008/3 of 18 July 2008 and other relevant resolutions,

Noting that cultural diversity is the common heritage of humankind and that the information society should be founded on and stimulate respect for cultural identity, cultural and linguistic diversity, traditions and religions, and foster dialogue among cultures and civilizations, and noting also that the promotion, affirmation and preservation of diverse cultural identities and languages as reflected in relevant agreed United Nations documents, including the Universal Declaration on Cultural Diversity of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, will further enrich the information society,

Recalling the Declaration of Principles and the Plan of Action adopted by the World Summit on the Information Society at its first phase, held in Geneva from 10 to 12 December 2003, as endorsed by the General Assembly, and the Tunis Commitment and the Tunis Agenda for the Information Society adopted by the Summit at its second phase, held in Tunis from 16 to 18 November 2005, and endorsed by the General Assembly,

Recalling also the 2005 World Summit Outcome,

Stressing the need to reduce the digital divide and to ensure that the benefits of new technologies, especially information and communication technologies, are available to all,

Recalling the first and second meetings of the Internet Governance Forum, held in Athens from 30 October to 2 November 2006 and in Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, from 12 to 15 November 2007, respectively, and welcoming the convening of the third meeting of the Forum in Hyderabad, India, from 3 to 6 December 2008,

Welcoming, in view of the existing gaps in information and communication technologies infrastructure across Africa, the launching in Kigali, in October 2007, of Connect Africa, an initiative aimed at mobilizing human, financial and technical resources to accelerate the implementation of the connectivity goals of the World Summit on the Information Society,

Recognizing the role of the Commission on Science and Technology for Development in assisting the Economic and Social Council as the focal point in the system-wide follow-up, in particular the review and assessment, of progress made in implementing the outcomes of the World Summit on the Information Society, while at the same time maintaining its original mandate on science and technology for development,

Recalling Economic and Social Council resolution 2007/8 of 25 July 2007, in which, inter alia, the Council requested various entities, including the Global Alliance for Information and Communication Technologies and Development, to submit reports to the Commission on the implications of the outcomes of the World Summit on the Information Society,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General to the Commission on the implementation of the outcomes of the World Summit on the Information Society,

Noting the intersessional meeting of the Commission, held in Santiago from 12 to 14 November 2008,

Stressing that, for the majority of the poor, the developmental promise of science and technology, including information and communication technologies, remains unfulfilled, and emphasizing the need to effectively harness technology, including information and communication technologies, to bridge the digital divide,

Recognizing the pivotal role of the United Nations system in promoting development, including with respect to enhancing access to information and communication technologies, inter alia, through partnerships with all relevant stakeholders,

1. Recognizes that information and communication technologies have the potential to provide new solutions to development challenges, particularly in the context of globalization, and can foster economic growth, competitiveness, access to information and knowledge, poverty eradication and social inclusion that will help to expedite the integration of all countries, particularly developing countries, into the global economy;

2. Stresses the important role of Governments in the design of public policies and in the provision of public services responsive to national needs and priorities through, inter alia, making effective use of information and communication technologies, on the basis of a multi-stakeholder approach, to support national development efforts;

3. Recognizes that, in addition to financing by the public sector, financing of information and communication technologies infrastructure by the private sector has come to play an important role in many countries and that domestic financing is being augmented by North-South flows and South-South cooperation;

4. Also recognizes that information and communication technologies present new opportunities and challenges, and that there is a pressing need to address the major impediments that developing countries face in accessing the new technologies, such as insufficient resources, infrastructure, education, capacity, investment and connectivity and issues related to technology ownership, standards and flows, and in this regard calls upon all stakeholders to provide adequate resources, enhanced capacity-building and technology transfer, on mutually agreed terms, to developing countries, particularly the least developed countries;

5. Further recognizes the immense potential that information and communication technologies have in promoting the transfer of technologies in a wide spectrum of socio-economic activity;

6. Acknowledges that a gender divide exists as part of the digital divide, and encourages all stakeholders to ensure the full participation of women in the information society and women's access to the new technologies, especially information and communication technologies for development;

7. Recalls the improvements and innovations in financial mechanisms, including the creation of a voluntary Digital Solidarity Fund, as mentioned in the Geneva Declaration of Principles, and, in this regard, invites voluntary contributions to its financing;

8. Recognizes that South-South cooperation, particularly through triangular cooperation, can be a useful tool to promote the development of information and communication technologies;

9. Encourages strengthened and continuing cooperation between and among stakeholders to ensure effective implementation of the outcomes of the Geneva and Tunis phases of the World Summit on the Information Society, through, inter alia, the promotion of national, regional and international multi-stakeholder partnerships, including public-private partnerships, and the promotion of national and regional multi-stakeholder thematic platforms, in a joint effort and dialogue with developing and least developed countries, development partners and actors in the information and communication technologies sector;

10. Encourages the United Nations funds and programmes and the specialized agencies, within their respective mandates, to contribute to the implementation of the outcomes of the World Summit on the Information Society, and emphasizes the need for resources in this regard;

11. Recognizes the urgent need to harness the potential of knowledge and technology, and in that regard encourages the United Nations development system to continue its effort to promote the use of information and communication technologies as a critical enabler of development and a catalyst for the achievement of the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the Economic and Social Council at its substantive session of 2009, on the basis of his consultations with all relevant organizations, including international organizations, a report which may contain recommendations on how the process towards enhanced cooperation should be pursued;

13. Invites Member States to support the meaningful participation of stakeholders from developing countries in the preparatory meetings of the Internet Governance Forum and in the Forum itself in 2009 and 2010, and to consider contributing to the multi-stakeholder trust fund created for the Forum, as appropriate;

14. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its sixty-fourth session, through the Economic and Social Council, a report on the status of the implementation of and follow-up to the present resolution.

Follow-up to World Summit on the Information Society

In response to Economic and Social Council resolution 2007/8 [YUN 2007, p. 853], the Secretary-General submitted an April report [A/63/72-E/2008/48] on progress made in the implementation of and follow-up to the wsis outcomes at the regional and international levels. The report reviewed progress made, incorporating analyses of responses provided by 14 international and regional organizations on trends, achievements and obstacles to wsis implementation. It also highlighted major initiatives undertaken since February 2007, as reported by international and regional organizations.

At the regional level, UN regional commissions supported wsis implementation through regional action plans. They highlighted the importance of collaborating with other development partners and of bridging the digital divide between and within their regions. The Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia led an initiative involving all the regional commissions in creating knowledge networks through ICT access points for disadvantaged communities. Those networks provided a platform for developing and sharing knowledge pertinent to those communities in key areas of sustainable development, such as employment, education, gender and health.

At the international level, UN system entities reported a wide range of programme activities, and several entities reported on institutional mechanisms to facilitate implementation. To strengthen the secretariat of the Commission on Science and Technology for Development, UNCTAD formed the Science, Technology and ICTs branch, while the Secretary-General entrusted DESA to oversee and manage the secretariats of the Internet Governance Forum (IGF) and the UN Global Alliance for ICT and Development. The International Telecommunication Union (ITU), as outlined in its Strategic Plan (2008–2011), established a wsis Task Force to coordinate ITU strategies and activities in relation to wsis. Wsis outcomes were also integrated into the UNESCO 2008–2013 Medium-term Strategy and its 2008–2009 programme and budget.

The Secretary-General concluded that progress towards the implementation of wsis outcomes seemed to be on track. UN system activities to implement those outcomes were carried out in multi-stakeholder partnerships with other organizations at the international, regional, national and local levels. However, while some entities reported on successful mobilization of relevant stakeholders through electronic networks and face-to-face consultations and meetings, others encountered difficulty in securing the participation of all stakeholders, and reported low involvement of new stakeholders in the facilitation process. The high cost associated with face-to-face facilitation meetings in Geneva deterred participation by developing country stakeholders. Entities called for greater coordination among the leading facilitator agencies, with a view to providing coherent measuring tools to monitor and assess the status of implementation of the main themes. However, progress towards the attainment of the targets and goals set out in the Geneva Plan of Action and the Tunis Agenda for the Information Society needed to be benchmarked. In that regard, the Commission, through the UNCTAD secretariat, should collaborate with the United Nations Group on the Information Society, the lead moderators and facilitators to group the 11 action lines into thematic clusters. In addition, the UNCTAD secretariat should consult with action line facilitators during the 2008–2009 intersessional period to define roles and explore ways of streamlining the reporting process. The Commission should also explore ways of maximizing the participation of—and contribution by—civil society and business entities in its work.

By decision 2008/216 of 18 July, the Economic and Social Council took note of the Secretary-General's report.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 18 July, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on Science and Technology for Development [E/2008/31], adopted resolution 2008/3 without vote [agenda item 13 (b)].

Assessment of the progress made in the implementation of and follow-up to the outcomes of the World Summit on the Information Society

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling the outcome documents of the World Summit on the Information Society,

Recalling also that access to information and the sharing and creation of knowledge contribute significantly to strengthening economic, social and cultural development, thus helping all countries to reach the internationally agreed development goals and objectives, including the Millennium Development Goals, considering that this process can be enhanced by removing barriers to universal, ubiquitous, equitable and affordable access to information, and underlining the importance of removing barriers to bridging the digital divide, particularly those that hinder the full achievement of the economic, social and cultural development of countries and the welfare of their people, in particular in developing countries,

Recognizing the efforts by all stakeholders to implement the outcomes of the two phases of the Summit,

Recognizing also the efforts of the United Nations organizations and programmes and of all the regional commissions in implementing the goals, commitments and recommendations of the Summit,

Recalling its resolution 2006/46 of 28 July 2006 on the follow-up to the Summit and review of the Commission on Science and Technology for Development and the mandate that it gave to the Commission,

Recalling also General Assembly resolution 57/270 B of 23 June 2003 and Economic and Social Council resolution 2007/29 of 27 July 2007,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the progress made in the implementation of and follow-up to the outcomes of the Summit at the regional and international levels,

Evolving challenges and opportunities

1. Notes that the digital divide is changing in some respects and that while in general the divide may be shrinking, a new form of digital divide is emerging in terms of difference in quality and speed of access to information and communications technologies;

2. Also notes the continuing relevance of assisting developing countries in their efforts to overcome the digital divide, particularly with regard to both access and capacity;

3. Further notes that the disparity continues between developed and developing countries in respect of the cost and quality of access and that in developed, high-income economies, the average cost of a broadband connection is significantly less than in developing countries, both in nominal terms and as a percentage of the average monthly income;

4. Notes that the gender divide still persists in respect of the quality and variety of means of access to the Internet and information and communications technologies in the building of the information society in both developed and developing countries;

5. Also notes the strong growth of mobile telephony subscriptions, especially in developing countries;

6. Notes with concern the growing number of incidents affecting global network safety and security and provoking service outages in large regions of the world;

7. Notes that in many countries there is inadequate coherence and complementarity between national information and communications technology policies and national development and poverty reduction strategies and that, especially in the poorer rural areas, the potential of the Internet and information and communications technologies in general for promoting development has not yet been fully utilized;

8. Calls upon all stakeholders to increase efforts towards funding of and investment in information and communications technologies in order to advance broadband access, including wireless access, in areas and countries in which it is still limited or non-existent;

9. Calls upon all States, in building the information society, to take steps with a view to avoiding, and to refrain from taking, any unilateral measure not in accordance with international law and the Charter of the United Nations that impedes the full achievement of economic and social development by the population of the affected countries and that hinders their well-being;

10. Reaffirms that the protection of intellectual property is important for encouraging innovation and creativity in the information society, that, similarly, the wide dissemination, diffusion and sharing of knowledge is important for encouraging innovation and creativity, and that facilitating meaningful participation by all in intellectual property issues and knowledge-sharing through full awareness and capacity-building is a fundamental function of an inclusive information society;

11. Calls upon all stakeholders to increase their efforts to reduce the disparity in cost of access, through, for example, the establishment of Internet exchange points and the creation of a competitive environment, at both the backbone network and local levels;

12. Recommends that all States strive for gender equality in access to the Internet and in building the information society in both developed and developing countries, by ensuring the inclusion of the gender approach in information and communications technology policies in national strategies;

13. Calls upon all stakeholders to continue the development and spread of easy-to-use applications and services for mobile phones and related devices, especially those that are useful in rural areas and work with low bandwidth and high latency;

14. Also calls upon all stakeholders to cooperate more closely in making global networks more stable, resilient and secure and in overcoming outages of, incidents affecting and attacks on those networks;

15. Calls upon international and regional organizations to assess and report on a regular basis on the universal accessibility of nations to information and communications technologies, with the aim of creating equitable opportunities for the growth of the information and communications technology sectors of developing countries;

16. Recommends the mainstreaming of information and communications technology policies into national development or poverty reduction strategies, in accordance with the priorities of countries;

17. Also recommends increased international cooperation at all levels and among all stakeholders to help rural areas to access and benefit from the Internet and information and communications technologies in general;

Successes and shortcomings to date in respect of the implementation of the outcomes of the World Summit on the Information Society

18. Takes note with appreciation of the ongoing work of the Internet Governance Forum, its multi-stakeholder approach and its innovative platform, and expresses its thanks to host Governments for their contributions;

19. Acknowledges the progress made towards developing multilingual capabilities on the Internet;

20. Also acknowledges the work of the Partnership on Measuring Information and Communications Technologies for Development on developing indicators for further consideration and decision by the Statistical Commission;

21. Notes the lack of indicators needed to measure progress towards achieving the targets as set out in section B of the Plan of Action adopted by the World Summit on the Information Society at its first phase, held in Geneva from 10 to 12 December 2003, and endorsed by the General Assembly;

22. Takes note of the efforts undertaken by the regional commissions in respect of the coordination of the implementation of the outcomes of the Summit, including in developing e-strategies, capacity-building and measuring of information and communications technologies;

23. Acknowledges the efforts of all action line facilitators, especially the International Telecommunication Union and the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization in their role as lead facilitators;

24. Notes that the architecture for the implementation of the outcomes of the Summit, as defined in the Tunis Agenda for the Information Society, is rather complex and has also imposed limitations in respect of the participation of all stakeholders, in particular those from developing countries;

25. Takes note of the letter from the Secretary-General addressed to relevant organizations responsible for essential tasks associated with the Internet in which he requested them to report on the steps they had taken towards achieving enhanced cooperation in accordance with paragraph 71 of the Tunis Agenda, looks forward to the report to be prepared by the Secretary-General, which may contain recommendations on how the process should be pursued, and notes that all stakeholders, in their respective roles, will be included in this process;

26. Reaffirms the relevance of decisions on Internet governance in their entirety, as outlined in the Tunis Agenda;

27. Recommends that the Internet Governance Forum, as a multi-stakeholder discussion forum, retain its focus on public policy issues related to Internet governance;

28. Encourages collaboration among all stakeholders, including international organizations, consistent with their mandate and existing budgetary resources, in regard to the multilingualization of the Internet;

29. Recommends that the Partnership on Measuring Information and Communication Technologies for Development consider the creation of benchmarks and indicators, including impact indicators, for further consideration and decision by the Statistical Commission, in order to track progress towards the attainment of the specific goals and targets set out in the outcome documents of the Summit, particularly section B of the Plan of Action adopted in Geneva;

30. Also recommends that action line facilitators, in cooperation with all stakeholders, establish milestones, deadlines and calendars for their action lines, taking into account the outcome documents of the Summit;

31. Further recommends that lead facilitators conduct open-ended multi-stakeholder consultations with a view to improving the effectiveness and coherence of the annual clustering of activities related to the Summit;

32. Recommends that the United Nations Group on the Information Society organize focused, open-ended multi-stakeholder consultations on the implementation of paragraphs 3 to 28 of the Tunis Agenda, concerning financial mechanisms for meeting the challenges of information and communications technologies for development;

33. Also recommends the introduction in the facilitation process of electronic collaboration tools such as mailing lists, Web 2.0 applications, observatories and clearing-house models in order to enhance multi-stakeholder participation, in particular from developing countries;

34. Further recommends that in submitting their reports to the secretariat of the Commission on Science and Technology for Development, in accordance with Economic and Social Council resolution 2007/8 of 25 July 2007, action line facilitators bring to the attention of the Commission obstacles and difficulties encountered by all stakeholders in regard to the commitments and recommendations pertaining to their respective action lines at the regional and international levels and make proposals to the Commission for possible actions, whenever deemed necessary;

35. Invites all actors and institutions involved in the implementation of and follow-up to the outcomes of the Summit to clarify further their respective roles, improve coordination and information-sharing and build synergies to make the most effective use of available resources;

36. Invites the international community to make voluntary contributions to the special trust fund established by the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to support the review and assessment work of the Commission in regard to the follow-up to the Summit;

37. Recommends that all stakeholders redouble their efforts to implement the vision of the Summit of a people-centred, inclusive and development-oriented information society, so as to enhance digital opportunities for all people and help to bridge the digital divide.

UN role in ICT development

CEB consideration. At its fifteenth session (Rome, 17–18 March) [CEB/2008/3], the CEB High-level Committee on Management was briefed by the Chairperson of the ICT Network on the three major areas of activity and discussion within that Network: the plan of action for harmonization and reform of business practices, data communications study, and collaboration with the United Nations Development Group. Regarding the business practices proposals, much of the recent work of the Network focused on that subject, with the lead agencies working to refine the proposals and commence planning activities, pending the availability of funding. The Network had not commenced its study on common data communications services, owing to the delay in obtaining funding from agencies. The final contributions had been confirmed, leaving only the finalization of the memorandum of understanding between the CEB secretariat and the United Nations Children's Fund, the procuring agency, to be completed.

At its sixteenth session (New York, 18–19 September) [CEB/2008/5], the CEB High-level Committee on Management encouraged all agencies that had not done so to closely examine their ICT services, with a view to utilizing the services of the International Computer Centre more fully.

Internet Governance Forum meeting. The IGF, established in 2006 [YUN 2006, p. 1001] to support the Secretary-General in carrying out the wsis mandate to convene a multi-stakeholder policy dialogue on Internet governance issues, held its third meeting in Hyderabad, India, from 3 to 6 December. The overall theme was "Internet for All", which looked at the question of the adequacy of the way the Internet was managed, for the day when several billion users with varying cultural and ethical predilections and language competencies became users.

Economic and social trends

The World Economic Situation and Prospects 2008 [Sales No. E.08.II.C.2], jointly issued by the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development

(UNCTAD) and the United Nations Department of Economic and Social Affairs, stated that, in 2007, except for the United States, the growth of the world economy was broad-based. The majority of countries (102 out of 106 for which data were available) increased per capita output by 3 per cent or more. At the same time, the number of countries registering a decline in gross domestic product (GDP) per capita fell to nine, less than the previous year. Nevertheless, the divergence in economic performance remained across countries, particularly the least developed countries, where per capita income growth ranged from close to zero to well over 10 per cent. Africa as a whole showed further strong performance, but still accounted for many of the countries with sub-par performance. Among the developed economies, a continued slump in the housing sector and the associated credit tightening were expected to lead the United States into another year of below-trend growth, expected to reach only 2 per cent in 2008. Private consumption was expected to weaken with the housing downturn, while corporate investment spending and hiring were also likely to decelerate. Growth in Western Europe was also expected to slow in 2008, with GDP growing by 2.3 per cent for the euro area, down from 2.7 per cent in 2007. The economies of the newer European Union member States were expected to grow to about 5.4 per cent in 2008, compared to 6 per cent in 2007. Vibrant economic activity in the region was, however, accompanied by weakening indicators of macro-economic stability. Economic growth in Japan was expected to reach 1.7 per cent in 2008, representing a slowdown from the 2 per cent expansion in 2007. In other developed economies, growth in Canada moderated in the second half of 2007 and was expected to remain subdued in 2008. Growth in Australia was strong during 2007, driven by domestic demand. Among the economies in transition, growth in the Commonwealth of Independent States maintained a strong pace of 8.2 per cent for 2007, and strengthened further in the South-Eastern European economies to 6 per cent. Robust domestic demand, particularly private consumption and fixed investment, remained the key driver.

Among the developing economies, growth in Africa strengthened in 2007, driven largely by buoyant domestic demand, booming mining and gas production and broad-based recovery in those countries recovering from economic decline. However, in some countries, it continued to be hampered by political and social tensions. East Asian economies maintained a solid pace of 8.4 per cent in 2007, with exports being the main driver of growth, followed by domestic demand. China continued to lead that growth, expanding at a pace of 11.4 per cent. In South Asia, growth decelerated to 6.9 per cent, while Western Asia ben-edited from the favourable effects of high oil prices, propelling growth to 5.7 per cent. In Latin America and the Caribbean, growth seemed to have peaked after the robust performance of the previous four years. The 5 per cent growth rate in 2007 was attributed to an improved economic performance in Brazil, led by domestic demand and strong business and public infrastructure investments. Further slowdown in the United States would pose risks for the region, affecting not only Mexico and Central America, but also some countries in South America.

According to the Trade and Development Report, 2008 [Sales No. E.08.II.D.21], published by UNCTAD, in mid-2008 the global economy was teetering on the brink of recession. The downturn, after four years of relatively fast growth, was due to the global fallout from the financial crisis in the United States, the bursting of the housing bubble there and in other large economies, soaring commodity prices, increasingly restrictive monetary policies in a number of countries and stock market volatility. In that uncertain environment, the world economy was expected to grow by around 3 per cent in 2008, almost one percentage point less than the previous year, with GDP in developed countries expected to fall to about half that rate. By contrast, GDP growth in developing countries was expected to remain robust at around 6.4 per cent. Despite a slowdown, output growth in China in 2008 was expected to expand close to 10 per cent. West Asia (6.7 per cent) and both North Africa (6 per cent) and sub-Saharan Africa (excluding South Africa) (7.1 per cent) were the only regions where average rates of output growth were likely to rise compared to the previous two years. The growth in sub-Saharan Africa was the highest annual rate in more than three decades, largely due to higher income from primary commodity exports, particularly oil.

Overall, the financial turmoil, commodity price hikes and huge exchange-rate swings were having an enormous impact on the global economy, casting a shadow on the outlook for 2009. The fallout from the collapse of the United States mortgage market and the reversal of the housing boom in a number of countries were more profound and persistent than expected, and the shock waves spread beyond the countries directly involved, triggering widespread uncertainty in the financial markets. A year after the outbreak of the crisis, it remained unclear how long it would last. For a large number of developing countries, the outlook depended primarily on future trends in the prices of their primary commodity exports. Some developing and transition economies with substantial external debt and large current-account deficits, mainly in Eastern Europe and Central Asia, could face an increase in their financing costs and a reversal of their currency valuations.

One of the reasons for the fragile state of the world economy was the weakness in the system of global economic governance, in particular a lack of coherence between the international trading system, which was governed by internationally agreed rules and regulations, and the international monetary and financial system, which was not. The financial turbulence, the speculative forces affecting food and oil prices, and the apparent failure of foreign exchange markets to bring about changes in exchange rates that reflected shifts in the international competitiveness of countries suggested that there was an urgent need for redesigning the system of global economic governance. The meltdown of the sub-prime mortgage market had once again exposed the fragility of the global financial sector, and the complex financial instruments developed in recent years had served to spread the impact of risky investments across continents, institutions and markets. The recurrent episodes of financial volatility seemed to be driven by a mix of opaque instruments and massive leverage with which financial firms attempted to extract double-digit returns out of a real economy that was growing at a much slower rate. Since the outbreak of the sub-prime crisis, the risks of securitization had become more evident, and there were concerns over the financial industry's ability to generate large temporary profits by applying unsustainable refinancing schemes, while passing part of the losses that arose from inevitable market corrections to the public sector and the taxpayer. Indeed, since financial crises could have enormous negative effects on the real economy, policymakers had to bail out parts of the financial sector when systemic threats loomed. Just as with deposit-taking commercial banks, recent actions of the United States Federal Reserve had shown that investment banks and mortgage lenders, too, could be deemed "too big to fail" and that their liabilities were protected by implicit insurance. Given the risks to financial stability, the Federal Reserve was right to provide such insurance and prevent the bankruptcy of a large investment bank and the two largest mortgage lenders in the United States; but insurance should not come without cost. If the Government decided that different types of financial institutions needed to be bailed out because their failure could lead to a systemic crisis, those institutions should be subject to tighter prudential regulation similar to that imposed on deposit-taking banks. The recent crisis had shown once again that market discipline alone was ineffective in preventing recurrent episodes of "irrational exuberance" and that the market mechanism could not cope with massive drops in financial asset prices.

The World Economic and Social Survey 2008 [Sales No. E.08.II.C.1], entitled "Overcoming Economic Insecurity", stated that, in 2008, rising food prices and a growing incidence of hunger demonstrated the mismatch between market forces and socio-economic well-being. For many of the countries facing severe food insecurity, the problem was often one of multiple threats from poverty, natural disasters and civil violence; but the outbreak of food riots in rapidly urbanizing middle-income countries, some with a solid growth record, suggested more serious structural deficiencies. Since early 2008, a growing mismatch between the supply of—and demand for—agricultural products had also triggered political unrest in a number of countries and put the issue of food security back in the international agenda. The problem was compounded by energy insecurity, as fuel prices hit new highs and future supplies became entangled in geopolitical calculations, and by increasingly flexible labour markets, which also undermined employment security. Instead of providing shelter against the upsurge of that turbulent economy, money markets added greatly to the sense of expanding insecurity. Volatile international financial flows, boom-bust cycles, collapsing currencies and speculative panics had put jobs, homes and pensions at risk. Still, heightened insecurity could not be put down simply to the destructive impulses of markets. Rather, it had much to do with the eagerness with which policymakers ceded economic responsibility to central bankers, corporations and managers of unregulated hedge funds on the promise that they would deliver a healthy investment climate and help secure large economic gains. While the macroeconomic climate had become less volatile, productive investment had not picked up. At the same time, more households, communities and countries were exposed to adverse shocks and downside risks, while their ability to recover from the consequences was sharply diminished. Despite greater price stability and increased openness, the growth record was uneven and the macroeconomic environment unbalanced. Food, fuel and financial markets were not delivering economic security.

Those concerns were compounded by new global threats, such as climate change. Several increasingly destructive natural disasters provided evidence of the threat posed to economic livelihoods in rich and poor countries alike. The attention brought to the presence of those heightened economic risks and compounded threats was often met with the response that the forces behind them were autonomous and irresistible, and beyond collective political control. The call invariably had been to cast aside old institutions and loyalties and embrace the new and efficient market practices of a borderless world. The Survey argued that it was the wrong response to increasing levels of economic insecurity, and that the deepening sense of insecurity had just as much to do with the lack of effective policy responses. It associated that failure, in part, with a policy bias built around the misguided idea of a self-regulating market economy, and stressed the need for a new balance between the market and the public interest along with a more integrated social and economic policy framework, which could provide and preserve a secure and stable economic future.

Human development

The Executive Board of the United Nations Development Programme/United Nations Population Fund, at its 2008 annual session (Geneva, 16–27 June) [E/2008/35], considered an April update on Human Development Report consultations [DP/2008/30], which revealed that 2008 was an exceptional year for the Report and the Human Development Report Office. Given the importance of the topic of climate change, the 2007 Report [YUN 2007 p. 857] covered 2008 also. That decision was taken in order to allow for a more sustained follow-up to the messages and policy implications presented in the climate change report. Moreover, the Director of the Office ceased his functions as at 31 December 2007. Those two facts affected the content and frequency of the informal consultations, and the research and writing of the 2009 Report started later than usual. The update described the consultations held during the transition period. The Executive Board took note of the update[E/2008/35 (dec. 25)].

Development policy and public administration

Committee for Development Policy

The Committee for Development Policy (CDP), at its tenth session (New York, 17–20 March) [E/2008/33], addressed three major themes: achieving sustainable development goals in the context of climate change; the worsening of global economic prospects and implications for developing countries; and matters related to the identification and graduation from the list of least developed countries (LDCs). Regarding the first theme, CDP stressed that achieving and sustaining the goals of the international sustainable development agenda required deep reductions in carbon emissions and adaptation policies to address current and future consequences of global warming. Key issues for developing countries were: creating less carbon-intensive incentives for economic growth; and enhancing adaptive capacities, particularly in the most vulnerable and poorest countries. An effective sustainable development strategy should be based on investment, innovation and institutional capacity, and international cooperation was fundamental, as the strategy would require appropriate funds, as well as technology development, transfer and dissemination. Greater coherence and integration between climate and development policies at national and international levels were necessary.

As to the second theme, the Committee examined the worsening global economic outlook at the beginning of 2008, and its possible impact on economic growth in developing countries through trade and external account shocks, with a potential to further delay the achievement of internationally agreed development goals. That outlook was set against the accumulation of large foreign-exchange reserves by many developing countries, which had been judged costly in terms of the opportunity costs of forgoing consumption and investment, and direct financial costs and implications for macroeconomic indicators. The Committee outlined the features of a reformed contingency finance architecture, based on a robust and flexible compensatory financing mechanism that, in the face of shocks, would provide sufficient resources in a timely manner, thereby obviating the need for developing countries to maintain large balances of foreign-exchange reserves.

With regard to the third theme, CDP continued developing criteria to be applied to all recommendations regarding the inclusion in and graduation from the list of LDCs. It reconfirmed the reliability of the current approach and recognized that the criteria should not be used mechanically, particularly in situations where country indicators were very close to inclusion or graduation thresholds. It proposed that the vulnerability profile take due account of aspects of countries' economic vulnerability not currently covered by the criteria used in the identification of LDCs, and that the impact assessments address the anticipated implications of the loss of LDC status. It also considered practical measures concerning the smooth transition of graduating countries and recommended that the United Nations give concrete leadership in the implementation of such measures.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 23 July [meeting 42], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of CDP [E/2008/33], adopted resolution 2008/12 without vote [agenda item 13 (a)].

Report of the Committee for Development Policy on its tenth session

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 59/209 of 20 December 2004 on a smooth transition strategy for countries graduating from the list of least developed countries,

Recalling also its resolutions 2007/34 and 2007/35 of 27 July 2007,

1. Takes note of the report of the Committee for Development Policy on its tenth session;

2. Requests the Committee, at its eleventh session, to examine and make recommendations on the themes chosen by the Economic and Social Council for the high-level segment of its substantive session of 2009;

3. Takes note of the proposals made by the Committee regarding its future work programme, in particular regarding the monitoring of the development progress of Cape Verde;

4. Requests the Committee to monitor the development progress of countries graduating from the list of least developed countries and to include its findings in its annual report to the Economic and Social Council;

5. Invites the Chairperson and, as necessary, other members of the Committee to continue the practice of reporting orally on the work of the Committee.

Public administration

Committee of Experts. The Committee of Experts on Public Administration, at its seventh session (New York, 14–18 April) [E/2008/44], had before it Secretariat notes on: strengthening governance and public administration capacities for development [E/C.16/2008/2]; the review of the United Nations Programme in Public Administration and Finance [E/C.16/2008/4]; and the public administration perspective on implementing the internationally agreed goals and commitments in regard to sustainable development [E/C.16/2008/5]. It also considered a compendium of basic UN terminology in governance and public administration [E/C.16/2008/3]. The Committee concluded that there should be a much stronger awareness of the importance of capacity-building by the United Nations and Member States. The United Nations, particularly the Economic and Social Council, should prioritize capacity-building for countries in transition for achieving the Millennium Development Goals (MDGs), post-conflict reconstruction and disaster management and preparedness.

Regarding capacity-building for achieving the MDGs, the Committee recommended that the Council reiterate the need to monitor progress towards the Goals, including time-bound targets and national/subnational action plans. It also recommended national evidence-based reporting, with sets of data disaggregated by socially relevant categories, such as gender, income levels, age groups and subnational factors. The Council should also urge Member States to prepare an inventory of good administrative policies and practices to support the MDGs, which would include the capacities, institutional preparedness aspects and a strategic vision for a modern civil service; the UN system, particularly the Department of Economic and Social Affairs (DESA) and other concerned bodies, should support such efforts.

As to capacity-building in post-conflict reconstruction, public administration reconstruction in a post-conflict environment should be done at the systemic, societal, organizational and individual levels, and start before the end of a conflict. The Secretariat should compile the lessons learned in post-conflict recovery and reconstruction in the next World Public Sector Report. At the systemic level, capacity-building involved the basic elements of State-building, including legitimacy, social cohesion, the value of citizenship, coherence between traditional and modern systems, consultations with stakeholders—such as eminent members of the diaspora community—and reconciliation. At the organizational level, public administration reconstruction should aim for continuity of administration services, coherence of the public sector and the inclusion of different groups. At the individual level, political leadership was required to guide the processes for participation in all aspects of State reconstruction to build a shared understanding, develop an awareness of the rights and responsibilities of citizens, create an environment conducive to reconciliation, and develop decision-making processes that reformulated the citizen/State relationship. Training individuals in a new, common and shared understanding of political and social institutions, economic development and reconstruction was of the utmost importance, and the international community should strengthen public institutions and leaders. Early warning systems for future conflicts should be identified and mechanisms put into place to eliminate sources of conflict.

Concerning capacity-building in disaster management and prevention, Member States should conduct post-crisis evaluations and research and make them publicly available so as to enhance transparency and accountability in the management of the resources allocated to disaster management. Such evaluations could be carried out on a country-by-country basis or through peer review or other means, which would allow States to exchange information on best practices and learn from one another. States should also develop capacities at the individual level through the training of public servants in disaster management; DESA should expand its disaster management activities; and the UN Secretariat should create a working group or task force jointly with other international organizations to raise global awareness within public administrations and create a trans-administrative response.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 25 July [meeting 44], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Committee of Experts on Public Administration [E/2008/44], adopted resolution 2008/32 without vote [agenda item 13 (g)].

Report of the Committee of Experts on Public Administration on its seventh session

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolutions 2002/40 of 19 December 2002, 2003/60 of 25 July 2003, 2005/3 of 31 March 2005,

2005/55 of 21 October 2005, 2006/47 of 28 July 2006 and 2007/38 of 4 October 2007 on public administration and development,

Recalling also General Assembly resolutions 50/225 of 19 April 1996, 56/213 of 21 December 2001, 57/277 of 20 December 2002, 58/231 of 23 December 2003, 59/55 of 2 December 2004 and 60/34 of 30 November 2005 on public administration and development,

Recalling further paragraph 11 of General Assembly resolution 60/1 of 16 September 2005,

Taking note with appreciation of the pioneering work of the United Nations Programme on Public Administration, Finance and Development in supporting Member States with administrative reforms, public institution-building, civil service training and post-conflict reconstruction of public administrations during the past sixty years, since its inception in 1948,

Recognizing that although the conditions and context of development and governance have changed, public administration priorities, including capacity-building for development and ownership of national development, still remain critical cross-cutting issues for the achievement of the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals,

1. Takes note of the conclusions on the topic of capacity-building for development in the report of the Committee of Experts on Public Administration on its seventh session;

2. Encourages Member States to continue to strengthen their capacities to better utilize the various aid modalities and to disseminate the understanding and implementation of capacity-building as a judicious combination of institution-building and human resource development, whereby people, organizations, States and society as a whole develop and maintain their ability to manage their public affairs successfully, among other means, by fostering public participation in governance and development processes, harnessing the potential of information and communications technology to promote people-centred development, effectively combining decentralization and centralization policies, and forging regional and national partnerships with institutions of public administration to provide needed training;

3. Emphasizes that capacity-building is essential and needed in administrative restructuring, civil service reform, human resources development and public administration training, improving performance in the public sector, financial management, public-private interaction, social development, developing infrastructure and protecting the environment, governmental legal and regulatory capacity, and the management and implementation of development programmes;

4. Invites Member States to continue to monitor the progress made towards the achievement of the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals, and to prepare an inventory of good administrative policies implemented to support the Goals, including the necessary capacities, institutional development aspects and strategic visions concerning a modern civil service, and emphasizes that the United Nations system, particularly the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the Secretariat and other concerned United Nations bodies, should support such efforts and the sharing of best practices and lessons learned;

5. Stresses that capacity-building for public administration is of utmost importance for all transitioning economies, the achievement of the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals, post-conflict rehabilitation and reconstruction, and disaster/crisis management and preparedness, that capacity-building processes in those areas share a number of important common features and experiences concerning the interaction of societal, systemic, organizational and individual levels of action, and that Member States should share those experiences in a more systematic and comprehensive way;

6. Emphasizes that in capacity-building for post-conflict recovery and reconstruction, the continuity of administration and public services, the coherence of the public sector and a multi-stakeholder approach are important prerequisites, and that in capacity-building for post-disaster and crisis situations, the United Nations system, particularly the Department of Economic and Social Affairs and other United Nations bodies, should support efforts to distil and share lessons learned and best practices;

7. Requests the Secretariat to enhance its support for capacity-building, including in the public sector, ensuring that available resources are adequate and existing resource levels are maintained;

8. Also requests the Secretariat to continually focus on the United Nations Public Service Awards, the United Nations Online Network in Public Administration and Finance, the Network of Innovators, the World Public Sector Reports and the Global Forum on Reinventing Government, and further requests the Secretariat to continue its useful role in facilitating the implementation of the action lines contained in the Tunis Agenda for the Information Society;

9. Notes the latest phase of the work done by the Committee of Experts on basic United Nations terminology in governance and public administration through a review of proposed definitions;

10. Also notes the input by the Committee of Experts to the theme of the 2008 annual ministerial review: Implementing the internationally agreed goals and commitments in regard to sustainable development.

On the same date, by decision 2008/254, the Council approved the convening of the eighth session of the Committee of Experts on Public Administration from 30 March to 3 April 2009 on the main theme “The human factor in capacity-building and development”, and the provisional agenda for that session.

Groups of countries in special situations

On 19 September, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the General Committee, included in the agenda of its sixth-third session the item entitled “Groups of countries in special situations”, covering least developed countries and landlocked and transit developing countries, and allocated it to the Second Committee.

By decision 63/543 of 19 December, the Assembly took note of the report of the Second Committee on the subject [A/63/417].

Least developed countries

The special problems of the least developed countries (LDCs) were considered in several UN forums in 2008, particularly in connection with the implementation of the Brussels Declaration and Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the Decade 2001–2010, adopted at the Third United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries in 2001 [YUN 2001, p. 770] and endorsed by the General Assembly in resolution 55/279 in July of that year [ibid., p. 771]; and the reaffirmation by world leaders, in the 2005 World Summit Outcome document [YUN 2005, p. 48], of their commitment to addressing the special needs of LDCs and the urgency of meeting the goals and targets of the Brussels Programme, particularly the official development assistance (ODA) target. The Committee for Development Policy (CDP) and UNCTAD also considered LDC-related issues.

LDC list

In 2008, the number of countries officially designated as LDCs stood at 49, following the graduation of Cape Verde in December 2007 [YUN 2007, p. 861]. Maldives had been recommended for graduation from the list of LDCs in resolution 59/209 [YUN 2004, p. 854], however, the General Assembly, in resolution 60/33 [YUN 2005, p. 942], deferred until January 2008 the start of the three-year transition period for its graduation, in the wake of the destruction and damage caused by the December 2004 Indian Ocean tsunami to the country’s social and economic infrastructure and disruption of its development plans. Also in 2007, the Assembly, in resolution 62/97 [YUN 2007, p. 863], noted the Economic and Social Council’s decision to endorse the CDP recommendation that Samoa be graduated from the list.

The full list of LDCs comprised the following countries: Afghanistan, Angola, Bangladesh, Benin, Bhutan, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Cambodia, Central African Republic, Chad, Comoros, Democratic Republic of the Congo, Djibouti, Equatorial Guinea, Eritrea, Ethiopia, the Gambia, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Haiti, Kiribati, the Lao People’s Democratic Republic, Lesotho, Liberia, Madagascar, Malawi, Maldives, Mali, Mauritania, Mozambique, Myanmar, Nepal, the Niger, Rwanda, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Sudan, Timor-Leste, Togo, Tuvalu, Uganda, United Republic of Tanzania, Vanuatu, Yemen and Zambia.

Smooth transition strategy

CDP consideration. At its tenth session (New York, 17–20 March) [E/2008/33], CDP, which was responsible for adding countries to—or graduating them from—the LDC list, re-examined, in preparation for the 2009 triennial review of that list, the methodology for the identification of such countries, pursuant to Economic and Social Council resolution 2007/35 [YUN 2007, p. 858]. It also deliberated on the graduation process, and the contents of future vulnerability profiles and of impact assessments. Also reviewed were the question of a smooth transition, guidelines for monitoring the progress of graduated countries and a handbook on the LDC category.

In terms of the graduation procedures, including vulnerability profiles and impact assessment, CDP stated that, for countries found eligible for the first time, a vulnerability profile would be prepared by UNCTAD and an impact assessment by the UN Department of Economic and Social Affairs (DESA), in cooperation with UNCTAD, in the year prior to the next triennial review. The vulnerability profile and the impact assessment would provide the Committee with information to help it decide whether a country found eligible at the previous triennial review should be recommended for graduation. The vulnerability profile should give the overall background of a country's economy and development situation, compare the values of the indicators used in the criteria with national statistics, and further assess other vulnerabilities, such as instability of remittances, dependency on tourism, high infrastructure cost due to geographical conditions and the impact of climate change. The Committee also requested UNCTAD to provide comparative data for other low-income countries in similar situations; in view of the increased number of countries under review for graduation and the increased demand on the substantive content of the vulnerability profiles, it stressed the need for the availability of sufficient resources for that purpose. CDP agreed that the impact assessment should address the expected implications of the loss of LDC status, in particular with regard to development financing, international trade and technical assistance. The effective implementation of the impact assessments would require that DESA be able to draw on the cooperation of donor countries, international cooperation agencies, trading partners and the country concerned.

The Committee addressed the question of a smooth transition for graduating countries, as set out in Assembly resolution 59/209, and reiterated the need to effectively implement the measures contained therein. In that regard, the United Nations should give concrete leadership in the implementation of smooth transition measures by maintaining the travel-related benefits to delegates from graduated countries over a period appropriate to the development situation of the country. CDP stated that an expert group should be convened to consider the phasing out of LDC benefits, with a view to identifying those that could be maintained for a period, and proposing specific phasing-out periods. Case studies could be conducted assessing the situation of Cape Verde and countries that had qualified for graduation.

CDP examined a report submitted by Cape Verde and noted the country's continued rate of growth and achievements on the MDG indicators, despite continuing economic vulnerability. It encouraged Cape Verde and its development partners to make full use of future meetings of the consultative mechanism (Grupo de Apoio à Transição) to obtain support for its economic transformation agenda.

The Economic and Social Council, in resolution 2008/12 of 23 July (see ES/1/38), requested CDP to monitor the development progress of countries graduating from the LDC list and to include its findings in its annual report to the Council. It also took note of the proposals regarding its future work in relation to the monitoring of Cape Verde's development progress.

Programme of Action (2001–2010)

UNCTAD consideration. LDC Ministers, meeting on 19 April in the context of the twelfth session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD XII) (Accra, Ghana, 20–25 April) [TD/442], issued the Declaration of the Least Developed Countries Ministerial Meeting at UNCTAD XII, in which they accorded high priority to national ownership of the Enhanced Integrated Framework for Trade-Related Technical Assistance to Least Developed Countries (EIF) as an effective tool for enhancing economic development, and urged UNCTAD, as an EIF-participating agency, to work towards its operationalization so that LDCs could start benefiting from it by mid-2008. They welcomed the graduation of a number of LDCs to developing-country status as a sign of economic progress within the group, but recognized the accompanying challenges and opportunities that needed to be addressed effectively in order for progress in graduating countries to be broad-based and sustainable. They urged the international community to put in place a smooth transition strategy for those countries, and UNCTAD to continue to play a lead role through its policy research and analysis in support of recently graduated countries and those in the transition phase for graduation. Concerned by soaring food prices, against the backdrop of the global financial crisis and economic slowdown, the Ministers proposed that the UN Secretary-General establish a mechanism to address the food crisis in LDCs, including the establishment of a panel of eminent persons to address the issue and long-term food security issues and the convening of an international meeting. They encouraged UNCTAD to strengthen its policy research and analysis, consensus-building and technical cooperation functions in favour of LDCs and to make a substantive contribution to the Fourth United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries (see ES/1/45). Donors that had not done so were invited to make financial contributions to the UNCTAD trust fund for LDCs, which needed urgent replenishment on a more predictable and secure basis.

Report of Secretary-General. In accordance with General Assembly resolution 62/203 [YUN 2007, p. 866] and Economic and Social Council resolution 2007/31 [ibid., p. 863], the Secretary-General submitted, in May [A/63/77-E/2008/61], his annual report on the implementation of the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the Decade 2001–2010. The Secretary-General stated that most LDCs, except those in the Pacific, had met or were on track to achieve the Brussels Programme growth and investment targets by 2010. Progress made in human development targets was noticeable in the areas of health and education, but further advances would depend on improved access to water and sanitation, where less progress had been made. Less progress than previously thought had also been made in gender parity in education, and none in maternal mortality. Data on extreme poverty suggested that almost 50 per cent of the population in one half of the LDCs for which data were available lived in extreme poverty, while malnutrition seemed to be worsening, particularly among children and women. The rising costs of basic food exacerbated malnutrition; jeopardized efforts to achieve the objective of the Brussels Programme; and risked destabilizing the political situation and triggering social unrest in many countries—including 26 of the LDCs—experiencing political instability.

The Secretary-General concluded that, on the demand side, energy consumption could be significantly decreased by adopting cost-effective, energy-efficient technologies, as well as carbon-saving strategies to tackle climate change and secure the provision of sustainable energy. On the supply side, the short-term strategy should include immediate humanitarian assistance to countries in food crisis, which required scaling up international assistance and closing a $750 million shortfall in the World Food Programme's budget caused by high food prices; social protection programmes, such as cash support, food-for-work programmes and school feeding programmes; and financial lending and crop insurance schemes.

In the medium term, the prospects for supply relied on an increase in agricultural productivity by improving farmers' access to finance and markets, enabling them to purchase agricultural inputs, machinery and tools and other innovations for obtaining higher yields, as well as better irrigation, transport infrastructure, electricity, investment in research and development and improvement of market information systems. A medium-term solution to the food crisis also required rethinking the use of biofuel, which accounted for between 10 and 30 per cent of the increase in global food prices. In the long term, the State-led green revolution should facilitate the transition to a high-value agricultural revolution led by the private sector. The agriculture-for-development agenda called for full trade liberalization, which could increase agricultural commodity prices and welfare gains for LDCs. Reduction of deforestation, control of wildfires, management of livestock waste and adoption of conservation agriculture could reduce the environmental footprint, while sustainable land cultivation, livestock and forest management, and irrigation and watershed management, along with the development of crop varieties resistant to pests and drought, could increase the resilience of agricultural production in LDCs to climate change. Carbon trading schemes also could reduce emissions from agriculture.

The global food crisis provided an opportunity to address the issue of high fertility, especially in the African LDCs, as slower population growth would reduce the pressures faced by LDCs in regard to food security, land tenure, environmental degradation and water supply, and strengthen the human capital critical for sustained growth and sustainable development.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 25 July [meeting 45], the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 2008/37 [draft: E/2008/L.38] without vote [agenda item 6 (b)].

Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the Decade 2001–2010

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling the Brussels Declaration and the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the Decade 2001–2010,

Recalling also its decision 2001/320 of 24 October 2001, in which it decided to establish, under the regular agenda item entitled “Integrated and coordinated implementation of and follow-up to major United Nations conferences and summits”, a regular sub-item entitled “Review and coordination of the implementation of the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the Decade 2001–2010”,

Affirming the Ministerial Declaration of the high-level segment of its substantive session of 2008, and recognizing the impacts of the financial, economic, social and environmental challenges identified therein on the implementation of the Programme of Action,

Recalling the Ministerial Declaration of the high-level segment of its substantive session of 2004 on the theme “Resources mobilization and enabling environment for poverty eradication in the context of the implementation of the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the Decade 2001–2010”,

Taking note of the Istanbul Declaration on the Least Developed Countries: Time for Action, adopted at the Ministerial Conference of the Least Developed Countries, held in Istanbul on 9 and 10 July 2007 on the theme “Making globalization work for the least developed countries”,

Recalling its resolution 2007/31 of 27 July 2007,

Recalling also General Assembly resolutions 61/1 of 19 September 2006 and 62/203 of 19 December 2007,

1. Takes note of the annual progress report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the Decade 2001–2010;

2. Reaffirms that the Programme of Action constitutes a fundamental framework for a strong global partnership aimed at accelerating sustained economic growth, sustainable development and poverty eradication in the least developed countries;

3. Welcomes the Declaration adopted by Heads of State and Government and heads of delegations participating in the high-level meeting of the sixty-first session of the General Assembly on the midterm comprehensive global review of the implementation of the Programme of Action, in which they recommitted themselves to addressing the special needs of the least developed countries by making progress towards the goals of poverty eradication, peace and development;

4. Also welcomes the contributions made in the lead-up to the midterm comprehensive global review of the implementation of the Programme of Action, and notes the Cotonou Strategy for the Further Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the Decade 2001–2010 as an initiative owned and led by the least developed countries;

5. Further welcomes the continued economic and social progress of many least developed countries, which has led to the fact that a number of countries are proceeding towards graduation from the list of least developed countries and that some of them are on track to achieving the growth and investment targets of the Programme of Action by 2010;

6. Remains concerned, however, about the insufficient and uneven progress achieved in the implementation of the Programme of Action, and stresses the need to address, within the time frame set by the Programme of Action, areas of weakness in its implementation and the continued precarious socio-economic situation in some least developed countries, through a strong commitment to the objectives, goals and targets of the Programme of Action;

7. Expresses its deep concern that the number of people living in extreme poverty remains significantly high in the least developed countries, while an increasing number of people are at risk of malnutrition, in particular children and women, and recognizes that there are important linkages between development, poverty eradication and gender equality;

8. Stresses that the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals, can be effectively achieved in the least developed countries through, in particular, the timely fulfilment of the seven commitments of the Programme of Action;

9. Underlines the fact that, for the further implementation of the Programme of Action, the least developed countries and their development partners must be guided by an integral approach, a broader genuine partnership, country ownership, market considerations and results-oriented actions encompassing:

- (a) Fostering a people-centred policy framework;
- (b) Ensuring good governance at both the national and the international levels as essential for the implementation of the commitments embodied in the Programme of Action;
- (c) Building human and institutional capacities;
- (d) Building productive capacities to make globalization work for the least developed countries;
- (e) Enhancing the role of trade in development;
- (f) Reducing vulnerability and protecting the environment;
- (g) Mobilizing financial resources;

10. Reaffirms that progress in the implementation of the Programme of Action will require effective implementation of national policies and priorities for the sustained economic growth and sustainable development of the least developed countries, as well as strong and committed partnership between those countries and their development partners;

11. Urges the least developed countries to strengthen country ownership in the implementation of the Programme of Action by, inter alia, translating its goals and targets into specific measures within their national development frameworks and poverty eradication strategies, including, where they exist, poverty reduction strategy papers, promoting broad-based and inclusive dialogue on development with relevant stakeholders, including civil society and the private sector, and enhancing domestic resource mobilization and aid management;

12. Urges development partners to fully implement, in a timely manner, commitments in the Programme of Action and to exercise individual best efforts to continue to increase their financial and technical support for its implementation;

13. Welcomes the graduation of Cape Verde from the list of least developed countries;

14. Reiterates its invitation to all development and trading partners to support the implementation of the transition strategy of countries graduating from the list of least developed countries, to avoid any abrupt reductions in either official development assistance or technical assistance provided to the graduated country and to consider extending to the graduated country trade preferences previously made available as a result of least developed country status, or reducing them in a phased manner;

15. Encourages the United Nations resident coordinator system, the Bretton Woods institutions, bilateral and multilateral donors and other development partners to assist the least developed countries in translating goals and targets of the Programme of Action into concrete actions in the light of their national development priorities and to collaborate with and provide support to, as appropriate, the relevant national development forums and follow-up mechanisms;

16. Stresses the crucial importance of integrated and coordinated follow-up, monitoring and reporting for the effective implementation of the Programme of Action at the national, subregional, regional and global levels;

17. Also stresses, within the context of the annual global reviews, as envisaged in the Programme of Action, the need to assess the implementation of the Programme of Action sector by sector, and in this regard invites the United Nations system and all relevant international organizations, consistent with their respective mandates, to report on the progress made in its implementation using quantifiable criteria and indicators to be measured against the goals and targets of the Programme of Action and to participate fully in reviews of the Programme of Action at the national, subregional, regional and global levels;

18. Reiterates its invitation to the organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system and other relevant multilateral organizations to provide full support to and cooperation with the Office of the High Representative for the Least Developed Countries, Landlocked Developing Countries and Small Island Developing States;

19. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure, at the Secretariat level, the full mobilization and coordination of all parts of the United Nations system to facilitate coordinated implementation and coherence in the follow-up to and monitoring and review of the Programme of Action at the national, subregional, regional and global levels, including through such coordination mechanisms as the United Nations System Chief Executives Board for Coordination, the United Nations Development Group, the Executive Committee on Economic and Social Affairs and the Inter-Agency Expert Group on the Millennium Development Goals Indicators;

20. Expresses its concern about the insufficiency of resources in the trust fund established for the participation of the least developed countries in the annual review of the implementation of the Programme of Action by the Economic and Social Council, and expresses its appreciation to those countries that have made voluntary contributions;

21. Reiterates the critical importance of the participation of Government representatives from the least developed countries in the annual review of the Programme of Action by the Economic and Social Council, expresses, in this regard, its deep appreciation to those countries that have made voluntary contributions to the special trust fund established for this purpose by the Secretary-General, invites donor countries to continue to support the participation of two representatives from each least developed country in the annual review of the implementation of the Programme of Action, including by contributing in an adequate and timely manner to the special trust fund, and requests the Secretary-General to intensify his efforts to mobilize the resources necessary in order to ensure that the trust fund is adequately resourced and to provide information on the status of the trust fund;

22. Reiterates its request to the Secretary-General to include least developed country issues in all relevant reports in the economic, social and related fields in order to ensure follow-up to their development in the broader context of the world economy and contribute to preventing their marginalization while promoting their further integration into the world economy;

23. Recalls paragraph 114 of the Programme of Action on holding a fourth United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries towards the end of the current decade, and notes the steps being taken in this regard, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 62/203;

24. Requests the Secretary-General to step up appropriate measures for the implementation of the advocacy strategy on the effective and timely implementation of the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the Decade 2001–2010, in coordination with all relevant stakeholders;

25. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit an analytical and results-oriented annual progress report on the further implementation of the Programme of Action and to make available adequate resources, within existing resources, for the preparation of such a report.

Trade and Development Board action. The UNCTAD Trade and Development Board (TDB), at its fifty-fifth session (Geneva, 15–26 September) [A/63/15 (Part IV)], considered the seventh progress report [TD/B/55/8 & Corr.1] on UNCTAD-wide activities in the implementation of the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the Decade 2001–2010, and adopted agreed conclusions [493(LV)] on the review of progress in the implementation of the Programme of Action. The Board welcomed the recent improvement in the economic performance of many LDCs, but was concerned that growth remained fragile and LDCs were lagging behind in the achievement of the MDGs, notwithstanding some progress in primary education and gender equality. It invited Member States and UN organizations to consider the policy recommendations contained in The Least Developed Countries Report 2008: Growth, Poverty and the Terms of Development Partnership [Sales No. E.08.II.D.20] in designing development policies and strategies, and the terms of development partnership. TDB urged LDCs to assume greater ownership of national development strategies by designing and implementing inclusive policies suited to their particular needs, and to mobilize domestic resources and build State capacities and good governance, including by adopting transparent aid management policies, bearing in mind the Accra Agenda for Action adopted at the Third High-level Forum on Aid Effectiveness (Accra, Ghana, 2–4 September) [E/63/539]. LDC development partners should support country leadership in designing and implementing national development strategies and help strengthen LDCs' capacity to exercise such leadership. The Board invited LDCs, when designing and implementing country-owned national development strategies, to emphasize productive sectors and infrastructure and to make their aid requests support such emphasis. Development partners should fulfil their aid commitments and provide aid consistent with the development priorities identified by LDCs in their strategies.

The Board recommended that UNCTAD should promote the exchange of country experiences and best practices among LDCs in trade and development and the interrelated areas of finance, technology, investment and sustainable development. It acknowledged the importance of EIF and invited the UNCTAD secretariat to intensify cooperation with the Framework to complement its technical cooperation activities and capacity-building for LDCs. UNCTAD should provide technical assistance to LDCs, many of which were suffering from the effects of the food crisis, climate change and natural disasters, and donors and other countries in a position to do so should contribute to the UNCTAD LDC trust fund and regularly replenish it, so as to diversify the funding sources. UNCTAD should also focus on the needs of LDCs across all areas of its mandate and contribute to the upcoming Fourth United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries (see below). It should undertake further studies on sectors of specific interest to LDCs, especially new and non-traditional sectors; reallocate part of its regular budget to fund The Least Developed Countries Report; and increase its operational effectiveness so that funds for the report were provided with the least possible disturbance of its other activities.

Preparatory process for Fourth UN Conference on LDCs

Report of Secretary-General. In August, the Secretary-General, in response to General Assembly resolution 62/203 [YUN 2007, p. 866], submitted a report on the outline of modalities of the Fourth United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries [A/63/284]. The Conference would convene to assess the implementation of the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the Decade 2001–2010 and formulate new strategies and an action plan for the sustainable development of LDCs in the following decade. An analysis of past performance would shed light on the most critical constraints on the realization of the goals of the previous programmes of action and suggest new strategies to reverse them. The Fourth Conference should: assess the implementation of the Programme of Action during the first decade of the twenty-first century towards halving the proportion of people living in extreme poverty and suffering from hunger, and promoting sustainable and steady increases in gross domestic product growth rates in LDCs; review the implementation of international support measures, particularly in the areas of ODA, debt, investment and trade; and consider the formulation and adoption of national and international policies and measures for the sustainable development of LDCs and their progressive integration into the world economy. The Conference would provide an opportunity to share lessons learned and best practices; identify international and domestic policies in light of the outcomes of the appraisals; agree on additional international support measures in favour of LDCs; enhance partnerships between stakeholders; reaffirm the commitment to poverty eradication and sustainable development in LDCs, as well as the commitment to address their needs, made at major UN conferences and summits, including the Millennium Summit [YUN 2000, p. 47] and the 2005 World Summit [YUN 2005, p. 47]; mobilize international support and action; and identify new challenges and opportunities for LDCs and means to address them.

The preparatory process for the Conference should promote dialogue between stakeholders, establish linkages and ensure synergies at all levels. To that end, various multi-stakeholder events were encouraged. National preparations would build on country review processes to avoid duplication and ensure UN system coordination at the country level. They would also take into account the recent stock-taking exercise in preparation for the MDG-based national development strategies, undertaken by most LDCs, with the support of UN resident coordinators, as well as the national reviews held within the framework of the annual ministerial reviews during the high-level segments of the Council's substantive sessions. Regional preparations should bring the regional perspective into the review process. The global preparatory process would build on the reviews of other major UN conferences and stocktaking exercises between 2008 and 2010. To that end, the Secretariat would map out all major reviews between 2008 and 2010 and prepare a road map, consisting of a comprehensive list of preparatory events. Offers to host the Conference had been received from Turkey and Austria. The Secretary-General recommended that the Assembly should decide at its sixty-third (2008) session on the convening of the Conference, including its dates and venue. The United Nations Office of the High Representative for the Least Developed Countries, Landlocked Developing Countries and Small Island Developing States would serve as the focal point for the preparatory process. The UN Secretary-General would designate the Conference Secretary-General following the Assembly's decisions on the convening of the conference.

Communications. On 17 November, Bangladesh transmitted to the Secretary-General the Ministerial Declaration of the Least Developed Countries, issued at their meeting held in New York on 29 September [A/C.2/63/8]. The Ministers expressed their concern about the fact that two years after the midterm comprehensive global review of the implementation of the Brussels Programme of Action [YUN 2006, p. 1014], the progress achieved in its implementation was insufficient and uneven. Economic growth in LDCs had not translated into poverty eradication and improved well-being. If the trend continued, many of their countries would not meet the MDGs and other internationally agreed development goals. They welcomed the convening of the Fourth United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries, which would be an opportunity for their countries and development partners to establish a new strategic framework for the following decade for development efforts in a complex and changing world.

The Foreign Ministers of the Group of 77, at their thirty-second annual meeting (New York, 26 September) [A/63/464] (see also p. 904), recognized the special challenges and needs of LDCs, particularly in the face of new and emerging challenges. They supported the convening of the Fourth United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries, which would represent an opportunity for LDCs and their partners to review past performance—especially in areas of failures and weak implementation—and establish a new strategic framework for the next decade for development efforts.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December [meeting 72], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/63/417/Add.1], adopted resolution 63/227 without vote [agenda item 52 (a)].

Implementation of the Brussels Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the Decade 2001–2010

The General Assembly,

Recalling the Brussels Declaration and the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the Decade 2001–2010,

Recalling also the United Nations Millennium Declaration,

Recalling further its resolution 57/270 B of 23 June 2003 on the integrated and coordinated implementation of and follow-up to the outcomes of the major United Nations conferences and summits in the economic and social fields,

Recalling the 2005 World Summit Outcome,

Recalling also its resolution 62/203 of 19 December 2007,

Taking note of Economic and Social Council resolution 2008/37 of 25 July 2008,

Taking note also of the Ministerial Declaration adopted at the Annual Meeting of Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the Least Developed Countries on 29 September 2008 in New York,

Reaffirming that the Programme of Action constitutes a fundamental framework for a strong global partnership, whose goal is to accelerate sustained economic growth, sustainable development and poverty eradication in the least developed countries,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General and his note on the modalities of the Fourth United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries;

2. Welcomes the contributions made in the lead-up to the midterm comprehensive global review of the implementation of the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the Decade 2001–2010, and notes the Cotonou Strategy for the Further Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the Decade 2001–2010 as an initiative owned and led by the least developed countries;

3. Also welcomes the Declaration adopted by Heads of State and Government and heads of delegations participating in the high-level meeting of the sixty-first session of the General Assembly on the midterm comprehensive global review of the implementation of the Programme of Action, in which they recommitted themselves to addressing the special needs of the least developed countries by making progress towards the goals of poverty eradication, peace and development;

4. Decides to convene, as called for in paragraph 114 of the Programme of Action, the Fourth United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries at a high level in 2011 for a duration of not more than five working days, with the following mandate:

(a) To undertake a comprehensive appraisal of the implementation of the Programme of Action by the least developed countries and their development partners, share best practices and lessons learned, and identify obstacles and constraints encountered as well as actions and initiatives needed to overcome them;

(b) To identify effective international and domestic policies in the light of the outcome of the appraisal as well as new and emerging challenges and opportunities and the means to address them;

(c) To reaffirm the global commitment to addressing the special needs of the least developed countries made at the major United Nations conferences and summits, including the Millennium Summit and the 2005 World Summit, in particular the needs related to sustainable development in its economic, social and environmental dimensions, and to support the least developed countries in eradicating poverty and integrating beneficially into the global economy;

(d) To mobilize additional international support measures and action in favour of the least developed countries, and, in this regard, to formulate and adopt a renewed partnership between the least developed countries and their development partners;

5. Also decides to convene, towards the end of 2010 and/or early in 2011, an intergovernmental preparatory committee, which would hold no more than two meetings;

6. Further decides that the meeting of the preparatory committee will be preceded by two regional-level preparatory meetings, one in collaboration with the Economic Commission for Africa and the other in collaboration with the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific, in the context of the regular annual sessions of each Commission, those regional-level meetings to be supported by broad-based and inclusive country-level preparations;

7. Stresses that the Conference and the preparatory activities should be carried out within the budget level proposed by the Secretary-General for the biennium 2010–2011 and should be organized in the most effective and efficient manner possible;

8. Decides to take a decision on the organizational aspects, date and venue of the Conference, and on the venue, duration and dates of the preparatory committee meetings, before the end of its sixty-third session;

9. Recognizes the importance of the contributions of civil society actors at the Conference and in its preparatory process, and in this regard stresses the need for their active participation in accordance with the rules of procedure of the General Assembly;

10. Decides that the Office of the High Representative for the Least Developed Countries, Landlocked Developing Countries and Small Island Developing States will be the focal point for the preparations for the Conference, in accordance with mandates given in General Assembly resolution 56/227 of 24 December 2001, to ensure that those preparations are carried out effectively, and to mobilize and coordinate the active involvement of the organizations of the United Nations system;

11. Requests the organizations of the United Nations system, including the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, the regional commissions, the specialized agencies, and funds and programmes, and invites the Bretton Woods institutions, the World Trade Organization and other relevant international and regional organizations, within their respective mandates, to provide necessary support and actively contribute to the preparatory process and to the Conference itself;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure, as appropriate, the full involvement of resident coordinators and country teams in preparations for the Conference, in particular in the country- and regional-level preparations;

13. Also requests the Secretary-General to ensure the active involvement of the organizations of the United Nations system in the preparatory process for the Conference in a coordinated and coherent manner, inter alia, by making use of the existing coordination mechanisms of the United Nations system;

14. Further requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its sixty-fourth session a report on the further implementation of the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the Decade 2001–2010 as well as on the implementation of the present resolution, including a report on the state of the substantive, organizational and logistic preparations for the Conference.

Small island developing States

During 2008, UN bodies continued to review progress in the implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States (Barbados Programme of Action), adopted at the 1994 Global Conference on the subject [YUN 1994, p. 783]. Member States also reviewed the Mauritius Strategy for the Further Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States, adopted by the 2005 International Meeting to Review the Implementation of the 1994 Programme of Action [YUN 2005, p. 946].

Commission on Sustainable Development consideration. On 12 May, the Commission on Sustainable Development, at its sixteenth session (New York, 11 May 2007, 5–16 May 2008) [E/2008/29], reviewed implementation of the Mauritius Strategy, focusing on the thematic cluster for the 2008–2009 implementation cycle. It had before it a February report of the Secretary-General [E/CN.17/2008/9] on the integrated review of the thematic cluster of agriculture, rural development, land, drought, desertification and Africa in small island developing States, which described continuing challenges faced by those States in advancing implementation of the Mauritius Strategy as a basis for consideration of a way forward. The Commission expressed concern at the slow rate of implementation of the Strategy and noted that, while the small island developing States had made some progress at the national and regional levels in building institutional capacity for sustainable development, formulating strategies and action plans and carrying out policy reforms, many continued to encounter constraints which impeded their sustainable development, including limited technical, financial and human resources. It also addressed the means of implementation to advance the agenda for the sustainable development of small island developing States, inter alia, the need to reverse the downward trend in international financial flows to those States, including ODA; improve terms of trade; facilitate the transfer of technology; and strengthen capacity-building in support of their efforts to adapt to climate change. Attention was drawn to the structural disadvantages of those States in terms of their small land area and population and resource base, and high dependence on imports. Many of them had been particularly affected by the dramatic rise in food and energy prices, and most had not benefited from the expansion of global trade and investment.

An integrated review of the thematic issues under consideration by the Commission was undertaken through two panel-led discussions on sustainable land management and drought and desertification. The panel discussions also addressed land policy administration and management and the challenges and impacts of desertification, drought and invasive species in small island developing States. Also considered were the need for effective land-use strategies to address the increasing pressure on their limited land resources, as well as agriculture and rural development. Discussions focused on agro-tourism and a range of niche markets which offered scope for the development of rural industries. The sustainable management of fisheries, forestry and agriculture and freshwater resources was also highlighted as important for improving food security and access. Support was expressed for the opportunity to review the achievements and challenges faced by small island developing States in respect of the thematic cluster of issues under discussion, and commitments of continued support for their sustainable development efforts were renewed. The need was underscored for strengthening the Secretariat unit for small island developing States to support the implementation of the Barbados Programme of Action and the Mauritius Strategy.

The Commission also had before it the conclusions [E/CN.17/2008/16] of the High-level Round Table on International Cooperation for Sustainable Development in Caribbean Small Island Developing States (Bridgetown, Barbados, 25–27 March), which launched new partnerships between Iceland and Caribbean small island developing States.

On 16 May [dec. 16/2], the Commission decided to devote one day of its review sessions exclusively to the Mauritius Strategy.

Reports of Secretary-General. In the context of that review, the Secretary-General submitted an August report [A/62/945] on measures to strengthen the capacity of the Small Island Developing States Unit of the DESA Division for Sustainable Development to fulfil its mandate and to strengthen, in particular, its Technical Assistance Programme (SIDSTAP) and its Network (SIDSNet). The Secretariat had taken measures to strengthen the Unit by deploying additional established posts, and had secured extrabudgetary resources to provide for an Interregional Adviser for one year and an Associate Expert for two years. The Unit would also continue to benefit from its interaction with the Division for Sustainable Development. Consultations were ongoing with donors to secure extrabudgetary resources to revitalize SIDSNet and to restore, for two years, the technical posts lost in 2005 for lack of resources. The Secretary-General concluded that, in view of the new and emerging challenges facing the small island developing States, systematic efforts were needed to scale up the capacity to deliver the Unit's mandates. Special consideration should be given to expanding the established posts in the Unit beyond the current three Professional and two General Service posts, in particular by assigning additional established posts for the management of SIDSNet.

In another August report [A/63/296], submitted in accordance with General Assembly resolution 62/191 [YUN 2007, p. 868], the Secretary-General presented a comprehensive review of efforts by the UN system, the international community and small island developing States to operationalize the Mauritius Strategy. He also gave an account of recent initiatives to promote the mainstreaming of the Strategy in small island developing States' sustainable development plans.

The Secretary-General concluded that concerted efforts were being made at the national, regional and international levels to further implement the Mauritius Strategy. Continued support for the development and strengthening of national sustainable development strategies would enhance national capacity for more effective and coherent development administration. In that regard, support for the design and implementation of those strategies in small island developing States would continue in the Pacific region, and the possibility of pursuing similar projects in the other regions would be explored. Further work on the design of a framework for mainstreaming and monitoring the implementation of the Strategy would be pursued, while promoting its coordinated implementation with existing development strategies and plans, including the MDGs. Particular attention would be given to the challenges of capacity that small island developing States continued to face in implementing the Strategy.

Significant attention had been given in the previous year to the impact of climate change on the well-being and security of small island developing States. The Assembly's decision to review at its sixty-fifth (2010) session progress made in addressing their vulnerabilities through implementation of the Strategy was therefore both relevant and timely, and substantial attention would be given in the coming year to preparation for that review.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December [meeting 72], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/63/414/Add.2], adopted resolution 63/213 without vote [agenda item 49 (b)].

Follow-up to and implementation of the Mauritius Strategy for the Further Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the Declaration of Barbados and the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States, adopted by the Global Conference on the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States, and recalling its resolution 49/122 of 19 December 1994 on the Global Conference,

Reaffirming also the Mauritius Declaration and the Mauritius Strategy for the Further Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States ("Mauritius Strategy for Implementation"), adopted by the International Meeting to Review the Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States on 14 January 2005,

Recalling its resolutions 59/311 of 14 July 2005, 60/194 of 22 December 2005, 61/196 of 20 December 2006 and 62/191 of 19 December 2007,

Recalling also the 2005 World Summit Outcome,

Reaffirming that the Commission on Sustainable Development is the primary intergovernmental forum for monitoring the implementation of the Barbados Programme of Action and the Mauritius Strategy for Implementation,

Recalling the convening of one half-day session of the Intergovernmental Preparatory Meeting for the fifteenth session of the Commission on Sustainable Development, as called for by the General Assembly in its resolution 61/196, to discuss policy options for addressing the barriers and constraints facing small island developing States in the four thematic areas of the session, taking into account the review of the implementation of the Mauritius Strategy for Implementation conducted during the fourteenth session of the Commission,

Reaffirming that the adverse effects of climate change and sea-level rise present significant risks to the sustainable development of small island developing States, that the effects of climate change may threaten the very existence of some of them and that adaptation to the adverse effects of climate change and sea-level rise therefore remains a major priority for small island developing States,

Recognizing the urgent need to increase the level of resources provided to small island developing States for the effective implementation of the Mauritius Strategy for Implementation,

Underlining the importance of developing and strengthening national sustainable development strategies in small island developing States,

Recalling its request to the Secretary-General to submit a report on actions taken to strengthen the Small Island Developing States Unit of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the Secretariat,

Recalling also the decision to review progress made in addressing the vulnerabilities of small island developing States through the implementation of the Mauritius Strategy for Implementation at the sixty-fifth session of the General Assembly,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the follow-up to and implementation of the Mauritius Strategy for Implementation;

2. Also takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on actions taken to strengthen the Small Island Developing States Unit;

3. Welcomes the renewed commitment of the international community to the implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States;

4. Urges Governments and all relevant international and regional organizations, United Nations funds and programmes, the specialized agencies and regional commissions, international financial institutions and the Global Environment Facility, as well as other intergovernmental organizations and major groups, to take timely action for the effective implementation of and follow-up to the Mauritius Declaration and the Mauritius Strategy for Implementation, including the further development and operationalization of concrete projects and programmes;

5. Calls for the full and effective implementation of the commitments, programmes and targets adopted at the International Meeting to Review the Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States and, to this end, for the fulfilment of the provisions for the means of implementation, as contained in the Mauritius Strategy for Implementation, and encourages small island developing States and their development partners to continue to consult widely in order to develop further concrete projects and programmes for the implementation of the Mauritius Strategy for Implementation;

6. Reaffirms the decision taken by the Commission on Sustainable Development at its sixteenth session that one day of its review sessions should be devoted exclusively to the review of the Mauritius Strategy for Implementation, focusing on that year's thematic cluster, as well as on any new developments in the sustainable development efforts of small island developing States using existing modalities;

7. Invites the Commission to devote one half-day of its Intergovernmental Preparatory Meeting to discussing policy options for addressing the barriers and constraints facing small island developing States identified in the thematic cluster of each implementation cycle, taking into account the review conducted during the respective review session;

8. Encourages enhanced, closer and early consultation with small island developing States in the planning and co-ordination, as appropriate, of the activities of the Commission devoted to the review of the Mauritius Strategy for Implementation, and emphasizes the importance of enhanced interaction between small island developing States and the relevant agencies of the United Nations system addressing issues concerning small island developing States;

9. Calls upon the international community to enhance support for the efforts of small island developing States to adapt to the adverse impacts of climate change, including through the provision of dedicated sources of financing, capacity-building and the transfer of appropriate technologies to address climate change;

10. Requests the relevant agencies of the United Nations system, within their respective mandates, to intensify efforts aimed at mainstreaming the Mauritius Strategy for Implementation in their work programmes and to establish a focal point for matters related to small island developing States within their respective secretariats to support coordinated implementation of the Programme of Action at the national, subregional, regional and global levels;

11. Calls upon the international community to enhance its support for the implementation of the programme of work on island biodiversity as a set of actions to address characteristics and problems that are specific to islands, adopted by the Conference of the Parties to the Convention on Biological Diversity at its eighth meeting, in 2006;

12. Calls for continued support for the design and implementation of national sustainable development strategies in all small island developing States;

13. Encourages the implementation of partnership initiatives, within the framework of the Mauritius Strategy for Implementation, in support of the sustainable development of small island developing States;

14. Underlines the importance of providing the Small Island Developing States Unit with adequate, stable and predictable funding to facilitate the full and effective implementation of its mandates in accordance with the priority accorded to the Unit and in view of the demand for its services, in particular with respect to the provision of assistance and support to small island developing States;

15. Reiterates the importance of ensuring sufficient and sustainable staffing of the Small Island Developing States Unit so that it may undertake its broad range of mandated functions with a view to facilitating the full and effective implementation of the Mauritius Strategy for Implementation, and in this regard requests the Secretary-General to take the necessary actions;

16. Calls for the provision of new and additional voluntary resources to ensure the revitalization and sustainability of the Small Island Developing States Information Network;

17. Reaffirms its decision to review, at its sixty-fifth session, the progress made in addressing the vulnerabilities of small island developing States through the implementation of the Mauritius Strategy for Implementation, decides to convene a two-day high-level review in September 2010 as a part of that session, and requests the Secretary-General to report to the Assembly at its sixty-fourth session on possible arrangements for the review;

18. Decides that the two-day high-level review should be preceded, where necessary, by national, subregional, regional and substantive preparations in a most effective, well-structured and broad participatory manner and that, for this purpose, the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the Secretariat, through its Small Island Developing States Unit, the Office of the High Representative for the Least Developed Countries, Landlocked Developing Countries and Small Island Developing States and the relevant agencies of the United Nations system, including regional commissions, within their respective mandates and existing resources, should organize, facilitate and provide necessary support to the review process at the national, regional and international levels; and stresses that the review should provide the international community with an opportunity to conduct an assessment of the progress made, lessons learned and constraints encountered in the implementation of the Mauritius Strategy for Implementation and agree on what needs to be done to further address the vulnerabilities of small island developing States;

19. Invites the small island developing States to consider at their relevant intergovernmental meetings assessments of and relevant contributions to the review process;

20. Calls upon the international community to support the efforts to review progress made in addressing the vulnerabilities of small island developing States through the implementation of the Mauritius Strategy for Implementation, including by facilitating the participation of small island developing States in review activities;

21. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to the General Assembly at its sixty-fourth session on the follow-up to and implementation of the Mauritius Strategy for Implementation;

22. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its sixty-fourth session, under the item entitled "Sustainable development", the sub-item entitled "Follow-up to and implementation of the Mauritius Strategy for the Further Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States".

Landlocked developing countries

Ministerial Communiqué of Landlocked Developing Countries. Trade Ministers of landlocked developing countries, meeting within the framework of UNCTAD XII (Accra, Ghana, 20–25 April) [TD/442], issued on 22 April the Ministerial Communiqué of Landlocked Developing Countries, in which they called on World Trade Organization (WTO) member States to take into account the specific needs and problems of landlocked developing countries in the process of WTO accession negotiations. UNCTAD should give special attention to those countries' needs in its analytical work and technical assistance activities that helped attract foreign direct investment (FDI), including in UNCTAD investment policy reviews, investment guides and FDI Blue Books. Ministers welcomed the forthcoming midterm review of the implementation of the Almaty Programme of Action (see below) as an opportunity to take stock and focus on the next steps. They requested the UNCTAD Secretary-General to strengthen UNCTAD institutional and operational capacity for addressing the development challenges faced by landlocked developing countries and, in cooperation with the Office of the High Representative for the Least Developed Countries, Landlocked Developing Countries and Small Island Developing States and other UN organizations and international agencies, to assist landlocked developing countries in organizing a meeting of their trade Ministers in 2009. The UN Secretary-General should strengthen the Office of the High Representative, and donors should increase financial and technical assistance to landlocked developing countries to enable them to meet their special development needs and overcome the impediments of geography, with a view to helping them participate effectively in the multilateral trading system.

Report of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 62/204 [YUN 2007, p. 870], the Secretary-General submitted a July report [A/63/165] on the implementation of the Almaty Programme of Action: Addressing the Special Needs of Landlocked Developing Countries within a New Global Framework for Transit Transport Cooperation for Landlocked and Transit Developing Countries, adopted by the International Ministerial Conference of Landlocked and Transit Developing Countries and Donor Countries and International Financial and Development Institutions on Transit Transport Cooperation in 2003 [YUN 2003, p. 875]. The report described the overall socio-economic situation in landlocked developing countries and the four priority areas of the Programme of Action: fundamental transit policy issues; infrastructure development and maintenance; international trade and trade facilitation; and international support measures. It also detailed the preparatory process for the midterm review and monitoring of the implementation of the Programme of Action.

The Secretary-General said that the high cost of international trade was a serious constraint to the trade and economic development of landlocked developing countries. Measures to deal with their transit problems addressed inadequate infrastructure, trade imbalance, inefficient transport organization, and weak managerial, procedural, regulatory and institutional systems. Without real solutions to the disadvantages that beset the landlocked developing countries, those States would continue to be driven to the outer fringes of the global economy. While tangible progress had been registered in the implementation of the Almaty Programme of Action, its implementation should be further accelerated. Both landlocked and transit developing countries, with the support of development partners, produced notable achievements in all of the Programme of Action's priorities. Development partners were more actively engaged with respect to transport infrastructure development, trade facilitation, aid, debt relief and market access, while multilateral and development institutions and regional organizations had allocated much greater resources to the establishment of efficient transit systems. The Secretary-General proposed further strengthening of regional cooperative arrangements for transit cooperation and of the role of regional and subregional organizations. The United Nations and other international organizations should support regional initiatives in that regard, including the development of regional integrated infrastructure networks, viable multimodal transport, ways to complete missing links, trade facilitation measures and broader application of information technology. Transit transport policy reforms and trade facilitation measures that had a positive impact on transit costs should be facilitated at all levels, including the commercialization and liberalization of transport services and efforts to improve institutional, procedural, regulatory and managerial systems, and reduce excessive paperwork and red tape requirements. The international community should provide greater market access for goods originating in landlocked developing countries, and extend to them increased technical assistance to ensure their effective participation in WTO trade negotiations, particularly those related to trade facilitation. Donor countries and financial and development institutions, in particular the World Bank, the Asian Development Bank, the African Development Bank and the Inter-American Development Bank, should provide greater financial resources to transit transport infrastructure projects in landlocked and transit developing countries, and special attention should be given to them in the context of the Aid for Trade initiative.

Midterm review of Almaty Programme of Action.

The General Assembly conducted its midterm review of the Almaty Programme of Action on 2 and 3 October, in accordance with its resolutions 61/212 [YUN 2006, p. 1019] and 62/204 [YUN 2007, p. 870]. As part of the preparatory process, substantive/thematic meetings were organized in 2007 on transit transport infrastructure development in Ouagadougou, Burkina Faso, and in Ulaanbaatar, Mongolia [ibid. p. 870]. Regional review meetings were held during 2008: the Regional Preparatory Expert Group Meeting of Euro-Asian Landlocked Developing and Transit Countries for the Midterm Review of the Almaty Programme of Action (Bangkok, Thailand, 22–23 April) [CSN/2008/EGM/APA/3]; the African Regional Review Meeting of the Almaty Programme of Action (Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, 18–20 June) [E/ECA/ALMATY/08]; and the Latin American Regional Review Meeting for the Midterm Review of the Almaty Programme of Action (Buenos Aires, Argentina, 30 June) [LC/L.2922]. Other events included: the Euro-Asian Transport Links Ministerial Meeting (Geneva, 19–21 February); the Meeting on Trade Facilitation and Aid for Trade: keys for unlocking the landlocked (Accra, Ghana, 19 April); the Workshop on Logistics Performance Index and New Approaches on Improving Trade and Transport Services to and from Landlocked Countries (New York, 2 June); the Briefing on the progress in the trade facilitation negotiations at WTO and on developments in the Aid for Trade initiative (New York, 27 June); the Meeting on Trade Facilitation Opportunities for Landlocked and Transit Developing Countries (Geneva, 8–9 July); and the High-Level Investment Forum “Investing in Landlocked Developing Countries: Trends, Experiences and the Way Forward” (New York, 1 October).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 3 October [meeting 19], the General Assembly adopted resolution 63/2 [draft: A/63/L.3] without vote [agenda item 52 (b)].

Outcome document of the midterm review of the Almaty Programme of Action: Addressing the Special Needs of Landlocked Developing Countries within a New Global Framework for Transit Transport Cooperation for Landlocked and Transit Developing Countries

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 62/204 of 19 December 2007, in particular paragraph 11 thereof,

Adopts the following outcome document:

Declaration of the high-level meeting of the sixty-third session of the General Assembly on the midterm review of the Almaty Programme of Action

We, the Ministers and heads of delegations participating in the high-level plenary meeting of the General Assembly on the midterm review of the Almaty Programme of Action: Addressing the Special Needs of Landlocked Developing Countries within a New Global Framework for Transit Transport Cooperation for Landlocked and Transit Developing Countries, held in New York on 2 and 3 October 2008,

Recalling the United Nations Millennium Declaration, in which Heads of State and Government recognized the particular needs and problems of landlocked developing countries and urged both bilateral and multilateral donors to increase financial and technical assistance to that group of countries to meet their particular development needs and to help them to overcome the impediments of geography by improving their transit transport systems, and resolved to create an environment, at the national and global levels alike, that is conducive to development and to the eradication of poverty,

Reaffirming our commitment to urgently addressing the special development needs of and challenges faced by the landlocked developing countries through the full, timely and effective implementation of the Almaty Programme of Action, as called for in the 2005 World Summit Outcome,

Also reaffirming that the Almaty Programme of Action constitutes a fundamental framework for genuine partnerships between landlocked and transit developing countries and their development partners at the national, bilateral, subregional, regional and global levels,

Recognizing that the primary responsibility for establishing effective transit systems rests with the landlocked and transit developing countries, which need to seek to create conditions in which resources can be generated, attracted and effectively mobilized to address their development challenges, but that their efforts need to be given continued international support by the development partners and international and regional organizations in a spirit of shared responsibility, including South-South cooperation and triangular cooperation, and taking into account regional integration agreements,

Also recognizing that the private sector is an important stakeholder, whose contribution to the development of infrastructure and productive capacity should be increased, including through public-private partnerships,

Further recognizing that cooperation between landlocked and transit developing countries results in better transit transport systems. This cooperation must be promoted on the basis of the mutual interest of both landlocked and transit developing countries,

Reaffirming the right of access of landlocked countries to and from the sea and freedom of transit through the territory of transit countries by all means of transport, in accordance with applicable rules of international law,

Also reaffirming that transit countries, in the exercise of their full sovereignty over their territory, have the right to take all measures necessary to ensure that the rights and facilities provided for landlocked countries in no way infringe upon their legitimate interests,

Expressing support to those landlocked developing countries that are emerging from conflict, with a view to enabling them to rehabilitate and reconstruct, as appropriate, their political, social and economic infrastructure and assisting them in achieving their development priorities in accordance with the goals and targets of the Almaty Programme of Action, as well as the Millennium Development Goals,

Taking note of the outcome documents of the Thematic Meeting on Transit Transport Infrastructure Development, held in Ouagadougou from 18 to 20 June 2007, and of the Thematic Meeting on International Trade and Trade Facilitation, held in Ulaanbaatar on 30 and 31 August 2007,

Also taking note of the respective outcome documents of the regional review meeting for Asia and Europe, held in Bangkok on 22 and 23 April 2008, the regional review meeting for Africa, held in Addis Ababa from 18 to 20 June 2008, and the regional review meeting for Latin America, held in Buenos Aires on 30 June 2008,

1. Reaffirm the commitment made in the Almaty Programme of Action to address the special needs of the landlocked developing countries, taking into account the challenges confronted by their transit developing neighbours, through measures identified in the five priorities of the Programme of Action;

General assessment

2. Acknowledge that despite persisting problems, landlocked developing countries, as a group, have achieved some progress in their overall economic development and growth. They have recorded increased growth rates of gross domestic product and foreign direct investment in the past five years; and exports have surged, particularly for oil and other mineral resources;

3. Express concern that the economic growth and social well-being of landlocked developing countries remain very vulnerable to external shocks as well as the multiple challenges the international community faces;

4. Acknowledge that landlocked and transit developing countries, with the support of their development partners, have registered some progress in implementing the specific actions agreed upon in the Almaty Programme of Action. Landlocked and transit developing countries in Africa, Asia, Europe and Latin America have strengthened their policy and governance reform efforts. Donor countries, financial and development institutions and international and regional organizations have paid greater attention to the establishment of efficient transit systems;

5. Recognize that, although the difficulties of being landlocked permeate every aspect of the development process and poverty eradication, their negative impact on external trade is particularly severe. While some progress, even though uneven, has been made, landlocked developing countries continue to be marginalized from international trade, which prevents them from fully using trade as an instrument for achieving their development goals;

6. Stress that the higher cost of moving goods across borders for landlocked developing countries puts their products at a competitive disadvantage and discourages foreign investment, and that landlocked developing countries continue to face challenges in their efforts to establish efficient transit transport systems, such as inadequate transport infrastructure, insufficient carrying capacity at ports, port and customs clearance delays, transit dependence, fees and obstacles owing to cumbersome customs procedures and other regulatory constraints, an underdeveloped logistics sector, weak legal and institutional arrangements, as well as costly bank transactions. Also, in most cases, the transit neighbours of landlocked developing countries are themselves developing countries, often of broadly similar economic structure and beset by similar scarcities of resources. These challenges need to be urgently addressed through acceleration of the implementation of the specific actions under each of the priorities laid out in the Almaty Programme of Action;

Fundamental transit policy issues

7. Welcome the efforts made by many landlocked and transit developing countries to reform their administrative, legal and macroeconomic policies on the basis of an integrated approach to trade and transport. Reform measures have included the liberalization of transit and transport services, accession to relevant international conventions, the establishment of regional intermodal transport corridors and the development of transparent, streamlined and common rules and standards that have strengthened private and public sector dialogue to address the bottlenecks that exist at different segments of transit services. Continued efforts need to be made to ensure the effective implementation of those positive reforms and to ensure that transport strategies and programmes, particularly where they involve the regulation of transport operations or the construction of major new infrastructure, take full account of environmental aspects and development needs to ensure sustainable development at the local and global levels. The international community, including financial and development institutions and donor countries, should provide greater assistance to landlocked and transit developing countries in this regard;

8. Recognize the important role of regional cooperation and integration involving landlocked developing countries and their transit neighbours for the effective and integrated solution to cross-border trade and transit transport problems. In this context, we particularly welcome regional initiatives aimed at promoting the development of regional rail and road transit transport networks, such as the agreements on the Asian Highway and Trans-Asian Railway, the New Partnership for Africa's Development Short-term Action Plan on Infrastructure, the Sub-Saharan Africa Transport Policy Programme, the Initiative for the Integration of Regional Infrastructure in South America, the Transport Corridor Europe-Caucasus-Asia, the Africa Infrastructure Country Diagnostic study for infrastructure development in Africa and the Infrastructure Consortium for Africa;

9. Also recognize that international conventions on transport and transit, as well as the regional, subregional and bilateral agreements ratified by landlocked and transit developing countries are the main vehicles by which the harmonization, simplification and standardization of rules and documentation can be achieved. We encourage both landlocked developing countries and transit developing countries to effectively implement the provisions of those conventions and agreements;

Transit transport infrastructure development and maintenance

10. Acknowledge that, in spite of some improvement in the development of the transit transport infrastructure in landlocked developing countries, inadequate and deteriorating physical infrastructure in rail transport, road transport, ports, inland waterways, pipelines, air transport, and information and communications technology in many landlocked developing countries, along with few harmonized rules and procedures, little cross-border investment and private-sector participation, are the major obstacles to developing viable and predictable transit transport systems. Physical links of landlocked developing countries to the regional transport infrastructure network fall well short of expectations. Missing links are a major problem and need to be addressed urgently;

11. Recognize that the construction of transit transport infrastructure, especially the missing links to complete regional networks, and the improvement and maintenance of existing facilities play a key role in the process to achieve the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals;

12. Encourage landlocked and transit developing countries to allocate a greater share of public investment to the development and maintenance of infrastructure supported by, as appropriate, financial assistance and investment from donors, international financial institutions and development assistance agencies. We note that private sector participation should also be encouraged in this regard;

13. Emphasize that the development and improvement of transit transport facilities and services should be integrated into the overall development strategies of the landlocked and transit developing countries and that donor countries should consequently take into account the requirements for the long-term restructuring of the economies of the landlocked developing countries;

International trade and trade facilitation

14. Note that some progress, although limited and uneven, has been achieved by landlocked developing countries in the area of international trade;

15. Express concern that the share of world merchandise trade of landlocked developing countries has remained small. Most landlocked developing countries are still dependent on the export of a limited number of commodities. Their continued marginalization from the international trading system prevents them from fully using trade as an instrument for achieving the Millennium Development Goals;

16. Note with concern that approximately one third of all landlocked developing countries are still outside the rules-based multilateral trading system. Therefore, we stress that the accession of landlocked and transit developing countries to the World Trade Organization should be further accelerated. In this respect, the accession process for landlocked and transit developing countries should take into account their individual level of development, including the special needs and problems caused by geographical disadvantage. The development partners should provide assistance in this matter;

17. Recognize that one of the main causes of the marginalization of landlocked developing countries from the international trading system is high trade transaction costs. Therefore, we stress the need for the current negotiations on market access for agricultural and non-agricultural goods to consider giving particular attention to products of special interest to landlocked developing countries;

18. Reaffirm that, in accordance with the commitments contained in the Doha Ministerial Declaration, in particular paragraphs 13 and 16 thereof, and the rules of the World Trade Organization, current trade negotiations should give full attention to the needs and interests of developing countries, including landlocked and transit developing countries;

19. Note that ongoing World Trade Organization negotiations on trade facilitation, particularly on the relevant articles of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, such as article V on freedom of transit, article VIII on fees and formalities, and article X on transparency, as per the modalities contained in annex D to the decision of the General Council of the World Trade Organization of 1 August 2004, are particularly important for landlocked developing countries to gain a more efficient flow of goods and services as well as the improved international competitiveness that result from lower transaction costs. In this context, technical assistance should be provided to developing countries, in particular, to landlocked developing countries;

20. Recognize that some progress has been reached on coordination of border crossings, infrastructure investment, facilities for the storing of merchandise, normative frameworks and other facilities that benefit both landlocked and transit developing countries;

21. Acknowledge, however, that a large number of bottlenecks related to trade facilitation persist in many landlocked and transit developing countries. Those bottlenecks need to be urgently addressed. They include: an excessive number of documents required for export/import; the multiplication of scheduled and unscheduled roadblocks; lack of adjacent border controls; unnecessary customs convoys; complicated and non-standardized procedures for custom clearance and inspection; an insufficient application of information and communications technology; non-transparency of trade and customs laws, regulations and procedures; lack of institutional capacities and trained human resources; underdeveloped logistics services; lack of interoperability of transport systems and absence of competition in the transit transport services sector; slow progress in establishing or strengthening national trade and transport facilitation committees; and a low level of adherence to international conventions on transit transport;

International support measures

22. Acknowledge the increase in development assistance and debt relief measures in favour of landlocked developing countries. However, we note that much of the official development assistance goes to emergency and food aid. The allocation of development assistance to transport, storage and communications has not changed over the past five years, whereas the need for increased financial support for the construction and maintenance of infrastructure remains valid and urgent. In spite of enhanced Heavily Indebted Poor Countries and Multilateral Debt Relief Initiatives, which have provided debt relief to several landlocked and transit developing countries, the debt burden remains high for many of those countries;

23. Stress the need to attract private investment, including foreign direct investment. Private sector participation through co-financing can play a catalytic role in this regard. We recall that notwithstanding the increase of flows in foreign direct investment, private sector involvement in infrastructure development still has a considerable potential;

24. Acknowledge the increased attention and resources devoted by the United Nations system and international organizations to the challenges facing landlocked and transit developing countries. We recognize with appreciation the progress made towards developing effective monitoring mechanisms to measure the progress in implementation of the Almaty Programme of Action. We appreciate the work undertaken by the United Nations Office of the High Representative for the Least Developed Countries, Landlocked Developing Countries and Small Island Developing States on a set of macroeconomic, trade and transport indicators, by the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific on the time/cost methodology and the World Bank with its Logistics Performance Index and the Doing Business indicators that provide quantifiable data to measure the progress, and emphasize that these efforts should be pursued further;

Future actions to accelerate the implementation of the Almaty Programme of Action

25. Call upon landlocked and transit developing countries to undertake the following measures to speed up the implementation of the Almaty Programme of Action:

(a) Promote the learning of lessons from existing regional infrastructure initiatives that aim to encourage integrated cross-border infrastructure investment;

(b) Further strengthen the legal framework governing transit transport operations, including through full and effective implementation of bilateral, subregional and regional agreements;

(c) Promote inter-railway cooperation with a view to facilitating the operation of through trains;

(d) Facilitate road transit operations by harmonizing road transit charges, vehicle dimensions, axle load limits and gross vehicle mass, third-party motor insurance schemes and contracts of carriage of goods by road;

(e) Effectively implement trade facilitation measures, including the implementation of regional customs transit schemes, the reduction/minimization of the number of trade and transport documents, the harmonization of working hours at national borders, the publication of transit formalities and fees and charges, inter-agency coordination of border control services and the establishment of port communities and promotion of their effective operation;

(f) Consider the possibility of negotiating and granting duty-free zones at maritime ports, where this has not been done;

(g) Make efforts towards eliminating the practice of customs convoys. For this purpose, negotiate mutually beneficial arrangements to introduce a system of approved secure vehicles for transit operations and, where escort is warranted, arrange daily customs escorts;

(h) Take appropriate and effective measures to monitor control agents on road transport corridors in order to reduce roadblocks. In this context, the regional commissions should assist transit developing countries in addressing the issue of diversion of transit goods to domestic markets;

(i) Improve border infrastructure facilities and introduce a one-window/one-stop border system along with necessary capacity-building programmes;

(j) Make full use of available information and communications technology in order to enhance trade facilitation and to facilitate information-sharing between and among transport and trade stakeholders;

(k) Widen and deepen public and private sector cooperation and collaboration and, in this context, expand platforms for public-private sector dialogue, such as trade and transport facilitation committees or corridor management committees;

(l) Mobilize adequate investment from all sources, including the private sector, for the development and maintenance of transport networks, as well as the construction of missing links;

(m) Where appropriate, use mutually beneficial public-private partnerships for securing additional financial resources and modern technological and management systems;

(n) Keep abreast of changing technologies and management systems which have an impact on trade and transport. In this context, the expansion of container capacity is urgent in many maritime ports;

(o) Consider designating a focal point who would be responsible for the implementation of the Almaty Programme of Action and its coordination at the national level;

26. Welcome the proposal to set up in Ulaanbaatar an international think tank to enhance the analytical capability of landlocked developing countries needed to maximize the efficiency of our coordinated efforts for the effective implementation of the internationally agreed provisions, particularly the Almaty Programme of Action and the Millennium Development Goals. For this purpose, we urge international organizations and donor countries to assist them in realizing this initiative;

27. Call upon donors and the multilateral, regional, financial and development institutions to provide landlocked and transit developing countries with appropriate, substantial and better coordinated technical and financial assistance, particularly in the form of grants or concessionary loans, for the implementation of the Almaty Programme of Action, in particular for the construction, maintenance and improvement of their transport, storage and other transit-related facilities, including alternative routes and improved communications, to promote subregional, regional and interregional projects and programmes;

28. Call upon the development partners to effectively operationalize the Aid for Trade initiative so as to support trade facilitation measures and trade-related technical assistance, as well as the diversification of export products through the development of small and medium-sized enterprises and private sector involvement in landlocked developing countries;

29. Encourage the international community to enhance efforts to facilitate access to and encourage the transfer of technologies related to transit transport systems, including information and communications technology;

30. Also encourage the further strengthening of South-South cooperation and triangular cooperation with the involvement of donors, as well as cooperation among subregional and regional organizations in support of landlocked and transit developing countries towards the full and effective implementation of the Almaty Programme of Action;

31. Call upon the relevant organizations of the United Nations system, the regional commissions, the United Nations Development Programme and the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, and invite other international organizations, including the World Bank, the regional development banks, the World Customs Organization, the World Trade Organization, regional economic integration organizations and other relevant regional and subregional organizations, to further integrate the Almaty Programme of Action into their relevant programmes of work, taking into account the midterm review, and encourage them to continue, as appropriate, within their respective mandates, their support to the landlocked and transit developing countries, inter alia, through well-coordinated and coherent technical assistance programmes in transit transport and trade facilitation. In particular, we:

(a) Encourage the United Nations Office of the High Representative for the Least Developed Countries, Landlocked Developing Countries and Small Island Developing States to continue to ensure coordinated follow-up and effective monitoring and reporting on the implementation of the Almaty Programme of Action, in line with General Assembly resolution 57/270 B of 23 June 2003, to step up its advocacy efforts to raise international awareness of the Almaty Programme of Action as well as mobilize resources; and to further develop cooperation with the United Nations system organizations in order to ensure the timely and effective implementation of the Programme of Action;

(b) Encourage the regional commissions to continue to strengthen their efforts to work with landlocked and transit developing countries in order to develop integrated regional transit transport systems, harmonize regulatory requirements and procedures for import/export and transit with international conventions and standards, promote intermodal transport corridors, encourage accession to and more effective implementation of international conventions on transit transport, and assist in the establishment of national trade and transport facilitation coordination mechanisms and in improving the planning and development of the missing links in regional infrastructure networks, especially in Africa;

(c) Encourage the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to continue to strengthen its technical assistance in the areas of infrastructure and services, transit transport arrangements, electronic commerce and trade facilitation, as well as trade negotiations with and accession to the World Trade Organization. The Division for Africa, Least Developed Countries and Special Programmes should, within its mandate, strengthen its analytical work and technical assistance to the landlocked developing countries. The United Nations Conference on Trade and Development should also develop pragmatic tools and investment guides, as well as identify best practices, to assist the landlocked developing countries in their efforts to attract a larger share of flows of foreign direct investment;

(d) Encourage the United Nations Development Programme to enhance its provision of trade-related technical assistance and capacity-building programmes to landlocked developing countries;

(e) Invite the World Trade Organization to continue to provide technical assistance to landlocked developing countries in order to enhance their negotiating capabilities;

(f) Invite the World Bank to continue to give priority to requests for technical assistance to supplement national and regional efforts to promote the efficient use of existing transit facilities, including the application of information technologies and the simplification of procedures and documents;

(g) Invite the World Customs Organization and other relevant international and regional organizations to continue to strengthen the provision of technical assistance and capacity-building programmes to landlocked and transit developing countries in the area of customs reform, the simplification and harmonization of procedures, and enforcement and compliance;

32. Invite the General Assembly to consider, at the appropriate time, undertaking the final review of the implementation of the Almaty Programme of Action, in accordance with paragraph 49 thereof.

Also on 19 December [meeting 72], the General Assembly adopted, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/63/417/Add.2], resolution 63/228 without vote [agenda item 52 (b)].

Groups of countries in special situations:
specific actions related to the particular needs and problems of landlocked developing countries:
outcome of the International Ministerial Conference of Landlocked and Transit Developing Countries and Donor Countries and International Financial and Development Institutions on Transit Transport Cooperation

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 58/201 of 23 December 2003, 60/208 of 22 December 2005, 61/212 of 20 December 2006 and 62/204 of 19 December 2007,

Recalling also the United Nations Millennium Declaration, and the 2005 World Summit Outcome,

Recognizing that the lack of territorial access to the sea, aggravated by remoteness from world markets, and prohibitive transit costs and risks continue to impose serious constraints on export earnings, private capital inflow and domestic resource mobilization of landlocked developing countries and therefore adversely affect their overall growth and socio-economic development,

Expressing support to those landlocked developing countries that are emerging from conflict, with a view to enabling them to rehabilitate and reconstruct, as appropriate, political, social and economic infrastructure and to assisting them in achieving their development priorities in accordance with the goals and targets of the Almaty Programme of Action: Addressing the Special Needs of Landlocked

Developing Countries within a New Global Framework for Transit Transport Cooperation for Landlocked and Transit Developing Countries,

Recalling the New Partnership for Africa's Development, an initiative for accelerating regional economic cooperation and development, as many landlocked and transit developing countries are located in Africa,

Reaffirming that the Almaty Programme of Action constitutes a fundamental framework for genuine partnerships between landlocked and transit developing countries and their development partners at the national, bilateral, subregional, regional and global levels,

Recalling its resolution 63/2 of 3 October 2008, by which it adopted the Declaration of the high-level meeting of the sixty-third session of the General Assembly on the midterm review of the Almaty Programme of Action,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the Almaty Programme of Action;

2. Reaffirms the right of access of landlocked countries to and from the sea and freedom of transit through the territory of transit countries by all means of transport, in accordance with the applicable rules of international law;

3. Also reaffirms that transit countries, in the exercise of their full sovereignty over their territory, have the right to take all measures necessary to ensure that the rights and facilities provided for landlocked countries in no way infringe upon their legitimate interests;

4. Further reaffirms its full commitment to the Declaration adopted by the Ministers and heads of delegations participating in the high-level plenary meeting of the General Assembly on the midterm review of the Almaty Programme of Action, in which they recommitted themselves to urgently addressing the special development needs of and challenges faced by the landlocked developing countries through the full, timely and effective implementation of the Almaty Programme of Action;

5. Acknowledges that landlocked and transit developing countries in Africa, Asia, Europe and Latin America have strengthened their policy and governance reform efforts and that donor countries, financial and development institutions and international and regional organizations have paid greater attention to the establishment of efficient transit systems; notes with concern, however, that the landlocked developing countries continue to be marginalized from international trade, thus preventing them from fully using trade as an instrument for achieving their development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals, and face challenges in their efforts to establish efficient transit transport systems; and therefore notes the importance of the ongoing World Trade Organization negotiations on trade facilitation, particularly on the relevant articles of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade that are important to landlocked developing countries, such as those referred to in the Declaration on the midterm review of the Almaty Programme of Action;

6. Calls upon landlocked and transit developing countries to take all appropriate measures, as set out in the Declaration, to speed up the implementation of the Almaty Programme of Action;

7. Calls upon donors and multilateral, regional, financial and development institutions to provide landlocked and transit developing countries with appropriate, substantial and better-coordinated technical and financial assistance, particularly in the form of grants or concessionary loans, for the implementation of the Almaty Programme of Action, in particular for the construction, maintenance and improvement of their transport, storage and other transit-related facilities, including alternative routes, completion of missing links and improved communications, so as to promote subregional, regional and interregional projects and programmes;

8. Calls upon the development partners to effectively operationalize the Aid for Trade initiative so as to support trade facilitation measures and trade-related technical assistance, as well as the diversification of export products through the development of small and medium-sized enterprises and private sector involvement in landlocked developing countries;

9. Encourages the international community to enhance efforts to facilitate access to and encourage the transfer of technologies related to transit transport systems, including information and communications technology;

10. Encourages the further strengthening of South-South cooperation and triangular cooperation with the involvement of donors, as well as cooperation among subregional and regional organizations, in support of the efforts of landlocked and transit developing countries towards achieving the full and effective implementation of the Almaty Programme of Action;

11. Calls upon the relevant organizations of the United Nations system, the regional commissions, the United Nations Development Programme and the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, and invites other international organizations, including the World Bank, the regional development banks, the World Customs Organization, the World Trade Organization, regional economic integration organizations, and other relevant regional and subregional organizations, to further integrate the Almaty Programme of Action into their relevant programmes of work, taking full account of the Declaration on the midterm review, and encourages them to continue, as appropriate, within their respective mandates, their support to the landlocked and transit developing countries, inter alia, through well-coordinated and coherent technical assistance programmes in transit transport and trade facilitation;

12. Encourages the Office of the High Representative for the Least Developed Countries, Landlocked Developing Countries and Small Island Developing States to continue to ensure coordinated follow-up to and effective monitoring and reporting on the implementation of the Almaty Programme of Action, in line with General Assembly resolution 57/270 B of 23 June 2003, and to step up its advocacy efforts directed towards raising international awareness and mobilizing resources, as well as to further develop cooperation and coordination with organizations within the United Nations system in order to ensure the timely and effective implementation of the Almaty Programme of Action and the Declaration on the midterm review;

13. Encourages the Economic Commission for Africa, the Economic Commission for Europe, the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean and the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific to continue their efforts to work with landlocked and transit developing countries to develop integrated regional transit transport systems, harmonize regulatory requirements and procedures for import/export and transit with international conventions and standards, promote intermodal transport corridors, encourage access to and more effective implementation of international conventions on transit transport, and assist in the establishment of national trade and transport facilitation coordination mechanisms and in improving the planning and development of the missing links in regional infrastructure networks, especially in Africa;

14. Encourages the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to continue to strengthen its technical assistance activities and analytical work related to logistics and transit transport cooperation;

15. Encourages the United Nations Development Programme to enhance its provision of trade-related technical assistance and capacity-building programmes to landlocked developing countries;

16. Invites the World Trade Organization to continue to provide technical assistance to landlocked developing countries in order to enhance their negotiating capabilities;

17. Invites the World Bank to continue to give priority to requests for technical assistance to supplement national and regional efforts to promote the efficient use of existing transit facilities, including the application of information technologies and the simplification of procedures and documents;

18. Invites the World Customs Organization and other relevant international and regional organizations to continue to strengthen the provision of technical assistance and capacity-building programmes to landlocked and transit developing countries in the area of customs reform, simplification and harmonization of procedures, and enforcement and compliance;

19. Encourages donors and the international financial and development institutions, as well as private entities, to make voluntary contributions to the trust fund established by the Secretary-General to support the activities related to the follow-up to the implementation of the outcome of the Almaty International Ministerial Conference;

20. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its sixty-fourth session an analytical report on the implementation of the Almaty Programme of Action and the Declaration on the midterm review;

21. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its sixty-fourth session the item entitled "Specific actions related to the particular needs and problems of landlocked developing countries: outcome of the International Ministerial Conference of Landlocked and Transit Developing Countries and Donor Countries and International Financial and Development Institutions on Transit Transport Cooperation".

Economies in transition

In response to General Assembly resolution 61/210 [YUN 2006, p. 1021], the Secretary-General, in an August report [A/63/256], reviewed progress made in the integration of the economies in transition into the world economy during the period 2006–2007, and highlighted major policy challenges facing them. According to the report, the high prices for primary commodities and increased capital inflows had supported robust growth in South-Eastern Europe and the Commonwealth of Independent States (CIS) in recent years. However, the weakening of the global economy since mid-2007, due to the global financial turmoil and the food crisis, had affected economic performance, especially in the more vulnerable smaller economies, where economic vulnerability was linked to limited diversification of domestic production sectors and high dependence on a few export commodities of low value-added content. Therefore, a major challenge for those countries was promoting economic diversification and upgrading their production to higher value-added activities, thereby reducing their exposure to the volatility of world markets. Despite the recent significant increase in FDI inflows to those countries, more investment was required to revitalize their industrial capacity and diversify their output and export base. To attract more FDI, however, economies in transition needed to continue focusing on systemic and market-enhancing reforms, institutions able to support markets, legal and regulatory systems designed to promote competition, intellectual and property rights, the rule of law, good governance and financial services.

The countries of South-Eastern Europe, in particular, faced multiple challenges with respect to enhancing their gains from further integration into the world economy. Regional cooperation within the context of the Central European Free Trade Agreement and the Regional Cooperation Council needed to be strengthened and non-tariff barriers eliminated in order to boost intraregional trade. In addition, market access for exports should be enhanced through WTO-compatible export promotion activities and completion of WTO accession, while further export and output diversification would require attracting more FDI inflows and the upgrading of physical infrastructure. Further integration into European markets would be helped by the adoption of European and international standards and further harmonizing of those countries' legislation with that of the European Union. To improve market access for South-Eastern Europe and CIS countries, international organizations should support export and investment promotion activities in the region. Assistance could be provided in securing potential customers and business partners for exporters and in reaching the retail networks in potential markets. Adequate resources should be mobilized, including through multilateral development banks, to help those countries develop infrastructure, including the revitalization of regional road and rail networks, particularly in CIS landlocked countries. Special attention should be given to the development of telecommunications, which lagged well behind European standards, and the energy shortages in the region should be addressed. The issues of migration and protection of migrant workers should also be addressed, and the fight against human trafficking intensified. The International Labour Organization should continue to provide advice on improving labour migration policies and the protection of the rights of migrant workers, and work towards the ratification of all relevant conventions by more countries. The banking systems, as well as non-banking transfer services in the region, should be developed in order to reduce transaction costs for remittances and to divert flows of funds to official channels. It was also important to encourage policies aimed at channelling those funds into productive investment.

On 19 December, the Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's report (decision 63/542).

Operational activities for development

In 2008, the United Nations system continued to provide development assistance to developing countries and countries with economies in transition through the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), the central United Nations funding body for technical assistance. UNDP income reached $6 billion. Total expenditure for all programme activities and support costs in 2008 increased to $5.39 billion. Total income for the United Nations Capital Development Fund (UNCDF) reached $50.1 million in 2008, including $6 million managed by UNCDF on behalf of UNDP. At year's end, United Nations Foundation allocations to projects of the United Nations Fund for International Partnerships reached approximately $1.06 billion.

In April, the Secretary-General reported on the implementation of General Assembly resolution 62/208 on the 2007 triennial comprehensive policy review of operational activities for development of the UN system. In an August report, the Secretary-General analysed the implications of aligning the strategic planning cycles of the UN funds and programmes with the comprehensive policy review, and provided recommendations on changing the review from a three-year to a four-year cycle.

In September, the UNDP/United Nations Population Fund Executive Board approved the enhanced and integrated UNDP accountability system, which included an accountability framework and an oversight policy. It also amended the UNDP financial regulations and rules to enable the UNDP Administrator to make ex-gratia payments of up to $75,000 per year.

In 2008, the United Nations Office for Project Services (UNOPS) delivered $1.06 billion through project implementation and spent $61.9 million administering it. The contribution to the operational reserve was $4.9 million, bringing it to $30.06 million. In September, the Executive Board approved a change to the UNOPS governance structure, realigning the functions and composition of its Management Coordination Committee to allow it to perform a policy advisory function; the body was renamed the Policy Advisory Committee to reflect its new role. At its September session, the Executive Board approved the revised UNOPS accountability framework and oversight policies. It also took note of the draft fourth cooperation framework for South-South Cooperation (2009–2011) and encouraged Member States to support UNDP and the Special Unit for South-South Cooperation in implementing the framework.

In 2008, 7,753 volunteers working for the UNDP-administered United Nations Volunteer programme carried out 7,991 assignments in 132 countries.

UNCDF achieved its programmatic targets in 2008, expanding its interventions to 38 least developed countries. During the year, UNDP and UNCDF met most of their objectives with respect to elaborating the UNCDF/UNDP partnership framework.

System-wide activities

Operational activities segment of the Economic and Social Council

The Economic and Social Council, during its 2008 substantive session [A/63/3/Rev.1], considered the question of operational activities of the United Nations for international development cooperation at meetings held on 10, 11 and 18 July. On 5 February (decision 2008/207), the Council decided to devote the work of the operational activities segment to progress on and implementation of General Assembly resolution 62/208 [YUN 2007, p. 877] on the triennial comprehensive policy review of operational activities for development of the UN system. The Council considered follow-up to policy recommendations of the Assembly and the Council, and the reports of the Executive Boards of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP)/United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA), the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) and the World Food Programme (WFP).

Among the documents before the Council were the Secretary-General's reports on the comprehensive statistical analysis of the financing of operational activities for development [A/63/71-E/2008/46]; the management process for implementation of Assembly resolution 62/208 on the triennial comprehensive policy review [E/2008/49]; the resident coordinator system [E/2008/60]; and the summary statement of outcomes of the seminar of the programme pilot countries on "Delivering as one" [A/63/85-E/2008/83].

On 10 July, the Council held a high-level panel discussion on "The United Nations system in a changing aid environment: implications and comparative advantages", and another on "Strengthening United Nations development system's responsiveness to the different needs of programme countries". On 11 July, it held a panel discussion with heads of UN funds and programmes.

Implementation of resolution 62/208

An April report of the Secretary-General [E/2008/49] presented an overview of a management process for the full implementation of General Assembly resolution 62/208 [YUN 2007, p. 877] relating to the 2007 triennial comprehensive policy review of operational activities for development of the UN system [ibid., p. 874]. The 2007 review affirmed the overarching importance of national ownership and leadership over UN system operational activities. The management process revolved around the key concepts set out in the resolution, including that operational activities for development were carried out at the request and for the benefit of programme countries, in accordance with their own development policies and priorities. The internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals (MDGs), offered a framework for planning, reviewing and assessing UN operational activities for development. The UN system should focus on long-term development goals and on enhancing national capacity to pursue poverty eradication, sustained economic growth and sustainable development. Reform was aimed at making the UN system more efficient, effective and coherent in its support to developing countries.

The process placed considerable emphasis on the role of inter-agency mechanisms, including the United Nations System Chief Executives Board for Coordination (CEB) and the United Nations Development Group (UNDG) with respect to UN development cooperation. The key actions to ensure a growing trend in funding, especially core resources, rested principally with Member States that contributed resources to the UN system. The role of the Secretary-General would mainly consist of advocacy and dialogue with donors.

UN system development efforts encompassed four dimensions: capacity-building and development, South-South cooperation, gender equality and empowerment, and the transition from relief to development. UNDG had adopted the approach of making use of the common country assessment and United Nations Development Assistance Framework (UNDAF) processes as capacity-building tools. It would also encourage UN country teams to promote South-South and triangular cooperation as modalities for capacity-building in implementing UNDAF. The Interagency Network on Women and Gender Equality would complete by 2009 an action plan to implement the CEB strategy for gender mainstreaming. Regarding the transition from relief to development, the post-conflict needs assessment would continue to serve as a tool for the United Nations to work with the World Bank in designing country-tailored support.

Improved functioning of the UN development system under resolution 62/208 was guided by the principles of national ownership, strengthening national capacities, and ownership of the resident coordinator system by the UN development system as a whole. Efforts would continue to align all planning and programming documents of the UN development system, including UNDAF and the common country assessment, with national planning and programming cycles and processes. Other areas of focus included improving the functioning of the resident coordinator system and further enhancing the performance appraisal system for the resident coordinators and the UN country teams. The latest UNDAF guidelines would be updated to encourage end-of-cycle evaluations in close cooperation with the Government, and the CEB High-level Committee on Management would work to define a system-wide approach to strengthening evaluation throughout the UN system. A matrix setting out actions, targets and benchmarks of the management process for the implementation of resolution 62/208 was annexed to the Secretary-General's report.

In response to resolution 62/208, the Secretary-General submitted a May report [E/2008/60] on the functioning of the resident coordinator system, including costs and benefits. The report discussed coherence, system-wide participation and accountability mechanisms within the context of national ownership and leadership. The resident coordinator system, while managed by UNDP, was owned by the UN development system as a whole. It encompassed all the entities of the UN system that carried out operational activities for development in programme countries, regardless of their formal presence in country. Key elements of the system included the UN country team, the resident coordinator and his or her office at the country level; the regional director and regional manager teams at the regional level; and UNDG and UNDP as the manager of the system at the Headquarters level.

The General Assembly, in resolution 32/197 [YUN 1977, p. 438], established the concept of a single official—the resident coordinator—to coordinate operational activities for development within the UN system. The resident coordinator system was also the main mechanism for coordinating the UN system's emergency, recovery and transition activities in programme countries. The resident coordinator was the designated representative of the Secretary-General and led the UN country team, which comprised representatives of the UN funds and programmes, specialized agencies and other UN entities accredited to a given country. Management of the resident coordinator system remained anchored in UNDP, with management oversight the responsibility of the Administrator. The resident coordinator reported to the Secretary-General through the UNDP Administrator as UNDG Chair. Although most resident coordinators historically came from UNDP, the number of non-UNDP resident coordinators more than doubled between 2001 and April 2008, from 13 per cent to 30 per cent. Joint programmes were increasingly used for coordination in areas where agencies needed to work together in implementing UNDAF. As at March, 428 joint programmes addressed, among other themes, HIV/AIDS, gender, health, poverty reduction, governance and democracy, and measurement of—and reporting on—the MDGs.

As the organization that managed and funded the resident coordinator system, UNDP funded the basic coordination capacities of the United Nations. Between 2004 and 2007, total core UNDP resources attributed to the resident coordinator function averaged $67.7 million, with minimal increments during 2004–2006. In 2007, that amount rose to $74.1 million, an 11 per cent increase over the 2006 total.

Significant progress in the resident coordinator system had been made through measures aimed at: improving programmatic and operational coherence at the country level, system-wide participation and strengthening accountability. Major challenges to achieving effectiveness and efficiency in operational activities for development through the resident coordinator system included the need to respond adequately to demands placed on the system, mobilize the expertise of the UN system to provide support to country development processes and address divergences in business practices. The report contained recommendations to the Council regarding future reporting on the resident coordinator system. Among other measures, the Council might wish to recommend that Secretariat reports to the governing bodies of UN system organizations included quantifiable information on contributions to the resident coordinator system and measures on the decentralization and delegation of authority in the field.

Also in May [A/63/71-E/2008/46], the Secretary-General issued a report on the comprehensive statistical analysis of the financing of UN system operational activities for development, which was to be read in conjunction with his April report on the implementation of resolution 62/208 [YUN 2007, p. 877]. The report presented and analysed contributions and expenditures for 2006, expenditure trends and targeting, and the contributions of the specialized agencies. It also compared trends in UN system financing with trends in multilateral and bilateral development assistance, and described progress in building a comprehensive and sustainable financial data and reporting system on UN operational activities.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 18 July [meeting 34], the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 2008/2 [draft: E/2008/L.12] without vote [agenda item 3 (a)].

Progress in the implementation of General Assembly resolution 62/208 on the triennial comprehensive policy review of operational activities for development of the United Nations system

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 62/208 of 19 December 2007 on the triennial comprehensive policy review of operational activities for development of the United Nations system,

Reaffirming the importance of the triennial comprehensive policy review of operational activities for development, through which the General Assembly establishes key system-wide policy orientations for the development cooperation and country-level modalities of the United Nations system,

Recalling the role of the Economic and Social Council in providing coordination and guidance to the United Nations system to ensure that policy orientations set out by the General Assembly are implemented on a system-wide basis in accordance with Assembly resolutions 57/270 B of 23 June 2003, 61/16 of 20 November 2006, 62/208 and other relevant resolutions,

Management process for the implementation of General Assembly resolution 62/208

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the management process for the implementation of General Assembly resolution 62/208 on the triennial comprehensive policy review of operational activities for development of the United Nations system, and the efforts of the Secretary-General to strengthen the results-orientation of that report, in line with paragraph 141 of resolution 62/208;

2. Notes the response of the United Nations system in implementing resolution 62/208 at the agency and inter-agency levels, as specified in the above-mentioned report of the Secretary-General, and requests the United Nations system to pursue the management process for the implementation of resolution 62/208;

3. Reiterates the call of the General Assembly for the governing bodies of the funds, programmes and specialized agencies of the United Nations development system to take appropriate actions for the full implementation of resolution 62/208;

4. Also reiterates the requests of the General Assembly to the executive heads of those organizations to report annually to their governing bodies on measures taken and envisaged for the implementation of the resolution on the triennial comprehensive policy review;

5. Reaffirms that the fundamental characteristics of the operational activities for development of the United Nations system should be, inter alia, their universal, voluntary and grant nature, their neutrality and multilateralism, and their ability to respond to the development needs of programme countries in a flexible manner, and that the operational activities are carried out for the benefit of programme countries, at the request of those countries and in accordance with their own policies and priorities for development;

6. Requests the Secretary-General, as called for in paragraph 142 of resolution 62/208, to submit to the Economic and Social Council, at its substantive session of 2009, a detailed report on results achieved and measures and processes implemented in follow-up to that resolution in order for the Council to evaluate the implementation of the resolution, with a view to ensuring its full implementation;

7. Also requests the Secretary-General, in responding to paragraph 142 of resolution 62/208, to strengthen efforts to identify results and fine-tune targets, benchmarks and time frames;

8. Recalls the request of the General Assembly to the Secretary-General, in paragraph 125 of resolution 62/208, to prepare a report identifying human resources challenges within the development system at the country level and formulating recommendations for improvements, and requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the International Civil Service Commission, to submit that report to the Economic and Social Council at its substantive session of 2009 and to cover in the report the issues raised in paragraph 126 of resolution 62/208;

9. Welcomes the ongoing efforts of the United Nations system to achieve an upward trend and an expanding base of financial support for operational activities for development, and requests the United Nations system to pursue and consult with Member States on efforts to increase resources and achieve a better balance between core/regular funding and non-core/extrabudgetary funding;

10. Requests the United Nations system, in line with paragraphs 45 and 46 of resolution 62/208, to undertake concrete efforts, in consultation with Member States, to support capacity-building for development, the promotion and transfer of new and emerging technologies to programme countries, and the facilitation of access of developing countries to new and emerging technologies in support of operational activities for development;

11. Reaffirms paragraph 139 of resolution 62/208, and in this regard takes note of the seminar of the "programme country pilot" countries on the theme "Delivering as one: exchange of experiences and lessons learned", held in Maputo from 21 to 23 May 2008;

Functioning of the resident coordinator system, including its costs and benefits

12. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the functioning of the resident coordinator system, including costs and benefits;

13. Requests the Secretary-General, in his annual report on the functioning of the resident coordinator system, to report on the participation in and support of the United Nations system, including the non-resident agencies, to the functioning of the resident coordinator system, and on progress in enhancing development impact, coherence, effectiveness and efficiency and costs and benefits of coordination through the resident coordinator system, with specific attention to the regional and country levels;

14. Requests the heads of the funds, programmes and specialized agencies and other United Nations organizations to include in the annual reports to their governing bodies any proposed measures to enhance participation by their respective organizations in financial, technical and organizational support to the resident coordinator system;

15. Underscores that the resident coordinator, supported by the United Nations country team, should report to national authorities on progress made against results agreed in the United Nations Development Assistance Framework;

16. Encourages the United Nations Development Group, within the United Nations System Chief Executives Board for Coordination and in close cooperation with the United Nations Development Programme, to further develop approaches to measure and report on the costs and benefits of coordination, and further encourages the Secretary-General to consolidate this information, to the extent possible, and present it to the Economic and Social Council at its substantive sessions of 2009 and 2010;

17. Requests the Secretary-General, in his response to paragraph 94 of resolution 62/208, to bear in mind the various coordination functions of the resident coordinators;

Comprehensive statistical analysis of the financing of operational activities for development of the United Nations system for 2006

18. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the comprehensive statistical analysis of the financing of operational activities for development of the United Nations system for 2006, and recognizes the progress made to broaden and improve the reporting in line with paragraph 28 of resolution 62/208;

19. Encourages the organizations of the United Nations development system to participate fully in this exercise;

20. Requests the Secretary-General, making use of existing capacities within the Secretariat and, if necessary, voluntary contributions, to continue efforts:

(a) To continue to broaden and improve the coverage, timeliness, reliability, quality and comparability of system-wide financial data, definitions and classifications for the financial reporting of operational activities for development of the United Nations system, in a coherent way;

(b) To build a comprehensive, sustainable and consistent financial data and reporting system for the operational activities for development of all the relevant organizations and entities of the United Nations system;

(c) To invite Member States to contribute to the support of the work mentioned above;

Simplification and harmonization of the United Nations development system

21. Takes note of the actions taken by the executive boards and governing bodies of the United Nations funds and programmes and specialized agencies in the area of simplification and harmonization of the United Nations development system;

22. Requests the Secretary-General to make every effort to ensure that the information provided in response to paragraph 112 of resolution 62/208 is presented at future sessions of the Economic and Social Council in the form of a report;

23. Requests the executive heads of the funds, programmes and specialized agencies to report in a timely manner to the executive boards and governing bodies on progress regarding simplification and harmonization to support the assessment by the executive boards and governing bodies in this area.

Operational activities

Trends in contributions

A July report of the Secretary-General [A/63/201] provided an overview of trends in contributions to operational activities for development of the UN system and measures to promote an adequate, predictable and expanding base of UN development assistance. It noted that adequacy of funding for the UN system was linked to overall performance in achieving the target of 0.7 per cent of gross national income for official development assistance (ODA). ODA performance had generally declined from its 1995 level for the period 1996–2004, only returning to the 1995 level in 2005. Over the previous few years, the international community had made renewed efforts to scale up the volume of aid flows and improve aid effectiveness, but most donors would need to make unprecedented efforts to meet their targets. At the end of 2007, ODA from the Organisation for Economic Cooperation and Development (OECD)/Development Assistance Committee (DAC) donors stood at $103.7 billion, down 8.4 per cent in real terms since 2006. Multilateral aid continued to represent around 40 per cent of global flows and 50 per cent of flows from DAC donors, but around 50 per cent of that funding, including for the United Nations, was earmarked for specific initiatives, sectors or themes. There was an urgent need for donor countries to increase their funding to UN operational activities, notably through the provision of core resources. Broadening the donor base could help enhance long-term financial sustainability, as heavy reliance on a limited number of donors was the norm. The top 10 donors to UNDP provided close to 80 per cent of its total regular resources for 2008. Contributions of non-DAC member States to the UN system became increasingly important, totalling $451 million in 2006 (excluding self-supporting contributions), representing a 104 per cent increase over the $221 million contributed in 2004. The so-called “self-supporting” resources channelled by Governments through UN agencies for expenditure in their own countries amounted to $1.89 billion in 2006, coming from 154 countries.

Uncertainties in the world economy negatively affected further scaling-up of funding for the United Nations. The voluntary nature of the funding of UN operational activities made it vulnerable to cutbacks in times of constrained Government budgets. World economic growth registered 3.8 per cent in 2007, but was expected to decline markedly, to 1.8 and 2.1 per cent in 2008 and 2009, respectively. Humanitarian assistance represented the biggest share of overall expenditure of the UN development system. It was estimated that the humanitarian assistance expenditure increased at an average of 15.3 per cent per year during the 11-year period from 1993 to 2003, compared to the much lower and even-paced rate of increase for operational activities for development (net of the humanitarian assistance component) of 7.4 per cent per year.

In general, ODA remained unpredictable, with only 60 to 65 per cent of aid flows disbursed by donors in the fiscal year for which they were scheduled. The multi-year funding frameworks or strategic plans enabled Member States to monitor the effective use of financial resources by comparing them with the results achieved through planned activities. In some cases, thematic contributions in line with priorities set out in strategic plans resulted in increased predictability of non-core resources, which constituted a growing portion of total funding. Thematic funds also involved low administrative costs, simplified annual reporting and greater flexibility, allowing for longer-term planning and more sustainable results. The “One Fund” established as part of the “Delivering as one” pilot initiative [YUN 2006, p. 1584] allowed donors to fund a strategic plan for a coordinated UN response to development challenges, while aiming to reduce transaction costs and enhance flexibility and predictability for implementing agencies. As the implementation of the One UN funds in the pilot countries was at an early stage, however, it needed to be carefully monitored and assessed.

The General Assembly highlighted the need to enhance the core contributions to the UN development system. In 2006, non-core/extrabudgetary resources for operational activities amounted to $12.1 billion, as compared to core resources of $5.1 billion. Thus, the share of core resources represented only 29.5 per cent of total funding. In constant dollars, the increase in non-core funds from 2002 to 2006 was 9.9 per cent, compared to just 0.3 per cent per year, on average, for core funds. With the exception of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA), whose resources were consistently 100 per cent core, patterns on the balance between core and non-core resources varied among individual UN organizations.

The Assembly stressed that an increase in funding, particularly core resources, should correspond to parallel progress in efficiency, effectiveness, coherence and impact in the UN development system and its organizations. In the 2006–2007 period, UNDP, UNFPA and UNICEF took significant steps to harmonize results-based budgeting for their biennial support budgets, and an increasing number of UN organizations were introducing a results-based management approach in their internal functioning. The UN system was also working towards harmonized approaches with regard to cost recovery, in order to avoid using core resources to cover the management of extrabudgetary funds.

Aligning planning cycles with comprehensive policy review

In August [A/63/207], the Secretary-General submitted a report analysing the implications of aligning the strategic planning cycles of the UN funds and programmes with the comprehensive policy review. The analysis covered the planning activities of UNDP, UNFPA, UNICEF and WFP, which together accounted for more than 60 per cent of the expenditures on UN system operational activities for development. The report set out the advantages of changing the comprehensive policy review from a three-year to a four-year cycle. The change would allow enough time for the UN system to put in place measures to implement guidance given by the General Assembly in the comprehensive policy review. It would open the possibility of synchronizing the strategic plans of the funds and programmes with the comprehensive policy review, so that the plans could reflect the guidance from the review. A four-year cycle might allow for a midterm review, which could provide a more solid basis for guiding the preparations for the following comprehensive review. It might also generate savings for the UN Secretariat, with regard to both regular and extrabudgetary resources.

The strategic plans constituted the main instruments by which the funds and programmes implemented their mandates and the policy guidance of the Assembly and the Economic and Social Council. The budgeting processes of the four funds and programmes were aligned with their strategic plans. UNDP and UNFPA had the same Executive Board; UNICEF and WFP each had its own Executive Board, with WFP also reporting to the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO). UNDP, UNFPA and WFP were operating within four-year strategic planning cycles for the 2008–2011 period; UNICEF was operating within a four-year cycle for the 2006–2009 period. UNDP, UNFPA and UNICEF used fixed planning cycles, while WFP had a rolling system whereby it reviewed and adjusted its plan every two years. In September (see p. 1286), the UNICEF Executive Board decided to extend its planning cycle by two years, to 2011. As a benefit of doing so, the following UNICEF planning cycle would cover the period 2012–2015, coinciding with the other funds and programmes. With the 2015 target date for realizing the MDGs approaching, it would be critical for the funds and programmes to enhance efforts towards reaching the Goals, which should be reflected in the strategic plans. Alignment with the comprehensive policy review would also bolster consistency among the plans concerning the review's themes and approaches.

The report examined two options for changing the comprehensive policy review from a three-year to a four-year cycle: proceeding with the triennial review as scheduled in 2010 and shifting to a quadrennial review beginning in 2011, with the first quadrennial review to be held in 2014 (option 1); or holding the first quadrennial review in 2011, thus extending the period for the implementation of the 2007 triennial review by one year (option 2). Option 1 would require the fewest adjustments to the current and subsequent planning cycles of UNDP, UNFPA and WFP, including their budget processes. Only UNICEF would need to make an adjustment to extend its current cycle by two years. If UNDP, UNFPA and UNICEF aligned their planning cycles, WFP would not be in alignment with the cycles every two years; it would therefore need to consider adopting a fixed, four-year cycle starting in 2012 to ensure full alignment. Option 2 would require that all four organizations made adjustments to adopt the 2013–2016 period as a synchronized plan period, which would also have implications for adjusting the biennial support budgets.

The Secretary-General recommended that the Assembly consider changing the comprehensive policy review from a triennial to a quadrennial cycle. The Assembly should also recommend that UNDP, UNFPA, UNICEF and WFP make the changes required to align their planning and budgetary processes with the quadrennial review.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December [meeting 72], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee [A/63/419], adopted resolution 63/232 without vote [agenda item 54].

Operational activities for development

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 62/208 of 19 December 2007 on the triennial comprehensive policy review of operational activities for development of the United Nations system,

Reaffirming the importance of the triennial comprehensive policy review of operational activities for development, through which the General Assembly establishes key system-wide policy orientations for the development cooperation and country-level modalities of the United Nations system,

1. Takes note of the reports of the Secretary-General and of the note by the Secretary-General transmitting the report on the activities of the United Nations Development Fund for Women;

2. Also takes note of Economic and Social Council resolution 2008/2 of 18 July 2008 on the progress in the implementation of General Assembly resolution 62/208 on the triennial comprehensive policy review of operational activities for development of the United Nations system;

Funding of operational activities of the United Nations development system

3. Reiterates paragraphs 18 to 20 of Economic and Social Council resolution 2008/2, on the comprehensive statistical analysis of the financing of operational activities for development of the United Nations system;

4. Requests the United Nations Development Programme and the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the Secretariat, making use of existing capacities within the Secretariat and, if necessary, voluntary contributions, to take the necessary steps to integrate by 2010 information from the report on United Nations system technical cooperation expenditures and its statistical addendum into the report on the comprehensive statistical analysis of the financing of operational activities for development of the United Nations system, to provide appropriate online access to this information and to report to the Economic and Social Council in 2009 on progress in this regard, and encourages the Executive Board of the United Nations Development Programme/United Nations Population Fund to take the necessary decision to make this possible;

5. Expresses concern at:

(a) The fact that the upward trend in contributions in real terms received by the United Nations system for operational activities since 2002 came to a halt in 2006;

(b) The continuing imbalance between core and non-core funding;

(c) The limited progress towards greater predictability and adequacy of funding;

6. Emphasizes that increasing financial contributions to the United Nations development system is key to achieving the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals, and in this regard recognizes the mutually reinforcing links between increased effectiveness, efficiency and coherence of the United Nations development system, achieving concrete results in assisting developing countries in eradicating poverty and achieving sustained economic growth and sustainable development through operational activities for development and the overall resourcing of the United Nations development system;

7. Stresses that core resources, because of their untied nature, continue to be the bedrock of the operational activities for development of the United Nations system;

8. Urges donor countries and other countries in a position to do so to substantially increase their voluntary contributions to the core/regular budgets of the United Nations development system, in particular its funds, programmes and specialized agencies, and to contribute on a multi-year basis, in a sustained and predictable manner;

9. Invites countries to consider increasing their contributions to the budgets of the specialized agencies in order to enable the United Nations development system to respond in a more comprehensive and effective manner to the demands of the United Nations development agenda;

10. Emphasizes the importance of taking measures to broaden the donor base and increase the number of donor countries and other partners making financial contributions to the United Nations development system in order to reduce reliance of the United Nations development system on a limited number of donors;

11. Welcomes the growth in funding provided to the United Nations system from non-governmental sources, such as civil society, private organizations and foundations;

12. Notes that non-core resources represent an important supplement to the regular resource base of the United Nations development system to support operational activities for development, thus contributing to an increase in total resources, while recognizing that non-core resources are not a substitute for core resources and that unearmarked contributions are vital for the coherence and harmonization of the operational activities for development;

13. Underscores the importance of mobilizing more predictable levels of voluntary contributions to the core operational programmes of the United Nations development system, recognizes the establishment of thematic trust funds, multi-donor trust funds and other voluntary non-earmarked funding mechanisms linked to organization-specific funding frameworks and strategies established by the respective governing bodies as funding modalities complementary to regular budgets, and encourages the measurement of the funding received by the United Nations development system through these modalities as part of the comprehensive statistical analysis of financing of operational activities for development of the United Nations system;

14. Recognizes the increasing complexity of the international aid architecture, and in this regard encourages the organizations of the United Nations development system to continue to explore ways to engage with other development partners in order to strengthen their complementarity and the implementation of their mandates, taking into account the importance of national priorities of programme countries, and requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the United Nations development system, to report on efforts in this regard in the context of his annual report on the implementation of resolution 62/208;

15. Encourages the organizations of the United Nations system, if they have not done so, to mobilize and allocate resources, on the basis of a strategic plan, including a multi-year resource programming framework;

16. Reiterates its request to the Secretary-General to take, in full consultation with Member States and observer States, measures:

(a) To promote an adequate and expanding base of development assistance from the United Nations system, taking into account, inter alia, the development priorities of programme countries;

(b) To promote an upward trend in real contributions to operational activities for development, to identify obstacles to the achievement of that goal, and to make appropriate recommendations in this regard;

(c) To promote the predictability and the multi-year pledging of funding for operational activities for development;

(d) To promote an appropriate balance between core and non-core contributions;

17. Requests the Secretary-General to report, in the context of his annual report on the implementation of resolution 62/208, on measures taken in response to paragraph 16 above, bearing in mind the provisions of the present resolution, and including feedback from Member States on ways to achieve the aims contained therein;

Aligning the strategic planning cycles of the United Nations funds and programmes with the comprehensive policy review of operational activities for development of the United Nations system

18. Decides to change the comprehensive policy review of operational activities from a triennial to a quadrennial cycle in order to better provide policy guidance to the United Nations funds and programmes and the specialized agencies;

19. Also decides in this regard to hold its next comprehensive policy review in 2012 and subsequent reviews on a quadrennial basis;

20. Urges the funds and programmes and encourages the specialized agencies to carry out any changes required to align their planning cycles with the quadrennial comprehensive policy review, including the implementation of midterm reviews as necessary, and to report to the Economic and Social Council on adjustments made to fit the new comprehensive review cycle at the substantive session of the Council.

Financing of operational activities

UN system expenditures on operational activities totalled $17.3 billion in 2007 [A/64/75-E/2009/59], the most recent year for which figures were available, compared to $15.9 billion in 2006, representing a nominal increase of 8.4 per cent over 2006 and an average annual increase of 9 per cent since 2003. Taking account of inflation and exchange rate movements, there was no change in expenditures in 2007 compared to 2006, while the real annual increase since 2003 was 3.3 per cent.

Of total expenditures for 2007, $4,679 million was distributed in development grants by UNDP and UNDP-administered funds; $2,642 million by WFP; $2,517 million by UNICEF; $1,760 million by the World Health Organization; $1,342 million by the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees; $699 million by UNRWA; $591 million by FAO; $515 million by UNFPA; $381 million by the International Labour Organization; $308 million by the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization; $239 million by the Joint United Nations Programme on HIV/AIDS (UNAIDS); $219 million by the United Nations Industrial Development Organization; $185 million by the UN Office on Drugs and Crime/UN International Drug Control Programme; $137 million by the UN Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs; $130 million by the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP);

$99 million by the United Nations Human Settlements Programme; $61 million by the UN Department of Economic and Social Affairs; $60 million by the International Trade Centre of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD); $58 million by the UN regional commissions; $32 million by UNCTAD; $2 million by the Peacebuilding Support Office; and $284 million by other specialized agencies. The International Fund for Agricultural Development (IFAD) disbursed $401 million in loans.

In July [DP/2008/40 & Add.1], the UNDP Administrator reported $13 billion in technical cooperation expenditures in 2007 (excluding the World Bank Group), a 6.5 per cent increase over the $12.2 billion expended in 2006. Executing and specialized agencies reported an increase of 14 per cent in technical assistance delivery to $3.5 billion. Increases were also reported by WFP (3.3 per cent to $2.8 billion); UNICEF (18.2 per cent, to $2.4 billion), and UNFPA (21.8 per cent, to $477.8 million). UNDP experienced a 4.5 per cent decrease in delivery, to $3.9 billion.

By region, Africa received the largest amount of development assistance (28 per cent or $3.7 billion), followed by Asia and the Pacific (21 per cent or $2.8 billion), the Arab States (19 per cent or $2.5 billion), Latin America and the Caribbean (16 per cent or $2.1 billion) and Europe (5 per cent or $0.6 billion). Interregional, global and other initiatives received 11 per cent or $1.3 billion. The top three recipients of the technical cooperation delivered were the Sudan ($982.7 million), Afghanistan ($482.2 million) and Brazil ($354.4 million), totalling $1.8 billion or 14 per cent out of the total of $13 billion. The next highest recipients were the Democratic Republic of the Congo ($340.3 million) and Ethiopia ($337.9 million). Spending in the humanitarian sector amounted to $3.2 billion (25 per cent of the total expenditure). Aggregate expenditure in the humanitarian, health, education, and agriculture, forestry and fisheries sectors amounted to $9.5 billion (73 per cent of the total), with the balance of $3.5 billion (27 per cent) spread among 15 other sectors.

The UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board, at its September session [E/2008/35 (dec. 2008/38)], took note of the report on UN system technical cooperation expenditures in 2007 and its addendum.

A later report [DP/2009/29 & Add.1] provided information on technical cooperation activities funded by UN system organizations in 2008. Expenditure of technical cooperation on the MDGs across the UN system and programme countries (excluding the World Bank group) reached $15.2 billion. Executing and specialized organizations reported an overall increase of 16.8 per cent in expenditure, from $3.5 billion in 2007 to $4.1 billion in 2008. UNDP expenditure grew 11 per cent to $4.3 billion in 2008, accounting for 28 per cent of the total spent on technical cooperation. WFP reported a 28 per cent increase in expenditure to $3.5 billion (23 per cent of the total). UNICEF spending increased 11 per cent to $2.7 billion (18 per cent of the total), and UNFPA spending increased 16 per cent to $554 million (4 per cent of the total). The combined expenditures of the other specialized organizations, funds and programmes amounted to $4.1 billion (27 per cent of the total). Assistance to developing nations from the World Bank/International Development Association amounted to $138.8 million—a decrease of 38.8 per cent compared with $227.2 million spent in 2007.

Contributions to executing and specialized organizations dropped nearly 12 per cent, from $4.1 billion in 2007 to $3.6 billion in 2008. Contributions to UNDP decreased some 2 per cent to $1 billion. Those received by WFP, however, increased 77 per cent to $5 billion. UNICEF funding increased 14 per cent to $3.4 billion; and UNFPA funding increased 12 per cent to $754.8 million.

Technical cooperation was distributed among the five major regions as follows: Africa, $4.4 billion (29 per cent of the total); Asia and the Pacific, $3.2 billion (21 per cent); the Arab States, $3.1 billion (21 per cent); Latin America and the Caribbean, approximately $1.8 billion (12 per cent); and Europe, $0.6 billion (4 per cent). Interregional, global and other initiatives accounted for the remaining $1.9 billion (13 per cent). Out of the combined pool of $15.2 billion, $5.4 billion (36 per cent) was spent among 15 programme countries. The three largest recipients of technical cooperation were the Sudan, receiving $1.1 billion (7 per cent) of the total; Afghanistan, receiving $729.9 million (5 per cent), and Ethiopia, receiving $489.6 million (3 per cent).

In 2008, UNDP mapped its corporate outcomes to the sector approach of the Administrative Committee on Coordination, renamed the United Nations System Chief Executives Board for Coordination. Applying the 2008 sector classification, the humanitarian assistance sector received $3.8 billion (25 per cent) of the total expenditure; health, some $3.1 billion (20 per cent); general development, $1.8 billion (12 per cent); education, $1 billion (7 per cent); and agriculture, forestry and fisheries $843.9 million (some 6 per cent). Aggregate expenditure for the five sectors was $10.5 billion (69 per cent of the total). The balance of the funds—approximately $4.6 billion, representing 31 per cent of the total technical cooperation amount expended—was spread among 15 sectors.

At the 2008 United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities (New York, 10 November) [A/CONF.208/2008/3], the Conference noted that several Governments would communicate their pledges to the Secretary-General as soon as they were able to do so.

In August [A/CONF.208/2008/2 & Corr.1] and September [A/CONF.208/2008/2/Add.1], the Secretary-General provided statements of contributions pledged or paid at the 2007 Pledging Conference, as at 30 June 2008, to 23 funds and programmes, amounting to some $584.9 million.

Voluntary contributions in UN system

The Joint Inspection Unit (JIU), in its report on voluntary contributions in UN system organizations: impact on programme delivery and resource mobilization strategies, which was issued in 2007 [YUN 2007, p. 1474] and subsequently transmitted by the Secretary-General to the General Assembly [A/62/546], found that extrabudgetary/non-core funding in UN system organizations grew at a faster rate than regular/core funding during the 2000–2005 period. The trends in voluntary funding had some positive effects on programme delivery, but the lack of predictability in such funding and its impact on the sustainability of programme delivery was a major concern. Conditions attached to voluntary contributions reduced the flexibility of funding and inhibited the secretariats of organizations in delivering their mandated programmes. Faced with increasing competition for resources, some organizations sought to increase the flow of funds from the private sector, but those resources remained a small component of overall funding from contributions. Some organizations made considerable progress in developing strategies for resource mobilization. UN system organizations and donor agencies were increasingly decentralizing funding processes and activities, which might give rise to inefficiencies, including duplication and lack of uniformity.

JIU recommended, among other measures, that the legislative bodies of each UN fund and programme establish an intergovernmental working group to develop proposals for a voluntary indicative scale of contributions for core resources, based on the model adopted by UNEP. The legislative bodies of UN system organizations should request their respective executive heads to: expedite work on the harmonization of support cost recovery policies being conducted under the auspices of CEB; ensure that agreements negotiated with individual donor countries for associate/junior professional officer programmes included a funding component from underrepresented countries; and develop a corporate resource mobilization strategy for the consideration and approval of the bodies.

By a January note [A/62/546/Add.1], the Secretary-General transmitted his comments on the JIU report and those of CEB. Although CEB generally concurred with the JIU recommendations, its members did not generally support the recommendation that the legislative bodies of each UN fund and programme should establish an intergovernmental working group to develop proposals for a voluntary indicative scale of contributions for core resources.

Technical cooperation through UNDP

In response to General Assembly resolutions 56/201 [YUN 2001, p. 783], 59/250 [YUN 2004, p. 868] and 62/208 [YUN 2007, p. 877] on the triennial comprehensive policy review of operational activities for development of the UN system, the UNDP Administrator and the UNFPA Executive Director issued a joint report in December [E/2009/5] on the reform programme of the Secretary-General and implementation of the review's provisions. The report stated that capacity development was the core UNDP service in programme countries, with priority given to creating opportunities for sustainable capacity, including institutional reform; the promotion of leadership, education and learning; and enhanced accountability. UNDP hosted a capacity development network with over 1,000 participants from UN organizations, Governments, and other development partners. It supported programme countries in all regions through capacity assessments and responses in the areas of programme delivery, disaster risk management and the implementation of national growth and development strategies and plans.

UNDP and UNFPA engaged with UN country teams in the "Delivering as one" pilot countries [YUN 2007, p. 1418] to simplify and harmonize processes and procedures and reduce transaction costs. A key initiative was the harmonization of financial regulations and rules among UNDP, UNICEF, UNFPA, WFP and the United Nations; the final harmonized financial regulations and rules were to be ready for consideration by the governing bodies of those entities in 2009. UNDP, UNFPA, UNICEF and WFP continued to implement the harmonized approach to cash transfers (HACT) across country offices in order to strengthen national capacities in public financial management. In 2008, 13 countries were fully HACT compliant, and many were partially compliant.

UNDP and UNFPA worked with 25 civil society and UN organizations in the areas of global policy on gender and climate change; climate change financing mechanisms that benefited women and men equitably; and the integration of women and gender into climate-change plans and processes. Responding to its South-South cooperation evaluation findings (see p. 988), UNDP was implementing a strategy to consolidate and strengthen its support to South-South cooperation with new country-level programming initiatives in South Africa, Timor-Leste and Zambia.

UNDP and its partners jointly reviewed UN coordination arrangements in the post-crisis recovery phase to strengthen the transition from relief to development, and established modalities to provide predictable and sustainable coordination support to UN country teams and partners in transition countries.

The UN Evaluation Group (UNEG) formally entrusted UNDP with the responsibility of being its Executive Coordinator and hosting its secretariat. The UNEG programme of work focused on UN reform and evaluation, the evaluation function, and professionalizing evaluation. Internationally agreed development goals, including the MDGs, formed the cornerstone of UNDP and UNFPA work at the international, regional, national and local levels. Some 23 countries had completed MDG needs assessments, and more than 60 countries were involved in MDG-based planning.

On 24 January [dec. 2008/7], the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board took note of the report of the Administrator and Executive Director on 2007 activities [YUN 2007, p. 887]; transmitted the report to the Economic and Social Council; and requested UNDP and UNFPA to include in future reports a more qualitative assessment and analysis of results achieved, progress made and difficulties encountered, as well as lessons learned.

The Council took note of the 2007 report on 18 July (decision 2008/215).

UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board

In 2008, the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board held its first (21–28 January) and second (8–12 and 19 September) sessions in New York, and an annual session (16–27 June) in Geneva [E/2008/35].

The Board adopted 38 decisions in 2008, including those providing an overview of actions taken at its January [E/2008/35 (dec. 2008/8)], June [dec. 2008/25] and September [dec. 2008/38] sessions. Other decisions dealt with the work of UNDP, the United Nations Office for Project Services and the United Nations Capital Development Fund (see above and sections below), as well as that of UNFPA (see PART THREE, Chapter VIII) and the United Nations Development Fund for Women (UNIFEM) (see PART THREE, Chapter X).

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 2008/215 of 18 July, took note of the Board's report on its work in 2007 [YUN 2007, p. 887].

UNDP/UNFPA reports

Human Development Report

The Executive Board, at its annual session in June, considered an April update report [DP/2008/30] on the Human Development Report consultations. In response to General Assembly resolution 57/264 [YUN 2002, p. 841], the report detailed actions taken to improve the quality of consultations with Member States and with the community of human development practitioners at large. It also described the content of informal consultations held in 2008, including a consultation held by the Director of the Human Development Report Office, who ceased his functions as at 31 December 2008; a consultation on the selection of the theme of the Human Development Report 2009 and plans for the elaboration of the 2010 Report; and a thematic consultation on statistics. Following the usual practice, the Office, which was charged with preparing the Report, held a special network consultation in 2008 to choose the theme for the Human Development Report 2009.

The Executive Board took note of the update report in June [dec. 2008/25].

A later report [DP/2009/17] stated that the Human Development Indices: A statistical update 2008 was released in December. For the first time, the human development index was released separately from the main report, so as to explain significant changes in the underlying data. In June 2008, the Office announced that Human Development Report 2009 would focus on migration. The Office held an informal consultation with the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board on 17 November to review the concept note and outline for the 2009 Report.

UNDP operational activities

Country and regional programmes

The UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board, at its January session [dec. 2008/8], approved country programme documents for 14 countries; multi-country programmes for 2 countries; and 3 regional programmes.

At its annual session in June [dec. 2008/25], the Board took note of draft country programme documents and the comments made thereon for four countries. It also took note of the one-year extensions of the country programmes for Afghanistan, Argentina, Ecuador, Guatemala, the Republic of Korea and the Turks and Caicos Islands, and approved the two-year extension of the country programme for Pakistan; information on the extensions was provided in an April note by the UNDP Administrator [DP/2008/31]. At the same session, the Board took note of reports on the joint field visit of the Executive Boards of UNDP/UNFPA, UNICEF and WFP to Haiti (1–9 March) [DP/FPA/2008/CRP.1-E/ICEF/2008/CRP.11] and the joint field visit of the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board to Kazakhstan (6–12 April) [DP/2008/CRP.3-DP/FPA/2008/CRP.2].

At the same session [dec. 2008/11], the Executive Board requested UNDP and UNFPA to provide a short explanation of the reasons for the deferment of draft country programme documents from the Board's annual session to its second regular session, and urged them to increase their efforts to present such documents at the annual session, as decided by the Board in 2006 [YUN 2006, p. 1038].

At its second regular session in September [dec. 2008/38], the Board approved country programmes for four countries. It also approved a second one-year extension of the programme for Burundi and a third one-year extension of the programme for Lebanon; information on the extensions was provided in a July note by the Administrator [DP/2008/48]. It took note of the draft country programme documents and comments made thereon for nine countries. The Board also organized an oral briefing on the UNDP response to the humanitarian emergency caused by Cyclone Nargis, which struck Myanmar in May (see p. 421).

UNDP global programme

Evaluation of third global cooperation framework, 2005–2007

A July report [DP/2008/44] summarized the findings, conclusions and recommendations of the independent evaluation of the third UNDP global cooperation framework for the 2005–2007 period [YUN 2005, p. 964], the duration of which was extended by the Board in June 2007 for one year. The evaluation found that the framework had fallen short in its strategic mission to underpin and integrate the UNDP practice architecture. Its effectiveness in meeting demand was constrained by weak strategic choices regarding focus areas, implementation modalities, allocation of resources and partnerships. Although it had contributed to UNDP becoming a more globally networked knowledge organization, weak management and lack of corporate oversight had limited its effectiveness. The evaluation concluded that, although the third global framework did not fulfil its role, there was a need for a global programme in UNDP.

The evaluation recommended that UNDP design a new programme that would be based on demand from programme countries, be fully integrated within UNDP, and add value as a global programme. It should clearly set out its global role, development goals, a strategic focus and a corresponding results and accountability framework based on a clear rationale and criteria to distinguish global programme initiatives from those at the regional and country levels, as well as a programme approach, to replace the current framework approach. The global programme should also be based on a clear definition of its global contribution and its contribution to programme countries, through the UNDP regional and country programme architecture; alignment with the UNDP strategic plan; a concentration on mainstreaming approaches in the cross-cutting areas of gender equality, capacity development and HIV/AIDS; and the identification of means to reduce the dependency on the global programme to fund required posts. UNDP should develop improved corporate strategies and delivery mechanisms so the new global programme might better support the achievement of results at the country level. The programme should have an explicit strategy to partner systematically with other UN agencies and development institutions, with the aim of fostering policy debates and approaches critical to programme countries for the achievement of their development goals. UNDP should establish a system to ensure results orientation and accountability for the new global programme, and institutionalize mechanisms to ensure corporate oversight and ownership of the programme.

In its August response [DP/2008/45] to the evaluation of the third global programme (formerly known as the global cooperation framework), UNDP management expressed its agreement with the findings related to the weaknesses of the programme in monitoring and evaluation, the reporting of results, and some aspects of programme management. Subsequent actions were aimed at improving substantive focus and arrangements for policy development, service delivery, results-based management, transparency and accountability, and the relevance and quality of UNDP work.

Under the fourth global programme, resources would continue to be used to support country and regional development initiatives. Although the primary role of UNDP was to support country-level development programmes, it was also essential that it engage global processes to ensure that policies were developed on the basis of a thorough understanding of country-level needs and opportunities. Integrated teams across country, regional and global units would identify and respond to demand and emerging issues, promoting consistency and quality while ensuring that the advice and input provided were grounded in local reality.

In September [dec. 2008/32], the Executive Board took note of the conclusions of the evaluation of the third global cooperation programme framework and the related management response. It requested that UNDP continue to reflect the conclusions in the new fourth global programme, 2009–2011 (see below), and in its implementation.

Global programme, 2009–2011

The UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board, at its September session, considered the fourth UNDP global programme, 2009–2011 [DP/GP/2], which was designed to streamline UNDP policy approaches across its mandated areas and facilitate communication between local and global actors. It would play a vital role in the implementation of the UNDP strategic plan, 2008–2011 [YUN 2007, p. 897], strengthening the ability of country offices to respond quickly and effectively, and using global engagement to identify opportunities, resources and innovations that could help countries address multifaceted development challenges. The purpose of the proposed programme was to support countries in achieving internationally agreed development goals, including the MDGs. The global programme was charged with supporting both development and institutional results. It highlighted the mainstreaming of cross-cutting results in the areas of capacity development, gender equality and women's empowerment, and South-South cooperation. Through the global programme, UNDP aimed to connect country, regional and headquarters staff to share expertise and knowledge from across the UN development system.

The UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board, at its September session [dec. 2008/32], reaffirmed that all activities under the global programme 2009–2011 would be fully consistent with the provisions of General Assembly resolution 62/208 on the triennial comprehensive policy review [YUN 2007, p. 877] and the revised 2008–2011 UNDP strategic plan (see p. 975). It requested the UNDP Administrator, in the context of proposals to be presented to the Board in line with its decision on realigning the cost classification of UNDP activities (see p. 977), to include proposals on the future classification of UNDP policy advisory capacities. The Administrator was also asked to include, in his annual report to the Board, improvements and implementation of the global programme, 2009–2011. The Board noted that a midterm review of the global programme would be submitted in 2010, and a final comprehensive report on performance and results would be submitted in 2012. It approved the global programme, 2009–2011, and decided that the decision would serve as the preface to, and an integral part of, the global programme.

Implementation of Paris Declaration on Aid Effectiveness

The UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board, at its June session, considered a summary report [DP/2008/28 & Corr.1,2] on the joint evaluation of the United Nations Development Group (UNDG) contribution to the implementation of the 2005 Paris Declaration on Aid Effectiveness [YUN 2005, p. 957]. In 2006, UNDG, a Declaration signatory, agreed with partner countries and donors to conduct an evaluation of its contribution to implementing the Declaration between 2007 and 2010, using a two-phased approach. The first phase focused on inputs, the implementation process and outputs. The evaluation was conducted jointly with IFAD, UNAIDS, the United Nations Economic Commission for Africa, UNFPA and UNIFEM. Nine countries and 11 development partner organizations conducted an evaluation of their performance under the Declaration as an input to the first phase.

The evaluation concluded that the UNDG experience in applying the principles of the Declaration varied substantially across the principles. The role of the resident coordinator and the UN country team extended beyond the Declaration's aid effectiveness objectives. The UNDG/UN country team assisted Governments in strengthening capacities to prepare and execute their country development strategies and deal with new aid modalities, including sector-wide approaches and direct budget support.

Areas of progress included aligning the planning cycles of United Nations Development Assistance Frameworks with those of national development plans. Some progress was also made in improving coordination among country team members and other development partners, mainly under the harmonized approach to cash transfers initiative. Implementation of the Declaration's principles among the crosscutting issues was uneven. UNAIDS—a UNDG entity—was helpful in implementing the principles in the critical area of HIV/AIDS, but implementation was less successful in the remaining three cross-cutting issues of gender equality, rural development and capacity development.

The report recommended that UNDG make increased use of national systems for support services, when appropriate and to the benefit of the partner countries, in order to strengthen national capacities and reduce transaction costs. UNDG should further harmonize and simplify its business practices in order to increase the accountability and transparency of operational activities and further standardize and harmonize concepts and practices. It should create specific, measurable, achievable and relevant results frameworks and strategies, and encourage partner countries to initiate and conduct joint and country-led evaluations.

UNDP management submitted its response to the evaluation in June [DP/2008/29].

At its June session [dec. 2008/19], the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board, having considered the evaluation of the UNDG contribution to implementing the Paris Declaration and the management response thereto, encouraged UNDP to continue to make increased use of national systems to strengthen national capacities and reduce transaction costs, and conduct joint evaluations with UN organizations on development effectiveness while retaining a focus on UNDP accountability, in order to increase the value of evaluation to programme countries.

UNDP role in Arab region net contributor countries

In June, the Executive Board had before it the independent evaluation, issued in March [DP/2008/26 & Corr.1,2], of the role of UNDP in the net contributor countries (NCCs) of the Arab region. All countries were eligible to participate in UNDP programmes, but those with higher levels of income were affected by special policies that limited the resources that UNDP could provide. The five NCCs within the group of Arab States—Bahrain, Kuwait, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Saudi Arabia, and the United Arab Emirates—had experienced rapidly growing economies and were moving towards greater political openness. At the same time, they had to adapt to globalization and find their role in the new external environment. Their relationship with UNDP had to change to reflect those realities.

Apart from Libya, all the Arab region NCCs were high-income countries in the “high human development” category, and all were making progress towards achieving the MDGs. Poverty existed in Libya and Saudi Arabia, but it had largely been eradicated in the other three countries. Bahrain, Kuwait, Libya and the United Arab Emirates had achieved universal primary education, and Saudi Arabia was making significant progress towards that goal. All five countries, however, faced challenges in the areas of economic diversification, employment creation, public administration and governance, gender equality, and protecting the environment.

The evaluation found a strong justification for a strengthened UNDP presence in the five Arab region NCCs. UNDP should be prepared to respond to the demands of NCCs with greater flexibility in a new relationship based on full and equal partnership at the strategic and programmatic levels. The UNDP minimum delivery threshold to justify a country office presence needed to be revisited and specific guidelines developed on the application of UNDP policies to NCCs. The evaluation recommended that the overall relationship and interaction between UNDP headquarters units and country offices in the Arab region NCCs be strengthened to align them more closely with evolving UNDP strategies and policies.

UNDP management, in its April response to the evaluation [DP/2008/27], stated that fulfilling the UNDP policy requirement of delivering a minimum of $10 million per programming cycle to justify a UNDP country presence had been a challenge for some NCCs, and UNDP would explore improving the country presence criteria, as recommended by the evaluation. UNDP welcomed the recommendation to redefine its role and strategy in the NCC context and develop a common understanding and set of approaches for technical cooperation. It would strengthen its substantive engagement in programmes and improve the quality of its technical advisory services. UNDP would also explore opportunities for joint programming with relevant UN agencies.

UNDP recognized the important role that it could play in facilitating Government, civil society and private-sector partnerships, as well as in providing capacity-building support to civil society organizations, given the nascent state of such organizations in most NCCs. In the context of national execution, UNDP needed to harmonize project management and implementation systems with national systems. It fully accepted the recommendations to strengthen the capacity of country offices to contribute to the development effectiveness of UNDP programmes and projects in the Arab States NCCs. As an interim measure, UNDP had taken action to place deputy resident representatives, using extrabudgetary funding, in all of the NCCs except Bahrain, where such representatives would be placed in the near future. In order to meet the specific needs of NCCs looking to UNDP for the delivery for high-end consultancy services and skills, UNDP would provide dedicated support to the NCCs within the structure of its Regional Service Centre for the Arab States.

During its June session [dec. 2008/18], the Executive Board took note of the evaluation and the management response. It requested UNDP to include the Board in its consultations concerning the review and development of criteria for continued UNDP presence in NCCs. The Board urged UNDP to give high priority to strengthening its support to NCCs in the area of capacity development, based on national priorities and systems, in order to strengthen the sustainability of its programming.

UNDP programme results

UNDP activities under the 2008–2011 strategic plan, endorsed by the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board in 2007 [YUN 2007, p. 898] and updated in 2008 (see p. 975), were conducted in four focus areas: poverty reduction and achievement of the MDGs, democratic governance, crisis prevention and recovery, and environment and sustainable development. Other areas of work, as outlined in a later report on the operationalization of the UNDP strategic plan [DP/2009/11], included capacity-building and development, gender equality and women's empowerment, and South-South cooperation.

(For information on South-South cooperation, see p. 988; for all other areas of UNDP work, see sections below.)

Poverty eradication and MDG achievement

In 2008, increased food prices, turmoil in financial markets, economic downturns and climate change

had a particular impact on the poor, with long-term implications for poverty reduction and human development. Working with its global partners, UNDP would: help build national capacities to manage crises and address their long-term implications through initiatives to assess the impact of crises on growth and human development; monitor vulnerability; and provide countries with policy options for combining short-term growth and poverty reduction strategies with longer-term efforts to build resilience to volatility in the world economy.

Other initiatives would aim to strengthen national capacities to attract and manage domestic and external resources, and develop and implement national development strategies based on the MDGs to address bottlenecks, scale up proven MDG interventions, and prioritize the needs of the most vulnerable.

During the year, UNDP contributed to the development of tools and analysis for monitoring MDG achievements and partnered with UN regional commissions, Governments, and civil society organizations to improve MDG monitoring and reporting.

Democratic governance

UNDP support to public administration reform sought to build capacities to address development challenges at the national and local levels, with activities in 89 programme countries. It also supported the work of national parliaments in over 50 programme countries, including through an initiative to enhance parliamentary oversight of human security in post-conflict countries. A significant development was the increased demand from programme countries for strengthening the electoral cycle. The Bangladesh Electoral Commission, supported by UNDP and donors, trained 500,000 people, who in turn registered 81 million voters, nearly 51 per cent of them female. Globally, UNDP directly supported 19 electoral processes.

Many UNDP initiatives focused on strengthening youth participation in development, in cooperation with the United Nations Volunteers programme. Access to information, which UNDP directly supported in 12 countries, was being mainstreamed into more traditional areas such as local governance and public administration reform.

Within the framework of the 2003 United Nations Convention against Corruption, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 58/4 [YUN 2003, p. 1127], UNDP supported 12 programme countries with anti-corruption initiatives and provided technical advice on anti-corruption for programmes on strengthening institutions.

Crisis prevention and recovery

Crisis affected 45 to 60 per cent of the countries in which UNDP worked. UNDP sought to help those countries develop capacities for preventing and mitigating the effects of crisis, elaborate strategic options for addressing long-term implications and promote recovery. Disaster risk reduction was the largest area of demand, with activities in 37 countries. At the local level, activities included support to community-based disaster risk reduction programmes, strengthening local early warning systems and urban disaster risk management.

Based on demand, UNDP established early recovery coordination mechanisms in 28 programme countries, deployed early recovery advisers to 20 countries, and supported needs assessments and strategic frameworks in 10 countries. The demand for developing capacities to manage potentially violent tensions also increased in 2008. In response to demand from nine programme countries, UNDP launched a global initiative on strengthening the rule of law in conflict and post-conflict situations. Reintegration programmes highlighted the critical contribution of employment and income generation to peacebuilding, as well as the importance of providing “peace dividends” to communities affected by conflict.

Environment and sustainable development

UNDP, through its new climate change strategy, sought to focus the attention of the development community on issues related to climate change, and help countries develop public policies and partnerships to leverage resources, transform markets and drive investment towards initiatives on lower carbon emissions and climate resilience. In 2008, UNDP mobilized more than $500 million in grant resources and more than $1 billion in related co-financing through the Global Environment Facility (GEF), the Multilateral Fund of the 1987 Montreal Protocol on Substances that Deplete the Ozone Layer [YUN 1987, p. 686], and other initiatives. UNDP was assisting programme countries in removing barriers and finding new sources of environmental financing through such mechanisms as the MDG Carbon Facility, which mobilized private-sector financing for developing countries through global carbon markets. The Facility screened 160 projects in 31 countries in 2008.

With support from Japan, UNDP designed a $92 million programme to integrate climate change issues into national development processes in 21 countries in Africa. The GEF Small Grants Programme expanded its portfolio and secured additional funding for activities that supported community-based adaptation to climate change. With 300 projects in 60 countries,

UNDP helped expand local access to energy services for over half a million people.

Evaluation of UNDP role in the environment and energy

In September, the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board considered a July report [DP/2008/46] on the evaluation, conducted by the UNDP Evaluation Office, of the role and contribution of UNDP in the area of the environment and energy at the global, regional and national levels. The evaluation team visited eight countries and two regional centres. Global consultations focused on UNDP headquarters staff and management, and on organizations whose interests and goals overlapped with those of UNDP. The evaluation was hampered by a lack of reliable financial data for activities not financed by GEF and a lack of useful performance measures.

The report stated that the project design and the implementation work carried out by UNDP and its partners were generally of high quality. The availability of GEF funding, however, was the most important driving force determining where, how, and when UNDP country-level environment and energy work was undertaken. As a result, high-priority national environmental issues—including environmental health, water supply and sanitation, and energy management—were replaced by GEF priorities related to climate change mitigation, biodiversity and international waters. UNDP staff at headquarters and in the regional centres were recognized for their expertise and the results they achieved, but most were funded through extrabudgetary sources, which was not conducive to long-term capacity or career development.

The evaluation concluded that energy and the environment were central to the UNDP mission, and the UNDP role in that area within the United Nations was potentially important but not fully realized. UNDP responsiveness to national priorities was uneven, and the type and effectiveness of the Programme’s environment and energy work varied significantly between partner countries. Capacity for planning and managing environment and energy work also varied considerably within UNDP, and most country offices lacked the capacity to engage in high-level policy dialogue with Governments. The mainstreaming of environmental considerations in other major UNDP practice areas was limited at all levels, and measuring progress continued to be a challenge.

The evaluation recommended that UNDP demonstrate more clearly the pursuit of its mandate with regard to the environment and energy, rather than the specific priorities of a limited number of major donors or funds. UNDP should assume a proactive role to respond to national priorities, and identify and implement institutional arrangements and incentives to promote the mainstreaming of environmental considerations throughout all major practice areas. It should also identify options for strengthening the environment and energy capacities of its country offices.

In its August response to the evaluation [DP/2008/47], UNDP management stated that many of the issues raised had received considerable attention, but much work remained to be done. UNDP took steps to augment its funding base, resulting in some successes at the global level. In that regard, Spain was channelling $62.5 million through UNDP under the Millennium Development Goals Achievement Fund for environment and climate change. The Gates Foundation committed $19 million to promote energy access for the poor in West Africa, and Japan was providing $92.7 million through UNDP to support climate change adaptation in Africa.

UNDP committed itself to promoting the visibility and prominence of environmental concerns by making environment and sustainable development one of its four main focus areas, and establishing environment and energy as a distinct practice. It was working with UNDG to enhance guidance and support on mainstreaming environmental sustainability and integrating climate change into programming. UNDP was negotiating the renewal of its three-year memorandum of understanding with UNEP, including agreements and working arrangements on the Poverty and Environment Initiative. In February, it launched an enhanced, results-based management platform that included tools for managing for results in support of national development priorities; provided UNDP with performance data for accountability purposes, organizational learning and decision-making; and provided the substantive basis for communicating UNDP results to the general public.

In September [dec. 2008/30], the Executive Board took note of the evaluation and the management response. It emphasized the need for UNDP to strengthen national capacity development in the area of the environment and energy, and urged it to improve its responsiveness to national priorities, especially the specific needs of least developed countries and small island developing States. It requested the Administrator to identify and implement institutional mechanisms and incentives to mainstream the environment and energy into all major practice areas, and to strengthen its capacities throughout the organization, especially in UNDP country offices. The Administrator was also asked to report orally to the Board at its first regular session in 2009 on the UNDP strategy on the environment and energy, based on the evaluation, and on the finalization of its memorandum of understanding with UNEP.

Capacity development

The strategic plan, 2008–2011, endorsed by the Executive Board in 2007 [YUN 2007, p. 898], positioned capacity development as the overarching service provided by UNDP to programme countries. Demand increased in 2008, particularly for mainstreaming capacity development into programmes and projects; designing thematic, sector and national capacity development plans; and the provision of collective approaches to capacity development by the UN development system. UNDP responded to requests to facilitate capacity assessments and diagnostics in 65 programme countries. It helped shape a UN approach to capacity development by designing materials to assist UN country teams in integrating capacity development into frameworks and programmes, and facilitating inter-agency learning on the issue. UNDP would improve its services and focus on helping programme countries to scale up and sustain capacity development, adapt and respond to global crises, and deliver on human development.

Gender equality and women's empowerment

UNDP embarked on a programme to integrate gender equality throughout its work and ensure that countries were supported in reducing gender inequality and improving women's lives. With UNDP support, the Governments of 22 African countries adopted and incorporated gender needs assessments as planning and costing tools. In Latin America, UNDP partnered with the private sector, civil society, mass media and Government on innovative approaches to address gender-based violence. Attention and resources were focused on integrating women's needs into UNDP crisis prevention and recovery operations through the provision of dedicated resources for women's empowerment, the deployment of experienced gender advisors and the adoption of performance incentives.

Programming arrangements

At its January session, the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board considered a report on providing information on the "target for resources assignment from the core" (TRAC)-2 allocation methodology and criteria for establishing fixed lines in programming arrangements [DP/2008/14]; the report was submitted in response to a 2007 Board decision [YUN 2007, p. 895]. UNDP employed three primary criteria as the main determinants for allocating TRAC-2 resources: national capacities for the MDGs and human development, policy and plans; national capacities for implementing development strategies and goals; and response to emerging development priorities of programme countries. At the beginning of each programming cycle, TRAC-1 resources were computed and allocated based on the latest gross national income per capita (GNI) and population data available. For the 2008–2011 programming period, the 2005 GNI and population data would be used. TRAC-2 resources were allocated based on a thorough assessment of the effective integration by country programmes of some of the criteria. The overall quality of programmes remained a key cross-cutting element. The TRAC-2 framework was implemented through the common country assessment/UNDAF and country programme document/action plan process. Annexes to the report contained information on the total TRAC-2 allocation per country from 2004 to 2007; regional shares and distribution by income categories; and the fixed lines in the programming arrangements for the 2008–2011 period.

Monitoring and evaluation

The UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board, at its June session, considered the annual report on evaluation in UNDP, issued in April [DP/2008/25]. The report, which covered the period from March 2007 to February 2008, provided information on evaluation coverage, compliance, quality, institutional arrangements and use. It highlighted systematic constraints to effective implementation of the evaluation policy. The report also presented key findings and outlined the proposed UNDP Evaluation Office programme of work for the 2008–2009 period.

The Evaluation Office and evaluation units in the associated funds and programmes continued to support the effective implementation of the evaluation policy by all parts of the organization. The Office revised the operational guidelines for evaluation in the UNDP Programme and Operations Policies and Procedures to promote good evaluation practices. It was also revising the Handbook for Monitoring and Evaluation for Results to reflect the requirements and principles of the evaluation policy, as well as the United Nations Evaluation Group (UNEG) Standards for Evaluation in the UN system. UNDP and its associated funds and programmes continued to build on professional partnerships in evaluation with UNEG, the OECD/Development Assistance Committee (DAC) Network on Evaluation and other partners.

The Evaluation Office conducted nine evaluations during the reporting period. Programme units completed 186 evaluations, including two by the regional bureaux and one by the Bureau for Development Policy. At the country level, UNDP offices in 137 countries completed 183 evaluations, of which 138 were project evaluations and 28 were outcome evaluations. The evaluations found that the comparative advantages of UNDP, including its ability to bring partners together and its universal presence, enabled it to establish relationships with a wide range of national and international actors, and to play a useful role in advocacy, facilitation and coordination. The evaluations also found, however, that UNDP did not fully utilize its development knowledge. Inadequate regular resources restricted the UNDP ability to pursue core activities related to its priorities. The evaluations stressed that efforts to mobilize resources should not detract from strategic focus. UNDP should continue to build its capacity in its core areas of competence while recognizing the importance of raising resources. Capacity development continued to be central to the work of UNDP, but its contribution to strengthening local capacities was mixed. UNDP partnership and engagement with Governments was generally strong, but partnerships with the private sector and civil society were often weak or not fully used.

In June [dec. 2008/17], the Executive Board took note of the annual report on evaluation and urged the relevant evaluation units to provide additional information and analysis on the evaluation functions and activities of the United Nations Capital Development Fund (UNCDF), UNIFEM and the United Nations Volunteers programme in future annual reports. It requested the UNDP Administrator to increase oversight to improve the quality and implementation of country office evaluation plans. The Administrator was also asked to strengthen regional and country office capacities in results-based management, project design, monitoring and reporting. The Board urged UNDP to strengthen senior management supervision and support for monitoring and evaluation by programme units, and continue to improve its use of evaluation to support learning and a culture of results. UNDP was asked to continue to support national partners in developing capacities, so as to exercise their national ownership in evaluation, and report to the Board in 2009 on its follow-up to management responses. The Board approved the assessments of development results and activities to strengthen the evaluation function from the proposed 2008–2009 programme of work for the Evaluation Office. It requested additional consultation on the new independent evaluations to be conducted by the Evaluation Office, as proposed in the programme of work, for approval at the second regular Executive Board session in September 2008.

An August report [DP/2008/49] submitted in response to the Board's June decision contained additional information on the 2008–2009 Evaluation Office work programme, which included nine new evaluations. In September [dec. 2008/31], the Executive Board approved the independent evaluations contained in the work programme and the August report. It stressed the importance of clear linkages of subsequent work programmes with the UNDP strategic plan, 2008–2011 [YUN 2007, p. 897].

Evaluation of results-based management in UNDP

At its January session, the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board considered a report containing the executive summary of the evaluation of results-based management in UNDP [DP/2008/6]. The evaluation focused on the organizational strategy, vision and expectations of the results-based management approach; the design, implementation and use of the system to operationalize the approach; and the results of those efforts. The scope of the study covered the 1999–2006 period, all geographic regions, and the adoption of results-based management at the programme, country, regional and corporate levels.

The evaluation found that the goals in the UNDP strategic framework had changed in presentation, but the underlying areas of work remained the same. Focus areas under the goals were rationalized and simplified, but it was difficult to identify substantive change in the scope of activities at the country level. Overall, UNDP established a cycle of setting and revising corporate goals, introduced improved office systems to manage project finances, institutionalized the need to report on performance, and raised awareness about results throughout the organization. It concluded that the UNDP experience with introducing results-based management was similar to that of other organizations. UNDP had a weak culture of results, however, and its corporatist approach had only a limited effect on development effectiveness at the country level. Results-based management had been misinterpreted as not supporting the decentralized way in which UNDP worked, and improved financial administration and management systems were not helping build a results-based culture. The report recommended that UNDP strengthen its leadership and direction; sharpen the role of the strategic results framework to distinguish more clearly between corporate goals and country programme outcomes; support managing for outcomes at country offices; and expand investment in, and the use of, evaluation and performance audits.

UNDP management, in its response to the evaluation [DP/2008/7], stated that many of the issues raised confirmed certain persistent limitations with respect to the implementation of results-based management that UNDP was committed to addressing. The findings might have overestimated what could be attributed to UNDP, but they provided the Programme with a number of useful inputs for organizational learning. The report outlined the main conclusions and recommendations of the evaluation report and the UNDP response, including steps that the Programme was taking to address the issues raised in the evaluation.

In January [dec. 2008/8], the Executive Board took note of the evaluation of results-based management in UNDP and the management response to the evaluation.

Multi-year funding framework, 2004–2007

At its annual session in June, the Executive Board considered an April report [DP/2008/23 & Corr.1] on UNDP performance and results for 2007, the final year of the 2004–2007 multi-year funding framework (MYFF) cycle. The report, which complemented the 2007 cumulative MYFF report [YUN 2007, p. 896], contained an overview of the global UNDP portfolio; highlighted trends in demand and performance, and described UNDP work on the ground during the year. It also provided an update on priority UNDP management activities and work in support of UN coordination efforts, and reviewed income and expenditures. The Board also had before it a statistical annex, issued in May [DP/2008/23/Add.2], and a joint UNDP/UNFPA report, issued in April [DP/2008/23/Add.1-DP/FPA/2008/5(Part II)], which provided a synopsis of management responses to key recommendations of JIU in 2007 that were of specific relevance to those organizations.

At the same session [dec. 2008/14], the Executive Board took note of the MYFF report on UNDP performance and results for 2007 and the statistical annex. It noted with concern that the poverty eradication practice area did not receive top priority in terms of the percentage of total spending during 2007, and emphasized that appropriate activities should be used to support direct poverty reduction initiatives. The Board urged UNDP to undertake relevant poverty reduction activities and give top priority to achieving the MDGs and reducing human poverty. It reaffirmed the commitment of UNDP to results-based management and programming and requested UNDP to include in future reports, starting in 2009, a comprehensive comparative analysis of spending for UN system coordination and programming. The Board took note of the report on the 2007 recommendations of JIU and urged UNDP to continue to pay particular attention to the recommendations relating to human resources management. It noted with concern that earmarked resources continued to far exceed UNDP regular resources, which affected the ability of UNDP to fulfil its mandate adequately and to effectively support the development agenda of partner countries. UNDP was urged to give enhanced priority to direct poverty reduction results in implementing the strategic plan, 2008–2011 (see p. 975). The Board asked UNDP to allocate sufficient levels of financial and staff resources across the practice areas of the strategic plan, with particular attention to least developed countries, in the context of achieving the MDGs, and to report in that regard at the Board's 2009 annual session. UNDP was also asked to submit, in 2009, a distribution of total and regular resources expenditure by practice area, and to highlight in future reports per capita programme expenditure and programme expenditure figures for the least developed countries.

Strategic plan, 2008–2011

The UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board, at its annual session in June, considered a May report [DP/2007/43/Rev.1] containing the updated UNDP strategic plan, 2008–2011. The plan was endorsed by the Board in 2007 [YUN 2007, p. 898] and was subsequently revised pursuant to the same decision. Addenda to the report discussed the development and institutional results frameworks of the strategic plan [DP/2007/43/Add.1] and the implications for the plan of General Assembly resolution 62/208 on the triennial comprehensive policy review of operational activities for development of the UN system [YUN 2007, p. 877].

At the same session [dec. 2008/15], the Executive Board took note of the revisions to the UNDP strategic plan, 2008–2011, as contained in the May report.

Financial and administrative matters

The UNDP Administrator, in his annual review of the financial situation [DP/2009/28 & Corr.1 & Add.1], reported that total income in 2008 was $6.03 billion, comprised of contributions ($5.5 billion), interest ($180 million) and other income ($360 million). Total contributions to UNDP, in nominal terms, were $5.5 billion, 6 per cent above the 2007 level of $5.19 billion. Regular resources contributions to UNDP registered $1.1 billion, amounting to 20 per cent of overall contributions, whereas other resources contributions reached $4.16 billion, representing 75.5 per cent of total contributions in 2008. Total income in nominal terms, including interest and other income, increased by 6 per cent, from $1.14 billion in 2007 to $1.21 billion in 2008. Total expenditure increased by 9 per cent, from $965 million to $1.05 billion.

Of the total other resources contributions of $4.16 billion, $1.44 billion was contributed by bilateral donor Governments; $1.35 billion came from non-bilateral/multilateral sources; $960 million from local sources; and $410 million from other sources. Contributions from the top 10 donors decreased by 5 per cent in 2008 to $859 million in nominal terms, down from $900 million in 2007. In real terms, 2008 contributions totalled $827 million, representing an 8 per cent decrease from 2007. The value of fund flows for multi-donor trust funds, joint programmes and support to other UN organizations totalled $1.5 billion in 2008, down from $1.9 billion in 2007.

Programme expenditure, including programme support to the resident coordinator system, development support services, and the UNDP economist programme, increased by 10 per cent, from $561 million in 2007 to $617 million in 2008. By category, 74 per cent of expenditure in 2008 was spent on the harmonized biennial support budget functions, 19 per cent on the UNDP-specific function of country office support to UN activities, 1 per cent on the United Nations Development Operations Coordination Office, 5 per cent on the United Nations Volunteers (UNV) programme, and 1 per cent on UNCDF. In total, 62 per cent of the 2008–2009 biennial support budget expenditure related to country offices, with the remaining 38 per cent attributed to headquarters locations, including UNV.

By region, Africa recorded the highest expenditure of regular resources, with $286 million, followed by Asia and the Pacific with $140 million, Europe and the Commonwealth of Independent States with $47 million, the Arab States with $42 million and Latin America with $34 million. The expenditure for global and other programmes was $64 million.

Overall income of other resources increased by $220 million (5 per cent), from $4.33 billion in 2007 to $4.55 billion in 2008. In real terms, income increased by $260 million or 6 per cent, from $4.11 billion in 2007 to $4.37 billion in 2008. At the end of 2008, the balance of unexpended regular resources was $499 million, an increase of 32 per cent over the 2007 figure of $377 million.

In September [dec. 2008/27], the Executive Board took note of the Administrator's annual review of the financial situation for 2007 [YUN 2007, p. 898].

Regular funding commitments to UNDP

In May [DP/2008/24], UNDP submitted a report on the status of regular funding commitments to the Programme and its associated funds and programmes for 2008 and onward. Following five consecutive years of increases in UNDP regular resources since 2001, resources remained at the 2005 level in 2006, but increased again in 2007. Provisional data showed that contributions to regular resources for 2007 reached $1.1 billion. Some donors, however, announced reductions in their contributions, while others had not yet indicated their level.

Fourteen OECD/DAC members increased their contributions to regular resources in 2007, many for the fifth consecutive year. One doubled its contribution, three increased their contribution by 20 per cent or more, and four others by 10 per cent or more. Eight donors increased their contribution annually over the full MYFF period (2004–2007), and eight programme countries contributed $1 million or more. Although a number of donors delayed payment of significant proportions of their pledges in the last quarter of 2007, the operational reserves did not have to be used.

In June [dec. 2008/16], the Executive Board took note of the report on the status of regular funding commitments to UNDP for 2008 and onward, and noted that UNDP was unable to meet the fourth and overall (2007) annual funding target of its second MYFF (2004–2007). It underscored the vital importance of maintaining the 2007 level of regular resources in 2008, so as to enable UNDP to meet the first annual funding target in the integrated resources framework of the strategic plan, 2008–2011. The Board requested that all countries that had not yet done so provide contributions to regular resources for 2008. Member States were encouraged to announce multi-year pledges and payment schedules for the 2008–2011 planning cycle and adhere to such pledges and schedules thereafter.

Biennial support budget, 2008–2009

At its first regular session in January, the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board considered a report of the UNDP Administrator [DP/2008/3] containing UNDP results-based budget proposals and estimates for the 2008–2009 biennium. The Administrator proposed a regular resources funded budget of $778.7 million in net terms; in nominal terms, that amount was $120.8 million greater than the net budget approved by the Board for the 2006–2007 biennium [YUN 2005, p. 974]. The proposal incorporated total net volume increases of $14.7 million and net cost increases amounting to $109.8 million. The estimates also incorporated an increase of $3.7 million to projected income that offset the gross support budget, amounting to $74.9 million in 2008–2009, up from $71.2 million in 2006–2007. The total gross regular resources proposals for the 2008–2009 period amounted to $853.6 million.

The Administrator proposed that $31.2 million for United Nations-mandated security costs continue to be treated as a distinct requirement from regular resources, and at the same nominal level approved for the 2006–2007 biennium. In addition, the Administrator proposed that $9 million for International Public Sector Accounting Standards (IPSAS) be treated as a distinct requirement from regular resources, in order to meet United Nations-mandated system-wide compliance during the 2008–2009 biennium.

The Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ), in its January report [DP/2008/5] on the UNDP and UNIFEM estimates for the 2008–2009 biennial support budget, stated that UNDP efforts to implement results-based budgeting could be improved, particularly with regard to distinct information on links with specific programmes of work or activities, which should allow assessment of the cost-effectiveness and degree of achievement of expected results. ACABQ reiterated its previous request that UNDP, as well as UNFPA and UNICEF, avail themselves of lessons learned by other UN entities that had implemented results-based techniques. It emphasized the importance of timely implementation of the recommendations of the Board of Auditors, information on which should be provided by UNDP in future budget presentations. ACABQ stressed the importance of including in the support budget submission information on major objects of expenditure under post and non-post costs to ensure greater transparency. Consideration should be given to presenting a comprehensive support budget, reflecting the support requirements related to all sources of funding, in order to enable thorough intergovernmental analysis and scrutiny.

The Committee noted that the establishment of a number of UNDP country director positions through the creation of 11 D-1 posts significantly expanded the number of countries in which the Programme was financing such posts. It expressed concern about the multiple layers of management, as well as at the large number of posts proposed for reclassification. The Committee recommended that those management and staffing arrangements, including their effectiveness and cost, be reviewed. It also recommended that comprehensive information on the rationale followed in the post classification exercise be provided to the Executive Board.

In January [dec. 2008/1], the Executive Board took note of the functions, management results, indicators and resource requirements in the budget estimates for the 2008–2009 biennium, and approved gross regular resources in the amount of $853.6 million, as presented in the Executive Director's report, subject to the provisions of the decision. It requested the Administrator to ensure that the biennial support budget was consistent with the UNDP strategic plan, 2008–2011, and its annexes, as augmented and amended in accordance with the Board's 2007 decision on the plan [YUN 2007, p. 898] and the 2007 triennial comprehensive policy review [ibid., p. 874]; and to report to the Board at its September session. The Board requested UNDP to exercise restraint in implementing its proposal for reclassifications, with clear justifications in line with International Civil Service Commission standards. The Administrator was also asked to include in future budget submissions an annex on budget estimates by cost category for major objects of expenditure and to report on estimates and efficiency targets in the annual financial reporting. The Board decided that future biennial support budgets should aim at progressive decrease as a proportion of resources. It urged UNDP to continue to exercise scrutiny of management costs so as to ensure a higher allocation of funds for programmes, and to increase its efforts to bring greater efficiency to its operations. The Board encouraged the Administrator to intensify consultations with other UN funds and programmes in order to harmonize, to the extent possible, the attribution of costs between the programme and support budgets. The Administrator was requested to include in the report on cost classification information on the concept and methodology determining the minimum base structure, as well as a description of that structure. The Board reaffirmed its 2007 decision on cost recovery [ibid., p. 899] and requested the Administrator to realign the funding modality of UNDP management activities to ensure that cost-recovery income bore the support cost associated with all other resources-funded activities within the next biennium. It requested the Administrator, in close cooperation with other UN funds and programmes, to continue to harmonize the methodology of results-based budgeting and improve targets and indicators.

The Board approved the maximum expenditure of $9 million from regular resources to cover the costs of introducing IPSAS by the end of 2009. It asked the Administrator to include information on support requirements related to all sources of funding in future biennial support budgets, in accordance with recommendations contained in the ACABQ report, and present the biennial support budget, 2010–2011, for approval by the Board in 2009.

The Board took note of the consolidated summary of UNDP funding requirements for security activities [DP/2008/CRP.2]. It approved the net amount of $51.2 million as a separate requirement from regular resources to cover security measures mandated by the United Nations, as proposed in the summary, and endorsed the proposal of the Administrator to grant him exceptional authority, during the 2008–2009 period, to access up to an additional 20 per cent ($10.2 million) of the approved amount.

Cost classification in UNDP

A December report [DP/2009/3], submitted in response to a 2007 Executive Board decision on programming arrangements for the 2008–2009 period [YUN 2007, p. 895] and the Board's January 2008 decision on the UNDP support budget for that period (see above), provided an initial conceptual framework and road map for realigning the cost classification of activities within the overall UNDP resource plan. A joint consultancy, commissioned by UNDP, UNICEF and UNFPA in mid-2008 to assess the degree of harmonization in cost classification among the three entities, found that their agreed harmonized cost definitions were still applicable. They defined direct costs as those incurred for, and traceable in full to, the activities, projects and programmes of an organization in fulfilment of its mandate. Fixed indirect costs were those incurred by the organization regardless of the scope and level of its activities, and which could not be traced unequivocally to specific activities, projects or programmes. Variable indirect costs were those incurred by the organization in support of its activities, projects and programmes, and which could not be traced unequivocally to specific activities, projects or programmes. The definitions facilitated the classification of costs across the three organizations as “direct” development costs, and as “fixed indirect” or “variable indirect” management costs.

Three guiding principles underlying a transparent, strategic and fully aligned cost classification system in UNDP were the transparent identification and attribution of costs; the rationalization and simplification of cost classification groupings; and the alignment of cost classifications and funding frameworks with the UNDP business model and the strategic plan. The two broad cost groupings that existed—development and management—remained relevant. A third category could deal with special-purpose activities.

In the context of the four UNDP focus areas (poverty reduction and achievement of the MDGs, democratic governance, crisis prevention and recovery, environment and sustainable development), development costs could lend themselves to further classification within three major subcategories: programmes; programme effectiveness activities; and UN development coordination activities. Management activities were the functions and activities required to ensure the delivery of development activities. They would include executive leadership and direction, corporate oversight and accountability, compliance with statutory obligations, and effective human and financial resources management. Special-purpose activities could include United Nations-mandated security costs, after-service health insurance costs and capital investment costs.

The business model and strategic plan, as well as the resource frameworks and cost classification system that underpinned them, were the key to the future relevance and sustainability of UNDP. The approach presented in the report should result in a more optimal allocation of resources to meet the myriad funding priorities of UNDP, including a longer-term view of the need for sustainability.

Direct budget support and pooled funds

An April report [DP/2008/36 & Corr.1,2] discussed UNDP engagement in direct budget support and pooled funds. The UNDP policy and approach stated in the report was aligned with that of UNFPA. Direct budget support was defined as a method of financing the budget of a partner country through a transfer of resources from an external financing agency to the national treasury of the partner Government. UNDP recognized direct budget support as a development finance instrument that promoted national ownership, transparency and harmonization in aid allocations and alignment with national budget priorities. A country's preparedness to absorb direct budget support in transparent, efficient and results-oriented ways centred on the capacities of national institutions, aid coordination mechanisms and management systems to negotiate, manage and monitor the use of such funds for their agreed purposes. Direct budget support could be classified as general budget support—a non-earmarked contribution directed at overall Government policy and expenditures that included balance-of-payments support—or as sector budget support, which was an earmarked contribution to the national budget towards programme-specific results. Unlike sector budget support funds, pooled funds were contracted out by a Government to be managed by an agreed party.

The report stated that the preferred value-added contribution of UNDP would be to support national capacities to negotiate, design and manage direct budget support for development effectiveness. If UNDP was requested by a Government to manage a pooled fund in a transition period to strengthen national capacities in a given area, it would be done under existing UNDP direct execution guidelines and cost-sharing agreements, and the standard UNDP management agent fee of 7 per cent would apply. Where UNDP provided a financial contribution to the fund, the project document would specify the implementation arrangements and the modified results framework, reporting, auditing, and monitoring and evaluation arrangements. UNDP would not transfer monies into a pooled fund not managed by a UN specialized agency, fund or programme. The report outlined requirements for direct financial contributions.

It was proposed that the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board consider the 2008–2011 cycle as a pilot period for UNDP to assume an enhanced role in the direct budget support environment that included the ability to contribute to a Government-managed sector budget support fund, or to a UN fund, programme or specialized agency-managed pooled fund, in a given number of demonstration countries. Such action would require the addition of financial regulations specific to direct budget support and pooled funds, and would constitute amended versions of financial regulations to allow for reporting on co-mingled funds; fund-level auditing in accordance with the agreement of the fund participants; and definitions for direct budget support, sector budget support and pooled funds. Annexed to the report were proposed amendments to the UNDP Financial Regulations and Rules.

In a June report [DP/2008/42], ACABQ stated that it had no objection to the proposed amendments to the UNDP Financial Regulations, subject to the observations made in its report.

At its June session [dec. 2008/24], the Executive Board took note of the report on UNDP engagement in direct budget support and pooled funds and requested UNDP to give preference to engagement in direct budget support, in the form of sector budget support, as a signatory, without fiduciary obligation, taking into account the views of programme countries. It endorsed, in principle, a four-year pilot period, starting in September 2008, for enabling UNDP financial contributions to pooled funding and sector budget support within the limitations and provisions provided in the April report on the issue. The Board requested UNDP to prepare an additional report for approval by the Board in 2008, including an update on the common UNDG approach towards the changing aid environment, an analysis of the UNDP role in the new aid environment, and a further elaboration of the criteria of engagement in sector budget support and pooled funding, as well as indicators to measure the effectiveness of the new aid modality. It approved, for the duration of the pilot period, the proposed changes in the regulations and rules as contained in the April report, including the requirements for direct financial contributions, taking into account the ACABQ recommendations. UNDP was requested to include, during the pilot period, a progress report in the Administrator's annual report, and an overview of contributions to pooled funding and sector budget support in the annual review of the financial situation. The Board asked UNDP to prepare a report at the end of the pilot period, including an evaluation and audit of the pilot programme and an update on its efforts towards the harmonization of regulations and rules under consideration in the United Nations, including the changes needed to allow participation in pooled funding and sector budget support.

Changing aid environment

An August report [DP/2008/53], submitted in response to the Executive Board's June decision on UNDP engagement in direct budget support and pooled funds (above), outlined the UNDP response to the changing aid environment at the country level and the Programme's engagement with UNDG on a common approach in that regard. It built on the April report on UNDP engagement in direct budget support and pooled funds (see p. 977), and provided indicators for measuring effectiveness and evaluating the process by which the results for the pilot period for UNDP engagement in sector budget support and pooled funding would be evaluated. The report stated that UNDP was helping to facilitate and negotiate aid modalities, including direct budget support. While acknowledging that direct budget support was not its core business, UNDP recognized it as a development finance instrument that promoted national ownership, transparency and harmonization in aid allocations, as well as alignment with national plan and budget priorities. The rationale for UNDP engagement in sector budget support and pooled funds was to respond to growing country demands for capacity development and for expanded inclusion of UNDP in efforts towards harmonization and alignment. UNDP would only engage in pooled funding in areas or sectors in which it was already present through a separate project.

The overarching principles for UNDP engagement were that sector budget support and pooled funding had to: contribute to strengthening partner countries' ownership; enhance the performance and accountability of programme countries' public financial management systems; seek to minimize transaction costs incurred by participating countries; and be delivered in a way that enhanced the predictability of resources and reduced their volatility.

During its September session [dec. 2008/29], the Executive Board took note of the report on the role of UNDP in the changing aid environment at the country level and approved implementation of the pilot programme.

Ex-gratia payments

An August report [DP/2008/41] proposed amendments to the UNDP financial regulations and rules regarding ex-gratia payments, or payments that were justified by moral obligation in cases where there was no legal liability to UNDP. The report stated that, in the aftermath of the 2007 bombing in Algiers that affected UN personnel [YUN 2007, p. 61], it was evident that ex-gratia payments might, in certain circumstances, need to exceed the limit set in the current UNDP financial regulations and rules. UNDP therefore asked the Board to approve an amendment to its regulation 23.01 to permit ex-gratia payments in excess of $50,000. UNDP was also correcting its rule 123.01 (a) to reflect that an opinion on the matter of ex-gratia payments should be provided by the UNDP Legal Support Office, rather than the United Nations Office of Legal Affairs.

In June [DP/2008/42], ACABQ recommended approval of the proposed amendments.

During its September session [dec. 2008/26], the Executive Board took note of the report on the revision of the UNDP financial regulations and the corresponding ACABQ report. It decided on new wording for financial regulation 23.01, enabling the Administrator to make ex-gratia payments, not exceeding $75,000 per year, as he or she deemed necessary in the interest of UNDP. In the case of an emergency where, at the Administrator's discretion, immediate ex-gratia payments were necessary for humanitarian reasons, in instances such as injury or death suffered in connection with UNDP activities, the Administrator might make such payments without limitation as to the amount. The Administrator would immediately inform the Executive Board when any single situation resulted in payments in excess of $50,000. The Board noted the corresponding change in financial rule 123.01.

Audit reports

The UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board, at its January session, considered the Administrator's report [DP/2008/15] on the implementation of the recommendations of the Board of Auditors for the 2004–2005 biennium [YUN 2006, p. 1631]. Since the Administrator's previous update [YUN 2007, p. 900], UNDP had implemented 105 out of 115 audit recommendations, resulting in a 91 per cent implementation rate. With the exception of one recommendation, UNDP had implemented all recommendations targeted for completion by the third quarter of 2007 and was on schedule to implement the remaining 9 per cent, or 10 recommendations, by the end of 2007.

In response to a 2007 Executive Board decision [ibid.], the report reviewed progress in addressing nationally executed (NEX) projects; bank reconciliation and staff professionalization programmes; internal controls in the Atlas enterprise resource planning system; and progress in mainstreaming risk management into UNDP policies and processes. It also reviewed initiatives to strengthen accountability and organizational responsiveness to audit recommendations in UNDP, including leveraging the recommendations and feedback of the Audit Advisory Committee on key strategic initiatives and related oversight matters; formalizing the regular review of the top 15 audit priorities and accountability matrix for audit follow-up; using the web-based audit dashboard for transparent reporting and follow-up; and formalizing periodic country scans to better understand the programmatic, financial and human resource challenges and audit issues for all UNDP country offices.

In January [dec. 2008/8], the Executive Board took note of the report on the implementation of the recommendations of the Board of Auditors for the 2004–2005 biennium.

A March report on internal audit and investigations [DP/2008/20] provided information on the activities of the Office of Audit and Investigations (OAI) for the year ended 31 December 2007. The former Office of Audit and Performance Review was renamed effective 8 February to better reflect its two core functions: internal audit and investigations. During the year, OAI issued 58 internal audit reports, pertaining to five headquarters audits and 53 country office audits. During the last quarter of 2007, it conducted a new audit risk assessment for the purpose of the 2008 work plan for country office audits, which showed that three (2 per cent) of the 141 offices assessed were ranked very high risk, 50 (35 per cent) were high risk, and the remainder medium risk. Compared to the audit risk assessment results in 2006, there was no change in the risk ranking of 85 per cent of the offices.

With respect to country office audits, the areas needing the most improvement remained essentially the same as in previous years. Seventeen audit reports noted that project monitoring and evaluation required improvement. Bank reconciliation issues were raised in 14 audit reports; 14 reports described instances of non-compliance or partial compliance with procurement rules; and 16 reports described weaknesses in the recruitment of personnel, including non-transparent and non-competitive recruitment processes. As at 31 December 2007, the implementation rate for seven headquarters audits conducted between 2005 and 30 September 2007 was 76 per cent on average, ranging from 24 per cent to 96 per cent.

As to projects executed by non-governmental organizations and/or national Governments (NGO/NEX), the report stated that as at 31 December, OAI had received 1,790 (96 per cent) of the audit reports encompassing NGO/NEX expenditures totalling $2.0 billion. Of those received, OAI reviewed 1,711 audit reports (or 96 per cent), representing $1.7 billion. The audit reports for fiscal year 2006 expenditures had generated 5,364 audit issues, 70 per cent of which lay in the areas of financial management, recordkeeping systems and controls, and the management and use of equipment and inventory. The majority of the issues (80 per cent) were noted as medium- and low-risk, with most of the high-risk issues (20 per cent) related to financial management, project progress and rate of delivery.

OAI was entrusted in 2007 with conducting all formal investigations of harassment, sexual harassment and abuse of authority cases. A total of 113 complaints were received in 2007. By the end of the year, 83 per cent of the complaints carried forward to 2007 were closed. Of the 104 complaints closed, 35 per cent were found unsubstantiated and did not require further investigation, while 4 per cent were referred to the Office of Human Resources and the Legal Support Office (LSO). The balance, representing 62 per cent of the complaints, were formally investigated by OAI. After formal investigation, 25 per cent were found to be unsubstantiated and another 35 per cent were referred to LSO for review.

During its June session [dec. 2008/13], the Executive Board took note of the report on internal audit and investigations in UNDP and the report on UNFPA internal audit and oversight activities in 2007 (see p. 1193). It called on UNDP and UNFPA to further strengthen the national execution modality by addressing the operational risks and weaknesses identified in the audit reports, with particular attention given to capacity-building, and requested UNDP and UNFPA to inform the Board of the implementation of the proposed actions. The Board noted that specific audit procedures and guidelines were being developed in response to the use of the harmonized approach to cash transfers, and called on UNDP to develop such procedures and guidelines in coordination with other UN funds, programmes and agencies. UNDP and UNFPA were asked to report to the Board in 2009 on progress made and lessons learned in implementing the harmonized approach to cash transfers. The Board urged the UNDP Administrator to further strengthen risk-based audit planning and fill vacant OAI posts rapidly. It expressed concern that 13 per cent of the ratings in the internal audit reports were unsatisfactory, that some audit findings remained unresolved for 18 months, and that there were investigation findings on the misconduct of staff members. UNDP was asked to report to the Board in 2009 on progress made in those areas, as part of the annual report on internal audit and investigations.

UNDP accountability system

An August report [DP/2008/16/Rev.1] presented the enhanced and integrated UNDP accountability system, which included an accountability framework and an oversight policy. The accountability framework underscored the commitment of UNDP to results and risk-based performance management, as well as the shared values and culture of accountability and transparency. The oversight policy included the organization of independent internal and external oversight to provide assurances that functional systems of internal controls were in place, including evaluation of the policy framework, efficient utilization of resources and adherence to professional and ethical standards.

In a decision adopted during its September session [dec. 2008/37], the Executive Board took note of the report on the UNDP accountability system and approved the accountability framework and oversight policy contained therein, subject to the provisions of the decision. It decided that the UNDP Ethics Office should submit a report to the Board at its annual session. The Board also decided that the UNDP Administrator, and the UNFPA/UNOPS Executive Directors, could disclose internal audit reports to Member States, in accordance with the relevant provisions stipulated in the UNDP accountability framework and oversight policy, the UNFPA oversight policy (see p. 1193) and the UNOPS accountability and oversight policies (see p. 985), respectively. The UNPD Administrator and the UNFPA/UNOPS Executive Directors were requested to submit to the Board a report on the implementation of the decision in 2010.

Other technical cooperation

Development Account

The Secretary-General, in his February report [A/62/708] on improving the effective and efficient delivery of the mandates of development-related activities and revised estimates relating to the programme budget for the 2008–2009 biennium (see p. 1552), proposed, among other measures, the establishment of a Development Account Programme Management Unit to strengthen the Account's programme management and oversight. The proposal required additional resources in the amount of $357,600. The Secretary-General said that the additional resources dedicated to management and oversight would lead to enhanced monitoring, evaluation and impact; assessment; information-sharing and transparency, and coordination with other programmes.

In July [A/62/7/Add.40], ACABQ recommended acceptance of the proposals put forth in the Secretary-General's report under Programme support. It also recommended that the Secretary-General be requested to carry out a comprehensive assessment of programme activities of the Unit and its actual impact on the delivery of activities funded from the Development Account, and report thereon in the context of the programme performance report.

In response to section VIII of General Assembly resolution 62/238 [YUN 2007, p. 1453], the Secretary-General submitted an August report [A/63/335] on the Development Account. It included the status of implementation of projects funded from additional resources provided under Assembly resolutions 62/235 A [YUN 2007, p. 1436] ($5 million); 62/238 [ibid., p. 1451] ($2.5 million); and 62/237 A [ibid., p. 1449] on the initial appropriation of the programme budget for the biennium 2008–2009 ($18,651,300). Nine entities would implement 15 new projects in the Asia and the Pacific and the Latin America and the Caribbean regions, and in Africa and Europe. Ten of the projects would be included in the programme budget for the 2006–2007 biennium and five would be included in the 2008–2009 biennium. All of the projects would assist in achieving the internationally agreed development goals.

The report also discussed the status of implementation of the provisions of section VIII of resolution 62/238 with regard to the identification of savings through the reduction in administrative and overhead costs. The Secretary-General noted in previous reports on the Development Account that while efficiency measures helped simplify processes, procedures, rules and services, improved the quality of services and had an impact on mandated programmes in the form of increased benefits, the results of the measures could not be quantified. He stated that identifying efficiency savings in order to increase the resources base of the Account had not been feasible.

In October [A/63/479], ACABQ stated that it was not convinced by the Secretary-General's argument concerning efficiency measures and pointed out that anticipated efficiency gains were calculated and routinely reflected in the budget submissions of peacekeeping operations. It suggested that the Secretary-General explore the possibility of using a similar approach in the regular budget. ACABQ also recommended that the General Assembly request the Secretary-General to develop a proper methodology to quantify savings from possible reductions, including in administration and other overhead costs, through improvements in internal procedures and ongoing human resources, information and communications technology and other management reforms, as well as resources released from discontinued activities and outputs. It expressed disappointment that the Secretary-General's report did not provide any options for tangible, predictable and sustainable funding for the Development Account, despite the concerns expressed by the Assembly in section VIII of resolution 62/238. The Committee repeated its recommendation that the Assembly might wish to review the Account in all its aspects.

The Assembly, in resolution 63/260 of 24 December (see p. 1553), took note of the reports of the Secretary-General on improving the effective and efficient delivery of the mandates of development-related activities and revised estimates related to the programme budget for the 2008–2009 biennium and the Development Account; and endorsed the conclusions contained in the related ACABQ reports.

UN activities

Department of Economic and Social Affairs

During 2008, the UN Department of Economic and Social Affairs (DESA) had approximately 452 technical cooperation projects under execution in a dozen substantive sectors, with total project expenditures of $68.1 million. Projects financed by UNDP represented $4.2 million, and those by trust funds, $63.9 million. On a geographical basis, the Department's technical cooperation programme included expenditures of $36.8 million for Interregional and global programmes, $23.6 million in Asia and the Pacific, $4.9 million in Africa, $2.2 million in the Middle East; and $0.6 million in the Americas.

Distribution of expenditures by substantive sectors was as follows: associate expert programme, $26.6 million; programme support, $22.4 million; socioeconomic governance management, $6.7 million; governance and public administration, $6 million; water, $2.6 million; knowledge management, $2.2 million; statistics, $1 million; energy, $0.2 million; social development, $0.2 million; the United Nations Forum on Forests, $0.2 million; and advancement of women, $0.01 million. Of the total delivery of $68.1 million, the associate expert programme comprised 39 per cent; programme support, 33 per cent; and socioeconomic governance management, 10 per cent.

On a component basis, the Department's delivery in 2008 included $56.7 million for project personnel, $4.3 million for sub-contracts, $3.7 million for training, $2.7 million for equipment; and $0.7 million for miscellaneous expenses.

The total expenditure for DESA against the UN regular programme of technical cooperation was $4.9 million. The total expenditure against the UN Development Account (see p. 981) was $1.7 million.

UN Office for Partnerships

The United Nations Office for Partnerships, formed in 2006 [YUN 2006, p. 1046], served as the gateway for public-private partnerships with the UN system in furtherance of the MDGs. It oversaw the United Nations Fund for International Partnerships, the United Nations Democracy Fund, and Partnership Advisory Services and Outreach.

The Secretary-General, in his report on the activities of the Office in 2008 [A/64/91], said that the Office continued to help the underprivileged by harnessing interest, competencies and resources across sectors. Working with leaders in business and civil society, it provided a platform for strategic policy dialogue and engaged financial, technical and management expertise to achieve the MDGs. In 2008, the Office focused on building networks with organizations, leveraging their membership of more than 10,000 prospective partners.

The General Assembly, by decision 63/548 of 24 December, took note of the Secretary-General's report on the 2007 activities of the Office for Partnerships [YUN 2007, p. 903].

UN Fund for International Partnerships

The United Nations Fund for International Partnerships (UNFIP) was established in 1998 [YUN 1998,

p. 1297] to serve as an interface between the UN system and the United Nations Foundation, the public charity responsible for administering Robert E. Turner's $1 billion contribution in support of UN causes. At the end of 2008, the Foundation's allocations to UNFIP projects reached approximately $1.06 billion, which comprised $438.3 million in core Turner funds and $622.1 million (nearly 58.7 per cent) generated by other partners. More than 455 projects had been implemented by 39 UN entities in 123 countries.

At the end of 2008, the children's health portfolio of projects was valued at $638.6 million for 87 projects; the women and population portfolio, $137.4 million for 101 projects; the environment portfolio, $164 million for 144 projects; and the peace, security and human rights portfolio, $53.9 million for 60 projects. Sixty-three other projects were valued at $65.5 million.

United Nations Democracy Fund

The United Nations Democracy Fund (UNDEF) was established in 2005 [YUN 2005, p. 655] to support democratization throughout the world. UNDEF focused on supporting democratic institutions, promoting human rights and ensuring the participation of all groups in democratic processes. Through UNDEF, the UN Office for Partnerships had channelled a total of $58.7 million for 204 projects around the world, including 157 projects in 94 countries, 34 regional projects covering a further 13 countries, and 13 global projects. The projects were aimed at strengthening civil society leadership skills and promoting the participation of women and youth, among other issues, and included civil society media programmes. The majority of project funds went to local NGOs from countries in the transition and consolidation phases of democratization.

In 2008, UNDEF began funding its second round of projects. It launched its third round for project proposals in November; by year's end, it had received 2,143 applications from organizations in 138 countries, representing a 14 per cent increase over the number of applications received in the second (2007) round. The majority of the applications came from local or regional NGOs, with 34.1 per cent from sub-Saharan Africa, 23.8 per cent from Asia, 21 per cent from Europe, 10.4 per cent from the Americas, 8.6 per cent from Arab States, and 2.1 per cent from global organizations. The projects would support community development (24.8 per cent); women's empowerment (19.3 per cent); the rule of law and human rights (16.8 per cent); tools for democratization (13.5 per cent); youth (11.6 per cent); strengthening the instrumentalities of Government (7.9 per cent); and media (6.0 per cent). As at 31 December, total contributions to the Fund exceeded $91 million.

Partnership Advisory Services and Outreach

Partnership Advisory Services and Outreach, established in 2006, provided advice to various entities, including academic institutions, companies, foundations, Government agencies and civil society organizations, on how best to implement public-private partnerships. Investment in high-impact initiatives was encouraged by providing advice to potential partners both within and outside the UN system.

Regarding internal services, Governments, foundations, businesses and civil society organizations announced significant new commitments estimated at $16 billion to meet the MDGs. The commitments were made mainly during the more than 60 partnership events coordinated by the Office for Partnerships from 21 to 25 September. On the external front, the Office received nearly 1,000 requests for advisory services in 2008, a nearly 45 per cent increase over 2007. The requests came from a wide range of private-sector companies, foundations, civil society organizations, academic institutions and philanthropists. The majority of requests from non-State actors concerned assistance in partnering on programmes focused on poverty reduction, education, health and disaster relief, as well as humanitarian assistance in the least developed countries.

UN Office for Project Services

The United Nations Office for Project Services (UNOPS) was established in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 900], in accordance with General Assembly decision 48/501 [YUN 1994, p. 806], as a separate, self-financing entity of the UN system to act as a service provider to UN organizations. It offered a broad range of services, from overall project management to the provision of single inputs.

2008 activities

The UNOPS Executive Director, in his annual report on UNOPS activities [DP/2009/22], informed the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board of progress made in 2008 towards implementing the UNOPS business strategy, 2007–2009 [YUN 2007, p. 905], which focused on financial viability, client satisfaction, world-class business practices and performance, and workforce competence and motivation. Significant advances were made in generating income, boosting productivity, standardizing and refining business processes, and recruiting and retaining staff. UNOPS delivered $1.1 billion through project implementation in 2008 and spent $61.9 million administering it. The contribution to the operational reserve was $4.9 million, bringing the reserve to $30.1 million. However, bad debt provisions and write-offs, predominantly from the pre-2006 period, including the inter-fund balance with UNDP (see p. 984), amounted to $6.5 million. UNOPS business acquisition rose to $1.5 billion, representing an increase of 3.3 per cent over the previous year and an all-time record demand for UNOPS services.

The leading sectors for project implementation expenditures in 2008 were conflict prevention and resolution, peace and security (23 per cent of expenditures); health (18 per cent); Government and civil society (13 per cent); humanitarian aid (11.4 per cent); environmental protection (10.6 per cent); and transport and storage (9.9 per cent). The major sub-sectors included post-conflict peacebuilding (12.1 per cent); road transport (8.6 per cent); Government administration (8.5 per cent); landmine clearance (7.9 per cent), medical services (7.8 per cent) and material relief assistance and services (7.6 per cent).

The main financial initiatives implemented in 2008 included a financial data tool that enabled UNOPS to provide client reports in line with internationally accepted standards; further movement towards Atlas-based transaction processing; preparation of 2009–2010 budgets using the results-based budgeting process; the submission of revised UNOPS Financial Regulations and Rules to the Executive Board for its consideration; and the establishment of a project team to lead and implement the International Public Sector Accounting Standards (IPSAS) in UNOPS.

The report provided an overview of how UNOPS contributed to the results of UN peacekeeping, humanitarian and development operations. It contained information on project outputs and partnerships in education; emergency response and humanitarian relief; the environment; gender; governance; health; justice, security and public order; local economic development; and public works.

In June [dec. 2008/20], the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board took note of the annual report of the Executive Director on 2007 activities [YUN 2007, p. 904] and requested the UNDP Administrator and the UNOPS Executive Director to report on the UNOPS governance structure at its September session (see p. 984).

Financial, administrative and operational matters

Budget estimates

The Executive Board, at its January session, considered a report on the UNOPS budget estimates for the 2008–2009 biennium [DP/2008/13]. The UNOPS Executive Director proposed a results-based budget of $120,009,900 for the 2008–2009 biennium. The proposal was based on a gross revenue target of $133,343,900 and a resulting contribution to the operational reserve of $13,334,000 or 10 per cent of gross revenue. The budget proposals underpinned the specific objectives of the 2007–2009 UNOPS business strategy [YUN 2007, p. 905]. Specific priorities for the biennium included continued improvement and external certification of business practices; learning and certification of staff competencies; knowledge-sharing; and the introduction of IPSAS.

Estimated actual gross revenue for the 2006–2007 period amounted to $137.4 million; expenditures totalled $118.5 million. The resulting net revenue of $18.9 million exceeded the target of $13.7 million by $5.2 million.

In a decision adopted at the same session [dec. 2008/5], the Board approved the UNOPS budget contained in the report. It requested UNOPS and UNDP to finalize the settlement of the matter related to the balance of the inter-fund with UNDP [ibid.]. The Executive Director was requested to continue efforts to harmonize the UNOPS budget format with the biennial support budgets of other UN funds and programmes and contribute to improving the methodology of results-based budgeting. He was also asked to present the biennial support budget, 2010–2011, for the approval of the Board in 2009, and submit the UNOPS accountability framework and oversight policy for consideration and approval by the Board at its annual session in June 2008.

UNOPS governance structure

An August report [DP/2008/52] on the UNOPS governance structure contained a proposal to realign the Management Coordination Committee (MCC) to more effectively define and assign accountability for UNOPS in light of its evolution and future prospects as a self-financed provider of operational services. It was proposed that the role, functions, and composition of MCC be revised to permit it to perform a policy advisory function, and that it be renamed the Policy Advisory Committee to reflect its new focus. The proposed model would entrust the UNOPS Executive Director with full and independent authority and accountability for the conduct of UNOPS business. The Policy Advisory Committee would provide policy guidance to ensure that the strategy and activities of UNOPS corresponded to the broader objectives of the United Nations, and that they were coordinated with the work of other entities to ensure a complementary approach and avoid overlap. Responsibility for the use of UNOPS financial and other resources would lie with the Executive Director. It was proposed that the Committee's membership include the UNDP Administrator; the Chair of the CEB High-level Committee on Management; and the Under-Secretaries General of the Departments of Management and Field Services, and of the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs.

During its September session [dec. 2008/35], the Executive Board took note of the report on the UNOPS governance structure and approved the amended role and function of MCC—to be renamed the Policy Advisory Committee—as outlined in the report. It requested UNOPS to submit to the Board in 2009 a comprehensively revised set of UNOPS financial regulations and rules, taking into account the changes in the UNOPS governance structure and the specifics of the UNOPS business model. The Board recommended that the Secretary-General delegate authority to the UNOPS Executive Director to administer UN staff rules and regulations in respect of UNOPS staff.

Audit reports

In May [DP/2008/21], the Head of the Internal Audit Office provided an activity report on internal audit and related services in UNOPS for the year ended 31 December 2007. Based on mutual agreement, the Office of Audit and Performance Review (OAPR) ended its services to UNOPS with effect from 30 June 2007 [YUN 2007, p. 906]. As part of the transition arrangement, the former chief of the Project Services Audit Section was assigned as officer-in-charge of the Internal Audit Office from 1 July until 10 September 2007, when the Office began to function as the UNOPS Internal Audit Office.

The Office stated that 24 audit reports were issued in 2007. The reports contained 145 recommendations for improving internal controls and organizational efficiency and effectiveness. The status of implementation of the 2007 recommendations as at 6 April 2008 was 67 per cent.

The Office assisted UNOPS management in the initial formulation and distribution of an internal control framework. It also assisted in preparing a settlement proposal with respect to the unresolved UNOPS/UNDP inter-fund differences prior to 2006 [YUN 2007, p. 906]; the Executive Director communicated the proposal to UNDP for discussion and approval. An internal audit charter containing the mandate, authority, responsibilities and general scope of work of the Internal Audit Office was submitted to the Executive Director and approved. The Office established channels of communication with other oversight groups in the United Nations, particularly with the UN Office of Internal Oversight Services and the Board of Auditors.

During its June session [dec. 2008/13], the Executive Board took note of the report of UNOPS on internal audit and oversight in 2007. It welcomed the establishment of the Internal Audit Office and the transition from OAPR to the new office.

In June, the Board of Auditors transmitted to the General Assembly the UNOPS financial report and audited financial statements for the biennium ended 31 December 2007 [A/63/5/Add.10]. The Board issued a modified opinion on the financial statements for the period under review. The unconfirmed difference in the inter-fund debt with UNDP, amounting to $9.9 million in 2005 had increased to approximately $33.9 million as at 31 December 2007. The UNOPS inter-fund account with UNFPA showed a difference of $0.6 million, which UNOPS was investigating. The Board obtained confirmations from five other UN agencies and noted differences amounting to $1.03 million. It was not able to confirm 21 balances from other entities that amounted to a net difference of $0.6 million. The Board reported shortcomings in asset management and noted significant errors in asset registers that supported the amount of $10.3 million disclosed in the financial statements. UNOPS performed a comprehensive review of all the submissions received from its regional offices and operations centres, and made adjustments of $2.3 million to the value of non-expendable property disclosed. The report contained 48 main recommendations based on the Board's audit observations.

In a July report [DP/2008/50], UNOPS provided a status report on the implementation of the recommendations of the Board of Auditors for the 2004–2005 biennium [YUN 2007, p. 906] and a summary of the management plan addressing the recommendations, including actions yet to be fully implemented. The Board acknowledged that of the 43 main recommendations made in the audit report, 23 (54 per cent) were fully implemented and 20 (46 per cent) were partially implemented by the end of 2007. UNOPS management was confident that the remaining 20 recommendations would be substantially implemented by the end of 2008.

UNOPS took steps to fund its operational reserve to the specified level in a timely manner. The UNOPS operational reserves for the year ending 31 December 2007 amounted to some $25.1 million, or 72.1 per cent of the mandatory reserve balance, representing a significant improvement in the UNOPS financial position. Regarding the creation of an accounts payable suspense account, UNOPS initiated discussions with the information technology development team to design a customized report in the Atlas enterprise resource planning system, to be ready by the end of 2008, that would allow close monitoring of the liquidation of such account balances. As at June 2008, UNOPS had collected 75 per cent of the outstanding rental receivables balance. UNOPS was continuing its clean-up exercise and hoped to liquidate most outstanding balances by the end of 2008. The inter-fund transaction first-time acceptance rate reached 98 per cent during the 2006–2007 biennium, and UNOPS pledged to do its utmost to liquidate all the long-outstanding inter-fund items by the end of 2008. As part of its drive to enhance internal controls, UNOPS put new procedures and tools in place during 2007 for the regular monitoring of project budgets and expenditures incurred.

During its September session, the Executive Board [dec. 2008/33], took note of the status report on the implementation of the recommendations of the Board of Auditors for the 2004–2005 biennium.

In October [DP/2009/6], UNOPS submitted a report on its implementation of the recommendations of the Board of Auditors for the 2006–2007 biennium. All of the Board's main recommendations were addressed in an annex to the report.

UNOPS accountability framework and oversight policies

In response to a January decision of the Executive Board (see p. 984), the UNOPS Executive Director submitted, in May [DP/2008/22], the draft UNOPS accountability framework and oversight policy. In June [dec. 2008/13], the Board requested the Executive Director to revert to the Board with the policy at its September session, ensuring coordination and harmonization with UNDP and UNFPA.

Pursuant to the Board's June decision, the Executive Director submitted a revised draft of the UNOPS accountability framework and oversight policies in an August report [DP/2008/55]. The framework, which aimed to strengthen UNOPS accountability, risk management and assurance processes, described the roles and responsibilities of the various parties and the resulting synergies that could enhance its oversight mechanisms. The report stated that during the 2006–2007 and 2008–2009 bienniums, UNOPS made significant progress in the areas of accountability, assurance, risk management, internal controls, and fraud prevention. It established the independent Strategy and Audit Advisory Committee to provide independent, senior-level advice to the Executive Director. UNOPS developed anti-fraud initiatives and adopted the UN "whistleblower" policy against retaliation for reporting wrongdoing. It also implemented a "balanced scorecard" programme—a performance-based, strategic management tool that provided stakeholders with a comprehensive indication of how the organization was progressing towards its strategic goals.

UNOPS updated and strengthened its internal control and risk management framework, formalized and implemented its cost recovery and pricing policy, and procured various business insurance policies as an integral part of its comprehensive risk management. It completed its information and communications technology strategy for 2008–2012 and introduced an individual contractor agreement, an essential tool for its business operations. Addressing two cornerstones of accountability for UNOPS—its staff and contract performance review systems—the Office established a comprehensive performance and results assessment programme, and planned to introduce, in the 2008–2009 biennium, project acceptance and contractor performance review policies.

The Executive Board, in a decision adopted during its September session [dec. 2008/37], approved the revised UNOPS accountability framework and oversight policies set out in the August report, subject to the provisions of the decision.

Procurement

A July report [DP/2008/43 & Corr.1] of the Inter-Agency Procurement Services Office (IAPSO) provided an update on IAPSO activities for the 2006–2007 biennium. UNDP and UNOPS initiated a partial merger of certain IAPSO functions with UNOPS in 2007 [YUN 2007, p. 905], which was successfully implemented on 1 January 2008. The Office continued to be self-financing, requiring no UNDP budget support to sustain its operations. It used the revenue it generated to invest in procurement capacity development for UNDP, and to support its inter-agency functions. Overall, the IAPSO fund balance increased from $9.4 million as at 1 January 2006 to $10.1 million as at 31 December 2007.

IAPSO played a major role in supporting procurement activities of UNDP country offices, mainly by providing procurement transaction services. It fielded over 30 missions to country offices to provide hands-on training to procurement staff. IAPSO was the resource for procurement support and advice in developing electoral assistance projects, including procurement strategies and plans, budget and timeline review, and procurement training. It provided support for business seminars and published consolidated statistics on UN system procurement.

By the end of 2006, UNDP country offices represented more than half of the total IAPSO procurement volume, a trend that slowed in 2007 due to the partial merger with UNOPS. During the 2006–2007 biennium, IAPSO continued to increase the range of supply markets in which it procured repeatedly, and sought to support that activity with long-term agreements.

In response to a 2007 Executive Board decision [ibid., p. 905], the UNOPS Executive Director submitted, in August, the annual statistical report on the procurement activities of UN system in 2007 [DP/2008/51]. UNOPS assumed responsibility for collecting and compiling the UN system-wide procurement data following its partial merger with IAPSO.

The report stated that total UN system procurement of good and services under all sources of funding rose to $10.08 billion in 2007 from $9.4 billion in 2006, an increase of $679.5 million (about 6.7 per cent). Procurement of goods increased by $608 million, a gain of 2.7 per cent of total procurement volume, while the procurement of services grew by $71 million but decreased its share by 2.7 per cent of total procurement volume.

Although procurement from developing countries and countries with economies in transition increased by $198 million in 2007 over 2006, their share of overall total procurement volume decreased by 1.3 per cent, to 53.5 per cent. Procurement of goods and services from the top 20 developing countries and countries with economies in transition represented 33.7 per cent of overall UN procurement volume, an increase of 1 per cent over 2006.

At its September session, the Executive Board took note of the Administrator's report on IAPSO activities for the 2006–2007 biennium [dec. 2008/28] and the annual statistical report on the procurement activities of the UN system organizations [dec. 2008/34].

UN Volunteers

In 2008, 7,753 volunteers worked for the UNDP-administered United Nations Volunteers (UNV) programme, compared to 7,521 in 2007. The volunteers, representing 159 nationalities, carried out 7,991 assignments in 132 countries. Volunteers from developing countries represented 79 per cent of the total number; women accounted for 36 per cent. By region, 48 per cent of assignments were carried out in sub-Saharan Africa, 20 per cent in Asia and the Pacific, 16 per cent in the Arab States, 11 per cent in Latin America and the Caribbean, and 5 per cent in Europe and the Commonwealth of Independent States. Total contributions to UNV in 2008 amounted to $197 million; other income totalled $10.9 million. The total expenditure for the year was $207.9 million.

During its June session [dec. 2008/22], the Executive Board took note of the annual report of the Administrator on UNV activities for the 2006–2007 period [DP/2008/34]. It encouraged countries in a position to do so to contribute to the UNV Special Voluntary Fund to enable UNV to further expand and strengthen the role of volunteerism in development. The Board called on UN system organizations to increase their efforts towards achieving gender parity in the recruitment of volunteers, and reaffirmed its support for UNV as focal point for the follow-up (see below) to the International Year of Volunteers (2001) [YUN 2001, p. 814].

Follow-up to International Year of Volunteers (2001)

In response to General Assembly resolution 60/134 [YUN 2005, p. 981] the Secretary-General issued a July report [A/63/184] on the follow-up to the implementation of the International Year of Volunteers (2001). It discussed the state of volunteerism and developments with regard to the recognition of the contribution of volunteerism to development; the facilitation and promotion of volunteerism; networking; and volunteerism in the UN system. The report also contained proposals on possible ways to mark the tenth anniversary of the International Year in 2011. Ideas on possible actions had emerged from extensive consultations with Governments, civil society and the UN system. Multi-stakeholder International Year committees could be re-established to plan and implement activities. Some committees established in 2001 still existed and had helped to “institutionalize” volunteering. Recognition of the contribution of volunteerism to development should be incorporated into Government and UN system policies to provide a solid basis for taking full advantage of the anniversary. Such recognition could be engendered in the wider population through high-profile cultural, sports and other events. International, regional and national media events could link broadcasters across the world to showcase the best of volunteering, including through performances, documentaries, and interviews with celebrities and political leaders. On International Volunteer Day for Economic and Social Development (5 December), all public sector and UN system employees could be given the opportunity to volunteer with a cause of their choice.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December [meeting 70], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee [A/63/424], adopted resolution 63/153 without vote [agenda item 55 (b)].

Follow-up to the implementation of the International Year of Volunteers

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 60/134 of 16 December 2005 on the follow-up to the International Year of Volunteers,

Noting that the momentum created by the International Year has contributed to the vibrancy of volunteerism globally with the involvement of more people, from a broader cross-section of societies,

Recognizing that volunteerism is an important component of any strategy aimed at, inter alia, such areas as poverty reduction, sustainable development, health, disaster prevention and management and social integration and, in particular, overcoming social exclusion and discrimination,

Recognizing also that volunteerism makes significant contributions to development and that appropriate policies are needed to ensure that this potential is realized,

Acknowledging the existing contribution of the organizations of the United Nations system to supporting volunteering, especially the work of the United Nations Volunteers programme around the world, and acknowledging also the efforts of the International Federation of Red Cross and Red Crescent Societies to promote volunteerism throughout its global network,

Bearing in mind the need for an integrated and coordinated follow-up to the International Year to be pursued in the relevant parts of the United Nations system,

1. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General;
2. Reaffirms the need to recognize and promote all forms of volunteerism as an issue that involves and benefits all segments of society, including women, children, young persons, older persons, persons with disabilities, minorities, migrants and those who remain excluded for social or economic reasons;
3. Recognizes the importance of supportive legislative and fiscal frameworks for the growth and development of volunteerism, and encourages Governments to enact such measures;
4. Welcomes the work of Governments, the United Nations system and other stakeholders to create a supportive environment for the promotion of volunteerism;
5. Takes note of the actions by Governments to support volunteerism, and reiterates its call upon them to continue such action;
6. Acknowledges the importance of civil society organizations for the promotion of volunteerism, and in that respect recognizes that strengthening the dialogue and interaction between civil society and the United Nations contributes to the expansion of volunteerism;
7. Encourages Governments to establish partnerships with civil society in order to build up volunteer potential at the national level, given the important contribution that volunteerism makes to the fulfilment of the internationally agreed development goals, including those contained in the United Nations Millennium Declaration;
8. Welcomes the expanding involvement of the private sector in support of volunteerism, and encourages Governments to support this trend;
9. Invites Governments to mobilize and support the research community globally to carry out more studies on the subject of volunteerism, in partnership with civil society, in order to provide sound knowledge as a foundation for policies and programmes;
10. Recognizes that greater efforts are needed to ensure that climate change and the environment feature on the volunteerism agenda of Governments and the United Nations;
11. Calls for the relevant organizations and bodies of the United Nations system to integrate volunteerism in its various forms into their policies, programmes and reports, and encourages the recognition and inclusion of volunteer contributions in future United Nations and other relevant international conferences;
12. Reaffirms its recognition of the work of the United Nations Volunteers programme as the focal point for the follow-up to the International Year of Volunteers, and requests it to continue to raise awareness of the contribution of volunteerism to peace and development, to act as a convener on the subject for the various interested stakeholders, to make available networking and reference resources and to provide technical cooperation to developing countries, upon their request;

13. Invites the Commission for Social Development to consider “volunteerism for development” in the context of its theme of social integration at its forty-seventh and forty-eighth sessions, in 2009 and 2010 respectively;

14. Decides that, on or around 5 December 2011, the International Volunteer Day for Economic and Social Development, two plenary meetings of the sixty-sixth session of the General Assembly shall be devoted to follow-up to the International Year and the commemoration of its tenth anniversary, under the item entitled “Social development”;

15. Invites Governments, with the active support of the media, civil society and the private sector, as well as development partners and the relevant organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, to carry out activities focused on marking the tenth anniversary of the International Year, in 2011, at the regional and national levels;

16. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its sixty-seventh session on the implementation of the present resolution under the item entitled “Social development”.

Economic and technical cooperation among developing countries

South-South cooperation

The UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board, at its January session, considered the evaluation of the UNDP contribution to South-South cooperation [DP/2008/8]. The evaluation addressed the nature and extent of support provided by the Special Unit for South-South Cooperation and UNDP in promoting and expanding South-South cooperation, and their ability to learn from experience and strengthen and institutionalize support to such cooperation across all UNDP practice areas. It considered the appropriateness, relevance, effectiveness and sustainability of UNDP efforts, as well as UNDP preparedness to address emerging demands.

The evaluation found that the effectiveness of support under the third cooperation framework for South-South cooperation, endorsed by the Executive Board in 2005 [YUN 2005, p. 982], was constrained by a mismatch between the mandate, resources and implementation strategy of the Special Unit. UNDP was a responsive partner at the country level, but its effectiveness was constrained by uneven recognition, inadequate resources and incentives, and an inability to systematize learning. UNDP and the Special Unit had not fully leveraged their collective strengths and capacities. The evaluation recommended that the fourth cooperation framework be shaped around knowledge-sharing, policy development and advocacy, and innovation. In programming initiatives, the Special Unit should adopt strict criteria and leverage the capacities of UNDP and other UN organizations to enhance the contribution of South-South cooperation to development effectiveness. UNDP should develop a corporate strategy on South-South cooperation that addressed emerging issues, drew on its experience, integrated its programme frameworks and was underpinned by resources, incentives and accountability. It should also define clear collaboration arrangements between the Special Unit and UNDP.

UNDP management, in its response to the evaluation [DP/2008/9], stated that it was committed to establishing a more effective, integrated approach to South-South cooperation, based on a clearer division of responsibilities across the organization and a closer, mutually supportive collaboration with the Special Unit. It acknowledged that its extensive capacity with respect to regional service centres, thematic knowledge networks and communities of practice should be leveraged further to facilitate South-South cooperation more systematically. UNDP was reviewing and clarifying its role in middle-income countries.

In January [dec. 2008/8], the Executive Board took note of the evaluation of the UNDP contribution to South-South cooperation and the management response. It approved the one-year extension, until 31 December 2008, of the third cooperation framework for South-South cooperation, as discussed in a 2007 note by the UNDP Administrator [YUN 2007, p. 908].

In June [dec. 2008/25], the Executive Board took note of the draft fourth cooperation framework for South-South cooperation (2009–2011) [DP/CF/SSC/4].

At its September session, the Executive Board considered a later draft of the fourth cooperation framework, issued in July [DP/CF/SSC/4/Rev.1]. Under the framework, the Special Unit would work to develop and provide all interested partners with the policy tools necessary to help developing countries build capacities to achieve their development goals, as well as internationally agreed development goals, including the MDGs, through South-South and triangular cooperation. The Special Unit would continue to focus its work in three strategic areas: policy dialogue, development and advocacy; the promotion of South-South knowledge- and experience-sharing by development partners; and the piloting of mechanisms and partnerships for scaling up South-South exchanges.

At the same session [dec. 2008/36], the Executive Board took note of the fourth cooperation framework and requested that UNDP take into account the recommendations made by Member States in its implementation.

Preparations for high-level conference on South-South Cooperation

In a 5 November letter [A/C.2/63/7], the General Assembly President transmitted to the Second Committee Chairperson the October report of the President of the High-level Committee on South-South Cooperation concerning the proposed High-level United Nations Conference on South-South Cooperation. The report was prepared in response to Assembly resolution 62/209 [YUN 2007, p. 908], in which the Assembly decided to convene the Conference on the occasion of the thirtieth anniversary of the adoption of the 1978 Buenos Aires Plan of Action for Promoting and Implementing Technical Cooperation among Developing Countries [YUN 1978, p. 467], no later than the first half of 2009. The report summarized the consultations undertaken by the President of the High-level Committee with Member States to prepare for the Conference, as well as the outcomes and recommendations of those consultations.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December [meeting 72], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/63/419], adopted resolution 63/233 without vote [agenda item 54].

High-level United Nations Conference on South-South Cooperation

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its resolution 33/134 of 19 December 1978, in which it endorsed the Buenos Aires Plan of Action for Promoting and Implementing Technical Cooperation among Developing Countries,

Recalling the 2005 World Summit Outcome,

Recalling also its resolution 62/209 of 19 December 2007, in which it decided to convene a High-level United Nations Conference on South-South Cooperation,

Taking note with appreciation of the report of the President of the High-level Committee on South-South Cooperation submitted pursuant to its resolution 62/209,

Taking note of the draft fourth cooperation framework for South-South cooperation (2009–2011) and the recommendations contained therein,

Reaffirming its previous relevant resolutions pertaining to South-South cooperation,

Requests that the President of the General Assembly entrust the President of the High-level Committee on South-South Cooperation with undertaking, while making use of the existing coordination mechanisms of the United Nations system, the necessary consultations with Member States in order to prepare for the proposed High-level United Nations Conference on South-South Cooperation, with a view to the Assembly taking a decision, during its sixty-third session, on the nature, date, budgetary implications, objectives and modalities of the Conference.

UN Capital Development Fund

The United Nations Capital Development Fund (UNCDF) achieved its programmatic targets in 2008. The Fund expanded its interventions to 38 least developed countries (LDCs), of which 10 were post-conflict countries, from 31 in 2007. It was making progress towards expanding its programmes to 45 LDCs by 2011, as set out in the UNCDF investment plan (2008–2011). Its overall budget delivery rate stood at 70 per cent. The UNCDF performance rate in the decentralization and local development practice area was 77 per cent, and its performance rate in the inclusive finance practice area was 80 per cent.

Total income increased from $28.5 million in 2007 to $50.1 million in 2008, including $6 million managed by UNCDF on behalf of UNDP, in accordance with a 2007 Executive Board decision [YUN 2007, p. 910]. Contributions to UNCDF regular (core) resources increased by 51 per cent, from $15.6 million in 2007 to $23.5 million in 2008, including the $6 million contributed by UNDP. When other resources were factored in, there was an overall increase in contributions of 76 per cent over 2007. Total resources expenditures in 2008 amounted to $37 million, of which the local development practice area accounted for $22.1 million (72 per cent), slightly lower than the $23.8 million in expenditures recorded in 2007. The level of operational reserves remained at $22.6 million, the same level as in 2007.

During its January 2007 session, the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board considered a report [DP/2008/12] on the UNCDF partnership framework with UNDP, proposed in 2007 [YUN 2007, p. 909], including programming and funding arrangements and the cost-recovery policy. Over the course of the previous year, UNDP and UNCDF worked to finalize the details of the strategic partnership. Most of their objectives were achieved, and the two entities issued a joint guidance note for UNDP country offices and regional bureaux to inform them of the agreements reached. Outstanding actions were scheduled to be completed in six to 12 months. The report stated that issues related to financial alignment might require a decision by the Executive Board.

At the same session [dec. 2008/4], the Board took note of the report on the UNCDF partnership framework with UNDP. It decided that the UNCDF cost-recovery policy would entail a recovery rate of 7 per cent for recovery of indirect support costs for new third party contributions and a basic 3 per cent recovery rate of indirect support costs for all new programme country contributions. The Board requested UNCDF management to report on the implementation of the cost-recovery policy, including the impact of the applied rates on regular and other resources, as well as the use and allocation of indirect costs recovered, for consideration at the annual session in June. UNDP and UNCDF were asked to report to the Executive Board in 2009 on progress made in implementing the strategic partnership.

In April [DP/2008/33], UNCDF submitted to the Executive Board its results-oriented annual report, which outlined the programmatic, management and financial results achieved against established targets in 2007. The report reflected the Fund's efforts to monitor and improve performance in its two practice areas: decentralization and local development, and inclusive finance. In response to the Board's January decision (above), the report also included information on the implementation of the UNCDF cost-recovery policy. With an overall performance rate of 85 per cent in its decentralization and local development practice area and 76 per cent in its inclusive finance practice area, UNCDF achieved its programmatic targets. The Fund also performed well in terms of its objective of geographical expansion. By the end of 2007, it had programmes in 31 of the 49 LDCs. Contributions to regular resources increased from $13.9 million in 2006 to $15.6 million in 2007; contributions to other resources increased by 59 per cent, from $8.1 million to $12.9 million. Total income increased by almost 30 per cent, from $22 million in 2006 to approximately $28.5 million in 2007. The increase was not sufficient, however, to reach the 2007 regular resources target of $18.5 million. Regular resources expenditures increased from $16.8 million in 2006 to $19 million in 2007. Other resources expenditures increased to $9.7 million and accounted for one third of total programme expenditures. Headquarters expenditures increased from $4.6 million in 2006 to $5.4 million in 2007; the increase was largely attributable to the settlement of outstanding reimbursements to UNDP for services delivered in 2006 and a higher overall level of personnel expenditures, as vacant positions were filled.

In June [dec. 2008/21], the Executive Board took note of the UNCDF results-oriented annual report, including the section on the implementation of the UNCDF cost-recovery policy. It noted with concern that UNCDF did not reach its 2007 resource mobilization targets, despite the upward trend in regular and other resources. The Board reiterated its request that UNDP and UNCDF continue their efforts to secure stable funding for UNCDF activities, and its call on donor countries, and other countries in a position to do so, to provide and sustain additional funding support for UNCDF programmes and activities in the LDCs. UNCDF management was requested to report in 2009 on the implementation of the cost recovery policy, including the impact of the applied rates on regular and other resources, as well as the use and allocation of indirect costs recovered. The UNDP Administrator was asked to appoint, as soon as possible, a new Executive Secretary for UNCDF.

Humanitarian and special economic assistance

In 2008, the United Nations, through the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs (OCHA), continued to mobilize and coordinate humanitarian assistance to respond to international emergencies. During the year, consolidated inter-agency and flash appeals were launched for Bolivia, the Central African Republic, Chad, Côte d'Ivoire, the Democratic Republic of Congo, Georgia, Haiti, Honduras, Iraq, Kenya, Kyrgyzstan, Liberia, Madagascar, Myanmar, the Occupied Palestinian Territory, Somalia, Southern Africa, the Sudan, Tajikistan, Uganda, West Africa, Yemen and Zimbabwe. OCHA received contributions for natural disaster assistance totalling $1.4 billion.

The Ad Hoc Advisory Groups on Guinea-Bissau and Haiti continued to develop long-term programmes of support for those countries. Due to progress made in Guinea-Bissau, and following the corresponding Group's recommendation, the Economic and Social Council terminated that Group's mandate in July.

In other development activities, the General Assembly held a high-level meeting on Africa's development needs in September and adopted a political declaration on the topic.

In 2008, some 354 disasters associated with natural hazards, such as earthquakes, floods, cyclones and droughts, caused 235,264 deaths and affected approximately 214 million people. The cost of natural disasters was estimated at $190 billion in economic damages. The relative economic impact of disasters was greatest in low- and middle-income countries. Efforts continued to implement the Hyogo Declaration and the Hyogo Framework for Action 2005–2015, the 10-year plan for reducing disaster risks, adopted at the World Conference on Disaster Reduction in 2005. Preparations were under way for the second session of the Global Platform for Disaster Risk Reduction scheduled for 2009.

During the year, the Economic and Social Council considered ways to strengthen United Nations humanitarian assistance coordination by implementing improved humanitarian response at all levels. Implementation of the humanitarian reform agenda advanced with the launch of the cluster approach in five new sudden-onset emergencies.

The Central Emergency Response Fund continued to allow for the rapid provision of assistance to populations affected by sudden-onset disasters and underfunded emergencies.

Coordination

Humanitarian affairs segment of the Economic and Social Council

The humanitarian affairs segment of the Economic and Social Council (15–17, 24 and 25 July) [A/63/3/Rev.1] considered, in accordance with Council decision 2008/213, the theme “Building capabilities and capacities at all levels for timely humanitarian assistance, including disaster risk reduction”. It also convened panels on disaster risk reduction and preparedness: addressing the humanitarian consequences of natural disasters, including the impact of climate change; and on humanitarian challenges related to global food aid. On 29 April, the Council decided to hold an informal event on 15 July to discuss the transition from relief to development (decision 2008/212).

The Council considered the Secretary-General's May report [A/63/81-E/2008/71] on strengthening the coordination of UN emergency humanitarian assistance, submitted in response to General Assembly resolutions 46/182 [YUN 1991, p. 421] and 62/94 [YUN 2007, p. 915] and Council resolution 2007/3 [ibid., p. 913]. The report summarized humanitarian trends and challenges during the preceding year, including disasters associated with natural hazards and complex emergencies; examined ongoing challenges such as strengthening the coordination of humanitarian assistance, the use of foreign military assets in disaster relief and integrating a gender perspective in humanitarian assistance; and addressed the themes of the Council's humanitarian affairs segment (see above).

During the reporting period, the largest driver of disasters was the increased incidence and severity of extreme weather events, with nine out of every 10 being linked to climate change. The United Nations issued an unprecedented 15 funding appeals for sudden disasters, five more than in the previous year, of which 14 were climate-related. Some 414 disasters associated with climate change affected 234 million people and caused over 16,000 deaths. Floods or storms were responsible for 86 per cent of all natural disaster deaths and 98 per cent of populations affected by natural disasters. Since 1987, climate-related disasters had increased by almost 90 per cent, while geological hazards had increased by nearly 40 per cent, with part of the increase being attributed to better reporting. The humanitarian consequences of conflict remained high, with displacement continuing to be a major source of concern. The Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) reported that by the end of 2007 there were 11.4 million refugees worldwide, and some 52 million displaced people due to violence and persecution or hazard-related disasters. Those figures included long-standing displaced populations in Colombia and Sri Lanka, as well as new population displacements in the Central African Republic, Chad, Iraq, Kenya, the Sudan and Somalia. In response to some of those needs, the 2008 humanitarian consolidated appeal reported that 25 million people would require humanitarian assistance at a cost of $3.8 billion. Meanwhile, the recent jumps in food and fuel prices, which had compounded the challenges of climate change and armed conflict and led to violent protests in some countries, posed a further threat as high food prices could sharply increase the incidence and depth of food insecurity. The World Bank predicted that in addition to the estimated 800 million people suffering from hunger, an additional 100 million people could be pushed into poverty by the food security crisis, thereby reversing progress towards the Millennium Development Goals (MDGs). The crisis had an immediate impact on the cost of humanitarian operations and could lead to significant additional demand for food, health and nutritional assistance. Consequently, global demand for humanitarian assistance was likely to increase in the coming decade. In May, the Secretary-General established a high-level task force on the global food security crisis (see p. 1343) that aimed to develop a comprehensive framework for action; humanitarian actors would play a central role, particularly in the short term.

Complex emergencies, those that were long-standing or those that arose from political unrest in countries that had previously enjoyed relative stability, remained a challenge. During six weeks of rioting in Kenya following the announced results of the disputed presidential election in December 2007 (see p. 326), more than 1,000 civilians were killed and 300,000 displaced. In more than 30 countries, violent riots and protests against the escalation of food prices could risk derailing critical development programmes. The five-year-old crisis in Darfur, which had displaced some 2.4 million people, mostly women and children, continued with no immediate end in sight. Sexual violence remained a significant problem, while two thirds of the population required some form of humanitarian assistance. Ongoing violence in Iraq and other aid delivery challenges were preventing millions from accessing essential services. The United Nations estimated that four million Iraqis were in urgent need of food assistance and only 40 per cent of the population had reliable access to safe drinking water. The situation in Somalia had deteriorated further, and it was estimated that two million people would be in need of humanitarian assistance or livelihood support in 2008, an increase of more than 50 per cent from 2007. In the Occupied Palestinian Territory, in Gaza, where 80 per cent of the population depended on humanitarian aid, the lockdown of crossing points into the Gaza Strip since June 2007 had impeded humanitarian aid from entering and being distributed. The United Nations and its humanitarian partners responded to such complex emergencies where they were able, and delivered timely assistance to people in need. However, in too many places humanitarian workers were denied access to populations in need and were attacked when trying to provide assistance. In that connection, the report provided an overview of the situation of humanitarian workers on the ground, including threats to their safety; emphasized the need for acceptance of, and respect for, the principles that underpinned humanitarian action; and noted the growing challenge to the application of humanitarian principles due to the increasingly blurred distinction between military and humanitarian civilian actors and the need for humanitarian actors to distinguish themselves from other actors in the field.

In the context of ongoing challenges, capacity and coordination in the field was bolstered by the cluster approach [YUN 2006, p. 1057], whereby thematic leads were designated for areas that had no clear, prior lead organization. The approach contributed to enhanced coordination, decision-making and partnerships among humanitarian actors. It was implemented during the reporting period in 12 out of 26 countries where resident and humanitarian coordinators were in place. That number was expected to increase throughout the rest of 2008 as more coordinators introduced the cluster approach to improve coordination in preparedness exercises and ongoing emergency response operations. The need for a common analytical framework that allowed humanitarian stakeholders to jointly determine humanitarian needs and priorities to ensure the timely, accountable and equitable provision of humanitarian assistance was stressed. In that regard, OCHA initiated a mapping of ongoing assessment initiatives in a bid to develop a global needs assessment framework for the joint collection and use of data. On financing aspects, significant success was achieved with pooled funding mechanisms. Donors had pledged $1.1 billion to the Central Emergency Response Fund since its inception, and the Fund had committed $708.9 million to 879 projects in 60 countries. A two-year evaluation of the Fund—as mandated by the General Assembly—was under way. The Secretary-General was expected to report on the evaluation findings to the Assembly at its sixty-third (2008) session. In other developments, an independent study commissioned by OCHA on the use of foreign military assets in disaster relief found that, while humanitarian relief was and should remain a predominantly civilian function, foreign military assets could play a valuable role in disaster relief operations. The effectiveness of using those assets, however, depended on the timeliness of deploying them and making them operational. Progress was achieved in integrating a gender perspective in humanitarian assistance with the update of the Inter-Agency Standing Committee (IASC) policy on gender equality, which was endorsed in May, and the launch of the coalition's "United Nations Action against Sexual Violence in Crisis" [YUN 2007, p. 1168], which harmonized the UN system's response to sexual violence in emergencies and supported field activities in several countries.

The Secretary-General observed that trends such as the increased incidence of climate-related disasters and the continued rise of food prices required a strengthened humanitarian response with enhanced coordination at all levels, as well as respect by all stakeholders of the humanitarian principles underpinning humanitarian assistance. He made a series of recommendations for consideration by States on promoting respect for the humanitarian principles of humanity, neutrality, impartiality and independence; facilitating the rapid and unimpeded passage of humanitarian personnel to populations in need; ensuring the safety and security of humanitarian personnel operating within their borders; developing risk reduction and preparedness measures against disasters in coordination with relevant actors and in accordance with the Hyogo Framework for Action [YUN 2005, p. 1015]; strengthening operational and legal frameworks for international disaster relief through implementation of internationally recognized guidelines; intensifying research to better understand the humanitarian consequences of climate change; increasing the availability of resources to meet global humanitarian challenges; and providing military assets for disaster relief based on humanitarian considerations and broadly disseminating guidelines on civil-military coordination, such as the Oslo Guidelines [YUN 1994, p. 823]. He called for support for the work of his high-level task force on the global food security crisis. He also urged the United Nations and humanitarian partners to ensure that all aspects of humanitarian response addressed equally the needs of women, girls, men and boys, including through the improved collection, analysis and reporting of sex- and age-disaggregated data.

Report of Secretary-General. The Council also had before it the report of the Secretary-General [A/63/84-E/2008/80] on strengthening emergency relief, rehabilitation, reconstruction and prevention in the aftermath of the 2004 Indian Ocean tsunami disaster (see p. 1032).

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 25 July [meeting 45], the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 2008/36 [draft: E/2008/L.28, orally revised], without vote [agenda item 5].

Strengthening of the coordination of emergency humanitarian assistance of the United Nations

The Economic and Social Council,

Reaffirming General Assembly resolution 46/182 of 19 December 1991 and the guiding principles contained in the annex thereto, and recalling other relevant Assembly and Economic and Social Council resolutions and agreed conclusions of the Council,

Welcoming the decision to consider the theme "Building capabilities and capacities at all levels for timely humanitarian assistance, including disaster risk reduction" at the humanitarian affairs segment of its substantive session of 2008,

Welcoming also the decision to hold panels on "Disaster risk reduction and preparedness: addressing the humanitarian consequences of natural disasters, including the impact of climate change" and "Humanitarian challenges related to global food aid, including enhancing international efforts and cooperation in this field" and to hold an informal event on "Coordination in the transition phase between emergency relief and sustainable recovery",

Expressing grave concern at the increase in the number of people affected by humanitarian emergencies, including those associated with natural hazards and complex emergencies, and at the increased impact of natural disasters as well as the displacement resulting from humanitarian emergencies,

Reaffirming the need for all actors engaged in the provision of humanitarian assistance in complex emergency situations and natural disasters to promote and fully respect the humanitarian principles of humanity, neutrality, impartiality and independence,

Reiterating the need to mainstream a gender perspective into humanitarian assistance in a comprehensive and consistent manner, and taking note of the updated policy of the Inter-Agency Standing Committee on gender equality in humanitarian action,

Expressing its deep concern at the increasing challenges posed to Member States and to the United Nations humanitarian response capacity by the consequences of natural disasters, including the impact of climate change, and by the humanitarian implications of the current global food crisis,

Condemning the increasing number of attacks and other acts of violence against humanitarian personnel, and expressing its deep concern about the implications for the provision of humanitarian assistance to populations in need,

Recognizing the clear relationship between emergency relief, rehabilitation and development, and reaffirming that, in order to ensure a smooth transition from relief to rehabilitation and development, emergency assistance must be provided in ways that will be supportive of recovery and long-term development, and that emergency measures should be seen as a step towards long-term development,

Welcoming the holding of the High-level Conference on World Food Security in Rome from 3 to 5 June 2008, and noting the importance of implementing its outcome, including those elements related to humanitarian assistance,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the strengthening of the coordination of emergency humanitarian assistance of the United Nations;

2. Encourages Member States to create and strengthen an enabling environment for the capacity-building of their national and local authorities, national societies of the Red Cross and Red Crescent, and national and local non-governmental and community-based organizations in providing timely humanitarian assistance, and also encourages the international community, the relevant entities of the United Nations system and other relevant institutions and organizations to support national authorities in their capacity-building programmes, including through technical cooperation and long-term partnerships based on recognition of their important role in providing humanitarian assistance;

3. Stresses that the United Nations system should make efforts to enhance existing humanitarian capacities, knowledge and institutions, including, as appropriate, through the transfer of technology and expertise to developing countries, and encourages the international community to support efforts of Member States aimed at strengthening their capacity to prepare for and respond to disasters;

4. Urges Member States to develop, update and strengthen disaster preparedness and risk reduction measures at all levels, in accordance with priority 5 of the Hyogo Framework for Action, taking into account their own circumstances and capacities and in coordination with relevant actors, as appropriate, and encourages the international community and relevant United Nations entities to continue to support national efforts in this regard;

5. Encourages Member States and, where applicable, regional organizations to strengthen operational and legal frameworks for international disaster relief, taking into account, as appropriate, the Guidelines for the Domestic Facilitation and Regulation of International Disaster Relief and Initial Recovery Assistance, adopted at the thirtieth International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent, held in Geneva in November 2007;

6. Calls upon the relevant organizations of the United Nations system and, as appropriate, other relevant humanitarian actors to continue to strengthen the coordination of humanitarian assistance at the field level, including with national authorities of the affected State, as appropriate, and to further enhance transparency, performance and accountability;

7. Recognizes the benefits of engagement of and co-ordination with relevant humanitarian actors to the effectiveness of humanitarian response, and encourages the United Nations to continue to pursue efforts to strengthen partnerships at the global level with the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement, relevant humanitarian non-governmental organizations and other participants of the Inter-Agency Standing Committee;

8. Urges Member States to continue to take the necessary steps to ensure the safety and security of humanitarian personnel operating within their borders, recognizes the need for appropriate collaboration between humanitarian actors and relevant authorities of the affected State in matters related to their safety and security, requests the Secretary-General to continue his efforts to contribute to enhancing the safety and security of personnel involved in United Nations humanitarian operations, and urges Member States to ensure that perpetrators of crimes committed on their territory against humanitarian personnel do not operate with impunity and are brought to justice as provided for by national laws and obligations under international law;

9. Welcomes decisions taken during the United Nations Climate Change Conference in 2007, in particular the Bali Action Plan, encourages Member States, as well as regional organizations and relevant international organizations, in accordance with their specific mandates, to support adaptation to the effects of climate change and to strengthen disaster risk reduction and early warning systems in order to minimize the humanitarian consequences of natural disasters, including the impact of climate change, and also encourages relevant entities to continue research on these humanitarian implications;

10. Takes note of the recent establishment by the Secretary-General of the High-level Task Force on the Global Food Security Crisis, and encourages its continued engagement with Member States;

11. Takes note with interest of the section on the use of foreign military assets in disaster relief contained in the report of the Secretary-General on the strengthening of the coordination of emergency humanitarian assistance of the United Nations, emphasizes the fundamentally civilian character of humanitarian assistance, and reaffirms the need, in situations where military capacity and assets are used to support the implementation of humanitarian assistance, for their use to be undertaken with the consent of the affected State and in conformity with international law, including international humanitarian law, as well as humanitarian principles;

12. Recalls the Guidelines on the Use of Foreign Military and Civil Defence Assets in Disaster Relief, also known as the Oslo Guidelines, stresses the value of their use, and invites Member States to raise awareness about them;

13. Requests Member States, relevant United Nations organizations and other relevant actors to ensure that all aspects of humanitarian response address the specific needs of women, girls, men and boys, including through the improved collection, analysis and reporting of sex- and age-disaggregated data, taking into account, inter alia, the available information provided by States;

14. Urges Member States to continue to prevent, investigate and prosecute acts of gender-based violence, including sexual violence in humanitarian emergencies, calls upon Member States and relevant organizations to strengthen support services to victims of such violence, and also calls for a more effective response in this regard;

15. Welcomes the continued efforts to strengthen the humanitarian response capacity and the progress made in strengthening support to resident/humanitarian coordinators, including by improving their identification, selection and training, in order to provide a timely, predictable and appropriate response to humanitarian needs and to strengthen United Nations coordination activities at the field level, and requests the Secretary-General to continue efforts in this regard, in consultation with Member States;

16. Encourages Member States, the private sector and other relevant entities to make contributions and consider increasing their contributions to humanitarian funding mechanisms, including consolidated and flash appeals, the Central Emergency Response Fund and other funds, based on and in proportion to assessed needs, as a means of ensuring flexible, predictable, timely, needs-based and, where possible, multi-year and additional resources, to meet global humanitarian challenges;

17. Calls upon United Nations humanitarian organizations, in consultation with Member States, as appropriate, to strengthen the evidence base for humanitarian assistance by further developing common mechanisms to improve the quality, transparency and reliability of humanitarian needs assessments, to assess their performance in assistance and to ensure the most effective use of humanitarian resources by these organizations;

18. Requests the Secretary-General to reflect the progress made in the implementation of and follow-up to the present resolution in his next report to the Economic and Social Council and to the General Assembly on the strengthening of the coordination of emergency humanitarian assistance of the United Nations.

Humanitarian reform agenda

In 2008, reform became the humanitarian norm and significant improvements were made within the international humanitarian system. Coordination leadership was strengthened through increased accountability; partnerships between the United Nations and non-UN parts of the humanitarian system were further reinforced; the cluster approach [YUN 2006, p. 1057] was rolled out in five sudden-onset emergencies that arose during the year; and pooled funding at the global and national level made a major contribution to humanitarian relief and coordination. An increasing amount of funding—a total of $859 million—was funnelled through humanitarian pooled funds managed by OCHA.

During the year, humanitarian partners focused on implementing and further integrating the various pillars of reform, thereby overhauling humanitarian coordination and ensuring a tighter, more robust delivery of humanitarian assistance. Working with IASC partners, efforts were made to ensure closer integration and coherence of the mutually reinforcing elements constituting reform—leadership, coordination, partnership and financing—to sustain a stronger framework for humanitarian action. Key improvements helped systematize humanitarian leadership, including the revision of the Terms of Reference for Resident and Humanitarian Coordinators (RC/HCs); the re-launch of the HC pool to develop a professional, transparent and participatory selection system; the signing of compacts between the Emergency Relief Coordinator and HCs; and the development of the RC/HC/Designated Official Performance Appraisal System to strengthen accountability. Progress was made on the implementation of the cluster approach, particularly at the field level, with 21 of 27 countries with HCs reaching an agreement on using the approach. Improvements were evident in the response to the surge of humanitarian needs in Gaza, Georgia, Haiti, Myanmar and Sri Lanka. In addition to strengthening partnerships on the ground, OCHA strengthened partnerships at the global level. Three new non-governmental organizations (NGOs) became members of the IASC Principals Forum. The Global Humanitarian Platform, which met for the second time in July, stepped up its efforts to broaden the inclusion of national NGOs. More predictable humanitarian financing at the country level helped strengthen the efficacy of response. OCHA established a Funding Coordination Section to better oversee country-based pooled funds and strengthen coherence among pooled funding mechanisms. OCHA also played a key role in the Secretary-General's Policy Committee (PC) decision on integration in June, which reaffirmed "integration" as the guiding principle in an integrated UN presence and stipulated that integration arrangements should take full account of humanitarian principles and safeguard humanitarian space, while facilitating coordination with all humanitarian actors. The need to operationalize the PC decision led OCHA to initiate a Policy Instruction on OCHA Structural Relationships within an Integrated UN Presence that clarified how and under what conditions decisions were made about the structural aspects of integration. The Office also increased its engagement in the Integrated Missions Planning Process, including the revision of guidelines for both headquarters and field-level planning.

Global Cluster Approach Evaluation. Following the 2005 Humanitarian Response Review [YUN 2005, p. 991], IASC established the "cluster leadership approach" as a mechanism to improve humanitarian response effectiveness and to strengthen partnerships among all humanitarian actors [YUN 2006, p. 1057], and requested an evaluation of the cluster approach after two years. The first phase of the evaluation took place in 2007, while the second phase was to be commissioned in 2008 [YUN 2007, p. 915]. The early part of the year provided an opportunity to reflect on the findings of the Phase I Cluster Evaluation and to address collectively many of its recommendations. A steering group led by OCHA and composed of donors, NGOs and UN agencies was established to develop the terms of reference for the Phase II Cluster Evaluation. Consequently, in August, OCHA issued a "Revised Note on a proposed Approach for the Cluster Evaluation phase II", which described the purpose, objectives and scope, and organizational approach of the second evaluation, as well as key issues it would address. The evaluation, which aimed to assess the main outcomes of the joint humanitarian response at country level and the overall effectiveness of the approach in facilitating and supporting the coordinated joint humanitarian response at that level through a global analysis of common country-level findings, would be launched in different phases and would take place between August 2008 and September 2009. The phases involved the following: the development of methodology, frameworks and guidance; country-level evaluations; country surveys conducted by one or more survey specialists; and synthesis of the country-level evaluations, studies and surveys.

Other developments. In other efforts, IASC continued to clarify its operational guidance on the use of the cluster approach. In July, the Operational Guidance on the Concept of “Provider of Last Resort”, which set out the responsibilities of cluster leads in the field, was endorsed. Meanwhile, the Steering Group developed a framework for Phase II of the cluster evaluation, which was expected to begin in May 2009 and would be conducted in six countries. With the leadership of OCHA and the Global Cluster Leads, a cluster evaluation management response matrix was finalized and a monitoring plan was initiated.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 11 December [meeting 68], the General Assembly adopted resolution 63/139 [draft: A/63/L.49 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 65 (a)].

Strengthening of the coordination of emergency humanitarian assistance of the United Nations

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its resolution 46/182 of 19 December 1991 and the guiding principles contained in the annex thereto, other relevant General Assembly and Economic and Social Council resolutions and agreed conclusions of the Council,

Taking note of the reports of the Secretary-General on the strengthening of the coordination of emergency humanitarian assistance of the United Nations and on the Central Emergency Response Fund, and of the independent review of the Central Emergency Response Fund, a summary of which is presented in the latter report,

Reaffirming the principles of neutrality, humanity, impartiality and independence for the provision of humanitarian assistance,

Deeply concerned about the impact of the current global food crisis and the urgent humanitarian challenges related to this crisis, welcoming the establishment by the Secretary-General of the High-level Task Force on the Global Food Security Crisis, and emphasizing the importance of implementing the Comprehensive Framework for Action,

Emphasizing the need to mobilize adequate, predictable, timely and flexible resources for humanitarian assistance based on and in proportion to assessed needs, with a view to ensuring fuller coverage of the needs in all sectors and across humanitarian emergencies, and in this regard recognizing the achievements of the Central Emergency Response Fund,

Expressing its deep concern at the increasing challenges faced by Member States and the United Nations humanitarian response capacity as a result of the consequences of natural disasters, including the impact of climate change, reaffirming the importance of implementing the Hyogo Framework of Action 2005–2015: Building the Resilience of Nations and Communities to Disasters, including by providing adequate resources for disaster risk reduction, including disaster preparedness,

Emphasizing that enhancing international cooperation on emergency humanitarian assistance is essential, and reaffirming its resolution 63/141 of 11 December 2008 on international cooperation on humanitarian assistance in the field of natural disasters,

Noting with grave concern that violence, including gender-based violence, including sexual violence, and violence against children, continues to be deliberately directed against civilian populations in many emergency situations,

Condemning the increasing number of deliberate violent attacks against humanitarian personnel and facilities and the negative implications for the provision of humanitarian assistance to populations in need,

Paying tribute to all humanitarian personnel, including United Nations and associated personnel, who have worked to promote the humanitarian cause, as well as to those who have perished in the cause of duty,

Recognizing that building national and local preparedness and response capacity is critical to a more predictable and effective response,

Noting with appreciation the efforts made by the United Nations to improve humanitarian response, including by strengthening humanitarian response capacities, improving humanitarian coordination, enhancing predictable and adequate funding and strengthening accountability to all stakeholders,

Recognizing that in strengthening the coordination of humanitarian assistance in the field, United Nations organizations should continue to work in close coordination with national Governments,

1. Takes note of the outcome of the eleventh humanitarian affairs segment of the Economic and Social Council at its substantive session of 2008;

2. Requests the Emergency Relief Coordinator to continue his efforts to strengthen the coordination of humanitarian assistance, and calls upon relevant United Nations and other relevant intergovernmental organizations, as well as other humanitarian and relevant development actors, to continue to work with the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat to enhance the coordination, effectiveness and efficiency of humanitarian assistance;

3. Calls upon the relevant organizations of the United Nations system and, as appropriate, other relevant humanitarian actors, to continue efforts to improve the humanitarian response to natural and man-made disasters and complex emergencies by further strengthening the humanitarian response capacities at all levels, by continuing to strengthen the coordination of humanitarian assistance at the field level, including with national authorities of the affected State, as appropriate, and by further enhancing transparency, performance and accountability;

4. Recognizes the benefits of engagement and coordination with relevant humanitarian actors to the effectiveness of humanitarian response, and encourages the United Nations to continue to pursue efforts to strengthen partnerships at the global level with the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement, relevant humanitarian non-governmental organizations and other participants in the Inter-Agency Standing Committee;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to strengthen the support provided to United Nations resident/humanitarian coordinators and to United Nations country teams, including through the provision of necessary training, the identification of resources and by improving the identification of and selection process for United Nations resident/humanitarian coordinators;

6. Reaffirms the importance of implementing the Hyogo Framework for Action 2005–2015: Building the Resilience of Nations and Communities to Disasters, and calls upon national Governments and the international community to increase resources towards disaster risk reduction measures, including for preparedness for effective response and contingency planning;

7. Encourages the international community, including relevant United Nations organizations and the International Federation of Red Cross and Red Crescent Societies, to support efforts of Member States aimed at strengthening their capacity to prepare for and respond to disasters and to support efforts, as appropriate, to strengthen systems for identifying and monitoring disaster risk, including vulnerability and natural hazards;

8. Recognizes the importance of the work of international and, as appropriate, regional organizations in supporting State efforts to improve international cooperation in disaster response, and encourages Member States and, where applicable, regional organizations to strengthen operational and legal frameworks for international disaster relief, taking into account, as appropriate, the Guidelines for the Domestic Facilitation and Regulation of International Disaster Relief and Initial Recovery Assistance, adopted at the Thirtieth International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent, held in Geneva from 26 to 30 November 2007;

9. Urges Member States, the United Nations and other relevant organizations to take further steps to provide co-ordinated emergency response to food and nutrition needs of affected populations, while aiming to ensure that these measures are supportive of national strategies and programmes aimed at improving food security;

10. Encourages States to create an enabling environment for the capacity-building of local authorities and national and local non-governmental and community-based organizations in order to ensure better preparedness in providing humanitarian assistance;

11. Encourages efforts to enhance cooperation and coordination of United Nations humanitarian entities, other relevant humanitarian organizations and donor countries with the affected State, with a view to planning and delivering emergency humanitarian assistance in ways that are supportive of early recovery as well as sustainable rehabilitation and reconstruction efforts;

12. Also encourages efforts to provide education in emergencies, including in order to contribute to a smooth transition from relief to development;

13. Calls upon relevant United Nations organizations to support the improvements of the consolidated appeals process, inter alia, by engaging in the preparation of needs analysis and common humanitarian action plans, in order to further the development of the process as an instrument for United Nations strategic planning and prioritization, and by involving other relevant humanitarian organizations in the process, while reiterating that consolidated appeals are prepared in consultation with affected States;

14. Calls upon United Nations humanitarian organizations, in consultation with Member States, as appropriate, to strengthen the evidence base for humanitarian assistance by further developing common mechanisms to improve the quality, transparency and reliability of humanitarian needs assessments, to assess their performance in assistance and to ensure the most effective use of humanitarian resources by these organizations;

15. Calls upon donors to provide adequate, timely, predictable and flexible resources based on and in proportion to assessed needs, including for underfunded emergencies, and encourages efforts to adhere to the principles of Good Humanitarian Donorship;

16. Welcomes the important achievements made by the Central Emergency Response Fund in ensuring a more timely and predictable response to humanitarian emergencies, and stresses the importance of addressing the findings and recommendations contained in the report on the Central Emergency Response Fund, in order to ensure that the resources are used in the most efficient, effective and transparent manner possible;

17. Calls upon all Member States and invites the private sector and all concerned individuals and institutions to consider increasing voluntary contributions to the Central Emergency Response Fund, and emphasizes that contributions should be additional to current commitments to humanitarian programming and not to the detriment of resources made available for international cooperation for development;

18. Requests the Secretary-General to commission an independent comprehensive review of the activities of the Central Emergency Response Fund, including the ability to meet its objectives, its administration, the needs assessment process and criteria for resource allocations, at the end of its fifth year of operation, and to submit a report on its findings and recommendations to the General Assembly at its sixty-sixth session;

19. Invites Member States, the private sector and all concerned individuals and institutions to consider voluntary contributions to other humanitarian funding mechanisms;

20. Reiterates that the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs should benefit from adequate and more predictable funding;

21. Reaffirms the obligation of all States and parties to an armed conflict to protect civilians in armed conflicts in accordance with international humanitarian law, and invites States to promote a culture of protection, taking into account the particular needs of women, children, older persons and persons with disabilities;

22. Calls upon States to adopt preventive measures and effective responses to acts of violence committed against civilian populations in armed conflicts and to ensure that those responsible are promptly brought to justice, as provided for by national law and obligations under international law;

23. Urges all Member States to address gender-based violence in humanitarian emergencies and to ensure that their laws and institutions are adequate to prevent, promptly investigate and prosecute acts of gender-based violence, and calls upon States, the United Nations and all relevant humanitarian organizations to improve coordination, harmonize response and strengthen capacity in support services to victims of such violence;

24. Recognizes the Guiding Principles on Internal Displacement as an important international framework for the protection of internally displaced persons, encourages Member States and humanitarian agencies to continue to work together in endeavours to provide a more predictable response to the needs of internally displaced persons, and in this regard calls for international support, upon request, for capacity-building efforts of States;

25. Calls upon all States and parties in complex humanitarian emergencies, in particular in armed conflict and in post-conflict situations, in countries in which humanitarian personnel are operating, in conformity with the relevant provisions of international law and national laws, to cooperate fully with the United Nations and other humanitarian agencies and organizations and to ensure the safe and unhindered access of humanitarian personnel, as well as delivery of supplies and equipment, in order to allow them to efficiently perform their task of assisting affected civilian populations, including refugees and internally displaced persons;

26. Decides to designate 19 August as World Humanitarian Day in order to contribute to increasing public awareness about humanitarian assistance activities worldwide and the importance of international cooperation in this regard, as well as to honour all humanitarian and United Nations and associated personnel who have worked in the promotion of the humanitarian cause and those who have lost their lives in the cause of duty, and invites all Member States and the entities of the United Nations system, within existing resources, as well as other international organizations and non-governmental organizations, to observe it annually in an appropriate manner;

27. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its sixty-fourth session, through the Economic and Social Council at its substantive session of 2009, on progress made in strengthening the coordination of emergency humanitarian assistance of the United Nations and to submit a report to the Assembly on the detailed use of the Central Emergency Response Fund.

UN and other humanitarian personnel

In response to General Assembly resolution 62/95 [YUN 2007, p. 1504], the Secretary-General, in an August report [A/63/305 & Corr.1], provided updates on the safety and security of humanitarian and UN personnel over the preceding year and on the efforts by the UN Department of Safety and Security to implement that resolution. He expressed concern over the wide scale of threats, the rise in deliberate targeting of humanitarian and UN personnel and their vulnerability worldwide, particularly as hostage incidents and targeted attacks in areas of humanitarian emergencies continued unabated. He also indicated that locally recruited personnel of the UN and humanitarian organizations in conflict and post-conflict areas were most vulnerable.

The Assembly, in resolution 63/138 of 11 December, called on Governments and parties in complex humanitarian emergencies to cooperate fully with the United Nations and other humanitarian agencies and organizations and to ensure the safe and unhindered access of humanitarian personnel (see p. 1611).

Resource mobilization

Central Emergency Response Fund

In 2008, the Central Emergency Response Fund (CERF), formerly known as the Central Emergency Revolving Fund [YUN 2006, p. 1061], a cash-flow mechanism for the initial phase of humanitarian emergencies established in 1992 [YUN 1992, p. 584], continued to allow for the rapid provision of assistance to populations affected by sudden-onset disasters and underfunded emergencies. The Fund was upgraded by General Assembly resolution 60/124 [YUN 2005, p. 991] to include a grant element, targeted at $450 million, to ensure the availability of immediate resources to address humanitarian crises. The loan element of the Fund continued to operate as a distinct and separately managed revolving fund with a target of $50 million. The 16-member CERF Advisory Group established to provide the Secretary-General with policy guidance and advice on the use and impact of the Fund met in June and November. In 2008, CERF reached its annual funding target for the first time, with over $453 million in pledges and contributions from donors. As at 31 December, $428.8 million in CERF funds had been allocated to support relief operations in 54 countries and the Occupied Palestinian Territory. In addition, by early December, some $380 million had already been secured towards the $450 million grant facility target for 2009.

Report of Secretary-General. In his October report on CERF [A/63/348], the Secretary-General provided information on its activities from 1 January 2007 to 30 June 2008, and on an evaluation of the Fund that was conducted after its second year of operation. The evaluation concluded that CERF had largely achieved its objectives and had become a valuable and impartial tool for humanitarian action by helping to speed up response and increase coverage of needs, and by serving as a catalyst for improved field-level coordination and evidence-based prioritization. Conversely, several challenges were also identified. The evaluation was conducted during the first half of 2008 by a team of independent consultants who focused on assessing the grant and loan elements of the Fund; its administration; the criteria for resource allocation; actions and responses supported by the Fund; and the Fund's ability to meet its objectives. In its report, the team presented its key findings, as well as 33 operational and four strategic recommendations, which included the progressive increase in the size of the Fund; improved consistency of the quality of CERF-funded programmes; strengthened capacity of the CERF secretariat and OCHA; and clarification of the multiple lines of accountability for CERF. As there was insufficient time to discuss the evaluation's findings and recommendations with key stakeholders, a detailed response to the evaluation would be compiled and provided at the General Assembly's 2008 plenary session on humanitarian affairs. On CERF activities, the Fund's loan mechanism continued to serve as a tool for UN system entities to bridge funding gaps caused by delays in the receipt of funding, with $41.3 million advanced in 2007, all to the Sudan, and another $30 million advanced through June 2008. On the grant component of the Fund, $350.9 million was committed to humanitarian projects in 2007, while some $249.1 million was committed in the first half of 2008.

The Secretary-General stated that the areas of improvement pinpointed by the evaluation would be taken up expeditiously to ensure that the Fund continued to build on its track record. In that connection, strengthening of the CERF Secretariat and ensuring that the Emergency Relief Coordinator had sufficient resources to meet the costs associated with the functioning, management and oversight of the Fund were key. He also observed that for the Fund to remain an effective response tool, it must be adequately supported so that it continued to reach the annual target of $500 million. He urged States to contribute to the Fund, including through early and multi-year commitments, and to support agencies' individual emergency reserves, in addition to country-based humanitarian pooled funds, such as emergency response funds and common humanitarian funds. He also encouraged the General Assembly to keep the Fund's progress under review and to consider requesting the conduct of another independent review in 2011.

Advisory Group meetings. At its June meeting, the CERF Advisory Group discussed the draft report of the two-year evaluation of CERF (see above), inter alia, in the context of observations and recommendations made by the Group during the course of its mandate; debated a range of issues related to the Fund's performance; and addressed outstanding challenges since its last meeting in October 2007 [YUN 2007, p. 918]. In a note issued following the meeting, the Group made a series of observations and recommendations based on updates by the Under-Secretary-General and Manager of the Fund; consultations with UN agencies, the International Organization for Migration, non-governmental organization (NGO) partners, and the Humanitarian/Resident Coordinator of the Democratic Republic of the Congo; and, in particular, discussions surrounding the evaluation of CERF with the team leader of the evaluation. Although the Group noted that they were in broad agreement with the report's conclusions and that the evaluation covered many issues and proposed recommendations that the Group had already raised, it called for a number of clarifications in the evaluation, including on analysis and evidence.

In November [A/63/665], the Group reviewed the management response to the evaluation of the Fund, the potential impact of the global financial crisis on the Fund and its performance since the Group's June meeting. It expressed concern about the impact of the global financial crisis on future CERF funding and noted that the high-level conference on 4 December would provide an early indication as to the effect of the crisis on donor behaviour. The Group made recommendations for the Fund to develop a resource mobilization strategy that included an adequate focus on small donors; explore complementarities with other funding sources; harmonize policies and procedures in accordance with the principles of good humanitarian donorship; and support only the highest-priority humanitarian projects. It also encouraged the CERF secretariat to strictly enforce the life-saving criteria when reviewing proposals. On the two-year evaluation, the Group supported its recommendations and the matrix summarizing the response of the Emergency Relief Coordinator. It noted that many of the recommendations had been implemented or were being implemented. Nonetheless, the most difficult outstanding issues, including partnerships, needs assessments and prioritization, reflected weaknesses in the overall humanitarian system and could not be resolved by the Fund itself. The Group proposed that the major challenges highlighted by the evaluation be divided into three strategic issues: performance and accountability, partnership arrangements, and the role of humanitarian/resident coordinators. It also recommended that OCHA play a leadership role in addressing systemic issues and lead the initiative to develop a performance and accountability framework to be used at the level of the overall humanitarian response, which could feed information to the Fund as required.

On 11 December, the General Assembly, in resolution 63/139 (see p. 996), requested the Secretary-General to commission an independent review of CERF and report on its findings and recommendations at the Assembly's sixty-sixth (2011) session.

Consolidated appeals

The consolidated appeals process, an inclusive and coordinated programme cycle for analysing context, assessing needs and planning prioritized humanitarian response, was the humanitarian sector's main strategic planning and programming tool. In 2008, the United Nations and its humanitarian partners issued consolidated and flash appeals seeking $7.1 billion in assistance to Bolivia, the Central African Republic, Chad, the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Georgia, Haiti, Honduras, Iraq, Kenya, Kyrgyzstan, Madagascar, Myanmar, the Occupied Palestinian Territory, Somalia, the Southern African Region (Malawi, Mozambique, Zambia, Zimbabwe), the Sudan, Tajikistan, Uganda, the West Africa subregion (Benin, Burkina Faso, Cape Verde, Côte d'Ivoire, Gambia, Ghana, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Liberia, Mali, Mauritania, Niger, Nigeria, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Togo) and Yemen. Separate appeals were launched for Côte d'Ivoire, Liberia and Zimbabwe.

The latest available data indicated that 72 per cent ($5.1 billion) of requirements had been met.

New international humanitarian order

In 2008, the UN system continued efforts to promote a new international humanitarian order and strengthen its capacity, as well as that of States, to provide assistance to victims of humanitarian emergencies. OCHA, IASC and other UN agencies played a role in those efforts, and the Global Humanitarian Platform (GHP), which was established in 2006 to enhance the effectiveness of humanitarian action—based on the premise that no single humanitarian agency could cover all humanitarian needs—continued its activities in accordance with the GHP Action Plan 2007–2009.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December [meeting 70], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee [A/63/423], adopted resolution 63/147 without vote [agenda item 39].

New international humanitarian order

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 61/138 of 19 December 2006, all previous resolutions concerning the promotion of a new international humanitarian order and all relevant resolutions, in particular resolution 46/182 of 19 December 1991 on the strengthening of the coordination of humanitarian emergency assistance of the United Nations, and the annex thereto, and resolution 62/94 of 17 December 2007 on the strengthening of the coordination of emergency humanitarian assistance of the United Nations,

Noting with appreciation the continuing efforts of the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat and the Inter-Agency Standing Committee, as well as other United Nations agencies in the context of international humanitarian assistance,

Recognizing the importance of action at the national and regional levels and the role that regional organizations can play in certain cases to prevent humanitarian crises, and emphasizing the importance of continued international cooperation in support of affected States in dealing with natural disasters and complex emergencies,

Noting with appreciation the continuing efforts of the United Nations system to increase its capacity and that of its Member States to provide assistance to victims of humanitarian emergencies,

Recognizing the important role that international organizations, intergovernmental organizations, civil society, including non-governmental organizations, and the private sector can play, within their respective mandates, in the humanitarian context,

1. Recognizes the need for the further strengthening of national, regional and international efforts to address humanitarian emergencies;

2. Expresses its appreciation for the continuing efforts of the Secretary-General in the humanitarian field, and invites him to continue to promote strict adherence to refugee law, international humanitarian law and internationally agreed norms and principles in humanitarian emergency situations;

3. Urges Governments, intergovernmental organizations and civil society, including non-governmental organizations, to extend cooperation and support to the efforts of the Secretary-General, inter alia, through the relevant United Nations agencies and organizational mechanisms set up to address the assistance and protection needs of affected populations as well as the safety and security of United Nations and other humanitarian workers;

4. Encourages intergovernmental organizations and civil society, including non-governmental organizations, as well as the private sector, where appropriate, to assist and support national and international efforts to respond to humanitarian emergencies;

5. Invites Member States, the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, relevant entities of the United Nations system and intergovernmental organizations and civil society, including non-governmental organizations, to reinforce activities and cooperation so as to continue to develop an agenda for humanitarian action;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to report on these issues to the General Assembly at its sixty-fifth session in his annual report on the strengthening of the coordination of emergency humanitarian assistance of the United Nations.

Humanitarian activities

Africa

Central African Republic

The UN Consolidated Inter-Agency Appeal for the Central African Republic, launched for $118.7 million in 2008, received 90 per cent ($107.3 million) of its target.

The conflict in the Central African Republic between three militant groups and the Government had ended, and the Government had drawn up a long-term development plan to tackle chronic poverty and underdevelopment. Donors had started to re-engage, pledging $600 million in development aid over a three-year period. Nonetheless, many Central Africans still lived in fear and the threat to security and progress was growing more complex. The sources of conflict in the country had multiplied, with attacks and violence by bandits becoming the grimmest source of human suffering. Criminal gangs who robbed travellers, assailed, looted and burned entire villages and kidnapped children for ransom were responsible for one third of all displacement, and had forced 100,000 Central Africans to flee from their villages or remain displaced in the bush, in towns or in neighbouring Chad and Cameroon. Some 10,000 Central Africans had fled to Chad, and at least 13,000 were forced into internal displacement due to banditry. The most obvious consequences of the violence were the 197,000 displaced persons who had fled their villages. Improved information gathering enabled the Humanitarian and Development Partnership Team (HDPT) to design and coordinate its programmes more effectively. HDPT revised its strategy for humanitarian action until the end of the year. While the overall strategic priorities remained the same: providing protection and emergency assistance, and linking humanitarian assistance to recovery and development, the objectives and projects in each sector were reviewed by both clusters and the Humanitarian Coordinator.

Chad

The UN Consolidated Inter-Agency Appeal for Chad in 2008 sought $317.9 million, of which 81 per cent ($257.5 million) was received.

Humanitarian needs in Chad increased due to renewed fighting in the north of the country and developments in Darfur and the Central African Republic over the first half of the year. In February, armed opposition groups reached the capital of N'Djamena in an attempt to overthrow the Government. Given the climate of political instability, the second half of 2008 was critical for determining whether security and stability would improve or worsen in Chad. As a result of humanitarian aid, half a million people were able to survive. In preparation for potential recovery, progress had also been made in promoting livelihoods, decreasing food aid dependency, improving access to drinking water and health care, and promoting human rights for the most vulnerable people. Education was a priority not only for the well-being of children and their families, but to sustain hopes for future development. Nonetheless, humanitarian work was becoming increasingly dangerous, with access to some areas being limited. An international presence in Chad established by Security Council resolution 1778(2007) [YUN 2007, p. 153], with a military component, had yet to become operational. The appeal, which originally sought $288 million, was revised to $306 million.

Democratic Republic of Congo

The UN Consolidated Inter-Agency Appeal for the Democratic Republic of Congo, launched for $736.5 million in 2008, received 77 per cent ($564.5 million) of its request.

Developments early in the year had a positive impact on the humanitarian situation. Following the Goma peace conference in January, violence decreased in North and South Kivu, compared to the previous six months, and there were reports of people returning to both provinces. Progress was also observed in other provinces. Only a small number of displaced persons remained in Katanga, compared to over 100,000 in September 2006. The number of displaced persons in the Orientale province decreased from 152,000 in June 2007 to 63,000 in May 2008. Despite those gains, the humanitarian situation in the country remained fragile. Since the Goma conference, 188 violations of the ceasefire by armed groups were recorded in North Kivu, displacing some 91,000 people. Within the framework of the "Amani Programme" established to follow up on the conference, humanitarian actors worked to develop sustainable conditions and solutions for internally displaced persons (IDPs) after years of conflict. During the development of the 2008 Humanitarian Action Plan, the country team introduced a new approach. Humanitarian actors identified five priority areas and established multi-sectoral programmes for assistance activities to: reduce mortality and morbidity rates; combat malnutrition; reduce violence against civilians; protect and assist IDPs; and facilitate the return and reintegration of IDPs. Preliminary results indicated that 91 per cent of the 12,627 undernourished children admitted to nutritional centres were treated successfully; more than 137,000 displaced families, returnees and vulnerable people were given assistance as non-food items; over 28,466 tonnes of goods had been distributed since the beginning of the year; and mortality and morbidity rates dropped below the humanitarian threshold within several territories, such as Bomongo and Equateur. Due to the evolving humanitarian situation, the country team revised the Plan, increasing the financing requirements from $575 million to $736 million. A revised, consolidated set of indicators allowed 79 territories to be classified as humanitarian priority zones. Following an earthquake that struck South Kivu in February, humanitarian actors offered their assistance.

Kenya

The UN Consolidated Inter-Agency Appeal for Kenya, which sought $207.6 million in 2008, received 66 per cent ($136.9 million) of the requirements.

The widespread violence that followed the disputed presidential elections in December 2007 led to a growing humanitarian crisis in the country. Following claims from national and international observers that the vote had been seriously flawed, rioting and looting broke out in cities and towns particularly in the west of the country and in and around Nairobi. An estimated 500,000 people were displaced or otherwise affected by the crisis, including some 250,000 IDPs who found shelter in camps and other sites. Although a power-sharing arrangement was signed between the opposing parties on 28 February, how the agreement would be implemented was a source of anxiety for the population at large, and the displaced in particular. In addition to the political crisis, there were increasing indications that the country was facing the early stages of drought. The projected rain shortages in the arid and semi-arid lands would compound food insecurity stemming from the production shortfalls caused by the post-election violence and the consequent loss of the March planting in the country's grain-basket areas. In western Kenya, humanitarian actors began trucking water in several districts and preparedness activities were needed to preserve fragile livelihoods. In January 2008, humanitarian partners launched the Emergency Humanitarian Response Plan and sought $41.9 million for urgent, lifesaving humanitarian activities. As an increasingly comprehensive assessment of needs became available, humanitarian partners revised their response strategies in line with the evolving political situation, which added to the emerging humanitarian needs due to poor expected rainfall. The revised appeal included projects from 13 UN system entities and 37 international and national NGOs through the end of 2008 and addressed three main areas: drought; maintenance of IDPs, including host families; and resettlement, early recovery and restoring livelihoods. The largest increase was in the food sector, owing to expanding drought-related needs.

Somalia

The UN Consolidated Inter-Agency Appeal for Somalia for 2008, which sought $662.5 million, received 74 per cent ($489.8 million) of the requirements.

Somalia experienced a serious deterioration of the humanitarian situation, at a more rapid and larger scale than anticipated during the development of the appeal. Drought and severe water shortages affected wide geographical areas from the north to most of central Somalia, while displacement caused by insecurity and conflict continued in and around Mogadishu, with the IDP population reaching 300,000 in the Afgooye corridor, and 1.1 million in total. The crisis was compounded by the growing IDP population, the effects of drought, deepening insecurity and a number of economic factors. In April, the Food Security Analysis Unit (FSAU) of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO) indicated that 2.6 million or 35 per cent of the population faced the conditions of Humanitarian Emergency (HE) or Acute Food and Livelihoods Crisis (AFLC), an increase of more than 40 per cent since January. The FSAU analysis also gave an early warning that in the event the Gu rains failed, the Somali shilling would continue to be devalued, food prices would continue to increase and civil insecurity would worsen, with potentially 3.5 million people—nearly half the population—facing HE or AFLC conditions. The situation called for the immediate scaling-up of the humanitarian and livelihood-support programmes. The financial requirements for the appeal were revised upwards from the original $406 million to $641 million (57 per cent increase) to assist those 2.6 to 3.5 million people in need.

Sudan

The UN Consolidated Inter-Agency Appeal for the Sudan, launched for $2 billion in 2008, received 70 per cent ($1.4 billion) of the requirements.

Three years after the Sudan's warring factions signed the Comprehensive Peace Agreement [YUN 2005, p. 301] to end the war between the north and the south, there was still fighting in parts of the country, and millions continued to suffer and rely on humanitarian aid. Nonetheless, some gains had been achieved: roads were built, mines cleared, millions of children were vaccinated and dozens more were removed from armed groups. More than 85,000 displaced Sudanese received UN assistance to return home from northern Sudan and neighbouring countries, while some 3.4 million people received food. The need to manage Sudan's resources became a priority, since their depletion would not only make people more reliant on aid, but would also aggravate the fundamental causes of conflict. Continuing violence, on the other hand, increasingly complicated the delivery of vital humanitarian aid. Within the first six months of the year, conflict in Darfur deepened, displacing an additional 200,000 people, increasing the number of displaced and vulnerable to 4.3 million. Meanwhile, camps were overcrowded, water was in short supply and consecutive bad harvests and rising food and fuel prices had led to more malnutrition. The humanitarian community became the target of violence, with 12 aid workers killed; and insecurity cut off thousands of people from much-needed aid. The UN decision to raise security levels both in Darfur and the rest of the north might also impact future operations and planning. The 2008 Sudan Work Plan introduced a new category: early recovery, intended to highlight the gradual transition towards long-term sustainable solutions. The 2009 Work Plan would present only humanitarian and early recovery portfolios, while a separate UN Development Assistance Framework would plan for recovery and development.

Uganda

The UN Consolidated Inter-Agency Appeal for Uganda, which sought $374.4 million in 2008, received 71 per cent ($265.4 million) of its target.

Steady improvement was made in the humanitarian situation in northern Uganda, with the lifting of the last remaining restrictions on the freedom of movement and a gradual increase in the number of returnees across the Acholi and Teso sub-regions, which prompted the Government and aid agencies to develop coordinated strategies for consolidating the peace dividends that had accrued since August 2006. Therefore, across the districts hosting IDPs, the humanitarian priority from July 2008 to December 2009 would be to help consolidate peace by supporting the Government's lead role in stabilizing the needs of the vulnerable population, while working to ensure that IDPs achieved the durable solutions recognized under the Uganda IDP Policy, namely, voluntary return; settlement in the former IDP camp; and relocation to another part of the country. Low donor support, which had left various clusters without the means of implementing most of their transitional programming, was a concern, as was the deteriorating situation in Karamoja, where visible signs of malnutrition had been reported. In an effort to sharpen the humanitarian focus in northern Uganda, humanitarian and development partners prioritized all projects in the revised appeal on a three-tier system that indicated projects that had been classified as humanitarian, early recovery or recovery.

West Africa

The UN Consolidated Inter-Agency Appeal for the West Africa subregion, launched for $459 million in 2008 to assist beneficiaries in Benin, Burkina Faso, Cape Verde, Côte d'Ivoire, the Gambia, Ghana, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Liberia, Mali, Mauritania, the Niger, Nigeria, Senegal, Sierra Leone and Togo, received 67 per cent ($309.2 million) of the requirements.

At the regional level, humanitarian partners agreed to focus on five priority areas: food security and nutrition; rapid response to health emergencies; protection and population movements; natural disaster preparedness; and water, sanitation and hygiene. As reform efforts rallied humanitarian partners into cluster leadership and cross-sector coordination, the challenge would be making the transition from a culture of coordinating humanitarian actions related to conflicts to a new role of coordinating humanitarian affairs to ensure that countries, regional organizations and new actors were fully engaged in disaster risk reduction activities that spanned from conflict to natural disasters. That would require a shift from a humanitarian response system based on addressing highly visible needs to a livelihood-based approach that placed rights to food, protection and health at the centre of a search for better human security, a prerequisite for sustainable development. As a result of the mid-year review, revised requirements for the appeal totalled $416.5 million.

Côte d'Ivoire

The UN Consolidated Inter-Agency Appeal for Côte d'Ivoire, which sought $58.1 million in 2008, received 47 per cent ($27.1 million) of the requirements.

Following the signature of the Ouagadougou Agreement in March 2007 [YUN 2007, p. 174], Côte d'Ivoire entered a post-conflict phase for the first time since the socio-political crisis erupted in 2002 [YUN 2002, p. 180]. That transition led to improvements in the security situation and reinforced collaboration between humanitarian partners and the Government, which helped facilitate response efforts to meet the relief and protection needs of an estimated 120,000 IDPs in the western part of the country. Consequently, between March 2007 and September 2008, humanitarian agencies recorded the voluntary return of 70,000 IDPs in the west. Another benchmark of the transition was the closure of the IDPs transit camp in Guiglo on 31 July, marking significant progress in the returns process. The cluster approach was formalized and the terms of reference for all sector groups were revised in accordance with IASC generic guidelines for cluster/sector leads. Humanitarian efforts in the country resulted in 13,300 households assisted by FAO during the rainy season; food rations provided by the World Food Programme (WFP) to 42,151 vulnerable groups, including 17,000 IDPs in transit and IDPs in camp Guiglo; and the vaccination of some two million people in response to the yellow fever outbreak in August. Efforts to strengthen mechanisms for preventing gender-based violence also continued. Nonetheless, high rates of malnutrition were revealed in July. A joint survey carried out by UNICEF, WFP and an external partner concluded that the food security situation in the north had deteriorated following a poor maize and rice harvest in 2007, erosion of the means of production with the loss of oxen, and a loss of purchasing power as a result of high food prices. The acute malnutrition rate was 17.5 per cent in the north, well above the emergency threshold of 10 per cent. Other potential threats to long-term peace and security persisted, with little or no progress in the disarmament of former rebels and dismantling of militias, and weapons remaining prolific. The revised appeal, which modified the food security sector, sought $54.8 million.

Liberia

The UN Consolidated Inter-Agency Appeal for Liberia, launched for $43.8 million in 2008, received 62 per cent ($27.2 million) of its target.

Despite the gains achieved in previous years to consolidate peace and strengthen national authority in Liberia, which had paved the way to more sustainable recovery and development, many Liberians remained vulnerable, faced with acute humanitarian needs on a daily basis. Those included lack of access to health care, safe drinking water, shelter and education. In response to the many challenges, the Government was leading efforts to formulate a poverty reduction strategy that would prioritize development efforts. In order to ensure a more coherent response, the United Nations in Liberia formulated a United Nations Development Assistance Framework that advanced programmatic initiatives aligned with national priorities. During the crisis and immediate post-crisis period, Liberia relied on the support of international humanitarian organizations to provide basic social services, many of which closed operations or were scaling back due to reduced funding. The situation was a reminder that the international community had yet to come to grips with the humanitarian-to-development gap, and that steps were needed to ensure that vulnerabilities were not exacerbated in a nation that remained fragile. Against that background, the Government and the humanitarian community agreed on the need to highlight the most critical humanitarian gaps (CHG) and mobilized resources to respond. Nineteen high-priority projects were presented in the sectors of health, food security, and water, sanitation, and hygiene, which had been particularly underfunded in previous humanitarian appeals. The CHG projects would play a role in advancing efforts to lay the foundation for recovery and development; build upon successful work in Liberia supported by CERF in 2006–2007; and benefit from the strengthened collaboration and joint analysis fostered by the CERF prioritization process.

Zimbabwe

For Zimbabwe, the UN Consolidated Inter-Agency Appeal sought $583.4 million in 2008, of which 69 per cent ($400.5 million) was received.

In 2008, the alarming degradation of Zimbabwe's economy and the rise in social vulnerability exacerbated the humanitarian situation. A protracted election period, from March through August, put the country on hold for six months, during which election violence and Government restrictions halted most humanitarian field activities. Consequently, half a year of critical humanitarian service delivery in support of food security, clean water, health, and education services was lost. A third consecutive failed agricultural season further increased dependence on food and non-food assistance. It was estimated that 5.1 million Zimbabweans would rely on food aid by the first quarter of 2009. The infrastructure for delivering basic social services was seriously affected, resulting in unprecedented levels of disease incidence and prevalence throughout the country. Hyperinflation and a collapsing banking system also posed challenges to humanitarian operations, with most agencies affected by the lack of cash and inability to access foreign currency. As at November 2008, it was estimated that further deterioration of the humanitarian situation could be averted if a Government of national unity could be created. In support of effective response, the cluster approach was adopted in 2008 covering five priority sectors: agriculture; emergency telecommunications; health; nutrition; and water, sanitation and hygiene. Early recovery, education, and protection working groups were expected to be formalized into clusters in 2009. In addition, HIV focal points for each cluster would ensure the integration of HIV in emergency preparations and management.

Asia

Afghanistan

In 2008, the humanitarian situation in Afghanistan worsened and was characterized by food insecurity due to drought and exacerbated by high global food prices that affected as much as one sixth of the population. The impact of armed conflict on civilians also contributed to the deteriorating humanitarian situation. An increasingly dangerous operational environment for humanitarian personnel constrained their ability to access and deliver assistance, as there had been an increase in the number of attacks against humanitarian personnel and assets in recent years. The ongoing conflict also posed a threat to the protection of the Afghan population in affected areas and had a severe impact on livelihoods, coping mechanisms and access to essential services, especially in vulnerable areas inaccessible by road. As at October, approximately 40 per cent of the country, including much of the south, could not be accessed by most humanitarian organizations. More than half of Afghanistan's land area received less than 25 per cent of its normal rainfall during the year. As a consequence of the drought, an estimated 1.2 million children under five, along with 550,000 pregnant and lactating women in 22 provinces, were at high risk of severe malnutrition. An appeal to provide a safety net for the 425,000 most vulnerable households was launched in January and sought $81.3 million (Afghanistan Joint Appeal for the Humanitarian Consequences of the Rise of Food Prices). In July, a second Afghanistan joint emergency appeal for $404 million was launched to support nearly 2 million people affected by the food insecurity and drought conditions in addition to the 2.6 million assisted during the previous six months.

In September [A/63/372-S/2008/617], the Secretary-General reported that the humanitarian situation was worsening and the food insecurity situation had become serious. He said that the most pressing humanitarian problems were the drought and high global food prices that had created food shortages affecting one sixth of the population, and that the situation called for urgent action with both a short-term and a longer-term perspective.

Iraq

The UN Consolidated Inter-Agency Appeal for Iraq sought $274.3 million in 2008, of which 71 per cent ($194.4 million) of the requirements was received.

In 2008, the humanitarian situation in Iraq continued to call for a concerted and comprehensive international response. Urgent needs across key humanitarian sectors were widespread and accumulating due to acute deprivation of essential services; armed conflict; generalized violence and rights violations; long-term internal displacement and challenging return situations; and lack of access to impartial humanitarian assistance. The consolidated appeal and the Common Humanitarian Plan underpinning it were launched in mid-February. The overarching strategic priorities for humanitarian actors remained: relieve immediate suffering in communities acutely deprived by the crisis by bridging the gap in access to essential services; provide protection for the most vulnerable civilians against grave violations of their human rights; improve the capacity, coverage, coordination and impact of humanitarian action; and strengthen links between immediate action for families in crises and support for sustainable recovery.

While the overall appeal was 47 per cent funded as at July, financial contributions were unevenly allocated across the sectors, and key humanitarian sectors faced funding shortages. Moreover, funding for the emergency response had been late coming in, while other emergency programmes still needed funding to be delivered to Iraqi communities.

Nepal

In 2008, landmark political achievements took place in Nepal, with the holding of successful elections in April, the first election in the country of a President and Vice-President, the swearing-in of the first Prime Minister, and the formation of a new Government. Nonetheless, the new Government faced several challenges, such as the global food and fuel crisis, elaborating a new Federal Constitution, the integration of armies and addressing floods. The humanitarian situation, which remained a concern with high malnutrition rates exacerbated by the food crisis, was further compounded by floods and landslides in two regions of the country, affecting an estimated 250,000 persons. The Nepal IASC elaborated an appeal for transition support to improve monitoring and response to needs of the people affected by the conflict, internal disturbances and natural disasters; provide timely and effective humanitarian services for the most vulnerable population; and ensure coherence between humanitarian assistance and development and peacebuilding efforts. Total appeal requirements amounted to $121.9 million, which included the revised Transition Appeal ($106.4 million) and the supplementary flood response plan ($15.5 million).

Pakistan

In August, Pakistan suffered a series of overlapping crises that led to substantial internal displacement and left hundreds of thousands in need of humanitarian assistance when the country was reeling from the effects of the global food crisis. Unusually heavy monsoon rains and flash floods in early August affected over 300,000 people in the northern part of the country, with the Peshawar District in the North West Frontier Province (NWFP) and Rajanpur District in Punjab Province particularly adversely affected. In addition, renewed fighting between the Government and militant groups in the Federally Administered Tribal Areas and in the Swat District in NWFP caused significant internal displacement. While a significant proportion of an estimated 260,000 people displaced by operations in Bajaur Agency were reported to have returned home following the ceasefire announcement, it was likely that the conflict would escalate again and cause new displacement. Moreover, although the acute phase of the flooding appeared to have passed, the humanitarian situation remained critical.

The Humanitarian Response Plan sought a total of $55 million to cover the identified and estimated needs of approximately 400,000 people affected by floods and conflict and needing immediate assistance over a period of six months. Programming also took into account the volatile security situation and the need to respond rapidly to possible further displacement of up to 400,000 people in the ensuing months, making an overall projected caseload of 800,000.

Occupied Palestinian Territory

million in 2008, received 75 per cent ($337.1 million) of the requirements.

In 2008, the overall humanitarian situation in the Territory continued to deteriorate, with the exception of slight improvements in some sectors, and was characterized by a desperate environment in the Gaza Strip. Palestinians living in Gaza were confronted with interference in their normal social and political lives and daily degradations such as reduced access to water, electricity, proper sanitation and garbage collection, and adequate health care. They also faced increased violence and casualties; extended closures of crossings; severe limitations on basic supplies; shortages of spare parts, raw materials, and other commercial and agricultural supplies; and an overall economic contraction. Over 70 per cent of households continued to rely on food aid, and shortages of fuel and electricity supplies due to Israel's restrictions exacerbated the situation. There was also a significant rise in Palestinian and Israeli casualties, including a major increase in child fatalities among Palestinians. In the West Bank, the humanitarian situation was affected by a slight deterioration in internal freedom of movement, reflected by the increasing number of closure obstacles and restrictions for Palestinians using key roads. Some areas experienced improvements with restrictions/closures being lifted. Other factors affecting the situation were the previous winter's drought and frost, and the increase in housing demolitions during the first quarter of the year. In both Gaza and the West Bank, the humanitarian situation worsened due to a significant rise in food prices, with vulnerable groups being hardest hit. Although some measures were taken to improve movement restrictions and the economic situation, those efforts were unlikely to have a significant impact on short-term humanitarian needs. The midyear review of the 2008 consolidated appeal revealed that the main needs identified at the end of 2007 remained unchanged. Meanwhile, the Gaza Strip was identified as an increasing priority in terms of the delivery of humanitarian aid.

Sri Lanka

In 2008, developments in the 25-year-long conflict in Sri Lanka adversely impacted the humanitarian situation. In January, the Government withdrew from the 2002 ceasefire agreement [YUN 2002, p. 1213] and stepped up efforts to impair the operational capacities of the Liberation Tigers of Tamil Eelam. The humanitarian situation was characterized by a significant decrease in the provision of adequate shelter, water and sanitation for the growing number of displaced persons in the Kilinochchi and Mullaitivu Districts due to a ban on transporting construction materials for national security reasons. Implementing partners prioritized the provision of shelter, camp management and supply of non-food relief items, assisting some 100,000 individuals in five districts. Some 220,000 people were provided with access to safe water and essential hygiene items, while 5,700 persons benefited from better access to sanitation. Nearly 784,000 people, including 336,900 IDPs, received food assistance during the year. In September, as fighting intensified, Kilinochchi (the main base for humanitarian operations in the north) grew increasingly insecure, and the United Nations and international NGOs had to relocate to Vavuniya. Limited access, as well as the relocation of UN/NGO personnel from Kilinochchi, hampered efforts by humanitarian workers to assess, implement and monitor assistance and protection programmes. On the other hand, as fighting intensified in the north, the end of fighting in the east led to the return of 160,000 IDPs.

Syrian Arab Republic

In 2008, Syria experienced its worst drought in four decades. The Government estimated that 200,000 families—predominantly herders and subsistence farmers, who risked malnutrition and the loss of their livelihoods—had suffered from its impact. The Government approached the UN Resident Coordinator requesting the mobilization of emergency funds from UN agencies and the donor community. The UN country team conducted a UN joint rapid drought impact assessment from 11 to 25 August to verify the impact of rain shortfall on crop production and range vegetation, livestock, vulnerable groups, herders and household income. The UN Inter-Agency mission estimated that some 204,000 families (1 million people) in north-eastern Syria were food insecure; their income from crops and livestock sales had been depleted; and many of them were resorting to damaging coping mechanisms, such as decreased food intake, sale of agriculture and household assets, or migration. The availability of safe drinking water had decreased considerably in the rural areas of north-eastern Syria, and the migration of the rural population towards less water-stressed urban areas was 20 to 30 per cent higher than in previous years due to the impact of the drought, loss of livelihoods and water shortages. The situation was not expected to improve until the spring of 2009, when the crops sown in October 2008 would mature—if the rains did not fail for a second consecutive year. Through the Syria drought appeal, five UN agencies sought $20.2 million to work with governmental partners and NGOs in addressing emergency humanitarian needs and preventing further impact on approximately 1 million drought-affected persons for a period of six months.

Timor-Leste

In 2008, Timor-Leste continued to transition from relief to development. Humanitarian actors recognized that there was no short-term solution to internal displacement and that a phased and multi-dimensional approach was required to reach a sustainable resolution. Consequently, the Transitional Strategy and Appeal (TSA) for Timor-Leste contained a modular framework, including feasible and realistic humanitarian and recovery assistance projects, to be implemented during the year. While humanitarian assistance in the IDP camps continued to be an imperative, the Government and its partners focused on a recovery strategy and initiatives aimed at creating an enabling environment for the return or resettlement of IDPs. As natural disasters seriously impacted human and national security, strengthening the national disaster risk management capacity was also a focus to prevent future humanitarian needs. The TSA included 67 projects submitted by NGOs, UN agencies and affiliated organizations and amounted to $33.5 million.

Georgia

On 8 August, following an increase in the number of military incidents, the situation in the breakaway Georgian province of South Ossetia escalated into open hostilities. It deteriorated further with renewed fighting in the Abkhazia province, and fighting in other parts of Georgia, particularly in and around the city of Gori. Hundreds of people were reportedly killed or wounded, and the fighting led to internal and external displacement of large numbers of people. An estimated 128,700 people were displaced in Georgia, of which 30,000 were in the South Ossetia region. Another 30,000 people were believed to have sought refuge in North Ossetia, Russian Federation. Georgia was a country with some 220,000 displaced persons from previous conflicts in the South Ossetia and Abkhazia regions. Challenges to the delivery of assistance included the multiple sites of displaced persons and the presence of Russian military forces around several towns in Georgia, particularly Gori, along the main east-west transport link, which limited access to populations in the west and north-west. An initial appeal sought $59.6 million to cover the identified and estimated needs of a projected caseload of 128,700 persons for a six-month planning horizon. By October, although 68,000 of the 127,499 displaced persons from South Ossetia and Abkhazia had returned home, a significant number remained displaced, with an estimated 10,000 to 15,000 within South Ossetia.

Based on improved assessments and access, humanitarian organizations in Georgia revised the appeal, including refinements to food security, health and nutrition, protection, and shelter activities, as well as the introduction of a range of early recovery initiatives, which would cover the needs of 127,499 displaced persons and returnees until March 2009. The revised UN Flash Appeal sought $114.3 million, of which 64 per cent ($73 million) was received.

New Partnership for Africa's Development

The General Assembly, by resolution 57/7 [YUN 2002, p. 910], endorsed the Secretary-General's recommendation [ibid., p. 909] that the New Partnership for Africa's Development (NEPAD), adopted in 2001 by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity [YUN 2001, p. 900], should be the framework within which the international community should concentrate its efforts for Africa's development. During 2008, efforts continued to focus on UN and international support for NEPAD, its implementation and the holding of a high-level meeting by the General Assembly, which resulted in the adoption of a political declaration on Africa's development needs.

High-level meeting on Africa's development needs

The General Assembly, in resolution 62/179 [YUN 2007, p. 935] reaffirmed its decision to hold a high-level meeting on the theme "Africa's development needs: state of implementation of various commitments, challenges and the way forward" during its sixty-third (2008) session. On 4 March, by resolution 62/242 (see p. 1008) the Assembly agreed on the date (22 September), modalities and format of the meeting, which would be held at the highest political level, with the participation of Heads of State or Government, ministers and special representatives, and decided that the meeting would result in a political declaration on Africa's development needs. It also mandated the United Nations to consult with the African Union (AU) in preparing for the meeting and requested the Secretary-General to submit to the meeting a comprehensive report, with recommendations on the theme, in cooperation with relevant development agencies of the United Nations, the Bretton Woods institutions and other regional and international financial and trade institutions.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 March [meeting 85], the General Assembly adopted resolution 62/242 [draft: A/62/L.29/Rev.1 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 64 (a)].

Modalities, format and organization of the high-level meeting on Africa's development needs

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 61/229 of 22 December 2006 and 62/179 of 19 December 2007, in which it decided to convene, during its sixty-third session, a high-level meeting on the theme "Africa's development needs: state of implementation of various commitments, challenges and the way forward",

Recalling also the 2005 World Summit Outcome and its follow-up resolution 60/265 of 30 June 2006,

Recalling further its resolutions 57/270 B of 23 June 2003, 61/230 of 22 December 2006 and 61/296 of 17 September 2007 and the ministerial declaration of the high-level segment of the substantive session of 2001 of the Economic and Social Council of 18 July 2001, entitled "The role of the United Nations in support of the efforts of African countries to achieve sustainable development",

Reaffirming its determination to address the special needs of Africa, which is the only continent not on track to meet the Millennium Development Goals by 2015,

Noting that the implementation of commitments made to and by African countries will contribute to the continent's achievement of the Millennium Development Goals by 2015,

Convinced that the high-level meeting will constitute a significant event that will review the implementation of all commitments made to and by Africa in order to comprehensively address the special development needs of the continent,

1. Decides that the high-level meeting will be held on 22 September 2008, prior to the general debate of the sixty-third session of the General Assembly;

2. Decides also that the meeting will be held at the highest possible political level, with the participation of Heads of State or Government, ministers, special representatives and other representatives, as appropriate;

3. Decides further that the meeting will be composed of an opening plenary meeting, followed by two high-level round tables in the morning and two high-level round tables in the afternoon, which will address the overall theme of the meeting, and a closing plenary meeting;

4. Requests the President of the General Assembly to finalize the organizational arrangements for the meeting;

5. Decides that the meeting will result in a political declaration on Africa's development needs;

6. Requests the President of the General Assembly to produce a concise draft text, in consultation with Member States and based on their inputs, and convene informal consultations on the initial draft text at an appropriate date to enable sufficient discussion;

7. Strongly urges all Member States to actively participate in the meeting;

8. Decides that the preparations for the meeting will be conducted in close consultations between the United Nations and the African Union;

9. Invites the Holy See, in its capacity as observer State, and Palestine, in its capacity as observer, to participate in the meeting;

10. Decides that the President of the General Assembly will consult with representatives of non-governmental organizations in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council, civil society organizations and the private sector, and with Member States, as appropriate, on the list of representatives of non-governmental organizations, civil society organizations and the private sector that may participate in the round tables of the meeting;

11. Decides also that the meeting will be chaired by the President of the General Assembly;

12. Invites intergovernmental organizations and entities that have observer status with the General Assembly to participate in the meeting;

13. Invites heads of the United Nations funds, programmes and agencies to participate in the meeting, in consultation with the President of the General Assembly;

14. Invites the Bretton Woods institutions, the World Trade Organization, the regional development banks, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and development partners to participate in the meeting;

15. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the meeting a comprehensive report, with recommendations, on "Africa's development needs: state of implementation of various commitments, challenges and the way forward" in cooperation with relevant development agencies of the United Nations, the Bretton Woods institutions and other relevant regional and international financial and trade institutions.

Report of Secretary-General (July). Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 62/242 (above), the Secretary-General submitted a July report [A/63/130] on Africa's development needs: state of implementation of various commitments, challenges and the way forward. The report highlighted Africa's underlying development needs and challenges, including recurrent armed conflict and the lack of human and institutional capacity to design and implement sound policies; reviewed the main commitments made by the international community to address the continent's needs; and considered the implementation of pledges made by international development partners in key areas such as international development assistance, debt relief and debt cancellation, trade liberalization and aid for trade, and peace and security. It also analysed the UN role in supporting the AU and NEPAD, and assessed progress in attaining the MDGs in Africa. In that connection, the report indicated that 2008 marked the midpoint of the global effort to achieve the goals by 2015, and on the basis of current trends, no African country was likely to achieve all of them. Fragile and post-conflict countries faced particular challenges in generating momentum to reduce poverty and improve living standards. Nonetheless, success stories on individual goals across a range of countries demonstrated that rapid progress could be made when sound domestic policies were matched with substantial technical and financial support from the international community. Consequently, the high-level meeting on Africa's development needs, as well as the high-level event on the MDGs on 25 September (see p. 926), would provide key opportunities to renew the political will to implement existing commitments to address Africa's development needs and for all stakeholders to announce commitments to tangible action in support of the achievement of the MDGs in Africa. The report also drew on the work of the MDG Africa Steering Group, which was first convened in September 2007 [YUN 2007, p. 934] to catalyse, at the midpoint, more effective and efficient action by the international community in support of the MDGs in Africa.

The report concluded that progress towards the MDGs and other internationally agreed development goals remained off track and that more needed to be done to fulfil existing African and international commitments, as most remained only partially realized. Significant progress had been made in providing debt relief, aid for trade and support for peace and security, yet more needed to be done to follow through on pledges of sectoral-level support for Africa's development. Meeting Africa's development needs was within reach provided that African States and the international community acted with determination to turn commitments into concrete action. The report made recommendations for African States to strengthen mechanisms for the participation, inclusion and empowerment of all segments of society; the AU Commission and NEPAD secretariat to intensify efforts towards the ongoing integration of NEPAD into the structures of the Commission; and African countries to take further steps to improve economic and political governance. African countries were urged to integrate climate issues into economic planning and management at both national and regional levels. International partners were encouraged to support mitigation and adaptation efforts, "climate proof" all projects and policies intended to achieve agreed development goals, and provide compensatory financing for that process. In the follow-up to the MDG Africa Steering Group assessment, the international community needed to increase external financing for African agriculture from $1–2 billion per year to some $8 billion by 2010, while $8.3 billion was required each year to meet the education MDGs, and an estimated $25–30 billion would be required per year by 2010 for health. Some $52.2 billion was required annually in public and private investment finance to resolve the critical bottlenecks in infrastructure. Other recommendations addressed shortcomings in the quality of aid and on harmonizing delivery, prioritizing quick-impact projects, development partners' fulfilling their ODA commitments, and African countries' improving their supply-side capacities and deepening their regional integration; and the donor community concentrating its efforts on conflict prevention/early warning, post-war reconstruction, peacekeeping and peace enforcement, in order to achieve a conflict-free Africa by 2010.

Political declaration on Africa's development needs. On 22 September, the General Assembly convened a high-level plenary meeting [A/63/PV.3 & 4] on the theme "Africa's development needs: state of implementation of various commitments, challenges and the way forward", which considered the Secretary-General's report on that topic (see above) and discussed the progress made towards achieving the goals set out in the Millennium Declaration [YUN 2000, p. 49]. In his address to the meeting, the Secretary-General said that current trends indicated that no African country would achieve all the MDGs by 2015. The meeting on Africa's development needs was important in itself, yet was also critical to preparations for the high-level meeting on the MDGs to be held on 25 September and the Doha Review Conference on Financing for Development in November (see p. 1076). He stated that through concerted action by African Governments and their development partners, the MDGs remained achievable in Africa. On the estimated cost of $72 billion per year in external financing to achieve the goals by 2015, he appealed to all donors to implement the 2005 Gleneagles summit pledge to more than double aid to Africa. He also urged participants to strengthen their commitment to change the course of history and bring hope and development to Africa. On the same date, the Assembly adopted a political declaration on Africa's development needs (see below), in which States reaffirmed their commitment to address the special needs of Africa and to strengthen support for the implementation of NEPAD and national and sub-regional development plans and strategies.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 September [meeting 4], the General Assembly adopted resolution 63/1 [draft: A/63/L.1] without vote [agenda item 57 (a)].

Political declaration on Africa's development needs

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 62/242 of 4 March 2007, in particular paragraph 5,

Adopts the following political declaration:

Political declaration on Africa's development needs

1. We, Heads of State and Government, Ministers and representatives of Member States gathered at a high-level meeting at United Nations Headquarters in New York on 22 September 2008 to address "Africa's development needs: state of implementation of various commitments, challenges and the way forward”, stress that the high-level meeting represents a unique opportunity to strengthen the global partnership for development in Africa, which is pivotal to bringing Africa into the mainstream of the global economy.

2. We reaffirm the special needs of Africa as contained in the United Nations Millennium Declaration, the United Nations Declaration on the New Partnership for Africa's Development, the Monterrey Consensus of the International Conference on Financing for Development, the Plan of Implementation of the World Summit on Sustainable Development (“Johannesburg Plan of Implementation”) and the 2005 World Summit Outcome.

3. We recommit ourselves to reinvigorate and strengthen a global partnership of equals based on our common values, mutual accountability, shared responsibility and the determination to collectively act for our common future and to mobilize the resources, including human, financial and technological, required to end poverty, hunger and underdevelopment in Africa, with the explicit objective of turning existing commitments into concrete actions.

4. We commit to strengthening support for the implementation of the New Partnership for Africa's Development, which is an overarching framework for socioeconomic sustainable development in Africa, as well as for the implementation of national and subregional development plans and strategies.

5. We stress that eradicating poverty, particularly in Africa, is the greatest global challenge facing the world today. We underline the importance of accelerating sustainable broad-based economic growth, including employment generation and decent work, towards a vibrant Africa.

6. We reaffirm our commitment to address the special needs of Africa, a continent where, despite recent considerable improvements, the full and timely achievement of the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals, remains elusive.

7. We commit to supporting the consolidation of democracy in Africa and assisting African countries in their struggle for lasting peace, economic growth, poverty eradication and sustainable development.

8. We underline that good governance at all levels is essential for sustained economic growth, poverty eradication and sustainable development. We welcome the progress many African countries have made with respect to implementing pro-poor economic policies, deepening democracy and protecting human rights. We stress the importance of African-led initiatives to strengthen political, economic and corporate governance, such as the African Peer Review Mechanism. We recommit ourselves to actively protecting and promoting all human rights, the rule of law and democracy.

9. We welcome the efforts of African Governments to mobilize domestic resources and attract private capital to finance the investments and expenditures needed to achieve their development goals. We underscore the importance of an enabling environment at all levels, which is vital for mobilizing domestic resources, increasing productivity, generating employment, especially for youth, reducing capital flight, fighting corruption, encouraging the private sector and attracting foreign direct investment, and in this regard we underline the importance of human, professional and institutional capacity-building for development.

10. We stress the importance of strengthening domestic financial sectors as a source of capital by making them inclusive, thus expanding access to financial services.

11. We underline the importance of increasing foreign direct investment in the extractive industries value chain as well as diversification in other sectors, in order to achieve higher levels of employment and facilitate the transfer of technology and knowledge.

12. We are concerned that, at the current rate, the commitment of doubling aid to Africa by 2010 as articulated at the Summit of the Group of Eight, held at Gleneagles from 6 to 8 July 2005, will not be reached. We call for the fulfillment of all official development assistance-related commitments, including the commitments made by many developed countries to achieve the target of 0.7 per cent of gross national income for official development assistance by 2015, as well as the target of 0.15 per cent to 0.20 per cent of gross national income for least developed countries, and urge those developed countries that have not yet done so to make concrete efforts in this regard in accordance with their commitments.

13. We welcome the increased aid flows from new development actors, including some developing countries, global funds, the private sector and civil society organizations, as well as from innovative sources of finance.

14. We emphasize that debt sustainability is essential for underpinning growth, and underline the importance of debt sustainability and effective debt management to the efforts to achieve national development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals. Debtors and creditors must share the responsibility for preventing and resolving unsustainable debt situations. We note with appreciation the progress under the Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Initiative and the Multilateral Debt Relief Initiative, but remain concerned that a number of African countries are still facing difficulties in finding a durable solution to their debt problems, which could adversely affect their sustainable development. We therefore call for continued efforts to achieve long-term debt sustainability.

15. We recommit to improving the effectiveness of development assistance, including the fundamental principles of ownership, alignment, harmonization, managing for results and mutual accountability. We call for a continuing dialogue to improve the effectiveness of aid, including the full implementation of the Accra Agenda for Action by countries and organizations that commit to it.

16. We commit to promoting South-South cooperation and triangular cooperation, which have great potential to facilitate the exchange of successful strategies, practices and experiences. The impact of South-South cooperation may be further harnessed through synergies with other bilateral or multilateral development partners. We recognize South-South cooperation initiatives that are rooted in the principle of national ownership and are aimed at strengthening productive capacity as well as accelerating economic growth and sustainable development.

17. We welcome the commitments made by Africa and its development partners in the context of various important initiatives and partnerships in recent years, inter alia, the Africa Partnership Forum, the New Asian-African Strategic Partnership, the China-Africa Partnership, the European Union-Africa Strategic Partnership, the Group of Eight-Africa Partnership, the Millennium Challenge Account, the Emergency Plan for AIDS Relief of the President of the United States of America, the Africa-Turkey Cooperation Summit, the Africa-South America Summit, the Tokyo International Conference on African Development, the comprehensive health-care initiative sponsored by the Government of Cuba, the Initiative for Africa's Development of the Republic of Korea, the special technical assistance programme for Africa of Pakistan, the Viet Nam-Africa cooperation partnership and the India-Africa Forum.

18. We urge the United Nations system, international and regional financial institutions and other multilateral development partners to continue and strengthen support for African Governments in their efforts to implement national development strategies and programmes. We stress the need to strengthen the capacities and capabilities of the United Nations system in supporting Africa's development.

19. We stress the need for well-functioning national and international financial systems, which should have the capacity to help reduce uncertainty and support economic growth. We recognize the need to enhance the voice and participation of developing countries in policymaking in the areas of trade, money and finance.

20. We are concerned that Africa's share of international trade is only 2 per cent, and underline the important role that trade plays in promoting economic growth. We stress the need to promote Africa's international trade, including through regional integration and greater integration into the global economy and fulfilment of our commitment to a well-functioning, universal, rules-based, open, non-discriminatory and equitable multilateral trading system which promotes sustainable development. We commit to redoubling our efforts towards the reinvigoration of the multilateral trade negotiations and to achieve a successful development-oriented outcome of the Doha Round of the World Trade Organization. We call for stronger national action and international support to build domestic productive competitive export supply capacities, as well as trade support, infrastructure and institutions for African countries.

21. We underline that development, peace and security and human rights are interlinked and mutually reinforcing. We stress that conflict prevention, resolution and management and post-conflict consolidation are essential for the achievement of the objectives of the special needs of Africa. We welcome the progress that the African Union and the subregional organizations have made in this regard, inter alia, through the strengthening of Africa's peace and security architecture.

22. We call for intensified efforts and a coordinated approach between national Governments, the African Union, subregional organizations, the United Nations system and partners with a view to achieving further progress towards the goal of a conflict-free Africa. We stress the importance of and pledge to support peace consolidation mechanisms and processes, including the Panel of the Wise, the African Union Post-Conflict Reconstruction and Development Framework, the early warning system and the operationalization of the African Standby Force. We also stress the importance of and pledge to support relevant United Nations bodies, inter alia, the Peacebuilding Commission. We welcome the intensification of cooperation between the United Nations and the African Union on peace and security and underline the importance of the implementation of the ten-year capacity-building programme for the African Union. We call upon the international community to assist post-conflict countries in achieving a smooth transition from relief to development.

23. We recognize that Africa faces a number of serious challenges, including poverty, hunger, climate change, land degradation and desertification, rapid urbanization, lack of adequate water supplies and energy supply and HIV/AIDS, malaria, tuberculosis and other endemic diseases. We commend African countries for their leadership in addressing those challenges and charting the way forward for the region in the context of the African Union as well as through national and subregional development plans and strategies.

24. We stress that climate change has serious implications for sustainable development. We express concern that Africa faces high risks from the negative effects of climate change, although it emits the least amount of greenhouse gases. We acknowledge that the global nature of climate change calls for the widest possible cooperation by all countries and their participation in an effective and appropriate international response, in accordance with their common but differentiated responsibilities and respective capabilities and their social and economic conditions. We reaffirm our support for the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change, and welcome the decisions adopted by the Conference of the Parties to the Convention at its thirteenth session, held in Bali from 3 to 15 December 2007, including the Bali Action Plan. We remain deeply concerned that all countries, in particular developing countries, including least developed countries, small island developing States and African countries, face increased risks from the negative effects of climate change, and stress the need to urgently address adaptation needs relating to such effects. In this context, we underline in particular the need for new and additional financial resources.

25. We are concerned about the consequences of the global food crisis on the achievement of the Millennium Development Goals, and in this regard we acknowledge the African Union's declaration on responding to the challenges of high fuel prices and agricultural development. We call for an integrated response by African countries and the international community, working in partnership to support integrated and sustainable agriculture and rural development approaches, and stress the importance of food security and strengthening the agricultural sector, as set out in, inter alia, the Comprehensive Africa Agriculture Development Programme of the New Partnership for Africa's Development. We call upon all donors and the United Nations system to increase their assistance to Africa, in particular to least developed countries and those that are most negatively affected by high food prices.

26. We welcome Africa's commitment to the Africa Water Vision 2025, the Sirte declaration on agriculture and water in Africa and the Sharm el-Sheikh Commitments for Accelerating the Achievement of Water and Sanitation Goals in Africa.

27. We recognize the challenges of inadequate infrastructure and industrialization in Africa and the need to substantially increase investment in all forms of infrastructure in accordance with the New Partnership for Africa's Development. We recognize the contribution that private capital can make towards the development of infrastructure.

28. We recognize the urgent need for large-scale investments in energy infrastructure, as outlined in the New Partnership for Africa's Development, and are committed to promoting renewable sources of energy, clean energy, energy efficiency and conservation.

29. We reaffirm the universal commitment to promoting gender equality and the empowerment of women, recognizing that they are key actors in development.

30. We resolve to increase our efforts to reduce maternal and child mortality, and reaffirm the commitment to achieve universal access to reproductive health by 2015.

31. We note with concern that violence against women and children everywhere continues and often increases, and resolve to ensure the strict universal adherence to international norms regarding violence against women and girls.

32. We express our grave concern at the negative effects on development, peace, security and human rights posed by transnational crime, including the smuggling of and trafficking in human beings.

33. We commit ourselves to safeguarding the principle of refugee protection and to upholding our responsibility in resolving the plight of refugees, including through support of efforts aimed at addressing the causes of refugee movement, bringing about the safe and sustainable return of those populations.

34. We recognize the Guiding Principles on Internal Displacement as an important international framework for the protection of internally displaced persons, and welcome the fact that an increasing number of States, United Nations agencies and regional and non-governmental organizations are applying them as a standard, and encourage all relevant actors to make use of the Guiding Principles when dealing with situations of internal displacement.

35. We recognize that HIV/AIDS, malaria, tuberculosis and other infectious diseases pose severe risks for the entire world and serious challenges to the achievement of development goals. In this regard, we welcome the commitment by African Governments and regional institutions to scale up their own responses in order to curb the devastating effects of those pandemics. We reaffirm our commitment to pursuing all necessary efforts to scale up support for nationally driven, sustainable and comprehensive responses in Africa to achieve broad multisectoral coverage for prevention, treatment, care and support, with the full and active participation of people living with HIV, vulnerable groups, most affected communities, civil society and the private sector, towards the goal of universal access to comprehensive prevention programmes, treatment, care and support by 2010, in line with the 2006 Political Declaration on HIV/AIDS.

36. We renew our resolve to fulfil our commitments towards providing quality basic education and promoting literacy, using the full range of bilateral and multilateral instruments, including continued efforts to mobilize resources to meet the education needs of African countries. We emphasize the importance of expanded primary, secondary and higher education as well as vocational education and technical training, especially for girls and women.

37. We recognize that the way forward for meeting Africa's development needs requires taking coordinated, balanced and integrated actions at all levels for the full and timely achievement of the Millennium Development Goals and comprehensively addressing all challenges to Africa's development. In this regard, we welcome the Secretary-General's initiative to hold a high-level event on the Millennium Development Goals on 25 September 2008.

38. This political declaration is adopted on 22 September 2008 on the occasion of the high-level meeting on "Africa's development needs: state of implementation of various commitments, challenges and the way forward". It seeks to reaffirm the commitment of all States to addressing the development needs on the African continent. In adopting this political declaration, Member States reaffirm their belief in a prosperous future for Africa in which core human values of dignity and peace are fully enshrined. In this context, Member States further confirm their adherence to the spirit of cooperation that defines the United Nations system and that is based on a partnership among equals.

39. The high-level meeting has reviewed the implementation of all commitments made to and by Africa in order to comprehensively address the special development needs of the continent. All commitments to and by Africa should be effectively implemented and given appropriate follow-up by the international community and by Africa itself. We underscore the urgency of finding solutions to Africa's major challenges. In this regard, we request the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its sixty-fourth session a comprehensive report, with recommendations, on "Africa's development needs: state of implementation of various commitments, challenges and the way forward" with a view to the formulation, by the sixty-fifth session of the Assembly, of a mechanism to review the full and timely implementation of all commitments related to Africa's development, building on existing mechanisms, to ensure that Member States remain seized of the issue of addressing Africa's special development needs.

Implementation and support for NEPAD

Report of Secretary-General (March). The Secretary-General, responding to a request of the Committee for Programme and Coordination (CPC) [YUN 2005, p. 1004], submitted a March report [E/AC.51/2008/5] on UN system support for NEPAD, which detailed work undertaken since May 2007 and was organized around nine thematic clusters corresponding to the Partnership's priorities and strategies: infrastructure development; governance; peace and security; agriculture, food security and rural development; industry, trade and market access; environment, population and urbanization; human resources development, employment and HIV/AIDS; science and technology; and communication, advocacy and outreach. The report also examined different dimensions of individual and collective activities initiated by entities of the UN system, as well as challenges it faced in supporting NEPAD. In addition, three policy issues in the implementation of NEPAD were examined: strengthening the cluster system and enhanced UN-AU cooperation; support for the mobilization of financial resources for NEPAD implementation; and cross-cutting issues and institutional support. The report identified a number of challenges and constraints in the cluster system, such as the need for stronger commitment and leadership; increased participation of the AU Commission, the NEPAD secretariat, regional economic communities and the African Development Bank; increased resource mobilization; enhanced monitoring and evaluation of activities; and increased communication and information-sharing.

The Secretary-General concluded that the recommendations made in various meetings, including the external review of the cluster system and the latest regional consultation meeting, needed to be implemented fully and that monitoring and evaluation needed to be improved. He made recommendations for greater UN inter-agency collaboration rather than a sector-driven approach, the development by the UN system of an integrated framework for supporting the AU Commission, which incorporated support of NEPAD, and the further harmonization of the policies and support of UN system entities to create synergies across thematic clusters. He said that an expanded source of funding was needed to ensure adequate, predictable and timely core resources.

CEB report. The United Nations System Chief Executives Board for Coordination (CEB), in its annual overview report for 2007–2008 [E/2008/58], continued its consideration of UN system support for Africa's development. CEB focused on the need for clarity with respect to the various initiatives in the system and for the approach the system was taking to be clearly articulated to States and to African Governments in particular. Emerging challenges impacting UN system efforts to support African development included the rise in food prices, the slowing world economy and the need for more rapid progress in the Doha Development Round of trade negotiations to improve market access for developing countries. CEB members welcomed the Secretary-General's initiative in launching the Millennium Development Goal (MDG) Africa Steering Group and the MDG Africa Working Group to galvanize support for the implementation of the MDGs and other internationally agreed goals in Africa.

CPC action. CPC, at its forty-eighth session (9 June–3 July) [A/63/16], welcomed the Secretary-General's report on NEPAD (see above) and requested the UN system to continue to provide assistance to the AU, the NEPAD secretariat and African countries in developing projects and programmes within the scope of NEPAD priorities and in monitoring and evaluating their effectiveness. The Committee also called for greater UN inter-agency collaboration to ensure that NEPAD was integrated in the activities of the UN system to strengthen the secretariats of both the AU Commission and NEPAD through capacity-building; urged the UN system to develop an integrated framework for supporting the AU Commission and to enhance its support to the Commission in the areas of economic and social development, as well as peace and security, in a balanced and equitable manner; and called on UN system entities to further harmonize their policies to create synergies across thematic clusters. CPC also stressed that the merger of the Office of the Special Adviser on Africa and the Office of the High Representative for the Least Developed Countries, Landlocked Developing Countries and Small Island Developing States should not undermine the UN system's focus on and support for NEPAD programmes. The Committee welcomed the high priority CEB continued to attach to ensuring the effectiveness and coordination of UN system support for Africa and NEPAD and encouraged CEB member organizations to further align their priorities with those of NEPAD and to scale up their efforts to support it.

Reports of Secretary-General (August). In response to General Assembly resolution 62/179 [YUN 2007, p. 935], the Secretary-General submitted, in August, the sixth consolidated report [A/63/206] on progress achieved to implement and support NEPAD, which highlighted policy measures taken by African countries and organizations in the implementation of NEPAD; the response of the development partners; the support of the UN system; and activities undertaken by the private sector and civil society in support of NEPAD during the previous year. It also drew from the work of the MDG Africa Steering Group and the Secretary-General's July report on Africa's development needs (see p. 1008). The August report acknowledged that African countries had made progress in implementing NEPAD sectoral priorities, yet called for urgent action to mitigate the socio-economic impact of increasingly high food prices by launching the Africa Agriculture Development Programme. It urged countries to allocate more resources towards NEPAD priorities and to adopt reforms to further encourage private sector participation in NEPAD projects. It also encouraged development partners to scale up development aid to ensure that commitments were achieved within the set deadline.

Significant progress was made in implementing the NEPAD short-term Action Plan infrastructure projects, as well as the Medium to Long Term Strategic Framework—in all four sectors—despite human resource and funding constraints. In 2007, members of the Infrastructure Consortium for Africa committed an estimated $10 billion, an increase of 20 per cent from the $7.7 billion committed in 2006. Multilateral institutions and bilateral donors also significantly increased their financial support. On agriculture, progress was made in implementing the Comprehensive Africa Agriculture Development Programme (CAADP), including strengthened coordination by the AU Commission, the NEPAD secretariat and regional economic communities. The three institutions made progress in delineating the core responsibilities within an overall framework for joint responsibility in coordinating CAADP implementation at the country and regional levels. NEPAD supported countries in incorporating the CAADP agenda into their agriculture and rural development programmes. With the support of the TerrAfrica partnership, it mobilized $150 million under the Global Environment Facility Strategic Investment Programme for Sustainable Land Management in Sub-Saharan Africa, which resulted in an additional $1 billion to support the scaling-up of land and water management practices. In response to the rise in world food prices, through the CAADP framework, the AU and NEPAD convened a workshop in May 2008 composed of African Governments, development partners, regional economic communities, NGOs, farmer associations and research institutions.

On health and education issues, African Governments adopted the African Health Strategy 2007–2015, which articulated required health system interventions. NEPAD began to collaborate with the Global Fund to Fight AIDS, Tuberculosis and Malaria in an effort to be more responsive to African priorities and inputs. Gains were also achieved in implementing various education projects in a number of countries within the context of regional economic communities. In other efforts, the NEPAD capacity-building programme completed subregional environment action plans with the support of the United Nations Environment Programme, which would promote regional cooperation in policy development and planning for environment and natural resource management. On information and communication technology, progress was made in accelerating the implementation of components of NEPAD e-Schools, including developments in its Demonstration Project (Demo) and e-Schools Business Plan. Efforts continued in implementing the programmes of Africa's Science and Technology Plan of Action: African Biosciences Initiative; and in establishing a high-level African panel on biotechnology, the African Water Sciences and Technology Network, the African Energy Research and Innovation Network, and the African Science, Technology and Innovation Indicators Initiative.

On gender mainstreaming, the NEPAD Gender Task Force recommended a number of changes to the African Peer Review Mechanism (APRM), following gender analysis of the APRM country reports. It proposed that the reports cover four themes: implementation of the Solemn Declaration on Gender Equality in Africa; the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination Against Women and the Protocol to the African Charter on Human and Peoples Rights on the Rights of Women in Africa; financial support for the implementation of gender issues through enterprises; and the status of representation of women in parliament. Meanwhile, the APRM process continued to move forward. As at June, 29 countries had voluntarily acceded to the Review Mechanism, of which 14 had set up national structures and were at various stages of implementing the APRM process. In order to streamline and fast track the APRM process, a workshop was held in Algeria in November 2007 that conducted a review of the experience achieved by countries that had been peer-reviewed and by those that had reached an advanced stage in the process. The workshop also made recommendations to improve peer-review monitoring and evaluation activities.

On the response of the international community, there was evidence that African countries had, through NEPAD, created an effective leadership process for engaging international partners on a number of issues ranging from international trade arrangements to debt relief, including the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD)/Development Assistance Committee (DAC). In that connection, the 2008 G-8 Summit endorsed a five-year time frame for providing $60 billion to fight infectious diseases and to strengthen health systems. In December 2007, at the second European Union (EU)-Africa Summit in Lisbon, both continents strengthened their partnership by adopting a joint Africa-EU strategy comprising a common strategic vision and road map. Nonetheless, despite renewed interest in Africa's development issues, OECD estimates indicated that official development assistance (ODA) to Africa had dropped from $44 billion in 2006 to $35 billion in 2007, a decrease of 20.5 per cent. The drop was due mainly to debt relief being phased out, which meant that ODA to Africa had fallen short of 2005 pledges to double aid by 2010 by $25 billion. On debt relief, the previous year had witnessed continued progress in multilateral and bilateral debt relief and cancellation efforts within the framework of the Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Initiative and the Multilateral Debt Relief Initiative.

In the trade sector, little progress had been made in the Doha trade talks to reach an agreement on matters affecting Africa, such as agricultural market access and further reducing trade-distorting agricultural subsidies. In late 2007, the World Trade Organization facilitated global meetings on aid for trade in order to highlight the need for improvements in aid for trade flows and the importance of improving performance indicators for donors and recipients, as well as increasing country, regional and sector focus. Limited progress was made in negotiations on economic partnership agreements between the EU and six regional clusters of African countries. On South-South cooperation, non-DAC and emerging partners were playing an increasing role in development cooperation, offering new ideas and approaches to achieve globally agreed development goals. Following the launch of the China-Africa Development Fund in 2007 [YUN 2007, p. 934], over $90 million had been contributed to the Fund. At the first India-Africa Forum Summit in April 2008, India offered $5.4 billion in financial credit for the next five years and $500 million in development grants. In June, African and South American trade ministers met to plan a new trade framework between the two continents. Turkey became a non-regional member of the African Development Bank (ADB) in early 2008, and in August would host the first Turkey-Africa Cooperation Summit to consider ways to strengthen that partnership.

The UN system continued to provide support to the AU and NEPAD. The Eighth Regional Consultations Meeting, held in November 2007, noted the increasing effectiveness of the Regional Consultation Mechanism in terms of enhancing leadership and sharpening the focus of cluster activities. The meeting called for the establishment of a steering committee to oversee the activities of the Regional Consultation Mechanism, further aligning the cluster system with AU and NEPAD priorities, and the development by the clusters of three-year business plans and for them to mainstream cross-cutting work on gender, health and culture. In response to Africa's remaining as a whole off-track with regard to achieving the MDGs, the Secretary-General launched the Africa Steering Group in 2007 [ibid., p. 934], which for the first time brought together a handful of international organizations to identify actions to attain the MDGs in Africa. In June 2008, the Steering Group published its recommendations on key sectors, including agriculture, education, health, infrastructure, climate change and aid predictability, which were endorsed by the AU Summit. Since the Millennium Project launched the Millennium Villages initiative in 2006 [YUN 2006, p. 10], 13 countries had established Villages, and early results in countries across Africa proved that rapid progress towards achieving the MDGs was possible when a holistic set of interventions was combined with local leadership, Government support and adequate donor financing.

The Secretary-General concluded that while significant progress had been achieved, persistent challenges needed to be addressed, such as the need for: modern and efficient physical infrastructure; coordination among the various key regional institutions on the continent to accelerate implementation of infrastructure projects; implementation of the agreed programmes of action and recommendations of APRM country reports; increased spending by African countries on agricultural and rural development to 10 per cent of public expenditure; improved linkages and coordination among African countries, the regional economic communities, the AU Commission, ADB and ECA; the scaling-up of aid by donor countries; the removal of obstacles to an open trading system in agricultural commodities, to the benefit of African countries in particular; and, in the context of South-South cooperation, the establishment of a facility whereby countries receiving windfall earnings from oil export would contribute to the most vulnerable African countries.

On 4 August, the Secretary-General submitted a report [A/63/212] on the implementation of his 1998 recommendations on the causes of conflict and the promotion of durable peace and sustainable development in Africa [YUN 1998, p. 66], which was to be read together with his August report on NEPAD (see above). On 11 September, in resolution 62/275 (see p. 113), the General Assembly reaffirmed its commitment to address the special needs of Africa and to strengthen cooperation with NEPAD by providing coherent support for the programmes drawn up by African leaders within that framework.

Communication. On 6 June [A/62/859], Japan transmitted to the General Assembly the outcome documents of the Fourth Tokyo International Conference on African Development (TICAD IV), held from 28 to 30 May in Yokohama and co-organized by the Government of Japan, the United Nations, the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) and the World Bank. The Conference reaffirmed the importance of Africa's exercising full ownership of its development agenda and the need for a genuine partnership with the international community in those efforts, and issued the Yokohama Declaration and the TICAD IV action plan and follow-up mechanism.

On 24 December, the Assembly decided that the agenda item on the "New Partnership for Africa's Development: progress in implementation and international support" would remain for consideration during its resumed sixty-third (2009) session (decision 63/552).

Social dimensions of NEPAD

The Commission for Social Development, at its forty-sixth session (New York, 16 February 2007, 6–15 February and 22 February 2008) [E/2008/26], recommended to the Economic and Social Council for adoption a resolution on the social dimensions of NEPAD. In resolution 2008/17 (see p. 1016), the Council requested the Commission to continue to give prominence to and raise awareness of the social dimensions of NEPAD, and the Secretary-General to submit a report on the subject to the Commission's forty-seventh (2009) session.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 24 July [meeting 42], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission for Social Development [E/2008/26], adopted resolution 2008/17 without vote [agenda item 14 (b)].

Social dimensions of the
New Partnership for Africa's Development

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling the outcomes of the World Summit for Social Development, held in Copenhagen from 6 to 12 March 1995, and the twenty-fourth special session of the General Assembly, entitled "World Summit for Social Development and beyond: achieving social development for all in a globalizing world", held in Geneva from 26 June to 1 July 2000,

Reaffirming the United Nations Millennium Declaration of 8 September 2000, the United Nations Declaration on the New Partnership for Africa's Development of 16 September 2002, General Assembly resolution 57/7 of 4 November 2002 on the final review and appraisal of the United Nations New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s and support for the New Partnership for Africa's Development,

Noting the conclusions of the African Union Extraordinary Summit on Employment and Poverty Alleviation in Africa, held in Ouagadougou on 8 and 9 September 2004,

Recognizing the commitments made in meeting the special needs of Africa at the 2005 World Summit,

Remaining concerned that Africa is the only continent currently not on track to achieve any of the goals set out in the Millennium Declaration by 2015, and in this regard emphasizing that concerted efforts and continued support are required to fulfil the commitments to address the special needs of Africa,

Recognizing that capacity-building is essential for the successful implementation of the New Partnership for Africa's Development, and recognizing also the need for continued support from the international community,

Bearing in mind that African countries have primary responsibility for their own economic and social development, that the role of national policies and development strategies cannot be overemphasized and that their development efforts need to be supported by an enabling international economic environment, and in this regard recalling the support given by the International Conference on Financing for Development to the New Partnership,

1. Welcomes the progress made by the African countries in fulfilling their commitments in the implementation of the New Partnership for Africa's Development to deepen democracy, human rights, good governance and sound economic management, and encourages African countries, with the participation of stakeholders, including civil society and the private sector, to intensify their efforts in this regard by developing and strengthening institutions for governance and creating an environment conducive to attracting foreign direct investment for the development of the region;

2. Also welcomes the good progress that has been achieved in implementing the African Peer Review Mechanism, in particular the completion of the peer review process in some countries, the progress in implementing the recommendations of those reviews in some countries and the completion of the self-assessment process, the hosting of country support missions and the launching of the national preparatory process for the peer review in others, and urges African States that have not yet done so to join the peer review, as a matter of priority, and to strengthen the peer review process so as to ensure its efficient performance;

3. Further welcomes the efforts made by African countries and regional and subregional organizations, including the African Union, to mainstream a gender perspective and the empowerment of women in the implementation of the New Partnership;

4. Emphasizes that the African Union and the regional economic communities have a critical role to play in the implementation of the New Partnership, and in this regard encourages African countries, with the assistance of their development partners, to increase and coordinate effectively their support for enhancing the capacities of those institutions;

5. Also emphasizes that progress in the implementation of the New Partnership depends also on a favourable national and international environment for Africa's growth and development, including measures to promote a policy environment conducive to private sector development and entrepreneurship;

6. Further emphasizes that democracy, respect for all human rights and fundamental freedoms, including the right to development, transparent and accountable governance and administration in all sectors of society and effective participation by civil society, non-governmental organizations and the private sector are among the indispensable foundations for the realization of social and people-centred sustainable development;

7. Emphasizes that the rising poverty levels and social exclusion faced by most African countries require a comprehensive approach to the development and implementation of social and economic policies, inter alia, to reduce poverty, to promote economic activity, growth and sustainable development, to ensure employment creation and decent work for all, and to enhance social inclusion, political stability, democracy and good governance and the promotion and protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms, so as to ensure the achievement of Africa's social and economic objectives;

8. Recognizes that, while social development is primarily the responsibility of Governments, international cooperation and assistance are essential for the full achievement of that goal;

9. Also recognizes the contribution made by Member States to the implementation of the New Partnership in the context of South-South cooperation, welcomes, in that regard, the convening of the Beijing Summit of the Forum on China-Africa Cooperation on 4 and 5 November 2006 and the Africa-South America Summit, held in Abuja on 30 November and 1 December 2006, and encourages the international community, including the international financial institutions, to support the efforts of African countries, including through triangular cooperation;

10. Welcomes the various important initiatives of Africa's development partners in recent years, including those of the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development, the Africa Action Plan of the Group of Eight, the 2007 European Union-Africa Summit, the Africa-Asia Business Forum, the report of the Commission for Africa entitled "Our common interest" and the Africa Partnership Forum, as well as the Fourth Tokyo International Conference on African Development, held in Yokohama, Japan, from 28 to 30 May 2008, on the theme "Towards a vibrant Africa: continent of hope and opportunity", and in this regard emphasizes the importance of coordination in such initiatives on Africa;

11. Urges continuous support of measures to address the challenges of poverty eradication and sustainable development in Africa, including, as appropriate, debt relief, improved market access, support for the private sector and entrepreneurship, enhanced official development assistance, increased foreign direct investment and the transfer of technology;

12. Welcomes the recent increase in official development assistance pledged by many of the development partners, including the commitments of the Group of Eight and the European Union, which will lead to an increase in official development assistance to Africa of 25 billion dollars per year by 2010, and encourages all development partners to ensure aid effectiveness through the implementation of the Paris Declaration on Aid Effectiveness: Ownership, Harmonization, Alignment, Results and Mutual Accountability, of 2005;

13. Recognizes the need for national Governments and the international community to make continued efforts to increase the flow of new and additional resources for financing for development from all sources, public and private, domestic and foreign, to support the development of African countries;

14. Welcomes the efforts by development partners to align their financial and technical support to Africa more closely with the priorities of the New Partnership, as reflected in national poverty reduction strategies or in similar strategies, and encourages development partners to increase their efforts in this regard;

15. Acknowledges the activities of the Bretton Woods institutions and the African Development Bank in African countries, and invites those institutions to continue their support for the implementation of the priorities and objectives of the New Partnership;

16. Notes the growing collaboration among the entities of the United Nations system in support of the New Partnership, and requests the Secretary-General to promote greater coherence in the work of the United Nations system in support of the New Partnership, on the basis of the agreed clusters;

17. Requests the United Nations system to continue to provide assistance to the African Union and the secretariat of the New Partnership and to African countries in developing projects and programmes within the scope of the priorities of the New Partnership;

18. Invites the Secretary-General, as a follow-up to the 2005 World Summit, to urge the organizations and bodies of the United Nations system to assist African countries in implementing quick-impact initiatives, based on their national development priorities and strategies, to enable them to achieve the Millennium Development Goals, and in this respect acknowledges recent commitments by some donor countries;

19. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to take measures to strengthen the Office of the Special Adviser on Africa, and requests the Office to collaborate with the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the Secretariat and to include the social dimensions of the New Partnership in its comprehensive reports to the General Assembly at its sixty-third session;

20. Requests the Commission for Social Development to discuss, in its annual programme of work, regional programmes to promote social development so as to enable all regions of the United Nations system to share experiences and best practices, with the concurrence of concerned countries;

21. Decides that the Commission for Social Development should continue to give prominence to and raise awareness of the social dimensions of the New Partnership during its forty-seventh session;

22. Requests the Secretary-General, in collaboration with the Office of the Special Adviser on Africa, while also taking into consideration General Assembly resolution 62/179 of 19 December 2007 entitled "New Partnership for Africa's Development: progress in implementation and international support", to submit to the Commission for Social Development at its forty-seventh session a report on the social dimensions of the New Partnership.

Report of Secretary-General. In response to Economic and Social Council resolution 2008/17 (above), the Secretary-General submitted a November report [E/CN.5/2009/3] on the social dimensions of NEPAD that emphasized the need to address plans of action in such areas as governance, agricultural development, infrastructure development, health and education. It also highlighted the importance of social inclusion, social protection, global partnerships and the need to strengthen data in respect of the social dimensions of NEPAD. The report concluded with a set of recommendations to elevate and champion Africa's social development agenda.

Liberia

In response to General Assembly resolution 61/218 [YUN 2006, p. 1081], the Secretary-General submitted an August report [A/63/295] on humanitarian assistance and the reconstruction of Liberia that provided an analysis of the challenges to the delivery of assistance faced by the United Nations and its partners.

The Secretary-General said that the presence of peacekeeping troops of the United Nations Mission in Liberia had stabilized the security situation in all 15 counties of Liberia, creating an environment conducive to the return and reintegration of refugees and IDPs to their places of origin, supporting the re-establishment of a democratic Government and re-suscitating the economy. Regarding the humanitarian situation, in 2007, there were more than 10 reported cases of flooding in five counties; strong winds damaged 44 homes and other structures in two counties; and fire destroyed 43 homes in two counties. Overall, some 21,000 people were affected. Although the destruction was not on the same scale as that caused by natural disasters in other parts of the world, limited financial support for critical humanitarian needs, poor response and inadequate absorptive capacity had an extraordinarily negative impact on affected communities. The National Disaster Relief Commission was working with partners to develop a comprehensive national disaster management policy. Despite the natural disasters, the overall humanitarian situation had continued to improve since the Secretary-General's 2006 report [YUN 2006, p. 1081]. The Government, with the assistance of the United Nations and the humanitarian community, focused on urgent humanitarian needs. A common humanitarian action plan was launched in 2007 [YUN 2007, p. 927] to address key humanitarian needs, including basic health care, water and sanitation facilities and food security. Meanwhile, funding from CERF allowed UN agencies and partners to provide urgent life-saving assistance to more than 1 million vulnerable people. Ongoing efforts to repatriate Liberian refugees in the subregion continued. In April 2008, a voluntary return exercise was launched following a tripartite agreement between Ghana, Liberia and UNHCR, primarily for the return of the 27,000 refugees remaining in Ghana at the end of 2008. An estimated 72,000 registered Liberian refugees remained in asylum countries. Although the capacity to absorb returnees had improved since 2006, many IDPs and refugees were returning home amid high unemployment and rising food and fuel prices, which had increased by 22 per cent between January 2007 and January 2008. A World Bank grant of $10 million to address urgent food needs was a welcome initiative, as were UN efforts to support the Government's food security and nutrition strategy through a $140.2 million joint UN programme. Another key development challenge remained security. Increasing waves of armed robbery in residential as well as corporate quarters were posing a challenge to the National Police. In addition, severe institutional, material and national capacity constraints were hampering the achievement of the MDGs. Other constraints to progress included inadequate technical capacity and the lack of resources to drive reforms and the development agenda of the country; the lack of basic social services and infrastructure; and the high level of formal unemployment, estimated at 80 per cent.

The Secretary-General concluded that massive poverty alleviation and economic recovery efforts were essential to making substantial progress in attaining the MDGs. Substantial donor support was required to help the new Government provide some services on a large scale and help meet the expectations of the people of Liberia. Consolidation of the hard-won peace was dependent upon it. In line with the poverty reduction strategy, he said that creating employment through the private sector was at the heart of recovery and sustainable development in Liberia, and urged development partners to focus on attracting investment into the country and stabilizing the economic environment to foster economic growth. He also made recommendations for building the capacity of national institutions and implementation of the joint Government of Liberia/UN programme to prevent and respond to sexual and gender-based violence.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 11 December [meeting 68], the General Assembly adopted resolution 63/136 [A/63/L.45 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 65 (b)].

Humanitarian assistance and reconstruction of Liberia

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 45/232 of 21 December 1990, 46/147 of 17 December 1991, 47/154 of 18 December 1992, 48/197 of 21 December 1993, 49/21 E of 20 December 1994, 50/58 A of 12 December 1995, 51/30 B of 5 December 1996, 52/169 E of 16 December 1997, 55/176 of 19 December 2000, 57/151 of 16 December 2002, 59/219 of 22 December 2004 and 61/218 of 20 December 2006,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General,

Commending the Economic Community of West African States, the African Union, the International Contact Group on the Mano River Basin, the United Nations system and its specialized agencies, donor countries and institutions and governmental and non-governmental organizations for their continued support for the peacebuilding process and development of Liberia,

Commending also the United Nations Mission in Liberia for its important role in the maintenance of peace and stability in the country,

Noting with appreciation the progress made by the Truth and Reconciliation Commission, despite many difficulties, and expressing its appreciation to the Government of Liberia and those of its partners that have so far provided assistance to the Commission,

Taking note, while conscious of further challenges, of the progress made in a number of areas, including the consolidation of governmental authority throughout the country, as evidenced by the national development agenda, which encompasses four benchmarks: security; good governance and the rule of law; economic revitalization and infrastructure; and basic services, which are also important elements for sustainable economic growth and development,

Strongly condemning all acts of gender-based violence, including sexual violence committed against civilians, in particular women and children, and underlining the need to implement the Government of Liberia/United Nations Joint Programme to Prevent and Respond to Sexual Gender-based Violence (2008–2012),

Stressing the need to protect women and children in post-conflict situations, and recalling the Security Council resolutions and presidential statements on women and peace and security, in particular Council resolution 1325(2000) of 31 October 2000,

Taking note that the situation in Liberia remains generally stable, although fragile,

1. Expresses its gratitude to the Economic Community of West African States, the African Union, donor countries and institutions, the United Nations system and its specialized agencies and non-governmental organizations for their valuable support in their adoption of a comprehensive approach to peacebuilding in Liberia and in the subregion;

2. Commends the Secretary-General for his continued efforts in mobilizing the international community, the United Nations system and other organizations to provide assistance to Liberia;

3. Renews its invitation to all States and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to provide assistance to Liberia to facilitate the continued creation of an enabling environment for the promotion of peace, socio-economic development and regional security, including by emphasizing capacity-building, institution-building and employment generation in their work and ensuring that such work complements and contributes to the development of an economy characterized by a predictable investment climate conducive to entrepreneurship, good governance and the rule of law;

4. Welcomes the agreement, in June 2008, on the Government of Liberia/United Nations Joint Programme to Prevent and Respond to Sexual Gender-based Violence (2008–2012), and calls upon all parties to implement it;

5. Takes note with appreciation of the fact that the Government of Liberia's poverty reduction strategy has been finalized and overwhelmingly endorsed by its partners at the Liberia Poverty Reduction Forum, held in Berlin on 26 and 27 June 2008;

6. Strongly encourages the international community to translate the tremendous goodwill expressed at the Liberia Poverty Reduction Forum into tangible resources and support for the Government's national reconstruction agenda, including its poverty reduction strategy and actions for the achievement of the Millennium Development Goals;

7. Urges the Government to continue to create an environment conducive to the promotion of socio-economic development, peace and security in the country, to the reintegration of refugees and internally displaced persons and to its commitment to ensure the upholding of human rights, the rule of law and national reconciliation;

8. Appeals to the international community and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to provide adequate assistance to programmes and projects identified in the report of the Secretary-General;

9. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To continue his efforts in coordinating the work of the United Nations system and mobilize financial, technical and other assistance for the rehabilitation and reconstruction of Liberia;

(b) To submit to the General Assembly at its sixty-fifth session the final and comprehensive report on the implementation of humanitarian assistance and reconstruction of Liberia, under the item entitled "Strengthening of the coordination of humanitarian and disaster relief assistance of the United Nations, including special economic assistance", taking into account the peacebuilding activities in the country financed through the Peacebuilding Fund;

10. Decides to consider, at its sixty-fifth session, the status of international assistance for the rehabilitation and reconstruction of Liberia.

African countries emerging from conflict

Guinea-Bissau

Pursuant to Economic and Social Council resolution 2007/15 [YUN 2007, p. 940], the mandate of the Ad Hoc Advisory Group on Guinea-Bissau was extended until the Council's 2008 substantive session. Following its two previous reports in 2007 [ibid., p. 939] and 2006 [YUN 2006, p. 1085], in which the Group recognized the limitations inherent in its structure and mandate and invited the Council to consider recommending that Guinea-Bissau be placed on the agenda of the Peacebuilding Commission, on 11 December 2007, the Security Council agreed to support the country's inclusion on the Commission's agenda [YUN 2007, p. 230].

In May 2008, the Group submitted a report [E/2008/55], which provided an overview of its work since the Group's establishment in 2002 [YUN 2002, p. 920], highlighting its main accomplishments and key recommendations, and concluded with observations about Guinea-Bissau which the Group believed might be relevant to the Peacebuilding Commission. The Group also recommended the termination of its mandate at the Council's substantive session.

(For more information on Guinea-Bissau, see p. 220).

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 25 July [meeting 44], the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 2008/30 [draft: E/2008/L.34] without vote [agenda item 7 (f)].

Ad Hoc Advisory Group on Guinea-Bissau

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolutions 2005/32 of 26 July 2005, 2006/11 of 26 July 2006 and 2007/15 of 26 July 2007 and its decision 2002/304 of 25 October 2002,

1. Takes note of the report of the Ad Hoc Advisory Group on Guinea-Bissau;

2. Welcomes the decision of the Peacebuilding Commission to place Guinea-Bissau in its agenda and the creation of a country-specific configuration;

3. Takes note of the political and economic evolution of the situation, and welcomes the support of the international community for this process;

4. Looks forward to continued support for Guinea-Bissau from donors, the United Nations system and the Bretton Woods institutions, and, in this regard, welcomes the decision by the Executive Board of the International Monetary Fund to renew access by Guinea-Bissau to emergency post-conflict assistance;

5. Reaffirms the importance of promoting sustainable development and improved governance as fundamental to consolidating peace, in addition to ongoing efforts for socio-economic recovery and reforms in the public administration, security and defence sectors;

6. Invites the partners of Guinea-Bissau to provide predictable and adequate resources to ensure the effective implementation of the strategic framework of the Peacebuilding Commission;

7. Stresses the importance of addressing the structural causes of conflict, and, in this connection, urges continued support and funding for the implementation of the country's poverty reduction strategy, its security sector reform plan and its anti-narcotics operational plan;

8. Expresses its appreciation for the positive and constructive role of the Advisory Group in supporting the country in its efforts to rebuild its economy and society, and invites its members to continue their support through the Peacebuilding Commission;

9. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for the support provided to the work of the Advisory Group;

10. Decides to terminate the mandate of the Ad Hoc Advisory Group on Guinea-Bissau;

11. Invites the Peacebuilding Commission to consider the work of the Ad Hoc Advisory Group on Guinea-Bissau of the Economic and Social Council and to draw upon the lessons learned from that experience;

12. Also invites the Peacebuilding Commission to continue to inform it about the economic and social aspects of peacebuilding in Guinea-Bissau;

13. Decides to consider this matter at its substantive session of 2009 under the item entitled "African countries emerging from conflict".

Other economic assistance

Haiti

In response to Economic and Social Council resolution 2007/13 [YUN 2007, p. 942], the Ad Hoc Advisory Group on Haiti reported in June [E/2008/90] on the follow-up to recommendations contained in its 2007 report [YUN 2007, p. 941] on key issues for the long-term development of Haiti, including development planning and aid coordination; institutional capacity-building; and the Haitian and international levers for economic and social development. It also provided information on the food crisis and ensuing demonstrations, which led to the destitution of the Government in April 2008 and an institutional and political vacuum, and on action needed to end the crisis. The Group had postponed its mission to Haiti, scheduled for 27 to 30 April, due to the uncertain context. Given the lack of progress in the political situation, it decided to cancel its visit at the end of May, as the time had become too short for it to visit the country and prepare a meaningful report to the Council for consideration at its July session.

On development planning and aid coordination, the Group reported that by the end of 2007, Haitian authorities had finalized the national growth and poverty reduction strategy paper, which presented three main areas of action: promoting vectors of growth (agriculture and rural development, tourism, infrastructure, and science and technology); strengthening human development, with a focus on improving the delivery of basic services; and improving democratic governance, including security and the justice system. Environmental protection, disaster risk reduction and HIV/AIDS were presented as cross-cutting issues. On institutional capacity-building, despite progress made to improve programme delivery, the key challenge remained the strengthening of local capacities to manage development programmes. A positive development in judicial reform was the adoption by Parliament of legislation on magistrates. The security situation remained a concern owing to the kidnappings and violence that had been on the rise since the April crisis, and the potential negative impact the deterioration of security conditions could have on the capacity of NGOs to support the country. Meanwhile, improvements in macroeconomic governance brought a more stable environment with an increase in remittances and donor flows, and debt relief by the Inter-American Development Bank. However, between August 2007 and March 2008, the price of basic food commodities had increased by up to 65 per cent, exacerbating the situation of an already vulnerable population. The Group noted that the international community had come to the country's aid swiftly, including through the UN system in Haiti, which had released resources for emergency assistance, and the provision by international donors and Governments of food aid and in-kind donations. The Inter-American Development Bank accelerated the disbursement of $27 million and the World Bank supported the Government with a $10 million grant.

The Group concluded that while there had been improvements on various fronts, the persistent instability and vulnerability in the country remained a concern. As political stability was paramount to the development work, the Group stressed the importance of the installation of a new Government. It called on international stakeholders to increase their support to Haiti; stated that it was still imperative for Haiti to remain on the international agenda; and recommended a strong UN presence on the ground. In that connection, the Group supported further renewals of the mandate of the United Nations Stabilization Mission in Haiti. It also made a series of recommendations on development planning and aid coordination, institutional capacity-building and international levers for economic and social development.

(For more information on Haiti, see p. 334.)

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 23 July [meeting 40], the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 2008/10 [draft: E/2008/L.15] without vote [agenda item 7 (d)].

Ad Hoc Advisory Group on Haiti

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolutions 2004/52 of 23 July 2004, 2005/46 of 27 July 2005, 2006/10 of 26 July 2006 and 2007/13 of 25 July 2007 and its decision 2004/322 of 11 November 2004,

1. Takes note of the report of the Ad Hoc Advisory Group on Haiti and the recommendations contained therein;

2. Also takes note of the political and economic evolution of the situation, and welcomes the support provided by the international community to this process;

3. Notes the progress made by the Government of Haiti in terms of gender equality, and also notes the importance of gender equality as a necessary dimension of any strategy for development;

4. Commends the finalization of the growth and poverty reduction strategy paper by the Haitian authorities, and looks forward to continued support from donors, the United Nations system and the Bretton Woods institutions in connection with the implementation of this strategy;

5. Expresses concern over the especially adverse effects of the global food crisis on Haiti, and encourages the international community to continue providing support for the short- and long-term needs for the recovery of Haiti, and, in this regard, welcomes the holding of meetings on this issue, such as the High-level Meeting on Food Security in Haiti, held in Rome on 2 June 2008, and the Conference on Food Sovereignty and Rural Development in Haiti, held in Madrid on 15 July 2008;

6. Recognizes the need for effective coordination between the Government of Haiti and donors, as well as a standing mechanism for consultation with the main non-governmental organizations active in Haiti;

7. Decides to extend the mandate of the Advisory Group until the substantive session of the Economic and Social Council in July 2009, with the purpose of following closely and providing advice on Haiti's long-term development strategy to promote socio-economic recovery and stability, with particular attention to the need to ensure coherence and sustainability in international support for Haiti, based on the long-term national development priorities and building upon the Interim Cooperation Framework and the growth and poverty reduction strategy paper, and stressing the need to avoid overlap and duplication with respect to existing mechanisms;

8. Expresses its satisfaction to the Secretary-General for the support provided to the Advisory Group, and requests him to continue to support the Group's activities adequately from within existing resources;

9. Requests the Advisory Group, in accomplishing its mandate, to continue to cooperate with the Secretary-

General and his Special Representative in Haiti, the head of the United Nations Stabilization Mission in Haiti, the United Nations Development Group, relevant United Nations funds and programmes and the specialized agencies, the Bretton Woods institutions, regional organizations and institutions, including the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean, the Organization of American States, the Caribbean Community and the Inter-American Development Bank, and other major stakeholders;

10. Also requests the Advisory Group to submit a report on its work, with recommendations, as appropriate, to the Economic and Social Council at its substantive session of 2009.

Kazakhstan

In response to General Assembly resolution 60/216 [YUN 2005, p. 1013], the Secretary-General submitted a report [A/63/659] on humanitarian assistance and rehabilitation for selected countries and regions that provided information on international cooperation and coordination for the human and ecological rehabilitation and economic development of the Semipalatinsk region of Kazakhstan, a former nuclear test site, including a summary of actions undertaken in the previous three years by the Government of Kazakhstan, the UN system and the international community. Those efforts had not been sufficient to mitigate the suffering caused by years of nuclear testing.

On the economic and social conditions, although Kazakhstan was a middle-income country that enjoyed macroeconomic stability due to reforms in social, monetary and credit policy, land relations and private sector development, and had achieved the first three MDGs in their regional formulation by 2004, the 2007 national report on the MDGs indicated that nearly 40 per cent of the population lived close to the poverty line in 2006 and that significant disparities existed among provinces. The territories of the former Semipalatinsk test site belonged to three provinces: East Kazakhstan, Pavlodar and Karagandar; the share of population with income below the minimum subsistence level in those provinces was, respectively, 12.5 per cent, 12 per cent and 20.2 per cent, in comparison to the national average of 18.2 per cent. Child and maternal mortality rates in those provinces remained high. On the institutional framework for the delivery of assistance, the Government took the lead in setting priority areas and supporting the rehabilitation of the region through its 2005–2007 programme, which aimed to improve the ecological, economic, medical and social factors affecting the living standards of the population in the region. In follow-up to its 2002–2005 programme, in 2008, UNDP, along with the UN Volunteers, UNICEF and UNFPA started a three-year joint project entitled “Enhancing human security in the former nuclear test site of Semipalatinsk”. The report also provided information on donor assistance to the Semipalatinsk region to address various economic and social issues, as well as on international aid and development organizations that had contributed funds to help the Semipalatinsk region implement projects in the education, environment and health sectors. On priorities for future action, the Ministry of Environment Protection and the Ministry of Energy and Mineral Resources developed a new programme for the Semipalatinsk region for 2009–2011 that aimed to optimize State control over the nuclear testing site area; create a more secure situation with regard to radiation and rehabilitate the environment in the region; safely secure objects using atomic energy located within the former nuclear testing site; and rehabilitate the population and develop the social infrastructure.

The Secretary-General recommended the organization of a conference with the participation of international and national partners to review the work that had been accomplished and to set future priorities. Based on the findings of the conference, the international community would be called upon to reinforce donor interest and assistance to the Semipalatinsk region. He also made recommendations for the Government to focus on the improvement of administration, including the training of central authorities in the more effective use of resources, and the establishment of a multi-stakeholder mechanism, which would include Government ministries, donors, local government and civil society organizations. In that regard, the Government could call on the UN Resident Coordinator and the UNDP office in Kazakhstan to assist in those efforts. The main priority areas were: radiation safety, socio-economic development, health, providing information and communicating risk to the population, and strengthening NGOs in their efforts to carry out socio-economic initiatives.

Third States affected by sanctions

In response to General Assembly resolution 62/69 [YUN 2007, p. 1381], the Secretary-General submitted an August report [A/63/224] that highlighted developments concerning General Assembly and Economic and Social Council activities in the area of assistance to third States affected by the application of sanctions; arrangements in the Secretariat related to assistance to those States; and operational changes as a result of the shift in focus towards targeted sanctions in the procedures and working methods of the Security Council and its sanctions committees.

The Assembly took action with regard to the Secretary-General's report in resolution 63/127 (see p. 1476).

Disaster response

In 2008, disasters associated with natural hazards such as earthquakes, floods, cyclones and droughts continued to trigger humanitarian emergencies and were driven by the increased frequency and severity of extreme weather events, mostly associated with climate change. Some 354 disasters associated with natural hazards caused 235,264 deaths and affected approximately 214 million people. Although the number of disasters was below the average of 397 per year for the period 2000–2007, the number of deaths was three times higher than the average owing to Cyclone Nargis in Myanmar and the Sichuan earthquake in China, which killed 138,366 and 87,476 people, respectively. Floods were the most common type of disaster recorded, with 166 events, followed by 112 storms and 23 earthquakes. Climate-related hazards caused 91 per cent of disasters. The cost of natural disasters was estimated at $190 billion in economic damages. Despite high absolute financial losses in the United States and Europe, the relative economic impact of disasters was greatest in low- and middle-income countries. Where Governments and affected communities were adequately prepared, an effective response to natural hazards could be mounted before they happened.

In southern Africa, recurrent drought jeopardized the livelihoods of millions, with rainfall below average across the region and almost non-existent in Ethiopia, Kenya and Somalia. In other regions, torrential rains caused severe flooding and destroyed crops. More than 40,000 people were displaced by floods in southern Sudan, while flooding and landslides in Kenya affected 300,000 people. In West Africa, flooding from July to September affected more than 300,000 people and damaged crops and vital infrastructure. In Asia, heavy monsoon rains caused flooding that affected more than half a million people in India, Nepal and Pakistan, while the October earthquake in Pakistan's Balochistan Province affected 68,200 people and destroyed or damaged 7,600 houses. In the Middle East, Yemen faced the most devastating flash floods in decades, displacing an estimated 25,000 people. In Latin America and the Caribbean, Cuba was hit by four successive hurricanes and tropical storms, damaging or destroying some 500,000 homes. In Haiti, those same hazards affected more than 800,000 people and caused losses estimated at $900 million. Meanwhile, Guatemala and Panama experienced an intense rainy season affecting 203,300 persons. In Eastern Europe, heavy rains and storms in the summer led to severe flooding affecting 40,000 people in Moldova, Romania and Ukraine.

International cooperation

Report of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 62/92 [YUN 2007, p. 945], the Secretary-General, in an August report on international cooperation on humanitarian assistance in the field of natural disasters [A/63/277], provided an overview of disasters associated with natural hazards and the humanitarian response to them and highlighted emerging trends, their implications for humanitarian action and the key challenges that needed to be addressed. The report stated that 2007 figures conformed to a longer-term trend of increasing frequency and intensity of natural hazard disasters, with some 414 disasters affecting over 211 million people and resulting in 16,800 deaths. It also indicated that while the number of recorded disasters had increased significantly over the past two decades, so had disaster resilience in some countries. Strengthened preparedness was essential to saving lives and livelihoods in disasters, as an increased capacity to predict, monitor, warn and respond to the needs of those adversely affected by an emergency was essential for effective humanitarian action.

A number of key steps were taken at the global level to strengthen early warning and preparedness for response capacity. Investment in the global cluster approach coordination system had ensured improved collaboration on preparedness in a number of countries, as well as more effective and timely global support at the outset of several disasters. Following an extensive review process in November 2007, IASC endorsed the revised Inter-Agency Contingency Planning Guidelines for Humanitarian Assistance, which outlined how the international community could organize itself to complement national action. Enhancing partnerships between humanitarian organizations to improve humanitarian action was also the focus of the second meeting of the Global Humanitarian Platform in July 2008. The UN disaster assessment and coordination system and the International Search and Rescue Advisory Group continued to work with States to enhance preparedness and response capacity. The UN disaster assessment and coordination system deployed 13 response missions: eight to the Americas and Caribbean region, two to Africa and three to Asia. Humanitarian actors also intensified efforts to share good practices in preparedness for disaster response. A review of the Central Register of Disaster Management Capacities was scheduled to commence in 2008. The Register comprised a series of standby directories to support the United Nations and the international community in delivering humanitarian emergency assistance. Meanwhile, preparations for the second session of the Global Platform for Disaster Risk Reduction [YUN 2007, p. 949], due to take place in June 2009, were under way. Other issues addressed in the report included the use of information technology for improved humanitarian action, including space-based technology; strengthening the transition from relief to development; the use of military assets for disaster response and the outcome of a study on the topic, which was completed in March 2008; and humanitarian financing for disasters associated with natural hazards. In that regard, the Emergency Relief Coordinator had committed $148 million in CERF funding to 28 countries affected by hazard events during the reporting period.

The Secretary-General made a series of recommendations. He encouraged Member States and humanitarian agencies to promote natural disaster preparedness activities, including contingency planning at all levels. The UN system and other humanitarian actors should improve dissemination of tools and services to support disaster risk reduction. Member States should increase allocation of funds for disaster risk reduction activities; enhance or develop funding mechanisms to support strengthened preparedness for response and early recovery activities; and support humanitarian organizations in meeting the increasing humanitarian burden exacerbated by climate change and high food and fuel prices.

He also recommended that States make use of the Guidelines for the Domestic Facilitation and Regulation of International Disaster Relief and Initial Recovery Assistance to strengthen their legal frameworks for international disaster assistance, and consider the applicability of the Guidelines on the Use of Foreign Military and Civil Defense Assets in Disaster Relief for the coordination of foreign military assets to their national and regional disaster structures.

UN-SPIDER programme. The Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space (see p. 684) submitted a report [A/AC.105/929] on the 2008 activities of the United Nations Platform for Space-based Information for Disaster Management and Emergency Response (UN-SPIDER). On 5 December, in resolution 63/90, the General Assembly noted the progress made in the implementation of the UN-SPIDER 2007–2009 programme, including inaugurating and making fully operational its office in Bonn, Germany (ibid.).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 11 December [meeting 68], the General Assembly adopted resolution 63/141 [draft: A/63/L.53 & Add.1, orally revised] without vote [agenda item 65 (a)].

International cooperation on humanitarian assistance in the field of natural disasters, from relief to development

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its resolution 46/182 of 19 December 1991, the annex to which contains the guiding principles for the strengthening of the coordination of emergency humanitarian assistance of the United Nations system, as well as all its resolutions on international cooperation on humanitarian assistance in the field of natural disasters, from relief to development, and recalling the resolutions of the humanitarian segments of the substantive sessions of the Economic and Social Council,

Recognizing the importance of the principles of neutrality, humanity, impartiality and independence for the provision of humanitarian assistance,

Welcoming the Hyogo Declaration, the Hyogo Framework for Action 2005–2015: Building the Resilience of Nations and Communities to Disasters and the common statement of the special session on the Indian Ocean disaster: risk reduction for a safer future, as adopted by the World Conference on Disaster Reduction, held in Kobe, Hyogo, Japan, from 18 to 22 January 2005,

Emphasizing that the affected State has the primary responsibility in the initiation, organization, coordination and implementation of humanitarian assistance within its territory and in the facilitation of the work of humanitarian organizations in mitigating the consequences of natural disasters,

Emphasizing also the responsibility of all States to undertake disaster preparedness, response and early recovery efforts in order to minimize the impact of natural disasters, while recognizing the importance of international cooperation in support of the efforts of affected countries which may have limited capacities in this regard,

Expressing its deep concern at the increasing challenges to Member States and to the United Nations humanitarian response capacity presented by the consequences of natural disasters, including the impact of climate change, and by the humanitarian implications of the current global food crisis,

Noting that local communities are the first responders in most disasters, and underlining the critical role played by in-country capacities in disaster risk reduction, including preparedness, response and recovery,

Recognizing the importance of international cooperation in support of the efforts of the affected States in dealing with natural disasters in all their phases, in particular in preparedness, response and the early recovery phase, and of strengthening the response capacity of countries affected by disaster,

Noting with appreciation the important role played by Member States, including developing countries, that have granted necessary and continued generous assistance to countries and peoples stricken by natural disasters,

Recognizing the significant role played by national Red Cross and Red Crescent societies, as part of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement, in disaster preparedness and risk reduction, disaster response, rehabilitation and development,

Emphasizing the importance of addressing vulnerability and integrating risk reduction into all phases of natural disaster management, post-natural disaster recovery and development planning,

Recognizing that efforts to achieve economic growth, sustainable development and internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals, can be adversely affected by natural disasters, and noting the positive contribution that those efforts can make in strengthening the resilience of populations to such disasters,

Emphasizing, in this context, the important role of development organizations in supporting national efforts to mitigate the consequences of natural disasters,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Expresses its deep concern at the number and scale of natural disasters and their increasing impact, resulting in massive losses of life and property worldwide, in particular in vulnerable societies lacking adequate capacity to mitigate effectively the long-term negative social, economic and environmental consequences of natural disasters;

3. Calls upon States to fully implement the Hyogo Declaration and the Hyogo Framework for Action 2005–2015: Building the Resilience of Nations and Communities to Disasters, in particular those commitments related to assistance for developing countries that are prone to natural disasters and for disaster-stricken States in the transition phase towards sustainable physical, social and economic recovery, for risk-reduction activities in post-disaster recovery and for rehabilitation processes;

4. Calls upon all States to adopt, where required, and to continue to implement effectively, necessary legislative and other appropriate measures to mitigate the effects of natural disasters and integrate disaster risk reduction strategies into development planning, and in this regard requests the international community to continue to assist developing countries as well as countries with economies in transition, as appropriate;

5. Encourages Member States and, where applicable, regional organizations to strengthen operational and legal frameworks for international disaster relief, taking into account, as appropriate, the Guidelines for the Domestic Facilitation and Regulation of International Disaster Relief and Initial Recovery Assistance, adopted at the Thirtieth International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent, held from 26 to 30 November 2007;

6. Welcomes the effective cooperation among the affected States, relevant bodies of the United Nations system, donor countries, regional and international financial institutions and other relevant organizations, such as the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement, and civil society, in the coordination and delivery of emergency relief, and stresses the need to continue such cooperation and delivery throughout relief operations and medium- and long-term rehabilitation and reconstruction efforts, in a manner that reduces vulnerability to future natural hazards;

7. Reiterates the commitment to support the efforts of countries, in particular developing countries, to strengthen their capacities at all levels in order to prepare for and respond rapidly to natural disasters and mitigate their impact;

8. Urges Member States to develop, update and strengthen disaster preparedness and risk reduction measures at all levels, in accordance with priority five of the Hyogo Framework for Action, taking into account their own circumstances and capacities and in coordination with relevant actors, as appropriate, and encourages the international community and relevant United Nations entities to continue to support national efforts in this regard;

9. Encourages Member States to consider elaborating and presenting to the International Strategy for Disaster Reduction secretariat their national platforms for disaster reduction in accordance with the Hyogo Framework for Action, and also encourages States to cooperate with each other to reach this objective;

10. Stresses that, to increase further the effectiveness of humanitarian assistance, particular international cooperation efforts should be undertaken to enhance and broaden further the utilization of national and local capacities and, where appropriate, of regional and subregional capacities of developing countries for disaster preparedness and response, which may be made available in closer proximity to the site of a disaster, and more efficiently and at lower cost;

11. Also stresses, in this context, the importance of strengthening international cooperation, particularly through the effective use of multilateral mechanisms, in the timely provision of humanitarian assistance through all phases of a disaster, from relief and recovery to development, including the provision of adequate resources;

12. Takes note that a review of the Central Register of Disaster Management Capacities, planned for 2009, is expected to assess its value added and user satisfaction, and requests the Secretary-General to report on its findings;

13. Reaffirms the role of the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat as the focal point within the overall United Nations system for advocacy for and coordination of humanitarian assistance among United Nations humanitarian organizations and other humanitarian partners;

14. Welcomes, so as to increase further the effectiveness of humanitarian assistance, the incorporation of experts from developing countries that are prone to natural disasters into the United Nations Disaster Assessment and Coordination system, and the work of the International Search and Rescue Advisory Group in assisting such countries in strengthening urban search and rescue capacities and establishing mechanisms for improving their coordination of national and international response in the field, and recalls in this regard its resolution 57/150 of 16 December 2002 entitled "Strengthening the effectiveness and coordination of international urban search and rescue assistance";

15. Recognizes that information and telecommunication technology can play an important role in disaster response, encourages Member States to develop emergency response telecommunication capacities, and encourages the international community to assist the efforts of developing countries in this area, where needed, including in the recovery phase;

16. Encourages States that have not acceded to or ratified the Tampere Convention on the Provision of Telecommunication Resources for Disaster Mitigation and Relief Operations, to consider doing so;

17. Encourages the further use of space-based and ground-based remote-sensing technologies, as well as the sharing of geographical data, for the prevention, mitigation and management of natural disasters, where appropriate, and invites Member States to continue to provide their support to the consolidation of the United Nations capability in the area of satellite-derived geographical information for early warning, preparedness, response and early recovery;

18. Encourages Member States, relevant United Nations organizations and international financial institutions to enhance the global capacity for sustainable post-disaster recovery in areas such as coordination with traditional and non-traditional partners, identification and dissemination of lessons learned, development of common tools and mechanisms for recovery needs assessment, strategy development and programming, and incorporation of risk reduction into all recovery processes, and welcomes the ongoing efforts to this end;

19. Encourages Member States and relevant regional and international organizations to identify and improve the dissemination of best practices for improving disaster preparedness, response and early recovery and to scale up successful local initiatives, as appropriate;

20. Requests the United Nations system to improve its coordination of disaster recovery efforts, from relief to development, inter alia, by strengthening institutional, coordination and strategic planning efforts in disaster recovery, in support of national authorities;

21. Calls upon relevant United Nations humanitarian and development organizations, in consultation with Member States, to strengthen tools and mechanisms to ensure that early recovery needs and support are considered part of the planning and implementation of humanitarian response and development cooperation activities, as appropriate;

22. Calls upon the United Nations system and other humanitarian actors to improve the dissemination of tools and services to support enhanced disaster risk reduction;

23. Calls upon relevant United Nations humanitarian and development organizations to continue efforts to ensure continuity and predictability in their response and to further improve coordination in recovery processes in support of the efforts of national authorities;

24. Emphasizes the need to mobilize adequate, flexible and sustainable resources for recovery, preparedness and disaster risk reduction activities;

25. Stresses the importance of rapid access to funds to ensure a more predictable and timely United Nations response to humanitarian emergencies, and welcomes in this regard the achievements of the Central Emergency Response Fund and its contribution to the promotion and enhancement of early humanitarian response;

26. Calls upon all Member States and invites the private sector and all concerned individuals and institutions to consider increasing voluntary contributions to the Central Emergency Response Fund, and emphasizes that contributions should be additional to current commitments to humanitarian programming and not to the detriment of resources made available for international cooperation for development;

27. Invites Member States, the private sector and all concerned individuals and institutions to consider voluntary contributions to other humanitarian funding mechanisms;

28. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to improve the international response to natural disasters and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its sixty-fourth session, and to include in his report, within existing resources, an analysis of the possible gaps existing in the assistance provided in the period between emergency relief and development, taking into account information provided by Member States and relevant United Nations entities, with a view to formulating recommendations on how to address any problems identified in a systematic manner and to ensuring sustainable solutions, particularly in rehabilitation and reconstruction.

Disaster reduction

International Strategy for Disaster Reduction

In response to General Assembly resolution 62/192 [YUN 2007, p. 950], the Secretary-General, in a September report [A/63/351], provided an overview on implementation of the International Strategy for Disaster Reduction (ISDR), adopted by the programme forum of the International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction (1990–2000) in 1999 [YUN 1999, p. 859] and endorsed by the Assembly in resolution 54/219 [ibid., p. 861]. It also detailed efforts to implement the Hyogo Framework for Action, the 10-year plan for reducing disaster risks adopted at the World Conference on Disaster Reduction in 2005 [YUN 2005, p. 1015] and endorsed by the Assembly in resolution 60/195 [ibid., p. 1018]. The report indicated that disasters related to hydro-meteorological hazards, particularly floods and storms, had continued to increase in recent years. Over the period from 2000 to 2007, their frequency rose on average by 8.4 per cent annually, with an average annual cost exceeding $80 billion, making up the largest source of disaster costs. Environmental degradation continued to be one of the main factors responsible for increased vulnerability to natural hazards. Worldwide, some 70 per cent of the 5.2 billion hectares of dry lands used for agriculture were already degraded and threatened by desertification. Climate change and the growth of unplanned urban areas, which were often located in high-risk areas for earthquakes, floods, landslides and technological hazards, were also of concern.

Regarding the Hyogo Framework for Action (2005–2015), the Secretary-General said that while progress had been made on many fronts, the world was not on track to achieve the Framework's goal of a substantial reduction in disaster losses by 2015. At the national level, increased commitment by Governments, parliamentarians, NGOs and other stakeholders had resulted in some gains in implementing disaster risk reduction, including a number of countries adopting instruments to guide policy and enact legislation for risk reduction, while others had integrated risk reduction into their national development plans or poverty reduction strategies. Some 55 States had either established multi-stakeholder national platforms for disaster risk reduction or were in advanced stages of preparation, and 120 Governments had designated official focal points for the implementation, follow-up and monitoring of progress of the Hyogo Framework. However, 147 countries had yet to establish national platforms, and 66 lacked Hyogo Framework focal points. At the international level, the ISDR secretariat facilitated and promoted the engagement of numerous partners in disaster risk reduction in a coordinated manner. UN system entities enhanced their own commitments to the Hyogo Framework, and the Global Facility for Disaster Reduction and Recovery, a partnership between the World Bank and ISDR, contributed to the scaling-up of the Bank's commitment to integrate disaster risk reduction into poverty reduction strategies and climate change adaptation. Key UN coordination mechanisms—including CEB, the United Nations Development Group and IASC—had taken action on disaster risk reduction, including climate change adaptation, in coordination with ISDR.

Following the first session of the Global Platform for Disaster Risk Reduction in 2007 [YUN 2007, p. 949], ISDR was strengthened to provide better coordinated support and guidance to regional, national and local actors. The second session of the Global Platform, in June 2009, would serve to initiate the midterm review of the implementation of the Hyogo Framework, expected by 2010. ISDR had also established a global, regional and national reporting system with the partners, releasing a global assessment report every two years that fed into Global Platform sessions. In January 2008, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) hosted the first meeting of the ISDR Scientific and Technical Committee, which provided specific reviews aimed at ensuring that a sound scientific base was available for ongoing ISDR system processes. In other developments, the Bali Action Plan of the Framework Convention on Climate Change, adopted in December 2007 [ibid., p. 1060], called for strategies to lessen the impact of disasters on developing countries and on risk management, including risk transfer mechanisms such as insurance. Those topics would be the subject of a workshop to be held in Poznań, Poland in December 2008. In June, at climate change negotiations in Bonn, Germany, parties recommended the inclusion of disaster risk reduction strategies and the Hyogo Framework in national policies and programmes.

On investment in disaster risk reduction, a substantial increase was urgently needed if the goals and objectives of the Hyogo Framework were to be attained by 2015, as the resources available fell short of the amount required to build the resilience of nations and communities. The expanding scope of work of the ISDR system work programme and the secretariat's 2008–2009 work plan amounted to $90.6 million. While 40 per cent of commitments were pledged for the work plan by mid-2008, commitments to the system's joint programmes were poor. States were encouraged to make multi-annual, unearmarked contributions as early in the fiscal year as possible. Moreover, if the Hyogo Framework was to be effectively implemented, increased contributions to the UN Trust Fund for Disaster Reduction would be needed to fill, by 2009, the gap of over $70 million to support the work of organizations involved in the ISDR system joint work programme. The report concluded with recommendations on accelerating implementation of the Hyogo Framework; ensuring synergy between climate change adaptation and disaster risk reduction agendas; strengthening the funding arrangements of ISDR; and investing in disaster risk reduction, including the setting of targets by States for public spending on multi-year disaster risk reduction programmes at the national and local levels, as well as increased investment in disaster risk reduction by Governments, donors and funding institutions as an integral component of all programmes for humanitarian action, economic and social development and environmental protection.

On 3 September [A/63/347], Tajikistan transmitted the Dushanbe Declaration on water-related disaster reduction, adopted at the close of the International Conference on Water-Related Disaster Reduction (Dushanbe, Tajikistan, 27–29 June) held in the framework of the International Decade for Action “Water for Life” (2005–2015) [YUN 2003, p. 1034].

Ministerial meeting on disaster reduction. The Secretary-General convened a ministerial meeting on “Reducing disaster risks in a changing climate” (New York, 29 September), which emphasized the need to promote and invest in disaster risk reduction as the first line of defense in climate change adaptation and to mobilize resources for disaster risk reduction from the national to the international level. The meeting, attended by nearly 200 high-level officials from 86 Member States, demonstrated an increased collective commitment to accelerate the implementation of disaster risk reduction and find innovative, robust solutions to the increasing disaster risks created by a rapidly changing climate.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December [meeting 72], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee [A/63/414/Add.3], adopted resolution 63/216 without vote [agenda item 49 (c)].

International Strategy for Disaster Reduction

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 44/236 of 22 December 1989, 49/22A of 2 December 1994, 49/22B of 20 December 1994, 53/185 of 15 December 1998, 54/219 of 22 December 1999, 56/195 of 21 December 2001, 57/256 of 20 December 2002, 58/214 of 23 December 2003, 59/231 of 22 December 2004, 60/195 of 22 December 2005, 61/198 of 20 December 2006 and 62/192 of 19 December 2007 and Economic and Social Council resolutions 1999/63 of 30 July 1999 and 2001/35 of 26 July 2001, and taking into due consideration its resolution 57/270B of 23 June 2003 on the integrated and coordinated implementation of and follow-up to the outcomes of the major United Nations conferences and summits in the economic and social fields,

Recalling also the 2005 World Summit Outcome,

Reaffirming the Hyogo Declaration, the Hyogo Framework for Action 2005–2015: Building the Resilience of Nations and Communities to Disasters and the common statement of the special session on the Indian Ocean disaster: risk reduction for a safer future, as adopted by the World Conference on Disaster Reduction,

Reaffirming also its role in providing policy guidance on the implementation of the outcomes of the major United Nations conferences and summits,

Expressing its deep concern at the number and scale of natural disasters and their increasing impact in recent years, which have resulted in massive loss of life and long-term negative social, economic and environmental consequences for vulnerable societies throughout the world and hamper the achievement of their sustainable development, in particular in developing countries,

Emphasizing that disaster risk reduction, including reducing vulnerability to natural disasters, is an important cross-cutting element that contributes to the achievement of sustainable development,

Recognizing the clear relationship between development, disaster risk reduction, disaster response and disaster recovery and the need to continue to deploy efforts in all these areas,

Recognizing also the urgent need to further develop and make use of the existing scientific and technical knowledge to build resilience to natural disasters, and emphasizing the need for developing countries to have access to appropriate, advanced, environmentally sound, cost-effective and easy-to-use technologies so as to seek more comprehensive solutions to disaster risk reduction and to effectively and efficiently strengthen their capabilities to cope with disaster risks,

Recognizing further that certain measures for disaster risk reduction in the context of the Hyogo Framework for Action can also support adaptation to climate change, and emphasizing the importance of strengthening the resilience of nations and communities to natural disasters through disaster risk reduction programmes,

Stressing the importance of advancing the implementation of the Plan of Implementation of the World Summit on Sustainable Development and its relevant provisions on vulnerability, risk assessment and disaster management,

Taking note of the ministerial meeting on “Reducing disaster risks in a changing climate”, convened by the Secretary-General on 29 September 2008,

Noting the declaration “Together for humanity” of the thirtieth International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent, held in Geneva from 26 to 30 November 2007, in particular concerning the need to ensure that environmental degradation and adaptation to climate change are integrated in disaster risk reduction and disaster management policies and plans,

Recognizing the need to continue to develop an understanding of, and to address, socio-economic activities that exacerbate the vulnerability of societies to natural disasters and to build and further strengthen community capability to cope with disaster risks,

Taking note of the workshop on risk management and risk reduction strategies, including risk sharing and transfer mechanisms such as insurance, held in Poznań, Poland, in December 2008,

Having considered the recommendation of the Secretary-General regarding General Assembly resolution 54/219,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the International Strategy for Disaster Reduction;

2. Recalls that the commitments of the Hyogo Declaration and the Hyogo Framework for Action 2005–2015: Building the Resilience of Nations and Communities to Disasters include the provision of assistance for developing countries that are prone to natural disasters and disaster-stricken States in the transition phase towards sustainable physical, social and economic recovery, for risk reduction activities in post-disaster recovery and for rehabilitation processes;

3. Welcomes the progress made in the implementation of the Hyogo Framework for Action, and stresses the need for a more effective integration of disaster risk reduction into sustainable development policies, planning and programming; for the development and strengthening of institutions, mechanisms and capacities to build resilience to hazards; and for a systematic incorporation of risk reduction approaches into the implementation of emergency preparedness, response and recovery programmes;

4. Calls upon the international community to increase its efforts to fully implement the commitments of the Hyogo Declaration and the Hyogo Framework for Action;

5. Invites Member States, the United Nations system, international financial institutions, regional bodies and other international organizations, including the International Federation of Red Cross and Red Crescent Societies, as well as civil society, including non-governmental organizations and volunteers, the private sector and the scientific community, to increase efforts to support, implement and follow up the Hyogo Framework for Action, and stresses the importance in this regard of the continued cooperation and coordination of all stakeholders with respect to addressing effectively the impact of natural disasters;

6. Calls upon the United Nations system, and invites international financial institutions and regional and international organizations, to integrate the goals of, and take into full account, the Hyogo Framework for Action in their strategies and programmes, making use of existing coordination mechanisms, and to assist developing countries with those mechanisms to design and implement, as appropriate, disaster risk reduction measures with a sense of urgency;

7. Also calls upon the United Nations system, and invites the international financial institutions and regional banks and other regional and international organizations, to support, in a timely and sustained manner, the efforts led by disaster-stricken countries for disaster risk reduction in post-disaster recovery and rehabilitation processes;

8. Recognizes that each State has the primary responsibility for its own sustainable development and for taking effective measures to reduce disaster risk, including for the protection of people on its territory, infrastructure and other national assets from the impact of disasters, including the implementation of and follow-up to the Hyogo Framework for Action, and stresses the importance of international cooperation and partnerships to support those national efforts;

9. Also recognizes the efforts made by Member States to develop national and local capacities to implement the

Hyogo Framework for Action, including through the establishment of national platforms for disaster reduction, and encourages Member States that have not done so to develop such capacities;

10. Further recognizes the importance of coordinating adaptation to climate change with relevant disaster risk reduction measures, invites Governments and relevant international organizations to integrate these considerations in a comprehensive manner into, inter alia, development plans and poverty eradication programmes and, in least developed countries, National Adaptation Programmes of Action, and invites the international community to support the ongoing efforts of developing countries in this regard;

11. Welcomes the regional and subregional initiatives developed in order to achieve disaster risk reduction, and reiterates the need to further develop regional initiatives and risk reduction capacities of regional mechanisms where they exist and to strengthen them and encourage the use and sharing of all existing tools;

12. Expresses its satisfaction with the work carried out by the Global Facility for Disaster Reduction and Recovery, a partnership of the Strategy system managed by the World Bank on behalf of the participating donor partners and other partnering stakeholders, as a significant initiative to support the implementation of the Hyogo Framework for Action;

13. Encourages the secretariat of the Strategy to continue to develop improved methods for predictive multi-risk assessments, including on the economics of disaster risk reduction and socio-economic cost-benefit analysis of risk reduction actions at all levels;

14. Calls upon the international community to support the development and strengthening of institutions, mechanisms and capacities at all levels, in particular at the community level, that can systematically contribute to building resilience to hazards;

15. Encourages Member States to increase their commitment to the effective implementation of the Hyogo Framework for Action, making full use of the mechanisms of the Strategy system, such as the Global Platform for Disaster Risk Reduction;

16. Welcomes the upcoming second session of the Global Platform for Disaster Risk Reduction, on the theme “Disasters, poverty and vulnerability”, to be held in Geneva from 16 to 19 June 2009, which will serve to initiate the midterm review of the implementation of the Hyogo Framework for Action, expected by 2010, and requests the Secretary-General to include information on the Global Platform in his next report;

17. Recognizes the importance of integrating a gender perspective and empowering and engaging women in the design and implementation of all phases of disaster management, as well as in risk reduction strategies and programmes, and encourages the secretariat of the Strategy to continue to increase the promotion of gender mainstreaming and empowerment of women;

18. Acknowledges the importance of the work of the United Nations in disaster risk reduction and the growing demands on the secretariat of the Strategy and the need for increased, timely, stable and predictable resources for the implementation of the Strategy;

19. Expresses its appreciation to those countries that have provided financial support for the activities of the Strategy by making voluntary contributions to the United Nations Trust Fund for Disaster Reduction;

20. Encourages the international community to continue providing adequate voluntary financial contributions to the Trust Fund in the effort to ensure adequate support for the follow-up activities to the Hyogo Framework for Action, and encourages Member States to make multi-annual, unearmarked contributions as early in the year as possible;

21. Encourages Governments, multilateral organizations, international and regional organizations, international and regional financial institutions, the private sector and civil society to systematically invest in disaster risk reduction with a view to implementing the objectives of the Strategy;

22. Stresses the importance of disaster risk reduction and subsequent increased responsibilities of the secretariat of the Strategy, and requests the Secretary-General to explore all means of securing additional funding to ensure predictable and stable financial resources for the operation of the secretariat and to report on this to the General Assembly at its sixty-fourth session;

23. Encourages Member States to integrate early warning systems into their national disaster risk reduction strategies and plans, and invites the international community to support the secretariat of the Strategy in its role in facilitating the development of early warning systems;

24. Stresses the need to foster better understanding and knowledge of the causes of disasters, as well as to build and strengthen coping capacities through, inter alia, the transfer and exchange of experiences and technical knowledge, educational and training programmes for disaster risk reduction, access to relevant data and information and the strengthening of institutional arrangements, including community-based organizations;

25. Emphasizes the need for the international community to maintain its focus beyond emergency relief and to support medium- and long-term rehabilitation, reconstruction and risk reduction, and stresses the importance of implementing programmes related to the eradication of poverty, sustainable development and disaster risk reduction management in the most vulnerable regions, particularly in developing countries prone to natural disasters;

26. Stresses the need to address risk reduction of and vulnerabilities to all natural hazards, including geological and hydrometeorological hazards, in a comprehensive manner;

27. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its sixty-fourth session a report on the implementation of the present resolution, under the item entitled "Sustainable development".

Natural disasters and vulnerability

In response to General Assembly resolution 61/200 [YUN 2006, p. 1097], the Secretary-General submitted a report [A/63/351] on ISDR implementation providing information on measures taken to reduce vulnerability to severe climate-related hazards. The ISDR secretariat engaged the Framework Convention on Climate Change, the World Bank, UNDP, regional organizations and individual Governments in several workshops and high-level policy forums to foster better understanding among policymakers of the benefits of linking frameworks for risk reduction to climate change adaptation and poverty reduction. UNDP developed a programming framework to "climate proof" the MDGs and started a pilot Climate Risk Management Technical Support Project in four countries.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December [meeting 72], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/63/414/Add.3], adopted resolution 63/217 without vote [agenda item 49 (c)].

Natural disasters and vulnerability

The General Assembly,

Recalling its decision 57/547 of 20 December 2002 and its resolutions 58/215 of 23 December 2003, 59/233 of 22 December 2004, 60/196 of 22 December 2005 and 61/200 of 20 December 2006,

Reaffirming the Johannesburg Declaration on Sustainable Development and the Plan of Implementation of the World Summit on Sustainable Development ("Johannesburg Plan of Implementation"),

Reaffirming also the Hyogo Declaration and the Hyogo Framework for Action 2005–2015: Building the Resilience of Nations and Communities to Disasters, adopted by the World Conference on Disaster Reduction,

Recalling the 2005 World Summit Outcome,

Recognizing the need to continue to develop an understanding of, and to address, the underlying risk factors, as identified in the Hyogo Framework for Action, including socio-economic factors, that exacerbate the vulnerability of societies to natural hazards, to build and further strengthen the capacity at all levels to cope with disaster risks and to enhance resilience against hazards associated with disasters, while also recognizing the negative impact of disasters on economic growth and sustainable development, in particular in developing countries and disaster-prone countries,

Emphasizing the importance of addressing vulnerability and integrating risk reduction into all phases of disaster management, post-disaster recovery and development planning,

Recognizing the need to integrate a gender perspective in the design and implementation of all phases of disaster risk reduction management, with a view to reducing vulnerability,

Noting that the global environment continues to suffer degradation, adding to economic and social vulnerabilities, in particular in developing countries,

Taking into account the various ways and forms in which all countries, in particular the more vulnerable countries, are affected by severe natural hazards such as earthquakes, tsunamis, landslides and volcanic eruptions and extreme weather events such as heatwaves, severe droughts, floods and storms, and the El Niño/La Niña events which have global reach,

Expressing deep concern at the recent increase in the frequency and intensity of extreme weather events and associated natural disasters in some regions of the world and their substantial economic, social and environmental impacts, in particular upon developing countries in those regions,

Taking into account that geological and hydrometeorological hazards and their associated natural disasters and their reduction must be addressed in a coherent and effective manner,

Noting the need for international and regional cooperation to increase the capacity of countries to respond to the negative impacts of all natural hazards, including earthquakes, tsunamis, landslides and volcanic eruptions and extreme weather events such as heatwaves, severe droughts and floods, and associated natural disasters, in particular in developing countries and disaster-prone countries,

Bearing in mind the importance of addressing disaster risks related to changing social, economic, environmental conditions and land use, and the impact of hazards associated with geological events, weather, water, climate variability and climate change, in sector development planning and programmes as well as in post-disaster situations,

Stressing that the impacts of natural disasters are severely hampering efforts in achieving the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals, and emphasizing the importance of reducing vulnerabilities to natural disasters,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of its resolution 61/200;

2. Urges the international community to continue to address ways and means, including through development cooperation and technical assistance, to reduce the adverse effects of natural disasters, including those caused by extreme weather events, in particular in vulnerable developing countries, including least developed countries and in Africa, through the implementation of the International Strategy for Disaster Reduction, including the Hyogo Framework for Action 2005–2015: Building the Resilience of Nations and Communities to Disasters, and encourages the institutional arrangement for the International Strategy to continue its work in this regard;

3. Recognizes that each State has the primary responsibility for its own sustainable development and for taking effective measures to reduce disaster risk, including for the protection of people on its territory, infrastructure and other national assets from the impact of disaster, including the implementation and follow-up of the Hyogo Framework for Action, and stresses the importance of regional and international cooperation and partnerships to support those national efforts;

4. Stresses the importance of the Hyogo Declaration and the Hyogo Framework for Action and the priorities for action that States, regional and international organizations and international financial institutions as well as other concerned actors should take into consideration in their approach to disaster risk reduction and implement, as appropriate, according to their own circumstances and capacities, bearing in mind the vital importance of promoting a culture of prevention in the area of natural disasters, including through the mobilization of adequate resources for disaster risk reduction, and of addressing disaster risk reduction, including disaster preparedness at the community level, and the adverse effects of natural disasters on efforts to implement national development plans and poverty reduction strategies with a view to achieving the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals;

5. Recognizes the importance of considering enhanced action on adaptation, including, inter alia, risk management and risk reduction strategies, including risk sharing and transfer mechanisms such as insurance, and disaster reduction strategies and means to address loss and damage associated with climate change impacts in developing countries that are particularly vulnerable to the adverse effects of climate change;

6. Expresses its deep concern at the number and scale of natural disasters and the increasing challenges posed by the consequences of natural disasters, as well as the impact of climate change, to all countries, in particular developing countries, especially small island developing States and least developed countries, as well as other particularly vulnerable countries;

7. Encourages continued and greater support by the international community for adaptation strategies, particularly in countries vulnerable to the adverse effects of climate change, in order to contribute to disaster management efforts, and encourages enhanced coordination between adaptation strategies and disaster management strategies;

8. Encourages Governments, through their respective International Strategy for Disaster Reduction national platforms and national focal points for disaster risk reduction, in cooperation with the United Nations system, the International Federation of Red Cross and Red Crescent Societies and other stakeholders, to strengthen capacity-building in the most vulnerable regions, to enable them to address the social, economic and environmental factors that increase vulnerability, and to develop measures that will enable them to prepare for and cope with natural disasters, including those associated with earthquakes and extreme weather events, and encourages the international community to provide effective assistance to developing countries in this regard;

9. Emphasizes, in order to build resilience, particularly in developing countries, especially those vulnerable among them, the importance of addressing the underlying risk factors identified in the Hyogo Framework for Action, promoting the integration of risk reduction associated with geological and hydrometeorological hazards in disaster risk reduction programmes and enhancing knowledge and public awareness of disaster risk reduction;

10. Stresses that, in order to reduce vulnerability to natural hazards, risk assessments should be integrated into disaster risk reduction programmes at national and local levels;

11. Encourages the institutional arrangement for the International Strategy for Disaster Reduction to continue, within its mandate, particularly the Hyogo Framework for Action, to enhance the coordination of activities to promote natural disaster risk reduction and to make available to Member States, the relevant United Nations entities and other relevant stakeholders information on options for natural disaster risk reduction, including severe natural hazards and extreme weather-related disasters and vulnerabilities;

12. Stresses the importance of close cooperation and coordination among Governments, the United Nations system, and other international and regional organizations, as well as non-governmental organizations and other partners such as the International Federation of Red Cross and Red Crescent Societies, as appropriate, taking into account the need for the development of disaster management strategies encompassing prevention, preparedness and response, including the effective establishment of early warning systems that are, inter alia, people-centred, while taking advantage of all available resources and expertise for that purpose;

13. Also stresses that, to reduce vulnerability to all natural hazards, including geological and hydrometeorological events and associated natural disasters, closer and more systematic cooperation, and information-sharing on disaster preparedness among the scientific and academic communities and disaster managers at all levels, should be strengthened;

14. Encourages the Conference of the Parties to the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change and the parties to the Kyoto Protocol to the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change to continue to address the adverse effects of climate change, especially in developing countries that are particularly vulnerable, in accordance with the provisions of the Convention, and also encourages the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change to continue to assess the adverse effects of climate change on the socio-economic and natural disaster reduction systems of developing countries;

15. Calls upon the international community, in particular the developed countries, to provide adequate and predictable resources and access to and transfer of technology, as mutually agreed, to developing countries vulnerable to the adverse effects of natural hazards with a view to enhancing their adaptation capacity;

16. Stresses the need to address risk reduction of and vulnerabilities to all natural hazards, including geological and hydrometeorological hazards;

17. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its sixty-fifth session on the implementation of the present resolution, and decides to consider the issue of natural disasters and vulnerability at that session, under the sub-item entitled "International Strategy for Disaster Reduction" of the item entitled "Sustainable development".

On 24 December, in resolution 63/262 (see p. 1592), the General Assembly noted that the Secretariat lacked an Organization-wide approach to disaster recovery and business continuity, and requested the Secretary-General to submit a unified disaster recovery and business continuity plan, including a permanent solution for UN Headquarters.

El Niño

In response to General Assembly resolution 61/199 [YUN 2006, p. 1099], the Secretary-General submitted a report [A/63/351] on ISDR implementation, which provided information on international cooperation to reduce the impact of the El Niño phenomenon. The report indicated that over the previous five years, the Guayaquil, Ecuador-based International Research Centre on the El Niño Phenomenon [YUN

1998, p. 873], had consolidated its role in the Western South America region, particularly in identifying and monitoring the phenomenon, providing information products and tools, and establishing networks for broad dissemination. The Centre collected climate and oceanographic information from several international centres, as well as from national meteorological and hydrological services to monitor climate and related hazards. The World Meteorological Organization (WMO) continued to facilitate development of an El Niño/Southern Oscillation (ENSO) consensus report on engaging all the major climate centres worldwide and facilitated regional climate outlook forums in different regions that analysed expected impacts on ENSO and other climatic regimes. WMO was initiating those forums in South-Eastern Europe with assistance from the World Bank and held its first workshop in 2008.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On December 19 [meeting 72], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/63/414/Add.3], adopted resolution 63/215 without vote [agenda item 49 (c)].

International cooperation to reduce the impact of the El Niño phenomenon

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 52/200 of 18 December 1997, 53/185 of 15 December 1998, 54/220 of 22 December 1999, 55/197 of 20 December 2000, 56/194 of 21 December 2001, 57/255 of 20 December 2002, 59/232 of 22 December 2004 and 61/199 of 20 December 2006, and Economic and Social Council resolutions 1999/46 of 28 July 1999, 1999/63 of 30 July 1999 and 2000/33 of 28 July 2000,

Noting that the El Niño phenomenon has a recurring character and that it can lead to extensive natural hazards with the potential to seriously affect humankind,

Reaffirming the importance of developing strategies at the national, subregional, regional and international levels that aim to prevent, mitigate and repair the damage caused by natural disasters that result from the El Niño phenomenon,

Noting that technological developments and international cooperation have enhanced the capabilities for the prediction of the El Niño phenomenon and thereby the potential for the preventive actions that may be taken to reduce its negative impacts,

Taking into account the Johannesburg Declaration on Sustainable Development and the Plan of Implementation of the World Summit on Sustainable Development ("Johannesburg Plan of Implementation"), in particular paragraph 37 (i) thereof,

Reaffirming the Hyogo Declaration and the Hyogo Framework for Action 2005–2015: Building the Resilience of Nations and Communities to Disasters,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the International Strategy for Disaster Reduction, in particular annex II of the report, entitled

“International cooperation to reduce the impact of the El Niño phenomenon”, and calls upon the international community to make greater efforts to assist countries affected by this phenomenon;

2. Recognizes the efforts made by the Government of Ecuador, the World Meteorological Organization and the inter-agency secretariat of the International Strategy for Disaster Reduction which led to the establishment of the International Research Centre on El Niño at Guayaquil, Ecuador, and encourages them to continue their support for the advancement of the Centre;

3. Also recognizes the technical and scientific support of the World Meteorological Organization to producing regionally coordinated monthly and seasonal forecasts;

4. Encourages, in this regard, the World Meteorological Organization to strengthen collaboration and the exchange of data as well as of information with the relevant institutions;

5. Welcomes the activities undertaken so far to strengthen the International Research Centre on El Niño, through collaboration with international monitoring centres, including the national oceanographic institutions, and efforts to enhance regional and international recognition and support for the Centre and to develop tools for decision makers and Government authorities for reducing the impact of the El Niño phenomenon;

6. Calls upon the Secretary-General and the relevant United Nations organs, funds and programmes, in particular those taking part in the International Strategy for Disaster Reduction, and the international community to adopt, as appropriate, the necessary measures to strengthen the International Research Centre on El Niño, and invites the international community to provide scientific, technical and financial assistance and cooperation for this purpose, as well as to strengthen, as appropriate, other centres devoted to the study of the El Niño phenomenon;

7. Underscores the importance of maintaining the El Niño/Southern Oscillation observation system, continuing research into extreme weather events, improving forecasting skills and developing appropriate policies for reducing the impact of the El Niño phenomenon and other extreme weather events, and emphasizes the need to further develop and strengthen these institutional capacities in all countries, in particular developing countries;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to include a section on the implementation of the present resolution in his report to the General Assembly at its sixty-fifth session on the implementation of the International Strategy for Disaster Reduction.

Disaster assistance

Indian Ocean tsunami aftermath

Three and a half years after the 2004 Indian Ocean tsunami [YUN 2004, p. 952], progress was apparent across affected regions: displaced persons were residing in newly constructed homes, children were in schools and hospitals were being rebuilt and repaired. While physical reconstruction efforts had been actualized, many complex challenges remained as the region continued to recover. Each affected country faced different challenges and consequently, progress was uneven. However, what was common to all countries was that it would take many years for individual households and the wider economies on which they depended to recover. During the course of the recovery efforts, considerable strides had been taken towards rehabilitation and reconstruction. Across the five most affected countries, progress was evident throughout 2006 and 2007. Many countries had fulfilled their promise of rebuilding better and had taken important steps forward in disaster risk management and disaster risk reduction. Continuing challenges for leading agencies included the linkage of various ongoing recovery processes, provision or access to critical information and capacity-building of local governments. Moreover, while needs had changed considerably in many sectors, the planning systems of many implementing agencies continued to be based on original assessments and commitments.

During the year, the Tsunami Trust Fund established to manage contributions for recovery and reconstruction, and managed by OCHA, disbursed $527,889 to finance activities undertaken for the co-ordination of humanitarian action, including relief to victims and longer-term development of infrastructure or to support UNDP development activities. As the Fund was in its final stages, activities were projected to cease during 2009, with the fund closing in 2010. As at 31 December 2008, the closing balance of the Fund was $3.5 million. The Multi-Donor Voluntary Trust Fund on Tsunami Early Warning Arrangements in the Indian Ocean and Southeast Asia, established by the United Nations Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific in 2005, continued to build and enhance tsunami warning capabilities in accordance with the needs of Indian Ocean and South-East Asian countries. As at the end of 2008, the Fund had conducted five rounds of funding and received 51 proposals from regional, subregional and national organizations. A total of 11 projects were approved with a total budget of approximately $9.2 million.

Report of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 62/91 [YUN 2007, p. 953], the Secretary-General, in June, submitted a report [A/63/84-E/2008/80] on strengthening emergency relief, rehabilitation, reconstruction, recovery and prevention in the aftermath of the Indian Ocean tsunami disaster that provided information on progress, achievements and challenges experienced by five affected countries: India, Indonesia, Maldives, Sri Lanka and Thailand. The report focused primarily on recovery efforts in key social sectors. It also addressed aid and recovery coordination, models of Government humanitarian and recovery institutions, transparency, and accountability to donors, as well as risk reduction, tsunami early warning and incorporation of prevention in development planning. The report did not purport to cover the field in terms of progress achieved, which had been substantial in all five countries, or the challenges that recovery actors would continue to face as efforts became mainstreamed.

On coordination in the humanitarian and recovery phases, a virtual knowledge management network of international and local recovery/governance professionals and decision makers would be established in 2008 to enhance coordination and manage challenges and opportunities across thematic and geographical areas. The network—an international UN best practice known as “solutions exchange”—would develop six virtual “communities of practice” supported by a coordination and research secretariat to ensure high-quality, timely and targeted solutions in all phases of recovery and governance planning, programming and implementation. To facilitate the recovery process, with regard to shelter and infrastructure in particular, community-driven approaches were implemented to ensure that skills and investments remained in communities and strengthened donorship and solidarity. Training communities and local government officials to enable that process was also essential. Partners of the Tsunami Recovery Impact Assessment and Monitoring System (TRIAMS) made recommendations on assessing damages and needs to be considered by those proposing reform in needs assessment processes. In addition, progress was made in developing and implementing several tools to increase transparency and accountability among actors involved in the tsunami response—notably the Tsunami Evaluation Coalition, the development assistance database TRIAMS, and the analytical framework for assisting Governments, aid agencies and affected populations assess and monitor the rate and direction of recovery.

Local and international organizations continued to provide comprehensive information to the development assistance database system, and the four national databases established to track recovery and reconstruction were updated regularly and provided data on projects and assistance. On TRIAMS, significant progress was made in further developing and piloting the framework. Participating countries updated and added disaster risk reduction indicators to the framework in April 2007, reflecting significant changes to the recovery situation in most countries. The Tsunami Evaluation Coalition produced five thematic evaluations and two synthesis reports in 2006. Four main findings and over 200 sub-recommendations were noted in the initial synthesis report. The work of the Coalition was expected to continue throughout 2008, with milestone events planned at UN agencies; international, bilateral and non-governmental organizations and others would discuss their approaches in adopting the Coalition’s recommendations. On risk reduction, tsunami early warning and the incorporation of prevention in development planning, the report indicated that many measures to evaluate/strengthen early warning systems had focused primarily on establishing system governance structures, technical advice and implementation, public awareness and preparedness, and training. Targeted training activities involving more than 150 national officers and researchers had taken place in tsunami-affected countries. Twenty-five of 28 possible nations had established official tsunami warning focal points capable of receiving and disseminating tsunami advisories around the clock. At the national level, countries were working to establish clearer responsibilities to ensure people-centred early warning systems. However, critical elements of community preparedness, community education and outreach programmes were generally not yet in place in most countries. Only a few countries had developed tsunami emergency plans or tested response procedures for tsunamis and earthquakes. Nonetheless, there was much greater awareness among policymakers of the importance of those disaster risk reduction and environmental issues.

The report concluded that the two previous reports in 2006 [YUN 2006, p. 1100] and 2007 [YUN 2007, p. 952] on the Indian Ocean tsunami aftermath highlighted a number of issues that guided recovery and reconstruction efforts and policies and subsequently influenced significant progress, achievements and outcomes. As those efforts were being integrated into long-term development assistance projects and programmes, the Secretary-General said that continued specific reporting to the Economic and Social Council was no longer warranted.

On 25 July, the Council took note of the report of the Secretary-General on strengthening emergency relief, rehabilitation, reconstruction, recovery and prevention in the aftermath of the Indian Ocean tsunami (decision 2008/259).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 11 December [meeting 68], the General Assembly adopted resolution 63/137 [draft: A/63/L.47 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 65 (a)].

Strengthening emergency relief, rehabilitation, reconstruction and prevention in the aftermath of the Indian Ocean tsunami disaster

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 46/182 of 19 December 1991, 57/152 of 16 December 2002, 57/256 of 20 December 2002, 58/25 of 5 December 2003, 58/214 and 58/215 of 23 December 2003, 59/212 of 20 December 2004, 59/231 and 59/233 of 22 December 2004, 59/279 of 19 January 2005, 60/15 of 14 November 2005, 61/132 of 14 December 2006 and 62/91 of 17 December 2007,

Commending the prompt response, continued support, generous assistance and contributions of the international community, Governments, civil society, the private sector and individuals, in the relief, rehabilitation and reconstruction efforts, which reflect the spirit of international solidarity and cooperation to address the disaster,

Noting the Declaration on Action to Strengthen Emergency Relief, Rehabilitation, Reconstruction and Prevention in the Aftermath of the Earthquake and Tsunami Disaster of 26 December 2004, adopted at the special meeting of leaders of the Association of Southeast Asian Nations, held in Jakarta on 6 January 2005,

Recalling the Hyogo Declaration and the Hyogo Framework for Action 2005–2015, as well as the common statement of the special session on the Indian Ocean disaster, adopted at the World Conference on Disaster Reduction, held in Kobe, Hyogo, Japan, from 18 to 22 January 2005,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General,

Stressing the need to continue to develop and implement disaster risk reduction strategies and to integrate them, where appropriate, into national development plans, in particular through the implementation of the International Strategy for Disaster Reduction, so as to enhance the resilience of populations in disasters and reduce the risks to them, their livelihoods, the social and economic infrastructure and environmental resources, and stressing also the need for Governments to develop and implement effective national plans for hazard warning systems with a disaster risk reduction approach,

Emphasizing that disaster reduction, including reducing vulnerability to natural disasters, is an important element that contributes to the achievement of sustainable development,

Emphasizing also the role of the Intergovernmental Oceanographic Commission of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization in coordinating the establishment of the Indian Ocean Tsunami Warning and Mitigation System, given the importance of strengthening regional and subregional cooperation and coordination, which is essential for effective early warning system arrangements for tsunamis,

Commending the operationalization of the Multi-Donor Voluntary Trust Fund on Tsunami Early Warning Arrangements in the Indian Ocean and Southeast Asia, and inviting Governments, donor countries, relevant international organizations, international and regional financial institutions, the private sector and civil society to consider contributing to the Trust Fund through financial contributions and technical cooperation to support the establishment of the tsunami early warning system in accordance with the needs of the countries of the Indian Ocean and Southeast Asia so that the Trust Fund contributes to the development of an integrated early warning system based on adequate resources and comprising a network of collaborative centres connected to the global system,

Stressing the need for continued commitment to assist the affected countries and their peoples, particularly the most vulnerable groups, to fully recover from the catastrophic and traumatic effects of the disaster, including in their medium- and long-term rehabilitation and reconstruction efforts, and welcoming Government and international assistance measures in this regard,

Noting that progress has been achieved in the recovery and rehabilitation efforts of tsunami-affected countries, and noting also that efforts and assistance are still required to re-establish the basis for long-term sustainable development,

Welcoming the development or strengthening of disaster management institutions in some affected countries that provide leadership in comprehensive disaster risk reduction as well as strengthen emergency response at local and national levels,

1. Notes with appreciation the efforts by the Governments of affected countries to undertake the rehabilitation and reconstruction phase, as well as in enhancing financial transparency and accountability, with respect to the channelling and utilization of resources, including, as appropriate, through the involvement of international public auditors;

2. Recognizes and encourages ongoing efforts to promote transparency and accountability among donors and recipient countries by means of, inter alia, a unified financial and sectoral information online tracking system, and highlights the importance of timely and accurate information on assessed needs and the sources and uses of funds, and the continued support of donors, where needed, for further development of online tracking systems in the affected countries;

3. Encourages the sharing of lessons learned by tsunami-affected countries and other relevant stakeholders with other disaster-affected and disaster-prone countries, including on how prevention, risk reduction and humanitarian assistance measures could be improved in the future;

4. Encourages donor communities and international and regional financial institutions, as well as the private sector and civil society, to strengthen partnerships and to continue to support the medium- and long-term rehabilitation and reconstruction needs of the affected countries;

5. Urges Governments of the affected countries to identify their unmet needs in terms of financial and technical assistance in order to foster the ongoing efforts to enhance national capacity and create a reliable tsunami early warning system in the region in concert with the activities of the Intergovernmental Oceanographic Commission of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization;

6. Welcomes the steps taken by those Governments and regional organizations to improve their legal and institutional frameworks for disaster management, and encourages them to continue to examine ways to strengthen their regulatory frameworks for international disaster assistance, including by taking into consideration, as appropriate, the Guidelines for the Domestic Facilitation and Regulation of International Disaster Relief and Initial Recovery Assistance adopted at the Thirtieth International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent, held from 26 to 30 November 2007;

7. Notes with appreciation the efforts of international agencies, donor countries and relevant civil society organizations in supporting the Governments of affected countries to develop national capacity for tsunami warning and response so as to increase public awareness and provide community-based support for disaster risk reduction;

8. Encourages the continued effective coordination among the Governments of affected countries, relevant bodies of the United Nations system, international organizations, donor countries, regional and international financial institutions, civil society, the International Red

Cross and Red Crescent Movement and private sectors involved in rehabilitation and reconstruction efforts, in order to ensure the effective implementation of existing joint programmes and to prevent unnecessary duplication and reduce vulnerability to future natural hazards, as well as to adequately respond to the remaining humanitarian needs, where needed;

9. Emphasizes the need for the development of stronger institutions, mechanisms and capacities at the regional, national and local levels, as affirmed in the Hyogo Declaration and the Hyogo Framework for Action 2005–2015, and the promotion of public education, awareness and community participation, in order to systematically build resilience to hazards and disasters, as well as reduce the risks and the vulnerability of populations to disasters, including an effective and sustained tsunami warning system;

10. Stresses the need for relevant bodies of the United Nations system, international organizations, regional and international financial institutions, civil society and the private sector to implement programmes according to assessed needs and agreed priorities of the Governments of tsunami-affected countries and to ensure full transparency and accountability for their programme activities;

11. Calls upon States to fully implement the Hyogo Declaration and the Hyogo Framework for Action 2005–2015, in particular those commitments related to assistance for developing countries that are prone to natural disasters and for disaster-stricken States in the transition phase towards sustainable, physical, social and economic recovery, for risk-reduction activities in post-disaster recovery and for rehabilitation processes;

12. Stresses the importance of and the need for regular updating of recovery assessment by the Governments of affected countries, the United Nations system and international and regional financial institutions, based on the affected countries' national data and utilizing a consistent methodology, in order to reassess progress and identify gaps and priorities, with the participation of the local community during the recovery and reconstruction phase, in order to build back better;

13. Recognizes that the Tsunami Recovery Impact Assessment and Monitoring System is a valuable common analytical framework for assessing and monitoring the impact of tsunami recovery and for informing effective planning and programming;

14. Acknowledges that relevant activities in evaluating and strengthening the tsunami early warning systems have focused principally on establishing the system's governance structure, its technical implementation, increasing public awareness and preparedness, including training, and technical advice;

15. Welcomes the operationalization of Tsunami Warning Focal Points capable of receiving and disseminating tsunami advisories around the clock, and encourages the continuation of the efforts of the Intergovernmental Oceanographic Commission supported by Member States, United Nations agencies and donors, including for developing national action plans for all countries participating in the Indian Ocean tsunami early warning system;

16. Also welcomes the work of the secretariat of the International Strategy for Disaster Reduction in establishing partnership among relevant actors, and stresses the importance for countries to establish early warning systems that are people-centred;

17. Urges Governments and the United Nations system, in planning for disaster preparedness and responding to natural disasters, and in implementing recovery, rehabilitation and reconstruction efforts, to integrate a gender perspective and provide every opportunity for women to take a full, active and equal role in all phases of disaster management;

18. Expresses its deep appreciation to relevant United Nations organizations, in particular the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat, and other humanitarian and relevant development actors, including the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement, in the relief, rehabilitation and reconstruction efforts in the affected countries;

19. Welcomes significant progress, achievements and outcomes in the affected countries, and requests the United Nations system to continue to provide its support to those countries as efforts are being mainstreamed into long-term development assistance projects and programmes.

Other disaster assistance

Bolivia

In February, extreme climatic events caused by the La Niña phenomenon since November 2007 affected all nine departments of Bolivia. Heavy rainfall in the country and extreme water flows from upstream areas towards lower regions raised rivers in several departments to historic levels, creating extensive floods in many communities. Floods, landslides and mudslides caused loss of lives, injury and displacements, as well as damage to housing, infrastructure and agriculture. The most vulnerable communities lost their livelihoods and income, in many cases for the third consecutive year. As at 13 February 2008, the floods had killed 52 persons and affected 58,887 households (some 300,000 persons). Especially critical was the situation in Trinidad, the capital city of Beni department, as its population and the displaced people sheltered in urban camps were at risk of evacuation. Water levels in the north and the lowest regions were expected to keep rising in the ensuing weeks, and the situation would remain precarious for months. On 12 February, the Government declared a national emergency situation and requested support from the international community. The UN system, in coordination with the Government and other partners, prioritized in order of importance the following sectors: food security and nutrition; shelter and housing; water and sanitation; child protection; education; minimum accessibility restoration for humanitarian assistance; agriculture; health; and institutional coordination and territorial integration.

The UN Flash Appeal sought $18.2 million for international partners to support the Government in its response to the floods, of which 80 per cent ($14.6 million) was received. As at October 2008, the appeal closed and unmet requirements were reduced to zero.

China

On 12 May, a massive earthquake struck the Sichuan Province in China. State media reported that over 41,000 people had lost their lives, 32,000 were missing, 250,000 had been injured and five million were homeless. The World Health Organization rushed emergency health kits to the quake-affected areas and the International Telecommunication Union deployed satellite terminals to coordinate relief and rescue operations. UNDP allocated $100,000 for relief activities and the United Nations contributed $8 million from CERF.

Cuba

In 2008, between August and September, Cuba was hit by two tropical hurricanes and two tropical storms. More than 500,000 homes were damaged or destroyed and nearly 113,000 hectares of crops were damaged, resulting in lost harvested crops, agricultural tools, food storage facilities and approximately 53,000 tonnes of food. In order to avoid human suffering, 3 million people were evacuated, approximately 28 per cent of the country's population. While many found shelter in the houses of friends or relatives, some 500,000 were provided with temporary shelters. In support of the initial response, the UN system contributed $8.7 million. UN agencies designed the Post-Hurricane Plan of Action to alleviate the basic needs of the population and promote the recovery of livelihoods in a period of 12 months. The Plan of Action required $30 million.

Djibouti

Successive years of low rainfall and subsequent drought in Djibouti led in 2008 to massive deaths of livestock and consequently a significant reduction in milk production. The suffering caused by the drought was aggravated by sharp increases in food prices since late 2007, which severely compromised the food security, health, and livelihoods of some 24,000 families or 120,000 people, including 36,000 sub-urban people, 8,500 refugees and 20,000 asylum-seekers. In many cases, those affected migrated to urban areas seeking assistance and remittances. The Djibouti UN country team received a CERF allocation of $2.6 million in February for emergency projects submitted by UN system agencies, which allowed them to initiate a humanitarian response in food aid, water and sanitation, nutrition and health, and agriculture and livestock health. However, the prevalence of acute malnutrition continued, as did the need for intervention.

The UN country team appealed for $31.7 million to help support the Government response to the food and nutrition crisis with a consolidated approach to cover the last six months of 2008. The emergency response plan was expected to continue and strengthen the CERF allocation through the critical hot season from July to December.

Haiti

In 2008, the combined impact of four successive hurricanes and tropical storms (Fay, Gustav, Hanna and Ike), which hit Haiti between August and September, affected 9 out of 10 regions in the country, causing 793 deaths and injuring 548 people. As at 19 December, some 310 people were still missing. More than 165,000 families (800,000 people) were affected due to destroyed or damaged houses (approximately 100,000) and the loss of their livelihoods. Many main roads and bridges across the country were destroyed or blocked, compounding an already difficult logistics operation. Following a request from the Government for international assistance, a flash appeal was launched in September for $107 million for humanitarian and early recovery activities for six months. In December, a post-disaster needs assessment (PDNA) was being finalized by the Government with the support of the international community, which would provide a comprehensive framework for early recovery, rehabilitation and reconstruction. Based on a better understanding of the disaster's impact, a revised appeal, which would run until the end of April 2009, was tailored to ensure consistency with the PDNA.

The revised UN Flash Appeal for Haiti, which sought $121.1 million in 2008, received 60 per cent ($73.2 million) of the requirement.

Honduras

In October, Honduras was affected by heavy rainfall due to Tropical Depression 16, which remained in the country for approximately 15 days and produced floods in 17 of the country's 18 departments. The resulting flooding and landslides caused extensive damage or loss of shelter and/or livelihoods and loss of life and injuries, affecting over 271,000 people. Some 72,085 hectares of crops were lost and extensive damage was sustained to public infrastructure. An Inter-Agency Emergency Response Plan was being implemented and sectoral groups were activated for water and sanitation, shelter, health, food security and nutrition, early recovery, and telecommunications and logistics. The UN country team, UN disaster management team and UN emergency team were activated to assist in coordinating the international response. During the first weeks, priority would be given to life-saving and life-sustaining activities to support those affected in terms of basic needs, as well as to the coordination of assistance and definition of the most immediate needs.

The UN Flash Appeal for Honduras sought $17.1 million for emergency relief projects, of which 35 per cent ($6 million) was received.

Kyrgyzstan

In 2008, low precipitation during the spring and summer, which had followed a harsh winter in 2007, depleted the country's hydroelectric resources, causing power cuts when electricity was most needed for home heating. Soaring food and fuel prices, adverse weather and declining remittances weakened the purchasing power of the most vulnerable and contributed to a precarious food security situation. An estimated 800,000 people were considered specifically vulnerable to the effects of water, energy and food insecurity, including the extremely poor, homeless people, street children, persons living in institutions or in extremely remote locations, and people who lacked proper documentation, which made them ineligible for many of the social protection schemes. Those factors prompted a flash appeal that aimed to respond to actual and imminent humanitarian needs between December 2008 and May 2009, focusing on the most vulnerable groups and social services institutions such as hospitals and orphanages. It also included support for the urgent implementation of priority interventions of the Country Development Strategy, including linkages between humanitarian assistance and early recovery actions.

The initial UN Flash Appeal for Kyrgyzstan sought $20.6 million, while the revised appeal sought $14.8 million, of which 54 per cent ($8 million) was received.

Lao People's Democratic Republic

In 2008, heavy rainfall between 12 and 18 August in the Lao People's Democratic Republic in and around the Mekong watershed caused severe flooding that affected the Northern and Central regions of Laos in particular, with flash floods causing 11 deaths. Across the country, it was estimated that 204,189 people were affected in 866 villages of 53 districts in 11 provinces. Preliminary Government estimates indicated that 74,989 hectares of agricultural land were inundated during the peak of the floods and nearly 50,000 hectares out of the total inundated area suffered damage. Thousands of households lost their assets, livelihoods and, in some cases, their dwellings. A needs assessment found that damage and contamination of water systems and wells had caused an acute shortage of safe drinking water in affected areas. The global surge in food prices had strained household coping strategies, and access to food was limited. The loss of crops, livestock, and other sources of livelihood due to the August flood, as well as damage to crops, fishponds, food stocks and livestock, had a negative impact on medium- to long-term food security. The appeal for flood recovery and rehabilitation submitted by UN agencies in partnership with the Government and other development partners, which was launched for $9.9 million, proposed 15 projects in eight sectors to address key humanitarian and early recovery needs for a one-year period.

Madagascar

By March, Madagascar had been hit by two cyclones during the year. Both cyclones brought heavy rainfall to most parts of the island and affected more than 239,000 people in the northeastern and northwestern parts of the country. The ensuing floods hit heavily populated areas, including the capital city of Antananarivo, as well as important farming areas, such as the Alaotra Mangoro region. As a result, the food security situation deteriorated dramatically and the risk of maternal and child mortality due to a lack of access to quality services, and to water- and vector-borne diseases, increased. On 22 February, the Government appealed to the United Nations and the diplomatic community for international solidarity and assistance in addressing the situation.

The UN Flash Appeal for Madagascar, which sought $36.5 million to address the immediate needs of more than 239,000 people affected by the cyclones, heavy rains and winds, received 50 per cent ($18.8 million) of its target. As at November, the appeal closed and unmet requirements were reduced to zero.

Myanmar

On 2 and 3 May, Cyclone Nargis struck Myanmar, causing widespread devastation in the Ayeyarwady and Yangon Divisions. An estimated 84,537 people were killed, another 53,836 were missing, and nearly 20,000 were injured. Some 2.4 million people—more than a third of the population of 7.3 million in the affected townships—were thought to have been severely affected in the loss of livelihoods, shelter, or similarly severe loss, and up to 800,000 were displaced from their homes. The impact on the Ayeyarwady Delta, a remote area that was heavily populated and difficult to reach, was particularly severe. In addition to the lives and livelihoods lost, the timing and extent of the natural disaster affected the critical planting season in what was Myanmar's breadbasket region, with significant quantities of seeds and harvested crops lost. The initial flash appeal for $187 million was issued on 9 May. Following a wide-ranging assessment to identify key humanitarian and recovery needs in the affected areas and the observations made by clusters and agencies after 10 weeks of operations, it was determined that those needs remained significant and required a more comprehensive and prolonged response than the appeal's six-month planning horizon.

The revised plan, which expanded the UN Flash Appeal to 103 projects in 13 key sectors to assist 2.4 million people with a planning horizon until April 2009, sought $477.1 million, of which 73 per cent ($348.8 million) was received.

Nepal

On 18 August, the Koshi River, with one of the largest river basins in Asia, breached its eastern embankment, inundating four Village Development Committees (VDCs) in the district of Sunsari in Nepal. The disaster led to extensive flooding and the displacement of several million people in Bihar, south of Nepal's border with India. The force of the water led to 80 per cent of the river changing its course, rendering parts of the flooded areas inaccessible. An estimated 70,000 to 100,000 people were affected, with up to 40,000 being displaced from the flood-affected areas into neighbouring VDCs. The Government declared a state of emergency on 4 September. In collaboration with the Government, the Nepal IASC developed a humanitarian response plan that was a supplement to the 2008 Nepal Common Appeal for Transition Support (see p. 1005). The response plan sought $15.5 million to cover the needs of at least 70,000 people for a six-month period, prioritizing immediate life-saving activities in 10 sectors.

Southern Africa

In 2008, Southern Africa faced unusually early and torrential rainfall, which by February had damaged the homes and crops of some 449,000 people in Malawi, Mozambique, Zambia and Zimbabwe; 120,000 persons were displaced—more than 80 per cent in Mozambique. Eleven tropical storms had already formed and regional forecasts indicated a likelihood of above-normal rainfall across most of Southern Africa until April; national authorities in the four affected countries predicted that it would continue with the same severity. In all four countries, Governments sought international assistance in implementing their contingency and response plans, and took immediate preparedness measures to ensure a rapid response to a deterioration of the situation. While the flooding in Malawi, Zambia and Zimbabwe had been localised, the early onset of rains and likelihood of more posed an imminent threat to populations living in the catchment areas of rising rivers, dams and lakes. The UN Flash Appeal sought $89.1 million, of which 33 per cent ($29.5 million) was received, to address the needs of more than 449,000 people already affected by the floods, as well as to undertake preparedness measures in all four countries to address the needs of an additional 805,000 persons at immediate risk of being affected, for a six-month period. Concerted efforts would be made to mobilize longer-term programmes for recovery and mitigation. In November, the appeal was closed and unmet requirements were reduced to zero.

Tajikistan

In early 2008, Tajikistan experienced the worst winter in 44 years, with heavy snowfall that isolated communities and severe weather that hampered travel between major commercial centres. The exceptionally cold weather caused breakdowns in the country's energy infrastructure and water supply systems. Heating was limited in urban areas, while heating prices increased in rural areas. Essential services were also affected, with many health facilities and schools forced to close. The rural food security status that had already begun to deteriorate markedly in 2007 due to rising fuel, transportation and food costs, as well as prolonged drought in the spring and summer, was exacerbated by a locust invasion in 2008 that taxed the capacities of households through further food insecurity. The combined effects of those conditions on vulnerable populations were particularly acute. The price of bread and cooking oil doubled during the period, while prices for most other basic commodities increased by 50 per cent. An appeal was launched in February to cover the needs of 2 million people. Response activities helped to alleviate suffering, sustain minimum essential services, mitigate further disease outbreaks and avoid further deterioration in the nutrition status. Joint food security, livelihoods, agriculture and nutrition needs assessments conducted in April and June found that some 2.2 million people were food insecure, and of those 800,000 were severely food insecure. In May, the Tajikistan UN country team launched a revised appeal to support the Government in its efforts to address the humanitarian needs arising from the compounded crisis. It sought to stimulate support and early recovery by creating an integrated early recovery plan and network to restore basic services, infrastructure and livelihood opportunities.

The revised UN Flash Appeal for Tajikistan sought $26.9 million, of which 57 per cent ($15.4 million) was received.

Yemen

In 2008, floods and heavy rains that affected eastern Yemen from 24 to 25 October resulted in one of the most serious natural disasters in the country in decades. Flash floods and surging waters killed at least 73 people and displaced an additional 20,000 to 25,000 people. Some 3,264 predominantly mud-brick houses were totally destroyed or damaged beyond repair, while hundreds of others were uninhabitable, particularly in several Wadi Hadramout villages that had been listed as UNESCO World Heritage Sites. In addition to houses, several health facilities and an estimated 166 schools were damaged or destroyed. The flooding and surging water also caused extensive damage to the local agriculture and honey production, as well as the loss of livelihoods, which impacted some 650,000 people. The United Nations estimated that food, medicine and non-food items delivered through bilateral channels would suffice for several weeks of the initial response to the emergency. The Yemen Floods Response Plan was prepared based on the findings of a UN/International Organization for Migration rapid needs assessment mission that visited Wadi Hadramout; communication with the authorities of the affected governorates; and missions by UN staff in the affected areas. It sought funding in the areas of food, water and sanitation, health, nutrition, shelter/non-food items, camp coordination and management, protection, education, and livelihoods, including agriculture.

The UN Flash Appeal for Yemen sought $11.5 million in 2008, of which 45 per cent ($5.1 million) was received.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 11 November [meeting 45], the General Assembly adopted resolution 63/20 [draft: A/63/L.21 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 65 (b)].

Special economic assistance for Yemen

The General Assembly,

Concerned about the floods and heavy rain that occurred in the eastern provinces of Yemen on 24 October 2008, resulting in a natural disaster that caused damage to infrastructure and the loss of human lives, and undermined the Government's effort to achieve the Millennium Development Goals,

Acknowledging with appreciation the timely assistance extended by the regional and international donor community, as well as by United Nations agencies and other humanitarian actors,

Noting the immediate response by the Government of Yemen to this disaster,

1. Expresses its solidarity with and support for the Government and people of Yemen;
2. Invites Member States and relevant United Nations entities, as well as international financial institutions and development agencies, to provide economic and technical assistance in the post-disaster recovery and rehabilitation process;
3. Invites the international community and the United Nations system and other international organizations to support the disaster risk management and disaster preparedness capacity of Yemen.

International trade, finance and transport

The World Trade Organization (WTO) Doha Round of trade negotiations stood at a critical juncture as negotiations entered the seventh year in 2008, when they were scheduled to conclude. The focus was on establishing full modalities for reducing commitments in agriculture and non-agricultural market access. In July, an informal WTO “mini-ministerial” meeting, convened to establish modalities on agriculture and non-agricultural market access, failed to achieve a breakthrough to set the basis for concluding the Doha Round in 2008.

From 20 to 25 April, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) held its twelfth session (UNCTAD XII) in Accra, Ghana, under the theme “Addressing the opportunities and challenges of globalization for development”. The Conference adopted the Accra Declaration, a political statement in which member States commended UNCTAD for its contribution to advancing the development agenda and supporting developing countries in addressing challenges and maximizing benefits from the globalized world economy. It also adopted the Accra Accord, which built upon the 2004 São Paulo Consensus, and provided updated policy analysis and responses, as well as guidelines for strengthening UNCTAD and enhancing its development role, impact and institutional effectiveness.

In April, the Economic and Social Council held a special high-level meeting with the Bretton Woods institutions (the World Bank Group and the International Monetary Fund), WTO and UNCTAD under the theme “Coherence, coordination and cooperation in the context of the implementation of the 2002 Monterrey Consensus, including new challenges and emerging issues”. The meeting identified new initiatives on financing for development, which it viewed as important for achieving the objectives of the Consensus. The Follow-up International Conference on Financing for Development to Review Implementation of the Monterrey Consensus was held in Doha, Qatar, from 29 November to 2 December. The Conference had as its theme “Looking ahead: further cooperative actions in financing for development”. It adopted the Doha Declaration on Financing for Development: outcome document of the Follow-up International Conference on Financing for Development to Review the Implementation of the Monterrey Consensus, in which States reaffirmed the Consensus. It also recognized that mobilizing financial resources for development and the effective use of those resources were central to the global partnership for sustainable development and for achieving the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals (MDGs). On 24 December, the General Assembly endorsed the Doha Declaration.

The World Economic Situation and Prospects 2009, jointly issued by UNCTAD and the UN Department of Economic and Social Affairs, stated that the global financial crisis, coming on the heels of the food and energy security crises, would most likely set back progress towards poverty reduction and the achievement of the MDGs. Restoring confidence in financial markets in order to normalize credit flows remained of primary importance. In that regard, the General Assembly President convened, in October, an Interactive Panel on the Global Financial Crisis to secure a more stable and sustainable global economic order, and welcomed the establishment of a High-level Task Force of Experts to undertake a comprehensive review of the international financial system. In 2008, developing countries continued to make increasing substantial net outward transfers of financial resources to developed countries, reaching an all-time high of $933 billion. Net transfers from countries with economies in transition increased to $171 billion, owing mainly to the strong increase in the trade surplus of the Russian Federation. In contrast, in Latin America and the Caribbean and East and South Asia, net outward transfers declined as a consequence of the financial turmoil, leading to a reduction in private capital flows from the third quarter of the year onwards.

Total contributions to UNCTAD voluntary trust funds amounted to $36.8 million, reflecting in nominal terms a 26.4 per cent increase over the previous year. Developed countries' contributions accounted for 58 per cent of the total, an increase of 30 per cent in nominal terms, while contributions from developing countries and economies in transition declined by 17 per cent and accounted for 21 per cent. Contributions from multilateral donors increased sharply, with the European Commission providing 14.5 per cent of the total, a 127 per cent increase, and the UN system providing 5 per cent. The private and public sectors provided 1.8 per cent.

At its fifty-fifth session in September, the UNCTAD Trade and Development Board adopted agreed conclusions on review of progress in the implementation of the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the Decade 2001–2010; economic development in Africa: trade liberalization and export performance in Africa; and review of UNCTAD technical cooperation activities and their financing.

UNCTAD XII

The twelfth session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD XII) was held in Accra, Ghana, from 20 to 25 April [TD/442 & Corr.1], in accordance with General Assembly resolutions 1995(XIX) [YUN 1964, p. 210] and 60/184 [YUN 2005, p. 1042]. Attended by 149 States, the Holy See and Palestine; 23 intergovernmental organizations; 12 UN organizations, bodies and programmes; 9 specialized agencies; and 104 non-governmental organizations, the Conference had as its theme "Addressing the opportunities and challenges of globalization for development". Discussions centred around four sub-themes: enhancing coherence for sustainable economic development and poverty reduction in global policymaking; key trade and development issues and new realities in the world economy; enhancing the enabling environment for productive capacity, trade and investment: mobilizing resources and harnessing knowledge for development; and strengthening UNCTAD's development role, impact and institutional effectiveness.

The Conference adopted the provisional agenda [TD/414], and established a Committee of the Whole to consider and report on the specific substantive item referred to it, and the draft negotiated text and annex thereto [TD/L.398 & Add.1–4], prepared and approved by the Trade and Development Board (TDB), acting as the Preparatory Committee for the Conference.

The main Conference events were: a high-level segment on trade and development for Africa's prosperity: action and direction; and nine round tables on: social and gender dimensions of globalization, development and poverty reduction; creating an institutional environment conducive to increased foreign investment and sustainable development; the changing face of commodities in the twenty-first century; emergence of a new South and South-South trade as a vehicle for integration for development; harnessing knowledge and technology for development; debt management solutions supporting trade and development; developing productive capacities in least developed countries (LDCs); and strengthening UNCTAD.

Parallel events included: meeting of the Investment Advisory Council [TD/L.403]; Global Leaders Investment Debate; capacity-building workshops on investment; Annual Conference of the World Association of Investment Promotion Agencies; Civil Society Forum (Accra, 17–25 April); meeting of the United Nations Chief Executives Board for Coordination: Inter-agency Cluster on Trade and Productive Capacity; ministerial meetings of least developed countries (LDCs) (19 April), of the Group of 77 and China (20 April) and of landlocked developing countries (22 April); meeting of senior officials of the Global System of Trade Preferences; high-level meeting on trade facilitation and Aid for Trade for the landlocked; and World Investment Forum, on prospects for global foreign direct investment (FDI) and new business opportunities, global value chains [TD/435], and Africa: a new emerging market for FDI [TD/438].

Other events focused on perspectives on a development agenda in commodities trade; UNCTAD's role in development; trade and gender: perspectives for sustainable growth and poverty reduction [TD/L.409]; making sustainability standards work for pro-poor agricultural trade and development; Aid for Trade (perspectives of regional commissions); Compal (deliverables on competition law and policy) [TD/L.407]; making trade work for biodiversity sustainable use [TD/L.410]; trade and investment between developing countries and transition economies [TD/L.411]; bio-fuels (small producers in developing countries); Amandla (light) project initiative with Philips, and exhibition of its corporate social responsibility products; UNCTAD Empretec Africa Forum launch; inauguration of the Dominican Republic Sugar Cane Industry Project; launch of the Creative Economy Report; exhibition of African Art; Women's Business Awards; and Creative Africa: concert and film festival.

The meeting had before it the report of the UNCTAD Secretary-General to UNCTAD XII entitled "Globalization for development: opportunities and challenges" [TD/413]; the report of TDB to the Conference [TD/441]; an issues note on trade and development for Africa's prosperity [TD/433]; and notes by the UNCTAD secretariat on: the outcome of the expert meeting in preparation for UNCTAD XII: identifying issues and priorities for LDCs during and beyond UNCTAD XII [TD/415]; developing productive capacities in LDCs [TD/420]; harnessing knowledge and technology [TD/421]; the interface between trade and climate change policies and the role of UNCTAD [TD(XII)/BP/2]; debt management [TD/424]; emergence of a new South and South-South trade as a vehicle for regional and interregional integration [TD/425]; creating an institutional environment conducive to increased foreign investment and sustainable development [TD/426]; social and gender dimensions of globalization, development and poverty reduction [TD/422]; strengthening UNCTAD's development role [TD/430] and its impact and institutional effectiveness [TD/431]; and the changing face of commodities [TD/428 & Corr.1].

A list of the Conference participants was issued in May [TD/INF.41].

Accra Declaration and Accra Accord

The Conference concluded on 25 April [TD/442] with the adoption of the Accra Declaration, in which member States commended UNCTAD for its contribution to advancing the development agenda and supporting developing countries in addressing challenges and maximizing benefits from the globalized world economy. They recommitted themselves to upholding a well-functioning, universal, rules-based, open, non-discriminatory and equitable multilateral trading system that promoted development and maximized development gains for all. UNCTAD member States resolved to find integrated solutions to the challenges of rising food and energy prices, and global economic uncertainties compounded by climate change, and committed to redoubling efforts to combat poverty and hunger. They pledged to bolster the world's food security, meet urgent humanitarian needs in developing countries, particularly LDCs and Africa, and pay special attention to the food and nutritional needs of mothers and children. Those efforts should be accompanied by collective measures and an enabling environment, particularly by meaningful reform and liberalization of trade in agriculture and improved official development assistance (ODA) flows to the agricultural sector of developing countries. Participants noted that a new phase of globalization had emerged, in which developing countries played an important role as a new engine of the global economy, but recognized that many of them—especially African countries and LDCs—remained on the margins of globalization and were lagging behind in the achievement of the Millennium Development Goals (MDGs). Their development would remain a priority of the international community. States also undertook to strengthen support for integration in Africa, in particular the New Partnership for Africa's Development. They resolved to redouble efforts to conclude the Doha Round of trade negotiations (see p. 1050) and emphasized that the agreement reached at the Sixth World Trade Organization Ministerial Conference [YUN 2005, p. 1041] to provide duty-free and quota-free market access for LDCs should be implemented, as well as those made with regard to cotton. In the context of the Aid for Trade Initiative, they called for stronger national action and international support to help build domestic productive competitive export supply, especially for Africa, LDCs, landlocked developing countries, small island developing States and other structurally weak and vulnerable small economies. They called upon donors to honour their ODA commitments and improve ODA effectiveness in support of nationally owned development strategies. States recognized the need to enhance the coherence, governance and consistency of the international monetary, financial and trading systems, and urged the participation, in trade, money and finance policymaking, of developing countries and countries with economies in transition. As inclusive globalization would require fuller participation of countries in the global knowledge and information society, they encouraged the public and private sectors and civil society to put information, technology, innovation, creativity and diversity at the service of fair and equitable development for all. States also underlined the importance of sound policies and good governance, and of the effective participation and contribution of all stakeholders, including the Government, private sector and civil society. Climate change adaptation and mitigation should be urgently addressed, including its trade and development aspects.

The Accra Accord stated that UNCTAD should examine new and long-standing issues which could foster a better understanding of ways of ensuring that the positive impact of globalization and trade on development was maximized. It should enhance its work on the problems of Africa and LDCs, and the needs of small island developing States, landlocked developing countries and other structurally weak, vulnerable and small economies, and assist transit developing countries with their challenges of infrastructure and transport. UNCTAD should contribute to the implementation of and follow-up to the outcomes of relevant conferences and the achievement of internationally agreed development goals, including the MDGs, and help implement the global development agenda by 2015. It should also contribute to the implementation of specific actions requested at international summits and conferences, and of the internationally agreed goals in the Doha Ministerial Declaration and other relevant decisions.

Under the sub-theme on enhancing coherence at all levels for sustainable economic development and poverty reduction in global policymaking, including the contribution of regional approaches, UNCTAD XII stated that, in order to complement national efforts, the coherence, governance and consistency of the international monetary, financial and trading systems should be enhanced. Towards that end, it was important to improve global economic governance, strengthen the UN leadership in promoting development and enhance coordination among relevant ministries and institutions. Similarly, policy and programme coordination of international institutions and coherence at the operational and international levels should be encouraged in order to meet the MDGs of sustained economic growth, poverty eradication and sustainable development. At the national level, coherence between macroeconomic and microeconomic policies was crucial. Microeconomic and structural policies should provide incentives for investment that could bring about productivity growth and improve the international competitiveness of domestic enterprises. The impact of policies to foster industrial development and technological upgrading could be enhanced by policies to attract FDI and trade and competition policies. Regional cooperation among developing countries, as well as integration, could reinforce national development strategies and multilateral agreements and enhance developing countries' output growth, trade and influence. Such cooperation could deliver development gains if it encompassed policies in support of growth, stability, industrial development, infrastructure, employment and structural change. UNCTAD should conduct research into and analysis of macroeconomic policies, trade, investment, finance, debt and poverty, and their interdependence, to help developing countries meet their development goals, including poverty eradication, improve the welfare of their citizens and address the opportunities and challenges created by globalization. It should also continue its role in delivering policy analysis and identifying options at the global and national levels.

As to the sub-theme on key trade and development issues and the new realities in the geography of the world economy, the Accra Accord stated that, to make globalization a positive force for all, with its benefits shared equitably, a comprehensive and coherent set of development policies and initiatives was required. Ensuring the effective participation of all countries, in particular developing countries, in the international trading system was a critical challenge and opportunity. All World Trade Organization (WTO) members should promote a well-functioning, rules-based, open, equitable, predictable and non-discriminatory multilateral trading system, and demonstrate their political will to achieve the completion of the WTO Doha Round and the realization of its core agenda, within its overall development dimension. Developing countries, LDCs and countries with economies in transition acceding to WTO should be able to do so on terms reflecting their individual trade, financial and development circumstances, and countries engaging in regional trade agreements should ensure policy coherence and compatibility with WTO rules. Attention should be paid to helping countries with economies in transition and developing countries to benefit mutually from increased trade and investment flows. Aid for Trade, including technical assistance, should help developing countries implement and benefit from trade liberalization and reform so as to build productive capacities and trade-related infrastructure based on each country's needs and priorities. Increased and more effective Aid for Trade was needed to support developing countries, in particular LDCs, to benefit from the rule-based international trading system. Standards and technical regulations should be developed transparently and applied non-discriminatorily, and developing countries should be provided with technical assistance and capacity-building support to meet standards effectively. Trade liberalization would also require addressing non-tariff measures, including unilateral measures, where they might act as unnecessary trade barriers. Efforts should prevent and dismantle anti-competitive structures and practices and promote responsibility and accountability of corporate actors at both the national and international levels, thereby enabling developing countries' producers, enterprises and consumers to take advantage of trade liberalization. Further work was needed to support developing countries, in particular LDCs, and countries with economies in transition, on key issues at the interface between trade, the environment and development, such as new standards, including issues concerning eco-labelling and certification, as well as environmentally preferable products and the transfer of, and cooperation on, environmentally sound technology. UNCTAD should intensify its trade and trade-related technical cooperation and capacity-building activities, strengthen its contribution to the Enhanced Integrated Framework for Trade-related Technical Assistance to LDCs and the Joint Integrated Technical Assistance Programme, and continue to provide and strengthen technical support to, and cooperation with, developing countries, according to their level of development, prior to, during and in the follow-up to their WTO accession process.

Addressing the sub-theme on enhancing the enabling environment at all levels to strengthen productive capacity, trade and investment: mobilizing resources and harnessing knowledge for development, the Accord stated that efforts to promote a conducive environment for development and to introduce reform and eradicate poverty needed to be supported in order to achieve the internationally agreed development goals. Attracting and benefiting from FDI required appropriate national investment and development policies, and improved data and more analysis were needed on the social, economic and development impacts of FDI and transnational corporation activities to enable policymakers to make better informed decisions. Investment in basic economic and social infrastructure was vital for developing countries, whose efforts to identify and overcome obstacles to mobilizing domestic resources should be complemented by external flows, including FDI, other private flows and ODA. Governments, international institutions and the international community could help countries create an attractive investment environment by providing better information on national laws and regulations, as well as on international agreements and country opportunities and risks. Sovereign risk assessments made by the private sector should maximize the use of strict, objective and transparent parameters, which could be facilitated by high-quality data and analysis. In the areas of international trade and transportation, the development of internationally agreed rules and standards, such as international conventions and other legal instruments agreed under the auspices of the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law (UNCITRAL) and other bodies, was required to bring about benefits to traders and help reduce legal, administrative and transaction costs. Developing countries should participate in international consensus-building and negotiation processes, and their concerns and interests should be taken into account. Developing countries might also require capacity-building and technical assistance to help them in the implementation of internationally agreed rules and standards. With the increasing involvement of the private sector in transport infrastructure development, developing countries should strengthen their capacity to monitor, regulate and facilitate that sector at the national level. Policies were needed to promote competitive and effective transportation systems for both landlocked and transit developing countries. In that context, full support should be given to the implementation of the Almaty Programme of Action and Declaration [YUN 2003, p. 875], and efforts should ensure that the outcome of the Midterm Review of the Implementation of the Programme of Action (see p. 949) contributed to the establishment of efficient transit and transport systems, addressing the challenges of transit developing countries and the integration of landlocked developing countries into the international trading system. Measures to enhance the security of international supply chains and to address environmental concerns also had to be taken into account. UNCTAD work on investment should assist developing countries, in particular LDCs and countries with special needs, in designing and implementing policies to boost productive capacities and international competitiveness. Attention should be paid to the role of both North-South and South-South investment and domestic investment. UNCTAD should address the particular needs of LDCs, as well as the needs and problems of landlocked developing countries, small island developing States and other structurally weak, vulnerable and small economies.

Regarding the sub-theme on strengthening UNCTAD: enhancing its development role, impact and institutional effectiveness, the Accord stated that in the context of the changing global economy and development needs, UNCTAD's development role, impact and institutional effectiveness should be strengthened in order for it to provide guidance and support with respect to both emerging issues and long-standing problems at the interface between trade and development. That strengthening process should include the adoption of new and improved indicators of achievement and performance measures, the continued adaptation of its working methods and structures and a more focused approach to address trade and development issues that responded to the needs, concerns and priorities of its membership. UNCTAD would mainstream cross-cutting issues of gender equality and the empowerment of women, the promotion of sustainable development and full and productive employment. It should strengthen its internal coordination; align more closely the thematic focus of its research and analysis, technical assistance and intergovernmental discussions; and designate regional focal points to deepen its regional perspectives. In view of the challenges in commodities markets, the UN Secretary-General was urged to transform the Commodities Branch into an autonomous unit reporting directly to the UNCTAD Secretary-General, while retaining the Branch's mandate and taking into account, without duplicating, the work of other organizations. The unit should contribute more effectively to developing countries' efforts to formulate strategies and policies to respond to the challenges and opportunities of commodity markets. As the highest UNCTAD body between Conferences, TDB should strengthen its decision-making, policy and governance functions, and ensure overall consistency in the organization's activities. The Board's agenda should reflect the interests and concerns of the UNCTAD membership, and be policy-oriented and organized around themes agreed by member States. It would add to the agenda of its regular session an item entitled "Development strategies in a globalized world". The agenda item "Evaluation and review of UNCTAD implementation of the Accra Accord" would be added to its regular session in 2010, extended by one week, and the UNCTAD Secretary-General would present a report on UNCTAD implementation of the Accra Accord. The TDB annual regular session would take place in early September, and monthly consultations with the extended Bureau of the Board and interested States should be held to serve as a forum for dialogue between the secretariat and States on issues of interest to the organization. Welcoming the establishment of the Global Network of Development Think Tanks, involving institutions at the country level and regional networks, the Conference invited the UNCTAD Secretary-General to explore the feasibility of organizing an annual meeting of the Global Network to be held in conjunction with the TDB regular session. As to the commissions (TDB subsidiary bodies), their reports would be submitted to TDB for approval, and their role would be to conduct policy dialogue on one or two selected issues; consider reports of expert meetings and recommend for approval their work programmes; and promote and strengthen synergies among the UNCTAD three pillars of research and analysis, consensus-building and technical cooperation. There would be two commissions: the Trade and Development Commission, with the mandate of the previous Commission on Trade in Goods and Services, and Commodities, and the responsibility for transport and trade logistics issues from the previous Commission on Enterprise, Business Facilitation and Development; and the Investment, Enterprise and Development Commission, with the mandate of the previous Commission on Investment, Technology and Related Financial Issues, and the responsibility for enterprise and information and communication technology (ICT) issues from the previous Commission on Enterprise, Business Facilitation and Development. Commission sessions would be held at the same time each year back-to-back for five days in the spring, and their outcomes would be agreed conclusions from the policy dialogue and recommendations to the secretariat. TDB would decide on their substantive topics, upon the recommendation of the Bureau of the Board. Expert meetings would continue to be held under the auspices of the commissions, in single or multi-year sessions for a period of three days, and their number would remain at eight. TDB, at its fifty-fifth session, would determine the topics and terms of reference for multi-year expert meetings, which would continue for up to four years and report annually to the commissions. In that regard, TDB would establish a multi-year expert meeting on commodities. Single-session expert meetings would be convened on specific topics that required in-depth examination, to be decided on by TDB. Funding for the participation of experts from developing countries should be sustainable and predictable and come from the existing trust fund. The UNCTAD Secretary-General should attract contributions to the funds and States should contribute. The Intergovernmental Group of Experts on Competition Law and Policy and the Intergovernmental Working Group of Experts on International Standards of Accounting and Reporting would continue to meet annually.

UNCTAD technical cooperation should be fully integrated with the other two pillars and should: deliver results at the interregional, regional and national levels, to the benefit of developing countries; be demand-driven and embrace country ownership; be based on the principles of transparency, efficiency, effectiveness and accountability; address the needs of developing countries, in particular LDCs, as well as the needs of Africa; be planned and implemented in a geographically balanced manner; address the special needs and problems of landlocked developing countries, small island developing States and other structurally weak, vulnerable and small economies; and accord with TDB decisions 492(LIV) [YUN 2007, p. 1002] and 478(L) [YUN 2003, p. 996], and with the conclusions of the 2006 midterm review [YUN 2006, p. 1109]. Regional partnership-based delivery of technical assistance activities should be maximized, and local and regional expertise and material resources should enhance the institutional capacity of recipient countries and the sustainability of benefits. UNCTAD should intensify its contribution to the Enhanced Integrated Framework for Trade-related Technical Assistance to LDCs, and strengthen in-country capacities for the management, implementation and monitoring of the mainstreaming of trade into LDCs' national development plans. The Conference took note of the outcome of the 2007 Pledging Conference on the Enhanced Integrated Framework. It stated that efforts should improve the management, evaluation and reporting of technical assistance activities, with greater attention paid to: measuring the effectiveness and evaluating the impact of those activities, in accordance with TDB decision 478(L) and relevant UN rules and procedures on technical cooperation evaluation; identifying the roles and responsibilities within the secretariat; and tracking the demand for assistance and availability of funding. There should be more cross-divisional cooperation to promote a holistic, UNCTAD-wide perspective and to enhance synergies, cost-effectiveness and the sharing of best practices and lessons learned in the design and implementation of technical assistance activities. The Conference underscored TDB decision 492(LIV) and encouraged its implementation in order to increase predictability, transparency and coherence in the planning and implementation of technical assistance programmes, with a view to enhancing UNCTAD technical cooperation. Fund-raising should also be improved. Donors and potential donors should provide multi-year contributions to the newly established thematic trust funds so as to increase predictability in the planning and implementation of the relevant technical assistance programmes, and other ways and options should be explored, such as more effective outreach and presentation of UNCTAD technical cooperation capacities and programmes and of funding needs. UNCTAD should reinforce its operational links with other UN organizations, particularly those operating at country level. The Conference welcomed the establishment by the UN System Chief Executives Board for Coordination of the inter-agency thematic cluster on trade and productive sectors to enhance the role of trade in UN development assistance plans, undertake joint operations at the country level and enhance inter-agency cooperation in system-wide initiatives. The newly established training programme for UN resident coordinators on the activities and programmes of the thematic cluster should be pursued, and the regional focal points should assist coordinators in developing UNCTAD programmes for their countries and their inclusion in UN development frameworks. General Assembly resolution 62/208 on the triennial policy review of operational activities for development of the United Nations [ibid., p. 877], and subsequent resolutions on that subject, should be implemented by UNCTAD.

The Conference also encouraged the implementation of the Aid for Trade initiative and noted that UNCTAD could contribute to its realization through its technical cooperation activities. UNCTAD should also improve its outreach towards potential recipients, including LDCs. The interaction between the secretariat, potential beneficiaries and donors on technical cooperation should be more structured and facilitated within the framework of the Working Party on the Medium-term Plan and the Programme Budget.

The activities outlined in the operational paragraphs on UNCTAD's contribution and on strengthening UNCTAD in the Accra Accord should be presented as the work programme for the following four years with defined objectives and outputs. The UNCTAD Secretary-General should present the work programme to States for discussion at the first meeting of the Working Party on the Medium-term Plan and the Programme Budget and the subsequent TDB session.

Annexed to the report of the conference were: the Ministerial Declaration of the Group of 77 and China on the occasion of UNCTAD XII [TD/436 & Corr.1]; the Declaration of the Least Developed Countries Ministerial Meeting at UNCTAD XII [TD/434] (see p. 939); the Ministerial Communiqué of Landlocked Developing Countries [TD/439] (see p. 948); and the Civil Society Forum Declaration to UNCTAD XII [TD/437]. In addition, the report contained two resolutions and statements of position on the outcome of the Conference by the United States and Iran.

Other action. On 25 April, the Conference expressed its gratitude to Ghana for hosting the Conference; welcomed the offer of Qatar to host UNCTAD XIII in 2012; endorsed the lists of States contained in the annex to resolution 1995(XIX) [TD/B/INF.211]; and took note of the TDB report to the Conference [TD/441] and of the statement by the Director of the Division of Management that TDB, at its fifty-fifth session, would carry out a review of the Accord and make related decisions. In that light, a statement of programme budget implications, if applicable, would be submitted by the secretariat.

In July, the UN Secretary-General transmitted to the Assembly the UNCTAD XII report [A/63/168].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December [meeting 72], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee [A/63/412/Add.1], adopted resolution 63/204 without vote [agenda item 47 (a)].

Report of the twelfth session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development

The General Assembly,

1. Notes with satisfaction the outcome of the twelfth session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, held in Accra from 20 to 25 April 2008, specifically the Accra Declaration and the Accra Accord;

2. Expresses its deep gratitude to the Government and people of Ghana for the hospitality extended to participants in the twelfth session of the Conference;

3. Welcomes the generous offer of the Government of Qatar to host the thirteenth session of the Conference in 2012.

Preparatory process

Pre-conference events. In preparation for the convening of UNCTAD XII, the following pre-conference events were held: conference on Global Initiative on Commodities: re-launching the commodities agenda (Brasilia, Brazil, 7–11 May 2007) [TD(XII)/BP/1]; expert meeting on identifying issues and priorities for LDCs for action during and beyond UNCTAD XII (Arusha, United Republic of Tanzania, 22–24 October 2007) [TD/415]; India–Africa Hydrocarbon Conference and Exhibition (New Delhi, India, 6–7 November 2007) [TD/418]; meeting on trade and development implications of tourism services for developing countries (Geneva, 19–20 November 2007) [TD/427]; conference on biofuels: an option for a less carbon-intensive economy (Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, 4–5 December 2007) [TD/416]; meeting on science, technology, innovation and ICTs for development (Geneva, 6 December 2007) [TD/417]; meeting on globalization of port logistics: opportunities and challenges for developing countries (Geneva, 12 December 2007) [TD/419]; Secretary-General's high-level panel on the creative economy and industries for development (Geneva, 14–15 January 2008) [TD/423]; Aid for Trade and development: towards a new global solidarity initiative (Bangkok, Thailand, 24–25 January) [TD/429]; hearings with civil society and the private sector (Geneva, 28 January and 3 March) [TD(XII)/PC/2, TD(XII)/PC/3]; high-level workshop for African LDCs (Izmir, Turkey, 4–5 March) [TD/432]; South-South trade in Asia and the role of regional trade agreements (Tokyo, 25 March); Lessons learned from South-South trade in Asian regions (Geneva, 2 April); expert meeting on making sustainability work for small farmers (Arusha, 7–9 April); and workshop on development strategies in Africa (Accra, 19 April).

TDB action. On 3 March [A/63/15 (Part I)], TDB, at its forty-third executive session, was addressed by the UN Secretary-General, who stressed that UNCTAD XII could contribute to building an international economic environment that fostered development by galvanizing support for a more development-friendly global economic, trading and financial system. It should also articulate a strategy to leverage globalization, trade and investment for poverty reduction and economic growth. Zimbabwe, speaking on behalf of the Group of 77 and China, stressed that the outcome of UNCTAD XII should encompass new and emerging issues such as climate change and migration, and provide stimulus to traditional issues such as commodities and South-South trade. It should also result in a strengthening of three pillars of UNCTAD work. TDB received an overview of the proceedings of UNCTAD XII and an update of the programme and other conference information from the host country.

At its twenty-fourth special session (Geneva, 17–20 March) [A/63/15 (Part II)], the TDB President, acting also as Chairman of the UNCTAD XII Preparatory Committee, presented the Committee's report [TD/B(S-XXIV)/L.2] and reports on the two hearings with civil society [TD(XII)/PC/2, TD(XII)/PC/3]. The President said that negotiations on the text from the Preparatory Committee were not yet concluded. The Board took note of all three reports. At its plenary meeting on 7 April, the Preparatory Committee decided to transmit the draft UNCTAD XII negotiated text to the Conference [TD/L.398 & Add.1–4].

International trade

---

The World Economic Situation and Prospects 2009 [Sales No. E.09.II.C.2], jointly issued by UNCTAD and the UN Department of Economic and Social Affairs (DESA), stated that growth in the volume of trade slowed to an estimated 4.4 per cent in 2008, nearly half of the average annual growth of 8.6 per cent during 2004–2007. During 2008, the signs of significantly weakening world trade were visible in the Baltic Dry Index, a leading indicator of global trade activity measuring the demand for shipping capacity to transport commodities versus the supply of dry bulk carriers, which had declined by 85 per cent between May and November. However, the value of trade flows increased significantly, due largely to extraordinary rises in the prices of oil and most commodities during the first half of the year. At an aggregate level, oil producers in North Africa, the Commonwealth of Independent States (CIS) and Western Asia doubled their rate of nominal export revenue growth to 53 per cent, 48 per cent and 38 per cent, respectively. In addition, countries in sub-Saharan Africa (excluding Nigeria and South Africa) and LDCs as a group achieved remarkable rates of growth of export revenue following the primary commodity boom, averaging about 42 per cent. Latin America, which had a somewhat more diversified trade structure, saw the doubling of its rate of export revenue growth offset by a more rapidly increasing import bill. Manufactured goods exporters in East and South Asia were affected by the rise in commodity prices. In Europe, although import growth was less dramatic, it outpaced export growth, but fortunes reversed following the dramatic fall in the prices of oil and primary commodities in the second half of 2008.
