FOREWORD

As we mark the 60th year of the publication of The Yearbook of the United Nations, I am delighted to contribute my first foreword to this indispensable and authoritative reference work on the Organization. This milestone edition documents the results of the 2005 World Summit, an unprecedented gathering of more than 150 Heads of State and Government who collectively took bold decisions in the areas of security, human rights, United Nations reform and the Millennium Development Goals.

The 2005 World Summit pledged to "enhance the relevance, effectiveness, efficiency, accountability and credibility of the United Nations system." It set the stage for major advances, including the creation of the Peacebuilding Commission and the Human Rights Council, the adoption of a global counter-terrorism strategy, and the establishment of a Central Emergency Response Fund to expedite humanitarian relief. The vision forged in 2005 continues to animate our work as we move, in the phrase of this Yearbook's theme, "towards development, security and human rights for all".

About the 2005 edition of the Yearbook

This volume of the YEARBOOK OF THE UNITED NATIONS continues the tradition of providing the most comprehensive coverage of the activities of the United Nations. It is an indispensable reference tool for the research community, diplomats, government officials and the general public seeking readily available information on the UN system and its related organizations.

Efforts by the Department of Public Information to achieve a more timely publication have resulted in having to rely on provisional documentation and other materials to prepare the relevant articles. Largely, Economic and Social Council resolutions and some other texts in the present volume are provisional.

Structure and scope of articles

The Yearbook is subject-oriented and divided into six parts covering political and security questions; human rights issues; economic and social questions; legal questions; institutional, administrative and budgetary questions; and intergovernmental organizations related to the United Nations. Chapters and topical headings present summaries of pertinent UN activities, including those of intergovernmental and expert bodies, major reports, Secretariat activities and, in selected cases, the views of States in written communications.

Activities of United Nations bodies. All resolutions, decisions and other major activities of the principal organs and, on a selective basis, those of subsidiary bodies are either reproduced or summarized in the appropriate chapter. The texts of all resolutions and decisions of substantive nature adopted in 2005 by the General Assembly, the Security Council and the Economic and Social Council are reproduced or summarized under the relevant topic. These texts are preceded by procedural details giving date of adoption, meeting number and vote totals (in favour–against–abstaining) if any; and an indication of their approval by a sessional or subsidiary body prior to final adoption. The texts are followed by details of any recorded or roll-call vote on the resolution/decision as a whole.

Major reports. Most reports of the Secretary-General, in 2005, along with selected reports from other UN sources, such as seminars and working groups, are summarized briefly.

Secretariat activities. The operational activities of the United Nations for development and humanitarian assistance are described under the relevant topics. For major activities financed outside the UN regular budget, selected information is given on contributions and expenditures.

Views of States. Written communications sent to the United Nations by Member States and circulated as documents of the principal organs have been summarized in selected cases, under the relevant topics. Substantive actions by the Security Council have been analysed and brief reviews of the Council's deliberations given, particularly in cases where an issue was taken up but no resolution was adopted.

Related organizations. The Yearbook also briefly describes the 2005 activities of the specialized agencies and other related organizations of the UN system.

Multilateral treaties. Information on signatories and parties to multilateral treaties and conventions is taken from Multilateral Treaties Deposited with the Secretary-General: Status as at 31 December 2005 (ST/LEG/ SER.E/24 (vols. I & II)), Sales No. E.06.V.2.

Terminology

Formal titles of bodies, organizational units, conventions, declarations and officials are given in full on first mention in an article or sequence of articles. They are also used in resolution/decision texts, and in the SUBJECT INDEX under the key word of the title. Short titles may be used in subsequent references.

How to find information in the Yearbook

The user may locate information on the United Nations activities contained in this volume by the use of the Table of Contents, the Subject Index, the Index of Resolutions and Decisions and the Index of Security Council presidential statements. The volume also has five appendices: Appendix I comprises a roster of Member States; Appendix II reproduces the Charter of the United Nations, including the Statute of the International Court of Justice; Appendix III gives the structure of the principal organs of the United Nations; Appendix IV provides the agenda for each session of the principal organs in 2005; and Appendix V gives the addresses of the United Nations information centres and services worldwide.

EXPLANATORY NOTE ON DOCUMENTS

References in square brackets in each chapter of Parts One to Five of this volume give the symbols of the main documents issued in 2005 on the topic. The following is a guide to the principal document symbols:

A/- refers to documents of the General Assembly, numbered in separate series by session. Thus, A/60/- refers to documents issued for consideration at the sixtieth session, beginning with A/60/1. Documents of special and emergency special sessions are identified as A/S- and A/ES-, followed by the session number.

A/C.- refers to documents of the Assembly's Main Committees, e.g. A/C.1/- is a document of the First Committee, A/C.6/-, a document of the Sixth Committee. A/BUR/- refers to documents of the General Committee. A/AC.- documents are those of the Assembly's ad hoc bodies and A/CN.-, of its commissions; e.g. A/AC.105/- identifies documents of the Assembly's Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space, A/CN.4/-, of its International Law Commission. Assembly resolutions and decisions since the thirty-first (1976) session have been identified by two arabic numerals; the first indicates the session of adoption; the second, the sequential number in the series. Resolutions are numbered consecutively from 1 at each session. Decisions since the fifty-seventh session are numbered consecutively, from 401 for those concerned with elections and appointments, and from 501 for all other decisions. Decisions of special and emergency special sessions are numbered consecutively, from 11 for those concerned with elections and appointments, and from 21 for all other decisions.

E/- refers to documents of the Economic and Social Council, numbered in separate series by year. Thus, E/2005/- refers to documents issued for consideration by the Council at its 2005 sessions, beginning with E/2005/1. E/AC.-, E/C.- and E/CN.-, followed by identifying numbers, refer to documents of the Council's subsidiary ad hoc bodies, committees and commissions. For example, E/CN.5/- refers to documents of the Council's Commission for Social Development, E/C.2/-, to documents of its Committee on Non-Governmental Organizations. E/ICEF/- documents are those of the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF). Symbols for the Council's resolutions and decisions, since 1978, consist of two arabic numerals: the first indicates the year of adoption and the second, the sequential number in the series. There are two series: one for resolutions, beginning with 1 (resolution 2005/1); and one for decisions, beginning with 201 (decision 2005/201).

S/- refers to documents of the Security Council. Its resolutions are identified by consecutive numbers followed by the year of adoption in parentheses, beginning with resolution 1(1946).

ST/-, followed by symbols representing the issuing department or office, refers to documents of the United Nations Secretariat.

Documents of certain bodies bear special symbols, including the following:

CD/-	Conference on Disarmament
CERD/-	Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination
DC/-	Disarmament Commission
DP/-	United Nations Development Programme
HS/-	Commission on Human Settlements
ITC/-	International Trade Centre
TD/-	United Nations Conference on Trade and Development
UNEP/-	United Nations Environment Programme

Many documents of the regional commissions bear special symbols, which are sometimes preceded by the following:

E/ECA/-	Economic Commission for Africa
E/ECE/-	Economic Commission for Europe
E/ECLAC/-	Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean
E/ESCAP/-	Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific
E/ESCWA/-	Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia

"L" in a symbol refers to documents of limited distribution, such as draft resolutions; "CONF." to documents of a conference; "INF." to those of general information. Summary records are designated by "SR.", verbatim records by "PV.", each followed by the meeting number.

United Nations sales publications each carry a sales number with the following components separated by periods: a capital letter indicating the language(s) of the publication; two arabic numerals indicating the year; a Roman numeral indicating the subject category; a capital letter indicating a subdivision of the category, if any; and an arabic numeral indicating the number of the publication within the category. Examples: E.05.II.A.2; E/F/R.05.II.E.7; E.05.X.1.

Report of the Secretary-General

Report of the Secretary-General on the work of the Organization

Following is the Secretary-General's report on the work of the Organization [A/60/1], dated 25 August 2005, submitted to the sixtieth session of the General Assembly. The Assembly took note of it on 29 September (decision 60/504).

Introduction

1. Every year, this comprehensive report on the work of the Organization provides me with an opportunity to review the progress of the United Nations in meeting the Charter objectives of maintaining international peace and security; developing friendly relations among nations; achieving international cooperation in solving economic, social, cultural or humanitarian problems; and encouraging respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all. Success in fulfilling the purposes of the United Nations requires the full commitment and support of its Member States, civil society and the private sector, as well as the peoples of the world.

2. This past year has witnessed both progress and setbacks not just for the United Nations, but also for the world. There have been positive developments in the area of peace and security, such as the end of the North-South conflict in the Sudan, democratic elections in Afghanistan and Iraq, improvements in relations between India and Pakistan. Such developments strengthen our determination to continue our efforts in other conflict situations.

3. Vicious terrorist attacks in Egypt, Iraq, the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland and elsewhere have dramatized the magnitude of the threat of terrorism. No cause or belief can possibly justify the use of terror and indiscriminate violence against civilians. Terrorism is not the product of any particular religion or ideology, nor is it directed only at certain countries or people. It is a menace affecting all of us, and the international community must continue to work together to confront and defeat it.

4. Together with the Organization's efforts to maintain peace and security, promoting sustainable development remains at the centre of our actions. Our generation is the first to have the knowledge and resources to eradicate extreme poverty, so there is no longer any excuse for leaving over a billion of our fellow human beings in that state. Meeting the goals of the Millennium Declaration, agreed upon by all Member States as a blueprint for building a better world in the twenty-first century, is at the core of our global mission. In this context, I am particularly encouraged by the recent commitments on official development assistance and debt cancellation by the European Union and the Group of Eight. All States, both developed and developing, must do their part to intensify the fight against poverty and disease. We need a major global effort to meet the Millennium Development Goals by 2015 and to ensure that the benefits of globalization are more equally shared among the world's peoples.

5. An unprecedented Indian Ocean tsunami in December 2004 spread death and destruction over 14 countries on two continents. The disaster confirmed a disturbing trend during the past decade: the number of people killed by natural disasters has increased by almost 50 per cent. The outpouring of support from Governments, civil society, the private sector and individuals and the quick mobilization of resources set a new standard for humanitarian response. I hope that the global outpouring of solidarity and generosity will become a model for the response to other ongoing or future humanitarian crises.

6. Human rights abuses sadly persist in many parts of the world. Clearly, enormous efforts are still needed to make human rights a reality for all. The tragedy in Darfur and the appalling suffering of the civilian population represents one of the most flagrant violations of human rights. United Nations system agencies have made valiant efforts to provide humanitarian assistance to the population. The United Nations is supporting the efforts of the African Union, whose troops are helping to protect the population from further atrocities. I am pleased that the Security Council has now agreed to ask the International Criminal Court to play an essential role in holding to account those accused of war crimes. The crisis in Darfur is not simply an African problem. It concerns the entire international community.

7. During the past year, United Nations reform has been high on my agenda. The concrete reform measures that have been put in place since I became Secretary-General in 1997 have already made the United Nations a more effective and efficient organization. The system shows greater coherence, and its disparate elements now work better together. However, there is much that remains to be done to adapt the Organization's structures and institutional culture to new expectations and new challenges.

8. Last March I put before the Member States a set of proposals in my report entitled "In larger freedom", a phrase which comes from the Preamble to the Charter of the United Nations. I put forward bold yet achievable interlinked proposals on development, security and human rights, as well as a series of institutional reforms covering the intergovernmental organs, Secretariat management and coordination of the wider United Nations system. I hope that at the High-level Plenary Meeting of the General Assembly, to be held in New York in September, leaders from all Member States of the United Nations will take concrete decisions to improve the prosperity, security and dignity of peoples everywhere and to strengthen the Organization itself as an instrument for achieving these noble objectives.

9. I submit this ninth annual report of mine in accordance with the Charter and in the hope that, through our collective efforts, the dream of a more secure, prosperous and just world embodied in the Charter will become a reality for all.

Chapter I

Achieving peace and security

10. The United Nations worked tirelessly around the globe throughout the year to prevent and resolve conflicts and to consolidate peace. From Afghanistan to Burundi, from Iraq to the Sudan, from Haiti to the Middle East, the tools employed were as diverse as the circumstances. My envoys used their good offices in seeking peace agreements or in trying to prevent disputes from violently escalating. Peacekeepers deployed to conflict zones in record numbers and in complex multidimensional operations—working not only to provide security, but also to disarm, demobilize and reintegrate former fighters; to permit the safe and sustainable return of refugees and internally displaced persons; and to help war-torn countries, write constitutions, hold elections and strengthen human rights and the rule of law. United Nations agencies, funds and programmes tailored their assistance to the special needs of post-conflict societies.

Conflict prevention and peacemaking

11. Nowhere were the stakes higher and the challenges to global peace and security greater than in Iraq. The international community has a shared and vital responsibility to achieve a successful transition that will lead to national reconciliation and a better life for all Iraqis. For both Iraq and the world at large, success is the only option.

12. The United Nations has been doing everything it can to help. Under the leadership of my Special Representative for Iraq and the United Nations Assistance Mission for Iraq, the United Nations has worked on many different fronts: to promote an inclusive, participatory and transparent political transition process; to provide reconstruction, development and humanitarian assistance; and to promote the protection of human rights, national reconciliation and judicial and legal reform. Although insecurity remains a constraint, I have consistently sought ways to work within the prevailing circumstances in order to carry out United Nations activities.

13. Our contributions to the political transition are numerous and ongoing. In August 2004 the United Nations helped to convene a national conference at which an Interim National Council was selected. The United Nations also played a leading role in assisting the Independent Electoral Commission of Iraq in its successful management of the historic elections in January 2005. Following the convening of the Transitional National Assembly in March and the formation of the Transitional Government in April, Iraq's political transition has entered a decisive phase. The United Nations is helping the Iraqis draft a permanent constitution and to prepare for a constitutional referendum and elections for a permanent Government in accordance with the timetable endorsed by the Security Council in its resolution 1546(2004).

14. At the international conference on Iraq, held in Brussels in June 2005, representatives from more than 80 countries and organizations emphasized the leading role of the United Nations in supporting the political process. They also welcomed the decision of the Transitional Government to establish an Iraqi-led donor coordination mechanism with the support of the United Nations. I hope the conference will help build momentum for greater international burden-sharing for Iraq's political and economic reconstruction.

15. Violence dropped sharply in the Israeli-Palestinian conflict, as actions by leaders on both sides generated new hopes for peace. The summit meeting held at Sharm el-Sheikh, Egypt, on 8 February 2005 produced a series of commitments—including a halt to violence and military activities—aimed at rebuilding trust and breaking the cycle of bloodshed. Although formal negotiations were not resumed, the two parties agreed to hold direct discussions to coordinate the Israeli withdrawal from the Gaza Strip and parts of the northern West Bank, scheduled to take place in August.

16. I welcomed the new momentum with cautious optimism, aware there would likely be setbacks and delays. During a visit to Israel and the occupied Palestinian territory in March 2005, I urged the two sides to seek further progress through direct dialogue and negotiations. In May, I appointed a new Special Coordinator for the Middle East Peace Process and Personal Representative to the Palestinian Authority and the Palestine Liberation Organization. The United Nations has also remained engaged through its participation in the Quartet for Middle East peace, which has met five times in the period since September 2004, and in April 2005 I appointed a Special Envoy for Gaza Disengagement. Despite the improved climate for peace, I continued to express grave concern about the Israeli barrier and its humanitarian impact. In response to a request from the General Assembly, I proposed a framework for a registry of damage caused by the barrier.

17. Lebanon became a focus of international attention following the adoption of Security Council resolution 1559(2004) in September and the shocking bomb attack that killed former Prime Minister Rafik Hariri and 20 others in Beirut in February 2005. I designated a Special Envoy for the implementation of Security Council resolution 1559(2004), which called, among other things, for the withdrawal of foreign forces from the country and the disbanding and disarmament of militias. A team of military experts I dispatched to Lebanon at the end of April concluded to the best of its ability that Syrian military assets, except in one disputed border area, had been withdrawn fully from Lebanon. I sent the team back in June to clarify allegations that Syrian intelligence operatives continued to operate in the country.

18. The assassination of Mr. Hariri, occurring only months before planned parliamentary elections, raised fears that Lebanon would return to its violent past. In condemning the attack, the Security Council requested that I report to it urgently on its causes, circumstances and consequences. Within days I dispatched a mission of inquiry, which concluded that an international commission should independently investigate the crime. The Council agreed, calling for such a commission to be created to assist the Lebanese authorities in investigating the bombing. By June, the United Nations International Independent Investigation Commission was fully operational. I also responded positively to a request of the Lebanese Government for electoral assistance by deploying a mission to help authorities prepare for the parliamentary elections and to coordinate the work of international electoral observers. The holding of these elections on time and in a credible manner has been a key element in a transition in which the Lebanese people have been expressing their determination to shape their own future, strengthen political institutions and restore their full sovereignty.

19. Turning to Africa, there was a major breakthrough in the Sudan with the signing on 9 January of the Comprehensive Peace Agreement between the Government and the Sudan People's Liberation Movement (SPLM). The accord ended two decades of North-South fighting that had killed and uprooted millions of people. During the negotiations, my Special Adviser provided support to the parties and to the mediation by the Intergovernmental Authority on Development (IGAD). The agreement permitted the United Nations Mission in the Sudan to be established, replacing the United Nations Advance Mission in the Sudan, which had been created in June 2004 to prepare for the anticipated peacekeeping operation as well as to provide further support to the parties in the final months leading up to the signing of the Peace Agreement. While attending the historic swearing-in of the new Government of National Unity on 9 July in Khartoum, I was encouraged that the two former adversaries, President Omer Hassan A. Al-Bashir and First Vice-President John Garang, pledged to seek wider political participation in the interim Government as well as to pursue peace and reconciliation in the regions of the Sudan that remained wracked by instability and conflict. The tragic and untimely death of First Vice-President Garang just three weeks later on 30 July was a terrible loss for the Sudan. However, since that date, I have been greatly reassured by the speed with which SPLM named Dr. Garang's successor, Commander Salva Kiir, as the head of the Movement and his subsequent inauguration as the First Vice-President of the Sudan. Crucially, both parties have quickly and authoritatively reaffirmed their commitment to the implementation of the Comprehensive Peace Agreement.

20. Peace between North and South did not, however, resolve the dire situation in the western Darfur region of the Sudan where, amid continuing human rights abuses and ceasefire violations, the United Nations provided massive humanitarian assistance to a brutalized population. The United Nations also actively supported and encouraged the African Union in its efforts to mediate a peace agreement for Darfur through the Abuja process and in its deployment of troops and police to monitor the ceasefire and improve security on the ground. The African Union mission has performed admirably under extraordinarily difficult circumstances and with limited means. As a result, the terrible violence that has afflicted the region has largely stopped in areas where the mission operates. However, while I found reasons to be encouraged during my visit to the region in May, the situation in Darfur remains intolerable. The parties to the conflict must comply with their commitments, guarantee the safety of civilians and make every effort to conclude a full-fledged peace agreement by the end of 2005. Only then can real security begin to take hold and the people of Darfur begin to rebuild their lives. The signing in Abuja on 5 July of the Declaration of Principles for the Resolution of the Sudanese Conflict in Darfur was an important step in the right direction, as the Declaration gives shape to future negotiations on issues such as unity, religion, power-sharing, wealth-sharing, security arrangements and the key question of land use and ownership.

21. The Security Council took an important stand against impunity in Darfur when it decided in March 2005 to refer charges of war crimes charges to the International Criminal Court. The Court should benefit from the ground already laid by the International Commission of Inquiry that I established. In addition, the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and my Special Adviser on the Prevention of Genocide visited Darfur at my request and offered recommendations to the Security Council on protecting civilians and preventing massive violations of human rights and international humanitarian law.

22. Hopes were rekindled for peace in Somalia after the Somali National Reconciliation Conference concluded successfully in October 2004 with the formation of a Transitional Federal Government based in Nairobi. The United Nations supported the IGAD-led negotiating process and was asked to play a leading role in coordinating international support for implementing the terms of the transitional federal charter that came out of the Conference. While this has been the most inclusive peace effort to date, insecurity and ongoing disputes have prevented the Transitional Federal Government from relocating to Somalia. Seeing a need for higher profile United Nations leadership, I appointed a Special Representative, who will head an expanded United Nations Political Office for Somalia.

23. Efforts to end the violence in northern Uganda edged forward in December 2004 with the first face-to-face meeting between the Government of Uganda and the "Lord's Resistance Army". Those efforts, facilitated by a national mediator and supported by the United Nations and others in the international community, continued in 2005 with a view to finding a peaceful resolution to the 19-year-old conflict.

24. Political transitions were marred by violence in some African countries, prompting good offices efforts by the United Nations and others to prevent disputes from escalating into armed conflicts. The United Nations supported regional initiatives by the Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS) and the African Union to ensure respect for constitutionality during the transitional process in Togo upon the sudden death of President Gnassingbé Eyadema. The United Nations peacebuilding offices in Guinea-Bissau and the Central African Republic were active in promoting peaceful transitions in those countries. I dispatched a Special Envoy to Guinea-Bissau to help ensure that presidential elections were conducted peacefully and transparently in June.

25. I continued to work closely with the Heads of State of Cameroon and Nigeria in peacefully settling their territorial dispute. In a three-way meeting in May, both Presidents renewed to me their commitment to moving the process forward in accordance with the ruling of the International Court of Justice. The United Nations also continued to help Equatorial Guinea and Gabon mediate a settlement of their dispute over the island of Mbanie.

26. As called for in the July 2004 report of the Security Council mission to West Africa, my Special Representative for West Africa continued to hold regular meetings of the heads of the United Nations presences in the region. He pursued preventive diplomacy missions to help defuse tension in several countries, while also engaging ECOWAS, Governments, civil society organizations and donors in developing an integrated regional conflict-prevention strategy.

27. Civilians bore the brunt of continued fighting in Colombia. With some 2 million internally displaced persons, the situation has not improved. Violence increased in the first half of 2005, particularly attacks against indigenous communities. Regrettably, peacemaking efforts did not lead to a resumption of negotiations. While allowing the mandate of my Special Adviser to expire in April, given the unfavourable climate for peace talks, I made it clear that United Nations good offices remained available to Colombia.

28. The United Nations Verification Mission in Guatemala closed at the end of 2004, successfully completing 10 years of dedicated support to the Guatemalan peace process. As a follow-on mechanism to strengthen human rights and the rule of law, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights agreed with the Government to establish an office in Guatemala. On the other hand, the Constitutional Court rejected a 2004 agreement between the Government and the United Nations to create a special investigative commission on illegal groups and clandestine security organizations.

29. Following the outcome of the April referendums in Cyprus, my good offices were dormant, and I encouraged all parties to engage in a period of reflection. In late May and early June 2005, the Under-Secretary-General for Political Affairs visited Cyprus, Greece and Turkey to ascertain the views of all parties in order to assist me in determining the priority, resources and intensity with which to pursue my good offices in the future.

30. I continue to be encouraged by the steady and meaningful progress achieved by India and Pakistan in their bilateral dialogue. The launch, in April 2005, of the landmark bus service across the line of control was a powerful gesture of peace. Leaders of the two countries assured me of their commitment to working to resolve all outstanding issues, including that of Jammu and Kashmir.

31. In Nepal, the United Nations system is making efforts to strengthen its presence and ability to respond to the deteriorating situation caused by the ongoing conflict and political crisis. I hope that the establishment of a monitoring presence of the Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights will lead to improvements in human rights, which in turn could enhance the prospects for peace talks. In my contacts with King Gyanendra, I continue to urge a prompt return to constitutional rule and to reiterate the readiness of the United Nations to help to peacefully resolve the conflict. As part of such efforts, my Special Adviser visited Nepal from 10 to 15 July and met with King Gyanendra, senior Government officials, leaders of political parties and a cross-section of representatives of Nepalese society.

32. Insecurity grew in Central Asia, where there was political upheaval in Kyrgyzstan in March and an outbreak of violence in Uzbekistan in May. I informed the members of the Security Council of my intention to establish in Turkmenistan the United Nations Regional Centre for Preventative Diplomacy for Central Asia as a response to the growing instability and as a tool for strengthening cooperation on issues ranging from the fight against drug trafficking and terrorism to strengthening democratic institutions and respect for human rights. In Tajikistan, with assistance from the United Nations Tajikistan Office of Peacebuilding (UNTOP), the Government took further steps to consolidate the peace.

33. During a visit to Sri Lanka in January 2005, I encouraged a collective commitment to recovering from the Indian Ocean tsunami tragedy and to reinvigorating the peace process. The United Nations continued to support efforts backed by the Government of Norway to revive peace negotiations and stands ready to assist the process in any way necessary.

34. The United Nations Observer Mission in Bougainville concluded its mandate successfully in June 2005 following peaceful, transparent elections and the inauguration of the first autonomous Bougainville Government. With these achievements, Bougainville has reached a major milestone in its peace process.

35. My good offices efforts in Myanmar continued, albeit with little progress. My Special Envoy has not been able to visit the country since March 2004. I met Senior General Than Shwe, Chairman of the State Peace and Development Council, during the Asia-Africa Summit in Jakarta in April and emphasized that the transition process must include all parties.

36. In Indonesia, I am hopeful that peace talks between the Government and the Free Aceh Movement, facilitated by the Chairman of the Board of the Crisis Management Initiative and former President of Finland, will succeed. Regarding the serious human rights violations committed in 1999 in Timor-Leste, I established an Independent Commission of Experts in February to review the prosecution of those crimes. The Commission submitted its report to me at the end of May and I transmitted it to the Security Council. I still firmly believe that the perpetrators must be brought to justice.

37. I remain concerned about the situation on the Korean peninsula. I am pleased, however, that after a long period of intensive diplomatic efforts to revitalize the Beijing process, the Governments concerned demonstrated flexibility and goodwill and agreed to resume the six-party talks. I will continue doing my best to mobilize international support for this multilateral approach towards a nuclear-free peninsula. I will also look for practical ways in which the Organization can strengthen its humanitarian and development work in the Democratic People's Republic of Korea.

38. Meanwhile, in seven countries of Africa, Latin America and Asia—Ecuador, Ghana, Guyana, Kenya, Namibia, Yemen and Zimbabwe— a joint programme of the Department of Political Affairs and the United Nations Development Programme (undp) was actively helping Governments, political parties and members of civil society to acquire the skills they need to resolve disputes peacefully before they lead to violence. Separately, my Special Adviser on the Prevention of Genocide worked to develop a system for early warning of situations potentially involving massive violations of human rights and international humanitarian law.

39. As requested by the Security Council in 2004, I intend, by October, to present an action plan for the implementation throughout the United Nations system of resolution 1325 (2000), by which the Council called upon the Organization and its Member States to involve women more systematically and at the highest levels in the pursuit of international peace and security.

Peacekeeping and peacebuilding

40. The past year has brought tremendous challenges for United Nations peacekeeping, whose scale of operations has reached a historic high. Even as major commitments in Sierra Leone and Timor-Leste were reduced, the Security Council established a new 10,000-person-strong peacekeeping operation in the Sudan. Approximately 80,000 military, civilian police and civilian personnel served in 16 peacekeeping operations and in the special political missions in Afghanistan and Timor-Leste.

41. I was deeply disturbed by the reports during the year of sexual exploitation and abuse committed by United Nations peacekeepers in several missions, including in the Democratic Republic of the Congo. I have enacted a policy of zero tolerance towards such offences, which applies to all personnel engaged in United Nations operations. I strongly encourage Member States to support the enforcement of this policy with respect to their national contingents.

42. The challenges facing the new operation in the Sudan are enormous, given the complexity of the situation, the potential for interference from "spoilers" outside the peace process, the sheer size of Africa's largest country, the absence of infrastructure in many areas and the prevalence of landmines. Creating conditions for the safe and sustainable return of more than 500,000 refugees and some 4 million internally displaced persons will be one of the keys to consolidating peace. Despite these challenges, I was encouraged during my visit to the region in May by the commitment of the parties to the Comprehensive Peace Agreement. Implementation will not come without a price. Governments must deliver on the generous pledges of support they made to the Sudan at the April 2005 donor conference in Oslo.

43. In Côte d'Ivoire, many of the provisions of the Linas-Marcoussis Agreement signed by the Ivorian parties in January 2003 have yet to be implemented. The November 2004 military operation by the National Armed Forces of Côte d'Ivoire against Forces nouvelles positions in the north of the country and the ensuing violence in Abidjan and elsewhere dealt a severe blow to the peace process. The United Nations is working in close cooperation with the African Union and ECOWAS in support of the peace process. The United Nations Operation in Côte d'Ivoire is playing an important role in enhancing security. The mission is also monitoring the use of the media to incite hate and violence as well as the arms embargo imposed by the Security Council in November 2004. The mediation efforts of the President of South Africa, initiated on behalf of the African Union after the November 2004 crisis, resulted in an agreement signed in Pretoria on 6 April, which calls upon the United Nations to play a major role in the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration of combatants, the preparation of presidential elections, scheduled for October, and the restoration of security in the north. However, implementation of the Pretoria Agreement has proceeded only slowly. In July I appointed a High Representative for the Elections in Côte d'Ivoire, who will certify all stages of the electoral process and verify that the elections are free, fair and transparent.

44. In Liberia, steady progress has been made with the support of the United Nations Mission in Liberia (UNMIL) and the United Nations country team in disarming, demobilizing, rehabilitating and reintegrating ex-combatants and in starting the large-scale return of refugees and internally displaced persons. Preparations for the 11 October elections remained on course, and the restructuring of the Liberian police service also advanced. The National Transitional Government of Liberia made slow progress in restoring administration throughout the country. It will need continued assistance so that it can deliver basic services and extend its authority nationwide while addressing concerns about the lack of transparency in the collection and use of public revenues.

45. While undergoing further personnel reductions, the United Nations Mission in Sierra Leone continued to make progress in accomplishing the benchmarks established for it by the Security Council, which include strengthening the capacity of the armed forces and police to maintain security and stability; consolidating State authority throughout the country; and helping UNMIL to fully deploy in neighbouring Liberia. After assessing the situation, I recommended that the presence of the United Nations Mission in Sierra Leone (UNAMSIL) be extended for a final period of six months, until the end of 2005. A strong and integrated presence of the United Nations system will be needed after the departure of UNAMSIL in order to help Sierra Leone consolidate peace. In collaboration with the Government of Sierra Leone, the Office of the Special Adviser on Africa convened a conference on disarmament, demobilization, reintegration and stability in Freetown from 21 to 23 June. The conference focused on examining the extent to which current disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programmes genuinely contribute to stability and identifying the necessary preconditions for the success of such programmes.

46. I regret that no progress was made in overcoming the deadlock in Western Sahara. The Security Council twice extended the mandate of the United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara (MINURSO), which currently runs to October 2005. I continue to stand ready to help the parties move towards a political solution that would permit the people of Western Sahara to exercise their right to self-determination. Meanwhile, MINURSO continued to support confidence-building measures led by the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, including the exchange of family visits between Western Sahara and the Tindouf area refugee camps in Algeria.

47. The Burundi peace process advanced considerably, following the deployment of the United Nations Operation in Burundi (UNOB) in June 2004. After twice being postponed, the referendum on a post-transitional constitution was held successfully on 28 February 2005, with support from UNOB. Communal elections were successfully concluded in June, despite some violence at polling stations in two western provinces. The three-year transitional period was extended to 26 August 2005. By mid-year more than 10,000 former combatants had participated in the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programme. Laws establishing a new integrated army and police force were promulgated, and the cantonment process was completed in May. The armed parties and movements that signed the Arusha Peace and Reconciliation Agreement registered as political parties. Improved security eased the return and reintegration of refugees and internally displaced persons.

48. Stalemate persisted in the peace process between Eritrea and Ethiopia, although relative calm prevailed in the temporary security zone and its adjacent areas. The United Nations Mission in Ethiopia and Eritrea continued to monitor the zone, chairing the Military Coordination Commission and coordinating humanitarian, human rights and demining activities, including the clearance of roads. It is imperative that the parties begin a peaceful dialogue to address outstanding issues while proceeding to demarcate the border without further delay.

49. In the Democratic Republic of the Congo, despite some progress by the Transitional Government in extending its authority, power-sharing was complicated by the fragile relations among its members. Some progress was made in preparing for elections, although necessary legislation had not been adopted. The United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo (MONUC) worked to ensure that the country's constitutional framework and its electoral laws were consistent with internationally accepted principles. The Mission also helped to strengthen the operational capacity of the Congolese National Police. On 13 May 2005 the National Assembly approved a draft constitution, to be put to a referendum later in the year. The transitional period was extended by six months, through December. Voter registration commenced on 20 June in Kinshasa.

50. United Nations peacekeepers were able to take a more robust approach towards protecting civilians after the Security Council, in October 2004, authorized the deployment of 5,900 additional troops and civilian police to reinforce the Mission's military and security capacity. Combined military and political pressure resulted in the disarmament of 14,000 militiamen in the Ituri district. Regrettably, 11 peacekeepers were killed in the line of duty.

51. The March 2005 announcement by the Forces démocratique de libération du Rwanda (FDLR) of its intention to renounce violence and to enter the process of disarmament, demobilization and reintegration was an important development. Despite MONUC preparations for repatriating the remaining FDLR combatants, there had been no tangible progress since the announcement. Meanwhile, the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees continued to help repatriate Rwandan refugees from the rainforest of the eastern part of the Democratic Republic of the Congo.

52. In Afghanistan, progress continued in implementing the Bonn Agreement's benchmarks, with the support of the United Nations Assistance Mission in Afghanistan. President Hamid Karzai and a new cabinet took office in December 2004, following presidential elections held without major security incidents. The benchmarks will be completed later in the year, following parliamentary and provincial elections scheduled for September 2005. Nevertheless, Afghan institutions of security and justice and the provision of basic services are still extremely weak and dependent on the international community. Opium production has increased. Accordingly, I am giving thought to a possible post-Bonn agenda, to be worked out in close consultation with the Afghan authorities and their international partners.

53. The United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon continued to monitor the Blue Line between Israel and Lebanon. The past year has seen a limited number of armed exchanges between Hizbollah and the Israel Defense Forces, the worst of which resulted in the death of an Israeli soldier and a United Nations military observer. Israel frequently violated Lebanese airspace and, in a new development, Hizbollah drones twice penetrated Israeli airspace. My representatives in the region and I have continued to urge the parties to respect the Blue Line and to abide fully by their obligations. We have also continued to emphasize the pressing need for the Lebanese Government to exert control over the use of force throughout its entire territory and to prevent attacks from Lebanon across the Blue Line.

54. In Timor-Leste, the United Nations continued to provide capacity-building assistance in public administration, law enforcement, democratic governance and human rights, while the role of United Nations agencies increased in those areas. The United Nations Office in Timor-Leste was established by the Security Council with a one-year mandate to 20 May 2006, succeeding the United Nations Mission of Support in East Timor. The operation was further reduced and its tasks revised to enable a smooth transition, by the end of the mandate, from a special political mission to a framework for sustainable development assistance.

55. The United Nations Observer Mission in Georgia continued to monitor the ceasefire between the Georgian and Abkhaz sides and to promote a comprehensive political settlement of the conflict. After elections produced a new leadership in Sukhumi, both sides met again under United Nations auspices in April 2005 and agreed to resume dialogue on issues related to security, the return of displaced persons and economic cooperation.

56. The United Nations Interim Administration Mission in Kosovo transferred additional powers to the provisional institutions of self-government. The new Kosovo Government and the provisional institutions showed a greater commitment to implementing the Standards for Kosovo, which are central to the policy of the international community in Kosovo and which aim to lay foundations for a sustainable multi-ethnic, democratic society in which all can live in dignity and without fear. On 3 June I appointed a Special Envoy to carry out a comprehensive review of Kosovo, as indicated in my recent report on the United Nations Interim Administration Mission in Kosovo, endorsed by the Security Council on 27 May. The comprehensive review is being carried out in accordance with resolution 1244 (1999) and the relevant presidential statements of the Security Council. It consists of consultations with the parties and the international community and is broad in scope in order to assess the current situation and the conditions for the possible next steps in the process.

57. The United Nations Stabilization Mission in Haiti (MINUSTAH) continued to carry out its mandate to help ensure a secure and stable environment within which the constitutional and political processes can go forward. Despite ongoing criminality, overall security conditions improved gradually following successful operations by MINUSTAH troops and police, jointly with the Haitian National Police. Preparations are under way to help organize presidential, legislative and local elections in the third quarter of 2005. The lack of a legal framework impeded the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration of former combatants. Moreover, the Transitional Government maintained its ambiguous position vis-à-vis the former military. The human rights situation remained of utmost concern.

58. The Security Council endorsed my recommendations for an amended concept of operations and force level of the United Nations Peacekeeping Force in Cyprus, including the downsizing of the military personnel and an increase in its police component. The mission was extended with the new concept of operations and force strength until 15 December 2005.

Cooperation with regional organizations

59. Regional organizations have become essential partners of the United Nations in promoting international peace and security. The sixth high-level meeting between the United Nations and regional organizations, held in New York on 25 and 26 July 2005, provided an important opportunity to strengthen those bonds.

60. Cooperation was particularly strong in Africa, where in many cases the United Nations assumed a supporting role in peacemaking and preventive action led by the African Union and African subregional organizations, such as ECOWAS and IGAD. In Darfur and elsewhere, we have seen how peacekeeping by regional organizations is making a growing and valuable contribution. The United Nations and the African Union are working together closely through the deployment of a United Nations assistance cell in Addis Ababa, through close cooperation between the Special Representatives of the two organizations in Khartoum and ever more closely on the ground in Darfur. Staff exchange programmes were conducted with the African Union and ECOWAS, and discussions are under way for similar arrangements with the Economic Community of Central African States. The increased regional role in peacekeeping also implies new requirements for coordination, cooperation and assistance from external partners, as discussed in my report of November 2004 on enhancement of African peacekeeping capacity. It is important that such capacity be developed in a way that complements the unique and indispensable resource of United Nations peacekeeping.

61. In November 2004 I attended the first Summit of Heads of State and Government of the International Conference on the Great Lakes Region, held in Dar es Salaam under the auspices of the United Nations and the African Union. The Summit adopted a declaration of principles that addressed the interlinked issues of peace, security, development, governance and humanitarian affairs.

62. Cooperation with the European Union deepened over the past year, as demonstrated by my presence in December 2004 at the European Council in Brussels and the meetings held by the Deputy Secretary-General in Strasbourg and Brussels in February 2005 with officials from the European Parliament, the European Commission and the Council of the European Union. Working-level dialogue also continued, permitting the sharing of political assessments and fostering greater coordination on the ground.

63. Cooperation in economic and social fields has intensified as well. Under a framework agreement reached in May 2004 between the European Commission and 10 United Nations entities, strategic partnership agreements have thus far been signed with the International Labour Organization (ILO), the World Health Organization (WHO), UNDP, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO) and the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR).

64. The United Nations and the European Union continued their collaboration in peace operations on the ground, including in particular in the Democratic Republic of the Congo and in Kosovo. This was supplemented by ongoing dialogue on policy issues, including meetings of the United Nations-European Union steering committee in November 2004 and June 2005 and United Nations participation in a European Union peacekeeping "exercise study" in April 2005.

65. Contacts on peace and security in south-eastern Asia increased between the United Nations and the Association of Southeast Asian Nations. The United Nations and the Commonwealth of Independent States (CIS) sought to strengthen cooperation in the area of conflict prevention. A memorandum of understanding was signed to that effect between the UNTOP and the CIS Executive Secretariat.

Terrorism

66. Terrorism is a threat to all that the United Nations stands for: respect for human rights, the rule of law, the protection of civilians, tolerance among peoples and nations and the peaceful resolution of conflict. The United Nations must speak loudly and clearly in denouncing terrorism and be an effective international forum for combating it.

67. In an address to the International Summit on Democracy, Terrorism and Security, held in Madrid in March 2005, I set out a five-part strategy to combat terrorism. I stressed that terrorism was neither an acceptable nor an effective way to advance any cause and urged Member States to conclude a comprehensive convention against terrorism. I also emphasized that the fight against terrorism must not infringe on human rights and fundamental freedoms.

68. Since 2001 I have sought to prioritize the Organization's activities in combating terrorism and to provide strategic guidance in order to ensure that the United Nations system functions more coherently and effectively in the struggle against terrorism. As I indicated in my remarks in Madrid, departments and agencies across the United Nations can and must contribute to implementing a comprehensive strategy against terrorism. I have recently established an implementation task force, under my office, to coordinate this work.

69. Cooperation is particularly important among the United Nations bodies most directly engaged in the fight against terrorism—including Security Council subsidiary organs and their expert panels, the Counter-Terrorism Committee Executive Directorate and the Terrorism Prevention Branch of the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime. In the same vein, and given the increasing links between terrorism and drug trafficking, I continue to urge Member States to sign and ratify the 13 existing anti-terrorism conventions—including the International Convention for the Suppression of Acts of Nuclear Terrorism adopted by the General Assembly in April 2005—and to work closely to implement them.

Electoral assistance

70. The past year witnessed several landmark elections in countries going through complex transitions to peace—elections in which the United Nations played a key role, both by giving technical assistance and by facilitating negotiations leading to the establishment of electoral institutions and laws. Credible elections have become an essential element in peacemaking, peacebuilding and the prevention of conflict.

71. Eighteen months of intense preparations culminated successfully in the Afghan presidential elections of October 2004. Despite threats and intimidation from extremist groups targeting the electoral process, voter turnout was high even in the most vulnerable conflict areas. Women participated heavily, determined to take part in the political life of their country, and were assisted by an extensive voter registration exercise and targeted education campaigns. Building on that success, the United Nations will be assisting with the coming parliamentary and provincial elections, which had to be postponed until September 2005 owing to technical and financial difficulties.

72. United Nations electoral experts also provided crucial support to the historic election in Iraq on 30 January 2005 for its Transitional National Assembly. The high voter turnout defied expectations, given the levels of violence and intimidation from insurgents attempting to disrupt the process.

73. Electoral support was important to the mandates of peacekeeping operations and the political agreements in numerous countries, including Burundi, Côte d'Ivoire, the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Haiti and Liberia. Assistance was provided to establish and develop national electoral institutions; to institute proper electoral legislation and an effective system for complaints and appeals; to promote civil and voter registration; and to carry out civic education and media campaigns.

74. Of course, an election by itself cannot resolve deep-seated problems, particularly in a society traumatized by conflict. A United Nations University study shows that ill-timed or poorly designed elections in volatile situations can actually fuel chaos and reverse progress towards democracy. Exacerbating existing tensions, they can result in support for extremists or encourage patterns of voting that reflect wartime allegiances.

Disarmament

75. New challenges and threats heightened international concern about weapons of mass destruction. Among them were cases of non-compliance with nuclear non-proliferation commitments, evidence of the existence of a clandestine nuclear network, ambivalent commitment to disarmament and the threat of weapons of mass destruction falling into the hands of terrorists. Multilateral instruments to prevent proliferation and to promote disarmament must be revitalized if they are to continue to contribute to international peace and security.

76. In May the 2005 Review Conference of the Parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons failed to reach agreement on any substantive issues. The opportunity was missed to address the most pressing problems of not only the nuclear non-proliferation regime, but also of international security more broadly. I urge Member States to act with greater determination on this important issue and to give it further consideration in the coming months.

77. The Conference on Disarmament remains deadlocked. It will fail to regain its importance as the multilateral negotiating body on disarmament treaties unless Member States proceed to substantive negotiations on items relevant to the current international security environment.

78. States continued their discussions to promote better implementation of the Biological Weapons Convention. While steady progress has been achieved in the destruction of declared chemical arsenals, a great deal more remains to be done. The Comprehensive Nuclear-Test-Ban Treaty requires further efforts to realize its entry into force. There has been progress in the substantive examination of the 118 national reports submitted so far under Security Council resolution 1540(2004) on the non-proliferation of weapons of mass destruction. Significant progress has been made towards establishing a nuclear-weapon-free zone in Central Asia.

79. Estimated global military expenditures exceeded $1 trillion in 2004 and were projected to keep rising. While participation has improved in the United Nations Register of Conventional Arms and the Standardized Instrument for Reporting Military Expenditures, greater progress with a view to universal participation is needed, particularly on military expenditures.

80. I am encouraged by the recent agreement reached on the text of a politically binding international instrument to enable States to identify and trace in a timely and reliable manner illicit small arms and light weapons, to be presented to the General Assembly for adoption at its sixtieth session. Its acceptance is another positive step forward in the realization of the political commitments made in the United Nations Programme of Action to Prevent, Combat and Eradicate the Illicit Trade in Small Arms and Light Weapons in All Its Aspects. I urge Member States to take all action necessary to ensure the early and effective implementation of the instrument. Its adoption also augurs well for maintaining the momentum of active dialogue among Member States on tackling the issue of illicit brokering in small arms and light weapons.

81. The Nairobi Summit on a Mine-Free World, held in November and December 2004, provided the first opportunity for a review by the parties of the 1997 Convention on the Prohibition of the Use, Stockpiling, Production and Transfer of Anti-Personnel Mines and on Their Destruction. The resulting Nairobi Action Plan for 2005-2009 set as its top priority meeting the deadlines for clearing mined areas.

Sanctions

82. During the past year, the Security Council created two new sanctions committees: on Côte d'Ivoire, pursuant to resolution 1572 (2004), and on the Sudan, pursuant to resolution 1591(2005). The measures imposed by the two resolutions were designed to provide incentives for peace, in that arms embargos were immediately applied for the entire territory of Côte d'Ivoire and the Darfur region of the Sudan, whereas sanctions targeted at individuals and related entities (in the form of a travel ban and assets freeze) were not to enter into force until 30 days after the adoption of the respective resolutions. This gap of one month provided an incentive to the parties to re-engage quickly in the peace process in order to avoid the application of further sanctions measures. Although the Côte d'Ivoire and Sudan committees have not yet designated any individuals or entities, the possibility serves as a continued incentive.

83. Targeted sanctions lists have been drawn up by and continue to play an important role in the work of the Al-Qaida and Taliban sanctions Committee, the Liberia sanctions Committee and the Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 1518 (2003), which is concerned with individuals and entities associated with the former Government of Iraq. By the end of 2004, the preparation of new or revised guidelines was under way in the Al-Qaida and Taliban, Liberia and Côte d'Ivoire sanctions committees. The adoption of revised guidelines would assist the committees concerned in managing targeted sanctions lists in a uniform and transparent way.

84. In a related development, the Security Council, in its resolution 1566(2004), decided to establish a working group to examine practical measures to be imposed upon individuals, groups or entities involved in or associated with terrorist activities, other than those designated by the Al-Qaida and Taliban sanctions Committee. The resolution also raised the possibility of establishing an international fund to compensate victims of terrorist acts and their families.

85. The Security Council continued to receive detailed information regarding its sanctions regimes from expert groups tasked with monitoring States' compliance and investigating alleged sanctions violations. These included the Panel of Experts on Somalia, the Analytical Support and Sanctions Monitoring Team on Al-Qaida and the Taliban, the Panel of Experts on Liberia, the Group of Experts on the Democratic Republic of the Congo, the Group of Experts on Côte d'Ivoire, and the Panel of Experts concerning the Sudan. More attention should be paid to implementing the valuable recommendations of these expert groups.

Chapter II

Cooperating for development

Achieving the Millennium Development Goals

86. The framework for the development activities of the United Nations provided by the Millennium Declaration and the eight Millennium Development Goals was given added focus and impetus by the issuance of the report of the United Nations Millennium Project, Investing in Development: A Practical Plan to Achieve the Millennium Development Goals, as well as my report for the High-level Plenary Meeting, "In larger freedom: towards development, security and human rights for all" (A/59/2005 and Add.1-3). The Millennium Project report offered a comprehensive analysis and a set of proposals on how to achieve the Millennium Development Goals at the country, regional and global levels. I welcomed the proposals and presented Member States with a set of priorities to move the development agenda forward.

87. During the past months, the member agencies of the United Nations Development Group (UNDG) continued to implement its four-pillar strategy to support the achievement of the Millennium Development Goals. The four pillars are: (a) integrating the Goals into all aspects of the United Nations system's work at the country level; (b) assisting developing countries in preparing Millennium Development Goal progress reports; (c) working with the Millennium Project and the Millennium Campaign to build global support for the Goals; and (d) supporting advocacy and awareness-raising efforts based on national strategies and national needs.

88. The Millennium Campaign has been mobilizing and reinforcing political support for the Millennium Declaration by working with parliamentary networks, local authorities, the media, faith-based organizations, youth organizations, the business sector, non-governmental organizations (NGOs) and other entities. In 2004 the Campaign and its partners in civil society helped to secure a major breakthrough with the launch of the Global Call to Action against Poverty, the largest campaign coalition against poverty assembled in recent years. While the Campaign was one among several partners who made this achievement possible, its advocacy and facilitating role did make a significant contribution to the coalition-building process.

89. To track global, regional and national progress, a wide-ranging system of monitoring and reporting has also been put in place. Monitoring progress towards the Millennium Development Goals at the global level has involved the collaboration of international agencies and regional commissions and close consultation with national experts and statisticians. The Inter-Agency and Expert Group on Millennium Development Goal Indicators coordinates the efforts of United Nations entities and national statistical services, as well as regional and international statistical bodies from outside the United Nations system. It coordinates the compilation and analysis of the indicators, reviewing methodologies and supporting countries in the collection, analysis and reporting of data for Millennium Development Goal indicators. The results of this work have been reflected in the statistics and analysis prepared as a basis for my annual reports to the General Assembly on the implementation of the Millennium Declaration and in the Millennium Development Goal indicators country series, an annually revised database comprising the most up-to-date series provided by the designated lead agency for the indicator in question. On 9 June I launched The Millennium Development Goals Report 2005, containing the most comprehensive and up-to-date statistics on targets and indicators associated with the Millennium Development Goals compiled through a collaborative effort by 25 United Nations agencies and global organizations.

90. The availability of high-quality statistical data and the capacity of Governments, donors and international organizations to systematically measure, monitor and report reliable indicators lies at the heart of development policy and the achievement of the Millennium Development Goals. An important contribution to building national statistical capacity is the Organization's work in providing technical assistance to national statistical offices and training of national statisticians in the production and use of indicators. DevInfo, a software tool developed by the United Nations system for the collection and analysis of both standard and specific user-defined indicators, is finding wider application. Governments, United Nations country teams, academic institutions and others increasingly make use of it to provide standardized and comparable reporting on the Millennium Development Goals. Regional commissions have also been providing support to national capacity-building in monitoring and reporting on the Goals through workshops and tools such as an Arabic version of the UNDG handbook "Indicators for Monitoring the Millennium Development Goals". To build national capacity to monitor the Goals and to improve the use of evidence-based methodologies for the management of development policy, UNDP developed a project on building capacity and statistical literacy for Millennium Development Goal monitoring at the country level, which is moving steadily into its implementation phase.

91. UNDP is the lead agency for monitoring at the country level. It has been assisting Governments and country teams in the preparation and dissemination of their reports. As at March 2005, 93 countries and territories had produced 104 such reports, ranging from middle-income countries to some of the lowest-income least developed countries. Eight countries have produced their second reports (Albania, Armenia, Bolivia, Cambodia, Egypt, Lithuania, Mauritius and Senegal) and two other countries, Cameroon and Viet Nam, have released their third annual reports. Three regional Millennium Development Goal reports were published in 2004 in cooperation with other United Nations entities, complementing national reports with data and analysis on the status and trends in the Arab States, Central Europe and the Caribbean region, bringing the total number of regional reports prepared to date to six.

92. A major contribution of the United Nations development system to achievement of the Millennium Development Goals has been the growing number of ongoing and new inter-agency initiatives. In response to the challenge of fighting hunger and achieving food security, United Nations food and agricultural agencies have strengthened their collaboration. Jointly, the agencies are pursuing a twin-track approach that seeks to provide direct assistance to the hungry to meet their immediate food and nutrition needs while simultaneously addressing longer-term agricultural and rural development issues by providing support for sustainable growth, including improved infrastructure, sound natural resource management and increased access to land, water, credit and social services.

93. The majority, or three quarters of the world's poor women, men and children, live and work in rural areas. In order to achieve the Millennium Development Goals, it is essential that poverty reduction interventions focus on the rural poor and that significant investments be made in rural and agricultural development. Some parts of the United Nations system are pursuing this goal by strengthening the capacity of the rural poor and their organizations, improving equitable access to productive natural resources and technology and increasing access to financial services and markets. Other parts are investing the vast majority of their resources in countries reported by the United Nations to be struggling the most to achieve the Millennium Development Goals and countries where a lack of data suggests major capacity problems.

94. The capacity to innovate can be developed to contribute to the poverty reduction and sustainability targets of the Millennium Development Goals. The United Nations University Institute for New Technologies in Maastricht, the Netherlands, examines how this can be done by looking at successful examples, such as flower production in Colombia and Kenya, shrimp production in Bangladesh and horticulture in Ghana, activities which, starting from a base of almost zero 20 years ago, are now among the top export earners for their countries.

95. There is certainly a need to address urban poverty by promoting the role of cities as engines of economic growth and social development. Several United Nations system organizations are working together to help eradicate poverty in urban areas, to promote sustainable urbanization and to enhance industrial development.

96. There is a need to make further efforts to ensure progress in the realization of the education-related Millennium Development Goals, namely universal primary education and the elimination of gender disparity in primary and secondary education. Various United Nations system organizations have teamed up in joint activities to help achieve those goals. A number of initiatives have been set in motion to generate sustained global commitment and support for country-level efforts in implementing Education for All, coordinated by the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO). Those initiatives include the Education for All Global Monitoring Report, which has become a standard reference document for all partners in the field of education; the Collective Consultation of NGOs on Education for All; national and regional Education for All Forums; and the annual meetings of the High-level Group on Education for All and the Working Group on Education for All. Other initiatives include the Education for All Fast-Track Initiative, which is improving efficiency in the allocation of resources to primary education service delivery, system expansion, system financing and spending for primary education; supporting the Initiative through school feeding; using the Millennium Development Goal indicators relating to education to ensure that all children have access to primary schooling in refugee camps; and a new series of reports of the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) entitled "Progress for children", which are report cards on children's issues related to the Millennium Development Goals.

97. Over the years, organizations of the system have scored major successes in immunizing children and reducing child mortality. In 2004 an inter-agency working group on integrated management of childhood illness was established. The Child Survival Partnership is another multi-agency initiative aimed at providing a forum for coordinated action to address the major conditions that affect children's health. The Partnership enables Governments and other stakeholders to agree on consistent approaches and stimulates concerted efforts to implement them.

98. Organizations of the system have also long recognized that the eradication of extreme poverty and hunger cannot succeed if questions of population and reproductive health are not addressed effectively. Making sexual and reproductive health services accessible to all is essential for meeting goals related to child and maternal mortality, HIV/AIDS and gender equality and to ensuring the right of all women, men and children to the highest attainable standards of health.

99. Greater attention to the Millennium Development Goals is required in countries emerging from conflict. Within the context of the joint United Nations-World Bank needs assessments and recovery planning, the Goals provide important targets and indicators for planning the transition out of conflict. For example, relevant Millennium Development Goal targets and indicators are being used for the delivery of humanitarian relief to refugees and other displaced persons. In post-conflict countries, shorter-term humanitarian relief must help form the basis for longer-term development efforts to achieve the Goals.

The United Nations development agenda

100. While the Millennium Development Goals provide a compelling platform from which to mobilize the international community, they must be pursued as part of a larger development agenda that also encompasses the needs of the middle-income developing countries, questions of growing inequality and the wider dimensions of human development. Social integration and issues that require long-term approaches must be addressed equally, such as the differential impact of globalization and increasing the participation of developing countries in global economic governance.

101. The aforementioned issues and the basic objective of integrating economic, social and environmental goals were addressed in depth by the United Nations conferences and summits. Their outcomes reflect a broad-based consensus that various parts of the United Nations system should pursue the full scope of the United Nations development agenda, including the Millennium Development Goals. Progress towards the goals thus set is reviewed in detail each year by the functional commissions of the Economic and Social Council, while the Council itself takes a cross-cutting, integrated view.

102. At its forty-third session, held in New York from 9 to 18 February 2005, the Commission for Social Development reviewed progress in implementing the commitments of the World Summit for Social Development over the past 10 years, including global performance in promoting full and productive employment. Various United Nations system entities are working on such projects as making employment part of United Nations country programming processes in developing countries, fighting rural unemployment and helping with the development of skills. The Youth Employment Network, which I launched in 2001 in partnership with the heads of the World Bank and ILO, has been promoting the preparation of national action plans for youth employment in an increasing number of countries.

103. Promoting social integration was one of the core issues addressed by the World Summit for Social Development in 1995. The Copenhagen Declaration, a key outcome of the Summit, contains a specific commitment to advance social integration by fostering societies that are stable, safe, just and tolerant and that respect diversity. The Millennium Declaration also subsumes social integration in its synthesis of peace, security, development and human rights. While some progress has been made in such areas as accession to legal instruments dealing with economic, social and cultural rights and the elimination of discrimination, the concept of social integration has yet to be fully incorporated into the general development discourse. The challenge is to ensure that the concept of social integration is at the centre of all policies and to find practical ways and means of achieving a "society for all".

104. The Commission for Social Development emphasized the need for more integrated efforts to achieve the Millennium Development Goals and implement the broader Copenhagen commitments. There remains a shortage of comprehensive and systematic national plans to address the special concerns of youth and vulnerable groups, including indigenous peoples, the elderly, those living with disabilities and internally displaced persons. There is thus a need to ensure that policy interventions to achieve the Millennium Development Goals of halving poverty and hunger should take into account the needs and concerns of those vulnerable groups. The Department of Economic and Social Affairs supports activities to enhance social integration, overcome exclusion and increase the participation of social groups in national development and decision-making. To help implement the Madrid Plan of Action on Ageing, the main outcome of the Second World Assembly on Ageing (8-12 April 2002), the Department assisted Governments in ensuring that the older poor were explicitly integrated into development processes, including Millennium Development Goal programmes.

105. UNDG adopted, in October 2004, a Guidance Note on Durable Solutions for Displaced Persons. This marked the first time that a common policy was adopted among United Nations development actors on the importance of attaining durable solutions for displaced persons and on how to incorporate them into joint planning and implementation strategies. The Guidance Note has been included in the existing UNDG guidelines on common country assessment and in the United Nations Development Assistance Framework.

106. At its forty-ninth session, held in New York from 28 February to 11 March 2005, the Commission on the Status of Women reviewed progress towards implementation of the 1995 Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action and the outcomes of the twenty-third special session of the General Assembly, held in 2000. Ten years after the Beijing conference, there remain many areas in which progress is lacking. For example, high rates of violence against women afflict all parts of the world, including zones of armed conflict. There is an increasing incidence of HIV/AIDS among women, gender inequality in employment, a lack of sexual and reproductive health rights and a lack of equal access under the law to land and property, among other things. The Commission's final declaration emphasized that the full and effective implementation of the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action was essential to achieving the internationally agreed development goals, including those contained in the Millennium Declaration.

107. In order to achieve all six Education for All goals by 2015, the issues of access to and quality of education are inseparable and must be addressed concurrently and improved through both national and international initiatives. The High-level Group on Education for All, meeting in Brasilia in November 2004, focused on quality education. The United Nations Decade of Education for Sustainable Development(2005-2014), in follow-up to the World Summit on Sustainable Development, contributes to improving the quality and relevance of education.

108. Progress towards achieving the goals set in 2002 in Johannesburg, South Africa, at the World Summit on Sustainable Development continues to be made through the efforts of the United Nations system and the implementation of the various multilateral environmental agreements. The thirteenth session of the Commission on Sustainable Development, held in New York from 11 to 22 April 2005, was attended by over 75 Government ministers with such diverse portfolios as finance, development, planning, trade, housing, water, health and the environment. It focused on the multidisciplinary issues of water and sanitation and human settlements. Over 150 organizations of other major groups of stakeholders also took part in the session. Agreement was reached on a set of practical policy options intended to boost global efforts to implement the Johannesburg commitments to provide clean water, basic sanitation and decent housing.

109. The goal pledged in the Millennium Declaration of ensuring the entry into force of the Kyoto Protocol of the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change was finally realized in February 2005 following its ratification by the Russian Federation, thus ensuring the continuity of mitigation efforts into the next decade. The tenth session of the Conference of the Parties to the Convention, held in Buenos Aires from 6 to 17 December 2004, marking 10 years of action under the Convention, adopted a package of measures aimed at helping countries to prepare for climate change. The Stockholm Convention on Persistent Organic Pollutants held its first Conference of the Parties in Punta del Este, Uruguay, from 2 to 6 May 2005, marking the start of an ambitious international effort to rid the world of polychlorinated biphenyls, dioxins and furans, as well as nine highly dangerous pesticides, including DDT.

110. At its twenty-third session, held in Nairobi from 21 to 25 February 2005, the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP) and Global Ministerial Environment Forum gave new impetus to the implementation of the environmental agenda across a wide range. Governments also formally adopted the Bali Strategic Plan for Technology Support and Capacity-Building, which will help focus the work of UNEP, including support for developing countries, thus serving its overall objective of combating poverty by promoting the concept of "environment for development".

111. Implementing the Monterrey Consensus, the main outcome of the 2002 International Conference on Financing for Development, remains critical for furthering the global development agenda, including the Millennium Development Goals. The Monterrey Consensus recognized that economically effective and socially sensitive macroeconomic policies were needed to achieve the outcomes of United Nations conferences.

112. In April 2005 the Economic and Social Council hosted its annual special high-level meeting with the Bretton Woods institutions, the World Trade Organization (WTO) and the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD). The overall theme of the meeting was "coherence, coordination and cooperation in the context of the implementation of the Monterrey Consensus: achieving the internationally agreed development goals, including those contained in the Millennium Declaration". In my view, this annual meeting is a unique platform for promoting coherence within the system on economic and financial issues in support of the United Nations development agenda, including the Millennium Development Goals. The High-level Dialogue on Financing for Development, held in New York on 27 and 28 June 2005, further contributed to identifying the tasks ahead in the overall implementation of the Monterrey Consensus, which are of particular importance in the run-up to the High-level Plenary Meeting in September.

113. The Monterrey Consensus recognized trade as a powerful driver of economic growth and poverty reduction. Various organizations of the United Nations system have been collaborating to build trade-related capacity, particularly in the least developed countries, so as to better integrate those countries into the global economy and enable them to reap greater benefits from globalization. A notable example of this collaboration is the Integrated Framework for Trade-Related Technical Assistance, combining the efforts of the International Monetary Fund (IMF), the International Trade Centre UNCTAD/WTO (ITC), UNCTAD, UNDP, the World Bank and WTO, in partnership with bilateral donors and recipient countries. The Integrated Framework supports national development plans with diagnostic studies to identify and respond to trade development needs. Experience shows that reforming formal trade policies is not enough to stimulate growth. There is a need to address a range of obstacles, including weak institutions, deficient infrastructure and trade barriers in key markets.

114. The Monterrey Consensus viewed microcredit as an innovative source of development finance. The International Year of Microcredit, 2005, which was launched by the General Assembly in November 2004, has brought together various United Nations agencies, civil society organizations and the private sector to promote microfinance and microcredit as a key instrument for reducing poverty and achieving the Millennium Development Goals.

115. An important cross-cutting dimension of the United Nations development agenda is the promotion of good governance at the global and national levels. The strong focus of UNDP on democratic governance responds to a growing demand for support from many developing countries in realization of the importance of effective, accountable and inclusive institutions and processes for achieving the Millennium Development Goals and the other internationally agreed development goals.

116. At its fourth session, held in New York from 4 to 8 April 2005, the United Nations Committee of Experts on Public Administration stressed ensuring integrity, transparency and accountability in pro-poor policies. National poverty reduction strategies offer space for an accountable and participatory process that is aligned with the United Nations development goals, including those contained in the Millennium Declaration, namely, a stable macroeconomic environment, a robust role for the private sector in line with developmental objectives and dialogue with civil society to mainstream the concerns of the poor into public policy.

117. Both the Johannesburg Declaration on Sustainable Development and the Monterrey Consensus explicitly recognized that corruption was one of the serious threats to sustainable development and called for anti-corruption measures to be put in place at all levels as a priority. The first global and legally binding convention against corruption, adopted by the General Assembly in October 2003, has been signed so far by 118 countries and ratified by 15. It will enter into force upon the deposit of the thirtieth instrument of ratification. The ratification of the Convention and its entry into force will enable States parties to employ the instrument and, consequently, to prevent, detect and combat corruption more effectively, at both the national and international levels.

118. The United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime launched a global programme against corruption in February 1999 as a vehicle to provide technical assistance to Member States. The purpose of the programme is to strengthen legal and institutional frameworks and develop policy guidance, as well as to enhance cooperation across agencies active in anti-corruption policy, advocacy and enforcement. To date, the programme is managing some 15 technical assistance projects supporting Member States in preventing and controlling corruption. The projects focus mainly on strengthening judicial integrity and criminal justice, a unique strategic niche, particularly in post-conflict States, where actions to return the rule of law have a potentially high impact and an overall stabilizing effect. The Office has also helped Member States to implement international standards to combat money-laundering and terrorist financing through direct technical assistance.

119. The cultivation of illicit drug crops remains a serious impediment to the sustainable development of some countries. Joint action between the United Nations and host Governments is undertaken to carry out annual crop surveys in the countries concerned. Those surveys provide illicit drug production trend analyses to the international community. They also make available reliable information upon which development strategies can be based in order to offer alternative sustainable livelihoods to farmers dependent on such illicit cultivation.

The special needs of Africa

120. The United Nations system continues to provide support for Africa's development. The independent panel of eminent persons that I established last year to recommend ways to mobilize international support for the New Partnership for Africa's Development (NEPAD) submitted its first report in April 2005.

121. In an effort to promote private sector involvement in the implementation of NEPAD and to mobilize private sector resources, the Office of the Special Adviser on Africa organized two meetings, a panel discussion on promoting the domestic private sector in October 2004 and, jointly with the NEPAD secretariat, an expert group meeting on the contribution of the private sector to the implementation of the New Partnership, in March 2005. Studies presented at the latter meeting detailed the nature and scope of private sector involvement, including taking equity, forming public-private partnerships and fostering other types of joint ventures.

122. The technical staff of the Economic Commission for Africa and UNDP actively participated in the support missions of the NEPAD African Peer Review Mechanism to a number of countries, such as Ghana (May 2004), Rwanda (June 2004), Mauritius (June 2004), Kenya (July 2004) and Uganda (February 2005). Subsequent missions are planned for Mali, Mozambique and South Africa. As part of its institutional support, UNDP has been actively involved in the planning and has provided direct technical and administrative support to the African peer review panel and secretariat. It is supporting all the country preparations of member States, including institutional support to the African peer review focal points and, the setting up of national structures to oversee the process (such as national African Peer Review Mechanism commissions), as well as the organization of sensitization workshops.

123. The Department of Economic and Social Affairs has provided a wide range of technical and advisory services in support of the NEPAD governance agenda, including support to the design of the NEPAD governance and capacity-building programmes on public administration, on leadership for public sector performance and on managing conflict; strategies for mainstreaming professionalism and ethics in the African public service; strengthening Africa's parliaments; and the Africa Governance Inventory web portal, developed by the Department, which is the main organizer for the Pan-African Conference of Ministers of Public Service, a biennial meeting held in conjunction with the NEPAD secretariat.

124. The Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees convenes the United Nations sub-cluster on humanitarian response and post-conflict recovery, which advances the promotion and implementation of integrated programmes in post-conflict countries to contribute to reconstruction and sustain peace and stability. UNHCR is currently analysing 14 transitional situations in Africa in order to identify critical gaps and determine how to improve the effectiveness of its efforts. The analysis will inform future programme initiatives and contribute to the work of NEPAD, and United Nations entities.

125. The United Nations Development Fund for Women provided support for the first regional women's meeting, held in Kigali in October 2004, in preparation for the International Conference on the Great Lakes Region, convened in Dar es Salaam in November 2004. The meeting addressed the specific needs of women in matters pertaining to peace and security, democracy and governance, economic and regional integration and humanitarian and social affairs. The meeting resulted in the Kigali Declaration, which was later incorporated into the Dar es Salaam outcome document adopted by the heads of State and Government at the International Conference.

126. The Department of Economic and Social Affairs provided advisory services and sponsored technical cooperation programmes to support African Governments in meeting their obligations under international agreements and treaties, including the Beijing Platform for Action and the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women. Those efforts were aimed in particular at enhancing national capacity to implement the Convention and at building the capacity of judges to apply international human rights law at the domestic level. The Department also worked with national machineries for the advancement of women to support countries emerging from conflict to meet their obligations under the Convention.

127. The World Food Programme (WFP) and NEPAD jointly carried out a study on national food reserve systems in Africa and how they could be improved to better contribute to improving food security and coping capacities for dealing with food crises. The United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO) provided support in the articulation of the African Productive Capacity Initiative, which was adopted by the African Union summit, in July 2004, as the policy framework for Africa's industrial development. UNESCO has developed the Literacy Initiative for Empowerment, which will be implemented in countries with an illiteracy rate of over 50 per cent or 10 million illiterates. UNEP, in partnership with the NEPAD secretariat and the African Ministerial Conference on the Environment, is assisting African countries to prepare the five subregional environmental action plans of NEPAD. The United Nations Human Settlements Programme (UN-Habitat) formulated the NEPAD cities programme as a means of achieving "quick wins". To further strengthen the programme, the African Ministerial Conference on Housing and Urban Development, held in Durban, South Africa, from 31 January to 4 February 2005, agreed on an enhanced framework of implementation for overcoming the challenges of shelter and urbanization.

128. A cluster of United Nations agencies and entities is also supporting NEPAD in the areas of agriculture, trade and market access through knowledge management, advocacy and capacity-building. A continuing major challenge for United Nations organizations in Africa is achieving greater effectiveness, avoiding duplication and overlap, cutting costs and, more generally, improving policy and operational coherence and strengthening the regional coordination mechanism in support of the implementation of the priorities of NEPAD.

The needs of least developed countries, landlocked developing countries and small island developing States

129. The international community continues to focus on the development needs and challenges faced by the most vulnerable countries. While the overall indicators for the least developed countries, landlocked developing countries and small island developing States show improvement in many respects, progress has been uneven. At the present pace of development, many of those countries will not be able to reach the Millennium Development Goals. The Office of the High Representative for the Least Developed Countries, Landlocked Developing Countries and Small Island Developing States continued to assist me in mobilizing the efforts of all parts of the United Nations system in ensuring coordinated follow-up of the outcomes of the conferences and summits related to those groups of countries.

130. The emergence of a domestic entrepreneurial class, the strengthening of production and commercial exchange capacity and the provision of lasting debt relief are essential to allow trade to play its due role in alleviating poverty in the least developed countries. UNCTAD has contributed to this task in a variety of ways. Following the publication of its Least Developed Countries Report 2004 on the linkages between trade and poverty alleviation, UNCTAD has continued to analyse what the international community has done for the least developed countries in the areas of trade policy, development finance and technical cooperation. UNCTAD has also been providing extensive training to and building the capacity of the least developed countries in trade negotiations and commercial diplomacy, including on issues related to accession to WTO. Jointly, UNCTAD, UNDP, IMF, the World Bank, WTO and ITC have assisted a number of least developed countries in their efforts to mainstream trade in national development strategies, using their Integrated Framework for Trade-related Technical Assistance.

131. FAO, in providing field programme assistance to the least developed countries, met a wide range of needs, from emergency assistance and agricultural rehabilitation to policy assistance and programme support for food security, sustainable agricultural growth and rural development. UNIDO activities for the least developed countries concentrated on building productive capacity to enable those countries to integrate into the global economy. The African Productive Capacity Initiative, for example, was approved by the African Heads of State as a NEPAD component for sustainable industrial development.

132. The United Nations Capital Development Fund continued to strengthen and refine its programmes to provide greater support to the needs of least developed countries in meeting the Millennium Development Goals through its local development and microfinance programmes. In microfinance alone, the Fund approved a new $42 million seven-year initiative to tackle constraints and harness opportunities to invigorate economies and deepen the financial sectors in 20 African least developed countries. The World Intellectual Property Organization assisted least developed countries in technological capacity-building and in the areas of legislative advice, collective management of copyright and related rights and small- and medium-sized enterprise. The Least Developed Countries Fund of the Global Environment Facility provides funds for the enhancement of those countries' adaptive capacity and the implementation of their national adaptation plans of action and grants for their environmental projects.

133. At the regional level, the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific has continued to support the most vulnerable countries through a variety of activities, such as the regional poverty alleviation programme, its project of strengthening national capabilities in poverty alleviation and conflict negotiation skills, an advocacy project on multisectoral responses to fight HIV/AIDS in Asia, capacity-building for effective participation in the multilateral trading system and external debt management.

134. With their small populations, often long maritime and air transportation routes, and mono-crop cultures, small island developing States are particularly vulnerable to the impact of both economic trends in the rest of the world and natural phenomena. The December 2004 tsunami, which affected many categories of countries, served to highlight the special vulnerability of the small island developing States, which suffered enormous human and material loss. The disaster showed the importance of heeding the warning signs, coming together in advance of the calamity and sustaining a collective effort to end human misery and lay solid foundations for peace and development. I have therefore called for a global warning system, covering not only tsunamis but also other natural disasters, such as storm surges and cyclones.

135. In the aftermath of the tsunami, the United Nations and its various agencies, funds and programmes mobilized rapidly to mount a coordinated response, providing immediate humanitarian relief—food aid; water purification, emergency health and sanitation kits; temporary shelters; and supplies for emergency obstetrical care, safe blood transfusions and vaccinations—and coordinating efforts for long-term rehabilitation and reconstruction of the affected areas.

136. Coming on the heels of the tragedy, the International Meeting to Review the Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Small Island Developing States in January 2005, hosted by the Government of Mauritius with the support of the Office of the High Representative for the Least Developed Countries, Landlocked Developing Countries and Small Island Developing States, the Department of Economic and Social Affairs, UNCTAD, the regional economic commissions and UNDP, provided a timely venue for the international community to come together in renewed support of those countries. The meeting received considerable international attention and saw active participation from civil society, the private sector and other stakeholders. The social, economic and environmental vulnerabilities of the small island developing States were re-emphasized, and donor support was sought to further implement the agreed international programme for small island developing States. The Mauritius Declaration and Strategy provide a clear navigational chart for international and national efforts for the development of small island States. United Nations organizations and the small island developing States are now embarking on developing their road maps for the implementation of the Strategy.

137. The High-level Meeting on the Role of International, Regional and Subregional Organizations for the Implementation of the Almaty Programme of Action for Landlocked Developing Countries, convened by the Office of the High Representative for the Least Developed Countries, Landlocked Developing Countries and Small Island Developing States in Almaty, Kazakhstan, in March 2005, adopted a joint communiqué in which international and regional partners identified further measures to assist landlocked developing countries through coordinated strategies.

138. Landlocked developing countries incur significant additional transport costs for their exports and imports arising from inefficient transportation arrangements linked directly to their geographically disadvantaged status. During the past year, agencies of the United Nations system strengthened their partnership to implement the Almaty Programme of Action: Addressing the Needs of Landlocked Developing Countries within a New Global Framework for Transit Transport Cooperation for Landlocked and Transit Developing Countries. UNCTAD research shows that the international transport costs for imports of landlocked African countries account for an average of 20.7 per cent of the value of the imports, as compared with the world average of 5.1 per cent and the average of African countries of 12.7 per cent. In 2004, several landlocked developing countries, with advisory support from regional commissions and other United Nations entities, implemented measures to increase the efficiency of transit transport operations.

Combating HIV/AIDS

139. HIV/AIDS is both an emergency and a long-term development issue. The epidemic risks undoing past and present efforts to achieve the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals, and as such it must be made a firm priority for action.

140. The Commission on Population and Development, at its thirty-eighth session, held in New York in April 2005, focused in particular on HIV/AIDS and its connection with poverty. It emphasized the need to strengthen policy and programme linkages and coordination between HIV/AIDS and sexual and reproductive health, incorporating them in national development plans, including poverty reduction strategies, as a necessary step for addressing the HIV/AIDS epidemic. The report on the impact of AIDS submitted to the Commission revealed that since the first AIDS case was diagnosed in 1981, more than 20 million people had died from the disease. As at the end of 2004, approximately 39.4 million people were living with HIV. The AIDS epidemic takes a heavy toll on women and adolescent girls, who account for some 57 per cent of all people living with HIV in sub-Saharan Africa and about 50 per cent on average worldwide. The AIDSepidemic is spreading as a result of underlying causes, including the disempowerment of women and stigma and discrimination against people living with HIV. In addition, the vast majority of people in need of treatment lack access to affordable antiretroviral drugs.

141. The United Nations continues to develop joint and comprehensive approaches to HIV/AIDS, including in the areas of prevention, treatment, care, the fight against discrimination and the mitigation of impact. Significant progress has been made in expanding treatment through the WHO-led "3 by 5 Initiative" to provide 3 million people living with HIV/AIDS in developing and middle-income countries with life-prolonging antiretroviral treatment by the end of 2005. The number of people receiving such treatment has more than doubled, from 400,000 in December 2003 to approximately 1 million in June 2005. Concurrently, the Joint United Nations Programme on HIV/AIDS (UNAIDS) is working to ensure that prevention remains a priority through a broad initiative and a complementary UNESCO-led Global Initiative on Education and HIV/AIDS to scale up education-sector responses to the epidemic. New policies on prevention were endorsed at the seventeenth meeting of the UNAIDS Programme Coordinating Board (27-29 June), with a view to bridging the current HIV prevention gap, particularly among women and young people.

142. The United Nations is working in close partnership with the Global Fund to Fight AIDS, Tuberculosis and Malaria to strengthen capacity at the country level. As a token of this partnership, I have agreed to chair the replenishment meeting of the Global Fund, to be held on 5 and 6 September in London, which is aimed at increasing the predictability of the Fund's resource-mobilization efforts.

143. Joint efforts to address the multifaceted challenges posed by HIV/AIDS cover a wide array of activities, ranging from awareness-raising and advocacy to resource mobilization, capacity-building and health service delivery. FAO, UNICEF and WFP supported the improvement of food and nutrition security, as well as care for orphans and other children living with HIV/AIDS in Southern Africa. Through the Southern Africa Capacity Initiative, UNDP worked with United Nations agencies, including the United Nations Volunteers Programme and WHO, to counter the devastating loss of capacity due to HIV/AIDS across Governments, civil society and the private sector. ILO promoted and facilitated the management and mitigation of HIV/AIDS in the workplace with its national tripartite constituents, namely Governments, employers and workers' organizations.

144. In 2004 UNHCR became the tenth co-sponsoring organization of UNAIDS and adopted, in March 2005, a three-year strategic plan to combat HIV/AIDS among returnees, refugees and other displaced persons.

145. On 2 June the General Assembly, at its high-level meeting on HIV/AIDS, reviewed progress on the Declaration of Commitment adopted at its special session held in June 2001. On 18 July the Security Council, at its meeting on HIV/AIDS, focused on the strong collaboration between UNAIDS and the Department of Peacekeeping Operations in making sure that HIV prevention efforts are part of all United Nations peacekeeping operations.

146. As at 2005, the World AIDS Campaign, led since 1997 by UNAIDS, has become a global civil society movement aimed at promoting the Declaration of Commitment on HIV/AIDS. The Campaign will now be led by a civil society global steering group, with UNAIDS as a non-voting member. I welcome this milestone in the involvement of civil society in the global governance of development issues.

147. One remaining challenge is a simplified approach to accessing the United Nations system's support and assistance mechanisms. In December 2004, UNDG and the UNAIDS secretariat provided further guidance for" United Nations implementation support plans to country responses on HIV/AIDS". In March 2005 leaders from donor and developing country Governments, civil society, United Nations agencies and other multilateral and international institutions agreed to form a global task team to develop a set of recommendations on improving the institutional architecture of the response to HIV/AIDS to reduce the burden placed on countries. The team's recommendations were approved by the UNAIDS Programme Coordinating Board in June 2005.

148. During the past year, my Special Envoys for HIV/AIDS continued to assist me in four regions of the world—Africa, Asia, the Caribbean and Eastern Europe—in promoting key issues and to advocate for an expanded response to HIV/AIDS in their regions.

Chapter III

Meeting humanitarian commitments

149. Large-scale human suffering continues as a result of a number of ongoing crises and humanitarian emergencies around the world, such as those in Colombia and the Democratic Republic of the Congo. At the same time, in Nepal and the Darfur region of the Sudan, an increasing number of people are affected by conflict and insecurity. Several devastating natural disasters have also occurred in the past year, including hurricanes in the Caribbean, locusts in the Sahel and the tsunami in the Indian Ocean.

150. The outpouring of international support for relief and recovery operations in countries affected by the tsunami has been both generous and unprecedented in its scale. Sadly, many other crises continue to suffer from neglect. By December 2004, a year after the devastating earthquake in Bam, Islamic Republic of Iran, only 11 per cent of pledged funds had been disbursed. In Côte d'Ivoire, the Democratic Republic of the Congo and Somalia, funding continues to be well below what is required, even after considerable effort by United Nations agencies and their partners to better assess needs and prioritize activities. Once again, I call upon the donor community to ensure that funding is provided more consistently across humanitarian emergencies and that it better address the needs of all sectors, including in the area of protection.

Protecting and assisting refugees and displaced populations

151. The consolidation of peace in a number of conflicts during 2004 encouraged the return of refugees and displaced people to their homes. More than 1.5 million refugees were aided in their voluntary repatriation last year, 35 per cent more than in 2003. UNHCR estimates that in 2004 the global number of refugees dropped to 9.2 million, its lowest level since 1980. That number does not, however, include an estimated 4.2 million Palestine refugees, who continued to receive assistance and services from the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA), among them an estimated 1.6 million living in the occupied Palestinian territory. In spite of the decrease in the number of refugees, the total population of concern to UNHCR increased from 17 million people at the end of 2003 to 19.2 million by the end of 2004. The latter figure includes 4.8 million internally displaced persons, a fraction of the worldwide total. Globally an estimated 25 million people have been displaced internally because of conflict or human rights violations.

152. The largest number of returns last year occurred in Afghanistan with more than 940,000 refugees alone returning home. Economic improvements and successful elections reinforced interventions to ensure the reintegration of more than 4.1 million refugees and internally displaced people who had returned home since the end of 2001. Mine-action programmes continue to facilitate return and the delivery of assistance by opening vital routes into communities at risk. Using a community-based approach to ensure local support, UNICEF has been addressing the particular needs of returning child soldiers. More than 4,000 underage soldiers have been demobilized and reintegrated into their communities through programmes combining informal education, skills training and psycho-social support. Despite progress, however, an estimated 160,000 people remain displaced in Afghanistan owing to insecurity or drought in their place of origin. An estimated 1 million Afghans remain in the Islamic Republic of Iran, while another 960,600 are living in camps in Pakistan. According to a February 2005 Government census, an additional 1.9 million Afghans are living in urban areas in Pakistan, some of whom may be refugees.

153. Returns also continued in Africa. Under the UNHCR organized return programme, nearly 90,000 Angolans returned home in 2004—an increase over the corresponding figure for 2003 (43,000)—bringing the total to more than 338,000 since the conflict ended there in the first quarter of 2002. In Burundi, some 90,000 refugees returned home in 2004 as part of UNHCR assisted repatriation programmes, bringing the total number of assisted returns to 226,000 since the start of the programmes in April 2002. In Liberia, a total of 269,000 refugees and internally displaced people had returned home since October 2004. In Sierra Leone, the repatriation of refugees has come to an end. Some 270,000 refugees have returned home since the conflict ended, an estimated 179,000 of whom were assisted by UNHCR.

154. In eastern Africa, the conclusion of a peace agreement between the Government of the Sudan and the Sudan People's Liberation Movement has opened the door to significant levels of return. By mid-March 2005 an estimated 600,000 Sudanese had returned home, including 200,000 people who had repatriated spontaneously from neighbouring countries and 400,000 who had returned from other areas of the Sudan. Mine education and clearance in the Nuba region facilitated the resettlement of returnees there. As many as 550,000 refugees are expected to return in the coming months from neighbouring countries where they are being registered by UNHCR for organized repatriation. To continue providing effective protection and assistance, UNHCR has expanded its presence in southern Sudan.

155. The optimism generated by the resolution of the conflict in southern Sudan has been dampened, however, by continuing violence in Darfur, where more than 1.6 million people have fled their homes since the beginning of armed conflict. UNHCR continues to provide for more than 200,000 Sudanese refugees residing in 12 camps in Chad. Through a UNICEF-led campaign, 81,000 refugees and local children have been vaccinated against measles.

156. The conflict in Colombia continues to generate new displacement, with more than 138,000 Colombians having fled their homes last year in search of safety elsewhere in the country. With a negotiated settlement to the conflict still elusive, prospects for durable solutions are not likely in 2005 for an estimated 2 million internally displaced persons and more than 40,000 Colombian refugees. On a more positive note, 20 Latin American Governments commemorated the twentieth anniversary of the Cartagena Declaration in November 2004 and recommitted themselves to upholding the comprehensive refugee protection standards contained therein.

157. In order to strengthen the response to internal displacement, the Inter-Agency Standing Committee issued, in September 2004, a policy package on implementing the collaborative response to situations of internal displacement. The package provides guidance to humanitarian and resident coordinators and United Nations country teams and sets out a road map for implementing the collaborative response. The Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, through its inter-agency Internal Displacement Division, also continued its efforts to support the effective implementation of a collaborative response.

158. Ensuring effective security for refugees and internally displaced persons continues to be a pressing and vital need, as demonstrated by the massacre of 156 Congolese refugees at the Gatumba camp in Burundi in August 2004, and the continuing use of sexual violence as a tool of war in places like Darfur and the eastern part of the Democratic Republic of the Congo. The "Convention Plus" initiative, launched in 2003 by UNHCR to complement the 1951 Convention relating to the Status of Refugees, led to the development in 2004 of tools to enhance State responsibility and international burden-sharing for refugee protection. Such tools, like the Multilateral Framework of Understandings on Resettlement, for example, provide a means of making international cooperation on refugee-related challenges more robust and effective.

159. To counter gender-based violence, the Inter-Agency Standing Committee adopted, in January 2005, a statement of commitment on action to prevent gender-based violence, ensure appropriate care for survivors and work towards holding perpetrators accountable. UNHCR is increasing the number of women in leadership positions within camp committees to improve prevention of gender-based violence. It is also working to increase the participation of women in assessments of its programmes to enhance its gender-focused protection measures. To better assist survivors of gender-based violence, UNHCR and the United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA) have started a pilot programme in the United Republic of Tanzania for the provision of post- exposure prophylaxis. UNFPA has also developed a training programme on the clinical management of rape survivors.

160. The incidence of sexual and gender-based violence has been appallingly high in the Democratic Republic of the Congo. For the prevention of such incidents and the treatment of the victims, the Government of Belgium and the United Nations system have launched the first-ever comprehensive programme focusing on health, judicial reform, psycho-social assistance and livelihood support. The four-year project will benefit 25,000 women, young people and children in three provinces and will include the participation of key Congolese ministries, the Congolese military and police and local NGOs with expertise in addressing sexual violence. UNICEF has also expanded its interventions for preventing and responding to sexual violence, providing assistance to more than 15,000 children and women survivors in the most-affected eastern area of the country. Those activities, however, are focused primarily on response. More needs to be done in terms of prevention, targeting impunity and reinforcing accountability.

Humanitarian assistance

161. The past three years have been turbulent ones for the humanitarian community, as conflicts in Afghanistan, Iraq and Darfur and the disaster in the Indian Ocean have tested its ability to guarantee a response that is effective and appropriate. The expectation that large crises will continue to demand greater capacity, quality and accountability in humanitarian response requires that the United Nations examine and strengthen the systems, tools and competencies it has in place. To that end, the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs has commissioned a review of the international humanitarian response system.

162. In Africa, the conflict in Darfur, Sudan, has led to the internal displacement of more than 1.6 million persons. Another 200,000 people have been driven across the border to Chad. United Nations system agencies at present provide nearly 28,000 tons of food per month to nearly 2 million people. They have also supported interventions that provide 850,000 internally displaced people with access to safe drinking water and assisted in a major Government immunization campaign in Darfur in which more than 2 million children were vaccinated against measles. An early warning and response network has been established throughout Darfur to warn against a possible outbreak of disease, and support is provided for the early resumption of farming activities, as well as community-based animal health initiatives, land tenure policy reform and natural resources management. A mine information office has been established in Darfur to help humanitarian agencies conduct operations safely.

163. In Uganda, 2.1 million displaced people living in settlements were dependent on WFP food assistance as at June 2005. UNICEF has supported the construction of 27 temporary schools in camps for the internally displaced, trained 800 displaced teachers in psycho-social counselling and established 18 early childhood development centres. UNICEF is also providing emergency shelter, household items and access to clean water and sanitation facilities for nearly 12,000 "night commuters", children who move each evening from vulnerable rural areas into more secure towns to avoid abduction by the Lord's Resistance Army.

164. The largest outbreak of Marburg haemorrhagic fever in history struck the northern Angolan province of Uige in March. WHO and other partners quickly moved to support the Angolan Ministry of Health in its efforts to contain the dangerous virus. In Liberia, UNICEF has been instrumental in the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration process for children associated with fighting forces. Thus far, more than 11,780 children have benefited from demobilization programmes. The UNICEF back-to-school campaign has enabled more than 600,000 students to return to school, bringing a sense of stability and hope to many urban and rural communities across the country. In the Democratic Republic of the Congo, the ongoing FAO relief programmes support the food security and livelihoods of nearly 500,000 conflict-affected farming households. To open up markets for rural inhabitants, FAO is also rehabilitating hundreds of kilometres of small roads, while WFP provides food rations to the project workforce.

165. In the Middle East, United Nations system agencies are working with the Iraqi Ministry of Health to revitalize health systems in the country by repairing, restocking and restarting essential facilities. Iraqi health professionals are being trained, policies and regulations for water quality are being established and water-testing systems are being updated. Furthermore, $60 million worth of projects covering irrigation, veterinary services, livestock production and cottage industries are being implemented.

166. In the same region, the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA) is continuing its regular programme of assistance for the 4.2 million Palestine refugees registered in Jordan, Lebanon, the Syrian Arab Republic and the West Bank and Gaza Strip. The Agency enrols some 500,000 students in 652 schools, operates 125 health clinics, supports 250,000 poor refugees, works with 102 community-based centres and operates an extensive microcredit programme. UNRWA also continues to provide emergency support to Palestinians in the occupied Palestinian territory, where poverty rates are as high as 70 per cent. In 2004, for instance, UNRWA provided food aid to more than 1.1 million Palestinians in the occupied Palestinian territory. The Agency also constructed some 300 new shelters in southern Gaza, where Israeli forces had demolished over 730 shelters. UN-Habitat has also started a special human settlements programme for the Palestinian people. Despite such efforts, developments such as the extension of the Israeli barrier in the West Bank have exacerbated the deteriorating socio-economic conditions of the Palestinian population.

167. In those emergencies and some 27 others, the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs is providing support to United Nations country teams through the resident and humanitarian coordinators. In 2004 the Office facilitated the preparation and launch, in November, of consolidated humanitarian appeals for 18 crises. Through those appeals the United Nations and its partners requested $4.4 billion to cover the immediate relief and recovery needs of some 35 million people. Six months after the appeals were launched, however, only 38 per cent of requirements had been met. If the generous support to the appeal for the tsunami-affected areas is excluded, only 24 per cent of requirements had been met for the rest of the appeals. Of the 14 appeals for Africa, 8 had received less than 20 per cent as at May 2005.

168. The way humanitarian crises are funded affects the ability of the United Nations to respond promptly, effectively and in a principled manner. As events during the reporting period have made clear, there are many situations in which crises develop or escalate quickly, where the rapid deployment of staff in critical sectors is required or where the needs in underreported emergencies or sectors may go unnoticed but still require substantial support. Timely, adequate and predictable funding improves the ability of the United Nations to further develop and maintain response capacity commensurate to the needs on the ground.

169. Early recovery is one sector that is frequently underfunded, especially when it comes to support for building the capacity of national institutions. A sustainable transition from conflict to peace, however, depends on the prompt re-establishment of national capacities that have been eroded by conflict. Several activities of UNDP focus on this area. For example, in Guinea-Bissau, UNDP helped the Government to establish an economic emergency management fund to help with the temporary payment of civil servants' salaries, which in turn enabled the Government to stabilize priority areas of public administration and resume its delivery of social services.

Natural disaster management

170. The incidence and severity of disasters associated with natural hazards continues to increase. According to the Centre for Research on the Epidemiology of Disasters, more than 246,000 people were killed between April 2004 and April 2005 as a result of natural disasters. Another 157 million were injured, displaced or otherwise adversely affected. An estimated $100 billion worth of property damage also occurred, which in many countries eroded hard-won development gains. Ongoing climate change, environmental degradation, unplanned urbanization and mitigation systems that do not adequately address those factors are the likely cause of the increase in both the incidence and the severity of disasters.

171. Of the disasters that have occurred in the past year, the 26 December 2004 earthquake and tsunami in the Indian Ocean was by far the largest. In the immediate aftermath of the tsunami, the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs facilitated the preparation and launch of an inter-agency "flash" appeal covering the urgent needs of some 5 million people for six months. Of the $1 billion requested, nearly 90 per cent had been pledged by May 2005. As a result of the swift and generous support provided by Governments and private citizens around the world, the immediate humanitarian situation in the affected areas was quickly stabilized. No major outbreaks of communicable disease occurred, and affected communities received the necessary food and other support. Extensive damage to local infrastructure caused delays in the most immediate response. A massive logistics operation was soon established, however, with military assets from over 17 countries, which enabled local authorities and humanitarian organizations to assist stricken communities. The effort was one of the most complex in the history of WFP, which spearheaded the coordination of logistics on behalf of the United Nations system through the Joint Logistics Centre. Within days, helicopters were continuously ferrying food down Sumatra's hard-hit western coast. By 7 January, WFP was feeding 750,000 people in Sri Lanka, and by 3 May it had reached almost 1.9 million people across the region and had dispatched 90,000 tons of food. UNHCR provided tents, plastic sheeting, blankets, kitchen sets and other household goods to more than 100,000 people in Sumatra and 160,000 people in Sri Lanka.

172. In response to the tsunami, WHO coordinated a large, multi-agency assessment of health needs along the west coast of Aceh. Early warning systems were promptly established in affected areas and the Global Outbreak Alert and Response Network was triggered. Clinics, hospitals and laboratories reported weekly communicable disease figures and daily alerts. UNICEF distributed emergency health supplies for 800,000 people and by mid-May was providing 850,000 people with safe drinking water. UNICEF and its partners have also constructed and rehabilitated sanitation facilities for 550,000 people. Approximately 400,000 children were immunized against measles and provided with vitamin A supplements. UNICEF and its partners also facilitated the registration, tracing and reunification of separated and unaccompanied children. Thanks to the vigilance of the international community and affected Governments, children have been protected against exploitation and trafficking.

173. Operations are now moving from relief to recovery efforts. With initial inputs from UNHCR in some countries and support from UN-Habitat, shelter reconstruction programmes have begun. FAO is helping affected countries to coordinate and plan the rehabilitation of their agriculture, fisheries and forestry sectors, with an emphasis on rebuilding sustainable livelihood opportunities to enhance food security and incomes. To facilitate the transition to recovery, I have appointed a Special Envoy for Tsunami Recovery, who is working to sustain global attention to and cooperation in long-term recovery and reconstruction.

174. In Africa, despite considerable warnings nine months prior, a massive desert locust upsurge infested 10 West and North African countries in the summer of 2004, threatening millions of hectares of crops. FAO and the Governments of the affected countries mounted a major control operation, treating more than 12 million hectares of infested land to protect crops.

175. A number of hurricanes hit the Caribbean between August and October 2004, causing substantial damage. Hurricane Ivan, the most powerful to hit the region in 10 years, caused damage to 90 per cent of the homes in Grenada, leaving some 60,000 people homeless. Hurricane Jeanne hit Haiti, killing an estimated 1,500 people. Another 300,000 were injured or suffered property damage. FAO is helping to restore agricultural and fisheries production throughout the region with diverse interventions, including the repair of fishing boats, the distribution of tools, seeds and fertilizers and the rehabilitation of irrigation infrastructure. UNDP is also supporting recovery efforts in five Caribbean countries. A principal aim of this support is to ensure that recovery and reconstruction efforts avoid risks that may have contributed to the disaster in the first place, such as building in high-risk areas using inappropriate construction techniques.

176. Reducing risk by strengthening disaster management must be a principal aim of the international community. To that end, the United Nations and the Government of Japan organized the World Conference on Disaster Reduction in Kobe in January 2005. The Conference resulted in the Hyogo Framework for Action 2005-2015: Building the Resilience of Nations and Communities to Disasters. Translating the framework into results will be a significant challenge for the United Nations system, as well as Governments, regional entities and NGOs. The Framework calls for targeted increases in official development assistance and national budgets towards reducing underlying risk factors. The secretariat of the International Strategy for Disaster Reduction is coordinating strategic guidelines to support national and regional efforts through the Inter-Agency Task Force on Disaster Reduction.

177. The Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs is continuing its efforts to improve disaster management by broadening participation in the disaster assessment and coordination teams. Increasingly, such teams include emergency managers from disaster-prone countries. This allows the United Nations to build local response capacity and deal with more disasters more quickly. For example, during the Caribbean storms in 2004, the United Nations deployed four such teams simultaneously to the Dominican Republic, Grenada, Haiti, Jamaica and the Cayman Islands consisting of a total of 24 members from 12 countries and organizations working in three languages. A few months later, during the Indian Ocean tsunami, five disaster assessment and coordination teams were deployed to Indonesia, Maldives, Somalia, Sri Lanka and Thailand, consisting of a total of 44 members from 16 countries and four international organizations. Disaster management and risk-reduction efforts have also been strengthened by the launch, in December 2004, of the Humanitarian Early Warning Service website (www.hewsweb.org). Developed by WFP on behalf of the Inter-Agency Standing Committee, the website provides easy public access to early warning analysis and forecasts on a variety of natural hazards.

178. Recent events have demonstrated that natural disasters also create protection needs for affected populations, but this remains a largely neglected area. For example, in the immediate aftermath of the tsunami there were concerns over trafficking of orphaned children. The International Federation of Red Cross and Red Crescent Societies is seeking to codify the laws relating to natural disasters in the international disaster response law project. For the time being, however, the protection framework for the victims of natural disasters is less well developed than the protection afforded to civilians affected by armed conflict.

Protection of civilians in armed conflict

179. Over the past few years there has been increasing international recognition that, in many humanitarian crises, material assistance used to safeguard lives and livelihoods is only one element of the support that affected populations require. A number of crises—some regional in nature, as in West Africa, others country-specific, as in Darfur—have been characterized as crises of protection. In response, the United Nations system, Member States and civil society have increasingly become aware that the existing international framework needs to be enhanced to better address the complex emergencies we are facing today. To that end, the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council and the Security Council have passed a series of resolutions urging Member States and other parties to conflicts to fully respect their international commitments under international humanitarian, refugee and human rights law.

180. More and more, the challenge is to translate the overall legal and policy framework into practice in the field. I am pleased to report that significant progress has been made in this regard during the reporting period. The Security Council, for example, has increasingly incorporated concerns for protection issues in the mandates of peacekeeping missions. More importantly, such missions are now better staffed and structured to address protection needs. The Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs has worked with a number of countries currently or formerly affected by armed conflict to find common approaches to creating more secure environments for civilians. In Uganda, for example, the Government, humanitarian organizations, affected parties, the military and civil society all agreed to a common approach and joint or complementary actions that each would undertake to improve the protection of civilians. This achievement led to specific and positive changes on the ground in northern Uganda, including increased access for humanitarian staff. A similar dialogue has been started in the northern Caucasus to address post-conflict protection challenges.

181. Recent developments have also underscored the importance of engaging with regional and other intergovernmental organizations on protection issues. In Darfur, for example, women collecting firewood outside villages were becoming increasingly vulnerable to rape and sexual abuse as the conflict worsened. The African Union, which has been engaged with the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs on protection issues, placed its monitors and troops along routes taken by women, thus contributing to a decrease in the number of rapes and other attacks.

182. Supporting national Governments in their efforts to strengthen domestic judicial structures and undertake security sector reform is central to anchoring protection gains made during the crisis and ensuring their sustainability. As part of its emergency response programme for Darfur, UNDP has partnered with local and international non-governmental organizations to train more than 1,400 stakeholders in the region, including members of the judiciary, Sudanese NGOs, and security personnel. The training includes an introduction to international standards on human rights and criminal law, humanitarian law, gender justice, child protection and codes of conduct.

Chapter IV

The international legal order and human rights

Human rights developments

183. In follow-up to my report of September 2002 entitled "Strengthening of the United Nations: an agenda for further change" (A/57/387 and Corr.1) and the resulting action 2 initiative, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR) placed greater emphasis on strengthening national systems of human rights protection. This led to greater engagement at the country level and in particular through cooperation with and capacity-building for United Nations country teams. Technical cooperation and advisory services continued in all parts of the world, with a focus in particular on the development of national human rights action plans, human rights education and strengthening the capacity of national human rights institutions.

184. At its 2005 session, the Commission on Human Rights agreed to permit accredited national human rights institutions to speak within their mandates and to address the Commission under all items of its agenda. This is a significant development, which enhances the status and effectiveness of national institutions within the international human rights system.

185. In an effort to address human rights violations and promote better protection, OHCHR continued to undertake monitoring and fact-finding missions. An agreement between the High Commissioner for Human Rights and the Government of Nepal, signed on 10 April 2005, established an OHCHR office in Nepal with a broad mandate to protect and promote human rights, including by conducting monitoring activities throughout the country. The High Commissioner will submit periodic analytical reports on the human rights situation in the country to the Commission on Human Rights, the General Assembly and me.

186. In the Sudan, as part of the United Nations emergency 90-day plan of action, OHCHR deployed human rights observers to Darfur in mid-August 2004. The Security Council, in its resolution 1564(2004), authorized the establishment of the International Commission of Inquiry for Darfur, which was substantively and administratively supported by OHCHR. The Commission submitted a report on its findings to me on 25 January 2005.

187. OHCHR supported the Commission of Inquiry in Côte d'Ivoire, established under the Linas-Marcoussis Agreement at the request of the Government of Côte d'Ivoire and the Security Council in its presidential statement of 25 May 2004 (S/PRST/2004/17). The Commission submitted its report in December 2004. In October, the Truth and Reconciliation Commission of Sierra Leone, whose operations were fully supported by OHCHR, submitted its report to the President of Sierra Leone. OHCHR activities in support of the implementation of the recommendations of the Commission are continuing.

188. The special procedures mechanisms of the Commission on Human Rights continued to make valuable contributions to the protection of human rights, including some 100 reports addressing a variety of human rights issues submitted to the Commission, over 1,000 confidential communications addressed to the Governments of some 140 countries for urgent action, and 40 country visits by mandate holders in the framework of their fact-finding activities.

189. The Commission on Human Rights at its sixty-first session established new special procedures on the use of mercenaries, minority issues, human rights and international solidarity, human rights and transnational corporations, protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms while countering terrorism and the situation of human rights in the Sudan. The Commission also adopted, after 15 years of elaboration, the basic principles and guidelines on the right to a remedy and reparation for victims of gross violations of international human rights law and serious violations of international humanitarian law. The Independent Expert of the Commission on Human Rights on Impunity also updated the Set of Principles for the protection and promotion of human rights through action to combat impunity.

190. The work of the expert bodies established under the human rights treaties continues to be of critical importance. From August 2004 to July 2005, the Human Rights Committee, the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination, the Committee on the Rights of the Child, the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women and the Committee against Torture considered the reports of 94 States parties. The treaty bodies continue to harmonize their working methods and to consider means to assist States parties to fulfil their substantive commitments and meet their reporting obligations. Over the past year, treaty bodies have also adopted well over 100 decisions and views on individual cases.

191. While the sixty-first session of the Commission on Human Rights attracted more than 3,000 participants, including a record 88 senior Government officials addressing the high-level segment, the politicization of the Commission's debates and the lack of consideration of certain situations involving grave human rights violations remains a deep concern. Reflecting the high level of interest on the issue of reform, the Commission held an informal meeting on the human rights sections of my report entitled "In larger freedom". Member States across regional groups as well as non-governmental organizations expressed a wide spectrum of views on my proposals, in particular the establishment of a new Human Rights Council.

192. OHCHR provided a plan of action on 20 May 2005 following the issuance of my abovementioned report, which lays out a strategic plan to strengthen and focus the work of the Office. With the emphasis placed on implementation, OHCHR is further equipping itself for a programme of effective dialogue and engagement with countries, which will be supported by, inter alia, strengthened geographic and thematic expertise, greater deployments at the regional and subregional levels and more in-country offices. Protecting human rights and empowering people will be the main objectives of OHCHR as it takes the lead in moving the human rights agenda from rhetoric to reality.

International Criminal Court

193. By its resolution 58/318, the General Assembly approved the Relationship Agreement between the United Nations and the International Criminal Court, which had been approved by the Assembly of States Parties to the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court on 7 September 2004. The Relationship Agreement, which entered into force on 4 October 2004, sets out the legal framework for cooperation between the United Nations and the Court to facilitate the effective discharge of their respective responsibilities.

194. Under the Relationship Agreement, the United Nations undertakes to cooperate with the Court with due regard to its responsibilities and competence under the Charter and subject to its rules. At the request of the Court or the Prosecutor, the United Nations may provide information and documents that are relevant to the work of the Court. In addition, the United Nations may agree to provide the Court with other forms of cooperation and assistance. The Relationship Agreement also anticipates the conclusion of supplementary arrangements to implement its terms. On the basis of such arrangements, the United Nations has already rendered assistance to the Office of the Prosecutor on a number of occasions.

195. Through its approval of the Relationship Agreement, the General Assembly further decided that the International Criminal Court may attend and participate in the work of the General Assembly in the capacity of observer. All expenses that may accrue to the United Nations as a result of the implementation of the Relationship Agreement shall be paid in full to the Organization.

196. By its resolution 1593(2005) the Security Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, decided "to refer the situation in Darfur since 1 July 2002 to the Prosecutor of the International Criminal Court". Pursuant to that decision, I provided several documents to the Prosecutor, including a sealed envelope containing a list of suspects, which I had received from the Chairman of the International Commission of Inquiry for Darfur (see para. 186).

International criminal tribunals

International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia

197. During the reporting period, the Tribunal continued to implement measures to ensure the fulfilment of its mandate by 2010. The Tribunal began the process of transferring cases back to the States of the former Yugoslavia. Currently, 10 requests involving 18 accused are pending. The establishment of the War Crimes Chamber of the Court of Bosnia and Herzegovina in 2005 provided further capacity to try war crimes in the region. In addition, investigation files were transferred to the Prosecutor of Bosnia and Herzegovina. In the light of the referral of cases to local courts, rule 11 bis of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence was amended. Amendments were also made to rules 98 bis and 124.

198. As at 23 June 2005, six trials involving a total of nine accused were ongoing before the Tribunal's trial chambers. At that time, 30 other cases involving 51 accused were in the pretrial phase. In the trial chambers a total of three judgements were delivered. In the Appeals Chamber four judgements were delivered. As at 23 June 2005, 58 persons were being detained at the Tribunal's detention facility, and 21 persons were on provisional release. The Tribunal transferred three convicted persons to Denmark, Spain and the United Kingdom to serve their sentences. The Tribunal attained a record of 23 indictees taken into its custody during the period from October 2004 to April 2005. As a result, the number of accused who remain at large has been reduced to 10. Nevertheless, among them there are still high-profile officials such as Radovan Karadziæ and Ratko Mladiæ, at large for nearly 10 years. In this respect the cooperation of the international community, especially of the States of the former Yugoslavia, remains essential in bringing the accused to justice. Nevertheless, the Tribunal continues to move towards fulfilling its mandate to ensure that all 163 indictees are brought to justice.

International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda

199. The trial chambers' activities are now at an all-time high, with an unprecedented number of trials in progress. Thanks to the full use of the nine ad litem judges working with the nine permanent judges, as well as a fourth courtroom funded by the Governments of Norway and the United Kingdom, the output has continued to increase. Judgements concerning 25 accused have been delivered, and 25 others are on trial. In two of those trials, which involve 10 accused, the defence is presenting its evidence. In another trial, concerning four accused, the prosecution has called all witnesses. Sixteen detainees are awaiting trial. Their cases will start as soon as trial chamber capacity allows. The Appeals Chamber delivered three judgements during the reporting period involving four accused, as well as numerous interlocutory decisions.

200. The Office of the Prosecutor concluded its investigations with respect to those suspected of committing genocide. The last indictments are expected to be submitted for confirmation by the Chambers by the middle of 2005. The process of referring cases to national jurisdictions has commenced, with the Prosecutor in February 2005 handing over to the Government of Rwanda 15 dossiers on persons who had been under investigation. Greater effort is being devoted to the tracking and apprehension of fugitives. The Tracking Unit of the Office of the Prosecutor was reorganized and strengthened and its mode of operation revised. There is an active programme to enhance State cooperation through contacts by the prosecutor with authorities in various countries.

201. The Registry continues its steadfast support for the judicial process by servicing the other organs of the Tribunal and the defence. It also gathers support from States and/or international institutions for the smooth conduct of the proceedings. Agreements are concluded with States and institutions to fund activities not covered by the regular budget, to ensure the movement of witnesses and their safety and to find places where convicted persons will serve their sentences.

Special Court for Sierra Leone

202. As the Special Court for Sierra Leone approaches its fourth year of operation, all nine accused persons who are in custody in Freetown are currently on trial. On 17 January 2005 three judges were appointed to the second trial chamber and the trial in the case of the Armed Forces Revolutionary Council started on 7 March. Meanwhile, the first trial chamber continues to alternate the trials regarding the Civil Defence Forces and the Revolutionary United Front, which began on 3 June and 5 July 2004 respectively. Two other cases are still pending before the Special Court. The whereabouts of Johnny Paul Koroma, Chairman of the Armed Forces Revolutionary Council, remain unknown. Charles Taylor resigned as President of Liberia on 11 August 2003 and since that date has been in Nigeria.

203. In October 2004 the Special Court adopted its completion strategy, which the President presented to the Security Council on 24 May 2005. The Registrar signed agreements on the enforcement of sentences with two countries, and negotiations are ongoing with a number of others. During the post-completion phase, the Court will continue certain "residual activities" after it no longer exists in its current form and with its current capacity.

204. To date, the Special Court has received approximately $54.9 million in voluntary contributions from 33 States against a four-year budget of $104 million. In order to supplement insufficient voluntary contributions, I sought a subvention of up to $40 million for the biennium 2004-2005. The General Assembly, in its resolution 59/276, authorized me to enter into commitments not exceeding $20 million to supplement the financial resources of the Special Court for the period from 1 January to 30 June 2005. In my report of 18 April 2005 (A/59/ 534/Add.4), I proposed an additional subvention of up to $13 million to finance the first six months of the fourth year of operations of the Court, until December 2005, and stated my intention to propose an additional subvention of up to $7 million for the Court in 2006. The General Assembly, on 22 June 2005, adopted resolution 59/294, in which it approved commitment authority for up to $13 million for the period from 1 July 2005 to 31 December 2005.

Enhancing the rule of law

205. On 6 October 2004, the Security Council held an open meeting to discuss my report on the rule of law and transitional justice in conflict and post-conflict societies (S/2004/ 616). The Council stressed the importance and urgency of restoring justice and the rule of law in post-conflict societies, not only to help them come to terms with past abuses, but also to promote national reconciliation and prevent a return to conflict. The Council underlined the importance of tailoring solutions to local circumstances and, more importantly, of involving local actors. It accordingly emphasized the need to give consideration to the full range of transitional justice mechanisms, not just courts. Finally, in terms of concrete action, the Council urged the Secretariat to make proposals for implementing the various practical recommendations set out in my report.

206. Over the past year I have continued work to put in place the arrangements necessary for the entry into force of the Agreement between the United Nations and the Royal Government of Cambodia concerning the Prosecution under Cambodian Law of Crimes Committed During the Period of Democratic Kampuchea. In December 2004 I sent a third planning mission to Phnom Penh to complete work on identifying the probable requirements of the Extraordinary Chambers.

207. On 28 March I convened a pledging conference with a view to seeking the $43 million needed to fund the United Nations commitment under the Agreement and received sufficient contributions and pledges to meet the Organization's obligations. On 28 April I consequently notified the Government of Cambodia that the legal requirements on the part of the United Nations for the entry into force of the Agreement had been complied with, and the Agreement accordingly entered into force the following day.

208. Upon the request of the Government of Burundi that the Security Council establish an international judicial commission of inquiry as provided for in the Arusha Peace and Reconciliation Agreement for Burundi, I dispatched an assessment mission to consider the advisability and feasibility of establishing such an international commission for the purpose of clarifying the truth and bringing to justice those responsible for the crime of genocide, crimes against humanity and war crimes committed in Burundi since its independence. The assessment mission recommended the establishment of a twin mechanism: a non-judicial accountability mechanism in the form of a truth commission and a judicial accountability mechanism in the form of a special chamber within the court system of Burundi.

209. Regarding the Sudan, pursuant to Security Council resolution 1564(2004), I established an international commission of inquiry in order to investigate reports of violations of international humanitarian law in Darfur by all parties, to determine also whether or not acts of genocide had occurred and to identify the perpetrators of such violations with a view to ensuring that those responsible were held accountable. In its report (S/2005/60), the Commission found that the crimes committed in Darfur did not amount to genocide and characterized them as crimes against humanity. It further recommended that the Security Council refer the situation in Darfur to the International Criminal Court.

210. With respect to Timor-Leste, on 11 January 2005 I established an independent Commission of Experts to review the prosecution of serious human rights violations committed in Timor-Leste in 1999 and to assess the progress made by the Indonesian Ad Hoc Human Rights Court in Jakarta and by the Serious Crimes Unit and the Special Panels for Serious Crimes in Dili.

The Commission, which was supported by OHCHR, submitted its report on 26 May 2005.

211. Consistent with the goal of advancing the international rule of law and to encourage wider participation in the multilateral treaty framework, in 2000 I initiated an annual treaty event. In March I invited Governments to participate in this year's treaty event, entitled "Focus 2005: responding to global challenges", to be held during the high-level plenary meeting of the sixtieth session of the General Assembly. During the reporting period, three new multilateral treaties were added to the 506 active treaties already deposited with me. In addition, 11 treaties relating to the environment, health, telecommunications and transport entered into force.

212. A meeting of experts organized by the United Nations University in cooperation with the Office of Legal Affairs concluded that the pressure of contemporary problems could sometimes hide the reality of progress made in international criminal justice. Fifteen years ago, no leader would have had cause to fear international criminal prosecution. Today no leader can be confident of impunity. This is an astonishing amount of progress in a remarkably short period of time in human history.

Legal affairs

213. During its fifty-ninth session, the General Assembly adopted by consensus the United Nations Convention on Jurisdictional Immunities of States and Their Property (resolution 59/38) and the International Convention for the Suppression of Acts of Nuclear Terrorism (resolution 59/290). The adoption of the latter represents a significant step forward in the strengthening of the international legal framework against terrorism. In addition, On 8 March, the General Assembly approved the United Nations Declaration on Human Cloning (resolution 59/280), thus concluding its discussion of a highly complex item that had been on its agenda since 2001.

214. With respect to the law of the sea, the Open-ended Informal Consultative Process on Oceans and the Law of the Sea at its sixth meeting discussed fisheries and their contribution to sustainable development. At its initial meeting, in January 2005, the United Nations Ocean and Coastal Areas network, the general mechanism for inter-agency cooperation in ocean affairs, established four task forces dealing with, among other things, the tsunami disaster and marine biodiversity beyond national jurisdiction. An important initiative was the establishment of a new capacity-building team that developed a training manual on article 76 of the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea and on how to make submissions to the Commission on the Limits of the Continental Shelf.

215. During the past year, the Office of Legal Affairs has continued to provide legal advice and assistance in relation to a broad and diverse range of the Organization's activities. With respect to the United Nations presence in Iraq, the Office advised me on issues arising from the bombing of the United Nations headquarters in Baghdad on 19 August 2003; the winding down of the oil-for-food programme, including questions related to the Independent Inquiry Committee; and the activities of the United Nations Assistance Mission for Iraq. In relation to the Organization's peacekeeping operations more generally, the Office continued to provide advice and assistance with respect to the interpretation and implementation of mandates, the preparation of rules of engagement and the negotiation and implementation of status-of-forces agreements.

216. The International Trade Law Division assisted in the adoption of a legislative guide on insolvency law designed to help countries establish fair and transparent systems to address commercial failure. With respect to matters internal to the Organization, the Office facilitated a comprehensive review of United Nations general conditions of contract; assisted in the development of general principles for accepting pro bono goods and services; prepared guidelines on the use of information and communication technology resources and data; revised the financial regulations of certain United Nations funds; and represented the Secretary-General before the United Nations Administrative Tribunal.

Chapter V

Management

Administration and management

217. The Organization maintained a strong emphasis on improving client orientation in the delivery of services and implemented measures to produce better results in all areas, with a renewed focus on accountability through both performance measurement and strengthened reporting. In an effort to enhance accountability by reporting more effectively on the implementation of recommendations made by the oversight bodies and by providing analyses of the decisions made by the United Nations Administrative Tribunal, the relevant functions of the Department of Management were rationalized and consolidated.

218. The Organization's sponsorship of the Global Compact Leaders Summit in June 2004 highlighted the paradox that the Secretariat itself could do more to ensure that its own administrative practices were fully aligned with Global Compact principles. Accordingly, the Department of Management convened a working group that took action to implement changes in vendor relations and facilities management and to research practical measures for pension investments and human resources policies that would reconcile fiduciary responsibility, our own regulations and the Global Compact principles.

219. The Organization built new capacities and pursued concrete measures to ensure the security and safety of United Nations staff and property. Most significantly in institutional terms, an internal review process and extensive discussions with Member States resulted in the unification of United Nations security functions within a new Department of Safety and Security. A staff security plan was completed and put in place at the Headquarters complex, tamper-proof holographic building passes were introduced, a crisis management plan was put in place at all duty stations and anti-blast film was installed on all windows in the Secretariat building and all the annex buildings in New York.

220. Several security rehearsals, including a complete evacuation, were used to test the updated and revalidated crisis management operational plan for the Headquarters complex. The current year will bring the United Nations complex into full compliance with the minimum operating security standards. Security involves more than tangible, preventive measures, and in that spirit the Organization funded and implemented training for 40 designated senior officers responsible for security at their duty stations and their security management teams. In addition, the counselling services carried out stress management training missions in 34 countries and provided individual stress counselling to 3,500 staff members and dependants.

Common support services

221. The Organization continued to pursue opportunities to cut costs through volume discounts and to create service efficiencies through process redesign. The newly initiated Inter-Agency Travel Network promotes a global airline agreement signed with a major international carrier; as a result, for the first time, smaller offices can obtain discounts. By introducing e-commerce philatelic products and other innovations, the United Nations Postal Administration has become profitable for the first time since 1994; further revenue increases are projected as the Administration's new market profile is further enhanced.

Information and communication technology strategy

222. In the ongoing effort to upgrade the wide-area network infrastructure, the network equipment in the Secretariat building has been brought up to the new standard and the design for upgrading the electrical facilities in the annex buildings was completed. By the first quarter of 2005, both Headquarters and offices away from New York were prepared to do business using this highly cost-effective method, which brings offices around the globe into closer collaboration. Once these enhancements have been completed, the Organization may begin to consolidate administrative functions, which are currently decentralized and replicated throughout all offices away from Headquarters. With the constitution of the Project Review Committee for information and communication technology initiatives, all offices comply with a process that requires preparation of a business case to justify investments and ensure consistency with technical standards. Our information technologists re-engineered and implemented a new Secretariat-wide Intranet to increase staff productivity and efficiency by enabling organizational units to share information without having specialized technical knowledge.

Human resources management

223. Further embedding and broadening of the principles of human resources management reform in the Secretariat continued to be the main focus. Greater attention has been given to making progress on geographical and gender balance, harmonizing conditions of service of staff assigned to the field, streamlining administrative procedures and increasing the efficiency of existing human resources-related information technology systems such as the electronic performance appraisal system and the Galaxy electronic staffing system. Improved inter-agency cooperation on HIV/AIDS issues has resulted in the design and implementation of "HIV/AIDS in the workplace" orientation sessions for staff from the Secretariat, as well as United Nations funds, programmes and specialized agencies. A new programme for senior women leaders and new organizational development tools that model effective managers and departments were introduced.

224. Preparation for mobility, including a comprehensive communication campaign Secretariat-wide, a voluntary managed reassignment exercise, attention to work-life issues and development of career support programmes, has been a major priority. Monitoring of human resources has been strengthened, as evidenced by the establishment of human resources action plans for 26 departments and offices. On-site monitoring of delegated authority for human resources management has been done in six departments and offices, two tribunals and three peacekeeping missions.

Capital master plan

225. While significant technical work has gone forward on design, construction planning, and space programming in support of the urgent and inevitable refurbishment of the Headquarters complex, many of the assumptions that underlie the capital master plan project and its costing, approved by the General Assembly in 2003, have been called into question by political and financial dynamics. Refurbishment of the core complex can proceed only upon the acquisition of transitional accommodations—so-called "swing space"—for staff and operations, including Secretariat functions and conference space, but the site originally proposed appears to be unavailable. A number of alternative options are being explored. In the meantime, the General Assembly is to take a decision on the host country's loan offer of $1.2 billion, combined with my request for authorization to conclude an agreement that would afford the United Nations full discretion in borrowing and drawing down funds.

Financial management

226. The United Nations budget process is on its way to assuming a more logical structure, with significant benefits for strategic planning. The new biennial budget for 2006-2007 is clearly linked to the new two-year programme plan. The planning and budgetary processes were aligned and simplified through the use of the same results-based-budgeting logical framework for both the budget and the biennial programme plan. For programme managers, the budget website continued to play a key role in ensuring the availability of key planning and budgetary data.

227. Regarding peacekeeping budgets, those for the financial period 2004/05 featured more measurable indicators of achievement and outputs and improved linkages between the results-based budgeting frameworks and resource requirements. For the first time, the budgets of peacekeeping operations have indicated how many personnel (military, police and civilian staff, comprising on average 69 per cent of total resources), are attributable to individual components. Variances in human resources have been justified by reference to specific elements in the results-based-budgeting frameworks. Furthermore, for the support component of peacekeeping budgets, measurable outputs have been identified for each of the main operational cost categories (e.g., facilities, ground transportation, air transportation, information technology and communications).

228. In another area with implications for field operations, the first phase of a comprehensive cash-management project has been implemented, namely, the automation of the disbursement functions. Electronic systems have been upgraded and integrated for use for the Headquarters overseas bank accounts utilizing the SWIFT (Society for Worldwide Interbank Financial Telecommunication) network. In addition, the Treasury has implemented a set of measures to assist peacekeeping missions in reducing local bank charges, finding alternative means of transporting money into and within mission areas by United Nations personnel and reducing cash-in-transit insurance premiums.

229. Within the Secretariat, with respect to services provided to staff members, the accounting and payroll services have focused on client orientation. Improved techniques for the review and consolidation of data were developed, which helped in the preparation of the final consolidated financial statements, and new tax reimbursement and quarterly tax advance systems were put in place.

Financial situation

230. The financial situation of the United Nations remains very fragile. Despite lower arrears in contributions to the regular budget and the international tribunals in 2004, a substantial amount of assessed contributions, a legal obligation of Member States, remained unpaid. As a result, our reserves were regularly depleted and the Organization was obliged to delay reimbursements to Member States that had contributed troops and equipment to peacekeeping operations. In addition, the Organization was obliged periodically to resort to cross-borrowing from the accounts of closed peacekeeping operations for the regular budget, the tribunals and some ongoing peacekeeping operations. This is not only an inherently undesirable practice, but the pool of funds available in those accounts is limited and shrinking as the surpluses are returned to Member States. The solution to the continuing financial problems of the Organization is for Member States to fully meet their financial obligations to the United Nations in a timely manner.

Security for United Nations staff

231. United Nations staff members continue to face serious and often escalating threats in carrying out their duties in the field. In Afghanistan, for example, they have been the targets of abduction, assassination or improvised explosive devices. A protracted hostage situation involving United Nations staff in Afghanistan was successfully resolved during the months of October and November 2004. Also in November, the degraded security situation in Côte d'Ivoire necessitated the relocation of dependants and the evacuation of non-essential United Nations staff. In February 2005, nine United Nations peacekeepers were brutally murdered in Bunia, Democratic Republic of the Congo. Over the past year, humanitarian assistance workers have operated in a high-risk environment in responding to the crisis in Darfur, Sudan. Detentions, hostage-taking, murder and looting of relief supplies have increasingly characterized the security conditions there.

232. Against this background, my long-standing efforts to reinforce the Organization's security structure were realized through the establishment of the Department of Safety and Security, responsible for the safety and security of more than 100,000 United Nations staff members and an estimated 300,000 dependants serving at more than 150 duty stations worldwide. My report to the General Assembly at its fifty-ninth session on a strengthened and unified security management system for the United Nations was supported by Assembly resolution 59/276, which established the Department of Safety and Security effective 1 January 2005. The new Department, headed by an Under-Secretary-General, amalgamates the former Office of the United Nations Security Coordinator, the Security and Safety Service and the security component of the Department of Peacekeeping Operations.

233. The Department of Safety and Security is responsible for providing leadership, operational support and oversight of the security management system to facilitate the safest and most efficient conduct of the programmes and activities of the United Nations system. Under the leadership of the new Under-Secretary-General, who assumed his post in February 2005, every effort is being made to have the major elements of the Department in place and running by the sixtieth session of the General Assembly. The overarching goal is to ensure that the Department has the operational ability to make it possible to carry out the United Nations mandate in the most demanding locations on the globe.

234. In its resolution 59/276, the General Assembly specified measures to strengthen the security and safety of the United Nations system, including field-security arrangements at all duty stations worldwide, and to unify the separate security structures into the Department of Safety and Security. The ongoing structural changes include the establishment of distinct capacities for policy, planning and coordination; compliance, evaluation and monitoring; and training and standardization, as well as strengthening of the Critical Incident Stress Management Unit. The administrative capacity of the Department will be strengthened through the creation of an Executive Office. A Division of Headquarters Security and Safety Services has been set up to provide policy and operational guidance to major duty stations and regional commissions and to coordinate personal protection functions. A Division of Regional Operations with an enhanced threat and risk-assessment capacity and a round-the-clock communications centre will strengthen the ability of the United Nations to ensure its own security.

Accountability and oversight

235. As a result of its five-year review of the mandate of the Office of Internal Oversight Services, the General Assembly, in its resolution 59/272, adopted new measures aimed at strengthening the Office's independence and reporting mechanism. This, together with my announcement to establish a Management Oversight Committee and other initiatives to strengthen integrity, accountability and oversight, provides a solid foundation for an improved internal governance framework for the Organization. In addition, the Office of Internal Oversight Services assisted in the drafting of the Organization's first whistle-blowing protection policy, which, among other things, promulgates the establishment of an Ethics Office to receive reports of reprisals or threats against complainants and witnesses who cooperate in an investigation.

Monitoring, evaluation and consultation

236. The Office of Internal Oversight Services continued its activities to strengthen monitoring and evaluation in the context of results-based management, including the provision of training and an evaluation manual, which is available on its website. The Office established a Secretariat-wide Working Group on Monitoring and Evaluation, which submitted proposals to the Deputy-Secretary-General on the strengthening and monitoring of programme performance and evaluation, which were also included in the report of the Office to the General Assembly (A/60/73), drafted in collaboration with the Joint Inspection Unit.

237. In its evaluation of UN-Habitat (E/AC.51/2005/3), the Office recommended narrowing the focus of the programme and improving the management of some of its activities. The Office also conducted evaluations of the United Nations Voluntary Fund for Victims of Torture (E/CN.4/2005/55) and a pilot thematic evaluation, which focused on Headquarters-field linkages for poverty eradication (E/AC.51/2005/2). The Office continued to provide change-management consulting services, including to the Department for General Assembly and Conference Management aimed at enhancing the effectiveness of the document slotting system. Because of limited resources, the Office was unable to make certain necessary enhancements to the Integrated Monitoring and Documentation Information System and to provide training to staff at offices away from Headquarters.

Internal audit

238. The Office conducted approximately 160 audits and issued seven reports to the General Assembly dealing with a wide range of issues, including peacekeeping operations; safety and security; the appeals process of the administrative justice system; the procurement of air services for peacekeeping missions; the capital master plan; information technology; the activities of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees; the United Nations libraries; and the mission subsistence allowance.

239. Following the bombing of United Nations offices in Baghdad, the Office conducted a comprehensive global audit of security management at Headquarters and at 20 field missions (A/59/702). The Peacekeeping Service undertook a number of audits, including of procurement, vacancy rates and the state of discipline at various missions. A management review of the appeals process at Headquarters, Geneva, Vienna and Nairobi (A/59/408) determined that the timeliness of appeals could be improved by streamlining the process at most duty stations. Audits of the UNHCR emergency operations in Burundi, Chad and the Sudan identified a need to improve procurement and general management. Limited resources prevented the Office from undertaking horizontal performance audits, such as an audit of the activities of the United Nations system on HIV/AIDS and the advancement of women.

Investigations

240. The Office received a total of 560 matters and issued 91 investigative reports, including 20 on sexual exploitation and abuse at the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo. The General Assembly affirmed the need for a comprehensive strategy to eliminate future sexual exploitation and abuse in United Nations peacekeeping operations. Following its review of the report of the Office on strengthening the investigative functions in the United Nations (A/58/708), the General Assembly assigned specific responsibility for the investigation of serious misconduct, including sexual exploitation and abuse, to the Office, and requested that I establish an administrative mechanism for the mandatory reporting by programme managers of allegations of misconduct to the Office (resolution 59/287). As indicated previously, I have already enacted a policy of zero tolerance towards such offences.

241. The resources of the Office were stretched to the limit to handle the MONUC sexual exploitation cases, to provide liaison services for the Independent Inquiry Committee, headed by Paul Volcker, and to deal with the backlog of cases in peacekeeping operations.

Strengthening the Organization

242. As I reported last year, most of the reform elements contained in my "agenda for further change" of 2002 have now been implemented. We have seen some very clear benefits: a thoroughly revised programme budget for 2004-2005, a shorter, more efficient cycle of planning and budgeting for the biennium 2006-2007, a reduction in the quantity of reports and meetings and greater integration of human rights elements in the work of United Nations country teams. Nevertheless, progress in a number of other areas has been slow. That is one of the reasons I have launched a two-track package of Secretariat reform in 2005. I am pursuing one track vigorously under my own authority, and the other is to be taken up in the context of the wider proposals contained in my reform report, "In larger freedom", to be taken up at the High-level Plenary Meeting in September. I hope that together they demonstrate my commitment to continuous improvement and to strengthening the Organization to meet the needs of the twenty-first century.

243. The current phase of reform comes at a particularly crucial time for the United Nations. The Secretariat has faced an unprecedented series of organizational challenges that have exposed flaws in the way it does business. I am moving ahead with a package of small yet important measures for immediate implementation. I anticipate that most of them will have been fully implemented by September. While preparation for many of the steps predates problems revealed over the past year, the initiatives also explicitly seek to address both the serious concerns expressed by United Nations staff in the integrity perception survey and the recommendations of the Independent Inquiry Committee investigating the oil-for-food programme. Broadly, these fit into the following four categories:

- Improving the performance of senior management
- Enhancing oversight and accountability
- Ensuring ethical conduct
- Increasing transparency

244. The Senior Management Group, an internal information-sharing and coordination tool that I instituted upon taking office, has proven too large for effective and timely decision-making. As a result, two smaller senior committees—one for policy issues and the other for management and reform matters—have been created. I have also introduced a much more transparent system for the selection of new United Nations senior leaders—with an open selection process based on predetermined criteria. I am also introducing a much more structured system of induction to ensure that senior officials are properly briefed on the broader system of United Nations rules, regulations, codes of conduct and managerial systems.

245. The need for better tools to ensure accountability has also been identified. I have created a small Management Performance Board that will systematically assess the performance of individual senior managers and advise me on suggested corrective action where necessary. A new Oversight Committee is also being established to ensure that appropriate management action is taken to implement the recommendations of the various oversight bodies.

246. Concerns about fairness and integrity were raised by staff in the 2004 integrity survey. We are moving ahead with a series of measures to strengthen ethical conduct. First, I am introducing a robust new policy for the protection of whistle-blowers so that staff can feel sufficiently protected to come forward with concerns about conduct without reprisal. Second, the Organization is moving swiftly to take appropriate disciplinary action against all proven cases of sexual misconduct. At the same time, measures to improve training, to impose a unified standard of conduct, to establish credible complaint mechanisms and to review welfare and recreational needs for personnel in the field are well under way. Third, a more expansive requirement for financial disclosure by senior officials and better dissemination of code of conduct requirements are being introduced.

247. In terms of increasing transparency, the Organization is developing a clear and consistent policy for sharing different categories of United Nations information, which will increase the transparency of our work while ensuring confidentiality where needed. Work is also under way to validate our procurement system to ensure that it meets the highest global standards and to develop policy guidance on the provision of pro bono goods and services.

248. At the same time, I hope that the outcome of the High-level Plenary Meeting in September will allow for a more fundamental strengthening of the Secretariat. I proposed three key reforms in my report of March 2005 (A/59/2005), which, if approved, will go a long way to enhance the efficiency and effectiveness of the Organization. First, I have proposed that all mandates older than five years be reviewed by Member States and considered for deletion. Second, and inextricably linked to the mandate review, I have proposed a one-time buy-out for United Nations personnel whose skills and profile no longer match the new needs of the Secretariat. Third, I have asked the General Assembly to approve a thorough review of all the budgetary and human resources rules that govern the Secretariat. I believe these reforms are long overdue and, if done properly, could have a major impact on modernizing the Organization and making it more responsive.

Chapter VI

Partnerships

Communications

249. The past year has certainly challenged United Nations communicators and, although it has not been a particularly good year for public perceptions of the United Nations in some Member States, I believe that our communication processes have demonstrated a new fluidity and our communicators have shown considerable skill in rising to meet those challenges.

250. In my previous annual report, I spoke of 2003 as a year of consolidation for the Department of Public Information. The Department's reorientation and the other changes I had instituted in its structure have certainly been tested in the forge of public opinion. Its capacity to mobilize resources quickly and efficiently to address priority issues was much needed and is now well established. Throughout the past year, the Department of Public Information has provided advice, support and information on numerous urgent projects to ensure that the public hears of our efforts to address managerial problems at Headquarters and in the field.

251. In the face of a number of crises and bitter and often unjust criticism, the Department strengthened its media monitoring and reinforced its media response capacity. Several public information initiatives were launched to counter misinformation in the media, and a crisis communications team was mobilized, which included senior staff from my Office, the Spokesman's Office and the Department. This team now sets daily priorities that guide not only the Organization's response to media concerns, but also its promotion of important international issues.

252. Guided by this strategy, senior spokes persons are aided in their efforts to make the views of the United Nations known through television and radio appearances and the publication of opinion pieces, interviews and letters in high-impact print media. Information is now provided rapidly to our civil society partners when they express interest in engaging the public on priority issues. In addition, the network of United Nations information centres is employed to ensure that our message is heard all around the world, through interviews and the placement of articles in local media in the regions they serve.

253. I have become increasingly convinced that the Organization must do more to ensure that its staff are informed of our efforts to promote issues and address our critics, and the Department of Public Information has played an important role in improving our internal communications using a new Intranet website entitled "Hot Issues, Cold Facts" and developing and distributing briefing material on major issues to staff in the field and at Headquarters.

254. Throughout the year, the Department of Public Information undertook a series of outreach initiatives that bolstered United Nations efforts to promote tolerance and understanding, most notably through three major seminars addressing specific manifestations of intolerance. The first of them, the "Unlearning Intolerance" seminar on anti-Semitism, held in June 2004, raised the profile of an important problem that the Department addressed again early in 2005, when it hosted a major exhibition from Israel's Yad Vashem (the Holocaust Martyrs' and Heroes' Remembrance Authority) concurrently with the special session of the General Assembly commemorating the liberation of the death camps. The second seminar focused on Islamophobia and drew an equally inspiring cast of experts from across the religious and political spectrum.

255. The Department has also made it a priority to ensure that civil society is informed of the ongoing process of revitalization and reform of the United Nations and, where possible, is engaged in that process. Information about the various proposals in the reports that I have commissioned or encouraged, including the report of the High-level Panel on Threats, Challenges and Change and the report of the Millennium Project, Investing in Development, were vigorously promoted. Since the launch of my own report, "In larger freedom", in March 2005, the focus has shifted to providing information on its recommendations to civil society actors to allow them to be effectively engaged in the review process.

256. As I have stated elsewhere, I believe that the Millennium Development Goals are the framework around which United Nations development activities must be aligned. In addition to providing information about significant relevant events, like the Global Compact Leaders Summit and the Mauritius meeting on the sustainable development of small island developing States, the Department worked with the Millennium Campaign Office to launch a new campaign to generate support for the Millennium Development Goals, featuring a specially designed logo and the catch phrase "keep the promise".

257. The Millennium Development Goals and the role of civil society in achieving them were the primary topics of discussion when 2,000 representatives of non-governmental organizations from around the world attended the fifty-seventh annual Department of Public Information/NGO Conference in September 2004. An even larger turnout is expected for the 2005 conference, which will focus on ways to revitalize the architecture of the international system at whose centre the United Nations stands.

258. Conscious of the need to ensure public support at a time when the United Nations faces an unprecedented surge in demand for peacekeeping operations, the Department of Public Information worked with the Department of Peacekeeping Operations on strategies to inform Member States, decision makers and the public about our operations. Communications experts from Headquarters were sent to peacekeeping missions to review their information programmes, assess their resource requirements and determine what support from Headquarters would best help them to play an effective role in implementing their mission's mandate. Information campaigns aimed at informing United Nations staff, troop contributors and peacekeepers of the seriousness of my determination to prevent unacceptable behaviour by peacekeeping personnel were also instituted, and information on standards of conduct has been produced and distributed to all missions.

259. Following a successful pilot training project in 2004 for peacekeeping information staff, a second training course was held in May 2005. The objective of such exercises is to strengthen United Nations capacity to conduct effective information campaigns at the start of new peacekeeping missions. I intend to continue this training to ensure that the United Nations has a solid cadre of versatile and well-trained public information staff available when required.

260. I continue to examine the network of United Nations information centres with a view to improving their capacity to function effectively. Several significant obstacles have emerged that make it clear that it will not be possible to create regional hubs in other regions comparable to the model for Western Europe. As a consequence, I have recalibrated the proposals I made in 2004 and set out a new modus operandi that aims to rationalize the network of centres based on strategic communications imperatives (see my report to the Committee on Information, A/AC.198/2005/3). I await the advice of the General Assembly on this new approach.

261. The interests of Africa remained at the forefront of the Department of Public Information's priorities, with its revamped publication Africa Renewal now reaching more than a million people (in English or French) and two new radio programmes specifically about Africa added to the Department's regular roster.

262. New media and civil society partnerships play a key role in the Department's efforts to increase the reach of its information products. Under the terms of an arrangement negotiated during the past year, the International Association of University Presidents will now distribute United Nations radio programmes to 100 of its 700 affiliates worldwide by the end of 2005.

263. New partnerships have also been established with radio, television and cable networks and media production companies around the world. One such partnership has resulted in the daily transmission by satellite of a video package of United Nations news footage to more than 500 broadcasters worldwide. Much of the footage from the field distributed under this arrangement is at present produced by UNICEF and other agencies, but as the Department's technical capacities expand I expect that video reports from peacekeeping missions will supplement this material. At the same time, a new digital storage system that is now in operation should make it possible to make high-resolution professional-quality photographs available via the United Nations website.

264. Continuing its efforts to draw attention to vital stories that fall off the media's radar screen, the Department issued its second annual list of 10 stories the world should hear more about. The list included tales of troubling humanitarian emergencies and fragile post-conflict situations, as well as encouraging stories about human rights, health and development. The level of press attention the project has attracted, as well as positive feedback from Member States and others, demonstrates that the top-10 stories project has become a valuable tool for drawing the attention of the media and the world at large to urgent matters of international concern.

265. The United Nations website continues to grow, with about 1 million pages of information, in all six official languages, viewed by users around the globe every day: a 50 per cent increase over 2002 figures. A significant step towards multilingualism on the website has been achieved through the introduction of public access to the Official Document System (ODS) through the Web. Anyone with Internet access can now access official documents in all six official languages electronically.

266. The Internet is now an increasingly important source for news, and the Department continues to strengthen its main online news portal, the UN News Centre, which covers breaking stories on United Nations activities and offers easy access to a wide range of related sources. The News Centre is one of the most heavily visited areas of the United Nations website and is frequently cited as a resource by major media outlets. The list of subscribers to the associated e-mail news service continues to grow steadily, as does the number of news media sites that have established direct links to the UN News Centre.

267. Webcasting of United Nations events is now an integral part of the daily work of the United Nations. In addition to daily webcasts of General Assembly and Security Council meetings and my spokesman's press briefings, the Department of Public Information now webcasts events in connection with conferences held away from Headquarters. In addition to providing millions with immediate virtual access to the deliberative and legislative bodies of the United Nations, the webcasts are now archived on the Web, and more than 10,000 video clips are currently accessed from those archives every day.

268. The involvement of the United Nations in The Interpreter culminated in the premiere of the feature film in April 2005. Based on the large number of interview requests and the media response in general, the desired outcome—an increased awareness of the United Nations among a broad audience—was certainly attained.

269. Outreach to educational institutions continued throughout the past year, with new partnerships with universities and other schools having been established. One result of those outreach efforts was that the number of visitors taking the Headquarters guided tour has returned to pre-11 September 2001 levels, reaching 360,000 in 2004. The largest increase was in the number of students touring the complex. They now make up 42 per cent of the total number of visitors. To highlight the Organization's sixtieth anniversary, the Department of Public Information has launched new promotional campaigns encouraging schools to take the tours and engage with the Organization in other creative ways.

270. The special United Nations website for students, the Cyberschoolbus, was selected as one of the 101 best sites for teachers. It now hosts the most comprehensive website on the Millennium Development Goals developed explicitly for a younger audience. It also launched a new feature, GA Newsflash, providing information about the work of the fifty-ninth session of the General Assembly to a younger audience. The documentaries and web material of the award-winning UN Works programme are also being distributed to schools and educators.

271. An internal reform of the Dag Hammarskjöld Library, currently under way, will foster a culture of knowledge management throughout the Organization, enhance effectiveness and align the Library's activities, services and outputs more closely with the goals and objectives of the Organization.

United Nations Fund for International Partnerships

272. The successful partnership between the United Nations Fund for International Partnerships (UNFIP) and the United Nations Foundation (UNF) entered its eighth year in March 2005. From the inception of the partnership in 1998 to the end of 2004, a total of $637 million has been allocated to fund 324 projects with activities in 122 countries and involving 37 United Nations organizations. The cumulative amount of co-financing from other funding partners, such as multilateral and bilateral donors, has been $237 million, or more than one third of the total. Projects have covered the following programme areas: children's health; population and women; biodiversity; renewable energy and climate change; and peace, security and human rights.

273. The UNF-UNFIP partnership has continued to focus on grant-making and on telling the story of programmes and projects and the work of the United Nations in general. UNF has continued to provide an important platform for advocacy on behalf of the Organization, including strengthening United States-United Nations relations. The Foundation's contributions are available for use in ways that the Organization's core funds are not—opening up possibilities for innovation and creativity. In response to UNF matching and challenge grants, new partners have come forward to collaborate and existing partners have increased their engagement in United Nations causes such as emergency humanitarian assistance and HIV/AIDS prevention.

274. Building on a series of innovative initiatives, UNF, the Coalition for Environmentally Responsible Economies and UNFIP hosted the Second Institutional Investor Summit on Climate Risk in May 2005. The Summit brought together international pension fund managers, Government officials, business executives and treasurers—collectively responsible for managing well over $5 trillion in assets—with non-governmental organizations and senior United Nations officials to explore the connection between climate risk and fiduciary responsibility. It concluded with a call for action to manage climate risk and capture opportunities.

275. The growing interest from the private sector and foundations in the work of the United Nations has led to a substantial increase in enquiries about partnerships with entities of the United Nations system: UNFIP receives an average of five substantive enquiries per week from companies, foundations, individual philanthropists, academic institutions and civil society. The UNFIP office now functions as a one-stop service for opportunities to form partnerships to achieve the Millennium Development Goals. It has helped to create innovative alliances with a number of institutions, foundations and corporations, including Domini, Vodafone and the United States Chamber of Commerce. UNFIP facilitated a partnership between the producers of the film Hotel Rwanda, UNF and UNDP and established the International Fund for Rwanda, channelling profits from the film and entertainment industry to assist in the country's recovery and reconciliation.

276. In December 2004 UNFIP hosted an event for members of the European Foundation Centre to encourage closer collaboration between European foundations and the United Nations. UNFIP also launched the Power Users of Information and Communication Technology initiative in collaboration with the Education Development Centre to harness the power of technically talented youth worldwide. In response to the Indian Ocean tsunami, UNF provided $5 million of its core funds and, with UNFIP support, was able to leverage an additional $35 million from a range of partners, including the American Red Cross.

277. The International Year of Sport and Physical Education(2005) has provided a useful opportunity for UNFIP to promote field-level projects using sport as a tool for development, as it continues to provide support to my Special Adviser on Sport for Development and Peace.

Project services

278. The year 2004 was one of further transition and recovery for the United Nations Office for Project Services (UNOPS). A realignment of the Office's structure to bring services closer to clients proceeded and a comprehensive programme to improve financial conditions and the internal control framework and to streamline business processes and technologies to meet changing client and market needs cost-effectively and efficiently was initiated. UNOPS experienced growing demand for its services, particularly for project management services supporting large-scale, complex programme activities in post-conflict and transitional situations. The increased diversification of its client base is of note, and the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board approved resolutions extending UNOPS service outreach to regional and subregional development banks as well as host Governments in the provision of services to infrastructure and public works programmes.

279. In terms of 2004 performance, UNOPS acquired $739 million in new business, representing the highest level of business acquisition since 1998. Total project delivery for 2004 amounted to $495.22 million, with revenue totalling $45.27 million and expenditures $57.08 million. In addition to ongoing administrative costs, expenditures cover non-recurring investments for the roll-out of a new enterprise resource programme, Atlas, jointly implemented by UNDP/UNFPA and UNOPS, and expenses associated with change initiatives, to recast UNOPS as a financially viable client-centred organization.

Civil society and business partnerships

280. Since the inception of the United Nations 60 years ago, civil society has always been a key partner of the Organization, whether at the country level delivering humanitarian assistance or at the global level participating in intergovernmental debates. The presence and participation of civil society has clearly enhanced the legitimacy, accountability and transparency of the United Nations.

281. The exponential growth in both numbers and influence over the past two decades or so prompted me to establish the Panel of Eminent Persons on United Nations-Civil Society Relations to assess and draw lessons from United Nations interaction with civil society and recommend ways to improve it. The Panel submitted its report in June 2004 (A/58/817 and Corr.1).

282. I issued a report (A/59/354) in September 2004 in response to the report of the Panel. I commended the report of the Panel to the attention of the General Assembly and made specific recommendations on how it could be implemented. Follow-up actions have already been initiated in a number of areas. The General Assembly decided to hold informal interactive hearings on 23 and 24 June 2005 with representatives of NGOs, civil society organizations and the private sector. I hope this will become an annual meeting held just before the opening of each General Assembly session. The United Nations Development Group is increasing its efforts to strengthen the capacity of the United Nations resident coordinator system to engage with civil society and other relevant local actors at the country level. To that end, UNDG has constituted a working group on civil society to develop terms of reference for the civil society focal point in the resident coordinator system and define a set of programme activities at the country level that will be funded by a trust fund to be established. I am currently looking into ways of putting the Non-Governmental Liaison Service on a stronger institutional and financial footing, but it will take some time to arrive at an acceptable solution. Finally, access to official documents by civil society has become much easier since ODS was made available to the public, on 31 December 2004.

283. On the other hand, I have decided not to pursue the proposed Partnership Office. While we had obtained the concurrence of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions for the establishment of a post for the head of the office at the Assistant Secretary-General level, it has not been possible to raise sufficient voluntary funds from donors to ensure its long-term viability. Moreover, some of the expected constituents of the proposed office were not very supportive.

284. So far, the General Assembly has not adopted a resolution in response to the two reports on civil society. Thus, I reiterated in my report to the high-level plenary meeting of the General Assembly to be held in September 2005 (A/59/2005) that the Assembly should engage much more actively with civil society. I sincerely hope that the Member States will act on these recommendations.

285. During the past year the Global Compact has continued its impressive growth while at the same time taking strategic steps to improve quality management. The Global Compact today includes more than 2,000 companies from over 80 countries. At the Global Compact Leaders Summit that I convened in June 2004, the largest gathering of business and civil society representatives ever held at the United Nations, participants from all sectors agreed that the initiative had reached a stage requiring an intensified focus on quality assurance, brand management and governance at both the global and local levels.

286. To that end the Global Compact Office fully implemented during the past year its policy on communication on progress whereby corporate participants are required to submit annually a prominent communication outlining their implementation of the 10 principles or risk being identified as inactive on the Global Compact website. The overall objective is to increase the transparency and public accountability of the initiative. The Global Compact Office communicated directly with all participating chief executive officers concerning this requirement, while also engaging the many country networks to mobilize local participants in that regard. To assist in the effort, the Global Compact Office, in collaboration with key partners, published the Practical Guide to Communication on Progress. As the 30 June 2005 deadline for submissions approached, more than 80 per cent of the largest corporations engaged in the Global Compact had submitted their communications—many of exemplary quality. However, at the same time, the majority of participants—most of them in the developing world—had not yet submitted their communications. An overriding challenge moving forward, therefore, will be to encourage more companies to develop this important communication, understanding hurdles that include language issues as well as fundamental differences in business culture and attitudes with respect to implementation versus communication. Indeed, it is clear that many Global Compact participants have impressive track records in terms of turning the 10 principles into practice, but are unclear why the Global Compact is now placing such importance on communicating those activities. Thus, we must better explain the rationale, as well as provide those companies with a simple model to follow as they get started.

287. The past year also witnessed important developments with respect to Global Compact country networks, now numbering more than 40. A key meeting of country networks was co-convened by the Government of the United Kingdom in December 2004 at which some networks agreed to form formal governance structures while others opted for looser structures. The networks agreed to work with participants in relation to encouraging the development of communications on progress, as well as becoming more robust and dynamic with respect to brand management, the recruitment of new participants and initiating more programmes and activities to broaden implementation. One challenge moving forward will indeed be to encourage "sleepy" networks either to become more active or simply fade way. During the year there were impressive examples of country network activity. For example, the Global Compact Egypt network held a series of seminars on implementation, while the Global Compact Society India helped convene a two-day Global Compact Regional Conclave in South Asia in Jamshedpur, which drew more than 200 participants and focused on the issue of business and poverty.

288. With respect to improving brand management, the Global Compact Office also published a new and more comprehensive policy on the use of the Global Compact logo, introducing a second, modified logo for use by participants and other supporters.

289. During the year, the Global Compact Office—at my request—entered the next phase of its governance review, which included the development and circulation to participants of discussion papers relating to overall governance as well as more refined integrity measures. The process was completed in August 2005. While the governance of the Global Compact will continue to be directed from the Global Compact Office, the initiative's participants will take over greater ownership through the many country networks that have been established. At the country level, participants will focus on broader and deeper implementation of the principles and utilize quality-assurance mechanisms to ensure that commitments are translated into concrete action.

290. The Global Compact Office also played a major role in the development of Business Contributions to United Nations Emergency Relief: An Orientation Guide, which it launched with the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs at a landmark conference on 25 April, attended by former United States President Bill Clinton. The Guide has been designed to assist businesses in identifying effective ways to support United Nations emergency relief efforts. As the response to the tsunami relief effort demonstrated, we can do a better job at the United Nations in helping to channel the enormous generosity of the private sector amid global crises.

291. In terms of specific issue areas, the Global Compact Office on 28 April launched two related publications—Enabling Economies of Peace: Public Policy for Conflict-Sensitive Business, published by the Global Compact, and Conflict-Sensitive Business Practice: Guidance for Extractive Industries, published by the NGO International Alert. I welcome these contributions, as one urges Governments to strengthen efforts to assist businesses in promoting peace, while the other encourages high-impact industries to more aggressively develop conflict-sensitive business practices.

292. Also during the year, the Global Compact stepped up its efforts with respect to engaging the financial markets. Under the umbrella of the Who Cares Wins initiative, launched in June 2004 at the Leaders Summit, a group of mainstream investment companies met in working groups during the year and will publish in 2005 a report and tool that will assist financial analysts in the integration of environmental and social factors to help make markets more inclusive and sustainable. At the same time, the Global Compact and UNEP launched the Principles for Responsible Investment initiative, which is currently mobilizing the chief executive officers of the world's largest pension funds to advance responsible investment globally. In both cases, the challenge will be the adoption of such approaches and guidelines by a critical mass of financial sector actors.

293. The past year also saw the launch of Compact Quarterly, an electronic newsletter containing articles and updates on the Global Compact and its issue areas. During its short life, the newsletter has already enjoyed a readership of more than 3,000 participants, policymakers and thought leaders from around the world.

294. Finally, the Global Compact Office secured the support of the Government of China to convene the Global Compact China Summit on 30 November and 1 December 2005. This promises to be a historic event, bringing Chinese business and Government heads together with the leaders of foreign companies and other organizations to advance responsible corporate citizenship in China and beyond.

295. The past year also saw concrete follow-up to the report of the Commission on the Private Sector and Development entitled "Unleashing Entrepreneurship: Making Business Work for the Poor", presented in March 2004 under the auspices of UNDP. The report was officially launched in more than 30 countries, engaging Heads of State, key policymakers, local Governments and private sector players, both foreign and domestic. The launches were complemented by a series of workshops and new project developments, concrete initiatives embodying the recommendations of the report. The year also saw expansion of the Growing Sustainable Business initiative, a key programme that takes the findings of the Commission's report and pushes the envelope of innovative strategies at the nexus of markets and development. Inspired by the Global Compact's 2002 policy dialogue on business and sustainable development, this initiative facilitates business-led enterprise solutions to poverty reduction. It has amassed a portfolio of over 15 leading global businesses and has further pushed its expansion in Africa, Asia and Latin America. Cited by the recent World Economic Forum, NEPAD and Commission for Africa reports as a ground-breaking contribution to the business and development landscape, I look to its continued growth in inspiring innovative business approaches to advance the Millennium Development Goals.

Conclusion

296. The activities described in the present report cover a broad range of issues of direct relevance to the world's peoples, from peace and security to development, human rights and the rule of law. In all these areas, the United Nations is responding imaginatively to the ever-changing needs of the international community. The Organization is a symbol and an instrument of our shared commitment to working together in pursuit of common objectives. Despite its imperfections, the United Nations embodies humanity's hope for a peaceful and equitable world order.

297. In this sixtieth anniversary year of the United Nations, it is important to recognize the many achievements of the Organization since its founding in San Francisco in 1945. But it must also be a time of reflection on how we can better fulfil our duties and responsibilities. Change is nothing new for the Organization, and change has never been more important. At the High-level Plenary Meeting in September, leaders of Member States will have the opportunity to take bold decisions to make our world fairer and freer, more prosperous and more secure, and to strengthen the United Nations. I am confident they will rise to the occasion for our own sake and for the sake of future generations.

60TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE UNITED NATIONS

"Today, as we celebrate sixty years of our United Nations, we must recognize that the world today is very different from that of our founders. The United Nations must reflect this new age, and respond to its challenges.

Kofi Annan

The 2005 World Summit of the United Nations General Assembly

Gathering of world leaders. From 14 to 16 September, world leaders gathered at United Nations Headquarters in New York for a World Summit (a High-level Plenary Meeting of the United Nations General Assembly) to commemorate the sixtieth anniversary of the founding of the Organization and to chart its future course in a changed world. Convened at the commencement of its sixtieth (2005) session, in response to General Assembly resolution 58/291 [YUN 2004, p. 1363], the World Summit was organized around six plenary meetings and four interactive roundtable sessions. During those three days, world leaders from over 170 countries reviewed the status of implementation of the Millennium Declaration, adopted at the 2000 Millennium Summit [YUN 2000, p. 49], as well as the integrated follow-up to other major United Nations conferences and summits in the economic, social and related fields.

The World Summit was preceded by the resumed fifty-ninth session of the Assembly (15 April), which considered the preparations for the event; a High-level Dialogue on Financing for Development (New York, 27-28 June) (see p. 1065); informal interactive hearings with representatives of civil society and private sector organizations (New York, 23-24 June) (see p. 75); and the Second World Conference of Speakers of Parliament (New York, 7-9 September) (see p. 76).

To assist the World Summit's preparations and negotiations, the Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly a March report entitled "In larger freedom: towards development, security and human rights for all" [A/59/2005 & Corr. 1] (see p. 67). Three addenda to the report contained explanatory notes on his proposals for the creation of a Peacebuilding Commission [A/59/2005/Add.2], a Human Rights Council [A/59/2005/Add.1], and a letter to the Assembly President containing the Plan of Action for the Human Rights Council submitted by the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights [A/59/2005/Add.3]. He also transmitted, by a March note [A/59/727], the overview of the UN Millennium Project's final report, entitled "Investing in Development: A Practical Plan to Achieve the Millennium Development Goals" (see p. 70), prepared by 265 of the world's leading development experts, headed by the Secretary-General's Special Adviser on the Millennium Development Goals (MDGs), Professor Jeffrey D. Sachs (United States).

The World Summit was opened on 14 September by Göran Persson, Prime Minister of Sweden and Co-Chairperson of the Summit, who told the gathering: "five years ago, at the outset of the new millennium, we met here to address key challenges for the future of mankind. Our response included a set of ambitious, yet realistic goals for development. It is time to take stock and evaluate. What have we achieved? Where have we failed?" Good progress in several areas, he added, indicated that eliminating global poverty was not a forlorn hope. It could be done. The challenge was to make development work everywhere. "Let us take advantage of this great opportunity, and our presence here, to live up to our commitments in the Millennium Declaration and the Development Goals. Let each and every one of us do whatever we can to contribute to the great enterprise of building a better United Nations for the benefit of all mankind," he urged.

The President of Gabon, El Hadj Omar Bongo Ondimba, who also Co-Chaired the Summit, said "today, we must acknowledge that we are far from our goal" and drew attention to persisting problems regarding peace and collective security, owing to increasing acts of violence throughout the world, including in the Middle East, Africa and Asia. "Disease and poverty continued to weigh heavily on millions of people in developing countries", he observed, noting that, "clearly, the declaration to be adopted at the end of this summit must not be just another statement. I hope that a new impetus will be born and a new commitment imbued with pragmatism to respond tangibly to the challenges that face us . . . It is therefore our duty to act together to give future generations a better world."

United States President George W. Bush, in his address as the host country President, said "the advance of freedom and security is the calling of our time. It is the mission of the United Nations . . . to spread the hope of liberty, to fight poverty and disease and to help secure human rights and human dignity for all the world's people. To help make those promises real, the United Nations must be strong and efficient, free from corruption and accountable to the people it serves. The United Nations must stand for integrity—and live by the high standards it sets for others. Meaningful institutional reform must include measures to improve internal oversight, identify cost savings and ensure that precious resources are used for their intended purpose."

The Secretary-General, in his address to the Summit, said that, in marking its sixtieth anniversary, the Organization remained fully engaged in conflict resolution, peacekeeping, humanitarian assistance, defence of human rights and development around the world. However, there were still deep divisions among Member States and the underperformance of their collective institutions were preventing them from coming together to meet the threats they faced and to seize the opportunities before them. The reports of the High-level Panel on Threats, Challenges and Change [YUN 2004, p. 54] and on the UN Millennium Project [A/59/727] had set the agenda for reform, along with a balanced set of proposals he had put forward for decisions at the World Summit (see p. 69), which were ambitious, but necessary and achievable.

The draft Summit outcome document, which had been negotiated, while being a far-reaching package of changes, had not achieved the sweeping and fundamental reform that was required, due to sharp differences of opinion, some of which were substantive and legitimate. The package, however, was a good start and the Organization should turn to the next stages in the reform process. First, it should implement what had been agreed, including getting the Peacebuilding Commission and the Human Rights Council up and running, concluding a comprehensive convention on terrorism and ensuring that the Democracy Fund (see p. 655) was working effectively. Second, the Organization should continue to work with determination on the tough issues on which progress was urgent. A healthy, effective United Nations was vital in the service of all the world's peoples. That was why the reform process mattered and had to continue. He urged world leaders to keep working on the reform agenda, to have the patience to persevere and the vision to forge a real consensus.

On 16 September, after three days of statements, debate and exchange of views in roundtable sessions (see p. 71), consultations and negotiations, the General Assembly (see below) adopted the draft outcome document of its 2005 High-level Plenary Meeting (World Summit), resolution 60/1, contained in the annex to its resolution 59/314 of 13 September, which was adopted during its resumed fifty-ninth session. In resolution 60/1, world leaders reaffirmed their faith in the United Nations and their commitment to the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations and outlined a set of principles and a vision for providing multilateral solutions to problems in the areas of development, peace and collective security, human rights and the rule of law and strengthening of the United Nations. The Secretary-General had also submitted to the Summit on 14 September [A/60/355] a statement of the programme budget implications of draft Summit outcome document, in the amount of $80 million, for consideration in the context of the review of the programme budgets for the biennia 2004-2005 and 2006-2007.

Before the adoption of resolution 60/1, the Venezuelan representative, in an explanation of position, said that the outcome document was conceived in darkness and brought forth from the shadows to be approved, in violation of the basic democratic process. The analysis and preparation of the document were restricted to a small group of 32 persons, and subsequently to a smaller group of 15, and thereafter, to an even smaller group. That, he purported, represented an increasing and dangerous curtailment of the exercise of democracy in the Assembly.

2005 World Summit Outcome

A five-part 2005 World Summit Outcome, set out in resolution 60/1 [draft: A/60/L.1], was adopted by the General Assembly on 16 September [meeting 8] without vote [agenda items 48 and 121].

The General Assembly,

Adopts the following 2005 World Summit Outcome:

I. Values and principles

1. We, Heads of State and Government, have gathered at United Nations Headquarters in New York from 14 to 16 September 2005.

2. We reaffirm our faith in the United Nations and our commitment to the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations and international law, which are indispensable foundations of a more peaceful, prosperous and just world, and reiterate our determination to foster strict respect for them.

3. We reaffirm the United Nations Millennium Declaration, which we adopted at the dawn of the twenty-first century. We recognize the valuable role of the major United Nations conferences and summits in the economic, social and related fields, including the Millennium Summit, in mobilizing the international community at the local, national, regional and global levels and in guiding the work of the United Nations.

4. We reaffirm that our common fundamental values, including freedom, equality, solidarity, tolerance, respect for all human rights, respect for nature and shared responsibility, are essential to international relations.

5. We are determined to establish a just and lasting peace all over the world in accordance with the purposes and principles of the Charter. We rededicate ourselves to support all efforts to uphold the sovereign equality of all States, respect their territorial integrity and political independence, to refrain in our international relations from the threat or use of force in any manner inconsistent with the purposes and principles of the United Nations, to uphold resolution of disputes by peaceful means and in conformity with the principles of justice and international law, the right to self-determination of peoples which remain under colonial domination and foreign occupation, non-interference in the internal affairs of States, respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms, respect for the equal rights of all without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion, international cooperation in solving international problems of an economic, social, cultural or humanitarian character and the fulfilment in good faith of the obligations assumed in accordance with the Charter.

6. We reaffirm the vital importance of an effective multilateral system, in accordance with international law, in order to better address the multifaceted and interconnected challenges and threats confronting our world and to achieve progress in the areas of peace and security, development and human rights, underlining the central role of the United Nations, and commit ourselves to promoting and strengthening the effectiveness of the Organization through the implementation of its decisions and resolutions.

7. We believe that today, more than ever before, we live in a global and interdependent world. No State can stand wholly alone. We acknowledge that collective security depends on effective cooperation, in accordance with international law, against transnational threats.

8. We recognize that current developments and circumstances require that we urgently build consensus on major threats and challenges. We commit ourselves to translating that consensus into concrete action, including addressing the root causes of those threats and challenges with resolve and determination.

9. We acknowledge that peace and security, development and human rights are the pillars of the United Nations system and the foundations for collective security and well-being. We recognize that development, peace and security and human rights are interlinked and mutually reinforcing.

10. We reaffirm that development is a central goal in itself and that sustainable development in its economic, social and environmental aspects constitutes a key element of the overarching framework of United Nations activities.

11. We acknowledge that good governance and the rule of law at the national and international levels are essential for sustained economic growth, sustainable development and the eradication of poverty and hunger.

12. We reaffirm that gender equality and the promotion and protection of the full enjoyment of all human rights and fundamental freedoms for all are essential to advance development and peace and security. We are committed to creating a world fit for future generations, which takes into account the best interests of the child.

13. We reaffirm the universality, indivisibility, interdependence and interrelatedness of all human rights.

14. Acknowledging the diversity of the world, we recognize that all cultures and civilizations contribute to the enrichment of humankind. We acknowledge the importance of respect and understanding for religious and cultural diversity throughout the world. In order to promote international peace and security, we commit ourselves to advancing human welfare, freedom and progress everywhere, as well as to encouraging tolerance, respect, dialogue and cooperation among different cultures, civilizations and peoples.

15. We pledge to enhance the relevance, effectiveness, efficiency, accountability and credibility of the United Nations system. This is our shared responsibility and interest.

16. We therefore resolve to create a more peaceful, prosperous and democratic world and to undertake concrete measures to continue finding ways to implement the outcome of the Millennium Summit and the other major United Nations conferences and summits so as to provide multilateral solutions to problems in the four following areas:

- Development
- Peace and collective security
- Human rights and the rule of law
- Strengthening of the United Nations

II. Development

17. We strongly reiterate our determination to ensure the timely and full realization of the development goals and objectives agreed at the major United Nations conferences and summits, including those agreed at the Millennium Summit that are described as the Millennium Development Goals, which have helped to galvanize efforts towards poverty eradication.

18. We emphasize the vital role played by the major United Nations conferences and summits in the economic, social and related fields in shaping a broad development vision and in identifying commonly agreed objectives, which have contributed to improving human life in different parts of the world.

19. We reaffirm our commitment to eradicate poverty and promote sustained economic growth, sustainable development and global prosperity for all. We are encouraged by reductions in poverty in some countries in the recent past and are determined to reinforce and extend this trend to benefit people worldwide. We remain concerned, however, about the slow and uneven progress towards poverty eradication and the realization of other development goals in some regions. We commit ourselves to promoting the development of the productive sectors in developing countries to enable them to participate more effectively in and benefit from the process of globalization. We underline the need for urgent action on all sides, including more ambitious national development strategies and efforts backed by increased international support.

Global partnership for development

20. We reaffirm our commitment to the global partnership for development set out in the Millennium Declaration, the Monterrey Consensus and the Johannesburg Plan of Implementation.

21. We further reaffirm our commitment to sound policies, good governance at all levels and the rule of law, and to mobilize domestic resources, attract international flows, promote international trade as an engine for development and increase international financial and technical cooperation for development, sustainable debt financing and external debt relief and to enhance the coherence and consistency of the international monetary, financial and trading systems.

22. We reaffirm that each country must take primary responsibility for its own development and that the role of national policies and development strategies cannot be overemphasized in the achievement of sustainable development. We also recognize that national efforts should be complemented by supportive global programmes, measures and policies aimed at expanding the development opportunities of developing countries, while taking into account national conditions and ensuring respect for national ownership, strategies and sovereignty. To this end, we resolve:

(a) To adopt, by 2006, and implement comprehensive national development strategies to achieve the internationally agreed development goals and objectives, including the Millennium Development Goals;

(b) To manage public finances effectively to achieve and maintain macroeconomic stability and long-term growth and to make effective and transparent use of public funds and ensure that development assistance is used to build national capacities;

(c) To support efforts by developing countries to adopt and implement national development policies and strategies through increased development assistance, the promotion of international trade as an engine for development, the transfer of technology on mutually agreed terms, increased investment flows and wider and deeper debt relief, and to support developing countries by providing a substantial increase in aid of sufficient quality and arriving in a timely manner to assist them in achieving the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals;

(d) That the increasing interdependence of national economies in a globalizing world and the emergence of rule-based regimes for international economic relations have meant that the space for national economic policy, that is, the scope for domestic policies, especially in the areas of trade, investment and industrial development, is now often framed by international disciplines, commitments and global market considerations. It is for each Government to evaluate the trade-off between the benefits of accepting international rules and commitments and the constraints posed by the loss of policy space. It is particularly important for developing countries, bearing in mind development goals and objectives, that all countries take into account the need for appropriate balance between national policy space and international disciplines and commitments;

(e) To enhance the contribution of non-governmental organizations, civil society, the private sector and other stakeholders in national development efforts, as well as in the promotion of the global partnership for development;

(f) To ensure that the United Nations funds and programmes and the specialized agencies support the efforts of developing countries through the common country assessment and United Nations Development Assistance Framework process, enhancing their support for capacity-building;

(g) To protect our natural resource base in support of development.

Financing for development

23. We reaffirm the Monterrey Consensus and recognize that mobilizing financial resources for development and the effective use of those resources in developing countries and countries with economies in transition are central to a global partnership for development in support of the achievement of the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals. In this regard:

(a) We are encouraged by recent commitments to substantial increases in official development assistance and the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development estimate that official development assistance to all developing countries will now increase by around 50 billion United States dollars a year by 2010, while recognizing that a substantial increase in such assistance is required to achieve the internationally agreed goals, including the Millennium Development Goals, within their respective time frames;

(b) We welcome the increased resources that will become available as a result of the establishment of timetables by many developed countries to achieve the target of 0.7 per cent of gross national product for official development assistance by 2015 and to reach at least 0.5 per cent of gross national product for official development assistance by 2010 as well as, pursuant to the Brussels Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the Decade 2001-2010, 0.15 per cent to 0.20 per cent for the least developed countries no later than 2010, and urge those developed countries that have not yet done so to make concrete efforts in this regard in accordance with their commitments;

(c) We further welcome recent efforts and initiatives to enhance the quality of aid and to increase its impact, including the Paris Declaration on Aid Effectiveness, and resolve to take concrete, effective and timely action in implementing all agreed commitments on aid effectiveness, with clear monitoring and deadlines, including through further aligning assistance with countries' strategies, building institutional capacities, reducing transaction costs and eliminating bureaucratic procedures, making progress on untying aid, enhancing the absorptive capacity and financial management of recipient countries and strengthening the focus on development results;

(d) We recognize the value of developing innovative sources of financing, provided those sources do not unduly burden developing countries. In that regard, we take note with interest of the international efforts, contributions and discussions, such as the Action against Hunger and Poverty, aimed at identifying innovative and additional sources of financing for development on a public, private, domestic or external basis to increase and supplement traditional sources of financing. Some countries will implement the International Finance Facility. Some countries have launched the International Finance Facility for immunization. Some countries will implement in the near future, utilizing their national authorities, a contribution on airline tickets to enable the financing of development projects, in particular in the health sector, directly or through financing of the International Finance Facility. Other countries are considering whether and to what extent they will participate in these initiatives;

(e) We acknowledge the vital role the private sector can play in generating new investments, employment and financing for development;

(f) We resolve to address the development needs of low-income developing countries by working in competent multilateral and international forums, to help them meet, inter alia, their financial, technical and technological requirements;

(g) We resolve to continue to support the development efforts of middle-income developing countries by working, in competent multilateral and international forums and also through bilateral arrangements, on measures to help them meet, inter alia, their financial, technical and technological requirements;

(h) We resolve to operationalize the World Solidarity Fund established by the General Assembly and invite those countries in a position to do so to make voluntary contributions to the Fund;

(i) We recognize the need for access to financial services, in particular for the poor, including through microfinance and microcredit.

Domestic resource mobilization

24. In our common pursuit of growth, poverty eradication and sustainable development, a critical challenge is to ensure the necessary internal conditions for mobilizing domestic savings, both public and private, sustaining adequate levels of productive investment, increasing human capacity, reducing capital flight, curbing the illicit transfer of funds and enhancing international cooperation for creating an enabling domestic environment. We undertake to support the efforts of developing countries to create a domestic enabling environment for mobilizing domestic resources. To this end, we therefore resolve:

(a) To pursue good governance and sound macroeconomic policies at all levels and support developing countries in their efforts to put in place the policies and investments to drive sustained economic growth, promote small and medium-sized enterprises, promote employment generation and stimulate the private sector;

(b) To reaffirm that good governance is essential for sustainable development; that sound economic policies, solid democratic institutions responsive to the needs of the people and improved infrastructure are the basis for sustained economic growth, poverty eradication and employment creation; and that freedom, peace and security, domestic stability, respect for human rights, including the right to development, the rule of law, gender equality and market-oriented policies and an overall commitment to just and democratic societies are also essential and mutually reinforcing;

(c) To make the fight against corruption a priority at all levels and we welcome all actions taken in this regard at the national and international levels, including the adoption of policies that emphasize accountability, transparent public sector management and corporate responsibility and accountability, including efforts to return assets transferred through corruption, consistent with the United Nations Convention against Corruption. We urge all States that have not done so to consider signing, ratifying and implementing the Convention;

(d) To channel private capabilities and resources into stimulating the private sector in developing countries through actions in the public, public/private and private spheres to create an enabling environment for partnership and innovation that contributes to accelerated economic development and hunger and poverty eradication;

(e) To support efforts to reduce capital flight and measures to curb the illicit transfer of funds.

Investment

25. We resolve to encourage greater direct investment, including foreign investment, in developing countries and countries with economies in transition to support their development activities and to enhance the benefits they can derive from such investments. In this regard:

(a) We continue to support efforts by developing countries and countries with economies in transition to create a domestic environment conducive to attracting investments through, inter alia, achieving a transparent, stable and predictable investment climate with proper contract enforcement and respect for property rights and the rule of law and pursuing appropriate policy and regulatory frameworks that encourage business formation;

(b) We will put into place policies to ensure adequate investment in a sustainable manner in health, clean water and sanitation, housing and education and in the provision of public goods and social safety nets to protect vulnerable and disadvantaged sectors of society;

(c) We invite national Governments seeking to develop infrastructure projects and generate foreign direct investment to pursue strategies with the involvement of both the public and private sectors and, where appropriate, international donors;

(d) We call upon international financial and banking institutions to consider enhancing the transparency of risk rating mechanisms. Sovereign risk assessments, made by the private sector should maximize the use of strict, objective and transparent parameters, which can be facilitated by high-quality data and analysis;

(e) We underscore the need to sustain sufficient and stable private financial flows to developing countries and countries with economies in transition. It is important to promote measures in source and destination countries to improve transparency and the information about financial flows to developing countries, particularly countries in Africa, the least developed countries, small island developing States and landlocked developing countries. Measures that mitigate the impact of excessive volatility of short-term capital flows are important and must be considered.

Debt

26. We emphasize the high importance of a timely, effective, comprehensive and durable solution to the debt problems of developing countries, since debt financing and relief can be an important source of capital for development. To this end:

(a) We welcome the recent proposals of the Group of Eight to cancel 100 per cent of the outstanding debt of eligible heavily indebted poor countries owed to the International Monetary Fund, the International Development Association and African Development Fund and to provide additional resources to ensure that the financing capacity of the international financial institutions is not reduced;

(b) We emphasize that debt sustainability is essential for underpinning growth and underline the importance of debt sustainability to the efforts to achieve national development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals, recognizing the key role that debt relief can play in liberating resources that can be directed towards activities consistent with poverty eradication, sustained economic growth and sustainable development;

(c) We further stress the need to consider additional measures and initiatives aimed at ensuring long-term debt sustainability through increased grant-based financing, cancellation of 100 per cent of the official multilateral and bilateral debt of heavily indebted poor countries and, where appropriate, and on a case-by-case basis, to consider significant debt relief or restructuring for low- and middle-income developing countries with an unsustainable debt burden that are not part of the Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Initiative, as well as the exploration of mechanisms to comprehensively address the debt problems of those countries. Such mechanisms may include debt for sustainable development swaps or multicreditor debt swap arrangements, as appropriate. These initiatives could include further efforts by the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank to develop the debt sustainability framework for low-income countries. This should be achieved in a fashion that does not detract from official development assistance resources, while maintaining the financial integrity of the multilateral financial institutions.

Trade

27. A universal, rule-based, open, non-discriminatory and equitable multilateral trading system, as well as meaningful trade liberalization, can substantially stimulate development worldwide, benefiting countries at all stages of development. In that regard, we reaffirm our commitment to trade liberalization and to ensure that trade plays its full part in promoting economic growth, employment and development for all.

28. We are committed to efforts designed to ensure that developing countries, especially the least-developed countries, participate fully in the world trading system in order to meet their economic development needs, and reaffirm our commitment to enhanced and predictable market access for the exports of developing countries.

29. We will work towards the objective, in accordance with the Brussels Programme of Action, of duty-free and quota-free market access for all least developed countries' products to the markets of developed countries, as well as to the markets of developing countries in a position to do so, and support their efforts to overcome their supply-side constraints.

30. We are committed to supporting and promoting increased aid to build productive and trade capacities of developing countries and to taking further steps in that regard, while welcoming the substantial support already provided.

31. We will work to accelerate and facilitate the accession of developing countries and countries with economies in transition to the World Trade Organization consistent with its criteria, recognizing the importance of universal integration in the rules-based global trading system.

32. We will work expeditiously towards implementing the development dimensions of the Doha work programme.

Commodities

33. We emphasize the need to address the impact of weak and volatile commodity prices and support the efforts of commodity-dependent countries to restructure, diversify and strengthen the competitiveness of their commodity sectors.

Quick-impact initiatives

34. Given the need to accelerate progress immediately in countries where current trends make the achievement of the internationally agreed development goals unlikely, we resolve to urgently identify and implement country-led initiatives with adequate international support, consistent with long-term national development strategies, that promise immediate and durable improvements in the lives of people and renewed hope for the achievement of the development goals. In this regard, we will take such actions as the distribution of malaria bed nets, including free distribution, where appropriate, and effective anti-malarial treatments, the expansion of local school meal programmes, using home-grown foods where possible, and the elimination of user fees for primary education and, where appropriate, health-care services.

Systemic issues and global economic decision-making

35. We reaffirm the commitment to broaden and strengthen the participation of developing countries and countries with economies in transition in international economic decision-making and norm-setting, and to that end stress the importance of continuing efforts to reform the international financial architecture, noting that enhancing the voice and participation of developing countries and countries with economies in transition in the Bretton Woods institutions remains a continuous concern.

36. We reaffirm our commitment to governance, equity and transparency in the financial, monetary and trading systems. We are also committed to open, equitable, rule-based, predictable and non-discriminatory multilateral trading and financial systems.

37. We also underscore our commitment to sound domestic financial sectors, which make a vital contribution to national development efforts, as an important component of an international financial architecture that is supportive of development.

38. We further reaffirm the need for the United Nations to play a fundamental role in the promotion of international cooperation for development and the coherence, coordination and implementation of development goals and actions agreed upon by the international community, and we resolve to strengthen coordination within the United Nations system in close cooperation with all other multilateral financial, trade and development institutions in order to support sustained economic growth, poverty eradication and sustainable development.

39. Good governance at the international level is fundamental for achieving sustainable development. In order to ensure a dynamic and enabling international economic environment, it is important to promote global economic governance through addressing the international finance, trade, technology and investment patterns that have an impact on the development prospects of developing countries. To this effect, the international community should take all necessary and appropriate measures, including ensuring support for structural and macroeconomic reform, a comprehensive solution to the external debt problem and increasing the market access of developing countries.

South-South cooperation

40. We recognize the achievements and great potential of South-South cooperation and encourage the promotion of such cooperation, which complements North-South cooperation as an effective contribution to development and as a means to share best practices and provide enhanced technical cooperation. In this context, we note the recent decision of the leaders of the South, adopted at the Second South Summit and contained in the Doha Declaration and the Doha Plan of Action, to intensify their efforts at South-South cooperation, including through the establishment of the New Asian-African Strategic Partnership and other regional cooperation mechanisms, and encourage the international community, including the international financial institutions, to support the efforts of developing countries, inter alia, through triangular cooperation. We also take note with appreciation of the launching of the third round of negotiations on the Global System of Trade Preferences among Developing Countries as an important instrument to stimulate South-South cooperation.

41. We welcome the work of the United Nations High-Level Committee on South-South Cooperation and invite countries to consider supporting the Special Unit for South-South Cooperation within the United Nations Development Programme in order to respond effectively to the development needs of developing countries.

42. We recognize the considerable contribution of arrangements such as the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries Fund initiated by a group of developing countries, as well as the potential contribution of the South Fund for Development and Humanitarian Assistance, to development activities in developing countries.

Education

43. We emphasize the critical role of both formal and informal education in the achievement of poverty eradication and other development goals as envisaged in the Millennium Declaration, in particular basic education and training for eradicating illiteracy, and strive for expanded secondary and higher education as well as vocational education and technical training, especially for girls and women, the creation of human resources and infrastructure capabilities and the empowerment of those living in poverty. In this context, we reaffirm the Dakar Framework for Action adopted at the World Education Forum in 2000 and recognize the importance of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization strategy for the eradication of poverty, especially extreme poverty, in supporting the Education for All programmes as a tool to achieve the millennium development goal of universal primary education by 2015.

44. We reaffirm our commitment to support developing country efforts to ensure that all children have access to and complete free and compulsory primary education of good quality, to eliminate gender inequality and imbalance and to renew efforts to improve girls' education. We also commit ourselves to continuing to support the efforts of developing countries in the implementation of the Education for All initiative, including with enhanced resources of all types through the Education for All fast-track initiative in support of country-led national education plans.

45. We commit ourselves to promoting education for peace and human development.

Rural and agricultural development

46. We reaffirm that food security and rural and agricultural development must be adequately and urgently addressed in the context of national development and response strategies and, in this context, will enhance the contributions of indigenous and local communities, as appropriate. We are convinced that the eradication of poverty, hunger and malnutrition, particularly as they affect children, is crucial for the achievement of the Millennium Development Goals. Rural and agricultural development should be an integral part of national and international development policies. We deem it necessary to increase productive investment in rural and agricultural development to achieve food security. We commit ourselves to increasing support for agricultural development and trade capacity-building in the agricultural sector in developing countries. Support for commodity development projects, especially market-based projects, and for their preparation under the Second Account of the Common Fund for Commodities should be encouraged.

Employment

47. We strongly support fair globalization and resolve to make the goals of full and productive employment and decent work for all, including for women and young people, a central objective of our relevant national and international policies as well as our national development strategies, including poverty reduction strategies, as part of our efforts to achieve the Millennium Development Goals. These measures should also encompass the elimination of the worst forms of child labour, as defined in International Labour Organization Convention No. 182, and forced labour. We also resolve to ensure full respect for the fundamental principles and rights at work.

Sustainable development: managing and protecting our common environment

48. We reaffirm our commitment to achieve the goal of sustainable development, including through the implementation of Agenda 21 and the Johannesburg Plan of Implementation. To this end, we commit ourselves to undertaking concrete actions and measures at all levels and to enhancing international cooperation, taking into account the Rio principles. These efforts will also promote the integration of the three components of sustainable development—economic development, social development and environmental protection—as interdependent and mutually reinforcing pillars. Poverty eradication, changing unsustainable patterns of production and consumption and protecting and managing the natural resource base of economic and social development are overarching objectives of and essential requirements for sustainable development.

49. We will promote sustainable consumption and production patterns, with the developed countries taking the lead and all countries benefiting from the process, as called for in the Johannesburg Plan of Implementation. In that context, we support developing countries in their efforts to promote a recycling economy.

50. We face serious and multiple challenges in tackling climate change, promoting clean energy, meeting energy needs and achieving sustainable development, and we will act with resolve and urgency in this regard.

51. We recognize that climate change is a serious and long-term challenge that has the potential to affect every part of the globe. We emphasize the need to meet all the commitments and obligations we have undertaken in the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change and other relevant international agreements, including, for many of us, the Kyoto Protocol. The Convention is the appropriate framework for addressing future action on climate change at the global level.

52. We reaffirm our commitment to the ultimate objective of the Convention: to stabilize greenhouse gas concentrations in the atmosphere at a level that prevents dangerous anthropogenic interference with the climate system.

53. We acknowledge that the global nature of climate change calls for the widest possible cooperation and participation in an effective and appropriate international response, in accordance with the principles of the Convention. We are committed to moving forward the global discussion on long-term cooperative action to address climate change, in accordance with these principles. We stress the importance of the eleventh session of the Conference of the Parties to the Convention, to be held in Montreal in November 2005.

54. We acknowledge various partnerships that are under way to advance action on clean energy and climate change, including bilateral, regional and multilateral initiatives.

55. We are committed to taking further action through practical international cooperation, inter alia:

(a) To promote innovation, clean energy and energy efficiency and conservation; improve policy, regulatory and financing frameworks; and accelerate the deployment of cleaner technologies;

(b) To enhance private investment, transfer of technologies and capacity-building to developing countries, as called for in the Johannesburg Plan of Implementation, taking into account their own energy needs and priorities;

(c) To assist developing countries to improve their resilience and integrate adaptation goals into their sustainable development strategies, given that adaptation to the effects of climate change due to both natural and human factors is a high priority for all nations, particularly those most vulnerable, namely, those referred to in article 4.8 of the Convention;

(d) To continue to assist developing countries, in particular small island developing States, least developed countries and African countries, including those that are particularly vulnerable to climate change, in addressing their adaptation needs relating to the adverse effects of climate change.

56. In pursuance of our commitment to achieve sustainable development, we further resolve:

(a) To promote the United Nations Decade of Education for Sustainable Development and the International Decade for Action, "Water for Life";

(b) To support and strengthen the implementation of the United Nations Convention to Combat Desertification in Those Countries Experiencing Serious Drought and/or Desertification, Particularly in Africa, to address causes of desertification and land degradation, as well as poverty resulting from land degradation, through, inter alia, the mobilization of adequate and predictable financial resources, the transfer of technology and capacity-building at all levels;

(c) That the States parties to the Convention on Biological Diversity and the Cartagena Protocol on Biosafety should support the implementation of the Convention and the Protocol, as well as other biodiversity-related agreements and the Johannesburg commitment for a significant reduction in the rate of loss of biodiversity by 2010. The States parties will continue to negotiate within the framework of the Convention on Biological Diversity, bearing in mind the Bonn Guidelines, an international regime to promote and safeguard the fair and equitable sharing of benefits arising out of the utilization of genetic resources. All States will fulfil commitments and significantly reduce the rate of loss of biodiversity by 2010 and continue ongoing efforts towards elaborating and negotiating an international regime on access to genetic resources and benefit-sharing;

(d) To recognize that the sustainable development of indigenous peoples and their communities is crucial in our fight against hunger and poverty;

(e) To reaffirm our commitment, subject to national legislation, to respect, preserve and maintain the knowledge, innovations and practices of indigenous and local communities embodying traditional lifestyles relevant to the conservation and sustainable use of biological diversity, promote their wider application with the approval and involvement of the holders of such knowledge, innovations and practices and encourage the equitable sharing of the benefits arising from their utilization;

(f) To work expeditiously towards the establishment of a worldwide early warning system for all natural hazards with regional nodes, building on existing national and regional capacity such as the newly established Indian Ocean Tsunami Warning and Mitigation System;

(g) To fully implement the Hyogo Declaration and the Hyogo Framework for Action 2005-2015 adopted at the World Conference on Disaster Reduction, in particular those commitments related to assistance for developing countries that are prone to natural disasters and disaster-stricken States in the transition phase towards sustainable physical, social and economic recovery, for risk-reduction activities in post-disaster recovery and for rehabilitation processes;

(h) To assist developing countries' efforts to prepare integrated water resources management and water efficiency plans as part of their national development strategies and to provide access to safe drinking water and basic sanitation in accordance with the Millennium Declaration and the Johannesburg Plan of Implementation, including halving by 2015 the proportion of people who are unable to reach or afford safe drinking water and who do not have access to basic sanitation;

(i) To accelerate the development and dissemination of affordable and cleaner energy efficiency and energy conservation technologies, as well as the transfer of such technologies, in particular to developing countries, on favourable terms, including on concessional and preferential terms, as mutually agreed, bearing in mind that access to energy facilitates the eradication of poverty;

(j) To strengthen the conservation, sustainable management and development of all types of forests for the benefit of current and future generations, including through enhanced international cooperation, so that trees and forests may contribute fully to the achievement of the internationally agreed development goals, including those contained in the Millennium Declaration, taking full account of the linkages between the forest sector and other sectors. We look forward to the discussions at the sixth session of the United Nations Forum on Forests;

(k) To promote the sound management of chemicals and hazardous wastes throughout their life cycle, in accordance with Agenda 21 and the Johannesburg Plan of Implementation, aiming to achieve that by 2020 chemicals are used and produced in ways that lead to the minimization of significant adverse effects on human health and the environment using transparent and science-based risk assessment and risk management procedures, by adopting and implementing a voluntary strategic approach to international management of chemicals, and to support developing countries in strengthening their capacity for the sound management of chemicals and hazardous wastes by providing technical and financial assistance, as appropriate;

(l) To improve cooperation and coordination at all levels in order to address issues related to oceans and seas in an integrated manner and promote integrated management and sustainable development of the oceans and seas;

(m) To achieve significant improvement in the lives of at least 100 million slum-dwellers by 2020, recognizing the urgent need for the provision of increased resources for affordable housing and housing-related infrastructure, prioritizing slum prevention and slum upgrading, and to encourage support for the United Nations Habitat and Human Settlements Foundation and its Slum Upgrading Facility;

(n) To acknowledge the invaluable role of the Global Environment Facility in facilitating cooperation with developing countries; we look forward to a successful replenishment this year along with the successful conclusion of all outstanding commitments from the third replenishment;

(o) To note that cessation of the transport of radioactive materials through the regions of small island developing States is an ultimate desired goal of small island developing States and some other countries and recognize the right of freedom of navigation in accordance with international law. States should maintain dialogue and consultation, in particular under the aegis of the International Atomic Energy Agency and the International Maritime Organization, with the aim of improved mutual understanding, confidence-building and enhanced communication in relation to the safe maritime transport of radioactive materials. States involved in the transport of such materials are urged to continue to engage in dialogue with small island developing States and other States to address their concerns. These concerns include the further development and strengthening, within the appropriate forums, of international regulatory regimes to enhance safety, disclosure, liability, security and compensation in relation to such transport.

HIV/AIDS, malaria, tuberculosis and other health issues

57. We recognize that HIV/AIDS, malaria, tuberculosis and other infectious diseases pose severe risks for the entire world and serious challenges to the achievement of development goals. We acknowledge the substantial efforts and financial contributions made by the international community, while recognizing that these diseases and other emerging health challenges require a sustained international response. To this end, we commit ourselves to:

(a) Increasing investment, building on existing mechanisms and through partnership, to improve health systems in developing countries and those with economies in transition with the aim of providing sufficient health workers, infrastructure, management systems and supplies to achieve the health-related Millennium Development Goals by 2015;

(b) Implementing measures to increase the capacity of adults and adolescents to protect themselves from the risk of HIV infection;

(c) Fully implementing all commitments established by the Declaration of Commitment on HIV/AIDS through stronger leadership, the scaling up of a comprehensive response to achieve broad multisectoral coverage for prevention, care, treatment and support, the mobilization of additional resources from national, bilateral, multilateral and private sources and the substantial funding of the Global Fund to Fight AIDS, Tuberculosis and Malaria as well as of the HIV/AIDS component of the work programmes of the United Nations system agencies and programmes engaged in the fight against HIV/AIDS;

(d) Developing and implementing a package for HIV prevention, treatment and care with the aim of coming as close as possible to the goal of universal access to treatment by 2010 for all those who need it, including through increased resources, and working towards the elimination of stigma and discrimination, enhanced access to affordable medicines and the reduction of vulnerability of persons affected by HIV/AIDS and other health issues, in particular orphaned and vulnerable children and older persons;

(e) Ensuring the full implementation of our obligations under the International Health Regulations adopted by the fifty-eighth World Health Assembly in May 2005, including the need to support the Global Outbreak Alert and Response Network of the World Health Organization;

(f) Working actively to implement the "Three Ones" principles in all countries, including by ensuring that multiple institutions and international partners all work under one agreed HIV/AIDS framework that provides the basis for coordinating the work of all partners, with one national AIDS coordinating authority having a broad-based multisectoral mandate, and under one agreed country-level monitoring and evaluation system. We welcome and support the important recommendations of the Global Task Team on Improving AIDS Coordination among Multilateral Institutions and International Donors;

(g) Achieving universal access to reproductive health by 2015, as set out at the International Conference on Population and Development, integrating this goal in strategies to attain the internationally agreed development goals, including those contained in the Millennium Declaration, aimed at reducing maternal mortality, improving maternal health, reducing child mortality, promoting gender equality, combating HIV/AIDS and eradicating poverty;

(h) Promoting long-term funding, including public-private partnerships where appropriate, for academic and industrial research as well as for the development of new vaccines and microbicides, diagnostic kits, drugs and treatments to address major pandemics, tropical diseases and other diseases, such as avian flu and severe acute respiratory syndrome, and taking forward work on market incentives, where appropriate through such mechanisms as advance purchase commitments;

(i) Stressing the need to urgently address malaria and tuberculosis, in particular in the most affected countries, and welcoming the scaling up, in this regard, of bilateral and multilateral initiatives.

Gender equality and empowerment of women

58. We remain convinced that progress for women is progress for all. We reaffirm that the full and effective implementation of the goals and objectives of the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action and the outcome of the twenty-third special session of the General Assembly is an essential contribution to achieving the internationally agreed development goals, including those contained in the Millennium Declaration, and we resolve to promote gender equality and eliminate pervasive gender discrimination by:

(a) Eliminating gender inequalities in primary and secondary education by the earliest possible date and at all educational levels by 2015;

(b) Guaranteeing the free and equal right of women to own and inherit property and ensuring secure tenure of property and housing by women;

(c) Ensuring equal access to reproductive health;

(d) Promoting women's equal access to labour markets, sustainable employment and adequate labour protection;

(e) Ensuring equal access of women to productive assets and resources, including land, credit and technology;

(f) Eliminating all forms of discrimination and violence against women and the girl child, including by ending impunity and by ensuring the protection of civilians, in particular women and the girl child, during and after armed conflicts in accordance with the obligations of States under international humanitarian law and international human rights law;

(g) Promoting increased representation of women in Government decision-making bodies, including through ensuring their equal opportunity to participate fully in the political process.

59. We recognize the importance of gender mainstreaming as a tool for achieving gender equality. To that end, we undertake to actively promote the mainstreaming of a gender perspective in the design, implementation, monitoring and evaluation of policies and programmes in all political, economic and social spheres, and further undertake to strengthen the capabilities of the United Nations system in the area of gender.

Science and technology for development

60. We recognize that science and technology, including information and communication technology, are vital for the achievement of the development goals and that international support can help developing countries to benefit from technological advancements and enhance their productive capacity. We therefore commit ourselves to:

(a) Strengthening and enhancing existing mechanisms and supporting initiatives for research and development, including through voluntary partnerships between the public and private sectors, to address the special needs of developing countries in the areas of health, agriculture, conservation, sustainable use of natural resources and environmental management, energy, forestry and the impact of climate change;

(b) Promoting and facilitating, as appropriate, access to and the development, transfer and diffusion of technologies, including environmentally sound technologies and corresponding know-how, to developing countries;

(c) Assisting developing countries in their efforts to promote and develop national strategies for human resources and science and technology, which are primary drivers of national capacity-building for development;

(d) Promoting and supporting greater efforts to develop renewable sources of energy, such as solar, wind and geothermal;

(e) Implementing policies at the national and international levels to attract both public and private investment, domestic and foreign, that enhances knowledge, transfers technology on mutually agreed terms and raises productivity;

(f) Supporting the efforts of developing countries, individually and collectively, to harness new agricultural technologies in order to increase agricultural productivity through environmentally sustainable means;

(g) Building a people-centred and inclusive information society so as to enhance digital opportunities for all people in order to help bridge the digital divide, putting the potential of information and communication technologies at the service of development and addressing new challenges of the information society by implementing the outcomes of the Geneva phase of the World Summit on the Information Society and ensuring the success of the second phase of the Summit, to be held in Tunis in November 2005; in this regard, we welcome the establishment of the Digital Solidarity Fund and encourage voluntary contributions to its financing.

Migration and development

61. We acknowledge the important nexus between international migration and development and the need to deal with the challenges and opportunities that migration presents to countries of origin, destination and transit. We recognize that international migration brings benefits as well as challenges to the global community. We look forward to the high-level dialogue of the General Assembly on international migration and development to be held in 2006, which will offer an opportunity to discuss the multidimensional aspects of international migration and development in order to identify appropriate ways and means to maximize their development benefits and minimize their negative impacts.

62. We reaffirm our resolve to take measures to ensure respect for and protection of the human rights of migrants, migrant workers and members of their families.

63. We reaffirm the need to adopt policies and undertake measures to reduce the cost of transferring migrant remittances to developing countries and welcome efforts by Governments and stakeholders in this regard.

Countries with special needs

64. We reaffirm our commitment to address the special needs of the least developed countries and urge all countries and all relevant organizations of the United Nations system, including the Bretton Woods institutions, to make concerted efforts and adopt speedy measures for meeting in a timely manner the goals and targets of the Brussels Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the Decade 2001-2010.

65. We recognize the special needs of and challenges faced by landlocked developing countries and therefore reaffirm our commitment to urgently address those needs and challenges through the full, timely and effective implementation of the Almaty Programme of Action: Addressing the Special Needs of Landlocked Developing Countries within a New Global Framework for Transit Transport Cooperation for Landlocked and Transit Developing Countries and the São Paulo Consensus adopted at the eleventh session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development. We encourage the work undertaken by United Nations regional commissions and organizations towards establishing a time-cost methodology for indicators to measure the progress in implementation of the Almaty Programme of Action. We also recognize the special difficulties and concerns of landlocked developing countries in their efforts to integrate their economies into the multilateral trading system. In this regard, priority should be given to the full and timely implementation of the Almaty Declaration and the Almaty Programme of Action.

66. We recognize the special needs and vulnerabilities of small island developing States and reaffirm our commitment to take urgent and concrete action to address those needs and vulnerabilities through the full and effective implementation of the Mauritius Strategy adopted by the International Meeting to Review the Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States, the Barbados Programme of Action and the outcome of the twenty-second special session of the General Assembly. We further undertake to promote greater international cooperation and partnership for the implementation of the Mauritius Strategy through, inter alia, the mobilization of domestic and international resources, the promotion of international trade as an engine for development and increased international financial and technical cooperation.

67. We emphasize the need for continued, coordinated and effective international support for achieving the development goals in countries emerging from conflict and in those recovering from natural disasters.

Meeting the special needs of Africa

68. We welcome the substantial progress made by the African countries in fulfilling their commitments and emphasize the need to carry forward the implementation of the New Partnership for Africa's Development to promote sustainable growth and development and deepen democracy, human rights, good governance and sound economic management and gender equality and encourage African countries, with the participation of civil society and the private sector, to continue their efforts in this regard by developing and strengthening institutions for governance and the development of the region, and also welcome the recent decisions taken by Africa's partners, including the Group of Eight and the European Union, in support of Africa's development efforts, including commitments that will lead to an increase in official development assistance to Africa of 25 billion dollars per year by 2010. We reaffirm our commitment to address the special needs of Africa, which is the only continent not on track to meet any of the goals of the Millennium Declaration by 2015, to enable it to enter the mainstream of the world economy, and resolve:

(a) To strengthen cooperation with the New Partnership for Africa's Development by providing coherent support for the programmes drawn up by African leaders within that framework, including by mobilizing internal and external financial resources and facilitating approval of such programmes by the multilateral financial institutions;

(b) To support the African commitment to ensure that by 2015 all children have access to complete, free and compulsory primary education of good quality, as well as to basic health care;

(c) To support the building of an international infrastructure consortium involving the African Union, the World Bank and the African Development Bank, with the New Partnership for Africa's Development as the main framework, to facilitate public and private infrastructure investment in Africa;

(d) To promote a comprehensive and durable solution to the external debt problems of African countries, including through the cancellation of 100 per cent of multilateral debt consistent with the recent Group of Eight proposal for the heavily indebted poor countries, and, on a case-by-case basis, where appropriate, significant debt relief, including, inter alia, cancellation or restructuring for heavily indebted African countries not part of the Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Initiative that have unsustainable debt burdens;

(e) To make efforts to fully integrate African countries in the international trading system, including through targeted trade capacity-building programmes;

(f) To support the efforts of commodity-dependent African countries to restructure, diversify and strengthen the competitiveness of their commodity sectors and decide to work towards market-based arrangements with the participation of the private sector for commodity price-risk management;

(g) To supplement the efforts of African countries, individually and collectively, to increase agricultural productivity, in a sustainable way, as set out in the Comprehensive Africa Agriculture Development Programme of the New Partnership for Africa's Development as part of an African "Green Revolution";

(h) To encourage and support the initiatives of the African Union and subregional organizations to prevent, mediate and resolve conflicts with the assistance of the United Nations, and in this regard welcomes the proposals from the Group of Eight countries to provide support for African peacekeeping;

(i) To provide, with the aim of an AIDS-, malaria- and tuberculosis-free generation in Africa, assistance for prevention and care and to come as close as possible to achieving the goal of universal access by 2010 to HIV/AIDS treatment in African countries, to encourage pharmaceutical companies to make drugs, including antiretroviral drugs, affordable and accessible in Africa and to ensure increased bilateral and multilateral assistance, where possible on a grant basis, to combat malaria, tuberculosis and other infectious diseases in Africa through the strengthening of health systems.

III. Peace and collective security

69. We recognize that we are facing a whole range of threats that require our urgent, collective and more determined response.

70. We also recognize that, in accordance with the Charter, addressing such threats requires cooperation among all the principal organs of the United Nations within their respective mandates.

71. We acknowledge that we are living in an interdependent and global world and that many of today's threats recognize no national boundaries, are interlinked and must be tackled at the global, regional and national levels in accordance with the Charter and international law.

72. We therefore reaffirm our commitment to work towards a security consensus based on the recognition that many threats are interlinked, that development, peace, security and human rights are mutually reinforcing, that no State can best protect itself by acting entirely alone and that all States need an effective and efficient collective security system pursuant to the purposes and principles of the Charter.

Pacific settlement of disputes

73. We emphasize the obligation of States to settle their disputes by peaceful means in accordance with Chapter VI of the Charter, including, when appropriate, by the use of the International Court of Justice. All States should act in accordance with the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Cooperation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations.

74. We stress the importance of prevention of armed conflict in accordance with the purposes and principles of the Charter and solemnly renew our commitment to promote a culture of prevention of armed conflict as a means of effectively addressing the interconnected security and development challenges faced by peoples throughout the world, as well as to strengthen the capacity of the United Nations for the prevention of armed conflict.

75. We further stress the importance of a coherent and integrated approach to the prevention of armed conflicts and the settlement of disputes and the need for the Security Council, the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council and the Secretary-General to coordinate their activities within their respective Charter mandates.

76. Recognizing the important role of the good offices of the Secretary-General, including in the mediation of disputes, we support the Secretary-General's efforts to strengthen his capacity in this area.

Use of force under the Charter of the United Nations

77. We reiterate the obligation of all Member States to refrain in their international relations from the threat or use of force in any manner inconsistent with the Charter. We reaffirm that the purposes and principles guiding the United Nations are, inter alia, to maintain international peace and security, to develop friendly relations among nations based on respect for the principles of equal rights and self-determination of peoples and to take other appropriate measures to strengthen universal peace, and to that end we are determined to take effective collective measures for the prevention and removal of threats to the peace and for the suppression of acts of aggression or other breaches of the peace, and to bring about by peaceful means, in conformity with the principles of justice and international law, the adjustment or settlement of international disputes or situations that might lead to a breach of the peace.

78. We reiterate the importance of promoting and strengthening the multilateral process and of addressing international challenges and problems by strictly abiding by the Charter and the principles of international law, and further stress our commitment to multilateralism.

79. We reaffirm that the relevant provisions of the Charter are sufficient to address the full range of threats to international peace and security. We further reaffirm the authority of the Security Council to mandate coercive action to maintain and restore international peace and security. We stress the importance of acting in accordance with the purposes and principles of the Charter.

80. We also reaffirm that the Security Council has primary responsibility in the maintenance of international peace and security. We also note the role of the General Assembly relating to the maintenance of international peace and security in accordance with the relevant provisions of the Charter.

Terrorism

81. We strongly condemn terrorism in all its forms and manifestations, committed by whomever, wherever and for whatever purposes, as it constitutes one of the most serious threats to international peace and security.

82. We welcome the Secretary-General's identification of elements of a counter-terrorism strategy. These elements should be developed by the General Assembly without delay with a view to adopting and implementing a strategy to promote comprehensive, coordinated and consistent responses, at the national, regional and international levels, to counter terrorism, which also takes into account the conditions conducive to the spread of terrorism. In this context, we commend the various initiatives to promote dialogue, tolerance and understanding among civilizations.

83. We stress the need to make every effort to reach an agreement on and conclude a comprehensive convention on international terrorism during the sixtieth session of the General Assembly.

84. We acknowledge that the question of convening a high-level conference under the auspices of the United Nations to formulate an international response to terrorism in all its forms and manifestations could be considered.

85. We recognize that international cooperation to fight terrorism must be conducted in conformity with international law, including the Charter and relevant international conventions and protocols. States must ensure that any measures taken to combat terrorism comply with their obligations under international law, in particular human rights law, refugee law and international humanitarian law.

86. We reiterate our call upon States to refrain from organizing, financing, encouraging, providing training for or otherwise supporting terrorist activities and to take appropriate measures to ensure that their territories are not used for such activities.

87. We acknowledge the important role played by the United Nations in combating terrorism and also stress the vital contribution of regional and bilateral cooperation, particularly at the practical level of law enforcement cooperation and technical exchange.

88. We urge the international community, including the United Nations, to assist States in building national and regional capacity to combat terrorism. We invite the Secretary-General to submit proposals to the General Assembly and the Security Council, within their respective mandates, to strengthen the capacity of the United Nations system to assist States in combating terrorism and to enhance the coordination of United Nations activities in this regard.

89. We stress the importance of assisting victims of terrorism and of providing them and their families with support to cope with their loss and their grief.

90. We encourage the Security Council to consider ways to strengthen its monitoring and enforcement role in counter-terrorism, including by consolidating State reporting requirements, taking into account and respecting the different mandates of its counter-terrorism subsidiary bodies. We are committed to cooperating fully with the three competent subsidiary bodies in the fulfilment of their tasks, recognizing that many States continue to require assistance in implementing relevant Security Council resolutions.

91. We support efforts for the early entry into force of the International Convention for the Suppression of Acts of Nuclear Terrorism and strongly encourage States to consider becoming parties to it expeditiously and acceding without delay to the twelve other international conventions and protocols against terrorism and implementing them.

Peacekeeping

92. Recognizing that United Nations peacekeeping plays a vital role in helping parties to conflict end hostilities and commending the contribution of United Nations peacekeepers in that regard, noting improvements made in recent years in United Nations peacekeeping, including the deployment of integrated missions in complex situations, and stressing the need to mount operations with adequate capacity to counter hostilities and fulfil effectively their mandates, we urge further development of proposals for enhanced rapidly deployable capacities to reinforce peacekeeping operations in crises. We endorse the creation of an initial operating capability for a standing police capacity to provide coherent, effective and responsive start-up capability for the policing component of the United Nations peacekeeping missions and to assist existing missions through the provision of advice and expertise.

93. Recognizing the important contribution to peace and security by regional organizations as provided for under Chapter VIII of the Charter and the importance of forging predictable partnerships and arrangements between the United Nations and regional organizations, and noting in particular, given the special needs of Africa, the importance of a strong African Union:

(a) We support the efforts of the European Union and other regional entities to develop capacities such as for rapid deployment, standby and bridging arrangements;

(b) We support the development and implementation of a ten-year plan for capacity-building with the African Union.

94. We support implementation of the 2001 Programme of Action to Prevent, Combat and Eradicate the Illicit Trade in Small Arms and Light Weapons in All Its Aspects.

95. We urge States parties to the Anti-Personnel Mine Ban Convention and Amended Protocol II to the Convention on Certain Conventional Weapons to fully implement their respective obligations. We call upon States in a position to do so to provide greater technical assistance to mine-affected States.

96. We underscore the importance of the recommendations of the Adviser to the Secretary-General on Sexual Exploitation and Abuse by United Nations Peacekeeping Personnel, and urge that those measures adopted in the relevant General Assembly resolutions based upon the recommendations be fully implemented without delay.

Peacebuilding

97. Emphasizing the need for a coordinated, coherent and integrated approach to post-conflict peacebuilding and reconciliation with a view to achieving sustainable peace, recognizing the need for a dedicated institutional mechanism to address the special needs of countries emerging from conflict towards recovery, reintegration and reconstruction and to assist them in laying the foundation for sustainable development, and recognizing the vital role of the United Nations in that regard, we decide to establish a Peacebuilding Commission as an intergovernmental advisory body.

98. The main purpose of the Peacebuilding Commission is to bring together all relevant actors to marshal resources and to advise on and propose integrated strategies for post-conflict peacebuilding and recovery. The Commission should focus attention on the reconstruction and institution-building efforts necessary for recovery from conflict and support the development of integrated strategies in order to lay the foundation for sustainable development. In addition, it should provide recommendations and information to improve the coordination of all relevant actors within and outside the United Nations, develop best practices, help to ensure predictable financing for early recovery activities and extend the period of attention by the international community to post-conflict recovery. The Commission should act in all matters on the basis of consensus of its members.

99. The Peacebuilding Commission should make the outcome of its discussions and recommendations publicly available as United Nations documents to all relevant bodies and actors, including the international financial institutions. The Peacebuilding Commission should submit an annual report to the General Assembly.

100. The Peacebuilding Commission should meet in various configurations. Country-specific meetings of the Commission, upon invitation of the Organizational Committee referred to in paragraph 101 below, should include as members, in addition to members of the Organizational Committee, representatives from:

(a) The country under consideration;

(b) Countries in the region engaged in the post-conflict process and other countries that are involved in relief efforts and/or political dialogue, as well as relevant regional and subregional organizations;

(c) The major financial, troop and civilian police contributors involved in the recovery effort;

(d) The senior United Nations representative in the field and other relevant United Nations representatives;

(e) Such regional and international financial institutions as may be relevant.

101. The Peacebuilding Commission should have a standing Organizational Committee, responsible for developing its procedures and organizational matters, comprising:

(a) Members of the Security Council, including permanent members;

(b) Members of the Economic and Social Council, elected from regional groups, giving due consideration to those countries that have experienced post-conflict recovery;

(c) Top providers of assessed contributions to the United Nations budgets and voluntary contributions to the United Nations funds, programmes and agencies, including the standing Peacebuilding Fund, that are not among those selected in (a) or (b) above;

(d) Top providers of military personnel and civilian police to United Nations missions that are not among those selected in (a), (b) or (c) above.

102. Representatives from the World Bank, the International Monetary Fund and other institutional donors should be invited to participate in all meetings of the Peacebuilding Commission in a manner suitable to their governing arrangements, in addition to a representative of the Secretary-General.

103. We request the Secretary-General to establish a multi-year standing Peacebuilding Fund for post-conflict peacebuilding, funded by voluntary contributions and taking due account of existing instruments. The objectives of the Peacebuilding Fund will include ensuring the immediate release of resources needed to launch peacebuilding activities and the availability of appropriate financing for recovery.

104. We also request the Secretary-General to establish, within the Secretariat and from within existing resources, a small peacebuilding support office staffed by qualified experts to assist and support the Peacebuilding Commission. The office should draw on the best expertise available.

105. The Peacebuilding Commission should begin its work no later than 31 December 2005.

Sanctions

106. We underscore that sanctions remain an important tool under the Charter in our efforts to maintain international peace and security without recourse to the use of force, and resolve to ensure that sanctions are carefully targeted in support of clear objectives, to comply with sanctions established by the Security Council and to ensure that sanctions are implemented in ways that balance effectiveness to achieve the desired results against the possible adverse consequences, including socio-economic and humanitarian consequences, for populations and third States.

107. Sanctions should be implemented and monitored effectively with clear benchmarks and should be periodically reviewed, as appropriate, and remain for as limited a period as necessary to achieve their objectives and should be terminated once the objectives have been achieved.

108. We call upon the Security Council, with the support of the Secretary-General, to improve its monitoring of the implementation and effects of sanctions, to ensure that sanctions are implemented in an accountable manner, to review regularly the results of such monitoring and to develop a mechanism to address special economic problems arising from the application of sanctions in accordance with the Charter.

109. We also call upon the Security Council, with the support of the Secretary-General, to ensure that fair and clear procedures exist for placing individuals and entities on sanctions lists and for removing them, as well as for granting humanitarian exemptions.

110. We support efforts through the United Nations to strengthen State capacity to implement sanctions provisions.

Transnational crime

111. We express our grave concern at the negative effects on development, peace and security and human rights posed by transnational crime, including the smuggling of and trafficking in human beings, the world narcotic drug problem and the illicit trade in small arms and light weapons, and at the increasing vulnerability of States to such crime. We reaffirm the need to work collectively to combat transnational crime.

112. We recognize that trafficking in persons continues to pose a serious challenge to humanity and requires a concerted international response. To that end, we urge all States to devise, enforce and strengthen effective measures to combat and eliminate all forms of trafficking in persons to counter the demand for trafficked victims and to protect the victims.

113. We urge all States that have not yet done so to consider becoming parties to the relevant international conventions on organized crime and corruption and, following their entry into force, to implement them effectively, including by incorporating the provisions of those conventions into national legislation and by strengthening criminal justice systems.

114. We reaffirm our unwavering determination and commitment to overcome the world narcotic drug problem through international cooperation and national strategies to eliminate both the illicit supply of and demand for illicit drugs.

115. We resolve to strengthen the capacity of the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime, within its existing mandates, to provide assistance to Member States in those tasks upon request.

Women in the prevention and resolution of conflicts

116. We stress the important role of women in the prevention and resolution of conflicts and in peacebuilding. We reaffirm our commitment to the full and effective implementation of Security Council resolution 1325(2000) of 31 October 2000 on women and peace and security. We also underline the importance of integrating a gender perspective and of women having the opportunity for equal participation and full involvement in all efforts to maintain and promote peace and security, as well as the need to increase their role in decision-making at all levels. We strongly condemn all violations of the human rights of women and girls in situations of armed conflict and the use of sexual exploitation, violence and abuse, and we commit ourselves to elaborating and implementing strategies to report on, prevent and punish gender-based violence.

Protecting children in situations of armed conflict

117. We reaffirm our commitment to promote and protect the rights and welfare of children in armed conflicts. We welcome the significant advances and innovations that have been achieved over the past several years. We welcome in particular the adoption of Security Council resolution 1612(2005) of 26 July 2005. We call upon States to consider ratifying the Convention on the Rights of the Child and the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the involvement of children in armed conflict. We also call upon States to take effective measures, as appropriate, to prevent the recruitment and use of children in armed conflict, contrary to international law, by armed forces and groups, and to prohibit and criminalize such practices.

118. We therefore call upon all States concerned to take concrete measures to ensure accountability and compliance by those responsible for grave abuses against children. We also reaffirm our commitment to ensure that children in armed conflicts receive timely and effective humanitarian assistance, including education, for their rehabilitation and reintegration into society.

IV. Human rights and the rule of law

119. We recommit ourselves to actively protecting and promoting all human rights, the rule of law and democracy and recognize that they are interlinked and mutually reinforcing and that they belong to the universal and indivisible core values and principles of the United Nations, and call upon all parts of the United Nations to promote human rights and fundamental freedoms in accordance with their mandates.

120. We reaffirm the solemn commitment of our States to fulfil their obligations to promote universal respect for and the observance and protection of all human rights and fundamental freedoms for all in accordance with the Charter, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and other instruments relating to human rights and international law. The universal nature of these rights and freedoms is beyond question.

Human rights

121. We reaffirm that all human rights are universal, indivisible, interrelated, interdependent and mutually reinforcing and that all human rights must be treated in a fair and equal manner, on the same footing and with the same emphasis. While the significance of national and regional particularities and various historical, cultural and religious backgrounds must be borne in mind, all States, regardless of their political, economic and cultural systems, have the duty to promote and protect all human rights and fundamental freedoms.

122. We emphasize the responsibilities of all States, in conformity with the Charter, to respect human rights and fundamental freedoms for all, without distinction of any kind as to race, colour, sex, language or religion, political or other opinion, national or social origin, property, birth or other status.

123. We resolve further to strengthen the United Nations human rights machinery with the aim of ensuring effective enjoyment by all of all human rights and civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights, including the right to development.

124. We resolve to strengthen the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, taking note of the High Commissioner's plan of action, to enable it to effectively carry out its mandate to respond to the broad range of human rights challenges facing the international community, particularly in the areas of technical assistance and capacity-building, through the doubling of its regular budget resources over the next five years with a view to progressively setting a balance between regular budget and voluntary contributions to its resources, keeping in mind other priority programmes for developing countries and the recruitment of highly competent staff on a broad geographical basis and with gender balance, under the regular budget, and we support its closer cooperation with all relevant United Nations bodies, including the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council and the Security Council.

125. We resolve to improve the effectiveness of the human rights treaty bodies, including through more timely reporting, improved and streamlined reporting procedures and technical assistance to States to enhance their reporting capacities and further enhance the implementation of their recommendations.

126. We resolve to integrate the promotion and protection of human rights into national policies and to support the further mainstreaming of human rights throughout the United Nations system, as well as closer cooperation between the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and all relevant United Nations bodies.

127. We reaffirm our commitment to continue making progress in the advancement of the human rights of the world's indigenous peoples at the local, national, regional and international levels, including through consultation and collaboration with them, and to present for adoption a final draft United Nations declaration on the rights of indigenous peoples as soon as possible.

128. We recognize the need to pay special attention to the human rights of women and children and undertake to advance them in every possible way, including by bringing gender and child-protection perspectives into the human rights agenda.

129. We recognize the need for persons with disabilities to be guaranteed full enjoyment of their rights without discrimination. We also affirm the need to finalize a comprehensive draft convention on the rights of persons with disabilities.

130. We note that the promotion and protection of the rights of persons belonging to national or ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities contribute to political and social stability and peace and enrich the cultural diversity and heritage of society.

131. We support the promotion of human rights education and learning at all levels, including through the implementation of the World Programme for Human Rights Education, as appropriate, and encourage all States to develop initiatives in this regard.

Internally displaced persons

132. We recognize the Guiding Principles on Internal Displacement as an important international framework for the protection of internally displaced persons and resolve to take effective measures to increase the protection of internally displaced persons.

Refugee protection and assistance

133. We commit ourselves to safeguarding the principle of refugee protection and to upholding our responsibility in resolving the plight of refugees, including through the support of efforts aimed at addressing the causes of refugee movement, bringing about the safe and sustainable return of those populations, finding durable solutions for refugees in protracted situations and preventing refugee movement from becoming a source of tension among States. We reaffirm the principle of solidarity and burden-sharing and resolve to support nations in assisting refugee populations and their host communities.

Rule of law

134. Recognizing the need for universal adherence to and implementation of the rule of law at both the national and international levels, we:

(a) Reaffirm our commitment to the purposes and principles of the Charter and international law and to an international order based on the rule of law and international law, which is essential for peaceful coexistence and cooperation among States;

(b) Support the annual treaty event;

(c) Encourage States that have not yet done so to consider becoming parties to all treaties that relate to the protection of civilians;

(d) Call upon States to continue their efforts to eradicate policies and practices that discriminate against women and to adopt laws and promote practices that protect the rights of women and promote gender equality;

(e) Support the idea of establishing a rule of law assistance unit within the Secretariat, in accordance with existing relevant procedures, subject to a report by the Secretary-General to the General Assembly, so as to strengthen United Nations activities to promote the rule of law, including through technical assistance and capacity-building;

(f) Recognize the important role of the International Court of Justice, the principal judicial organ of the United Nations, in adjudicating disputes among States and the value of its work, call upon States that have not yet done so to consider accepting the jurisdiction of the Court in accordance with its Statute and consider means of strengthening the Court's work, including by supporting the Secretary-General's Trust Fund to Assist States in the Settlement of Disputes through the International Court of Justice on a voluntary basis.

Democracy

135. We reaffirm that democracy is a universal value based on the freely expressed will of people to determine their own political, economic, social and cultural systems and their full participation in all aspects of their lives. We also reaffirm that while democracies share common features, there is no single model of democracy, that it does not belong to any country or region, and reaffirm the necessity of due respect for sovereignty and the right of self-determination. We stress that democracy, development and respect for all human rights and fundamental freedoms are interdependent and mutually reinforcing.

136. We renew our commitment to support democracy by strengthening countries' capacity to implement the principles and practices of democracy and resolve to strengthen the capacity of the United Nations to assist Member States upon their request. We welcome the establishment of a Democracy Fund at the United Nations. We note that the advisory board to be established should reflect diverse geographical representation. We invite the Secretary-General to help to ensure that practical arrangements for the Democracy Fund take proper account of existing United Nations activity in this field.

137. We invite interested Member States to give serious consideration to contributing to the Fund.

Responsibility to protect populations from genocide, war crimes, ethnic cleansing and crimes against humanity

138. Each individual State has the responsibility to protect its populations from genocide, war crimes, ethnic cleansing and crimes against humanity. This responsibility entails the prevention of such crimes, including their incitement, through appropriate and necessary means. We accept that responsibility and will act in accordance with it. The international community should, as appropriate, encourage and help States to exercise this responsibility and support the United Nations in establishing an early warning capability.

139. The international community, through the United Nations, also has the responsibility to use appropriate diplomatic, humanitarian and other peaceful means, in accordance with Chapters VI and VIII of the Charter, to help to protect populations from genocide, war crimes, ethnic cleansing and crimes against humanity. In this context, we are prepared to take collective action, in a timely and decisive manner, through the Security Council, in accordance with the Charter, including Chapter VII, on a case-by-case basis and in cooperation with relevant regional organizations as appropriate, should peaceful means be inadequate and national authorities are manifestly failing to protect their populations from genocide, war crimes, ethnic cleansing and crimes against humanity. We stress the need for the General Assembly to continue consideration of the responsibility to protect populations from genocide, war crimes, ethnic cleansing and crimes against humanity and its implications, bearing in mind the principles of the Charter and international law. We also intend to commit ourselves, as necessary and appropriate, to helping States build capacity to protect their populations from genocide, war crimes, ethnic cleansing and crimes against humanity and to assisting those which are under stress before crises and conflicts break out.

140. We fully support the mission of the Special Adviser of the Secretary-General on the Prevention of Genocide.

Children's rights

141. We express dismay at the increasing number of children involved in and affected by armed conflict, as well as all other forms of violence, including domestic violence, sexual abuse and exploitation and trafficking. We support cooperation policies aimed at strengthening national capacities to improve the situation of those children and to assist in their rehabilitation and reintegration into society.

142. We commit ourselves to respecting and ensuring the rights of each child without discrimination of any kind, irrespective of the race, colour, sex, language, religion, political or other opinion, national, ethnic or social origin, property, disability, birth or other status of the child or his or her parent(s) or legal guardian(s). We call upon States to consider as a priority becoming a party to the Convention on the Rights of the Child.

Human security

143. We stress the right of people to live in freedom and dignity, free from poverty and despair. We recognize that all individuals, in particular vulnerable people, are entitled to freedom from fear and freedom from want, with an equal opportunity to enjoy all their rights and fully develop their human potential. To this end, we commit ourselves to discussing and defining the notion of human security in the General Assembly.

Culture of peace and initiatives on dialogue among cultures, civilizations and religions

144. We reaffirm the Declaration and Programme of Action on a Culture of Peace as well as the Global Agenda for Dialogue among Civilizations and its Programme of Action adopted by the General Assembly and the value of different initiatives on dialogue among cultures and civilizations, including the dialogue on interfaith cooperation. We commit ourselves to taking action to promote a culture of peace and dialogue at the local, national, regional and international levels and request the Secretary-General to explore enhancing implementation mechanisms and to follow up on those initiatives. In this regard, we also welcome the Alliance of Civilizations initiative announced by the Secretary-General on 14 July 2005.

145. We underline that sports can foster peace and development and can contribute to an atmosphere of tolerance and understanding, and we encourage discussions in the General Assembly for proposals leading to a plan of action on sport and development.

V. Strengthening the United Nations

146. We reaffirm our commitment to strengthen the United Nations with a view to enhancing its authority and efficiency, as well as its capacity to address effectively, and in accordance with the purposes and principles of the Charter, the full range of challenges of our time. We are determined to reinvigorate the intergovernmental organs of the United Nations and to adapt them to the needs of the twenty-first century.

147. We stress that, in order to efficiently perform their respective mandates as provided under the Charter, United Nations bodies should develop good cooperation and coordination in the common endeavour of building a more effective United Nations.

148. We emphasize the need to provide the United Nations with adequate and timely resources with a view to enabling it to carry out its mandates. A reformed United Nations must be responsive to the entire membership, faithful to its founding principles and adapted to carrying out its mandate.

General Assembly

149. We reaffirm the central position of the General Assembly as the chief deliberative, policymaking and representative organ of the United Nations, as well as the role of the Assembly in the process of standard-setting and the codification of international law.

150. We welcome the measures adopted by the General Assembly with a view to strengthening its role and authority and the role and leadership of the President of the Assembly and, to that end, we call for their full and speedy implementation.

151. We call for strengthening the relationship between the General Assembly and the other principal organs to ensure better coordination on topical issues that require coordinated action by the United Nations, in accordance with their respective mandates.

Security Council

152. We reaffirm that Member States have conferred on the Security Council primary responsibility for the maintenance of international peace and security, acting on their behalf, as provided for by the Charter.

153. We support early reform of the Security Council—an essential element of our overall effort to reform the United Nations—in order to make it more broadly representative, efficient and transparent and thus to further enhance its effectiveness and the legitimacy and implementation of its decisions. We commit ourselves to continuing our efforts to achieve a decision to this end and request the General Assembly to review progress on the reform set out above by the end of 2005.

154. We recommend that the Security Council continue to adapt its working methods so as to increase the involvement of States not members of the Council in its work, as appropriate, enhance its accountability to the membership and increase the transparency of its work.

Economic and Social Council

155. We reaffirm the role that the Charter and the General Assembly have vested in the Economic and Social Council and recognize the need for a more effective Economic and Social Council as a principal body for coordination, policy review, policy dialogue and recommendations on issues of economic and social development, as well as for implementation of the international development goals agreed at the major United Nations conferences and summits, including the Millennium Development Goals. To achieve these objectives, the Council should:

(a) Promote global dialogue and partnership on global policies and trends in the economic, social, environmental and humanitarian fields. For this purpose, the Council should serve as a quality platform for high-level engagement among Member States and with the international financial institutions, the private sector and civil society on emerging global trends, policies and action and develop its ability to respond better and more rapidly to developments in the international economic, environmental and social fields;

(b) Hold a biennial high-level Development Cooperation Forum to review trends in international development cooperation, including strategies, policies and financing, promote greater coherence among the development activities of different development partners and strengthen the links between the normative and operational work of the United Nations;

(c) Ensure follow-up of the outcomes of the major United Nations conferences and summits, including the internationally agreed development goals, and hold annual ministerial-level substantive reviews to assess progress, drawing on its functional and regional commissions and other international institutions, in accordance with their respective mandates;

(d) Support and complement international efforts aimed at addressing humanitarian emergencies, including natural disasters, in order to promote an improved, coordinated response from the United Nations;

(e) Play a major role in the overall coordination of funds, programmes and agencies, ensuring coherence among them and avoiding duplication of mandates and activities.

156. We stress that in order to fully perform the above functions, the organization of work, the agenda and the current methods of work of the Economic and Social Council should be adapted.

Human Rights Council

157. Pursuant to our commitment to further strengthen the United Nations human rights machinery, we resolve to create a Human Rights Council.

158. The Council will be responsible for promoting universal respect for the protection of all human rights and fundamental freedoms for all, without distinction of any kind and in a fair and equal manner.

159. The Council should address situations of violations of human rights, including gross and systematic violations, and make recommendations thereon. It should also promote effective coordination and the mainstreaming of human rights within the United Nations system.

160. We request the President of the General Assembly to conduct open, transparent and inclusive negotiations, to be completed as soon as possible during the sixtieth session, with the aim of establishing the mandate, modalities, functions, size, composition, membership, working methods and procedures of the Council.

Secretariat and management reform

161. We recognize that in order to effectively comply with the principles and objectives of the Charter, we need an efficient, effective and accountable Secretariat. Its staff shall act in accordance with Article 100 of the Charter, in a culture of organizational accountability, transparency and integrity. Consequently we:

(a) Recognize the ongoing reform measures carried out by the Secretary-General to strengthen accountability and oversight, improve management performance and transparency and reinforce ethical conduct, and invite him to report to the General Assembly on the progress made in their implementation;

(b) Emphasize the importance of establishing effective and efficient mechanisms for responsibility and accountability of the Secretariat;

(c) Urge the Secretary-General to ensure that the highest standards of efficiency, competence, and integrity shall be the paramount consideration in the employment of the staff, with due regard to the principle of equitable geographical distribution, in accordance with Article 101 of the Charter;

(d) Welcome the Secretary-General's efforts to ensure ethical conduct, more extensive financial disclosure for United Nations officials and enhanced protection for those who reveal wrongdoing within the Organization. We urge the Secretary-General to scrupulously apply the existing standards of conduct and develop a system-wide code of ethics for all United Nations personnel. In this regard, we request the Secretary-General to submit details on an ethics office with independent status, which he intends to create, to the General Assembly at its sixtieth session;

(e) Pledge to provide the United Nations with adequate resources, on a timely basis, to enable the Organization to implement its mandates and achieve its objectives, having regard to the priorities agreed by the General Assembly and the need to respect budget discipline. We stress that all Member States should meet their obligations with regard to the expenses of the Organization;

(f) Strongly urge the Secretary-General to make the best and most efficient use of resources in accordance with clear rules and procedures agreed by the General Assembly, in the interest of all Member States, by adopting the best management practices, including effective use of information and communication technologies, with a view to increasing efficiency and enhancing organizational capacity, concentrating on those tasks that reflect the agreed priorities of the Organization.

162. We reaffirm the role of the Secretary-General as the chief administrative officer of the Organization, in accordance with Article 97 of the Charter. We request the Secretary-General to make proposals to the General Assembly for its consideration on the conditions and measures necessary for him to carry out his managerial responsibilities effectively.

163. We commend the Secretary-General's previous and ongoing efforts to enhance the effective management of the United Nations and his commitment to update the Organization. Bearing in mind our responsibility as Member States, we emphasize the need to decide on additional reforms in order to make more efficient use of the financial and human resources available to the Organization and thus better comply with its principles, objectives and mandates. We call on the Secretary-General to submit proposals for implementing management reforms to the General Assembly for consideration and decision in the first quarter of 2006, which will include the following elements:

(a) We will ensure that the United Nations budgetary, financial and human resource policies, regulations and rules respond to the current needs of the Organization and enable the efficient and effective conduct of its work, and request the Secretary-General to provide an assessment and recommendations to the General Assembly for decision during the first quarter of 2006. The assessment and recommendations of the Secretary-General should take account of the measures already under way for the reform of human resources management and the budget process;

(b) We resolve to strengthen and update the programme of work of the United Nations so that it responds to the contemporary requirements of Member States. To this end, the General Assembly and other relevant organs will review all mandates older than five years originating from resolutions of the General Assembly and other organs, which would be complementary to the existing periodic reviews of activities. The General Assembly and the other organs should complete and take the necessary decisions arising from this review during 2006. We request the Secretary-General to facilitate this review with analysis and recommendations, including on the opportunities for programmatic shifts that could be considered for early General Assembly consideration;

(c) A detailed proposal on the framework for a one-time staff buyout to improve personnel structure and quality, including an indication of costs involved and mechanisms to ensure that it achieves its intended purpose.

164. We recognize the urgent need to substantially improve the United Nations oversight and management processes. We emphasize the importance of ensuring the operational independence of the Office of Internal Oversight Services. Therefore:

(a) The expertise, capacity and resources of the Office of Internal Oversight Services in respect of audit and investigations will be significantly strengthened as a matter of urgency;

(b) We request the Secretary-General to submit an independent external evaluation of the auditing and oversight system of the United Nations, including the specialized agencies, including the roles and responsibilities of management, with due regard to the nature of the auditing and oversight bodies in question. This evaluation will take place within the context of the comprehensive review of the governance arrangements. We ask the General Assembly to adopt measures during its sixtieth session at the earliest possible stage, based on the consideration of recommendations of the evaluation and those made by the Secretary-General;

(c) We recognize that additional measures are needed to enhance the independence of the oversight structures. We therefore request the Secretary-General to submit detailed proposals to the General Assembly at its sixtieth session for its early consideration on the creation of an independent oversight advisory committee, including its mandate, composition, selection process and qualification of experts;

(d) We authorize the Office of Internal Oversight Services to examine the feasibility of expanding its services to provide internal oversight to United Nations agencies that request such services in such a way as to ensure that the provision of internal oversight services to the Secretariat will not be compromised.

165. We insist on the highest standards of behaviour from all United Nations personnel and support the considerable efforts under way with respect to the implementation of the Secretary-General's policy of zero tolerance regarding sexual exploitation and abuse by United Nations personnel, both at Headquarters and in the field. We encourage the Secretary-General to submit proposals to the General Assembly leading to a comprehensive approach to victims' assistance by 31 December 2005.

166. We encourage the Secretary-General and all decision-making bodies to take further steps in mainstreaming a gender perspective in the policies and decisions of the Organization.

167. We strongly condemn all attacks against the safety and security of personnel engaged in United Nations activities. We call upon States to consider becoming parties to the Convention on the Safety of United Nations and Associated Personnel and stress the need to conclude negotiations on a protocol expanding the scope of legal protection during the sixtieth session of the General Assembly.

System-wide coherence

168. We recognize that the United Nations brings together a unique wealth of expertise and resources on global issues. We commend the extensive experience and expertise of the various development-related organizations, agencies, funds and programmes of the United Nations system in their diverse and complementary fields of activity and their important contributions to the achievement of the Millennium Development Goals and the other development objectives established by various United Nations conferences.

169. We support stronger system-wide coherence by implementing the following measures:

Policy

- Strengthening linkages between the normative work of the United Nations system and its operational activities
- Coordinating our representation on the governing boards of the various development and humanitarian agencies so as to ensure that they pursue a coherent policy in assigning mandates and allocating resources throughout the system
- Ensuring that the main horizontal policy themes, such as sustainable development, human rights and gender, are taken into account in decision-making throughout the United Nations

Operational activities

- Implementing current reforms aimed at a more effective, efficient, coherent, coordinated and better-performing United Nations country presence with a strengthened role for the senior resident official, whether special representative, resident coordinator or humanitarian coordinator, including appropriate authority, resources and accountability, and a common management, programming and monitoring framework
- Inviting the Secretary-General to launch work to further strengthen the management and coordination of United Nations operational activities so that they can make an even more effective contribution to the achievement of the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals, including proposals for consideration by Member States for more tightly managed entities in the fields of development, humanitarian assistance and the environment

- Upholding and respecting the humanitarian principles of humanity, neutrality, impartiality and independence and ensuring that humanitarian actors have safe and unhindered access to populations in need in conformity with the relevant provisions of international law and national laws
- Supporting the efforts of countries, in particular developing countries, to strengthen their capacities at all levels in order to prepare for and respond rapidly to natural disasters and mitigate their impact
- Strengthening the effectiveness of the United Nations humanitarian response, inter alia, by improving the timeliness and predictability of humanitarian funding, in part by improving the Central Emergency Revolving Fund
- Further developing and improving, as required, mechanisms for the use of emergency standby capacities, under the auspices of the United Nations, for a timely response to humanitarian emergencies

Environmental activities

- Recognizing the need for more efficient environmental activities in the United Nations system, with enhanced coordination, improved policy advice and guidance, strengthened scientific knowledge, assessment and cooperation, better treaty compliance, while respecting the legal autonomy of the treaties, and better integration of environmental activities in the broader sustainable development framework at the operational level, including through capacity-building, we agree to explore the possibility of a more coherent institutional framework to address this need, including a more integrated structure, building on existing institutions and internationally agreed instruments, as well as the treaty bodies and the specialized agencies

Regional organizations

170. We support a stronger relationship between the United Nations and regional and subregional organizations, pursuant to Chapter VIII of the Charter, and therefore resolve:

(a) To expand consultation and cooperation between the United Nations and regional and subregional organizations through formalized agreements between the respective secretariats and, as appropriate, involvement of regional organizations in the work of the Security Council;

(b) To ensure that regional organizations that have a capacity for the prevention of armed conflict or peacekeeping consider the option of placing such capacity in the framework of the United Nations Standby Arrangements System;

(c) To strengthen cooperation in the economic, social and cultural fields.

Cooperation between the United Nations and parliaments

171. We call for strengthened cooperation between the United Nations and national and regional parliaments, in particular through the Inter-Parliamentary Union, with a view to furthering all aspects of the Millennium Declaration in all fields of the work of the United Nations and ensuring the effective implementation of United Nations reform.

Participation of local authorities, the private sector and civil society, including non-governmental organizations

172. We welcome the positive contributions of the private sector and civil society, including non-governmental organizations, in the promotion and implementation of development and human rights programmes and stress the importance of their continued engagement with Governments, the United Nations and other international organizations in these key areas.

173. We welcome the dialogue between those organizations and Member States, as reflected in the first informal interactive hearings of the General Assembly with representatives of non-governmental organizations, civil society and the private sector.

174. We underline the important role of local authorities in contributing to the achievement of the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals.

175. We encourage responsible business practices, such as those promoted by the Global Compact.

Charter of the United Nations

176. Considering that the Trusteeship Council no longer meets and has no remaining functions, we should delete Chapter XIII of the Charter and references to the Council in Chapter XII.

177. Taking into account General Assembly resolution 50/52 of 11 December 1995 and recalling the related discussions conducted in the General Assembly, bearing in mind the profound cause for the founding of the United Nations and looking to our common future, we resolve to delete references to "enemy States" in Articles 53, 77 and 107 of the Charter.

178. We request the Security Council to consider the composition, mandate and working methods of the Military Staff Committee.

Speaking after the adoption of resolution 60/1, the United States representative said that his country had joined the consensus on the outcome document and was pleased that Member States had agreed to denounce terrorism in all its forms, advance the cause of development, reform the management of the United Nations, establish a Peacebuilding Commission and create a Human Rights Council. However, the United States understood that reference to the International Conference on Population and Development [YUN 1994, p. 955], the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action [YUN 1995, p. 1170] and the use of the phrase "reproductive health" in the outcome document did not constitute support, endorsement or promotion of abortion.

The Prime Minister of Sweden and Co-Chairperson of the Summit stated that, during the debate, leaders reaffirmed their strong commitment to international cooperation as a tool for meeting global challenges. The World Summit Outcome document took decisive steps to strengthen the United Nations and the collective security system and reaffirmed the commitment to achieving the MDGs by 2015. He said that the momentum created had to be maintained for the months and years ahead, and urged all political leaders to remain committed in order to ensure that the decisions taken would be turned into reality.

Special meeting on Financing for Development

On 14 September [meeting 3], the General Assembly, in accordance with resolution 59/291 (see p. 72), held a separate meeting on Financing for Development, as part of its High-level Plenary Meeting (World Summit). The meeting had before it the Assembly President's summary of the deliberations of the second High-level Dialogue on Financing for Development (New York, 27-28 June) [A/60/219] (see p. 1064), which reviewed the implementation of the Monterrey Consensus adopted at the 2002 International Conference on Financing for Development [YUN 2002, p. 953], and discussed ways to advance efforts in that regard.

President Bongo Ondimba, Co-Chairperson of the World Summit, in his opening remarks to the meeting, said that, although the Monterrey Consensus provided a framework for mobilizing financial resources for development, resources allocated for that purpose were still far from the minimum necessary and seriously jeopardized implementation of the commitments made in 2002 [ibid.]. He welcomed the decision of the Group of Eight (G-8) most industrialized countries to cancel the debt of 18 developing countries, the steps taken by the European Union (EU) to increase official development assistance (ODA) and the decision of Heads of State and Government in June in Doha, Qatar, to create a development fund. He said that all other initiatives aimed at providing more equitable trade measures within the context of the World Trade Organization (WTO) Doha round of multilateral trade negotiations (see p. 1041), including those aimed at finding new resources of financing for development, should be encouraged.

Prime Minister Göran of Sweden, Co-Chairperson of the Summit, observed at the meeting that poverty was one of the major threats facing humanity and he expected the Summit to reaffirm the recognition that poverty was a common challenge and required action by all parties. He noted that while progress had been made over the past five years in halving poverty, it was unevenly distributed between and within countries. Africa remained a region of great concern, but other areas in the world lagged behind also. He said the progress in countries that were performing well benefited only a few, and that a good average did not necessarily translate into prosperity for the poorest. He called on world leaders to renew their pledges and intensify efforts to honour their commitments.

Addressing the meeting, the Secretary-General said that the past quarter century had seen a dramatic reduction in extreme poverty, yet international solidarity had fallen well short of need. The challenge was to transform the breakthroughs of the past few years into a Monterrey-based MDG performance pact. At the national level, States needed to practise good governance, mobilize domestic resources and devise strategies to meet the MDGs and other important development objectives. The international community should support those steps through wide-ranging global reforms, more and better aid, trade policies that gave a fair chance to developing countries, and the opening up of institutions to allow the developing world a greater voice. The General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council should play a stronger role in monitoring performance, offering advice and issuing warnings.

The meeting also heard statements from several Heads of State and Government, as well as the President of the World Bank and the Managing Director of the International Monetary Fund.

"In larger freedom: towards development, security and human rights for all"

In his March report [A/59/2005] to the General Assembly entitled "In larger freedom: towards development, security and human rights for all", the Secretary-General, as requested by Assembly resolution 55/2 [YUN 2000, p. 49], gave a broad review of the implementation of the Millennium Declaration that was adopted at the United Nations Millennium Summit [ibid.] and proposed an agenda to be taken up at the 2005 World Summit. The Secretary-General said that a point-by-point report on the implementation of the Millennium Declaration would miss the larger point that new circumstances demanded that consensus be revitalized on key challenges and priorities, and that such consensus be converted into collective action. He said much had happened since the adoption of the Millennium Declaration to compel such an approach.

The report did not include all areas in which progress was important or desirable but only those items in which action was both vital and achievable in the months ahead. The name of the report stressed the enduring relevance of the UN Charter and emphasized that its purposes had to be advanced in the lives of individual men and women, encapsulating the idea that development, security and human rights went hand in hand. Unless all those causes were advanced, none would succeed. The report discussed the historic opportunity presented in 2005 for taking ambitious and urgent action to advance global change and to reform the Organization under the headings: freedom from want; freedom from fear; freedom to live in dignity; and proposals for strengthening the United Nations.

In the annex to the report, entitled "For decision by Heads of State and Government", the Secretary-General set out his reform proposals under the various headings.

Under "Freedom from want", in order to reduce poverty and promote global prosperity for all, he urged Heads of State and Government to: reaffirm, and commit themselves to implementing the development consensus agreed in 2002 at the International Conference on Financing for Development [YUN 2002, p. 953], and at the World Summit on Sustainable Development [ibid., p. 821]. Within the context of the MDGs, he recommended that: developing countries recommit themselves to taking primary responsibility for their own development by strengthening governance, combating corruption and putting in place policies and investments to drive private sector–led growth and maximize domestic resources to fund national development strategies; developed countries should support those efforts through increased development assistance, a more development-oriented trading system and wider and deeper debt relief, recognizing the special needs of Africa; developing countries affected by extreme poverty should, by 2006, adopt and begin to implement a comprehensive national strategy to meet the 2015 MDGs targets; developed countries that had not already done so, should establish timetables to achieve the 0.7 per cent target of gross national income (GNI) for ODA by 2015; they should also redefine debt sustainability as the level of debt that allowed a country to achieve both the MDGs and reach 2015 without an increase in its debt ratios, which meant exclusive grant-based finance and 100 per cent debt cancellation for most heavily indebted poor countries (HIPC), and significantly more debt reduction to many heavily indebted non-HIPC and middle-income countries. The Secretary-General also proposed that leaders complete the WTO Doha round of multilateral trade negotiations no later than 2006, with full commitment to realizing its development focus; launch, in 2005, an International Financial Facility to support an immediate front-loading of ODA; consider other innovative sources of finance for development to supplement the Facility in the longer term; and launch a series of "quick win" initiatives to realize major immediate progress towards the MDGs. The international community should urgently provide the resources for an expanded and comprehensive response to HIV and AIDS and full funding for the Global Fund to fight AIDS, tuberculosis and malaria. World leaders should reaffirm gender equality; recognize the need for significantly increased international support for scientific research and development to address the special needs of the poor in the areas of health, agriculture, natural resource and environmental management, energy and climate; resolve to develop a more inclusive international framework for climate change beyond 2012; establish a worldwide early warning system for all natural hazards; and decide that, starting in 2005, developing countries that put forward sound, transparent and accountable national strategies and required increased development assistance should receive a sufficient increase in aid to enable them to achieve the MDGs.

Under "Freedom from fear", the Secretary-General urged Heads of State and Government to commit themselves to agreeing on and implementing comprehensive strategies for confronting the range of threats to international peace and security, including those relating to weapons of mass destruction, terrorism, State collapse, civil conflict, deadly infectious diseases, extreme poverty and the destruction of the environment. In that context, he further urged Heads to pledge full compliance with the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons (NPT) (see p. 597), the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction (Biological Weapons Convention) (see p. 615) and the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production, Stockpiling and Use of Chemical Weapons and on Their Destruction (Convention on Chemical Weapons) (see p. 616), in order to further strengthen the multilateral framework for non-proliferation and disarmament. Heads should also reaffirm their commitment to a moratorium on nuclear test explosions and to the entry into force of the Comprehensive Nuclear-Test-Ban Treaty (CTBT) (see p. 593). He further urged leaders to: develop legally binding international instruments to regulate the marking, tracing and illicit brokering of small arms and light weapons, and to ensure the effective monitoring and enforcement of UN arms embargoes; affirm that no cause or grievance justified the targeting and deliberate killing of civilians and non-combatants, and declare that any action that was intended to cause death or serious bodily harm to civilians or non-combatants constituted an act of terrorism; resolve to implement the comprehensive UN counter-terrorism strategy (see p. 101), that he had presented, which would deny terrorists access to funds and materials, deter States from sponsoring terrorism, develop State capacity to defeat terrorism while defending human rights; and resolve to accede to all international conventions against terrorism, conclude a convention on nuclear terrorism as a matter of urgency, as well as a comprehensive convention on terrorism before the end of the Assembly's sixtieth (2005) session.

Member States should: accede to all relevant international conventions on organized crime and corruption, and implement them effectively; request the Security Council to set out the principles for the use of force and affirm its intention to be guided by them when authorizing or mandating such use; establish a Peacebuilding Commission and a voluntary standing fund for peacebuilding; create strategic reserves for UN peacekeeping; support efforts by the European Union (EU) and the African Union (AU) and others to establish standby capacities as part of an interlocking system of peacekeeping capacities; establish a UN civilian police standby capacity; and ensure that Council sanctions were effectively enforced.

Under "Freedom to live in dignity", the Secretary-General exhorted Heads of State and Government to reaffirm their commitment to human dignity by strengthening the rule of law, ensuring respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms and promoting democracy. In this respect, they should embrace the "responsibility to protect" as a basis for collective action against genocide, ethnic cleansing and crimes against humanity, and agree to act on that responsibility. He also urged them to support the 2005 Treaty-signing Event (see p. 75), which focused on 31 multilateral treaties, and encouraged Governments that had not done so to ratify and implement all treaties relating to the protection of civilians. Leaders should also support democracy in their own countries, regions and the world, and resolve to strengthen UN capacity to assist emerging democracies, and to that end, welcome the creation of a Democracy Fund to provide funding and technical assistance to countries seeking to establish or strengthen their democracy. They should recognize the important role of the International Court of Justice in adjudicating disputes among countries and consider how to strengthen the Court's work.

Under "the imperative for collective action: strengthening the United Nations", in order to make the United Nations a more efficient instrument for forging a united response to shared threats and needs, the Secretary-General urged Heads of State and Government to reform, restructure and revitalize its major organs and institutions. The General Assembly should adopt, at its sixtieth session, a comprehensive package of reforms that included rationalizing its work and speeding up its deliberative process, streamlining its agenda, committee structure and procedures for plenary debates and for requesting reports, and strengthening the role and authority of its President; it should focus on addressing the major substantive issues of the day on its agenda; and establish mechanisms for engaging fully and systematically with civil society.

The Security Council should be made more representative of the international community and current geopolitical realities by expanding its membership. It should consider the two options—models A and B—proposed in the current report, as well as any other viable proposals and decisions taken on the issue before the World Summit.

The Economic and Social Council should be mandated to: hold annual ministerial-level assessments of progress towards agreed development goals, particularly the MDGs; serve as a high-level development cooperation forum; convene timely meetings to assess threats to development such as famines, epidemics and major natural disasters, and to promote coordinated responses to them; and regularize its work in post-conflict management by working with the proposed Peacebuilding Commission.

The Secretary-General also recommended that the Commission on Human Rights should be replaced with a smaller standing Human Rights Council, as a principal organ of the United Nations or subsidiary body of the General Assembly, and that the Secretariat be reformed by endorsing his request that the Assembly review the continued relevance of all mandates older than five years to see if the activities concerned were still needed or whether resources assigned to them could be reallocated in response to new and emerging challenges.

Heads should give the Secretary-General the authority and resources to pursue a one-time staff buyout so as to refresh and realign the staff to meet current needs and undertake a comprehensive review of the budget and human resources rules. They should endorse the Secretary-General's package of management reforms and commission a comprehensive review of the Office of Internal Oversight Services. They should further ensure stronger system-wide coherence by coordinating their representatives on the governing boards of the various development and humanitarian agencies; commit themselves to protecting humanitarian space and ensuring that humanitarian actors had safe and unimpeded access to vulnerable populations; accelerate humanitarian response by developing new funding arrangements; and support the Secretary- General's effort to strengthen the inter-agency and country-level responses to the needs of internally displaced persons.

Heads of State and Government should: recognize the need for a more integrated structure for environmental standard-setting, scientific discussion and monitoring, and treaty compliance that assigned environmental activities at the operational level to the development agencies to ensure an integrated approach to sustainable development; support a stronger relationship between the United Nations and regional organizations, including by developing and implementing a 10-year plan for capacity-building with the AU, and by ensuring that regional organizations with conflict prevention or peacekeeping capacity considered placing such capacities in the framework of the United Nations Standby Arrangements System; eliminate references to "enemy States" from the Charter; and delete Article 47 on the Military Staff Committee and the references to it, as well as Chapter XIII on the Trusteeship Council.

A practical plan to achieve the MDGs

In March [A/59/727], the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly a report on "Investing in Development: A Practical Plan to Achieve the Millennium Development Goals", an overview of the final report of the UN Millennium Project, an independent advisory body he had appointed in 2002, headed by his Special Adviser on the Millennium Development Goals, Professor Jeffrey Sachs, and supported by the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP). The report was prepared jointly by 10 task forces established under the Project, made up of 265 development practitioners and experts from academia, Governments, UN agencies, international and financial institutions, non-governmental organizations (NGOs), donor agencies and the private sector. The report described why the MDGs were important and the varied progress made in achieving them, and offered a diagnosis of why progress had been mixed across regions and Goals. It made recommendations for implementation at the country level, focusing on the processes, investments, policies and scale-up strategies required to achieve the MDGs and estimated the costs and benefits of achieving them.

According to the report, the world had made significant progress in achieving many of the Goals, but there were huge disparities across and within countries. Sub-Saharan Africa was the epicentre of crisis and faced continuing food insecurity, a rise in extreme poverty, high child and maternal mortality, large numbers of people living in slums and widespread shortfall in most of the MDGs. While Asia recorded the fastest progress, hundreds of millions of people remained in extreme poverty and even some of the fastest-growing countries in that region failed to achieve non-income Goals. Other regions had mixed records, notably Latin America, the transition economies, the Middle East and North Africa, often with slow or no progress on some Goals and persistent inequalities undermining progress in others. Overall, the proportion of undernourished people remained high in many parts of the world; progress was made in primary education in most regions, but sub-Saharan Africa and South Asia remained significantly off track; gender equality remained unfulfilled and the education parity target for 2005 would be missed in many countries; child mortality rates had generally declined with progress slowed in many regions and even reversed in others; maternal mortality remained unacceptably high in every region, reflecting low public attention to women's needs; HIV/AIDS, which currently affected 40 million people, continued to pose a serious threat along with malaria; the population with access to improved drinking-water supply increased substantially in most regions; the world was not on track to meet the sanitation Goal; about 900 million people were living in slum-like conditions, characterized by insecure tenure, inadequate housing and lack of access to water or sanitation; and, all regions experienced environmental degradation.

The report identified four overarching reasons why the Goals were not being achieved: poor governance, corruption, poor economic policy choices and the denial of human rights. It recommended that developing country Governments adopt, by 2006, bold MDG-based poverty reduction strategies in order to meet the 2015 deadline. Those strategies should anchor the scaling-up of public investments, capacity-building, domestic resource mobilization and official development assistance (ODA) and provide a framework for strengthening governance, promoting human rights, engaging civil society and promoting the private sector. Those strategies should also be developed and implemented in transparent and inclusive processes. International donors should identify at least a dozen MDG "fast-track" countries for a rapid scaling-up of ODA in 2005, and developed and developing countries should jointly launch, in the same year, a group of "Quick Win" actions to save and improve millions of lives and to promote economic growth. Developing country governments should align national strategies with such regional initiatives as the New Partnership for Africa's Development (see p. 1003) and the Caribbean Community and Common Market, and regional groups should receive increased direct donor support for regional projects. High-income countries should increase ODA from 0.25 per cent of their GNP to around 0.44 per cent in 2006 and 0.54 per cent in 2015. They should also open their markets to developing country exports in accordance with the World Trade Organization (WHO) Doha Round of multilateral trade negotiations and help least developed countries raise export competitiveness through investments in critical trade-related infrastructure, including electricity, roads and ports. The Doha Development Agenda should be fulfilled and the Doha Round completed by 2006. The Secretary-General and the United Nations Development Group should strengthen the coordination of UN agencies, funds and programmes to support the MDGs at Headquarters and at the country level.

Round-table sessions

More open and in-depth discussions of the Summit's agenda took place in four interactive round-table sessions, each chaired by a Head of State or Government. Each regional group (Africa, Asia, Eastern Europe, Latin America and the Caribbean, Western Europe and other States) was represented in the round tables, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 59/291 (see p. 72). During the Summit's concluding plenary, the Chairpersons of the four round table sessions made oral presentations on the deliberations of their respective groups.

Round Table 1. The Chairman of Round Table I, John Howard, Prime Minister of Australia, in his statement read by that country's Deputy Permanent Representative to the United Nations, said that the broad sentiment shared in the Round Table was a sense of optimism for the future of the United Nations, despite some ambivalent comments on the draft outcome document. Participants felt that the document excluded many things which should have been at its heart and had not gone far enough in other matters. The major disappointment related to the neglect of the issues of disarmament and the risk of nuclear proliferation. On the positive side, strong support was expressed for the Peacebuilding Commission, the revamping of the UN human rights machinery and the recognition of the mutual interdependence of the developed and developing worlds. There was also a strong emphasis on poverty eradication and meeting the commitments for the realization of the MDGs.

Round Table 2. The Chairman of Round Table 2, Aleksander Kwasniewski, President of Poland, in his summary said that world leaders emphasized the importance of multilateralism in responding to the challenges and threats of the increasingly interdependent and globalized age of the twenty-first century. There was a call to make the World Summit one of: solidarity, especially with Africa; broad partnership for development; progress on human rights and the new Human Rights Council; and courage to accelerate reform of the United Nations. Participants strongly supported the idea of enhancing efforts to promote development, including making the MDGs an operational reality, and for strengthening human rights and democracy, including the consolidation of the Democracy Fund and the Human Rights Council.

Round Table 3. The Chairman of Round Table 3, Winston B. Spenser, Prime Minister of Antigua and Barbuda, reported that participants focused on development, stressing the importance of the MDGs and their use by national institutions to assess and guide public policies in the economic and social fields, and the need to strengthen global partnership to implement them. Speakers also underlined the need for a coherent policy on trade and aid. The unique challenges of landlocked countries and small island developing nations were addressed, as well as the potential of information and communication technologies (ICT) in helping to achieve the MDGs and the importance of improving developing countries' access to ICT. Of concern were the lack of progress in addressing the debt problem of middle-income countries and the issue of conditionality attached to debt cancellation and its impact on the quality of aid. The importance of making international trade a real engine for development was emphasized, for which the early completion of the Doha round of multilateral trade negotiations was considered essential. Also highlighted were the link between humanitarian assistance and development and the need for greater international cooperation to establish the context for evolving durable solutions and addressing the root causes of crises, abuse and instability.

Round Table 4. The Chairman of Round Table 4, Olusegun Obasanjo, President of Nigeria, said that the draft outcome document clearly emphasized the vital role that the United Nations had to play in the twenty-first century. He pointed out that many gaps and omissions remained, including the failure to agree on the reform of the Security Council and on measures to further non-proliferation and disarmament. There was disappointment that the high expectations on a broad range of issues, including the concept of impunity and the role of the International Criminal Court, were not met. Participants reiterated their condemnation of terrorism as one of the greatest threats to international peace and security and emphasized the importance of redoubling efforts towards a global convention against terrorism. The need to assist developing countries that lacked the capacity to combat terrorism was also discussed and specific reference made to assistance in the area of safe transportation by sea and air. He also said that development had to remain at the centre of trade negotiations, and globalization made more inclusive and equitable. The specific needs of developing countries should be taken into consideration and favourable access to markets granted to small countries and special efforts made to help them, especially those in Africa, to build an environment for attracting foreign investment. Concern was expressed regarding the capacity of low- and middle-income countries to reach the MDGs. In that regard, it was suggested that those countries' access to international monetary and financial institutions should be facilitated and other systemic imbalances fixed to ensure equitable development. A broad consensus had also emerged with regard to the need to strengthen and reform the United Nations so that it could effectively play its role in addressing the multidimensional challenges of the twenty-first century.

Closing session. During the closing session on 16 September, the World Summit also heard statements by the Co-Chairpersons, and by representatives of the League of Arab States, the European Commission, the Organization of the Islamic Conference, the World Conference of Speakers of Parliaments of the Inter-Parliamentary Union, the Shanghai Cooperation Organization, the International Union for the Conservation of Nature and Natural Resources, the Council of Europe, the Commonwealth Secretariat, the Asian Development Bank, the African Development Bank, the International Confederation of Free Trade Unions, the Flora Tristan Centre for Peruvian Women, a national women's organization, and BHI Holdings Limited, a private business enterprise concerned with development ventures.

World Summit preparatory meetings

The General Assembly, at its resumed fifty-ninth (2005) session on 15 April, considered and took decisions on the preparations for and organization of the High-level Plenary Meeting of the General Assembly (see resolution below) and at its September session adopted the draft outcome document for submission to the World Summit.

On 15 April [meeting 92], the Assembly adopted resolution 59/291 [draft: A/59/L.60] without vote [agenda items 45 and 55].

9. Requests the Secretary-General to establish a trust fund to enhance the participation in the hearings of representatives of non-governmental organizations and civil society organizations from developing countries, and calls upon Member States and others to support the trust fund generously and speedily;

10. Encourages Member States to attend the hearings at the ambassadorial level to facilitate interaction between the Member States and the representatives of non-governmental organizations, civil society organizations and the private sector;

11. Requests the President of the General Assembly to continue to hold open, inclusive and transparent consultations with all Member States with a view to reaching the broadest possible agreement on all major issues relating to the High-level Plenary Meeting, taking into account the views expressed by Member States.

Annex I

Organization of the plenary meetings and establishment of the list of speakers for the High-level Plenary Meeting of the General Assembly

1. The High-level Plenary Meeting will consist of a total of six meetings, on the basis of two meetings a day, as follows:

Wednesday, 14 September 2005, from 9 a.m. to 10 a.m. and from 3 p.m. to 7 p.m.;

Thursday, 15 September 2005, from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. and from 3 p.m. to 7 p.m.;

Friday, 16 September 2005, from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. and from 3 p.m. to 7 p.m.

2. The podium in the General Assembly Hall will have three seats to accommodate the two Co-Chairpersons and the Secretary-General. In the absence of the Head of State of the country of the President of the General Assembly at its fifty-ninth session or the Head of State or Government of the country of the President of the General Assembly at its sixtieth session, the President of the Assembly at its fifty-ninth session or the President of the Assembly at its sixtieth session will sit instead.

3. At the opening plenary meeting, on Wednesday morning, 14 September 2005, the speakers will be the two Co-Chairpersons, the Secretary-General and the head of the delegation of the host country of the Organization.

4. The separate meeting on Financing for Development will be held from 10 a.m. to 1 p.m. immediately following the adjournment of the opening plenary meeting. Statements will be made by the head of the delegation of the host country of the International Conference on Financing for Development, major institutional stakeholders, individual delegations, in particular delegations that are proposing key initiatives in the Financing for Development process, one representative from civil society and one representative from the private sector, in consultation with the President of the General Assembly.

5. The list of speakers for the High-level Plenary Meeting will therefore be established on the basis of five meetings. The afternoon meeting on Wednesday, 14 September 2005, the morning and afternoon meetings on Thursday, 15 September 2005, and the morning meeting on Friday, 16 September 2005, will each have 40 speaking slots. The Friday afternoon meeting will have 32 speaking slots since the last hour will be devoted to the closing of the High-level Plenary Meeting.

6. The list of speakers for the High-level Plenary Meeting will be established initially as follows:

(a) The representative of the Secretary-General will draw one name from a first box containing the names of all Member States that will be represented by Heads of State, Heads of Government, vice-presidents, crown princes/princesses, and of the Holy See, in its capacity as observer State, and Palestine, in its capacity as observer, should they be represented by their highest-ranking officials. This procedure will be repeated until all names have been drawn from the box, thus establishing the order in which participants will be invited to choose their meetings and select their speaking slots. The representative of the Secretary-General will then draw from a second box the names of those not contained in the first box in accordance with the same procedure;

(b) Five boxes will be prepared, each one representing a meeting and each one containing numbers corresponding to speaking slots at that meeting;

(c) Once the name of a Member State, the Holy See, in its capacity as observer State, or Palestine, in its capacity as observer, has been drawn by the representative of the Secretary-General, that Member State, the Holy See, in its capacity as observer State, or Palestine, in its capacity as observer, will be invited first to choose a meeting and then to draw from the appropriate box the number indicating the speaking slot in the meeting.

7. The initial list of speakers for the High-level Plenary Meeting as outlined in paragraph 6 above will be established at a meeting to be scheduled as soon as possible in the month of May 2005.

8. Subsequently, when each category of speakers is organized following the order resulting from the selection process outlined in paragraph 6 above, the list of speakers for each meeting will be rearranged in accordance with the established practice of the General Assembly:

(a) Heads of State will thus be accorded first priority, followed by Heads of Government; vice-presidents, crown princes/princesses; the highest-ranking official of the Holy See, in its capacity as observer State, and of Palestine, in its capacity as observer; ministers; and permanent representatives;

(b) In the event that the level at which a statement is to be made is subsequently changed, the speaker will be moved to the next available speaking slot in the appropriate category at the same meeting;

(c) Participants may arrange to exchange their speaking slots in accordance with the established practice of the General Assembly;

(d) Speakers who are not present when their speaking turn comes will be automatically moved to the next available speaking slot within their category.

9. In order to accommodate all speakers at the High-level Plenary Meeting, statements will be limited to five minutes, on the understanding that this will not preclude the distribution of more extensive texts.

10. Without prejudice to other organizations which have observer status in the General Assembly, a representative of each of the following may also be included in the list of speakers for the plenary meetings of the High-level Plenary Meeting:

League of Arab States

African Union

European Community

Organization of the Islamic Conference

World Conference of Speakers of Parliament of the Inter-Parliamentary Union.

11. Representatives of non-governmental organizations in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council, civil society organizations and the private sector, one from each grouping, selected during the informal interactive hearings of June 2005, may also be included in the list of speakers for the plenary meetings of the High-level Plenary Meeting in consultation with the President of the General Assembly, time permitting.

12. Other than for Member States, the list of speakers for the plenary meetings of the High-level Plenary Meeting will be closed on Monday, 1 August 2005.

13. The arrangements set out above shall in no way create a precedent.

Annex II

Organization of the interactive round-table sessions for the High-level Plenary Meeting of the General Assembly

1. The High-level Plenary Meeting will hold four interactive round-table sessions, as follows:

Wednesday, 14 September 2005, from 3 p.m. to 6 p.m.;

Thursday, 15 September 2005, from 10 a.m. to 1 p.m. and from 3 p.m. to 6 p.m.;

Friday, 16 September 2005, from 10 a.m. to 1 p.m.

2. The four round-table sessions will have at least 40 seats each and will be chaired by a Head of State or Government.

3. The chairpersons of the four round-table sessions will be from the African States, the Asian States, the Eastern European States and the Latin American and Caribbean States. Those four chairpersons will be selected by their respective regional groups in consultation with the President of the General Assembly.

4. Following the selection of the chairpersons of the round-table sessions, each regional group will determine which of its members will participate in each round-table session, ensuring that equitable geographical distribution will be maintained, allowing for some flexibility. The chairpersons of the regional groups will communicate to the President of the General Assembly the list of countries from their respective regions that will participate in each round-table session. Member States are encouraged to be represented at the round tables at the level of Head of State or Government.

5. All four round-table sessions will cover the entire agenda of the High-level Plenary Meeting.

6. Each Head of State or Head of Government or head of delegation attending the round-table sessions may be accompanied by two advisers.

7. The composition of the four round-table sessions will be subject to the principle of equitable geographical distribution. Thus, for each regional group, the distribution of its members for participation in each round-table session will be as follows:

(a) African States: fifteen Member States;

(b) Asian States: fifteen Member States;

(c) Eastern European States: seven Member States;

(d) Latin American and Caribbean States: ten Member States;

(e) Western European and other States: nine Member States.

8. A Member State that is not a member of any of the regional groups may participate in a round-table session to be determined in consultation with the President of the General Assembly. The Holy See, in its capacity as observer State, and Palestine, in its capacity as observer, as well as the organizations listed in paragraph 10 of annex I to the present resolution, may also participate in different round-table sessions to be determined also in consultation with the President of the Assembly.

9. Heads of entities of the United Nations system may also participate in the round-table sessions, in consultation with the President of the General Assembly.

10. The list of participants in each round-table session will be made available in due course.

11. The round-table sessions will be closed to the media and the general public. Accredited delegates and observers will be able to follow the proceedings of the round-table sessions via a closed-circuit television in the overflow room.

12. Summaries of the deliberations of the four round-table sessions will be presented orally by the chairpersons of the round-table sessions during the concluding plenary meeting of the High-level Plenary Meeting.

Annex III

Organization of the informal interactive hearings

1. The President of the General Assembly will preside over the informal interactive hearings to be held on 23 and 24 June 2005. The hearings shall consist of a brief opening plenary meeting followed by four sequential sessions of the hearings on the basis of two sessions a day, from 10 a.m. to 1 p.m., and from 3 p.m. to 6 p.m. Each session will consist of presentations by invited participants from non-governmental organizations in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council, civil society organizations and the private sector and an exchange of views with Member States.

2. The hearings will be attended by representatives of non-governmental organizations in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council, civil society organizations, the private sector, Member States and observers.

3. The President of the General Assembly will determine the list of invited participants and the exact format and organization of the hearings, in consultation with Member States and representatives of non-governmental organizations in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council, civil society organizations and the private sector.

4. The themes for the hearings will be based on the comprehensive report of the Secretary-General of 21 March 2005 and the clusters defined therein.

5. The President of the General Assembly will consult with representatives of non-governmental organizations in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council, civil society organizations and the private sector, and with Member States, as appropriate, on the list of representatives of non-governmental organizations, civil society organizations and the private sector that may participate in the plenary meetings of the High-level Plenary Meeting of September 2005.

On 13 September [meeting 118], the Assembly adopted resolution 59/314 [draft: A/59/L.70] without vote [agenda items 45 and 55], which contained the draft outcome document of the September 2005 High-level Plenary Meeting of the Assembly.

Other World Summit events

Treaty-signing ceremony

During the World Summit (14-16 September), the General Assembly held a Treaty-signing Event—"Focus 2005: Responding to Global Challenges"—during which 99 countries and the European Community signed, ratified or acceded to a number of UN treaties. Fifty-two countries participated at the level of Head of State or Government and over 40 at the level of Minister of Foreign Affairs. A total of 265 treaty actions were undertaken during the event. The treaties that attracted the most attention were: the International Convention for the Suppression of Acts of Nuclear Terrorism (see p. 1410), which was opened for signature during the event (82 signatures); the United Nations Convention against Corruption, adopted by General Assembly resolution 58/4 [YUN 2003, p. 1127] (seven signatures, two ratifications and one accession), and which entered into force on 14 December; the Optional Protocol to the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, adopted by Assembly resolution 57/199 [YUN 2002, p. 631] (nine signatures and two ratifications); the World Health Organization Framework Convention on Tobacco Control [YUN 2003, p. 1251] (five ratifications and two accessions); and the United Nations Convention on Jurisdictional Immunities of States and Their Property, adopted by Assembly resolution 59/38 [YUN 2004, p. 1304] (nine signatures). One State, Liberia, undertook a record 83 treaty actions on 16 September.

Related World Summit gatherings

The occasion of the World Summit also provided an opportunity for several other bodies to gather, in order for their views and proposals to be taken into account by the Heads of State and Government, during their deliberations and finalization of the Summit's outcome document. Those gatherings included the informal interactive session of the General Assembly with representatives of non-governmental organizations (NGOs), civil society organizations and the private sector [A/60/331]; the second High-level Dialogue on Financing for Development (New York, 27-28 June) (see p. 1065); the second World Conference of Speakers of Parliament [A/60/398]; and other related regional meetings.

Informal interactive hearings

For the first time in its history, the General Assembly held informal interactive hearings with representatives of NGOs, civil society organizations and the private sector (New York, 23-24 June) [A/60/331], in accordance with Assembly resolutions 59/291 and 59/293 (see pp. 72 & 1064). The hearings were organized by the Assembly President, Jean Ping (Gabon), as an input to the preparatory process of the High-level Plenary Meeting of the General Assembly (World Summit).

The hearings, based on the Secretary-General's report "In larger freedom: towards development, security and human rights for all" (see p. 67), were conducted in five interactive sessions, on the themes: "Freedom from want: the MDGs one to seven; Freedom from want: MDG eight and issues regarding financing for development; Freedom from fear; Freedom to live in dignity; and Strengthening the United Nations".

A summary of the hearings [A/60/331], transmitted to the Assembly by its President, outlined the main messages emerging from the sessions. There was a shared feeling that development, peace and security and human rights were interconnected and that the World Summit presented a unique opportunity to make headway in bringing about a more prosperous, fair and safe world. The hearings emphasized: a human rights-based approach to development, peace and security and the need to elevate human rights within the United Nations; that gender equality, empowering women and protecting their human rights were prerequisites for achieving the MDGs; and that the draft outcome document of the World Summit gave more attention to the rights, needs and contributions of such groups as indigenous peoples, those facing racial discrimination and disabilities, children, youth and older people.

Concerning MDG eight (trade and financing for development), the hearings expressed the need to challenge the trade liberalization agenda of the Doha multilateral trade negotiations (see p. 1041) and to prioritize development concerns. There was a call for keeping the commitment to devote 0.7 per cent of GNP to ODA, innovative sources of financing and ensuring immediate and wide-ranging debt relief and cancellation. It was felt that the outcome document should give greater attention to the need to enhance democracy and accountability in international decision-making. The need to move towards a culture of conflict prevention was recognized and it was felt that the outcome document should give serious attention to disarmament and a new legal instrument to control arms trade.

Member States were urged to recognize the responsibilities that accompanied sovereignty, including a commitment to prevent genocide and massive human rights violations. Civil society participation in the United Nations needed to be strengthened, and there was widespread agreement on the need for a strengthened United Nations and support for the proposed Peacebuilding Commission and Human Rights Council. Key issues raised on Secretariat reform included the need for increased resources and the preservation of the Secretariat's independence and integrity.

IPU World Conference of Speakers of Parliaments

The second World Conference of Speakers of Parliament of the Inter-Parliamentary Union (IPU) was held at United Nations Headquarters from 7 to 9 September. The Final Declaration of the Conference "Bridging the democracy gap in international relations: a stronger role for parliaments", was transmitted to the General Assembly on 16 September [A/60/398] by the IPU President. The Declaration stated that the Conference was convened to take stock of action effected by parliaments since their first meeting in 2000 [YUN 2000, p. 67], and to examine how to support better international cooperation and the United Nations, in order to help bridge the democracy gap in international relations. It also stated that the United Nations had to remain the cornerstone of global cooperation and urged all parliaments to debate the reform proposals contained in the Secretary-General's report "In larger freedom: towards development, security and human rights for all" (see p. 67) and engage with their respective Governments to create the momentum for action.

The Conference welcomed the UN decision to grant observer status to IPU [YUN 2002, p. 1445] and noted that the time had come for a strategic partnership between the two institutions. It would also welcome more substantive cooperation with the United Nations and called on the world body to resort more frequently to the political and technical expertise which IPU and its Member Parliaments could provide, particularly in post-conflict institution-building. It also welcomed the debate on how best to establish more meaningful and structured interaction between the United Nations and national parliaments. The Conference encouraged IPU to ensure that national parliaments were better informed about UN activities, to develop further parliamentary hearings and specialized meetings at the United Nations, and to cooperate more closely with regional parliamentary assemblies and organizations, with a view to enhancing coherence and efficiency in global and interregional parliamentary cooperation. Participants pledged to increase the capacity of their parliaments to bring their influence to bear on the work of the United Nations, enhance its transparency and accountability and to provide an impetus to the reforms under way. They encouraged every parliament to organize, around the same time each year, an "International Day of Parliaments" and to hold a parliamentary debate on one of the recommendations included in the Final Declaration of the Conference.

The IPU Secretary-General, Anders Johnsson, in reporting to the World Summit on the outcome of the Conference, said that the Declaration had taken up the subject of UN reform, as the Speakers of Parliamentarians wanted to see the reform proposals debated, and acted on immediately by their Governments. They wanted comprehensive reform that would recognize the intrinsic link between democracy, security development and human rights, and a stronger United Nations. They called on States to demonstrate leadership and political will to provide the Organization with more efficient mechanisms, appropriate human and financial resources and real management reform.

Regional contributions to the World Summit

Communications. On 5 August [A/59/900], Lebanon, on behalf of the Arab Group at the United Nations, transmitted to General Assembly President resolution No. 314 and a Declaration on the pursuit of the implementation of the Millennium Development Goals, issued by a Joint Ministerial Conference of Arab Ministers of Social Affairs and Planning on the Millennium Development Goals (Cairo, Egypt, 30 June).

On 22 August [A/60/313], Indonesia transmitted to the General Assembly President the Jakarta Declaration on the Millennium Development Goals in Asia and the Pacific: the Way Forward 2015, adopted at a Ministerial Regional Meeting (Jakarta, Indonesia, 3-5 August).

On 9 September [A/60/368], Guatemala transmitted to the Secretary-General its second progress report on the MDGs, for submission to the High-level Plenary of the Assembly's sixtieth session.

Implementation of the World Summit Outcome

Report of Secretary-General. The Secretary-General, in an October report [A/60/430] on the implementation of those decisions contained in the World Summit Outcome requiring specific action by him, noted that the Outcome document provided comprehensive policy guidance for the ongoing work of the Secretariat and UN agencies, funds and programmes, all of which would be reviewing their programmes accordingly. He informed Member States of the programmatic and management-related workplan and overall framework he established for implementing the Summit Outcome, and the basic processes and time lines expected in each area of activity. The implementation of mandated actions would be under his direct leadership, with a number of individual programmatic elements falling to the lead UN department or entity, which would work with relevant parts of the UN system to prepare further proposals and implementation plans for the General Assembly's consideration.

The implementation activity fell into four broad clusters: work related to institutional innovations, including support to the intergovernmental process discussing the Peacebuilding Commission and Human Rights Council, and finalizing details and/or beginning the implementation of such new entities as the Peacebuilding Support Office and Peacebuilding Fund, as well as the analysis and recommendations requested in support of the review of programmatic and institutional mandates older than five years; the overhaul of oversight and audit arrangements, including the creation of an ethics office and strengthened financial disclosure regulations and the development of new oversight arrangements, including a new oversight committee reporting to the Assembly; the review of existing financial and human resources regulations, rules and policies and the development of the proposed staff buy-out programme; and the review of system-wide coherence, including ensuring greater policy and operational coordination across specialized agencies, funds and programmes, and the development of proposals for more tightly managed entities in the fields of development, humanitarian assistance and the environment. The financial implications of the Summit's decisions were calculated, and submitted to the Assembly in November (see p. 1476). Budgetary implications for the proposed Peacebuilding Commission and the Human Rights Council were submitted separately.

The report also described the actions taken under specific subject areas to implement the Summit Outcome decisions. Those actions addressed economic and social development (see also CEB consideration below), peaceful settlement of disputes, particularly regarding the preparation of proposals to further support national efforts and capacity to prevent conflict and enhancement of the capacity of the Department of Political Affairs for mediation and other activities in support of the Secretary-General's good offices function and the work of his special envoys. The Secretary-General stated that he had formed a Counter-Terrorism Implementation Task Force and would submit proposals in 2006 to further strengthen the UN system capacity to assist States in combating terrorism and to enhance coordination in that regard. In the area of peacekeeping, the Department of Peacekeeping Operations presented a proposal for a strategic reserves concept and would continue to engage with Member States on that and other options for enhanced rapidly deployable capacities to reinforce peacekeeping operations in crisis. The Secretariat was proceeding with the design and terms of reference of the Peacebuilding Fund, which was expected to be established by the end of November, and work had commenced to prepare the Peacebuilding Support Office. Considering the Summit's decision that the Security Council improve the monitoring of the implementation and effects of sanctions, the Office of Legal Affairs was tasked with developing proposals and guidelines for the Council's consideration, and with respect to the need to strengthen the UN Office on Drugs and Crime to carry out its mandate, financial implications would be submitted in November. The Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights was working with the Department for General Assembly and Conference Management to ensure that support arrangements were in place for the Human Rights Council as soon as the Assembly took a decision on that matter. The Secretary-General also highlighted efforts to strengthen the rule of law in UN activities and to develop a system-wide code of ethics for all UN staff. With regard to Secretariat reform, he had initiated the review of all mandates older than five years to assist the Assembly to update and focus the work of the Organization, based on which a strategic framework for 2008-2009 would be proposed subsequent to the Assembly's approval of the review. Work was also under way to strengthen the capacity of the Office of Internal Oversight Services, and proposals would be submitted to the Assembly, based on the recommendations of the CEB High-level Committee on Management, for an independent external evaluation of the auditing, oversight, roles and responsibilities of the management of the United Nations and the specialized agencies. The Secretariat was also preparing proposals for the creation of an independent oversight advisory committee to enhance the independence of UN oversight structures. The Secretary-General said he intended to review and discuss options for strengthening management and coordination of UN operational activities, and the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs was developing proposals to improve the timeliness and predictability of humanitarian funding.

The Secretary-General concluded that work was under way to implement many of the Summit's decisions along with a number of steps he had already taken in that regard. However, progress in some key areas would depend on decisions that had to be taken by Member States and he underscored the urgent need for them to complete discussions on those issues.

The Secretary-General issued separate reports on the establishment of the ethics office, comprehensive review of governance arrangements, including an independent external evaluation of the auditing and oversight system and the independent audit advisory committee [A/60/568 & Corr. 1, 2] (see p. 1496).

CEB consideration. The Chief Executives Board for Coordination (CEB), at its second regular session (New York, 28 October) [CEB/2005/2], discussed the implications of, and follow-up to, the outcome of the 2005 World Summit. It had before it a background note entitled "United Nations system follow-up to the 2005 World Summit", which analysed the Outcome under the headings: development; peace and collective security, human rights and the rule of law and humanitarian assistance; and management reform. The Secretary-General drew the Board's attention to the four broad clusters of his workplan for the remainder of 2005 and the first quarter of 2006 and beyond (see above). He said the fourth cluster—system-wide coherence— was of particular importance to CEB, as its implementation posed a range of coherence issues that needed to be addressed collectively. He said work could not be rushed nor held to the deadline of the first quarter of 2006 or earlier, as the other clusters. The process needed to be inclusive with ample opportunity for discussion and input. He undertook to consult with Member States on how the World Summit Outcome follow-up in that area might be organized, following consultations with CEB. The Chairman of the High-level Committee on Programmes (HLCP), reporting on the Committee's tenth session (Frascati, Italy, 6-8 October) [CEB/2005/7], said that on the overall issue of system-wide coherence, HLPC emphasized that issues of development, peace and security and human rights had to be tackled in an integrated manner and that the main horizontal themes of sustainable development, human rights and gender had to be mainstreamed in the policies of all organizations. HLCP member organizations suggested that the Outcome document be placed before their governing bodies as a basis for more coherent and coordinated follow-up by Member States and the UN system. The Committee raised the possibility of developing a road map with appropriate indicators and milestones for the system's follow-up to the Outcome.

The Executive Heads welcomed the Outcome as an expression of the importance of multilateral cooperation and the crucial role of the UN system. CEB would pursue all matters in which system-wide coordination and coherence were involved, including developing proposals for strengthened management and coordination of operational activities, particularly in relation to the World Summit's call for more tightly managed entities in the fields of development, humanitarian assistance and the environment; fully utilizing HLPC, in collaboration with UNDG, for advancing policy and operational coherence at Headquarters and in the field; drawing on the CEB report prepared in the lead-up to the Summit, entitled "One United Nations—Catalyst for Progress and Change", in elaborating a system-wide approach to ensuring coherent and coordinated follow-up of the Outcome; encouraging UN system organizations to bring the Outcome to the attention of their governing bodies; providing support for the strengthened role of the Economic and Social Council, particularly in relation to the holding of annual ministerial-level substantive reviews to assess progress in reaching the internationally agreed development goals and the convening of a biennial high-level development cooperation forum.

Assembly and Security Council actions. In December, the General Assembly (resolution 60/180) and the Security Council (resolutions 1645(2005) and 1646(2005)) (see p. 94) took action to establish the Peacebuilding Commission.

Other implementation matters. In a 10 June letter [A/59/842], China welcomed the report of the High-Level Panel on Threats, Challenges and Change [YUN 2004, p. 54], the UN Millennium Project Report (see p. 70) and the comprehensive report of the Secretary-General (see p. 67). It maintained, among other things, that UN reforms should observe the principles of multilateralism, sovereign equality, non-interference in internal affairs and peaceful resolution of conflicts; reforms should be all-dimensional and multisectoral; and they should accommodate the propositions and concerns of all UN members, especially those from developing countries.

In a 16 September statement, issued by the Office of the Spokesman [SG/SM/10100], the Secretary-General welcomed the initiative of the Prime Minister of Sweden to create a "Leaders' Network in support of UN reform". The Secretary-General encouraged other countries to support the initiative and expressed hope that the Network could help translate the commitments made at the World Summit into effective action.

On 26 September [A/60/394], Iran transmitted to the Secretary-General the Tehran communiqué, adopted at the International Conference on United Nations Reform (Tehran, Iran, 17-18 July).

On 27 September [A/60/412], Mexico, on behalf of the Group of Friends for the Reform of the United Nations (Algeria, Australia, Canada, Chile, Colombia, Germany, Japan, Kenya, Mexico, New Zealand, the Netherlands, Pakistan, Singapore, Spain, Sweden), said, in a letter to the Secretary-General, that the crucial phase of the implementation of the outcome document of the 2005 World Summit was about to begin. If the Organization failed to turn its words into actions, multilateralism would not be able to produce the solutions that societies demanded all over the world. It urged the Secretary-General to continue working to implement the commitments and agreements reached during the High-level Plenary Meeting and assured him that the Group of Friends would continue to take the necessary actions to attain the goal of bringing about a comprehensive and sound United Nations.

Other matters

Request for legal opinion

On 7 October [A/60/438], Venezuela, in a letter to the General Assembly President, reiterated its objections to the process leading to the Assembly's adoption of draft resolutions A/59/L.70 and A/60/L.1 relating to the World Summit Outcome. It requested that the matter be referred to the UN Office of Legal Affairs to determine whether the procedure followed in the negotiation and adoption of the final outcome document of the World Summit complied with the United Nations Charter and the Assembly's rules of procedure.

In a 1 November reply [A/60/535], the Assembly President told Venezuela that he had been informed by the Office of Legal Affairs that, as a matter of policy and practice, it provided legal advice only at the request of a UN organ and not from individual Member States. Moreover, it was incumbent on the Office of the President and Member States to implement the document, which was adopted without vote by more than 150 Heads of State and Government.

PART ONE

Political and security questions

Chapter I

International peace and security

In 2005, the United Nations celebrated its sixtieth anniversary in an international environment, which continued to face interconnected threats to peace and security stemming from war and conflict, civil violence, international organized crime, terrorism and arms proliferation, including weapons of mass destruction, persistent poverty, deadly infectious diseases and environmental degradation. In September, at the 2005 World Summit, a High-level Plenary Meeting of the General Assembly to mark that milestone, world leaders articulated the need for a new security consensus that would address those threats preventively, including a new global strategy for preventing catastrophic terrorism from ever becoming a reality. They also approved the Secretary-General's proposal for the creation of an intergovernmental Peacebuilding Commission and a Peacebuilding Support Office to strengthen the management of UN peace operations worldwide, which he had articulated in his report to the Summit, entitled "In larger freedom: towards development, security and human rights for all".

The Security Council, which also met in September at the level of Heads of State and Government to discuss threats to international peace and security, adopted additional measures for Member States to reinforce ongoing efforts to prevent terrorism. To help countries break the cycle of relapsing into conflict, the Council adopted a declaration on strengthening its effectiveness in conflict prevention, particularly in Africa. The Council also addressed the role that civil society could play and stressed the need for a broad strategy of conflict prevention that addressed the root causes of armed conflict and political and social crises comprehensively. Conscious of the invaluable contribution of regional organizations to UN peace efforts, the Council held a High-level meeting with regional organizations in October and expressed its determination to further develop cooperation between the United Nations and those organizations in the maintenance of peace and security.

Throughout the year, the United Nations worked tirelessly to prevent and resolve conflicts and to consolidate peace. Those efforts resulted in the successful transition from peacekeeping to peacebuilding in Sierra Leone and Timor Leste, support for the organization of elections in Burundi, the Democratic Republic of the Congo (DRC), Haiti and Liberia, and facilitated complex political transition processes in those countries, and in Afghanistan.

The year 2005 was particularly devastating with regard to international terrorism, having witnessed an increase in tragic terrorist attacks worldwide, including in Egypt, India, Indonesia, Iraq, Lebanon and London. In a series of statements, the Council condemned those acts and called for the prosecution of the perpetrators. The General Assembly, in the outcome document of its 2005 World Summit, welcomed the identification by the Secretary-General of elements for a counter-terrorism strategy, and in April, adopted the International Convention for the Suppression of Acts of Nuclear Terrorism.

During the year, the United Nations continued to strengthen its peacekeeping capacity worldwide. In June, the Assembly considered and took action on a number of cross-cutting issues related to the administrative and budgetary aspects of UN peacekeeping operations, including a request to the Office of Internal Oversight Services to review the practices and management structure of the Department of Peacekeeping Operations. The Council and the Assembly also confronted the issue of sexual abuse and exploitation by peacekeepers, with the Assembly endorsing the recommendations contained in the report of the Secretary-General's Adviser on Sexual Exploitation and Abuse by United Nations Peacekeeping Personnel, entitled "A comprehensive strategy to eliminate future sexual exploitation and abuse in United Nations peacekeeping operations".

The Organization maintained 12 political and peacebuilding missions and 18 peacekeeping operations. At the end of 2005, some 85,000 military and civilian personnel were serving under UN command, compared to 64,701 the previous year.

The financial position of UN peacekeeping operations continued to improve during the year, as expenditures increased to $4,074.3 million, compared to $2,933.8 million in 2004, a 39 per cent increase, mostly attributable to expanded operations in the DRC and the full-year impact of four other missions. Unpaid assessed contributions amounted to $1.7 billion, compared to $1.5 billion the previous year.

Promotion of international peace and security

A new concept of collective security

In his 21 March report entitled "In larger freedom: towards development, security and human rights for all" [A/59/2005 & Add.1], submitted to the 2005 World Summit (see p. 48), the Secretary-General endorsed the broad vision of the role of the United Nations in providing collective security and the case for a more comprehensive concept of such collective action, as articulated in the 2004 report of the High-level Panel on Threats, Challenges and Change [YUN 2004, p. 54]. He said that threats to peace and security in the twenty-first century included not just international war and conflict, but civil violence, organized crime, terrorism, weapons of mass destruction, poverty, deadly infectious disease and environmental degradation. In a globalized world, the threats were interconnected, and as such, a new security consensus had to be found to address them all preventively, acting at a sufficiently early stage with the full range of available instruments. An essential part of the new consensus had to be agreement on when and how much force could be used to defend international peace and security, particularly the right to use it preemptively against imminent threats, and preventively against latent or non-imminent threats. He recommended that the Security Council adopt a resolution setting out the principles for using force and expressing its intention to be guided by them when deciding to authorize or mandate such use. The Secretary-General said that the time had come to transform the United Nations into the effective instrument for preventing conflict that it was meant to be, by acting on several key policy and institutional priorities. In that context, a new global strategy was needed to avert catastrophic terrorism. The multilateral frameworks for handling threats from nuclear, biological and chemical weapons should be revitalized to ensure continued progress on disarmament and to address the growing risk of a cascade of proliferation, especially in the nuclear field, and efforts should be continued to reduce the prevalence and risk of war. The Secretary-General appealed to Member States to do more to ensure that the United Nations had effective capacities for peacekeeping, commensurate with the demands placed upon it. Noting that the time was ripe for an interlocking system of peacekeeping capacities to enable the Organization to work with relevant regional organizations, he proposed the creation of an intergovernmental Peacebuilding Commission and Peacebuilding Support Office (see p. 93).

The World Summit, in its outcome document (resolution 60/1 of 16 September) (see p. 48), decided to establish the Peacebuilding Commission and endorsed the creation of an initial operating capability for a standing police capacity for the policing component of UN peacekeeping operations.

Maintenance of international peace and security

On 12 July [meeting 5225], the Security Council held a debate on the role of the Council in humanitarian crises: challenges, lessons learned, and the way ahead. Greece, in an explanatory non-paper of 6 July [S/2005/434], said that the debate was to focus on recent Council efforts to break the cycle of conflict affecting societies and to prevent them from relapsing into such crises. Attention was to be placed particularly on the three key pillars of post-conflict security: the promotion of the rule of law; security sector reform; and the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration of ex-combatants.

In opening the debate, the Council President noted that the early prevention of humanitarian crises had become a political and moral imperative for the Council, and that the United Nations should strengthen its capacity to move from reaction to prevention of crises before they reached critical mass. While the responsibility for the protection of civilian populations rested primarily with States concerned, in cases of extreme violations and atrocities, the international community had an obligation to the victims of such violence. The United Nations, particularly the Council, had to take effective action to alleviate the suffering of civilians and to avert the occurrence of humanitarian disasters.

The Secretary-General, in his statement to the Council, observed that Member States needed to take early action in a crisis situation to prevent human suffering and said it was important to prevent future conflicts by addressing their root causes. He also addressed the problems of providing security and justice in post-conflict situations, based on the rule of law, which he said could not be imposed from outside. Local actors had to understand that only confidence in the rule of law would ensure lasting security, by enabling different factions or communities to rely on the forces of the State, rather than on factional militias for protection. The role of the international community was to galvanize and provide technical assistance to that process, while making sure all national actors were included in it. Different parts of the UN system, including international financial institutions, needed to cooperate closely with each other, bilateral donors and troop contributors. Ensuring such coordination was one of the roles he hoped to see fulfilled by the new Peacebuilding Commission.

In his address, the Under-Secretary-General for Peacekeeping Operations, Jean-Marie Guéhenno, while also reflecting on post-conflict situations, stressed that, if peace were to be lasting, the short-, medium- and long-term security and justice needs of both the State and its population had to be addressed equally. UN efforts in the security and justice sectors tended to be driven by peace agreements, which addressed those issues in the context of ending a conflict. While being an important element, it did not lay a strong basis for the consolidation of State and human security in the post-conflict setting. Insufficient attention was given to a comprehensive national security review process that identified threats to State and human security and the development of a security architecture that was responsive to those threats. As a result, both the international community and host countries were ill-prepared to tackle critical challenges, such as corruption, cross-border narcotics and arms, and human trafficking. Peace agreement-driven approaches had, in some instances, even led the international community to support the reform of State institutions that had lost their legitimacy in the eyes of the population. It was, therefore, not surprising that those same countries had a high propensity for relapsing into conflict.

Furthermore, international efforts related to the security and justice sectors were often disjointed, leading to uneven or duplicative assistance, and within the United Nations, there was no single system-wide approach to those issues. International approaches in support of security sector reform in post-conflict countries mostly applied foreign models and standards that were often politically unpalatable, unsuitable or unrealistic in the light of the realities of the situation.

To address those challenges, the international community should reconsider whether it was always realistic to seek to rebuild, reform or restructure a country's defence, police, courts and penal system while simultaneously seeking to reestablish security, keep the political process on track, facilitate the return of displaced populations, conduct elections and restore basic services.

In some cases, it might be appropriate to start early on complex tasks, such as rebuilding courts and training police, while in others, the sequence of activities might need to be re-examined to enable the peacekeeping operation to focus on stabilization while a proper assessment of threats and needs was conducted and appropriate international, regional and local partners were identified to rebuild the security infrastructure and institutions. Those questions needed to be thought through carefully to ensure that efforts and resources were spent on viable processes and institutions that could be sustained beyond the brief lifespan of a peacekeeping operation.

For the UN system, another key to better delivery was to continue to strive to carry out its mandates in as integrated a manner as possible, including with development partners at the initial stages of planning for peacekeeping operations, to ensure that joint efforts were guided by a coherent, long-term strategy, and allowed for smooth handovers to national and development partners once the peacekeeping mandate was over. At the same time, there should be greater integration of capacities within the UN system, with assignment of clear responsibility for specific activities; the development of repositories of best practices, including diverse models of reforming the security sector; and effective coordination of United Nations, bilateral and other efforts.

There should also be a differentiation between areas where the UN system had, or should further develop, its capacity to carry out operational tasks and deliver programmes, and other areas where it could most usefully engage knowledgeably with host countries and bilateral and multilateral partners that had the requisite experience or capacity. As such, the UN's role should be to advocate for assistance and to ensure that what was promised and delivered responded to the actual needs of the host country. One key area that deserved examination was defence reform, where the United Nations currently had limited capacity.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 12 July [meeting 5225], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2005/30 on behalf of the Council:

> The Security Council reaffirms the purposes and principles enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations and bears in mind its primary responsibility under the Charter for the maintenance of international peace and security.
> The Council remains deeply concerned by the devastating humanitarian, political and economic consequences of armed conflicts and stresses the overriding political and moral imperatives to prevent the outbreak and escalation of armed conflicts and humanitarian crises, and the benefits therein for peace and development and friendly relations among all States.

The Council acknowledges the importance of helping to prevent future conflicts through addressing their root causes in a legitimate and fair manner.

The Council reiterates the importance it attaches to the promotion and urgent restoration of justice and the rule of law in post-conflict societies and in promoting national reconciliation, democratic development, and human rights. The Council recognizes that ending impunity is important in peace agreements and can contribute to efforts to come to terms with past abuses and to achieve national reconciliation to prevent future conflict. The Council recalls that it has repeatedly emphasized the responsibility of States to end impunity and bring to justice those responsible for genocide, war crimes, crimes against humanity and serious violations of international humanitarian law.

The Council further recognizes the increasing importance of civilian aspects of conflict management in addressing complex crisis situations and in preventing the recurrence of conflict and acknowledges the importance of civilian-military cooperation in crisis management. When approving a United Nations operation, the Council should take into account the essential role of military and civilian police in assisting the stabilization of crisis situations and the maintenance of security. At the same time, the Council acknowledges that the special representative of the Secretary-General, assisted by civilian advisers, could play a key coordination role in the provision of humanitarian assistance, the re-establishment of public order, the functioning of public institutions, as well as rehabilitation, reconstruction and peacebuilding, which lead to long-term sustainable development.

The Council stresses the need to ensure adequate and timely financing for peacebuilding priorities at all stages of the peace process and stresses the need for sustained financial investment in peacebuilding over the medium to longer-term period of recovery. It recognizes the importance of rapid initiation of peacebuilding activities to meet immediate needs and encourages the building of capabilities that can be incorporated rapidly.

The Council takes note with interest of the important proposal by the Secretary-General to establish a peacebuilding commission and shares the objective of improving United Nations capacity to coordinate with donors and troop contributors and to perform peacebuilding activities, in particular from the start of peacekeeping operations through stabilization, reconstruction and development. The Council recognizes the important role that this body could play to bridge the gap between maintenance of international peace and security and the work of humanitarian and economic development assistance.

The Council acknowledges that in post-conflict societies, successful peacebuilding rests on the premise that protection of civilians, the promotion of the rule of law and transitional justice, disarmament, demobilization, repatriation, reintegration and rehabilitation of former combatants, security sector and democratic, economic and social reform are integrated elements and that national ownership plays an important role which should be supported by the international community, including the regional organizations.

The Council emphasizes that security sector reform is an essential element of any stabilization process in post-conflict environments, underlines the fact that it is inextricably linked with promotion of the rule of law, transitional justice, disarmament, demobilization and reintegration and the protection of civilians, among others, and acknowledges the need for more adequate preparation, including mobilization of necessary planning resources, and more coherent approaches by the United Nations and the international community in addressing these issues.

The Council acknowledges the need to give adequate attention to security sector reform in the future, drawing on best practices that have been developed in this area. The Council also stresses the need seriously to consider the promotion of the rule of law and transitional justice, the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration process and security sector reform, their interlinkage and the availability of adequate resources, when approving the necessary mandates for United Nations operations.

Role of civil society in conflict prevention and pacific settlement of disputes

The Security Council, on 20 September [meeting 5264], discussed the role of civil society in conflict prevention and the pacific settlement of disputes. In accordance with rule 39 of the Council's provisional rules of procedure, the Executive Director of the European Centre for Conflict Prevention, Chair of the Columbia University Seminar on Conflict Resolution and faculty coordinator of the Columbia University Conflict Resolution Network, and the Executive Director of the African Centre for the Constructive Resolution of Disputes were invited to attend the meeting.

The Philippines, in a 7 September letter to the Secretary-General [S/2005/594], said that non-governmental organizations (NGOs), civil society, local authorities and the private sector could contribute to the promotion and implementation of development, security and human rights programmes, and it was important that they be engaged with Governments, the United Nations and other international organizations in those key areas. Coordination with civil society organizations in the peaceful settlement of disputes was beneficial and necessary, given their strength as neutral actors whose knowledge, abilities, experience, links with key constituencies, influence and resources contributed greatly to creating confidence among parties concerned.

Specific civil society sectors that could be tapped to assist parties in the search for peaceful solution to disputes, tensions and frictions included the academe, NGOs dedicated to conflict prevention, and the religious sector. The Council therefore needed to address: ways to harness the actual and potential contributions of non-governmental and civil society organizations in developing a strategy for comprehensive conflict prevention and the pacific settlement of disputes in line with Chapter VI of the UN Charter; how it could collaborate with those organizations in overall conflict prevention strategies and in the various stages of dispute settlement; how it could mobilize them to play a more active role in pursuit of "other peaceful means" to settle disputes, such as informal dialogues and contacts between and among parties to disputes; and, in addition to existing mechanisms as the Arria formula (Security Council informal consultative arrangement), what cooperative framework could be fostered in order for the Council and those organizations to have a smooth working relationship to safeguard international peace and security.

The Secretary-General, in his statement to the Council, delivered on his behalf by Assistant Secretary-General, Tuliameni Kalomoh, of the Department of Political Affairs, said that civil society's role in conflict prevention needed to be fully recognized, and both the United Nations and regional organizations had to do more to tap into the comparative advantages of that role. Local ownership and participation were essential for the success of peace processes, and civil society was often far out in front in identifying new threats and concerns. That was certainly one of its most important roles. Civil society organizations were also indispensable in "track-two" and "people-to-people" diplomacy, which was often integral to successful official diplomacy and post-conflict political and reconciliation processes. At times, they could reach parties on the ground that Governments or the United Nations could not and they could also complement the work of the United Nations by: offering valuable analyses originating in the field, forging partnerships to implement UN decisions, increasing the sustainability of UN operations and creating networks to advocate for peacebuilding. For those reasons, civil society organizations would have an important role to play in the deliberations of the Peacebuilding Commission.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 20 September [meeting 5264], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2005/42 on behalf of the Council:

> Recognizing the complex nature of threats to international peace and security, the Security Council underlined the need for a broad strategy for conflict prevention and pacific settlement of disputes in line with Chapter VI of the Charter of the United Nations.

The Council stressed that the essential responsibility for conflict prevention rests with national governments, and that the United Nations and the international community can play an important role in support of national efforts for conflict prevention and can assist in building national capacity in this field, and recognized the important supporting role of civil society.

The Council reaffirmed the need for this strategy to be based on engagement with governments, regional and subregional organizations as well as civil society organizations, as appropriate, reflecting the widest possible range of opinions.

The Council underlined the potential contributions of a vibrant and diverse civil society in conflict prevention, as well as in the peaceful settlement of disputes. It noted that a well-functioning civil society has the advantage of specialized knowledge, capabilities, experience, links with key constituencies, influence and resources, which can assist parties in conflict to achieve a peaceful solution to disputes.

The Council noted that a vigorous and inclusive civil society could provide community leadership, help shape public opinion, and facilitate as well as contribute to reconciliation between conflicting communities. The Council also underscored the role that these actors could play in providing a bridge to dialogue and other confidence- building measures between parties in conflict.

The Council underscored and will strengthen its relationship with civil society, including as appropriate, through, inter alia, the use of "Arria-formula" meetings and meetings with local civil society organizations during Council missions.

The Council agreed to keep this item under review.

Conflict diamonds

Kimberley Process. At its 2005 regular session, the Plenary Meeting of the Kimberley Process (Moscow, Russian Federation, 15-17 November) reviewed the implementation of the Kimberley Process Certification Scheme (KPCS), established in 2003 [YUN 2003, p. 55] to stop the use of conflict diamonds in fuelling armed conflict, protect the legitimate diamond industry and ensure implementation of resolutions on trade in conflict diamonds.

The Plenary was informed that, in 2005, Indonesia was included in the list of Kimberley Process participants and Lebanon rejoined KPCS. It noted with concern evidence of ongoing illicit production of diamonds in the Northern rebel-controlled regions of Côte d'Ivoire and adopted a resolution outlining measures to prevent the introduction of conflict diamonds from that country into the legitimate trade. It also agreed to conduct a detailed assessment, with the United Nations and other participants, to identify where diamonds from Côte d'Ivoire were entering into the trade.

The Plenary noted the progress made in implementing the KPCS peer review process. At the time of the meeting, 19 Participants had received review visits and six more were expected to receive such visits by the end of the year. Having received the report of the Working Group on Statistics on aspects of national methodologies that constrained statistical reporting, the Plenary decided that Participants should use Kimberley Process Certificate-based data when submitting trade data, thereby improving the comparability of statistics provided by them. The Working Group was to study the issue of public release of statistical information and report in 2006.

The Plenary adopted a declaration setting out recommendations for effective internal controls over alluvial diamond mining, in order to improve the traceability of alluvial production and to further the effective implementation of KPCS. It agreed to renew the mandate of the ad hoc subgroup on alluvial production, which was to report at intervals on the progress achieved towards implementing those recommendations. The Plenary also adopted terms of reference for the review of KPCS to be carried out by the ad hoc Working Group on the Review of KPCS, and mandated it to report in 2006.

Botswana and the European Community were elected Chair and Vice-Chair, respectively, of the Kimberley Process for 2006.

The report of the Plenary meeting was transmitted to the General Assembly President, in December [A/60/589 & Corr.1], by the Russian Federation, in its capacity as Chair of the Kimberley Process, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 59/144 [YUN 2004, p. 995].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December [meeting 67], the General Assembly adopted resolution 60/182 [draft: A/60/L.42 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 11].

The role of diamonds in fuelling conflict: breaking the link between the illicit transaction of rough diamonds and armed conflict as a contribution to prevention and settlement of conflicts

The General Assembly,

Recognizing that the trade in conflict diamonds is a matter of serious international concern, which can be directly linked to the fuelling of armed conflict, the activities of rebel movements aimed at undermining or overthrowing legitimate Governments and the illicit traffic in and proliferation of armaments, especially small arms and light weapons,

Recognizing also the devastating impact of conflicts fuelled by the trade in conflict diamonds on the peace, safety and security of people in affected countries, and the systematic and gross human rights violations that have been perpetrated in such conflicts,

Noting the negative impact of such conflicts on regional stability and the obligations placed upon States by the Charter of the United Nations regarding the maintenance of international peace and security,

Recognizing, therefore, that continued action to curb the trade in conflict diamonds is imperative,

Recognizing also the positive benefits of the legitimate diamond trade to producing countries, and underlining the need for continued international action to prevent the problem of conflict diamonds from negatively affecting the trade in legitimate diamonds, which makes a critical contribution to the economies of many of the producing, exporting and importing States, especially developing States,

Noting that the vast majority of rough diamonds produced in the world are from legitimate sources,

Recalling the Charter and all the relevant resolutions of the Security Council related to conflict diamonds, and determined to contribute to and support the implementation of the measures provided for in those resolutions,

Recalling also Security Council resolution 1459(2003) of 28 January 2003, in which the Council strongly supported the Kimberley Process Certification Scheme as a valuable contribution against trafficking in conflict diamonds,

Welcoming the important contribution of the Kimberley Process, which was initiated by African diamond-producing countries,

Believing that the implementation of the Kimberley Process Certification Scheme should substantially reduce the opportunity for conflict diamonds to play a role in fuelling armed conflict and should help to protect legitimate trade and ensure the effective implementation of the relevant resolutions on trade in conflict diamonds,

Recalling its resolutions 55/56 of 1 December 2000, 56/263 of 13 March 2002, 57/302 of 15 April 2003, 58/290 of 14 April 2004 and 59/144 of 15 December 2004, in which it called for the development and implementation of proposals for a simple, effective and pragmatic international certification scheme for rough diamonds,

Welcoming, in this regard, the implementation of the Kimberley Process Certification Scheme in such a way that it does not impede the legitimate trade in diamonds or impose an undue burden on Governments or industry, particularly smaller producers, and does not hinder the development of the diamond industry,

Welcoming also the decision of countries and one regional economic integration organization to address the problem of conflict diamonds by participating in the Kimberley Process and to implement the Kimberley Process Certification Scheme,

Welcoming further the important contribution made by the diamond industry, in particular the World Diamond Council, as well as civil society, to assist international efforts to stop the trade in conflict diamonds,

Welcoming the voluntary self-regulation initiatives for the diamond industry announced by the World Diamond Council, and recognizing that a system of such voluntary self-regulation will contribute, as described in the Interlaken Declaration of 5 November 2002 on the Kimberley Process Certification Scheme for Rough Diamonds, to ensuring the effectiveness of national systems of internal control for rough diamonds,

Noting with appreciation that the Kimberley Process has pursued its deliberations on an inclusive basis, involving concerned stakeholders, including producing, exporting and importing States, the diamond industry and civil society,

Recognizing that State sovereignty should be fully respected and that the principles of equality, mutual benefits and consensus should be adhered to,

Recognizing also that the Kimberley Process Certification Scheme, which came into effect on 1 January 2003, will be credible only if all participants have established internal systems of control designed to eliminate the presence of conflict diamonds in the chain of producing, exporting and importing rough diamonds within their own territories, while taking into account that differences in production methods and trading practices, as well as differences in institutional controls thereof, may require different approaches to meet minimum standards,

1. Reaffirms its strong and continuing support for the Kimberley Process Certification Scheme;

2. Recognizes that the Kimberley Process Certification Scheme can help to ensure the effective implementation of relevant resolutions of the Security Council containing sanctions on the trade in conflict diamonds, and calls for the full implementation of existing Council measures targeting the illicit trade in rough diamonds that play a role in fuelling conflict;

3. Also recognizes the important contributions that the international efforts to address the problem of conflict diamonds, including the Kimberley Process Certification Scheme, have made to the settlement of conflicts in Angola, the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Liberia and Sierra Leone, and the ongoing value of the Certification Scheme as a mechanism for the prevention of future conflicts;

4. Stresses that the widest possible participation in the Kimberley Process Certification Scheme is essential and should be encouraged, and urges all Member States to participate actively in the Certification Scheme by complying with its undertakings;

5. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Chair of the Kimberley Process submitted pursuant to resolution 59/144, and congratulates the Governments, regional economic integration organization representatives, the organized diamond industry and civil society participating in the Kimberley Process for contributing to the development and implementation of the Kimberley Process Certification Scheme;

6. Notes the decision of the General Council of the World Trade Organization of 15 May 2003 granting a waiver with respect to the measures taken to implement the Kimberley Process Certification Scheme, effective from 1 January 2003 to 31 December 2006;

7. Welcomes the adoption by the plenary meeting of the Kimberley Process, held in Moscow from 15 to 17 November 2005, of a resolution on the subject of illicit diamond production in Côte d'Ivoire that outlines a series of measures to prevent the introduction of conflict diamonds from Côte d'Ivoire into legitimate trade, including a detailed assessment of the volume of rough diamonds produced in and exported from Côte d'Ivoire, to be carried out in cooperation with the United Nations, and encourages cooperation between the Kimberley Process and the United Nations, particularly the United Nations Operation in Côte d'Ivoire;

8. Also welcomes the adoption by the plenary meeting of the Kimberley Process of a declaration on improving internal controls over alluvial diamond production, which sets out recommendations for effective internal controls over alluvial diamond mining and encourages potential donors to provide capacity-building assistance to further the effective implementation of the Kimberley Process Certification Scheme;

9. Notes with appreciation the contribution of the Kimberley Process and of its Chair to the work of the Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 1521(2003) concerning Liberia, including the submission of a report on the results of the Kimberley Process expert mission to Liberia;

10. Welcomes the agreement reached at the plenary meeting of the Kimberley Process on terms of reference for the three-year review of the Kimberley Process Certification Scheme;

11. Also welcomes the important progress made in the implementation of the peer review mechanism in the Kimberley Process Certification Scheme, and encourages all remaining participants to receive voluntary review visits;

12. Further welcomes the progress made towards the collection and submission of statistical reports on the production and trade in rough diamonds, and encourages all the Kimberley Process participants to enhance the quality of data, with a view to ensuring effective implementation of the Kimberley Process Certification Scheme;

13. Acknowledges with great appreciation the important contribution that the Russian Federation, as Chair of the Kimberley Process in 2005, has made to the efforts to curb the trade in conflict diamonds, and welcomes the succession of Botswana as Chair and the European Community as Vice-Chair of the Process for 2006;

Peacemaking and peacebuilding

Post-conflict peacebuilding

On 26 May [meeting 5187], the Security Council discussed the issue of post-conflict peacebuilding. It had before it a 16 May [S/2005/316] discussion paper submitted by Denmark, which urged the Council to discuss the current policy, institutional and financial challenges in post-conflict peacebuilding, with a view to strengthening coherence and consistency of Council action, while keeping in mind that it was only one of several players in the field.

Denmark, in opening the debate, noted that, although the United Nations had made progress in strengthening its coherence in post-conflict situations, significant challenges remained in the policy, institutional and financial fields. Regarding policy, the Organization needed to ensure local ownership of the process of devising and implementing post-conflict peacebuilding strategies, so as to make them sustainable, with participatory dialogues between the United Nations and local stakeholders, to highlight the fact that the country in question and its people carried the main responsibility for their future. As the regional perspective was often underestimated in addressing a particular conflict, comprehensive strategies were needed that addressed the specifics of the conflict and its regional dimensions, as well as cross-cutting issues such as small arms; demobilization, disarmament and the reintegration (DDR) of former combatants; the protection of women and children; and the repatriation of refugees and internally displaced persons.

In West Africa, where soldiers of fortune, mercenaries and sanctions-busters were taking their deadly business from one theatre of conflict to the next, the United Nations should focus more on tackling cross-border issues by, among other ways, aiming for a comprehensive subregional DDR strategy.

Regional organizations in different parts of the world, especially the European Union (EU) and the African Union (AU), were taking on greater responsibilities in peacebuilding, and it was important to involve and support them in taking a leadership role.

Most post-conflict situations had a "rule-of-law vacuum" and the United Nations had to be able to more effectively help fill that vacuum, by helping to build national judicial institutions, strengthening governance and ensuring transitional justice for crimes committed during conflicts. Denmark said that it would welcome thoughts on creating a focal point for the rule of law.

At the institutional level, it stressed that all relevant actors should be involved to ensure systematic contributions from UN development and humanitarian agencies in the integrated mission planning process for post-conflict situations. Accordingly, a system of recording and disseminating best practices should be devised.

Overall, the United Nations needed to develop peacebuilding strategies that aimed for local ownership and regional engagement, which were coordinated between all actors in the field and at Headquarters, made efficient use of the available resources within and outside the United Nations and ensured sufficient financial means and long-term donor commitment.

The Deputy Secretary-General, in his statement, said that strategies for ending war should also tackle the question of relapse, ensure that peace agreements were implemented in a sustainable manner and that critical stabilization activities, such as the reintegration and rehabilitation of demobilized combatants, were adequately financed and carefully implemented. The United Nations should help societies and markets recover their vitality and strengthen the capacity of State and social institutions to provide security and justice based on the rule of law.

To improve the peacebuilding success rate, four things were vital: building on existing national institutions and capacities, both of the State and of civil society; ensuring that the UN system, especially its operations on the ground, and its principal organs, functioned in a coherent fashion; involving international financial institutions, bilateral donors and regional actors in UN peacebuilding efforts; and providing more resources for both immediate needs and medium-term recovery.

Recalling that the Secretary-General had proposed the establishment of a Peacebuilding Commission and a Peacebuilding Support Office (see p. 93) to help meet those needs, the Deputy Secretary-General emphasized that the Commission would bring together international financial institutions, bilateral donors and regional actors, and harmonize peacebuilding activity across the multilateral system.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 May [meeting 5113], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2005/20 on behalf of the Council:

> The Security Council reaffirms its commitment to the purposes and principles enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations and recalls its primary responsibility for the maintenance of international peace and security. The Council considers post-conflict peacebuilding closely linked to its primary responsibilities.
> The Council recognizes that intra-State conflicts and States emerging from conflict are among the most complex challenges facing the international community and that responding to these challenges in most instances requires a coherent and integrated mix of peacebuilding and peacekeeping activities, including political, military, civilian, humanitarian and development activities.
> The Council acknowledges that serious attention to the longer-term process of peacebuilding in all its multiple dimensions is critically important and that adequate support for peacebuilding activities can help to prevent countries from relapsing into conflict.
> The Council underlines the fact that priorities in the post-conflict environment should include, where appropriate: protection of civilians; disarmament, demobilization, repatriation, reintegration and rehabilitation of former combatants; security sector and economic and social reform; the end of impunity; establishment and re-establishment of the institutions of Government, the rule of law and transitional justice, respect for human rights; and economic revitalization.
> The Council recognizes the key role played by the United Nations, including the United Nations funds, programmes and specialized agencies, in peacebuilding alongside the international financial institutions, in particular the World Bank, bilateral donors and troop contributors. It also acknowledges the role the private sector can play in countries emerging from conflict. The Council underlines the fact that a successful outcome of post-conflict peacebuilding activities depends on the sustained commitment of all relevant actors to the process, through the involvement of these actors and the coordination of their activities in all phases from planning through implementation. In this regard, the Council also stresses the importance of pursuing coherent policies and resource allocation between these United Nations entities taking into account their respective mandates. The Council recalls the report of the Panel on United Nations Peace Operations and the recommendations therein, and welcomes the progress made since the publication of the report, not least as regards planning of peacekeeping operations.
> The Council underlines the fact that for countries emerging from conflict, significant international assistance for economic and social rehabilitation and reconstruction is indispensable. In this regard, the Council acknowledges the role the Economic and Social Council plays, including in sustainable development, and reiterates its willingness to improve cooperation with United Nations bodies and organs directly concerned with peacebuilding.
> The Council underlines the importance of national ownership of the transition process from the end of a conflict to the attainment of lasting peace and sustainable development and the need for the international community to support nationally owned peacebuilding priorities. The Council recognizes the positive role played by local stakeholders and encourages dialogue between the United Nations and relevant national actors. The Council encourages capacity-building in order to respond to the country-specific circumstances of each conflict situation. One goal of this capacity-building—and of peacebuilding generally—should be to promote the establishment of self-supporting national authorities and thus the evolution of international assistance from peace support to longer-term development.
> The Council recognizes the crucial role of regional and subregional organizations in post-conflict peacebuilding and their involvement at the earliest possible stage. The Council realizes that a clear regional perspective is necessary as most conflicts have interlocking political, security, humanitarian and economic dynamics across borders. The Council underscores in this respect the need for enhanced cooperation and, where appropriate, coordination between United Nations and regional and subregional organizations in peacebuilding, based on a more integrated approach and with the aim of maximizing use of available resources and capabilities.

The Council stresses the importance of a comprehensive international and regional approach to disarmament, demobilization and reintegration of former combatants that is not limited to the political and security aspects, but also addresses its social and economic aspects, including special needs of child soldiers and women.

The Council stresses the special needs of Africa in post-conflict situations and encourages the international community to pay particular attention to those needs. It welcomes the ever-closer partnership between the African Union, the African subregional organizations and the United Nations in the area of peacemaking and peacekeeping and stresses the importance of extending this partnership to peacebuilding efforts.

The Council underscores the importance of cooperation between United Nations peacekeeping operations and the United Nations funds, programmes and specialized agencies. The Council stresses the importance of ensuring that planning and implementation of United Nations humanitarian, peacekeeping, political and developmental activities at country level are well coordinated system-wide, including through the development of shared strategic objectives. The Council stresses that the United Nations should function as one integrated entity at country level under effective overall leadership in post-conflict peacebuilding.

The Council stresses the need to ensure adequate and timely financing for peacebuilding priorities at all stages of the peace process and stresses the need for sustained financial investment in peacebuilding over the medium to longer-term period of recovery. It recognizes the importance of rapid initiation of peacebuilding activities to meet immediate needs and encourages the building of capabilities that can be incorporated rapidly.

The Council welcomes the submission of the report of the Secretary-General of 21 March 2005 entitled "In larger freedom: towards development, security and human rights for all" and of the report by the High-level Panel on Threats, Challenges and Change entitled "A more secure world: our shared responsibility". The Council acknowledges institutional gaps, identified in the reports, in the United Nations institutional machinery with respect to effectively, coherently and comprehensively helping countries with the transition from conflict to lasting peace and sustainable development.

The Council takes note with interest of the important proposal by the Secretary-General to establish a peacebuilding commission and shares the objective of improving United Nations capacity to coordinate with donors and troop contributors and to perform peacebuilding activities, in particular from the start of peacekeeping operations through stabilization, reconstruction and development. The Council recognizes the important role that this body could play to bridge the gap between maintenance of international peace and security and the work of humanitarian and economic development assistance.

Establishment of Peacebuilding Commission

In May [A/59/2005/Add.2], the Secretary-General set out the modalities for the establishment of the Peacebuilding Commission, which he had proposed in the main part of his report entitled "In larger freedom: towards development, security and human rights for all" (see p. 67). He stated that the proposed Commission would provide a central node for helping to create and promote comprehensive peacebuilding strategies. It should also encourage coherent decision-making on peacebuilding by Member States and the UN Secretariat, agencies and programmes, and provide a forum in which UN system representatives, major bilateral donors, troop contributors, relevant actors and organizations, international financial institutions and the national or transitional authorities of the country concerned could share information about post-conflict recovery.

The Commission should provide information to the Security Council and focus attention on development and institution-building efforts necessary for recovery; help ensure predictable financing for early recovery activities, partly by providing an overview of assessed, voluntary and standing funding mechanisms; periodically review progress towards medium-term recovery goals; ensure sustained financing of recovery and development activities and extend the period of political attention to post-conflict recovery; strengthen UN preventive efforts by providing better tools for helping States and societies reduce the risk of conflict; develop best practice on cross-cutting peacebuilding issues; and improve the coordination of UN funds, programmes and agencies.

To support the Commission's work, a Peacebuilding Support Office would be established to prepare the substantive inputs for Commission meetings; provide high-quality inputs to the planning process for peacebuilding operations, working with lead departments, UN field presences and others; and conduct best practices analysis and develop policy guidance. A Standing Fund for Peacebuilding would also be established, possibly on a voluntary, replenishable basis, to provide critical targeted support to nascent authorities and to early peacebuilding activities. In terms of the institutional structure, the Commission would advise the Security Council and the Economic and Social Council. Its core membership should comprise Security Council and Economic and Social Council members, major donors and leading troop contributors. In country specific operations, the Commission should involve the national or transitional authorities, relevant regional actors and organizations, troop contributors and the major donors to the specific country.

In terms of modalities, the Commission should be advisory in nature, meet on a quarterly basis, with country-specific meetings held at regular intervals, and should be flexible in allowing participation by national actors and field- and capital-based representatives.

The General Assembly, in resolution 60/1 of 16 September (see p. 48), agreed to establish the Peacebuilding Commission.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 20 December [meeting 5335], the Security Council, acting concurrently with the General Assembly in resolution 60/180 (see below for text of resolution), unanimously adopted resolution 1645(2005). The draft [S/2005/803] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

Cooperation with regional organizations

High-level meeting between the UN and regional organizations. The sixth high-level meeting between the United Nations and regional organizations (New York, 25-26 July) was held under the theme "United Nations–regional organizations: partnership for a more secure world". Twenty regional organizations participated in the meeting, which discussed the findings of the High-level Panel on Threats, Challenges and Change [YUN 2004, p. 54] and the Secretary-General's report entitled "In larger freedom: towards development, security and human rights for all" (see p. 67). As Chairman of the meeting, the Secretary-General transmitted the meeting's conclusions in identical letters to the Presidents of the General Assembly and the Security Council on 29 August [A/60/341-S/2005/567]. The participants condemned the spate of terrorist bombings of recent months (see p. 103), and held the view that human and State security depended on combating terrorism while respecting civil liberties and addressing the root causes of conflict and terrorism. Structural prevention needed to be complemented by effective operational prevention, based on effective regional-global cooperation in conflict prevention and resolution, peacekeeping and peacebuilding. To that end, the systemic weaknesses of the global system, such as absolute poverty, natural resource depletion and environmental degradation, health pandemics and the social ills of crime and corruption, needed to be seriously addressed as issues of international peace and security.

Participants expressed satisfaction at the work done since the fifth high-level meeting [YUN 2003, p. 58] to strengthen the UN–regional organizations partnership, and endorsed the proposals of the six working groups that had been established on peacekeeping, civilian protection, respect for human rights in counter-terrorism, dialogue among civilizations, disarmament and the implications of United Nations reform for the partnership. They supported the further development of organizational capacities in conflict prevention and resolution, peacekeeping and peacebuilding, particularly the proposed 10-year capacity-building plan for the African Union (AU), approved by the Assembly in resolution 60/1 (see p. 48). Future meetings would accord special attention to African needs.

In the light of the trauma experienced by the peoples of so many regions in the wake of the Indian Ocean tsunami and other national disasters, participants agreed to include disaster relief and related risk-reduction on their agenda for future cooperation. They recognized that a more structured relationship between the United Nations and regional and other intergovernmental organizations was needed, and endorsed the Secretary-General's intention to conclude agreements with individual organizations. They agreed to convene annually to monitor developments in international security and promote UN goals; ensure that their high-level meetings coincided with the Security Council's meetings with regional organizations; establish a standing committee to, among other things, ensure implementation of their decisions; identify one high-level official in each organization to liaise with the United Nations and with one another; recognize that interested regional and subregional organizations should pursue joint activities under the umbrella of high-level meetings under Chapter VIII of the Charter, while other intergovernmental organizations should partner with the United Nations under the other Charter provisions; and strengthen the secretariat of the high-level meetings to assist the new standing committee and the working groups. Participants supported the establishment of the Human Rights Council and the Peacebuilding Commission by the General Assembly in resolution 60/1 (see p. 48), and adopted a statement on a partnership among civilizations, which was appended to its report.

Security Council public meeting. On 17 October [meeting 5282], the Security Council met with representatives of the AU, the Association of Southeast Asian Nations, the Commonwealth of Independent States, the Council of Europe, the League of Arab States, the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, the Organization of American States and the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe to consider cooperation between the United Nations and regional organizations in maintaining international peace and security.

In a discussion paper forwarded to the Secretary-General on 10 October [S/2005/638], Romania stated that the relationship between the United Nations and regional organizations was pursued on an ad hoc basis, despite its widely acknowledged importance and day-to-day impact on Council activities. Given the significant participation of those organizations in maintaining peace and security all over the world, the time was right for the relationship to become more focused and organized. Romania proposed that the meeting take measures to deepen and better structure the Council's relationship with regional organizations; follow up in the Council's areas of responsibility on the understandings reached at the World Summit in that regard; and draw attention to the opinions of regional organizations on the subject, with a view to enhancing their contributions to maintaining international peace and security.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 17 October [meeting 5282], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1631(2005). The draft [S/2005/649] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Recalling Chapter VIII of the Charter of the United Nations,

Reaffirming its previous relevant resolutions and the statement by its President,

Welcoming the adoption of the 2005 World Summit Outcome,

Welcoming the Conclusions of the Chairman of the sixth high-level meeting between the United Nations and regional and other intergovernmental organizations, held in New York on 25 and 26 July 2005,

Reiterating its primary responsibility for the maintenance of international peace and security,

Emphasizing that the growing contribution made by regional organizations in cooperation with the United Nations can usefully complement the work of the Organization in maintaining international peace and security, and stressing in this regard that such contribution must be made in accordance with Chapter VIII of the Charter,

Recognizing the necessity to support capacity-building and cooperation at the regional and subregional levels in maintaining international peace and security, and noting in particular the importance of strengthening the capacity of African regional and subregional organizations,

Acknowledging the resolve of Heads of State and Government of the 2005 World Summit to expand, as appropriate, the involvement of regional organizations in the work of the Security Council, and to ensure that regional organizations that have a capacity for the prevention of armed conflict or peacekeeping consider the option of placing such capacity in the framework of the United Nations Standby Arrangements System,

Welcoming the decision in the 2005 World Summit Outcome to establish a Peacebuilding Commission, and looking forward to it as an important opportunity for cooperation and close contact with regional and subregional organizations in post-conflict peacebuilding and recovery,

1. Expresses its determination to take appropriate steps for the further development of cooperation between the United Nations and regional and subregional organizations in maintaining international peace and security, consistent with Chapter VIII of the Charter of the United Nations, and invites regional and subregional organizations that have a capacity for conflict prevention or peacekeeping to place such capacities in the framework of the United Nations Standby Arrangements System;

2. Urges all States and relevant international organizations to contribute to strengthening the capacity of regional and subregional organizations, in particular of African regional and subregional organizations, in conflict prevention and crisis management, and in post-conflict stabilization, including through the provision of human, technical and financial assistance, and welcomes in this regard the establishment by the European Union of the African Peace Facility;

3. Stresses the importance for the United Nations of developing the ability of regional and subregional organizations to deploy peacekeeping forces rapidly in support of United Nations peacekeeping operations or other operations mandated by the Security Council, and welcomes relevant initiatives taken in this regard;

4. Stresses also the potential role of regional and subregional organizations in addressing the illicit trade in small arms and light weapons and the need to take into account in the mandates of peacekeeping operations, where appropriate, the regional instruments enabling States to identify and trace illegal small arms and light weapons;

5. Reiterates the need to encourage regional cooperation, including through the involvement of regional and subregional organizations in the peaceful settlement of disputes, and to include, where appropriate, specific provisions with this aim in future mandates of peacekeeping and peacebuilding operations authorized by the Council;

6. Welcomes the efforts undertaken by its subsidiary bodies with responsibilities in counter-terrorism to foster cooperation with regional and subregional organizations, notes with appreciation the efforts made by an increasing number of regional and subregional organizations in the fight against terrorism, and urges all relevant regional and subregional organizations to enhance the effectiveness of their counter-terrorism efforts within their respective mandates, including with a view to develop their capacity to help Member States in their efforts to tackle the threats to international peace and security posed by acts of terrorism;

7. Expresses its intention to hold regular meetings, as appropriate, with heads of regional and subregional organizations in order to strengthen the interaction and cooperation with these organizations in maintaining international peace and security, ensuring, if possible, that such meetings coincide with the annual high-level meetings held by the United Nations with regional and other intergovernmental organizations for better efficiency of participation and substantive complementarity of agendas;

8. Recommends better communication between the United Nations and regional and subregional organizations through, notably, liaison officers and the holding of consultations at all appropriate levels;

9. Reiterates the obligation for regional organizations, under article 54 of the Charter, to keep the Council fully informed of their activities for the maintenance of international peace and security;

Reports of Secretary-General. The Secretary-General, in his report on the work of the Organization [A/60/1], described UN cooperation activities with regional organizations in the areas of peace and security and development. In his report entitled "In larger freedom: towards development, security and human rights for all" [A/59/2005], submitted to the 2005 World Summit, he said that the United Nations and regional organizations should play complementary roles in facing the challenges of international peace and security. In that context, donor countries should pay particular attention to the need for a 10-year plan for capacity-building with the AU.

To improve coordination between the United Nations and regional organizations, he intended to introduce memoranda of understanding with individual organizations, governing the sharing of information, expertise and resources, and would invite regional organizations to participate in UN system meetings, when issues of interest to them were being discussed. The Secretary-General also proposed that the rules of UN peacekeeping budgets be amended to give the Organization the option, in exceptional circumstances, to use assessed contributions to finance Council-authorized regional operations or the participation of regional organizations in multi-pillar peace operations under the overall umbrella of the United Nations.

Threats to international peace and security

International terrorism

Report of Secretary-General to the World Summit. The Secretary-General, in his report to the 2005 World Summit [A/59/2005] (see p. 67) entitled "In larger freedom: towards development, security and human rights for all", said that terrorism was a threat to all that the United Nations stood for, including respect for human rights and the rule of law, the protection of civilians, tolerance among peoples and nations, and the peaceful resolution of conflict. Transnational networks of terrorist groups had global reach and made common cause to pose a universal threat, desired to acquire nuclear, biological and chemical weapons and to inflict mass casualties. The strategy against the problem had to be comprehensive and based on five pillars: dissuading people from resorting to terrorism or supporting it; denying terrorists access to funds and materials; deterring States from sponsoring terrorism; developing State capacity to defeat terrorism; and defending human rights. He urged Member States and civil society organizations everywhere to join in that strategy. He said that the moral authority of the United Nations and its strength in condemning terrorism had been hampered by the inability of Member States to agree on a comprehensive convention that included a definition of terrorism. The Secretary-General fully endorsed the call of the High-level Panel on Threats, Challenges and Change [YUN 2004, p. 54] for such a definition, which would make it clear that, in addition to actions already proscribed by existing conventions, any action constituted terrorism that was intended to cause death or serious bodily harm to civilians or non-combatants with the purpose of intimidating a population or compelling a Government or an international organization to do or abstain from doing something. He believed that the proposal had a clear moral force and strongly urged world leaders to unite behind it and to conclude a comprehensive convention on terrorism before the end of the General Assembly's sixtieth (2005) session. The Secretary-General also urged Member States to complete, without delay, an international convention for the suppression of acts of nuclear terrorism (see p. 1410), and to appoint a special rapporteur to report to the Commission on Human Rights on the compatibility of counter-terrorism measures with international human rights laws.

The General Assembly, in resolution 60/1 (see p. 48), which contained the World Summit Outcome, welcomed the Secretary-General's identification of elements of a counter-terrorism strategy, which the Assembly should develop, adopt and implement.

Summit meeting of the Security Council

By a 2 September note [S/2005/562], the Security Council President issued a statement on the Council's behalf, informing the media that Council members had agreed to take advantage of the presence of Heads of State and Government in New York to hold a meeting on 14 September, to consider the subject of international peace and security.

On 14 September [meeting 5261], the Council held a summit-level meeting at the level of Heads of State or Government to discuss threats to international peace and security. It adopted two resolutions, the first of which was on the prevention of terrorism (1624(2005)) (see below) and the other on enhanced steps to prevent armed conflict, particularly in Africa (1625(2005)) (see p. 155).

Speaking after the vote, the Secretary-General, elaborating on the elements of his proposed counter-terrorism strategy, said that the international community should complete a comprehensive convention that outlawed terrorism in all its forms. He also hoped that States would accede without delay to the International Convention for the Suppression of Acts of Nuclear Terrorism adopted by the Assembly (see p. 1410). In terms of developing State capacity to prevent terrorism, including the promotion of good governance and the rule of law, he welcomed the establishment of the Democracy Fund (see p. 655). The Secretary-General urged that the victims of terrorism should not be forgotten, noting that the Security Council had agreed to explore the possibility of an international fund to compensate victims and their families, which should be financed in part with assets seized from terrorist organizations.

President Vladimir Putin of the Russian Federation said that the common task was to create a truly solid front in the fight against terrorism, and any attempt to condone it or to use terrorists for different political purposes should be condemned unanimously. Those who advocated terrorism and propagated the ideologies of racism and ethnic or religious intolerance should be fought, not only using the power of the State but also engaging civil society, the mass media, humanitarian cooperation and interreligious dialogue. He said that the issues of fighting terrorism and its roots needed further cooperation and should be permanent items on the agenda of the United Nations, including the Security Council and other UN bodies.

United States President, George Bush, said that Council members had a solemn obligation to stop terrorism in its early stages, to defend their citizens against terrorism, to attack terrorist networks and deprive them of a safe haven, and to promote an ideology of freedom and tolerance that would refute the dark vision of the terrorist. They should do all they could to disrupt each stage of planning and support for terrorist acts, be consistent with past Council resolutions to freeze terrorist assets, deny them freedom of movement and prevent them from acquiring weapons, including weapons of mass destruction. The United States would continue to work with and through the Council to help all nations meet those commitments.

China's President, Hu Jinato, said that China supported an important role for the Security Council in responding to terrorism and other non-traditional threats to security. However, the international community should act in strict accordance with the purposes and principles of the Charter and work closely in a more effective fight against terrorism in all its forms and manifestations. It was also essential to promote dialogue among civilizations and to earnestly address problems of poverty, ignorance and social justice in order to eliminate the breeding ground for terrorism.

United Kingdom Prime Minister, Anthony Blair, told the Council that the terrorism, which had disfigured countries in every continent, at every stage of development, with every conceivable mix of races and religions, was a movement. It had an ideology and a strategy, which was not just to kill, but to cause chaos and instability and to divide and confuse nations. It would not be defeated until the international community's determination was as complete as theirs, its defence of freedom as absolute as their fanaticism, and its passion for the democratic way as great as their passion for tyranny. It was a doctrine of fanaticism, and the international community should unite to uproot it by cooperating on security, taking action against those who incited, preached or taught extremism and eliminating ambivalence by fighting not just the methods of terrorism but also the motivation, reasoning and excuses for terror.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 14 September [meeting 5261], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1624 (2005). The draft [S/2005/577] was prepared in prior consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Reaffirming also the imperative to combat terrorism in all its forms and manifestations by all means, in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, and also stressing that States must ensure that any measures taken to combat terrorism comply with all their obligations under international law, and should adopt such measures in accordance with international law, in particular international human rights law, refugee law and humanitarian law,

Condemning in the strongest terms all acts of terrorism irrespective of their motivation, whenever and by whomsoever committed, as one of the most serious threats to peace and security, and reaffirming the primary responsibility of the Security Council for the maintenance of international peace and security under the Charter,

Condemning in the strongest terms also the incitement of terrorist acts, and repudiating attempts at the justification or glorification (apologie) of terrorist acts that may incite further terrorist acts,

Deeply concerned that the incitement of terrorist acts motivated by extremism and intolerance poses a serious and growing danger to the enjoyment of human rights, threatens the social and economic development of all States, undermines global stability and prosperity, and must be addressed urgently and proactively by the United Nations and all States, and emphasizing the need to take all necessary and appropriate measures in accordance with international law at the national and international levels to protect the right to life,

Recalling the right to freedom of expression reflected in article 19 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights adopted by the General Assembly on 10 December 1948 ("the Universal Declaration"), and recalling also the right to freedom of expression set out in article 19 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights adopted by the Assembly on 16 December 1966 and that any restrictions thereon shall only be such as are provided by law and are necessary on the grounds set out in article 19, paragraph 3, of the Covenant,

Deeply concerned by the increasing number of victims, especially among civilians of diverse nationalities and beliefs, of terrorism motivated by intolerance or extremism in various regions of the world, reaffirming its profound solidarity with the victims of terrorism and their families, and stressing the importance of assisting victims of terrorism and providing them and their families with support to cope with their loss and grief,

Recognizing the essential role of the United Nations in the global effort to combat terrorism, and welcoming the identification by the Secretary-General of elements of a counter-terrorism strategy to be considered and developed by the General Assembly without delay with a view to adopting and implementing a strategy to promote comprehensive, coordinated and consistent responses at the national, regional and international levels to counter terrorism,

Stressing its call upon all States to become party, as a matter of urgency, to the international counter-terrorism conventions and protocols whether or not they are party to regional conventions on the matter, and to give priority consideration to signing the International Convention for the Suppression of Nuclear Terrorism adopted by the General Assembly on 13 April 2005,

Re-emphasizing that continuing international efforts to enhance dialogue and broaden understanding among civilizations, in an effort to prevent the indiscriminate targeting of different religions and cultures, and addressing unresolved regional conflicts and the full range of global issues, including development issues, will contribute to strengthening the international fight against terrorism,

Stressing the importance of the role of the media, civil and religious society, the business community and educational institutions in those efforts to enhance dialogue and broaden understanding, and in promoting tolerance and coexistence and fostering an environment which is not conducive to incitement of terrorism,

Recognizing the importance, in an increasingly globalized world, of States acting cooperatively to prevent terrorists from exploiting sophisticated technology, communications and resources to incite support for criminal acts,

Recalling that all States must cooperate fully in the fight against terrorism, in accordance with their obligations under international law, in order to find, deny safe haven to and bring to justice, on the basis of the principle of extradite or prosecute, any person who supports, facilitates, participates or attempts to participate in the financing, planning, preparation or commission of terrorist acts or provides safe havens,

(a) To prohibit by law incitement to commit a terrorist act or acts;

(b) To prevent such conduct;

(c) To deny safe haven to any persons with respect to whom there is credible and relevant information giving serious reasons for considering that they have been guilty of such conduct;

2. Also calls upon all States to cooperate, inter alia, to strengthen the security of their international borders, including by combating fraudulent travel documents and, to the extent attainable, by enhancing terrorist screening and passenger security procedures with a view to preventing those guilty of the conduct in paragraph 1 (a) above from entering their territory;

3. Further calls upon all States to continue international efforts to enhance dialogue and broaden understanding among civilizations, in an effort to prevent the indiscriminate targeting of different religions and cultures, and to take all measures as may be necessary and appropriate and in accordance with their obligations under international law to counter incitement of terrorist acts motivated by extremism and intolerance and to prevent the subversion of educational, cultural and religious institutions by terrorists and their supporters;

7. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

2005 terrorist attacks

In 2005, there was an unprecedented rise in the number of terrorist attacks worldwide. The Security Council met on 10 occasions to condemn such acts and to express sympathy and condolences to the victims and affected Governments and its determination to combat terrorism in all its forms.

London

On 7 July, a series of bombs exploded in London's public transport system during the morning rush hour, killing 52 persons, including the four perpetrators, and wounding 700. The incident was the deadliest single act of terrorism since the 1988 bombing of Pan Am flight 103 over Lockerbie, Scotland. The four terrorists, Mohammed Sidique Khan, Shehzad Tanweer, Germaine Lindsay and Hasib Hussain, belonged to an Al-Qaida affiliated organization named the Secret Organization of Al-Qaida in Europe, which later claimed responsibility for the attacks.

The Secretary-General deplored the atrocious bombings as an attack on humanity itself and urged that such violence should not be allowed to derail efforts to combat poverty and address the aspirations of billions of people worldwide.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 7 July [meeting 5223], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1611(2005). The draft [S/2005/437] was prepared in consultation among Council members.

The Security Council,

4. Expresses its utmost determination to combat terrorism, in accordance with its responsibilities under the Charter of the United Nations.

Communication. On 8 July [S/2005/450], Saudi Arabia transmitted to the Council President a statement on the bombings in London, issued by the Grand Mufti of the Kingdom of Saudi Arabia and Chairman of the Committee of Senior Ulema and of the Department of Scientific Research and Ifta', declaring that the incidents of individual and collective killing, explosions, destruction of property and the terrorizing of peace-loving people were forbidden by Islam and that any attribution of those acts to Islam was unjust. Islam forbade the unjust killing of human beings and Islamic scholars had repeatedly expressed their censure of such abominable acts and had stated time and again that those acts had nothing to do with Islam.

Iraq

On 7 July [S/2005/438], Egypt informed the Security Council that its recently appointed Ambassador to Iraq, Ihab El Sherif, was killed that day, four days after being kidnapped in Baghdad by a group of terrorists. Egypt said that while it continued to support the people of Iraq at its critical political juncture, it was regrettable that there still existed some groups that disrespected the sacredness of human life. It called on the Council to condemn the surge of violence against foreign diplomats in Iraq, in particular the killing of Ambassador El Sherif.

Measures to eliminate international terrorism

During 2005, the United Nations pursued actions on several fronts to combat and eliminate terrorism. The Security Council, by resolution 1617(2005) of 29 July (see p. 410), adopted measures to tighten the sanctions imposed against Al-Qaida, the Taliban and their associates.

The General Assembly, in resolution 59/290 of 13 April, adopted the International Convention for the Suppression of Acts of Nuclear Terrorism (see p. 1411); and in resolution 60/43 of 8 December (see p. 1417), it called on all States to prevent and suppress terrorist acts and asked the Terrorism Prevention Branch of the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime to continue to enhance the capabilities of the United Nations in the prevention of terrorism. In resolution 60/78 (see p. 602) of the same date, the Assembly requested the Secretary-General to report on measures already taken by international organizations on issues regarding the linkage between the fight against terrorism and the proliferation of weapons of mass destruction, and to seek the views of Member States on additional measures for tackling that threat.

Communications. Cuba, on 24 May [A/59/812-S/2005/341], transmitted to the Secretary-General a document containing "Summary of main points concerning the presence of terrorist Luis Posada Carriles in the United States".

On 25 July [A/59/882-S/2005/488], Cape Verde transmitted to the Secretary-General the action plan adopted by a regional expert workshop on the ratification and implementation of the universal instruments against terrorism, transnational organized crime and corruption, as well as the drafting of reports to the United Nations Counter-Terrorism Committee (Praia, Cape Verde, 8-10 December 2004).

Counter-Terrorism Committee

In 2005, the Chairman of the Counter-Terrorism Committee (CTC), established by Security Council resolution 1373(2001) [YUN 2001, p. 61], submitted CTC's work programmes for the 90-day periods from 1 January to 31 March [S/2005/22], 1 April to 30 June [S/2005/266], 1 July to 30 September [S/2005/421] and 1 Ocotber to 31 December [S/2005/663]. The Council considered those work programmes at meetings held on 18 January, 25 April, 20 July and 26 October.

Security Council consideration (January). The CTC Chairman, reporting on 18 January [meeting 5113] to the Security Council on the Committee's work, said that the Committee had received 551 reports from Member States and other entities by 31 December 2004. He reported two problems that required attention: the shortage of experts to review reports submitted by Member States and the increasing number of those failing to submit their reports on time. He emphasized that the Committee, operating through the CTC Executive Directorate (CTED), was prepared to provide Member States with the necessary assistance and guidelines on issues relating to the implementation of resolution 1373(2002) and had begun to review the problem in a broader context. CTC continued to develop new approaches to providing technical assistance and was undertaking analytical work to assess the assistance needs of Member States. It would also continue to update the Directory of Counter-Terrorism Information and Sources of Assistance and the Assistance Matrix. CTC would also continue to encourage Member States to accede to the 12 relevant international conventions and protocols relating to terrorism [YUN 2001, p. 69] and regularly monitor progress in that area.

During that period, the Committee completed preparations for its initial visit to several Member States in implementation of resolutions 1535 (2004) [YUN 2004, p. 79] on the revitalization of the Committee and 1566(2004) [ibid., p. 74], emphasizing the urgent need to strengthen international cooperation in combating terrorism. The visits were to help develop a more direct dialogue with national Governments, to enhance monitoring of the implementation of resolution 1373(2001) and to ensure a more accurate assessment of the capacities of States and their technical assistance needs.

CTC prepared for its fourth special meeting with international, regional and subregional organizations, and commended the proposal of the Commonwealth of Independent States (CIS) to organize that meeting in Almaty, Kazakhstan, from 26 to 28 January. It maintained cooperation between CTC experts and those of the Monitoring Group on sanctions against Al-Qaida and the Taliban, and would seek to establish contacts with the newly appointed experts under resolution 1540(2004) [YUN 2004, p. 544].

> The Council recalls the statement by its President of 19 October 2004, which indicated the intention of the Council to review the structure and activities of the Counter-Terrorism Committee, resolution 1535 (2004) on the revitalization of the Committee and resolution 1566(2004) emphasizing the urgent need to strengthen international cooperation in combating terrorism.
> The Council invites the Counter-Terrorism Committee to pursue its agenda as set out in the work programme for the Committee for the fourteenth 90-day period. It invites the Committee, in particular, to ensure that Counter-Terrorism Committee Executive Directorate becomes fully operational in the shortest possible time, and to take additional measures to enhance cooperation with the Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 1267(1999) concerning Al-Qaida and the Taliban and associated individuals and entities and the Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 1540(2004) and to initiate contacts with the Security Council Working Group established pursuant to resolution 1566(2004).

> The Council welcomes the intention of the Counter-Terrorism Committee to hold its fourth special meeting with international, regional and subregional organizations from 26 to 28 January 2005 in Almaty, Kazakhstan.
> The Council invites the Counter-Terrorism Committee to accelerate the preparation of assessments of Member States' assistance needs so that these can be shared with the relevant States and, in due course, with interested donor States and organizations. The Council invites the Committee to conduct the first of its visits to Member States in March 2005 in order to enhance the monitoring by the Committee of the implementation of resolution 1373(2001) and to facilitate the provision of technical and other assistance for such implementation.
> The Council notes that, as of 16 December 2004, 75 States had not submitted their respective reports to the Counter-Terrorism Committee on time as set out in resolution 1373(2001). It calls upon them urgently to do so, in order to maintain the universality of response which the threat of terrorism and the implementation of resolution 1373(2001) require.

The Council invites the Counter-Terrorism Committee to continue reporting on its activities at regular intervals.

Communication. On 3 February [S/2005/87], CTC Chairman transmitted to the Council President summaries provided by international, regional and subregional organizations and bodies and UN specialized agencies, funds and programmes that participated in the CTC/CIS fourth special meeting (26-28 January) regarding their activities and experiences in counter-terrorism and developments in their work in that regard since 2003.

Security Council consideration (April). The CTC Chairman, reporting to the Council on 25 April, together with the Chairmen of the Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 1267(1999) concerning Al-Qaida and the Taliban and associated individuals and entities, and the Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 1540 (2004), on the work of CTC, said that 75 States were late in submitting their reports, due to the lack of available technical capacity and "reporting fatigue". CTC's visit to Member States were initiated by a visit to Morocco (14-18 March), with similar visits to Albania, Kenya and Thailand planned. The Committee encouraged respective Member States to welcome those visits. With regard to technical needs assessments, a methodology on their preparation and review was developed and agreed upon. So far, 51 assessments were prepared and 11 endorsed by CTC and forwarded for review by Member States.

For technical reasons, CTED had not yet become fully operational and that seriously limited CTC's ability to sustain dialogue with Member States. CTC, as requested by the Council in resolution 1566(2004), was developing a set of best practices to assist States in implementing the provisions of resolution 1373(2001) relating to the financing of terrorism. It had also taken steps towards its own revitalization, in accordance with resolution 1535(2004). As set out in the work programme for April to June, it would continue efforts to complete the revitalization process, particularly in terms of developing a fully functional CTED.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 25 April [meeting 5168], following consultations among Security Council members, the Council President made statement S/PRST/2005/16 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council welcomes the briefings by the Chairmen of the Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 1267(1999) concerning Al-Qaida and the Taliban and associated individuals and entities, the Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 1373(2001) on counter-terrorism and the Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 1540 (2004), on the work of the three Committees.

The Council also reaffirms that proliferation of nuclear, chemical and biological weapons, as well as their means of delivery, constitutes a threat to international peace and security as stressed in resolution 1540(2004). The Council recalls its grave concern about the risk posed by non-State actors that attempt to develop, acquire, manufacture, possess, transport, transfer or use nuclear, chemical and biological weapons and their means of delivery.

The Council welcomes the adoption by the General Assembly on 13 April 2005 of the International Convention for the Suppression of Acts of Nuclear Terrorism by consensus.

The Council stresses the different mandates of the three Committees. The Council reaffirms its call for enhanced cooperation among the Committees, as well as their respective groups of experts, in monitoring implementation by States of provisions of the Council resolutions relevant to the three Committees, and invites the Committees, including their respective groups of experts, to strengthen further their cooperation through enhanced information sharing, coordinated visits to countries and other issues of relevance to the three Committees. The Council also invites the three Committees to continue cooperation with the working group established pursuant to resolution 1566(2004).

The Council recalls the obligation of Member States to report to the three Committees in a timely manner on steps they have taken or intend to take to implement resolutions 1267(1999), 1373(2001), and 1540(2004) and related resolutions, and encourages the three Committees to consider, if appropriate, how to deal with late submission of reports to these Committees in a coordinated manner.

The Council reaffirms that the responsibility for implementing its resolutions relevant to the mandates of the three Committees, including preparation of reports to the respective Committees, rests with the States. The Council encourages international, regional and subregional organizations to enhance their efforts to further the implementation by their members of these resolutions, and further encourages such organizations, as well as States, where appropriate, to provide technical assistance to enhance the capacity of States to implement these resolutions.

The Council welcomes the important contribution made by relevant international, regional and subregional organizations in the fight against terrorism and to ensure that non-State actors do not develop, acquire, manufacture, possess, transport, transfer or use nuclear, chemical and biological weapons and their means of delivery. The Council encourages the three Committees to further strengthen their cooperation with such organizations.

The Council further welcomes the important contribution made to the work of the Committee established pursuant to resolution 1267(1999) by the Analytical Support and Sanctions Monitoring Team established pursuant to Council resolution 1526 (2004) in application of its mandate annexed to that resolution; to the work of the Committee established pursuant to resolution 1540(2004) by its experts; and, to the work of the Counter-Terrorism Committee established pursuant to resolution 1373(2001) by the Counter-Terrorism Committee Executive Directorate established by resolution 1535(2004), and notes with satisfaction the completion by the Counter-Terrorism Committee Executive Directorate of its first field mission to a Member State as contemplated by resolution 1535(2004).

The Council invites the Counter-Terrorism Committee to pursue its agenda as set out in the work programme for its fifteenth 90-day period. The Council encourages all parts of the United Nations to do their utmost to ensure that the Counter-Terrorism Committee Executive Directorate becomes fully operational in the shortest possible time.

The Council also invites the Committee established pursuant to resolution 1540(2004) to pursue its undertakings as provided for in the first trimestrial programme of work approved by the Committee on 22 April 2005. The Council welcomes the submission by 113 Member States so far of reports on steps they have taken or intend to take to implement resolution 1540(2004), and calls upon States that have not yet submitted a report to do so as soon as possible. The Council welcomes the recruitment of experts of the Committee, and notes that they have begun to support the Committee in the consideration of the first reports submitted by Member States pursuant to resolution 1540(2004).

The Council invites the three Committees to continue reporting on their activities at regular intervals and, where appropriate, in a coordinated manner.

Report of CTC Chairman (July). Reporting to the Security Council on 20 July [meeting 5229], the CTC Chairman stated that CTED had visited Kenya in May and Albania and Thailand in June and obtained a thorough understanding of the situation in those countries and a better insight into the difficulties facing States seeking to ensure full implementation of resolution 1373 (2001). To guarantee follow-up to those visits, CTC was committed to ensuring that the technical needs identified during the visits were met.

Noting that, as at July, 67 States were behind in their reporting to CTC, the Chairman said CTC would continue discussions with the other two sanctions committees on how best to address reporting issues in a coordinated manner. CTC decided to further identify assistance needs in the process of evaluating States' reports. It would continue discussions on meeting requests made, including by further developing cooperation with potential donors. Regarding the need to provide clarity and transparency on what it took to implement resolution 1373(2001), CTC discussed the usefulness of developing best practices to guide States. In that regard, it welcomed work already done by international, regional and subregional organizations.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 20 July [meeting 5229], following consultations among Security Council members, the Council President made statement S/PRST/2005/34 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council reaffirms that terrorism in all its forms and manifestations constitutes one of the most serious threats to peace and security and that any acts of terrorism are criminal and unjustifiable regardless of their motivations, whenever and by whomsoever committed. The Council reiterates its condemnation of the Al-Qaida network and other terrorist groups for ongoing and multiple criminal terrorist acts, aimed at causing death and destruction of property, and undermining stability. The Council also reaffirms that proliferation of nuclear, chemical and biological weapons, as well as their means of delivery, constitutes a threat to international peace and security, and recalls its grave concern about the risk posed by non-State actors that attempt to develop, acquire, manufacture, possess, transport, transfer or use nuclear, chemical and biological weapons and their means of delivery.

The Council reiterates its call upon all Member States to become parties to all 12 international conventions against terrorism, and in this context draws attention to the treaty event being held in New York in September, and encourages Member States to take that opportunity also to sign the International Convention for the Suppression of Acts of Nuclear Terrorism. The Council calls upon Member States to cooperate on an expedited basis to resolve all outstanding issues, with a view to adopting the draft comprehensive convention on international terrorism.

The Council urges all States to cooperate to bring to justice, in accordance with the principle of extradite or prosecute, the perpetrators, organizers and sponsors of acts of terrorism. Recent events, as condemned by the Council in its resolution 1611(2005) and the statement by its President of 8 July 2005, stress the urgency and necessity of redoubling efforts to combat terrorism.

The Council welcomes the briefings by the Chairmen of the Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 1267(1999) concerning Al-Qaida and the Taliban and associated individuals and entities, the Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 1373(2001) on counter-terrorism and the Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 1540(2004), on the work of the three Committees. The Council reaffirms the importance and the urgency it attaches to the implementation of the provisions of the resolutions relevant to the three Committees, as well as to the fulfilment of the mandates of the three Committees. The Council therefore strongly encourages Member States as well as the respective Committees to redouble their efforts to seek ways to further strengthen the implementation of resolutions 1267 (1999), 1373(2001) and 1540(2004), in accordance with the provisions of these and other relevant resolutions.

The Council reaffirms its call for enhanced cooperation among the three Committees, as well as their respective group of experts, in monitoring implementation by States of the provisions of the relevant Council resolutions, with due respect for their different mandates, including through enhanced information sharing, coordinated response to late submission of reports by States to the three Committees, and other issues of relevance to the three Committees. The Council also invites the three Committees to continue cooperation with the working group established pursuant to resolution 1566(2004).

The Council urges Member States to redouble their efforts to implement the provisions of the resolutions relevant to the work of the three Committees. While reaffirming that the responsibility for implementing the provisions of these resolutions rests with the States, the Council encourages States to seek the necessary assistance to ensure that the necessary capacity to implement the resolutions is available.

The Council reiterates that relevant international, regional and subregional organizations can play a crucial role in supporting the goals of these resolutions, raising awareness of their importance, and helping their members implement them. The Council encourages such organizations, as or when proposed by the relevant Committee, where appropriate, to provide the necessary technical assistance. Moreover, the Council encourages its Counter-Terrorism Committee, its Al-Qaida/Taliban Sanctions Committee, and, when appropriate its Committee established pursuant to resolution 1540 (2004), as well as relevant organizations, to enhance cooperation with a view to identifying, promoting, and developing, as appropriate, best practices to provide clarity and guidance to States on the implementation of the provisions of the relevant resolutions.

The Council encourages Member States in a position to do so to make technical assistance available on a priority basis.

The Council invites the three Committees to continue reporting on their activities at regular intervals and, where appropriate, in a coordinated manner.

Report of CTC Chairman (October). The CTC Chairman, at the Council's 26 October meeting [meeting 5293], reported that CTED was fully staffed and urged States to take advantage of the resources available and request the assistance needed to further their counter-terrorism efforts. Over the past three months, the Committee's priorities were: engaging with regional organizations that had developed a counter-terrorism agenda; clearing the backlog of reports from States; continuing to examine ways to better facilitate technical assistance; continuation of visits to States; enhancing dialogue and cooperation with international, regional and subregional organizations, through their involvement in the CTC visits to States and by engaging them to help strengthen the Committee's capacity to promote the implementation of resolution 1373(2001) among other things; taking steps to ensure follow-up to Security Council resolution 1624 (2005) (see p. 102) on incitement of terrorism adopted at the Council's summit meeting in September; and engaging in policy discussions aimed at giving CTED the guidance foreseen in the revitalization documents.

Specifically, CTC and its CTED were ready to guide and assist international and regional organizations, and would make greater efforts to reach out to them. CTC encouraged those organizations to consider ways to enhance their bilateral cooperation in order to assist each other in developing their counter-terrorism agenda. It would also consider how to follow up on the latest special meeting (see p. 108) with international, regional and subregional groups and on how to approach future meetings in order to ensure their usefulness to everyone concerned.

Regarding the elimination of the backlog of reports from States on their implementation of resolution 1373(2001), the Committee examined ways of updating the reporting regime, including ensuring that all aspects of resolution 1373(2001) were included in future dialogues with States. It would also discuss with other related Council committees ways to jointly address the claim of reporting fatigue in the light of the World Summit's call for the Council to consider streamlining its reporting procedure (see p. 48).

In terms of assistance needs, the Committee assessed requirements and obtained agreement to share its findings with potential donors for 25 States. It also started sharing the needs assessments with the Counter-Terrorism Action Group. CTC intended to strengthen its dialogue with States to determine what each one needed in order to reach agreement on such needs and to stress the importance of achieving them. In that process, CTC would also enhance its cooperation with relevant international organizations and examine how its dialogue with potential donors could become more result-oriented.

The Committee would continue its discussions on ways to provide transparent guidance on the implementation of resolution 1373(2001) through the development of best practices and on how a human rights perspective might be incorporated into the Committee's policy and substantive work, while respecting the various aspects of its Council mandate. In that regard, the Committee intended to take steps to prepare for the Council's comprehensive review of CTED, in line with resolution 1535(2004).

Comprehensive review of CTC Executive Directorate

On 15 December [S/2005/800], the CTC Chairman submitted the Committee's report for consideration by the Security Council, as part of its comprehensive review of the Counter-Terrorism Committee Executive Directorate (CTED). The review, requested by the Council in resolution 1535(2004) [YUN 2004, p. 79], by which CTED was created, assessed the Directorate's assistance to CTC, particularly in attaining the goals of the revitalization process set out in the CTC Chairman's 2004 report to the Council [ibid.]. It also reviewed the extent to which both the mandate and functioning of CTED would enable it best to fulfil that role in the future.

CTC stated that, as CTED only became fully staffed in September, it had not had the full benefit of CTED's expertise, thus making the results of the review not as comprehensive as intended. During that time, however, it had provided CTC with valuable support. CTC recommended that the Council clarify CTED's reporting lines, within the framework of Council resolution 1535(2004) and indicate its readiness to work with the Secretary-General on the matter. CTC agreed to develop policy guidance in all key areas of CTED's mandate, to update that guidance as necessary and to review it annually. CTC agreed on the need for CTED to develop and carry out implementation plans for each area of policy guidance, with clear objectives and targets, within an appropriate time line. Progress towards the objectives of the policy guidance would form part of CTC's quarterly reports to the Council on the implementation of resolution 1373(2001).

CTED, whose guiding principles were cooperation, transparency, even-handedness and consistency of approach, would have as its future focus high-priority areas such as: providing in-depth analysis of the implementation of resolution 1373(2001); enhancing dialogue with States, through a more tailored approach to their individual circumstances, including through letters, direct dialogue and more flexibility regarding visits; reviewing and proposing ways to update the reporting regime and taking into account the 2005 World Summit Outcome recommendation, contained in General Assembly resolution 60/1 (see p. 48), on consolidating reporting requirements in cooperation with other Security Council counter-terrorism-related subsidiary bodies; close cooperation with other relevant Council subsidiary bodies, particularly the Security Council Committees established pursuant to resolutions 1267(1999) and 1540(2004), including on information-sharing, visits and technical assistance; continuing effective capacity-building work, through strengthening the facilitation of technical assistance, with a view to creating measurable results to enable more States to receive the assistance needed to further their implementation of resolution 1373(2001); improving the assistance provided to Member States through publishing and developing best practices in all areas of resolution 1373 (2001); and reviewing and proposing how to further develop cooperation with international, regional and subregional organizations to enhance the synergy between their work and that of the Committee in furthering the implementation of resolution 1373(2001).

The Committee reaffirmed its responsibility to include the implementation of Council resolution 1624(2005) in its dialogue with Member States and resolve to help build capacity in that regard, including through spreading best legal practices and promoting the exchange of information. It recommended that the Security Council request that another comprehensive review of CTED be prepared by CTC by 31 December 2006.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 21 December [meeting 5338], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2005/64 on behalf of the Council:

> The Security Council reaffirms that terrorism in all its forms and manifestations constitutes one of the most serious threats to international peace and security, and that any acts of terrorism are criminal and unjustifiable, regardless of their motivation, wherever, whenever and by whomsoever committed.
> The Council recalls its resolution 1535(2004), by which it decided to establish the Counter-Terrorism Committee Executive Directorate (hereinafter "CTED") as a special political mission under the policy guidance of the Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 1373(2001) concerning counter-terrorism (the Counter-Terrorism Committee) to enhance the ability of the Committee to monitor implementation of resolution 1373(2001) and effectively continue the capacity-building work in which it was engaged. At the same time, the Council decided to carry out a comprehensive review of CTED by 31 December 2005.
> During today's consultations, the Council undertook this review and came to the following conclusions:
> The Council endorsed the report prepared by the Counter-Terrorism Committee and forwarded to the Council, and agreed with the conclusions contained therein.
> The Council noted that CTED had only been fully staffed since 6 September 2005 and welcomed the start that CTED had made on its objectives as set out in the revitalization process. It welcomed the fact that the Counter-Terrorism Committee, in consultation with the Secretary-General, had decided to declare CTED operational on 15 December 2005.

The Council recalled that the mandate of CTED flows from that of the Counter-Terrorism Committee and reaffirmed that the Committee has the sole responsibility for providing policy guidance to CTED. It also welcomed the fact that such guidance would be accompanied by implementation plans to enhance the ability of the Committee to effectively implement its mandate.

The Council agreed with the Secretary-General and with the Counter-Terrorism Committee that there was a need to clarify CTED's reporting lines, within the framework of resolution 1535(2004), and welcomed the Secretary-General's initiative in this regard. The Council expressed its readiness to work with him on this matter.

The Council welcomed the integration into the work of the Counter-Terrorism Committee of the issue of implementation by Member States of resolution 1624(2005).

The Council decided to carry out another comprehensive review of CTED by 31 December 2006, prepared by the Counter-Terrorism Committee.

Reports of States. Between January and December, the CTC Chairman transmitted to the Council President reports submitted by Member States on action they had taken or planned to implement resolution 1373(2001) and letters from the Committee requesting follow-up information: [S/2005/33-34, S/2005/61-63, S/2005/70-71, S/2005/90-95 & Add.1, S/2005/107-123, S/2005/161-166, S/2005/191-194, S/2005/213, S/2005/224-225, S/2005/231, S/2005/239, S/2005/255-260, S/2005/264-265 & Add.1, S/2005/276-277, S/2005/286-296, S/2005/347, S/2005/366-367, S/2005/370, S/2005/425, S/2005/441-443, S/2005/445, S/2005/455-456, S/2005/461, S/2005/466, S/2005/479, S/2005/481-484, S/2005/501-502 & Add.1, S/2005/516-519, S/2005/524, S/2005/551, S/2005/573, S/2005/583, S/2005/595, S/2005/671, S/2005/705, S/2005/822 & Corr.1-823, S/2005/846].

Action by Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice

The Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice, at its fourteenth session (23-27 May) [E/2005/30], recommended to the Economic and Social Council for approval a draft resolution entitled "Strengthening international cooperation and technical assistance in promoting the implementation of the universal conventions and protocols related to terrorism within the framework of the activities of the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime". That resolution was approved by the Council as resolution 2005/19 (see p. 1232).

IAEA action

The General Conference of the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA), at its forty-ninth session (Vienna, Austria, 26-30 September) (see p. 1563), adopted resolution GC(49)/RES/10 on measures to protect against nuclear terrorism, in which it called for an early entry into force of the International Convention for the Suppression of Acts of Nuclear Terrorism, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 59/290 of 13 April (see p. 1411). It also called on the Director-General to continue to implement Agency activities relevant to nuclear and radiological security and protection against nuclear and radiological terrorism.

Peacekeeping operations

In 2005, the General Assembly and the Security Council continued to oversee the management and operation of UN peacekeeping missions. The Council addressed key issues aimed at strengthening and streamlining the overall conduct of those operations, reviewed the mandates of several ongoing operations and created new ones to deal with new security concerns. The Assembly took action on a number of financial and administrative matters. In December, acting in concurrence with the Council, the Assembly established the Peacebuilding Commission and the Peacebuilding Support Office.

The Department of Peacekeeping Operations (DPKO) continued to implement the recommendations of the Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations, whose mandate was to review the whole question of peacekeeping operations in all their aspects, as well as those of the Assembly.

General aspects of UN peacekeeping

Military information management in peacekeeping operations

In November [A/60/596], the Secretary-General transmitted the report of the Office of Internal Oversight Services (OIOS) on the review of the effectiveness of military information management in UN peacekeeping operations. OIOS assessed the effectiveness of information management by the military component of peacekeeping operations in terms of reducing operational and security risks and enhancing mission performance. It also and examined DPKO's information management capability and effectiveness in mission planning and performance. The report addressed, in particular, the role of information management in contemporary peacekeeping, its organization, inter-mission information flow and management, backstopping support for information management, promotion of organizational learning and best practice, and the use of information technology.

OIOS found that the requirement for information management existed in all peacekeeping missions, but the size and composition of the management entity varied depending on the mandate, size of force and structure of the mission. Observing that information flow in peacekeeping appeared to be an excessively complex and tangled network, OIOS stated that mission-wide collaboration was essential for information management. It noted DPKO's efforts to simplify the flow of information in peacekeeping by establishing integrated central information collation and processing centres at the mission level by conceptualizing a Joint Mission Analysis Cell (JMAC) as a multidisciplinary entity analysing information from all sources and providing strategic information and assessments to senior mission management. A JMAC type organization had already been established in seven missions and DPKO had established a working group to develop a policy for the concept and structure of JMACs.

Regarding capacity for effective information management, OIOS found that in most peacekeeping operations staff functions at force headquarters did not have any specific order of battle, knowledge, experience or adequate skills for using the products of overt information management for tactical and strategic purposes. In the opinion of OIOS, the reluctance of the United Nations to acknowledge intelligence operations as an operational and strategic resource had limited staff functions to their most basic and generic tasks, preventing key mission staff from employing intelligence as a vital component and virtual substitute for the use of force, manpower and time.

OIOS therefore recommended that DPKO establish an integrated information management system, such as a JMAC, in all multidimensional peacekeeping operations and develop strategic guidance, relevant policies and guidelines for JMACs, with system-wide uniform application. The function and role of a JMAC should be distinct from that of the military information cell/force G2 branch (military information cell) as a mission-level asset for strategic information support. DPKO should review the field policy and guide peacekeeping operations to develop a specific order of battle and standard operating procedures. It should also develop clear guidelines for the recruitment and selection of civilian and military staff to JMAC and the force G2 branch and a standardized training module for in-mission training; provide clear guidance to missions on the interface between JMAC and the public information officer in the framework of mission information management; and develop guidelines for integrating the functions of the military public information officer and the public information officer.

DPKO should further provide field missions with the requisite human, technical and financial resources to bolster, through publications and radio broadcasts, the mission's public information outreach and generate goodwill; institutionalize mechanisms for troop-contributing countries to communicate vital information inputs that could impact operational decisions; issue directives and guidelines for establishing and operating joint mission information management committees in regions where there was a UN regional office for information-sharing between field missions; and develop an institutional capacity for backstopping field missions by strengthening the monitoring and assessment capacity in the Situation Centre or the Current Military Operations Service. It should also develop mission-tailored packages containing templates, draft standard operating procedures, standard database formats and sample documents on information management; a compendium of best practices and lessons learned in information management; and a policy for providing technological support for information collection and for enhancing mission capacity for information analysis and synthesis. DPKO should provide a capability to perform and produce geographical and terrain analysis and to manage digital/analog geographic data, and review policies on communications monitoring and electronic countermeasures to enhance security and improve mission preparedness to deal with unexpected situations.

Military involvement in civil assistance in peacekeeping operations

In December [A/60/588], the Secretary-General transmitted the OIOS report on the review of military involvement in civil assistance in peacekeeping operations. The report focused on support provided to humanitarian activities by the military components of peacekeeping operations at the request of humanitarian organizations and agencies, and community support projects (CSPs) conducted. It addressed the coordination of such assistance with overall mission objectives and the enhancement of its effectiveness and efficiency.

OIOS found that, in addition to providing security, civil assistance had become a common activity of the military component in all missions, which led to the broadening of contemporary peacekeeping mandates in the context of multidimentional peace operations. While support for humanitarian activities was provided on request, CSPs were generally initiated and carried out by the military component itself. However, without a coherent and comprehensive approach to planning and strategy, coordination, guidance and support, continued improvisation would hamper the capacity of military components to support humanitarian activities and local communities. The current weaknesses in guidance to contingents on CSPs in missions, combined with disappointing feedback from humanitarian organizations and agencies regarding the efforts of military components to support local communities needed to be addressed in order to maximize the benefits of cooperation and synergy in the field. OIOS was confident that the results of discussions on integrated missions and civil-military coordination in missions, especially between DPKO and the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs (OCHA), would be translated into clear instructions for military components in the near future. The next challenge was to build on the experience gained by military components supporting humanitarian activities and to pursue changes that addressed military involvement in civil assistance throughout the stages of a peacebuilding operation beyond the humanitarian emergency phase. Such efforts would equally require a comprehensive approach that took into account implications for planning, strategy, coordination, guidance and support.

OIOS recommended that DPKO ensure that, in mission planning, opportunities for military support to humanitarian organizations and agencies were identified and considered, in consultation with relevant partners; that mission-level planning documents included a strategy for CSPs that took into account the needs of the population on the ground and overall mission objectives; provide missions with guidance for coordinating CSPs and quick-impact projects; and review with OCHA the terms of reference and structural location of civilian officers responsible for civil-military coordination in missions to enhance their effectiveness and avoid duplication.

It also recommended that peacekeeping operations should inform humanitarian organizations and agencies in the mission area to submit their requests for military support to a specific point of contact, which would prioritize such requests from a humanitarian perspective and forward them to the military component for action, and that such points should be established for different levels of command or different areas within the mission. DPKO should also promulgate its revised policy on civil-military coordination and ensure that it was fully reflected in all other relevant guidance material and served as the basis for the preparation of a generic standard operating procedure.

DPKO should complement the terms of reference for quick-impact projects with additional instructions on the preparation of mission-specific strategies and on their management, implementation and evaluation; advise missions, in consultation with OCHA, about their point of contact for advice on military involvement in civil assistance; and ensure that an adequate number of qualified personnel and a sufficient amount of support equipment were provided to missions for an effective civil-military coordination function at force, sector headquarters and contingent levels; update the generic training module on civil-military coordination contained in the standard generic training module level 1 to include more detail on the role of the military component in implementing CSPs and quick-impact projects, and the standard training module level 3 to include a separate module on civil-military coordination.

DPKO said that it agreed with and supported each recommendation and was already taking steps to implement some of them, which could form a support basis for some of its policy initiatives.

Operational capacity of UN military observers

In its report on the review of the operational capacity of UN Military Observers (UNMOs), transmitted to the General Assembly by the Secretary-General in April [A/59/764], OIOS noted that UNMOs played a crucial role in peacekeeping operations, which had evolved from monitoring compliance with ceasefire agreements to more complex tasks, including governance, humanitarian and human rights issues. However, the complexity of the environment and those new tasks did not appear to result in a commensurate revision of UNMOs role and operational modalities. OIOS reviewed the operational capacity of UNMOs, with a view to enhancing their effectiveness and efficiency in the context of multidimensional peacekeeping, focusing on command and control, selection and training, deployment, rotation and repatriation, use of advanced technology and administrative and logistics support. It also examined UNMO's role in missions vis-à-vis the armed contingents and how that effected their security and safety, and their cooperation and coordination with other mission components.

In terms of command and control, OIOS noted that, among the 13 missions with UNMOs, four different organizational structures were used: in the first structure, the Chief Military Observer (CMO) exercised full operational authority over the UNMOs; in the second, there was a separate chain of command for UNMOs who reported directly to the head of mission; the third followed the principle of "unity of command" with all military units under the operational authority of the Force Commander; and the fourth reflected a greater integration in UNMOs into the command and control chain of the contingent force. Among the difficulties reported were the lack of an effective flow of information in some missions, and the physical separation of the UNMOs chain of command from that of armed contingents resulting in structural restrictions for coordination at the lower tactical levels. OIOS believed that, to ensure effective integration, there should be a common communications plan and standard operating and reporting procedures, with priority given to a single and unified chain of command.

In the area of selection and training, the most pressing challenges were the different levels of military skills, training and experience of team members, language proficiency, driving, radio communications and map-reading skills.

Regarding safety and security, UNMOs were normally unarmed in forward locations, making them vulnerable to attack, hostage-taking and harassment. Their most common concerns were the availability of safe, reliable and efficient communications and their deployment to remote locations in small numbers, where they had to make independent arrangements for accommodation within local communities, which posed a major security risk.

OIOS also found that disruptions in cooperation and coordination between military units in general, and UNMOs and armed contingents in particular, often resulted from the lack of common understanding of their respective roles in the mission.

To improve the overall operational effectiveness of UNMOs in peacekeeping operations, OIOS recommended that DPKO develop a more generic and streamlined command and control structure for its peacekeeping missions with UNMOs and armed contingents that allowed effective integration of UNMOs at the Force Headquarters level through a single unified chain of command, while maintaining operational independence at sector and lower levels. It should also develop: a mechanism that ensured that UNMOs attended a recognized military observers' course at a national peacekeeping training centre prior to deployment; a system that helped identify troop-contributing countries that provided UNMOs who consistently performed poorly and recommended steps that improved standards and ensured compliance, and encouraged greater participation of female UNMOs in peacekeeping missions. DPKO should explore the use of a standby roster for improving its initial deployment of UNMOs, develop a system for staggering their arrival, rotation and repatriation, streamline the induction and checkout procedures, and develop a comprehensive security plan for UNMOs to help ensure that they operated within range of the VHF/HF communications systems of the armed contingents and were provided with armed escorts. Armed contingents should maintain a quick reaction team, with stand-by ground-to-air communications in each sector for response to emergency extraction/evacuation situations. Mission directives should emphasize that the responsibility for the security of UNMOs rested with the armed contingents, and UNMOs should be provided with a distinct identity to distinguish them from armed contingents in order to emphasize their unarmed status.

Mission plans should include an effective information reporting structure and a comprehensive communications plan to facilitate effective integration of UNMOs with other mission components. Proficient translators/interpreters should be made available to UNMO teams as required and each mission should have an exit strategy for UNMOs that built on established benchmarks and links with the post-peacekeeping phase. DPKO should also establish a focal point in the Military Adviser's office for UNMO policy issues.

HIV/AIDS and international peacekeeping operations

On 18 July [meeting 5228], the Security Council considered the question of HIV/AIDS in international peacekeeping operations. The Under-Secretary-General for Peacekeeping Operations, Jean-Marie Guéhenno, in briefing the Council on the subject, said that, since the adoption of resolution 1308(2000) [YUN 2000, p. 82] on the impact of AIDS on peace and security, a comprehensive strategy had been developed to reduce the risk of peacekeepers contracting or transmitting the virus while on mission. The key elements of that strategy were: the creation of specific mission capacity to address AIDS; ensuring the availability of condoms and observing universal medical precautions; developing voluntary counselling and testing capacities in missions; establishing monitoring and evaluation mechanisms; and setting up projects for outreach to local communities and mainstreaming the issue of AIDS into mission mandates. In terms of progress achieved in those areas, there were currently 10 AIDS advisers, compared to just four in 2000 deployed at major peacekeeping operations, supported by United Nations Volunteers and host country professionals, and focal points in the smaller missions. Since awareness-training was central to the strategy, DPKO was working closely with troop-contributing countries and the Joint United Nations Programme on HIV/AIDS (UNAIDS) to establish at least a basic level of AIDS awareness among all those working in peacekeeping operations and AIDS awareness-training was routinely included in all "train the trainer" courses, in military observer programmes and in other sessions organized and sponsored by DPKO to enhance national peacekeeping capabilities. AIDS awareness-training was also central to pre-deployment training for mission-specific personnel and formed part of induction training for all civilian personnel. The AIDS training module was revised to ensure that the issues of gender, codes of conduct and sexual abuse were fully reflected.

As the strategy also aimed at reinforcing support for AIDS prevention and mobilizing all DPKO personnel to deal with it, AIDS was high on the agenda of the conference of all force commanders and would continue to be part of the senior leadership training for those serving in peacekeeping operations. Training modules were tailored for specific occupational groups, such as public information officers and stress counsellors serving in the most difficult missions.

To assess the effectiveness of the training programmes, DPKO piloted an HIV/AIDS knowledge, attitude and practice survey in Liberia (May/June), in collaboration with the United States Centers for Disease Control and Prevention and UNAIDS, involving over 660 uniformed peacekeepers. The preliminary findings showed that awareness was generally high, with over 87 per cent of those in a mission for at least one month having received AIDS-awareness training since their arrival. However, only a small number had received training from within their battalions or detachments, and less than 2 per cent had been briefed on AIDS by their commanding officers while in the mission area.

To create greater capacity among peacekeepers, AIDS advisers conducted peer education programmes, drawing on UNAIDS peer education kit and awareness cards. UNAIDS and DPKO were also examining ways to create a network to maintain the capacity of peer educators when they returned home. The survey showed that of the peacekeepers surveyed, over 92 per cent were tested for HIV as part of their preparation for deployment. DPKO's efforts focused not only on how to reduce the risk of HIV transmission, but also on how to capitalize on the positive potential of peacekeepers as agents of change.

Despite the lessons learned over the past five years, answers were still required to ascertain whether enough was done, whether the basic strategy was the right one and what additional investments were needed to sustain and strengthen those efforts.

The UNAIDS Executive Director, Peter Piot, reporting to the Council on the implementation of resolution 1308(2000), said that, in response to resolution 1308(2000), an Office on AIDS, Security and Humanitarian Response was established in the UNAIDS secretariat, with support from Denmark. Some one million AIDS-awareness cards were distributed in 13 languages through peacekeepers and national security forces, and a peer education kit, available in 11 languages, had become an integral part of the military training curricula in several troop-contributing countries. With the increasing focus on regional troop and mission management for peacekeeping, UNAIDS was engaged with key regional bodies and was supporting the African Union (AU) with its AIDS programmes for AU peacekeeping forces. UNAIDS was also working with the North Atlantic Treaty Organization and the Caribbean Community secretariat in developing comprehensive AIDS programmes for uniformed services.

UNAIDS was assisting 53 Member States with comprehensive programmes to address AIDS among uniformed services, and had signed formal partnership agreements with 15 ministries of defence, covering about 1.3 million active uniformed personnel. For the future, two great tasks related to AIDS and security had to be faced: expanding the knowledge of the broader impact of AIDS on human security and national stability in the most-affected countries and those in conflict and post-conflict situations; and dealing with classic security matters. The unstated goal underpinning resolution 1308(2000) that all peacekeepers and uniformed personnel be given the knowledge and means to protect themselves and others from HIV had not yet been achieved. The Executive Director expressed the hope that the Council would make that an explicit and time-bound goal and ensure that peacekeeping missions were given the means to meet their responsibilities with respect to HIV, and that they were held accountable for their performance in responding to AIDS.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 18 July [meeting 5228], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2005/33 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council reaffirms its commitment to the full implementation of resolution 1308(2000). The Council also recalls the Declaration of Commitment on HIV/AIDS adopted at the twenty-sixth special session of the General Assembly on 27 June 2001.

The Council welcomes the collaboration between the Department of Peacekeeping Operations of the Secretariat and the Joint United Nations Programme on HIV/AIDS and its co-sponsors to address HIV/AIDS awareness among peacekeeping personnel, both uniformed and civilian. The Council commends the Joint Programme for developing, in cooperation with interested States, national programmes to address HIV/AIDS among their uniformed personnel. The Council recognizes the significant number of direct and indirect beneficiaries of the programmes worldwide.

The Council recognizes that men and women in the uniformed services are vital elements in the fight against HIV/AIDS. The Council welcomes the efforts by Member States, including through existing national programmes, the Department of Peacekeeping Operations, the Joint Programme and other stakeholders, to counter the spread of the disease. The Council encourages Member States, in the preparation of their personnel for participation in peacekeeping operations, to employ best practices in HIV/AIDS education, prevention, awareness, countering stigma and discrimination, voluntary confidential counselling and testing, and care and treatment.

The Council also recognizes that United Nations peacekeeping personnel can be important contributors to the response to HIV/AIDS, particularly for vulnerable communities in post-conflict environments. The Council welcomes the action taken by the Secretary-General and the United Nations peacekeeping missions to integrate HIV/AIDS awareness in their mandated activities and outreach projects for vulnerable communities and urges them to pay particular attention to the gender dimensions of HIV/AIDS. In this context, the Council encourages further cooperation between the Department of Peacekeeping Operations and the Joint Programme and its co-sponsors, non-governmental organizations and civil society, bilateral and multilateral donors and national Governments.

The Council further recognizes that significant progress has been made in implementation of resolution 1308(2000) but that many challenges remain. The Council expresses its readiness to further promote and support the implementation of this resolution. In order to maintain and consolidate momentum, the Council welcomes regular briefings, as needed, by the Department of Peacekeeping Operations and the Joint Programme on the progress made, as a measure to strengthen commitment and accountability at the highest levels and ensure sustained monitoring and evaluation of the impact of programmes. The Council reaffirms its intention to contribute, within its competence, to the attainment of the relevant objectives in the Declaration adopted at the twenty-sixth special session of the General Assembly in carrying out the Council's work, in particular in its follow-up to resolution 1308(2000).

Sexual exploitation and abuse in UN peacekeeping operations

OIOS report. On 5 January [A/59/661], the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly the report of the Office of Internal Oversight Services (OIOS) on the investigation into numerous allegations of sexual exploitation and abuse of Congolese women and girls by UN peacekeepers serving with the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo (MONUC) (see p. 165). OIOS found that many of the 72 allegations originally reported could not be substantiated or even fully investigated because of their non-specific nature. It, however, compiled 20 case reports, 19 of which involved peacekeepers from three contingents. Six cases were fully substantiated, in two others, the identification of the perpetrator was not fully corroborated, and in the 11 remaining cases, the victims and witnesses were unable to clearly identify the perpetrators. OIOS therefore made a number of recommendations for corrective actions.

Special Committee consideration (January/February). The Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations (New York, 31 January–25 February) [A/59/ 19/Rev.1], expressed outrage at the large number of alleged sexual misconduct by military and civilian personnel at MONUC. The Special Committee felt that the issue needed to be viewed within a broader and systemic context and, in that respect, recommended a comprehensive and balanced approach to the problem. It emphasized the need for reinforced efforts and measures by the United Nations and Member States to ensure that military, civilian police and civilian personnel in UN peacekeeping missions were fully aware of their duties and obligations.

The Special Committee supported the Secretary-General's efforts to address the problem, and the need to strengthen the implementation of UN zero tolerance policy and standards of conduct, in order to provide clear and effective guidelines for all Member States contributing military, civilian police and personnel. The Special Committee requested the Secretary-General to submit a comprehensive report with recommendations on the issue by April, following which it would reconvene to review the report and submit its findings for consideration by the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee and the General Assembly.

The Assembly, in resolution 59/281 (see p. 129), endorsed the Special Committee's recommendations.

Report of Adviser to Secretary-General. On 24 March [A/59/710], the Secretary-General, in response to the Special Committee's request, submitted the report of his Adviser on Sexual Exploitation and Abuse by United Nations Peacekeeping Personnel, His Royal Highness Prince Zeid Ra'ad Zeid Al-Hussein (Jordan), entitled "A comprehensive strategy to eliminate future sexual exploitation and abuse in United Nations peacekeeping operations". The report discussed the problem under four main themes: the rules on standards of conduct; the investigative process; organizational, managerial and command responsibility; and individual disciplinary, financial and criminal accountability. It stated that in 2003, DPKO had investigated allegations of sexual exploitation and abuse implicating five staff and 19 military personnel. The Secretariat was aware that the data gathered on those cases might not reflect the true extent of those incidents; the complaint procedures and victim support mechanisms were not adequate; and a system for systematically reporting misconduct was required. Following improvements in the Organization's complaint mechanism, the number of allegations received against peacekeeping personnel increased significantly. In 2004, DPKO received 105 allegations, 16 of which were against civilians, 9 against civilian police and 80 against military personnel. Forty-five per cent of those allegations related to sex with persons under 18 years of age, 31 per cent with adult prostitutes, while rape and sexual assault comprised 13 and 5 per cent, respectively. The remaining 6 per cent was related to other forms of sexual abuse and exploitation, as defined in the Secretary-General's bulletin on the subject [YUN 2004, p. 107].

The report noted that efforts to address the problem were ad hoc and inadequate, and a radical change was needed in the way it was addressed in peacekeeping contexts. During the Adviser's visit to the Democratic Republic of the Congo (DRC), women's organizations drew attention to several external factors they believed contributed to the problem, including the erosion of the social fabric by the ongoing conflict, the lack of income-generation possibilities, the high incidence of sexual violence against women and children during the conflict, discrimination, exploitative behaviour against them, and the lack of a well-functioning legal and judicial system, thereby encouraging impunity. On the other hand, MONUC personnel seemed to share a perception that little was being done to deal effectively with the problem, and that whistle-blowers would not be protected. There was little awareness of UN standards of conduct, inadequate recreational facilities and protracted periods of separation from families and communities.

Regarding the Organization's rules, the report concluded that the difficulty of dealing with sexual exploitation and abuse was compounded by the many categories of personnel in a mission, each governed by different rules. However, although the responsibility for the conduct and discipline of troops rested with troop-contributing countries, the Assembly should apply the rules set out in the Secretary-General's bulletin on special measures for protection from sexual exploitation and abuse to all categories of UN peacekeeping personnel. Those standards, as well as those set out in the publications entitled "Ten Rules: Code of Personal Conduct for Blue Helmets" and "We Are United Nations Peacekeepers", should be included in each memorandum of understanding signed with each troop-contributing country, whose obligation should be to ensure that those rules were binding on their national contingents. The rules should also be readily available to all members of a peacekeeping mission, including in card form and in the languages of the various contingents.

Concerning investigations into alleged sexual exploitation and abuse conducted by the Organization, the report recommended that a permanent professional mechanism be established to investigate complex cases of serious misconduct in that regard. An expert in military law should participate in any investigation to ensure that evidence was gathered in accordance with national law. Troop-contributing countries should share information obtained through its contingent's investigations and hold on-site courts martial to facilitate access to witnesses and evidence in the peacekeeping area. Those countries whose legislation did not so permit should consider reforming their legislation.

In relation to organizational, managerial and command accountability, a series of measures were recommended, including extensive training, an effective programme of outreach to the local community, a data collection system to track the investigation and resolution of allegations and the establishment of full-time positions at Headquarters and in the field to coordinate action by missions on those issues. Mission-specific measures were also recommended to deal with the problem and to help make life at the missions less difficult. In addition, the United Nations should offer basic assistance to alleged victims.

There should be strict disciplinary accountability for peacekeeping personnel who violated the Organization's rules relating to sexual exploitation and abuse, and in that context, the Assembly should define acts of sexual exploitation and abuse as serious misconduct in the Staff Regulations and request the Secretary-General to introduce expedited procedures to deal with such cases. Troop-contributing countries should also endeavour to bring implicated members of their contingent to justice.

UN peacekeeping personnel should be held financially accountable for harm caused to victims as a result of their acts of sexual exploitation and abuse. In particular, the Assembly should authorize DNA and other tests to establish paternity and obligate peacekeeping personnel to provide financial support to so-called peacekeeper babies. The model memorandum of understanding should require troop-contributing countries to ensure that their contingents respected local law and to exercise criminal jurisdiction over their troops. The Secretary-General should appoint a group of experts to advise on the feasiblility of drafting an international instrument or the use of other means to ensure that UN personnel were subject to criminal prosecution for defined crimes of sexual exploitation and abuse.

Special Committee consideration (April). The Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations, at its resumed session (New York, 4-8 April) [A/59/19/Rev.1], having considered the report of the Secretary-General's Special Adviser (see above), recognized the shared responsibility of the Secretariat and Member States in preventing sexual exploitation and abuse by all categories of personnel in UN peacekeeping missions and in enforcing UN standards of conduct. The Special Committee was committed to implementing fundamental, systematic changes as a matter of urgency and adopted a number of recommendations, which were without prejudice to the right of troop-contributing countries to exercise exclusive jurisdiction over their own contingents.

The Special Committee welcomed the standards set out in the Secretary-General's bulletin on special measures for protection from sexual exploitation and abuse and recommended that the Assembly endorse them for all categories of UN peacekeeping personnel. The Secretary-General should issue the standards in a manner convenient to troop-contributing countries, in the languages of contingent members and in UN official languages. DPKO should provide training on the requisite standards of conduct, particularly on the detailed prohibitions in the Secretary-General's bulletin.

The Special Committee urged the full integration of the Office of the Special Adviser on Gender Issues and Advancement of Women in efforts to encourage the reporting of abuse and to promote an environment that discouraged such acts. It highlighted the need for welfare and recreational services to be made available to all categories of personnel in peacekeeping missions. In that regard, the Secretary-General should carry out a comprehensive review, including a cost-benefit analysis, of welfare and recreational needs. That should also include: a review of the rules on rest and recreation and the classification of duty stations as family or non-family for UN civilian staff; the need for welfare officers and stress counsellors; the development of minimum standards of welfare and recreational facilities for all categories of personnel; and the effectiveness of the system of welfare payments. Related proposals should be made to the Assembly's sixtieth (2005) session.

The Secretary-General should establish a data collection and management system at Headquarters and in the field to track allegations of sexual exploitation and abuse and responses of missions to those allegations, which should ensure that prior offenders were not rehired, and track non-specific allegations since they might indicate a problem requiring managerial response.

The Special Committee recommended: the strengthening of DPKO's capacity to address all cases of misconduct, including sexual exploitation and abuse, provide prompt advice to missions, ensure the coherent application of UN procedures, and provide guidance and advice for all categories of civilian and uniformed personnel; measures to protect persons disclosing sexual exploitation and abuse from intimidation; and the establishment of a professional and independent investigative capacity to investigate alleged sexual exploitation and abuse and other allegations of misconduct of a similar grave nature. DPKO, in cooperation with the Department of Public Information, should establish an effective outreach programme to explain the Organization's policy relating to sexual exploitation and abuse, and effective mechanisms to allow individuals to make related complaints in a confidential setting. DPKO should also provide feedback to alleged victims on the outcome of their complaints and of the mission's investigation, giving due regard to the privacy laws of Member States.

The Secretary-General should provide the Special Committee, at its 2006 session, with a comprehensive strategy for assisting victims of sexual exploitation and abuse, including financial compensation. In the meantime, missions should provide emergency assistance to victims within mission budgets. Staff Regulations and contracts with United Nations Volunteers, consultants and individual contractors should be amended to specifically provide that acts of sexual exploitation and abuse constituted serious misconduct.

The Special Committee, noting that the report of the Secretary-General's Adviser included recommendations on the content of the model memorandum of understanding between the United Nations and troop-contributing countries, said it was informed that the model, which was last reported to the Assembly in 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 55], had not been adopted as a basis for negotiation with individual troop-contributing countries. The Committee therefore recommended that the Secretary-General prepare a revised draft model memorandum of understanding, and submit it to the Special Committee for consideration in 2006.

The Secretary-General should appoint a group of legal experts to prepare and submit to the Assembly at its sixtieth (2005) session, a comprehensive report providing advice on: the best way to ensure that the original intent of the Charter would be achieved, namely that UN staff and experts on missions would not be effectively exempted from the consequences of criminal acts committed at their duty station, nor unjustly penalized, in accordance with due process; whether, and if so, how, the standards in the Secretary-General's bulletin could bind contingent members in the period prior to the conclusion of a memorandum of understanding or other agreement or action by a troop-contributing country that incorporated those standards under its national law; and to study and propose ways of standardizing the norms of conduct applicable to all categories of peacekeeping personnel, paying particular attention to the issue of sexual exploitation and abuse. He should also provide a progress report on the implementation of the recommendations as part of his annual report to the Special Committee at its next regular (2006) session.

Security Council consideration. On 31 May [meeting 5191], the Security Council considered the reports of the Special Committee and the Secretary-General's Adviser on the subject. In his briefing to the Council, the Secretary-General's Adviser said that it was well known that, in the early 1960s, the United Nations Operation in the Congo had faced difficulties relating to discipline of some of its personnel, and since 1989, similar reports had surfaced in practically every subsequent mission. Over the past 60 years, Member States had refrained from opening that subject to public discourse because of pride and a deep sense of embarrassment, which only produced outright denials. Not only were abuses by peacekeepers repugnant, they struck at the credibility of the operation in question and the Organization as a whole. In order to overcome those difficulties, Member States had to resolve to recognize the truth openly, however painful that might be. While highlighting actions being taken to implement the recommendations of the Special Committee, the Secretary-General's Adviser indicated that it would be prudent to expect that further allegations could emerge in the future due to the Secretariat's strengthening of the system for lodging complaints. DPKO and OIOS would continue to coordinate on developing a standing procedure for launching investigations, and the relationship between OIOS and troop-contributing countries on investigations would need further refinement. The Adviser expressed hope that in 2006, the Special Committee would take up those recommendations and ideas in his report that were not addressed at its resumed session. He intended to propose again the holding of in-mission courts martial for the worst offences.

The Under-Secretary-General for Peacekeeping Operations, Jean-Marie Guéhenno, told the Council that combating sexual exploitation and abuse was one of DPKO's highest priorities and it had made significant progress in investigating related allegations and putting in place wide-ranging measures to prevent the problem. Over the past year, field missions had instituted numerous measures to prevent misconduct and enforce UN standards of conduct, such as providing training on aspects of those standards relating to sexual exploitation and abuse at missions in Côte d'Ivoire, Liberia and Sierra Leone and there were plans to make such training mandatory for all peacekeeping personnel arriving at missions. In 2004, DPKO issued a policy on human trafficking that was accompanied by a resource manual on the issue and included a training module and practical guidance for peacekeeping operations. In early 2005, awareness-raising posters on sexual exploitation and abuse and brochures on human trafficking were distributed to all missions.

Citing the Secretary-General's 9 February letter to the Council [S/2005/79], Mr. Guéhenno noted that MONUC had put in place mission-specific measures to minimize misconduct and was strengthening managerial accountability by requiring regional heads of office to prepare workplans for preventing sexual exploitation and abuse. At Headquarters, DPKO had established a task force to develop guidance and tools for peacekeeping operations to address sexual exploitation and abuse effectively, and was co-chairing, with the United Nations Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, an inter-agency task force aimed at developing an organizational culture throughout the UN system that prevented such acts. It was also developing common policies and guidance on victim assistance. The Department was cooperating closely with OIOS to develop suggestions for discussion with troop-contributing countries on how to facilitate their participation in OIOS investigations involving military peacekeeping personnel.

In 2005, DPKO reported 340 new allegations of which 217 were against uniformed personnel (involving 193 military and 24 civilian police officers), while about 123 were against civilian staff. Eighty allegations involved UN staff and 42 were related to other UN civilian personnel, which included individual contractors, consultants, Junior Professional Officers and UN Volunteers. With regard to cases involving DPKO and other civilian personnel, as at December, four allegations were deemed as requiring no further action and 68 were investigated, 33 of which were sent to Headquarters for disciplinary action, 1 was pending investigation, 14 were substantiated and four were unsubstantiated. Sixteen cases involving civilian personnel were sent to Boards of Inquiry for investigation. As of September 2005, cases of sexual exploitation and abuse from DPKO's field missions were referred to OIOS.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 31 May [meeting 5191], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2005/21 on behalf of the Council:

> The Security Council recognizes the vital role that United Nations peacekeeping operations have played for decades in bringing peace and stability to countries emerging from war. The Council further recognizes that, with few exceptions, the women and men who serve in United Nations peacekeeping operations do so with the utmost professionalism, dedication and, in some cases, make the ultimate sacrifice.
> The Council is deeply concerned about the allegations of sexual misconduct by United Nations peacekeeping personnel. The distinguished and honourable record of accomplishment in United Nations peacekeeping is being tarnished by the acts of a few individuals.
> The Council condemns, in the strongest terms, all acts of sexual abuse and exploitation committed by United Nations peacekeeping personnel. The Council reiterates that sexual exploitation and abuse are unacceptable and have a detrimental effect on the fulfilment of mission mandates.
> The Council, while confirming that the conduct and discipline of troops is primarily the responsibility of troop-contributing countries, recognizes the shared responsibility of the Secretary-General and all Member States to take every measure within their purview to prevent sexual exploitation and abuse by all categories of personnel in United Nations peacekeeping missions and to enforce United Nations standards of conduct in this regard. The Council reiterates the importance of ensuring that sexual exploitation and abuse are properly investigated and appropriately punished.
> The Council underlines the fact that the provision of an environment in which sexual exploitation and abuse are not tolerated is primarily the responsibility of managers and commanders.
> The Council welcomes the comprehensive report on sexual exploitation and abuse by United Nations peacekeeping personnel, prepared by the Adviser to the Secretary-General on this issue, Prince Zeid Ra'ad Zeid Al-Hussein, Permanent Representative of the Hashemite Kingdom of Jordan to the United Nations. The Council also welcomes the report of the Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations and its Working Group on its resumed session.
> The Council urges the Secretary-General and troop-contributing countries to ensure that the recommendations of the Special Committee, which fall within their respective responsibilities, are implemented without delay.
> The Council will consider including relevant provisions for prevention, monitoring, investigation and reporting of misconduct cases in its resolutions establishing new mandates or renewing existing mandates. In this regard, the Council calls upon the Secretary-General to include, in his regular reporting on peacekeeping missions, a summary of the preventive measures taken to implement a zero-tolerance policy and of the outcome of actions taken against personnel found culpable of sexual exploitation and abuse.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 June [meeting 104], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fourth (Special Political and Decolonization) Committee [A/59/472/Add.2], adopted resolution 59/300 without vote [agenda item 77].

Comprehensive review of a strategy to eliminate future sexual exploitation and abuse in United Nations peacekeeping operations

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 2006(XIX) of 18 February 1965 and all other relevant resolutions,

Recalling in particular its resolution 58/315 of 1 July 2004,

Recalling its resolution 59/281 of 29 March 2005, in which it endorsed the recommendation in paragraph 56 of the report of the Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations that the Secretary-General make available to the United Nations membership, no later than the first week of April 2005, a comprehensive report on the issue of sexual exploitation and abuse by military, civilian police and civilian personnel in United Nations peacekeeping operations,

Noting that the Secretary-General, on 24 March 2005, transmitted to the President of the General Assembly a report of his Adviser concerning sexual exploitation and abuse by United Nations peacekeeping personnel,

Affirming the need for the Organization to adopt without delay a comprehensive strategy to eliminate future sexual exploitation and abuse in United Nations peacekeeping operations as recommended by the Special Committee and the Adviser to the Secretary-General,

Convinced of the need for the United Nations to take strong and effective steps in this regard,

1. Welcomes the report of the Adviser to the Secretary-General;

2. Endorses the proposals, recommendations and conclusions of the Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations, contained in chapter II of the report on its 2005 resumed session;

3. Urges Member States, the Secretariat and the relevant organs of the United Nations to take all necessary steps to implement the proposals, recommendations and conclusions of the Special Committee, and supports the request of the Special Committee to the Secretary-General that he provide a progress report on the implementation of the recommendations of the Special Committee at its next regular session;

4. Requests the Special Committee to include this issue in its report to the General Assembly at its sixtieth session.

On the same date, the Assembly took further action on the question of sexual exploitation and abuse in section XIV of resolution 59/296 on the administrative and budgetary aspects of UN peacekeeping operations: cross-cutting issues (see p. 133).

Strengthening operational capacity

The Secretary-General, in his report on the implementation of the recommendations of the Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations [A/59/608 & Corr.1], outlined proposals for filling the gaps in UN peacekeeping capabilities. He proposed a strategic reserve for UN peacekeeping, comprising a number of task forces of some 1,250 troops each. Each task force would be held within the national command of a troop contributor and would be a combined-arms force, with enabling units capable of sustained operations. The task forces would be drawn from a geographical range of troop-contributing countries, each of which would secure prior political and legislative agreement to deploy, obviating the time-consuming process of securing agreement immediately prior to deployment. The task forces would be configured in a structure of "graduated readiness", and once deployed, would come under the command of the Force Commander. The strategic reserve would be deployed for a specific duration and task, and would return to the troop-contributing country upon the completion of that task. It would focus mainly on stabilization, but could provide an interim capability pending deployment of other forces.

The Secretary-General also proposed a standing civilian police capacity for two to three years and comprising up to 100 police officers, to be deployed in teams of 10 to 20 in mission areas to support early planning and needs assessments, the building up of mission headquarters, the setting up of a well-functioning civilian police component to develop sustainable local police structures and periodic evaluations related to mandate implementation.

The Special Committee, at its 2005 substantive session [A/59/19/Rev.1], while noting the unprecedented increase in peacekeeping operations, recognized that the current level of resources limited the scope and number of missions that DPKO could effectively undertake and manage. It recommended that DPKO evaluate how and to what extent the complexity of peacekeeping mandates affected the operational efficiency of peacekeeping missions, with a view to reporting its findings to the Special Committee in 2006. The Special Committee noted with concern the Secretary-General's assessment that UN peacekeeping continued to face significant gaps, particularly in regard to enabling and niche capabilities and strategic lift operations.

While recognizing that the UN's ability to rapidly deploy and support forces continued to improve, the Special Committee noted that initiatives to strengthen regional arrangements would provide readily available and deployable forces to reduce deployment time lines. It believed that a definitive review of the effectiveness of the UN standby arrangement system was necessary, and while supporting the call for rapid deployment, urged the Secretariat to optimize all aspects of pre-mandate operational preparedness and deployment. It called for a more efficient management of the financial and logistical aspects of peacekeeping operations at Headquarters and in the field, in order to make deployment both rapid and effective. To overcome the contingent-owned equipment and sustainability shortfall faced by some troop-contributing countries, the Special Committee recommended that DPKO continue to facilitate various enabling arrangements, including through other Member States and bilateral arrangements.

The Special Committee welcomed initiatives to improve the operational effectiveness of UN peacekeeping operations, including the creation of tactical and force-level reserves in mission areas, and took note of the Secretary-General's strategic reserve initiative to provide existing peacekeeping missions with a robust and capable reserve, to be called upon if required (see above). Furthermore, questions such as the composition of task forces, the decision-making processes for deployment, command and control arrangements, complementarity with other crisis response initiatives, sustainability and financial implications, among others, had to be answered before the Special Committee could reach firm conclusions on related proposals. The Special Committee recommended that DPKO work closely with Member States to answer those questions.

Civilian rapid deployment roster

In a March report [A/59/763], submitted in response to General Assembly resolution 58/298 [YUN 2004, p. 96], the Secretary-General described the status of the pilot civilian rapid deployment roster, established in 2003 [YUN 2003, p. 99] as a mechanism whereby UN staff members were selected and included in a roster for deployment at short notice for a limited time to perform critical functions at start-up, surge or liquidation phases of peacekeeping operations. The report also analysed the achievements and shortcomings of the mechanism and made recommendations to improve its utility.

As at July 2004, 57 staff members on the roster had been deployed to six missions. The operation of the mechanism was evaluated internally by the Personnel Management and Support Service and further reviewed by the Peacekeeping Best Practices Unit, during which various aspects were examined, including communications, process and commitment, the composition of the roster, applications, the selection and clearance process, deployment, medical clearance, length of deployment, the training programme and management and resources.

The reviews revealed, among other findings, that the actual purpose and implementation of the roster, its administration, funding and the permissible length of deployment, remained unclear. Some releasing missions were reluctant to release selected staff, while some receiving missions questioned the qualifications of the staff member selected. Critical posts were left vacant or without a sufficient number of candidates, and wide differences were observed between the qualifications of applicants included on the roster and the technical skills required.

Addressing the way forward, the Secretary-General observed that the value of a civilian rapid deployment roster mechanism was clearly demonstrated, despite the constraints identified. The roster would be extended to fully encompass the needs of missions during the start-up, surge and liquidation phases, and the team structure replaced by a single integrated roster, with a revised list of critical functions for which a specific number of staff would be selected. The new roster would comprise approximately 365 civilian staff members.

Comprehensive revised procedures would be communicated to all field missions and DPKO would explain the mechanism and its implementation modalities, clarifying that the roster facility was not a transfer or promotion mechanism, nor a substitute for the regular recruitment process. To ensure a larger pool of candidates, particularly for senior positions and functions, the application process would be extended to other Secretariat offices and possibly to UN Volunteers. The Secretary-General recommended that the civilian rapid deployment facility be closely linked to other DPKO rapid deployment initiatives.

Other major changes would be introduced in the revised selection and clearance process, which would enable DPKO or the missions to nominate staff members for inclusion on the roster. Individual staff members could also continue to voluntarily request inclusion in the roster. Staff would remain on the roster for one year, and the maximum deployment period would be extended to 120 days. With the concurrence of both the receiving and releasing missions, roster staff might apply for a position in the receiving mission but would have to return to their parent mission for a minimum period of three months. An evaluation mechanism would be built into the new procedures.

A rapid deployment roster management capacity would be established within the Personnel Management and Support Service to coordinate the selection and clearance process, monitor the roster, identify gaps and issue application request announcements to ensure that the roster remained populated and updated, and meet with staff and supervisors to promote and discuss the programme. Focal points would also be appointed in each technical entity in the Secretariat to provide technical advice and help to locate candidates. The roster would be renewed annually.

The Secretary-General concluded that the roster was one way of meeting DPKO's urgent operational requirements. The Department would report on efforts to build such a cadre in its comprehensive report on the conditions of field service.

In April [A/59/736], ACABQ considered the Secretary-General's report on the status of the civilian rapid deployment roster. Taking note of the selection criteria for the mechanism, the findings of an internal evaluation and review of its operation and the Secretary-General's recommendations for improving its utility, ACABQ encouraged the maximum use of existing personnel management and database systems, including the Galaxy recruitment system, in managing the roster, particularly in terms of improving its efficiency and reducing management costs. It requested the Secretariat to increase cooperation with UN agencies, funds and programmes in establishing the humanitarian, development and disarmament, demobilization and reintegration components of the roster to ensure that the requirements of integrated missions were fully met.

Strategies for complex peacekeeping operations

The Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations, at its 2005 substantive session (31 January–25 February) [A/59/19/Rev.1], recognized the need for DPKO to plan peacekeeping missions so as to facilitate an effective approach to peacebuilding and long-term prevention of the recurrence of armed conflict. It encouraged the Secretariat to develop coherent strategies and early integrated mission planning based on lessons learned in the areas of disarmament, demobilization and reintegration, strengthening of the rule of law, security sector reform, quick-impact projects and mine action, with a view to restoring immediate security and stability in post-conflict societies.

Underlining the need for clear and well-defined mandates and exit strategies for complex peacekeeping operations, the Special Committee called for the inclusion of peacebuilding elements in complex mandates to generate enabling conditions to prevent the recurrence of armed conflict. In that regard, it looked forward to the detailed review of UN system capacity to be included in the Secretary-General's report to the General Assembly's resumed fifty-ninth (2005) session on the implementation of resolution 57/337 [YUN 2003, p. 50].

The Special Committee welcomed DPKO's intention to develop guidance and training for civil/military cooperation in peacebuilding activities and called on the Secretary-General to report on best practices for the peacekeeping, humanitarian/development interface for Member States' consideration.

The Special Committee stressed the need for effective planning for the transition from peacekeeping to peacebuilding and to long-term development and to strengthen the financing of post-conflict assistance. It also encouraged cooperation with the business community, including the provision of employment opportunities to demobilized fighters as a contribution to reconstruction and post-conflict resolution.

The Special Committee called for long-term donor commitment to support disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programmes, and requested the Secretary-General to identify the additional resources needed to support donor capacity in that regard. It welcomed progress by DPKO and other UN agencies in developing UN integrated standards on disarmament, demobilization and reintegration as well as on a comprehensive weapons management strategy, encouraged them to complete those processes. The Special Committee also took note of the Stockholm Initiative on Disarmament, Demobilization and Reintegration launched in 2004 by 23 countries and 14 organizations, including UN agencies, to review current practice in that area and to strengthen intervention that supported peace processes. The initiative was examined and further defined during subsequent meetings. A final conference (Stockholm, Sweden, 17-18 November) discussed the Initiative's aims, outline and recommendations.

Recognizing the importance of quick-impact projects in addressing local needs, building and sustaining confidence and supporting peacekeeping operations, the Special Committee recommended that the selection procedure for those projects be addressed at the field level, that resources for them directly support the mission's mandate, and that they either respond to needs not covered by existing development and humanitarian assistance efforts, or serve as a catalyst to broaden those efforts.

Noting that a UN peacekeeping mission might be mandated to assist in building or reforming rule of law capacities, it encouraged the Secretariat to work towards the strategic and operational planning of peacekeeping operations to fulfil such mandates. It also encouraged DPKO to give special attention to the protection, welfare and rights of children in armed conflict.

The Special Committee looked forward to the Secretary-General's comprehensive strategy and action plan for mainstreaming gender perspectives into all peacekeeping activities and to reviewing that strategy in 2006, and DPKO's status reports on those initiatives. It commended the introduction of mandatory pre-deployment gender training for military, civilian and civilian police personnel and the issuance of guidance on human trafficking. It also encouraged Member States and the Secretariat to increase the participation of women in all aspects and levels of peacekeeping operations and stressed the need for ongoing reporting by the Secretary-General on the implementation of gender mainstreaming in the field and at Headquarters.

The Special Committee also recommended that, within the integrated mission planning process, DPKO should provide the concept of operations and the operational plan for the information of potential troop-contributing countries and regional organizations as early as possible in the mission planning process in order to facilitate national planning prior to submitting recommendations to the Security Council.

Safety and security

Security Council action. On 2 March, the Security Council, in statement S/PRST/2005/10 (see p. 167), condemned a 25 February attack against a patrol of the United Nations Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo (MONUC), which resulted in the death of nine Bangladeshi peacekeepers.

Special Committee consideration. The Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations, at its 2005 substantive session [A/59/19/Rev.1], expressed concern about the precarious security environment in many field missions and called on the Secretariat to give priority to enhancing the safety and security of United Nations and associated personnel in the field. It condemned the killing of military and civilian police officers in several missions and recognized that those attacks and other acts of violence constituted a major challenge to UN field operations. The Department of Safety and Security and DPKO needed to coordinate activities in order to provide integrated, unified security assessments and operational advice and support to crisis management to peacekeeping missions. The Secretariat should improve its capacity for the collection, analysis and dissemination of information and provide a concept definition or policy paper on joint mission analysis cells, setting out, among other things, the details of their structure, functions and role, with the aim of providing information on the various components in the context of both new and existing peacekeeping operations.

The Special Committee was concerned about the safety and security of military observers and other unarmed UN personnel deployed in UN peacekeeping operations and asked the Secretariat to provide greater clarity on measures taken to enhance their security. It stressed the need for correct risk assessments prior to the deployment of military observers and other unarmed UN personnel in difficult areas and called upon the Secretariat to ensure that they were provided with adequate security.

Welcoming improved information flow to troop-contributing countries, the Committee encouraged the Secretariat to maintain that flow. It agreed that, as the United Nations enhanced its capacity to gather field information and assess risks, all forms of technical monitoring and surveillance means, particularly aerial monitoring, should be explored to ensure the safety of peacekeepers, especially in volatile and dangerous conditions and in situations too dangerous for visual ground monitoring. The Secretary-General should provide in his next report to the Committee a comprehensive assessment in that regard, based on lessons learned.

The Special Committee stressed the need for DPKO to incorporate in measures to deal with aerial accidents the lessons learned from past incidents and to maintain the highest possible standards of air safety, especially when subcontracting air transport.

OIOS report. During the year, OIOS conducted a global audit of field security management at 15 field missions managed by DPKO and five political and peacebuilding missions administered by the Department of Political Affairs. As stated in the OIOS report [A/59/702], the audit, which assessed the effectiveness of field security management, aimed to help enhance the security of UN personnel in the field during a period of heightened risk. The audit found that basic security arrangements were being improved in the majority of missions and that good practices prevailed in some duty stations. The Office of the United Nations Security Coordinator (UNSECOORD) and DPKO had cooperated in strengthening security management. However, improvements were needed both at Headquarters and in field security structures, as well as in security plans and policies and their implementation, deployment and personnel administration, budgeting and resourcing, coordination with host Governments and external military forces and among UN agencies, and physical security. Other major findings included the need to clarify the roles and responsibilities of various security governing bodies, and that country-wide security organization in various countries needed to be re-examined, and reporting lines of security officers clearly defined. In some duty stations, no official memorandum of understanding or protocol (status of forces/mission agreement) on security issues was signed with the host Government and/or the external military forces, and the attendance by agencies at country-wide security management team meetings was poor. In other duty stations, the security plan was either incomplete or out of date and, in many cases, not tested or rehearsed. The security warden system was deficient, internal communications between staff and the mission security section was poor and there was inadequate awareness of the importance of security arrangements among UN personnel while the minimum operating security standards recommended by UNSECOORD had not yet been established by DPKO as a policy requirement.

Some missions had insufficient resources to ensure compliance with security requirements, as there was no separate budget line for security costs in mission budgets. The vacancy rate for security posts was high in many missions, and security training was often inadequate. In some missions, security arrangements for officials designated as "at risk" were inadequate, close protection was not always provided to high-ranking officials and perimeter security and access control procedures for visitors needed to be improved.

OIOS recommended that the Secretary-General issue a single policy document/manual incorporating all security-related directives and procedures, clearly identifying the roles and responsibilities of those expected to carry out security functions in the field and with additional clarification of those functions provided to missions when necessary. UNSECOORD and DPKO should direct all designated officials and heads of mission to improve security training for all UN staff at duty stations and to increase their awareness of the security arrangements; ensure that the composition and performance of the security management teams at the countrywide and mission levels met relevant UN policy requirements; improve the security warden system in duty stations and ensure that missions maintained updated staff lists, including dependants and contact information for each person. They should also ensure that mission and countrywide security plans were complete, updated and tested and that missions adhered to guidelines and requirements for providing close protection to senior officials.

DPKO should ensure that proper reporting lines and accountability mechanisms for security matters in field missions were established and review the practices for recruiting chief security officers; require peacekeeping missions to use UNSECOORD minimum operating security standards when implementing security management programmes; and request the Controller to establish separate budget lines in peacekeeping missions' budgets for the security function to facilitate the planning and monitoring of security-related expenditures. It should also address the understaffing of security posts and take immediate remedial action; streamline the procedure for acquiring essential security and safety equipment; ensure that the strategic deployment stocks at the UN Logistics Base at Brindisi, Italy, had essential security equipment available for rapid deployment to new missions; that designated officials took action to improve coordination at the countrywide and mission levels and strengthen communication and cooperation with the respective host Governments and external military forces; and clarify the authority and mechanisms regarding the declaration and revision of security phases.

DPKO and the Department of Safety and Security agreed with the majority of the recommendations, some of which they had already taken action to implement.

By decision 60/551 of 23 December, the General Assembly deferred until its resumed sixtieth session consideration of the OIOS report on the global audit of field security management.

Cooperation with regional organizations

The Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations [A/59/19/Rev.1], recognizing that regional arrangements had unique and complementary capacities to offer within the context of cooperation with UN peacekeeping operations, urged the United Nations to strengthen its operational linkages and partnerships with those organizations. It called on DPKO to continue to explore the concept of trilateral arrangements among the United Nations, regional arrangements and donor countries, with a view to enhancing regional peacekeeping capacity. The Special Committee welcomed the continued efforts of the European Union to cooperate with the United Nations in crisis management situations and to develop crisis management capabilities.

Women and peacekeeping

On 27 October [meeting 5294], the Security Council discussed the question of women and peace and security. It had before it a concept paper [S/2005/664] on the subject submitted by Romania and the Secretary-General's report [S/2005/636] on the preparation of a system-wide action plan for implementing resolution 1325 (2000) on women, peace and security [YUN 2000, p. 1113].

The Under-Secretary-General for Peacekeeping Operations, reporting on progress made and the remaining challenges in implementing resolution 1325(2000), said that DPKO had integrated a gender perspective in the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration process in Liberia, resulting in the demobilization of over 21,000 women, many of whom provided important information on hidden arms caches. In Burundi, 231 of the 485 disarmed female ex-combatants were recruited into the newly restructured police force as part of their reintegration. Gender advisers trained police personnel of restructured police forces to ensure that victims of rape and other forms of gender-based violence had access to confidential and gender-sensitive case reporting. The first specialist police unit to deal with gender-based violent crimes in peacekeeping missions was established in Timor-Leste, and similar units in other missions. Considerable work had also been done to promote women's participation in transitional government institutions.

Gender units were also supporting capacity development of national counterparts in the governmental and non-governmental sectors in all mission areas. In Afghanistan, that included capacity development of women's affairs departments in 29 provinces across the country. In Côte d'Ivoire, the gender unit was supporting the mobilization of women's groups representing political parties, trade unions and non-governmental organizations (NGOs) to create a common platform to promote women's participation in decision-making. Gender units also supported the integration of gender perspectives into the judicial and legal sectors.

However, there were some setbacks such as the revelation of sexual exploitation by peacekeepers of women and girls (see p. 118), which highlighted the importance incorporating a gender perspective into DPKO's work. A significant proportion of peacekeeping personnel still did not have a conceptual understanding of gender mainstreaming, which partly explained why many gender mainstreaming strategies had not been institutionalized and the limited progress made in increasing the number of female personnel in peacekeeping, particularly in uniformed functions and in senior leadership positions. The perspectives of women were still not adequately harnessed to inform planning and operational activities.

The Under-Secretary-General stated that, in recognition of those shortcomings, he had issued a policy statement on gender mainstreaming in peacekeeping that provided an operational framework at the field and Headquarters levels for implementing resolution 1325(2000). As part of that policy, DPKO was finalizing a comprehensive action plan for implementing that resolution, built on the system-wide action plan outlined in the Secretary-General's report before the Council.

In renewing DPKO's commitment to the implementation of resolution 1325(2000), the Department intended to focus on ensuring that responsibility for implementing the resolution was not limited to gender advisers or female staff alone; all men and women, particularly at senior levels at Headquarters and in the field, were responsible for implementing the resolution; all DPKO policies and guidance incorporated the relevant provisions of the resolution; gender mainstreaming was emphasized within all reporting and accountability mechanisms; marked progress was made towards increasing the number of women in peacekeeping; and partnership frameworks that guided collaboration with UN agencies and Member States in the implementation of the resolution were reviewed and refined. Strategic objectives and actions of individual DPKO offices would be consolidated into one Department-wide plan.

To further the implementation of resolution 1325(2000), the Under-Secretary-General suggested that Council members engage with the issue of women and peace and security on an ongoing basis and that its visits to peacekeeping missions provide for meaningful discussions with women leaders and representatives of women's organizations. The Council should also consider designing an action plan to guide its role in monitoring the implementation of resolution 1325(2000).

The Council President, in statement S/PRST/2005/52 of 27 October (see p. 1255), welcomed the UN System-wide Action Plan for the implementation of resolution 1325(2000) and reaffirmed the Council's commitment to integrate gender perspectives into the terms of reference of Council visits and missions and to include gender specialists in its teams.

Comprehensive review of peacekeeping

Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations

As requested by the General Assembly in resolution 58/315 [YUN 2004, p. 90], the Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations and its Working Group continued their comprehensive review of the whole question of peacekeeping operations in all their aspects [A/59/19/Rev.1]. In response to the Committee's request, the Secretary-General submitted a report on the implementation of the Committee's 2004 [A/59/608 & Corr.1] and 2005 [A/60/640 & Add.1] recommendations.

The Special Committee held two sessions in 2005, its substantive session (New York, 31 January–25 February) and a resumed session (New York, 4-8 April). During the general debate of its resumed substantive session, the Special Committee considered uniform standards, training, the participation of women in peacekeeping missions, planning, organizational, management and command responsibility, welfare and recreation, data management, capacity to address misconduct, investigations, public information and communications, victim assistance, individual disciplinary, financial and criminal accountability, memorandum of understanding and the group of legal experts (for details, see respective sections).

It also considered the report [A/59/710] on a comprehensive strategy to eliminate future sexual exploitation and abuse in UN peacekeeping operations (see p. 118).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 29 March [meeting 84], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee [A/59/472/Add.1], adopted resolution 59/281 without vote [agenda item 77].

The Council also authorized Member States, acting through or in cooperation with the European Union, to establish for a further period of 12 months a multinational stabilization force (EUFOR) in Bosnia and Herzegovina, as a legal successor to the stabilization force (SFOR), within the context of international efforts to implement the Peace Agreement in the country.

Financial and administrative aspects of peacekeeping operations

Financing

Expenditures for UN peacekeeping operations for the period 1 July 2004 to 30 June 2005 totalled $4,074.3 million, compared to $2,933.8 million for the previous 12-month period. The 39 per cent increase in expenditure was attributable to the expanded operations of MONUC, the full-year impact of four peacekeeping missions (UNMIL, UNOCI, MINUSTAH, ONUB), established in 2004, and the recent addition of UNMIS, partly offset by the lower expenditure levels in UNAMSIL and UNMISET.

In terms of the overall financial situation during the year, assessments, unpaid assessments and expenditures of active missions all increased on account of the increased activity, with a corresponding decrease in liquidity. Outstanding unpaid assessments for active peacekeeping missions rose by $147.5 million or 15 per cent. Unpaid assessments for closed missions did not change significantly. As at 30 June 2005, total unpaid assessments amounted to $1.7 billion, compared to $1.5 billion in the previous financial period.

Available cash for active missions totalled $1,245 million, while liabilities reached $1,704 million. For closed missions, available cash totalled $310.7 million, while liabilities were $322.1 million. Closed missions with cash surplus continued to be the only available source of lending to active peacekeeping missions. New loans totalling $244 million were made during the reporting period, bringing total loans outstanding as at 30 June 2005 to $41.6 million.

Notes of Secretary-General. In March [A/C.5/59/18], the Secretary-General, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 49/233 A [YUN 1994, p. 1338], submitted to the Assembly's Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee updated information on the approved budgetary levels for the period from 1 July 2004 to 30 June 2005 for all current peacekeeping operations, including requirements for the United Nations Logistics Base (UNLB), and the support account for peacekeeping operations, amounting to $3,878,821,200. That figure took into account the 2004 Assembly decisions in respect of UNMISET, MINUSTAH, ONUB, UNAMSIL and UNOCI.

In April [A/C.5/59/29], the Secretary-General submitted proposed budgetary requirements for all peacekeeping operations (except MONUC and UNMIS), UNLB and the support account for peacekeeping operations for the period from 1 July 2005 to 30 June 2006, amounting to $3,555,741,900. In June [A/C.5/59/33], that information was updated to include the commitment authorities for MONUC for the period 1 July to 31 October 2005 in the amount of $3,021,273,700.

In June [A/C.5/59/34], the Secretary-General, taking into account further financing actions by the Assembly, provided a breakdown of resources approved for all 15 peacekeeping operations, the support account for peacekeeping operations and UNLB in the amount of $3,521,456,500.

The Secretary-General also submitted a May note [A/C.5/59/31], which provided the working definitions used by DPKO in the preparation of mission budgets that included a disarmament, demobilization and reintegration component. The definitions, which addressed each element of that component, were being discussed by the United Nations interagency working group on disarmament, demobilization and reintegration, with a view to standardizing them across the UN system. While the Secretariat might continue to include operational costs related to disarmament and demobilization, including reinsertion, in the budgets of relevant peacekeeping missions, financial support for reintegration would continue to be resourced through voluntary contributions and managed by the appropriate agencies, funds and programmes.

The Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ), in its overview of the report of the Board of Auditors on the administrative and budgetary aspects of the financing of UN peacekeeping operations [A/59/736], welcomed the continued progress in the presentation of peacekeeping budgets using results-based budgeting techniques, but noted that some areas required further improvements. There was a need to formulate sufficiently representative and comprehensive indicators of achievement to better indicate progress in attaining expected accomplishments of logistical, administrative and security support. ACABQ made a number of other recommendations for improving the results-based budgeting presentation.

The Committee was concerned about the unevenness in the quality of presentation in the budget documentation submitted to it and held the view that the ultimate responsibility for maintaining standards with regard to presentation and related issues rested with Headquarters. It was also concerned about the tendency on the part of the Administration to use peacekeeping budgets to introduce initiatives with policy implications, rather than first seeking the necessary policy guidance from the Assembly.

ACABQ also considered a number of reports by the Secretary-General and OIOS on various cross-cutting issues relating to the administrative and budgetary aspects of the financing of UN peacekeeping operations. Those reports and ACABQ comments thereon were discussed under subsequent subheadings of this chapter.

By decision 59/562 of 22 June, the Assembly, having considered the Secretary-General's May statement [A/C.5/59/32] on the programme budget implications of draft resolution [A/C.5/591/L.53] entitled "Administrative and budgetary aspects of the financing of the United Nations peacekeeping operations: cross-cutting issues", noted that an additional appropriation of $466,600 would be required for the support account for peacekeeping operations for the period from 1 July 2005 to 30 June 2006, should it adopt that draft resolution.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 June [meeting 104], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/59/532/Add.1], adopted resolution 59/296 without vote [agenda item 123].

5. Notes that some indicators of achievement reflected in the budgets and budget performance reports appear to measure the performance of Member

2. Requests the Secretary-General to monitor the evolution of structures in individual peacekeeping operations to avoid the duplication of functions and an excessive proportion of higher-grade posts, bearing in mind the mandates, complexities and specificities of each mission;

3. Recalls, in this context, its resolution 59/272 of 23 December 2004;

4. Requests the Secretary-General, as a matter of priority, to entrust the Office of Internal Oversight Services with a comprehensive management audit to review the practices of the Department of Peacekeeping Operations and to identify risks and exposures to duplication, fraud and abuse of authority in the following operational areas: finance, including budget preparation; procurement; human resources, including recruitment and training; and information technology, and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its sixtieth session;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure that all relevant financial regulations and rules, staff regulations and rules and administrative issuances are fully complied with by all missions and that appropriate disciplinary actions are taken in all cases of non-compliance;

10. Also requests the Secretary-General to finalize the process for the establishment of guidelines for the enforcement of basic standards of conduct and behaviour for all United Nations system personnel;

11. Encourages the Secretary-General to take additional measures to ensure the safety and security of all personnel under the auspices of the United Nations participating in peacekeeping missions, bearing in mind paragraphs 5 and 6 of Security Council resolution 1502(2003) of 26 August 2003;

15. Decides to continue to suspend the application of the four-year maximum limit for appointments of limited duration under the 300 series of the Staff Rules in peacekeeping operations until 30 June 2006;

16. Authorizes the Secretary-General, bearing in mind paragraph 15 above, to reappoint under the 100 series of the Staff Rules those mission staff whose service under 300-series contracts has reached the four-year limit by 30 June 2006, provided that their functions have been reviewed and found necessary and their performance has been confirmed as fully satisfactory, and requests the Secretary-General to report thereon to the General Assembly at the second part of its resumed sixtieth session;

Peacekeeping support account

In February [A/59/714 & Add.1], the Secretary-General submitted the financial performance report on the budget of the support account for peacekeeping operations for the period from 1 July 2003 to 30 June 2004. Expenditure for the period totalled $111,201,000 against approved resources of $112,075,800, resulting in an unencumbered balance of $874,800, attributable mainly to underexpenditure in respect of consultants, official travel, facilities and infrastructure and other supplies, services and equipment. The Secretary-General recommended that the unencumbered balance and other income and adjustments of $1,873,000 be applied to the 2005/2006 budget. In March [A/59/730], he submitted the budget for the support account for the period from 1 July 2005 to 30 June 2006 in the amount of $150,743,200, which provided for 761 continuing posts, 100 new posts and 10 existing Resident Auditor posts transferred from mission budgets.

In April [A/59/784], ACABQ, noting that peacekeeping missions had evolved into complex, multidimensional operations, with considerable authority delegated by Headquarters to the field, was of the opinion that such development should have an impact on the level of backstopping required. The level of the support account should not increase indefinitely, nor be used to establish posts that were not approved under the regular budget, or to propose the establishment of posts that should properly be done under the regular budget. It recommended that the Secretary-General analyse the evolution of the support account, starting with the original concept of overload, and describe changing needs to justify departures from that concept. ACABQ reiterated that reports on the support account should justify the totality of resources requested and not just additional requests for posts and non-post requirements. As to the backstopping of special political missions, it was important to revisit the issue of coordination and cooperation between DPKO and the Department of Political Affairs to ensure complementarity, avoid potential duplication and overlap and to consider the possible redistribution of resources to bring them in line with changes in activities and priorities.

ACABQ also recommended approval of 69 posts out of the 110 proposed, and reductions amounting to $7,052,300 gross ($6,760,800 net) in the proposed budget for the support account for the period from 1 July 2005 to 30 June 2006, and that the unencumbered balance of $874,800 for the period 1 July 2003 to 30 June 2004 and other income of $1,873,000 related to the period ended 30 June 2004 be applied to the resources required for the new budget period.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 June [meeting 104], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/59/532/Add.1], adopted resolution 59/301 without vote [agenda item 123].

Support account for peacekeeping operations

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 45/258 of 3 May 1991, 47/218 A of 23 December 1992, 48/226 A of 23 December 1993, 56/241 of 24 December 2001, 56/293 of 27 June 2002, 57/318 of 18 June 2003, 58/298 of 18 June 2004 and 59/287 of 13 April 2005, its decisions 48/489 of 8 July 1994, 49/469 of 23 December 1994 and 50/473 of 23 December 1995 and other relevant resolutions of the General Assembly,

Having considered the reports of the Secretary-General on the financing of the support account for peacekeeping operations and the related reports of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Recognizing the importance of the United Nations being able to respond and deploy rapidly to a peacekeeping operation upon adoption of a relevant resolution of the Security Council, within thirty days for traditional peacekeeping operations and ninety days for complex peacekeeping operations,

Recognizing also the need for adequate support during all phases of peacekeeping operations, including the liquidation and termination phases,

Mindful that the level of the support account should broadly correspond to the mandate, number, size and complexity of peacekeeping missions,

1. Takes note of the reports of the Secretary-General on the financing of the support account for peacekeeping operations;

2. Reaffirms the need for effective and efficient administration and financial management of peacekeeping operations, and urges the Secretary-General to continue to identify measures to increase the productivity and efficiency of the support account;

3. Also reaffirms the need for adequate funding for the backstopping of peacekeeping operations, as well as the need for full justification for that funding in support account budget submissions;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure the full implementation of the relevant provisions of General Assembly resolution 59/296 of 22 June 2005;

5. Endorses the conclusions and recommendations contained in the relevant report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, subject to the provisions of the present resolution;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to rejustify the need for the P-5 post in the Executive Office of the Secretary-General at the sixtieth session;

7. Decides to maintain, for the period from 1 July 2005 to 30 June 2006, the funding mechanism for the support account used in the current period, from 1 July 2004 to 30 June 2005, as approved in paragraph 3 of its resolution 50/221 B of 7 June 1996;

8. Reaffirms the need for the Secretary-General to ensure that delegation of authority to the Department of Peacekeeping Operations of the Secretariat and field missions is in strict compliance with relevant resolutions and decisions and the relevant rules and procedures of the General Assembly on this matter;

9. Decides to provide general temporary assistance to implement and monitor the environmental protection programmes in the field, and requests the Secretary-General to rejustify this position by providing additional information on the necessity of the backstopping capacity at Headquarters and on the ongoing cooperative arrangements with the United Nations Environment Programme in the area of environmental protection;

10. Approves the establishment of the post of Police Generation Officer (P-4) in the Civilian Police Division;

11. Decides to provide general temporary assistance for the P-3 post for the secretariat of the Fifth Committee;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to entrust the Office of Internal Oversight Services to conduct an audit of standard costs applied to headquarters overheads such as furniture and rental of premises, providing comparative costs on current market prices for these items, and to submit its findings to the General Assembly at the second part of its resumed sixtieth session;

13. Decides that all future requests for additional headquarters capacity linked to new or expanded peacekeeping or peace support missions must be accompanied by an analysis of spare capacity created by any downsizing or liquidation of other missions;

14. Also decides that following the end of mandate of missions, mission-specific posts in the Office of Operations of the Department of Peacekeeping Operations should be disestablished or redeployed and reflected accordingly in the next support account proposal;

15. Further decides not to provide funds in the amount of 350,000 United States dollars for the independent review of the Department of Peacekeeping Operations, as requested in paragraph 63 of the report of the Secretary-General;

16. Decides not to provide funds for Enterprise Content Management and Customer Relationship Management pilot projects, with the exception of the resources of 149,000 dollars sought for the Archives and Records Management Section in paragraph 366 of the report of the Secretary-General;

17. Notes that as a result of the expanded range of activities in the Situation Centre, there is a need for a broader and balanced range of skills and qualifications, including but not limited to knowledge of operational military and civilian police issues, among the Situation Centre officers, and in this regard requests the Secretary-General to ensure that the 11 Operations Officer (P-3) posts are available for incumbency to all qualified candidates, including officers seconded from Member States, keeping in mind the importance of representation of major troop-contributing countries;

18. Decides to approve the post of Chief of the Unit (P-5) to strengthen the Criminal Law and Judicial Advisory Unit;

Financial performance report for the period from 1 July 2003 to 30 June 2004

19. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the financial performance of the support account for peacekeeping operations for the period from 1 July 2003 to 30 June 2004;

Budget estimates for the period from 1 July 2005 to 30 June 2006

20. Approves the support account requirements in the amount of 146,935,200 dollars for the period from 1 July 2005 to 30 June 2006, including 761 continuing and 70 new temporary posts and their related post and non-post requirements;

Financing of the budget estimates

21. Decides that the requirements for the support account for peacekeeping operations for the period from 1 July 2005 to 30 June 2006 shall be financed as follows:

(a) The unencumbered balance of 874,800 dollars for the period from 1 July 2003 to 30 June 2004 and other income of 1,873,000 dollars related to the period ended 30 June 2004, to be applied to the resources required for the period from 1 July 2005 to 30 June 2006;

(b) The amount of 13,790,000 dollars in excess of the authorized level of the Peacekeeping Reserve Fund in respect of the period ended 30 June 2004 to be applied to the resources required for the period from 1 July 2005 to 30 June 2006;

(c) The balance of 130,397,400 dollars to be prorated among the budgets of the active peacekeeping operations for the period from 1 July 2005 to 30 June 2006;

(d) The net estimated staff assessment income of 18,431,600 dollars, comprising the amount of 18,444,600 dollars for the period from 1 July 2005 to 30 June 2006, 26,400 dollars and 400,300 dollars for the requirements presented in the statements by the Secretary-General and the decrease of 439,700 dollars in respect of the financial period ended 30 June 2004, to be set off against the balance referred to in subparagraph (c) above, to be prorated among the budgets of the individual active peacekeeping operations.

Peacekeeping Reserve Fund

In April, the General Assembly considered the Secretary-General's 2004 [YUN 2004, p. 97] and 2005 [A/59/787] reports on the level of the Peacekeeping Reserve Fund, established in 1992 [YUN 1992, p. 1022] to ensure the rapid deployment of peacekeeping operations. From a level of $163.79 million, comprising a reserve of $150 million and an accumulated surplus of $13.79 million as at 30 June 2004, the balance of the Fund had increased, as at 31 March 2005, to $165.02 million, prior to the recording of investment income for the first quarter of the year. The Secretary-General recommended that the excess of $13.79 million over the authorized Fund level of $150 million be applied to the 2005/2006 budget of the support account for peacekeeping operations.

ACABQ, in an April report [A/59/791], said that the recommendation to use the excess in that fashion should be considered on a case-by-case basis and that it would be more prudent to determine whether or not to utilize any excess over the authorized Fund level with reference to actual cash on hand rather than a Fund balance that included credits from long-outstanding loans. It therefore recommended that, instead of using the excess balance as proposed by the Secretary-General, it should be maintained in the Fund.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 June [meeting 104], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/59/532/Add.1], adopted resolution 59/297 without vote [agenda item 123].

Peacekeeping Reserve Fund

The General Assembly,

Having considered the reports of the Secretary-General on the Peacekeeping Reserve Fund and the related reports of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Recalling its resolution 47/217 of 23 December 1992 on the establishment of the Peacekeeping Reserve Fund and its resolutions 49/233 A of 23 December 1994 and 51/218 E of 17 June 1997,

Reaffirming the general principles underlying the financing of United Nations peacekeeping operations, as stated in General Assembly resolutions 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, 3101(XXVIII) of 11 December 1973 and 55/235 of 23 December 2000,

1. Takes note of the status of contributions to the Peacekeeping Reserve Fund as at 31 December 2004;

2. Also takes note of the reports of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

3. Decides that the excess balance of 13,790,000 United States dollars in respect of the financial period ended 30 June 2004 shall be applied to meet the financing of the support account for peacekeeping operations for the period from 1 July 2005 to 30 June 2006.

Funds from closed missions

In March [A/59/752], the Secretary-General, in response to the General Assembly's request in resolution 57/323 [YUN 2003, p. 85], that he postpone the return of 50 per cent of the net cash available for credit to Member States as a result of the closure of a number of peacekeeping missions, reported that the amount available for that purpose as at 30 June 2004 was $92,898,000. He recommended that, since the available cash in the Peacekeeping Reserve Fund ($134.1 million), as at 28 February 2005, was not sufficient to meet all foreseeable cash requirements, particularly the start-up of UNMIS and the expansion of MONUC and pending the payment of assessed contributions, the balance of $92,898,000 from closed missions should be retained. He indicated that he would report to the Assembly on the matter at its sixtieth (2005) session.

ACABQ recommended acceptance of the Secretary-General's proposals [A/59/790].

By decision 59/563 of 22 June, the Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's report on the updated financial position of closed peacekeeping missions and the related ACABQ report and decided to consider the updated financial position of those missions as at 30 June 2005 during the main part of its sixtieth session.

The Assembly also decided that the updated information on the financial position of the United Nations Angola Verification Mission (UNAVEM) and the United Nations Observer Mission in Angola (MONUA) should be included in the report it would consider at its sixtieth (2005) session on the updated financial position of closed peacekeeping missions, under the item entitled "Administrative and budgetary aspects of the financing of the United Nations peacekeeping operations" (decision 59/564).

In October [A/60/437], the Secretary-General, updating the information on the financial position of closed missions, including UNAVEM and MONUA, stated that, as at 30 June, the net cash available for credit to Member States amounted to $126,304,000. Owing to the high level of outstanding assessments in the special accounts of some ongoing peacekeeping missions, there was a continuing need to borrow from closed missions. Moreover, the Assembly had only provided commitment authority for the period 1 July to 31 October for MONUC and UNMIS. The full budgets for those missions were still to be reviewed by the Assembly. The Secretary-General recommended that the Assembly approve the retention of the available cash balance of $126,304,000 for the 13 closed peacekeeping missions, in the light of the Organization's experience in respect of cash requirements during 2004/2005.

ACABQ, in November [A/60/551], stated that the postponement of the return of "available cash" to Member States was a policy decision to be determined by the Assembly. It drew attention to the fact that cash from closed missions appeared to be the only source for temporary cross-borrowing and was a source of funding for new or expanded missions, in addition to the Peacekeeping Reserve Fund. The Assembly might wish to take the Committee's observations into account in reaching its decision.

By decision 60/551 of 23 December, the Assembly deferred until its resumed sixtieth (2006) session the Secretary-General's October report on the subject and the related ACABQ report.

Consolidation of peacekeeping accounts

In April [A/59/795], the Secretary-General expressed regret that, owing to the unprecedented surge in peacekeeping operations, the Secretariat had not been able to prepare the comprehensive report on the feasibility of consolidating the accounts of the various peacekeeping operations, as requested by the General Assembly in resolution 57/319 [YUN 2003, p. 90]. Further analysis was required to consider the efficiency aspects of streamlining the processes for the financing of peacekeeping operations while permitting more consistent and timely reimbursement to troop-contributing Governments. The Secretary-General intended to submit the report to the Assembly's sixtieth (2005) session.

Accounts and auditing

At its resumed fifty-ninth (2005) session, the General Assembly considered the financial report and audited financial statements for UN peacekeeping operations for 1 July 2003 to 30 June 2004 [A/59/5 (vol. II)/Corr.1], the Secretary-General's report on the implementation of the recommendations of the Board of Auditors [A/59/704] and the related ACABQ report [A/59/736].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 June [meeting 104], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/59/588/Add.1], adopted resolution 59/264 B without vote [agenda item 106].

Financial reports and audited financial statements, and reports of the Board of Auditors

B

The General Assembly,

Having considered the financial report and audited financial statements for the twelve-month period from 1 July 2003 to 30 June 2004 and the report of the Board of Auditors on United Nations peacekeeping operations, the related section of the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions and the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the recommendations of the Board of Auditors concerning United Nations peacekeeping operations in respect of that period,

1. Accepts the audited financial statements on the United Nations peacekeeping operations for the period from 1 July 2003 to 30 June 2004;

2. Takes note of the observations and endorses the recommendations contained in the report of the Board of Auditors;

3. Also takes note of the observations and endorses the recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions related to the report of the Board of Auditors, subject to the provisions of the present resolution;

4. Commends the Board of Auditors for the quality of its report and the streamlined format thereof;

5. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the recommendations of the Board of Auditors concerning United Nations peacekeeping operations in respect of the financial period ended 30 June 2004;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to indicate an expected time frame for the implementation of the recommendations of the Board of Auditors as well as the priorities for their implementation, including the office holders to be held accountable;

7. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its sixtieth session on measures undertaken to implement paragraph 6 above;

8. Further requests the Secretary-General to ensure the full implementation of the recommendations of the Board of Auditors, including those relating to the issue of the management of rations in peacekeeping operations as a whole and the management of air operations, and the related recommendations of the Advisory Committee in a prompt and timely manner;

9. Requests the Secretary-General, in implementing the recommendations referred to in paragraph 81 of the report of the Board of Auditors, to take into account that this relates solely to the recommendations of the Panel on United Nations Peace Operations as adopted by the General Assembly which have not been fully implemented to date.

On the same day, the Assembly also considered and took action on the Secretary-General's report [YUN 2004, p. 98] on the first year of experience of regional investigators in two hubs, Vienna and Nairobi, in section XIII of resolution 59/296 (see p. 133).

Reimbursement issues

Equipment

The General Assembly, at its resumed fifty-ninth (2005) session, considered the Secretary-General's report on reformed procedures for determining reimbursement to Member States for contingent-owned equipment [YUN 2004, p. 98] and the findings and recommendations of the 2004 Working Group on Contingent-Owned Equipment [ibid.]. ACABQ, in its February 2005 report on the subject [A/59/708], recommended approval of the checklist attached to the Secretary-General's report defining the criteria for reimbursement of commercial pattern support vehicles as military pattern vehicles, and his proposed reimbursement rates for the new items of major equipment. The Contingent-Owned Equipment Manual should be amended to reflect that and the undated Manual distributed as an official UN document. As suggested by the Secretary-General, ACABQ also recommended approval of the Secretariat's proposal that the next Working Group on Contingent-Owned Equipment be held in 2008, instead of 2007, to review the contingent-owned equipment system, in accordance with the formats established by the Phase V Working Group, and establish a methodology for conducting rate reimbursement reviews.

ACABQ further recommended that the next Working Group review and make recommendations on the costing and medical staffing level of the modular medical concept; and that the Assembly approve the updated format for major medical equipment, as proposed by the Secretary-General for collecting national cost data on medical equipment for review by the next Working Group. It also recommended that consideration be given to having a diverse group of qualified, experienced and impartial individuals make proposals on the factors and elements on which the reimbursement of troop costs could be based.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 June [meeting 104], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/59/532/Add.1], adopted resolution 59/298 without vote [agenda item 123].

Reformed procedures for determining reimbursement to Member States for contingent-owned equipment

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 55/274 of 14 June 2001,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the reformed procedures for determining reimbursement to Member States for contingent-owned equipment, the letter dated 12 March 2004 from the Chairman of the 2004 Working Group on Contingent-Owned Equipment to the Chairman of the Fifth Committee and the related reports of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the reformed procedures for determining reimbursement to Member States for contingent-owned equipment, the letter dated 12 March 2004 from the Chairman of the 2004 Working Group on Contingent-Owned Equipment to the Chairman of the Fifth Committee and the related reports of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

2. Endorses the conclusions and recommendations contained in the reports of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, subject to the provisions of the present resolution;

3. Regrets that the 2004 Working Group on Contingent-Owned Equipment was unable to reach consensus on, inter alia, a review of the rates of reimbursement for contingent-owned equipment and self-sustainment;

4. Decides to approve the proposal of the Secretary-General that the next Working Group on Contingent-Owned Equipment, which will meet in 2008, carry out a comprehensive review of the contingent-owned equipment system, as per the formats established by the Phase V Working Group, for a period of not less than fourteen working days;

5. Urges the Secretary-General to explore the possibility of holding the Working Group meeting earlier than 2008, if feasible;

6. Decides that the next Working Group on Contingent-Owned Equipment will consider, without prejudice to the comprehensive review of the contingent-owned equipment system, in recommending any revision of rates of reimbursement for contingent-owned equipment and self-sustainment, the fact that there was no revision of such rates for the period 2004 to 2008 owing to the lack of consensus on an increase in the rates and on the methodology of the 2004 Working Group;

7. Notes that, in addition to maintaining all existing components of the current methodology, the Secretary-General had proposed the inclusion of peacekeeping-related training costs and post-deployment medical costs in the troop reimbursement methodology;

8. Regrets that the 2004 Working Group on Contingent-Owned Equipment was unable to reach consensus on the components for inclusion in the troop-cost reimbursement methodology;

9. Notes that the report of the Secretary-General on the rates of reimbursement to the Governments of troop-contributing countries did not address all elements of the request made in paragraph 8 of General Assembly resolution 55/274;

10. Reiterates its request contained in paragraph 8 of its resolution 55/274, and requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its sixtieth session a comprehensive report thereon, addressing all elements;

11. Notes that the Secretary-General, in preparing the comprehensive report, may utilize, as appropriate, external expertise;

12. Decides to review the daily allowance for troops at its resumed sixtieth session, based on information to be provided in the context of the comprehensive report referred to in paragraph 10 above;

13. Also decides to set up a channel of communication between the Secretariat and the Member States on the contingent-owned equipment system, strictly for the exchange of information and for seeking clarification and not for reaching decisions that are within the mandate of the Working Group on Contingent-Owned Equipment and relevant intergovernmental bodies.

Management of peacekeeping assets

UN Logistics Base

The General Assembly, at its resumed fifty-ninth (2005) session, considered the financial performance report of the United Nations Logistics Base (UNLB) at Brindisi, Italy, for the period from 1 July 2003 to 30 June 2004 [A/59/681]. Expenditure for the period totalled $22,059,100 gross ($20,682.000 net) against total appropriations of $22,208,100 gross ($20,949,600 net), resulting in an unencumbered balance of $149,000.

The Assembly was asked to decide on the treatment of that balance and other income adjustments amounting to $2,292,000.

The Assembly also had before it the proposed budget for the period from 1 July 2005 to 30 June 2006 [A/59/691], in the amount of $37,691,900, an increase of $9,269,900 in total resources over the previous twelve-month period. Overall, the proposed budget reflected increases of 21.4 per cent in operational costs, 52.9 per cent in personnel costs and 50.8 per cent in staff assessment, and provided for the deployment of 42 international and 167 national staff. It also provided for the completion of phase 1 of the three-phase refurbishment plan, including completion of the hardstanding and associated infrastructure at San Vito to replace the San Pancrazio facilities.

ACABQ, in April [A/59/736/Add.2], recommended that the unencumbered balance and other income/adjustments for the period ended 30 July 2004 be credited to Member States in a manner to be determined by the Assembly, and that the estimated budget requirement be reduced from $37,691,900 to $31,513,100.

In June [A/C.5/59/33], the Secretary-General submitted to the Fifth Committee a note on the amounts to be appropriated in respect of each peacekeeping mission, including the prorated share of UNLB for the period from 1 July 2005 to 30 June 2006.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 June [meeting 104], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/59/532/Add.1], adopted resolution 59/299 without vote [agenda item 123].

Financing of the United Nations Logistics Base at Brindisi, Italy

16. Also decides to consider at its sixtieth session the question of the financing of the United Nations Logistics Base at Brindisi, Italy.

Strategic deployment stocks

In response to resolution 58/297 [YUN 2004, p. 99], the Secretary-General submitted a February report [A/59/701] on the implementation of the strategic deployment stocks (SDS), including the functioning of the existing mechanism and the award of contracts for procurement. He indicated that the two-year project for establishing SDS had been effectively completed. Its management at the Secretariat and at UNLB was fully functional, the procurement of equipment and materials completed and stocks utilized to support multiple mission start-ups and expansions. Since the establishment of SDS in July 2002 [YUN 2002, p. 63], $132 million worth of equipment had been issued to various operations.

Total expenditure on the project between 2002 and 2004 amounted to $141,536 million. Total unliquidated obligations, as at 30 June 2004, amounted to $20,845,243, 70 per cent of which were disbursed during 1 July 2004 and 31 January 2005, with the remaining $6.3 million to be disbursed by 30 June 2005. Outstanding contributions from Member States to SDS as at 31 December 2004 amounted to $13.6 million, 99 per cent of which was related to the special assessed contribution of one Member State. Savings as a result of the liquidation of prior obligations stood at $397,322, which could be used, together with the unspent balance of $9,033, to cover currency exchange losses and replenishment of stocks.

The total value of procurement in support of SDS amounted to $140,639,492. Contracts valued at $12 million were awarded to companies from developing countries and countries with economies in transition, and contracts for 1.9 million awarded to companies in Africa.

The Secretary-General asked the Assembly to note the completion of the strategic deployment programme, approve the use of savings and the unspent balance to cover losses on currency exchange and the replenishment of stocks, and the inclusion of SDS replenishment within the $50 million commitment authority. He also asked that the Assembly authorize him, on an exceptional basis, and with ACABQ's concurrence, to enter into commitments over and above the $50 million for the replenishment of SDS in respect of the start-up phase of a new peacekeeping mission, to be financed from the Peacekeeping Reserve Fund.

ACABQ, in its April report [A/59/736/Add.2], recommended approval of the Secretary-General's recommendations.

The General Assembly took action on the recommendations in resolution 59/299 of 22 June (see p. 145).

Ground and air transportation

ACABQ, in its April report [A/59/736], considered the variety of armoured personnel carriers used in missions, and efforts made to obtain them by negotiating contingent-owned equipment with troop- and police-contributing countries. A limited number of armoured personnel carriers reported as part of inventory were provided by troop-contributing countries, ownership of which was later transferred to the United Nations under the old methodology for reimbursement of contingent-owned equipment. ACABQ also noted the persistent use of outdated vehicles, which were expensive to maintain, and recommended that the cost-effectiveness of utilizing such vehicles be reviewed as a matter of priority.

ACABQ, having been informed that the use of representational vehicles was mission-specific, noted that in some missions two or more vehicles, including specially equipped armoured vehicles, were assigned to the Secretary-General's Special Representative and that other vehicles of both types were distributed among the civilian staff without a standard policy regarding their entitlement to or need for such vehicles. The Committee had also addressed that issue in its reports on the relevant peacekeeping operations. In view of the high cost involved, it was of the view that DPKO should develop a policy with regard to the purchase and assignment of both standard civilian and specially equipped armoured vehicles, as well as representational vehicles. Representational and specially equipped vehicles, it stressed, should not be utilized as status symbols, but should be assigned on the basis of demonstrated need and in accordance with an established policy.

Regarding air transportation in peacekeeping missions, ACABQ analysed the costing structure relating to air operations contracts and efforts by DPKO to move away from the commercial industry approach of block-hours costing to one based on actual flight hours utilized. Noting that contracts were still being issued or renewed on the basis of block-hours costing if the terms were favourable to the Organization, the Committee urged a prudent approach that took into account the cooperation of vendors who had agreed to work with the Organization on the basis of the new costing structure. It requested DPKO to analyse the impact of the new pricing structure in order to assess its cost-effectiveness and to report thereon at the next opportunity.

The General Assembly, by resolution 59/288 B of 13 April (see p. 1471), took action on the 2004 OIOS report [YUN 2004, p. 101] on the audit of safeguarding air safety standards while procuring air services for United Nations peacekeeping missions.

Procurement

The General Assembly, at its resumed fifty-ninth (2005) session, considered the OIOS report [YUN 2003, p. 95] on the procurement of goods and service through letters of assist and the Secretary-General's 2004 [YUN 2004, p. 101] and February 2005 [A/59/688] reports on procurement and contract management for peacekeeping operations. The February report examined developments relating to ethics guidance, assistance to newly established peacekeeping missions, procurement training, vendor management and other measures to improve procurement and contract management for peacekeeping operations.

The Secretariat had developed ethical guidelines for staff involved in the procurement process to assist those serving in peacekeeping missions to determine how to conduct themselves in dealing with suppliers and other entities. The Procurement Service also drafted, in consultation with the Office of Human Resources Management and the Office of Legal Affairs (OLA), a Declaration of Ethical Responsibilities, which addressed the issue of confidentiality and conflict of interest, and should be signed by all staff engaged in procurement activities. The Procurement Service was also promulgating a UN vendor code of conduct, addressing the issue of corporate social responsibility, environmental and sustainable procurement and corruption, which would be communicated to all suppliers interested in doing business with the UN system. OLA was also coordinating an inter-agency working group to promulgate a revised United Nations General Conditions of Contract.

In addition, although the Procurement Service had released senior staff members to assist a number of peacekeeping missions, the retention of high-quality procurement staff for sustained periods in those missions remained an issue. The Secretariat was helping to develop a UN system-wide procurement training and certification programme to ensure consistency in knowledge and facilitate staff mobility between Headquarters and missions and within the UN system as a whole.

To streamline the approval process for field requirements, the Procurement Service was developing with DPKO and the Headquarters Committee on Contracts a standard personal delegation of authority document to be used across field missions and offices away from Headquarters. The revised delegation of authority, the level of which was raised to $1 million, would be issued by the first quarter of 2005 for the procurement of "core requirements", essential goods and services, which, by their nature or owing to market conditions, lent themselves to local procurement.

The Procurement Service was working to reduce the lead times for the provision of goods and services to peacekeeping missions, and with OLA, to develop model lease and contract templates to facilitate the work of procurement officials at those missions. In addition to vendor performance reporting, which the Procurement Service required from peacekeeping missions for the purposes of vendor management and contract renewals, the Service was working with UN system organizations to enhance the functioning of the United Nations Global Marketplace through information-sharing among all participating organizations. The Global Marketplace, in use at the Secretariat since February 2004, would be introduced in peacekeeping missions in 2005. The observance of reporting requirements relating to vendor performance remained an issue in peacekeeping missions, but the Secretariat had instituted measures to improve compliance and all missions were required to complete quarterly evaluations on vendor performance levels for headquarters contracts. A comprehensive review of vendor management conducted in 2004 made recommendations for simplifying, streamlining and harmonizing the vendor registration process, and the Procurement Service was developing, with other UN system organizations, the business process and implementing those recommendations. The new arrangements, which were to commence by 1 May, would significantly improve the efficiency and effectiveness of vendor management through standardized registration, reduce administrative duplication and institute dependable and professional evaluations of vendors' capabilities.

In March [A/59/722], ACABQ urged the Secretary-General to finalize, promulgate and implement expeditiously the guidelines on ethical principles and the declaration of independence and to report the results to the Assembly at its resumed fifty-ninth (2005) session. It also recommended expeditious finalization and promulgation of the code of conduct for suppliers and the revised General Conditions, and that the Secretary-General report to the Assembly during the main part of its sixtieth (2005) session. ACABQ underlined the importance of revisiting procurement plans on a quarterly basis to ensure that they were updated in accordance with mission operational requirements, and the need to enforce the use of procurement plans and tools to facilitate effective and efficient procurement management. While welcoming the developments in respect of procurement lead times and model leases and contract templates, ACABQ recommended that, instead of across-the-board averages, benchmarks for lead times be established by clusters of commodities or services to provide realistic data and to better illustrate achievements in that regard. It encouraged DPKO and the Department of Management to review and streamline the vendor performance, monitoring and reporting process, and asked that information on the delegation of authority be provided to the Assembly at its resumed fifty-ninth (2005) session.

Global procurement hub

As requested by ACABQ [YUN 2004, p. 101] and endorsed by the General Assembly in resolution 58/297 [ibid., p. 99], the Secretary-General submitted a February report [A/59/703] on the merit of establishing a global procurement hub for all peacekeeping missions at UNLB in Brindisi, Italy. The comprehensive review, conducted with the assistance of an external international consulting firm, assessed the implications of relocating the procurement and logistics function to UNLB, taking into consideration the current volatile operational environment and the evolving role of UNLB in support of field missions, particularly in the context of strategic deployment stock operations. It specifically examined the extent to which changes would translate into improved service and support for peacekeeping missions, the reallocation of responsibilities and transfer of skills, the interdependence between Headquarters-based procurement and logistics functions and those currently carried out at UNLB.

The review found that the relocation of functions would imply a division of the procurement function, and duplicate functions both at Headquarters and UNLB, reconfigure the procurement management structure and relocate or duplicate other related support functions, such as those of the Headquarters Committee on Contracts, the Office of Legal Affairs and accounts payable. Certain management and oversight functions, such as those provided by OIOS, might also need to be duplicated at Headquarters and UNLB. The relocation of the procurement function would also negatively affect communication with some outside interlocutors and the commercial section of Member States' consulates.

A survey of UNLB revealed that its existing infrastructure was inadequate to accommodate the functions and staff associated with the proposed procurement and logistics hub. The financial benefits of the relocation of the logistics and procurement functions from New York to UNLB would be limited, with modest savings in operating costs of less than five per cent and a return-on-investment period of nine years. Relocation would require significant reorganization at Headquarters and UNLB, and the terms of the memorandum of understanding with the host Government and the various domestic priorities of the region placed limitations on UNLB.

The Secretary-General concluded that a relocation of procurement and operational logistics functions to UNLB would have a negative impact on operational effectiveness and the financial case for such a move was weak. He was concerned that removal of critical logistics functions from the highly integrated structures in the Secretariat would negatively impact the Organization's overall capacity to rapidly and effectively deploy new missions and to provide effective logistical support to the 32 ongoing peacekeeping and peacebuilding operations.

ACABQ, in its April report on the administrative and budgetary aspects of UN peacekeeping operations [A/59/736], stated that notwithstanding the disadvantages described by the Secretary-General of relocating staff and related resources to UNLB, it was convinced that there was a greater potential to maximize the benefits from the considerable investment in information and communication technology (ICT) at UNLB and elsewhere. Further analysis should be made of how UNLB could best be utilized to provide efficient and economical ICT and other services for UN peacekeeping and Headquarters clients, and the cost-effectiveness of reducing reliance on commercial providers in favour of increasing UNLB's role.

Restructuring issues

Responding to General Assembly decision 59/507 [YUN 2004, p. 94], requesting a report on the review of the management structure of all peacekeeping operations, the Secretary-General, in an April note [A/59/794], expressed regret that the Secretariat was unable to provide the report requested. The Secretariat was in the process of reconciling the staffing tables of all peacekeeping missions and consolidating data on staffing and organizational structures that were critical elements in the analysis required to produce the report. Once the data collection was completed, the comprehensive review and analysis would be undertaken and the report submitted to the Assembly at the second part of its resumed sixtieth (2006) session.

ACABQ, in April [A/59/736], said that, while it understood the pressure of work under which the Secretariat found itself, such a review had little value if undertaken after the budgets and management structures had been approved and put in place. It recommended that the Secretariat proceed with the review, which should be completed in time for the next round of peacekeeping budgets preparation.

The Assembly, in section IV of resolution 59/296 (see p. 133), requested the Secretary-General, as a matter of priority, to entrust to OIOS the conduct of a comprehensive management audit of DPKO practices and to review its management structure.

Personnel matters

During the year, the General Assembly considered a number of reports relating to personnel matters, including the Secretary-General's report on the DPKO training policy and evaluation system [A/58/753], the criteria used for the recruitment of support account posts [YUN 2004, p. 103], greater use of national staff in the field, taking into account the delegation of recruitment authority to field missions, including the fair and transparent recruitment procedures and monitoring mechanisms [A/58/764], measures that would better streamline the policy guidelines relating to the temporary duty assignment of staff in peacekeeping missions [YUN 2003, p. 99], the status of civilian rapid deployment roster, the staffing of field missions, including the use of 300- and 100-series appointments, and relevant sections of ACABQ report (see below). It also considered OIOS reports on the audit of the policies and procedures for recruiting DPKO staff [YUN 2004, p. 103] and on the follow-up audit of DPKO policies and procedures for recruiting international civilian staff for field missions [ibid., p. 104].

The Assembly also considered the Secretary-General's report on special measures for protection from sexual exploitation and sexual abuse [A/59/782] (see p. 1526) and the OIOS report into allegations of sexual exploitation and abuse in MONUC [A/59/661] (see p. 118).

In considering those reports, ACABQ [A/59/736] recognized that the United Nations was developing a framework and methodology for evaluating training, the final model of which would be specifically suited to the organizational qualities and particular skill requirements of the United Nations and its peacekeeping activities and connected to existing staff evaluation. ACABQ considered it essential to have in place a mechanism to evaluate the effectiveness of training and to track competency gaps. It pointed out that training national staff of a particular mission for service in another was a new policy that should be thoroughly assessed and considered by the Assembly before being applied, since such staff would be serving as international staff and might be performing functions that could be carried out by national staff in that mission area. A better approach might be to reform the Field Service category of staff to meet the demands faced by peacekeeping operations.

Noting the Secretary-General's intention to review arrangements for regularizing the budgetary and technical support of the Galaxy e-staffing system and for transferring responsibility from DPKO to the Department of Management, ACABQ recommended that the lessons learned and experiences acquired during the development, implementation and roll-out phases of Galaxy by information technology specialists and users and applicants be fully documented and analysed. The experiences of other large organizations with similar systems should also be reviewed and consideration given to sharing the applications developed or acquired. The results should be reflected in the Secretary-General's report to the Assembly's sixtieth (2005) session, which should also evaluate the impact of the proposed changes on the UN's ICT strategy on interactions and interfaces with other systems, users and applicants. Special attention should be paid to the modalities of the transition and planning for a seamless change without disruption of services, and to a clear definition of the phases during which there would be an overlap of responsibilities between DPKO and the Department of Management. In addition, an analysis of the human resources requirements in terms of both UN staff and consultants and other financial implications should be provided.

Concerning recruitment for field missions, ACABQ welcomed the Secretariat's intention to develop flexible and creative staffing strategies to expand the use of National Professional Officers in those missions, and encouraged it to review the current criteria and made proposals for consideration by the International Civil Service Commission.

On the question of sexual exploitation and abuse, ACABQ called for a comprehensive approach [A/C.4/59/L.21] to the problem for all UN activities, both at Headquarters and in the field, and for an analysis of the related resource requirements to implement a consistent policy in that area. It would await the results of that analysis and revert to the matter during consideration of the proposed programme budget and other relevant matters.

ACABQ was informed that arrangements with the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) for the shared funding of the position of the Deputy Special Representative of the Secretary-General who led the humanitarian pillar and also served as Resident Coordinator had not yet been put into effect. Also, no formal agreement existed between DPKO and UNDP for the cost-sharing of Deputy Special Representative posts in peacekeeping missions, which were determined on a case-by-case basis. ACABQ saw no reason why the arrangements discussed with UNDP would not be applied to all missions concerned, irrespective of the level that was eventually determined for the posts. It expected that an undertaking that UNDP would fund the posts up to the Director (D-2) level would be confirmed and put into practice, and requested to be informed accordingly before the 2006/2007 budgets were submitted.

Staffing of field missions

As requested by the General Assembly in resolution 59/266 [YUN 2004, p. 1418], the Secretary-General reported in April [A/59/762] on the staffing of field missions, including the use of 300 and 100 series appointments. As a follow-up to his 2004 report on the subject [YUN 2004, p. 105], the April report provided information on mission staff reappointed from 300 to 100 series contracts after reaching the four-year limit of their 300 series contracts and made proposals for the further use of those appointment instruments in field missions.

The report observed that, as at 30 June 2005, 346 international staff had reached, or exceeded four years of service under the 300 series appointment of limited duration, and were considered for reappointment under the 100 series contract, in accordance with the criteria set out in section X of resolution 59/266, that their functions be reviewed and found necessary and that their performance be confirmed as fully satisfactory. As a result of that review, 287 staff met the criteria set out in resolution 59/266, 48 did not, due either to anticipated downsizing or mission closure and remained under the 300 series contract, 4 reached the mandatory age of separation, 5 had not met the necessary performance criteria and 2 were still pending consideration.

DPKO proposed that the 100 series appointment be used for the employment of staff performing functions that were not, by their nature, temporary or limited in duration, and for which the Department had a continuing need for one year or longer, and the 300 series appointment for functions of a temporary nature, with a limited duration of under one year, such as electoral assistance, border monitoring and short-term projects. The use of the 100 series appointment for functions of a continuing nature would also help to harmonize the conditions of service between different groups of staff in field missions, including Secretariat field staff and their counterparts from UN agencies, funds and programmes. The Secretary-General sought the Assembly's agreement to that request and, pending consideration of the proposal, approval to continue reappointing serving staff under 100 series contracts on a case-by-case basis after they had reached the maximum period of service permitted under a 300 series appointment, provided there was a continuing need for their services and they had a fully satisfactory performance record.

ACABQ [A/59/736] was of the opinion that the conditions of service for all staff in field missions should be harmonized and looked forward to receiving the Secretary-General's comprehensive report on the subject before considering the next round of peacekeeping financing proposals. In the meantime, it recommended that the Secretary-General be authorized to make 100 series appointments as he had requested, trusting that the criteria would be rigorous and consistently applied. However, no action should be taken on the general issue of appointing staff under the 100 series, pending consideration of the Secretary-General's comprehensive report.

Mission subsistence allowance

Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 58/258 [YUN 2003, p. 97], the Secretary-General submitted, in February [A/59/698], the OIOS report on the audit of mission subsistence allowance (MSA) rates, the daily allowance paid to

United Nations international civilian staff, military observers and civilian police in special peacekeeping missions to cover subsistence costs. OIOS reviewed those rates in several of the largest peacekeeping missions and followed up on recommendations contained in the Secretary-General's 2001 report on the subject [YUN 2001, p. 104]. OIOS noted, among other things, that its views and those of the Office of Human Resources Management (OHRM) and DPKO differed markedly concerning the most appropriate relationship between MSA and daily subsistence allowance (DSA) rates. OIOS maintained that MSA rates should always be lower than DSA rates, while OHRM argued that the conditions of life in many duty stations were sufficiently arduous to warrant higher MSA rates.

During extended discussions with OIOS, OHRM expressed strong resistance to lowering MSA rates automatically when DSA rates dropped. Consequently, there was no point in OIOS making recommendations that would continue to be resisted strongly by departments. It noted that the comprehensive review requested by the Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations in 2002 [YUN 2002, p. 85] of the allowance structure, which was to take into account the adverse conditions of life and work affecting personnel in UN peacekeeping operations and related request that a fair service package be developed, had not been undertaken. To resolve its differences of opinion with OHRM and DPKO regarding MSA, OIOS recommended that the comprehensive review be undertaken in a spirit of openness and transparency, and that the review consider establishing a two-component MSA structure, with one component for subsistence (food, accommodation and incidentals) and the other to compensate for particular living conditions in duty stations. OHRM and DPKO had accepted that recommendation.

OIOS also recommended that OHRM undertake a monthly comparative analysis of MSA and DSA rates, and that the difference should trigger the adjustment of MSA rates in the mission concerned. OHRM should also apply a consistent policy in promulgating revised MSA rates, by making them effective from the first day of the month following the issuance of its final MSA report.

The Secretary-General, in his comments on the OIOS report [A/59/698/Add.1], agreed with most of the recommendations. However, regarding the recommendation calling for a monthly analysis of the two rates, with consequential adjustment of MSA rates, he noted that the two rates served different purposes. While DSA was designed to cover expenditures incurred during short-term official travel under normal circumstances, MSA was defined as the total UN contribution towards living expenses incurred in connection with a special mission assignment. He did not feel that there was justification for using an across-the-board formula to determine MSA by reference to DSA. The Secretary-General noted, however, that for monitoring purposes only, OHRM was undertaking monthly comparisons of both rates in localities where there were special peacekeeping missions.

UN Volunteers

The General Assembly, at its resumed fifty-ninth (2005) session, considered the Secretary-General's report on the participation of UN Volunteers in peacekeeping operations [YUN 2001, p. 814] and the related ACABQ report [ibid., p. 94], as well as the report of the Joint Inspection Unit (JIU) on the evaluation of the Programme [YUN 2003, p. 1388] and the Secretary-General's comments thereon [A/59/68/Add.1].

ACABQ, in its April report [A/59/736], while noting the successful cooperation between UN Volunteers and DPKO, observed that the functions and responsibilities of volunteers were not always clearly defined. It recommended that the Programme and DPKO define clear parameters of employment for volunteers working with the Department and that the Assembly request the Programme to intensify its follow-up with the Office of Legal Affairs to ensure that the privileges and immunities of volunteers were clearly defined. It agreed with JIU that UNDP should introduce a regular cycle for the Programme to ensure objective risk control and management oversight.

Chapter II

Africa

In 2005, Africa showed measured progress towards resolving the many ongoing conflict situations that had beset the continent over the past decade, although there were grim reminders of the need for firmer international action to help resolve fully those conflicts and bring peace and prosperity to the populations concerned. The year witnessed the successful transition from peacekeeping to peacebuilding in several countries in Central Africa and the Great Lakes region, thereby facilitating the complex transition processes in those countries. The United Nations, in partnership with the African Union (AU) and other regional organizations and international actors, supported elections in Burundi in June and July. That paved the way for the election of Pierre Nkurunziza as President by the Joint Parliamentary Congress, whose inauguration marked the formal conclusion of the transitional process to a democratically elected Government. Similarly, in the Central African Republic, the election of General François Bozizé in June as President marked that country's return to constitutional order. Meanwhile, in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, preparations were under way for national elections scheduled to be held in 2006. In preparation for that event, the country successfully held a referendum on a new Constitution in December. However, key challenges remained, including the daunting task of consolidating peace by bringing the rebel groups into the peace process, concluding the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programmes for ex-combatants, promoting national reconciliation and creating conditions for economic and social rehabilitation and development.

In West Africa, several countries were on the path towards economic and democratic reforms as the intensity of conflicts lessened. Elections were successfully held in Liberia, which were won by Ellen Johnson-Sirleaf, thereby becoming the President-elect. Her inauguration in early 2006 would also mark a return to constitutional government in Liberia. Progress was also made in restoring State authority and addressing concerns about corruption in the National Transitional Government. In that regard, a governance and economic management assistance programme was developed to help the country regain control of its vital natural resources. The apprehension of former Liberian leader Charles Taylor for prosecution by the Special Court for Sierra Leone was deemed a priority by the Security Council. In Sierra Leone, the United Nations continued to help in laying the foundation for the country to achieve lasting stability, democracy and prosperity. Sierra Leone made further progress in meeting the benchmarks set by the Council to allow the United Nations Mission in Sierra Leone to continue to implement its plan for withdrawing its forces deployed there. At the request of the President of Sierra Leone, and given the continuing instability in the Mano River Basin subregion, the Council established the United Nations Office in Sierra Leone to assist the Government in consolidating peace, building national conflict prevention capacity and preparing for elections in 2007. The Government was able to take control of its diamond-mining sector, repatriate some 272,000 refugees and establish a national human rights commission. Cameroon and Nigeria continued to cooperate in resolving their border issues. Both countries, despite some delays, took action to begin, with international assistance, the planned withdrawal and transfer of authority in the Bakassi Peninsula and to begin the demarcation of the land boundary. However, those developments were overshadowed by the continuing conflict in Côte d'Ivoire, where the parties failed to live up to their commitments. Key benchmarks in the implementation of the 2003 Linas-Marcoussis Agreement were not met, such as the target date for the completion of demobilization and the constitutional deadline for holding presidential elections in October. In those circumstances, the AU and the Economic Community of West African States extended President Gbagbo's term for one year, appointed a Prime Minister and established bodies to oversee the peace process. In Guinea-Bissau, controversies over the eligibility of the two presidential candidates and the election results later in the year created a highly polarized atmosphere in the country. The Secretary-General revised the mandate of the United Nations Office in Guinea-Bissau to facilitate its new role in the transition process. The United Nations also supported the Government of Togo in addressing the political crisis arising from the sudden death of President Gnassingbé Eyadema, in preserving the stability of the country and ensuring a peaceful transition of power consistent with the Constitution and rule of law. Political upheavals and incidents of violence occurred following the elections, amidst allegations of human rights violations. Based on the report of a fact-finding mission dispatched to Togo by the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to investigate those allegations, the Government indicated its willingness to take action to prevent further violence and address the problems leading to such misconduct.

The ongoing conflicts in the Horn of Africa continued to take centre stage, as the United Nations and the international community spared no effort in trying to resolve them. In the Sudan, the 21-year civil war between the north and south of the country ended in January with the signing by the parties of the Comprehensive Peace Agreement, setting out new arrangements for power- and wealth-sharing. The Government of National Unity was established in September and the government of southern Sudan in December. In March, the Security Council set up the United Nations Mission in Sudan to oversee the implementation of the Comprehensive Peace Agreement. Hopes that the new political arrangement would lead to a solution to the crisis in the Darfur region in western Sudan were not realized, as the conflict there continued unabated. The Council tightened its sanctions in the face of the continued refusal of the Government to accept a UN peacekeeping force to assist the AU Force deployed there. The Council sent an assessment mission to Darfur to examine the human rights situation and, based on its recommendations, decided to refer the cases of violation of international human rights and humanitarian law to the International Criminal Court. In Somalia, the fledgling Transitional Federal Government based in Nairobi, Kenya, relocated to Somalia, but was not operational for most of the year due to a dispute over the site of the relocation and the composition of the interim peace support mission sponsored by the Intergovernmental Authority on Development. The border dispute between Eritrea and Ethiopia remained unsettled. The Eritrea-Ethiopia Boundary Commission failed to advance its demarcation activities, stalled since 2003 by Ethiopia's rejection of significant parts of the Commission's 2002 final and binding delimitation decision and Eritrea's insistence on its implementation. Eritrea, contrary to the Council's demand, increased its restrictions on the United Nations Mission in Ethiopia and Eritrea, including the request for certain nationalities to leave the country. The Council agreed to relocate its staff to Ethiopia until it reviewed future plans for the Mission.

The question of the future of the Western Sahara remained unresolved. In an effort to break the deadlock, the Secretary-General appointed a new Personal Envoy to explore with the parties and neighbours how best to achieve a mutually acceptable solution. Morocco continued to refuse to accept a referendum that would include the option of independence, while the Frente Popular para la Liberación de Saguía El-Hamra y de Río de Oro continued to insist that the only way forward was to implement the 2003 peace plan proposed by the Special Envoy or the 1991 settlement plan proposed by the Secretary-General.

Promotion of peace in Africa

In 2005, the United Nations continued ongoing efforts to identify and tackle the root causes of conflict in Africa and to consider ways to promote sustainable peace and development on the continent. In March, the Security Council discussed the African dimension of its work and explored how to improve its effectiveness in addressing related issues. Several Council members highlighted the root causes of conflicts on the continent and the need to combine peace and security efforts with long-term development strategies and to strengthen cooperation with regional and subregional organizations, particularly the African Union (AU), in conflict prevention and management on the continent. In September, the Council adopted a declaration on strengthening the effectiveness of its role in conflict prevention, particularly in Africa. The Secretary-General reported on the implementation of his 1998 recommendations for tackling the root causes of conflict and the promotion of durable peace in Africa, highlighting progress made and remaining challenges. The Office of the Special Adviser on Africa (OSAA), headed by Ibrahim Gambari (Nigeria), continued to serve as the focal point for monitoring the implementation of those recommendations and for enhancing international efforts to promote peace on the continent. In December, the Secretary-General extended the appointment of his Geneva-based Special Adviser on Africa, Mohamed Sahnoun (Algeria), until 31 December 2006.

Working Group. On 5 January [S/2005/4], the Security Council President said that following consultations among Council members, it was agreed that Mr. Joël W. Adechi (Benin) would serve as Chairman of the Ad Hoc Working Group on Conflict Prevention and Resolution in Africa until the end of 2005. However, on 26 June, Mr. Adechi relinquished the office and Mr. Jean-Francis R. Zinsou (Benin) took over as Acting Chairman until 19 October. By a 20 October note [S/2005/660], the Council President announced that Council members had agreed that Mr. Simon Bodéhoussè Idohou (Benin) would serve as Chairman of the Group until the end of 2005. On 21 December [S/2005/814], the President said that Council members had agreed that the Group would continue its work until 31 December 2006.

The Working Group, established in 2002 [YUN 2002, p. 93] to monitor the implementation of Council recommendations relating to its role in conflict prevention and resolution in Africa, reported in December [S/2005/833] on its 2005 activities. It monitored and contributed to the Council's work on improving ways to better address crises in Africa by promoting a common understanding of related issues. In particular, it forged a larger consensus on the need to develop a culture of proactive prevention of conflict. It accorded particular attention to the importance of peacebuilding in Africa, within the context of discussions on the establishment of a Peacebuilding Commission that might help improve cooperation between the Security Council and the Economic and Social Council in addressing relevant matters.

During the year, the Working Group held two major events: a policy forum (New York, 13 June) on the role of the Security Council in enhancing UN capacity for conflict prevention, which underlined the need to shift from a culture of reaction to crises to that of prevention, both in pre- and post-conflict situations; and a seminar (New York, 15 December) on cooperation between the United Nations and African regional organizations in the field of peace and security [S/2005/828], which outlined concrete steps to support the African Peace and Security Architecture of the African Union and to integrate it fully into the system of collective peace and security established by the UN Charter.

Security Council consideration. The Security Council, on 30 March [meeting 5156], discussed the African dimension of its work on how to improve its effectiveness in addressing African issues and its current agenda and methods of work. To facilitate the deliberations, the Council President prepared a background document [S/2005/188] outlining the objectives and scope of the discussion. Several Council members, pointing to the many conflict situations in Africa and the associated threats to international peace and security, noted that the continent was the main host of UN peacekeeping operations and the focus of much of the Council's monthly deliberations. Noting that the Council could do more to help address conflicts and related problems in Africa, delegates stressed, among other things, the need to strengthen cooperation with African regional and subregional organizations, particularly the African Union (AU), in preventing and managing conflicts on the continent and the importance of combining peace and security efforts with long-term development strategies. References were made to the importance of institutional dialogue among the principal bodies of the United Nations, particularly the Security Council and the Economic and Social Council, and to the greater involvement of international financial institutions, programmes and agencies. Delegations also referred to the Secretary-General's recommendations contained in his report entitled "In larger freedom" (see p. 67), especially regarding the establishment of a peacebuilding commission.

The Council President, speaking in his capacity as the representative of Brazil, noted that the Council had held up to 25 meetings in 24 days on Africa during the month of March, which indicated that the Council had not been effective enough in early crisis identification and conflict avoidance. The Council, therefore, needed to evolve from the logic of conflict resolution to that of prevention, and a new dimension—sustainability—needed to be added to its approach to work. He emphasized that the Council was responsible for peace and security that could be sustained over time and not for a year or two or the short period when a peacekeeping operation was deployed. Council efforts to provide security and ensure that fragile peace processes flourished demanded military action and parallel concrete measures to lead people out of the vicious circle of hopelessness and provide for sustainable peace. The Council's decision-making process would be substantially improved by making use of first-hand information regarding conflicts in Africa, as was provided recently when the Council was briefed by the representative of AU Mediators on the crisis in Côte d'Ivoire. Further improvement could be ensured through more Council missions to countries in conflict, which often provided a unique opportunity for members to engage in the realities of the conflicts with which the Council was seized. Dialogue with international and local non-governmental organizations (NGOs) or civil society representatives should also be initiated. The Council President stressed the need for closer cooperation between peacekeeping and political missions deployed on the continent, increased international support in terms of the requisite resources for facilitating peace processes in Africa and combating impunity by bringing perpetrators of wrongdoing to justice in local courts and international criminal tribunals.

On 30 June [meeting 5220], the Council deliberated on Africa's food crisis as a threat to peace and security. Addressing the Council, the Executive Director of the World Food Programme (WFP) said the greatest humanitarian crisis currently facing the world was not in Darfur (Sudan) or Afghanistan or the Democratic People's Republic of Korea. It was the gradual disintegration of the social structures in southern Africa, and hunger was at its core. The lethal mix of AIDS, recurring drought and failing governance and capacity was eroding social and political stability. The AIDS pandemic, in particular, which claimed one million lives in the region in 2004 and which had reduced life expectancy there by 20 years, was directly undermining the capacity of communities to produce enough food for themselves. It was currently estimated that some 8.3 million people would need food aid in southern Africa, largely owing to the lack of adequate rainfall between January and March, and for the continent as a whole, one out of every three Africans had been malnourished in the past 10 years. The Executive Director defined hunger as a symptom of failed harvest and of the failure to cope with natural disaster and overcome social inequities, ethnic strife and racial hatred. He noted that the relationship between hunger and conflict was similar to that between hunger and poverty, as hunger was both a cause and effect of poverty and political conflict. In that regard, competition for limited food resources could ignite violence and instability, as illustrated in a number of conflict situations in Africa, notably in the Sudan (Darfur), Mauritania and Senegal. He described adequate food aid as a critical component for facilitating peace processes in many African countries emerging from conflict, particularly with regard to disarmament, demobilization and reintegration efforts. It was also a tool to support education, help rebuild communities and afford people the means to safeguard their own welfare. The Executive Director described the extent of WFP's food aid delivery programme in Africa and addressed related concerns and questions raised by Council members. On the question of what was required to cover the total needs of Africa, the Executive Director estimated that an annual sum of $5 billion would be required to look after some 115 million people on the continent who needed help, comprising 93 million children and their mothers. To achieve that, there was a need for a global movement which would adopt the position that it was no longer acceptable for children to go hungry.

In a 19 December briefing to the Council [meeting 5332], the Chairman of the Ad Hoc Working Group on Conflict Prevention and Resolution in Africa said that the Group's activities in 2005 emphasized ways and means of meeting the challenge of preventing threats to the collective security of the international community and of addressing the related question of conflict prevention and resolution, within the contexts of ongoing UN reform efforts and of implementing the Millennium Development Goals. As several African countries continued to suffer from conflict situations and the continent faced complex difficulties that could cause those emerging from conflict to relapse into violence, the Group felt that it should take an active part in the debate on how to reform the UN and enhance its effectiveness in the area of conflict prevention and resolution in Africa. In doing so, it had contributed to forging a consensus on important issues of relevance to its work and had drawn up a programme of work identifying some general or specific issues raised in the Council in order to highlight the need to develop a comprehensive strategy for conflict prevention and to harmonize the approach to African questions by the United Nations, particularly the Security Council.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 14 September [meeting 5261], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1625 (2005). The draft [S/2005/578] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Decides to adopt the attached declaration on strengthening the effectiveness of the role of the Security Council in conflict prevention, particularly in Africa.

Annex

12. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Office of the Special Adviser on Africa

In 2005, the New York-based Office of the Special Adviser on Africa (OSAA), established by the terms of General Assembly resolutions 57/7 [YUN 2002, p. 910] and 57/300 [YUN 2002, p. 1353], continued efforts to support the Organization's deliberations on Africa, to enhance international efforts to promote peace and development on the continent through analytical and advocacy-oriented activities and to assist the Secretary-General in related matters. In particular, OSAA continued to serve as the focal point for monitoring the implementation of the recommendations contained in the Secretary-General's 1998 report [YUN 1998, p. 66] on the causes of conflict and the promotion of durable peace and sustainable development in Africa. In that regard, it played a lead role in preparing the Secretary-General's 2005 progress report on the implementation of the recommendations in his 1998 report (see below), which highlighted the need for special attention to post-conflict reconstruction and peacebuilding and for increased conflict prevention and resolution efforts. Analytical work undertaken by OSAA within the year on related topics focused on "human security in Africa"—the concept of protecting and empowering people at the individual and community levels—as an essential condition to national and international security; "peace consolidation in Africa: challenges and opportunities", which reflected on post-conflict civilian and military efforts by external and internal actors to prevent the recurrence of conflict and establish the conditions for durable peace and sustainable development; and "conflict in Africa and the role of disarmament, demobilization and reintegration in post-conflict reconstruction", which recognized the significance of disarmament and demobilization programmes for the re-establishment of peace, security and stability in post-conflict situations.

OSAA organized an international conference, in cooperation with Sierra Leone (Freetown, 21-23 June), on disarmament, demobilization and reintegration and stability in Africa to share experiences and ideas on improving the design and implementation of those programmes to better sustain peace on the continent, and took initiatives to promote and facilitate UN system support for Africa's economic recovery within the framework of the New Partnership for Africa's Development (NEPAD) (see p. 1003).

In December, the General Assembly, in resolution 60/223 (see p. 158), stressed the importance of enabling the Office of the Special Adviser on Africa to better fulfil its role as the focal point within the Secretariat for monitoring the implementation of the recommendations contained in the Secretary-General's report on the causes of conflict and promotion of durable peace and sustainable development in Africa.

Implementation of Secretary-General's 1998 recommendations on promotion of peace

Report of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 59/255 [YUN 2004, p. 112], the Secretary-General submitted on 1 August a report [A/60/182] on the implementation of the recommendations contained in his 1998 report on the causes of conflict and promotion of durable peace and sustainable development in Africa [YUN 1998, p. 66]. Updating developments since his follow-up report on the subject [YUN 2004, p. 111], the report reviewed recent action taken in implementing those recommendations, particularly regarding progress made in peacemaking and peacekeeping. It also highlighted remaining challenges and constraints and proposed measures to better consolidate peace on the continent.

The report noted that many recent trends in Africa had been positive, especially the fact that the number of major conflicts on the continent had further dropped from six in 2004 to three in 2005, a tremendous improvement from 1998 when the number stood at 14. Furthermore, most African countries enjoyed relatively stable political conditions and the majority had democratically elected Governments. Other encouraging developments included the establishment of the AU African Peer Review Mechanism, created to support national efforts to enhance political, economic and corporate governance, and the continent's improved growth rates, although not sufficient to ensure the achievement of the Millennium Development Goal of halving extreme poverty by 2015. The report described initiatives taken and the progress achieved towards enhancing the environment for peace through peacemaking and conflict prevention; peacekeeping by the United Nations and regional organizations, as well as UN support to the latter; and a variety of post-conflict peacebuilding and reconstruction activities, including the promotion of human security and human rights in Africa and support in reestablishing governmental structures and the rule of law. Other activities concerned the promotion of a culture of peace, controlling the illicit traffic in small arms and light weapons, disarmament, demobilization and reintegration and stability, addressing economic and social challenges, and mobilizing resources for the reintegration of refugees and internally displaced persons. Notable progress was also made in terms of enhancing the role of women in conflict prevention and resolution and peacebuilding, as well as in financial and technical assistance to address the underlying causes of conflict and to support sustainable development.

Despite those advances, the conditions required for sustained peace and development had yet to be consolidated throughout the continent. Civil strife in the Democratic Republic of the Congo and in the Darfur region of the Sudan had resulted in great and horrific loss of life, brutality and human dislocation, and the international community's response to those crises had been slow and inadequate. The Secretary-General's High-level Panel on Threats, Challenges and Change [YUN 2004, p. 54] had identified economic and social threats, including poverty, infectious diseases and environmental degradation, and internal conflicts, including civil war, genocide and other large-scale atrocities, as the most harmful threats to durable peace and sustainable development in Africa. As such, continuing efforts and support by the international community, including UN organizations, were necessary to reduce poverty and disease, raise governmental capacity to provide services and security, and sustain peace and development on a long-term basis. It was important for the world community to increase financial, human and technical resources to advance regional, subregional and national security development efforts in Africa, ensuring that an adequate allocation was dedicated to the capacity-building of regional organizations. The AU should establish, as a matter of priority, a continental early warning system to be complemented with enhanced collaboration with the United Nations. To help strengthen the AU's capacity to take the lead in peacekeeping efforts in Africa, the necessary financial support from the international community was vital. More technical and institutional support to African organizations was needed in order to develop common standards and operating procedures for all peacekeeping operations. In that regard, careful consideration should be given to the establishment of a revolving fund to enable African States to obtain strategic sea and airlift capabilities. The report also highlighted the need for close coordination of all peacekeeping and peace support activities on the continent, with the active involvement of the United Nations.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 23 December [meeting 69], the General Assembly adopted resolution 60/223 [draft: A/60/L.45 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 66 (b)].

African peacekeeping capacity

The Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations, at its 2005 substantive session (New York, 31 January–25 February) [A/59/19/Rev.1], continued discussions on the enhancement of African peacekeeping capabilities. Welcoming AU efforts to strengthen its crisis management and progress towards the development of an African standby force, the Special Committee called upon the international community to support those efforts. It advocated, in particular, that the United Nations and key strategic partners should increase support for AU efforts to undertake and manage peacekeeping operations in Africa, and supported the development of a joint action plan to address the systemic constraints identified by African States, including in the areas of common doctrine and training standards, logistical support, funding and institutional capacity. For the effectiveness of such joint action, the Special Committee stressed the importance of enhanced coordination between the United Nations, the AU and subregional organizations and non-African partners, including the European Union (EU) and Group of Eight (G-8) major industrialized countries. It welcomed the Secretary-General's recommendations for enhancing African peacekeeping capacity, such programmes as staff exchanges and the secondment of UN peacekeeping personnel to help the AU and subregional organizations build a cadre of qualified civilian and military training staff, and for the possibility of UN logistical support to AU peacekeeping missions until the Union developed fully its own capacity. The Special Committee recognized that the United Nations could make available to the AU a small core planning and advisory capacity to facilitate the initial planning and start-up processes of an AU-led peacekeeping mission. Such core capacity could consist of representatives from the Department of Peacekeeping Operations and its field missions, and could be temporarily attached to the AU headquarters.

On 14 September, the Security Council, in resolution 1625(2005) (see p. 155), urged African States and the international community to fully cooperate in developing the capacities of African regional and subregional organizations to deploy both civilian and military assets quickly when needed, including the development of the AU African Standby Force, and welcomed bilateral and multilateral programmes developed towards that end.

Central Africa and Great Lakes region

The United Nations and the wider international community continued in 2005 to assist the States of Central Africa and the Great Lakes region to resolve chronic conflicts and achieve political stability. The United Nations kept in place its peacekeeping missions in the Democratic Republic of the Congo (DRC), Burundi and the Central African Republic in support of the ongoing electoral and peace processes in those countries. As it had done in the previous five years, the Security Council dispatched a mission to assess the overall situation in the region and make recommendations. The United Nations Standing Advisory Committee on Security Questions in Central Africa held its yearly meetings also to assess the geopolitical and security situation in the region. More importantly, the 11 core States of the 2004 International Conference on Peace, Security, Democracy and Development in the Great Lakes Region, in collaboration with AU, made preparations for a second summit Conference in 2006, intended to adopt a regional security, stability and development pact.

Burundi, which had been moving its transitional process progressively forward, approved its Constitution by referendum in February, and, for the first time since gaining independence in 1962, successfully held national elections in June and July. In August, a Joint Parliamentary Congress elected Pierre Nkurunziza as President, whose inauguration in the same month marked the formal conclusion of the transitional process to a democratically elected Government. Similarly, the Central African Republic, in an electoral process deemed free, reliable, fair and transparent by national and international observers, voted for and confirmed General François Bozizé as President and Head of State in June, marking the country's return to constitutional order since the coup d'état in 2003. The national electoral process was completed in September, when elections at the colline level were held.

In the DRC, where preparations for national elections were under way, organizational problems resulted in delays, necessitating the Government of National Unity and Transition to extend the transition period, as allowed under the terms of the 2002 Global and All-Inclusive Agreement on the Transition in the Democratic Republic of the Congo; the revised electoral timetable called for elections by 30 June 2006. In December, the DRC successfully held a referendum on the new Constitution. Meanwhile, the Council increased the strength of the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo to provide logistics and security during the electoral period. To bolster the efforts of the DRC and the Mission to exert military pressure on the armed groups and movements operating in the eastern part of the country to give up their arms and disband, and to stem the flow of illegal arms into the area, the Council, in April, expanded the scope of its 2003 arms embargo imposed on those groups and movements and, in August, renewed the embargo until 31 July 2006. At the request of the Council, the Secretary-General re-established the Group of Experts monitoring the arms embargo twice, the second time, until 31 January 2006.

Among the key challenges confronting the newly elected Government of Burundi in its efforts to consolidate peace was to bring the rebel group, Parti pour la libération du peuple hutu-Forces nationales de libération, referred to as FNL (Rwasa), or Palipehutu-FNL, into the peace process. In the DRC, the Forces démocratiques de libération du Rwanda, an anti-Rwanda armed group operating in the eastern part of the country, issued a statement in March by which the group, in addition to condemning the 1994 Rwanda genocide, undertook to renounce the use of force and cease all offensive operations against Rwanda—a statement which the Council regarded as a significant opportunity to move towards the return of peace in the DRC, national reconciliation in Rwanda, and full normalization of relations between the two countries. Another armed group called the ex-FAR/Interahamwe (elements of the former Rwandan regime, including former soldiers of the Forces Armées Rwandaises), also operating in the eastern DRC, made known its intention to disarm unconditionally and return to Rwanda. Those statements remained to be put into action.

The United Nations Peace-building Support Office in the Central African Republic (BONUCA) continued to support the Republic's efforts to return to stability and achieve reconciliation and reconstruction, following the 2003 coup d'état. With the agreement of the Security Council, the Secretary-General extended the mandate of BONUCA for an additional year, until 31 December 2006, to help the country build on the success of its recent elections.

In December, the General Assembly requested the Secretary-General to establish an outreach programme entitled "The Rwanda Genocide and the United Nations", as well as measures to mobilize civil society for Rwanda genocide victim remembrance and education.

International Conference on Great Lakes Region

Preparations for second summit

On 15 November [S/2005/793], the Secretary-General noted that, since the first summit of the International Conference on Peace, Security, Democracy and Development in the Great Lakes Region [YUN 2004, p. 116], the 11 core countries of the Conference (Angola, Burundi, Central African Republic, Congo, Democratic Republic of the Congo (DRC), Kenya, Rwanda, Sudan, the United Republic of Tanzania, Uganda, Zambia) had worked to translate the Declaration adopted by the Conference [ibid.] into common programmes of action and protocols under the four Conference themes of peace and security, governance and democracy, economic development and regional integration, and social and humanitarian issues. A number of those were selected as priorities, which, together with the Declaration, were to form a stability and development pact for the Great Lakes region to be proposed for consideration by the upcoming second summit of the Conference. The extent of implementation of the proposed pact as a regional peacebuilding initiative, when adopted, would be the real measure of the success of the Conference.

The Regional Inter-Ministerial Committee, set up by the Conference [ibid.] to prepare draft protocols and programmes of action, met twice during the year. At its first meeting (Kigali, Rwanda, 15-18 February), the Committee approved its structure and functioning, as well as that of the Regional Preparatory Committee; the terms of reference of the draft protocols; programmes of action and projects; and the plan of activities for the summit. At its second meeting (Lusaka, Zambia, 22-23 July), it reviewed and prioritized the draft programmes of action and projects and discussed follow-up to the second summit.

The Regional Preparatory Committee met twice (Kigali, 14-16 February; Lusaka, 18-21 July) to prepare for the Inter-Ministerial Committee meetings. Thereafter, it held an extraordinary meeting (Luanda, Angola, 26-30 September) to review the draft documents for submission to a third and final Inter-Ministerial Committee meeting, rescheduled for 2006, following postponement of the second summit until after 30 June 2006, when the political transition in the DRC was expected to conclude.

Special Representative for Great Lakes Region

On 15 November [S/2005/793], the Secretary-General notified the Security Council that the mandate of his Special Representative for the Great Lakes Region, Ibrahima Fall, would expire on 31 December. In view of the Special Representative's involvement with the first (2004) summit of the International Conference on the Great Lakes Region [YUN 2004, p. 116] and the ongoing preparations for the second (2006) summit, the Secretary-General affirmed his intention to extend the mandate until 31 December 2006.

On 15 December [S/2005/794], the Council requested further clarification of the intended extension of the mandate, detailing the expected activities of the Special Representative and his office to support the Conference process, based on the assessment of his role and performance over the previous eight years. By a further exchange of letters between the Secretary-General and the Council on 23 [S/2005/849] and 30 December [S/2005/850], the Special Representative's mandate was extended until 31 March 2006, although the information requested was not available by the end of 2005.

Security Council mission to Central Africa

On 27 October [S/2005/682], the Security Council informed the Secretary-General that it was sending a mission to Central Africa from 4 to 10 November, headed by Jean-Marc de La Sablière (France). The mission would visit Burundi, the DRC, Rwanda, Uganda and the United Republic of Tanzania. Under its general terms of reference, the mission would underscore the importance of the resources committed by the United Nations to peacekeeping in the DRC and Burundi and the need for an unequivocal commitment on the part of national and regional actors; stress the importance of achieving sustainable peace, security and stability for all countries in the region; and encourage the peaceful resolution of differences through dialogue and the establishment of confidence-building measures and mechanisms. The mission would welcome investigative and preventive action by the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo (MONUC) and the United Nations Operation in Burundi (UNOB) in cases of alleged sexual exploitation and abuse by UN personnel, and would reaffirm the need for troop-contributing States to take the necessary disciplinary and judicial measures, and to attend fully to the victims. It would examine also the question of the use of children in armed conflict. Specific terms of reference were also outlined for each of the countries to be visited.

Mission report. On 14 November [S/2005/716], the mission reported on its visit, the sixth in as many years. In the DRC, the mission observed the progress made in the peace and transition process. President Joseph Kabila and the four Vice-Presidents stressed that their relationship had improved since the Government of National Unity and Transition was installed. The mission insisted on strict adherence to the electoral timeline for the political transition, which should culminate in the holding of free elections by 30 June 2006, and stressed the need to create socio-economic and political conditions to ensure stability in the post-transitional period. It insisted that progress in security sector reform was critical to the immediate and long-term stability of the DRC, particularly with regard to the acceleration of operations to disarm and repatriate foreign armed groups on its territory, and the resumption of the demobilization, training and integration of former combatants into a restructured DRC army.

In Burundi, the mission noted the challenges facing the new Government in the post-transitional period in its efforts to consolidate peace under its key priorities of reconstruction, development, good governance, human rights and the return of refugees from neighbouring countries. Regarding Burundi's suggestion that the UN peacekeeping component could be gradually reduced because security had returned to a major part of the country, the mission cautioned against an untimely disengagement of peacekeepers, as that had led, in similar situations, to a weakening of the overall security and political situation. In that regard, the mission expressed concern over the increase in insecurity and attacks on civilians, reportedly by the rebel Forces nationales de libération (Palipehutu-FNL), which repeated Government efforts had failed to bring into the peace process. Despite the difficulties it faced in reconciling its commitment to downsize public administration with the constitutional requirement to include Burundi's 36 political parties, the Government promised to make every effort to ensure their representation in the administration.

In meetings with President Yoweri Kaguta Museveni of Uganda and President Paul Kagame of Rwanda, the mission reiterated the Council's concern regarding the continued presence of foreign armed groups in eastern DRC, and underlined the importance of supporting and reinforcing the integration of the Forces armées de la République démocratique du Congo (FARDC) to enable it to tackle those armed groups robustly, with MONUC support. The Presidents agreed that, while successful elections in the DRC would contribute to the stability of the country and of the region as a whole, the issue of the presence of Ugandan and Rwandan armed groups in the eastern DRC, had to be resolved as they posed a threat not only to the DRC but also to Uganda and Rwanda. President Museveni reiterated the call made by the Tripartite Plus Joint Commission that the Forces démocratiques pour la libération du Rwanda (FDLR) be forcibly disarmed; President Kagame insisted that MONUC conduct operations against FDLR in the provinces of North Kivu and South Kivu as robustly as against Congolese militias in the district of Ituri.

The mission highlighted its concerns over the humanitarian situation in northern Uganda, the recent attacks on humanitarian workers and the security challenges faced by aid agencies. It encouraged Uganda to expedite the arrest of five leaders of the defeated Lord's Resistance Army (LRA), for whom the International Criminal Court had issued arrest warrants, while finding a peaceful solution for other LRA elements, some of whom remained active and contributed to insecurity in northern Uganda. The mission urged Uganda to extend amnesty to rank-and-file LRA combatants and to help them reintegrate into their communities. It emphasized that the use of force in the territory of a foreign State without the latter's consent would be a violation of the UN Charter.

The mission expressed concern over reports of continuing violations of the arms embargo imposed by Security Council resolution 1493(2003) [YUN 2003, p. 130] and urged Uganda and Rwanda to improve their cooperation with the Group of Experts established under resolution 1533(2004) [YUN 2004, p. 137] to monitor arms flows into the region. It also urged them to reinforce measures to prevent and deny the entry of arms into the eastern part of the DRC through their respective territories. Rwanda confirmed that it had established an inter-ministerial committee to monitor implementation of the embargo and to strengthen cooperation with the Group of Experts. The mission encouraged the Group to continue its investigations and called upon all States concerned to cooperate fully with it.

The United Republic of Tanzania shared the mission's concerns regarding the security situation in Burundi, including the risks that could arise from an untimely withdrawal of ONUB. In that regard, President Benjamin Mkapa and his Foreign Minister called for additional support for the integration of Burundi's army. The President reiterated Tanzania's commitment to cooperate with the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) in support of the voluntary return of Burundian and Congolese refugees in the United Republic of Tanzania to their respective countries.

The mission made a series of recommendations for consideration by the Council that were specific to each of the countries visited and for regional cooperation.

Uganda, on 7 December [S/2005/770], conveyed its observations on a number of the mission's recommendations as they related to Uganda, as well as a detailed account of the exchange of views between the head of the mission and Uganda's President and of their joint press conference.

Security Council consideration. The Council, on 15 November [meeting 5305], heard a briefing by the head of the mission, who said that the mission found in the DRC commendable progress in the preparations for the referendum on the constitution and for the legislative and presidential elections, for which 20 million voters had been registered. Several problems remained, however. First, the election preparations had been delayed, making the electoral timetable tight. The mission emphasized the imperative of opening the elections to everyone, adhering to the election date of 30 June 2006, and promulgating the electoral law the day after the adoption of the constitution on 18 December 2005. Second, despite progress in the demobilization of ex-combatants and restructuring of the army and police, the armed forces integration programme was interrupted after the first phase, and only six of the nine brigades planned had been integrated. The DRC was asked to redouble its efforts in starting the second integration phase and to ensure that the newly integrated brigades received the necessary equipment and were paid regularly and adequately. Third, the mission reiterated that the priority of re-establishing State authority had to be carried out with respect for the rule of law. Additional problems concerned the armed groups in the eastern part of the DRC, regarding which the mission stressed the need for every country concerned to respect the sovereignty of their neighbours, ensure that those groups received no cross-border support, respect the arms embargo, and no longer tolerate the illegal exploitation of natural resources that financed arms trafficking.

In Burundi, where a post-transition Government was already in place, the issue of disengaging the military component of ONUB was raised. The United Nations and Burundi might wish to consider a plan for a phased disengagement and transition from peacekeeping to peacebuilding. The mission felt it advisable for Burundi to establish a dialogue with the international community, the best channel for which would be the proposed Peacebuilding Commission (see p. 93). As to Palipehutu-FNL, the remaining active rebel group in the country, the Government remained open to resuming negotiations to bring the group into the peace process. The briefing recalled the previously expressed readiness of the Council (in its resolution 1577 (2004) [YUN 2004, p. 155]) to consider appropriate measures against individuals who threatened Burundi's peace and national reconciliation process, an option that the mission reminded Burundi was still available.

The head of the mission introduced the mission's report (see above) for consideration by the Council on 6 December [meeting 5315], which took note of the report and endorsed its recommendations on 21 December [meeting 5340] in resolution 1649(2005) (see p. 187).

Standing Advisory Committee on Security Questions

The United Nations Standing Advisory Committee on Security Questions in Central Africa held its twenty-second and twenty-third ministerial meetings in Brazzaville, Congo, on 14-18 March [A/59/769-S/2005/212] and on 29 August–2 September [A/60/393-S/2005/616], with all Committee members (Angola, Burundi, Cameroon, Central African Republic, Chad, Congo, DRC, Equatorial Guinea, Gabon, Rwanda, Sao Tome and Principe) participating. At both meetings, the Committee reviewed the geopolitical and security situation in Burundi, the Central African Republic, the DRC and Chad, as well as the situation between the DRC and Rwanda. The Committee noted considerable improvement in the security situation in Central Africa as a whole and in the countries reviewed in particular. Having led to free and democratic elections, the peace processes under way in most of those countries remained fragile, however, and the countries concerned and others of the subregion, together with the international community, needed to redouble their efforts to consolidate peace. In that regard, the Committee appealed to the subregion to become more closely involved in the settlement of conflicts and to support the ongoing peace processes.

The Committee condemned all forms of violence committed against women and children in conflict or in post-conflict situations, and recommended strengthening the mechanisms to punish those responsible. It exchanged experiences in the implementation of disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programmes for ex-combatants, and urgently appealed for funds to enable timely implementation. It adopted two declarations: one on mercenary activity in Central Africa that had become a serious obstacle to subregional peace, stability and development; and the other on the role of the Economic Community of Central African States in the implementation of the 2004 Declaration on Peace, Security, Democracy and Development in the Great Lakes Region [YUN 2004, p. 116]. The Committee reviewed Central Africa's contribution to the second biennial meeting of States to consider the implementation of the Programme of Action adopted by the 2001 UN Conference on small arms [YUN 2001, p. 499] and noted the activities of the Subregional Centre for Human Rights and Democracy in Central Africa.

The Committee, concerned at the continued tensions and incidents along the DRC-Rwanda border, particularly the presence of Rwandan armed groups in the eastern regions of the DRC, urged the AU Peace and Security Council to implement its 10 January decision to provide a military force to assist the DRC in disarming the anti-Rwandan rebel group ex-FAR/Interahamwe and other hostile forces operating in the DRC. It welcomed the bilateral and tripartite measures agreed upon at the high-level tripartite meeting among Cameroon, the Central African Republic and Chad (Yaoundé, Cameroon, 25-26 August) on the long-term prevention and/or containment of insecurity along their common borders caused by roadblocks set up by armed gangs and others.

The Secretary-General, in response to General Assembly resolution 59/96 [YUN 2004, p. 571], submitted a July report [A/60/166] on the Committee's activities regarding regional confidence-building measures taken at its twenty-second ministerial meeting, updating an earlier report [A/59/182] on the Committee's twentieth [YUN 2003, p. 111] and twenty-first [YUN 2004, p. 118] meetings.

Democratic Republic of the Congo

In 2005, the peace process in the DRC continued to move forward in the context of the 2002 Global and All-Inclusive Agreement on the Transition in the Democratic Republic of the Congo [YUN 2002, p. 125]. The Agreement provided for a two-year transitional period, which started from the formation of a transitional Government, inaugurated on 30 June 2003 as the Government of National Unity and Transition (Transitional Government) [YUN 2003, p. 129], and ended on 30 June 2005. Owing to problems related to the organization of the elections, the National Assembly and Senate jointly decided on 17 June to extend the transitional period for six months, as from 1 July. The period would be renewable once and would expire on the inauguration of the President following national elections, which were to be completed in 2006. The transition and election preparations were supported by the International Committee in Support of the Transition, comprising the five permanent Security Council members, plus Belgium and Canada; four African countries (Angola, Gabon, South Africa and Zambia); the EU and the AU; and MONUC (see below).

As of 17 December, over 25 million citizens of an estimated electorate of 22 to 28 million had registered to vote. On 18 and 19 December, a referendum on the DRC Constitution was held successfully.

By resolution 1596(2005), the Council expanded the scope of the arms embargo it had imposed by resolution 1493(2003) [YUN 2003, p. 130] on armed groups operating in the DRC. By resolution 1616(2005), it renewed the provisions of the embargo until 31 July 2006 and requested the Secretary-General to re-establish the Group of Experts monitoring the flows of arms in the region for a period expiring on 31 January 2006.

MONUC

The United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo (MONUC), established by Security Council resolution 1279 (1999) [YUN 1999, p. 92], was headed by William Lacy Swing (United States), Special Representative of the Secretary-General for the Democratic Republic of the Congo. MONUC continued in 2005 to discharge its mandate, as enhanced by Council resolution 1565(2004) [YUN 2004, p. 129], to provide operational and security support to guarantee the advancement of the transitional processes in the DRC towards elections and the establishment of a democratically elected Government. Its mandate was extended by the Council twice during the year, the first time until 1 October 2005 and the second until 30 September 2006. MONUC was headquartered in the DRC capital, Kinshasa.

Following its consideration of the Secretary-General's special report on the election process, the Council, by resolution 1621(2005) (see p. 181), increased the strength of MONUC by 841 personnel (five formed police units of 125 officers each plus 216 additional police) and authorized MONUC, in close coordination with UNDP, to provide additional support to the Independent Electoral Commission (IEC) for the transport of electoral materials within the DRC. By resolution 1635(2005) (see p. 186), the Council further increased MONUC's military strength by 300 to provide additional security within its area of operations during the electoral period. By its resolution 60/121, the General Assembly authorized the full deployment to MONUC of 507 additional personnel in support of the DRC elections.

Appointment. By an exchange of letters between the Secretary-General and the Security Council on 4 [S/2005/151] and 9 March [S/2005/152], Lieutenant General Babacar Gaye (Senegal) was appointed Force Commander of MONUC, replacing Major General Somaila Isliya (Nigeria), who completed his assignment on 28 February.

Sexual exploitation and abuse

In a 9 February letter to the Security Council [S/2005/79], the Secretary-General discussed the UN response to allegations of sexual exploitation and misconduct by MONUC civilian and military personnel. He reiterated that the United Nations could not tolerate even one instance of a UN peacekeeper victimizing the most vulnerable. Such behaviour did great harm to the distinguished tradition of UN peacekeepers, to troop-contributing Member States and to the reputation and honour of fellow peacekeepers. Most importantly, it violated the fundamental "duty of care" that peacekeepers owed to the very people they were sent to protect and serve. On the basis of the report of Prince Zeid Ra'ad Zeid Al-Hussein (Jordan), the Secretary-General's Adviser on Sexual Exploitation and Abuse by United Nations Peacekeeping Personnel, the United Nations was developing ways for troop-contributing countries to assist in eliminating sexual exploitation and abuse.

In January, the Office of Internal Oversight Services (OIOS) released the report on its investigation into alleged sexual misconduct by peacekeepers serving in Bunia (see p. 118). It identified 72 allegations, of which 20 warranted follow-up action; of those 20, seven individual cases (all military personnel) were fully substantiated. As most of those individuals had been rotated out of the Mission or repatriated, their cases were forwarded to the relevant Member States for action, with a request for information on follow-up measures taken. Additional investigations, carried out by MONUC into allegations against six other military personnel were completed; of those, four were repatriated, one was exonerated and one rotated home before the investigation was concluded. A joint team from the UN Office of Human Resources Management and DPKO investigated another five individuals, all civilians: one was in custody and awaiting trial in his home country, one was reassigned, one was cleared, one was disciplined and one was still under investigation. Also in January, DPKO sent a multidisciplinary team, headed by its Assistant Secretary-General to MONUC, to conduct further investigations and assist MONUC in developing an effective and sustainable response to the issue. The team completed nine investigations, was still investigating 10 others and had closed several files. MONUC had taken a number of measures to eliminate sexual exploitation and abuse: it had adopted a strict non-fraternization policy, imposed a curfew for military contingents, conducted comprehensive training and awareness-raising for all Mission personnel, and put forward proposals for improving contingent welfare facilities.

The Secretary-General appealed to the Council to assist in strengthening MONUC's capacity to conduct self-monitoring and enforcement programmes.

In his March report on MONUC (see p. 172), the Secretary-General said that the Headquarters-based task force on sexual exploitation and abuse had clarified existing policies and provided new guidelines to MONUC and other peacekeeping operations. The multidisciplinary team deployed to MONUC (see above) was increased in February by five highly skilled investigators and would be further strengthened to meet medium-term investigation requirements. The team was working closely with civilian and military colleagues in MONUC to consolidate the investigation process, decrease duplication, provide specialized techniques specific to the prevention of sexual exploitation and abuse, and improve the review process on which disciplinary recommendations were based. It established a sexual exploitation and abuse focal point network with all UN agencies, funds and programmes in the DRC. The MONUC code of conduct was revised to define and clarify behaviour constituting sexual exploitation and abuse.

By its resolution 1592(2005) (see p. 174), the Council urged troop-contributing countries to carefully review the report of the Secretary-General's Special Adviser entitled "A comprehensive strategy to eliminate future sexual exploitation and abuse in UN peacekeeping operations" (see p. 119), and to take appropriate action to prevent sexual exploitation and abuse by their personnel in the Mission, including predeployment awareness-training, and to take disciplinary and other action to ensure full accountability in cases of such misconduct.

In his August report (see p. 179), the Secretary-General stated that the MONUC Office for Addressing Sexual Exploitation and Abuse was established on 1 March. Its activities included investigating allegations of sexual misconduct involving MONUC personnel; developing and implementing policies that emphasized prevention of sexual exploitation and abuse and assistance to victims of such misconduct; training MONUC personnel in that regard; and raising awareness of the issue among the Congolese public. By the end of June, some 400 persons of all categories of MONUC personnel had attended MONUC-conducted training on the prevention of sexual exploitation and abuse.

In his September report (see p. 182), the Secretary-General said that the inter-agency focal point network on sexual exploitation and abuse, chaired by MONUC, was developing common standards and procedures for: the code of conduct; training materials and strategies; the referral of complaints; community outreach; the implementing partners of UN agencies and MONUC, in compliance with the Secretary-General's bulletin [ST/SGB/2003/13] on special measures for protection from sexual exploitation and abuse; and the transmission of complaints received by one agency about incidents involving staff of another agency. MONUC established a Sexual Violence Working Group, which was developing training and advocacy packages for the Congolese military, police and judiciary, and reviewing existing relevant legislation. MONUC also established a database to facilitate the provision of assistance to individual victims.

In his December report (see p. 189), the Secretary-General stated that, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 59/287 (see p. 1474), the MONUC Office for Addressing Sexual Exploitation and Abuse formally handed over all pending cases and new allegations to OIOS on 4 October. From 25 December 2004 to mid-October 2005, 111 investigations into allegations of sexual exploitation and abuse, involving 167 MONUC personnel, were completed; allegations were substantiated against 78 (over 46 per cent of the alleged perpetrators), representing 0.4 per cent of all MONUC personnel in all levels and categories. On 8 November, the MONUC Conduct and Discipline Team was established to ensure the prevention of all types of personnel misconduct, with emphasis on sexual exploitation and abuse, and compliance with and enforcement of UN standards of conduct among all categories of Mission personnel. By 16 November, the Team had held 60 briefings for over 1,500 MONUC personnel.

Attack on peacekeepers

The Secretary-General, in describing the security situation in the district of Ituri, north-east of the DRC, as contained in his March report on MONUC, stated that, on 22 February, the Union des patriotes congolais (UPC) attacked MONUC peacekeepers in Nizi, wounding two Pakistani soldiers. On 25 February, nine Bangladeshi peacekeepers protecting a camp of internally displaced persons were killed near the town of Kafé, 80 kilometres north of Bunia, on Lake Albert. The attack might have been in response to the increasing pressure by MONUC on militia groups over the previous weeks, notably the 24 February arrest of numerous militia members of the Front des nationalistes et intégrationistes (FNI) in their Datule stronghold. It might also have been designed to discourage the International Committee in Support of the Transition (CIAT) [YUN 2004, p. 119], which was in Bunia as part of efforts to ensure the extension of State administration to the area.

In response, MONUC and CIAT asked the Transitional Government to arrest the FNI leaders, in particular its President, Floribert Njabu, its former military leader, Goda Sukpa, and its current military commander, Etienne Lona; the head of the UPC/L faction, Thomas Lubanga, and its military commander, Bosco Ntaganda; and the head of the Front de résistance patriotique de l'Ituri (FRPI), Germain Katanga. Etienne Lona, who surrendered to MONUC, was arrested by the Government in Bunia on 1 March. MONUC also asked that the Transitional Government send clear orders to the armed groups in Ituri that they had to join the disarmament process immediately.

Also on 1 March, MONUC successfully mounted a large-scale cordon-and-search operation with attack-helicopter support to dismantle an FNI headquarters in Loga (north-east of Bunia), in Ituri. In the exchange of fire, between 50 and 60 FNI militia were killed and two Pakistani MONUC soldiers were injured.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (March)

On 2 March [meeting 5133], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2005/10 on behalf of the Council:

> The Security Council condemns with the utmost firmness the attack against a patrol of the United Nations Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo by the Front des Nationalistes et Intégrationnistes in Ituri, which occurred on 25 February 2005 near the town of Kafé, resulting in the murder of nine Bangladeshi peacekeepers. It offers its condolences to the victims' families and to the authorities of Bangladesh. It commends the dedication of the Mission's personnel, who operate in particularly hazardous conditions. It welcomes the action of the Mission against the militia groups responsible for these killings and the Mission's continued robust action in pursuit of its mandate.
> The Council considers this aggression, by its intentional and well-planned nature, to be an unacceptable outrage. It calls upon the Government of National Unity and Transition immediately to take all necessary measures to bring to justice the perpetrators, sponsors and authors of this attack, and welcomes the first arrests undertaken by the Government. It endorses in this regard the serious concern expressed in Kinshasa on 28 February 2005 by the International Committee for Support to the Transition over the illegal and criminal activities of militia in Ituri and their military and political leaders, in particular Floribert Ndjabu, Goda Sukpa, Etienne Lona, Thomas Lubanga, Bosco Tanganda and Germain Katanga. It expresses its concern that the integration of Ituri militia officers into the Congolese armed forces has failed to lead to the disarmament of their troops which should proceed without delay.
> The Council calls upon the Government of National Unity and Transition to strengthen its support for the implementation of the disarmament and community reintegration programme for Ituri militiamen. It considers those who try to impede this programme as a threat to the political process in the Democratic Republic of the Congo. It also calls upon the Government of National Unity and Transition urgently to deploy additional integrated troops and police units to Ituri, and invites donors to provide support for this vital undertaking.
> The Council reminds all States in the region of their responsibility to ensure compliance for the arms embargo imposed by resolution 1493(2003) and is considering additional measures it might take to reinforce implementation and monitoring of the embargo. It further urges those States to ensure that their territories cannot be used by any Congolese armed group, notably the Ituri militia, whose activities perpetuate a climate of insecurity that affects the whole region.
> The Council reaffirms its full support for the Mission, and urges it to continue to fulfil its mandate with determination. It notes the importance for the Mission to continue to strengthen its action in Ituri and in North and South Kivu.

Responding to the foregoing presidential statement, the DRC informed the Security Council on 21 March [S/2005/190] that, on that date, Thomas Lubanga was detained and immediately transferred to Makala prison; Floribert Ndjabu, Goda Sukpa and Germain Katanga were already under arrest; and Etienne Lona had reportedly surrendered to MONUC. Bosco Ntaganda remained at large and continued to cause trouble in an area in Ituri not under the control of the Congolese authorities. The DRC requested all possible assistance from the Council and MONUC for his capture.

Financing

In April, during its resumed fifty-ninth session, the General Assembly considered the Secretary-General's revised budget for MONUC for the period 1 July 2004 to 30 June 2005 [A/59/707], amounting to $962,012,400 against the initial appropriation of $709,123,200, together with the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) [A/59/735].

Political developments and MONUC activities

Report of Secretary-General (March). In response to Security Council resolution 1565(2004) [YUN 2004, p. 129], the Secretary-General issued his seventeenth (March) report on MONUC [S/2005/167], covering major developments in the Mission area and progress in the implementation of the MONUC mandate since December 2004 [ibid., p. 134]. He reported some progress in the implementation of the transitional agenda, but no significant improvement in the difficult relationship between the components of the Transitional Government. Implementation of some major aspects of the transition, including security-sector reform and the legislative agenda, had experienced considerable delays. By 3 January, Parliament had adopted laws on the armed forces, nationality and voter registration. However, legislation on the constitutional referendum and amnesty, the status of the political opposition, the financing of political parties, the draft constitution and the electoral law remained outstanding. A preliminary draft of the constitution was discussed in the Senate, including such issues as the balance of power between the President and the Prime Minister, and between the central Government and provincial governments.

On 7 January, the IEC President indicated to the press that, in his view, it would not be feasible to hold elections in June and that a date later in the year should be considered. The statement fuelled popular suspicion that the Transitional Government wanted to postpone the elections. That led to demonstrations on 9 and 10 January in Kinshasa, Goma and Mbuji-Mayi, which resulted in nine civilian deaths

Progress was made by the DRC-Rwanda Joint Verification Mechanism in addressing cross-border issues, and by the DRC-Rwanda-Uganda Tripartite Joint Commission in de-escalating regional tensions—both established in 2004 [YUN 2004, p. 134]. Joint verification teams were established in Goma and Bukavu by the DRC and Rwanda and facilitated by MONUC and the AU. The Goma team investigated 18 allegations, two of which were confirmed, including the presence of FDLR in Lusamambo and an internally displaced persons camp at Ngungu in the Kalehe territory near the Rwandan border. The team confirmed that a Rwandan soldier was being detained by FARDC elements in Kashebere, whose return was demanded by Rwanda. MONUC encouraged the parties to address those issues jointly. The Bukavu team became operational on 8 February; it carried out two verification missions, to Kalonge and Mule in the DRC, to investigate allegations of FDLR activities in the area, but which it could not corroborate.

The Tripartite Joint Commission met in Washington, D.C., on 2 February, with ministerial-level officials of the DRC, Rwanda and Uganda in attendance; the United Nations was also represented. The meeting discussed the use of pre-existing mechanisms to settle disputes and agreed to set up subcommissions on security and defence issues and on diplomatic affairs. At a further meeting (Kampala, Uganda, 23 February), the Commission agreed to establish a joint intelligence fusion, operations and analysis cell, through which they would share information on security issues and take appropriate action.

Regarding the security situation in Ituri, military operations by various armed groups had increased, particularly in the Tchomia and Kasenyi areas. MONUC adopted a four-pronged, proactive strategy that included pressing the Transitional Government to take decisive measures against any military group that opposed disarmament and the extension of State authority; strengthening coordination of the disarmament and community reintegration process, so as to conclude the process by 31 March; increasing political and financial support for the District Commissioner's office; and supporting legitimate authorities in re-establishing control over customs revenue. The Transitional Government had yet to put in place a transparent revenue collection system to end the fighting over the control of parallel tax and custom structures.

In early January, isolated attacks between UPC/L and FNI in the area of Djugu evolved into a wider confrontation between the two groups in the Tchomia and Kasenyi regions. In late January, Lendu fighters and FNI militia attacked Hema villages in the Tche area of Djugu; in response, MONUC launched several operations to enhance security there. On 24 February, MONUC launched a cordon-and-search operation at Ariwara, disarming 116 soldiers of the Forces armées du peuple congolais (FAPC) and collecting 118 weapons and ammunition. It also arrested 30 FNI militia and confiscated weapons in the village of Datule.

The security situation in North and South Kivu remained tense. In response to Rwanda's threats in December 2004 [YUN 2004, p. 135] to enter the DRC to disarm FDLR forcibly, the DRC sent additional FARDC troops to the area, resulting in increased inter-FARDC clashes. Reports were received of collaboration between FDLR and the Mayi-Mayi and between FDLR and FARDC elements. In North Kivu, the cease-fire between opposing FARDC units around Kanyabayonga held, but tensions remained high. In mid-January, MONUC withdrew on schedule from the 10-kilometre security zone it had established in December 2004 on the Kirumba-Mighobwe axis and reinforced its positions between Mighobwe and Kanyabayonga and in Butembo. In the Rutshuru territory, nine soldiers and one civilian were killed in FDLR raids between mid-January and early February.

As to the national disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programme, the Supreme Defence Council, on 25 January, revised its estimate of the number of FARDC combatants from 300,000 to 250,000. Subsequently, the Structure militaire d'intégration issued a revised plan for the emergency disarmament or mixing and retraining of troops, under which 10 disarmament centres would be opened before the end of March and MONUC would register arms handed in during the disarmament process, destroy unserviceable weapons and turn over the serviceable ones to the integrated army. Disarmament centres had so far been opened at Mushaki, Nyaleke (North Kivu), Kamina (Katanga) and Kitona (Bas-Congo). An estimated 11,500 troops had arrived at the centres and had handed in their weapons.

In accordance with resolution 1565(2004) [YUN 2004, p. 129], three joint commissions, on essential legislation, security-sector reform and elections, were established. The Joint Commission on Essential Legislation met twice, beginning on 24 January, with a focus on supporting the transitional institutions to adopt, as a priority, a draft post-transitional Constitution and the electoral law. The Joint Commission on Security Sector Reform held its first meeting on 26 January.

IEC, with the support of the EU, MONUC and other international donors, prepared a budget of some $285 million for the electoral process, which was endorsed by the World Bank Consultative Group in December 2004. The funds would be managed through a UNDP trust fund. The Secretary-General requested DPKO and the Electoral Assistance Division to field a mission to the DRC to work jointly with MONUC in finalizing a comprehensive operational election plan.

The number of foreign combatants and their dependants repatriated to Uganda, Rwanda and Burundi totalled 11,410. Progress in repatriation remained slow due to the continued resistance by the hard-line leadership of the armed groups and the persistent military tension and instability in the Kivus. The presence and activities on Congolese territory of ex-FAR/Interahamwe remained a destabilizing factor in the relations between the DRC and Rwanda. In that regard, MONUC, in consultation with Congolese authorities, key Member States and Rwanda, was implementing a strategy of political and military pressure in conjunction with a reliance on justice. In February, Transitional Government officials met with the FDLR leadership to persuade them to renounce publicly the use of force against Rwanda, condemn the 1994 genocide in that country [YUN 1994, p. 282] and agree to disarm voluntarily and be repatriated. With its deployment of two brigades to the Kivus, MONUC would step up military pressure by conducting operations to disrupt and weaken FDLR formations, thereby to limit their area of operations. It was also assisting FARDC in developing a concept of operations for the forcible disarmament of FDLR, including logistic support.

Regarding the human rights situation in the DRC, a special MONUC team continued to monitor gross violations of human rights in North Kivu. Investigations determined that ex-Armée nationale congolaise (ex-ANC) elements of FARDC were responsible for the arbitrary killings of at least 30 unarmed civilians at Buramba and of dozens more in the Masisi territory, following the group's occupation of Nyabiondo in December 2004. The North Kivu Governor, who initiated commissions of inquiry into the violations, denied that FARDC (ex-ANC) troops were responsible. MONUC investigated attacks on villages in Rutshuru, near the Ugandan border, where sexual violence was widely reported. In Ituri, arbitrary killings, sexual violence and abductions by militia groups continued on a daily basis.

The Secretary-General said he was deeply disturbed by the general deterioration of security and unabated abuse of human rights in Ituri. He called on the Transitional Government to make visible progress towards the holding of elections, most importantly through the adoption of the draft constitution and electoral law and the commencement of voter registration. He also called on the Congolese leaders to ensure that the Constitution and the electoral law provided for an inclusive political process, with a clear balance of power between the executive and legislative branches of Government, as well as for an independent judiciary, a representative legislature and clear lines of accountability. He called on the international community to step up its efforts and financial and logistic support with regard to security sector reform, and to provide logistics and training support for FARDC units. He stressed that the establishment of an integrated and professional army and police force was key to the MONUC exit strategy, and urged the international community to organize itself around a lead country to support those efforts. The Secretary-General recommended that the Council extend MONUC's mandate for a period of one year, until 31 March 2006.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 30 March [meeting 5155], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1592(2005). The draft [S/2005/207] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Recalling its previous resolutions and the statements by its President concerning the Democratic Republic of the Congo, in particular resolution 1565(2004) of 1 October 2004, and the statement of 2 March 2005,

Reaffirming its commitment to respect the sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of the Democratic Republic of the Congo as well as of all

States in the region, and its support for the process of the Global and All-Inclusive Agreement on the Transition in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, signed in Pretoria on 17 December 2002, and calling upon all the Congolese parties to honour their commitments in this regard, in particular so that free, fair and peaceful elections can take place,

Reiterating its serious concern regarding the continuation of hostilities by armed groups and militias in the eastern part of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, particularly in the provinces of North and South Kivu and in the Ituri district, and by the grave violations of human rights and of international humanitarian law that accompany them, calling upon the Government of National Unity and Transition to bring the perpetrators to justice without delay, and recognizing that the continuing presence of ex-Forces armées rwandaises and Interahamwe elements remains a threat for the local civilian population and an impediment to good-neighbourly relations between the Democratic Republic of the Congo and Rwanda,

Welcoming, in this regard, the African Union's support for efforts to further peace in the eastern part of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, and calling upon the African Union to work closely with the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo in defining its role in the region,

Recalling its condemnation of the attack by one of these militias against members of the Mission on 25 February 2005, and welcoming the first steps taken to date to bring them to justice, in particular the arrests of militia leaders suspected of bearing responsibility for human rights abuses,

Reiterating its call upon the Congolese parties, when selecting individuals for key posts in the Government of National Unity and Transition, including the armed forces and national police, to take into account the record and commitment of those individuals with regard to respect for international humanitarian law and human rights,

Recalling that all the parties bear responsibility for ensuring security with respect to civilian populations, in particular women, children and other vulnerable persons, and expressing concern at the continuing levels of sexual violence,

Reaffirming its full support for the Mission and for its personnel, who operate in particularly hazardous conditions, and welcoming the robust action it is undertaking in pursuit of its mandate,

Bearing in mind the third special report of the Secretary-General of 16 August 2004 on the Mission and its recommendations, and aware of the importance of keeping under review the situation in the Katanga and KasaV provinces,

Recalling the link between the illicit exploitation and trade of natural resources in certain regions and the fuelling of armed conflicts, condemning categorically the illegal exploitation of natural resources and other sources of wealth of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, and urging all States, especially those in the region including the Democratic Republic of the Congo itself, to take appropriate steps in order to end these illegal activities,

Taking note of the seventeenth report of the Secretary-General of 15 March 2005 on the Mission, and looking forward to the special report on the electoral process announced by the Secretary-General in paragraph 34 of his seventeenth report,

Noting that the situation in the Democratic Republic of the Congo continues to constitute a threat to international peace and security in the region,

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Decides to extend the mandate of the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, as contained in resolution 1565(2004), until 1 October 2005, with the intention to renew it for further periods;

2. Reaffirms its demand that all parties cooperate fully with the operations of the Mission and that they ensure the safety of, as well as unhindered and immediate access for, United Nations and associated personnel in carrying out their mandate, throughout the territory of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, and in particular that all parties provide full access to Mission military observers, including to all ports, airports, airfields, military bases and border crossings, and requests the Secretary-General to report without delay any failure to comply with these demands;

3. Urges the Government of National Unity and Transition to do its utmost to ensure the security of civilians, including humanitarian personnel, by effectively extending State authority throughout the territory of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, and in particular in North and South Kivu and in Ituri;

4. Calls upon the Government of National Unity and Transition to carry out the reform of the security sector, through the expeditious integration of the armed forces and of the national police of the Democratic Republic of the Congo and in particular by ensuring adequate payment and logistical support for their personnel, and stresses the need in this regard to implement without delay the national disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programme for Congolese combatants;

5. Also calls upon the Government of National Unity and Transition to develop with the Mission a joint concept of operations for the disarmament of foreign combatants by the armed forces of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, with the assistance of the Mission, within its mandate and capabilities;

6. Calls upon the donor community, as a matter of urgency, to continue to engage firmly in the provision of assistance needed for the integration, training and equipping of the armed forces and of the national police of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, and urges the Government of National Unity and Transition to promote all possible means to facilitate and to expedite cooperation to this end;

7. Emphasizing that the Mission is authorized to use all necessary means, within its capabilities and in the areas where its armed units are deployed, to deter any attempt at the use of force to threaten the political process, and to ensure the protection of civilians under imminent threat of physical violence, from any armed group, foreign or Congolese, in particular the ex-Forces armées rwandaises and Interahamwe, encourages the Mission in this regard to continue to make full use of its mandate under resolution 1565(2004) in the eastern part of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, and stresses that, in accordance with its mandate, the Mission may use cordon and search tactics to prevent attacks on civilians and to disrupt the military capability of illegal armed groups that continue to use violence in those areas;

8. Calls upon all the parties to the transition in the Democratic Republic of the Congo to make concrete progress towards the holding of elections, as provided for by the Global and All-Inclusive Agreement on the Transition in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, in particular in furthering the early adoption of the constitution and of the electoral law, as well as the registration of voters;

9. Demands that the Governments of Uganda, Rwanda, as well as the Democratic Republic of the Congo put a stop to the use of their respective territories in support of violations of the arms embargo imposed by resolution 1493(2003) of 28 July 2003 or of activities of armed groups operating in the region;

10. Urges all States neighbouring the Democratic Republic of the Congo to impede any kind of support to the illegal exploitation of Congolese natural resources, particularly by preventing the flow of such resources through their respective territories;

11. Reaffirms its concern regarding acts of sexual exploitation and abuse committed by United Nations personnel against the local population, and requests the Secretary-General to ensure compliance with the zero tolerance policy he has defined and with the measures put in place to prevent and investigate all forms of misconduct, discipline those found responsible and provide support to the victims, and to pursue active training and awareness-raising of all Mission personnel, and further requests the Secretary-General to keep the Council regularly informed of the measures implemented and their effectiveness;

12. Urges troop-contributing countries carefully to review the letter dated 24 March 2005 from the Secretary-General to the President of the Security Council and to take appropriate action to prevent sexual exploitation and abuse by their personnel in the Mission, including the conduct of predeployment awareness-training, and to take disciplinary action and other action to ensure full accountability in cases of such misconduct involving their personnel;

13. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Declarations of intent to disarm

Rwanda, by a 1 April communiqué [S/2005/223], informed the Security Council that it had received information that the ex-FAR/Interahamwe forces (also known as FDLR/FOCA) operating in the eastern DRC had decided to disarm unconditionally and to return to Rwanda. Rwanda urged the DRC and the international community to act with dispatch to ensure the expeditious disarmament and return of those forces. It remained ready to receive all former combatants returning to Rwanda and to assist in their reintegration. Rwanda welcomed the commitment of the Sant' Egidio community in its role as mediator to join the international community in working for a speedy disarmament and demobilization of those groups. It expressed grave concern that the United Nations, the EU and some countries planned to hold discussions with ex-FAR/Interahamwe, and that the political leadership of groups responsible for the 1994 genocide was based in Belgium with an official address.

A 24 June assessment of the Security Council's work under the Presidency of China [S/2005/415] included information that the Council was briefed on 7 April by the Assistant Secretary-General for Peacekeeping Operations on the 31 March FDLR statement issued in Rome, in which FDLR condemned the 1994 genocide in Rwanda [YUN 1994, p. 282] and committed itself to renounce the use of force and cease all offensive operations against Rwanda.

The thirty-third meeting of the AU Peace and Security Council (Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, 24 June) [S/2005/429] reiterated the AU's determination to contribute to the effective disarmament and neutralization of ex-FAR/Interahamwe and other armed groups in the eastern DRC and encouraged the DRC, the other countries of the region and the international community to do their utmost to persuade FDLR to honour unconditionally and without delay its commitments made in Rome on 31 March.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 12 April [meeting 5162], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2005/15 on behalf of the Council:

> The Security Council welcomes the statement issued by the Forces démocratiques de libération du Rwanda in Rome, on 31 March 2005, in which they condemn the 1994 genocide and commit themselves to renounce the use of force and cease all offensive operations against Rwanda. It considers this encouraging statement as a significant opportunity to move towards the return of peace in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, national reconciliation in Rwanda, and full normalization of relations between the two countries. It commends the role of independent mediator played by the Sant'Egidio community.
> The Council calls upon the Forces démocratiques de libération du Rwanda to turn their positive words into action and to demonstrate their commitment to peace by immediately handing all their arms to the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo and by taking part in the programme put in place for their earliest voluntary and peaceful return to Rwanda or resettlement, as well as by assisting the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda in Arusha to fulfil its mandate, particularly with regard to the arrest and transfer to its custody of indictees who remain at large.
> The Council encourages all other armed groups in the Democratic Republic of the Congo that have not yet done so to renounce likewise the use of force and to take part without delay in the programmes of disarmament, demobilization and reintegration.

The Council urges the Governments of the Democratic Republic of the Congo and Rwanda to work together, in close cooperation with the Mission, to make use of the chance given to them to contribute to peace and stability in the whole Great Lakes region of Africa.

The Council welcomes the commitment of the Government of Rwanda to receive former combatants, and urges the Government of Rwanda to guarantee the return and reintegration of members of the Forces démocratiques de libération du Rwanda and their dependents to be repatriated, in accordance with applicable standards of international law and with respect for the rights and freedoms of the human being.

The Council recalls the need for an effective programme of reintegration to be quickly implemented with the support, as appropriate, of the international community.

Press statement. According to a 26 April press statement by the Security Council President [SC/8369], the Council was briefed by the Under-Secretary-General for Peacekeeping Operations that political developments in the DRC were at a point when the transition process was entering a key phase. The possibility that the Council might send a number of its ambassadors on a mission to the DRC capital, Kinshasa, was discussed, a decision which would be taken at an appropriate stage. The Council encouraged the Congolese parties to carry through their political process in full respect of the principles set out in the 2002 Global and All-Inclusive Agreement [YUN 2002, p. 125]. The Council remained committed to supporting the process, including through its strong support for the action by the Special Representative and CIAT in Kinshasa.

Election preparations

In a May special report [S/2005/320], the Secretary-General provided an overview of progress towards the holding of elections in the DRC, including the legislative and operational framework, the political situation and the security environment. Based on the findings of an April UN mission to the DRC to assess electoral preparations, the report also presented MONUC's plans for assisting the Congolese people to achieve a viable and open electoral process.

The Secretary-General said that, while considerable difficulties had been encountered during the previous two years, the Transitional Government had made significant strides in implementing the objectives of 2002 Global and All-Inclusive Agreement, and the Congolese people were increasingly focused on the forthcoming national elections, the first in the DRC since 1965. The elections faced a number of challenges: the logistical task of reaching all eligible voters in a country the size of Europe with virtually no roads; a population without identity cards and no census since 1984; political tensions and insecurity from armed groups; and pressure from the public's high expectations for change. The electoral process would also be affected by a number of key transitional issues on which progress was significantly delayed, in particular the integration and reform of the army and police, the legislative agenda, the extension of State administration, and the financial management of the country. The Secretary-General said it was essential that the elections be sufficiently credible in the eyes of the Congolese electorate and that the political parties encourage broad acceptance of the process and its results. At a March seminar for political parties, IEC presented a draft code of conduct for the electoral process, which was adopted by general consensus by all parties present and was being finalized for their signature. The Secretary-General said Congolese leaders should be urged to pledge publicly, on behalf of their respective political parties and followers, to accept the results of the elections and condemn any use of violence, intimidation or corruption during the electoral process; the international community should ensure that those commitments were respected.

To address reports of growing and widespread misuse of State resources, and to help strengthen public confidence in the transition process, some Member States had suggested the establishment of a joint mechanism of Congolese officials and international donors to support the transparent management of State resources. Strongly supporting the idea, the Secretary-General said the mechanism could take the form a "Group of Friends on Good Governance" and include the World Bank Group, the International Monetary Fund (IMF) and UNDP; he asked his Special Representative to explore the concept with his Congolese interlocutors and donors.

The Secretary-General observed that, despite the security, operational and political challenges, elections could be held in the DRC within a reasonable period of time, given sufficient focus and support by the Transitional Government and assistance from international partners. It was primarily the responsibility of the Transitional Government to create the conditions necessary for stability in the post-transition period and for the success of the electoral process. The Secretary-General strongly urged the transitional leaders to enter into the commitments recommended, including the signing of a code of conduct and the establishment of a "Group of Friends on Good Governance". He remained deeply concerned over the state of security sector reform, stating that the Transitional Government should not allow armed elements of former factions to be politically manipulated during the electoral period. It had to ensure transparent payment of salaries and financial support to a viable "brassage" process, as well as support to the new integrated brigades. The Secretary-General urged donors to transform their commitments to the electoral budget into actual disbursements to avoid bottlenecks in the electoral operations.

In the context of MONUC's role in disarming more than 12,000 combatants in Ituri and in increasing security in North Kivu and South Kivu, the Secretary-General recommended that the Council consider: increasing MONUC's military strength by some 2,590 all ranks to a total of 19,290—the additional military personnel to be deployed temporarily during and in the immediate period following the elections; strengthening the civilian police component by an additional 261 civilian police and five formed police units to undertake training and institution-building activities; and mandating MONUC to provide logistical support, as requested by IEC, for the transport of electoral material from Kinshasa to the 145 territories (into which the districts were subdivided) and 21 cities in the DRC.

In a July addendum to his report [S/2005/320/Add.1], the Secretary-General informed the Council that the financial implications arising from the recommended support by MONUC for the elections were projected at some $188.8 million for the 12-month period.

Extension of transition period. On 17 June [S/2005/408], the DRC National Assembly and Senate, in a joint decision, extended the transition period in the DRC for six months as from 1 July, in accordance with the Transitional Constitution. The period would be renewable once and would expire on the inauguration of the DRC President after the elections. Annexed to the decision was a tentative schedule of elections drawn up by IEC.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (June)

On 29 June [meeting 5218], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2005/27 on behalf of the Council:

> The Security Council takes note of the joint decision reached by the two Houses of Parliament of the Democratic Republic of the Congo on 17 June 2005 to extend for a period of six months, renewable once, the transitional period that was to expire on 30 June 2005, in accordance with the provisions of the Global and All-Inclusive Agreement on the Transition in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, signed in Pretoria on 17 December 2002, and with article 196 of the transitional Constitution.
> The Council calls upon all Congolese parties to respect this decision, which aims to allow the elections provided for by the Agreement to take place in satisfactory logistic and security conditions. It encourages the Congolese people to mobilize for and conduct the electoral process in a peaceful manner, and urges, in particular, candidates and political parties to refrain from any action that might disrupt the process. It takes note, in this regard, of the recommendation contained in the special report of the Secretary-General of 26 May 2005 on elections in the Democratic Republic of the Congo that all political parties should sign and commit themselves to respect the agreed code of conduct for the electoral process. The Council urges all parties and transitional institutions to make every effort to respect scrupulously the timetable for polls developed by the Independent Electoral Commission, and in particular to begin preparations for the referendum on the draft Constitution as soon as possible.
> The Council welcomes the progress made so far in the preparation of the elections, in particular the adoption and promulgation of the referendum law, and the start of voter registration in Kinshasa, which marks an historic and important step in the electoral process in the Democratic Republic of the Congo. The Council calls upon the transitional authorities to accelerate those reforms remaining to be carried out, in particular drafting of the electoral law and integration of the security forces.
> The Council underlines the importance of elections as the foundation for the longer term restoration of peace and stability, national reconciliation, and establishment of the rule of law in the Democratic Republic of the Congo. It calls upon the Congolese authorities to exercise efficient, transparent and comprehensive control over State finances, ensuring that there is no impunity for those responsible for acts of embezzlement or corruption. In this regard, the Council encourages the Congolese authorities to continue consultations with their international partners, in full respect for the sovereignty of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, and to put in place credible arrangements to strengthen support for good governance and transparent economic management.

Massacres

As described in a later communication from the Secretary-General to the Security Council [S/2006/28], a group of armed Rwandan elements attacked the village of Kabingu in Ntulu-Mamba in South Kivu on 9 July. A MONUC multidisciplinary team that investigated the attack, from 12 to 20 July, confirmed that over 50 civilians were killed, more than 40 of whom, mostly women and children, were either burned alive in their huts or killed by machete blows while trying to escape; 15 others were injured, 6 of whom later died of their injuries; 11 women were raped. Widespread looting was also reported. Eyewitnesses indicated that the perpetrators were a group of about 30 well-armed Rwandans from an area near Kahuzi-Biega National Park, approximately 20 kilometres north-west of Bukavu—the same group whom local sources claimed was responsible for the 23 May massacre of at least 14 civilians in Nindja in Kabare territory. Witnesses suggested that the attack on Kabingu might have been a reprisal for the population's collaboration with FARDC and MONUC.

On 12 July [S/2005/451], the DRC condemned the attack on the village of Ntulu-mamba and those attacks carried out by FDLR, ex-FAR/Interahamwe, Rasta and other armed gangs, as well as attacks on the villages of Nyamirima, Nyakakoma and Ishasha, 150 kilometres north of Goma in North Kivu, which it said resulted in more than 30 deaths, over 50 wounded and 39 huts burned down. The DRC recalled that, despite FDLR's commitment of 31 March (see p. 176) to abandon its military activities and return to Rwanda, it had not yet done so. The DRC had always held that whatever potential threat the armed gangs posed to their countries of origin, they were a permanent danger and cause of insecurity to the Congolese populations. With UN support, the DRC was determined to intensify its operations to secure the regions affected by the attacks and forcibly disarm the gangs. It expected the firm support of the international community in that regard.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (July)

On 13 July [meeting 5226], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2005/31 on behalf of the Council:

> The Security Council condemns with the utmost firmness the massacre of some 50 people, most of them women and children, which occurred on 9 July 2005 in Ntulu-Mamba, in the Democratic Republic of the Congo.
> The Council requests the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for the Democratic Republic of the Congo to establish the facts and report to the Council as quickly as possible.
> The Council calls upon the Congolese authorities to prosecute and bring to justice expeditiously the perpetrators and those responsible for these crimes, and requests the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo to provide all necessary support. The Council encourages the Congolese authorities to continue their efforts to ensure the protection of civilians and respect for human rights within their territory.
> The Council stresses the need to bring to an end, particularly in the Kivus and Ituri, attacks by armed groups on local populations, which not only cause further suffering to civilians but also threaten the stability of the entire region, as well as the holding of elections in the Democratic Republic of the Congo. The Council demands that the Force démocratique de libération du Rwanda abide by the commitment made in Rome, on 31 March 2005, renounce the use of force and settle without delay the issue of the return to Rwanda of their combatants.
> The Council reaffirms its full support for the Mission. It welcomes the robust actions the Mission is undertaking in pursuit of its mandate, and the assistance it provides to the armed forces of the Democratic Republic of the Congo in reinforcing the safety of the population.

The extended transition period

Report of Secretary-General (August). In his eighteenth (August) report on MONUC [S/2005/506] the Secretary-General reported that, at the end of June, when the transition period was originally to end, and into the first weeks of its six-month extended period, the Transitional Government maintained public order amid calls for violent disturbances and heightened tension due to the debate over the future of the transition process. That debate had divided the Congolese people into two major camps: those participating in the transitional institutions, who favoured an extension of the transition; and those largely not represented in the transitional institutions, who accused the Transitional Government of failing to organize the elections on time, opposed an automatic extension of the transition and called for public demonstrations to stop the transitional process. While the large-scale actions called for by the Union pour la démocratie et le progrès social (UDPS), the lead party of the groups opposing the automatic extension, did not materialize, clashes between demonstrators and security forces between 29 June and 1 July resulted in a number of deaths in Kinshasa, Tshikapa and Mbuji-Mayi. Nonetheless, by 30 June, almost 250,000 voters had received their electoral cards in Kinshasa, a tangible proof that the transition was making progress and that the electoral process was under way.

On 13 May, the National Assembly adopted the draft constitution, which was to be submitted to a referendum on 27 November (see p. 189); on 23 June, the President promulgated the referendum law. A preliminary draft of the electoral law prepared by IEC and the Ministry of the Interior was under review by national and international experts. On 18 June, 186 of the 221 registered political parties signed the code of conduct prepared by IEC, outlining the principles for conducting the electoral process in a transparent, equitable, credible and non-violent manner; UDPS and the Parti du peuple pour la reconstruction et la démocratie (PPRD) had yet to sign the code. For security reasons, voter registration was being implemented throughout the country in five stages, beginning with Kinshasa (20 June) and in Province Orientale and Bas-Congo (25 July); Katanga, Kasai Oriental and Kasai Occidental; Maniema, North and South Kivu; and ending with Bandundu and Equateur by 30 September. By 26 July, more than 2.7 million voters had registered.

The shortfall in available funds to finance the upcoming elections was of serious concern. Of the estimated total budget of $422 million, only $272.8 million had been pledged, and additional requirements of $103 million were still pending a decision of the Security Council. If the funds were not approved, the electoral timetable could experience considerable delays. In addition, the Transitional Government estimated that some $48 million would be needed for electoral security, and a further $14.25 million for a communications system.

IEC launched a civic education campaign on 18 June, and disseminated most of the major legal texts relating to the elections, in the four national languages (Swahili, Lingala, Tshiluba and Kikongo). MONUC, in partnership with the UNDP and Appui au processus électoral au Congo, produced four videos on the electoral process in those languages.

Some progress was made towards de-escalating regional tensions as a result of the meeting of the Foreign Ministers of the DRC, Rwanda and Uganda (Lubumbashi, DRC, 21 April) under their 2004 tripartite agreement on regional security [YUN 2004, p. 134]. The parties reaffirmed their commitment to ending the presence and activities of foreign armed groups in the eastern DRC; agreed to support FARDC efforts to disarm, demobilize and repatriate FDLR combatants to Rwanda, with MONUC support, and to establish a "fusion cell" for the exchange and analysis of information on border security.

The security situation in Ituri remained volatile, despite robust measures taken by FARDC, with MONUC support, to disarm combatants. Moreover, the Transitional Government had yet to extend its authority throughout the district. On 24 May, a joint FARDC-MONUC operation forcefully expelled the Lubanga wing of UPC/L from its stronghold in Katoto. Under the disarmament and community reintegration programme, which ended on 25 June, 15,607 combatants of various militia groups, including 4,395 children (840 of whom were girls) were disarmed, and some 6,200 weapons collected. The sustainability of the programmes for the reintegration of ex-combatants into civilian life and of ex-militiamen into FARDC was a major challenge. Two thirds of ex-combatants were unemployed, and, without prospects for long-term socio-economic opportunities, were likely to be tempted to take up arms again. The implementation of reinsertion projects, costing some $3 million, was progressing slowly. As a result of the disarmament exercise, FAPC and the Kisembo wing of UPC ceased to exist. Reports indicated, however, that other groups, including UPC/L and FNI, were consolidating their remaining forces under a new alliance called the Mouvement révolutionnaire congolais (MRC). In that connection, the Secretary-General strongly urged neighbouring States to ensure that remaining militia groups were not allowed to use their territories as rear bases, safe havens or supply routes for illegal arms trafficking. MONUC urged the Transitional Government to issue international arrest warrants for militia leaders who might have taken refuge in a neighboring country.

The MONUC brigade in North Kivu carried out operations in close coordination with FARDC against armed elements in the province to facilitate free and safe access for civilians, and joint MONUC-FARDC operations were conducted in FDLR-held territory to limit FDLR's freedom of movement. In Katanga and the Kasais, the threat to the electoral process posed by political tensions and uncontrolled armed groups remained of serious concern.

In early May, the FDLR President, Ignace Murwanashyaka, travelled to Kinshasa and to North and South Kivu, apparently to sensitize the estimated 40,000 FDLR combatants and dependants believed to be operating in those provinces and prepare them to implement the FDLR 31 March declaration. He left the country in mid-May without, however, issuing orders for them to enter the disarmament, demobilization, repatriation and rehabilitation programme, for which MONUC had prepared six temporary assembly areas. There followed a slight increase in voluntary programme participation, but no large-scale repatriation. Between January 2003 and 27 June 2005, a total of 11,729 foreign combatants and their dependants were registered as having returned to their countries.

The Secretary-General noted that, despite tensions at the end of the first transition period on 30 June, that date passed without major disruptions to the peace process. He urged the Security Council to approve the requests and recommendations detailed in his special report on elections (see p. 177) in order to allow strict adherence to the electoral timetable.

The Secretary-General called on the Congolese authorities to show leadership and political commitment to make certain that the reform and restructuring of the security services, particularly the armed forces and national police, were effectively addressed, and asked donors to continue to coordinate their support in that regard.

The Secretary-General, concerned about the continuing volatility in Ituri and its repercussions for the security of the Great Lakes region, asked the Transitional Government and its partners to prepare urgently a comprehensive plan for integrating Ituri into the nation and end the illegal exploitation of resources in the DRC. He urged national and international action to prevent violations of the arms embargo imposed by Council resolution 1493(2003) [YUN 2003, p. 130] and as extended in scope by resolution 1596(2005) (see p. 192). He also urged the Transitional Government and its international partners to follow up urgently his recommendation to set up an arrangement between donors, international financial institutions and the Transitional Government to promote good governance, and accountable and transparent economic management. The Secretary-General appealed to Member States to maintain pressure on all relevant parties to ensure that the disarmament and repatriation of FDLR combatants proceeded without further delay.

Security Council briefing. In his briefing to the Security Council on 11 August on progress in the election preparations, the Assistant Secretary-General for Peacekeeping Operations stressed the need to strengthen MONUC with a view to mandating it to provide logistical support for the election process, as requested in the Secretary-General's special report on the elections.

Communications. The Secretary-General, on 22 August [S/2005/543], drew to the Council's attention that the DRC effectively had entered the electoral phase of its transitional process following the launch of voter registration in the capital, Kinshasa. The registration, which closed on 31 July with over 2.9 million registered, marked the first stage of the nationwide registration programme to be extended to all provinces. The Secretary-General understood that the Council had reached agreement in principle to approve his recommendation to furnish MONUC with the resources required to allow it to provide logistical support to the Congolese electoral process. To ensure the successful completion of ongoing registration activities in time for the 27 November constitutional referendum, the Secretary-General said he intended to begin immediately to provide such support, pending the Council's consideration and approval of his recommendations.

The Council took note of that intention on 26 August [S/2005/544].

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (September)

On 6 September [meeting 5255], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1621 (2005). The draft [S/2005/555] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Recalling its previous resolutions and the statements by its President concerning the Democratic Republic of the Congo, in particular resolutions 1565(2004) of 1 October 2004 and 1592(2005) of 30 March 2005 and the statement of 29 June 2005,

Reaffirming its commitment to respect for the sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of the Democratic Republic of the Congo as well as of all States in the region, and its support for the process of the Global and All-Inclusive Agreement on the Transition in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, signed at Pretoria on 17 December 2002,

Underlining the importance of elections as the foundation for the longer-term restoration of peace and stability, national reconciliation and establishment of the rule of law in the Democratic Republic of the Congo,

Calling upon the transitional institutions and all Congolese parties to ensure that free, fair and peaceful elections take place and that the timetable for polls developed by the Independent Electoral Commission is scrupulously respected,

Paying tribute to the donor community for the assistance they provide to the electoral process in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, and encouraging them to maintain it,

Welcoming the interest and commitment shown by the Congolese authorities to promote good governance and transparent economic management, and encouraging them to continue their efforts in this regard,

Reiterating its serious concern regarding the continuation of hostilities by armed groups and militias in the eastern part of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, at the violations of human rights and of international humanitarian law that accompany them, and at the threat they pose to the holding of elections in the Democratic Republic of the Congo,

Taking note of the special report of the Secretary-General of 26 May 2005 on elections in the Democratic Republic of the Congo and of the recommendations contained therein,

Noting that the situation in the Democratic Republic of the Congo continues to constitute a threat to international peace and security in the region,

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Approves the recommendations and the concept of operations described in paragraphs 50 to 57 of the special report of the Secretary-General, and authorizes an increase in the strength of the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo of 841 personnel, including up to five formed police units of 125 officers each and the additional police personnel;

2. Underlines the temporary character of the deployments referred to in paragraph 1 above, and requests the Secretary-General to take the necessary steps with a view to downsizing or repatriating these additional personnel from 1 July 2006 at the latest, and to report to the Security Council before 1 June 2006 on the assessment mentioned in paragraph 47 of his special report;

3. Approves the recommendation made by the Secretary-General in paragraphs 58 and 59 of his special report, and authorizes the Mission, in accordance with that recommendation and with its mandate as defined in paragraphs 5*(f)* and 7*(c)* of resolution 1565 (2004), and acting in close coordination with the United Nations Development Programme, to provide additional support to the Independent Electoral Commission for the transport of electoral materials;

4. Encourages the Mission, within its capacity and in accordance with its mandate, to provide advice and assistance as well as the necessary support to the setting up by the Transitional Government, international financial institutions and donors of an arrangement to strengthen support for good governance and transparent economic management;

5. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Statements and communication. Speaking before the General Assembly on 21 September [meeting 18], Uganda said no attention was being given to creating institutions and infrastructure to sustain the DRC, and the integration of armed factions into a single national armed force was half-hearted. Advocating the concept of provisional immunity, Uganda advised that all factions should first be integrated and those guilty of offences punished later. What was being witnessed was a rush to elections and political agendas in the DRC without due regard to the institutions and infrastructure necessary for the long-term sustainability of peace. The 1999 Lusaka Ceasefire Agreement [YUN 1999, p. 87], which provided a strong mechanism to enable the region and the DRC to play complementary roles in the peace process, had been abandoned; and, for over five years, MONUC had made no significant effort to ensure demobilization and disarmament of the negative forces recognized by that accord, thus leaving in place the seeds of future conflict.

The DRC, responding on 23 September [meeting 23], said Uganda's comments were disrespectful and unacceptable. It referred to what it called Uganda's irredentist designs on the DRC, aimed at "making a grab" for the country's eastern province. It said Uganda's objective was to gain control of the significant reserves of raw materials and strategic minerals in Congolese territory. The DRC believed that, to persuade Uganda to embark sincerely on the road to peace, the international community had to impose a comprehensive embargo on the sale of arms and suspend bilateral and multilateral assistance to that country.

In the exercise of its right of reply, Uganda, in a 29 September statement to the Assembly [A/60/400], said it was out of concern and in the spirit of friendship that it proffered its advice on how the international community could move the peace process forward in the DRC, especially in the country's eastern part. Similar advice was offered by Uganda's President to the Secretary-General during the high-level plenary meeting of the Assembly on 13 September and in a 22 August letter to the Security Council President; namely, that efforts be made to integrate militia leaders into the Government of National Unity; that provisional immunity be extended to the various rebel groups to ensure immediate peace; and that once peace and security were established, justice could be pursued. Uganda drew the Assembly's attention to an incident on 13 June, when some Congolese militia leaders entered Uganda. In the absence of a regional process under which they could be handed over to the DRC, all Uganda could do in fulfilment of its international obligation was to declare them personae non gratae. On a bilateral level, Uganda and the DRC were working closely to address outstanding problems. An intelligence-sharing mechanism existed between the two countries and a regional intelligence fusion cell was about to be launched with United States assistance.

Further political developments

Report of Secretary-General (September). The Secretary-General, in his nineteenth (September) report on MONUC [S/2005/603], stated that significant progress was made in voter registration for the elections, along with some progress in the integration of military units in the DRC armed forces and training of the national police. Cooperation among the parties represented in the Transitional Government increased, resulting in enhanced policy coordination. Overall relations between the DRC and neighbouring States had also improved. Only limited progress had been made by donors in providing the resources pledged in support of security for the electoral process to the UNDP-managed basket fund: out of $48.4 million pledged, only $7.6 million had been received by 6 September. Meanwhile, the Transitional Government had disbursed $1.6 million of the $4 million it had pledged.

UDPS, claiming it had not been properly registered as a political party by the Ministry of Interior, called for a boycott of the electoral process and continued to foment tensions in Katanga and the Kasais, where its supporters protested voter registration activities; efforts to persuade UDPS leaders to join the process were unsuccessful. As at 17 September, more than 11 million voters had registered, including 2.9 million in Kinshasa, out of an estimated electorate of 20 to 25 million. Although nationwide registration was to end on 25 September, registration timelines were extended in several areas, as in Katanga and the Kasais, due to logistical difficulties and the slow rate of registration. Despite massive international community support for the electoral process, only $165 million out of the $274 million pledged for the electoral budget had been received from donors as of 6 September.

On 10 August, DRC Vice-President Azarias Ruberwa met with Uganda's President Museveni in Kampala on the issue of the armed groups operating in the DRC. On 23 August, Uganda declared the six MRC leaders personae non gratae and expelled them from Uganda (see p. 184). However, the potential of MRC to undermine progress in stabilizing Ituri remained, given the Transitional Government's incapacity to bring armed group leaders to justice and prevent their movement into and from Uganda.

The DRC, Rwanda and Uganda held a meeting (Kigali, 24-25 August) within the framework of the Tripartite Joint Commission, with Burundi, the AU Commission, the EU Presidency and MONUC attending as observers. Expressing serious concern at the failure of FDLR to disarm and repatriate in accordance with its 31 March declaration (see p. 176), the meeting agreed that the Transitional Government should maintain contact with FDLR to ensure implementation of its declaration and that failure to do so by 30 September would have serious consequences, including the imposition of sanctions. The meeting also agreed to step up pressure to disarm militias operating in the eastern DRC and to negotiate bilateral extradition treaties concerning the remnant militia leaders. At a ministerial level meeting of the Tripartite Joint Commission (New York, 16 September), Burundi became a full participant; thus the Commission was renamed the Tripartite Plus Joint Commission; a summary of the decisions taken at the meeting was attached to Security Council presidential statement S/PRST/2005/46 (see p. 185).

In Ituri, militia remnants continued to commit human rights violations against the local population in areas where MONUC or FARDC was not present. Regular joint FARDC-MONUC operations resulted in the apprehension of some militia elements, seizure of illegal arms and ammunition, and limiting the militias' operational area. Despite the disarmament of 15,600 ex-combatants in Ituri, the National Commission for Demobilization and Reinsertion continued to face difficulties in discharging its responsibilities, in particular the payment of demobilization allowances to ex-combatants.

While the situation in North and South Kivu remained tense, voter registration started in the two provinces on 21 August and generally proceeded smoothly. On 26 August, tensions escalated near Rutshuru in North Kivu following repeated clashes between Mayi-Mayi elements and ex-Rassemblement congolais pour la démocratie-Goma (RCD-G) elements who had yet to participate in the disarmament process. On 25 August, a statement attributed to General Laurent Nkunda, one of the main perpetrators of the May 2004 Bukavu crisis [YUN 2004, p. 124], was published in Goma, in which he threatened to bring down the Transitional Government. The Council of Ministers responded with a special decree on 2 September, by which it stripped the General of his rank, removed him from the army and decided to prosecute him. Joint or parallel MONUC and FARDC operations resulted in an improved security situation in South Kivu. MONUC investigated a number of attacks by armed groups on villages in South Kivu. In North Kivu, MONUC teams continued to monitor the volatile security situation in the Rutshuru and Masisi territories. Frequent clashes between FARDC troops and armed groups operating in the area resulted in numerous civilian casualties. MONUC investigated several cases of killing, rape and abduction of civilians in Katanga.

Law and order problems continued to contribute to the fragility of the security situation in some areas of Katanga where the Transitional Government had not established effective security mechanisms for the protection of civilians. Despite calls by UDPS for a boycott of voter registration, the process continued in Katanga in a generally peaceful fashion. In northern and central Katanga, most Mayi-Mayi commanders refused to join the disarmament process; lawlessness continued to prevail in 10 out of Katanga's 21 territories. On 10 and 11 August, FARDC exchanged fire with a Mayi-Mayi group near the Lunga gold mine, about 200 kilometres from Kalemie, and took control of the area. The Secretary-General again recommended that the Council consider authorizing the deployment to MONUC of an additional brigade of 2,580 personnel.

A special humanitarian action plan for the DRC was being developed, with a preliminary budget of $800 million. The plan's major objectives were to save lives, reduce vulnerability and facilitate the transition, with reintegration as a cross-cutting issue.

The Secretary-General urged donors to accelerate the disbursement of their pledges for financing. However, the Transitional Government needed to work closely with its international partners to ensure the sound, transparent and accountable management of public finances and address corruption effectively. He called on the Congolese authorities to allocate adequate financial resources for strengthening the justice sector in the 2006 State budget and appealed to donors to increase their support in that area. He urged donors to support the development of the 2006 humanitarian action plan (see above) and to provide additional resources in response to the 2005 Consolidated Appeal for the DRC (see p. 996). He also called for increased support by international partners for the security sector reform, including for the main requirements of the FARDC brigades.

The Secretary-General recommended that MONUC's mandate be extended for one year, until 1 October 2006, which would include the period up to the elections and the immediate post-transitional period following the installation of the new Government.

Uganda, in its observations on the Secretary-General's foregoing report on MONUC, forwarded to the Council on 4 October [S/2005/633], fully endorsed the Secretary-General's request for 2,580 additional personnel for MONUC and his call on the international community to increase its assistance to the DRC in all areas, especially security reform.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (September)

On 30 September [meeting 5272], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1628 (2005). The draft [S/2005/614] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolutions on the Democratic Republic of the Congo, in particular resolutions 1565(2004) of 1 October 2004, 1592(2005) of 30 March 2005, 1596 (2005) of 18 April 2005 and 1621(2005) of 6 September 2005,

Reaffirming its commitment to respect for the sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, and its readiness to support the peace and national reconciliation process in that country, in particular through the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo,

Noting that the situation in the Democratic Republic of the Congo continues to constitute a threat to international peace and security in the region,

1. Decides to extend the mandate of the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, as contained in resolutions 1565(2004), 1592(2005), 1596(2005) and 1621(2005), adopted under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations, until 31 October 2005;

2. Decides also to remain seized of the matter.

Communications. The DRC, in a 3 October letter to the Security Council [S/2005/620], protested the Ugandan President's statement that the Ugandan army would cross the border into the DRC if in two months' time the DRC Government and MONUC failed to disarm the Ugandan rebels of LRA, who had come from the Sudan and installed themselves in the Garamba National Park, in the eastern DRC. The DRC called the statement an affront to the international community and a violation of the Charter. The DRC reiterated that it harboured no hidden agenda against any of its neighbours, and had given the LRA rebels an ultimatum to leave the country immediately. The DRC reminded the Council of its various resolutions and presidential statements expressing concern over the proven support of Uganda for the militia in the DRC, particularly in Ituri.

The DRC was firmly committed to the peace process; faced with the new Ugandan threat, however, it would have no choice but to act within the framework of international legality and of Article 51 of the Charter on the inherent right of individual or collective self-defence in the event of an armed attack. The DRC asked the Council to impose appropriate sanctions on Uganda, including an embargo on arms sales to that country, and to demand that it refrain from any action likely to disrupt the DRC peace process.

Uganda, on 7 October [S/2005/645], strongly protested and called false the DRC allegations. It pointed out that the main threat to international peace and security was posed by negative forces, mainly LRA, stationed in the DRC and using it as a base from which to attack Uganda and terrorize its citizens. Uganda had an obligation to defend itself if attacked, in accordance with Article 51 of the Charter. Uganda asserted, however, that there was no attack planned on the DRC and none was envisaged. The DRC had an international obligation to make sure its territory was not used as a base from which anti-Uganda elements could attack Uganda.

Uganda stressed that its businessmen did not trade in arms; it did not support any Congolese militia. Its sole interest and unequivocal demand was that the LRA terrorists be promptly disarmed, arrested and brought to justice. It was encouraged that the DRC had taken steps to act against them and was confident that the DRC would continue to do so. Uganda added that at no time had it attempted to enter the DRC in order to attack the LRA terrorists.

Uganda requested the Council to ensure that the DRC and MONUC were given the necessary assistance to disarm and demobilize the negative forces.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (October)

On 4 October [meeting 5275], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2005/46 on behalf of the Council:

> The Security Council takes note of the report of the Secretary-General of 26 September 2005 on the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo. It expresses its concern over the presence of foreign armed groups which continue to pose a serious threat to stability in the eastern part of the country.

The Council deplores in this regard the failure of the Forces démocratiques de libération du Rwanda to proceed with the disarmament and repatriation of their combatants, and exhorts them to do so without further delay and in accordance with the declaration that they signed at Rome on 31 March 2005.

The Council recognizes the attached decision, taken on 16 September 2005 by the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Uganda, Rwanda and Burundi, acting within the framework of the Tripartite Plus Joint Commission, to set the deadline of 30 September 2005 for the Forces démocratiques de libération du Rwanda to disarm or otherwise to face measures intended to compel them to do so. The Forces démocratiques de libération du Rwanda can no longer remain as an armed group in the Democratic Republic of the Congo.

The Council demands that the Forces démocratiques de libération du Rwanda seize this opportunity to proceed voluntarily with their disarmament and return to Rwanda without any delay or preconditions.

The Council commends the political and military pressure placed on the Forces démocratiques de libération du Rwanda by the Government of the Democratic Republic of the Congo and the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo.

The Council welcomes the steps taken by the Government of Rwanda, with the support of the international community, to peacefully repatriate members of the Forces démocratiques de libération du Rwanda returning to Rwanda, in accordance with the applicable norms of international law and with respect for the rights and freedoms of the human person. The Council encourages the Government of Rwanda to continue to give the widest publicity to its commitments.

The Council demands the full cooperation of the Forces démocratiques de libération du Rwanda with the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda, particularly with regard to the arrest and transfer of indictees who remain at large.

Moreover, the Council notes with concern the incursion of members of the Lord's Resistance Army into the Democratic Republic of the Congo and welcomes the intention of the Congolese armed forces to disarm this group in cooperation with the Mission and in accordance with the mandate of the Mission as set out in resolution 1565(2004).

Further, the Council calls upon all armed groups in the Great Lakes region of Africa to act without delay to lay down their arms and join the processes of political transition under way in the region.

The Council calls upon the States of the region to deepen their cooperation with a view to putting an end to the activities of illegal armed groups. It recalls its adherence to respect for the sovereignty of all States and underlines that any recourse to the threat or use of force against the territorial integrity of a State is contrary to the purposes and principles set out in the Charter of the United Nations.

Communication. Following a meeting of the Tripartite Plus Joint Commission (Kampala, 20-21 October), the Ministers of the partner States of the Commission (Burundi, the DRC, Rwanda and Uganda), in a 21 October letter to the Security Council [S/2005/667], proposed that the draft resolution before the Council on the renewal of MONUC's mandate (see below) be strengthened to include the identification by name of all armed groups currently operating in the eastern DRC; the disarmament of all armed groups and militias in that area, using all means necessary; and a redoubling of the donor community's efforts to support the integration, training and equipping of the DRC armed forces and national police. Attached to the letter was a text of an amendment to the draft resolution incorporating those points.

In resolution 1649(2005) (see p. 187), the Council took note of the letter and requested the Secretary-General to submit his observations and, if deemed necessary, his recommendations.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (October and December)

On 28 October [meeting 5296], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1635 (2005). The draft, [S/2005/665] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolutions and the statements by its President on the Democratic Republic of the Congo, in particular resolutions 1565(2004) of 1 October 2004, 1592(2005) of 30 March 2005, 1596(2005) of 18 April 2005, 1621(2005) of 6 September 2005 and 1628(2005) of 30 September 2005, and the statement of 4 October 2005,

Deploring the violations of human rights and international humanitarian law carried out by these militias and groups, and stressing the urgent need for those responsible for these crimes to be brought to justice,

Taking note of the nineteenth report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, of 26 September 2005, and of the recommendations contained therein,

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Decides to extend the mandate of the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo until 30 September 2006;

2. Having taken note of the recommendations described in paragraphs 27 to 29 of the report of the Secretary-General, authorizes an increase of 300 personnel in the military strength of the Mission to allow for the deployment of an infantry battalion in Katanga, with enabling assets, including its own air mobility and appropriate medical support, to provide additional security within its area of operations during the electoral period;

3. Underlines the temporary character of the increase referred to in paragraph 2 above, and requests the Secretary-General to take the necessary steps with a view to downsizing or repatriating this additional strength from 1 July 2006 at the latest, and to report to the Security Council before 1 June 2006 on the assessment to be made for that purpose;

4. Calls upon the transitional institutions and all Congolese parties to ensure that free, fair and peaceful elections take place and that the timetable for polls de-

8. Welcomes the action taken by the Mission in investigating and dealing with instances of sexual exploitation and abuse and its efforts to put in place preventive measures, requests the Secretary-General to continue to take the necessary measures to achieve actual compliance in the Mission with the United Nations zero-tolerance policy on sexual exploitation and abuse and to keep the Council informed, and urges troop-contributing countries to take appropriate preventive action, including predeployment awareness training, and other action to ensure full accountability in cases of such conduct involving their personnel;

9. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

On 21 December [meeting 5340], the Council, having considered the report of the Security Council mission to Central Africa in November (see p. 162) and the 21 October letter of the Tripartite Plus Joint Commission (see p. 186), unanimously adopted resolution 1649(2005). The draft [S/2005/810] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolutions and the statements by its President concerning the Democratic Republic of the Congo, in particular resolutions 1533(2004) of 12 March 2004, 1565(2004) of 1 October 2004, 1592(2005) of 30 March 2005, 1596(2005) of 18 April 2005, 1616(2005) of 29 July 2005, 1621(2005) of 6 September 2005 and 1628(2005) of 30 September 2005, and the statements of 2 March and 4 October 2005,

Reaffirming its commitment to respect for the sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of the Democratic Republic of the Congo as well as all States in the region, and its support for the process of the Global and All-Inclusive Agreement on the Transition in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, signed at Pretoria on 17 December 2002, and underlining the importance of elections as the foundation for the longer-term restoration of peace and stability, national reconciliation and establishment of the rule of law in the Democratic Republic of the Congo,

Reiterating its serious concern regarding the continuation of hostilities by militias and foreign armed groups in the eastern part of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, and at the threat they pose to civilians and to the holding of elections in the Democratic Republic of the Congo and to stability in the region,

Deploring the violations of human rights and international humanitarian law committed by these groups and militias, and stressing the urgent need for those responsible for these crimes to be brought to justice,

Welcoming the robust action taken by the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo against these groups and militias, and commending the dedication of the personnel of the Mission, who are operating in particularly hazardous conditions,

Calling upon all armed groups in the Great Lakes region of Africa, such as the Forces démocratiques de libération du Rwanda, the Parti pour la libération du peuple hutu-Forces nationales de libération and the Lord's Resistance Army, to act without delay to lay down their arms, enter demobilization programmes and support efforts to consolidate peace that are under way in the region,

Having noted the decision, taken on 16 September 2005 by the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Uganda, Rwanda and Burundi, acting within the framework of the Tripartite Plus Joint Commission, to retain the deadline of 30 September 2005 for the voluntary disarmament of the Forces démocratiques de libération du Rwanda, on the understanding that sanctions would be imposed should they fail to respect this deadline,

Taking note of the letter dated 21 October 2005 from the ministers representing Burundi, the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Rwanda and Uganda on the Tripartite Plus Joint Commission addressed to the President of the Security Council,

Calling upon the States of the region to deepen their cooperation with a view to putting an end to the activities of illegal armed groups, and underlining the fact that any recourse to the threat or use of force against the territorial integrity of a State is contrary to the Charter of the United Nations,

Urging, in this regard, participants in the International Conference on Peace, Security, Democracy and Development in the Great Lakes Region of Africa to convene the second summit as soon as possible,

Aware that the link between the illegal exploitation of natural resources, the illicit trade in those resources and the proliferation of and trafficking in arms is one of the factors fuelling and exacerbating conflicts in the Great Lakes region of Africa, in particular in the Democratic Republic of the Congo,

Paying tribute to the donor community for the assistance it is providing to the Democratic Republic of the Congo, and encouraging it to maintain that assistance,

Taking note of the report of the Security Council mission which visited the region of Central Africa from 4 to 11 November 2005, and endorsing its recommendations,

Noting that the situation in the Democratic Republic of the Congo continues to pose a threat to international peace and security in the region,

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter,

1. Deplores the fact that foreign armed groups present in the eastern part of the Democratic Republic of the Congo have not yet laid down their arms, and demands that all such groups engage voluntarily and without any delay or preconditions in their disarmament and in their repatriation and resettlement;

2. Decides that, for a period expiring on 31 July 2006, the provisions of paragraphs 13 to 16 of resolution 1596(2005) shall extend to the following individuals, as designated by the Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 1533(2004) ("the Committee"):

(a) Political and military leaders of foreign armed groups operating in the Democratic Republic of the Congo who impede the disarmament and the voluntary repatriation or resettlement of combatants belonging to those groups;

(b) Political and military leaders of Congolese militias receiving support from outside the Democratic Republic of the Congo, and in particular those operating in Ituri, who impede the participation of their combatants in disarmament, demobilization and reintegration processes;

3. Decides also that the measures imposed under paragraph 2 above as well as those under paragraph 13 of resolution 1596(2005) shall not apply where the Committee authorizes in advance, and on a case-by-case basis, the transit of individuals returning to the territory of the State of their nationality, or participating in efforts to bring to justice perpetrators of grave violations of human rights or international humanitarian law;

4. Decides further that the tasks of the Committee set out in paragraph 18 of resolution 1596(2005) shall extend to the provisions set out in paragraph 2 above;

5. Requests the Secretary-General and the Group of Experts established pursuant to resolution 1533 (2004), within its capabilities and without prejudice to the execution of the other tasks in its mandate, to assist the Committee in the designation of the leaders referred to in paragraph 2 above;

6. Decides that the provisions of paragraphs 2 to 5 above shall enter into force on 15 January 2006, unless the Secretary-General informs the Council that the process of disarmament of those foreign armed groups and Congolese militias operating in the Democratic Republic of the Congo is being completed;

7. Decides also that, no later than 31 July 2006, it shall review the measures set forth in paragraph 2 above, in the light of progress accomplished in the peace and transition process in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, in particular with regard to the disarmament of foreign armed groups;

8. Urges the Government of National Unity and Transition to do its utmost to ensure the security of civilians, including humanitarian personnel, by effectively extending State authority throughout the territory of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, and in particular in the provinces of North Kivu and South Kivu and in the Ituri district;

9. Recalls that, by its resolution 1565(2004), the Council has mandated the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo to support operations led by the Armed Forces of the Democratic Republic of the Congo to disarm foreign combatants, and to facilitate the voluntary repatriation of disarmed foreign combatants and their dependants;

10. Requests, in this regard, the Secretary-General, in close coordination with all relevant stakeholders and in particular the Government of National Unity and Transition, to submit to the Council for its consideration, by 15 March 2006, a comprehensive and integrated strategy for the disarmament, repatriation and resettlement of foreign combatants, incorporating military, political, economic and justice-related aspects, including the contribution of the Mission within its current mandate, in accordance with the applicable norms of international law and with respect for the rights and freedoms of the human person;

11. Emphasizes that, as per resolution 1565(2004), the Mission is authorized to use all necessary means, within its capabilities and in the areas where its armed units are deployed, to deter any foreign or Congolese armed group from attempting to use force to threaten the political process, and to ensure the protection of civilians under imminent threat of physical violence;

12. Urges the Government of National Unity and Transition to carry out reform of the security sector, through the expeditious integration of the Armed Forces and of the National Police of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, and in particular by ensuring adequate and timely payment and logistical support for their personnel, with a view to allowing them, inter alia, to expedite the disarmament of armed groups operating on Congolese territory, taking note, as appropriate, of the recommendations of the European Union Mission of Assistance for Security Sector Reform mentioned in the report of the Security Council mission to Central Africa;

13. Reiterates its call upon the donor community, as a matter of urgency, to continue to engage firmly in the provision of assistance needed for the integration, training and equipping of the Armed Forces and of the National Police of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, and urges the Government of National Unity and Transition to promote all possible means to facilitate and expedite cooperation to this end;

14. Requests the Secretary-General to submit his observations and, if he deems it necessary, recommendations concerning the letter dated 21 October 2005 from the ministers representing Burundi, the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Rwanda and Uganda on the Tripartite Plus Joint Commission addressed to the President of the Security Council;

15. Demands that the Governments of Uganda, Rwanda, the Democratic Republic of the Congo and Burundi take measures to prevent the use of their respective territories in support of violations of the arms embargo imposed by resolutions 1493(2003) of 28 July 2003 and 1596(2005), and renewed by resolution 1616 (2005), or in support of activities of armed groups present in the region;

16. Demands also that all States neighbouring the Democratic Republic of the Congo, as well as the Government of National Unity and Transition, impede any kind of support to the illegal exploitation of Congolese natural resources, in particular by preventing the flow of such resources through their respective territories;

17. Requests States concerned and in particular those in the region to take additional measures with regard to the political and military leaders of the foreign armed groups present in their respective territories, including, where necessary, by taking action to bring them to justice or by taking appropriate measures of international cooperation and judicial assistance;

18. Reiterates its call upon the Congolese authorities to bring to justice without delay perpetrators of grave violations of human rights and international humanitarian law, and reiterates that the mandate of the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, as set out in resolution 1565(2004), includes cooperation with efforts to bring such perpetrators to justice;

19. Demands that all parties cooperate fully with the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda, particularly with regard to the arrest and transfer of indictees who remain at large;

20. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Constitutional referendum

The referendum on the draft constitution, originally scheduled for 27 November, but postponed owing to the need to extend the period of voter registration, particularly in the provinces of Bandundu and Equateur, was successfully held on 18 and 19 December with minimal security incidents country-wide. Turnout was moderate and somewhat low in the opposition strongholds of the Kasais and in parts of Kinshasa, but appreciably higher in the eastern provinces. The referendum was preceded by a formal information campaign, from 2 to16 December, as required by the referendum law. Several months prior to that, IEC, MONUC, most political parties and several NGOs carried out civic education programmes. Civic and voter education activities were generally believed to have been insufficient, however, and would need to be stepped up in the lead-up to the elections.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 21 December [meeting 5340], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2005/66 on behalf of the Council:

> The Security Council commends the people of the Democratic Republic of the Congo for the successful holding of the referendum on the draft Constitution. The large number of voters demonstrated a genuine aspiration to peace and national reconciliation.
> The Council pays tribute to the work of the Independent Electoral Commission, which was able, with unprecedented and outstanding logistical support from the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo and with the assistance of the international community, to take up this challenge.
> The Council recalls its support for the holding of elections in the coming months, which must take place before the end of the transitional period on 30 June 2006. It urges the Government of National Unity and Transition to live up to the expectations of the Congolese people and to do its utmost to ensure that the next polls are held in accordance with the timetable of the Independent Electoral Commission.

The EU, on 22 December [S/2005/853], issued a statement congratulating the Congolese people, IEC and MONUC on the successful holding of the referendum on the Constitution on 18 December and reiterated its strong commitment to help the Congolese people to achieve the goal of completing the transition to full democratic Government as soon as possible.

Situation at end of year

The twentieth (December) report of the Secretary-General on MONUC [S/2005/832] noted that the electoral process gained further momentum. Voter registration was completed in all provinces, with over 25 million citizens, of an estimated electorate of 22 to 28 million having been registered by 17 December. On 7 November, President Kabila submitted to the National Assembly the draft electoral law, adopted by the Council of Ministers on 25 October. The draft provided for elections to the national and provincial assemblies to be conducted under a proportional representation system, with a closed list of candidates; to that end, 186 districts would be established, based on the existing administrative units (territories, towns and, for Kinshasa, communes). A joint commission of National Assembly and Senate members considered the draft text to help bridge differences on some of its essential provisions, including the options of using open and closed lists. It recommended an amended draft providing for a combination of three electoral systems, depending on the number of seats in each constituency. On 29 November, the National Assembly adopted the law granting amnesty for all political offences, including attempts on the life of a Head of State, as envisaged in the 2002 Global and All-Inclusive Agreement [YUN 2002, p. 125].

The security situation in Ituri, although significantly improved, remained fragile. An FARDC integrated brigade, with MONUC support, was deployed to the gold-mining areas of Kilo and Mongwalu in mid-October. By early November, close to 1,000 MRC militia had surrendered, of whom 300 were transported to Kisangani to be disarmed and demobilized. As a result of a joint FADRC-MONUC operation launched in mid-November in Irumu territory, south of Bunia, some 200 MRC elements fled towards North Kivu, where they surrendered to FARDC and were disarmed. Another 100 militia fled to Uganda and handed over their weapons to the Ugandan Peoples' Defence Forces (UPDF); their repatriation was being organized by Uganda and the DRC. Security in the border areas deteriorated, particularly in the Aru and Faradje territories, reportedly infiltrated by LRA and Sudanese criminal elements and UPDF troops from the Sudan and Uganda. The situation improved following a joint FADRC-MONUC operation around Aba, on the border with the Sudan, and a mid-November meeting there between FARDC and the Sudanese People's Liberation Movement/Army (SPLM/A).

The Transitional Government intensified military pressure on foreign armed groups and Mayi-Mayi elements in the Kivus who persisted in their refusal to enter the disarmament process. Military operations in the Kivus focused on, among other things, addressing concentrations of militia, especially FDLR and the Allied Democratic Forces/National Army for the Liberation of Uganda, ensuring flexible logistic MONUC support to enable rapid FARDC deployment, conducting joint FARDC-MONUC operations and supporting the operations of the integrated FARDC brigades. In late September, FARDC captured Bwahungu and Tubimbi, in Walungu territory in South Kivu, occupied for almost two months by FDLR and allied ex-Mayi-Mayi elements. In reprisal, FDLR/Rastas on 9 October attacked civilians in and around Buba in Walungu, causing 25 deaths. On 25 October, FARDC, with MONUC support, launched operations against renegade Mayi-Mayi in Virunga National Park, disarming 359 of them, destroying five camps and confiscating 167 weapons, as well as capturing 14 FDLR elements. While the operations improved security in several areas, they also caused the displacement of some 5,000 civilians from their homes in Bulundule, Bulindi and the adjoining villages to Kanyabayonga.

The security situation in northern and central Katanga continued to suffer from the activities of uncontrolled armed groups and FARDC elements. Mayi-Mayi militia reportedly killed a Catholic priest, looted villages and perpetrated human rights abuses in Moba, Manono and Kabala, causing the displacement of some 2,000 persons. An additional source of insecurity in the area were FARDC elements, particularly in connection with illegal tax collection and disputes with the provincial authorities. In the Nyunzu-Kabalo-Kongolo area, ex-Mayi-Mayi groups were reported to have expanded their territorial control, including over the Lunga gold mines. Outside the main cities, illegal roadblocks were set up, and gross human rights violations by Mayi-Mayi, FARDC, the national police, and intelligence and security services continued unabated.

The Transitional Government, with MONUC support, intensified its operations forcibly to disarm and repatriate Rwandan and Ugandan armed groups in the DRC. Several operations were carried out in the North and South Kivus, and about 60 Rwandan combatants and their dependants agreed to enter the demobilization process. As to the three-phase disarmament of former FARDC factional forces, only the first phase was completed with the integration of six brigades. The second phase, which was to have begun in September, was delayed by the slow pace in moving troops to the disarmament centres and by a shortfall of about 30,000 troops entering the process. Despite efforts to address the backlog, the national disarmament, demobilization and reintegration of ex-combatants into society remained slow.

The Secretary-General congratulated the people of the DRC on their successful constitutional referendum, the first important step to the elections. He urged all Congolese and international stakeholders to continue working together towards meeting the outstanding objectives of the transitional agenda. He also urged the Parliament to accelerate its review and approval of the electoral law, and the Transitional Government to promulgate an electoral timetable and step up the related civic education. He called on the Government to work with its partners to implement their proposals to address issues related to security sector reform, and with the international community to increase the capacity of the judicial system nationwide and to ensure humane conditions of detention. He strongly urged donors to consider his request for the minimum resources necessary for FARDC to conduct military operations with MONUC to disarm the foreign armed groups in the DRC. He also pointed to the strengthening of the Government's sovereignty, including its ability to manage the country's natural resources and provide basic services to the population, as requiring serious attention.

Arms embargo

In February [S/2005/81], the Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 1533(2004) [YUN 2004, p. 137] (Security Council Committee on the DRC) to review and monitor the arms embargo imposed by resolution 1493 (2003) [YUN 2003, p. 130] reported on its activities from 12 March to 31 December 2004, during which it held one formal and four informal meetings. The Committee received replies from 34 States and the EU to the request contained in resolution 1533(2004) that all States inform the Committee of measures they had taken to comply with the arms embargo. It also received notifications in advance from three States regarding exceptions to the embargo, on which the Committee took no action.

Report of Group of Experts (January). In accordance with Security Council resolution 1552(2004) [YUN 2004, p. 141], the Group of Experts on the Democratic Republic of the Congo, established pursuant to resolution 1533(2004), submitted its first report in January [S/2005/30]. As described by the report, the political and military realities in the eastern part of the DRC and on either side of it were such as to make the arms embargo susceptible to a variety of interpretations; hence, the need for a reappraisal of its geographical scope and targets. Many of the areas in the region suffered from the absence of State authority and thus from the extension of law and order. Moreover, the intertwining of shared interests and objectives on both sides of the DRC's eastern border rendered the arms embargo subject to abuse. The Group focused its investigations on three sectors connected to weapons supply and logistical support, namely, civil aviation, customs and immigration, and border commerce, and gave a detailed account of its findings.

Given the complexity of the political landscape in the DRC and the varying allegiances within the Transitional Government, the Group recommended that the target of the embargo, as defined in Council resolution 1493(2003), be revisited with a view to clarifying its terms and exemptions; that the état-major intégré of the armed forces of the DRC in Kinshasa, in which all parties to the 2002 Global and All-Inclusive Agreement [YUN 2002, p. 125] were represented and which, in principle, functioned as the decision-making body of the integrated army, be instituted as the sole procuring and authorizing agent on behalf of the Transitional Government and of the integrated army for military hardware and other forms of military equipment; and that the Council extend the arms embargo to the entire territory of the DRC, with the exception of the état-major and MONUC and for supplies of non-lethal material and training for humanitarian or protective use. Monitoring should extend until the end of the embargo. A Group liaison officer should be integrated into the Joint Mission Analysis Cell at MONUC headquarters for the duration of any future mandate to coordinate the activities of the Group and MONUC and the flow of information between them.

MONUC should standardize inspection and data collection procedures and establish baseline data on weapons seized or acquired. As to the monitoring of airports and air operations, MONUC should conduct regular ad hoc inspections of aircraft, including relevant documentation, at strategic airports, and share the information obtained with the DRC civil aviation authorities, the International Civil Aviation Organization (ICAO) and the Group for further action. The Ubwari Peninsula on the Congolese side of Lake Tanganyika was, in the Group's opinion, a conduit for arms smuggling and a hub for illicit military activity and should be monitored.

Modalities for integration into the DRC national army and police should include prior notification to MONUC of the internal movements of arms and related materiel for the use of the integrated units. The Council should consider resourcing a small arms component within UNOB or a UN agency, and baseline data and a weapons inventory should be established in connection with the disarmament programme in Burundi. The Group called on the commander of the DRC tenth military region to sensitize those who denied access to MONUC and the Group during an airport inspection in Bukavu, as well as all FARDC personnel under his command, to the need to abide by UN resolutions; to prevent similar instances in the future, the état-major should send clear instructions to all FARDC military regions to cooperate with MONUC in its inspections.

Given the large number of illicit aircraft operating to and from the eastern DRC, a coordinated, aggressive campaign should be launched by the Transitional Government, ICAO, MONUC and neighbouring Governments to divest the region of aircraft and air cargo companies involved in illegal aviation practices. The DRC civil aviation authorities should regularly verify the validity of aircrafts and pilots' documents to stop the use of false documents. The Group recommended that Uganda regularize the status of civilian aircraft using the military apron at Entebbe Airport and that Burundi investigate the dual use of the registration 9U-BHR by aircraft of Volga Atlantic and Aigle Aviation.

The Group's recommendations relating to border controls called for, among other measures: the imposition by the Council of a travel ban and asset freeze on high-ranking leaders of the Ituri armed groups, and the extension of State authority to customs and immigration in all of the DRC, especially in the embargoed areas; the mobilization by Uganda of sufficient manpower, including police and immigration officials, along key border crossings; and the strict regulation of Uganda's gold export trade and Rwanda's import of mineral resources.

The Group underscored the need to rectify the ambiguous relations between the military regions in the eastern DRC. The eighth and tenth military regional command structures, although officially part of an integrated FARDC, were in conflict with one another in the field. Accordingly, the Group called for sanctions against General Obedi, commander of the eighth military region who had been reluctant to oust the dissident General Nkunda and Colonel Nakabaka, an ex-Mayi-Mayi commander found supplying arms to FNL and FDLR from FARDC stores. It also called on the état-major to send clear instructions to the commanders of the eighth and tenth military regions to thwart cohabitation between FARDC troops and FDLR units in their respective areas of responsibility and to give priority to apprehending General Nkunda and extraditing the dissident Colonel Mutebutsi and his renegade forces to the DRC to face charges.

Finally, the Group recommended that the DRC, Rwanda and Uganda adhere to their 2004 tripartite agreement on regional security [YUN 2004, p. 134]. The Tripartite Plus Joint Commission and the 2004 Joint Verification Mechanism signed by the DRC and Rwanda [ibid.] should serve as the appropriate forums for addressing allegations of foreign military interference in the internal affairs of another country. Member States should strive to identify members of the FDLR diaspora based in their respective countries and contributing to the financing of FDLR activities in order to sever such assistance.

Communications. In a 31 January letter [S/2005/73], Rwanda informed the Security Council Committee on the DRC that the Group's report had been completed without its input and that it had been deliberately denied the opportunity to share information with the Group in a meaningful manner. It claimed that the Rwanda section of the report was "riddled with inconsistencies, ambiguity and innuendo". Rwanda addressed some of the issues dealt with in the report, including civil aviation, allegations of Rwandan support for dissident forces, Rwanda's alleged "residual" presence in the DRC, and the negative forces of FDLR. It concluded that FDLR/Forces combattantes Abacunguzi presented the greatest threat to regional peace and security, and recommended that the embargo and its monitoring be extended to the entire territory of the DRC. It also recommended that the Group's report and the evidence on which it was based be subject to critical review by either the Joint Verification Mechanism or the Tripartite Plus Joint Commission.

On 23 February [S/2005/210], Uganda, while welcoming the report, found sections that were of concern to it, including the report's methodology, allegations that Uganda maintained contact with leaders of armed groups in the embargoed region, illegal flights between Uganda and the DRC, Uganda's negligible customs supervision along its border with the DRC, arms transfers from Uganda to dissident forces in the DRC, and denying the Group a visit to military facilities. Uganda further outlined measures it had taken to comply with the Group's recommendations.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (April)

On 18 April [meeting 5163], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1596(2005). The draft [S/2005/245] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolutions concerning the Democratic Republic of the Congo, in particular resolutions 1493 (2003) of 28 July 2003, 1533(2004) of 12 March 2004, 1552(2004) of 27 July 2004, 1565(2004) of 1 October 2004 and 1592(2005) of 30 March 2005, and recalling also the statements by its President concerning the Democratic Republic of the Congo, in particular the statement of 7 December 2004,

Reiterating its serious concern regarding the presence of armed groups and militias in the eastern part of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, particularly in the provinces of North and South Kivu and in the Ituri district, which perpetuate a climate of insecurity in the whole region,

Welcoming the fact that some of these groups and militias have started to submit an inventory of arms and related materiel in their possession, as well as their location, with a view to their participation in the programmes of disarmament, and encouraging those who have not yet done so rapidly to do so,

Expressing its readiness to review the provisions of its resolutions 918(1994) of 17 May 1994, 997(1995) of 9 June 1995 and 1011(1995) of 16 August 1995 in a broader perspective, taking into account the implications of continued instability in the eastern part of the Democratic Republic of the Congo for peace and security in the Great Lakes region of Africa,

Condemning the continuing illicit flow of weapons within and into the Democratic Republic of the Congo, and declaring its determination to continue closely monitoring implementation of the arms embargo imposed by resolution 1493(2003),

Recalling the importance for the Government of National Unity and Transition to implement without delay the integration for which it bears responsibility of the armed forces of the Democratic Republic of the Congo by continuing to work within the framework of the Joint Commission on Security Sector Reform, and encouraging the donor community to provide coordinated financial and technical assistance for this task,

Commending the efforts made by the Secretary-General, the African Union and other actors concerned to restore peace and security in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, and welcoming in this regard the Declaration adopted in Dar es Salaam on 20 November 2004 at the conclusion of the first summit of the International Conference on Peace, Security, Democracy and Development in the Great Lakes Region,

17. Decides also that, no later than 31 July 2005, it shall review the measures set forth in paragraphs 1, 6, 10, 13 and 15 above, in the light of progress made in the peace and transition process in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, in particular with regard to the integration of the armed forces and of the national police;

23. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Press statement and communication. According to a 26 April press statement [SC/8368], the Security Council Committee on the DRC had been apprised of allegations pertaining to the work of the Group of Experts. It noted with concern that the allegations appeared to have been circulated in breach of contractual undertakings on confidentiality and in complete disregard for the security and safety of those involved with the work of the Group, undermining its future investigations. The Committee thoroughly examined the allegations calling into question the Group's investigative methodology and some of its findings and carefully considered the Group's explanations, with which it was fully satisfied. The Committee reaffirmed its full support for the work of the Group and encouraged it to continue to observe the highest procedural and evidentiary standards in conducting its work.

Rwanda, on 21 July [S/2005/263], reiterated its concerns, (see p. 192) regarding the Rwanda section of the Group's January report (see p. 191). It said those concerns had been corroborated by the UN independent consultant who reviewed the Group's work and concluded that, with respect to Rwanda, the experts had failed to conduct a thorough investigation. In many cases, they did not meet their own evidentiary standards, misrepresented facts and situations, and omitted significant information in reporting specific incidents to support their predetermined conclusions. The Group's poor working methods and lack of integrity and transparency suggested that its appointing authority and the Security Council should ensure that the Group's mandate was fulfilled in a strictly professional and non-prejudiced manner. Rwanda reiterated its request of 15 April to the Secretary-General that the Group's reports be subjected to an independent and transparent review.

Re-establishment of Group. The Secretary-General, on 17 May [S/2005/322], informed the Security Council that, in accordance with paragraph 21 of resolution 1596(2005) above, he had re-established the Group of Experts for a period expiring on 31 July 2005, and appointed five experts, among them a finance expert, to constitute the Group.

Report of Group of Experts (July). The second report of the Group of Experts, submitted in July [S/2005/436], noted that the short mandate period of the Group compelled it to focus on a limited number of issues relating to the implementation of the arms embargo. The Group reported that it was unable to collect irrefutable evidence of new violations of the embargo, but was investigating a suspected shipment of dual-use material crossing the border between Zambia and the DRC. It continued to receive reports of weapons flows and illegal armed group activities in the DRC and neighbouring States, but was unable to investigate the specific methods used to acquire, transport, and transfer those arms and to finance those activities, or the procurement of associated military material. The extent to which armed groups received logistical support and arms shipments across the border between Ituri and Uganda required further investigation, as did the way arms embargo violators continued to profit from the insufficient control of the DRC airspace and landing sites in Ituri. The Transitional Government, with MONUC support, was reasserting its authority over the border, in particular in Ituri district, as evidenced by the stationing of 27 border control officials at critical border crossings with Uganda. In its inspection of the Ituri crossings at Aru and Ariwara, however, the Group found that the Government's authority was weak and undermined by the overwhelming presence of illicit commercial networks with ties to dissident Ituri armed factions. The weak border controls allowed for lucrative alliances between leaders of armed groups and unscrupulous businessmen, and for the diversion of wealth to fund arms-related activities and destabilization efforts in the eastern DRC. The Group received satisfactory assistance from the concerned Governments in its investigation of civil aviation operations, but concluded that DRC supervision of those operations was of an unacceptably low standard.

The Group's interaction with the DRC, Uganda and Rwanda took place in a climate of cooperation and trust. However, owing to the time constraints of the Group's limited mandate, the DRC Transitional Government could not satisfy fully the Group's requests for information. The same was true of the meetings with Uganda. The meetings with Rwanda were likewise conducted in a constructive and open spirit but, except in the area of civil aviation, little of the other information requested by the Group was provided. The Group continued to examine the financial means sustaining embargoed parties, including revenue generated from the trade of precious metals; in so doing, it reviewed statistics from all three Governments on the production, import and export of precious metals and found significant inconsistencies.

The Group observed that inter-State cooperation in the Great Lakes region was one of the most powerful tools for countering violations of the arms embargo, which demanded a flexible and permanent mechanism for unambiguous information-sharing and cooperative action between States at the tactical and political levels.

The Group recommended maintaining the sanctions regime well into the post-electoral period; allocating sufficient means to MONUC for deployment on the borders and in DRC airports to support national customs structures and for monitoring its airspace and airport activities. It called for the development, under the Government's direction, of enhanced traceability systems for all important natural resources of the DRC, with the participation of Rwanda and Uganda, the World Bank and IMF, regional participants such as the Multi-country Demobilization and Reintegration Programme and the International Conference in the Great Lakes Region, along with relevant industry participants and other interested partners; and for regular reporting by the DRC to the Security Council Committee on the DRC on developments and implementation of those systems. The Group further recommended that the DRC request ICAO for technical expertise to improve national aviation security standards, and that the World Bank, ICAO and other multilateral organizations assist the Transitional Government in developing the capacity of the national civil aviation authority.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 29 July [meeting 5243], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1616(2005). The draft [S/2005/493] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Recalling its previous resolutions and the statements by its President concerning the Democratic Republic of the Congo, in particular resolutions 1493(2003) of 28 July 2003, 1533(2004) of 12 March 2004, 1552(2004) of 27 July 2004, 1565(2004) of 1 October 2004, 1592 (2005) of 30 March 2005 and 1596(2005) of 18 April 2005,

Reiterating its serious concern regarding the presence of armed groups and militias in the eastern part of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, particularly in the provinces of North Kivu and South Kivu and in the Ituri district, which perpetuate a climate of insecurity in the whole region,

Condemning the continuing illicit flow of weapons within and into the Democratic Republic of the Congo, and declaring its determination to closely monitor compliance with the arms embargo imposed by resolution 1493(2003) and expanded by resolution 1596(2005), and to enforce the measures provided for in paragraphs 13 and 15 of resolution 1596(2005) against persons and entities acting in violation of the embargo,

Recognizing the linkage between the illegal exploitation of natural resources, illicit trade in such resources and the proliferation and trafficking of arms as one of the factors fuelling and exacerbating conflicts in the Great Lakes region of Africa,

Taking note of the report of the Group of Experts referred to in paragraph 10 of resolution 1533(2004) and paragraph 21 of resolution 1596(2005) (hereinafter "the Group of Experts"), of 5 July 2005, transmitted by the Security Council Committee established in accordance with paragraph 8 of resolution 1533 (2004) (hereinafter "the Committee"),

Noting that the situation in the Democratic Republic of the Congo continues to constitute a threat to international peace and security in the region,

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Reaffirms the demands of paragraphs 15, 18 and 19 of resolution 1493(2003) and of paragraphs 5 and 19 of resolution 1596(2005);

2. Decides, in the light of the failure by the parties to comply with the demands of the Council, to renew until 31 July 2006 the provisions of paragraphs 20 to 22 of resolution 1493(2003), as amended and expanded by paragraph 1 of resolution 1596(2005), and reaffirms paragraphs 2, 6, 10 and 13 to 16 of resolution 1596 (2005);

3. Expresses its intention to modify or to remove those provisions if it determines that the demands noted above have been satisfied;

4. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Committee, to re-establish the Group of Experts within thirty days from the date of adoption of the present resolution and for a period expiring on 31 January 2006, drawing, as appropriate, on the expertise of the members of the Group of Experts established pursuant to resolution 1596(2005);

5. Requests the Group of Experts to continue fulfilling its mandate as defined in resolutions 1533(2004) and 1596(2005), to update the Committee on its work by 10 November 2005, and to report to the Council in writing before 10 January 2006, through the Committee, inter alia on the implementation of the measures imposed by paragraph 20 of resolution 1493(2003) and expanded by resolution 1596(2005), with recommendations in this regard, in particular concerning the lists provided for by paragraph 10*(g)* of resolution 1533(2004), and including information on the sources of financing, such as from natural resources, which are funding the illicit trade in arms;

6. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Re-establishment of Group. The Secretary-General, on 2 September [S/2005/566], informed the Security Council that, in accordance with paragraph 4 of the foregoing resolution, he re-established the Group of Experts until 31 January 2006, and appointed five experts to constitute the Group.

Communications. Following adoption of Security Council resolution 1596(2005) (see p. 192), a number of States informed the Security Council Committee on the DRC of measures they had taken to comply with the requirements contained in the resolution: Brazil [S/AC.43/2005/15], Burundi [S/AC.43/2005/13], Canada [S/AC.43/2005/2], DRC [S/AC.43/2005/14], Japan [S/AC.43/2005/16], Lithuania [S/AC.43/2005/10], Norway [S/AC.43/2005/4], Portugal [S/AC.43/2005/11], Russian Federation [S/AC.43/2005/9], Rwanda [S/AC.43/2005/1], Sri Lanka [S/AC.43/2005/8], Switzerland [S/AC.43/2005/3], South Africa [S/AC.43/2005/5], Uganda [S/AC.43/2005/6 & Add.1], United Kingdom [S/AC.43/2005/7], United Republic of Tanzania [S/AC.43/2005/12].

Brazil, in a later addendum [S/AC.43/2005/15/Add.1], informed the Committee of the measures it had taken to comply with the provisions of resolution 1616(2005) (see above).

Burundi

Several positive developments took place in Burundi in 2005, culminating in the successful conclusion of the transition period and the peaceful transfer of authority to representative and democratically elected government and institutions. With the assistance of the United Nations Operation in Burundi (ONUB), the referendum on the post-transition Constitution was conducted successfully on 28 February. On 3 June, for the first time since Burundi's independence in 1962, elections were held for communal councillors. Elections for the National Assembly were held on 4 July, and indirect Senate elections on 29 July. On 19 August, Pierre Nkurunziza, leader of the largest former political armed group called Conseil national pour la défense de la démocratie-Forces pour la défense de la démocratie, was elected President by a Joint Parliamentary Congress. His inauguration on 26 August marked the formal conclusion of the transitional process.

In March, an assessment mission dispatched by the Secretary-General in 2004 to consider the possible establishment of an international judicial commission of inquiry, as provided for in the 2000 Arusha Agreement on Peace and Reconciliation, recommended the establishment of two accountability mechanisms, negotiations for which were under way: a non-judicial one in the form of a national truth commission and a judicial one in the form of a special chamber within the Burundi court system.

On 15 May, Domitien Ndayizeye, President of the Transitional Government of Burundi, and Agathon Rwasa, leader of a faction of the Parti pour la libération du peuple hutu-Forces nationales de libération (FNL (Rwasa), also known as Palipehutu-FNL), signed a declaration to cease hostilities immediately, establish technical teams to decide on the mechanisms for a permanent ceasefire and promptly begin negotiations. Negotiations had not taken place by year's end and FNL remained outside the peace process.

The Implementation Monitoring Committee, established under the terms of the Arusha Agreement to monitor, supervise and coordinate the implementation of the Agreement, had played a critical role since September 2000 in Burundi's peace process and was dissolved with the installation of the new Government of Burundi. On the basis of a proposal by the Secretary-General, ONUB in October launched the Burundi Partners' Forum, an international mechanism to support the new Government in its efforts to consolidate peace and promote recovery and development in the country.

Burundi believed that the significant improvement in the overall situation in the country no longer warranted the continuation of a peacekeeping presence; hence, at its request, ONUB began to draw down 40 per cent of its military force in December. Consultations were held between ONUB and the Burundian authorities to determine modalities for the withdrawal.

ONUB

The United Nations Operation in Burundi, established in 2004 by Security Council resolution 1545(2004) [YUN 2004, p. 145], was extended until 1 July 2006 by resolution 1650(2005) (see p. 214). Among the many tasks specified by its mandate, ONUB was to ensure respect of the ceasefire agreements; promote the re-establishment of confidence between the Burundian forces; carry out the disarmament and demobilization portions of the national programme of disarmament, demobilization and reintegration of combatants; monitor the quartering of the Armed Forces of Burundi (FAB) and their heavy weapons, and the illegal flow of arms and movements of combatants across Burundi's borders; contribute to the successful completion of the electoral process, and to the creation of security conditions for the provision of humanitarian assistance; facilitate the voluntary return of refugees and internally displaced persons; protect civilians under imminent threat of violence; and to ensure the protection of UN personnel, facilities and equipment, as well as the security and freedom of movement of ONUB personnel.

Headquartered in the Burundi capital of Bujumbura, ONUB was headed by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Burundi, Carolyn McAskie (Canada). Its military observers were deployed to 27 team sites across the country; its infantry battalions were deployed to the following areas of operation: Cibitoké, Gitega, Bubanza, Bujumbura and Makamba. It maintained five regional offices, in Bujumbura Rurale, Gitega, Makamba, Muyinga and Ngozi. The electoral, human rights, civilian police, civil affairs and public information personnel in each office operated under the leadership of a Regional Coordinator.

The Status of Forces Agreement for ONUB, requested in resolution 1545(2004), was signed by the United Nations and the Transitional Government in Bujumbura on 17 June.

The mandate of ONUB was extended thrice during the year, the third time until 1 July 2006.

Sexual exploitation and abuse. The Special Representative moved proactively to enforce the Secretary-General's zero-tolerance policy with regard to undesirable behaviour, abuse and sexual exploitation by UN personnel in Burundi. The code of conduct officer of ONUB, accompanied by the Special Representative and the Force Commander, gave briefings for all contingent commanders and senior officers. The few complaints of misconduct by UN personnel were promptly addressed and were under investigation. In June, the Deputy Secretary-General visited Burundi to deliver a special message on the code of conduct and sexual exploitation and abuse. She also acknowledged the efforts and commitment of ONUB to upholding the highest possible standards of conduct.

Financing

In June, during its resumed fifty-ninth session, the General Assembly considered the Secretary-General's report on the ONUB budget for 1 July 2005 to 30 June 2006 totalling $296,654,700 and expenditure report for the period 21 April to 30 June 2004 indicating expenditures of $40,246,100 against an appropriation of $49,709,300 [A/59/748]. It also considered ACABQ's related report [A/59/736/Add.12], containing its recommendations and observations.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 June [meeting 104], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/59/528/Add.1], adopted resolution 59/15 B without vote [agenda item 153].

Financing of the United Nations Operation in Burundi

Political and military developments

Political developments and ONUB activities

Report of Secretary-General (March). In response to Security Council resolution 1577(2004) [YUN 2004, p. 154], the Secretary-General issued his March report on UNOB [S/2005/149] covering developments since November 2004 [YUN 2004, p. 153]. He said the six-month extension of the transition period, which began on 1 November 2004 [ibid.], had allowed the Burundian parties to advance the peace process despite some delays in the electoral calendar. The President had promulgated a law to establish a National Truth and Reconciliation Commission and decreed a limited right of assembly during the campaign on the constitution. The constitutional referendum would be conducted in accordance with the 1993 national election law. On 2 February 2005, the President's Office indicated that the texts of the proposed electoral code and communal law, both prerequisites for the conduct of elections, were ready for submission to the Council of Ministers, before being introduced to the National Assembly and Senate.

On 6 January, the transitional President sought and promptly received the Constitutional Court's interpretation that would allow him to submit a revision to the constitution for direct referendum or through the National Assembly and Senate. He had asked the Court to determine his authority directly to amend those articles of the constitution prohibiting transitional presidents from running in the first presidential election; requiring the National Assembly and the Senate to elect the first president of the post-transitional period; and providing for the co-option of an additional 18 to 21 Assembly members under specific circumstances. The President's party, the Front for Democracy in Burundi (FRODEBU), called for an endorsement of the constitution in the referendum but opposed any pre-referendum amendments. On 12 January, the FRODEBU parliamentary group issued a statement stressing that the proposed amendments would be inconsistent with the 2000 Arusha Agreement on Peace and Reconciliation in Burundi [YUN 2000, p. 146]. The Conseil national pour la défense de la démocratie-Forces pour la défense de la démocratie (CNDD-FDD(Nkurunziza)) issued a statement accusing President Ndayizeye of trying to delay elections, and warned that a "return to war" remained an option. By a 17 January joint communiqué, 11 political parties, including FRODEBU, condemned the President's attempts to amend the constitution. On the other hand, the Vice-President's party, the Union for National Progress, Burundi (UPRONA), supported the President, advocating strongly for an amendment. During that period, the Special Representative met with the President and other leaders on numerous occasions to discuss the proposed amendments, impressing upon them the importance of adhering to the Arusha Agreement. On 25 and 26 January, the Facilitator of the Burundi peace process (the Deputy President of South Africa) travelled to Bujumbura to convey a message from the Great Lakes region to all parties against amending the constitution before the referendum, likewise reminding them of their obligations under the Arusha Agreement. On 4 February, President Ndayizeye announced that he would no longer seek a constitutional amendment. UPRONA expressed dissatisfaction and, along with two other Tutsi-dominated parties—the Rally for Democracy and Economic and Social Development (RADDES) and the Party for National Redress (PARENA)—called for a vote against the constitution in the referendum. Despite two postponements by the Independent National Electoral Commission (CENI), the referendum on the post-transition Constitution took place on 28 February (see p. 202).

On 25 January, FNL (Rwasa) announced its willingness to restart peace talks with the Transitional Government, the first such indication since formal negotiations ended after FNL claimed responsibility for the August 2004 Gatumba massacre [YUN 2004, p. 149]. FNL's willingness to negotiate was also made known, through an intermediary, to the Special Representative. The Secretary-General affirmed UN preparedness to extend to the Great Lakes Regional Peace Initiative on Burundi and the Facilitator, the mediators of the Burundian peace process, any assistance that would help achieve a comprehensive ceasefire and sustainable peace in Burundi.

The Implementation Monitoring Committee, at its twenty-fifth session (24-25 January), welcomed the progress in the peace process, specifically the publication of voter lists, the promulgation at the end of 2004 of the laws on the new National Defence Force and national police service, and the registration early in January of the former armed political movements as political parties. It examined the new law on the National Truth and Reconciliation Commission, noting the need to avoid overlapping jurisdictions between the Commission and the proposed international judicial commission of inquiry (see p. 205). It held two special meetings in February to examine matters pertaining to the return of Burundian refugees, other vulnerable populations, land reform and political prisoners.

In keeping with the 3 January communiqué, expressing its intention to normalize relations with the DRC, Burundi's Foreign Minister visited Kinshasa (10-12 February) and concluded a bilateral agreement on the normalization of relations and security cooperation with DRC. The Secretary-General requested his Special Representative to discuss with the two Governments and MONUC an action plan to increase security along the Burundi-DRC border.

The security situation in Burundi remained generally stable, but armed clashes between the joint FAB/CNDD-FDD and FNL (Rwasa) continued in the provinces of Bujumbura Rurale, Bubanza and Cibitoké. On 23 January, the Governor of Bubanza and his bodyguard were killed when his entourage was stopped by unidentified assailants. ONUB issued a statement on 25 January deploring the murder; its subsequent investigation into the incident failed to ascertain the motive or find the perpetrators.

With regard to security sector reform, the laws promulgated by President Ndayizeye at the end of 2004 for the establishment of the new National Defence Force and national police service required considerable work to define their operational modalities and to enact the necessary legal instruments and regulations.

The Secretary-General reported some progress in the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programme. Following the successful training and integration of 1,800 joint FAB/CNDD-FDD security units at the Tenga training centre at the end of 2004, an agreement with the Government was reached on 13 January 2005 to begin the training and integration of an additional 2,700 ex-combatants. As of 4 February, 4,441 ex-combatants, who were not to be integrated into the security forces, had been disarmed and demobilized at the Gitega, Bubanza and Muramvya demobilization centres, where they also received elementary skills training and financial assistance. By 20 February, 12,950 ex-combatants, predominantly from CNDD-FDD and ex-FAB, entered designated cantonment sites in preparation for their relocation to a demobilization centre. Given the generally poor conditions in those sites, on 22 February, the Joint Ceasefire Commission, the Executive Secretariat and ONUB met to address specific concerns pertaining to conditions at the Buramata cantonment site; in subsequent meetings, all parties agreed to begin the initial demobilization of ex-combatants from that site. The remaining ex-combatants had not yet begun their full-scale transfer from the pre-disarmament assembly area to the cantonment sites, pending the harmonization of ranks, appointment of their representatives in the National Defence Force high command, approval of an operational plan for integration into the national security structures, and the return of FAB soldiers to barracks. ONUB, the Executive Secretariat and FAB agreed that the return of FAB soldiers to barracks would take place simultaneously with the entry of the armed political parties/movements to the cantonment sites, where their security would be monitored by ONUB military observers, in coordination with the joint security units and joint liaison teams comprising members from all parties.

The first and second phases of the demobilization of child soldiers ended by 31 December 2004, with 2,260 FAB and gardiens de la paix child soldiers demobilized by UNICEF and its partners through the Child Soldiers National Structure. An additional 618 children from the six armed political parties/movements were demobilized and reintegrated with their families or were in community care.

On 19 January, the Minister of Public Security signed a paper jointly elaborated by the Transitional Government and ONUB entitled "Concept for the Integration of the Burundi National Police". The paper set forth the reform and integration of the national police in two phases: the first phase was to ensure security during the elections, to be provided by the national police and defence forces; the second was to consist of various consolidation activities and long-term reform and capacity development initiatives. The paper also identified the responsibilities of the different actors involved and provided a basic framework for donors to provide assistance. On 18 February, during the first phase, ONUB began a 10-day training-of-trainers course for 70 Burundian civilian police trainers selected from officers of the Government and of the armed political parties/movements.

Besides monitoring the ceasefire agreements and the implementation of disarmament and demobilization activities, ONUB assisted with the nationwide distribution of electoral material and provided security daily to personnel of ONUB, UN agencies and programmes and NGOs, as well as to food convoys to the various assembly/cantonment sites throughout Burundi. It increased patrols close to the refugee camps in Mwaro and Muyinga and the former transit site at Ngagara (Bujumbura Mairie), where Congolese Banyamulenge refugees were located. It conducted a series of military operations aimed at deterring foreign combatants from infiltrating the border with the DRC, curtailing the flow of illegal weapons and assisting in the monitoring of the DRC arms embargo, in coordination with MONUC.

The Secretary-General observed that despite delays in the electoral calendar, there had been continued progress in the peace process, especially with regard to the extension of the transition, preparation for elections, and the demobilization, disarmament and reintegration process. He pointed out the key tasks to be completed without delay as the transitional process was entering its final and most crucial phase: the promulgation of an electoral code and communal law; the establishment of technically realistic dates in the electoral calendar; and the commencement of meaningful military and police integration. The inclusion of FNL (Rwasa) in the peace process also needed to be carefully assessed in order to achieve sustainable peace and stability throughout Burundi. The Secretary-General reiterated his call on all political and military leaders to stay the course, to respect the letter and spirit of the Arusha Agreement and to conclude the transitional process expeditiously and in good faith. He instructed the Special Representative to explore with the Burundian parties and regional and international partners ideas on how the United Nations and the international community could continue to support the consolidation of peace after elections. A decisive donor response would also be required in the post-transitional period to help stabilize the country. The extent of human rights violations in Burundi continued to be of concern; and the culture of impunity, which had contributed to the conflict, had to be addressed decisively, in order to lay the foundation of lasting peace and national reconciliation.

The referendum on the post-transition Constitution was conducted successfully without major incident on 28 February. Of the 3.3 million registered voters, 92.4 per cent, or 2,894,372 Burundians, exercised their right to vote for the first time since 1994; and about 90.1 per cent of voters endorsed the Constitution. On 6 March, the Constitutional Court confirmed the referendum results and formally adopted the Constitution. International donors provided full funding for the referendum and ONUB provided extensive transportation assistance, including the transport by land and air of electoral materials to polling stations.

By a press statement of 1 March [SG/SM/9742], the Secretary-General congratulated the Transitional Government and the Burundian people for the successful conduct of the referendum. He called on all Burundian parties to build on that positive momentum and ensure the early conduct of the national elections that would conclude the transitional process in Burundi.

The EU, in a 4 March statement [S/2005/146], welcomed the successful holding of the referendum and the high voter turnout. It encouraged Burundi to complete as swiftly as possible the remaining stages of the electoral process and urged all political forces to take part in that process and to accept unreservedly the expression of the will of the people.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (March)

On 14 March [meeting 5141], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2005/13 on behalf of the Council:

> The Security Council welcomes the approval by the Burundian people of the post-transitional Constitution, through the referendum of 28 February 2005, the final results of which have just been declared. The very broad participation of the citizens of Burundi, who have voted in favour of the Constitution in large numbers, is the sign of their support to the peace process. It is an important event for Burundi and for the whole region of the Great Lakes of Africa.
> The Council calls upon all Burundians to remain committed to the course of national reconciliation, for further steps remain to be taken. It invites, in particular, the political leadership in the country to work together towards the common goal of holding, expeditiously, local and national elections that are free and fair. It encourages the donor community to continue providing its assistance to this end.

Report of Secretary-General (May). In his fourth report on ONUB, issued on 19 May [S/2005/328], the Secretary-General noted that, in furtherance of the transitional process, the Chairman of the Regional Peace Initiative on Burundi, President Museveni of Uganda, convened a summit (Entebbe, Uganda, 22 April) attended by the Facilitator and the Presidents of Burundi, Kenya, the United Republic of Tanzania and Zambia, together with high-level representatives of Ethiopia, Rwanda and the AU, and the Special Representative of the Secretary-General. The summit endorsed a revised electoral calendar presented by CENI, and extended the transition period for the second time, until 26 August. It called for strict adherence to the new electoral timeline, which set the communal elections for 3 June; the legislative elections for 4 July; the Senate elections for 29 July; and the election by Parliament of a post-transition president for 19 August. Elections at the colline (village) level were to be held after the end of the transition period, on 23 September. The summit also endorsed the efforts of the Tanzanian President in his contacts with FNL (Rwasa), and mandated the Facilitator to resolve outstanding issues between President Ndayizeye and CNDD-FDD (Nkurunziza).

As national elections drew near, tensions mounted, especially between FRODEBU and CNDD-FDD (Nkurunziza), leading the latter to suspend its participation in cabinet meetings at the end of April. Tensions began when President Ndayizeye rejected the CNDD-FDD nominee for the post of Minister of the Interior (reserved for CNDD-FDD), requesting that several candidates be submitted for the post, which had fallen vacant with the death in March of the incumbent Minister. To resolve the problem, the Facilitator invited President Ndayizeye and CNDD-FDD leader Pierre Nkurunziza to a meeting (Pretoria, South Africa, 9 May), at which it was agreed that close consultations between the two leaders were necessary; in keeping with President Ndayizeye's undertaking, he appointed an alternative Interior Minister nominated by CNDD-FDD on 11 May.

The electoral code and the communal law, which were submitted to the National Assembly in early March, were promulgated on 20 April. By 8 May, 32 political parties had submitted their lists of candidates for the communal elections, with an average of 11 competing parties per commune. Submission of similar lists for the legislative elections was expected to be completed by 20 May.

The Implementation Monitoring Committee, at its twenty-sixth and twenty-seventh regular sessions, called on the Transitional Government to ensure the adoption of the necessary legal framework, including a decree on the harmonization of military ranks, in order to allow for the reintegration of former armed political parties/movements into the new national defence and police forces. The Committee, which had played a critical role in the peace process since September 2000, was expected to be dissolved at the end of the transition. Consequently, the Special Representative began consultations on the possible establishment of an international support mechanism to assist the elected Government during its first term.

Overall, the security situation in Burundi remained stable except for minor clashes with armed FNL (Rwasa) elements, and acts of banditry and looting. In Mubimbi and Kabezi, communes in Bujumbura Rurale, acts of criminality reportedly increased after CNDD-FDD combatants withdrew to cantonment sites. Security improved with the reinforcement of ONUB patrols in those areas in March and April, and its deployment of National Defence Force units at the end of April.

As to security sector reform, the last pre-disarmament assembly area closed in April, following the transfer of all combatants of the armed political parties/movements to cantonment sites. Combatants from the Gashingwa and Mabanda sites were transferred to the military regions to undergo joint training with former FAB units before their formal integration into the new National Defence Force. That process had been yet to be completed for combatants in the Kibuye cantonment sites. In addition, two brigades and one special protection unit, with a total of 6,000 personnel, were established and deployed through direct integration. On 11 May, President Ndayizeye signed a decree regulating the harmonization of military ranks, setting out the mechanism for the demobilization of officers and regulating the status of officers to be integrated into the National Defence Force and national police. The Executive Secretariat of the National Commission for Demobilization, Reinsertion and Reintegration established 10 provincial offices in support of ex-combatant reinsertion.

The Secretary-General stated that it was incumbent on the Burundian parties to demonstrate the political will necessary for the successful conclusion of the transitional process, and to ensure the strictest adherence to the new electoral calendar. He invited all Burundian leaders to reinforce the message that sectarian interests could no longer define modern Burundian society, which should build on the gains of the peace process and move towards national reconciliation, stability and development. The Secretary-General believed that the international community should play an active role in supporting the elected Government and endorsed efforts of the United Republic of Tanzania to facilitate an agreement between the Government and FNL (Rwasa). In the meantime, Burundi had to find a solution to its devastating debt burden if it was to enter the reconstruction and development phase in earnest. Ethnic and regional division, at the core of human rights abuses, needed to be resolutely addressed in the post-transition period.

In his belief that the role of ONUB in Burundi continued to be vital, especially during the electoral period, the Secretary-General recommended extending the mandate of the Operation at its current strength for an additional period of six months, until 1 December 2005.

Declaration of 15 May

Following consultations with member States of the Regional Peace Initiative, the United Nations and international partners, the United Republic of Tanzania held meetings with an FNL (Rwasa) delegation (Dar es Salaam, the United Republic of Tanzania, 4-12 April), which concluded with a statement by the delegation expressing FNL's intention to negotiate with the Transitional Government, cease hostilities, and provide a written explanation for its involvement in the 2004 Gatumba massacre [YUN 2004, p. 149]. The Deputy Chairperson of the Regional Peace Initiative (President Benjamin Mkapa of the United Republic of Tanzania) subsequently met with FNL leader Agathon Rwasa (Dar es Salaam, 25 April), who reiterated his group's commitment to begin negotiations. To that end, the United Republic of Tanzania arranged a meeting between President Ndayizeye and the FNL leader in Dar es Salaam on 15 May. At the meeting, the two parties signed a declaration [S/2005/325] by which they agreed on an immediate cessation of hostilities and to establish within a period of not more than one month technical teams to decide on the mechanisms of the permanent ceasefire; to begin negotiations as early as possible; and to negotiate without disrupting the current electoral process.

The Secretary-General later reported, however, that 15 FNL elements were killed the previous day in circumstances suggesting premeditated violence. The claim by the National Defence Force that they were killed in combat was contested by some witnesses. Those deaths and subsequent clashes with FNL undermined the parties' confidence in further negotiations. On 9 June, the United Republic of Tanzania convened talks in Dar es Salaam between the National Defence Force and FNL in the presence of regional, international and UN observers. The talks led to the issuance on 14 June of a joint communiqué committing the parties to respect the 15 May declaration and to identify core responsibilities and establish a mechanism for its implementation. Nonetheless, hostilities between the National Defence Force and FNL continued, as did FNL's forcible recruitment of combatants, including children.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (23 and 31 May)

On 23 May [meeting 5184], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2005/19 on behalf of the Council:

> The Security Council takes note with satisfaction of the declaration signed on 15 May 2005 in Dar es Salaam, United Republic of Tanzania, by the President of the Republic of Burundi, Mr. Domitien Ndayizeye, and by the leader of the rebel group Parti pour la libération du peuple hutu-Forces nationales de libération, Mr. Agathon Rwasa. The Council takes note in particular of the commitment by both parties to immediately cease hostilities, agree within a month on a permanent ceasefire, and negotiate without disturbing the electoral process.
> The Council shares the understanding that this declaration is a first step that should allow the Forces nationales de libération to be rapidly integrated, in a negotiated manner, into the transitional process currently in progress in Burundi. The Council remains convinced that the participation of the Forces nationales de libération in this process will facilitate the holding of the forthcoming elections, in accordance with the timetable confirmed at the last meeting of member States of the Regional Peace Initiative on Burundi, held in Entebbe, Uganda, on 22 April 2005.
> The Council commends the mediation of President Benjamin Mkapa and of the Government of the United Republic of Tanzania and, more generally, the efforts of States of the Regional Initiative chaired by President Yoweri Museveni of the Republic of Uganda and of the Facilitation led by Deputy President Jacob Zuma of the Republic of South Africa, as well as those made by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General, to bring the peace and national reconciliation process in Burundi to a successful conclusion. The Council reiterates that putting an end to the climate of impunity in Burundi and the Great Lakes region is essential to that process.
> The Council urges all Burundian parties to exert greater efforts to ensure the success of the transition, national reconciliation and the stability of the country in the longer term.

On 31 May [meeting 5193], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1602(2005). The draft [S/2005/345] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

ing note in particular of the commitment by both parties to cease hostilities immediately, agree within a month on a permanent ceasefire, and negotiate without disturbing the electoral process,

Urging the international community to take advantage of these positive political developments to increase its assistance for social and economic development in Burundi,

Welcoming the imminent holding of elections as provided for in the Arusha Agreement, taking note with satisfaction of the electoral timetable confirmed at the last meeting of member States of the Regional Peace Initiative on Burundi, held in Entebbe, Uganda, on 22 April 2005, calling upon the transitional authorities strictly to adhere to this timetable for the holding of each poll, and urging all Burundian parties and candidates to ensure respect for the electoral code of conduct, refrain from any actions that may disrupt the process and accept the result of the elections,

Encouraging the Transitional Government to continue, with the cooperation of the United Nations Operation in Burundi, to enhance the participation of women in the political process,

Taking note of the progress achieved in the reform of the security sector, as well as in the disarmament and demobilization of former combatants, and stressing in this regard the need to implement without delay a national reintegration strategy in order to further consolidate peace and stability,

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Decides to extend the mandate of the United Nations Operation in Burundi until 1 December 2005;

2. Calls upon all Burundian parties to exert greater efforts to ensure the success of the transition, national reconciliation and the stability of the country in the longer term, in particular by refraining from any actions which may affect the cohesion of the Arusha Agreement process;

3. Looks forward to the recommendations to be made by the Secretary-General by 15 November 2005 on the role of the United Nations in supporting Burundi, including on the possible adjustment of the mandate and force strength of the United Nations Operation in Burundi, in accordance with progress made on the ground;

4. Also looks forward to the submission by the Secretary-General of his detailed proposal, as described in paragraphs 53 and 54 of his report, for the establishment of an international support mechanism during the post-transitional period in Burundi;

7. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Establishment of commission of inquiry

Report of assessment mission. In March [S/2005/158], the Secretary-General submitted the report of the assessment mission authorized by the Security Council in 2004 in response to Burundi's request [YUN 2004, p. 142], with the objective of considering the advisability and feasibility of establishing an international judicial commission of inquiry in post-conflict Burundi, as provided for in the 2000 Arusha Agreement. The mission, which visited Burundi from 16 to 24 May, was led by Tuliameni Kalomoh, Assistant Secretary-General for Political Affairs, and included representatives of the UN Department of Political Affairs (DPA), the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR), UNHCR and the Office of the United Nations Security Coordinator (UNSECOORD). It held consultations with representatives of the Government and local authorities, political parties, religious leaders and civil society. It also visited courts and met with judicial authorities and members of the legal profession.

The report discussed the nature and added value of an international judicial commission of inquiry; the possibility of limiting the temporal competence of the commission to specific events or periods; the existing National Truth and Reconciliation Commission and its relationship to the proposed international judicial commission of inquiry; the implications of "provisional immunity"and its scope and legal validity before the national and international commissions, and before Burundian national courts; and the implementation of the judicial reforms provided for in the Arusha Agreement and the capacity of the Burundian judicial system to bring to trial those responsible for the crimes of genocide, crimes against humanity and war crimes in an impartial, fair and effective manner.

The mission recommended the establishment of two accountability mechanisms: a non-judicial one in the form of a national truth commission of mixed composition, including both national and international members; and a judicial one in the form of a special chamber within Burundi's court system. It recognized that the proposed mechanisms deviated from the letter, though not the spirit, of the Arusha Agreement; however, it was convinced that the establishment of the two mechanisms in parallel, as envisioned by the Agreement, would create the almost certain risk of overlapping jurisdictions, contradictory findings, wasted resources and, more importantly, marginalize the national truth and reconciliation commission.

The mission recommended that the proposed national truth commission be composed of five commissioners (three international and two national), with the mandate to establish the historical facts and determine the causes and nature of the conflict in Burundi, classify the crimes committed since independence in 1962 to the date of the signature in 2000 of the Arusha Agreement and identify those responsible. It would be carried out by an investigative unit responsible for investigating the crimes and identifying those responsible, and a research unit responsible for establishing the causes and facts of the conflict and the nature of the crimes committed in the different cycles of violence. The composition of the units would be mixed, with a substantial international component to include investigators, forensic experts, historians, political scientists and other experts, as appropriate. The commission would establish its main office in Bujumbura and a number of regional offices throughout the country.

In deciding to recommend a special chamber within the Burundi court system, the mission opted for a judicial accountability mechanism not only located in the country but forming part of that court system (a "court within a court"), with a view to strengthening the judicial sector in material and human resources and to leaving behind a legacy of trained judges, prosecutors, defence counsels and experienced court managers. The special chamber would have the competence to prosecute those bearing the greatest responsibility for the crime of genocide, crimes against humanity and war crimes committed in Burundi. Its temporal jurisdiction would be limited to specific phases of the conflict and would include, as a minimum, the events that occurred between 1972 and 1993. The special chamber would consist of a trial panel (or panels) of three judges and an appellate panel of five. The composition of the special chamber would be mixed, with a majority of international judges, an international prosecutor and a registrar.

The truth commission and the special chamber would be established as national law entities; as such, they would not be UN bodies and would not normally be financed through assessed contributions. In Burundi's circumstances, however, the establishment of any accountability mechanism would have to rely entirely on international funding in the form of voluntary contributions, or partly through assessed contributions.

In his observations, the Secretary-General said that the establishment of the two accountability mechanisms should be placed within the context of the overall judicial reform and capacity-building in Burundi, and pursued in complementarity with other justice and rule of law initiatives. ONUB and OHCHR should engage, within their respective mandates under Council resolution 1545(2004) [YUN 2004, p. 145], in the establishment and operation of the international truth commission and in strengthening the capacity of Burundi's judicial sector. The mission's proposal was the first in a two-stage process of establishing judicial and non-judicial accountability mechanisms in Burundi. If acceptable, the Council should mandate the Secretary-General to engage in negotiations with Burundi on the proposal's practical implementation. At the second stage and in parallel with the first, a broad-based, genuine and transparent consultation process should be conducted with a range of national actors and civil society at large to ensure that the general legal framework for the establishment of the mechanisms reflected the views and wishes of the people of Burundi and that the sense of national ownership was deep and genuine.

Security Council consideration. At its meeting on 15 June [meeting 5203], the Security Council was briefed by the Assistant Secretary-General for Legal Affairs, Ralph Zacklin, on the foregoing mission report, focusing his remarks on the recommended judicial and non-judicial mechanisms and placing them in their national and international contexts. He pointed out that the establishment of an international judicial commission of inquiry, foreseen in the Arusha Agreement, had to be considered in the light of Burundi's history of ethnic conflict, the events that had occurred since the conclusion of the Agreement in 2000 and the experience gained by the United Nations in promoting justice and the rule of law over the past 12 years. It should also be examined against the background of four international commissions of inquiry dispatched to Burundi between 1993 and 1995 [YUN 1993, p. 264; YUN 1994, p. 277; YUN 1995, pp. 340 & 346], three at the request of the Council.

For all their differences, the four commissions shared similar features: their subject matter and temporal jurisdiction were limited to the 1993 coup d'état in Burundi, the assassination of its President and the ensuing massacres. As the earlier 1972 massacre of Hutus was not within their mandate, a legal determination that the crime of genocide had been committed in Burundi was made only in respect of the 1993 massacres of Tutsis. While all four commissions recommended that to eradicate impunity those responsible should be brought to account, no action had been taken on the recommendation by any UN organ.

In connection with the legal basis for the establishment of the special chamber and the applicable law governing its operation, i.e., the Burundian law, with necessary modifications, the Assistant Secretary-General pointed out that, based on existing UN practice, in order for the United Nations to cooperate in the establishment of the special chamber, its founding instrument would have to exclude the death penalty from the sentencing framework and declare any amnesty given to genocide, crimes against humanity and war crimes invalid before the chamber. He said the expeditious establishment of the truth commission for Burundi would ensure that, by the time a special chamber was established, the results of the commission's investigations could be shared with the prosecutor of the special chamber. He also stressed that whatever mode of financing was utilized for the mechanisms, it was important that the funding be viable and sustained to permit them to take root, fulfil their mandates, and create the desired legacy of truth, reconciliation and justice.

In its statement before the Council, Burundi supported the mission's recommendations as meeting the dual concerns of the political negotiators of the Arusha Agreement and the people of Burundi to establish the truth and bring the guilty to justice and punish them. As the new version of the truth commission did not sufficiently highlight the aspect of reconciliation, Burundi requested that the Council give priority to that aspect in discussions on the commission. With respect to the judicial mechanism, Burundi pointed to the need to accelerate the ongoing reform of the judicial system to enable it to discharge its new mission. The final document on the judicial mechanism should clarify the relationship between the truth commission and the special chamber, and the Council should specify the financing modalities of the two mechanisms.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 20 June [meeting 5207], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1606(2005). The draft [S/2005/396] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its support for the process of the Arusha Peace and Reconciliation Agreement for Burundi, signed at Arusha, United Republic of Tanzania, on 28 August 2000 (hereinafter "the Arusha Agreement"),

Convinced of the need, for the consolidation of peace and reconciliation in Burundi, to establish the truth, investigate the crimes, and identify and bring to justice those bearing the greatest responsibility for crimes of genocide, crimes against humanity and war crimes committed in Burundi since independence, to deter future crimes of this nature, and to put an end to the climate of impunity, in Burundi and in the region of the Great Lakes of Africa as a whole,

Emphasizing that appropriate international assistance to Burundi is needed to help the Burundian people to end impunity, promote reconciliation and establish a society and government under the rule of law,

Having taken note of the letter dated 24 July 2002 from the then President of the Republic of Burundi, Pierre Buyoya, to the Secretary-General requesting the establishment of an international judicial commission of inquiry, as provided for in the Arusha Agreement,

Having taken note also of the report transmitted by the Secretary-General to the Security Council on 11 March 2005, following on the assessment mission he had dispatched to Burundi, from 16 to 24 May 2004, to consider the advisability and feasibility of establishing such a commission,

Having heard the opinion of the Transitional Government of Burundi, presented by its Minister of Justice, Didace Kiganahe, on 15 June 2005, on the recommendations contained in the report, which aim at the creation of a mixed truth commission and a special chamber within the court system of Burundi,

Acknowledging the crucial importance of reconciliation for peace and national unity in Burundi, and sharing the view that a future truth commission should contribute to it,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to initiate negotiations with the Government and consultations with all Burundian parties concerned on how to implement his recommendations, and to report to the Security Council by 30 September 2005 on details of implementation, including costs, structures and time frame;

2. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

The Secretary-General reported to the Security Council on 11 October [S/2005/644], as requested in resolution 1606(2005)(above), that a number of developments in Burundi had delayed the negotiations called for. Although the Transitional Government had appointed a commission in July to negotiate with the United Nations for the establishment of the truth commission and the special chamber within the court system of Burundi, negotiations could not take place owing to the activities involved in the electoral process and the subsequent inauguration of President Pierre Nkurunziza on 26 August, as well as the consequent disbandment of the commission established by the Transitional Government, with the installation of the new Government (below).

In meetings with ONUB in early September, President Nkurunziza and the new Minister of Justice expressed the Government's support in principle for the establishment of the two accountability mechanisms; the truth commission was to be established before the special chamber. They indicated their intention to nominate a committee to liaise with the United Nations on the details of the proposed legal framework for the two mechanisms, but made clear that Burundi would not be ready to engage in substantive negotiations before 30 September.

In preparation for the negotiations, consultations among Secretariat departments and offices, and between the Secretariat and relevant NGOs, were held at UN Headquarters to coordinate their respective roles in elaborating the operational modalities of the mechanisms and, their interrelationship and sequencing. In parallel, OHCHR undertook a preparatory mission to Burundi (27 September–1 October) to discuss coordination of activities between it and ONUB in relation to the establishment of a truth commission, the initiation of an information campaign, the design of a national consultative process on the two mechanisms, and the organization of a national conference on transitional justice. On the basis of the preliminary results of the consultative process, the preparatory discussions with Burundi and its readiness to start the negotiating process, a UN mission would be dispatched to Burundi to negotiate the practical implementation of the legal framework and report in due course to the Council.

Elections

On 3 June, for the first time since the country's independence in 1962, elections were held in Burundi for communal councillors. Some 80 per cent of the registered voters participated, and candidates were nominated by 35 political parties, as reported by the Secretary-General in September [S/2005/586]. CNDD-FDD (Nkurunziza) won 93 of the 129 communes, gaining 57.3 per cent of the national vote; FRODEBU took 23.3 per cent; UPRONA, 6.3 per cent; Leonard Nyangoma's faction of CNDD (CNDD (Nyangoma)), 4.1 per cent; MRC, 2.1 per cent; and PARENA, 1.8 per cent. In general, the electoral campaign was conducted peacefully, except in Kayanza province, where tensions between FRODEBU and CNDD-FDD supporters resulted in several acts of violence. The communal elections were held without any serious disruption in 15 of Burundi's 17 provinces, but violence in Bubanza and Bujumbura Rurale caused the early closure of 133 polling stations. With UN assistance, the elections in the affected communes were successfully concluded on 7 June.

Elections for the National Assembly were held as scheduled on 4 July, in a peaceful atmosphere, with the participation of some 77 per cent of the registered voters. CNDD-FDD (Nkurunziza) received 57.8 per cent of the national vote; FRODEBU, 21.6 per cent; UPRONA, 7.1 per cent; CNDD (Nyangoma), 4.9 per cent; and MRC, 2.1 per cent. Indirect Senate elections, in which ballots were cast by the 3,225 newly elected communal councillors, were held on 29 July. The Senate was composed of 41 members: one Hutu and one Tutsi representing each of the 17 provinces; three co-opted representatives from the Batwa community; and the four former Heads of State.

On 19 August, Pierre Nkurunziza, leader of CNDD-FDD, was elected President by a Joint Parliamentary Congress comprising members of the National Assembly and the Senate. On 26 August, the inauguration of Mr. Nkurunziza, the first democratically elected President in over a decade, marked the formal conclusion of the transitional process in Burundi. The final round of elections at the colline level was to be held on 23 September.

In his inaugural speech, President Nkurunziza signalled his intention to crack down on corruption, crime and lawlessness; fight the spread of HIV/AIDS; improve security; and promote economic growth. He promised free primary education for all children and urged all Burundians to help rebuild the country.

On 29 August, the National Assembly and the Senate confirmed President Nkurunziza's nominees for first Vice-President and second Vice-President. On 30 August, the President nominated ministers for the 20-member Cabinet; its composition generally complied with the Constitution and with the power-sharing arrangements in the Government agreed upon in the Arusha Agreement, which envisaged a Government consisting of 60 per cent Hutu, 40 per cent Tutsi and 30 per cent women representatives. Donors provided $22 million for the elections through the UNDP-managed trust fund.

Press statement of Secretary-General. By a press statement of 19 August [SG/SM/10053], the Secretary-General congratulated the Burundians on the election of their first post-transitional President. He wished the President-elect every success as he faced the challenging tasks ahead, including continuing the major reforms currently under way, the consolidation of peace, national reconciliation, reconstruction and development.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 30 August [meeting 5252], following consultations among Security Council members the President made statement S/PRST/2005/41 on behalf of the Council:

> The Security Council acknowledges the election of Mr. Pierre Nkurunziza as President of the Republic of Burundi, on 19 August 2005. This vote marks the welcome final step of the transitional process in Burundi. The conclusion of this transitional process represents an important milestone for the future of Burundi as well as the Great Lakes region as a whole.
> The Council pays tribute to the spirit of peace and dialogue demonstrated by the Burundian people throughout the transitional period, and commends them for their encouraging participation in the electoral process. The Council calls upon all parties to respect the will of the Burundian people, the elected Government and the commitments agreed upon during the transitional process. It encourages the new authorities to continue on the course of stability and national reconciliation and to promote social concord. It reaffirms in this regard that it is essential to put an end to the climate of impunity.
> The Council commends the critical contribution of the Regional Peace Initiative on Burundi, the African Union and the United Nations Operation in Burundi to the peace process. It calls upon all international partners of Burundi, including the States of the Regional Initiative and the main donors, to remain committed, and encourages them to agree with the Burundian authorities on the most appropriate framework to coordinate their support to reforms currently under way and to the consolidation of peace.

Communication. The AU Peace and Security Council, by a communiqué adopted at its thirty-seventh meeting (Addis Ababa, 8 September) [S/2005/580], welcomed the conclusion of the transitional period in Burundi, the successful conduct of the electoral process, the peaceful transfer of power to democratically elected institutions, the election of Mr. Nkurunziza as President and the establishment of new institutions based on the principles defined in the Burundian Constitution. It encouraged the Government to work resolutely towards consolidating the progress made and concluding the peace process, urged renewed efforts towards concluding a ceasefire agreement with Palipehutu-FNL, and appealed to all of Burundi's partners to provide the requisite financial and socio-economic assistance for post-conflict reconstruction and development.

Further political developments

Report of Secretary-General (September). In his special report of 14 September [S/2005/586], the Secretary-General focused on the conclusion of the transitional process and the proposed international arrangements for providing support to the new Government.

At meetings held on 20 and 21 June and on 18 and 19 July, the Implementation Monitoring Committee reiterated its call for the Transitional Government to implement pending defence and security sector reforms, and called on the CENI to ensure the free and fair conduct of the elections, including strict adherence to the electoral calendar. On 8 and 9 August, the Committee held its final meeting in Bujumbura. It issued a statement drawing the attention of the new Government and the international community to several outstanding provisions of the Arusha Agreement and called on the Government expeditiously to complete the implementation of those relating to the repatriation of refugees and rehabilitation of civilians affected by conflict; the release of political prisoners; reconstruction and economic and social development; the reform of the defence and security sectors and of the justice system; and ending impunity.

The Transitional Government concluded the harmonization of all military and police ranks for both the demobilization of personnel and their reintegration into either the new National Defence Force or the national police. Integration of ex-combatants of armed groups into the National Defence Force was completed. In May, ONUB, in cooperation with international donors, finalized a plan for the comprehensive reform of the security sector. The plan was communicated to the Transitional Government, which welcomed the initiative, but noted that it should be further developed in coordination with the incoming Government.

By 15 August, 16,491 combatants of the former Armed Forces of Burundi and of the armed political parties/movements had entered the national demobilization process, including 2,909 children and 485 female combatants. Another 11,400 former soldiers were expected to be demobilized by December. The Ministry of Defence reaffirmed its commitment to continue demobilization until the National Defence Force was reduced to 30,000 personnel.

During the reporting period, the continuing military confrontations between the National Defence Force and FNL had severe consequences for the civilian population in Bujumbura and Bubanza provinces. FNL continued targeting civilians suspected of no longer supporting it or of supporting CNDD-FDD, some of whom were beheaded or otherwise mutilated. On 16 June, five civilians attending a religious service in Bujumbura Rurale were killed, and at least 10 others were wounded by grenades and gunfire. In Bujumbura and Bujumbura Rurale, ONUB documented an increase in summary executions of suspected FNL supporters, reportedly by National Defence Force soldiers. During the electoral period, the Defence Force carried out mass arbitrary arrests of suspected FNL supporters, and several deaths resulting from torture and ill-treatment were reported; however, most detainees were released after questioning.

A total of 116,799 Burundians continued to live in 160 displacement sites nationwide, the majority in Kayanza, Ngozi, Kirundo, Muyinga and Gitega provinces. Furthermore, 26,077 Burundian refugees returned to Burundi between January and August, most to Makamba, Muyinga and Ruyigi provinces. UNHCR facilitated 25,030 returns.

The Secretary-General observed that, despite the progress achieved in consolidating peace, significant challenges remained. He underscored some of the key areas requiring sustained and enhanced international engagement and donor support: reconstruction, development, job creation, rehabilitation of the national health and education sectors, promotion of reconciliation, putting an end to impunity, conclusion of the security sector and judicial reform programmes and ensuring sound governance. He was encouraged by President Nkurunziza's willingness to pursue negotiations with FNL and called on FNL to act without further delay and in good faith to reach a peaceful settlement with the Government.

Burundi Partners' Forum. The Secretary-General, elaborating on his proposal for an international mechanism to support the new Government, stated that such a mechanism should support the reform processes under way, including those relating to the security sector, the judiciary and land ownership. It should address civilian disarmament issues and the management of large-scale refugee returns; ensure coordination among donors for reconstruction and development funding; support national efforts to consolidate peace through reconciliation; and assure the people of Burundi of the international community's commitment to ensuring democratic, transparent and accountable governance. The forum, which would have a small secretariat, would be chaired by the Special Representative and include representatives of the Regional Peace Initiative, the international donor community, the AU and the United Nations. It would meet monthly and hold regular meetings with the Government. At a 13 September meeting of the Heads of State of Burundi and of the member States of the Regional Peace Initiative, the AU, donors and other international stakeholders, chaired jointly by the Secretary-General and the President of Uganda, agreement was reached in principle on the establishment of the proposed mechanism in the form of a partners' forum, whose mandate and composition would be further elaborated in consultation with Burundi.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (September)

On 22 September [meeting 5268], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2005/43 on behalf of the Council:

> The Security Council takes note of the special report of the Secretary-General of 14 September 2005 on the United Nations Operation in Burundi, in particular the proposal to establish a partners' forum as an international support mechanism.
> The Council also takes note of the declaration adopted on 13 September 2005 in New York during the summit on Burundi, co-chaired by the Secretary-General and the President of the Republic of Uganda, in his capacity as Chairman of the Regional Peace Initiative on Burundi.
> The Council welcomes the decision taken during the summit to establish a forum of Burundi's partners and encourages the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Burundi to conclude discussions with all concerned partners in order to establish the forum as soon as possible.
> The forum should work with the Government of Burundi in consolidating peace and national reconciliation in Burundi, supporting reforms being undertaken by the Government and enhancing donor coordination, and should work in close coordination with the Peacebuilding Commission once it is operational.
> The Council also reiterates its call upon the donor community to pursue bilateral and multilateral efforts to support the country.

Subsequently, ONUB convened an informal meeting (Bujumbura, 18 October), at which the Burundi Partners' Forum was launched bringing together representatives of the AU, the Regional Peace Initiative, neighbouring countries, the United Nations and donors. In addition to holding regular meetings, the Forum would also hold periodic meetings with the participation of all interested international partners.

Security Council consideration. The Council heard briefings by the head of its mission to Central Africa on 15 November [meeting 5305] and on 6 December [meeting 5315]. In introducing the mission's report at the December meeting, the head of the mission remarked that the transition in Burundi had been a success and that the peace and national reconciliation process had set a stunning example for the region. The United Nations, whose support had been crucial to that success, had to withdraw and make way for others. The problem of FNL's non-participation in the peace process continued to pose a challenge; the mission hoped that, with the encouragement of Tanzania, FNL would return to the negotiating table without delay.

Report of Secretary-General (November). In response to Security Council resolution 1602 (2005) (see p. 204), the Secretary-General issued his fifth report on ONUB on 21 November [S/2005/728], updating major developments in the peace consolidation process and presenting his recommendations on the role of ONUB in supporting Burundi in its post-transition phase, including possible adjustments to the Operation's mandate and force strength.

Elections at the colline level were held as scheduled on 23 September in a generally peaceful atmosphere, with a moderate voter turnout. Some 44,724 independent candidates competed for 14,560 colline administrator posts. ONUB provided technical and logistical assistance to CENI in organizing the elections and coordinated closely with the Government on the provision of security. Those elections completed the national electoral process.

The new Cabinet, meeting for the first time on 9 September, identified the following tentative priorities for the Government: restoring peace and democracy, completing security sector reform, combating corruption, improving living conditions, addressing security issues and promoting regional cooperation. Steps were taken to curb public expenditure, and accountability measures were introduced for government officials, including declaring their financial assets.

On 29 October, the newly elected President of FRODEBU, Léonce Ngendakumana, announced that his party was considering withdrawing from the Government unless the decision-making process became more inclusive. On 4 November, the FRODEBU parliamentary group issued a statement expressing concern over the arbitrary arrests of some of its members accused of belonging to FNL. In a 30 October statement, CNDD (Nyangoma) also expressed concern over continuing insecurity in the country, including incidents of arbitrary arrests, torture and human rights violations, despite the new Government's promises for a tangible improvement in the human rights situation.

On 10 September, contrary to its previous position, FNL indicated that it would negotiate with the Government but only with the involvement of the international community. On 14 September, it announced the formation of an 80-member delegation to participate in negotiations, but with the precondition that violations of the 15 May agreement on the cessation of hostilities (see p. 203) be investigated. On 8 October, elements claiming to be from FNL and headed by Jean-Bosco Sindayigaya, a former deputy to FNL leader Agathon Rwasa, proclaimed that the leadership of FNL had been suspended and that the new faction was prepared to negotiate with the Government. The situation regarding the FNL leadership remained unclear. On 6 October, the Government announced that, unless FNL agreed to enter into negotiations before 31 October, it would take measures to bring it to the negotiating table, willingly or by force. It also announced on 29 October that measures would be taken to curb FNL activities. At the request of the Regional Peace Initiative, the United Republic of Tanzania continued its efforts to facilitate talks between the Government and FNL.

Meanwhile, the Tripartite Plus Joint Commission held a meeting (New York, 16 September) at which the members agreed to continue military and diplomatic pressure on all militias operating in their territories to ensure the disarmament and repartition or reintegration of those militias, and to impose sanctions on them if they refused to disarm voluntarily before 30 September. At a further meeting (Kampala, Uganda, 21 October), the Commission agreed to take measures against the armed groups, including FNL, that were operating in the eastern DRC and neighbouring countries. The measures would include prosecution and extradition of the groups' leaders, the imposition of travel bans and financial restrictions against them, and their possible designation as terrorist groups.

While the security situation in most areas of the country remained generally stable, attacks by FNL and clashes between it and the National Defence Force increased in the western provinces. As a result, the population, particularly in Bujumbura Rurale and Bubanza provinces, continued to suffer from violence and intimidation.

Multidisciplinary assessment mission. A multidisciplinary UN assessment mission, led by DPKO and comprising representatives of DPA, the Department of Safety and Security, the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, UNDP, the United Nations Development Group, OHCHR, UNHCR and the World Bank, visited Burundi from 16 to 23 October. The mission met with a wide cross-section of Burundian and international stakeholders and evaluated the security situation on the ground, the overall peace consolidation and national recovery process, and the UN role in the post-transition phase.

The mission examined key security challenges that needed to be addressed urgently for the restoration of stability in Burundi: bringing FNL into the peace process; building the capacity of the security sector, namely, the National Defence Force and the national police; completing the disarmament and demobilization process and reintegrating former combatants; reintegrating refugees and internally displaced persons; and resolving regional issues. Other challenges to be addressed effectively to ensure the consolidation of durable peace included: promoting democracy and good governance and strengthening State administration; strengthening the rule of law; fostering respect for human rights; transitional justice through the establishment of a national truth commission and a special chamber within Burundi's court system (see p. 206); and developing strategies for poverty reduction and humanitarian relief, promoting economic recovery and development, resolving disputes over land and property rights, and developing action plans for clearing mines and other explosive remnants of war.

The mission found that some progress had been achieved towards reforming the security sector. Success of the reintegration process was evidenced by a National Defence Force that currently comprised some 33,000 military personnel, which would be further reduced to 25,000 by December 2007, as it was important that the force be reduced to a size that was financially sustainable. Some 20,000 officers had been integrated into the national police force, of whom 1,012 were women. As to the disarmament and demobilization programme, by 16 October, 17,459 combatants of the former Armed Forces of Burundi and members of the armed political parties/movements had been demobilized, including 3,007 children and 482 women. By 10 October the Government had disarmed and paid allowances to 2,849 members of the gardiens de la paix and to 1,704 militants combattants; nonetheless, the process had been repeatedly interrupted owing to problems concerning the accuracy of lists of the gardiens, and was again suspended in mid-October. Despite the establishment (by the Transitional Government in April) of a National Commission for Civilian Disarmament to address the problem of the large number of small arms in the hands of the civilian population, little progress had been achieved. Refugee returns rose to over 18,000 in October, bringing the total number of returnees to more than 60,000. With UNHCR assistance, 281,731 Burundian refugees returned from the United Republic of Tanzania; some 426,521 more remained in the DRC, Rwanda and Tanzania. The number of internally displaced persons decreased from 145,000 in 2004 to 117,000 in 2005.

Drawdown of ONUB military component. In discussions with the assessment mission, the Government was of the view that, since security had been restored in most areas of the country, international support, including UN support, should focus on institutional capacity-building and on recovery, reconstruction and development. It therefore favoured an early withdrawal of the ONUB military component, while acknowledging the important role that it could continue to play in other critical areas. A joint Government-ONUB technical working group held extensive consultations (Bujumbura, 4-14 November) to consider the nature of ONUB support in the next phase. The Government indicated its strong preference for an early disengagement of ONUB's military and police and that its other areas of responsibility should be progressively assumed by the UN country team and other international partners during 2006. It further indicated the readiness of the National Defence Force and the national police to address security challenges, and to assume as soon as possible all security responsibilities currently undertaken by ONUB in the 14 provinces where security had generally been restored.

It was proposed that the ONUB military component could begin drawing down in December, starting with one national contingent. The phased withdrawal of two battalions, a level II hospital and an aviation unit from the provinces of Kirundo, Ngozi, Cankuzo, Ruyigi, Rutana, Makamba, Gitega, Karuzi and Muyinga could be completed from April to June 2006. During that period, troops could also be withdrawn or redeployed from Mwaro, Muramvya and Bururi. The result would be a reduction of approximately 2,000 personnel, or 40 per cent of ONUB's current authorized military strength. The number of military observers deployed throughout the country would also be reduced from the current authorized strength of 200 to 120 by the end of April 2006. The balance of the ONUB force would remain temporarily deployed in the three border provinces of Bujumbura Rurale (including Bujumbura city), Bubanza and Cibitoké, where FNL remained active and would continue to monitor and enhance security along the Burundi-DRC border, including Lake Tanganyika, in coordination with the National Defence Force and MONUC. A mechanism would be established to coordinate activities of the National Defence Force and the ONUB force related to border control and the progressive transfer of all security responsibilities from ONUB to the national army and police, including the protection of civilians in those provinces.

While it was envisaged that the withdrawal of the ONUB force could, at the request of the Government, be completed in the second half of 2006, a detailed drawdown plan for the approximately 3,000 remaining ONUB troops would be developed after a joint assessment by ONUB and the National Defence Force in January 2006.

The Government proposed that the ONUB police component be reduced from its current authorized strength of 120 to about 15 police trainers, to be based in Bujumbura, by the end of March 2006. ONUB could also play an important role in monitoring the implementation of a possible ceasefire agreement with FNL; supporting the ongoing disarmament, demobilization and reintegration, and security sector reform processes; and monitoring and promoting human rights, particularly through national capacity-building. The Government also requested ONUB support in the area of transitional justice, including for the establishment of a truth and reconciliation commission and special chamber (see p. 206). Many of those tasks were envisaged to be either completed or continued through other bilateral and multilateral assistance programmes before the end of 2006.

The Secretary-General encouraged Burundi and its international and regional partners to adopt a common approach to resolving the armed conflict with FNL and urged Burundi to continue its efforts to engage in talks with FNL, and the FNL leaders to seize the opportunity to join the peace process. He suggested that, if efforts to bring FNL to the negotiating table failed, the Security Council and the region might wish to consider the use of targeted measures against the FNL leaders who continued to obstruct a peaceful solution.

The Secretary-General encouraged Burundi to identify as a matter of urgency the priority areas in which assistance was needed to support the National Defence Force and the national police, and donors to give expeditious, positive consideration to helping meet the shortfalls, especially of equipment, logistics, housing, transport and training. The United Nations stood ready to assist the Government in establishing the truth and reconciliation commission and special chamber and to help ensure that they functioned effectively. The Secretary-General urged the Government to address as a priority the increasing human rights violations in the country and ensure that perpetrators were brought to justice.

The Secretary-General did not believe that ONUB should be maintained for longer than needed. However, in view of the major outstanding challenges, combined with a general lack of resources to address them, he cautioned the Security Council against a hasty or premature international disengagement. He appealed to the regional and international stakeholders, as well as international donors, to remain committed to Burundi in the next critical phase in that country, including by increasing bilateral and multilateral assistance. Taking into consideration the proposed adjustment in the military strength of ONUB, the Secretary-General recommended that its mandate be extended for a further six-month period, until 31 May 2006.

Burundian position. On 23 November [S/2005/736], Burundi transmitted its report to the Security Council on the conclusions of the talks between its Government and ONUB, following the UN assessment mission in October on the evolution of the ONUB mandate (see p. 211). The report outlined the modalities for the gradual withdrawal of ONUB forces as described in the Secretary-General's report (see p. 211) and the agreed areas of cooperation between ONUB and Burundi, as follows: monitoring Burundi's borders with the DRC, including Lake Tanganyika; support for the completion of the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration process and security sector reform; support for the promotion of human rights; support for transitional justice in the context of the establishment of the truth and reconciliation commission and the special chamber (see p. 206); protection of ONUB personnel and equipment; demining; and support for the World Food Programme (WFP) and UNHCR humanitarian operations. The report noted that Burundi would continue to cooperate with ONUB by working with the teams that were not part of the first withdrawal in the areas and within the limits of what was agreed. In March 2006, Burundi and ONUB would assess the situation on the ground and progress made in the agreed areas of cooperation.

Security Council consideration. During the 30 November meeting [meeting 5311] of the Security Council to discuss the reports of the Secretary-General and Burundi, the Foreign Minister of Burundi stated that the country, strengthened by its achievements, was working to address the challenges of reconstruction and development. There was peace throughout most of the country, with the exception of a few pockets in Bujumbura Rurale, Cibitoké and Bubanza, where the crime rate remained high and atrocities were sometimes perpetrated by members of Palipehutu-FNL. The National Defence Force and the national police were working hard to put an end to such actions with encouraging results: in November, 707 FNL members left the movement and surrendered to Burundian authorities; many of them had rejoined their families. Burundi was emerging from a long period of economic stagnation and a sense of confidence had returned. The last few months had seen a significant increase in tax yield due to the strict collection of duties and taxes. The Foreign Minister stressed, however, the urgent need to strengthen financially multilateral agencies, including UN agencies, to enable them to shift from humanitarian to development support of post-conflict Burundi.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (November)

On 30 November [meeting 5311], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1641 (2005). The draft [S/2005/741] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Recalling its relevant resolutions on Burundi, and in particular resolution 1545(2004) of 21 May 2004,

Reaffirming its strong commitment to the sovereignty, independence, territorial integrity and unity of Burundi, and recalling the importance of the principles of good-neighbourliness, non-interference and cooperation in the relations between States in the region,

Noting that factors of instability remain in Burundi, which continue to constitute a threat to international peace and security in the region,

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Decides to extend the mandate of the United Nations Operation in Burundi until 15 January 2006;

2. Decides also to remain actively seized of the matter.

Also on 30 November, the Council President in a press statement [SC/8567], said that the extension of the ONUB mandate to 15 January 2006 was of a technical nature to allow time for discussion on the future of the Operation. By the statement, Council members encouraged the new Burundian authorities to continue on the course of stability and national reconciliation and to promote social concord in the country. They reiterated their support for ONUB, which, together with the Burundi Partners' Forum, continued to have an important role to play in support of the Government's efforts towards the consolidation of peace. The Council would review ONUB's mandate, taking into account developments in Burundi and the region, and the numerous remaining challenges. They recognized the importance of a gradual disengagement of ONUB and encouraged the Burundian authorities and ONUB to consult closely on the matter. Council members again called on Palipehutu-FNL to join the peace process without further delay or conditions, and welcomed the willingness shown by the Government to achieve a peaceful solution.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (December)

On 21 December [meeting 5341], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1650 (2005). The draft [S/2005/811] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolutions and the statements by its President on Burundi, and in particular resolution 1545(2004) of 21 May 2004,

Reaffirming its strong commitment to the sovereignty, independence, territorial integrity and unity of Burundi, and recalling the importance of the principles of good-neighbourliness, non-interference and cooperation in the relations among States in the region,

Congratulating the people of Burundi for the successful conclusion of the transitional period and the peaceful transfer of authority to representative and democratically elected government and institutions,

Expressing its gratitude to the States of the Regional Peace Initiative on Burundi, the African Union and the United Nations Operation in Burundi for their significant contribution to the success of the political transition,

Encouraging the new authorities and all Burundian political actors to continue on the course of stability and national reconciliation and to promote social concord in their country, while recognizing that numerous challenges remain to be addressed,

Stressing the need to put in place the reforms provided for in the Arusha Peace and Reconciliation Agreement for Burundi, signed on 28 August 2000,

Encouraging in particular the Burundian authorities to continue to work with the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Burundi, including on the establishment of the mixed truth commission and the special chamber within the court system of Burundi referred to in resolution 1606(2005) of 20 June 2005,

Reiterating its support for the United Nations Operation in Burundi, which continues to have an important role to play in support of the efforts of the Government of Burundi towards the consolidation of peace,

Recognizing the important role of the Partners' Forum established during the summit on Burundi, held in New York on 13 September 2005, in the consolidation of peace and reconciliation in Burundi and in supporting reform being undertaken by the Government,

Encouraging the Government to work with its international partners, in particular with a view to mobilizing assistance for the reconstruction of the country,

Taking note of the position of the Government on the evolution of the mandate of the United Nations Operation in Burundi, as recorded in the letter dated 23 November 2005 from the Chargé d'affaires a.i. of the Permanent Mission of Burundi to the United Nations addressed to the President of the Security Council and as presented to the Council on 30 November 2005 by

Mrs. Antoinette Batumubwira, Minister for Foreign Affairs and International Cooperation of Burundi,

Taking note also of the report of the Security Council mission which visited the region of Central Africa from 4 to 11 November 2005, and endorsing the recommendations contained therein,

Expressing its serious concern at the continuation of hostilities by the Parti pour la libération du peuple hutu-Forces nationales de libération, and at the threat it poses to civilians,

Noting that, although there has been an improvement in the security situation since the completion of the transitional period, factors of instability remain in Burundi and in the Great Lakes region of Africa, which continue to constitute a threat to international peace and security in the region,

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Takes note of the fifth report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Operation in Burundi, of 21 November 2005, and in particular of the recommendations contained in paragraphs 57 to 60 thereof;

2. Decides to extend the mandate of the United Nations Operation in Burundi until 1 July 2006;

3. Welcomes the readiness expressed by the Secretary-General to continue to consult closely with the Government of Burundi, with a view to determining, on the basis of the recommendations referred to in the letter dated 23 November 2005 from the Chargé d'affaires a.i. of the Permanent Mission of Burundi to the United Nations addressed to the President of the Security Council, the modalities for implementing a gradual disengagement of the United Nations peacekeeping presence and an adjustment to its mandate, taking into account all the circumstances, as well as the merits of a United Nations contribution and support to the consolidation of peace in Burundi;

4. Looks forward to receiving the report of the Secretary-General on the joint assessment mentioned in paragraph 60 of his fifth report on the United Nations Operation in Burundi, by 15 March 2006;

5. Authorizes, subject to the following conditions, the temporary redeployment of military and civilian police personnel between the United Nations Operation in Burundi and the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, taking into account the need to ensure effective performance of the current mandates of those missions, and requests in this regard the Secretary-General to begin consultations with the countries contributing military and civilian police personnel to those missions:

(a) The Secretary-General shall receive the prior agreement of the countries contributing military and civilian police personnel and of the Governments concerned;

(b) He shall inform the Council in advance of his intention to proceed with such a redeployment, and in particular of its proposed scope and duration;

(c) Any such redeployment shall require a corresponding prior decision of the Council;

6. Underlines the fact that any personnel redeployed in accordance with paragraph 5 above shall continue to be counted against the authorized ceiling on military and civilian police personnel of the mission from which they are being transferred, and that any such transfer shall not have the effect of extending the deployment of personnel after the expiration of the mandate of their original mission, unless the Council decides otherwise;

7. Urges the Government to complete the implementation of the programme of disarmament, demobilization and reintegration, including the effective reintegration of former combatants;

8. Welcomes the willingness shown by the Government to achieve a peaceful solution with the Parti pour la libération du peuple hutu-Forces nationales de libération, and reiterates its call upon this movement to join the peace and national reconciliation process without further delays or conditions, and its intention to consider appropriate measures that might be taken against those individuals who threaten this process;

9. Expresses its deep concern at the violations of human rights reported by the Secretary-General, and urges the Government and other parties concerned to take the necessary steps to prevent further violations and to ensure that those responsible for such violations are brought to justice without delay;

10. Urges the international partners for the development of Burundi, including the United Nations bodies concerned, to continue to provide their support for the reconstruction of the country, particularly through an active participation in the donors conference to be organized in early 2006;

11. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Further report of Secretary-General. Reporting on developments in Burundi during November and December [S/2006/163], the Secretary-General noted that Parliament adopted nine out of 37 draft laws presented to it during its first session, which ended in December. It also approved the national budget for 2006, totalling $417 million. The budget was linked to the poverty reduction strategy and envisaged an increase in funding for health, education, public investment and wages, and a slight reduction in the allocation for the security sector.

The President announced the Government's 2006 priorities, which included economic recovery, reconstruction, reconciliation, governance, trade, education and environmental protection. He reiterated his commitment to resolving the issues of prison overcrowding and political prisoners, and to combating corruption and mismanagement. He pledged to strengthen the capacity of the security sector, reorganize judicial institutions, disarm civilians, and reintegrate returnees and former combatants. Taxes on basic food items were reduced. Membership of the Burundi Partners' Forum was expanded to include all international representatives accredited to Burundi. In addition, a National Committee for Aid Coordination was established in December.

Following the appointment of a commission to identify political prisoners, the President announced in December the conditional release of all prisoners detained for more than two years without charge and those who had served at least a quarter of their sentence, except those who had committed serious crimes. By presidential decree, provisional immunity was granted to all political prisoners identified by the commission; 1,457 detainees were subsequently released. The decision raised serious concerns among political parties and human rights organizations over the lack of transparency in the work of the commission, in particular regarding the criteria on which the releases were based. The lack of preparation of the communities to which released detainees would return also raised concerns. The Government had since launched a sensitization campaign to explain its decision on political prisoners and to promote reconciliation in their communities.

In December, ONUB destroyed unserviceable ammunition collected through the disarmament process during a public ceremony organized by the Government and ONUB. With World Bank support, 96 per cent of former combatants received reinsertion allowances for the first 18 months following their demobilization. However, the delivery of longer-term economic reintegration assistance, including micro-projects, vocational training and apprenticeships had been seriously delayed. As at December, a total of 5,295 former combatants were receiving reintegration assistance, over half of them under the national programme. Meanwhile, in November, the National Defence Force began basic training on core military duties at the company level.

With regard to the return and reintegration of refugees and displaced persons, UNHCR facilitated 5,409 and 1,250 returns in November and December, respectively, bringing the total number of refugee returns to 68,000 during 2005.

At the request of the Government, ONUB began the drawdown of 40 per cent of its military force in December. As requested by Security Council resolution 1650(2005) (see p. 214), ONUB consulted with the Burundian authorities to determine the modalities for implementing the withdrawal of ONUB, on the basis of the recommendations made by Burundi in its 23 November report (see p. 213).

(For action by the Economic and Social Council on the reports of its Ad Hoc Advisory Group on the humanitarian and economic needs of Burundi, see p. 1008.)

Rwanda

Assistance to survivors of 1994 genocide

On 23 December [meeting 69], the General Assembly adopted resolution 60/225 [draft: A/60/L.34 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 73 (a)].

Assistance to survivors of the 1994 genocide in Rwanda, particularly orphans, widows and victims of sexual violence

The General Assembly,

Guided by the Charter of the United Nations and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights,

Recalling the 2005 World Summit Outcome, particularly its recognition that all individuals, in particular vulnerable people, are entitled to freedom from fear and freedom from want, with an equal opportunity to enjoy all their rights and fully develop their human potential,

Recalling also its resolution 59/137 of 10 December 2004, in which it requested the Secretary-General to encourage relevant agencies, funds and programmes of the United Nations system to continue to work with the Government of Rwanda to develop and implement programmes aimed at supporting vulnerable groups that continue to suffer from the effects of the 1994 genocide,

Recalling further the findings and recommendations of the independent inquiry commissioned by the Secretary-General, with the approval of the Security Council, into the actions of the United Nations during the 1994 genocide in Rwanda,

Recalling the report containing the findings and recommendations of the International Panel of Eminent Personalities commissioned by the Organization of African Unity to investigate the genocide in Rwanda and the surrounding events, entitled "Rwanda: The Preventable Genocide",

Recalling also its resolution 58/234 of 23 December 2003, by which it declared 7 April 2004 the International Day of Reflection on the Genocide in Rwanda,

Recognizing the numerous difficulties faced by survivors of the 1994 genocide in Rwanda, particularly the orphans, widows and victims of sexual violence, who are poorer and more vulnerable as a result of the genocide, especially the many victims of sexual violence who have contracted HIV and have since either died or become seriously ill with AIDS,

Firmly convinced of the necessity to restore the dignity of the survivors of the 1994 genocide in Rwanda, which would help to promote reconciliation and healing in Rwanda,

Commending the tremendous efforts of the Government and people of Rwanda and civil society organizations, as well as international efforts, to provide support for restoring the dignity of the survivors, including the allocation by the Government of Rwanda of 5 per cent of its national budget every year to support genocide survivors,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to encourage the relevant agencies, funds and programmes of the United Nations system to implement resolution 59/137 expeditiously;

2. Encourages all Member States to provide assistance to genocide survivors and other vulnerable groups in Rwanda in support of the present resolution;

3. Expresses its appreciation for development assistance and support for the reconstruction and rehabilitation of Rwanda after the 1994 genocide, and calls upon Member States to continue to support the development of Rwanda, inter alia, through programmes under the poverty reduction strategy;

4. Urges Member States to develop educational programmes that will inculcate future generations with the lessons of the genocide in Rwanda in order to help to prevent future acts of genocide;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to establish a programme of outreach entitled "The Rwanda Genocide and the United Nations" as well as measures to mobilize civil society for Rwanda genocide victim remembrance and education, in order to help to prevent future acts of genocide, and to report to the General Assembly on the establishment of the programme within six months from the date of the adoption of the present resolution;

6. Also requests the Secretary-General, in view of the critical situation of the survivors of the 1994 genocide in Rwanda, particularly orphans, widows and victims of sexual violence, to take all necessary and practicable measures for the implementation of the present resolution and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its sixty-second session;

7. Requests the General Committee to consider including in the provisional agenda of the General Assembly at its sixty-second session an additional item entitled "Assistance to survivors of the 1994 genocide in Rwanda, particularly orphans, widows and victims of sexual violence".

Arms embargo

On 7 February [S/2005/76], the Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 918(1994) [YUN 1994, p. 285] concerning the arms embargo against Rwanda issued a report covering its activities from 1 January to 31 December 2004. In the absence of a specific monitoring mechanism to ensure implementation of the arms embargo, the Committee recalled its previous observation [YUN 2004, p. 160] that it relied solely on the cooperation of States and organizations in a position to provide information on violations of the embargo. During the reporting period, no violations were brought to the Committee's attention.

Central African Republic

The United Nations Peacebuilding Office in the Central African Republic (BONUCA) had continued since 2000 to support the efforts of the Government to return the country to stability and achieve reconciliation and reconstruction, following the 2003 coup d'état. With the assistance of BONUCA and the international community, the first and second rounds of legislative and presidential elections were held successfully in March and May, and, in June, General François Bozizé, President of the Transitional Government, was confirmed President and Head of State of the Central African Republic, marking a return to constitutional order. As it assumed office, the new Government confronted several continuing major challenges, including insecurity in the north and west of the country due to the presence of armed groups, the human rights situation, and economic fragility. A Committee of Foreign Partners, including BONUCA, was established to monitor developments in the political, security and human rights situation and in respect of democracy in the country.

In November, the Secretary-General, with the agreement of the Security Council, extended BONUCA's mandate for an additional year, until 31 December 2006, to help the country build on the success of its recent elections. At the same time, he raised the rank of the Representative of the Secretary-General in the Central African Republic to that of Special Representative.

BONUCA mandate

On 30 November [S/2005/758], the Secretary-General informed the Security Council that the Central African authorities had advised his Representative that they wanted BONUCA, established by Security Council presidential statement S/PRST/2000/5 [YUN 2000, p. 162], to continue to assist them in building lasting peace. Since prospects for lasting stability in the Central African Republic were more encouraging than ever, the Secretary-General recommended that BONUCA's mandate be extended until 31 December 2006, to enable it to help the country build on the success of its recent elections. Support from BONUCA, particularly with regard to strengthening political dialogue and promoting the rule of law, would help create a climate conducive to reconstruction and development.

The Central African authorities, together with neighbouring countries, had also requested BONUCA and the Representative to serve as facilitators in their search for a common solution to security threats caused by the upsurge of banditry and the proliferation of weapons in the subregion. In view of those additional responsibilities and recent encouraging developments, the Secretary-General intended to raise the rank of his Representative in the Central African Republic to that of Special Representative, at the Assistant Secretary-General level.

The Council, on 2 December [S/2005/759], took note of the Secretary-General's recommendation and intention.

Political and security developments

The Security Council President, in a 6 January press statement [SC/8283], said that the Representative of the Secretary-General in the Central African Republic, General Lamine Cissé, had briefed the Council on the situation in Central Africa and on BONUCA activities. The Council reiterated its full support of the Representative's action in the country and noted the progress made by Central Africans in the transitional process towards the restoration of constitutional legality and the rule of law. The Council encouraged the country's international partners to continue to support that process, particularly by funding the forthcoming elections. It noted the difficulties arising from the recent ruling by the Transitional Constitutional Court to exclude certain candidates from the presidential elections, but were encouraged by the decision of the Head of State, General François Bozizé, to accept three of those who had been excluded. The Council invited General Bozizé and all other political actors to find promptly a consensual solution to save the electoral process and to create an environment conducive to the organization of free, transparent and democratic elections.

The Council requested the Secretary-General to inform it of any new developments in the country and to assess the situation through his Representative no later than the end of March.

Elections

The Secretary-General reported in June [S/2005/414] that the first and second rounds of presidential and legislative elections in the Central African Republic were held on 13 March and 8 May, respectively. Apart from some organizational problems and cases of attempted or actual electoral fraud, the elections took place in an atmosphere of calm. Of the 11 candidates in the first round of the presidential elections, two advanced to the second round: Head of State General Bozizé and former Prime Minister Martin Ziguélé. Of the 909 candidates, including 135 women, running in the legislative elections, 18 were elected in the first round and 325 advanced to the second. On 24 May, despite large-scale rigging alleged by the Union des forces vives de la nation, the Mixed and Independent Electoral Commission (CEMI), established in 2004 to ensure implementation of the Electoral Code [YUN 2004, p. 161], felt that the allegations did not undermine the credibility of the electoral process and announced the final results, declaring elected, along with 86 parliament members, General Bozizé as President, with 64.6 per cent of the vote, compared to 35.4 per cent for Mr. Ziguélé. On 11 June, after considering requests for annulment, the Transitional Constitutional Court confirmed the presidential election results and proceeded with the investiture of General Bozizé as President and Head of State of the Central African Republic. The election was observed by 269 national and 28 international observers working under the technical coordination of the International Organization of la Francophonie (OIF). In their joint report, the observers indicated that the reported shortcomings did not constitute irregularities and concluded that the electoral process had been free, reliable, fair and transparent.

On 3 June, the new National Assembly met to elect its officers and standing committees and to adopt its rules of procedure. The Assembly was dominated by the Convergence Kwa Na Kwa party, accounting for 77 of the 105 new seats. On 11 June, the President appointed Elie Doté (former head of the Agriculture and Development Division of the African Development Bank) to the post of Prime Minister.

Communications. The Security Council President, in a press statement of 12 April [SC/8357], said that the Council had been briefed by the Representative of the Secretary-General on the situation in the Central African Republic after the first round of presidential and legislative elections held on 13 March. He said that Council members welcomed the assistance that international partners continued to provide to the country, in particular for the electoral process. They unanimously welcomed the fact that the first round of elections was held with respect for democratic values, and noted with satisfaction that Central Africans demonstrated responsibility on that occasion.

The AU Peace and Security Council, by a communiqué adopted at its thirty-third meeting (Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, 24 June) [S/2005/429], welcomed the positive evolution of the situation in the Central African Republic, in particular the holding of legislative and presidential elections, which marked the country's return to constitutional rule. In the light of that development, the Peace and Security Council decided to lift the 2003 suspension of the Central African Republic from the activities of AU policy organs, imposed by the Central Organ of the OAU Mechanism for Conflict Prevention, Management and Resolution [YUN 2003, p. 158], following the 2003 coup d'état [ibid., p. 156].

Reports of Secretary-General

Report of Secretary-General (June). The Secretary-General, responding to presidential statement S/PRST/2001/25 [YUN 2001, p. 156], submitted a 27 June report [S/2005/414] on the situation in the Central African Republic and BONUCA activities during the first half of 2005.

Of concern was the security situation, particularly in the capital, Bangui, and in the northern areas of the country. Some areas experienced renewed attacks by armed gangs operating as roadblockers, mostly targeting livestock breeders, commercial transport operators or diamond collectors. The attacks displaced about 800 people who had left for the country's major townships and neighbouring Cameroon and Chad. The authorities were concerned that the gangs might be used to destabilize the new Government and its defence and security forces. Despite those threats, the restructuring of the armed forces continued, with France providing support for the training of three battalions. The BONUCA military team also worked with UNDP in the implementation of a project for the reintegration of former combatants, alongside the National Disarmament, Demobilization and Reintegration Commission. The Civilian Police Section of BONUCA continued to monitor the security situation in the capital and in the hinterland, and trained a total of 110 policemen and 286 gendarmes.

With the return to constitutional order and the expected resumption of cooperation between the country and its major donor partners, economic growth was expected to resume in most sectors in 2005, although overall economic activity was fragile. National public finances remained in deep crisis owing to the lack of good governance, the narrowness of the tax base and paucity of revenue. The country was increasingly dependent on budget support from its bilateral and multilateral partners, including France, China, the EU and the Central African Economic and Monetary Community (CEMAC), for its basic needs. It would not be able to meet its 2005 payment obligations without immediate additional budgetary support.

The humanitarian situation continued to deteriorate, from a situation of extreme poverty to a humanitarian emergency, especially in Ouham, Ouham-Pendé, Nana-Grébizi and Kémo prefectures, where resumption of normal activities was impeded by insecurity. In close cooperation with international NGOs and with additional funding from Norway, Sweden and the World Bank, the country team pursued activities to improve access to social services as a matter of urgency and enhance protection of the most vulnerable segments of the population. Other initiatives were launched to improve access to health services, boost school enrolment and revitalize agricultural production.

Serious human rights violations continued during the first half of 2005 in Bangui and in the hinterland, including torture and cruel, inhuman and degrading treatment, rape, kidnapping and forced disappearances for ransom, and summary executions. Harassment, threats, intimidation and cases of abuse of authority by law enforcement agencies were also noted during the electoral campaign.

The Secretary-General congratulated the international partners that provided financial and/or technical support to CEMI during the electoral process. With the emergency situation ended, the electoral process completed and new institutions in place, the Central African Republic had the tools to embark on the path to peace, reconstruction and sustainable development. The Secretary-General encouraged the new authorities to do everything possible to ensure respect for human rights. He appealed to the goodwill and generosity of the country's partners to provide considerable and immediate financial assistance to the economic reconstruction effort under way. The United Nations would provide technical assistance for the formulation of a poverty reduction strategy.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 22 July [meeting 5232], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2005/35 on behalf of the Council:

> The Security Council heard a briefing by the Representative of the Secretary-General, General Lamine Cissé, on the situation in the Central African Republic and the activities of the United Nations Peacebuilding Support Office in the Central African Republic. It reiterated its full support for the action of the Representative of the Secretary-General.
> The Council is deeply gratified by the successful holding of the presidential and legislative elections, and welcomes the establishment of the newly elected institutions whose stability is necessary to ensure lasting peace in the Central African Republic.
> The Council acknowledges the efforts by the Central African defence and security forces to guarantee satisfactory security conditions during the electoral process, and commends the Multinational Force of the Central African Economic and Monetary Community, France, the European Union, China and Germany for providing decisive support to them.
> The Council appreciates the vital role played in the process by the Multinational Force of the Central African Economic and Monetary Community to date, and expresses its support for continuing efforts by the Force to back the consolidation of the constitutional order, which has thus been re-established, and the rebuilding of the rule of law. In this regard, it welcomes the decision of the States of the Central African Economic and Monetary Community to extend the mandate of the Force.
> The Council invites the Government of the Central African Republic, and all the political and social forces, to consolidate the national dialogue and to ensure national reconciliation with a view to achieving sustainable development in their country.
> The Council calls upon international donors and the international financial institutions to continue to assist the Central African Republic generously. It emphasizes that their support will be indispensable for the country's economic and social recovery, and encourages them to formulate, in close consultation with the United Nations system and the Government of the Central African Republic, a concerted development strategy.

The Council requests the Secretary-General to explore, in close consultation with the authorities of the Central African Republic and the country's development partners, the possibility of setting up a follow-up committee or enlarging the Committee of Foreign Partners to Follow Up on the Electoral Process in order to support the reconstruction efforts initiated by the Central Africans. It invites the Secretary-General to report to it on his consultations, through his Representative in the Central African Republic, no later than 31 October 2005.

The Council expresses its concern at the insecurity reigning in the north and the west of the country owing to the presence of armed groups in these regions, and invites relevant States to consult with subregional and regional organizations and with the United Nations Peacebuilding Support Office in the Central African Republic on the action required to respond collectively to the threat posed by these armed groups to the stability of the Central African Republic and certain countries of the subregion.

The Council expresses also its deep concern at the continued deterioration of the humanitarian situation in the Central African Republic, in particular in the north of the country. It calls upon the international community to contribute generously to meet the humanitarian needs of the Central African Republic.

Report of Secretary-General (October). In response to the foregoing presidential statement, the Secretary-General, in his October report [S/2005/679], highlighted the results of his consultations with foreign partners and the Central African Republic on either setting up a follow-up committee, or enlarging the Committee of Foreign Partners to Follow Up on the Electoral Process, to support Central Africa's reconstruction efforts.

The Secretary-General said that the poverty reduction strategy paper for the country, once finalized, would become the framework for action, programming and reference for partners, under government coordination and with UN system support. The framework plan, based on the priorities determined with the Central African authorities, focused on democratic governance, resumption of post-conflict programmes, and the fight against HIV/AIDS. The plan was revised by BONUCA, UN agencies and the Government in the light of the new priorities determined by the Government, as contained in the general policy paper presented to the National Assembly by the Prime Minister on 8 August. Short-term (2005-2006) priorities included: streamlining of public finances by improving the collection of receivables; resolving the external debt-servicing problem through the early conclusion of an appropriate programme with the International Monetary Fund; introducing a transparent management and good governance mechanism; limiting the number of civil servants and State officials to control the wage bill; improving the management and functioning of public financial administrations through foreign technical assistance; providing security throughout the national territory by strengthening the defence and security forces; and expanding private sector development by improving the existing legal, judicial and regulatory framework. Medium-term (2007-2010) priorities included rehabilitating the basic infrastructure, particularly transport, energy and water supply; modernizing the telecommunication sector and its spatial and territorial expansion; modernizing the agricultural sector; increasing the exploitation of mineral and forestry resources; and promoting a policy of national unity based on tolerance, a culture of peace, dialogue and justice. The new Government was receiving assistance from its foreign partners and the UN system for the implementation of those priority actions.

At the political level, BONUCA would mediate and strengthen the dialogue between the political actors, and support the Government's efforts in promoting national unity and reconciliation. It would continue to provide technical assistance to strengthen the capacity of the defence and security forces and support efforts to restructure the army and eradicate the problem of cross-border insecurity, in keeping with the proposals made at the high-level tripartite meeting on that issue (Yaoundé, Cameroon, 25-26 August) by Cameroon, the Central African Republic and Chad. The recommendations adopted at that meeting provided, at the bilateral and trilateral levels, for increased exchanges of security intelligence and information, aerial border surveillance, reactivation of mixed commissions, increased contacts between civilian and military border authorities, joint operations and evaluation of the security situation. At a quadripartite meeting of BONUCA, Cameroon, the Central African Republic and Chad, organized by UNHCR (Geneva, 6 October), the three countries agreed to intensify security measures along their common borders and to launch large-scale humanitarian programmes without regard for their national borders, in order to facilitate the settlement of their populations and adoption of a special integrated development plan for the region. BONUCA would facilitate cooperation among those countries in order to eliminate permanently cross-border insecurity created by armed groups and those who set up roadblocks. It would continue to monitor security along the common borders of the three countries, and also the border between the Sudan and the DRC, in order to prevent serious conflict or humanitarian crises from spilling over from one country to the other.

BONUCA would provide greater support for the Government's efforts to promote and protect human rights and assist in implementing its commitment to restore the rule of law and respect its international obligations. As to reconstruction and economic governance and recovery, the UN system would support efforts to inform and mobilize donors and friends of the Central African Republic, with a view to securing technical and financial support. In the area of finance, the country's partners would help the Government to modernize public financial administrations; improve the monitoring and control of company taxes; introduce an economic and financial good governance charter that officials would be required to sign upon assuming office; and promote greater public awareness of public property. In the social and humanitarian fields, the UN system would focus on upgrading health services, improving access to potable water, raising school attendance and promoting subsistence farming.

Following consultations and exchanges among BONUCA, the country team, the Government and development partners, a Committee of Foreign Partners was established, comprising China, France, Germany, the Russian Federation and the United States; BONUCA, CEMAC and its Multinational Force in Central Africa, the EU, OIF, and the World Bank; and the United Nations Resident and Humanitarian Coordinator. With the Secretary-General's Representative and the High Representative of France as Co-Chairmen, the Committee would monitor developments in the political, security and human rights areas and issues related to respect for democracy.

The Secretary-General observed that the Central African Republic was gradually returning to peace, economic recovery, reconstruction and sustainable development, which required, a comprehensive approach and joint action with the country's development partners. Existing cooperation frameworks, such as the United Nations Development Assistance Framework and the consolidated appeal process, should be strengthened so as to provide greater support to the country's economic recovery efforts and to prevent any deterioration in the socio-economic situation.

Report of Secretary-General (December). The Secretary-General, reporting on 29 December [S/2005/831] on the situation in the Central African Republic and on BONUCA activities in the second half of the year, said that the period was marked by the progressive establishment of republican institutions. The President's appointment on 26 August of a National Ombudsman, in accordance with constitutional provisions, was seen by the Central African people as an important step towards peacebuilding and the strengthening of national political life.

The settlement of electoral disputes by the Transitional Constitutional Court resulted in a change in representation in the National Assembly. The Assembly, at its special session (5-13 August), adopted the Prime Minister's general political programme (see p. 220); at its regular session, it approved the 2005 supplementary budget and adopted the 2006 finance act. The judicial branch was also restructured, especially at the level of the courts and tribunals. The permanent Constitutional Court was established on 8 September, replacing the Transitional Constitutional Court.

Economic activity was heavily affected in 2005 by the negative consequences of earlier politico-military crises and insufficient external assistance. The latest figures suggested a modest recovery of less than 2 per cent, as compared with a forecast of 2.6 per cent. Slight improvements were recorded in fiscal revenues as a result of a census of State officials and civil servants conducted from 25 August through 5 September, which detected close to 1,700 irregularities. Nevertheless, public finances remained in deep crisis, the main effect of which was a new accumulation of salary arrears. The State had been able to pay salaries for six months, only four of which were for 2005; those payments were enabled by the assistance of France and China. The budgetary shortfall had engendered a series of strikes that paralysed a number of public services. In the post-election phase, the anticipated external budgetary assistance was an absolute necessity if the Central African Republic was to overcome its difficulties. Thus, a cooperation agreement between the Central African authorities and the international financial institutions needed to be concluded quickly. However, external assistance alone would not revive the country's economy. The Government had to step up the pace of reform and take strict measures to control public expenditure, expand the tax base and improve transparency in the management of State finances through a more effective anti-corruption drive.

Those parts of the UN system responsible for operational development activities acted within an integrated approach combining response to humanitarian emergencies, reconstruction and development activities, and improvement of the security situation. The revised United Nations Development Assistance Framework for the period 2004-2006, which identified as strategic priorities democratic governance, reconstruction, post-conflict recovery and combating HIV/AIDS, remained the reference point for programming. During the reporting period, the UN system stepped up action to stem the deterioration in humanitarian indicators, in collaboration with international NGOs and with financial support from Ireland, Norway, Sweden, the United States and the World Bank.

The overall human rights situation had been improving, although slowly, since the country's return to constitutional legality. Nevertheless, human rights were often flagrantly violated. Prison conditions were deteriorating and did not meet the minimum standards set by the international human rights instruments ratified by the Government. Violations of press and broadcast freedom continued. The recent arrest of a parliamentarian and of the president of the High Council for Communication, and abuses by the defence forces against the civilian population were brought to the attention of the BONUCA Human Rights Section.

The security situation had been precarious since the elections, in particular in the western and north-eastern regions of the country. Armed gangs continued to interfere with agricultural and commercial activities, causing significant population displacements to neighbouring Chad and Cameroon. The crisis in Darfur, Sudan (see p. 315), and the porous borders had exacerbated the proliferation and movement of light arms and psychotropic drugs. The restructuring of the armed forces continued. The Military Section of BONUCA participated in organizing training courses for battalion command post observers and officers, auto mechanics and small-calibre weapons technicians; its Civilian Police Section continued to monitor the country's security situation and trained 158 national policemen and 98 gendarmes.

The Secretary-General commended the people of the Central African Republic for their patience and political maturity during the post-election period. He said the immensity of the task to be accomplished was beyond the capacity of the Republic alone, which was still recovering from the effects of the recent crises and social tensions; the support of the international community was therefore crucial.

West Africa

In 2005, despite the positive developments achieved in West Africa, daunting challenges remained ahead. While several States were on the path towards economic and democratic reforms and the intensity of conflicts had lessened, the subregion remained vulnerable. The reintegration of former combatants and security sector reform were among the priorities still to be addressed. In March, the Secretary-General presented a progress report on ways to combat subregional and cross-border problems in West Africa, as well as efforts by the United Nations Office for West Africa (UNOWA) and the international community to address subregional cross-border issues. A collaborative EU/Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS/UNOWA) working group was established to develop a plan of action for their activities and a regional conflict prevention policy.

The United Nations continued efforts to move the peace process forward in Côte d'Ivoire, through the implementation of the 2003 Linas-Marcoussis Agreement [YUN 2003, p. 166] and the 2004 Accra III Agreements [YUN 2004, p. 182]. The May 2003 ceasefire monitored by the United Nations Operation in Côte d'Ivoire (UNOCI) continued to hold, with no major violations of the UN-imposed arms embargo. However, key benchmarks were not met, such as the targeted date for the completion of the demobilization of combatants and the constitutional deadline for holding presidential elections on 30 October 2005. The rebel movement Forces nouvelles retained control over the north of the country, while the south remained under Government control. Agreements were brokered in Pretoria, South Africa, on elections and disarmament issues in April and June, but in each case, the parties failed to live up to their commitments, and new disagreements emerged over the work and composition of the Independent Electoral Commission. ECOWAS and the AU extended President Gbagbo's term for a year, appointed a Prime Minister and established bodies to oversee the peace process. Optimism prevailed that Côte d'Ivoire's new road map would move the country beyond the impasse of no-war-no-peace and toward holding national elections by October 2006.

Events in Liberia were dominated by electoral activities. The United Nations Mission in Liberia (UNMIL) supported various aspects of the process, including security services. Elections were held in October, in a peaceful manner, in which Ellen Johnson-Sirleaf obtained the majority vote. While progress was made in restoring State authority, concerns about corruption in the National Transitional Government led to the establishment of an investigative committee, which concluded that there had been administrative and financial malpractices. A governance and economic management assistance programme was developed to address such issues. Violent demonstrations and protests by ex-combatants and reports of their recruitment from neighbouring countries to participate in conflicts, remained an ongoing threat to stability. The apprehension and transfer of former President Charles Taylor to Sierra Leone for prosecution by the Special Court was added to the UNMIL mandate, which was extended through 31 March 2006.

Concerted efforts were made in Sierra Leone to implement the provisions of the 2000 Agreement on the Ceasefire and Cessation of Hostilities (Abuja Agreement) and to lay the foundation for the country to achieve lasting stability, democracy and prosperity. The security situation remained stable, facilitating the implementation of the drawdown plan to reduce troops of the United Nations Mission in Sierra Leone (UNAMSIL), and of the benchmarks set by the Security Council. Due to the fragile situation in the Mano River Basin subregion and shortfalls in security sector reform, the President of Sierra Leone requested a follow-on UN presence after the withdrawal of UNAMSIL. The Security Council therefore established the United Nations Integrated Office in Sierra Leone (UNIOSIL) to assist the Government to consolidate peace, build the national capacity for conflict prevention and prepare for the 2007 elections. An international training team led by the United Kingdom would continue to provide training until 2010. Other progress included further Government control of the diamond-mining sector, the repatriation of some 272,000 Sierra Leonean refugees, the establishment of a national human rights commission and the Security Council Committee's recommendation to revisit the legal basis of the sanctions against Sierra Leone.

In Guinea-Bissau, controversies over the eligibility of two presidential candidates and the election results later in the year created a highly polarized atmosphere in the country. The United Nations Peace-building Support Office in Guinea-Bissau (UNOGBIS) and regional organizations, such as the AU and ECOWAS, provided support throughout the electoral process. In May, the Supreme Court validated the applications of both former Presidents Vieira and Yala, paving the way for the holding of the first and second round of presidential elections in June and July. However, one candidate rejected the final results, causing tensions to escalate. Although the inauguration of President-elect Vieira took place in October, by year's end, the rift had deepened further. By presidential decrees, Mr. Vieira dismissed the Government, appointed a Prime Minister and named a new Government, creating two blocs in the National Popular Assembly: one supporting the Government appointed by President Vieira and the other allied to the previous Government. To facilitate the new role of UNOGBIS in the transition process, the Secretary-General revised its mandate and recommended an extension for one year, until 31 December 2006.

Cameroon and Nigeria cooperated to resolve the border issue, with UN assistance, through the Cameroon-Nigerian Mixed Commission. Activities focused on completing and consolidating the transfers of authority, finding solutions to the outstanding maritime boundary issues and carrying out the demarcation process. In May, the Presidents of the two countries renewed their commitment to pursue the peaceful implementation of the 2002 International Court of Justice ruling [YUN 2004, p. 1265]. However, delays occurred in the planned withdrawal and transfer of authority in the Bakassi Peninsula and in the demarcation exercise.

The United Nations supported the Government of Togo in addressing the political crisis arising from the sudden death of President Gnassingbé Eyadéma, and in taking measures to preserve stability in the country and in ensuring a peaceful transfer of power consistent with the Constitution and the rule of law. Peaceful and orderly elections were conducted in April. However, the political upheaval and incidents of violence that occurred before, during and after the elections, resulted in allegations of human rights violations. The United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights dispatched a fact-finding mission to Togo to assess the situation. The Government indicated that it would examine the Commissioner's recommendations to prevent the cycles of violence and unrest that had often marred elections in Togo, and to redress the problems leading to such misconduct.

Regional issues

The Secretary-General noted that in 2005 West Africa presented a mixed picture. Several States were on the path to economic and democratic reforms; conflicts were less intense, with fewer people killed. Nonetheless, the subregion remained acutely vulnerable. Some conflicts showed little sign of abating; small arms and light weapons continued to proliferate; human rights abuses were perpetrated with impunity; youth unemployment was soaring; corruption was pervasive; rural exodus into urban areas was fueling explosive population growth in cities, undermining prospects for per capita growth; and in many countries HIV/AIDS and other infectious diseases continued to spread.

Among the key organizations assisting in confronting the problems undermining the subregion's development and security was the 15-nation Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS), with its growing capacity for economic integration and conflict management and prevention.

In his message [SG/SM/9862] to the ECOWAS summit early in the year (Accra, Ghana, 19 January), the Secretary-General cautioned that, despite positive developments in the subregion during the previous 12 months, daunting challenges lay ahead. He cited the adverse political and economic effects of the crisis in Côte d'Ivoire on much of West Africa; the situation in Guinea-Bissau and Liberia, which demanded sustained attention, especially with regard to security sector reform and the reintegration of former combatants into society; and lawlessness in certain border zones.

While encouraging development partners to explore ways of assisting ECOWAS to focus attention on security sector reform, the Secretary-General hoped ECOWAS would also continue the fight against corruption and impunity, consult more systematically with civil society organizations, and engage fully in discussions on the reform proposals contained in the report of the High-level Panel on Threats, Challenges and Change [YUN 2004, p. 54]. He said that ECOWAS needed to be reinforced further to give it real authority to deal with the problems facing the subregion and affirmed UN support in that effort.

UNOWA

The United Nations Office for West Africa (UNOWA), established by the Secretary-General in 2001 [YUN 2001, p. 162], was extended for three years from 1 January 2005 to 31 December 2007, on the recommendation of the Secretary-General [YUN 2004, p. 170] and with the concurrence of the Security Council [S/2004/858]. Headed by the Special Representative for West Africa, Ahmedou Ould-Abdallah (Mauritania) since 2002, UNOWA maintained its headquarters in Dakar, Senegal.

In keeping with his intention to strengthen UNOWA, the Secretary-General, on 11 January 2005 [S/2005/16], transmitted to the Council a copy of the enhanced mandate, which the Council took note of on 11 January [S/2005/17]. The functions entrusted to UNOWA under the mandate were to promote an integrated subregional approach and facilitate coordination and information exchange, with due regard to specific mandates of UN organizations, peacekeeping operations and peacebuilding support offices; liaise with and assist ECOWAS and the Mano River Union (see p. 228); perform good offices roles and special assignments in conflict prevention and peacebuilding; report to UN Headquarters on key subregional developments; and execute additional tasks assigned by the Secretary-General and the Security Council, including support to the work of the Cameroon-Nigeria Mixed Commission (see p. 296) and follow-up of the relevant recommendations contained in the report of the 2004 Security Council mission to West Africa [YUN 2004, p. 169] and of the Council's recommendations on cross-border issues in the subregion [ibid., p. 167].

Activities

During the year, UNOWA held regular meetings with the heads of UN operations and political offices in West Africa to develop an integrated subregional approach to conflict prevention and management, and to promote peace, security and development in the subregion. It continued to monitor the crisis in Côte d'Ivoire in order to update the Council on developments, and convened regional meetings aimed at formulating basic principles and guidelines for a harmonized approach to disarmament, demobilization and reintegration in West Africa. It worked to develop a regional strategy to tackle the problem of youth unemployment and launched a study entitled "Youth Unemployment and Regional Insecurity in West Africa" on the eve of the Afrique-France Summit (Dakar, 1 December). It convened a meeting (Timbuktu, Mali, April) to devise an integrated strategy for stabilizing the Mauritania/Mali/Niger border cluster area. Joint UNOWA/ECOWAS activities included, among others, the ECOWAS workshop on lessons learned from peacekeeping operations (Accra, 10-11 February) and the development of the ECOWAS/EU/UNOWA Framework of Action for Peace and Security at the seventh EU/ECOWAS Ministerial Troika meeting (Luxembourg, 18 May).

Threats to peace and security

Report of Secretary-General (February). On 11 February [S/2005/86], the Secretary-General submitted a report on progress made towards the implementation of the Security Council's recommendations contained in presidential statement S/PRST/2004/7 [YUN 2004, p. 167] on ways to combat subregional and cross-border problems in West Africa and those made by its 2004 mission to West Africa [ibid., p. 169].

The report outlined steps taken or envisaged to develop an integrated and coordinated approach to conflict prevention. Through the collaborative efforts of UN entities, those steps included: regular liaison between the Special Representative and other UN presences in the subregion to facilitate information exchange and analysis, devise integrated strategies to coordinate periodic meetings among the five UN peacekeeping and political missions in the subregion; and the UN Consolidated Inter-Agency Appeal for West Africa 2005 (see p. 999), which focused on alleviating the deterioration of human security, hence the ongoing close collaboration among the humanitarian, political and military actors. With UN support, the States in the Mano River basin—Guinea, Liberia and Sierra Leone—were reactivating the Mano River Union to enhance regular institutional cooperation among them and among the Union, the subregion and international partners; a reactivated Union would make possible the resumption of consultations among its members, particularly on ways to deal with mercenaries. ECOWAS and UNOWA concluded a cooperation agreement and a joint work programme on preventing unconstitutional seizure of power, and improving the capacity of ECOWAS in conflict prevention, crisis management and post-conflict prevention. ECOWAS and UNOWA would be working closely with the EU on many of those activities. A related action plan was under development. UNICEF received funding from the Humanitarian Aid Office of the European Commission for a subregional child protection project to reinforce the coordination of child protection initiatives in the subregion. UN entities had increasingly invited civil society organizations, particularly women's groups, to participate in the elaboration and implementation of action plans on cross-border issues and to undertake advocacy work, especially in remote areas. Through the efforts of a UNDP-funded civil society focal point within the ECOWAS secretariat, civil society organizations created the West Africa Civil Society Forum as an umbrella institution for regional integration, peace and security.

The report also outlined action taken to address cross-border issues in the following areas: combating the proliferation of small arms and light weapons; harmonization of disarmament, demobilization and reintegration, especially for child soldiers; finding durable solutions to the problem of refugees and displaced persons; security sector reform; and developing integrated strategies in sensitive border zones. The Programme for Coordination and Assistance for Security and Development was replaced by the ECOWAS Small Arms Control Programme to facilitate the conversion of the 1998 ECOWAS moratorium on the importation, exportation and manufacture of small arms and light weapons [YUN 1998, p. 537] into a legally binding instrument, build the capacity of national commissions and assist them in developing national action plans. UN presences in West Africa undertook a major collaborative exercise on ways to harmonize the national programmes on disarmament, demobilization and reintegration and eliminate inconsistencies among them. Such a strategy should help reduce the cross-border movement of combatants and weapons and consolidate peace processes throughout the subregion. Workshops for UN peace missions and agencies and development partners in the subregion were held (Dakar, Senegal, May and August 2004) to identify key aspects in which cross-border collaboration and policy harmonization were deemed essential: child, foreign and female combatants; militia groups; disarmament, demobilization and reintegration in countries not at war but deeply affected by armed conflict in neighbouring countries; and the monetary component. A key objective was the repatriation of foreign child combatants to their countries of origin, a strategy which was the subject of a meeting (Dakar, June 2004) of UNICEF and child protection agencies. ECOWAS and UNHCR agreed on a series of joint activities on four main themes: addressing security issues in refugee camps; prevention-mitigation preparedness and response; reviewing ECOWAS treaties and protocols with a view to harmonizing refugee policies in West Africa; and addressing refugee, returnee and development issues. The Humanitarian Coordination Section of the United Nations Mission in Liberia (UNMIL) organized a workshop on property rights of returnees, with emphasis on protecting widows' rights to property, with the aim to minimizing property disputes that could threaten social peace and cohesion. The UN presences in West Africa, working closely with development partners, continued to support ECOWAS in its efforts to reform the security sector of its member States. Senior officers of the subregion's military and security forces, UN agencies, international development partners and West African civil society organizations held a meeting (Dakar, 22-23 November 2004) to develop a common understanding of security sector reform in the West African context and reviewed reform projects in areas of health, particularly HIV/AIDS in the armed and security forces; security forces and mismanagement in the administration of justice; and weakness in the fight against criminal activities. ECOWAS, in collaboration with the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime, examined ways to improve its border control mechanisms by strengthening the flow of information among national law enforcement authorities, regional networking and cooperation in law enforcement issues. A joint initiative, known as "Integrated strategies for sensitive border areas in West Africa", headed by UNOWA and the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, and including concerned UN country teams and peace missions, ECOWAS, development partners and civil society groups in the region, was launched in October 2004 to address problems of West African border areas. Draft integrated strategies for four particular clusters were developed: Guinea/Cote d'Ivoire/Liberia/Sierra Leone; Mali/Burkina Faso/Côte d'Ivoire/Ghana; Mauritania/Mali/Niger; and Senegal/Gambia/Guinea-Bissau.

The Secretary-General noted the constructive partnership among the UN system, development partners and ECOWAS, as well as some Governments, civil society organizations and local communities in West Africa. He also noted the steps taken towards the development of truly collaborative arrangements for addressing cross-border problems. He called on ECOWAS and development partners to begin work on establishing a register of small arms. He pointed out that of special benefit to West Africa would be the recommendation of the 2004 High-level Panel on the establishment of a sizeable standing fund for peacebuilding that could be used to fund rehabilitation and reintegration programmes. The Secretary-General stressed that measures to reduce the high levels of youth unemployment were vital for rehabilitation, peacebuilding and development; that the 2005 consolidated appeals process for West Africa should underline the need to fund a regional humanitarian response strategy and development partners should fund the project proposals providing a range of cross-border support services; and that UNOWA, in consultation with its partners in West Africa, should produce, before the end of 2005, a regionally integrated programme for security sector reform with concrete projects that development partners could fund.

Security Council consideration. At its meeting on 25 February [meeting 5131], the Security Council considered the foregoing progress report of the Secretary-General, who said the report highlighted areas requiring immediate and longer-term actions; its recommendations were directed at a wide range of players, including the Council and other parts of the UN system, development partners, ECOWAS and civil society organizations, calling on all to practice prevention and to address at an early stage the root causes of conflict. He singled out ECOWAS efforts to address the complex challenges facing the subregion and drew attention to the growing cooperation among security agencies in cracking down on cross-border crime, as well as the efforts under way to protect children, to stem small-arms flows and to involve civil society groups more regularly in peacebuilding and other initiatives.

The Special Representative of the Secretary-General and Head of UNOWA said that the Office would continue to facilitate coherent and integrated approaches to peacebuilding among UN entities in West Africa; strengthen its partnership with West African States and subregional organizations, especially with ECOWAS; carry out preventive diplomacy and early warning missions; and devise policy recommendations that provided a basis for effective crisis management. In partnership with West African Governments, civil society organizations, the private sector and other international actors, it would initiate outreach activities to address persistent and emerging challenges to peace and security.

To strengthen action within the framework of its mandate, UNOWA focused on three broad challenges: the institutional, which called for further strengthening of collaboration among the UN entities in West Africa; the methodological, which required prioritizing issues, areas and objectives; and the doctrinal, which called for concentrating on countries at war and strongly supporting those which were not at war but which remained fragile.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 25 February [meeting 5131], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2005/9 on behalf of the Council:

> The Security Council has carefully reviewed the progress report of the Secretary-General of 11 February 2005 on the implementation of the recommendations of the Council on cross-border and subregional problems in West Africa, and reaffirms the statement by its President of 25 March 2004.
> The Council notes with appreciation the enhanced cooperation among the various United Nations political and peacekeeping missions in the subregion and looks forward to receiving the forthcoming report of the Secretary-General on intermission cooperation. The Council also welcomes the growing and constructive partnership between the United Nations system, the Economic Community of West African States, individual Member States, key bilateral and multilateral development partners, as well as civil society organizations, including women's organizations, aimed at addressing the many complex challenges confronting the West African subregion.
> The Council reiterates its belief that action on cross-border and subregional issues should take place as part of a wider strategy of conflict prevention, crisis management and peacebuilding in the subregion. The Council thus also encourages the United Nations Office for West Africa further to promote an integrated and joint subregional approach with the Economic Community of West African States and the African Union, as well as with other key international partners and civil society organizations.

The Council welcomes the encouraging prospects for the reactivation of the Mano River Union and the resumption of dialogue among its member States, notably on ways to deal with mercenaries. It also welcomes initiatives taken by the Economic Community of West African States to establish a Small Arms Unit and to adopt a new Small Arms Control Programme and its ongoing efforts to transform the moratorium on the import, export and manufacture of small arms and light weapons, signed in Abuja on 31 October 1998, into a binding convention.

The Council welcomes the decision of the European Commission on 2 December 2004 to assist the Economic Community of West African States in implementing its plans to combat the illicit dissemination of small arms. The Council reiterates its call upon all Member States and organizations, in a position to do so, to extend further assistance to the Economic Community of West African States in this field. The Council calls upon arms producing and exporting countries and West African States to explore ways in which they can ensure the implementation of the moratorium.

The Council calls upon Member States and key international partners to explore practical ways of assisting the Economic Community of West African States in enhancing its capacities in the areas of conflict prevention, peacemaking and peacekeeping, including through the provision of technical expertise, training programmes, and logistical and financial resources. In this connection, the Council reaffirms the crucial importance of the reintegration of excombatants, taking into account the special needs of child soldiers and women, in order to reverse the culture of violence and create an enabling environment for national reconciliation in countries emerging from conflict, and reiterates its call to the international community to provide adequate funding to this end.

The Council underlines the fact that ongoing or emerging crises in West Africa are a threat to subregional stability, and, in this regard, notes with deep concern the emerging and ongoing tensions in some countries over the transfer of power, involving members of security and armed forces, and which may further obstruct efforts to stabilize the subregion.

The Council recalls in this regard the African Union position on unconstitutional changes of governments, as stated in the 1999 Algiers Declaration and the 2000 Lomé Declaration.

The Council welcomes the action taken by the Economic Community of West African States and the African Union to address these issues.

The Council expresses its deep concern about the involvement of individuals including those from security and armed forces in such illicit activities as smuggling of arms, drugs and natural resources, human trafficking, extortion at roadblocks and money laundering, in the context of mismanagement in the administration of justice, and weak government capacity to fight against criminal activities and impunity. The Council stresses the need to pay special attention to those critical issues that have a direct bearing on efforts to enhance peace, stability and democratic governance in West African countries.

The Council emphasizes the need to pursue security sector reforms aiming at improving civil-military relations in countries emerging from conflict situations and creating a culture of peace and stability and promoting the rule of law. In this regard, the Council requests the United Nations Office for West Africa to further explore with interested governments and organizations ways in which security sector reforms could be formulated and implemented.

In this regard, the Council welcomes the ongoing efforts of the Economic Community of West African States, in collaboration with the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime, to improve border control mechanisms in West Africa by facilitating the flow of information among national law enforcement authorities, as well as regional networking and cooperation in law enforcement issues.

The Council reiterates the importance of curbing the growing risks of instability along some border areas. The Council, therefore, encourages the United Nations Office for West Africa to facilitate, in close cooperation with the Executive Secretariat of the Economic Community of West African States and its member States concerned, the implementation of strategies developed for sensitive border zones in the subregion, and calls upon donors to support these efforts.

The Council stresses the need to help West African States to curb illicit cross-border activities and to strengthen the capacities of the civil society groups working to promote a cross-border culture of nonviolence and peace.

The Council further emphasizes the need to generate economic activities and to foster development as a means of promoting sustainable peace in the subregion. It urges international donors to assist the Economic Community of West African States to address that need.

The Council reaffirms the urgency of finding lasting solutions to the problem of youth unemployment in order to prevent the recruitment of such youth by illegal armed groups. In this connection, the Council requests the Secretary-General to include in his next progress report practical recommendations on how best to tackle the problem of youth unemployment.

The Council urges donor countries, international organizations and civil society to address the dire humanitarian situation in many parts of the subregion and to provide adequate resources within the framework of the consolidated appeals process 2005 for West Africa as part of a regional humanitarian response strategy to improve the human security of the people in dire need of protection or those whose coping capacities are close to exhaustion.

The Council expresses its intention to keep these issues under review, and requests the Secretary-General to report on them regularly through his reports on the United Nations missions in the subregion.

Mano River Union. At a special summit of the Mano River Union, comprising Guinea, Liberia and Sierra Leone (Freetown, Sierra Leone, 28 July), the Heads of State and Government of the member countries considered security issues within the Mano River basin and the revival of the Union's secretariat. They reaffirmed their commitments to support initiatives promoting confidence-building measures along border areas and strengthening security in the subregion and to pursue a peaceful solution to the border issue along the Makona-Moa River in conformity with the 2004 memorandum or understanding signed in Conakry, Guinea [YUN 2004, p. 217], stipulating that the village of Yenga belonged to Sierra Leone and the Makona-Moa River to Guinea, as contained in the Anglo-French Treaty of 1912 and renewed by the 1974 Agreement between Sierra Leone and Guinea. They affirmed that the agreement should be concretized by the demarcation of the border areas by experts from both countries and begin in August. They appealed to the United Nations and the international community, including the EU, to provide assistance for the reactivation of the Union's secretariat.

Inter-mission cooperation in West Africa

Report of Secretary-General (March). In his March report [S/2005/135] on inter-mission cooperation among the United Nations Mission in Sierra Leone (UNAMSIL), the United Nations Mission in Liberia (UNMIL) and the United Nations Operation in Côte d'Ivoire (UNOCI), the Secretary-General noted that the presence of those three peacekeeping missions, under the aegis of UNOWA, provided an opportunity to pursue a coordinated subregional approach to addressing a number of linked key issues at the national and subregional levels.

The Secretary-General, in addition to describing ongoing inter-mission cooperation activities among UNAMSIL, UNMIL and UNOCI, presented recommendations on potential areas for future cooperation. Among them were: information sharing and joint strategy formulation to support the peace processes in Côte d'Ivoire, Liberia and Sierra Leone, together with the establishment of fully functional and inclusive joint mission analysis cells for effective information management; cross-border military operations, including "hot pursuit" operations, joint air patrolling, shared routine cross-border patrolling and periodic patrol visits at border crossing checkpoints, extended areas of border responsibility, prearranged coordinated military operations, and the possible establishment of an operational-level subregional reserve force capable of rapid deployment, with a command and control centre; sharing of experiences in planning, harmonizing and implementing disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programmes, and working closely with Governments and partners to support the repatriation of foreign ex-combatants, including women and children formerly associated with armed forces; sharing of information on combating the proliferation of small arms and light weapons, including on types and country of origin of weapons collected, arms flows and small arms and light weapons control programmes in each mission area; and sharing of technical expertise among the missions' civilian police operations on cross-border issues (trafficking in natural resources, arms and drugs) and drawing on expertise of international or subregional police mechanisms.

Other suggested areas of cooperation were in human rights, child protection, humanitarian assistance, civil affairs, the rule of law, public information and administration and logistics.

The Secretary-General pointed out that to conduct some of the inter-mission operations identified above, the Security Council would need to adjust the mandates of the individual missions. That entailed addressing a number of political and legal considerations: the consent of Governments in which the missions were deployed; agreement of troop-contributing countries for the use of their troops and equipment in more than one mission area, with consequent adjustments to the related memorandums of understanding; and arrangements for the extension of the protection, privileges and immunities, exemptions and facilities in the mission's respective status-of-forces agreements to UN personnel and property from other missions that might be deployed in the State concerned as part of inter-mission operations. Also to be addressed were financial and staffing constraints, changes to the budgetary process and estimates, and coordination with UN Headquarters on the subregional reallocation of assets so as to keep in line with global peacekeeping priorities and requirements.

The Secretary-General observed that, while the above agenda would require persistent effort, its benefits would stretch beyond West Africa as similar principles of inter-mission cooperation could be applied wherever there were other contiguous UN presences.

Côte d'Ivoire

In 2005, the United Nations, the Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS), the African Union (AU) and the international community continued efforts to move Côte d'Ivoire's peace process forward through the implementation of the 2003 Linas-Marcoussis Agreement [YUN 2003, p. 166] and the 2004 Accra III Agreement [YUN 2004, p. 182]. A Zone of Confidence separated troops belonging to the National Armed Forces of Côte d'Ivoire (FANCI), deployed in the Government, controlled south of the country, and those of the Forces nouvelles, deployed in the rebel-controlled north. The main responsibility for peacekeeping rested with the Licorne (French forces), whose deployment was endorsed by the Security Council in resolution 1464(2003) [ibid., p. 168]. Those efforts were supported by the United Nations Operation in Côte d'Ivoire, established by the Council in resolution 1528(2004) [YUN 2004, p. 173] to, among other things, monitor the May 2003 ceasefire and movements of armed groups, assist in the disarmament, demobilization, reintegration and repatriation and resettlement of ex-combatants and support humanitarian assistance and implementation of the peace process. The Mission was headed by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General. In June, the Council authorized an increase in UNOCI's military strength by 850 troops, bringing the Mission's military strength to just over 7,090. It also raised the number of UN police officers to 725.

During the year, the ceasefire monitored by UNOCI and the French Licorne forces continued to hold, with no major violations of the UN-imposed arms embargo. However, the target dates by which combatants were to be disarmed, demobilized and reintegrated into society were not met, nor was the 30 October deadline for the holding of presidential elections. In an effort to break the political stalemate, the Ivorian parties, at a meeting convened in April by the AU Mediator, South African President Thabo Mbeki, signed the Pretoria Agreement, which addressed a number of contentious issues on elections and disarmament. Under the accord, the two sides agreed not to veto the presidential candidates put forward by the signatories of the 2003 Linas-Marcoussis Agreement. It also allowed both former rebel and Government forces to withdraw heavy weapons from the frontline on each side of the Zone of Confidence. However, in June, the Forces nouvelles announced that it would not disarm until pro-Government militias laid down their weapons, thus delaying the peace process.

By September, it had become clear that elections could not be held by the end of October as scheduled. Combatants had not disarmed; the registration of voters had been delayed; and the country was still divided. As the deadline approached, new disagreements emerged over the work and composition of the Independent Electoral Commission. With a missed electoral deadline, leaders of ECOWAS and the AU agreed to extend President Laurent Gbagbo's term of office for a year. Significant powers would be entrusted to a Prime Minister who would oversee a power-sharing government and the transition to fresh elections by October 2006. ECOWAS and the AU also created two new bodies, the International Working Group and a Mediation Group, to oversee the peace process; both bodies were co-chaired by the UN Special Representative in Côte d'Ivoire. The Security Council endorsed those decisions in October.

In early December, the AU Chairperson, President Olusegun Obasanjo of Nigeria, the Chairperson of ECOWAS, President Mamadou Tandja of Niger, and the AU Mediator, President Mbeki, brokered the appointment of Charles Konan Banny, the Governor of the Central Bank for West African States, as the new Prime Minister.

In the latter months of 2005, a number of senior UN officials visited Côte d'Ivoire, including the Chairman of the UN Sanctions Committee on Côte d'Ivoire, who warned leaders that sanctions would be imposed against anyone obstructing the peace process. Despite setbacks in the Ivorian peace process in 2005, optimism remained that Côte d'Ivoire's new road map, drawn up by the International Working Group, would move the country out of the current impasse of no-war-no-peace and result in the disarmament of combatants, dismantlement of militias, restoration of State authority throughout the country, and, ultimately, to the holding of national elections by October 2006.

Political and security developments

Communications. On 10 January [S/2005/29], the AU Peace and Security Council, in a communiqué issued at its twenty-third meeting (Libreville, Gabon), endorsed the plan [YUN 2004, p. 189] submitted by the AU Mediator, South African President Thabo Mbeki, to help Côte d'Ivoire emerge from the crisis (the December 2004 road map), which called for the adoption of all the texts emanating from the Linas-Marcoussis Agreement, the implementation of the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programme, the effective functioning of the Government of National Reconciliation, and the establishment throughout the national territory of a climate conducive to the restoration of peace and security in the country. It renewed President Mbeki's mandate and urged the Ivorian parties to cooperate with him and honour the commitments made within the framework of the December 2004 road map.

On 13 January [S/2005/28], Côte d'Ivoire transmitted to the UN Security Council President a progress report "Moving the peace process forward: an update on the implementation of the December 2004 road map", outlining action it had taken in respect of the legislative programme, the disarmament, demobilization and reinsertion programme, efforts to create a climate conducive to free political activity, the functioning of the Government of National Reconciliation and the restoration of social services and redeployment of Government administration in the whole territory.

In another letter of the same date [S/2005/27], Côte d'Ivoire informed the Council President that it did not want France to initiate the Council's resolutions and declarations concerning Côte d'Ivoire, given the bias of the French force (Operation Licorne) in destroying all of the country's military aircraft and bombarding its presidential palaces in November 2004 [YUN 2004, p. 186]. It also wanted the French forces to be integrated into UNOCI.

In separate letters of 26 January [S/2005/55, A/59/693] addressed to the Council and the General Assembly, Côte d'Ivoire expressed concern over the tone of the opposition press. The priority should be to foster a return to dialogue, allay tensions and avoid the spread of false information.

Report of Secretary-General. The Secretary-General, in his fourth progress report on UNOCI [S/2005/186], highlighted major developments in the peace process at the beginning of the year. He said that much of the focus was on the efforts of President Thabo Mbeki, who led an AU mediation initiative, in January, in close cooperation with the United Nations and ECOWAS. Several rounds of consultations took place in Côte d'Ivoire and Pretoria, South Africa, with the Ivorian parties, including President Laurent Gbagbo, Prime Minister Seydou Diarra, the Secretary-General of the Forces nouvelles, Guillaume Soro, senior Government officials and opposition party leaders, focusing on how to advance the plan of action (see above) agreed upon by the Ivorian parties during President Mbeki's visit to Côte d'Ivoire in December 2004 [YUN 2004, p. 187]. Other interrelated issues dealt with the enactment of legislative reforms envisaged in the Linas-Marcoussis Agreement and ensuring the effective functioning of the Government of National Reconciliation.

In other developments, the Government extended until 11 June the ban on street marches and demonstrations in Abidjan, instituted in December 2004 [ibid., p. 190]. The Forces nouvelles, whose ministers had not participated in the Government since the November 2004 crisis [ibid., p. 185] indicated, in discussions with the AU mediation team, UNOCI and the Licorne forces, its wish to be allowed to bring their own close protection units to Abidjan. The effective functioning of the Government was also affected by a lack of clarity regarding the delegation of powers from the President to the Prime Minister and other ministers. The absence of civil servants remained a major contributing factor to the continued deterioration in the humanitarian situation, particularly in the north. Meanwhile, UNOCI continued to support efforts for the redeployment of State administration, which needed some $506 million to facilitate the return of civil servants and other Government personnel to their respective areas of responsibility.

On 18 January, the Forces nouvelles and FANCI resumed cooperation with the National Commission for Disarmament, Demobilization and Reintegration, which reported that an estimated 10,000 militia members still remained active in Côte d'Ivoire, and their growing numbers continued to be a major cause of concern. However, the Forces nouvelles efforts to formalize the national disarmament, demobilization and reintegration plan, which included the restructuring of FANCI, were derailed when it was attacked by militias at its checkpoint at Logoualé on 28 February.

Concerning the holding of elections, Prime Minister Seydou Diarra had sought to reactivate the national identification exercise in an effort to move the election preparations forward. The Independent Electoral Commission, on 8 February, adopted its programme of work, but the G-7 group of opposition political parties rejected the legislation revising the Commission's structure and composition as not being in conformity with the Linas-Marcoussis Agreement. The law establishing the Commission was challenged in court, as a result of which its main activities had to be suspended. On 18 February, several political parties expressed their wish that the United Nations organize the Ivorian elections. The Secretary-General, while expressing concern over the protracted delays in the organization and preparation of the presidential and legislative elections, stated that the request for an enhanced UN role in the electoral process had to be agreed upon to by all Ivorian parties.

The security situation remained tense, with a marked increase in criminality, especially in Abidjan and the Zone of Confidence. In the light of the volatile security situation, the Secretary-General recommended that UNOCI's mandate be extended for a period of 12 months, until 4 April 2006.

Security Council consideration. The Security Council was briefed on 28 March [meeting 5152] on the situation in Côte d'Ivoire by the Deputy Special Representative, Alan Doss (United Kingdom), who stated that the December 2004 road map remained largely unachieved. The Government of National Reconciliation remained bereft of Forces nouvelles ministers and the military dialogue had been interrupted, delaying the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration process.

In February, the Forces nouvelles reorganized the areas under their control, creating five new territorial entities under the command of new warlords. At the same time, its Secretary-General, Guillaume Soro, announced the opening of a new police and customs academy, as well as a new bank in Bouaké, actions that, even though they did not indicate an immediate intention to secede, revealed that they saw the crisis as one of long duration. In the absence of judicial authority in the Zone of Confidence, UNOCI proposed that the national authorities take exceptional measures to fill the gap, including the nomination of temporary administrators and the reactivation of the joint brigade composed of impartial forces, national forces and Forces nouvelles to patrol and combat rising crime in the Zone. Forces nouvelles had yet to accept the proposal because of suspicion that the central power would seek to establish itself in the Zone through that mechanism. UNOCI, supported by the Licorne forces, remained vigilant in the Zone, amid rising tensions.

On behalf of the AU Mediation Mission in Côte d'Ivoire, the South African Deputy Foreign Minister, Aziz Pahad, said that, to resolve the outstanding challenges with regard to the implementation of the road map and to ensure lasting peace in Côte d'Ivoire, a meeting between President Mbeki and the country's principal political leaders was planned for 3 April in South Africa (see p. 232). The AU mediation would report to the UN Security Council about the outcome. Meanwhile, an AU mediation legal team visited Côte d'Ivoire and had extensive interactions with the parties to determine the compliance of adopted legislation with the Linas-Marcoussis Agreement. The team confirmed that significant progress had been made in that regard, although there were differences among the parties on the appropriate legislative texts, mainly related to the interpretation of the Linas-Marcoussis Agreement, rather than a reluctance to implement it. There were areas where the Agreement was not in line with international practice. The findings were largely received by the parties.

The representative of Côte d'Ivoire complained that the Secretary-General's report showed considerable sympathy for the point of view of Forces nouvelles, the former rebels and opposition parties, while that of the legitimate authorities was systematically called into question. That risked giving comfort to the former rebels in their intention to change the country's institutions by violence and encourage other rebellions in the subregion.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 4 April [meeting 5159], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1594(2005). The draft [S/2005/221] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolutions 1528(2004) of 27 February 2004, 1572(2004) of 15 November 2004 and 1584(2005) of 1 February 2005, as well as the relevant statements by its President, in particular those of 6 November and 16 December 2004,

Reaffirming its strong commitment to the sovereignty, independence, territorial integrity and unity of Côte d'Ivoire, and recalling the importance of the principles of good-neighbourliness, non-interference and regional cooperation,

2. Calls upon all Ivorian parties immediately and actively to pursue a just and lasting solution to the current crisis, particularly through the African Union mediation led by President Thabo Mbeki;

Appointments. On 25 February [S/2005/133], the Secretary-General informed the Security Council of his intention to appoint Mr. Pierre Schori (Sweden) as his Special Representative and Head of UNOCI. On 2 March [S/2005/134], the Council took note of his intention.

The Pretoria Agreement

The AU mediation mission, led by South African President and Mediator, Thabo Mbeki, convened a meeting in Pretoria, South Africa from 3 to 6 April to discuss the December 2004 road map with President Laurent Gbagbo; Prime Minister Seydou Diarra; Henri Konan Bédié, President of the Democratic Party of Côte d'Ivoire; Alassane Ouattara, President of the Rally of Republicans; and Guillaume Soro, Secretary-General of the Forces nouvelles. The meeting resulted in the signing, on 6 April, of the Pretoria Agreement on the Peace Process in Côte d'Ivoire. The text of the Agreement, together with the Mediator's letter of determination on article 35 of the Constitution of Côte d'Ivoire addressed to the Ivorian leaders, were transmitted to the Security Council President by South Africa on 25 April [S/2005/270].

In the Agreement, the parties declared the immediate and final cessation of hostilities and the end of the war throughout the national territory; agreed to proceed with the disarmament and dismantling of militia throughout the country; that the Chiefs of Staff of FANCI and of the Armed Forces of the Forces nouvelles ensure the implementation of the National Disarmament, Demobilization and Reintegration Plan and make recommendations for the formation of one army; adopted a number of interim measures to guarantee the security of people and assets as soon as the cantonment of the Forces nouvelles in the North commenced; accepted the plan proposed by the AU mediation ensuring the security for the Forces nouvelles Ministers in the Government of National Reconciliation, including the return of the Forces nouvelles to the Government; reaffirmed the authority of the Prime Minister; agreed on amendments in the composition, organization and functioning of the Independent Electoral Commission; and mandated the Mediator to request UN assistance in organizing the elections. They also agreed to restore the status of the Ivorian Radio and Television (RTI) to that enjoyed prior to 24 December 2004, covering the whole country; and to finalize by 31 April, texts for the amendment of laws that were not in conformity with the Linas-Marcoussis Agreement. Agreement was also reached on the financing of political parties and national reconciliation. Concerning the eligibility of the Presidency in the upcoming elections, the Mediator undertook to make a determination on the matter (see below).

The Mediator, in his 25 April letter to the Ivorian parties with respect to the revision of article 35 of the Constitution relating to the eligibility of the Presidency, determined that, for the 2005 presidential elections, the Constitutional Council should accept the eligibility of the candidates who might be presented by the political parties that were signatories to the Linas-Marcoussis Agreement and requested President Gbagbo, under the powers granted to him by article 48 of the Constitution to give legal force to that determination.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 4 May [meeting 5173], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1600(2005). The draft [S/2005/282] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

On 3 June [meeting 5194], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1603(2005). The draft [S/2005/359] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

Welcoming the efforts of the Secretary-General, the African Union and the Economic Community of West African States towards re-establishing peace and stability in Côte d'Ivoire, Welcoming in particular the mediation efforts undertaken by Mr. Thabo Mbeki, President of the Republic of South Africa, on behalf of the African Union, and reaffirming its full support for him,

Welcoming the signing by the Ivorian parties at Pretoria on 6 April 2005 of the agreement on the peace process in Côte d'Ivoire (the Pretoria Agreement), under the auspices of President Thabo Mbeki, and expressing its satisfaction with the first steps which have been undertaken by the Ivorian parties in order to implement the Agreement, in particular with the agreement on the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration process reached on 14 May 2005 and the restoration of the status of the Ivorian Radio and Television to that which it enjoyed before 24 December 2004,

1. Endorses the Pretoria Agreement, and demands that all the signatories to the Agreement and all the Ivorian parties concerned implement it fully and without delay;

2. Stresses, in this regard, that non-respect, by the signatories to the Pretoria Agreement, or by any other Ivorian party concerned, of any of the commitments made in Pretoria in the presence of the President of South Africa, Mr. Thabo Mbeki, would endanger the peace process in Côte d'Ivoire and would constitute an obstacle to the implementation of the Linas-Marcoussis Agreement and the Accra III Agreement, and therefore reaffirms its readiness to implement paragraphs 9 and 11 of its resolution 1572(2004) of 15 November 2004 if the parties fail to meet their commitments under the Linas-Marcoussis and Pretoria Agreements;

7. Requests the Secretary-General, on the basis of the Pretoria Agreement, to designate, as an exceptional arrangement, after consultations with the African Union and President Thabo Mbeki, a High Representative for the elections in Côte d'Ivoire, autonomous from the United Nations Operation in Côte d'Ivoire, to assist in particular in the work of the Independent Electoral Commission and the Constitutional Council, without prejudice to the responsibilities of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Côte d'Ivoire and with the following mandate:

(a) To verify, on behalf of the international community, that all stages of the electoral process, including the establishment of a register of voters and the issuance of voters' cards, provide all the necessary guarantees for the holding of open, free, fair and transparent presidential and legislative elections within the time limits laid down in the Constitution of the Republic of Côte d'Ivoire;

On 19 July, the Secretary-General informed the Council of his intention to appoint Ambassador António Monteiro (Portugal) to the post of High Representative for the elections in Côte d'Ivoire, which the Council noted on 22 July [S/2005/486, S/2005/487].

Implementation of the Pretoria Agreement

Report of Secretary-General. In his fifth report on UNOCI [S/2005/398 & Add.1], issued in June, the Secretary-General stated that the momentum gained in the peace process following the signing of the Pretoria Agreement had slowed as only limited progress was made towards its implementation. As a result of the Agreement, FANCI and the Forces nouvelles, meeting in Bouaké from 14 to 16 April, issued a communiqué indicating that a seminar would be held in Yamoussoukro on the national disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programme and the restructuring of the armed forces. Following a meeting (Daoukro, 19 April) of the Quadripartite Commission (comprising FANCI, the Forces nouvelles, UNOCI and the Licorne forces), FANCI and the Forces nouvelles withdrew their heavy weapons from the boundaries of the Zone of Confidence between 21 and 24 April to agreed locations.

As follow-up to the resolution of the question of eligibility for the presidential elections, President Gbagbo consulted with national stakeholders on the issue, and on 26 April declared that all candidates nominated by the political parties would be allowed to participate in the elections. He also announced, under the same special powers granted to him by the Pretoria Agreement, that the production of voters' lists and registration cards would be the sole responsibility of the National Institute of Statistics, a decision that was strongly criticized by the opposition parties, who objected to such use of those powers as being outside those granted to him by the Agreement. On 20 May, Alassane Ouattara, President of the Rally of Republicans, and Henri Konan Bédié, President of the Democratic Party of Côte d'Ivoire, requested President Mbeki to make an additional determination on the issue.

Some progress was made in the revision of laws that were not in conformity with the Linas-Marcoussis Agreement, such as the law concerning the Independent Electoral Commission and the funding of political parties, but there were still divergent views within the Council of Ministers as to whether those laws should be amended. Prime Minister Diarra sought confirmation from President Mbeki on the need to revise other key pieces of legislation, including the nationality code and the laws on identification and land tenure.

On 14 May, the chiefs of staff of FANCI and the Forces nouvelles agreed on the timing and modalities of the national disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programme, which was to take place from 27 June to 10 August, and that a special commission should develop a plan for restructuring the armed forces by 26 September. The cost of the programme was estimated at $150 million. However, on 18 May, the Forces nouvelles indicated that they would not disarm, until a number of conditions had been met, including the disarmament and dismantling of militias and the adoption by the National Assembly of the amended law on the composition of the Independent Electoral Commission, the nationality code and the law on identification. It also insisted on adequate security guarantees during the process and that the requisite funding be secured before the start of the process. As to the disarmament and dismantling of the militias, while a symbolic handover of weapons by four of the main pro-Government militias operating in the west took place in Guiglo on 25 May, under the supervision of the chief of staff of FANCI, several of the militia members expressed a reluctance to disarm in the absence of adequate guarantees for their future. UNOCI was assisting the Prime Minister in developing a disarmament plan and was developing a training programme for the 600 Forces nouvelles members who would provide security in the north as soon as the cantonment of their forces began. On 28 April, President Gbagbo restored Ivorian Radio and Television to its original status and reinstated its board of directors.

In connection with the elections, an electoral review mission, led by the Electoral Assistance Division of the Department of Political Affairs, was deployed to Côte d'Ivoire from 20 May to 3 June to assess and review election preparations and make recommendations on further UN support. The mission found that the preparations for the elections had been subjected to delays and, unless the current slow pace of implementation was significantly increased, it would not be possible to meet the scheduled date of 30 October. Moreover, the Independent Electoral Commission did not enjoy the full support of all political actors, as the revised law on its composition had yet to be adopted. The situation was further compounded by the ambiguity surrounding the respective roles and responsibilities of the National Institute of Statistics and the Commission. As a result, preparing a budget for the electoral process was not possible and donors were reluctant to provide funds. On 18 April, in Paris, four opposition parties—the Rally of Republicans, the Democratic Party of Côte d'Ivoire, the Movement of Forces of the Future and the Union for Democracy and Peace in Côte d'Ivoire—created a common electoral platform known as the "Rally of Houphouëtistes for Democracy and Peace".

The continuing violence in the western part of Côte d'Ivoire remained a major cause for concern. Between 30 April and 2 May, 25 people were killed and 41 injured in Duékoué, Yrozon, Blody and Tao Zeo, and more than 9,000 were displaced. On 31 May, traditional hunters attacked the villages of Guetrozon and Petit Duékoué, killing some 41 people and injuring 61 others. It appeared that FANCI soldiers in Guetrozon did little to stop the initial attacks. On 1 June, UNOCI personnel helped the Ivorian Defence and Security Forces stabilize the situation. UNOCI reinforced its presence in and around Duékoué in support of those forces. To address the critical situation in the west, the Special Representative met with the Government to discuss ways to strengthen security in and around Duékoué, and on 8 June, he called on the Ivorian authorities to investigate the Duékoué attacks.

The Secretary-General observed that the maintenance of security nationwide was essential for the implementation of the Pretoria Agreement to proceed smoothly. The recent killings in the Duékoué area underscored the need to reinforce UNOCI urgently to prevent any further deterioration of the situation in the west. He therefore requested the Council to authorize the deployment of an additional 2,076 troops and three formed police units comprising 375 officers. The Secretary-General hoped that the additional troops would be redeployed throughout the country to provide support for the elections. He urged donor countries to give urgent consideration to the provision of the needed resources, in particular technical and financial assistance for the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration and electoral processes and also for the restoration of State authority. The United Nations would continue to work closely with the AU, ECOWAS and other key partners in support of the implementation of the key provisions of the Pretoria Agreement.

In a later addendum [S/2005/398/Add.1], the Secretary-General reported that the financial implications of the additional personnel for nine months would amount to $86.1 million.

Tripartite Monitoring Group

The Tripartite Monitoring Group, set up to review progress in the implementation of the Accra III Agreement, signed by the parties in 2004 [YUN 2004, p. 182], which provided a framework and timetable for the reactivation of the peace process, issued six reports in 2005 covering the periods from 18 December 2004 to 28 February 2005 [S/2005/82, S/2005/175], 1 March to 30 June [S/2005/395, S/2005/463], and 1 July to 31 August [S/2005/539, S/2005/611]. As of June, the Group's work was extended to reviewing implementation of the Pretoria Agreement.

Monitoring Group report (July). On 15 July [S/2005/463], the Secretary-General forwarded to the Security Council the fifteenth report of the Tripartite Monitoring Group on the implementation of the Accra III Agreement and the Pretoria Agreement. According to the report, although the Pretoria Agreement emphasized the critical importance of adopting the laws stemming from the Linas-Marcoussis Agreement, the disarmament process leading to the reunification of the country, and the creation of conditions conducive to the holding of elections in October, the outbreak of pockets of inter-communal violence and political bickering had brought the peace process to a standstill. Aside from the invocation by President Gbagbo of the exceptional powers under Article 48 of the Constitution to authorize the candidacy of Alassane Ouattara, and the signing of decrees restoring the Ivorian Radio and Television to its pre-November 2004 status, no further progress was recorded in the implementation of the legislative components of the Agreement.

Meanwhile, President Mbeki convened another meeting of the signatories to the Pretoria Agreement on 28 and 29 June in order to take stock of the progress in the implementation of the Agreement. After intensive discussions, the parties issued a "Declaration on the Implementation of the Pretoria Agreement on the peace process in Côte d'Ivoire". In the Declaration, in addition to reaffirming the importance of moving speedily towards the holding of elections in October, the parties agreed that the dismantling and disarmament of militias should be completed by 20 August, and that the Troika, comprising UNOCI, the Office of the Ivorian Prime Minister and the AU mediation, would determine any additional measures that might be required to expedite the process.

Regarding the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration of ex-combatants, the parties agreed that the chiefs of staff of FANCI and the Forces nouvelles would meet on 7 July to finalize a disarmament, demobilization and reintegration timetable. The parties also called on the National Assembly to adopt by 15 July, amendments to laws on the Independent Electoral Commission, the financing of political parties, nationality, identification, the Human Rights Commission, the print media and audio-visual communication. Failing to do so, the Mediator would be authorized to decide on "exceptional measures", which President Gbagbo would take to ensure the adoption of the amendments. The parties also agreed that the AU should impose sanctions against those who failed to implement the Pretoria Agreement and blocked the peace process. In that regard, the Mediator would recommend that the Security Council impose the targeted sanctions envisaged in resolution 1572(2004) [YUN, 2004, p. 172].

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 6 July [meeting 5221], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2005/28 on behalf of the Council:

> The Security Council has taken note with interest of the Declaration on the implementation of the Pretoria Agreement on the peace process in Côte d'Ivoire signed on 29 June 2005 at Pretoria under the auspices of the African Union mediator, President Thabo Mbeki.
> The Council welcomes the efforts undertaken by the African Union mediation so that the forthcoming elections in Côte d'Ivoire are credible and are held as planned, and reiterates its full support to the African Union mediator.
> The Council recalls that it has endorsed the Pretoria Agreement signed on 6 April 2005.
> The Council demands that all the signatories to this Agreement and all the Ivorian parties concerned implement fully and without delay all the commitments made with the African Union mediation and comply scrupulously with the timetable agreed on 29 June 2005 in Pretoria.
> The Council affirms that it stands ready, in close consultation with the African Union mediation, to implement individual sanctions provided for in paragraphs 9 and 11 of resolution 1572(2004) against those who do not comply with those commitments or who constitute an obstacle to their full implementation.

Further developments

Visit of High Representative to Côte d' Ivoire. The High Representative for the elections in Côte d'Ivoire, António Monteiro, in response to Security Council resolution 1603(2005), visited Côte d'Ivoire from 8 to 18 August. In his report, transmitted by the Secretary-General on 12 September [S/2005/584], the High Representative said that, in his meetings with a wide spectrum of actors, diplomatic representatives and international organizations, two principal issues were of concern to him—the conformity of the legislative package adopted by President Gbagbo with the relevant agreements, and the urgency of appointing a reconstituted Independent Electoral Commission. During the discussions, the G-7 opposition parties conveyed their dissatisfaction with certain aspects of the legislative package but made a clear commitment to designate their representatives on the reconstituted Independent Electoral Commission. The Forces nouvelles, on 18 August, following internal consultations, indicated to the High Representative their firm commitment to nominate their representative to the Commission.

In his meeting with President Mbeki, the High Representative discussed concerns expressed by the parties that the legislative package did not fully respect the Linas-Marcoussis and Pretoria Agreements and those grey areas requiring clarification. They arrived at an agreement on those issues about which they would write President Gbagbo. On the question of funding the electoral process, the High Representative drew attention to the $31 million still needed in the electoral budget, the result of institutional uncertainty and donor reticence because of the apparent lack of a genuine political commitment to push the peace process forward. He urged the Security Council to approach major donors for the necessary funding.

The High Representative stated that he had been advised by technical experts that the feasibility of holding elections by 30 October seemed increasingly problematic and that it would be preferable to leave the debate on that question until after the establishment of the Independent Electoral Commission, by which time a decision could be taken on a new date. In the meantime, the Commission's main task would be to draft and promote acceptance by all parties of an electoral code of conduct.

Communiqué of AU Peace and Security Council. The AU Peace and Security Council, in a communiqué issued at its eighth meeting (New York, 14 September) [S/2005/598], expressed concern over the lack of political will by the Ivorian parties to fully implement the various agreements reached, especially concerning the dismantling and disarming of militias, the disarmament, demobilization and rehabilitation programme and the creation of conditions conducive to elections. It called on them to honour their obligations and expressed its readiness to continue to cooperate with the United Nations on the best ways to support and advance the peace process.

Report of Secretary-General. The Secretary-General, in his September report [S/2005/604] on UNOCI, submitted in response to resolution 1603(2005), said that, since the signing of the Declaration on the Implementation of the Pretoria Agreement, some progress was made in carrying out the legislative reforms envisaged in the Linas-Marcoussis and Pretoria Agreements. On 10 July, realizing that the National Assembly would not pass the amended laws on time, due to continued resistance from the majority party, the Ivorian Popular Front, President Mbeki formally requested President Gbagbo to use his exceptional powers under article 48 of the Ivorian Constitution to ensure the adoption of the amended laws within the time frame stipulated by the Declaration. On 15 July, in response to that request, the President signed a series of decrees promulgating revised versions of the laws on the Independent Electoral Commission, nationality, identification, the Human Rights Commission, and the print media and audio-visual communications.

The Forces nouvelles and the members of the G-7 opposition parties expressed strong reservations on several of the revised texts, claiming that they still did not conform to the spirit of the Linas-Marcoussis Agreement. In the light of those concerns, President Gbagbo, on 29 August, promulgated new versions of the law on the Electoral Commission, the nationality code and the naturalization law, bringing them into conformity with the Linas-Marcoussis Agreement. However, controversy over the political process continued. On 1 September, in response to a statement by the South African Deputy Foreign Minister, Aziz Pahad, blaming the opposition forces for blocking the peace process, the Forces nouvelles declared that they would no longer work with the AU mediation, as it was biased towards President Gbagbo, and called on the AU Chairman, Nigerian President, Olusegun Obasanjo, to determine how best to move the peace process forward. On 30 October, the Forces nouvelles Secretary-General stated that President Gbagbo would no longer be President and called on all concerned to work together to put in place a transitional government.

Meanwhile, efforts continued towards the rehabilitation of the disarmament sites. At a meeting held in Yamoussoukro (7-9 July), the chiefs of staff of FANCI and the Forces nouvelles agreed on a timetable for starting the pre-cantonment of forces on 31 July and the actual disarmament and demobilization of combatants between 26 September and 3 October. They also agreed on linking implementation of the various phases of the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration of forces to other key provisions of the Pretoria Agreement and to establish a joint committee for the restructuring of the defence and security forces. According to the Office of the Prime Minister, as at 26 August, five of the nine disarmament sites in the north and five of the six sites in the south had already been rehabilitated. Some 2,000 militia members in the west were expected to be integrated into the programme.

The security situation in Côte d'Ivoire remained unpredictable and volatile. Following the attacks, in early June, on the villages of Guetrozon and Petit Duékoué in the west of the country, UNOCI strengthened its presence in the area and conducted joint patrols with FANCI. UNOCI's efforts to maintain a secure and stable environment were severely hampered by increased obstruction of the Mission's movements and operations in various parts of the country. Tensions were exacerbated by inflammatory statements made by the former FANCI chief of staff, calling for the departure of President Gbagbo and threatening to resort to "all necessary means" if the international community failed to ensure his departure. The Special Representative protested those obstructions to President Gbagbo, who, in a nationwide address, called on all Ivorians to allow the impartial forces to move freely throughout the country.

Concerning the elections, on 25 August, the Forces nouvelles declared that the elections could not be held on 30 October since the necessary conditions, including the identification of all Ivorians, had not been met and that a political transition would be required. It reaffirmed its willingness to designate its representatives to the Independent Electoral Commission, subject to certain conditions, including participation in the Commission's local organs and the exclusion of the National Institute of Statistics from the electoral process. On 29 August, in Abidjan, the political opposition also declared that it would not be possible to hold the elections on 30 October, while stressing the need for a transitional period, during which President Gbagbo would not be in power.

Under the current circumstances, the Secretary-General agreed that the elections could not be held on 30 October as required by the Ivorian Constitution, and urged that the parties agree on a new time frame for that process. He urged all Ivorian parties to exercise the utmost restraint and to cooperate fully with all key stakeholders. International partners were urged to remain engaged and support the peace process, humanitarian needs and long-term development.

Decision of AU Peace and Security Council (October). The AU Peace and Security Council, meeting in Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, at the level of Heads of State and Government, in a communiqué issued on 6 October [S/2005/639], endorsed the observations of the ECOWAS Extraordinary Summit (Abuja, Nigeria, 30 September) on the end of the mandate of President Laurent Gbagbo on 30 October, and the impossibility, recognized by all Ivorian parties, of organizing presidential elections on the scheduled date; and its decision that the arrangements agreed upon in the Linas-Marcoussis Agreement should continue from 31 October 2005 to 31 October 2006, during which President Gbagbo would continue as Head of State. A new Prime Minister, acceptable by all Ivorian parties, would be appointed and the Government would continue to discharge its responsibilities. The Prime Minister would not be eligible to stand for election. To assist the Government, a ministerial International Working Group (IWG) would be established to evaluate, monitor and follow up the peace process, including the road map agreed upon in Pretoria, and the parties invited to a Forum for National Dialogue in Yamoussoukro. It also decided to submit its decision to the UN Security Council and to dispatch a high-level delegation to Côte d'Ivoire, comprising the Presidents of Nigeria and South Africa to meet with President Gbagbo and other Ivorian parties.

Security Council consideration. The Security Council, meeting on 13 October [meeting 5278] to discuss the situation in Côte d'Ivoire, was briefed by Nigeria's Minister for Foreign Affairs, Oluyemi Adeniji, AU Commissioner Said Djinnit, the Secretary-General's Special Representative for Côte d'Ivoire, Pierre Schori, and the High Representative for elections in Côte d'Ivoire, António Monteiro.

As requested by the AU Peace and Security Council, Foreign Minister Oluyemi Adeniji submitted its 6 October decision (above) to the UN Security Council, drawing particular attention to the request that the Council consider a substantial increase in UNOCI strength.

The AU Commissioner, in his briefing, said that the AU Peace and Security Council, in adopting its 6 October decision, aimed to inject new impetus into the peace process. He observed that the Ivorian parties and the international community needed to take full advantage of the 12-month period decided by the Peace and Security Council to address all outstanding issues. The international community, together with the UN Security Council, needed to convey a strong signal to the parties as to their determination and cohesion. The United Nations should strengthen its role and presence, both in terms of providing UNOCI with the means to discharge its mandate effectively and reinforcing the authority of the High Representative for elections. The parties had to comply with their commitments and obligations and the international community had to exert more pressure and sanctions against the defaulting parties.

The Secretary-General's Special Representative urged the Council to endorse the 6 October AU decision to send a strong message of the unity of purpose of the international community and encourage the urgent convening of IWG to define a new timetable, with key benchmarks, for the implementation of the remaining provisions of the Pretoria Agreement. The Prime Minister and the Government should be in place as soon as possible and recommendations made on the role of the legislature after December. Presidents Obasanjo and Mbeki should be supported in their visit to Côte d'Ivoire, and the UN role should be clarified.

Reporting on the election process, the High Representative for the elections in Côte d'Ivoire said that, with the composition of the Independent Electoral Commission finalized, additional time was needed to allow for the application of all legal formalities and to resolve the issue of multiple nominations by one party. On 29 September, President Gbagbo signed a decree establishing the new Independent Electoral Commission, the first meeting of which was scheduled to be held on 19 October. The High Representative said that the Commission's most difficult tasks would be the identification question and the criteria for voter eligibility. He was exploring with political leaders the idea of voters' cards, with photograph and fingerprint. The High Representative concluded that the 12-month period proposed by the AU was largely sufficient for the preparation and holding of free and fair elections.

19. Urges countries neighbouring Côte d'Ivoire to prevent any cross-border movement of combatants or arms into Côte d'Ivoire;

20. Reiterates its serious concern at all violations of human rights and international humanitarian law in Côte d'Ivoire, and urges the Ivorian authorities to investigate those violations without delay in order to put an end to impunity;

21. Condemns the serious attacks against the personnel of the United Nations Operation in Côte d'Ivoire and the unacceptable obstacles to the freedom of movement of the United Nations Operation in Côte d'Ivoire and French forces, demands that all Ivorian parties cooperate fully in their operations, in particular by guaranteeing the safety, security and freedom of movement of their personnel, as well as associated personnel, throughout the territory of Côte d'Ivoire, and affirms that any obstacle to their freedom of movement or to the full implementation of their mandates would not be tolerated;

22. Takes note of paragraph 13 of the decision of the Peace and Security Council, recalls the statement by its President of 14 October 2005 and its decisions under resolution 1609(2005) of 24 June 2005, including paragraphs 4, 5 and 6 thereof, and expresses its intention to review the troop level of the United Nations Operation in Côte d'Ivoire by the end of its mandate on 24 January 2006, in the light of the situation in Côte d'Ivoire;

23. Recalls paragraph 12 of the decision of the Peace and Security Council and its support for the individual measures provided for in paragraphs 9 and 11 of resolution 1572(2004) of 15 November 2004, and reaffirms its readiness to impose those measures against any person who blocks the implementation of the peace process, as defined in particular by the road map mentioned in paragraph 13 above, who is determined to be responsible for serious violations of human rights and international humanitarian law in Côte d'Ivoire, who publicly incites hatred and violence, or against any person or entity who is determined to be in violation of the arms embargo;

24. Urges the International Working Group, which shall receive regular reports from the Mediation Group, and the Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 1572(2004) to evaluate, monitor and follow up closely the progress made with regard to the issues mentioned in paragraphs 14 to 18 above;

25. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Communications. On 3 November [S/2005/707], the Secretary-General informed the Council President that, in accordance with resolution 1603(2005) (see p. 233), his High Representative for the elections in Côte d'Ivoire had significantly contributed to the resolution of some of the key issues pertaining to the organization of the elections and had briefed the Council on 13 October (see above) on those issues. UNDP had put in place a project to receive donor contributions to support the work of the High Representative and had advanced $600,000 to the project against future contributions from donors. Those anticipated contributions had not yet materialized. The Secretary-General therefore appealed to Council members, in particular, to take the lead in fulfilling their responsibilities.

Implementation of resolution 1633(2005)

International Working Group meeting (October). The International Working Group (IWG), created by the AU Peace and Security Council on 6 October, and supported by the Security Council in resolution 1633(2005) (see p. 243), to assist the Ivorian Government in the implementation of its programme and consolidate and strengthen existing follow-up mechanisms, held its first meeting on 8 November in Abidjan. In a communiqué issued on the same date, and transmitted by the Secretary-General on 28 November [S/2005/744], the Group, comprising Ministers from Benin, Ghana, Guinea, the Niger, France, the United Kingdom, the EU and the United States, noted that resolution 1633(2005), which was binding on all Ivorians, was the primary basis of the process, as it granted the soon-to-be-appointed Prime Minister inherent powers and all the necessary resources to fully and effectively carry out his mandate. It identified and agreed on the specific duties and authority of the Prime Minister over the cabinet. Accordingly, the Group prepared a road map for the holding of elections no later than 31 October 2006. The road map, which included a timetable for action, covered issues of governance; the political process; disarmament, demobilization and reinsertion of ex-combatants; disarmament and disbanding of militias; redeployment of administration; identification and citizenship; electoral process; restoration of security; respect for human rights; sanctions and hindrance to freedom of movement; media monitoring; and humanitarian action.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 30 November [meeting 5314], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2005/58 on behalf of the Council:

> The Security Council affirms that the rapid appointment of a Prime Minister of Côte d'Ivoire is crucial to relaunch the peace process leading to the holding of free, fair, open and transparent elections no later than 31 October 2006, and to implement fully the road map established by the International Working Group at its first meeting, held in Abidjan on 8 November 2005.
> Therefore, the Council expresses its deep concern at the persistent disagreements among Ivorian parties on the appointment of the Prime Minister and considers that the Prime Minister must be designated without any further delay. The Council stresses once again that the Prime Minister must have all the necessary powers and resources described in paragraph 8 of resolution 1633(2005).
> The Council commends the initiatives undertaken by the Chairman of the African Union, the Chairman of the Economic Community of West African States and the African Union Mediator, and notes that their consultations with the parties signatories to the Linas-Marcoussis Agreement have been held, as provided for by the decision of the Peace and Security Council of the African Union of 6 October 2005 and by resolution 1633(2005). It reiterates its full support for them and urges them to expedite their efforts. The Security Council urges them to identify as soon as possible the candidate for the office of Prime Minister that they deem acceptable to all parties signatories to the Linas-Marcoussis Agreement, given the consultations they have held.
> The Council expresses its full support for the International Working Group, endorses its final communiqué of 8 November 2005,welcomes its decision to hold its second meeting in Abidjan on 6 December 2005, and urges the Group to keep the Council informed of the conclusions of its work.
> The Council commends also the continuing efforts of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Côte d'Ivoire and the High Representative for the elections in Côte d'Ivoire, and reiterates its support for them. In particular, it encourages the Ivorian parties to cooperate fully with the High Representative to resolve the current dispute concerning the Independent Electoral Commission and reaffirms that the High Representative, in accordance with paragraph 7 of resolution 1603(2005), can make all the necessary determinations in order to help the electoral process to move forward.
> The Council reaffirms its readiness, in close consultation with the African Union Mediation, to impose individual measures provided for in paragraphs 9 and 11 of resolution 1572(2004) and in resolution 1633(2005).

Report of Secretary-General. The Secretary-General, updating the Security Council on developments in Côte d'Ivoire, in a later report on UNOCI [S/2006/2], said that following the adoption of resolution 1633(2005), his Special Representative met with the Ivorian parties to explain its legal and political implications. The regional leaders appointed to facilitate consultations with the parties on the issue of the appointment of a new Prime Minister, as provided under that resolution, were unable to travel to Côte d'Ivoire before 31 October. The absence of a new Prime Minister, as the mandate of President Gbagbo came to an end on 30 October, resulted in a situation of uncertainty and heightened tensions in the country. On that date, President Gbagbo, in an address to the nation, stated that he would remain in power in view of the continued occupation of part of the country by the Forces nouvelles, based on a ruling made by the Constitutional Council on 29 October. The opposition parties and the Forces nouvelles rejected that interpretation and suspended their participation in the Council of Ministers. Both the opposition and the ruling party organized rallies in Abidjan to underscore their respective positions on the expiry of the President's mandate. The Forces nouvelles also organized demonstrations in Bouaké and other areas in the north, demanding that President Gbagbo step down. To help calm the situation, the Secretary-General issued a statement on 29 October calling on the Ivorian parties to exercise restraint, and based on consultations with Presidents Mbeki and Obasanjo, explained that Prime Minister Seydou Diarra would remain in office until a new Prime Minister was appointed. He also appealed to the parties to cooperate with the international partners in implementing resolution 1633(2005).

The regional leaders subsequently held a series of consultations with the Ivorian parties on the appointment of a new Prime Minister, including a visit by President Obasanjo to Côte d'Ivoire on 4 November, during which the parties submitted a list of 16 candidates for the post, which was later reduced to a shortlist of four. Presidents Mbeki, Obasanjo and Mamadou Tandja of the Niger conducted further consultations with the parties in Abidjan on 22 November, but no agreement was reached on a candidate acceptable to all. Presidents Mbeki and Obasanjo returned to Abidjan on 4 December for the final round of consultations, at the end of which they announced the appointment of Charles Konan Banny, the Governor of the Central Bank for West African States, as the Prime Minister for the transition period. The Forces nouvelles and the ruling party, the Front Populaire Ivoirien, welcomed his appointment and shortly after, former Prime Minister Seydou Diarra and the Government of National Reconciliation tendered their resignations. Mr. Banny was sworn into office on 7 December. The formation of the new Government, which was announced on 28 December, paved the way for the implementation of the peace agreements.

International Working Group meeting (December). At its second meeting held on 6 December [S/2005/768], IWG assured Prime Minister designate Charles Konan Banny of its full support, and invited the AU Mediation Group to verify and report to it as to whether the Prime Minister held all powers and resources described in paragraph 8 of Security Council resolution 1633 (2005) and reaffirmed in its 30 November presidential statement (see p. 245). Should it become necessary during the transition period to enact legislation to ensure the expeditious implementation of the Government's programme, the Council of Ministers would adopt decisions, which the Prime Minister would present within two days to the Head of State for signature within a maximum of five days.

The Group expressed concern over the protracted delay in the working of the Independent Electoral Commission, which had yet to become operational. It gave its full support to the High Representative on the consultations he had initiated to allow the Commission to function without delay as well as, if necessary, to use arbitration powers with regard to the constitution of the bureau, in accordance with resolutions 1603(2005) and 1633(2005) and the 30 November statement of the Council President. It resolved to help overcome any hindrance relating to the application of the individual sanctions imposed by the Council. It urged the Ivorian media to abstain from any publication, radio or television broadcasting that undermined the peace and reconciliation process and encouraged the Prime Minister to take steps to improve the media environment. The Group updated the road map for holding the elections (see p. 245) with a view to organizing the elections by 31 October 2006.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 9 December [meeting 5318], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2005/60 on behalf of the Council:

> The Security Council welcomes the appointment of Mr. Charles Konan Banny as Prime Minister of Côte d'Ivoire, and expresses its full support for him. It also commends the continued and decisive efforts of Presidents Olusegun Obasanjo, Thabo Mbeki and Mamadou Tandja, and reiterates its full support for them.
> The Council endorses the final communiqué of the International Working Group of 6 December 2005. It recalls the previous final communiqué of the International Working Group, of 8 November 2005, which states, in particular, that the fundamental basis of the peace and national reconciliation process is enshrined in resolution 1633(2005) and that the International Working Group will provide all necessary support to the new Prime Minister and the Government that he will establish. The Council also reaffirms its support for the decision of the Peace and Security Council of the African Union, which stresses that the ministers shall be accountable to the Prime Minister, who shall have full authority over his Cabinet.

The Council recalls and reaffirms that the Prime Minister must have all the necessary powers and resources described in resolution 1633(2005), and stresses the importance of the full implementation of that resolution by the Ivorian parties under the monitoring of the International Working Group. Therefore, the Council urges the establishment without delay of the Government so that the Prime Minister can implement as soon as possible the road map defined by the International Working Group, and requests the Mediation Group and the International Working Group to monitor this matter closely.

The Council reiterates its full support for the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Côte d'Ivoire and the High Representative for the elections in Côte d'Ivoire.

Communication. The EU, on 13 December [S/2005/829], expressed satisfaction over the nomination of Charles Konan Banny to the post of Prime Minister and considered it necessary that Mr. Banny should be able to effectively exercise the powers granted by the Council.

Later developments. In a later report [S/2006/2], the Secretary-General said that the High Representative for the elections was consulted on the outline of an electoral schedule, which would form part of the road map for the overall peace process. On 30 November, he proposed an outline to the AU Mediation Group, which envisaged that the substantive work on the preparations for the elections would commence by the end of December, by which time the reconstituted Independent Electoral Commission was to be fully operational. The development of the legal framework for the electoral operations, including the identification and registration of voters and the distribution of electoral identity cards, would also begin.

Meanwhile, the Independent Electoral Commission encountered internal problems, resulting in serious delays in the envisaged schedule. The reconstituted Commission was sworn into office on 17 October, but was not able to function as some members boycotted it, protesting the procedures under which its bureau was elected on 19 October. The Front Populaire Ivoirien, the ruling party, took the dispute to the Supreme Court, which, on 25 November, nullified the election of the Commission's bureau. The High Representative consulted with the parties and the Prime Minister on ways of resolving the dispute. He reported to IWG, which, in its communiqué of 6 December (see p. 246), expressed its full support for his initiative and affirmed that, if necessary, he should use his arbitration powers to assist in the constitution of the bureau.

At the expert meeting on disarmament, demobilization and reintegration, held on 8 November, specific recommendations were made to the Mediation Group on the need to update the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration timetable at the monthly IWG meetings; adopt measures for an immediate commencement of pre-cantonment of combatants and the disarmament and dismantling of the militias as soon as possible, as called for by Security Council resolution 1633(2005); create a task force to monitor and support the process of dismantling and disarmament of the militia groups; and create a disarmament, demobilization and reintegration team coordinated by UNOCI and comprising representatives of the AU, ECOWAS, the AU mediation, the World Bank and the Licorne forces. The team would serve as a forum for the exchange of information and would facilitate the development of a concerted and integrated approach to the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration process in Côte d'Ivoire.

The Secretary-General called upon the political parties to work with the Prime Minister and the High Representative for the elections in resolving the dispute within the Independent Electoral Commission. He fully supported the IWG view that, if need be, the High Representative should invoke his arbitration authority to decisively settle the matter.

With regard to the end of the mandate of the National Assembly on 16 December, the Mediation Group consulted with the Ivorian parties on the IWG decision concerning the procedure for dealing with emergency legislation during the transition period, following calls for the Assembly's mandate to be extended.

The Secretary-General stated that the effective implementation of the road map for the transition period required that the Ivorian parties fully comply with their obligations under the various peace agreements.

Sanctions

The Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 1572(2004) [YUN 2004, p. 187] concerning Côte d'Ivoire, continued to monitor implementation of the arms embargo, travel restrictions and freeze of assets on designated individuals and entities imposed by that resolution. In 2005, the Committee held 7 formal meetings and 13 informal consultations. During the reporting period the Committee received several notes verbales from Member States period from 19 January to 9 August [S/AC.45.2005/1-38] on the implementation of the sanctions.

It considered reports submitted by Member States, in accordance with their obligations under resolution 1572(2004), containing information on measures they had taken to implement the resolution [S/AC.45/2005/1-38]. In a report on its activities during 2005 [S/2006/55], the Committee Chairman informed that, on 13 June 2005, the Committee adopted guidelines for its work, including procedures for listing and delisting individuals and entities subject to the targeted sanctions. It considered several arms embargo monitoring reports and media monitoring reports prepared by UNOCI. The Committee considered the interim and final reports of the Group of Experts established by the Council under resolution 1584(2005) to assess compliance with the sanctions and on 14 December, began consideration of the Group's updated report, in accordance with resolution 1632(2005) (see p. 250). The Committee Chairman visited Côte d'Ivoire from 18 to 21 October to assess progress made by all parties towards implementation of their commitments and submitted his report to the Council (see p. 251).

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 1 February [meeting 5118], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1584(2005). The draft [S/2005/54] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

On 3 June [S/2005/368], he informed the Council of the appointment of Jean-Pierre Witty (Canada) to replace Gilbert Charles Barthe, who was unable to take up his appointment.

Report of Group of Experts (July). In accordance with resolutions 1572(2004) and 1584(2005), the Group of Experts issued a July interim report [S/2005/470] on the situation in Côte d'Ivoire. The Panel, which began its mandate on 18 April, visited France and the United Kingdom and held consultations in New York before visiting Côte d'Ivoire's neighbours (Guinea, Mali, Burkina Faso and Senegal). In May it visited Portugal and Côte d'Ivoire. In Côte d'Ivoire, the Panel liaised closely with political, police and military branches of UNOCI. It also met with the French Licorne forces. The Panel visited all the country's airports and took into account the Secretary-General report's [S/2005/135] on inter-mission cooperation.

On 18 October [meeting 5283], the Council unanimously adopted resolution 1632(2005). The draft [S/2005/653] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Recalling its previous resolutions concerning the situation in Côte d'Ivoire, in particular resolutions 1572(2004) of 15 November 2004, 1584(2005) of 1 February 2005 and 1609(2005) of 24 June 2005, and the relevant statements by its President,

Welcoming the ongoing efforts of the Secretary-General, the African Union and the Economic Community of Western African States towards re-establishing peace and stability in Côte d'Ivoire,

Recalling the interim report of the Group of Experts created by the Secretary-General pursuant to paragraph 7 of resolution 1584(2005), and anticipating the receipt of its final report,

Determining that the situation in Côte d'Ivoire continues to constitute a threat to international peace and security in the region,

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Decides to extend the mandate of the Group of Experts until 15 December 2005, and requests the Secretary-General to take the necessary administrative measures;

2. Requests the Group of Experts to submit to the Security Council, through the Committee established pursuant to paragraph 14 of resolution 1572(2004), before 1 December 2005, a brief written update on the implementation of the measures imposed by paragraph 7 of resolution 1572(2004) and reaffirmed by paragraph 1 of resolution 1584(2005), with recommendations in this regard;

3. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

On 2 November [S/2005/696], the Secretary-General informed the Council of his intentions to reappoint members of the Group of Experts, in accordance with resolution 1584(2005), until 15 December.

Report of Group of Experts (November). In November [S/2005/699], the Chairman of the Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 1572(2004) transmitted to the Council President the final report of the Group of Experts on the situation in Côte d'Ivoire. The report examined the political context, defence expenditure and natural resources, the effectiveness of the sanctions and possible violations of the arms embargo. The Group found that, despite rumours of fresh supplies of weapons and ammunition reaching the militias, there was no evidence of recent deliveries to those groups. It noted during its visits to Côte d'Ivoire many speculative articles in the Ivorian press alleging massive violations of the embargo, most of which were inaccurate. It reported that a number of countries had suspended or blocked the export of military goods and services to Côte d'Ivoire and many were forthcoming with information that assisted the Group in its task. However, there was widespread frustration on the part of Member States at not being able to implement fully resolution 1572(2004) because the Sanctions Committee had failed to provide them with the names of individuals or organizations for an assets freeze or travel ban. The Group noted that the Committee needed to urgently clarify that issue.

The Group noted that Côte d'Ivoire defence expenditure was high and urged the Council to call upon the Government to submit a comprehensive breakdown of those expenditures for 2005 as a matter of urgency. As for Forces nouvelles, it noted that the natural resources under its control funded its military activities, especially the proceeds from cocoa, cotton and diamonds. The Panel indicated that the fruit terminal at the port of Abidjan was a strategic location for the unloading of military goods and equipment and highlighted the need for better declaration procedures and the strengthening of UNOCI monitoring capabilities. Meanwhile, the Group noted that, even though the export of diamonds from Côte d'Ivoire was illegal, there was no credible evaluation of illicit export volumes of rough diamonds. UNOCI and the secretariat of the Kimberley Process (an international arrangement for the certification of rough diamonds) needed to investigate the production and illicit export of diamonds and make public reports of their findings. The Council should also call upon the Government to commission an audit of all cocoa agencies to be completed by May 2006.

The Group concluded that neither the Government nor the Forces nouvelles had a strategic need for, or the financial capability to procure heavy and light weapons. Their immediate needs were for transport, including helicopters. While UNOCI was vigilant concerning air assets importations, it was less focused on the increasing number of vehicles imported for military use by FANCI and the Forces nouvelles. The Group highlighted what it called a "dual-use loophole" and called for its remedy through the drafting of a tighter definition by the Council. It recommended that the Committee request Belarus, Bulgaria, Côte d'Ivoire and Togo to report on the ownership of certain aircraft at Lomé airport. The Group noted that Côte d'Ivoire had not made submissions to the United Nations Register of Conventional Arms and recommended that it submit a baseline statement of acquisitions in its possession. It welcomed the establishment by the Government of Côte d'Ivoire, in May, of the National Commission for the ECOWAS Moratorium on Small Arms and Light Weapons and hoped that it would play an active role in the negotiations to transform the moratorium into a binding regional convention.

Report of Committee Chairman. The Committee Chairman, Adamantios Th. Vassilakis, visited Côte d'Ivoire from 18 to 21 October. His report, submitted to the Council on 9 December [S/2005/790], assessed the progress made by all parties towards the implementation of their commitments. The Chairman stated that the sanctions had proved to be an effective tool and deterrent, although there was scepticism among some regarding their positive effects, in particular about their power to change the behaviour of targeted individuals. There was strong agreement that individual sanctions should be applied without further delay to force the parties to implement the agreements reached and to prevent incitement to hatred and violence, human rights violations and abuses. Although the Group of Experts on Côte d'Ivoire did not find major violations of the arms embargo, there were indications that large quantities of arms were at the disposal of the population.

The Chairman recommended that the Council and the Committee should keep the situation under close review until resolution 1633(2005) (see p. 243) was fully and unconditionally implemented and the disarmament of the Forces nouvelles, the militias and the defence groups completed. The Committee should consider taking prompt action against any individuals hindering the peace process, violating the arms embargo, inciting hatred, violence or intolerance or committing violations or abuses of human rights or humanitarian law. He suggested that the Council should consider the report of the International Commission of Inquiry for Côte d'Ivoire [YUN 2004, p. 117] and that the Sanctions Committee discuss the annexes, as suggested by the Secretary-General, with a view to putting an end to impunity.

While the request of the AU and the Mediator to withhold action that would have a negative effect on the peace process was justified, the Council should not leave unanswered any actions that might give the impression that it allowed impunity.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 14 December [meeting 5327], the Security Council adopted unanimously resolution 1643 (2005). The draft [S/2005/786] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

Liberia

In 2005, Liberia marked a major milestone in its efforts towards the restoration of peace and stability, with the successful holding of both legislative and presidential elections on 11 October. The elections, which saw Ellen Johnson-Sirleaf become the President-elect, marked one of the final steps towards completing the two-year transition period stipulated in the 2004 Comprehensive Peace Agreement [YUN 2004, p. 192]. With the assistance of the United Nations Mission in Liberia, the Economic Commission of West African States and other regional and international actors, Liberia made progress in the disarmament of combatants, the disbandment of former factions, the establishment of a stable environment throughout the country, the partial restoration of State authority in the counties, the resettlement of a significant number of refugees, the establishment of the Truth and Reconciliation Commission, the launching of security sector reform and the agreement to establish the Governance and Economic Management Assistance Programme.

However, significant problems faced the new Government to be installed in 2006. Concerns about the performance of the National Transitional Government of Liberia, particularly its lack of transparency in the collection and use of revenues, as well as corruption, had led to the establishment of an investigative committee. The committee concluded that there had been administrative and financial malpractices and recommended that remedial measures be taken. The security situation in the country remained calm, but fragile. Demonstrations and protest marches by ex-combatants demanding rehabilitation and reintegration opportunities or protesting the non-payment of salary arrears posed a threat to stability, in addition to the civil unrest which arose from alleged ritual killings. The discovery of diamonds in Sinoe County sparked a rush of over 20,000 people to the site and gave rise to violations of UN sanctions. The situation in neighbouring countries continued to be monitored, as the recruitment of Liberian ex-combatants from Côte d'Ivoire, Guinea and Sierra Leone remained a concern.

The Panel of Experts established to conduct an assessment on the implementation, impact and effectiveness of the arms, travel, timber and diamond sanctions imposed on Liberia concluded that the assets freeze had not been implemented and reports were received of violations of the travel ban, including by former President Charles Taylor. Sanctions on timber had been effective, but the Forest Review Committee had recommended the cancellation of all concessions and that the sector be reformed. The Panel identified developments that were undermining Liberia's efforts to meet the Security Council's requirements for lifting the embargo on exporting rough diamonds. The Panel also found that Government administration was weak, with archaic internal controls and little external oversight, and if the sanctions on diamonds and timber were to be lifted, it was unlikely that Government revenues would enter the budget process for the benefit of the Liberian people. The Security Council therefore renewed the arms and travel measures for a further 12 months and the diamonds and timber measures for six months.

Governments and human rights organizations continued to call on the Government of Nigeria to hand over former President Charles Taylor to the Special Court for Sierra Leone. The Council, following allegations that Taylor had been meddling in Liberian politics and had violated the conditions of his asylum in Nigeria, indicated that his return to Liberia would constitute a threat to international peace and security in the region and amended the UNMIL mandate to include the apprehension and detainment of Mr. Taylor, in the event of a return to Liberia, and his transfer to Sierra Leone for prosecution before the Special Court for Sierra Leone.

The National Transitional Government of Liberia made some human rights advances with the signing of the Truth and Reconciliation Commission Act into law in and the establishment of the Independent National Commission. UNMIL spearheaded the formulation of a five-year national human rights action plan for Liberia.

In December, the Security Council extended UNMIL's mandate until 31 March 2006 and authorized a temporary increase in the personnel ceiling to 15,250 troops.

UNMIL

The United Nations Mission in Liberia (UNMIL), established by Security Council resolution 1509(2003) [YUN 2003, p. 194], was mandated to support the implementation of the 2003 Agreement on Ceasefire and Cessation of Hostilities [ibid., p. 189] and of the peace process; protect UN staff, facilities and civilians; support humanitarian and human rights activities; and assist in national security reform, including national police training and the formation of a new, restructured military.

By resolution 1638(2005) (see p. 267), the Council decided that the mandate should include the apprehension and detention of former President Charles Taylor in the event of his return to Liberia and to transfer him to the Special Court for Sierra Leone. By resolution 1626(2005) (see p. 264), the Council extended UNMIL's mandate until 31 March 2006.

Headquartered in the Liberian capital, Monrovia, UNMIL was headed by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Liberia, Jacques Paul Klein (United States), from July 2003 to April 2005. He was succeeded in that capacity by Alan Doss (United Kingdom), who was appointed with effect from 15 August [S/2005/464 & S/2005/465].

Lieutenant General Joseph Olorungbon Owonibi (Nigeria), Deputy Force Commander of UNMIL since November 2003, was appointed Force Commander as of 1 January 2005 [S/2005/19 & S/2005/18]; and Lieutenant General Chikadibia Isaac Obiakor (Nigeria) was appointed Force Commander as of 1 January 2006 [S/2005/738 & S/2005/739].

Also by resolution 1626(2005), the Council supported the Secretary-General's recommendation to return to the ceiling of 15,000 UN military personnel authorized by resolution 1509(2003) [YUN 2003, p. 194] by 31 March 2006.

Financing

In June, at its resumed fifty-ninth (2005) session, the General Assembly considered the performance report on the UNMIL budget for 1 August 2003 to 30 June 2004 [A/59/624], showing expenditures amounting to $548,178,700 against a total appropriation of $564,494,300, and the proposed budget for UNMIL for 1 July 2005 to 30 June 2006 [A/59/630] of $722,633,600, together with the related ACABQ report [A/59/736/Add.11].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 June [meeting 104], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/59/836], adopted resolution 59/305 without vote [agenda item 134].

Peacebuilding efforts

Implementation of Comprehensive Peace Agreement and UNMIL activities

Report of Secretary-General (March). The Secretary-General, on 17 March, submitted his sixth progress report on UNMIL [S/2005/177] covering developments since his December 2004 report [YUN 2004, p. 200]. He noted the various advancements made in the implementation of the 2003 Comprehensive Peace Agreement [YUN 2003, p. 192]: preparations for the October 2005 elections were under way; former armed factions either formed new political parties or associated themselves with existing ones; increased numbers of internally displaced persons and refugees were returning to their homes; the training programme for the new Liberian police service was moving forward; and the process of restoring county administration continued, albeit at a slow pace. Limited progress was made in efforts to entrench the rule of law and improve the human rights situation; however, the National Transitional Government continued to function, notwithstanding serious internal tensions.

The Implementation Monitoring Committee and the International Contact Group, the two mechanisms monitoring implementation of the 2003 Comprehensive Peace Agreement, continued to meet regularly. Subregional engagement with the peace process remained strong, notably by ECOWAS, which visited Liberia in February/March to assess progress in the peace process and election preparations.

The Government, responding to donor concerns about its performance, particularly its lack of transparency in the collection and use of revenues and resistance to reforms and audits to fight corruption, set up a Task Force on Corruption and a Cash Management Committee. The National Transitional Legislative Assembly also set up a committee in January to investigate allegations of administrative and financial impropriety involving its leadership; it presented its report in March, confirming existent administrative and financial malpractices and recommending remedial measures. A proposal to suspend the Assembly leadership for up to seven months (which went into effect on 14 March) degenerated into a fracas; UNMIL had to intervene to restore calm.

In contravention of an article of the Comprehensive Peace Agreement barring principal cabinet ministers from running for elective office in the 11 October elections, two such officials declared their intention to run for the presidency and a senatorial seat, one arguing that the article was inconsistent with another article of the Agreement that he invoked. UNMIL and the International Contact Group on Liberia found no contradiction between the two articles—a finding reaffirmed by the National Elections Commission and the ECOWAS Mediator, General Abdulsalami Abubakar.

The overall security situation remained calm but fragile. Several incidents of lawlessness and violent unrest occurred, but no major disturbances. Large student demonstrations protesting the closure of schools were staged in Monrovia in December 2004, as were protests by civil servants against the non-payment of salaries in arrears and, in January and February 2005, by ex-combatants who were growing increasingly restive while awaiting rehabilitation and reintegration opportunities. Disturbances also occurred at rubber plantations. Incidents of mob violence erupted in Maryland County in January, following allegations attributing the disappearance of certain persons to ritual killings. As a result, the Transitional Government imposed a dusk-to-dawn curfew, and UNMIL troops and police acted quickly to restore calm.

As of 1 March, the number of formally disarmed combatants totalled 101,495, including women, boys and girls. With UNICEF assistance, 98 per cent of former child combatants were rejoined with their families. UNMIL destroyed all weapons and ammunition collected during the disarmament process. It encouraged communities to divulge information on arms caches and, with UNDP, launched a community arms collection and destruction project. Some 612 ex-combatants identified as foreign nationals during the disarmament and demobilization process were still awaiting repatriation. In addition to 50 children already repatriated to Liberia from Sierra Leone, the two countries reached an agreement for the repatriation by 31 March of 435 Liberian ex-combatants in internment camps in Sierra Leone. The most pressing challenge was to create long-term reintegration opportunities for more than 100,000 ex-combatants. Only 25,591 were participating in reintegration projects funded by the relevant UNDP-managed trust fund, the European Commission and the United States Agency for International Development; a number of projects in the pipeline would provide immediate opportunities for another 44,502, but many of them had yet to begin, owing to a lack of funding. The Secretary-General appealed to the international community for funds to reduce the $40 million shortfall.

As to the restructuring of the national police, some 1,134 trainees were enrolled in the National Police Academy training programme. As of 1 March, 200 police officers were deployed in the 12 counties with minimal or no police presence, and command structures were established with the deployment of police commanders to five regional police centres in Kakata, Tubmanburg, Gbarnga, Zwedru and Harper. For those outlying deployments to be sustainable, an estimated $871,000 was urgently required for basic equipment, renovations of police stations, including detention cells and security measures. The United States continued to take the lead in coordinating plans for the restructuring of the Liberian military, for which a preliminary budget was estimated at $87.5 to $200 million. Unfortunately, the restructuring exercise could not proceed until the existing personnel from the Armed Forces of Liberia had been decommissioned. In that regard, the Government's list of 14,084 personnel was being verified against the UNMIL database to determine their eligibility benefits for terminal. An estimated minimum of $8.5 million in donor assistance would be needed to cover the cost of their severance and pension packages.

Reform of the justice sector continued at a slow pace. Circuit courts functioned in only eight counties and only 60 per cent of the magistrate courts were operational. UNMIL conducted four training courses throughout the country for prosecutors and law enforcement officers. At the initiative of UNMIL, a case flow management committee was established to address the problem of pretrial detainees held for excessive periods. The recruitment of correctional officers, expected to take place every three months, had begun, with UNMIL providing technical advice and on-the-job training, as well as assisting in developing draft national policies on prisoner discipline and adjudication and admission procedures. About $130,000 was urgently required for the training of correctional officers and $800,000 for prison refurbishment and security upgrades.

Limited progress was made in the restoration of State authority and in the rehabilitation of government institutions. As of 18 February, the National Task Force for the Restoration of State authority completed consultations for the selection of Superintendent and Assistant Superintendent nominees in all 15 counties. The Transitional Government deployed 564 government officials across the country, including internal revenue collectors, customs officers and some 250 immigration and naturalization officers. UNMIL supported government efforts to ensure financial transparency and accountability by liaising with the General Audit Office on audits of ministries and State-owned enterprises. Concerns persisted over the Government's limited capacity to deliver basic services. A dearth of official vehicles and office accommodation, combined with other logistical constraints, undermined the ability of recently deployed county superintendents to perform their duties. Also, most regional officials had to travel to Monrovia to collect their salaries. UNMIL was working with the Central Bank of Liberia to establish rural branches and with the World Bank and the Government to find a short-term solution to the problem.

UNMIL continued to support the Government in asserting control over the country's land-based and marine natural resources. The Government lacked the capacity to police illegal fishing in its territorial waters and was powerless to prevent offshore dumping of waste by foreign vessels. UNMIL provided advice to the technical working group on fishing and undertook reconnaissance of Liberian waters to monitor illegal fishing. It also assisted government institutions in regulating issues of ownership, land tenure, management and functioning in respect of rubber and timber plantations. The Government was focused on ensuring compliance by the diamond-mining sector with the Kimberley Process Certification Scheme [YUN 2000, p. 76]. A review team of international experts on the Scheme that visited the country in February was to present its recommendations to the Panel of Experts dealing with sanctions on Liberia (see p. 269). UNMIL trained guards from the Forestry Development Authority and conducted an environmental baseline survey.

In the humanitarian area, UNHCR continued to facilitate the voluntary repatriation of Liberian refugees from Ghana, Guinea, Côte d'Ivoire, Nigeria and Sierra Leone. An estimated 100,000 refugees had returned spontaneously, while 8,113 returned with UNHCR assistance. As of 1 March, 67,644 internally displaced persons returned to their respective counties and were provided with return packages. Assistance provided by other UN agencies included food aid by WFP; agricultural support to farm families from FAO; and the re-establishment of country health teams by WHO. In addition to providing basic health care for 100,000 internally displaced persons and enabling the immunization services for 2.47 million children, UNICEF trained 13,000 teachers in "emergency" education as part of its back-to-school campaign.

The Secretary-General observed that the main pillars of the transition process had been successfully erected. However, if not provided with the necessary support and advice during that critical period, Liberia faced the risk of repeating the pattern of abuse of power, institutional breakdown and violence that had plagued the country for the past 25 years. It was therefore imperative that the Government proceed without delay to institute fundamental reforms and that the international community provide the required resources to allow for the consolidation of gains made so far. The Government also needed to eliminate corrupt practices and institute transparent arrangements for the management of public funds and take disciplinary actions against Government officials resisting institutional reforms to fight corruption. It should play a more proactive role in urgently finding a solution to the problems of the inadequate payment of salaries and provision of logistics for the national police, which might perpetuate a culture of corruption in the police service. The Government, along with the international community, should give due consideration to providing the $8.5 million required to complete the programme for restructuring the Armed Forces of Liberia.

The Secretary-General underscored other concerns, including the need to convene a national consultative forum prior to the elections to discuss reforms, particularly those on land use and property rights; measures to ensure free and fair elections; the growing disaffection among former combatants, unemployed youth, students and government workers; the activities of close associates of former President Charles Taylor; and negative developments in Côte d'Ivoire and their impact on efforts to stabilize Liberia.

EU evaluations. In a 21 March statement on evaluations [S/2005/222] carried out by the European Commission in Liberia, the EU, noting that the country was at a crucial point in its transition process, called on all political forces and the Liberian transitional authorities to cooperate to ensure strict compliance with the timetable and framework for the conduct of the October elections. It expressed concern about the significant level of corruption brought to light in recent reports and evaluations that was largely going unpunished, saying such corruption damaged the country's image and ongoing democratic process, and could jeopardize the conduct and international recognition of the elections.

Report of Secretary-General (June). In his June progress report on UNMIL [S/2005/391], the Secretary-General stated that the United Nations, the European Commission, the World Bank, the International Monetary Fund, ECOWAS and the United States met (Copenhagen, Denmark, 11 May) to address the issue of improving Liberia's economic governance. It reviewed the audit reports of the Central Bank of Liberia and five State-owned enterprises, and noted that the technical and policy advice on economic governance-related issues given to the Government over the previous 18 months had not achieved the desired results due to its unwillingness to institute reforms. Concluding that financial malfeasance and a lack of transparency and accountability were undermining the implementation of the Comprehensive Peace Agreement, they decided to develop an economic governance action plan for the Government's implementation, to be submitted to the Security Council for consideration.

With the agreement of the Chairman of the Transitional Government, Charles Gyude Bryant, ECOWAS earlier had dispatched a team of investigators to look into allegations of corruption within the Government. The team encountered resistance from some Ministers and other officials, as well as from the Liberian Institute of Certified Public Accountants, which petitioned the Supreme Court for a writ of prohibition restraining public officers from cooperating with the investigation on the grounds that it was a violation of Liberia's sovereignty. The writ was refused by the Supreme Court. Tensions stemming from the 14 March suspension of four members of the National Transitional Legislative Assembly—the Speaker, Deputy Speaker, the Chairperson of the Ways and Means Committee and Chairperson of the Rules and Orders Committee—for administrative and financial malpractice continued. A petition filed by the suspended officials for a reversal of their suspension was pending before the Supreme Court. The Assembly, which maintained that the judiciary had no jurisdiction over its internal processes, continued to function under the newly elected Acting Speaker and Deputy Speaker.

The Implementation Monitoring Committee and the International Contact Group continued to meet regularly to review progress in the peace process and to address emerging issues. The second meeting of the ECOWAS Coordination Mechanism (Abuja, Nigeria, 26 May), jointly held by the Government and the United Nations, examined progress and remaining challenges in the implementation of the Comprehensive Peace Agreement; welcomed the decision of Liberia's international partners to develop an economic governance action plan (above); emphasized that security sector reform should include the rehabilitation of the judicial, penal and immigration sectors; and called for the adoption of clear, well-defined and transparent criteria for the inclusion in or exclusion of individuals from the sanctions list on travel ban and assets freeze. The meeting also called for evidence from those alleging that the former President of Liberia was in violation of the terms of his asylum in Nigeria by actively interfering in Liberia's forthcoming presidential elections.

The security situation was marred by several incidents. Unemployed ex-combatants, susceptible to exploitation by political elements, held violent demonstrations to demand reintegration benefits and opportunities and also threatened to disrupt the elections and attack UNMIL personnel. Organized ex-combatant groups linked to influential members of the former armed factions were illegally occupying the State-owned Guthrie Rubber Plantation, located on the border of Bomi and Grand Cape Mount Counties. Other groups held protests demanding that their enrolment in schools they had formerly attended be facilitated. On 15 April, the first referral and counselling office for demobilized ex-combatants opened in Monrovia. Other threats to security were: the "coalition of unwilling political forces" composed of individuals barred by the Comprehensive Peace Agreement from running in the 11 October elections, those on the Security Council travel-ban and assets-freeze lists and those benefiting economically from Liberia's instability and lack of Government authority; and ethnic clashes. UNMIL troops continued to provide umbrella security throughout the country in order to create a stable environment for the electoral process. It took over security responsibilities at Monrovia's Freeport to enable it to meet international ship and port facility standards and enhance its security and operations.

In support of security sector reform, the programme to develop the new professional Liberian National Police made steady progress. In-kind support was provided by Belgium (weapons and ammunition), China (motorcycles and radios) and the United States (uniforms and funding for operational costs and trainee stipends). In May, UNMIL launched a training programme for senior law enforcement managers, who would serve as a core group of trainers when the new police service, to be established formally on 1 July, was to assume responsibility for running the Academy's training programme.

The programme for the recruitment and training of the new armed forces was expected to begin after the completion of the decommissioning and retirement process for the existing Armed Forces of Liberia. By an executive order signed on 15 May by the Chairman of the Transitional Government, that process would begin on 31 May; it was expected to be completed by September. The decommissioning exercise, estimated at $16.4 million, had a shortfall of some $5.4 million.

Other UNMIL activities included building the capacity of the justice sector in terms of training the various categories of judicial personnel, providing legal aid services to defendants, assisting in convening a meeting of a legislative drafting working group, and providing support to the Bureau of Corrections and Rehabilitation towards the rehabilitation of corrections infrastructure. UNMIL increased programming on human rights, transitional justice and humanitarian activities and carried out community-level live broadcasts with public participation on issues related to the peace process. It assisted in the return of Government officials to their duty stations, thereby to restore State authority, especially in the interior of the country; in providing advice to the relevant institutions and authorities on measures to ensure proper management of natural resources and monitoring sites where natural resource exploitation was taking place; spearheading the formulation of a five-year national human rights action plan; and accelerating the return of internally displaced persons and refugees to their counties of origin.

The annual review meeting on the Results-Focused Transitional Framework (Copenhagen, 9-10 May), attended by the Government and its international partners, identified priorities for 2005: addressing corruption, ensuring transparency and integrity in fiscal management and providing basic services in the interior of the country to sustain the return of internally displaced persons and refugees. The meeting recognized the need to extend the Framework into 2006 to ensure a structured transition from the Framework to a poverty reduction strategy based on the Millennium Development Goals [YUN 2000, p. 51].

The Secretary-General noted the encouraging progress achieved in Liberia in the past three months. He stressed the importance of the remaining six months of the transition period for laying the foundations for a peaceful and democratic Liberia; any efforts to disrupt the electoral process should be expeditiously addressed. He reiterated his March recommendation that the Security Council favourably consider authorizing an additional formed police unit of 120 officers, for an interim period of six months beginning in August, to assist in dealing with security emergencies during the electoral period.

Report of Secretary-General (September). In his September report on UNMIL [S/2005/560], the Secretary-General stated that the National Transitional Government took measures against a number of reported cases of Government corruption, suspending the Commissioner of the Bureau of Maritime Affairs, following allegations of fraud and dismissing Liberia's representative to the International Maritime Organization (IMO). Along with two others from the Bureau, they were alleged to have misappropriated more than $4 million and were charged with "economic sabotage and fraud of the internal revenue of Liberia". The ECOWAS team dispatched to investigate corruption within the Government (see p. 261) submitted its report to the ECOWAS Heads of State. Meanwhile, draft legislation on the establishment of a Liberian anti-corruption agency had been prepared.

The leadership crisis at the Transitional Legislative Assembly was resolved on 2 August, when the Supreme Court ruled that the 14 March suspension of four of its members violated neither the Comprehensive Peace Agreement, nor the Constitution, nor the standing rules of the Assembly, and that the Assembly had followed due process. One member, who had sought the Secretary-General's intervention to facilitate his reinstatement, or lift the Agreement's restriction barring him from running in the elections, was informed that the United Nations respected the Court's ruling and the sanctity of the legislature, and that it had no authority to modify the Agreement.

During the reporting period, diamond deposits discovered in the Sanquin District of Sinoe County resulted in an influx to the site of some 20,000 people who began illegal alluvial diamond mining. The presence of such a large group of youths, including ex-combatants, posed a threat to security. Cholera broke out in the area, claiming 29 lives. A security assessment team recommended evacuation of the area, while WHO delivered cholera treatment kits for 10,000 people. Other security concerns were the simmering ethnic tensions, property disputes and election-related violence.

The programme for the establishment of a new Liberian police service was on course to complete the basic training of 1,800 national police in time for the October elections. By 24 August, 756 police officers had completed the full basic training programme. Some 263 Special Security Service personnel and 116 Liberian Seaport Police had also graduated from the training programme. In July, 208 more police officers were deployed to various locations in the country, bringing to 918 the number of officers redeployed to police stations in the counties. The United States pledged $1.7 million to allow training at the Police Academy to continue for a further year. Funding shortfalls hampered efforts to rehabilitate police infrastructure, re-equip specialized units and decommission personnel from the Liberian National Police and the Special Security Services who were ineligible to join the new restructured services

By 24 August, 8,164 of the 9,086 irregular armed forces personnel had been demobilized. The demobilization programme, however, faced a funding shortfall of $11.5 million for the demobilization of 4,095 regular personnel of the Armed Forces of Liberia. Demobilized soldiers would be eligible to apply for the new military force during a 45-day recruitment period. The new force, originally intended to be 4,000 strong, was reduced to 2,000 for lack of funds. Also by 24 August, 37,500 demobilized ex-combatants had been placed in rehabilitation and reintegration projects and another 35,448 accommodated in projects covered by the UNDP-managed Disarmament, Demobilization, Reintegration and Rehabilitation Trust Fund. Nonetheless, 26,000 ex-combatants were still awaiting participation in the rehabilitation and reintegration programme, which was also facing a shortage of about $18.5 million. UNMIL and UNDP began registering ex-combatants illegally occupying the Guthrie Rubber Plantation (see p. 261) for reintegration opportunities. Ex-combatants numbering 5,187 who were unarmed and therefore did not enter the disarmament and demobilization programme would be placed in community-based recovery programmes.

The judicial system reform saw significant progress with the conclusion of the nomination, vetting and appointment processes for circuit court judges, specialized court judges and magistrates. UNMIL collaborated with the Liberian National Bar Association to ensure transparency in the selection and vetting procedures. The courts in operation were handling an increased number of cases: in July alone, six criminal jury trials were concluded, which equalled the total concluded during the whole of 2004. UNMIL continued to assist the Bureau of Corrections in improving conditions at corrections institutions and deployed corrections advisers to Zwedru and Harper, where courts recently opened with no detention facilities. UNMIL quick-impact projects also financed projects for water, sanitation and physical exercise in Monrovia and Gbarnga prisons.

In the area of human rights, on 10 June, the Chairman of the Transitional Government signed into law the Truth and Reconciliation Commission Act and, on 14 July, the ECOWAS Mediator presided over the inauguration of the selection panel for the Commission. The panel would recommend 15 candidates, from among whom the Chairman would select and appoint up to nine commissioners by 10 September. They would be assisted by three international technical advisers selected by OHCHR and ECOWAS. Following a visit to Liberia (9-13 July), the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, Louise Arbour, expressed the view that the weakest link in the Liberian transitional process was the justice system and recommended that the international community do more to encourage the Liberian judiciary to open up to international assistance. UNMIL hosted a workshop (21-23 July) on transitional justice for African peacekeeping missions, facilitated activities to raise human rights awareness and conducted a nationwide survey of human rights violations in the agricultural sector, with a focus on rubber plantations.

To extend and consolidate State authority in all 15 counties, the Government completed the commissioning of all 15 county superintendents in mid-July. Almost 95 per cent of civil servants had returned to their duty stations in the counties and at border posts; their salaries could be paid by offices of the Central Bank of Liberia in Kakata, Buchanan and Gbarnga, recently constructed with UNMIL assistance. To assist the Government to regain full control over the exploitation of the country's natural resources, particularly over artisanal diamond-mining activities, UNMIL continued to report to the Government the findings of its aerial and ground surveillance of areas where illegal diamond-mining was being carried out. On 28 July, the Government announced a draft action plan to meet the requirements for lifting the sanctions imposed by the Security Council on diamond mining and the export of rough diamonds from Liberia, which recommended an increased UNMIL presence in diamond-mining areas. The report of the Forest Concession Review Committee, endorsed by the European Commission, the United States and UNMIL, recommended the cancellation of all 70 forestry concession agreements for failure to meet the basic operational requirements and the debarment of 12 companies for complicity in the country's civil war. A committee would be established to monitor implementation of the reform programme. On 17 August, UNMIL assisted the Ministry of Internal Affairs to evacuate an estimated 1,000 people illegally residing, mining and hunting in Sapo National Park.

The Secretary-General commended the Liberian people for their determination to participate in the polls and the National Elections Commission for keeping the electoral process on track. He emphasized that the political parties, the candidates and their supporters needed to ensure that the electoral campaigns were conducted peaceably and freely, and that voters could participate in credible polls without any threat of violence. He called on the Government to redouble its efforts to raise the requisite funds for demobilizing security personnel and decommissioning former armed forces personnel who were ineligible to join the restructured security services. The Secretary-General appealed to donors to close the funding gap for the reintegration programme for ex-combatants. He stated that the proposed governance and economic management assistance programme would be an important tool for ensuring the Government's control over its revenues and expenditures, assisting in national recovery efforts, helping Liberia meet the requirements for the lifting of sanctions imposed by the Security Council and retaining the confidence of donors. He urged the Government to reach an early agreement on the programme for consideration by the Council. Although the transitional process prescribed by the Comprehensive Peace Agreement would conclude upon the inauguration of the newly elected Government in January 2006, the Secretary-General said that the peace process would still face many challenges.

In the light of the new phase of UNMIL operations, the Secretary-General recommended that its mandate be extended for a period of 12 months, until 19 September 2006.

The Secretary-General also proposed a temporary increase in UNMIL troop strength of some 250 troops, from 15 November 2005 to 31 March 2006, to provide security both at the Special Court for Sierra Leone after the withdrawal of UNAMSIL, and throughout Liberia in the sensitive period following the October elections and the inauguration of the newly-elected Government of Liberia, scheduled for January 2006.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 19 September [meeting 5263], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1626 (2005). The draft [S/2005/591] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Welcoming the further extension of State authority, including progress in the establishment of a new Liberian police service and the appointment of new judges and magistrates,

Expressing its appreciation for the indispensable and continuing contributions to the Liberian peace process by the Economic Community of West African States and the African Union, and for financial and other assistance provided by the international community,

Welcoming the signing by the National Transitional Government of Liberia and the International Contact Group on Liberia of the Governance and Economic Management Assistance Program, which is designed to ensure prompt implementation of the Comprehensive Peace Agreement signed at Accra on 18 August 2003 and to expedite the lifting of measures imposed by resolution 1521(2003) of 22 December 2003,

Reiterating its appreciation for the essential work of the Special Court for Sierra Leone and its vital contributions to the establishment of the rule of law in Sierra Leone and the subregion, and encouraging all States to cooperate fully with the Court as it implements its completion strategy,

Noting that the United Nations Mission in Sierra Leone is scheduled to end its operations on 31 December 2005,

Recalling the briefing by the President of the Special Court for Sierra Leone to the Security Council on 24 May 2005, in which he stressed the need for a continuing international security presence to provide protection for the Court after the departure of the Mission, and welcoming the recommendations of the Secretary-General in this regard,

Determining that the situation in Liberia continues to constitute a threat to international peace and security in the region,

6. Authorizes a temporary increase in the personnel ceiling of the Mission, to a total of 15,250 United Nations military personnel, for the period from 15 November 2005 to 31 March 2006 in order to ensure that the support provided to the Court does not reduce the capabilities of the Mission in Liberia during its political transition period;

7. Authorizes the Mission, subject to the consent of the troop-contributing countries concerned and of the Government of Sierra Leone, to deploy an adequate number of military personnel to Sierra Leone, if and when needed, to evacuate military personnel of the Mission deployed to Sierra Leone pursuant to paragraph 5 of the present resolution and officials of the Court in the event of a serious security crisis affecting those personnel and the Court;

12. Welcomes the efforts undertaken by the Mission to implement the Secretary-General's zero-tolerance policy on sexual exploitation and abuse and to ensure full compliance of its personnel with the United Nations code of conduct, and requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action in this regard and to keep the Security Council informed, and urges troop-contributing countries to take appropriate preventive action, including conducting predeployment awareness training, and to take disciplinary action and other action to ensure that allegations of sexual exploitation or abuse against their personnel are properly investigated and, if substantiated, punished;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to provide recommendations on a drawdown plan for the Mission, including specific benchmarks and a tentative schedule, in his March 2006 report;

14. Also requests the Secretary-General to continue to keep the Council regularly informed on the progress of the Mission in the implementation of its mandate;

15. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Elections

Pre-election activities. The Secretary-General reported in March [S/2005/177] that with the signing into law of the Electoral Reform Bill in December 2004, the National Elections Commission developed the legal and policy framework for the elections by adopting guidelines on the registration of political parties, independent candidates, and coalitions and alliances. With UNMIL assistance, it formulated regulations on voter registration, a code of conduct for Commission staff and accreditation guidelines for national and international observers. It introduced a process whereby political parties would draft their own code of conduct. The Commission began the civic education campaign in January and, on 7 February, announced the electoral timetable: voter registration would take place from 25 April to 21 May and the voter registers would be exhibited from 27 June to 1 July; elections would be held on 11 October and the results would be announced by 26 October.

Election messages targeting various segments of the population, including women, youth and ex-combatants, were prepared and media development training provided to radio station managers and journalists. UNMIL was to deploy its electoral staff to 11 counties by mid-March and set up electoral offices in 17 major locations by 21 March. Its troops provided security for the establishment of county electoral offices and identification of voter registration locations, as well as escort for electoral officials and logistics support for the distribution of election materials throughout the country. The Secretary-General strongly recommended the deployment of a fifth formed police unit for six months beginning in August, to reinforce UNMIL capacity to maintain a secure environment during the electoral period. The UNMIL Gender Unit, in cooperation with relevant partners and stakeholders, was working to ensure fair and genuine representation of women in the electoral process.

The Secretary-General reported in June [S/2005/391] that the voter registration process, held from 25 April to 21 May, was a notable success. Some 1.3 million voter registration forms were received from the 1,511 registration centres, which were supported by 1,039 static and mobile teams deployed nationwide to conduct the registration. Returning refugees were allowed an additional two-week period to register.

The Secretary-General reported in September [S/2005/560] that 22 political parties had been registered; eight others were registered under the umbrella of two alliances and one coalition, namely, the Alliance for Peace and Democracy, the United Democratic Alliance and the Coalition for the Transformation of Liberia. Several key milestones were reached, including the issuance of the Writ of Election on 13 July, the publication of the electoral districts on 15 July, the nomination of candidates from 21 July to 6 August, and the beginning of the campaign period on 15 August. The voters' register was exhibited from 30 June to 2 July, followed by the determination of rejections and challenges and consequent adjustments to the register. As of 1 September, the number of registered voters stood at 1,353,556.

The official list of candidates was published on 15 August. The National Elections Commission approved 22 presidential candidates, 22 vice-presidential candidates, 205 candidates for the Senate and 513 to the House of Representatives. Earlier, on 25 July, the Commission approved regulations on complaints and appeals, establishing its original jurisdiction over specified electoral offences; campaign finance guidelines and forms; directives to magistrates on their legal obligations in the electoral process; polling and counting procedures and related guidelines and regulations.

UNMIL and the UN country team assisted the Commission in overcoming the significant operational challenges of holding three elections on the same day during the rainy season in conditions of poor road networks. Direct technical assistance to the Commission was provided by the European Commission and the International Foundation for Election Systems.

Elections. The voting on 11 October was orderly and peaceful with no serious security incidents reported. Voter turnout was 74.9 per cent. Nine political parties and three independent candidates won seats in the 30-seat Senate. Five of the newly elected Senators were women (16.7 per cent). Eleven political parties and seven independent candidates obtained seats in the 64-seat House of Representatives. As none of the presidential candidates received more than 50 per cent of the votes in the first-round election, the National Elections Commission scheduled a run-off election on 8 November between the two candidates with the most votes: George Weah of the Congress for Democratic Change (CDC) (28.3 per cent) and Ellen Johnson-Sirleaf of the Unity Party (19.8 per cent). Although negative campaigning contributed to a somewhat tense political atmosphere, the run-off election took place in a peaceful atmosphere. On 9 November, as the National Elections Commission released the results, Mr. Weah's party, CDC, claimed having evidence of "massive and systematic" fraud during the run-off, submitted its complaints to the Commission and filed a petition with the Supreme Court to suspend ballot counting. CDC supporters held demonstrations in Monrovia, requesting a rerun of the elections. To calm the situation, the Secretary-General telephoned the two candidates to urge their supporters to exercise patience and allow the vote counting to be completed. On 16 November, the Elections Commission began open hearings on 16 complaints alleging irregularities; UNMIL initiated a review aimed at tracking the movement of all ballot papers.

On 23 November, the final official results of the run-off, as certified by the Board of Commissioners of the National Elections Commission, were announced: Mrs. Johnson-Sirleaf obtained 59.4 per cent of the vote and Mr. Weah, 40.6 per cent out of 805,572 valid votes cast. Voter turnout was 61 per cent. In keeping with the Electoral Reform Law, the parties were allowed one week to protest the declaration of the results, and the Elections Commission one month to respond. The complainants could also appeal the ruling of the Commission with the Supreme Court.

The first round of the elections was monitored by 436 international electoral observers, and the second by 302, who characterized them as peaceful, orderly, free, fair and transparent.

The Secretary-General later reported [S/2006/159] that, on 16 December, the National Elections Commission concluded its hearings on the CDC's complaints of irregularities and ruled that, while minor technical errors might have occurred in the electoral process, there had been no intent to commit fraud. On 21 December, following appeals from several regional leaders, Mr. Weah announced that he would not challenge the Commission's ruling in the Supreme Court. That paved the way for arrangements for the installation of the President-elect, Mrs. Johnson-Sirleaf.

EU statement. The EU, in an 11 November statement [S/2005/802], called upon the candidates, their parties and supporters to continue to demonstrate the responsible attitude they had shown during the campaigning and voting, and to abide by established procedures. It also reiterated the importance for the new Government, Senate and House of Representatives to cooperate fully with the international community in ensuring that the former President of Liberia was brought before the Special Court for Sierra Leone.

UNMIL mandate to apprehend former President of Liberia

The Secretary-General noted in his September report (above) that some Governments and human rights organizations continued to call on Nigeria to hand over to the Special Court for Sierra Leone the former President of Liberia, Charles Taylor, under indictment by the Court and in asylum in Nigeria (see p. 287). The Minister of Justice of Liberia, in a 5 July statement, alleged that Mr. Taylor had been meddling in Liberian politics and thus called for a review of the agreement for his asylum, a statement from which the National Transitional Government dissociated itself. The July special summit of the Mano River Union (see p. 228) issued a communiqué indicating that a review or a referral of the matter by Nigeria to ECOWAS might be necessary. For its part, Nigeria reaffirmed its commitment to honour the asylum agreement and hand over Mr. Taylor only at the request of the incoming Government of Liberia.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 11 November [meeting 5304], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1638 (2005). The draft [S/2005/710] was submitted by Denmark, the United Kingdom and the United States.

The Security Council,

Recalling its previous resolutions and the statements by its President concerning Liberia, Sierra Leone and West Africa,

Affirming its commitment to the sovereignty, political independence and territorial integrity of Liberia,

Expressing its appreciation to Nigeria and its President, Mr. Olusegun Obasanjo, for their contributions to restoring stability in Liberia and the West African subregion, and acknowledging that Nigeria acted with broad international support when it decided to provide for the temporary stay in Nigeria of former President Charles Taylor,

Stressing that former President Taylor remains under indictment by the Special Court for Sierra Leone, and determining that his return to Liberia would constitute an impediment to stability and a threat to the peace of Liberia and to international peace and security in the region,

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Decides that the mandate of the United Nations Mission in Liberia shall include the following additional element: to apprehend and detain former President Charles Taylor in the event of a return to Liberia and to transfer him or facilitate his transfer to Sierra Leone for prosecution before the Special Court for Sierra Leone, and to keep the Government of Liberia, the Government of Sierra Leone and the Security Council fully informed;

2. Decides also to remain actively seized of the matter.

Further peace process developments

Report of Secretary-General (December). The Secretary-General, in his December progress report on UNMIL [S/2005/764], describing developments related to the October presidential and legislative elections (see p. 266) and further progress made in the implementation of the 2003 Comprehensive Peace Agreement and the factors that hampered completion of a number of the priorities set out in the Agreement.

The report pointed out that, in the prevailing calm but fragile security environment, potentially serious security challenges could come from the armed forces personnel not satisfied with their demobilization and retirement benefits; restive ex-combatants awaiting reintegration opportunities; CDC supporters disgruntled over the run-off elections; members of the former Anti-Terrorist Unit wanting to participate in the demobilization programme; and security problems in western Côte d'Ivoire.

Further progress was made in the training and restructuring of the Liberian National Police. The previously announced target of 1,800 trained police was achieved by the time of the October elections. More than 300 Special Security Service personnel and 152 Liberian Seaport Police had graduated from the UN training programme. The Government approved a new structure for the Special Security Service, reducing its current strength of 1,287 to 395, including 35 civilian staff. Under the programme to restructure the Armed Forces of Liberia, led by the United States, the first phase of the demobilization of 9,400 irregular personnel recruited into the armed forces after the outbreak of the civil war in 1989 was successfully completed on 10 September. The second phase, under which 4,273 regular personnel recruited before the conflict were to be retired, began on 17 October; only 2,227 had been retired by 1 December, as funding for that phase was $3 million short. In that regard, recruitment and training for the new armed forces could not begin before completion of the second phase. Due to acute budgetary constraints, the projection of overall troop strength for the new Armed Forces of Liberia was reduced from 4,000 to 2,000—a level to be kept under review to take account, not only of resource availability, but also of long-term national requirements and potential external threats. UNMIL continued to work with the Government on the restructuring of other law enforcement agencies.

To bring the Truth and Reconciliation Commission into operation, the Government on 18 October appointed nine commissioners from a list of 150 publicly nominated candidates. In addition, OHCHR submitted the name of one of three international technical advisers to support the Commission's operations; ECOWAS would designate the other two. The independent expert on the promotion and protection of human rights in Liberia, during his second visit to the country (25 September–7 October), expressed concern about the weak state of the rule of law and welcomed the inception of the Commission. UNMIL also launched its first bimonthly public report on the human rights situation in Liberia

The Government achieved mixed progress in gaining full control over the exploitation of the country's natural resources. To fulfil the conditions for admission to the Kimberley Process Certification Scheme for the export of rough diamonds, a chief implementing officer was appointed and 120 mineral agents and inspectors were deployed throughout the country. However, in Gbarpolu and Nimba counties, where diamond deposits had been recently discovered, local officials were reportedly engaged in the illegal sale of mining permits. In the forestry sector, the Government referred fraudulently granted concessions to the Ministry of Justice for action, and lifted the ban on pit-sawing imposed in 2004 by the Forestry Development Authority to reduce the level of deforestation. The World Bank disbursed $1 million through the Global Environment Facility for a project to support the Authority's activities to protect Sapo National Park, following the evacuation of over 1,000 people illegally residing, hunting and mining there.

The Secretary-General observed that the elections constituted the penultimate step towards completing the two-year transition period stipulated in the Comprehensive Peace Agreement, which would end in January 2006 with the installation of the new Government, and congratulated Mrs. Johnson-Sirleaf on her victory in the presidential election. He said the achievements made during the transition period—the disarmament of combatants, the disbandment of the former armed factions, the establishment of a stable security environment throughout the country, the partial restoration of State authority in the counties, the resettlement of a substantial number of internally displaced persons and returning refugees, the establishment of the Truth and Reconciliation Commission, the launching of the security sector reform programme and the agreement to establish the Governance and Economic Management Assistance Programme—all had laid a good foundation upon which the new Government should build.

The challenges ahead were formidable for a country still in the early stages of reconstruction and rehabilitation, as major residual tasks from the transition period remained to be completed, including the reintegration of war-affected persons and ex-combatants; consolidation of State authority throughout the country; promotion of human rights; rehabilitation of the judicial system; advancement of security sector reform and implementation of the economic governance programme. Other pressing priorities not part of the transition programme that required attention were constitutional reform, economic recovery, poverty reduction and the provision of such basic services as water and electricity.

From the outset, the new Government would need to focus on economic governance issues, particularly in the management of funds and natural resources. With the mandate of the Governance Reform Commission expiring in January 2006, Liberia's international partners stood ready to discuss a successor arrangement to move the governance reform process forward. The Contracts and Monopolies Commission was to be replaced by the Public Procurement and Concessions Commission as from 1 January 2006.

The Secretary-General hoped the new Government would promptly open an effective and sustained dialogue with the people of Liberia, focusing on programmes to improve their living conditions in the shortest possible time and on policy and institutional reforms pivotal to political stability and economic progress. Under the leadership of his Special Representative, UNMIL and the UN country team were developing a peacebuilding framework to guide UN support for the new Government.

Appointment. On 28 December [SG/A/966], the Secretary-General appointed Jordan Ryan (United States) as his Deputy Special Representative for Recovery and Good Governance for Liberia, with effect from 1 January 2006. He would also serve as the United Nations Resident Coordinator and Humanitarian Coordinator in the country.

Sanctions

The Security Council received several reports on the implementation of sanctions imposed on Liberia pursuant to Council resolutions 1521 (2003) [YUN 2003, p. 208] and 1579(2004) [YUN 2004, p. 210]. Those sanctions banned arms and related materiel, military training, the export of Liberian timber products and rough diamonds, and international travel by individuals so designated, who constituted a threat to the peace process in Liberia and the subregion. Financial sanctions had also been imposed on former President Charles Taylor and his immediate family by resolution 1532(2004) [ibid., p. 204].

Appointment of Panel. On 17 January [S/2005/35], the Secretary-General informed the Council of his appointment of five members of the Panel of Experts established pursuant to resolution 1579(2004), which was mandated to conduct an assessment mission to Liberia and neighbouring States in order to report on the implementation of resolution 1521(2003) and any violations of the sanctions imposed by that resolution and those imposed by resolution 1532(2004); progress made towards meeting the conditions for lifting the sanctions; and the humanitarian and socio-economic impact of the measures imposed by resolution 1521(2003).

An 11 February press statement [SC/8308] chronicled the fifth meeting (New York, 4 February) of the Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 1521(2003), at which the Panel of Experts presented their programme of work, which was scheduled to run through 21 June 2005. In Liberia, the Panel would hold meetings with individuals inside and outside the Government and visit a number of relevant sites.

Implementation of sanctions regime

Report of Expert Panel (March). The Panel of Experts established pursuant to Security Council resolutions 1521(2003) and 1579(2004) concerning Liberia transmitted a March interim report [S/2005/176] to the Council, which contained the assessment on diamonds. Having visited the country in February and worked closely with the Kimberley Process expert mission, as well as the Liberian Ministry of Lands, Mines and Energy, the Panel identified developments that were undermining Liberia's endeavours to meet the requirements of the Security Council for lifting the embargo on exporting rough diamonds.

The training of outstation personnel for the Bureau of Mines, including regional coordinators, mining agents and mineral inspectors, continued but a lack of funding prevented them from being placed on the payroll and deployed to the field. The issuance of all diamond-mining licences and permits was suspended, effective from 14 January, which essentially outlawed all diamond-mining activity, and a moratorium placed on alluvial diamond prospecting. While the Panel commended the Ministry of Lands, Mines and Energy initiative to combat the illegal export of diamonds, the legality of the suspension under the Liberian Constitution had been questioned. Furthermore, the Ministry lacked the institutional capacity and authority to enforce the policy in remote mining areas. Slow funding had curtailed progress on a capacity-building project designed to improve implementation of the Kimberley Process Certification Scheme and on the completion of the facilities to house the assaying and computer equipment for the Scheme. Aerial surveys of established mining areas in Nimba County and the Upper Lofa River region were conducted by the Panel with UNMIL assistance. Despite the mining moratorium in force, the Panel estimated illegal domestic diamond production at $350,000 per month.

The Kimberley Process expert mission visited Liberia from 14 to 18 February and assessed steps taken by the Government to apply for participation in the Kimberley Process Certification Scheme. The expert mission found that Liberia had not met the requirements for participating in the scheme, as the country lacked functional internal controls and monitoring systems. Furthermore, the absence of UNMIL peacekeepers, State security and government administration in the diamond-producing regions in the west, was contributing to illegal mining activities in the country. The Panel of Experts shared the view of the expert mission and concluded that Liberia was not yet in a position to make a successful application for participation in the Kimberley Process.

Report of Expert Panel (June). The Panel of Experts submitted a June report [S/2005/360], pursuant to paragraph 8 (f) of Security Council resolution 1579(2004), which contained an assessment on all sanctions. The Panel noted that UN forces, including civilian police, had discovered a substantial number of weapons and ammunition, including a weapons cache discovered in February in Vahun, Lofa County. A local civilian source and an UNMIL security officer were of the opinion that more caches existed. Unfortunately, in some cases, all or part of the weapons caches reported to UNMIL for investigation were moved before UNMIL forces arrived, due to information leaks. Reports of the recruitment of former combatants for Côte d'Ivoire, Guinea and Sierra Leone remained a concern, which threatened stability in the subregion. The Special Court for Sierra Leone had reported its suspicions to the Panel that Charles Taylor had gone to Burkina Faso from Nigeria in violation of the travel ban and had been in permanent phone contact with his accomplices in Liberia. The Panel could not verify those reports.

The Panel recommended that UNMIL units in charge of criminal investigations be given a special mandate to undertake independent inquiries in order to recover weapons and monitor the possible recruitment of former combatants and to investigate violations of any of the sanctions, including diamonds, timber, the travel ban and seizures of assets. A witness protection programme should be established and legal protection from prosecution should be given to undercover agents and informants.

Despite repeated denials to the contrary by the Ministry of Lands, Mines and Energy, the Panel was able to confirm that a mining cooperatives support/mineral purchase agreement between Liberia and the West Africa Mining Corporation Limited (WAMCO) had been signed on 19 January. The contract was not subject to an open, competitive tender process, nor was it referred to the Monopolies and Contracts Commission. The sweeping rights awarded WAMCO under the contract for the exclusive purchase of virtually all minerals in Liberia to the west of the St. Paul River would adversely impact market competition, deny diggers a fair price for their goods, and ultimately encourage diamond smuggling to more favourable markets in neighbouring countries. The secrecy surrounding the WAMCO agreement had stalled the Government's progress in meeting the Security Council requirements for lifting the embargo on rough diamond exports. In particular, funding pledged by the United States and international donors for the implementation of internal control structures, as well as the provision of equipment and technical assistance had been put on hold. Furthermore, the mining moratorium had failed to curb illegal activity, which was steadily increasing and had risen to some $500,000 per month. The Panel had also received reports that Liberian diamonds were being trafficked through Guinea and Sierra Leone, and that Banjul and Bamako had become key trans-shipment points for uncertified diamonds.

As funding to implement mechanisms for participation in the Kimberley Process Certification Scheme would remain suspended until outstanding questions regarding the WAMCO deal had been answered, the Panel recommended that international donors interested in diamond sector reform work quickly with the Government and WAMCO to resolve the issue. It concluded that levels of illegal mining and export of Liberian diamonds would continue to grow steadily. As the Government lacked the capacity to deal with the problem and unchecked mining activity would pose an increasing threat to security and stability in the mining areas, the Panel recommended that UNMIL be given a robust mandate to assist the Government with its control of illegal mining in order to maintain security. It also advised that an external independent supervisory management structure for Liberia's mineral resources would be the best solution to problems concerning managerial professionalism and administrative transparency.

While the Panel indicated that there had been no evidence of timber exports or any detection of industrial logging, pit-sawing—the processing of logs using chainsaws—had been increasing, in spite of the ban on that activity since 15 September 2000. The Panel concluded that, while the export sanctions were effective, the domestic industry continued to operate illegally and few of the necessary reforms had been implemented. In addition to its previous recommendations, the Panel proposed that a management organization to control the forestry sector should be established.

The Panel determined that the Government's financial administration was weak, with nonexistent internal control systems and ineffective external oversight. A lack of transparency and accountability in the system allowed import revenue to leak from Government coffers and the method used in siphoning off Government revenues appeared to be the same as during the regime of Charles Taylor, who continued to be provided, according to unconfirmed reports, with monetary support from those funds.

The Panel concluded that the assets freeze had been ineffective. The Government had not taken action to implement it and the time lag between the travel ban resolution and the issuance of the assets freeze list had allowed time for concerned individuals to transfer funds

Report of Secretary-General (June). Also in June [S/2005/376], pursuant to Security Council resolution 1579(2004), the Secretary-General submitted a report on progress made by Liberia in meeting the conditions of resolution 1521 (2003) relating to the arms embargo, travel ban, diamond sanctions and timber sanctions.

The Secretary-General observed that the Government continued to take steps towards meeting the conditions contained in resolution 1521 (2003). With regard to the arms embargo, the ending of the disarmament and demobilization process and the dissolution of the armed factions had signalled the completion of the implementation of the ceasefire agreement. However, a key condition for lifting the arms embargo and travel ban was full implementation of the Comprehensive Peace Agreement, including the holding of national elections (see p. 266), installation of a new Liberian Government, scheduled to take place in 2006, and the laying of foundations for sustainable development and good governance. Furthermore, delays in the restructuring of the armed forces and the provision of reintegration opportunities for former combatants remained a threat to stability and the success of the transitional process.

Despite some progress in meeting the conditions for lifting the diamond sanctions, such as the training and deployment of mineral inspectors and the construction of a centre for appraising and certifying rough diamonds, the Government lacked the capacity to ensure effective control over diamond-producing areas and Liberia's borders. As UNMIL lacked both the mandate and the troop levels to perform such a role, the Secretary-General recommended that the Security Council consider broadening the mandate and increasing UNMIL's resources to enable the Mission to assist the Government in providing security in the diamond and timber-producing areas. With respect to the timber industry, governmental reforms to ensure that revenues were used for legitimate purposes had not been implemented. The Secretary-General recommended that the Government invite an internationally recognized forestry management team to temporarily oversee operations in the forestry sector.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 21 June [meeting 5208], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1607(2005). The draft [S/2005/401] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Recalling its previous resolutions and statements by its President on the situation in Liberia and West Africa,

Taking note of the reports of the Panel of Experts on Liberia of 17 March and 13 June 2005, and the report of the Secretary-General of 7 June 2005, submitted pursuant to resolution 1579(2004) of 17 June 2004,

Recognizing the linkage between the illegal exploitation of natural resources such as diamonds and timber, the illicit trade in such resources, and the proliferation and trafficking of arms and the recruitment and use of mercenaries as one of the sources of fuelling and exacerbating conflicts in West Africa, particularly in Liberia,

Recalling that the measures imposed under resolution 1521(2003) of 22 December 2003 were designed to prevent such illegal exploitation from fuelling a resumption of the conflict in Liberia, as well as to support the implementation of the Comprehensive Peace Agreement signed at Accra on 18 August 2003 and the extension of the authority, throughout Liberia, of the National Transitional Government of Liberia,

Expressing its concern that, while the deployment of the United Nations Mission in Liberia has contributed to the improvement of security throughout Liberia, the National Transitional Government of Liberia has not yet established its authority throughout Liberia,

Emphasizing the need for the international community to help the National Transitional Government of Liberia to increase its capacity to establish its authority throughout Liberia, particularly to establish its control over the diamond-producing and timber-producing areas and Liberia's borders,

Expressing deep concern at information that former President of Liberia Charles Taylor and others still closely associated with him continue to engage in activities that undermine peace and stability in Liberia and the region,

Having reviewed the measures imposed by paragraphs 2, 4, 6 and 10 of resolution 1521(2003) and paragraph 1 of resolution 1532(2004) of 12 March 2004 and the progress made towards meeting the conditions set forth in paragraphs 5, 7 and 11 of resolution 1521 (2003),

Welcoming the assessment of the Panel of Experts that there is no evidence of illegal timber being exported from Liberia, but noting with concern that few of the reforms in the National Transitional Government of Liberia road map necessary to meet the conditions set forth in paragraph 11 of resolution 1521(2003) for lifting the measures on timber imposed by paragraph 10 of resolution 1521(2003) have been implemented,

Acknowledging the recent completion of the Forest Concession Review, and welcoming the report of the Forest Concession Review Committee,

Welcoming the progress made by the National Transitional Government of Liberia in the training of diamond mining officials, but noting with serious concern the increase in unlicensed mining and illegal exports of diamonds and the agreement to, and lack of transparency in, granting exclusive mining rights to a single company by the National Transitional Government,

Noting with concern the limited progress made by the National Transitional Government of Liberia towards establishing transparent financial management systems that will help ensure that government revenues are not used to fuel conflict or otherwise used in violation of the resolutions of the Council but are used for legitimate purposes for the benefit of the Liberian people, including development,

Taking note of the ongoing discussions regarding a Liberia Economic Governance Action Plan, designed to ensure prompt implementation of the Comprehensive Peace Agreement and to expedite the lifting of measures imposed by resolution 1521(2003), and expressing its intention to consider, as appropriate, the Action Plan,

Emphasizing that, despite completion of demobilization and disarmament, significant challenges remain in completing the reintegration and repatriation of ex-combatants and the restructuring of the security sector, as well as establishing and maintaining stability in Liberia and the subregion,

Determining that the situation in Liberia continues to constitute a threat to international peace and security in the region,

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Decides, on the basis of its assessments above of progress made by the National Transitional Government of Liberia towards meeting the conditions for lifting the measures imposed by resolution 1521(2003), to renew the measures on diamonds imposed by paragraph 6 of resolution 1521(2003) for a further period of six months from the date of adoption of the present resolution;

2. Urges the National Transitional Government of Liberia to intensify its efforts, with the support of the United Nations Mission in Liberia, to establish its authority over the diamond-producing areas and to work towards establishing an official certificate-of-origin regime for trade in rough diamonds that is transparent and internationally verifiable, with a view to joining the Kimberley Process;

3. Reiterates the Council's readiness to terminate all measures imposed by resolution 1521(2003) once the conditions set forth in paragraphs 5, 7 and 11 of that resolution have been met;

4. Calls upon the National Transitional Government of Liberia urgently to intensify its efforts to reform the Forestry Development Authority, to implement the Liberia Forest Initiative and to implement the recommendations of the Forest Concession Review Committee for reform, which will ensure transparency, accountability and sustainable forest management and contribute towards the lifting of the measures on timber set forth in paragraph 10 of resolution 1521(2003);

5. Invites the National Transitional Government of Liberia to consider, with the assistance of international partners and for a specific time period, the possibility of commissioning independent external advice on the management of Liberia's diamond and timber resources, in order to increase investor confidence and attract additional donor support;

6. Notes that the measures imposed by paragraph 1 of resolution 1532(2004) remain in force to prevent former President of Liberia Charles Taylor, his immediate family members, senior officials of the former Taylor regime, or other close allies or associates from using misappropriated funds and property to interfere in the restoration of peace and stability in Liberia and the subregion, and reconfirms its intention to review these measures at least once a year;

7. Reiterates its intention to consider whether and how to make available to the Government of Liberia the funds, other financial assets and economic resources frozen pursuant to paragraph 1 of resolution 1532(2004), once that Government has established transparent accounting and auditing mechanisms to ensure the responsible use of government revenue to benefit directly the people of Liberia;

8. Emphasizes its concern that the National Transitional Government of Liberia has taken no action to implement its obligations under paragraph 1 of resolution 1532(2004), and calls upon the Government to take such action immediately, particularly by adopting the necessary domestic legislation, with technical support provided by Member States;

9. Notes that the measures on arms, travel and timber imposed by paragraphs 2, 4 and 10 respectively of resolution 1521(2003) and renewed by paragraph 1 of resolution 1579(2004) remain in force until 21 December 2005;

10. Urges the Mission to intensify its efforts, as mandated in resolution 1509(2003) of 19 September 2003, to assist the National Transitional Government of Liberia in re-establishing its authority throughout Liberia, including diamond-producing and timber-producing areas, and restoring proper administration of natural resources;

11. Reiterates the importance of the Mission to continue to provide assistance to the National Transitional Government of Liberia, the Security Council Committee established pursuant to paragraph 21 of resolution 1521(2003) (hereinafter "the Committee") and the Panel of Experts, within its capabilities and areas of deployment and without prejudice to its mandate, in the following areas:

(a) Monitoring the implementation of the measures in paragraphs 2, 4, 6 and 10 of resolution 1521(2003) in accordance with paragraph 23 of that resolution;

(b) Supporting efforts by the National Transitional Government to prevent violations of those measures, and reporting any such violations;

(c) Collecting, as appropriate, arms and any related materiel brought into Liberia in violation of the measures taken by States to implement paragraph 2 of resolution 1521(2003), and disposing of such arms and related materiel as appropriate;

(d) Assisting the National Transitional Government in monitoring the recruitment and movement of ex-combatants, and reporting any relevant information to the Panel of Experts and the Committee, in order to reduce the opportunity for ex-combatants to undermine the peace process or provoke renewed instability in Liberia and the subregion;

(e) Developing a strategy, in conjunction with the Economic Community of West African States and other international partners, to consolidate a national legal framework as mandated in resolution 1509(2003), including the implementation by the National Transitional Government of the measures in paragraph 1 of resolution 1532(2004);

12. Calls upon the United Nations Mission in Liberia, the United Nations Mission in Sierra Leone and the United Nations Mission in Côte d'Ivoire to intensify their cooperation, within their capabilities and areas of deployment and without prejudice to their mandates, to monitor arms trafficking and recruitment of mercenaries within the subregion;

13. Reiterates its call upon the international donor community to continue to provide assistance to the peace process, including for reintegration of ex-combatants and reconstruction, to contribute generously to consolidated humanitarian appeals, to disburse as soon as possible the pledges made at the International Reconstruction Conference on Liberia, held in New York on 5 and 6 February 2004, and to respond to the financial, administrative and technical needs of the National Transitional Government of Liberia, in particular to assist the Government to meet the conditions referred to in paragraph 3 above, so that the measures can be lifted as soon as possible;

14. Decides to re-establish the Panel of Experts appointed pursuant to resolution 1579(2004) for a further period until 21 December 2005 to undertake the following tasks:

(a) To conduct a follow-up assessment mission to Liberia and neighbouring States in order to investigate and compile a report on the implementation, and any violations, of the measures imposed by resolution 1521(2003), including any information relevant to the designation by the Committee of the individuals described in paragraph 4 (a) of resolution 1521(2003) and paragraph 1 of resolution 1532(2004), and including the various sources of financing, such as from natural resources, for the illicit trade of arms;

(b) To assess the impact and effectiveness of the measures imposed by paragraph 1 of resolution 1532 (2004);

(c) To assess the progress made towards meeting the conditions for lifting the measures imposed by resolution 1521(2003);

(d) To assess the humanitarian and socio-economic impact of the measures imposed by paragraphs 2, 4, 6 and 10 of resolution 1521(2003);

(e) To report to the Council by 7 December 2005, through the Committee, on all the issues listed in the present paragraph, and to provide informal updates to the Committee, as appropriate, before that date, especially on progress made towards meeting the conditions for lifting the measures imposed by paragraphs 6 and 10 of resolution 1521(2003);

(f) To cooperate with other relevant groups of experts, in particular the group of experts on Côte d'Ivoire established pursuant to resolution 1584(2005) of 1 February 2005;

15. Requests the Secretary-General, acting in consultation with the Committee, to appoint as soon as possible no more than five experts, with the appropriate range of expertise, in particular on arms, timber, diamonds, finance, humanitarian and socio-economic and any other relevant issues, drawing as much as possible on the expertise of the members of the Panel of Experts established pursuant to resolution 1579(2004), and further requests the Secretary-General to make the necessary financial and security arrangements to support the work of the Panel;

16. Calls upon all States and the National Transitional Government of Liberia to cooperate fully with the Panel of Experts;

17. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

The Secretary-General, on 22 July [S/2005/480], informed the Security Council of the names of the five experts he had appointed to the Panel of Experts pursuant established by resolution 1607(2005) (see above).

Report of Expert Panel (December). The Panel of Experts transmitted a report [S/2005/745] to the Security Council on 7 December, pursuant to resolution 1607(2005), containing an assessment of all sanctions, including diamonds, timber, arms and travel, as well as updates on financial matters, the assets freeze and the humanitarian and socio-economic impact of the sanctions on Liberia. On 22 June, following a directive by a 90 per cent shareholder, WAMCO officially terminated its mining contract with the Ministry of Lands, Mines and Energy. The Ministry, in collaboration with an international mineral exploration company, established laboratories for geological testing and mapping, completed the training and deployment of outstation personnel and issued invitations to international companies to bid for work necessary to achieve compliance with the Kimberley Process Certification Scheme. As a result of the WAMCO issue (see p. 270) the $1.4 million pledged for disbursement by the United States for training, acquisition of Kimberley Process certificates and database production would not be available until the new Government took office in January 2006. The Panel concluded that, as Liberia was not in a position to make a successful application to participate in the Kimberley Process, Liberian production threatened the credibility of the certification schemes in neighbouring States. Encouraging donors to disburse funding for structural reform, the Panel recommended that UNMIL mandate be extended to assist Liberia in restoring the rule of law in mining areas and that the international community provide technical and material assistance to non-diamond-producing States to enable them to participate in the Kimberley Process.

Sanctions on timber had been effective and there were no reports of major exports. However, given the perceived conspiracy between the Government and the timber industry over the past 25 years, the Forest Concession Review Committee recommended cancellation of each concession and that the sector be completely reformed.

Concerns regarding the arms embargo focused on the recruitment of ex-combatants from neighbouring States and the potential cross-border movement of recruits, in particular between Côte d'Ivoire and Liberia. The Panel continued to receive reports of organized recruitment. Although there had been no major discoveries in Liberia since the previous report of the Panel, small but regular flows of weapons and ammunition had been remitted to UNMIL outside the disarmament programme. In August, a waiver had been granted to allow the import of weapons for the training and equipping of the New Armed Forces of Liberia (NAFL). The travel ban documented a number of violations, as well as the fraudulent use of Liberian passports. The Panel recommended a review of the passport system.

One and a half years after its imposition, the assets freeze had yet to be implemented. The Panel recommended that the international community should pressure the incoming Government to implement the freeze. A midterm review of the assets of designated persons should be conducted and the necessary legal action to confiscate their assets undertaken.

On economic matters, the Panel recommended that international donors take note of the desperate state of the country's economy, and allocate resources to speed up rehabilitation of the infrastructure, as well as rehabilitation programmes. It also recommended that the newly elected Government cooperate proactively with the international community in implementing the Governance and Economic Management Programme.

The Panel indicated that the Government's financial administration continued to be weak. The Panel concluded that, should the sanctions on diamonds and timber be lifted, it was unlikely that Government revenues would enter the budget process for the benefit of the Liberian people. It recommended comprehensive audits of various executive offices; completion of the financial accounts of all major revenue-generating State-owned enterprises; and filling of positions in the Governance and Economic Management Programme on a priority basis, with time-bound objectives prescribed for each position.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 20 December [meeting 5336], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1647 (2005). The draft [S/2005/792] was submitted by Denmark, France, Japan, Romania, the United Kingdom and the United States.

The Security Council,

Recalling its previous resolutions and the statements by its President on the situation in Liberia and West Africa,

Welcoming the peaceful and orderly conduct of the recent elections in Liberia, an important step in Liberia's progress towards lasting peace and stability,

Welcoming also the commitment of the President-elect of the Republic of Liberia, Mrs. Ellen Johnson-Sirleaf, to rebuilding Liberia for the benefit of all Liberians, with the support of the international community,

Stressing the continuing importance of the United Nations Mission in Liberia in improving security throughout Liberia and helping the new Government to establish its authority throughout the country, particularly in the diamond- and timber-producing areas and border areas,

Taking note of the report of the Panel of Experts on Liberia of 25 November 2005,

Having reviewed the measures imposed by paragraphs 2, 4, 6 and 10 of resolution 1521(2003) of 22 December 2003 and paragraph 1 of resolution 1532(2004) of 12 March 2004 and the progress towards meeting the conditions set out in paragraphs 5, 7 and 11 of resolution 1521(2003), and concluding that insufficient progress has been made towards that end,

Underlining its determination to support the new Government of Liberia in its efforts to meet those conditions, and encouraging donors to do likewise,

Determining that the situation in Liberia continues to constitute a threat to international peace and security in the region,

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Decides, on the basis of its assessment of progress made to date towards meeting the conditions for lifting the measures imposed by resolution 1521(2003):

(a) To renew the measures on arms and travel imposed by paragraphs 2 and 4 of resolution 1521(2003) for a further period of twelve months from the date of adoption of the present resolution;

(b) To renew the measures on diamonds and timber imposed by paragraphs 6 and 10 of resolution 1521(2003) for a further period of six months from the date of adoption of the present resolution;

(c) To review any of the above measures at the request of the new Government of Liberia, once the Government reports to the Security Council that the conditions set out in resolution 1521(2003) for terminating the measures have been met, and provides the Council with information to justify its assessment;

2. Reiterates the Council's readiness to terminate these measures once the conditions set forth in paragraphs 5, 7 and 11 of resolution 1521(2003) have been met;

3. Welcomes the determination of the President-elect of Liberia, Mrs. Ellen Johnson-Sirleaf, to meet the conditions for terminating the measures thus renewed, and encourages the new Government of Liberia:

(a) To reform the Forestry Development Authority, to implement the Liberia Forest Initiative and to implement the recommendations of the Forest Concession Review Committee for reform and cancellation of existing logging concessions, which will ensure transparency, accountability and sustainable forest management and contribute towards the lifting of the measures on timber in accordance with paragraphs 11 and 12 of resolution 1521(2003);

(b) To consider, with the assistance of international partners and for a specific time period, the possibility of commissioning independent external advice on the management of Liberia's diamond resources, in order to increase revenue and investor confidence and to attract additional donor support;

4. Encourages the new Government of Liberia to implement the Governance and Economic Management Assistance Program, designed to ensure prompt implementation of the Comprehensive Peace Agreement signed at Accra on 18 August 2003 and expedite the lifting of the measures imposed by resolution 1521 (2003);

5. Welcomes the assistance provided by the United Nations Mission in Liberia to the Government of Liberia in re-establishing its authority throughout the country, and encourages the Mission to continue its joint patrols with the Forestry Development Authority;

6. Notes that the measures imposed by paragraph 1 of resolution 1532(2004) remain in force, and reconfirms its intention to review those measures at least once a year;

7. Emphasizes its concern that the National Transitional Government of Liberia took no action to implement its obligations under paragraph 1 of resolution 1532(2004), and calls upon the incoming Government to take such action immediately, particularly by adopting the necessary domestic legislation, with technical support provided by Member States;

8. Calls upon the international donor community to support the incoming Government of Liberia by providing generous assistance to the peace process, including for the reintegration of ex-combatants, reconstruction and humanitarian appeals, and by responding to the financial, administrative and technical needs of the Government, in particular to assist the Government to meet the conditions referred to in paragraph 2 above, so that the measures can be lifted as soon as possible;

9. Decides to re-establish the Panel of Experts appointed pursuant to resolution 1607(2005) of 21 June 2005 for a further period until 21 June 2006 to undertake the following tasks:

(a) To conduct a follow-up assessment mission to Liberia and neighbouring States in order to investigate and compile a report on the implementation, and any violations, of the measures imposed by resolution 1521(2003), including any information relevant to the designation by the Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 1521(2003) of the individuals described in paragraph 4 (a) of resolution 1521 (2003) and the individuals and entities described in paragraph 1 of resolution 1532(2004), and including the various sources of financing, such as from natural resources, for the illicit trade in arms;

(b) To assess the impact and effectiveness of the measures imposed by paragraph 1 of resolution 1532 (2004);

(c) To assess the progress made towards meeting the conditions for lifting the measures imposed by resolution 1521(2003);

(d) To assess the humanitarian and socio-economic impact of the measures imposed by paragraphs 2, 4, 6 and 10 of resolution 1521(2003);

(e) To report to the Council, through the Committee, by 7 June 2006 on all the issues listed in the present paragraph, and to provide informal updates to the Committee, as appropriate, before that date, especially on progress made towards meeting the conditions for lifting the measures imposed by paragraphs 6 and 10 of resolution 1521(2003);

(f) To cooperate with other relevant groups of experts, in particular the group of experts on Côte d'Ivoire established pursuant to resolution 1643(2005) of 15 December 2005, and with the Kimberley Process Certification Scheme;

10. Requests the Secretary-General, acting in consultation with the Committee, to appoint as soon as possible no more than five experts, with the appropriate expertise, in particular on arms, timber, diamonds, finance, and humanitarian and socio-economic issues, drawing as much as possible on the expertise of the members of the Panel of Experts established pursuant to resolution 1607(2005), and further requests the Secretary-General to make the necessary financial and security arrangements to support the work of the Panel;

11. Calls upon all States and the Government of Liberia to cooperate fully with the Panel of Experts;

12. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Security Council Committee. The Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 1521(2003) concerning Liberia submitted a report [S/2006/464] on its activities for the period 1 January to 31 December 2005. During the reporting period, the Committee held two formal meetings and 12 informal consultations.

The Committee received two requests for exemptions to the arms embargo. It approved a request to allow for the equipping and training of the Liberian armed forces and police. However, the second request, which involved the import of sidearms for the Liberian police, remained in limbo as, at the end of the year, the Committee had not received a waiver request from any exporting State in that connection. It also received and approved the export of non-lethal military equipment for the drilling of boreholes to provide water to outlying villages.

The Committee considered nine requests for travel ban waivers, of which four were granted. It held quarterly reviews of the travel ban list initially issued on 16 March 2004 [YUN 2004, p. 211], retaining the names of 52 persons listed as at 31 December 2004, and adding seven more in 2005. The Committee conducted one six-month review of the assets freeze list in June, and on 30 November, it added the names of two individuals and 30 entities to the list.

Harmonization of the contents of both the travel-ban and assets-freeze lists was concluded in May, thereby presenting identical information on individuals inscribed on both lists. The Committee received two replies from States on actions taken to implement the sanctions provided for in resolution 1521(2003) and four replies from States on actions taken to trace and freeze the funds, other financial assets and economic resources described in resolution 1532(2004).

Sierra Leone

In 2005, Sierra Leone continued to maintain strict adherence to the 2000 Agreement on the Ceasefire and Cessation of Hostilities [YUN 2000, p. 210] and accelerated its efforts to meet the benchmarks laid down by the Security Council in 2004 for the completion of the country's transition phase and the corresponding drawdown of the United Nations Mission in Sierra Leone. With the gradual achievement of the benchmarks, the Mission began drawing down further in mid-September, while ensuring a seamless transition from peacekeeping to peacebuilding. By the completion of its withdrawal at the end of December, the Mission left behind a country with great potential to achieve lasting stability, democracy and prosperity. The Mission's collaborative effort with the partnerships it had forged during its six years of operation had placed Sierra Leone on a firm path to its next phase of post-conflict recovery and peacebuilding.

To assist the Government to consolidate peace, build the national capacity for conflict prevention and prepare for the 2007 elections, the Council requested the Secretary-General to establish the United Nations Integrated Office in Sierra Leone, for an initial 12-month period beginning on 1 January 2006, on the basis of his recommendations. To complete the restructuring and training of the Sierra Leone security forces, which had assumed full responsibility for the maintenance of security in the country, the United Kingdom committed the International Military Advisory and Training Team, which it led, to providing continued training to the armed forces until at least 2010.

The Special Court for Sierra Leone continued to try those bearing the greatest responsibility for serious violations of international humanitarian and Sierra Leonean laws committed in the territory of Sierra Leone since 1996. In a statement before the Council, the President of the Court emphasized the importance of the expeditious apprehension and trial of two indictees who remained at large for the credibility of the Court and for its contribution to combating the culture of impunity. He estimated that the trials would be completed by the end of 2006 and that the appeals stage would take another four to six months. With the departure of the Mission, which provided security for the Court, the Council, by resolution 1626(2005), authorized the United Nations Mission in Liberia to assume that responsibility from November, as recommended by the Secretary-General.

In the light of the favourable security environment in Sierra Leone, and no reported violations or alleged violations of the sanctions regime in the country for at least two years, its Chairman recommended that the Council revisit the legal basis of the sanctions in force in Sierra Leone.

UNAMSIL

The United Nations Mission in Sierra Leone (UNAMSIL), established by Security Council resolution 1270(1999) [YUN 1999, p. 165], continued to be headed by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Sierra Leone, Daudi Ngelautwa Mwakawago (United Republic of Tanzania). The Deputy Special Representative, Victor da Silva Angelo, also served as Resident Representative of UNDP and UN Resident Coordinator in Sierra Leone.

In accordance with Council resolution 1537 (2004) [YUN 2004, p. 214], which defined the configuration of the Mission's residual presence in the country for an initial six-month period to 30 June 2005, the Mission completed its transition to such presence at the end of February 2005, having reduced its troop strength from the December 2004 level of 5,000 to 3,250 troops, 141 military observers and 80 civilian police. By Council resolution 1610(2005), the mandate of the Mission was extended for a final period of six months, until 31 December 2005.

As Sierra Leone prepared to enter its next peacebuilding phase, the Mission's planned withdrawal of its 3,200-strong force, which began in mid-September, was carried out in three phases, starting with closing the UN military observers' team sites, then withdrawing the force, and finally closing UNAMSIL headquarters. Meanwhile, a media campaign designed by UNAMSIL and other stakeholders was under way to raise national and international awareness about the achievements and exit strategy of the Mission and the mandate of the incoming United Nations Integrated Office in Sierra Leone (UNIOSIL) (see p. 281). Activities outlined in the joint UNAMSIL/UN country team transition plan continued, aimed at ensuring a seamless transition from peacekeeping to peacebuilding in Sierra Leone, while facilitating the Mission's exit strategy and preparing the ground for the establishment of UNIOSIL.

The UNAMSIL withdrawal was scheduled for completion by the end of December. As of 1 December, some 1,160 troops and 69 military observers remained in Freetown; 46 military police continued to operate from team sites in Freetown, Kenema, Bo, Makeni and Lungi, which would remain operational until 31 December, when all police personnel would be repatriated. A team of 10 officers would be retained temporarily to facilitate a smooth transition to UNIOSIL. Some 87 administrative support staff would also be retained to carry out the liquidation of UNAMSIL between 1 January and 30 June 2006.

By presidential statement S/PRST/2005/63 (see p. 286), the Council commended UNAMSIL for its invaluable contribution over the past six years to Sierra Leone's recovery from conflict and its progress towards peace, democracy and prosperity, as well as the Secretary-General's Special Representatives and all who had made the Mission a success, especially those who had helped it recover from its 2000 crisis [YUN 2000, p. 194].

Financing

In June, during its resumed fifty-ninth (2005) session, the General Assembly considered the performance report on the UNAMSIL budget for 1 July 2003 to 30 June 2004 [A/59/635 & Corr.1], showing expenditures of $448,734,400 against a total appropriation of $520,053,600; the proposed budget for 1 July 2005 to 30 June 2006 [A/59/758 & Corr.1], totalling $107,159,700, together with the Secretary-General's related note on maintenance and liquidation costs [S/2005/273/Add.1]; the proposed donation of assets to the Government of Sierra Leone with an inventory value of $8,406,072 and a corresponding residual value of $3,829,178 [A/59/759]; and the related ACABQ report [A/59/736/Add.9].

ACABQ recommended approval of the proposed budget. Noting that UNAMSIL was the first mission to have established an Asset Disposal and Environmental Protection Unit, ACABQ asked the Department of Peacekeeping Operations (DPKO) to integrate the lessons learned into its best practices documentation for sharing with other missions; it also recommended acceptance of the Secretary-General's proposed donation of assets to the Government of Sierra Leone.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 June [meeting 104], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/59/527/Add.1], adopted resolution 59/14 B without vote [agenda item 136].

Financing of the United Nations Mission in Sierra Leone

B

The General Assembly,

Having considered the reports of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Mission in Sierra Leone and the related reports of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

UNAMSIL activities

Assessment mission

Report of Secretary-General (April). In his April report on UNAMSIL [S/2005/273], the Secretary-General provided an update on the implementation of the benchmarks established by Security Council resolution 1537(2004) [YUN 2004, p. 214] for the residual Mission presence in Sierra Leone, as well as his recommendations concerning the continued UN presence in the country after the Mission's withdrawal and termination, based on the findings of a UN interdepartmental assessment mission that visited Sierra Leone from 20 to 28 March. The mission evaluated progress on the security situation, strengthening the capacity of the Sierra Leone armed forces and police, consolidating State authority throughout the country, and consolidating the deployment in neighbouring Liberia of the United Nations Mission in Liberia (UNMIL).

The report indicated that, with the aid of UNAMSIL and other bilateral and multilateral partners, the Government of Sierra Leone had made considerable progress in implementing the benchmarks. The security situation in the country had been calm and stable, with no incidents requiring support from UNAMSIL since September 2004 [ibid., p. 218], when it turned over primary responsibility for security to the Government. Nevertheless, major shortfalls remained in the security sector, especially in the country-wide consolidation of State administration and the restoration of full government control over diamond-mining activities.

With the support of the International Military Advisory and Training Team, led by the United Kingdom, the Government continued to implement a contingency programme aimed at increasing the capacity of the armed forces to deal with external security threats and backstop the police in maintaining law and order. The programme included the deployment of three armed forces brigades to the provinces and border areas; the continued restructuring of the armed forces to reduce their troop strength from some 13,000 to 10,500 by 2007; the establishment of nationwide security and intelligence committees to provide a framework for cooperation in security matters; and the construction of army barracks in the provinces and border areas. However, the programme to prepare the armed forces to assume responsibility for the country's security was behind schedule as their operational effectiveness was hampered by such logistic shortfalls as the lack of communications equipment and accommodation for the soldiers. In March 2005, the Secretary-General appealed to potential donors to provide assistance in that regard.

The police force, whose strength stood at 8,200 in March, made notable improvements in maintaining internal security with the support of UNDP, the Mission's civilian police and an international training team. The completed construction of classrooms and dormitories at the Police Training School allowed for an increase in the number of recruits from 400 to 600 per trainee group. Lack of Government funding for training, however, thwarted the chances of reaching the benchmark of 9,500 trained police officers by year's end. UNAMSIL also increased the capacity of the police through in-service specialist training and the development of training manuals. Since 2003, some 729 middle-management police officers, 109 field-coaching officers and 150 training instructors had been trained. While the Office of National Security had improved its effectiveness and intelligence-gathering capacity, the effectiveness of the central security structures was restricted by limited resources.

The assessment of the security sector in the context of the fragile security situation in the wider Mano River basin, comprising Côte d'Ivoire, Guinea, Liberia and Sierra Leone, brought to the fore potential threats to Sierra Leone's security from possible tensions in Liberia in connection with its forthcoming October elections, setbacks in the Côte d'Ivoire peace process, instability in Guinea and the unresolved territorial dispute between Guinea and Sierra Leone over the border village of Yenga. President Ahmad Tejan Kabbah and senior security officials informed UNAMSIL that to withdraw on the expiration of its mandate at the end of June would be premature, as the security sector could not effectively assume primary responsibility for the security of the country until the end of 2005.

Further strides were made in the consolidation of State authority through the continuing decentralization process, which provided a framework for the devolution of power and responsibilities between the central and local governments. With the support of the World Bank, UN agencies and UNAMSIL, training and capacity-building programmes were conducted for the recently elected local councils, making them functional; their capacity to deliver services to their communities was seriously curtailed, however, by lack of qualified personnel, funding, logistics and infrastructure. The judiciary was undergoing a gradual but slow consolidation. The administration of justice at the chiefdom level was reinforced with the appointment of 200 chairpersons of customary courts nationwide. At least one magistrates' court was operational in each of the 12 administrative districts, and government officials were functioning in all of them. Of great concern were the slow pace in addressing undue delays in the trial and adjudication of cases and the lack of judicial personnel, which were exacerbated by the lack of codified opinions of the Supreme Court and statutory laws. An increased police presence in the provinces had considerably improved the maintenance of law and order.

The Government made considerable progress in controlling the diamond-mining sector by implementing measures to curb illicit mining, including implementation of the Kimberley Process Certification Scheme [YUN 2000, p. 76]. A total of 2,300 diamond-mining licences were issued in 2004, compared to 800 in 2001, and official diamond exports increased from $10 million in 2000 to $127 million in 2004. Also under implementation was the core minerals policy adopted in December 2004, aimed at creating an enabling legal, fiscal and institutional framework for the development of the country's mineral resources.

Furthermore, a national cadastral system to facilitate the settlement of disputes over mining rights, territorial boundaries and mining sites was being established.

With respect to regional events, the report noted that, at a summit of the Mano River Union (Koindu, Sierra Leone, 20 February), Guinea, Liberia and Sierra Leone pledged to promote regional peace and security and improve economic cooperation. Under a 24 March memorandum of understanding between Sierra Leone and Liberia on the mutual repatriation of ex-combatants, 387 such persons were repatriated to Liberia in April. The urgency of resolving the Sierra Leone–Guinea dispute over Yenga was repeatedly stressed to the assessment mission. Despite the 2 September 2004 statement issued by the two countries reaffirming that Yenga belonged to Sierra Leone, the withdrawal of Guinea's troops from Yenga and the demarcation of the boundary between them had yet to take place.

The report also highlighted the repatriation of some 271,991 Sierra Leonean refugees since 2001, largely with UNHCR assistance; the establishment of human rights committees in nine of the 12 administrative districts; the expected follow-up to the recommendations of the Truth and Reconciliation Commission contained in its final report to the President in October 2004 [YUN 2004, p. 217]; and an update on the trials at the Special Court for Sierra Leone (see p. 286).

The Secretary-General indicated areas requiring attention to further enhance stability in Sierra Leone: political and electoral reform; good governance; issues related to youth, women and children; justice sector reform; capacity-building of the security structure; development of a public information strategy; and sustained support for economic initiatives.

Given the risk of civil unrest from the lack of improvement in the economy and living standards of the majority of the population, national and international stakeholders emphasized the need for the continued deployment of the residual UNAMSIL presence until the end of 2005. A joint transition plan, developed by UNAMSIL and the UN country team for the continued involvement of the international community in Sierra Leone was being implemented. The Secretary-General proposed a study of the logistical, political and legal implications of the cross-border commitment of UNMIL after the withdrawal of UNAMSIL.

The Secretary-General observed that, while the country had advanced towards meeting the benchmarks for stabilization and for the withdrawal of UNAMSIL, much remained to be done to address the underlying causes of conflict in the country so as to attain durable stability. In particular, the strengthening of the security sector required special, long-term attention. He therefore recommended that the Security Council extend the UNAMSIL mandate for a final period of six months, until the end of 2005, and that the drawdown of the Mission be completed by 31 December and its liquidation within six months thereafter.

10. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

UNIOSIL

In his April report [S/2005/273], the Secretary-General noted that, although stability had been successfully restored in Sierra Leone, serious challenges to building durable peace in the country remained. Considerable capacity-building was needed to enhance the Government's capability to discharge its functions related to political and economic governance and conflict prevention. Hence, after the termination of UNAMSIL, a strong UN presence was likely to be needed to assist in that regard. A number of options were being considered to ensure that the UN system was able to develop and implement in a fully coordinated and integrated manner, and in close consultation with national stakeholders, a viable peace consolidation strategy for Sierra Leone.

As requested by the Security Council in resolution 1610(2005) above, the Secretary-General's recommendations for the continued UN presence in Sierra Leone were submitted in a July addendum to his report [S/2005/273/Add.2], following extensive consultations among the UN Departments of Peacekeeping Operations, Political Affairs, and Economic and Social Affairs, the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, UNDP, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR), UNAMSIL, the UN country team, the Government of Sierra Leone and other national and international stakeholders.

Recommended was a modestly sized UN integrated office in Sierra Leone to be established for an initial period of 12 months, beginning on 1 January 2006. The office would further develop and consolidate the continuing initiatives of the UN country team. Its mandate would be to assist the Government, inter alia, to build the capacity of State institutions to address the root causes of the conflict and the main problems facing the country; develop a national action plan for human rights and establish a national human rights commission; enhance good governance and transparency and accountability; improve budgetary and expenditure processes; build the capacity of the National Electoral Commission (NEC) to conduct the national electoral process in 2007; strengthen the judiciary; develop political and economic empowerment initiatives for youth and initiatives for the rights and well-being of war-affected and vulnerable children and adolescents; build an independent and capable public radio capacity; liaise with the security sector and further strengthen the capacity of the police; and coordinate with the Special Court for Sierra Leone.

The office would be headed by the Executive Representative of the Secretary-General, who would also serve as the UNDP Resident Representative and the United Nations Resident and Humanitarian Coordinator, to ensure a cohesive and coordinated approach within the whole UN family in Sierra Leone. It would comprise a small office to support the Executive Representative and five sections on the key areas of its mandate: good governance and peace consolidation, human rights and rule of law, civilian police and military assistance, development, and public information. The sections would be staffed, respectively, by: eight peace and governance advisers, five international human rights officers supported by national officers and UN volunteers, 20 civilian police and 10 military liaison officers, the UN country team, the Office of the Resident and Humanitarian Coordinator and one senior coordination adviser, and three international public information officers and a number of national officers.

In reiterating that a sustained commitment of the United Nations, working in close partnership with the Government, would be required after the withdrawal of UNAMSIL, the Secretary-General hoped the Council would give serious consideration to his recommendations.

Communication. By a 21 June letter [S/2005/419], the President of Sierra Leone commended the work of UNAMSIL in bringing about peace and stability in Sierra Leone and said that, after the withdrawal of the Mission, a follow-on UN presence in the country would be indispensable, especially in the period leading up to the national elections in 2007.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 31 August [meeting 5254], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1620(2005). The draft [S/2005/554] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Recalling its previous resolutions and the statements by its President concerning the situation in Sierra Leone,

Commending the valuable contribution that the United Nations Mission in Sierra Leone has made to the recovery of Sierra Leone from conflict and to the country's peace, security and development,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 26 April 2005, and the addendum thereto of 28 July 2005, and welcoming his recommendation that a United Nations integrated office be established in Sierra Leone after the withdrawal of the United Nations Mission in Sierra Leone at the end of 2005, in order to continue to assist the Government of Sierra Leone to consolidate peace by enhancing political and economic governance, building the national capacity for conflict prevention, and preparing for elections in 2007,

Taking note of the letter dated 21 June 2005 from the President of the Republic of Sierra Leone to the Secretary-General, which likewise emphasizes the need for a United Nations integrated office to support the above objectives,

Emphasizing the importance of a smooth transition between the United Nations Mission in Sierra Leone and the new United Nations integrated office, and of the effective and efficient operation of the office,

Emphasizing also the importance of the continued support of the United Nations and the international community for the long-term security and development of Sierra Leone, particularly in building the capacity of the Government of Sierra Leone,

Reiterating its appreciation for the essential work of the Special Court for Sierra Leone and its vital contribution to the establishment of the rule of law in Sierra Leone and the subregion, underlining its expectation that the Court will finish its work in accordance with its completion strategy, and, in this regard, encouraging all States to cooperate fully with the Court and to provide it with the necessary financial resources,

Welcoming the publication of the report of the Sierra Leone Truth and Reconciliation Commission, and encouraging the Government of Sierra Leone to take further steps to implement its recommendations,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to establish the United Nations Integrated Office in Sierra Leone, as recommended in the addendum to his report, for an initial period of twelve months, beginning on 1 January 2006, with the following key tasks:

(a) To assist the Government of Sierra Leone in:

(ii) Developing a national action plan for human rights and establishing the national human rights commission;

(iii) Building the capacity of the National Electoral Commission to conduct a free, fair and credible electoral process in 2007;

(iv) Enhancing good governance, transparency and accountability of public institutions, including through anti-corruption measures and improved fiscal management;

(b) To liaise with the Sierra Leonean security sector and other partners, to report on the security situation and to make recommendations concerning external and internal security threats;

(c) To coordinate with United Nations missions and offices and regional organizations in West Africa in dealing with cross-border challenges such as the illicit movement of small arms, human trafficking and smuggling and illegal trade in natural resources;

(d) To coordinate with the Special Court for Sierra Leone;

2. Emphasizes the primary responsibility of the Government of Sierra Leone for the consolidation of peace and security in the country, and urges continued support from international donors for the efforts of the Government in this regard;

3. Underlines the importance of establishing a fully integrated office with effective coordination of strategy and programmes between the United Nations agencies, funds and programmes in Sierra Leone, between the United Nations and other international donors, and between the integrated office, the Economic Community of West African States and other United Nations missions in the region;

4. Welcomes the recommendation made by the Secretary-General in the addendum to his report that the integrated office should be headed by an Executive Representative of the Secretary-General and his intention that he or she should also serve as the Resident Representative of the United Nations Development Programme and United Nations Resident Coordinator;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to continue planning for security for the Special Court for Sierra Leone on the basis outlined in paragraphs 15 to 24 of the addendum to his report, and looks forward to further details on the proposed arrangements;

6. Also requests the Secretary-General to keep the Security Council regularly informed of progress in establishing the integrated office, and thereafter in the implementation of the present resolution;

7. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Appointment. By an exchange of letters between the Secretary-General and the Security Council on 7 and 12 December, respectively [S/2005/779, S/2005/780], the Deputy Special Representative for Sierra Leone, Victor da Silva Angelo (Portugal), was appointed Executive Representative for UNIOSIL. He would continue to serve as the Resident Representative of UNDP and UN Resident Coordinator in Sierra Leone.

Financing. The Secretary-General, in his December report [A/60/585] on estimates in respect of special political missions, good offices and other political activities authorized by the General Assembly and/or the Security Council, submitted proposed requirements for UNIOSIL in the amount of $23,298,600 for the period 1 January to 31 December 2006 under section 3, Political affairs of the 2006-2007 programme budget.

The Assembly, in section VI of resolution 60/248 of 23 December (see p. 1495), approved, as recommended by ACABQ [A 60/7/Add. 24], for UNIOSIL a prorated amount out of the charge of $100 million for the 26 special political missions for the period 1 January to 30 April 2006.

Further UNAMSIL activities

Report of Secretary-General (September). In his September report on UNAMSIL [S/2005/596], the Secretary-General outlined the withdrawal plan for UNAMSIL and described the media campaign on the achievements and exit strategy of the Mission, as well as the plans for a seamless transition from peacekeeping to peacebuilding.

The Secretary-General described the security environment in Sierra Leone as generally calm and stable. The Government took further steps towards assuming full responsibility for the maintenance of security. The performance of the Office of National Security improved, particularly its coordination capacity. Progress was limited, however, in addressing the serious threats to the country's stability: corruption, ineffective governance, widespread poverty, massive youth unemployment and consequent public discontent. Although the political situation in Liberia was stabilizing as preparations for the October elections were proceeding peacefully, and as its border with Sierra Leone continued to be jointly monitored by UNMIL and UNAMSIL, the fragile security situation in the subregion remained a potential threat.

Implementation of the benchmarks progressed further, as demonstrated by the enhanced capacity of the security forces, increased public confidence in the police and the successful recruitment, training and deployment of some 3,000 police officers, bringing the police force strength to 9,000 against the benchmark of 9,500. The armed forces continued to be constrained by a lack of communications equipment and shortages of accommodation, rations, fuel, ammunition, medical supplies, water and uniforms.

Further advances were made in the consolidation of State authority. The Government continued devolving major State administrative services in education, health and agriculture to the local councils. Relations between the local councils and the chiefdom system were evolving satisfactorily. The Government and local councils, in collaboration with UNAMSIL and civic organizations, began a new mediation initiative at the provincial and district levels for dispute settlement among chiefdoms. With UNAMSIL support, the Government was proceeding with the launch in October of the diamond-mining cadastral system in the district of Kono, which would be expanded to other diamond-mining areas. Although diamond exports rose to $82 million in the first half of 2005, close monitoring of the mines and diamond extraction needed to be maintained in view of UNAMSIL surveys showing that more than 50 per cent of diamond mining remained unlicensed, and reports that illegal diamond smuggling was considerable. On electoral reform, the restructuring and capacity-building of the National Electoral Commission continued with the appointment of a chairperson in May and a commitment by the Government of $8 million for staff recruitment and to facilitate further restructuring. International partners set up a basket fund to mobilize the $18.4 million required to complete the Commission's electoral tasks for the conduct of credible elections in 2007.

The Mano River Union countries (Guinea, Liberia and Sierra Leone), at their recent summit (Freetown, 28 July), reaffirmed their commitment to pursue a peaceful solution to the Yenga border issue, and agreed that demarcation of the border between Guinea and Sierra Leone would start on 20 August. The summit devoted considerable attention to the promotion of confidence-building measures in border areas and on the strengthening of security in the subregion.

Following the July visit of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, Louise Arbour, to Sierra Leone, the Government showed renewed interest in the establishment of a national human rights commission. With the support of UNAMSIL and OHCHR, preparatory work to that end was begun by the Attorney General and the Minister of Justice. The final report of the Truth and Reconciliation Commission was published and, on 8 August, UNAMSIL began nationwide distribution and sensitization of its findings and recommendations. The Government published a white paper reflecting most of the recommendations but had yet to implement them.

The Secretary-General observed that the Government had made commendable efforts towards consolidating constitutional order and State authority throughout Sierra Leone. However, it had yet to address many of the root causes of the conflict in the country, such as poverty, youth unemployment, illiteracy and lack of basic infrastructure. He also noted the commendable progress in the diamond-mining sector, adding that the Government should be encouraged to continue to build on initiatives aimed at generating additional revenue from that vital sector. He said further efforts, including by the international community, were required to help resolve the potential source of conflict posed by the Yenga border dispute, and instructed his Special Representative to intensify mediation efforts to reach a solution before the termination of UNAMSIL.

Report of Secretary-General (December). In his final report on UNAMSIL [S/2005/777], the Secretary-General observed that the tasks before the country as it advanced into the post-conflict peacebuilding phase were challenging. Public expectation of peace dividends was high at the same time that perception of government responsiveness to the population's needs was generally low; whence the need for a strategy to communicate the Government's vision and programmes to the public and to involve the participation of civic organizations and the private sector in enhancing democratic governance. Although the political situation was calm and stable, signs of tension were surfacing as political parties began preparing for the 2007 national elections. The two main parties, the ruling Sierra Leone People's Party (SLPP) and the All People's Congress (APC) selected Vice-President Solomon Berewa and APC leader Ernest Bai Koroma, respectively, as their presidential candidates. In the process, both parties experienced intra-party divisions that resulted in splinter groups. A faction of APC challenged the party's elected leadership in the courts, while Charles Margai, a prominent SLPP member, formed his own political party, the People's Movement for Democratic Change (PMDC), having failed to be selected as the SLPP presidential nominee. UNAMSIL promoted inter-party dialogue, reconciliation and tolerance among the political parties and bi-partisan approaches to national issues in the legislature. Other political developments included the appointment of a new Chairman of the Anti-Corruption Commission, which had investigated corruption charges against six cabinet ministers; and the formalization of the Political Parties Registration Commission with the approval of its composition by Parliament on 1 December.

Short-term indicators of internal security were positive, with little probability of a return to civil conflict, and criminal activities were expected to remain at manageable levels. The increased capacity of the security sector to restore law and order was exemplified by its efficient handling of three serious security incidents without UNAMSIL assistance: the violent riots resulting from the 7 November murder in Kenema of two motorcycle transportation operators and the death on 18 November in Koidu of a third operator in a traffic accident; and the disruption on 19 November by the supporters of Charles Margai of a commemorative ceremony at a college in Bo, where Vice-President Berewa was the guest of honour. No major external threats to the country's security occurred during the reporting period. Efforts to resolve the Yenga border dispute were in progress; Guinea and Sierra Leone conducted an on-site inspection of the disputed area and held consultations at Koindu.

In anticipation of the start of UNIOSIL operations on 1 January 2006, a UN interdepartmental team led by UNDP, and in collaboration with the Government and relevant partners, developed a draft peace consolidation strategy that would provide the framework for the implementation of the UNIOSIL mandate. Building upon the work accomplished under the joint UNAMSIL/UN country team transition plan for 2005, the strategy would focus on peace consolidation, as well as on complementing the Government's poverty reduction strategy and the revised UN development assistance framework. The third review of the transition plan, conducted in October, pointed to the successful completion of the initiatives taken by the UN system towards laying the foundation for post-conflict peacebuilding in Sierra Leone.

Towards the completion of its withdrawal by the end of December, UNMIL assumed command of the military unit protecting the Special Court for Sierra Leone on 1 December; it would be relieved on 15 January 2006 by a military guard force from Mongolia. UNMIL would also earmark a rapid reaction force to be deployed from the Liberian capital of Monrovia to Freetown.

Ongoing restructuring of Sierra Leone's armed forces slowed considerably due to a shortage of resources. The army training and restructuring programme required additional resources to enable it to be completed on schedule. The Sierra Leone police were deployed throughout the country in 74 police stations and 112 police posts. Police strength reached the benchmark figure of 9,500, some 4,000 of whom had received training from UNAMSIL.

The increasing trend towards respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms continued, especially for civil and political rights. Efforts were in progress to repeal or amend the provisions of the Public Order Act to eliminate undue limits on freedom of expression. The Government authorized the Ministry of Justice to proceed with the establishment of a national human rights commission. UNAMSIL collaborated with the Ministry on the selection and appointment of commissioners, while OHCHR contracted for the advisory services of a consultant. UNAMSIL, which produced an abridged version of the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's final report, continued its dissemination and conducted workshops on its findings and recommendations. To date, the Government had not prepared an action plan for implementing the recommendations. A stakeholders conference was held (6-8 December, Freetown) to review the human rights situation in Sierra Leone, assess tasks to be undertaken in the post-UNAMSIL phase and develop a work plan for the human rights component of UNIOSIL.

The Secretary-General observed that the completion of the peacekeeping phase of UN involvement in Sierra Leone and the departure of UNAMSIL at the end of December marked a turning point for the country. During its six years of operation, UNAMSIL had forged an effective partnership with the UN country team, the countries in the subregion, the donor community, humanitarian organizations, the Government and civil society in order to steer Sierra Leone on the path to post-conflict recovery. The formidable challenges posed by the socio-economic situation notwithstanding, the prospects for Sierra Leone were promising. The Secretary-General was encouraged by recent pledges of support by donors at the Fourth Consultative Group Meeting (London, 29-30 November) held by the World Bank and by the enthusiasm of political parties in preparing for the 2007 elections.

The Secretary-General highlighted the fact that UNAMSIL had broken new ground as the first peacekeeping mission to absorb a parallel subregional peacekeeping force and to enter into a backstopping arrangement with a Member State, namely, the United Kingdom, which had simultaneously launched a security sector reform programme to complement the Mission's efforts. He also highlighted the integrated mission concept, introduced for the first time in UNAMSIL, whose Deputy Special Representative held three integrative offices (see p. 283); the innovative approach of the Security Council to the UNAMSIL exit strategy, based on a carefully calibrated drawdown of its military component in step with the fulfilment of specified benchmarks; the establishment of UNIOSIL with its integrated nature and comprehensive peacebuilding mandate; and the regional approach to peacekeeping operations through inter-mission cooperation between UNAMSIL and other UN presences in the subregion.

The Secretary-General noted that the presence of both UNAMSIL and UNMIL had enabled the countries of the Mano River basin to begin rebuilding peaceful and mutually beneficial relationships. He hoped that Sierra Leone, Côte d'Ivoire, Guinea and Liberia would construct new mechanisms for security cooperation among them and that key stabilizing factors would prevail to ensure peace and stability in the West Africa subregion.

Security Council consideration. The Security Council, at its 20 December meeting [meeting 5334] to consider the Secretary-General's foregoing report, heard a briefing by the Special Representative for Sierra Leone and Head of UNAMSIL, who commended the country's gradual rise from a decade-long conflict and remarkable turnaround towards a future of hope and promise for a better life for its population. That UNAMSIL had completed most of the tasks assigned to it was a source of pride. One of the most satisfying achievements had been the realization of the benchmark to strengthen the Sierra Leone police to its pre-war level of 9,500 personnel under the supervision of the UN police. The Special Representative drew attention not only to the dramatic increase in revenue collection, citing that by November diamond exports had already amounted to some $131 million, but also to specific aspects of control over the diamond industry that were imperative. He pointed out, however, some of the problems that could destabilize the country in the post-UNAMSIL phase: funding gaps for meeting running costs of the security sector and support services, the possible intensification of inter- and intra-party rivalry as the 2007 elections approached, the backlog in court trials, unemployment and poverty.

The Special Representative remarked that, at the request of the Peacekeeping Best Practices Section of DPKO, a public opinion survey directed by Jean Krasno of the City College of New York and Yale University revealed that a large number of Sierra Leoneans had a positive perception of the work done by UNAMSIL since its inception. He was convinced that the Mission had provided a model for future peacekeeping missions. He thanked all concerned for their collaborative effort without which UNAMSIL could have faltered or failed.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 20 December [meeting 5334], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2005/63 on behalf of the Council:

> The Security Council commends the United Nations Mission in Sierra Leone for its invaluable contribution over the last six years to Sierra Leone's recovery from conflict and its progress towards peace, democracy and prosperity. The Council is grateful to the Secretary-General, his Special Representatives and all the individuals from the United Nations and from troop- and police-contributing countries who have made the Mission a success, especially those who helped the Mission to recover from the crisis it faced in May 2000. The Council also deeply appreciates the cooperation extended by the Government and the people of Sierra Leone to the Mission and the members of the United Nations family operating in the country.
> The Council notes with satisfaction the innovations in the Mission's methods of operation that may prove useful best practice in making other United Nations peacekeeping operations more effective and efficient, including an exit strategy based on specific benchmarks for drawdown; an integrated mission with a Deputy Special Representative managing governance, development and humanitarian elements; and substantial, regular cooperation and coordination with other United Nations peacekeeping operations and offices in the region.
> At the request of the Council, the Secretary-General has established the new United Nations Integrated Office in Sierra Leone in order to provide continued support to the Government as it tackles the many challenges ahead, including good governance, sustainable economic development, job creation and delivery of public services. The Government will need the sustained help of donors and development partners, particularly in addressing difficult but essential issues such as security sector reform, fighting corruption, the reinforcement of governance mechanisms, including the judiciary, and equal rights for women and girls. The Council therefore encourages Sierra Leone's development partners to continue their support in all these areas, and notes with satisfaction the outcome of the recent meeting of the donors' Consultative Group on Sierra Leone, held in London on 29 and 30 November 2005.
> With Sierra Leone now stable and at peace, the Council sees a great opportunity for the development of a mature and vibrant political culture. Achieving this will require tolerance, cooperation from all sides and a shared commitment to act responsibly and avoid inflammatory rhetoric. To that end, government and political leaders should reaffirm their commitment to the basic principles of democratic governance. This will pave the way for fair, transparent and peaceful elections in 2007.
> The Council reiterates its appreciation for the work of the Special Court for Sierra Leone and its vital contribution to reconciliation and the rule of law in the country and the subregion, and encourages all States, particularly States in the subregion, to cooperate fully with the Court and to provide it with the necessary financial resources.
> The Council continues to emphasize the importance of a regional approach to the countries of West Africa. The Council hopes that Sierra Leone's neighbours will intensify their cooperation, not least through the Mano River Union and the Economic Community of West African States, especially in the area of peace and security, and with the continued support of the United Nations and development partners.

Special Court for Sierra Leone

The Special Court for Sierra Leone, jointly established by the Government of Sierra Leone and the United Nations in 2002 [YUN 2002, p. 164] in accordance with Security Council resolution 1315(2000) [YUN 2000, p. 205], continued in 2005 to try those bearing the "greatest responsibility" for serious violations of international humanitarian and Sierra Leonean laws committed in the territory of Sierra Leone since 1996. The Secretary-General reported in April [S/2005/273] that former Chairman of the Armed Forces Revolutionary Council (AFRC) Johnny Paul Koroma, under a 17-count indictment, remained at large, and that efforts were continuing to apprehend former Liberian President Charles Taylor, indicted in 2003 [YUN 2003, p. 216] on 17 counts of crimes against humanity, violations of article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II and other serious violations of international humanitarian law and currently in asylum in Nigeria. On 24 February, the European Parliament unanimously adopted a resolution calling on the EU member States to take immediate action to bring about the appearance of Charles Taylor before the Special Court.

Security Council consideration. On 24 May [meeting 5185], the President of the Special Court for Sierra Leone, Judge Emanuel Ayoola, briefed the Security Council on the progress of the Court in relation to its revised completion strategy (see below). He said that of 13 indictments issued, two were withdrawn due to the death of the accused, leaving 11 proper indictments active. Nine of the 11 accused were in the custody of the Court in Freetown and two remained at large (see above). The Prosecutor indicated the possibility of additional indictments that could be linked to existing indictees, but their number would be limited. As to the three joint trials under way, namely, of AFRC, the Civil Defence Forces (CDF) and the Revolutionary United Front (RUF), Judge Ayoola estimated that, at the trial stage, the trials of the first two would be completed by the end of 2005 or early 2006, and the third by the end of 2006, plus an estimated additional four to six months for the appeals stage.

The Judge stressed that several factors could adversely affect the progress of the trials and thus the completion strategy, such as the number of witnesses required or the sudden illness or unavailability of key individual participants, as well as funding, security and cooperation of States (principally Nigeria and Liberia) in transferring the two accused who were at large. He said the importance of the expeditious apprehension and trial of Messrs. Koroma and Taylor could not be overemphasized for the credibility of the Court and for its contribution to combating the culture of impunity, which was essential for the consolidation of peace and development of the rule of law in Sierra Leone. On the question of funding for the Court, he was aware that the Fifth Committee was considering a commitment authority for the period 31 July–31 December 2005 but that funds beyond 2005 had not been assured.

The Council, by resolution 1638(2005) (see p. 267) of 11 November, authorized UNMIL to apprehend and detain Charles Taylor, should he return to Liberia, and transfer him to Sierra Leone for prosecution before the Special Court.

Completion strategy

By identical letters of 26 May to the General Assembly and the Security Council [A/59/816-S/2005/350], the Secretary-General presented the revised completion strategy prepared by the Special Court and endorsed by the Court's Management Committee on 18 May. The strategy specified that the Court's mandate would be carried out in two phases: the completion phase of the trials, during which the Court would render final judgements against all accused in custody and transfer those convicted to appropriate prisons in or outside Sierra Leone to serve their sentences, and concurrently downsize its staff and transfer and liquidate its assets; and the post-completion phase, during which the Court, through a mechanism that would need to be created, would continue certain residual activities: supervising sentence enforcement, providing witness support and protection, and conducting contempt and review proceedings and proceedings against any accused who later surrendered or was apprehended.

In addition, the completion strategy paper updated Court activities, including the swearing in of three additional judges in January; introducing initiatives to improve trial management efficiency in the form of a second Trial Chamber that began functioning in March, and the creation of a Judicial Services Co-ordinating Committee, the estimated completion dates of the trials and the status of enforcement agreements. The paper also pointed to ongoing efforts to develop a fundraising strategy for the Court's completion and post-completion phases from January 2006 onwards, the need to retain key personnel and ensure the security of the Court's premises, and the concern of the Court that supporters of the detainees posed a security threat to it so that the continued presence of international troops to protect the Court and its staff until the end of trial proceedings was critical to the completion strategy.

Security arrangements

In keeping with Security Council resolution 1610(2005) (see p. 280), the Secretary-General, on 28 July [S/2005/273/Add.2], following consultations among the Special Court, UNAMSIL and UNMIL on various options for providing reliable security for the Court after UNAMSIL's withdrawal at the end of the year, indicated that while the overall security of the Court would continue to be provided by the Sierra Leonean Government, the only feasible and cost-effective option would be to transfer that responsibility from UNAMSIL to UNMIL. Therefore, subject to the consent of troop-contributing countries, the Secretary-General recommended that a company-size military unit from UNAMSIL be retained in Freetown upon its departure to continue to protect the Court, and that UNMIL assume command, control and support of the unit. He said his recommendations were fully consistent with resolution 1609(2005) (see p. 236) authorizing, subject to certain conditions, the temporary redeployment of military and civilian police personnel among UNMIL, UNAMSIL and UNOCI to deal with challenges that could not be handled within the authorized personnel ceiling of a given mission in the region; approval of his recommendation would enhance inter-mission cooperation, as proposed in his report [S/2005/135] on such cooperation and possible cross-border operations among the three missions. The UN Secretariat, UNAMSIL and UNMIL had already consulted with potential troop-contributing countries, the Governments of Liberia and Sierra Leone, and the Special Court, and implementation proposals were being prepared.

Financing

Report of Secretary-General. The Secretary-General indicated in an 18 April report [A/59/534/Add.4] that, for the period from 1 July 2004 to 30 June 2005, expenditures for the Special Court would total approximately $26.6 million. He estimated that the commitment authority of $20 million authorized by General Assembly resolution 59/276 [YUN 2004, p. 1383] to supplement the Court's financial resources for the period 1 January to 30 June 2005 would be fully utilized and that an additional subvention of $13 million would be required for the period from 1 July to 31 December 2005. Accordingly, the Secretary-General requested the Assembly to appropriate $33 million as a subvention to the Court for the period from 1 January to 31 December 2005 under special political missions of section 3, Political affairs, of the 2004-2005 programme budget. A further subvention of $7 million would be required in 2006 to allow the Court to complete the existing trials, which the Secretary-General would request under the same section in the 2006-2007 programme budget during the sixtieth (2005) session of the General Assembly.

ACABQ [A/59/569/Add.4] encouraged the Court's Management Committee to raise voluntary contributions and recommended that the Secretary-General, in concert with the Committee, intensify efforts to raise voluntary contributions to support the work of the Court.

By section II of resolution 59/294 of 22 June (see p. 1488), the Assembly authorized an additional $13 million subvention to supplement the finance resources of the Court for the period 1 July to 31 December 2005, bringing the total subvention to $33 million for the period 1 January to 31 December 2005.

Sanctions

The Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 1132(1997) [YUN 1997, p. 135] concerning Sierra Leone submitted two reports in 2005: one on 25 January [S/2005/44] covering its 2004 [YUN 2004, p. 223] activities and the other on 30 December [S/2005/843] covering its 2005 activities to monitor and implement the 1998 embargo on the sale or supply of arms to Sierra Leone and the travel ban on leading members of the former military junta in Sierra Leone and of RUF, imposed by resolution 1171(1998) [YUN 1998, p. 169].

During 2005, the Committee did not meet, but its members were able to take all necessary decisions through the no-objection procedure. It noted that, as of the reporting date, the travel ban list included the names of 30 individuals designated as leading members of the former military junta, AFRC and RUF. Since the list was last revised in September 2004, no further information or recommendation had been received from Sierra Leone. In 2005, the Committee received a 2 August notification from Greece of its proposed export of a diesel electric generator to Sierra Leone by a South African power company; the Committee replied that since the equipment was not an embargoed item, it was not subject to the Committee's consideration. On 22 August [S/2005/561], the United Kingdom notified the Committee of its plan to export blank ammunition and demolition stores to the Sierra Leone armed forces. On 3 November [S/2005/724], the United Kingdom further notified the Committee of the request for a trade licence to export armoured cars from Jordan to Sierra Leone for use by the Special Court for Sierra Leone.

The Chairman of the Committee was of the view that, following the completion of the drawdown of UNAMSIL from Sierra Leone, the time would be appropriate for the Security Council to revisit the legal basis of its measures concerning Sierra Leone.

Security Council consideration. At the meeting of the Security Council on 19 December [meeting 5332], the Security Council Committee Chairman, Ronaldo Mota Sardenberg, in his briefing of the Council, summarized the history of the sanctions imposed in Sierra Leone, beginning with Council resolution 1132(1997), based on the Council's determination that the situation in the country constituted a threat to international peace and security. Taking into consideration the fact that UNAMSIL had since forged effective partnerships and placed Sierra Leone on a firm path to post-conflict recovery, and in the context of the Government's further progress towards consolidating constitutional order and assuming full responsibility for the maintenance of the country's security, Mr. Sardenberg said that the Council might soon start to review the Sierra Leone sanctions regime with a view to updating its legal basis and streamlining the measures currently in place, as well as the Committee's mandate. Consultations within the Committee and with the Government of Sierra Leone would contribute towards that end.

Guinea-Bissau

The United Nations Peace-building Support Office in Guinea-Bissau (UNOGBIS) continued in 2005 to assist Guinea-Bissau in the implementation of the provisions of the September 2003 Political Transition Charter for the restoration of constitutional order [YUN 2003, p. 227], interrupted by a military mutiny in October 2004.

For most of the first half of 2005, the political situation in the country was dominated by preparations for the presidential elections held in two rounds: the first on 19 June and the second on 24 July, culminating in the election of João Bernardo "Nino" Vieira and his investiture on 1 October as the new President of Guinea-Bissau. The event marked the completion of the electoral process that began in March 2004, ending a transitional period that had been in progress since the coup d'état of 14 September 2003.

The conduct of the elections, observed by international observers and coordinated by UNOGBIS country-wide, was peaceful and deemed free, fair and transparent. The pre-election stage, however, was marred by tensions sparked by the question as to whether one of two candidates who were former Presidents was eligible to run under the terms of the Transition Charter. Tensions mounted in the immediate post-election period as the runner-up persisted in rejecting the voting results and twice appealed to the Supreme Court of Justice for their annulment. The Court ruled to confirm the results on the first appeal; it could not rule on the second owing to "insufficient judicial elements". The investiture of the President was thus able to proceed.

Relations between the President and Prime Minister were difficult, notwithstanding their publicly stated willingness to work together. On 28 October, the President dismissed the Government, citing tensions among the organs of State sovereignty that rendered the Government dysfunctional. Shortly after, he appointed a new Prime Minister and, on 9 November, named a new Government. Those actions deepened the divisions generated during the elections, as reflected in a National Popular Assembly that became polarized into two camps: one supporting the Government appointed by the President and the other allied to the Government formed in May 2004 and dismissed by the President. The balance of power remained fluid, with neither side able to assure sustainable support in Parliament.

Throughout the electoral process, UNOGBIS used its good offices to promote dialogue among political, military and civil society actors. The Secretary-General noted that the aspects of its mandate relating to the full restoration of constitutional order, the holding of peaceful, free and fair presidential elections and the elaboration of a UN peacebuilding strategy for Guinea-Bissau had been successfully implemented. The engagement of key national stakeholders and international partners on the question of security sector reform within the broader framework of public administration reform was under way, and the basis of a national initiative to address the challenge posed by illicit small arms and light weapons had been established. In view of those developments, the Secretary-General, with the concurrence of the Security Council, adjusted the mandate of UNOGBIS and its resource base and staffing, in its new role of supporting the Government's efforts to consolidate constitutional rule, promote national reconciliation and respect for the rule of law and human rights, and of working with the other UN agencies to mobilize international financial assistance to enable the Government to meet its immediate financial needs.

UNOGBIS

The United Nations Peace-building Support Office in Guinea-Bissau (UNOGBIS), a political mission established in 1999 by decision of the Secretary-General and supported by Security Council resolution 1233(1999) [YUN 1999, p. 140], was extended until 22 December 2005. Its mandate had been revised by resolution 1580(2004) [YUN 2004, p. 229] in the face of intensified political turmoil and uncertainty in 2004. The Support Office was headed by the Representative of the Secretary-General for Guinea-Bissau, João Bernardo Honwana (Mozambique).

In line with resolution 1580(2004), the Secretary-General reported, in March [S/2005/174], that a UN multidisciplinary mission visited Guinea-Bissau from 12 to 17 February to conduct a review of UNOGBIS with a view to adjusting the Mission's capacities to meet the requirements of its mandate. Its broad objectives were to assess those aspects of the mandate that could foster political dialogue, ensure credible elections to take place in 2005, enhance respect for the rule of law and promote transitional justice, enhance the administration of justice, develop local conflict resolution mechanisms, promote security sector reform, initiate programmes to eradicate the proliferation of small arms and mobilize international support for the country.

In the light of work that remained to put the country's peacebuilding process on a steady forward-looking track, and taking account of the findings of the review mission, the Secretary-General recommended that, within the framework of its revised mandate, as outlined in Council resolution 1580(2004), UNOGBIS should focus on the promotion of political dialogue, development of stable civil-military relations, promotion of the implementation of the Programme of Action adopted by the 2001 UN Conference on small arms [YUN 2001, p. 499] as an urgent priority, advancement of a comprehensive and integrated UN peacebuilding strategy, and adjustment of the use of available UNOGBIS human and financial resources to enable it to respond more effectively to the requirements of its revised mandate. In that regard, some existing posts might need to be adjusted and new posts created.

In view of the completion of the country's transition phase that culminated in the presidential elections, the Secretary-General, in September [S/2005/575], proposed that UNOGBIS mandate be revised to include the following functions: to support efforts to consolidate constitutional rule, enhance political dialogue and promote national reconciliation and respect for the rule of law and human rights; to assist in strengthening the capacity of national institutions to maintain constitutional order; to encourage and support national efforts to reform the security sector; to encourage the Government to implement fully the Programme of Action on small arms; within the framework of a comprehensive peacebuilding strategy, to work closely with the Resident Coordinator and the UN country team to mobilize international financial assistance to enable the Government to meet its immediate financial and logistical needs; and to enhance cooperation and coordination with the AU, ECOWAS, the Community of Portuguese-speaking Countries (CPLP) and other international partners, and intermission cooperation. The emphasis of the revised mandate would be on initiatives meeting the requirements of self-sustainability and national ownership; the development of synergies and complementarities with UN agencies, particularly UNDP and the Bretton-Woods institutions (the World Bank Group and the International Monetary Fund), and with the AU, ECOWAS and CPLP; and political dialogue, governance, human rights, security sector reform and resource mobilization. The Secretary-General reiterated the resource base and personnel requirements as indicated in March (above).

On 2 December [S/2005/795], the Secretary-General advised the Council of a 21 November letter from the new President of Guinea-Bissau stating that, while UNOGBIS had achieved an important element in its mandate with the conclusion of the political transition in the country, it still had a decisive role to play in the consolidation of peace and stability and requested an extension of UNOGBIS mandate. The Secretary-General furthermore referred to his proposals (above) for the adjustment of the mandate and recommended that it be extended for one year, until 31 December 2006, which the Council noted on 15 December [S/2005/796]. The Council had issued a press statement on the previous day [SC/8581], stating that an agreement was reached for the mandate's revision and renewal as recommended.

Political and security developments and UNOGBIS activities

Report of Secretary-General (March). In his March report [S/2005/174] on developments in Guinea-Bissau and UNOGBIS activities, the Secretary-General noted that the country had improved noticeably since his December 2004 report [YUN 2004, p. 228], despite tremendous challenges. The country was peaceful, although the political situation remained complex and difficult. The Government was preparing for the holding of presidential elections by 7 May, as envisaged in the 2003 Political Transition Charter [YUN 2003, p. 227], which was one of the key benchmarks for the full restoration of constitutional normality. However, the slow pace of the preparations and the transition processes, which were interrupted by the 6 October 2004 military mutiny [YUN 2004, p. 227], and the demands by most political parties for a completely new voter register resulted in the election date being postponed. Since some 20 political parties had challenged the accuracy of the 2004 voter register and demanded a new registration exercise, the National Election Commission and political parties agreed to revise the register and to issue new voting cards. Agreement on that critical measure led to a subsequent consensus that the elections would be held in June 2005. Meanwhile, the Government obtained Parliament's approval of the 2005 State budget, re-engaged in dialogue with its development partners and continued efforts towards restoring the rule of law and improving fiscal management. Despite a continuing difficult financial situation, it managed to pay salaries up to December 2004, thereby removing the potential for social unrest.

The National Popular Assembly, at its new session (28 February–28 March), considered a proposed amnesty bill for all involved in various military interventions from 1980 to 6 October 2004 and proposed amendments to the Electoral Registration and the National Election Commission laws. During the session, on 1 March, the Representative of the Secretary-General in Guinea-Bissau briefed the Assembly on the political significance and practical implications of Security Council resolution 1580(2004), especially with regard to the need to uphold the principles of justice and to continue the fight against impunity.

As to military and security aspects, the Chief of General Staff held several sensitization meetings to promote reconciliation of the different military factions. He visited his counterparts in neighbouring Guinea and Senegal in February to discuss bilateral security issues and modalities of cooperation among their armed forces. Both countries provided non-lethal military assistance to the Guinea-Bissau armed forces. UNOGBIS continued to encourage the military leadership to initiate reform, to which the Chief of General Staff had several times reiterated his commitment. Three committees were set up to examine the Defence Act and military regulations, retirement for members of the armed forces and their physical deployment. UNOGBIS and UNDP were finalizing preparations to establish a technical team to support the Government and the armed forces to plan and implement military reform. An initial contribution for security sector reform was raised at a donor mini-conference (Lisbon, Portugal, 11 February). The Secretary-General dispatched a fact-finding and project development mission (7-11 March) to examine the challenge posed by the proliferation of small arms and light weapons in Guinea-Bissau. The mission, in collaboration with UNOGBIS, the UN country team, the Government and relevant civil society bodies, established the operational and conceptual capacity-building needs for the national implementation of the 2001 Programme of Action on small arms.

The International Organization of Migration (IOM) continued to provide administrative and financial management support to the demobilization, reinsertion and reintegration programme, which was in its last phase. Of the 7,182 beneficiaries, 2,406 had been reintegrated and 2,031 were expected to do so by June. The programme requested an extension to December 2005 to allow it to complete all its reintegration activities.

Progress towards the elimination of mine-related risks continued under the supervision of the UNDP-supported national mine-action coordination authority. By February, 2,545 anti-personnel mines, 64 anti-tank mines and 40,439 pieces of unexploded ordnance had been removed and 789,075 square metres cleared.

The economic situation improved slightly in 2004, the gross domestic product having increased to 4.3 per cent. Nonetheless, the Government remained unable to pay the backlog of civil service salary arrears from 2003, domestic debt, or salaries for January 2005. The 11 February donor mini-conference (above) was held to prepare for the Donor Round Table Conference to be held in the last quarter of 2005 and to mobilize resources to cover the gap of some $40 million in the 2005 State budget; funds were to be channelled through the UNDP-managed Emergency Economic Management Fund.

The Secretary-General observed that the country still faced tremendous challenges and was still floundering and unable to address effectively the basic needs of the populace, accomplish military reform or build a common vision among national stakeholders on how to foster peace, justice and reconciliation. The old sources of conflict persisted. The forthcoming presidential elections, scheduled for 19 June, would formally end the transition and mark the full restoration of constitutional order. If poorly prepared and managed, however, the elections could be an additional source of tension and further instability. The Secretary-General therefore urged national stakeholders to endeavour to create an environment conducive to peaceful, transparent, free and fair elections; a good beginning had been made by reaching consensus on the election date. UNOGBIS and the UN country team would continue to support the organization of the elections, concentrating on helping to lower tensions within and among political parties and promoting the adoption of a code of conduct by all parties during the electoral period. The Secretary-General said that the proposal to have Parliament grant a blanket amnesty to all involved in military actions raised concerns among large segments of the population, including civil society organizations.

The Secretary-General called on the international community to support Guinea-Bissau's efforts to complete the political transition, manage conflict, reform its institutions and relaunch the economy. He welcomed the extension of the mandate of the Ad Hoc Advisory Group on Guinea-Bissau of the Economic and Social Council and trusted that it would continue to support the country to address its pressing short- and longer-term development goals.

(For action by the Economic and Social Council on the reports of its Ad Hoc Advisory Group on Guinea-Bissau with respect to the country's humanitarian and economic needs, see p. 1009.)

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 31 March [meeting 5157], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2005/14 on behalf of the Council:

> The Security Council recognizes some progress made in some areas in Guinea-Bissau, including the electoral process, and urges all political actors in the country to show unequivocal commitment to a peaceful electoral process, leading to peaceful, transparent, free and fair elections, by refraining from inspiring or promoting any sort of ethnic or religious hostilities, particularly with a view to obtaining political gains. In this regard, the Council strongly condemns any attempts to incite violence and to impede ongoing efforts towards peace, stability and social and economic development.
> The Council expresses its growing concern at recent political developments in Guinea-Bissau, in particular the decision by the Partido da Renovaçno Social to select ex-President Koumba Yalá as its presidential candidate. Any decision, such as this, which challenges the Political Transition Charter has the potential to jeopardize the successful conclusion of the transitional process and forthcoming presidential elections.
> The Council also expresses its deep concern at the fact that peace efforts have not yet generated sufficient social and economic benefits for the population that could discourage the use of force.
> The Council stresses, at the same time, the urgent need for international support to the electoral process. It recalls previous appeals for increased international assistance to Guinea-Bissau, including to the forthcoming presidential elections, as part of an urgently needed peacebuilding strategy in that country.
> The Council calls upon Guinea-Bissau's international development partners, including all concerned agencies of the United Nations system, to cooperate fully with the Government of Guinea-Bissau, which has been fully engaged in the implementation of the Political Transition Charter and in efforts to promote transparency and good governance. It welcomes, in this regard, the holding on 11 February 2005, in Lisbon, of the meeting of Guinea-Bissau's partners to prepare for the round-table conference and stresses the importance of strong participation in the donor round-table conference scheduled for October 2005.
> The Council welcomes initial measures taken by the Chief of General Staff regarding the process of reform of the Armed Forces and the promotion of reconciliation among the military. The Council further encourages full inclusiveness and renewed commitment to reconciliation in the Armed Forces, and development of constructive civilian-military relations based on the Armed Forces as an institution subordinated to the elected civilian authorities. In accordance with its mandate in resolution 1580 (2004), it reaffirms the role of the United Nations Peacebuilding Support Office in Guinea-Bissau in encouraging and supporting national efforts to reform the security sector.

Report of Secretary-General (June). In his June report [S/2005/380] on Guinea-Bissau and UNOGBIS, the Secretary-General noted that tensions over the election preparations (see p. 291) demonstrated the fragility of peace and stability in the country. A mid-April strike by teachers protesting the non-payment of salaries also demonstrated the continued high level of social dissatisfaction.

Reconciliation and reintegration of the different military factions continued, with the armed forces Commission on Reconciliation and Reintegration holding a series of awareness-raising meetings (28 February–6 April) to promote the idea and content of a comprehensive security sector reform package. A census taken by the military forces in May concluded that 5,100 military personnel were in active service; the Ministry of Public Administration also completed two censuses of the police, border guards and customs officials based in Bissau.

Arrangements were formalized to enable interested Member States to contribute to security sector reform through the UNDP Thematic Trust Fund for Crisis Prevention and Recovery. The fact-finding mission on illicit small arms that visited Guinea-Bissau in March (see p. 291) developed a project proposal for assistance towards the establishment of a national small arms commission to spearhead and coordinate national efforts to address the problem, and for the execution of a pilot small arms collection and destruction programme in the city of Bissau. While the level of criminality in Guinea-Bissau was relatively low, seizures of illicit weapons and cocaine suggested an increase in organized crime operators; the Police Commissioner expressed concern about the lack of resources to address the problem.

Regarding the proposed general amnesty (see p. 291), the National Popular Assembly referred the matter to the Parliamentary Commission on National Reconciliation and to the Committee for Legal and Constitutional Affairs. UNOGBIS partially funded a two-day seminar organized by civil society organizations to promote a better understanding of the legal aspects of the proposal.

The Secretary-General said he was encouraged by the renewed commitment of the national authorities to hold the elections on schedule and called on all candidates to do their utmost to ensure a peaceful election and to accept the results. He welcomed the process of reconciliation within the armed forces and the increasingly republican attitude adopted by the military, as well as the reaffirmation by the military leadership of its subordination to civilian authority. He encouraged the AU, ECOWAS, CPLP and other partners of Guinea-Bissau to continue their critical role in promoting peace and stability in the country. Reiterating that Guinea-Bissau continued to face tremendous political, social and economic challenges, he noted that the UN country team and UNOGBIS had concluded the review of the UN comprehensive peacebuilding strategy for Guinea-Bissau, which combined peace, security and development agendas and defined the activities to be implemented.

Presidential elections

Presidential candidates. As reported by the Secretary-General [S/2005/380], legal controversies surrounding the eligibility of two former Presidents, João Bernardo "Nino" Vieira and Koumba Yalá, to run for the presidency created a highly polarized atmosphere during the preparations for the presidential elections scheduled for 19 June. Mr. Vieira, who returned to Guinea-Bissau on 7 April for the first time since his overthrow in a 1999 coup [YUN 1999, p. 142], was welcomed by supporters, including a section of the governing African Party for the Independence of Guinea and Cape Verde (PAIGC). Mr. Yalá, on the other hand, nominated on 26 March by the Party of Social Renewal, filed his candidacy with the Supreme Court of Justice, in spite of a provision in the Political Transition Charter banning his participation in political activities for five years.

Communications. The EU, in an 8 April statement [S/2005/249], expressed its growing concern at recent developments in the country, particularly Mr. Yalá's decision to run in the 19 June presidential elections and his public declarations that could undermine the efforts and progress achieved thus far in Guinea-Bissau. It called on regional organizations, such as CPLP and ECOWAS, to remain actively engaged in support of the country's efforts to achieve political stability.

A press statement issued on 13 April on behalf of the Secretary-General [SG/SM/9818] stated his concern at the mounting political and social tensions as the country prepared for presidential elections. Accordingly, he directed his Representative in Guinea-Bissau to facilitate dialogue among all of the country's political actors, on whom he called to refrain from any action or statement that could jeopardize the elections.

The AU Peace and Security Council, by a communiqué issued at its thirty-first meeting (Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, 8 June) [S/2005/381], urged all presidential candidates and their supporters to refrain from any act that might disrupt the electoral process and to commit themselves to accepting the election results; welcomed the decision of the Commission on the Situation in Guinea-Bissau to deploy an observer mission to monitor the elections; called for accelerating preparations for the Donor Round Table Conference in November; and agreed in principle to the proposed establishment of an AU liaison office that would support efforts to promote stability and socio-economic development, and enhance democracy and respect for the rule of law and human rights in Guinea-Bissau.

Pre-election events. On 29 April, the Secretary-General appointed the former President of Mozambique, Joaquim Alberto Chissano, as his Special Envoy for Guinea-Bissau to facilitate the holding of peaceful and credible elections and to help bring the ongoing transition to a successful conclusion and thus to the restoration of constitutional order. During his visit to the country (2-10 May), Mr. Chissano met with actors involved in the electoral process and secured the publicly stated commitments of the armed forces and the Ministry of Defence to respect the Constitution and not to interfere in the electoral process. In a ruling announced on 18 May, the Supreme Court validated the applications of 17 of the 21 candidates, including former Presidents Vieira and Yalá. Although criticized by some, the ruling was accepted by the society at large. Tensions mounted again on 15 May, when Mr. Yalá announced that the Court's decision to allow him to stand had created a constitutional power vacuum in the country; consequently, he decided to resume his presidential term and postpone the elections. The authorities reacted by reaffirming the Government's commitment to hold elections as scheduled; the Military Committee Chairman publicly pledged his allegiance to Interim President Pereira Rosa; and, on 17 May, thousands of school children and students, led by their teachers, held a "march for peace". Similar marches were also held in the interior of the country. Following the alleged 25 May attempt by Mr. Yalá to occupy a building of the presidential compound, which he denied, Government authorities and the National Election Commission issued statements reaffirming their commitment to hold elections as scheduled. An electoral needs assessment mission dispatched by the Secretary-General to the country (18-25 May) concluded that the necessary technical conditions were in place for the holding of the first round of elections. On 28 May, the official candidates began their electoral campaign in Bissau. By the end of May, donors had committed over 2.6 million euros to fund the elections through UNDP and directly to the Government. The EU also committed up to 1.5 million euros to cover costs of its Election Observation Mission already deployed in Guinea-Bissau.

Elections. The first round of the presidential elections took place on 19 June as scheduled. It was described as peaceful by the Secretary-General, who commended the people of Guinea-Bissau for turning out in large numbers [SG/SM/9942]. The second round, held on 24 July, was also described by the Secretary-General as peaceful, free, fair and transparent. The provisional results were announced by the national election authorities on 28 July: the majority vote, 52.35 per cent, had gone to Nino Vieira, compared with 47.65 per cent for Mr. Malam Bacai Sanhá, which Mr. Sanhá and his party, PAIGC, rejected. The Secretary-General appealed for calm during the counting process prior to the announcement of the final results and stressed the need to employ legal means to address any electoral grievances [SG/SM/10018]. Tension persisted as Mr. Sanhá again rejected the final results announced on 10 August. Following mediation efforts by the AU, Mr. Sanhá filed an official appeal with the Supreme Court of Justice, indicating that he would accept the Court's ruling. The international community, particularly ECOWAS, CPLP, the AU and the United Nations, had cooperated closely and coordinated their efforts to reduce electoral tension.

Communication. Earlier, the EU, by a 1 August statement [S/2005/514], expressed pleasure that the second round of the presidential elections was considered by international observers, particularly by the European Union Election Observation Mission (EU EOM), to have been peaceful and generally well organized in a transparent and inclusive manner, in line with principles for democratic elections, and that the voters were able to exercise their franchise freely, despite a tense pre-election period. Noting the provisional results published on 28 July, the EU called on all political parties and stakeholders to ensure completion of the remaining part of the election process in line with constitutional and other legal provisions.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 19 August [meeting 5248], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2005/39 on behalf of the Council:

> The Security Council acknowledges with satisfaction the successful holding of the presidential elections in Guinea-Bissau and the announcement by the National Electoral Commission of the final results of the ballot. This marks an important step towards the restoration of constitutional order. The Council takes note of the appeal filed with the Supreme Court of Justice by one of the contenders and strongly encourages all parties to honour their commitments and accept the final ruling of the Court. The Council urges them to refrain from any actions that could jeopardize the efforts towards peace and stability in Guinea-Bissau.
> The Council commends the people of Guinea-Bissau for their encouraging participation in the electoral process.
> The Council pays tribute to Guinea-Bissau's partners and neighbours, who provided indispensable support for the holding of the elections. The Council also congratulates international observers on the essential role they played throughout the country, and welcomes their statement recognizing the presidential elections as free, fair and transparent.
> The Council expresses its appreciation for the contribution made by the African Union, the Community of Portuguese-speaking Countries, the Economic Community of West African States, the European Union, the Special Envoy of the Secretary-General, the Special Envoy of the Chairperson of the African Union, the Representative of the Secretary-General in Guinea-Bissau and the United Nations Peacebuilding Support Office in Guinea-Bissau, bilateral partners and international financial institutions. The Council underlines the importance of their timely diplomatic efforts aimed at promoting national dialogue and respect for the rule of law.
> Considering the challenges still facing Guinea-Bissau, the Council urges all relevant national and international parties to reaffirm their commitment to peace and democracy in Guinea-Bissau, and calls upon bilateral development partners of Guinea-Bissau, international financial institutions and United Nations agencies to increase their support for economic and social development and the consolidation of national institutions, as well as the promotion of good governance and human rights, in particular by providing emergency financial assistance and technical support, in the short run, and by participating actively in the Donor Round Table Conference to be held in November 2005.
> The Council therefore welcomes the decision taken by the Economic and Social Council on 26 July 2005 to extend the mandate of the Ad Hoc Advisory Group on Guinea-Bissau, and commends the Advisory Group for its work.
> The Council invites the Secretary-General to present recommendations in his next report regarding the updating of the mandate of the Support Office and its role in the consolidation of peace and stability in Guinea-Bissau in the post-transition period.

Also on 19 August, the Supreme Court of Justice confirmed the final results of the second round of the presidential elections. On the same date, the EU EOM released a statement confirming that the elections had met international principles for democratic elections and that, in accordance with the electoral law of Guinea-Bissau, all legal resources had been exhausted.

Nevertheless, on 20 August, Mr. Sanhá and Prime Minister Carlos Gomes Júnior, the PAIGC president, persisted in rejecting the Court's ruling. On 23 August, the Secretary-General took note of the Court's ruling and called on all parties to accept it [SG/SM/10055]. On 26 August, the Supreme Court rejected Mr. Sanhá's second request for annulment of the poll, declaring that due to "insufficient judicial elements" it could not rule on the request.

In New York, on 21 September, the Secretary-General met with the Prime Minister to impress upon him the need to abide by his commitment made before the General Assembly on 16 September that the President-elect would be inaugurated on 1 October 2005 [SG/SM/10117]. As confirmed to the Assembly, President-elect Vieira was sworn in on 1 October as the new President of Guinea-Bissau, marking the formal end of the transitional period, which the country had been undergoing since the coup d'état of 14 September 2003.

Post-electoral situation

Report of Secretary-General (September). In his September report [S/2005/575] on developments in Guinea-Bissau and UNOGBIS activities, the Secretary-General said that the political situation in the country remained fragile. Although the aftermath of the polling was marked by bitterness and sharp political divisions over the provisional election results, there were some positive aspects of the electoral process: the political neutrality of the armed forces, deemed crucial in guaranteeing a peaceful environment for the elections; the appeals by national civil society organizations to candidates and their supporters to practice civil tolerance; and the use by UNOGBIS of its good offices to promote dialogue among the political, military and civil society actors throughout the electoral process.

From March to August, UNOGBIS focused its activities on managing and resolving crises inherent in the political transition, and building working relationships with national stakeholders and international partners in preparation for the post-transition consolidation phase. It would also facilitate the development of self-sustainable national peacebuilding mechanisms and initiatives and resume its advocacy and good offices roles, as well as training and capacity-building activities, especially in conflict management and resolution.

A draft comprehensive peacebuilding strategy was prepared and discussed with national stakeholders, which aligned the short-term political objectives of consolidating peace and stability with the medium- to long-term objectives of promoting sustainable socio-economic development. Its objectives were: to promote self-sustaining dialogue; enhance governance, the rule of law and respect for human rights; foster harmonious relations between organs of sovereignty, assist in the creation of indigenous conflict prevention and national reconciliation mechanisms; support security sector reform and the implementation of the 2001 Programme of Action on small arms; and mobilize international support for quick-impact projects.

In his summary of developments so far, the Secretary-General noted that the aspects of the UNOGBIS mandate relating to the full restoration of constitutional order, the holding of peaceful, free and fair presidential elections and the elaboration of a UN peacebuilding strategy for Guinea-Bissau had been successfully implemented. The engagement of key national stakeholders and international partners on the question of security sector reform within the broader framework of public administration reform was under way, and the basis of a national initiative to address the challenge posed by illicit small arms and light weapons had been established and required resource mobilization.

In view of those developments, the Secretary-General proposed a revision of the UNOGBIS mandate and an increase in its resources base and personnel requirements (see p. 289).

Report of Secretary-General (December). In his December report on Guinea-Bissau and UNOGBIS [S/2005/752], the Secretary-General noted the strained political situation in the country. The persistent rejection of the election results by Mr. Sanhá and the stalling until 1 October of the inauguration of President Vieira raised internal tensions and worried the country's external partners. Because of the deep divisions over the elections, the Guinea-Bissau political class remained highly polarized, resulting in a realignment of political forces in Parliament caused by splits within the governing party. The rift in PAIGC arose over support by a faction of the party for the electoral campaign of President Vieira and deepened further when the party leadership, headed by former Prime Minister Carlos Gomes Júnior, sought to maintain sanctions applied against 14 PAIGC parliamentarians who had backed the Vieira campaign, including the PAIGC vice-president, Aristides Gomes. In an attempt to create a new majority in Parliament, the 14 suspended PAIGC parliamentarians and other parties and individuals supporting President Vieira formed the Forum for the Convergence of Development. Shortly after President Vieira took office, he and Prime Minister Carlos Gomes Júnior publicly stated their willingness to work together but their relations continued to be difficult. Thus, following intensive consultations, the President issued a decree on 28 October dismissing the Government, citing continuing tensions among the organs of State sovereignty, which hampered the smooth functioning of State institutions and weakened the Government's capacity to survive in Parliament. PAIGC denounced the decision as "arbitrary and unconstitutional". On 2 November, the President issued another decree appointing Aristides Gomes as Prime Minister, drawing further adverse reaction from the PAIGC leadership, who contested the decision in the Supreme Court of Justice, insisting that the Prime Minister should come from PAIGC as the party majority in Parliament. On 9 November, the President named a new Government, which was expected to present its programme and the 2006 budget to the regular month-long parliamentary session.

UNOGBIS continued to use its good offices, often in tandem with ECOWAS, to help calm tensions and to focus on helping to develop self-sustaining national peacebuilding mechanisms.

The Secretary-General, noting that political tensions along personality and party lines continued to cast a shadow on the prospects for stability in Guinea-Bissau, warned that the lingering political instability not only hampered further democratic progress, but could lead donors to withhold urgently needed assistance to meet the country's reconstruction and development needs. He called upon all political actors and the society at large to respect the Supreme Court's ruling, once rendered, over the constitutionality of the President's government changes.

Further developments. In a later report [S/2006/162], the Secretary-General said that the stand-off between the Government and the opposition in Parliament had hampered progress in the normalization of relations among State institutions. The bitter divisions were mirrored in a National Popular Assembly polarized into two blocs: one, a dissident PAIGC faction supporting the Government appointed by the President on 2 November; the other, allied to the previous PAIGC Government dismissed by the President on 28 October. The balance of power remained fluid, with neither side able to assure sustainable support in Parliament. UNOGBIS led joint efforts with CPLP and ECOWAS to get the two sides to negotiate their differences constructively. A process initiated to bring together senior presidential advisers, government representatives, parliamentary parties and the Permanent Commission of the National Popular Assembly resulted in the participants' commitment to constructive dialogue and reconciliation, yet the will to move to joint problem-solving was lacking.

UNOGBIS continued its support of national efforts towards security sector reform. In December, it presented to the Government the report of the United Kingdom Security Sector Development Advisory Team that visited the country in October. Based on one of the recommendations in the report, the Prime Minister issued a decree creating an inter-ministerial committee on security sector reform.

Cameroon–Nigeria

In 2005, Cameroon and Nigeria continued to cooperate peacefully to advance progress in implementing the 2002 ruling of the International Court of Justice on the land and maritime boundary between them through the Cameroon-Nigeria Mixed Commission. The Secretary-General, through his good offices and with UN Secretariat support, continued to facilitate implementation. During the year, the withdrawal and transfer of authority along the land boundary were completed, as was a field assessment pilot project to establish the modus operandi of the complex survey of the land boundary. Demarcation of the land boundary began in early November southward from Lake Chad, spanning the distance from the mouth of the river Ebeji to Lawa/Wulba [UNOWA/CNMC/2005/09].

At their fourth meeting with the Secretary-General in May, the Heads of State of the two parties renewed their commitment to pursue to completion of the outstanding aspects of the implementation, including the Bakassi peninsula and the maritime boundary into the Gulf of Guinea.

Cameroon–Nigeria Mixed Commission

The Cameroon-Nigeria Mixed Commission, the mechanism established by the Secretary-General on 15 November 2002 [YUN 2002, p. 1265] at the request of the Presidents of Nigeria and Cameroon to facilitate the peaceful implementation of the 10 October 2002 ruling of the International Court of Justice (ICJ) on the border dispute between them [ibid., p. 1265], remained under the chairmanship of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for West Africa, Ahmedou Ould-Abdallah (Mauritania). The Commission was responsible for the demarcation of the land boundary between the two countries; the withdrawal of civil administration, military and police forces and transfer of authority in relevant areas along the boundary; the eventual demilitarization of the Bakassi peninsula; the protection of the rights of the affected populations; the development of projects to promote joint economic ventures and cross-border cooperation; and the reactivation of the five-member Lake Chad Basin Commission (Cameroon, Central African Republic, Chad, Niger and Nigeria), created in 1964 for the regulation and planning of the uses of the Lake and other natural resources of the conventional basin.

The Mixed Commission established two subcommissions: one responsible for the demarcation of the 1,600-kilometre land boundary between the two countries, with a joint technical team to carry out field assessments of the boundary and to supervise the demarcation work to be undertaken by outside contractors; the other to assess the situation of the affected populations and to consider ways to ensure the protection of their rights. Of the Commission's three working groups, those on the withdrawal of civil administration and military and police forces and the transfer of authority in the Lake Chad area, and on withdrawals and transfers of authority in the land boundary, completed their work in December 2003 and July 2004, respectively. The third working group, on maritime boundary, remained in place. An observer team was responsible for following up on the withdrawals and transfers of authority in the Lake Chad area and the land boundary. A UN team based in Dakar, Senegal, provided technical and logistical assistance and substantive support to the Commission and its subsidiary bodies. The mandate of the United Nations Office for West Africa also called for support to the work of the Mixed Commission (see p. 224).

The activities of the Mixed Commission in 2005 focused on three core tasks: completing and consolidating the transfers of authority undertaken in 2004 through monitoring, assessment and support activities on behalf of the affected populations placed under new administration along the final land boundary; finding solutions to the outstanding maritime boundary issues; and carrying out the demarcation process to its conclusion [A/59/534/Add.1].

Activities

Progress report. On 1 August [S/2005/528], the Secretary-General informed the Security Council of the latest achievements and activities undertaken by the Mixed Commission to implement the 2002 ICJ ruling. He reported that, since his progress report of 17 March 2004 [YUN 2004, p. 230], Cameroon and Nigeria had made encouraging and significant progress with support from the United Nations.

To consolidate the withdrawal and transfer of authority in the Lake Chad area and along the land boundary, the Commission deployed a team of civilian observers from Cameroon, Nigeria and the United Nations for a 12-month period from the withdrawal date. The team reported that the situation in the two areas remained calm and the issues raised by the affected populations were being addressed by the new authorities in the transferred areas. To foster confidence among the parties, the Commission identified projects aimed at promoting cross-border cooperation and joint economic activities. It sought financing for those projects from several multilateral financial and development organizations and obtained voluntary contributions to cover costs related to the work of two military advisers and a legal expert on the maritime boundary. In-kind contributions in the form of accommodations and transportation were provided by the two countries for the Commission's meetings and field visits to the Lake Chad area, the land boundary and the Bakassi peninsula. Both countries made a number of reciprocal official visits and discussed cross-border cooperation.

The first phase of the demarcation activities was a pilot field assessment undertaken from March to May (on a 62-kilometre stretch) to verify the location of the physical boundary line as depicted on preliminary maps produced by the United Nations and to determine pillar sites. The exercise sought to establish the technical modalities of the survey of the 1,600-kilometre land boundary. The field assessment was to be followed by the emplacement of pillars, a final survey and a final mapping. A workplan on the maritime boundary agreed upon by the two parties in June 2004 included the delineation of the maritime boundary, as delimited by the 2002 ICJ decision, and the production of a map on that basis. It was expected that the delimitation process would continue in the second half of 2005.

At the Secretary-General's fourth meeting with the Presidents of Cameroon and Nigeria (Geneva, 10-11 May) to review the work of the Commission, the Presidents renewed their commitment to pursue the peaceful implementation of the ICJ ruling and move the process forward to its completion. The withdrawal and transfer of authority in the Bakassi Peninsula, which had been planned for 15 September 2004, were delayed due to technical reasons raised by one of the parties. The demarcation of the land boundary, expected to last about 96 weeks, began on 8 November 2005 by a team of experts from Cameroon, Nigeria and the United Nations.

Of an estimated budget of $12 million for the demarcation of the land boundary, the Mixed Commission raised $8.15 million in voluntary contributions. In addition to the logistical support provided by the parties, Canada, Italy,

Norway, Sweden and Uruguay also provided substantive and technical support in the form of military and legal experts. The Secretary-General underscored that the Mixed Commission was funded entirely from extrabudgetary funds from its inception to 2003. During the 2004-2005 biennium, however, some $9 million was provided from the UN regular budget. Given the Commission's remaining tasks, he intended to ask for additional funds from the regular budget for the Commission for 2006.

On 12 August [S/2005/529], the Security Council took note of the foregoing information from the Secretary-General and of his intention to continue the activities of the UN support team to the Cameroon-Nigeria Mixed Commission with funding from the UN regular budget. The Council urged the parties to the Mixed Commission to work with international donors to seek further voluntary contributions.

Earlier, on 13 July [S/2005/475], the EU expressed concern at reports of security incidents in the Bakassi peninsula. It urged Nigeria and Cameroon to work constructively to establish the facts, defuse tension and meet under the auspices of the Mixed Commission as soon as practicable.

Financing

The General Assembly, by section VII of resolution 59/276 [YUN 2004, p. 1385], approved requirements for the Cameroon-Nigeria Mixed Commission for the period 1 January to 31 December 2005 in the amount of $3,938,200. In December 2005, the Secretary-General, in his report on estimates in respect of special political missions, good offices and other political initiatives authorized by the General Assembly and/or the Security Council [A/60/585 & Corr.1], proposed resource requirements for the Commission of $7,339,000 for the period 1 January to 31 December 2006.

The Assembly, in section VI of resolution 60/248 of 23 December (see p. 1495), acting on ACABQ's recommendation [A/607/Add.24], approved a prorated amount for the Commission out of the $100 million authorized for the 26 special political missions and decided to reconsider the issue at its resumed sixtieth (2006) session.

Togo

During 2005, the West African State of Togo underwent a political crisis that arose from the question of succession due to the death of its President on 5 February and the absence from the country of the President of the National Assembly, who, under the Constitution, would have assumed office as Acting President pending elections within 60 days. The appointment on 9 February of Fauré Gnassingbé, the late President's son, as Interim President, sparked widespread demonstrations and mounting pressure from the United Nations, the EU, the AU and ECOWAS for Togo to hold presidential elections consistent with the Constitution and the rule of law. Mr. Gnassingbé stepped down on 25 February and ran in the presidential elections, held on 24 April.

Although the elections proper were orderly, serious political violence and human rights violations followed the announcement of the election results on 26 April, declaring Mr. Gnassingbé the winner. A fact-finding mission dispatched by the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to assess the situation published its report in September. The Government said it would consider the recommendations within the framework of the national reconciliation process and other efforts to strengthen democracy and the rule of law, which it was determined to pursue.

Transfer of presidential power

The Secretary-General, by a press statement issued on 5 February [SG/SM/9706] on the death of President Gnassingbé Eyadéma of Togo, extended his condolences to the bereaved family, the Government and the people of Togo. Noting that the late President had played a central role in the governance of the country for almost 40 years and had contributed significantly to the peaceful settlement of disputes in Africa in general and in West Africa in particular, the Secretary-General trusted the Togolese authorities to take all necessary measures to preserve stability in the country and ensure a peaceful transfer of power. Two days later, [SG/SM/9711], he expressed concern that the transfer of power had not been done in full respect of the Constitution.

Togo explained, in a memorandum of 8 February [A/59/697], that uncertainty and insecurity gripped the country owing to the power vacuum created by the death of the President and by the absence from the country of the President of the National Assembly, Fambaré Ouattara Natchaba, who in such an event would serve as Acting President pending elections. After consultations within the military and security forces and among the leaders of the ruling party, the Rassemblement du peuple togolais (RPT), on how to preserve national stability and safeguard civil order, the Parliament met in special session and unanimously relieved the absent Assembly President of his duties. Minister Faure Gnassingbé, son of the late President and a member of the National Assembly before being appointed Minister, was proposed by the military for the presidency. To that end, he resigned his ministerial position and resumed his Assembly seat; he was then elected President of the National Assembly and, as such, temporarily assumed the duties as President of Togo. Parliament also amended the constitutional requirement under article 65 that elections be held within 60 days, a period deemed insufficient given the political climate in the country.

In his address to the nation on 9 February [A/59/700], President Fauré Gnassingbé enumerated the late President's major achievements. He stated that he had been appointed to the presidency as a matter of urgency and pledged to carry out fully the responsibilities conferred upon him by the Constitution. He then announced his decision to reduce by one quarter the sentences of those imprisoned for ordinary offences, invited Togolese nationals living abroad to return at any time, and asked the Government to carry on dialogue with the opposition in a new spirit. He said that the 22 commitments made by Togo in Brussels on 14 April 2004 would remain the country's basic guidelines (see below).

Resignation of appointed President

On 12 February [SG/SM/9716], the Secretary-General expressed concern over the deteriorating security situation in Togo and the deaths and injuries caused by violence in the capital, Lomé, where demonstrators protested the unconstitutional succession of Fauré Gnassingbé to the presidency. He called on all sides to exercise maximum restraint while the search for an early and peaceful solution to the crisis continued. On 19 February [SG/SM/9728], concerned that talks between ECOWAS and the Togolese authorities on the country's constitutional crisis had not advanced, and noting that ECOWAS had suspended Togo from that regional body, the Secretary-General reiterated his call for urgent efforts to find a peaceful solution.

By a 23 February statement [S/2005/136], the EU expressed great alarm at developments in Togo. While it welcomed the positive signals given by the announcement of presidential elections within 60 days and restoration of the freedom to demonstrate, it condemned the violation of constitutional and legal provisions in the continued maintenance of Mr. Fauré Gnassingbé as Interim President. The EU demanded an immediate return to constitutional and legal order to open the way for free and transparent presidential elections and supported the actions of the AU and ECOWAS in that regard.

The Secretary-General, on 25 February [SG/SM/9737], welcomed Mr. Gnassingbé's decision to step down as Head of State of Togo and the subsequent designation by the National Assembly of an Interim Head of State who would oversee the organization of the forthcoming elections in accordance with the Constitution. He noted that because of those positive developments, ECOWAS lifted the sanctions it had imposed on Togo.

The EU on 4 March [S/2005/147] stated its readiness to assist in facilitating free and transparent elections. It insisted that the Government honour the 22 undertakings it had made in the framework of the consultations held under article 96 of the 2000 Cotonou Declaration [YUN 2000, p. 544] on peace, security, democracy and development, particularly in the holding of a national dialogue to set up an electoral framework acceptable to all parties for the conduct of presidential and parliamentary elections.

Presidential elections

Pre-election events. On 20 April [SG/SM/9831], following fatal clashes between supporters and opponents of RPT, the Secretary-General called on political leaders to avoid any actions or statements that could incite or contribute to violence before, during or after the 24 April presidential vote. In the light of the many concerns already raised about the electoral process, he urged the authorities to ensure that citizens were able to vote freely and peacefully. He reiterated the readiness of the United Nations to work with all segments of the society to promote national reconciliation and socio-economic development following a peaceful electoral process.

On 21 April [HR/4829], two UN human rights experts expressed concern over reports of violent clashes during demonstrations by sympathizers of the various political parties that resulted in casualties and in the arrest of a number of demonstrators, of the media being prevented from covering the electoral campaigns, and of irregularities in the context of the organization of the elections.

Elections. By a press statement issued on 24 April [SG/SM/9836], the day of the presidential elections, the Secretary-General commended the peaceful and orderly manner in which the Togolese turned out in large numbers to cast their votes in the elections, as well as the sense of political and civic responsibility demonstrated by the leaders and the population. He appealed for calm while the official results were being awaited and urged parties to refer any electoral disputes to the appropriate authorities as provided for in the Electoral Code. In a statement two days later [SG/SM/9841], he expressed grave concern over reports of violence in Lomé following the voting on 24 April and the announcement of the preliminary results on 26 April. He called on political leaders and their supporters to refrain from actions inciting further violence, hatred and divisions; he also called on the security forces to exercise similar restraint. He commended efforts by regional leaders and institutions, particularly ECOWAS, to promote peace, and welcomed the AU initiative to encourage dialogue and national reconciliation.

Post-electoral period. On 28 April, UNHCR announced the deployment of an emergency team to neighbouring Benin, where more than 3,600 refugees had fled due to insecurity in Togo following the announcement of the election results, and that an additional 450 Togolese had sought refuge in Ghana.

According to a 10 June press statement [HR/4855], the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights established a fact-finding mission to look into allegations of human rights violations in Togo between 5 February and 5 May. The mission was to assess human rights issues arising from the conduct of the presidential elections, verify reports of alleged violations and compile information on perpetrators. The mission was to arrive in Togo on 13 June for about two weeks of field work.

The Government of Togo issued a 27 September communiqué [A/60/392] by which it took note of the publication of the final report of the fact-finding mission, indicating that before and during the presidential elections on 24 April, and despite the climate of tension and conflict, only a few acts of violence and minor incidents, such as the clashes of 15 April between coalition and RPT militants, had occurred between the death of the late President on 5 February and 24 April.

Togo drew attention to the report's conclusions regarding the post-electoral period, from 26 to 29 April, according to which militants belonging to the opposition were responsible for a number of actions which led to reactions from the security forces and RPT militants. The announcement on 26 April by the Independent National Electoral Commission of the provisional election results indicating that the RPT candidate, Fauré Gnassingbé, had won, unleashed an outbreak of the most serious acts of political violence and systematic violations of human rights. Clashes again broke out from 27 to 29 April in Lomé and in the interior, resulting in many deaths and injuries. Togo disputed as unsubstantiated the statements of witnesses putting the number of deaths at between 400 and 500, adding that the report made no distinction between deaths caused by one side or the other in order to establish responsibility.

With respect to the report's recommendation enjoining the Togolese, particularly the political leadership, to heed the republican values of mutual respect and respect for public and private property, and of the urgent need to combat impunity, Togo noted that the mandate of the Special National Inquiry Commission included the assessment of the damages incurred by the State and those by all other victims, with a view to taking adequate measures. The Government was determined to pursue the institutional reforms already under way, particularly those related to justice, the restoration of public confidence in the institutions of the country and the creation of conditions favourable to an all-inclusive political dialogue.

The EU, taking note of the fact-finding mission report on 25 October [S/2005/711], reiterated its condemnation of acts of violence and called on the Togolese authorities to deal thoroughly and fairly with the issue of human rights by prosecuting those responsible for such violence so as to end any sense of impunity. It further renewed its call for genuine dialogue involving all political forces in the country.

Horn of Africa

The political landscape in the Horn of Africa, which continued to be characterized by complex interlocking conflicts and rebellions, underwent a number of changes in 2005.

In the Sudan, the largest country in the region, the 21-year civil war officially ended in January with the signing by the Government and the Sudan Peoples' Liberation Movement/Army of the Comprehensive Peace Agreement between them, setting forth a new relationship between the north and the south based on power- and wealth-sharing arrangements. Under those terms, the Government of National Unity was established in September and the Government of southern Sudan in December; the restructured political system provided for a referendum in 2011 in which the south would decide whether to secede from the rest of the country. In March, the Security Council established the United Nations Mission in the Sudan (UNMIS) to help the parties implement the Peace Agreement. In addition, UNMIS helped to support the African Union Mission in the Sudan in its efforts to monitor the ceasefire in the Darfur region and to broker a deal to end the fighting between the rebel groups there. The hope that the new political arrangements might lead to a solution to the crisis in Darfur was not realized.

In Somalia, the fledgling Transitional Federal Government, established in 2004, based first in Nairobi, Kenya, and by mid-year in Somalia, was not operational for most of the year due to an impasse between the President and the Prime Minister on the one hand, and the Speaker of Parliament and some parliamentarians and ministers on the other, regarding the relocation site of the Government and the composition of an interim peace support mission, sponsored by the Intergovernmental Authority on Development and endorsed by the AU, in response to a request by the President. The United Nations Political Office for Somalia pursued its contacts with Somali leaders and other entities concerned in order to advance the peace and reconciliation process. The Monitoring Group on Somalia, charged by the Council with investigating violations of the arms embargo imposed on the country, continued to discharge its mandate on a renewable six-month basis.

The border dispute between Eritrea and Ethiopia remained unsettled. The United Nations Mission in Ethiopia and Eritrea continued to monitor the border region designated as the Temporary Security Zone and to support the work of the five-member Eritrea-Ethiopia Boundary Commission, the neutral body mandated under the terms of the 2000 Agreement on Cessation of Hostilities and Comprehensive Peace Agreement to delimit and demarcate the colonial treaty border. The Commission attempted but failed to advance its demarcation activities, stalled since 2003, due to the continued rejection by Ethiopia of significant parts of the Commission's 2002 final and binding delimitation decision and to Eritrea's insistence on adherence to that decision. The Commission thus suspended its activities and closed its field offices. Meanwhile, each country strengthened its military posture adjacent to its side of the Zone. As demanded by the Council, Ethiopia subsequently withdrew its troops to their previous deployment levels; Eritrea maintained it had no troops to withdraw. Contrary to the Council's demand that it lift its restrictions on the freedom of movement of the Mission, Eritrea increased them and, moreover, in December, asked certain nationalities of its staff to leave the country. The Council, in consultation with the Secretary-General, agreed to relocate the Mission's civilian and military staff temporarily to Ethiopia, while it reviewed future plans for the Mission.

Sudan

In 2005, the situation in the Sudan was marked by hope and disappointment. While efforts to resolve the conflict between the north and the south were successfully concluded, ending a 21-year civil war, the security situation in the Darfur region of the western part of the country deteriorated significantly, and the political process for finding a solution to that conflict remained mired in a stalemate.

In January, the Comprehensive Peace Agreement signed by the Government and the Sudan People's Liberation Movement/Army (SPLM/A) laid the basis for a new relationship between the north and the south based on arrangements for power-sharing and wealth-sharing, the establishment of a Government of National Unity and the government of southern Sudan, as well as the adoption of a new constitution. The restructured political system, based on democracy and respect for human rights, provided for a final decision on secession to be made by the south at the end of six years. The Security Council established the United Nations Mission in the Sudan (UNMIS) to help the parties implement the Peace Agreement, with the assistance of the international community. However, the optimism generated by that historic event was overshadowed by the death of John Garang, the SPLM/A Chairman and First Vice-President in the National Unity Government in a helicopter crash. Contrary to expectations, Mr. Garang's death did not derail implementation of the Peace Agreement and his successor, Salva Kiir, promised to adhere to all the agreements reached.

The signing of the Comprehensive Peace Agreement and the establishment of the Government of National Unity raised hopes for finding a solution to the crisis in the Darfur region, where two local rebel groups, the Justice and Equality Movement (JEM) and the Sudanese Liberation Movement/Army (SLM/A), were still fighting Government forces and allied militia groups.

The African Union Mission in the Sudan (AMIS), supported by the United Nations, particularly UNMIS, the European Union (EU), the United States, the North Atlantic Treaty Organization and other donors, increased its military deployment to more than 6,300 troops. In addition to monitoring the fragile ceasefire in Darfur, the AU stepped up its mediation efforts to broker a deal to end the fighting between the rebel groups. However, despite several rounds of talks in Abuja, Nigeria, a solution remained elusive as divisions within the rebel movement widened and the parties remained uncompromising in their positions on the issues of power-sharing, wealth-sharing and security.

Comprehensive Peace Agreement

Report of Secretary-General. In his 7 January report on the Sudan [S/2005/10], the Secretary-General welcomed the initialling on 31 December 2004 [YUN 2004, p. 256] by the Government of the Sudan and the Sudan People's Liberation Movement/Army (SPLM/A) of the last two agreements of the north-south peace process: the Agreement on the Implementation Modalities of the Protocols and Agreements, and the Agreement on the Permanent Ceasefire and Security Agreements Implementation Modalities, both of which were part of the Comprehensive Peace Agreement. The Secretary-General said that he looked forward to the signing of the Comprehensive Peace Agreement and indicated that the United Nations was prepared to play a significant role in its implementation. He was nevertheless concerned that there was no agreed basis to allow the UN advance mission in the Sudan to start its pre-deployment activities in the SPLM/A controlled areas. The Secretary-General expected that the signing of the Comprehensive Peace Agreement would improve capacity to solve the problems in the Darfur region (see p. 315).

Terms of Comprehensive Peace Agreement. The Comprehensive Peace Agreement was signed on 9 January in Nairobi, Kenya, by the Government of the Sudan, represented by Vice-President Ali Osman Mohamed Taha, and SPLM/A, represented by Chairman John Garang de Mabior. It was witnessed by several African and international representatives, including the Presidents of Kenya and Uganda, the United States Secretary of State and the United Kingdom Secretary of State for International Development, the AU Chairperson and the EU representative. The Agreement, transmitted to the Council President by the Sudan on 8 February [S/2005/78], consisted of four protocols, two framework agreements and two annexes regarding implementation modalities: the Machakos Protocol, signed on 20 July 2002 [YUN 2002, p. 217]; the Protocol on Power Sharing, signed on 26 May 2004 [YUN 2004, p. 236]; the Agreement on Wealth Sharing during the Pre-Interim and Interim Period, dated 7 January 2004; Principles of Agreement for the resolution of the Abyei conflict, signed on 26 May 2004 [ibid.]; the Protocol on the Resolution of the Conflict in Southern Kordofan and Blue Nile States, signed on 26 May 2004 [ibid.]; and the Framework Agreement on Security Arrangements during the Interim Period, dated 25 September 2003 [YUN 2003, p. 257]. Annexed to the Agreement were the Permanent Ceasefire and Security Arrangements Implementation Modalities and Appendices [YUN 2004, p. 256]; and Implementation Modalities and Global Implementation Matrix and Appendices, both signed on 31 December 2004 [ibid.]. In the chapeau to the Comprehensive Peace Agreement, the parties agreed to the beginning of the Interim Period and appealed to the regional and international communities, organizations and States that had witnessed the signing of the Agreement to provide and affirm their unwavering support for its implementation and make available resources for its programmes and activities in the transition to peace.

Security Council consideration. In briefing the Security Council on 11 January [meeting 5109], the Secretary-General's Special Representative for the Sudan, Jan Pronk, said that the signing of the Comprehensive Peace Agreement heralded the definitive end to nearly four decades of conflict, the uprooting and displacement of 4 million people and half a million refugees in neighbouring countries. However, it was not the end. Former combatants would have to be disarmed and demobilized; displaced people and refugees would need to return and participate in the economy and society, claiming a share of the resources, including land; other southern militant groups that did not participate in the peace talks would have to be incorporated into the new structures; and people's expectations concerning welfare, growth, education and other social and economic needs would have to be met.

Communication. The EU Presidency, in an 11 January statement [S/2005/37], welcomed the signing of the Agreement and reiterated its support for international efforts to consolidate it, in close cooperation with the United Nations, the AU and the Intergovernmental Authority on Development (IGAD).

Implementation of Comprehensive Peace Agreement

Report of Secretary-General (January). On 31 January, the Secretary-General, in his report on the Sudan [S/2005/57], said that harmonizing all aspects of the Comprehensive Peace Agreement would be a complex task. Some grey areas and potentially difficult issues remained, with the parties having differing interpretations of the texts that could prove controversial at a later stage. Some complicated issues had been left for the Presidency to decide and some decisions deferred to a later date. The creation of the Assessment and Evaluation Commission, the body to monitor the Agreement's implementation, as provided for in the Machakos Protocol, had been delayed until the adoption of the Interim National Constitution and the establishment of the Presidency. In addition, the government of southern Sudan faced the challenge of raising funds to pay its army and to achieve proportional downsizing. At the same time, political solutions would have to be found for other marginalized and unstable regions, such as Darfur. The integration of other armed groups in both the north and south was another challenge, to be carried out in good faith with international support. SPLM/A would have to engage with southern constituencies forming the south-south dialogue to jointly discuss the creation of southern institutions and public policies and to forge a shared vision for southern Sudan in line with the Comprehensive Peace Agreement. At the same time, the South Sudan Defence Force (a coalition of southern factions) would need assurances that the south-south dialogue would be carried out in good faith and result in a fair share of political and socio-economic power. In the north, traditional power structures would have to shift to accommodate the new alignment.

The Secretary-General welcomed the parties' engagement with a broad spectrum of the opposition to begin developing a consensus on peace implementation. He supported the convening of an all-inclusive national conference to discuss future governance in the Sudan, to be articulated in the national constitution and federal arrangements.

To assist in the implementation of the Comprehensive Peace Agreement, the Secretary-General recommended the establishment of the United Nations Advance Mission in Sudan (UNAMIS), whose main tasks would be to support implementation of the Comprehensive Peace Agreement; ensure security and freedom of movement for UN personnel and protect civilians; and provide governance assistance, as well as humanitarian and development assistance. UNAMIS mandate would be for seven years, including the pre-interim and interim periods, followed by a phase-out period. The Mission, to be headed by the Secretary-General's Special Representative, would have authority over all UN entities in the field, providing overall management and policy guidance, and coordinating all UN activities throughout the country. The Special Representative would be assisted by two deputies, one of whom would work with the Special Representative in matters relating to good offices and political support for the peace process and governance, and the other would act as the Resident Coordinator and Humanitarian Coordinator. The Force Commander would be responsible for the deployment and operation of UN military personnel. The Mission's area of operation would include six sectors (the Equatorial area, the Bahr el Ghazal area, the Upper Nile area, the Nuba Mountains area, Southern Blue Nile and the Abyei area). The mission's headquarters would be based in Khartoum, with a special office in Rumbek, the southern capital or wherever the southern government might choose to relocate. The Mission would include the following political components: public information, military, civilian police, rule of law, human rights, civil affairs, and electoral assistance. The military component would have a troop strength of 10,130, comprising 750 military observers, 160 staff officers, up to 5,070 enabling units, a force protection component of 4,150 and 755 civilian police.

The Secretary-General also emphasized that substantial resources were required for relief and recovery, including the return, repatriation and resettlement of internally displaced persons and refugees, as well as for the development activities envisaged by the joint assessment mission. Member States were urged to fund fully the work plan for 2005 and to make their contributions early, so as to allow for substantial recovery programming that could quickly demonstrate to the Sudanese people the dividends of peace. He recommended that the Security Council authorize the deployment of a multinational peace support operation with the mandate as he had proposed.

Security Council consideration (4 February). During the Security Council's consideration of the Secretary-General's report [S/2005/57], on 4 February [meeting 5119], the Special Representative for the Sudan affirmed that measures were being prepared to support the parties in their implementation of the Peace Agreement through the United Nations Advance Mission in Sudan (UNAMIS), established in 2004 [YUN 2004, p. 247]. Plans for the establishment of an institutional framework for the United Nations in south Sudan were already under way and consultations and briefings were held with both the Government and SPLM on those issues. The logistical and operational plan was developed to deploy just over 10,000 troops for monitoring and verification.

The Special Representative noted that, despite the signing of the Agreement, some areas still remained to be agreed upon (see p. 302). That process would be completed by the new presidency of the Sudan, which was to be composed of President Al-Bashir and Vice-Presidents Taha and Garang. He warned that if solutions were not found to the conflicts in Darfur and elsewhere in the Sudan, any peace support operation limited to south Sudan would be affected by the consequences of such conflicts. Therefore, for peace to be sustainable, the Government and the people of the Sudan would have to choose a comprehensive approach to address all the causes of conflict in a holistic and balanced way. The peace support operation would also have to be comprehensive and balanced. Tasks and priorities would be regularly assessed in the light of changing circumstances.

The indivisibility of peace in the Sudan also had consequences for UN peace efforts. In accordance with Council resolutions 1555(2004) [ibid. p. 127] and 1564(2004) [ibid. p.245], the Secretary-General had incorporated contingency planning for Darfur into the mission.

Security Council consideration (8 February). At its February 8 meeting [meeting 5120], the Council President welcomed the sense of ownership demonstrated by the Sudanese parties in the achievement of the Comprehensive Peace Agreement, and expected them to demonstrate likewise in its implementation. The Council endorsed Norway's initiative to convene a donor's conference in Oslo for the mobilization of resources. Council members were preparing a draft resolution to address all aspects of the situation in the Sudan, in particular the establishment of a UN peace support operation. The Council supported the Secretary-General's recommendations that the proposed mission cooperate with the AU and support its efforts to resolve the ongoing conflicts in the Darfur region.

The Sudan's First Vice-President, Ali Osman Taha, informed the Council that the Comprehensive Peace Agreement had been endorsed by the legislative institutions and actual implementation had begun. In that regard, Sudan was ready to discuss with the United Nations the details of its proposed mission (see p. 303). He appealed for the lifting of economic and trade restrictions or sanctions; the writing off of the Sudan's foreign debt; and generous donations at the upcoming donors conference to get the economic development process under way. The Government was firm in its commitment to apply the basic principles endorsed in the 1998 Constitution and the Comprehensive Peace Agreement to all states of the Sudan and to undertake a final settlement on the basis of those principles.

SPLM/A Chairman Garang told the Council that SPLM's National Liberation Council, the Movement's highest legislative body, had unanimously ratified the Comprehensive Peace Agreement on 24 January and the National Assembly on 1 February. In preparation for the Agreement's implementation, SPLM/A had established several committees to work out mechanisms to transform its various organs of guerilla warfare and armed opposition into institutions of good governance. It was holding discussions with the Government of the Sudan and planned to send advance teams to Khartoum, Juba, Malaka, Wau, Kadugli, Damazien and Abyei, as specified in the Agreement, to facilitate coordination of its implementation. Both sides were also evaluating the drafts of their respective joint assessment missions for presentation at the upcoming Oslo conference, and were also working jointly on an initial draft of the interim national constitution for presentation to and adoption by their respective legislative authorities. The interim constitution would launch the Government of National Unity, the government of southern Sudan and other structures stipulated in the Comprehensive Peace Agreement. He urged the international community to help with the enormous task of the voluntary return, reintegration and rehabilitation of returning refugees and internally displaced persons. SPLM/A supported, in principle, the deployment of a UN peace support mission and requested discussions with the United Nations of the details of that mission

He said that he was encouraged to believe that the Comprehensive Peace Agreement could be successfully applied and adapted to the conflicts in Darfur and eastern Sudan so that a comprehensive peace agreement might be achieved for the whole of the country.

18. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Further political developments

Report of Secretary-General (June). In a 23 June report [S/2005/411], the Secretary-General, in an assessment of the overall situation in the country since the signing of the Comprehensive Peace Agreement and the commencement of the implementation process, said that, at the start of the interim period of six and a half years of shared responsibility between the Government and SPLM/A, many of the political players in the north, as well as some forces in the south of the Sudan, were still hesitant to commit themselves to an agreement to which they were not party, especially its provisions on wealth-sharing arrangements. However, on 18 June (Cairo, Egypt), after months of effort and inconclusive talks, an agreement was finalized by the National Democratic Alliance and the Government, including Mr. Garang, that would enable the Alliance to participate in its implementation. As a sign of increasing engagement, more than 100 political leaders and civil society representatives attending a South-South Dialogue Conference (Nairobi, Kenya, April), at which they signed a covenant pledging to defend the Agreement and declaring their commitment to a process of reconciliation and national healing. They also adopted a number of resolutions that addressed various steps to be taken in support of the Agreement's implementation. However, on 1 June, 15 Sudanese political parties, including the Umma National Party and the Popular National Congress, signed a political declaration pledging to work together, but not in the context of the Agreement.

The Joint National Transition Team commenced its duties related to the Agreement's implementation, playing a crucial role in preparing for the establishment of governments at the national, southern Sudan and state/regional levels. It also developed fund-raising strategies for the smooth and timely commencement of the interim period, including the finalization of the joint Government-SPLM/A position for the donors' conference held in Oslo on 11 April. In addition, SPLM/A began to establish its presence in Khartoum, as well as in southern areas under the Government's control to set up SPLM/A political structures and had started working with the National Congress and local authorities.

On 30 April, the National Constitutional Review Commission was inaugurated. Composed of representatives from the Government, SPLM/A and some northern- and southern-based political opposition parties, the Commission met in both Khartoum and Rumbek. The conclusion of its work would pave the way for the establishment of the Government of National Unity.

The Abyei area, having been accorded special administrative status under the Agreement during the interim period, and considered the bridge between the north and the south, required particular attention. The Abyei Boundaries Commission, which was constituted in Nairobi, visited the region in April and May. The Secretary-General expressed concern over the obstruction of the Commission's activities by rogue elements resulting in a number of security incidents. Moreover, numerous armed groups in southern Sudan posed a potential security threat and risked jeopardizing the Agreement's implementation. To address the problem, SPLM and the Government convened an initial meeting of the Collaborative Committee of Other Armed Groups, but no further progress was made. The Joint Media Commission, established by the parties in early March, worked to improve the population's awareness of the Agreement's provisions, address the issue of hostile propaganda and help develop a cooperative relationship between the parties in the area of information. UNMIS assisted the Commission in its work. Concerning the joint integrated units to be deployed in the ceasefire areas and in Khartoum, the Government and SPL/A identified their participants and held discussions in the Nuba Mountains on the formation of units in southern Kordofan.

Communication. On 24 June [S/2005/413], the Secretary-General drew the attention of the Security Council President to the urgent need for additional donor support for the Sudan, in the light of a shortfall of over $1 billion for all sectors and areas of the country. He said that failure to meet the humanitarian challenges facing the country could place the Comprehensive Peace Agreement in jeopardy. Five months since the signing of the Agreement and two months after the pledge of $4.5 billion in humanitarian assistance made at the Oslo Conference, a large percentage of the pledges for 2005 had yet to materialize and pledges for more immediate assistance were urgently needed.

Death of First Vice-President

Report of Secretary-General (September). In a later report [S/2005/579], the Secretary-General said that President Omar Al-Bashir, First Vice-President Garang and Vice-President Ali Osman Taha were sworn in on 9 July. The President issued a decree on the same day to establish a caretaker Government, pending the establishment of the Government of National Unity. The new Interim National Constitution was also signed by President Al-Bashir and the state of emergency was lifted in all states except Darfur, Kassala and Red Sea. However, implementation of the Agreement was put to the test with the death of First Vice-President and SPLM Chairman John Garang on 30 July. His death sparked violence in Khartoum, Juba and Malakal in southern Sudan, resulting in a significant number of deaths, arson and damage to property. SPLM moved swiftly to confirm Salva Kiir as its new Chairman who, with Sudanese President Omar al-Bashir and a number of Sudanese and other world leaders, appealed for calm and unity. By the time Mr. Garang's funeral was held on 6 August, the tense atmosphere had dissipated somewhat and the caretaker Government had established committees to investigate both the helicopter crash and the violence. Salva Kiir was sworn in as First Vice-President of the Sudan on 11 August. During the inauguration ceremony, President Al-Bashir vowed to join hands with SPLM to continue working towards "harmony and co-existence", while the new First Vice-President pledged to continue the vision of the late SPLM leader and to work for unity for all southerners over the interim period. He called for the inclusion of all Sudanese political forces within the Comprehensive Peace Agreement. On 19 August, Riek Machar was appointed Vice-President of southern Sudan in accordance with SPLM succession procedures.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 2 August [meeting 5245], the Security Council met to consider the death, on 30 July, of First Vice-President and SPLM Chairman John Garang de Mabior in a helicopter crash near New Cush, southern Sudan. Following consultations among Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2005/38 on behalf of the Council:

> The Security Council expresses its profound regret over the death of the First Vice-President of the Sudan Mr. John Garang de Mabior in a helicopter crash on 30 July 2005. The Council offers its deepest sympathy and condolences to the family of Mr. Garang and to the people and Government of the Sudan.
> This is a time for the world community to come together to support Mr. Garang's vision of a united and peaceful Sudan. The Council commends the perseverance and commitment which the parties in the Sudan demonstrated in achieving the Comprehensive Peace Agreement and the promise of a new future. Over the last few years, Mr. Garang's courageous efforts were instrumental in ending the over 21-year civil war that cost the lives of millions of Sudanese. His leadership offered hope for democracy and peace for all people of the Sudan.
> The Council calls upon all Sudanese to honour his memory by restoring peace and calm throughout the Sudan. The Council trusts that, despite the sudden death of Mr. Garang, the people of the Sudan remain united and continue to work for the consolidation of peace in the country by implementing the Comprehensive Peace Agreement, for which Mr. Garang worked unstintingly.
> The Council stresses that the death of Mr. Garang should not deter the struggle of the Sudanese people for justice and dignity, and encourages the people of the Sudan to refrain from violence and maintain peace in the midst of mourning.
> The Council reiterates its determination to assist the Sudanese people in their efforts to promote national reconciliation, resolve the conflict in Darfur and restore peace and stability throughout the country, and to build a prosperous and united Sudan.
> The Council looks to the international community to continue its support for the people of the Sudan to implement the Comprehensive Peace Agreement, to resolve the humanitarian crisis in Darfur, and to proceed with the reconstruction and rehabilitation process.

Further implementation of Peace Agreement

The Secretary-General, in his September report [S/2005/597], said that Mr. Garang's death led to delays in the implementation of the Comprehensive Peace Agreement, including the appointment of the Council of Ministers, which was to have been completed by 9 August. There were reports of tension within the caretaker Government between the parties over portfolios and prolonged delays over the allocation of the key "sovereign" and economic ministries. At the same time, many commissions and committees anticipated in the Comprehensive Peace Agreement, in areas such as human rights and the civil service, remained to be created. However, on 30 August, President Al-Bashir established the Ceasefire Political Commission, whose functions would include supervising, monitoring and overseeing the Agreement's implementation, as well as providing a political forum for continuous dialogue between the parties and the international community. Meanwhile, the mandate and composition of the Assessment and Evaluation Commission were reviewed by the Presidency.

While the Government of National Unity remained to be finalized, the two chambers of the national legislature, the National Assembly and the Council of States, were inaugurated on 31 August. Three pieces of legislation were introduced for its review and approval: the Bank of Sudan Act, the Constitutional Court Act, and the Judicial Service Commission Act. Among other positive developments were the nomination by the Government and SPLM of officers to form the Joint Integrated Units, which would constitute the nucleus of the future Sudanese National Armed Forces and encouraging signs that political parties that were not signatories to the Agreement, including the National Democratic Alliance, were ready to participate in the Government of National Unity.

In the south, the SPLM legislative council was dissolved on 18 July and a caretaker administration established. On 27 August, the Southern Sudan Constitutional Drafting Committee was established to examine and adopt the draft of the southern Sudanese constitution based on the Comprehensive Peace Agreement and the Interim National Constitution. A south-south dialogue meeting (Nairobi, 30 June), facilitated by the Moi Africa Institute, brought together senior SPLM/A security officials and commanders of various militia groups active in southern Sudan for the first time since the 1991 SPLM/A split, but failed to resolve the fundamental differences between the Southern Sudan Defence Force and SPLM/A. However, Major General Paulino Matip, leader of the Southern Sudan Defence Force, sent encouraging signals following Mr. Kiir's accession to the SPLM/A leadership and his inauguration as First Vice-President. For his part, Mr. Kiir expressed readiness to discuss outstanding issues with the Southern Sudan Defence Force, including those yet to be resolved by the south-south dialogue.

On 14 July, the Abyei Boundaries Commission defined and demarcated the area of the nine Ngok Dinka chiefdoms transferred to Kordofan in 1905, prompting protests from some members of the Missiriya tribe. UNMIS contacted the parties in both Khartoum and Abyei to ensure that the resolution of the Abyei question was concluded on the basis of the Comprehensive Peace Agreement. The Special Representative undertook initiatives to reduce tension in the area. The Commission presented its report to the Presidency, which was being discussed.

On 4 August, President Al-Bashir issued a provisional order to promulgate a decree on the organization of humanitarian and voluntary work, which provided wide powers to the Ministry of Humanitarian Affairs and the Humanitarian Affairs Commission to oversee and control the activities of national and international non-governmental and civil society organizations.

The Secretary-General observed that much had been achieved in the implementation of the Comprehensive Peace Agreement, despite a number of complications and challenges. He deeply regretted the death of First Vice-President Garang and the ensuing loss of life during the subsequent riots. He was, however, reassured by the determination to recover from the setback and the desire to stay the course of the peace process. It was essential that Government positions be swiftly agreed upon and that the remaining commissions and other bodies anticipated in the Agreement be established as soon as possible. While noting that the ceasefire was holding, he called on the parties to submit to the Ceasefire Joint Military Committee detailed lists of the size and location of their troops, and to ensure that timely notification of troop dispositions and redeployments was submitted.

In the east, the Government and the Eastern Front had shown willingness to engage in direct talks, but it was taking a long time for those face-to-face talks to begin. In the meantime, the Front had given the United Nations access to the area to undertake a security and humanitarian assessment in Hameshkoreib and had agreed to discuss the details of that access with UNMIS. SPLM/A faced tremendous challenges in establishing the government of southern Sudan, and while UNMIS had responded with logistical and material assistance, the Mission would find it increasingly difficult to continue doing so without compromising its other mandated tasks. The Secretary-General appealed to the international community, in the light of the scale of the immense challenge facing the government of southern Sudan, to provide adequate support so as to consolidate peace in the Sudan. He recommended that the Council renew UNMIS mandate until 24 September 2006.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (September)

On 23 September [meeting 5269], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1627 (2005). The draft [S/2005/599] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Recalling its previous resolutions, in particular resolution 1590(2005) of 24 March 2005, and the statements by its President concerning the Sudan,

Reaffirming its commitment to the sovereignty, unity, independence and territorial integrity of the Sudan,

Reiterating its expression of sympathy and condolences on the death of First Vice-President John Garang de Mabior on 30 July 2005, and commending the Government of the Sudan and First Vice-President Salva Kiir Mayardit for continued efforts for the consolidation of peace in the Sudan,

Welcoming implementation by the Government of the Sudan and the Sudan People's Liberation Movement/Army of the Comprehensive Peace Agreement of 9 January 2005, and in particular welcoming the formation of the Government of National Unity as a significant and historic step towards lasting peace in the Sudan,

Urging the parties to meet their outstanding commitments under the Comprehensive Peace Agreement, including, as a priority, the establishment of the Assessment and Evaluation Commission,

Determining that the situation in the Sudan continues to constitute a threat to international peace and security,

Acknowledging the commitments by troop-contributing countries in support of the United Nations Mission in the Sudan, and encouraging deployment in order for the Mission to support timely implementation of the Comprehensive Peace Agreement,

1. Decides to extend the mandate of the United Nations Mission in the Sudan until 24 March 2006, with the intention to renew it for further periods;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Security Council every three months on the implementation of the mandate of the Mission, including its work to reinforce the efforts of the African Union Mission in the Sudan to foster peace in Darfur;

3. Urges troop-contributing countries to review carefully the letter dated 24 March 2005 from the Secretary-General to the President of the General Assembly and to take appropriate action to prevent sexual exploitation and abuse by their personnel in the United Nations Mission in the Sudan, including pre-deployment awareness training, and to take disciplinary action and other action to ensure full accountability in cases of such misconduct involving their personnel;

4. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Report of Secretary-General (December). In December [S/2005/821], the Secretary-General reported that implementation of the Comprehensive Peace Agreement gained some momentum despite the delays following the death of former First Vice-President John Garang. After considerable dispute over the allocation of some ministerial portfolios, most notably that of energy and mining, the Government of National Unity was established on 20 September. Members of the National Democratic Alliance subsequently agreed to join the Government and was allocated a number of executive positions and seats in parliament, but other northern parties decided to stay in opposition, although they did state their respect for the Comprehensive Peace Agreement and desire for a more inclusive political process. Some southern parties, other than SPLM, also joined the Government of National Unity.

Meanwhile, the government of southern Sudan was established on 22 October as a caretaker government, pending the adoption of the Interim Constitution of Southern Sudan, which was subsequently signed into law on 5 December. Ten southern Sudan state governors were also appointed during this period. However, although the government of southern Sudan included a number of small southern parties, it had been criticized by some as not being fully representative of the south. Some members of the Southern Sudan Legislative Assembly alleged an ethnic imbalance in the government of southern Sudan.

A number of key commissions were established and staffed, and some of the legislation for creating the remaining commissions was adopted. The presidency issued decrees to establish the Assessment and Evaluation Commission, the National Petroleum Commission, the Fiscal and Financial Allocation and Monitoring Commission and the Technical Ad Hoc Border Committee. The Assessment and Evaluation Commission, chaired by Norway, held its first two meetings. The membership of the Ceasefire Political Commission, announced in November, comprised representatives of NCP, SPLM, IGAD, the IGAD Partners Forum and the United Nations as a full member.

At the same time, the delay in implementing the Abyei Boundary Commission's decision defining the borders of the Abyei area contributed to a tense situation in that part of the country. The situation on the ground was further complicated by a sudden upsurge of returns, and a military build-up by the Sudanese Armed Forces (SAF), the Sudan People's Liberation Army (SPLA) and the South Sudan Defence Force. Due to concern that the start of the migration season could lead to clashes between the Missiriya and Dinka tribes, UNMIS increased its presence in Abyei and completed the deployment of the UN protection force there. The Mission encouraged the authorities to establish both the Executive Council and the Joint Integrated Unit in Abyei to normalize the situation and contribute to confidence-building measures. It also convened meetings with the parties to discuss areas of mutual concern, including security and migratory routes. UN agencies also started to plan humanitarian and developmental programmes in Abyei to help promote peaceful coexistence.

In the meantime, the problem of other armed groups remained of crucial importance in southern Sudan. Negotiations continued between First Vice-President Salva Kiir and leaders of other armed groups on their participation in southern state governments, some of whom had been offered government positions. However, many others did not meet the Comprehensive Peace Agreement standard of "incorporation", leaving a considerable number of them completely outside the process, including the remaining "independents" who were a source of growing concern, as the 9 January 2006 deadline for full integration approached. Meanwhile, extortion schemes, illegal taxation, forced recruitment and violence attributed to other armed groups still continued in some areas.

The Secretary-General urged the Government of National Unity and the government of southern Sudan to tackle the insecurity in southern Sudan, while the Government there should encourage continuing reconciliation throughout the region. The withdrawal of SPLA from the Hameshkoreib region of eastern Sudan on the border with Eritrea risked creating a power vacuum. He urged the eastern leaders to facilitate a security and humanitarian assessment of the area so as to allow humanitarian access from within the Sudan. Most importantly, direct talks on the situation in the east had to begin so that a political agreement could be reached. In the light of the fluidity of the situation on the ground, the United Nations would need to maintain a multifunctional presence in eastern Sudan beyond the 9 January 2006 deadline for the redeployment of SPLA.

UNMIS activities

In accordance with resolution 1590(2005), UNMIS provided good offices and political support to assist the parties in implementing the Comprehensive Peace Agreement and resolve all ongoing conflicts in the Sudan. It met regularly with officials of the Government of National Unity, the government of southern Sudan and opposition groups in an effort to encourage wider participation in and support for the peace process. The military elements began deployment during the first week of April and established the force headquarters in Khartoum and the Joint Military Monitoring Coordination Office responsible for supporting the Ceasefire Joint Military Committee. The Committee held 15 meetings during the year under the chairmanship of the UNMIS Force Commander. Military deployment remained behind schedule, owing largely to delays in the force-generation process. As at December, the military strength stood at 4,291 personnel, or 40 per cent of the expected total of 9,880. By September, it had established full-time military observer presence in Juba, Wau, Malakal, Kadugli, Ed Damazin, Abyei and Kassala. UNMIS had also begun to monitor the movement of armed groups and the redeployment of forces in its operational area. The first monitored redeployment took place on 3 and 4 September when 993 SPLA troops moved from Kassala to Khartoum with their weapons and equipment to make up the future Khartoum Joint Inspection Unit.

UNMIS facilitated, supported and encouraged local reconciliation initiatives in areas of conflict within the Sudan, including encouraging dialogue in relevant areas, identifying the needs of the new public administration and helping to defuse tension. UNDP was supporting state- and country-level public administration through technical assistance and in-service training. In Abyei, UNMIS hosted the first meeting in many years between Dinka Ngok and Missiriya leaders to discuss the seasonal migration of Missiriya nomads through the Dinka Ngok farming areas, and other issues that could lead to conflict between the two tribes. In southern Sudan, the Lord's Resistance Army operating out of Uganda perpetrated several vicious attacks on villages, and since the issue of indictments by the International Criminal Court of its leaders, had started targeting UN personnel and NGOs, hampering their activities. UNMIS coordinated its activities with others in the area to address the situation.

UNMIS supported the interim disarmament, demobilization and reintegration authorities for the north and the south in key assessment surveys. Disarmament of child combatants was planned to start in December. Japan and the United Kingdom had contributed $ 6.9 million and 2 million pounds, respectively, to implement the special groups' needs. However, serious challenges remained to the full implementation of the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programme and the establishment of the related national coordination councils and commissions for northern and southern Sudan.

The deployment of UN police suffered from delays due to a lack of facilities, especially in Kadugli, Abyei and Juba. As at December, 215 police from 27 countries had been deployed. The police monitored, advised and reported on the activities of the local police in southern Sudan, including criminal investigation and correctional reform.

UNMIS also liaised with the African Union Mission in the Sudan (AMIS) to reinforce AU-led efforts to foster peace in Darfur through technical and logistical assistance to AMIS.

Financing

On 1 March [S/2005/57/Add.1], the Secretary-General informed the Security Council that the financial implications of UNMIS deployment were projected at $1,009.8 million for a 12-month period.

On 29 March [A/57/756 & Corr. 1, 2], pending the submission of a full budget for UNMIS at the General Assembly's sixtieth (2005) session, the Secretary-General requested commitment authority with assessment in the amount of $595.5 million to cover the requirements of the Mission for the period from 1 July 2004 to the date of the establishment of the Mission and immediate start-up requirements to 31 October 2005.

ACABQ, in its April report [A/59/768], recommended approval of the Secretary-General's proposal.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 April, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/59/780], adopted resolution 59/292 without vote [agenda item 151].

Financing of the United Nations Mission in the Sudan

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Mission in the Sudan and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Recalling Security Council resolution 1590(2005) of 24 March 2005, by which the Council established the United Nations Mission in the Sudan for an initial period of six months from 24 March 2005,

Recognizing that the costs of the Mission are expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations,

Reaffirming the general principles underlying the financing of United Nations peacekeeping operations, as stated in its resolutions 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, 3101(XXVIII) of 11 December 1973 and 55/235 of 23 December 2000,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the Mission with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under the relevant resolution of the Security Council,

1. Expresses concern about the financial situation with regard to peacekeeping activities, in particular as regards the reimbursements to troop contributors that bear additional burdens owing to overdue payments by Member States of their assessments;

2. Also expresses concern at the delay experienced by the Secretary-General in deploying and providing adequate resources to some recent peacekeeping missions, in particular those in Africa;

3. Emphasizes that all future and existing peacekeeping missions shall be given equal and non-discriminatory treatment in respect of financial and administrative arrangements;

4. Also emphasizes that all peacekeeping missions shall be provided with adequate resources for the effective and efficient discharge of their respective mandates;

In December [A/60/626], the Secretary-General submitted the performance report for the UNMIS budget for the period from 1 July 2004 to 30 June 2005.

Situation in Darfur

Report of Secretary-General (January). In his January report [S/2005/10], submitted pursuant to Security Council resolutions 1556(2004) [YUN 2004, p. 240], 1564(2004) [ibid., p. 245] and 1574(2004) [ibid., p. 252], the Secretary-General, while hailing the conclusion of the Comprehensive Peace Agreement in the north-south peace process in the Sudan, noted the political stalemate in the situation in the Darfur region of the country. He said that the security situation was very poor, as new security problems had arisen. On 3 January, an attack by Government forces on a Sudanese Liberation Movement/Army (SLM/A) position in northern Darfur had been reported. Violence was seeping into the camps of internally displaced persons and was directly affecting humanitarian workers. Groups were also rearming and the conflict was spreading outside Darfur. Large quantities of arms had been carried into Darfur and the build-up of arms and intensification of violence, including air attacks, suggested that the security situation was deteriorating. The pressures on the parties to abide by their commitments were not having a perceptible effect on the ground, which led him to conclude that the Council should reconsider measures for achieving improved security and protection for the internally displaced persons.

Talks between the parties, within the Abuja peace process (10-22 December, 2004) had not yielded concrete results or a narrowing of the gap on the issues between them, and despite statements to the contrary, they had not committed themselves in practice to the implementation of the N'Djamena Humanitarian Ceasefire Agreement [YUN 2004, p. 235]. A move from the current fragile ceasefire to a resolution to the conflict in Darfur depended on the accomplishment of six tasks: the parties had to be persuaded, by a combination of pressure and assurances; that it was in their interest to pursue a peace settlement; respect the ceasefire; communicate their troop locations to the AU Ceasefire Commission; and agree on a plan of separation of forces. The parties should also minimize attacks by armed personnel on civilians by identifying practical means to ensure that their forces' basic survival needs were met without violating the ceasefire. The composition and modalities of the Joint Commission provided for under the Humanitarian Ceasefire Agreement had to be amended so as to improve its credibility and effectiveness. There had to be proactive follow-up on the implementation of previous commitments and obligations so as to reduce the level of violence on the ground and build confidence in the peace process and the international community had to help the AU force to accelerate the rate of its deployment. Perpetrators of violations of human rights law and crimes under international humanitarian law should not be allowed to go unpunished.

Regarding the political process, action in three areas could be key to putting it on the right track: the parties should commit themselves to proceeding with political talks without further delay; the Council should assist the parties of the north-south dialogue to agree on a declaration of principles that addressed the core issues of power and wealth-sharing, as well as the integration of the Darfur peace talks into the wider process of peacemaking in the Sudan; and, while the current negotiation process between the Government, SLM/A and the Justice and Equality Movement (JEM) should proceed, it would be useful to start thinking of ways to create a broad and strong support base for sustainable peace.

Restoring peace in Darfur would require reconciliation and restoration of the social fabric in that region. Reconciliation would have to include all social groups and segments, especially non-armed groups and victims of the current violence. The only alternative to finding new measures was to find a way to deploy as many personnel on the ground as possible. The AU force had done more than any other outside agent to improve the security situation on the ground, and whatever actions and new initiatives were undertaken, the AU would remain, for the foreseeable future, the best mechanism for promoting peace in Darfur.

Security Council consideration (11 January). On 7 January [meeting 5109], the Security Council discussed the situation in the Sudan, especially the signing, on 9 January, of the Comprehensive Peace Agreement. The Special Representative of the Secretary-General for the Sudan, Jan Pronk, in his briefing to the Council, said that, although the security situation in Darfur had not improved, the signature of the north-south peace Comprehensive Peace Agreement was an opportunity to improve the capacity to solve that conflict. In that regard, he suggested that any future talks on Darfur's political future be separated from those on security and humanitarian access, which should be relegated to the AU Ceasefire Commission and the Joint Commission; the Darfur ceasefire institutions should be empowered to enable them to authorize independent assessment of any ceasefire breaches and to make binding recommendations requiring unconditional implementation; and, with AU assistance, insist that both the Government and the rebel movements exercise full restraint and avert any attacks or retaliations; and the Government and the rebel movements should withdraw behind the lines prevailing before 8 December 2004 and the AU should protect the areas concerned; the Government should make a new start by disarming the Popular Defence Forces; the rebel movements should commit themselves to not blocking or disrupting the seasonal movement of nomadic tribes; and the Government should control and restrain the militias through force or tribal reconciliation and arrest those responsible for human rights violations.

The Special Representative suggested that it was time to prepare a national conference, with a view to reaching a consensus about the modalities of a peaceful future for the country, thereby integrating the Darfur peace talks into the wider peacemaking process. However, the Darfur talks should not wait until such a national conference was feasible.

Communication. On 27 January [S/2005/56], Australia, Canada and New Zealand informed the Security Council President that they were gravely concerned by the deteriorating situation in Darfur and for the safety of persons living there. Believing that the Council was uniquely placed to assist in protecting civilians in the Darfur region, they proposed that it establish a committee to monitor the implementation of the arms embargo called for in resolution 1556(2004) [YUN 2004, p. 240] and address, with the assistance of a panel of experts, the origins of arms flows to those actors covered therein. The committee would, among other things, determine the financiers of the armed militias in Darfur, including pro-government militias, rebel movements and other emerging movements. It could also help to ensure that existing Council resolutions were being properly implemented and identify areas where further Council attention might be necessary. The Council should design targeted measures to bring greater pressure to bear on all parties to the conflict to comply with their undertakings and with its resolutions, including individual travel bans and the freezing of assets. The Secretary-General, in his next report on Darfur, should assess further the extent to which the parties to the conflict had respected the obligations imposed on them by earlier Council resolutions.

Also, should the International Commission of Inquiry established pursuant to resolution 1564 (2004) [ibid., p. 245] determine that crimes within the jurisdiction of the International Criminal Court had been committed, the Council should refer the matter to the Court as the most appropriate body to investigate such crimes.

Report of the Secretary-General (February). In his 4 February report [S/2005/68], the Secretary-General said that the past six months had seen the Government of the Sudan progressively implement some of the elements of its obligations in the security, human rights, humanitarian and political spheres. However, that progress had been neither steady nor even, and some areas had been completely neglected. Fighting in Darfur involving Government forces, the armed movements and militias allied to the Government continued. On the eve of the December 2004 Abuja talks, the Government began a series of offensive operations termed "road clearing", particularly in southern Darfur. Those operations, which included de facto coordination with militia, involved clearing, burning of villages and looting. In January 2005, the authorities informed the United Nations and its partners that it intended to launch a similar operation in northern Darfur. Responding to UN concerns, the Government postponed or suspended the "clearing" provided the AU carried out road patrols. Operations resumed in mid-January, coinciding with militia attacks, such as those on Hamada village on 13 January and on Gereida and Shangil Tobai on 26 January.

Concerning human rights, the report of the Commission of Inquiry to Investigate Alleged Human Rights Violations Committed by Armed Groups in the Darfur States established by the Government of the Sudan in 2004 was released in January 2005 [S/2005/80]. It stated that serious violations of human rights were committed in the three Darfur States by all parties. However, genocide did not occur and the number of persons killed was exaggerated. Rape and crimes of sexual violence were not widespread or systematic and did not amount to crimes against humanity. The National Commission of Inquiry recommended that judicial investigation committees be established. The President directed that a Judicial Inquiry Committee and an Inventory of Losses and Reparations Committee be formed. The Secretary-General pointed out that the Committee's report differed substantially from the findings of the International Commission of Inquiry (see p. 323) regarding the scale and systematic nature of the crimes committed and the responsibility of the Government of the Sudan.

The Secretary-General suggested that future talks in the Abuja process de-link security and humanitarian issues from political ones, allowing the parties to focus their attention on designing the implementing institutions that would follow an agreement.

N'Djamena Joint Commission meeting (February). The seventh high-level meeting of the Joint Commission met in N'Djamena on 16 and 17 February [S/2005/140]. The meeting, attended by the Presidents of Chad, Gabon, the Democratic Republic of the Congo and the Sudan, the Chairman of the AU Commission, and ministerial representation from Egypt, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya and Nigeria, and the Secretary-General's Special Representative, was presented with a report by the Chairman of the Ceasefire Commission detailing ceasefire violations since January. The report faulted the Government and rebels for the violations and criticized the lack of commitment to the Humanitarian Ceasefire Agreement. The Ceasefire Commission made recommendations to the Joint Commission on ways to improve the security situation in Darfur, among which were that the status of AMIS units making up the protection force be upgraded from a company to a battalion; that SLM/A and JEM unconditionally release to the AU-Ceasefire Commission the locations of their combatants; and that the Government of the Sudan review and resubmit its plan for the disarmament of the armed militia operating in Darfur. The Joint Commission supported the sending of a survey team to Darfur to delineate the areas of control held by the various forces and called upon the AU Peace and Security Council to reinforce its Ceasefire Commission in order to find a solution to the crisis within an African framework. The joint commission also called for the rapid resumption of the next round of peace talks.

Sudan's proposals on Darfur. On 25 February [S/2005/128], Sudan transmitted to the Security Council President Al-Bashir proposals on the situation in Darfur to the February N'Djamena Summit (above). Those proposals centred on expediting the negotiation process, enhancing the security situation, strengthening the AU mission, and improving the humanitarian situation and the political dialogue. Among his main proposals, President Al-Bashir suggested that negotiations in Abuja, Nigeria, resume before the end of February, with representation from the two rebel movements. Believing that the best way to address the security situation was to identify the active armed elements in Darfur so that responsibility could be accurately determined, he called for the adoption of criterion for doing so, which he had proposed. He also informed that Government forces had suspended all attacks and had been directed to exercise utmost restraint. The Government had also withdrawn its air bombers from Darfur and demobilized 30 per cent of the Popular Defence Forces (PDF) (paramilitary forces mobilized when there was a threat to national security) and proposed demobilizing a further 20 per cent. The demobilization would come to a zero level when the rebels started implementing fully their commitments. He also proposed measures for dealing with the armed civilians among the tribes, strengthening the role of the Ceasefire Commission, and for strengthening humanitarian access.

The President believed that the Comprehensive Peace Agreement provided the basis for settling the Sudan, political and economic problems and was committed to a final settlement based on the principles set out in the Agreement.

AU mediation team. On 1 March, [S/2005/139], the Sudan informed the Council President that, as part of efforts to achieve a political solution to the Darfur conflict, an AU mediation team had concluded a three-day visit to the country, during which it held consultations with the Sudanese parties on the best way to rapidly resume the Abuja talks as called for by the AU. At the end of the consultations, the mediation team informed its interlocutors that a draft Framework Protocol on the resolution of the conflict in Darfur would be prepared in the light of the positions expressed by them. The mediation team would hold similar consultations in Nairobi, Kenya and Asmara, Eritrea, with the SLM/A and JEM leaders.

Report of Secretary-General (March). Reporting on developments in the Sudan, the Secretary-General, on 4 March [S/2005/140], said that, although there had been fewer clashes in Darfur between the Government and armed movement in February than in previous two months, the security situation remained fragile. SLM/A and Government forces clashed twice in February in northern Darfur. The AU confirmed that the Government had started removing Antonov bombers from El-Fasher and Nyala, although it kept its military helicopters in Darfur. Although the Government did not resume the "road clearing" operations, its forces remained in several areas they had occupied during those operations. At the same time, SLM/A forces maintained their presence in nearby locations. Fighting between militia or Janjaweed and rebel groups occurred in February. The Janjaweed attacked SLM/A forces on 2 and 19 February, while a Janjaweed-rebel conflict reportedly took place on 21 February.

In South Darfur, civilians were attacked in villages and on roads, particularly in the east of Nyala. Further incidents of rape and sexual violence continued to be reported throughout Darfur. Areas outside many of the displaced persons' camps remained particularly insecure. There were also reports of arrests by the police of unmarried women in the Mukjar area (West Darfur) who had become pregnant as a result of rape. There was no meaningful investigation into the reported killings of over 100 civilians and the mass rape of over 30 women and girls in the village of Hamada (South Darfur) on 13 and 14 January. Two of the committees established by the Government following the recommendations of the National Committee of Inquiry—the Judicial Inquiry Committee and the Reparations Committee—had begun visiting Darfur states. In terms of humanitarian access, relief agencies had gained access to areas previously closed due to security concerns. However, humanitarian operations continued to be impeded by the continued harassment of workers, including arrests, detention and abductions of national staff, especially in South Darfur, and attacks by armed groups on commercial trucks carrying humanitarian assistance.

The Secretary-General observed that there were no significant advances in searching for a political solution to the crisis in Darfur. The Government had not stopped militia from attacking civilians, while the rebel movements had done little to seize the political opportunities created since the signing of the Agreement. On the ground, their forces harassed the relief workers, fired on AU and WFP helicopters and refused to reveal their positions to the AU Ceasefire Commission. At the political level, the rebel movements appeared to be increasingly divided, resulting in a diminished capacity to engage in serious political negotiations.

The Secretary-General reported that he met with the Chairperson of the AU Commission, Alpha Oumar Konaré, on 28 February, and agreed that an AU-led assessment of peacekeeping requirements in Darfur would be undertaken as a matter of urgency, with the participation of the United Nations and its key partners (see p. 327). He was also sending a UN team to the region to make a full assessment of options for strengthening the peacekeeping presence in Darfur. In the meantime, the international community should not miss the opportunity to strengthen the position of the AU force in Darfur.

Security Council consideration (24 March). At the Security Council's 24 March meeting [meeting 5151] to consider the reports of the Secretary-General on Darfur, the Under-Secretary-General for Peacekeeping Operations, Jean-Marie Guéhenno, told the Council that it was clear that the current state of affairs in Darfur was unacceptable. The violence and destruction had to stop, and impunity ended. If the security did not improve quickly, the rape and killings would continue. It had to be made clear to those responsible that they would be held accountable. Humanitarian workers and the AU mission were on the front line of the international community's response to the Darfur crisis. The Council owed it to them to act with courage and determination.

Imposition of travel ban and assets freeze

On 29 March [meeting 5153], the Security Council adopted by vote (12-0-3) resolution 1591 (2005). The draft [S/2005/206] was submitted by the United States.

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolutions 1547(2004) of 11 June 2004, 1556(2004) of 30 July 2004, 1564(2004) of 18 September 2004, 1574(2004) of 19 November 2004, 1585(2005) of 10 March 2005, 1588(2005) of 17 March 2005 and 1590(2005) of 24 March 2005, and statements by its President concerning the Sudan,

Reaffirming its commitment to the sovereignty, unity, independence and territorial integrity of the Sudan, and recalling the importance of the principles of good-neighbourliness, non-interference and regional cooperation,

Recalling the commitments made by the parties in the N'Djamena ceasefire agreement of 8 April 2004 and the Humanitarian and Security Protocols of 9 November 2004 signed in Abuja between the Government of the Sudan, the Sudan Liberation Movement/Army and the Justice and Equality Movement, and recalling the commitments made in the joint communique of 3 July 2004 of the Government of the Sudan and the Secretary-General,

Welcoming the signing of the Comprehensive Peace Agreement between the Government of the Sudan and the Sudan People's Liberation Movement/Army in Nairobi on 9 January 2005,

Recognizing that the parties to the Comprehensive Peace Agreement must build on the Agreement to bring peace and stability to the entire country, and calling upon all Sudanese parties, in particular those party to the Agreement, to take immediate steps to achieve a peaceful settlement to the conflict in Darfur and to take all necessary action to prevent further violations of human rights and international humanitarian law and to put an end to impunity, including in the Darfur region,

Expressing its utmost concern over the dire consequences of the prolonged conflict for the civilian population in the Darfur region as well as throughout the Sudan, in particular the increase in the number of refugees and internally displaced persons,

Considering that the voluntary and sustainable return of refugees and internally displaced persons will be a critical factor for the consolidation of the peace process,

Expressing its deep concern for the security of humanitarian workers and their access to populations in need, including refugees, internally displaced persons and other war-affected populations,

Condemning the continued violations of the N'Djamena ceasefire agreement and the Abuja Protocols by all sides in Darfur and the deterioration of the security situation and negative impact this has had on humanitarian assistance efforts,

Strongly condemning all violations of human rights and international humanitarian law in the Darfur region, in particular the continuation of violence against civilians and sexual violence against women and girls since the adoption of resolution 1574(2004), urging all parties to take necessary steps to prevent further violations, and expressing its determination to ensure that those responsible for all such violations are identified and brought to justice without delay,

Recognizing that international support for implementation of the Comprehensive Peace Agreement is critically important to its success, emphasizing that progress towards resolution of the conflict in Darfur would create conditions conducive for delivery of such assistance, and alarmed that the violence in Darfur nonetheless continues,

Recalling the demands, in resolutions 1556(2004), 1564(2004) and 1574(2004), that all parties to the conflict in Darfur refrain from any violence against civilians and cooperate fully with the African Union mission in Darfur,

Welcoming the N'Djamena summit on Darfur held on 16 February 2005 and the continued commitment of the African Union to play a key role in facilitating a resolution to the conflict in Darfur in all respects, and the announcement by the Government of the Sudan on 16 February 2005 that it would take immediate steps, including withdrawal of its forces from Labado, Qarifa, and Marla in Darfur, and the withdrawal of its Antonov aircraft from Darfur,

Commending the efforts of the African Union, in particular its Chairman, acknowledging the progress made by the African Union in the deployment of an international protection force, police and military observers, and calling upon all Member States to contribute generously and urgently to the African Union mission in Darfur,

Reaffirming its resolutions 1325(2000) of 31 October 2000 on women and peace and security, 1379(2001) of 20 November 2001 and 1460(2003) of 30 January 2003 on children and armed conflict, as well as resolutions 1265(1999) of 17 September 1999 and 1296(2000) of 19 April 2000 on the protection of civilians in armed conflict and resolution 1502(2003) of 26 August 2003 on the protection of United Nations personnel, associated personnel and humanitarian personnel in conflict zones,

Taking note of the reports of the Secretary-General of 3 December 2004, 31 January 2005, 4 February 2005 and 4 March 2005, as well as the report of 25 January 2005 of the International Commission of Inquiry for Darfur,

Determining that the situation in the Sudan continues to constitute a threat to international peace and security,

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Strongly deplores the fact that the Government of the Sudan and rebel forces and all other armed groups in Darfur have failed to comply fully with their commitments and the demands of the Security Council referred to in resolutions 1556(2004), 1564(2004) and 1574(2004), condemns the continued violations of the N'Djamena ceasefire agreement and the Abuja Protocols, including air strikes by the Government of the Sudan in December 2004 and January 2005 and rebel attacks on Darfur villages in January 2005, and the failure of the Government of the Sudan to disarm Janjaweed militiamen and apprehend and bring to justice Janjaweed leaders and their associates who have committed violations of human rights and international humanitarian law and other atrocities, and demands that all parties take immediate steps to fulfil all their commitments to respect the N'Djamena ceasefire agreement and the Abuja Protocols, including notification of force positions, to facilitate humanitarian assistance, and to cooperate fully with the African Union mission;

2. Emphasizes that there can be no military solution to the conflict in Darfur, and calls upon the Government of the Sudan and the rebel groups, particularly the Justice and Equality Movement and the Sudan Liberation Movement/Army to resume the Abuja talks rapidly, without preconditions, and negotiate in good faith to speedily reach agreement, and urges the parties to the Comprehensive Peace Agreement to play an active and constructive role in support of the Abuja talks and take immediate steps to support a peaceful settlement to the conflict in Darfur;

3. Decides, in the light of the failure of all parties to the conflict in Darfur to fulfil their commitments:

(a) To establish, in accordance with rule 28 of its provisional rules of procedure, a committee of the Council consisting of all the members of the Council (hereinafter "the Committee") to undertake the following tasks:

(i) To monitor implementation of the measures referred to in subparagraphs (d) and (e) of the present paragraph and paragraphs 7 and 8 of resolution 1556(2004), and paragraph 7 below;

(ii) To designate those individuals subject to the measures imposed by subparagraphs (d) and (e) of the present paragraph and to consider requests for exemptions in accordance with subparagraphs (f) and (g) of the present paragraph;

(iii) To establish such guidelines as may be necessary to facilitate the implementation of the measures imposed by subparagraphs (d) and (e) of the present paragraph;

(iv) To report at least every ninety days to the Council on its work;

(v) To consider requests from and, as appropriate, provide prior approval to the Government of the Sudan for the movement of military equipment and supplies into the Darfur region in accordance with paragraph 7 below;

(vi) To assess reports from the panel of experts established under subparagraph (b) of the present paragraph, and Member States, in particular those in the region, on specific steps they are taking to implement the measures imposed by subparagraphs (d) and (e) of the present paragraph and paragraph 7 below;

(vii) To encourage a dialogue between the Committee and interested Member States, in particular those in the region, including by inviting representatives of such States to meet with the Committee to discuss implementation of the measures;

(b) To request the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Committee, to appoint for a period of six months, within thirty days of adoption of the present resolution, a panel of experts comprised of four members and based in Addis Ababa to travel regularly to El-Fasher and other locations in the Sudan, and to operate under the direction of the Committee to undertake the following tasks:

(i) To assist the Committee in monitoring implementation of the measures in subparagraphs (d) and (e) of the present paragraph, paragraphs 7 and 8 of resolution 1556(2004), and paragraph 7 below, and to make recommendations to the Committee on actions the Council may want to consider;

(ii) To provide a midterm briefing on its work to the Committee and an interim report no later than ninety days after adoption of the present resolution, and a final report no later than thirty days prior to termination of its mandate to the Council through the Committee with its findings and recommendations; and

(iii) To coordinate its activities as appropriate with ongoing operations of the African Union Mission in the Sudan;

(c) That those individuals, as designated by the Committee established by subparagraph (a) of the present paragraph, based on the information provided by Member States, the Secretary-General, the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights or the Panel of Experts established under subparagraph (b) of the present paragraph, and other relevant sources, who impede the peace process, constitute a threat to stability in Darfur and the region, commit violations of international humanitarian or human rights law or other atrocities, violate the measures implemented by Member States in accordance with paragraphs 7 and 8 of resolution 1556(2004) and paragraph 7 below as implemented by a State, or are responsible for offensive military overflights described in paragraph 6 below, shall be subject to the measures identified in subparagraphs (d) and (e) of the present paragraph;

(d) That all States shall take the necessary measures to prevent entry into or transit through their territories of all persons as designated by the Committee pursuant to subparagraph (c) of the present paragraph, provided that nothing in the present subparagraph shall obligate a State to refuse entry into its territory to its own nationals;

(e) That all States shall freeze all funds, financial assets and economic resources that are on their territories on the date of adoption of the present resolution or at any time thereafter, that are owned or controlled, directly or indirectly, by the persons designated by the Committee pursuant to subparagraph (c) of the present paragraph, or that are held by entities owned or controlled, directly or indirectly, by such persons or by persons acting on their behalf or at their direction, and decides also that all States shall ensure that no funds, financial assets or economic resources are made available by their nationals or by any persons within their territories to or for the benefit of such persons or entities;

(f) That the measures imposed by subparagraph (d) of the present paragraph shall not apply where the Committee established by subparagraph (a) of the present paragraph determines on a case by case basis that such travel is justified on the grounds of humanitarian need, including religious obligation, or where the Committee concludes that an exemption would otherwise further the objectives of the Council's resolutions for the creation of peace and stability in the Sudan and the region;

(g) That the measures imposed by subparagraph (e) of the present paragraph do not apply to funds, other financial assets and economic resources:

(i) That have been determined by relevant States to be necessary for basic expenses, including payment for foodstuffs, rent or mortgage, medicines and medical treatment, taxes, insurance premiums and public utility charges or for payment of reasonable professional fees and reimbursement of incurred expenses associated with the provision of legal services, or fees or service charges, in accordance with national laws, for routine holding or maintenance of frozen funds, other financial assets and economic resources, after notification by the relevant States to the Committee of the intention to authorize, where appropriate, access to such funds, other financial assets and economic resources and in the absence of a negative decision by the Committee within two working days of such notification;

(ii) That have been determined by relevant States to be necessary for extraordinary expenses, provided that such determination has been notified by the relevant States to the Committee and has been approved by the Committee; or

(iii) That have been determined by relevant States to be the subject of a judicial, administrative or arbitral lien or judgment, in which case the funds or other financial assets and economic resources may be used to satisfy that lien or judgment provided that the lien or judgment was entered prior to the date of the present resolution, is not for the benefit of a person or entity designated by the Committee, and has been notified by the relevant States to the Committee;

4. Decides also that the measures referred to in subparagraphs 3 (d) and (e) above shall enter into force thirty days from the date of adoption of the present resolution, unless the Council determines before then that the parties to the conflict in Darfur have complied with all the commitments and demands referred to in paragraph 1 above and paragraph 6 below;

5. Expresses its readiness to consider the modification or termination of the measures under paragraph 3 above, on the recommendation of the Committee or at the end of a period of twelve months from the date of adoption of the present resolution, or earlier if the Council determines before then that the parties to the conflict in Darfur have complied with all the commitments and demands referred to in paragraph 1 above and paragraph 6 below;

6. Demands that the Government of the Sudan, in accordance with its commitments under the N'Djamena ceasefire agreement and the Abuja Security Protocol, immediately cease conducting offensive military flights in and over the Darfur region, and invites the African Union Ceasefire Commission to share pertinent information as appropriate in this regard with the Secretary-General, the Committee, or the Panel of Experts established under paragraph 3 (b) above;

7. Reaffirms the measures imposed by paragraphs 7 and 8 of resolution 1556(2004) and decides that these measures shall, immediately upon adoption of the present resolution, also apply to all the parties to the N'Djamena ceasefire agreement and any other belligerents in the states of Northern Darfur, Southern Darfur and Western Darfur; decides that these measures shall not apply to the supplies and related technical training and assistance listed in paragraph 9 of resolution 1556(2004); decides also that these measures shall not apply with respect to assistance and supplies provided in support of implementation of the Comprehensive Peace Agreement; decides further that these measures shall not apply to movements of military equipment and supplies into the Darfur region that are approved in advance by the Committee established under paragraph 3 (a) above upon a request by the Government of the Sudan; and invites the African Union Ceasefire Commission to share pertinent information as appropriate in this regard with the Secretary-General, the Committee or the Panel of Experts established under paragraph 3 (b) above;

8. Reiterates that, in the event the parties fail to fulfil their commitments and demands as outlined in paragraphs 1 and 6 above, and the situation in Darfur continues to deteriorate, the Council will consider further measures as provided for in Article 41 of the Charter of the United Nations;

9. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

RECORDED VOTE ON RESOLUTION 1591:

In favour: Argentina, Benin, Brazil, Denmark, France, Greece, Japan, Philippines, Romania, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania, United States.

Against: None.

Abstaining: Algeria, China, Russian Federation.

Algeria, in its explanation of vote, said that, while it supported the approach to send a strong message to the parties to respect their commitments, it had, with other delegations, made proposals to "rebalance" the text, which were in line with the position of the African Group. It had doubts concerning the relevance and usefulness of certain of the resolution's measures. Also, the resolution did not take into consideration the early signs of a trend towards both parties respecting the ceasefire. It regretted that efforts were not made to promote a consensus.

The Russian Federation said that it was unable to support the draft resolution because it was not convinced that the potential political and diplomatic measures to defuse the conflict in Darfur had been exhausted, especially at the beginning of the deployment of a UN peacekeeping operation in the south of the Sudan. It was important to give the Government of National Unity of the Sudan time to show itself in a positive light, including with regard to Darfur.

China said that it had serious reservations about the resolution. While Council resolution 1590(2005) of 24 March (see p. 305) authorizing the deployment of a peacekeeping operation in southern Sudan would help the Sudanese people achieve peace and stability, just maintaining the pressure without regard to the complexity of the Darfur crisis could end up further complicating the situation and would not help efforts to find a political solution. China had always taken a cautious approach to sanctions and had repeatedly stressed that the Council should exercise great caution with respect to "measures" that could make negotiations more difficult and had a negative impact on the peace process.

The United Republic of Tanzania regretted that the situation in Darfur compelled the adoption of the resolution, after months of waiting for the Abuja peace process to resume. That process remained stalled and there was no significant improvement on the ground with regard to the humanitarian situation. It appealed to all parties to respond to the Council's and the international community's concerns by making a bold and decisive move towards peace in Darfur before the measures adopted became effective. The Council should review those measures as soon as the new Government was in place.

The Sudan said that, while it did not deny that the Council should address the situation in the Sudan and the events in Darfur, its unwise resolutions might make the situation worse. The Council talked about supporting the AU, but its resolution would complicate the situation both for the AU and on the ground. The sponsors of the draft resolution refused to show flexibility to reach a consensus, justified by reference to a resolution of the United States Congress, which, according to the Sudan, did not know the history and culture of the country and went against Africa's position.

The United States said that the resolution was adopted by 12 Council members, including two African States, and that the members of the United States Congress cared deeply about Darfur and many of them had gone there and had first-hand experience working with some of the NGOs in the area. The United States hoped that the resolution would contribute to an end to the violence in Darfur and to a successful resolution of the Abuja peace process.

Note by Security Council President. On 5 May [S/2005/297], the Council President informed that, following consultations among its members on 29 April and 4 May, the Council elected Mr. Adamantios Th. Vassilakis (Greece) as the Chairman of the Security Council Committee concerning the Sudan, established pursuant to resolution 1591(2005), for a period ending 31 December 2005, and two Vice-Chairmen from Argentina and the Philippines.

On 30 June [S/2005/428], the Secretary-General informed the Council President of the appointment of the four members to serve on the Panel of Experts to be established in accordance with paragraph 3 of Council resolution 1591(2005).

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (December)

On 21 December [meeting 5342], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1651 (2005). The draft [S/2005/812] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Recalling its previous resolutions concerning the situation in the Sudan, in particular resolutions 1556 (2004) of 30 July 2004 and 1591(2005) of 29 March 2005, and the statements by its President concerning the Sudan,

Stressing its firm commitment to the cause of peace throughout the Sudan, including through the African Union-led inter-Sudanese peace talks in Abuja ("Abuja Talks"), full implementation of the Comprehensive Peace Agreement, and an end to the violence and atrocities in Darfur,

Urging all parties to the Abuja Talks to reach without further delay an agreement that will establish a basis for peace, reconciliation, stability and justice in the Sudan,

Recalling the midterm briefing of 7 October 2005 by the Panel of Experts appointed by the Secretary-General pursuant to paragraph 3 (b) of resolution 1591 (2005), and anticipating the receipt of its final report,

Emphasizing the need to respect the provisions of the Charter of the United Nations concerning privileges and immunities, and the Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the United Nations, as applicable to United Nations operations and persons engaged in such operations,

Reaffirming its commitment to the sovereignty, unity, independence and territorial integrity of the Sudan, and recalling the importance of the principles of good-neighbourliness, non-interference and cooperation in the relations among States in the region,

Determining that the situation in the Sudan continues to constitute a threat to international peace and security in the region,

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter,

1. Decides to extend the mandate of the Panel of Experts appointed pursuant to resolution 1591(2005) until 29 March 2006, and requests the Secretary-General to take the necessary administrative measures;

2. Requests the Panel of Experts to report and make recommendations to the Security Council, through the Committee established pursuant to paragraph 3 (a) of resolution 1591(2005), prior to the termination of its mandate, on the implementation of the measures imposed by paragraphs 7 and 8 of resolution 1556(2004) and paragraphs 3, 6 and 7 of resolution 1591(2005);

3. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Report of International Commission of Inquiry

On 31 January [S/2005/60], the Secretary-General transmitted the report of the five-member Commission of Inquiry, established pursuant to Security Council resolution 1564(2004) [YUN 2004, p. 245], on the violations of international humanitarian law and human rights law in Darfur.

The Commission, headed by Antonio Cassese (Italy), was mandated to investigate reports of violations of international humanitarian law and human rights law in Darfur by all parties; determine whether or not acts of genocide had occurred; and name the perpetrators with a view to ensuring that they were held accountable. The Commission, which visited the Sudan from 8 to 20 November 2004 and from 9 to 16 January 2005, held extensive meetings with representatives of the Government, the Governors of the Darfur states and other senior officials in the capital and at the provincial and local levels, internally displaced persons, victims and witnesses of violations, NGOs and UN representatives.

Based on its investigations, the Commission established that the Government of the Sudan and the Janjaweed were responsible for serious violations of international human rights and humanitarian law amounting to crimes under international law. In particular, Government forces and militias conducted indiscriminate attacks, including the killing of civilians, torture, enforced disappearances, destruction of villages, rape and other forms of sexual violence, pillaging and forced displacement, throughout Darfur. Those acts were conducted on a widespread and systematic basis and might amount to crimes against humanity.

Government officials stated that any attacks carried out by their armed forces in Darfur were for counter-insurgency purposes and conducted on the basis of military imperatives. However, the findings revealed that most attacks were deliberately and indiscriminately directed against civilians. While it did not find a systematic or a widespread pattern to those violations, it found credible evidence that rebel forces, namely, SLA members and JEM, also were responsible for serious violations of international human rights and humanitarian law which might amount to war crimes.

The Commission concluded that the Government of the Sudan had not pursued a policy of genocide. The crucial element of genocidal intent appeared to be missing, at least as far as the central Government authorities were concerned. The policy of attacking, killing and forcibly displacing members of some tribes did not evince a specific intent to annihilate, in whole or in part, a group distinguished on racial, ethnic, national or religious grounds. Rather, it seemed that those who planned and organized attacks on villages pursued the intent to drive the victims from their homes, primarily for purposes of counter-insurgency warfare. That conclusion should not be taken in any way as detracting from the gravity of the crimes perpetrated in that region. Those identified as possibly responsible for those violations consisted of individual perpetrators, including Government officials, members of militia forces, members of rebel groups, and certain foreign army officers acting in their personal capacity. Some Government officials, as well as militia forces, had also been named as possibly responsible for joint criminal enterprise to commit international crimes, and others of involvement in planning and/or ordering the commission of such crimes, or in aiding and abetting them. The Commission would list the names of those persons in a sealed file to be placed in the Secretary-General's custody, with the recommendation that it be handed over to the International Criminal Court (ICC). The evidentiary material collected would be handed over to the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights.

The Commission recommended that the Council immediately refer the Darfur situation to ICC, as the alleged crimes documented in Darfur met the thresholds of article 13*(b)* of the Rome Statute establishing the Court [YUN 1998, p. 1209]. The Sudanese justice system was unable and unwilling to address the situation in Darfur, which had been significantly weakened during the last decade. The measures taken so far by the Government to address the crisis had been both grossly inadequate and ineffective, which contributed to the climate of almost total impunity for human rights violations in Darfur.

It also recommended the establishment of a Compensation Commission to grant reparation to the victims, whether or not the perpetrators of such crimes had been identified. It urged the Sudanese Government to undertake a number of measures, including ending impunity for war crimes and crimes against humanity committed in Darfur; strengthening the independence and impartiality of the judiciary; empowering courts to address human rights violations; granting full and unimpeded access by the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) and UN human rights monitors to all those detained in relation to the situation in Darfur; ensuring the protection of all victims and witnesses; enhancing the capacity of the Sudanese judiciary through training; respecting the rights of internally displaced persons and fully implementing the Guiding Principles on Internal Displacement; fully cooperating with relevant UN and AU human rights bodies and mechanisms; and creating a truth and reconciliation commission once peace was established in Darfur.

The Commission also recommended the re-establishment by the Commission on Human Rights of the mandate of the Special Rapporteur on human rights in the Sudan, and public and periodic reports on the human rights situation in Darfur by the High Commissioner for Human Rights.

Communications. On 10 February [S/2005/77], the Sudan, in its response to the Commission's report, said that it had grave reservations as to the Commission's methodology for preparing its report and reaching conclusions, particularly the definition of the "Janjaweed" phenomenon. It was concerned with the judicial standards of evidence. In addition, despite evidence to the contrary, the Commission nonetheless held the Government responsible for attacks perpetrated by armed groups outside of its control. The Government strongly objected to the Commission's recommendations that the Darfur issue be referred to ICC. It said it doubted the accuracy of many of the Commission's findings and that its judicial system was competent to bring the perpetrators of human rights abuse and violations to justice.

On 18 February [S/2005/100], the Sudan complained about the non-circulation of the report of its National Commission of Inquiry (see p. 317) transmitted to the Council President on 23 January for circulation to Council members.

Security Council Consideration (February). The Security Council, on 16 February [meeting 5125], considered the report of the International Commission of Inquiry (see above). The Secretary-General told the Council that the call to urgent action in Darfur did not stop at the Commission's recommendation for referring the situation there to ICC, for the attacks on villages, the killing of civilians, rape, pillaging and forced displacement continued in Darfur. The international community, led by the Council, had to find a way to halt the killing and protect the vulnerable through a full range of options, including targeted sanctions, stronger peacekeeping efforts, new measures to protect civilians and increased pressure on both sides for a lasting political solution.

The United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, Louise Arbour, said the Commission's recommendations provided a blueprint for action. Their implementation would not only do justice for the victims of the massive crimes committed, but might actually contribute to reducing the exposure of thousands of prospective victims. Any new initiative proposed by the Government of the Sudan to address those crimes could not be supported in the light of the Commission's conclusions, especially the extent of involvement of Government officials.

Further communication (March). On 22 March [S/2005/196], Switzerland urged Council members to refer the situation in Darfur to ICC, as recommended by the International Commission of Inquiry on Darfur.

Referral of Darfur situation to ICC

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 31 March [meeting 5158], the Security Council adopted resolution 1593(2005) by vote (11-0-4). The draft [S/2005/218] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Taking note of the report of the International Commission of Inquiry for Darfur on violations of international humanitarian law and human rights law in Darfur,

Recalling article 16 of the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court, under which no investigation or prosecution may be commenced or proceeded with by the International Criminal Court for a period of twelve months after a Security Council request to that effect,

Also recalling articles 75 and 79 of the Rome Statute, and encouraging States to contribute to the International Criminal Court's Trust Fund for Victims,

Taking note of the existence of agreements referred to in article 98, paragraph 2, of the Rome Statute,

Determining that the situation in the Sudan continues to constitute a threat to international peace and security,

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Decides to refer the situation in Darfur since 1 July 2002 to the Prosecutor of the International Criminal Court;

2. Decides also that the Government of the Sudan and all other parties to the conflict in Darfur shall cooperate fully with and provide any necessary assistance to the International Criminal Court and the Prosecutor pursuant to the present resolution and, while recognizing that States not party to the Rome Statute of the Court have no obligation under the Statute, urges all States and concerned regional and other international organizations to cooperate fully;

3. Invites the Court and the African Union to discuss practical arrangements that will facilitate the work of the Prosecutor and of the Court, including the possibility of conducting proceedings in the region, which would contribute to regional efforts in the fight against impunity;

4. Encourages the Court, as appropriate and in accordance with the Rome Statute, to support international cooperation with domestic efforts to promote the rule of law, protect human rights and combat impunity in Darfur;

5. Emphasizes the need to promote healing and reconciliation, and encourages in this respect the creation of institutions, involving all sectors of Sudanese society, such as truth and/or reconciliation commissions, in order to complement judicial processes and thereby reinforce the efforts to restore long-lasting peace, with African Union and international support as necessary;

6. Decides that nationals, current or former officials or personnel from a contributing State outside the Sudan which is not a party to the Rome Statute shall be subject to the exclusive jurisdiction of that contributing State for all alleged acts or omissions arising out of or related to operations in the Sudan established or authorized by the Security Council or the African Union, unless such exclusive jurisdiction has been expressly waived by that contributing State;

7. Recognizes that none of the expenses incurred in connection with the referral, including expenses related to investigations or prosecutions in connection with that referral, shall be borne by the United Nations and that such costs shall be borne by the parties to the Rome Statute and those States that wish to contribute voluntarily;

8. Invites the Prosecutor to address the Council within three months of the date of adoption of the present resolution and every six months thereafter on actions taken pursuant to the present resolution;

9. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

RECORDED VOTE ON RESOLUTION 1593:

In favour: Argentina, Benin, Denmark, France, Greece, Japan, Philippines, Romania, Russian Federation, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania.

Against: None.

Abstaining: Algeria, Brazil, China, United States.

The United States, in an explanation of vote, said that it strongly supported the bringing to justice of those responsible for the crimes and atrocities that had occurred in Darfur and ending the climate of impunity there, but could not agree to referring the Darfur situation to ICC because of its continuing fundamental objection to the view that ICC should exercise jurisdiction over the nationals, including government officials, of States not party to the Rome Statute. It had not dropped, and indeed continued to maintain its long-standing objection and concerns regarding ICC.

Algeria said that the process of fighting impunity was a crucial element for peace and stability and should aim at restoring harmonious relations between the populations of Darfur and serve the cause of peace. Algeria believed that the AU was best placed to take charge of that delicate and sensitive undertaking of satisfying the requirements for peace without sacrificing the requirements for justice. It regretted that the Council had declined to consider Nigerian President Obasanjo's proposal for reconciling those two fundamental requirements.

China stated that it would prefer to see perpetrators of gross violations of human rights stand trial in the Sudanese judicial system, which had recently taken legal action against a number of individuals involved. China was not a party to the Rome Statute and was not in favour of referring the question of Darfur to ICC without the consent of the Sudanese Government since that would only complicate efforts to secure an early settlement of the Darfur issue and have unforeseeable consequences for the north-south peace process.

The United Kingdom welcomed the Council's decision, which it considered the most efficient and effective means available to deal with impunity and to ensure justice for the people of Darfur.

Brazil said that, while it supported referring the Darfur situation to ICC, the number of substantial issues raised would not contribute to the strengthening of ICC. Brazil had consistently rejected initiatives to extend exemptions of certain categories of individuals from ICC jurisdiction and it maintained its position to prevent efforts that might dismantle the achievements reached in international justice.

Establishment of special criminal court on Darfur

On 18 June [S/2005/403], the Sudan, in a press release of the same date, informed the Security Council President that, on 7 June, the Chief Justice had issued a decree establishing the Special Criminal Court on the Events in Darfur. The Chief Justice, with other judges and the Deputy Minister of Justice, had visited the three Darfur states the previous week to assess the performance of the judiciary and the judicial system and to address reports of attacks against persons, property and honour in those states. He had therefore decided to establish the Court to examine those reports and any report transmitted to the investigation committees, whose establishment had been recommended by Sudan's Commission of Inquiry to Investigate Alleged Human Rights Violations Committed by Armed Groups in the Darfur States (see p. 317).

The Court would be headed by an experienced Supreme Court judge and composed of judges of the Court of Appeal, including a woman judge, given the nature of some of the reports. Appeals would be heard by a special court of appeal to be set up by the Chief Justice.

Further developments in Darfur

Report of Secretary-General on Darfur (April). The Secretary-General, in an April report on Darfur [S/2005/240], said that the positive trends that were evident in February stalled, as a result of violent confrontations between the rebel movements and Government forces, who were operating jointly with armed tribal militia. Attacks and threats against humanitarian workers and supplies remained a major concern, as well as attacks on the AMIS. SLM/A and JEM fought with the Government army and Janjaweed on at least seven occasions, the most recent on 26 March, when Government troops and tribal militias attacked SLM/A positions in western Darfur. The third, and least active armed rebel group in Darfur, the National Movement for Reform and Development (NMRD), also fought Government forces in that region. The fighting resulted in an undetermined number of casualties, including civilians.

The increased intensity of the fighting in West Darfur raised concerns that the Government was still trying to control the Jebel Moon and Jebel Marra regions, despite the human cost of such a campaign into the heart of rebel territory. Reports continued to be received of Janjaweed and SLM/A attacks on civilians. At the same time, security in the camps for internally displaced persons remained unstable. Kalma camp saw continued harassment and intimidation, as well as random shootings by the police. The gravity of sexual and gender-based violence in Darfur was highlighted in a report released on 8 May by the NGO, Médecins sans frontières, which said it had treated some 500 rape victims between October 2004 and February 2005. On 6 March, the establishment of a committee to combat sexual violence was announced by a Governor's decree. The United Nations had raised questions about the committee's mandate, but agreed to participate in its work as an observer to bring concerns to the committee's attention and advise on improving response, should the mandate be amended.

Meanwhile, the AU continued its efforts with the parties to the Darfur conflict in search of a framework for a political settlement. A draft framework agreement prepared by the mediation team was being reviewed by the parties. The Special Representative held talks with them, including the rebel movements, on assisting the AU peace process. Earlier, he had travelled to Asmara to meet with the leadership of Eritrea, SLM/A and JEM. That meeting revealed a strong consensus that the Abuja peace process remained a primary forum for negotiations and participants repeated their stated position that the judicial process called for by the International Commission of Inquiry (see p. 324) should move forward in advance or in step with the political negotiations. On 27 March, the Special Representative met with the Sudan's First Vice-President to discuss the Asmara meetings and the peace process generally. The Secretary-General discussed with the AU Commission Chairman, Alpha Oumar Konaré, steps to strengthen AMIS-UNMIS cooperation.

Report of Secretary-General (May). On 10 May [S/2005/305], the Secretary-General reported that during April, troop movements and the illegal occupation of new positions increased, as did harassment, burning of unoccupied villages, kidnapping, banditry, including carjacking, armed robbery and theft of livestock, attacks on civilians and rape by militia. Reports also suggested that the Government had tried to restrain its Popular Defence Forces militia and prevent criminal acts by issuing warnings and arresting perpetrators. Those efforts were inadequate, however, judging by the widespread reports of abuse by those groups in much of the non-rebel-held areas of Darfur.

Most of the militia activities involved small bands targeting civilians and internally displaced persons. However, on 7 April, a militia of the Missiriya tribe carried out the most serious attack since the sacking of Hamada in January. A militia under the command of Nasir Al-Tijani Adel Kaadir carried out a day-long raid of Khor Abeche in southern Darfur in retaliation for an earlier incident in which 10 members of the Missiriya people were killed and cattle stolen by SLA elements. In a joint statement, the AU and the United Nations determined that, pursuant to resolution 1591(2005), the name of Nasir Al-Tijani Adel Kaadir and his identified collaborators would be passed on to the relevant sanctions committee. Prior to the attacks, approximately 7,000 displaced persons were registered in Khor Abeche, a town with a population of about 3,000. A joint UN/AU assessment found the village had been substantially burned and looted and practically all of the population had fled. The Wali of South Darfur established a committee to investigate the attack and announce its findings within 15 days.

SLA and JEM carried out attacks on police and militia in April and continued to take commercial, private and NGO vehicles at gunpoint to be converted into battlefield platforms, on a scale that suggested that those acts were approved by their leadership.

Enhancing the AU Mission in the Sudan

AU Mission in the Sudan. In May [S/2005/285], the Secretary-General submitted, pursuant to Security Council resolution 1590(2005), a report on UN assistance to AMIS. He said that, in response to that resolution, he met with the AU Commission Chairperson on 28 February, and they agreed to dispatch a mission to Darfur to assess the security situation and AMIS deployment, consider requirements for enhancing peace support in Darfur, and explore UNMIS options for reinforcing AMIS, in particular in the areas of logistical support and technical assistance.

The mission (10-22 March and 1-4 May), led by the AU, and including the United Nations, the EU and the United States, assessed that since AMIS had been effective in the areas where it was deployed, it needed to be strengthened. That was to take place in two phases: phase I would allow AMIS to reach its full operational capability within its authorized strength of 3,320, by May; and phase II, involving deployments from June to August, would expand AMIS personnel to 7,447, including 5,887 military personnel and 1,560 police, plus civilian staff. That phase would entail improved compliance with the N'Djamena Humanitarian Ceasefire Agreement and the Abuja humanitarian and security protocols, providing a secure environment for internally displaced persons in and around camps and those not yet displaced to permit humanitarian access.

A phase III, involving a complex, multidimensional operation of more than 12,000 military and police personnel, was also envisaged to provide a secure environment throughout Darfur to permit the return of displaced persons. A decision on that phase would be made in September.

On 28 April, the AU Peace and Security Council, in a communiqué on the enhancement of AMIS, decided to increase its strength to 6,171 military personnel, with an appropriate civilian component, including up to 1,560 civilian police. It appealed to all AU partners to continue providing support to meet the requirements for the strengthening and sustainment of AMIS. At the Secretary-General's request, his Special Adviser, Lakhdar Brahimi, in a meeting with the AU Commission Chairperson, following the AU Peace and Security Council meeting, agreed that the two organizations should discuss ways in which the United Nations could assist with military and logistics planning, in appealing for funding for AMIS expansion, and in organizing and co-hosting a pledging conference to mobilize resources for that purpose.

The Secretary-General said that, while the assistance UNMIS could provide at that stage was limited, because of its focus on implementing the Comprehensive Peace Agreement, the United Nations and UNMIS could: assist in identifying qualified police personnel in support of completing phase I; assist the AU to develop a detailed operational plan for AMIS expansion; provide technical advice in logistics, planning and management; and provide training support for AU personnel in selecting police personnel for phase II and in convening troop contributor, and pledging conferences.

The Secretary-General observed that AMIS had been a groundbreaking initiative for the AU and its supporters within the international community. The Mission had accomplished a remarkable amount in a very short time, despite significant constraints. It was critical for all concerned to do their part. The Secretary-General recommended that AU States members identify personnel to join AMIS, the AU Commission strengthen planning and management capacity in order to support an expanded mission, and partners provide the AU with the means to carry out a costly and challenging task.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 12 May [meeting 5177], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2005/18 on behalf of the Council:

> The Security Council welcomes the report of the Secretary-General of 3 May 2005 on assistance by the United Nations Mission in the Sudan to the African Union Mission in the Sudan and the proposals therein on support the United Nations could make available to the African Union Mission.

The Council applauds the vital leadership role the African Union is playing in Darfur and the work of the African Union Mission on the ground. The Council supports the findings of the joint assessment mission, led by the African Union from 10 to 22 March 2005, which included the United Nations and other partners. The Council also supports the subsequent decision taken by the Peace and Security Council of the African Union on 28 April 2005 to expand its mission in Darfur to 7,731 personnel by the end of September 2005.

The Council welcomes the ongoing deployment of the United Nations Mission in the Sudan and looks forward to close coordination and cooperation between the Mission and the African Union Mission in the Sudan. In this context, the Council recalls its request in resolution 1590(2005) for the United Nations Mission in the Sudan to closely and continuously liaise and coordinate, at all levels, with the African Union Mission in the Sudan with a view towards expeditiously reinforcing the effort to foster peace in Darfur, especially with regard to the Abuja peace process and the African Union Mission in the Sudan.

The Council welcomes the role played by the African Union's partners in support of the African Union Mission in the Sudan and underlines the active role played by the European Union and by other bilateral donors.

The Council emphasizes the importance of increased coordinated international assistance for the African Union effort in Darfur and emphasises the readiness of the United Nations to continue playing a key role. In this context, the Council welcomes the second joint assessment mission from 1 to 4 May 2005, which included representatives from the African Union, the United Nations and other partners. The Council looks forward to continuing contacts in order to facilitate provision of assistance as requested by the African Union. The Council welcomes, in this regard, the effort and intention of the Secretary-General to consult closely with the African Union on the scope and nature of possible United Nations support to the African Union Mission in the Sudan.

Developments in Darfur between May and June

Report of Secretary-General on Darfur (May). On 10 May [S/2005/305], the Secretary-General said that, while there had been comparatively few systematic attacks in April, troop movements and illegal occupation of new positions increased, as had harassment, burning of unoccupied villages, kidnapping, banditry, attacks on civilians and rape by the militia. The border area of western Darfur saw an elevated level of military activity due to the movement of armed groups across the border with Chad. The non-fatal shooting of a Chadian consul en route from the border to Geneina, on 16 April, added to the tensions.

As to the Darfur political process, the AU focused its efforts on garnering the support of the parties for its proposed draft framework protocol for the resolution of conflict in Darfur. An AU negotiating team travelled to Khartoum to discuss the draft protocol with Government officials, including the Vice-President. It also contacted representatives of the armed movements. However, because of a lack of confidence between them, the parties refrained from taking a clear position on the proposed draft framework protocol.

Meanwhile, following the adoption of Security Council resolutions 1591(2005) and 1593(2005), tension in the Darfur states and Khartoum increased, with the risks of hostile action against the UN and other elements of the international presence in Darfur. The Secretary-General urged the Government to make clear its acceptance of all recent resolutions relating to the Sudan and Darfur, and to ensure that a cooperative policy was reflected at all levels.

Report of Secretary-General (June). The Secretary-General visited Darfur in May, where he found that the security situation had improved and the overall violence against civilians had dropped in comparison to the 2004 levels. According to his June report [S/2005/378], the trend was, however, not entirely positive, as increased fighting was reported between the Government and SLM/A forces. The Government forces were on the defensive, in most cases, as rebel movements conducted small-scale attacks against Government convoys or small units of army or police personnel.

Meanwhile, the Jebel Marra area had become inaccessible to relief operations, as insecurity and the rains made the road to most localities in rebel-held areas unsafe. In northern Darfur, SLA ambushed several convoys and vehicles engaged in humanitarian work along the Kabkabiya-El-Fasher-road, while in southern Darfur, insecurity and banditry on the Ed Daein-Nyala road seriously hampered access for humanitarian relief operations.

The AU announced that the next round of the Darfur peace talks was to resume in Abuja, Nigeria, on 10 June and the appointment of Salim A. Salim as its Special Envoy for the Inter-Sudanese Peace Talks on Darfur. The Sudanese leaders had assured the Secretary-General during his visit to Darfur that the Naivasha Agreement [YUN 2004, p. 236] would serve as the model and framework for an agreement in Darfur, with arrangements for power and wealth-sharing, a land commission and a reconciliation process. He urged the Government to commence an effective programme of disarmament and demobilization of the tribal militias that continued to terrorize the civilian population of Darfur.

Joint Implementation Mechanism missions to Darfur

The Joint Implementation Mechanism, established to oversee implementation of the terms of the 3 July 2004 communiqué [YUN 2004, p. 239] signed by the United Nations and the Government of the Sudan, undertook three missions to Darfur (western Darfur (15-16 June) and northern and southern Darfur (22-23 June)) to evaluate their compliance with it. The Mechanism's report, annexed to the Secretary-General's July report on Darfur [S/2005/467], examined humanitarian issues, human rights, security and political issues.

The missions found that the overall situation in Darfur had improved considerably since the signing of the joint communiqué in 2004, with progress having been achieved in all areas. However, the remaining obstacles had to be acknowledged and addressed. Substantial gaps in the response of humanitarian assistance still persisted, despite the increase in humanitarian assistance. The number of conflict-affected people in Darfur had risen from 1,090,000 to more than 2,730,000, due in part to the return of internally displaced persons to areas closer to their homes because of localized improvements in security. Assistance also had to be widened to reach affected groups outside the camps. The easing of restrictions on humanitarian operations had resulted in a significant increase in humanitarian presence and delivery, but humanitarian workers still faced difficulties in visa processing, and reports continued to be made of harassment, arbitrary arrests and restrictions on their movement. The provision of humanitarian assistance to internally displaced person in some camps was hampered also by the resistance of local camp leaders to the head count necessary for registration.

Although the Government had taken a number of positive steps in the area of human rights, including cooperation with the international human rights officers that had been deployed, and established a National Judicial Committee to investigate human rights violations in Darfur and a Special Criminal Court for Darfur Crimes, those instruments had not yet contributed to the establishment of accountability for human rights and the ending of impunity.

While the security situation had improved, especially in the camps, it remained volatile and unpredictable. The reported presence of militias around the camps highlighted the need to improve the security environment and not just provide safe havens to which the civilian population could be confined. With respect to disarmament, while some steps had been taken in that regard, the missions found limited indications of a systematic and sustained effort by the authorities to address the disarmament of the Janjaweed and other armed groups.

The missions concluded that, despite the progress, efforts were needed to end the harassment of aid workers in southern Darfur and ensure that the policies adopted at the national and state levels were implemented. More needed to be done to address impunity and disarmament. Both the civilian police and AMIS troops received strong support from the displaced population, as their limited deployment had helped restore confidence. While recognizing that protecting the population remained the responsibility of the local authorities, cooperation with AMIS would help improve the security situation and offer better protection for internally displaced persons.

Further political and security developments in Darfur

Reports of Secretary-General (August/October). The fifth round of the AU-led Abuja talks aimed at reaching a political agreement between the Government and the two armed movements opened on 10 June, the Secretary-General stated in his July report [S/2005/467]. On 5 July, the three parties agreed on the Declaration of Principles for the Resolution of the Sudanese Conflict in Darfur, which contained important provisions regarding the shape of future negotiations on matters such as unity, religion, power-sharing, wealth-sharing, security arrangements and land use and ownership. The Declaration of Principles was favourably received in Darfur, the Secretary-General said in his August report on Darfur [S/2005/523]. The third armed movement in Darfur, NMRD, had been quoted as agreeing to abide by the Declaration of Principles when it met the Government in El-Fasher on 19 July. Meanwhile, the Darfur Forum, a broad-based unaffiliated Sudanese civil society organization, in a meeting with the Special Representative in July, argued that the armed movements did not represent all the people of Darfur and sought participation in talks with the Government. The Declaration of Principles provided for the start of comprehensive inter-Darfur dialogue following the Abuja talks to allow the concerns, beyond those of the parties, such as the non-fighting groups and civil society, to be addressed. The Special Representative and his staff were already discussing with such parties the conditions under which such a dialogue would lead to a sustainable peace.

The AU mediator intended to contact the partners in the run-up to the next round of Abuja talks scheduled to start on 24 August to discuss the way forward. At the same time, UNMIS was exploring ways to further support the AU, substantively and technically, through the provision of experts and logistical support for participants attending the talks. Although internal divisions within SLM/A posed a challenge to the next round of talks, the signing of an agreement between SLM/A and JEM in Tripoli, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, on 18 July, would in some measure help to unify the rebels' positions on key issues. However, renewed fighting between the Government of the Sudan and SLM/A on 23 July threatened to complicate further the next round of talks.

The Special Criminal Court for the events in Darfur began proceedings in August, with four cases before it dealing with rape, armed robbery, illegal possession of firearms and unlawful killing of persons in custody. Two of the cases involved charges brought against members of the Government armed forces and military intelligence. However, none of the cases addressed the major violations of human rights and international humanitarian law, nor the criminal responsibility of senior officials. The Secretary-General expressed concern also that the Special Court had no special procedures in place for protecting minors.

As at 1 July, the number of people needing humanitarian assistance had risen to 3.2 million. Flooding, due to heavy rains, prompted the relocation of internally displaced persons in some camps and emergency intervention to safeguard minimum sanitary conditions in all three Darfur states, and hindered road access to various parts of the region. At a time when humanitarian assistance had to rely increasingly on air operations, funding gaps risked constraining the delivery of that assistance. As to security in the camps, the registration process was violently disrupted on 8 July in seven of the eight camps around Geneina. Violent attacks took place again on 16 July during food distribution in the Mornei camp, with exchanges of fire between armed elements and Government police. On both occasions, there was strong evidence of incitement by sheikhs within the camps, whose manipulation of the ration-card system was threatened by the registration process.

Meanwhile, AMIS continued to take the lead in international efforts to address security concerns in Darfur. The Secretary-General urged major AU partners to fill the funding gap for AMIS and encouraged the AU Commission to establish clear priorities within its budget so that critical needs could be addressed.

Reports of Secretary-General (September/October). In mid-August, the Special Representative resumed his visit to Darfur to continue contacts with SLM/A leaders on the Darfur peace negotiations and to discuss with them the security problems facing humanitarian assistance convoys. During an earlier trip to Darfur, the Special Representative met SLM/A Secretary-General Minni Minawi and several field commanders to discuss some of the problems facing SLM/A. Mr. Minawi requested UN financial, logistical and technical assistance in organizing a conference of the movement's military and political leadership to clarify its structure. While the Special Representative did not rule out the possibility of such assistance, he emphasized the need for the Abuja negotiations to resume on schedule. Elements of SLM/A sympathetic to Mr. Minawi called for a delay in the Abuja talks in order to convene that conference. While that conference did not take place, it would be important for SLM/A to adopt a unified position for the negotiations, the Secretary-General noted in his September report [S/2005/592].

The sixth round of Inter-Sudanese Peace Talks on Darfur resumed in Abuja on 15 September. The talks opened with technical workshops on power-sharing, wealth-sharing and security (15-21 September) the Secretary-General reported in October [S/2005/650]. At the AU's request, the United Nations provided air transportation to the talks for some JEM and SLM/A delegates and a group of SLA commanders. Nevertheless, the talks opened with uncertainty regarding the cohesion of the SLM/A delegation and the degree to which SLM/A's Secretary-General Minawi's faction was participating.

The workshops and the talks were negatively affected by reports of a Government attack on SLM/A positions in Jebel Marra and near El-Fasher and violence in Shaeria on 19 September (see below). Nonetheless, at the urging of the AU mediator and international partners, all the parties continued to attend the workshops until their conclusion. Negotiations did not begin until the end of September. Internal division within SLM paralysed the talks for one week, during which discussions were limited to procedural matters. Neither SLM faction seemed willing to negotiate substance, despite urgent appeals by the AU mediator and representatives of the international community.

In September, the Secretary-General also reported an alarming deterioration in the security situation in all three Darfur states. The frequency and intensity of the violence committed by the Sudanese Armed Forces and the Popular Defence Forces, Government-aligned tribal militias and the armed movements, including in particular SLM/A, reached levels unseen since January. In northern Darfur, tribal militia struck villages in a number of locations, including in Shangil Tobayi area, Um Maharek and south of Tawilla town. In southern Darfur, one of the more devastating clashes occurred on 19 September when SLM/A attacked Sudanese Armed Forces positions in and around the village of Shaeria, forcing many civilians to seek shelter outside the town. The Sudanese Armed Forces suffered dozens of casualties and SLM/A made off with quantities of arms, munitions, fuel and other supplies. On 29 September, Government police and Sudanese Armed Forces units entered Tawilla town and the adjacent Dali IDP camp, firing at civilians indiscriminately and without provocation.

The security situation in western Darfur worsened dramatically as well. Banditry and hijacking along roads from Geneina reached such dire levels that all roads leading south, west and east from the town were "off-limits" for UN staff and critical movements could proceed only with authorized armed escorts. Indications showed that local authorities were increasingly unwilling or incapable of controlling the tribal militia and armed gangs operating in the area. The police were often challenged by armed gangs or militia members and did not appear to have the capacity to enforce laws.

While banditry and lawlessness were the primary cause of insecurity in western Darfur, there was also politically motivated violence, with the largest and deadliest of those incidents being the unprovoked attack by tribal militia on the Aro Sharow camp and the villages of Gosmino and Ardja in the Kulbus area of western Darfur near the border with Chad on 28 September. The latest information available indicated that 35 internally displaced persons were killed and 10 wounded in the violence, and over 4,000 forced to flee. The volatile security situation during September also took a toll on international personnel working in Darfur.

Evidence showed that Government forces triggered some of the incidents, and there were clear indications that, in many cases, the tribal militia operated with enabling support from the Government. Those attacks were confirmed by the Head of AMIS, Baba Gana Kingibe, who announced in a press conference on 1 October that the Sudanese Armed Forces had conducted "coordinated offensive operations" with tribal militia on four occasions since 18 September. That assessment was corroborated by evidence gathered from survivors of the militia attacks on villages.

Communications. The EU Presidency, in a 23 September statement [S/2005/630], expressed concern about reports of serious clashes in Darfur, including most recently on the eastern slopes of the Jebel Marra and in Shaeria, South Darfur. It called on all belligerents to reign in their fighters and to ensure their forces respected international law, as well as the N'Djamena Ceasefire Agreement and the Abuja protocols.

The AU Peace and Security Council, in a 10 October communiqué [S/2005/643], expressed concern over the deteriorating security situation throughout Darfur since August. It condemned the killing and abduction of AMIS soldiers and the attacks by SLM/A in Turba on 23 August and on the Government's military camp in Shaeria on 19 September, and Janjaweed attacks on Tawilla town and its camps on 29 September. The Council requested the AU Commission to examine ways to strengthen the mechanisms for effective compliance by the Sudanese parties with all agreements, as well as the decisions of the Ceasefire Commission and the Joint Commission and to submit proposals on the best way forward. It supported the Chairperson's decision to send a high-level military team to Darfur to assess the situation and make recommendations on how to prevent a recurrence of such incidents. It also decided to bring the situation in Darfur to the attention of the UN Security Council.

On 20 October [S/2005/676], the AU Peace and Security Council extended AMIS mandate for three months until 20 January 2006, and appealed to AU member States and partners to provide financial and logistical support to enable it to execute its mandate.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 13 October [meeting 5277], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2005/48 on behalf of the Council:

> The Security Council expresses its grave concern at recent reports of an upsurge of violence in Darfur by all sides and insists that all parties strictly abide by the demands and commitments made in the N'djamena ceasefire agreement of 8 April 2004, the resolutions of the Council and the Abuja Protocols. The Council strongly condemns the attack of 8 October 2005 reportedly by the Sudan Liberation Movement/Army on personnel of the African Union Mission in the Sudan in Darfur, which killed four Nigerian peacekeepers and two civilian contractors and wounded three others near Menawasha, and the attack of 9 October 2005 reportedly by the Justice and Equality Movement in Tine in Northern Darfur, which resulted in the ambush and detention of approximately 35 Mission personnel. The Council extends its deepest condolences to the families of those killed.

The Council also condemns the attack of 25 September 2005 in Modaina, Chad, by armed groups coming from the Sudan, which killed 75 people, the majority of them civilians. The Council joins with the African Union in expressing particular outrage at the attack of 19 September 2005 by Darfur rebels against the town of Sheiara, the attack by Janjaweed militias on the camp for displaced persons at Aro Sharow on 28 September 2005, during which 29 people were killed and many more wounded, and the attack on the village of Tawilla by Sudanese government forces on 29 September 2005.

The Council expresses its deep concern at the humanitarian impact that these developments cause and at the restrictions imposed on humanitarian operations in Darfur. The Council insists that restrictions end immediately and strongly urges all parties to ensure unhindered humanitarian access in Darfur.

The Council also expresses its concern that in the report of the Secretary-General of 19 September 2005 it was stated that there had been 'no visible effort by the Government [of the Sudan] to disarm the militia or hold them to account in accordance with past agreements and Security Council resolutions [...]. The SLM/A [Sudan Liberation Movement/Army] and the Justice and Equality Movement (JEM) are also failing to abide by the commitments made under past agreements and are doing far too little to control their men under arms.' The Council recalls the obligation undertaken by the Government of the Sudan to disarm and control militias. It demands that the Sudan Liberation Movement/Army, the Justice and Equality Movement and the Government of the Sudan immediately cease violence, comply with the N'djamena ceasefire agreement, end impediments to the peace process and cooperate fully with the African Union Mission in the Sudan. The Council again emphasizes the need to bring to justice those who perpetrate violence.

The Council recalls the provisions of its resolution 1591(2005) concerning the Sudan. It urges the African Union to share the results of its investigations into recent attacks with the Council for possible referral to the Sudan sanctions committee in order to assist in the implementation of the provisions of the relevant Council resolutions.

The Council expresses its unequivocal support for the African Union Mission in the Sudan, and recalls that the Government of the Sudan and Darfur rebel movements have to take the necessary steps to facilitate the deployment and effectiveness of the Mission.

The Council remains firmly committed to the cause of peace in all of the Sudan, including through the Abuja talks and through full implementation of the Comprehensive Peace Agreement. It encourages the Government of National Unity and the Darfur rebels to engage in the search for a solution to the Darfur conflict. It urges all parties to make rapid progress at the Abuja talks to conclude a peace agreement without further delay.

Reports of Secretary-General (November/December). In his November report [S/2005/719], the Secretary-General stated that the sixth round of the inter-Sudanese peace talks on Darfur held in Abuja ended on 20 October following weeks of difficult negotiations among the Government, SLM/A and JEM. The parties adopted a joint communiqué, in which they expressed their commitment "to make the next round", due to start on 21 November, "a decisive one". The start of the actual negotiations was delayed due to the dispute over the legitimacy of SLM/A representatives to the talks. Both SLM/A Chairman Wahid and Secretary-General Minawi had sent separate lists of delegates to the talks. A group of 10 field commanders, representing different tribal groups, and 3 representatives from Mr. Minawi's office in Asmara, arrived in Abuja on 25 September, stressing the "neutrality" of their group in the ongoing disagreement between the SLM/A Chairman and Secretary-General and promising to promote unity within the movement. Despite week-long consultations, SLM/A leadership failed to find a compromise. On 29 October, an SLM reconciliation conference was convened in northern Darfur, which was attended by Mr. Minawi but not by Mr. Wahid, who sent a delegation.

Despite the SLM split, the talks started on 3 October, first with the power-sharing commission and later on the wealth-sharing and the security commission. Although negotiations on the three main elements of the talks should have been conducted in parallel, SLM/A and JEM, which formed a united delegation throughout the talks, cited a lack of capacity within the movements to discuss some of them, in particular wealth-sharing. Nevertheless, before the adjournment of the talks, the agenda on wealth-sharing was adopted. Some progress was made on three of nine items on the power-sharing agenda: general principles on power-sharing; human rights and fundamental freedoms; and the criteria and guidelines for power-sharing. Discussions began on the fourth agenda item, the federal system and all levels of Government, although the positions of the two sides still differed considerably. In particular, there were lingering concerns that the movements might continue to withhold their recognition of either the Comprehensive Peace Agreement or the Interim National Constitution on the grounds that they were not party to their negotiation.

The ninth meeting of the Joint Commission, established by the 2004 N'Djamena Protocol, was held in the Chadian capital on 13 and 14 October, the first since February 2005. The meeting took place in parallel to the Abuja talks, and both meetings influenced each other positively. During the meeting, the Government and SLM/A were criticized for significant ceasefire violations and the militia groups for attacks on civilians. The Joint Commission noted that the Government had made no progress in disarming the Janjaweed and that the movements had failed to identify their positions and separate their forces on the ground. It urged the parties to give written indications of their respective positions to the Ceasefire Commission; reiterated its call for the immediate disarmament of the Janjaweed; and urged the Government to allow the entry into Darfur of 105 armoured personnel carriers made available by Canada to AMIS. The Government signalled its readiness to allow only 35 armoured personnel carriers into the region but indicated a willingness to consider the entry of the remaining 70. Finally, it was agreed that the Joint Commission would meet on a regular basis, possibly monthly.

The Secretary-General observed that, to ensure the success of the peace process, continued coordination among international partners was required, especially for those activities that would have to be carried out after a successful conclusion of the peace talks. They included: bridging the relief-development gap; assisting voluntary returns; ceasefire monitoring; disarmament, demobilization and reintegration; policing; and rule of law and human rights monitoring. Moreover, the Darfur-Darfur dialogue and reconciliation were core issues that should be addressed both during and after the talks if the peace settlement was to be truly inclusive. International community support for a Darfur peace agreement would also depend on several factors, including its consistency with the Comprehensive Peace Agreement and the Interim National Constitution and respect for the constitutional arrangements worked out for southern Sudan; its potential application to other conflict areas in the country, such as eastern Sudan; and the inclusion of measures to effectively enforce a permanent ceasefire in Darfur.

In his December report [S/2005/825], the Secretary-General informed that, following the adjournment of the sixth round of the inter-Sudanese peace talks on Darfur, the Minawi element of the SLM/A leadership called a conference in Haskanita, in eastern Darfur, on 29 October. Although the conference, was well attended, the SLM/A Chairman Abdul Wahid Al-Nur and the majority of his supporters refused to participate. The Haskanita conference culminated in the election of Minni Minawi as the new SLM/A Chairman, which was rejected by Abdul Wahid. Several important initiatives were undertaken to repair the SLM/A rift and help create a conducive environment for the seventh round of Abuja talks, which resumed on 29 November. The first was a meeting of senior officials from donor countries and the United Nations (London, 1 November), convened by the United Kingdom, to, among other things, discuss how to unite positions within SLM/A ahead of the talks, proposals to end the violence in Darfur, and the post-Abuja period. UNMIS also participated in a meeting (Nairobi, 8-9 November), convened by the United States, to reconcile Abdul Wahid and Minni Minawi. Although Abdul Wahid attended the meeting, Minni Minawi did not, but sent a delegation to represent him.

On 12 November, a meeting of Special Envoys convened by the Special Representative in Khartoum, attended by representatives from the AU, the EU, Canada, France, Germany, the Netherlands, Norway, the United Kingdom and the United States, discussed how to facilitate a more unified position within SLM before the talks began, and humanitarian and development issues that would have to be addressed after the conclusion of a peace agreement. An UNMIS paper presented to the Special Envoys, focused on the post-Abuja process and discussed the characteristics that would be required of any peace agreement to make it credible and sustainable. At the meeting, the importance for the international community to engage the parties on key post-conflict issues that needed to be defined in the peace agreement was also recognized, some of which could also be addressed in more detail in the Darfur-Darfur dialogue, to be held after the conclusion of a final peace agreement on Darfur. That dialogue should also include a strategy for sustainable reconciliation among all communities in Darfur.

On 19 November, following the Envoys' meeting in Khartoum, United States Assistant Secretary of State for African Affairs, Jendayi Frazer, and the Head of AMIS, Ambassador Baba Gana Kingibe, jointly facilitated a meeting between Abdul Wahid and Minni Minawi to urge them again to participate constructively and with a united purpose in the seventh round of the Abuja talks, notwithstanding the disagreements within the movement. A further initiative was led by the Government of Chad, assisted by the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Eritrea and the AU, in N'Djamena on 25 and 26 November. Both Abdul Wahid and Minni Minawi agreed to present a common negotiating platform, to be coordinated with JEM.

The Special Representative also held two bilateral meetings with Mr. Minawi, during which he underlined the international community's position that divisions within SLM should not detract from the overarching mission of achieving peace and reconciliation in Darfur before the end of 2005. He urged Mr. Minawi to refrain from detaining dissenting commanders, made clear that the United Nations could not take a stance in the movement's internal dispute and called on him to cooperate with Abdul Wahid to ensure that the signing of a peace agreement reached during the next round would result in the cessation of military activities by all.

The seventh round of inter-Sudanese peace talks on Darfur opened in Abuja on 29 November. All parties pledged to negotiate in good faith, with a view to reaching an agreement by the end of the year. Talks were held on power-sharing and on wealth-sharing and security arrangements. While the parties identified priority areas of concern in the power-sharing discussions, their position still remained far apart, which the AU mediation was attempting to bridge through compromise solutions.

In preparation for those talks, the AU Peace and Security Council (Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, 22 November) [S/2005/765] issued a communiqué expressing concern over developments on the ground. It demanded that the SLM/A leadership should be addressed collectively to resolve the conflict in a democratic and transparent manner. The AU Council decided, in consultation with the UN Security Council, to consider future measures, including sanctions, to be taken against any party that undermined or constituted an obstacle to the Darfur peace process. It appealed to all international partners to support the AU position on an all-inclusive peace process, and the peace talks, as well as AMIS deployment in Darfur.

Concerning the security situation, the Secretary-General said in his November report that the security situation in western Darfur remained very precarious in October. Even after promises by the state government to implement joint military and police patrols on the highways to ensure security, lawlessness and banditry reached such dangerous levels that all roads out of Geneina remained open to UN staff only with approved armed escorts. The tense situation within Geneina itself warranted a reduction of non-essential UN personnel on 12 October. The poor security situation was compounded by issues that straddled the Sudan-Chad border. Reports of defections from the Chadian army highlighted the risk of transborder tribal ties internationalizing the conflict in Darfur. Moreover, criminal cross-border activities added another dimension to the already challenging security environment.

October also marked a milestone for AMIS, as five of its members were killed on 8 October, the mission's first such deaths, during a firefight with an armed group that had earlier ambushed and killed two civilian contractors in southern Darfur. The AMIS patrol stated that the attackers appeared to be members of the SLM/A, while the movement's leadership denied any involvement. That event was followed the next day by a large-scale, though short-term, detention of AMIS personnel and advisers by a splinter faction of JEM near Tine, northern Darfur. On 27 October, an AMIS patrol was shot at near Tama, southern Darfur, by unknown gunmen. The escalation of targeted violence against AMIS underscored the serious dangers and risks facing the AU force and the need for all parties to guarantee their safety and security in Darfur.

In early November, the freedom of movement of members of the panel of experts appointed by the Security Council to monitor the implementation of Council resolution 1591(2005) was affected during the panel's latest visit to El-Fasher, where they were harassed by Government security agents. On 10 November, the State Minister admitted that the behaviour of military intelligence "had been wrong" and assured the Special Representative that the panel members had freedom of movement in the pursuit of their mandated activities.

In his December report, the Secretary-General said that the confirmed number of civilian deaths due to violence had almost doubled, due to both politically motivated attacks and criminal banditry. In particular, two political developments significantly contributed to violence and insecurity during the reporting period. First, the internal struggle within SLM/A created a leadership vacuum in certain areas of Darfur, leading to speculation that the split would spur inter-tribal clashes between the Fur and the Zaghawa, the respective tribes of the two rival SLM/A leaders, Abdul Wahid and Minni Minawi. Second, a recent influx of military deserters from Chad into western Darfur had further destabilized the complex security situation in the region. They joined Chadian armed opposition groups based in Darfur who engaged in a wide range of destructive activities, including cross-border smuggling, cattle-rustling and banditry. There were also serious inter-tribal clashes in southern Darfur between the Falata and the Massalit. Militia attacks on more than a dozen Massalit villages south-west of Gereida occurred from 6 to 17 November, resulting in an estimated 60 deaths, and the displacement of 15,000 people.

In northern Darfur, SLM/A internal difficulties translated into an increasing number of inter-tribal incidents on 11 November between the Zaghawa and Meidop tribes. On 13 November, confrontation between the two tribes resulted in the death of at least 15 people.

Western Darfur presented the most complex security environment of the three States, as splinters of various armed groups and significant numbers of infiltrators from Chad engaged in criminally and politically motivated violence. On 18 November, the Sudanese Armed Forces carried out operations in the Jebel Moon area, allegedly against Chadian deserters who had moved into the area. That incident was confirmed a week later by an UNMIS assessment team visiting the area on a fact-finding mission. Furthermore, there was no sign of Chadian deserters as alleged by the Government.

The Secretary-General noted that the situation in Darfur had not changed since 2004: the vast majority of armed militia had not been disarmed, nor any major steps taken by the Government to bring to justice or even identify any of the militia leaders or the perpetrators of attacks, contributing to a prevailing climate of impunity. He urged the Government of the Sudan once again to take decisive steps to address those issues. The current round of the Abuja talks was critical and had to be decisive, despite the serious difficulties encountered, as a result of the division within SLM. Further procrastination should not be accepted. The international community, including his Special Representative, had begun engaging the parties on key post-conflict issues that needed to be defined in a peace agreement. However, a peace agreement could result in security and protection only if it was widely accepted among the various elements in Darfur, including those not represented at the Abuja talks. Sustained dialogue among all parties and an inclusive and long-term reconciliation strategy therefore would have to follow an agreement in Abuja. All parties would have to demonstrate their political determination for genuine reconciliation. Those and other steps would have to go hand in hand with an enhanced international security presence, which should address adequately the deteriorating security situation on the ground.

The Secretary-General said that he was pleased that the AU had decided to lead a second assessment mission from 10 to 20 December (see below), including a team from the United Nations. The mission's recommendations on the way forward would help inform the AU, its partners and the Security Council as they considered the next steps to take. In the meantime, everything possible should be done to sustain and strengthen the AU Mission and to further enhance protection efforts throughout the region. He also appealed to the donor community to respond generously to the massive humanitarian needs in Darfur, which were outlined in the 2006 workplan for the Sudan, and presented on 2 December.

AU assessment team to Darfur (December)

The AU-led assessment team to Darfur arrived there on 10 December to review AMIS operations, assess the implementation of the recommendations of the March assessment mission (see p. 327) and evaluate the security situation.

In its assessment, transmitted by Nigeria to the Security Council President on 22 December [S/2005/834], the mission concluded that the AMIS presence had contributed to reducing the number of ceasefire violations and afforded some level of protection for the delivery of humanitarian assistance. Its "firewood patrols" and field sorties enabled internally displaced persons to cultivate and harvest crops in certain areas, and that, together with a sustained humanitarian effort by the international community, had considerably reduced malnutrition and mortality rates in Darfur. Several AMIS commanders had also engaged in local reconciliation efforts ("military diplomacy"), thus contributing to reducing tensions and preventing many incidents. The deployment of the civilian police component, which had started 24-hour operations in some locations, also helped to improve significantly the security in the camps for internally displaced persons and their immediate vicinity.

The team noted, however, that the prevailing security situation did not allow for the return of internally displaced persons and refugees in any significant numbers. Banditry, harassment of civilians, and tensions and skirmishes between ethnic communities were rife throughout Darfur and remained an unresolved security challenge.

The team paid tribute to the fallen AMIS soldiers in the Khor Abeche area in southern Darfur and those injured near the Chadian border. The mission noted that AMIS personnel, whose total strength, as at 13 December, stood at 6,932 (5,623 military personnel and 1,309 civilian police), were conducting their tasks with increasing effectiveness and great commitment.

The findings of the assessment mission would form the basis of the AU Commission's recommendations to the Peace and Security Council in January 2006 on how to further enhance the effectiveness of the AU forces in Darfur and to provide pointers on the way forward.

Year-end developments

In a later report [S/2006/59], the Secretary-General indicated that the seventh round of the inter-Sudanese peace talks, which started in Abuja on 29 November, made slow progress. Work in the power-sharing commission was delayed for a week, as the parties were unable to reach a compromise on the four key issues of agenda item 4, namely: whether Darfur should become a region or remain divided into three separate states; the inclusion of a Darfurian representative in the structure of the presidency; Darfurian representation at the national capital level; and the application of the 1 January 1956 boundaries to Darfur. After extensive consultations with both sides, the power-sharing commission resumed work on 19 December in a somewhat improved atmosphere and was continuing to debate the four issues.

In the wealth-sharing commission, further progress was made. The movements called for a joint assessment mission by both sides, with international community participation, to assess the effects of the war on the ground. While it was established that this could not take place without the appropriate security conditions, the parties nevertheless agreed to call upon international partners to participate in such a mission with the least possible delay. Despite concerted efforts to move matters forward in the commission on security arrangements, the agenda for discussion was only adopted on 23 December. Little progress was made, given the failure of the parties, particularly the movements, to separate their formal negotiating position from an agreement on the substance of the agenda. There was a growing feeling that some of the protagonists were deliberately stalling in support of their belief that they could achieve a military solution.

From 19 to 21 December, the National Congress Party (NCP) components within the Darfur state governments organized an all-Darfur conference, to which the armed movements, Darfurians in the diaspora and in political movements across the Sudan were invited. However, other major political parties, including SLM, boycotted the conference, citing differences in views with NCP. Internally displaced persons in the Abo-Shouk and El-Salam camps in El-Fasher also boycotted the conference, arguing that they were not sufficiently represented. The conference adopted a wide range of recommendations in the economic, political and social areas.

Concerning the security situation, the Secretary-General reported that December witnessed a continuation of very high levels of violence and insecurity in Darfur, including banditry, a new round of militia attacks on villages and camps, intensive Government combat operations and the deliberate destruction of significant areas of farmland. In addition, the rapid deterioration of the situation along the Chad-Sudan border and concern about a possible conflict between those two neighbouring countries further exacerbated the climate of insecurity.

Both SLM/A and the Government seriously flouted the ceasefire agreements. On 3 December, armed militia attacked the SLA at Um Kunya, south of Nyala, resulting in 11 civilian deaths and up to 7,500 people displaced. On 4 December, in an apparent retaliation, SLA forces attacked the Sudanese Armed Forces garrison at Donkey Dereaisa, while Sudanese Armed Forces attacked their positions in the Masteri area, south-west of Geneina. Heavy fighting continued for three days, forcing the relocation of NGOs from the area. Government forces and rebels also fought in Masteri, Kongo Haraza and Beida, together with militia attacks in the Jebel Moon, Silea and Kulbus areas.

The level and intensity of inter-tribal and militia clashes also increased. On 19 December, hundreds of armed militia attacked the village of Abu Sorouj, in western Darfur, burning dozens of huts and looting livestock. A total of 19 villagers, including several women and children, were reported killed in the attack.

The security situation in western Darfur was again being negatively affected by the rapidly deteriorating situation along the Chad-Sudan border. On 18 December, major clashes took place between Chadian rebel groups and Chadian armed forces in the border town of Adre. Since then, there was a worrying build-up of armed forces of the two states and local militias on both sides of the border.

In the area of human rights, unidentified armed elements continued to launch attacks on camps during December, while elements associated with the Sudanese Armed Forces continued to harass and intimidate them. At Kalma camp, on 15 December, the Government lifted the commercial blockade that had been imposed on the camp for more than six months. The blockade prevented the flow of critical goods and materials into the camp and led to a dramatic increase in tensions and violence there. The lifting of the ban, combined with the more regular AMIS presence in the camp, had significantly reduced the number of security incidents reported from Kalma.

Field missions and investigations conducted by UN human rights officers in December also revealed serious abuses against civilians in the context of major attacks by the Sudanese Armed Forces and/or armed militias. Documented violations included forced displacement, arbitrary arrest, prolonged detention, torture by national security officials and the indiscriminate use of force in military operations.

Communications. The EU Presidency, in a 21 December statement [S/2005/852], welcomed the progress made in the seventh round of the Abuja talks in the wealth-sharing commission, but expressed concern at the lack of progress on power-sharing and security arrangements. The EU was deeply concerned by the continuing violations of the ceasefire agreements in Darfur and called on all sides to stop such attacks and refrain from any action that might aggravate the situation in Darfur and Chad.

On 22 December [S/2005/835], the Spokesman for the AU mediation issued a statement, in which the AU Special Envoy for Darfur and Chief Negotiator expressed outrage at the attack on Abu Sorouj in western Darfur on 19 December. The Special Envoy stressed that the perpetrators should be made to face the full force of the law and urged the Sudanese authorities and others concerned to ensure that justice was done. He also called on the Government of the Sudan and all parties to the conflict to ensure the protection of the civilian population in Darfur.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 21 December [meeting 5342], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2005/67 on behalf of the Council:

> The Security Council welcomes the commencement in Abuja of the seventh round of the African Union-led inter-Sudanese peace talks on Darfur, and expresses its appreciation to the African Union, the international community and the other donors.
> The Council is encouraged by the active participation of representatives from all invited groups of the Sudan Liberation Movement/Army and the Justice and Equality Movement, as well as members of the Sudan People's Liberation Movement, as part of the Government of National Unity, and urges their continued cooperation with the African Union Mission in the Sudan and with the United Nations Mission in the Sudan.
> The Council calls upon all parties to the conflict to fulfil their commitments to conclude a just and full peace accord without further delay. The Council demands that all parties refrain from violence and put an end to atrocities on the ground, especially those committed against civilians, including women and children, humanitarian workers and international peacekeepers.
> The Council recalls the demands on the Government of the Sudan and the rebel forces, as well as other armed groups, to respect fully their commitments referred to in its recent resolutions. The Council demands, in particular, that the Sudan Liberation Movement/Army, the Justice and Equality Movement and the Government of the Sudan immediately cease violence, comply with the N'djamena ceasefire agreement, end impediments to the peace process and cooperate fully with the African Union Mission in the Sudan, and that the Government of the Sudan disarm and control militias. It further demands that those responsible for violations of human rights and international humanitarian law be brought to justice without delay.
> The Council recalls its concern that the persisting violence in Darfur might further negatively affect the region, in particular the security of Chad. It firmly condemns, in this context, recent attacks perpetrated by armed elements within Chad and in particular the attack of 18 December 2005 on positions of the Chadian national army in the town of Adré, and supports efforts to reduce tensions on the border.
> The Council reaffirms its determination to make full use of existing measures under its relevant resolutions on the Sudan, including holding accountable those responsible for violence and violations of the arms embargo, and those who impede the peace process.
> The Council expresses its gratitude to the African Union and its Mission in the Sudan for the positive role that its forces have played in reducing violence and promoting the restoration of order in Darfur.
> The Council also appeals to donors to continue both to support the crucial work of the African Union Mission in the Sudan in stemming the violence in this suffering region and to provide critical humanitarian assistance to millions of war-afflicted civilians in Darfur and across the border in Chad.
> In the broader Sudan context, the Council welcomes further progress achieved in the implementation of the Comprehensive Peace Agreement, in particular the signing of the Constitution for Southern Sudan and the formation of the Government of Southern Sudan.

Eritrea-Sudan

On 27 June [S/2005/416], the Sudan accused Eritrea of acts of aggression and sabotage designed to undermine the peace agreements achieved in southern Sudan and to destabilize and threaten national security. It also accused Eritrea of organizing conferences of Sudanese opposition groups in Eritrea and offering political, training and logistic support to those organizations. It called on the Security Council to address the situation, which it warned was soon reaching that point when it would be forced to exercise its legitimate right to defend its sovereignty, territorial integrity and security.

Eritrea, in a 28 June response [S/2005/417], detailed its historic efforts to promote internal peace and stability in the Sudan, and said that the groundless accusations were either pretexts by the Government to derail the entire peace process and renege on its commitments, or a deliberate diversion to foment problems in the region.

Somalia

The Transitional Federal Government of Somalia, established at the end of 2004, following the successful conclusion of the Somali National Conference, began 2005 with the endorsement by Parliament of a Cabinet. Shortly thereafter, the Government, in addressing the two immediate priorities, namely, its relocation from Nairobi to Somalia and the establishment of an interim peace support mission pending deployment to the country of a peacekeeping mission, caused a rift within the leadership of the transitional federal institutions that resulted in a political impasse for most of the year.

On the one hand, President Abdullahi Yusuf Ahmed and Prime Minister Ali Mohammed Gedi planned to start functioning in Jawhar until it was safe to relocate to the capital, Mogadishu; on the other, the Speaker of Parliament, Sharif Hassan Sheik Adan, and some ministers insisted on immediate relocation to Mogadishu. Although no agreement was reached, relocation got under way by midyear, with each side relocating to its chosen site. Also contentious was the composition of an interim peace support mission, sponsored by the Intergovernmental Authority on Development and endorsed by the African Union, in response to a request by the President. As the impasse persisted, each side proceeded to engage in unilateral actions that the other rejected, leading to heightened tension and reported military build-up by both sides. The Security Council cautioned that a peace support mission had to be carefully planned and required the support of the Somali people; it called on all Somali leaders to exercise maximum restraint and stressed that a resort to military force was unacceptable.

Meanwhile, the United Nations Political Office for Somalia remained in contact with Somali leaders, civic organizations and the States and organizations concerned in order to advance the peace and reconciliation process. In November, the Secretary-General outlined to the Council the specifics of an expanded role for the United Nations in the country, which the Government, States in the region and the international community had requested.

The Monitoring Group on Somalia, charged by the Council with investigating violations of the arms embargo imposed on the country, reported in August a dramatic rise in violations that involved the leaders of the two opposing sides, which corresponded to their increased militarization activities in central and southern Somalia. At the request of the Council, the Secretary-General, in March and November, re-established the Group, each time for a six-month period, in order to continue its functions.

Insecurity remained prevalent in Mogadishu and in other parts of the country, as intermittent violence, factional and inter-clan conflicts and militia rivalries continued, which not only exacerbated the threat to the viability of the transitional institutions but also prevented implementation of UN programmes in the country and hampered delivery of humanitarian assistance to the Somali communities in crisis.

The self-proclaimed republic of "Somaliland" in the north-west continued to press for international recognition of its status as an independent State. "Somaliland" and the self-declared autonomous north-east region of "Puntland" were relatively stable throughout the year.

(For assistance for humanitarian relief and the economic and social rehabilitation of Somalia, see p. 996.)

United Nations Political Office for Somalia

The United Nations Political Office for Somalia (UNPOS), established in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 400], continued to assist in advancing the cause of peace and reconciliation in Somalia. The Secretary-General, in his February report (see p. 339), stated that the Transitional Federal Government, the countries in the region and the international community had asked the United Nations to take the lead in coordinating support to the Government to implement the agreements reached by the Somali National Reconciliation Conference, which concluded in October 2004 with the election of the President [YUN 2004, p. 261], and to establish peace and stability in Somalia. The Secretary-General recalled having previously pointed to the need, at that stage of the Somali peace process, for an expanded UN political presence and proposed an incremental expansion based on discussions with the Transitional Federal Government. That called for a higher profile leadership by UNPOS and an increase in its staff in the areas of political and military liaison, information, civil police, disarmament, demobilization and reintegration, and human rights. The Security Council, in welcoming the efforts of UNPOS, concurred with the need for an expanded UN role in Somalia as proposed (see p. 341).

On 16 November [S/2005/729], the Secretary-General confirmed to the Council that the expanded role for the United Nations would include assisting in the continuous dialogue among Somali parties for reconciliation; assisting in effort to address the issue of "Somaliland"; coordinating support for the peace process with Somalia's neighbours and other international partners; and chairing the Coordination and Monitoring Committee, as well as playing a leading political role in peacebuilding activities. The main objectives of UNPOS during 2006-2007 would be to foster inclusive dialogue and reconciliation among the transitional federal institutions (TFIs); support the establishment of governance structures and institutions and develop action plans for them, in close coordination with the Transitional Federal Government; and coordinate international political and financial support to the nascent Somali institutions.

The Council took note of the information on 21 November [S/2005/730].

Appointment. By an exchange of letters between the Secretary-General and the Security Council [S/2005/280, S/2005/279], François Lonseny Fall (Guinea) was appointed Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Somalia and Head of UNPOS, to succeed Winston A. Tubman (Liberia), who had served in that capacity until March. Mr. Fall assumed his duties in Nairobi on 27 May.

Financing

The Secretary-General, in his April report [A/59/534/Add.4] on estimates in respect of the special political missions, good offices and other political initiatives authorized by the General Assembly and/or the Security Council, presented additional resource requirements for the expanded operation of UNPOS for the period 1 June to 31 December 2005, estimated at $5,017,400 net ($5,394,600 gross). Of that amount, $845,700 would be met from the unencumbered balance against existing appropriations for the period ending on 31 May 2005, thus reducing the overall additional requirements for UNPOS to $4,171,700 net ($4,548,900 gross).

On 22 April [A/59/569/Add.4], ACABQ recommended approval of the resources requested, but was aware that savings might be achieved as events dictated possible movements.

The General Assembly, in section II of resolution 59/294 of 22 June (see p. 1488), approved the UNPOS budget for the period 1 June to 31 December 2005 in the amount set out in the Secretary-General's report.

In December [A/60/585 & Corr. 1], the Secretary-General, in his budget submission for the 26 special political missions authorized by the Assembly and or the Security Council, proposed requirements for UNPOS for 2006 in the amount of $7,129.2 million. The Assembly, in section VI of resolution 60/248 of 23 December (see p. 1495), approved $100 million for those missions and decided to continue consideration of the Secretary-General's request at its resumed sixtieth (2006) session.

National reconciliation process and security situation

As requested by Security Council presidential statement S/PRST/2001/30 [YUN 2001, p. 210], the Secretary-General submitted quarterly reports during the year updating developments on the situation in Somalia since his October 2004 report [YUN 2004, p. 260].

Report of Secretary-General (February). In his February report [S/2005/89], the Secretary-General stated that the new Cabinet proposed by the Prime Minister, composed of 92 ministers, assistant ministers and ministers of State, was endorsed by Parliament on 13 January. The unusually large number of appointments drew criticism, which the Prime Minister defended as necessary to ensure inclusivity. At its first meeting, on 15 January, the Cabinet set up committees to handle cooperation with the international community and to work on the relocation of the Transitional Federal Government from Nairobi to Somalia. The relocation plan called for relocating to Somalia 987 people, including the Government and Parliament members, and delegates to the Somali National Reconciliation Conference; peacebuilding and reconciliation through the organization of peacebuilding conferences in 92 districts; establishment of provisional regional and district administrations pending full realization of the federal structure; encampment and retraining of 53,000 militia members; and formation of a police force of 10,000. The plan, costing some 94,375,572 euros, was expected to last over three months, from mid-February. The plan was presented on 2 February to the new Coordination and Monitoring Committee [YUN 2004, p. 262], created as a mechanism through which donor countries and regional and subregional organizations provided support to the efforts of the Transitional Federal Government. The Committee's Declaration of Principles and Structured Coordination Modalities, which served as the highest level of information-sharing and policy discussion in the partnership between the international community and the Government, was signed on 9 February by the Transitional Federal Government and the United Nations, representing the international community.

On 6 February, two delegations of 73 Parliamentarians led by the Speaker of Parliament and the Second Deputy Speaker visited Mogadishu to discuss the relocation and security issues with local leaders, clan elders and other stakeholders. The visits were supported by the United Nations Trust Fund for Peacebuilding in Somalia, the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) and the European Commission. For their part, the President and the Prime Minister, while still residing in Nairobi, had undertaken a number of diplomatic missions to countries of the region towards the end of the previous year to discuss those issues.

On 31 January, the Intergovernmental Authority on Development (IGAD) issued a communiqué expressing the willingness of Djibouti, Ethiopia, Kenya, the Sudan and Uganda to participate in a future African Union (AU) peace support mission to Somalia. On 7 February, the AU Peace and Security Council authorized IGAD to deploy such a mission to Somalia. A large demonstration led by a number of sheikhs and militias under the Sharia courts had been mounted, on 8 January, against the deployment in Somalia of what they considered foreign troops in support of the Transitional Federal Government. Heavy weapons, including anti-aircraft guns and armoured vehicles were reportedly being purchased for use against such troops.

The intermittent fighting and violence in Somalia continued to prevent the United Nations from implementing programmes in many areas of the country. Large-scale violations of the arms embargo by extremist groups, militias and some Parliament members were reported. Of concern was the proliferation of small arms and heavy weapons, such as tanks, artillery, anti-aircraft guns, rocket launchers and heavy mortars. Because of insecurity in Mogadishu, where violent crime remained common and clan disputes occasionally occurred, the Transitional Federal Government had been obliged to consider a phased approach for its return to the capital and perhaps to start functioning in Baidoa or Jawhar. Widespread inter-clan fighting and banditry continued to have a severe impact on southern and central Somalia.

Confrontation continued between "Somaliland" (the north-western regions) and "Puntland" (north-eastern Somalia) over control of the north-western regions of Sool and Sanaag. An electoral law passed by the "Somaliland" House of Representatives and by the House of Elders on 18 January and 5 February, respectively, provided for the demarcation of district and regional boundaries; the holding of elections in all "Somaliland" regions (including Sool and Sanaag) and a population census; and the completion of voter registration and issuance of identity cards to all "Somalilanders" before elections. The law raised concern over the possibility of renewed tensions between "Somaliland" and "Puntland" during those elections, scheduled for 28 March. In "Puntland" on 8 January, General Adda Musse was elected President.

Given that stabilizing the humanitarian situation in Somalia constituted an essential component for the peace and reconciliation process, the report also described the efforts to that end, including assistance to the drought-affected regions of the north and south-central zones and along the Somali coastline that had been affected by the 2004 Indian Ocean tsunami [YUN 2004, p. 952], as well as to the estimated 400,000 Somalis displaced by drought conditions and clan conflicts. Further detailed were UNDP operational activities to promote peace and stability in the areas of governance, livelihoods, health, water and environmental protection, child protection, HIV/AIDS, internally displaced persons and refugees, and education. The Secretary-General called on the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs and UN agencies to accelerate their efforts to reach out to non-traditional donors, and for the expansion of community-based peace and reconciliation initiatives currently being undertaken in the humanitarian context.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 7 March [meeting 5135], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2005/11 on behalf of the Council:

> The Security Council reaffirms all its previous decisions concerning the situation in Somalia, in particular the statement by its President of 19 November 2004.
> The Council welcomes the report of the Secretary-General of 18 February 2005, and reaffirms its commitment to a comprehensive and lasting settlement of the situation in Somalia and its respect for the sovereignty, territorial integrity, political independence and unity of Somalia, consistent with the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations.
> The Council welcomes the progress made in the Somali National Reconciliation Process, in particular the ongoing relocation efforts of the Transitional Federal Government, expects further progress in this regard and stresses the need for the international community to provide strong political, financial and capacity-building support for these efforts.
> The Council commends the efforts of the African Union and the Intergovernmental Authority on Development in support of the Transitional Federal Government. The Council reiterates its support for the efforts of the African Union in assisting the process of transition in Somalia. The Council recognizes the African Union's readiness to play an important role in a future peace support mission in Somalia. Such a mission must be carefully considered and planned and would require the support of the Somali people.
> The Council urges all Somali factions and militia leaders to cease hostilities and encourages them and the Transitional Federal Government to enter into immediate negotiations for a comprehensive and verifiable ceasefire agreement leading to final disarmament, and welcomes the willingness of the United Nations to provide advice in this regard.

The Council expresses its gratitude to all those donors who have supported the peace process in Somalia and encourages donor countries and regional and subregional organizations to contribute to the reconstruction and rehabilitation of Somalia, in particular through efforts coordinated by United Nations agencies.

The Council welcomes the establishment of the Coordination and Monitoring Committee, chaired jointly by the Prime Minister of the Transitional Federal Government and the United Nations, through which donor countries and regional and subregional organizations can provide support to the efforts of the Government.

The Council stresses that improving the humanitarian situation is an essential component of support for the peace and reconciliation process. The Council strongly believes that ensuring humanitarian access to all Somalis in need and providing guarantees for the safety and security of aid workers is an immediate priority and obligation of the Transitional Federal Government.

The Council welcomes the efforts of the United Nations Political Office for Somalia and its leading role in coordinating support for the Transitional Federal Government to implement the agreements reached at the Somali National Reconciliation Conference and establish peace and stability in Somalia. The Council takes note of the need to expand the United Nations presence as proposed in the report of the Secretary-General of 18 February 2005. The Council concurs with the Secretary-General that a further enhanced role for the Organization in Somalia must be incremental and should be based on the outcome of discussions with the Government.

The Council reaffirms its full support for the peace process in Somalia and the commitment of the United Nations to assist the regional and subregional efforts in this regard.

Communications. The European Union (EU), in a 7 April statement issued by its Presidency [S/2005/248], urged all Somali parties inside and outside the TFIs to refrain immediately from further hostilities and armed confrontations, and called for an immediate dialogue among all the parties within the TFIs with a view to having the Council of Ministers and Parliament reach an agreement on a new comprehensive proposal on relocation and security.

By a joint statement of 12 May [S/2005/326], the EU and the United States stressed the urgent need for a viable agreement on relocation and security, to be endorsed by the TFIs. They welcomed the Somali efforts on relocation, including those of the Somali parties to facilitate demilitarization in Mogadishu, which should be incorporated into a national plan as soon as possible.

Report of Secretary-General (June). The Secretary-General's June report [S/2005/392] noted that the two issues of relocation and security had proved controversial within the Transitional Federal Government. Serious concern was expressed among Somalis and the international community that, almost eight months after the conclusion of the Somali National Reconciliation Conference, the transitional institutions were still in Nairobi rather than in Somalia. Controversy on the first issue caused a rift between President Yusuf and Prime Minister Gedi, on the one hand, who argued that the Government should relocate temporarily to Baidoa or Jawhar until Mogadishu was made safe; and Speaker of Parliament Sharif Hassan Sheikh Adan and those associated with him, on the other, who insisted on immediate relocation to Mogadishu. Consequently, relocation could not begin in mid-February as planned. However, Parliament members and ministers gradually began leaving Nairobi for Mogadishu beginning in late March through the middle of June. By the reporting date, over 100 parliamentarians were in Mogadishu. The President arrived in the city of Jawhar on 26 July, which he and the Prime Minister used as the de facto temporary seat of the Transitional Federal Government.

Controversy on the second issue centered on the inclusion of troops from the front line States—Djiouti, Ethiopia and Kenya—in a future AU/IGAD peace support mission requested by the President. Again, a large number of Parliament members, Cabinet ministers and other leaders who were later joined by the Speaker, while welcoming AU troops, categorically opposed the inclusion of troops from those States and insisted on the endorsement by Parliament of the mission's composition and mandate. The opposing sides held demonstrations in the capital in early March in support of their respective views. The IGAD Council of Ministers met on the issue on 17 and 18 March, following Parliament's debate on it. The Ministers reaffirmed their commitment to execute their 31 January decision to deploy an IGAD peace support mission to Somalia (see p. 340). Deployment would take place in two phases: during phase I, troops from the Sudan and Uganda would provide security and support to the Government to ensure its relocation to Somalia, while the remaining IGAD countries would provide logistics, equipment and training to the Somali army and police; during phase II, troop deployment would be undertaken by the remaining IGAD countries pending the deployment of AU troops. The Ministers welcomed the decision of the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the League of Arab States (LAS) to participate in the mission and to assist IGAD and the AU in that regard.

An AU/IGAD fact-finding mission had visited Somalia earlier (14-26 February) to hold consultations with different segments of the population in many parts of the country, including Mogadishu. The mission elicited mixed reactions, but, on the whole, most Somalis supported the deployment of foreign troops, except troops from neighbouring States. In an emergency session of Parliament called by the President on 11 May, two motions submitted by the Prime Minister—to deploy the IGAD peace support mission, authorized on 17 February (see p. 340), and to approve the Cabinet's decision to relocate to Baidoa or Jawhar, with an office in Mogadishu, pending stabilization of the capital—were approved by votes of 145 and 141, respectively. The votes were declared null and void by the Speaker.

The AU Peace and Security Council, following its consideration of the fact-finding mission's report at its twenty-ninth meeting (Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, 12 May), issued a communiqué [S/2005/315] authorizing the deployment under phase I of the IGAD peace support mission, which was to facilitate the relocation of the Transitional Federal Government and provide protection as appropriate; to assist the Government and the Somali parties in security sector reform and disarmament, demobilization and reintegration efforts; and to facilitate humanitarian operations within its capabilities. The AU Council also requested the Security Council to authorize an exemption for the peace support mission from the arms embargo imposed on Somalia by Security Council resolution 733(1992) [YUN 1992, p. 199].

In addition to the activities of IGAD, the AU and LAS to help establish a functional Government, Sweden held consultations related to the coordination of international support to the Government relocation plan. The Director of the Africa Division of the UN Department of Political Affairs visited Nairobi in April to stress the need to resolve the current differences within the Transitional Federal Government. Citing the impossibility of ensuring security for the Government by external troops alone, he pointed to the need for a comprehensive ceasefire agreement with the possible formation of a core Somali security force that was initially to be recruited on the basis of the "4.5 formula" for clan representation and quickly trained. The TFIs could gradually move from Nairobi to Mogadishu, while the President could travel to different locations in Somalia.

UNPOS likewise encouraged dialogue between the Transitional Federal Government members in Mogadishu and those in Nairobi (see p. 344). It visited possible facilities for the relocation and identified a number of project proposals for several peacebuilding activities under the United Nations Trust Fund for Peacebuilding in Somalia.

In Mogadishu, despite the rapprochement between many of the faction leaders there, violent crime and occasional inter-clan incidents continued at such levels that the city remained at UN security phase V. In the South of the country, aid operations were seriously hampered by the proliferation of checkpoints manned by uncontrolled militia who restricted staff and supply movement. In contrast, administrations in both "Somaliland" and "Puntland" were able to control such activities, allowing delivery of aid over a wide area. In "Somaliland" in May, a visiting AU delegation was briefed by authorities there on the determination of "Somaliland" to protect its sovereignty, stressing that its recognition was within the purview of the AU. A United Kingdom official had visited Hargeysa in the previous month to discuss the forthcoming parliamentary elections. The reporting period saw no significant incidents between "Somaliland" and "Puntland" in the contested regions of Sool and Sanaa, although no progress towards a political solution had been achieved.

The Secretary-General updated information on developments in the various operational activities mentioned in his first report (see p. 339), including the training of youth groups in good governance to enhance their participation in district-based local governance processes. The United Nations had also developed policy and operational plans for countrywide disarmament, demobilization and reintegration. As to security sector reform, the United Nations was registering and surveying over 15,000 security forces and militia in "Puntland" and "Somaliland", where demobilization and reintegration of several thousand forces were under way. Pilot projects and planning would continue in central and southern Somalia pending large-scale demobilization, in partnership with the Transitional Federal Government. Under development were small-arms and light-weapons control strategies, including a legal framework for the curtailment of weapons proliferation in the country.

The Secretary-General underlined the importance of including a humanitarian and human rights component in training programmes envisaged for foreign troops and Somali security forces. He said the United Nations would continue to support disarmament, demobilization and reintegration efforts and to build on experiences of UN agencies already involved in such programmes.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (July)

On 14 July [meeting 5227], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2005/32 on behalf of the Council:

> The Security Council reaffirms all its previous decisions concerning the situation in Somalia, in particular the statements by its President of 19 November 2004 and 7 March 2005.
> The Council welcomes the report of the Secretary-General of 16 June 2005, and reaffirms its commitment to a comprehensive and lasting settlement of the situation in Somalia and its respect for the sovereignty, territorial integrity, political independence and unity of Somalia, consistent with the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations.
> The Council is encouraged by the relocation now under way of the transitional federal institutions to Somalia, urges further progress in this regard and calls upon the Somali leaders to continue to work towards reconciliation, through inclusive dialogue and consensus-building within the framework of the transitional federal institutions, in accordance with the Transitional Federal Charter of the Somali Republic adopted in February 2004.
> The Council expresses its concern at the recent disagreements and increased tensions among Somali leaders, which threaten the viability of the transitional federal institutions. The Council calls upon all leaders in Somalia to exercise maximum restraint and take immediate effective steps to reduce tension. Violence or military action by any members of the transitional federal institutions or other parties is unacceptable as the means for dealing with the current differences within the transitional federal institutions. The Council reiterates that any members of the transitional federal institutions or other parties who persist on the path of confrontation and conflict, including military action, will be held accountable.
> The Council urges the transitional federal institutions to conclude without delay a national security and stabilization plan, to include a comprehensive and verifiable ceasefire agreement leading to final disarmament, and welcomes the willingness of the United Nations to provide advice in this regard.
> The Council commends the commitment of the African Union and the Intergovernmental Authority on Development in support of the relocation to Somalia of the transitional federal institutions and reiterates its support for those efforts in assisting the process of transition in Somalia. The Council welcomes the readiness of the African Union and the Intergovernmental Authority on Development to reinforce their continued support for the establishment of a functioning central government of Somalia, including the possible deployment of a peace support mission to Somalia, and encourages the Peace and Security Council of the African Union to keep the Security Council informed of all developments. The Council expects the African Union and the Intergovernmental Authority on Development to work out a detailed mission plan in close coordination with, and with the broad consensus of, the transitional federal institutions and consistent with a national security and stabilization plan.
> The Council takes note of the request by the Peace and Security Council to the Security Council for the authorization of an exemption from the arms embargo imposed against Somalia by resolution 733 (1992) of 23 January 1992, contained in the communiqués issued by the Peace and Security Council on 12 May and 3 July 2005. The Security Council stands ready to consider this matter in due course on the basis of information on the above-mentioned mission plan.
> The Council further reminds all parties in Somalia, including all members of the transitional federal institutions, as well as all Member States, of their obligation to implement and enforce the arms embargo imposed by the Council under resolution 733(1992). Continued non-compliance with this measure undermines the efforts of those who seek to establish peace in Somalia. There can be no effective and lasting progress in Somalia as long as arms and ammunition flow unchecked across Somalia's borders. A stable and secure environment in Somalia is essential to the future success of the national reconciliation process.
> The Council welcomes the continued engagement of donors in supporting the establishment of a functioning government in Somalia through the mechanism of the Coordination and Monitoring Committee and in fulfilment of the Declaration of Principles. The Council encourages donor countries and regional and subregional organizations to continue to contribute to the reconstruction and rehabilitation of Somalia, in particular through the mechanism of the Rapid Assistance Programme and efforts coordinated by the United Nations.
> The Council stresses that improving the humanitarian situation is an essential component of support for the peace and reconciliation process. The Council reiterates that ensuring humanitarian access to all Somalis in need and providing guarantees for the safety and security of aid workers is an immediate priority and obligation of the transitional federal institutions. The Council further welcomes the ongoing efforts and work of the business community, humanitarian organizations, non-governmental organizations, civil society and women's groups to facilitate the demilitarization of Somalia.
> The Council deplores the recent hijacking of a vessel off the coast of Somalia that had been chartered by the World Food Programme and was carrying food aid for tsunami victims, and notes the subsequent decision by the Programme to suspend all shipments of humanitarian assistance to Somalia. The Council expresses its concern at the impact of these developments, and calls for the quick and appropriate resolution of this incident. The Council condemns in the strongest terms the brutal murder of Somali peace activist Abdulkadir Yahya Ali in Mogadishu on 11 July 2005. The Council calls for the incident to be investigated immediately and for those responsible to be held fully accountable.
> The Council welcomes the steps being taken to strengthen the capacity of the United Nations Political Office for Somalia and reaffirms its strong support for the leadership of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General in his efforts in fostering inclusive dialogue among the leaders of the transitional federal institutions. The Council calls upon all Somali parties and Member States to extend to him their fullest cooperation in this regard.

The Council reaffirms its full support for the peace process in Somalia and the commitment of the United Nations to assist the regional and subregional efforts in this regard.

Report of Secretary-General (October). The Secretary-General's report of 11 October [S/2005/642] indicated no progress in resolving the differences between the TFI leaders on four broad issues: the relocation of the TFIs; a national security and stabilization plan; national reconciliation; and the peace support mission envisaged by the AU and IGAD. Instead, tensions worsened between the President and the Prime Minister, who were based in Jawhar, and the Speaker of Parliament and ministers based in Mogadishu, with the opposing parties proceeding to take unilateral actions.

At a meeting of some Parliament members in Nairobi on 12 June, chaired by the First Deputy Speaker, the President announced a two-month recess of Parliament; the Speaker, who did not attend, questioned the legitimacy of the meeting and the President's declaration of such a recess. On 8 August, the Prime Minister announced the composition of committees on national security, economic affairs and social affairs, which the Minister for National Security refused to recognize as having been constituted without the consultations required by the Transitional Federal Charter. Some Parliament members who met in Mogadishu on 13 August under the Speaker's chairmanship, announced the creation of a 59-member committee to restore peace and stability in Mogadishu; they then summoned the full Parliament to a meeting on 27 August, also in Mogadishu, so as to establish parliamentary subcommittees. That meeting did not take place. On 27 August, the Prime Minister announced to reporters that the Government would soon start offering oil, gas and mineral concessions to foreign firms and called on such firms to avoid dealings with no other authority than the Transitional Federal Government.

Mediation efforts between the two parties were mounted by Yemen, the Deputy Prime Minister and the Minister of Interior, as well as by the Special Representative, jointly with Kenya's Minister for Regional Cooperation and East Africa Affairs. On the basis of Security Council presidential statement S/PRST/2005/32 (above), the Special Representative intensified his contacts with the leadership of the TFIs to foster an inclusive dialogue. On 1 August, he visited Jawhar and presented the President and the Prime Minister with a proposed road map for dialogue which would address the key issues of an agreement on the safe relocation of the TFIs, a national security and stabilization plan, modalities for the deployment of an AU/IGAD peace support mission, and national reconciliation. A sequencing chart, prepared by IGAD, the AU and the EU, was also presented. It proposed that, upon successful conclusion of the dialogue, the Council of Ministers and a full session of Parliament should be called to establish a national security commission to draw up the modalities for the deployment of a peace support mission.

On 3 August, the Special Representative visited Mogadishu and presented to the Speaker, ministers and members of Parliament a copy of the road map and sequencing chart. They expressed support for the initiative but voiced their concerns that the President and the Prime Minister might resort to an armed confrontation with them. While committing themselves to dialogue, they emphasized that the agenda, venue and composition of delegations for the talks had to be agreed to in advance. The Prime Minister announced at a press conference on 19 August that the Government was open for dialogue within the TFIs. The Speaker, for his part, gave an undertaking to the Special Representative not to use any Parliament meetings to undermine the prospects for dialogue, and, on 26 August, reiterated his willingness to enter into dialogue within the framework of the TFIs, stressing the need to respect the Transitional Federal Charter.

On 13 September, the Prime Minister informed the Transitional Federal Government of his intentions, after consultations, to begin holding meetings of the Council of Ministers in Mogadishu. The Special Representative welcomed the initiative and expressed the hope that the meetings would be preceded by consultations and followed by a full session of Parliament, in accordance with the Transitional Federal Charter. In his discussions with high-level officials in the subregion, the Special Representative impressed upon his interlocutors the need to foster dialogue with the TFIs and encouraged them to use their influence towards that end. He subsequently held talks with European Governments to impress upon them the need for the international community to speak with one voice on the issues of an inclusive dialogue and of a functional parliament as essential for the legitimacy of the Transitional Federal Government.

The Heads of Mission of the EU countries in Nairobi welcomed the Prime Minister's proposal to resolve the differences within the TFIs at three levels: the leadership (President, Prime Minister and Speaker), the Cabinet (ministers), and Parliament. They emphasized that, if a resolution through dialogue was successful, more financial assistance would be forthcoming from their countries.

The Secretary-General expressed deep concern that the political tensions between the TFI leaders had led to military preparations. On 6 July, the President announced the creation of a Somali national army, which began to be assembled soon thereafter from various regions of Somalia. When troops loyal to him arrived in Jawhar in early September, the Mogadishu-based leaders responded by deploying their troops in the direction of Jawhar. By a 7 September press release, they warned all humanitarian agencies and diplomats to suspend their presence in Jawhar and cautioned all aircraft to cease landing there. On 8 September, the United Nations relocated its international humanitarian staff to Nairobi and Wajid, a move criticized by the President. On 12 September, the offices of the United Nations Children's Fund were ordered closed by the faction leader controlling Jawhar.

Meanwhile, in "Somaliland" on 27 June, the "President" there, speaking on the occasion of the forty-fifth anniversary of independence from the United Kingdom, expressed optimism for gaining international recognition for "Somaliland". At the request of the electoral commission, he also postponed the parliamentary elections to 29 September.

Mogadishu remained insecure, in spite of unprecedented pre-disarmament efforts to encamp militiamen, canton "technicals" (armed vehicles), and dismantle checkpoints. Killings and politically-linked assassinations in the capital included the assassination of a Somali reporter working for Horn Afrik Radio (5 June) and of the long-standing peace activist, Abdul Qadir Yahya, who was also a senior member of the Center for Research and Dialogue (11 July). Lack of security in most of the country remained a significant problem also for aid agencies. The increased inflow of weapons, in continued violation of the UN arms embargo on Somalia (see p. 346), the inter- and intra-clan fighting, especially in central and southern Somalia, and fighting between rival militias all made for difficult humanitarian access to the critical communities in need of emergency assistance.

As later reported by the Secretary-General [S/2006/122], the Prime Minister led a ministerial delegation to Mogadishu on 6 November, to make good his intention of holding a meeting of the Council of Ministers in an effort to break the deadlock within the Transitional Federal Government. Soon after arriving in the north of the city, his motorcade was attacked by an explosive device; although he was unhurt, the blast killed nine people and wounded at least 10 others. Nonetheless, the Prime Minister called a Cabinet meeting on 8 November, but only those ministers already supporting him attended; those based in Mogadishu declined to attend, as the meeting was not preceded by consultations between the two sides.

Another initiative for reconciliation was undertaken in early November by the Chairman of the Juba Alliance in control of Kismayo, who proposed a two-phased approach to parliamentary dialogue: the first would involve a meeting in Kismayo of 16 parliamentarians each from Jawhar and Mogadishu to discuss technical modalities; the second would involve a full session of Parliament. Owing to lack of consensus on the question of venue, the initiative was not realized.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (November)

On 9 November [meeting 5302], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2005/54 on behalf of the Council:

> The Security Council reaffirms all previous statements by its President and its resolutions concerning the situation in Somalia, in particular the statement by its President of 14 July 2005 and its resolution 1630(2005) of 14 October 2005.
> The Council welcomes the report of the Secretary-General of 11 October 2005, and reaffirms its commitment to a comprehensive and lasting settlement of the situation in Somalia and its respect for the sovereignty, territorial integrity, political independence and unity of Somalia, consistent with the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations.
> The Council expresses its concern over recent reported military activities and hostile rhetoric, and emphasizes that any resort to military force as a means of dealing with the current differences within the transitional federal institutions is unacceptable. The Council condemns in the strongest terms the assassination attempt on 6 November 2005 against Prime Minister Ali Mohammed Gedi in Mogadishu.
> The Council expresses its concern and disappointment over the lack of progress in ameliorating the contention between the leaders of the transitional federal institutions, and over the non-functioning of the Transitional Federal Parliament, which has an essential role in promoting the peace process. The Council calls upon all Somali parties and the leaders of the transitional federal institutions to take concrete steps towards reaching a consensus agreement through inclusive dialogue without delay. The Council commends the Prime Minister's initiative for the early convening of a full Council of Ministers in Mogadishu, to be followed by a full session of Parliament. The Council underlines the fact that the primary responsibility for progress in restoring an effective functioning government to Somalia lies with the leaders and members of the transitional federal institutions.

The Council underlines its strong support for the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Somalia in his efforts at facilitating the peace process in Somalia, supporting ongoing Somali-owned internal initiatives. The Council calls upon all Member States to provide their full and active support in this regard.

The Council commends the neighbouring countries, the Intergovernmental Authority on Development, the African Union, the League of Arab States, the European Union and concerned Member States for their keen interest and persistent efforts in support of the peace process in Somalia. The Council urges them to use their influence and leverage through a common approach to ensure that the transitional federal institutions resolve their differences and build trust, through an inclusive dialogue, and to move ahead on the key issues of security and national reconciliation.

The Council affirms its continuing support to the transitional federal institutions and reiterates the need for a national security and stabilization plan to be agreed, through which any efforts to rebuild the security sector should be directed.

The Council condemns the increased inflow of weapons into Somalia and the continuous violations of the United Nations arms embargo. The Council further reminds all States of their obligations to comply fully with the measures imposed by resolution 733(1992) and urges them to take all necessary steps to hold violators accountable.

The Council expresses serious concern over the increasing incidents of piracy off the coast of Somalia. The Council condemns recent hijackings of vessels in the area, particularly of ships carrying humanitarian supplies to Somalia. The Council urges the transitional federal institutions, regional actors and relevant international organizations to work together to address this problem.

The Council expresses its growing concern over the situation of one million Somalis in a state of humanitarian emergency or suffering from severe livelihood distress and the rising civil and food insecurity in parts of southern Somalia, where malnutrition levels have increased. The Council stresses that improving humanitarian access to all Somalis in need is an essential component of durable peace and reconciliation.

The Council recognizes the role of civil society, in particular women's groups, and their contribution to progress in demobilizing militias and improving the humanitarian situation in Somalia.

The Council strongly urges the transitional federal institutions to ensure humanitarian access and provide guarantees for the safety and security of aid workers. The Council condemns in the strongest terms the killing of a United Nations national security officer in Kismayo on 3 October 2005. The Council calls for those responsible to be held accountable.

The Council reaffirms its full support for the peace process in Somalia and the commitment of the United Nations to assist in this regard.

Arms embargo

Report of Monitoring Group (March). As requested by Security Council resolution 1558 (2004) [YUN 2004, p. 264], the Monitoring Group of four experts re-established by the Secretary-General for a period of six months [ibid., p. 265], continued to investigate violations of the arms embargo covering access to Somalia by land, air and sea, to assess progress of its full implementation by States in the region, and to make recommendations.

The Group issued its report [S/2005/153] on 14 February, which the Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 751(1992) concerning Somalia (Committee on sanctions against Somalia) [YUN 1992, p. 202] transmitted to the Council on 8 March. The Group reported that violations of the arms embargo continued to occur at a brisk and alarming rate. Since February 2004, it had uncovered 34 separate arms shipments in violation of the embargo, which ranged from individual weapons, such as large anti-aircraft guns, to ocean freight containers full of arms ranging from explosives and ammunition to small arms, mines and anti-tank weapons.

Information gathered by the Group indicated the existence of a sophisticated financial network operating inside and outside Somalia that might be directly involved in arms purchases. Recent arms shipments had strengthened the military capacity of well organized and funded opposition elements within Somalia, who had publicly expressed their intent to violently oppose the Government and any international supporters that might provide military support to it inside Somalia.

The report drew attention to two major arms markets that continued to help fuel and perpetuate the violent clashes and instability prevalent in the country: the Bakaaraha arms market inside Somalia, particularly in Mogadishu, and an arms market located in Yemen that the Group was convinced was the source of a continuous supply of arms for the Bakaaraha market. Those markets were also a main cause of the many arms-related problems in the front line States. The increased clandestine arms shipments to Somalia relied less on air and more on sea and road transport. The Group's findings included arms shipments offloaded from container ships at a neighbouring country's seaport and transported to Somalia by road and by dhows. Organized criminal groups involved in the clandestine movement of arms shipments from source to recipient had consistently circumvented the customs and police authorities of the various States responsible for interdicting such shipments. As a result, the continued heavy flow of arms into Somalia, mostly directed to those elements opposed to the newly established Transitional Federal Government (temporarily based in Nairobi), posed a serious threat to its peaceful establishment in Somalia.

Among the Group's recommendations were the continued monitoring of the arms embargo, especially at border crossings and along the Somali coastline, which were the linchpins of the embargo violations; updating of the draft list of violators; and establishing a more formally structured Transitional Federal Government relationship with the AU, IGAD and possibly the front-line States to facilitate information exchange and cooperation. With international and regional support, the Transitional Federal Government should be encouraged to take prompt and decisive steps to regulate or stop arms sales through the Bakaaraha market. Increased arms enforcement and interdiction by the customs, police and security organs of the regional and front-line States should be promoted. The Transitional Federal Government should work with the International Civil Aviation Organization, through the Civil Aviation Caretaker Authority for Somalia, to enable it to undertake its responsibilities for curtailing the transport of arms by air. The Committee on sanctions against Somalia, through the Monitoring Group and in collaboration with the International Maritime Organization and neighbouring States, should develop projects for the effective control of maritime activities along the Somali coastline; regional and front-line States should continue to monitor aggressively aircraft movements to and from Somalia, in coordination with the Civil Aviation Caretaker Authority; and neighbouring States should enforce the embargo by closely monitoring their common borders and regulating the flow of vehicular traffic.

The Transitional Federal Government was to be encouraged to establish its own customs border enforcement upon its relocation to Somalia, and special operations against illicit cross-border arms movement were to be conducted by regional customs authorities. The Group recommended that steps be taken to regulate the production of charcoal and establish adequate legal financial channels for the revenues derived from its export, without which large sums of money would continue to be indiscriminately used by warlords to strengthen their positions in the Somali conflict; and that financial and law enforcement authorities in countries where counterfeit Somali shillings were being printed undertake joint operations to address the practice and the smuggling of such currency into Somalia. Organizations giving donations to Somali charities and NGOs should reinforce their post-donation audit to ensure that donations were not diverted to warlords or extremist groups.

Communication. By a letter of 8 June to the Council [S/2005/390], Yemen annexed a detailed response to all the statements and references, implied or otherwise, to the country in the Group's February report above. It made clear that the reported arms market inside Yemen had ceased to exist legally as from the beginning of 2003, when it was abolished by the Government and the permits granted for its operation were cancelled. Although the reference to a neighbouring country's seaport from which arms shipments were offloaded for transport to Somalia was unclear, Yemen pointed out that it had no land borders with Somalia across which weapons might be transported to that country by land; Yemen was not among other parties having the capacity to carry out such combined sea-and-land activity.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (March)

On 15 March [meeting 5142], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1587(2005). The draft [S/2005/160] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its previous resolutions and the statements by its President concerning the situation in Somalia, in particular resolution 733(1992) of 23 January 1992, which established an embargo on all deliveries of weapons and military equipment to Somalia (hereinafter referred to as "the arms embargo"), and resolutions 1519(2003) of 16 December 2003 and 1558(2004) of 17 August 2004,

Welcoming further progress in the process of national reconciliation in Somalia, and expecting further steps by the Transitional Federal Government towards establishing effective national governance in Somalia,

Reaffirming the importance of the sovereignty, territorial integrity, political independence and unity of Somalia,

Commending the efforts of the African Union and the Intergovernmental Authority on Development in support of the Transitional Federal Government, and welcoming the continued support of the African Union for reconciliation in Somalia,

Taking note of the report of the Monitoring Group of 14 February 2005, submitted pursuant to paragraph 3 (e) of resolution 1558(2004), and the observations and recommendations contained therein,

Condemning the continued flow of weapons and ammunition supplies to and through Somalia, in violation of the arms embargo, and expressing its determination that violators should be held accountable,

Reiterating the importance of the implementation of the arms embargo by Member States and the enhancement of the monitoring of the arms embargo in Somalia through persistent and vigilant investigation into the violations, bearing in mind that strict enforcement of the arms embargo will improve the overall security situation in Somalia,

Determining that the situation in Somalia constitutes a threat to international peace and security in the region,

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Stresses the obligation of all States to comply fully with the measures imposed by resolution 733(1992);

2. Expresses its intention to give the report of the Monitoring Group of 14 February 2005 due consideration in order to improve implementation of and compliance with the measures imposed by resolution 733(1992);

3. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 751(1992) concerning Somalia (hereinafter referred to as "the Committee"), to re-establish within thirty days of the date of the adoption of the present resolution, and for a period of six months, the Monitoring Group referred to in paragraph 3 of resolution 1558(2004), with the following mandate:

(a) To continue investigating the implementation of the arms embargo by Member States and violations, inter alia, through field-based investigations in Somalia, where possible, and, as appropriate, in other States, in particular, those in the region;

(b) To assess actions taken by Somali authorities, as well as Member States, in particular those in the region, to implement fully the arms embargo;

(c) To make specific recommendations based on detailed information in relevant areas of expertise related to violations and measures to give effect to and strengthen the implementation of the arms embargo in its various aspects;

(d) To continue refining and updating information on the draft list of those individuals and entities who violate the measures implemented by Member States in accordance with resolution 733(1992), inside and outside Somalia, and their active supporters, for possible future measures by the Council, and to present such information to the Committee as and when the Committee deems appropriate;

(e) To continue making recommendations based on its investigations, on the previous reports of the Panel of Experts appointed pursuant to resolutions 1425 (2002) of 22 July 2002 and 1474(2003) of 8 April 2003, and on the previous reports of the Monitoring Group appointed pursuant to resolutions 1519(2003) and 1558 (2004);

(f) To work closely with the Committee on specific recommendations for additional measures to improve overall compliance with the arms embargo;

(g) To assist in identifying areas where the capacities of States in the region can be strengthened to facilitate the implementation of the arms embargo;

(h) To provide to the Council, through the Committee, a midterm briefing within ninety days of its establishment;

(i) To submit to the Council through the Committee, no later than thirty days prior to the termination of its mandate, a final report covering all the tasks set out above, which the Committee will subsequently consider and convey to the Council prior to the expiration of its mandate;

4. Also requests the Secretary-General to make the necessary financial arrangements to support the work of the Monitoring Group;

5. Reaffirms paragraphs 4, 5, 7, 8 and 10 of resolution 1519(2003);

6. Requests the Committee, in accordance with its mandate and in consultation with the Monitoring Group and other relevant United Nations entities, to consider and recommend to the Council ways to improve implementation of and compliance with the arms embargo, including ways to develop the capacity of States in the region to implement the arms embargo, in response to continuing violations;

7. Also requests the Committee to consider, when appropriate, a visit to Somalia and/or the region by its Chairman and those he may designate, as approved by the Committee, to demonstrate the determination of the Council to give full effect to the arms embargo;

8. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

On 6 April [S/2005/229], the Secretary-General informed the Council that, after consultations with the Committee on sanctions against Somalia, he had re-established the Monitoring Group and appointed the four experts to constitute its membership.

Report of Monitoring Group (October). In accordance with the foregoing Security Council resolution, the Monitoring Group issued its report on 22 August [S/2005/625], which the Committee on sanctions against Somalia transmitted to the Council on 5 October. The Group reported that the previous six-month period saw a dramatic and sustained rise in the number of arms embargo violations that involved members of the Transitional Federal Government and those of the opposition in Mogadishu. The greatly increased arms flows into Somalia reflected the ongoing militarization in central and southern Somalia by the two sides (see p. 346). The opposition members who committed violations were the same individuals previously identified by the Group as warlords who did not want the establishment in Somalia of a Government that would infringe or overturn their personal political and economic vested interests. The Bakaraaha arms market in Mogadishu continued to play a major role as an intermediary for channelling arms to members of the opposition. States in the region provided direct arms support to both sides as well.

The Group identified two key generators of revenue that accrued to certain powerful local administrations to help maintain their militias and purchase arms: the fishing industry, driven principally by foreign interests with whom local administrations or faction leaders concluded licensing arrangements for the unrestrained exploitation of marine resources in Somali coastal waters; and the export from Somalia of large commercial quantities of charcoal, which represented a considerable source of revenue for factions engaged in arms embargo violations.

Therefore, to reduce the financial capacity of such local administrations to buy arms, the Group recommended that the Council consider adopting an integrated arms embargo that would reaffirm and maintain the existing arms embargo on Somalia and include an embargo on the export of Somali charcoal, a ban on foreign vessels fishing in Somali waters, and an embargo on the export of fish from those waters.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (October)

On 14 October [meeting 5280], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1630(2005). The draft [S/2005/646] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its previous resolutions and the statements by its President concerning the situation in Somalia, in particular resolution 733(1992) of 23 January 1992, which established an embargo on all deliveries of weapons and military equipment to Somalia (hereinafter referred to as "the arms embargo"), and resolutions 1519(2003) of 16 December 2003, 1558(2004) of 17 August 2004 and 1587(2005) of 15 March 2005,

Reaffirming also the importance of the sovereignty, territorial integrity, political independence and unity of Somalia,

Reiterating the urgent need for all Somali leaders to take tangible steps to begin political dialogue,

Reaffirming its strong support for the leadership of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Somalia in his efforts at fostering inclusive dialogue, particularly through his road map for dialogue among the leaders of the transitional federal institutions,

Stressing the need for the transitional federal institutions to continue working towards establishing effective national governance in Somalia,

Commending the efforts of the African Union and the Intergovernmental Authority on Development in support of the transitional federal institutions, and welcoming the continued support of the African Union for national reconciliation in Somalia,

Taking note of the report of the Monitoring Group of 22 August 2005, submitted pursuant to paragraph 3 (i) of resolution 1587(2005)and the observations and recommendations contained therein,

Condemning the significant increase in the flow of weapons and ammunition supplies to and through Somalia, which constitutes a violation of the arms embargo and a serious threat to the Somali peace process,

Reiterating its insistence that all Member States, in particular those in the region, should refrain from any action in contravention of the arms embargo and should take all necessary steps to hold violators accountable,

Reiterating and underscoring the importance of enhancing the monitoring of the arms embargo in Somalia through persistent and vigilant investigation into the violations, bearing in mind that strict enforcement of the arms embargo will improve the overall security situation in Somalia,

Determining that the situation in Somalia constitutes a threat to international peace and security in the region,

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Stresses the obligation of all Member States to comply fully with the measures imposed by resolution 733(1992);

3. Decides to request the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 751(1992) (hereinafter referred to as "the Committee"), to re-establish within thirty days of the date of adoption of the present resolution, and for a period of six months, the Monitoring Group referred to in paragraph 3 of resolution 1558 (2004), with the following mandate:

(a) To continue the tasks outlined in paragraphs 3 (a) to (c) of resolution 1587(2005);

(b) To continue to investigate, in coordination with relevant international agencies, all activities, including in the financial, maritime and other sectors, which generate revenues used to commit arms embargo violations;

(c) To continue to investigate any means of transport, routes, seaports, airports and other facilities used in connection with arms embargo violations;

(d) To continue refining and updating information on the draft list of those individuals and entities who violate the measures implemented by Member States in accordance with resolution 733(1992), inside and outside Somalia, and their active supporters, for possible future measures by the Council, and to present such information to the Committee as and when the Committee deems appropriate;

(e) To continue making recommendations based on its investigations, on the previous reports of the Panel of Experts appointed pursuant to resolutions 1425 (2002) of 22 July 2002 and 1474(2003) of 8 April 2003, and on the previous reports of the Monitoring Group appointed pursuant to resolutions 1519(2003), 1558 (2004)and 1587(2005);

(f) To work closely with the Committee on specific recommendations for additional measures to improve overall compliance with the arms embargo;

(g) To assist in identifying areas where the capacities of States in the region can be strengthened to facilitate the implementation of the arms embargo;

(i) To submit, through the Committee, for consideration by the Council, a final report covering all the tasks set out above, no later than fifteen days prior to the termination of the mandate of the Monitoring Group;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to make the necessary financial arrangements to support the work of the Monitoring Group;

5. Reaffirms paragraphs 4, 5, 7, 8 and 10 of resolution 1519(2003);

6. Requests the Committee, in accordance with its mandate and in consultation with the Monitoring Group and other relevant United Nations entities, to consider and recommend to the Council ways to improve implementation of and compliance with the arms embargo, in response to continuing violations;

7. Also requests the Committee to consider, when appropriate, a visit to Somalia and/or the region by its Chairman and those he may designate, as approved by the Committee, to demonstrate the determination of the Council to give full effect to the arms embargo;

8. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

As requested, the Secretary-General advised the Council on 2 November [S/2005/695] that, after consultations with the Committee on sanctions against Somalia, he had re-established the Monitoring Group and appointed the four experts to constitute its membership.

Report of Committee on sanctions. In accordance with a 1995 Security Council note, the Chairman of the Committee on sanctions against Somalia transmitted the annual report of the Committee [S/2005/813] summarizing its activities during 2005. The Committee held nine informal and three formal meetings. At the informal meetings, it met separately with representatives of Somalia's neighbouring countries: Ethiopia, Eritrea and Kenya; discussed actions to follow up the meetings with those countries; met with the members of the Monitoring Group; discussed the AU communiqué of 12 May [S/2005/315] seeking exemption from the arms embargo for the proposed AU/IGAD peace support mission so as to allow it to bring military equipment to Somalia (see p. 341); and heard a briefing by the Chairman on his visit to Kenya, Ethiopia and Yemen (26 November–4 December), as requested by Council resolution 1630(2005). Discussions at the formal meetings concerned the findings and recommendations of the Group as contained in its two reports.

The Committee's strong support for the work of the Monitoring Group, its active dialogue with and engagement of Somalia's neighbouring States, and the Chairman's recent visit to the region were evidence of its firm commitment to further strengthen the arms embargo on Somalia. As in the past, the Committee continued to rely on the cooperation of States and organizations in a position to provide information on violations of the arms embargo.

Eritrea–Ethiopia

The United Nations, in 2005, maintained its presence in Eritrea and Ethiopia in order to assist the countries in the implementation of their 2000 Agreement on Cessation of Hostilities and Comprehensive Peace Agreement, both signed in Algiers (the Algiers Agreements), which regulated their border dispute that had led to armed conflict in 1998 and subsequent intermittent fighting. The United Nations Mission in Ethiopia and Eritrea (UNMEE), established in 2000, continued to monitor the border region designated as the Temporary Security Zone and to support the work of the five-member Eritrea-Ethiopia Boundary Commission, the neutral body mandated under the terms of the Peace Agreement to delimit and demarcate the colonial treaty border.

During the year, the Boundary Commission attempted but failed to advance its demarcation activities, stalled in 2003, following the rejection by Ethiopia of significant parts of the Commission's 2002 final and binding delimitation decision, previously accepted by both parties. Ethiopia declined to attend a meeting called by the Commission and remained firm in its insistence on preconditions for the implementation of the demarcation in the form of procedural impediments, whereas Eritrea insisted on adherence to the delimitation decision. In view of the impasse, the Commission decided in May to suspend activities and close its field offices; it expressed readiness to proceed with and complete the demarcation process whenever circumstances permitted.

Ethiopia continued to reinforce its troop build-up close to the southern boundary of the Zone, begun at the end of the previous year, while Eritrea continued to conduct military exercises north of it. UNMEE had successfully maintained the integrity of the Zone, despite restrictions imposed by both parties on its freedom of movement. However, Eritrea imposed additional operational and administrative restrictions and, in October, banned all UNMEE helicopter flights within its airspace, thus severely inhibiting UNMEE capacity to implement its monitoring mandate. The fact-finding mission dispatched by the Security Council to the region in November to assess the situation involving UNMEE resulted in Council resolution 1640(2005) demanding that the parties immediately return to the 16 December 2004 levels of deployment, that Ethiopia accept fully the Commission's delimitation decision, and that Eritrea immediately reverse all restrictions imposed on UNMEE operations. Ethiopia complied with the demand on troop redeployment; Eritrea maintained it had no troops to redeploy. The other demands of the resolution remained unfulfilled by year's end.

Eritrea, instead of reversing its restrictions, asked that UNMEE staff of certain nationalities leave the country with effect from 6 December.

On 14 December, the Council, in consultation with the Secretary-General, agreed to temporarily relocate UNMEE civilian and military staff to Ethiopia; it intended to maintain the military presence of the Mission in Eritrea during its review of future plans for the Mission, whose mandate had been extended until 15 March 2006.

UNMEE

The United Nations Mission in Ethiopia and Eritrea (UNMEE), established by Security Council resolution 1312(2000) [YUN 2000, p. 174], continued in 2005 to monitor and verify implementation of the June 2000 Agreement on Cessation of Hostilities between Ethiopia and Eritrea [ibid., p. 173]. Its core operations, as revised by resolutions 1320 (2000) [ibid., p. 176] and 1430(2002) [YUN 2002, p. 189], were devoted to observation, reporting, analysis, identification of potential flashpoints and preventive action, chairing the Military Coordination Commission and assisting the Boundary Commission (see below). The area under constant monitoring was within and around the Temporary Security Zone, a 25-kilometre-wide buffer zone separating Eritrea and Ethiopia, which for operational purposes, was divided into Sector West, Sector Centre and Sub-Sector East (formerly Sector East). UNMEE was headquartered in Addis Ababa and Asmara and maintained an office in Adigrat, Ethiopia.

In accordance with resolution 1560(2004) [YUN 2004, p. 270], which approved the two-phased adjustments to the configuration of the Mission, as proposed by the Secretary-General [ibid., p. 269], the Mission's operations were streamlined beginning in December 2004 and completed by the end of January 2005. Its force was reduced from three to two battalions, and the former Sector East was reorganized into the new Sub-Sector East under the operational command of Sector Centre.

On the recommendation of the Secretary-General, the Council extended the mandate of UNMEE twice during the year, each for a six-month period: the first time until 15 September 2005 and the second until 15 March 2006.

Appointments. The Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Eritrea and Ethiopia, Legwaila Joseph Legwaila (Botswana), who had headed UNMEE since 2000, was assisted by two Deputy Special Representatives appointed by the Secretary-General in 2005: Joël W. Adechi (Benin), on 25 May [SG/A/925-AFR/1171], who was to take up his duties in the Eritrean capital, Asmara, in early June; and Azouz Ennifar (Tunisia), on 29 July [SG/A/936-AFR/1222], who was to be based in the Ethiopian capital, Addis Ababa. The latter succeeded Cheikh-Tidiane Gaye (Senegal), who had left the Mission area earlier in the year.

Financing

At its resumed fifty-ninth session, the General Assembly considered the Secretary-General's performance report on the budget of UNMEE for 1 July 2003 to 30 June 2004 [A/59/616] showing expenditures totalling $183,600,200 out of an apportionment of $188,400,000, a variance of $4,799,800, or 2.5 per cent; the proposed UNMEE budget for 1 July 2005 to 30 June 2006 [A/59/636 & Corr.1], amounting to $176,716,200; and the related report of ACABQ [A/59/736/Add. 10].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 June [meeting 104], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/59/833], adopted resolution 59/303 without vote [agenda item 130].

Implementation of Algiers Agreements

Report of Secretary-General (March). The Secretary-General, in his March report [S/2005/142] updating developments in the peace process to which Ethiopia and Eritrea were committed under the terms of the 2000 Algiers Agreements, stated that, since his last report [YUN 2004, p. 272], Ethiopia had been steadily massing troops towards the southern boundary of the Temporary Security Zone. UNMEE confirmed the deployment of six to seven additional divisions at points ranging from 25 to 45 kilometres from that boundary, and training exercises and troop movements in Sector West. While Ethiopia described those activities as part of a reorganization of its armed forces to improve its defence capability, Eritrea regarded them as provocative. No significant movement of the Eritrean Defence Forces had been observed, however, except for some adjustments in areas near the Zone to cover the main roads linking both countries.

Concerned about a consequent rise in tensions along the parties' common border, the Secretary-General appealed to Ethiopia to redeploy its troops in order to reinstate the situation obtaining prior to 16 December 2004.With Ethiopia's troop build-up and hostile rhetoric from the two parties, the continuing threat to military stability due to the lack of progress in the Ethiopia-Eritrea peace process remained. Nonetheless, both generally cooperated with UNMEE, thus enabling it to maintain the integrity of the Zone.

The Military Coordination Commission, at its twenty-eighth meeting (Nairobi, 17 January), reviewed the functioning of the sector-level military coordination commissions and discussed the Ethiopian troop deployment and its potential impact on the peace process.

Restrictions on UNMEE's freedom of movement in areas adjacent to the Zone had been reduced to some extent by Eritrea. However, its continued closure of the Asmara-Keren-Barentu road—the best supply route for UN troops in Sector West—constituted a major impediment to UNMEE operations, although it was reopened briefly from 12 to 26 January to facilitate the rotation of the Jordanian battalion. Moreover, Eritrea's position in denying UNMEE a direct flight route between the capitals of both countries remained unchanged; UNMEE aircraft thus continued to fly via Djibouti, resulting in additional costs and work hours, and increased risk to staff safety and security. On the Ethiopian side of the Zone, restrictions were also encountered, especially in Sub-Sector East.

The UNMEE Mine Action Coordination Centre continued to provide support for the maintenance of a well-coordinated mine action response within the Zone and nearby areas, where landmines and unexploded ordnance posed a major danger and thus an obstacle to the resettlement there of the populations of both countries. During the reporting period, the Centre's field teams provided mine-risk education, assistance and advice to almost 4,000 people. Three people were reported killed and 11 injured resulting from five accidental mine/ordnance explosions, three in Sector Centre and two in Sector West.

The overall humanitarian situation in Eritrea continued to deteriorate. Successive years of drought and existing economic policies had so seriously undermined crop and livestock production that about two thirds of the population required varying levels of food assistance throughout the year. Some 19,000 internally displaced persons who had recently returned to the Zone required social services and sustainable reintegration. In Ethiopia, the 2005 joint humanitarian appeal was launched in December 2004 (see p. 1032), just as the Government embarked on its Productive Safety Nets Programme. Despite the previous year's reported bumper harvest, large areas of the country remained severely affected by drought and food insecurity.

UNMEE implemented numerous small-scale, quick-impact projects for safe water, sanitation, and health and education services, with funding through the Trust Fund to Support the Peace Process in Ethiopia and Eritrea. It regularly monitored the situation of the more than 8,000 Eritrean refugees in the Shimelba camp, near Shiraro in Ethiopia, who faced critical humanitarian needs; monitored the human rights situation within the Zone, investigating border crossings and abduction of minors; undertook preliminary needs assessments in Ethiopia for technical cooperation projects to assist in capacity-building efforts in human rights, and planned to do the same in Eritrea; and regularly conducted human rights promotional and training activities for target groups in both countries.

The Secretary-General reiterated his appeal to Ethiopia and Eritrea to refrain from any action that could jeopardize the fragile and relative stability that had so far prevailed in the Zone, as well as the importance for both countries to accept demarcation of the boundary in accordance with the Boundary Commission's instructions (see below). He suggested that the Council might find it opportune to reaffirm and demonstrate its 2002 commitment to support the peace process [YUN 2002, p. 184] by returning to visit the two countries. He again appealed to Eritrea to cooperate with his Special Envoy for Ethiopia and Eritrea, Lloyd Axworthy (Canada), to enable him to facilitate implementation of the Algiers Agreements and the 13 April 2002 delimitation decision of the Commission [ibid., p. 187].

The Secretary-General, affirming the stabilizing role of UNMEE in the Ethiopia-Eritrea conflict, recommended that its mandate be extended until 15 September 2005.

Boundary Commission (February). The sixteenth report of the Boundary Commission [S/2005/142, annex I], issued in February and covering its activities from 15 December 2004 to 28 February 2005, stated that, despite its efforts, it had not been able to secure a resumption of the demarcation process, stalled since the Commission's eleventh (2003) report [YUN 2003, p. 241].

By a 26 January letter to Ethiopia and Eritrea, the Commission, stating the imperative of being enabled to continue and complete its mission, called on both parties to assist it to that end without any preconditions, and provided a framework of specific steps that needed to be taken. The Commission subsequently invited the parties to meet with it in London on 22 February. Since the invitation was accepted only by Eritrea and not by Ethiopia, the Commission cancelled that meeting but held its own meeting on that date. The Commission outlined the principal developments that had led to the current impasse and identified the conduct that had prevented it from completing its mandate.

In summary, the Commission said it found itself confronted by the situation whereby Eritrea was insisting on adherence to the Commission's 13 April 2002 delimitation decision [YUN 2002, p. 187]. It was willing to meet with the Commission and Ethiopia to discuss the unconditional renewal of the demarcation process, but was not prepared to accept Ethiopia's 2003 proposal [YUN 2003, p. 240]—that the Security Council set up an alternative mechanism to demarcate the contested parts of the boundary (principally Badme, found by the Commission to lie on the Eritrean side of the boundary, and parts of Sector Centre) in a just and legal manner—for the completion of demarcation in the Eastern Sector, unless there was at the same time a clear assurance from Ethiopia that the rest of the boundary would also be demarcated. Ethiopia, on the other hand, was not prepared to allow demarcation to continue in the manner laid down in the demarcation directions and in the timeline set by the Commission. While insisting on prior dialogue, Ethiopia had rejected the opportunity for such dialogue within the framework of the demarcation process provided by the Commission in its 26 January letter. That, the Commission said, was the latest in a series of obstructive actions taken since the summer of 2002 and belied the frequently professed acceptance by Ethiopia of the delimitation decision.

In view of the situation, the Commission said it was taking immediate steps to close its field offices; they could be reactivated, if Ethiopia abandoned its insistence on preconditions for the implementation of the demarcation. The Commission remained ready to proceed with and complete the demarcation process whenever circumstances permitted.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (March)

On 14 March [meeting 5139], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1586(2005). The draft [S/2005/157] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Reaffirming all its previous resolutions and statements pertaining to the situation between Ethiopia and Eritrea, and the requirements contained therein, including in particular resolution 1560(2004) of 14 September 2004,

Stressing its unwavering commitment to the peace process, including through the role played by the United Nations Mission in Ethiopia and Eritrea, and to the full and expeditious implementation of the comprehensive Peace Agreement signed on 12 December 2000 at Algiers by the Governments of Ethiopia and Eritrea (hereinafter referred to as "the parties") and the preceding Agreement on Cessation of Hostilities signed on 18 June 2000 ("the Algiers Agreements"), and the delimitation decision of the Eritrea-Ethiopia Boundary Commission of 13 April 2002, embraced by the parties as final and binding in accordance with the Algiers Agreements,

Welcoming the Secretary-General's determination that the Mission has been able to maintain the integrity of the Temporary Security Zone,

Expressing concern regarding the recent high concentration of Ethiopian troops in the areas adjacent to the Temporary Security Zone,

Recalling that lasting peace between Ethiopia and Eritrea, as well as in the region, cannot be achieved without the full demarcation of the border between the parties,

Seriously concerned with the decision of the Boundary Commission to take immediate steps to close down its field offices, due to the lack of progress made in the demarcation of the border, as reflected in the sixteenth report on the work of the Commission, of 24 February 2005,

Expressing its concern about Ethiopia's ongoing rejection of significant parts of the decision of the Boundary Commission and its current lack of cooperation with the Commission, including the refusal to participate in the meeting of 22 February 2005,

Expressing its disappointment about the continuing refusal of Eritrea to engage with the Special Envoy of the Secretary-General for Ethiopia and Eritrea, whose good offices represent a concrete opportunity for both parties to move the peace process forward,

Recalling the recent increase in United Nations peacekeeping activities and the need to allocate peacekeeping resources in the most effective manner, and recalling in this regard the additional burden caused by the delays in the demarcation process,

Welcoming Eritrea's unconditional acceptance of the decision of the Boundary Commission,

Welcoming also Ethiopia's five-point peace proposal of 25 November 2004,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 7 March 2005, and welcoming the observations made therein,

1. Decides to extend the present mandate of the United Nations Mission in Ethiopia and Eritrea until 15 September 2005;

2. Calls upon the parties to refrain from any increase of troops in the areas adjacent to the Temporary Security Zone, to give serious consideration to returning to the 16 December 2004 levels of deployment and, more generally, to refrain from any threat of use of force against each other;

3. Also calls upon the parties to cooperate fully and expeditiously with the Mission in the implementation of its mandate, to ensure the security of all staff of the Mission, and to remove immediately and unconditionally all restrictions on and impediments to the work and to the full and free movement of the Mission and its staff;

4. Takes note of positive developments in some areas of relations between the Mission and the parties, in this regard urges Eritrea to take immediate steps, in consultation with the Mission, towards implementing the direct flights between Addis Ababa and Asmara, and also calls upon Eritrea to reopen the Asmara to Barentu road;

5. Stresses that Ethiopia and Eritrea have the primary responsibility for the implementation of the Algiers Agreements and the decision of the Eritrea-Ethiopia Boundary Commission, and calls upon the parties to show political leadership to achieve a full normalization of their relationship, including through political dialogue for the adoption of further confidence-building measures and to consolidate progress achieved so far, by making full use of the existing framework of the Commission;

6. Reiterates its call upon the parties to cooperate fully and promptly with the Boundary Commission and to create the necessary conditions for demarcation to proceed expeditiously, including through the complete appointment by Ethiopia of its field liaison officers;

7. Calls upon Ethiopia without preconditions to start the implementation of demarcation, by taking the necessary steps to enable the Boundary Commission to demarcate the border completely and promptly;

8. Expresses its concern at the worsening humanitarian situation in Ethiopia and Eritrea and the implications this could have for the peace process, and calls upon Member States to continue to provide prompt and generous support for humanitarian operations in Ethiopia and Eritrea;

9. Reiterates its full support for the Special Envoy of the Secretary-General for Ethiopia and Eritrea, Mr. Lloyd Axworthy, in his efforts to facilitate the implementation of the Algiers Agreements, the decision of the Boundary Commission and the normalization of diplomatic relations between the two countries through his good offices, and emphasizes that this appointment does not constitute an alternative mechanism;

10. Calls upon Eritrea to accept the good offices of the Secretary-General and cooperate with his Special Envoy;

11. Calls upon the witnesses to the Algiers Agreements to play a more concerted and active role to facilitate their full implementation;

12. Decides to continue monitoring closely the steps taken by the parties in the implementation of their commitments under the relevant resolutions of the Security Council and under the Algiers Agreements, including through the Boundary Commission, and to review any implications for the Mission;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to monitor the situation closely, to review the mission's mandate in the light of progress made in the peace process and changes made to the Mission;

14. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Report of Secretary-General (June). In his 20 June report [S/2005/400], the Secretary-General noted that Ethiopia maintained its troop deployment close to the southern boundary of the Temporary Security Zone and that Eritrea remained engaged in military training exercises nearby. In a demonstration of transparency, Ethiopia gave UNMEE details of its current military positions, while Eritrea escorted the Force Commander to its operational locations in Sub-Sector East and Sector West. In addition to the usual cross-border incursions involving livestock rustling and individual strayings into the Zone, three shooting incidents occurred in Sector West, allegedly between armed Ethiopians and Eritrean militia, on 9, 11 and 26 April, which resulted in the deaths of four Ethiopians and one Eritrean militiaman. Those incidents notwithstanding, UNMEE was able to maintain the integrity of the Zone.

UNMEE ground patrols operating on the Eritrean side adjacent to the Zone continued to encounter restrictions. Its personnel had also been subjected to unwarranted arrests and detention by Eritrean authorities, who had moreover imposed restrictions on the military police contingent in Asmara, in contravention of the 1946 Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the United Nations [YUN 1946-47, p. 100, GA res. 179 A (I), annex, 13 Feb. 1946], and of the model status-of-forces agreement in force between the United Nations and the Government of Eritrea.

The Military Coordination Commission, at its twenty-ninth and thirtieth meetings (Nairobi, 25 March and 11 May), discussed the prevailing military situation, the cross-border incidents and existing restrictions on UNMEE's freedom of movement.

The Secretary-General noted that the national and regional elections held in Ethiopia on 15 May were generally peaceful. The elections were monitored by more than 300 foreign observers and were covered by over 800 accredited national and international journalists. The delay in announcing the final vote counts resulted in some demonstrations, however, in which a number of demonstrators were shot and killed by security forces.

The period from March through May saw eight incidents of mine or unexploded ordnance within the Zone that killed one person in Sector Centre and injured eight others in Sector West, near the Ethiopian side of which four newly laid mines on certain roads were also discovered. UNMEE, together with the commercial contractors, destroyed eight mines and 704 items of unexploded ordnance, and demined 1,385,156 square metres of land and 457 kilometres of road.

The Secretary-General expressed concern over the recent shootings in the Zone, which he felt could easily escalate into situations that would compromise military stability, as well as the continuing stalemate in the peace process, which he considered unsustainable in the long term. He said that the attainment of durable peace between Ethiopia and Eritrea rested primarily with both of them, and fulfilment of that responsibility was a debt they owed to their peoples.

Boundary Commission (May). The seventeenth report of the Boundary Commission [S/2005/400, annex I], issued on 30 May and covering the period 1 March to 30 May, stated that the Commission had suspended all its activities in the area, closed its field offices and terminated its staff contracts. For the time being, its field assets were in UNMEE's custody. There had been no further demarcation activity.

Report of Secretary-General (August). In an August report [S/2005/553], the Secretary-General stated that the integrity of the Temporary Security Zone continued to be successfully maintained by UNMEE, even as Ethiopia's troops remained in their forward positions to the south of the Zone and Eritrea's military exercises continued.

Improved cooperation by Ethiopia and Eritrea with UNMEE resulted in a decline in the restrictions imposed by both parties on the Mission's freedom of movement. The Asmara-Keren-Barentu road remained closed, however, with no indication from Eritrea as to when it would reopen. Eritrea's continuing restrictions on UNMEE police in Asmara, preventing the Italian contingent from resuming its activities there led to the contingent's withdrawal in July. Kenyan military police were to take over and deploy as early as possible. As to the long-standing request for a direct flight route between Asmara and Addis Ababa, although Ethiopia had agreed to allow UN aircraft to fly directly from Addis Ababa to Asmara, UNMEE had yet to receive a positive response from the authorities in Asmara.

At the thirty-first meeting of the Military Coordination Commission (Nairobi, 16 July), the Eritrean and Ethiopian delegates, in addition to discussing the current military situation and functioning of the sector military coordination commissions, reiterated their willingness to cooperate fully with UNMEE to resolve outstanding issues relating to the maintenance of the Zone.

From June to mid-August, three accidents from unexploded ordnance occurred in Sector West and two in Sector Centre that killed one child and injured four persons. UNMEE demining assets and commercial contractors destroyed 10 mines and 285 pieces of unexploded ordnance, besides clearing 1,079,195 square metres of land and 574 kilometres of road. UNMEE continued to work with commercial contractors to implement an integrated approach to demining operations inside the Zone focusing on minefields in the Shilalo region of Eritrea, in Sector West. UNMEE Mine Action Coordination Centre provided mine-risk education to 1,978 internally displaced persons returning to that region.

In the area of human rights, UNMEE followed up cases of cross-border abductions and missing persons from Ethiopia and Eritrea; monitored the repatriation of 298 persons to Ethiopia and 163 to Eritrea under the auspices of the International Committee of the Red Cross; visited Shimelba refugee camp in northern Ethiopia, where international aid agencies addressed the needs of 9,327 refugees for food, water, sanitation, health and education services; and continued its technical cooperation activities in Ethiopia, including training projects for law enforcement officials, civil society organizations and national human rights institutions. The Secretary-General once again invited Eritrea to assist UNMEE in extending its technical cooperation in human rights work in the country.

The Secretary-General, stating that the protracted stalemate in the Ethiopia-Eritrea peace process was inherently destabilizing, reiterated his strong appeal to the witnesses to the Algiers Agreements—Algeria, the EU, OAU (now the AU), the United Nations and the United States—especially those with influence on the parties, to play a more concerted role in assisting them to resolve the stalemate. He also called on the international community to spare no effort in bringing the parties together to engage in constructive dialogue aimed at moving the peace process forward and normalizing bilateral relations between them.

The Secretary-General recommended that UNMEE's mandate be extended for a further six months, until 15 March 2006, and that the authorized number of its military observers be increased by 10, to a total of 230, within the existing authorized strength of 3,404 military personnel. Given the progress made in integrating demining operations in the Mission area, the difficulties facing the Eritrean national demining programme and of the fact that demining support to the Eritrea-Ethiopia Boundary Commission remained on hold, the Secretary-General also recommended that UNMEE assist the parties, in continuing cooperation with other international partners in the mine action sector, by providing humanitarian demining assistance, technical advice and coordination in and around the Zone.

Boundary Commission (August). The eighteenth report of the Boundary Commission [S/2005/553/Add.1], issued on 31 August and covering the period 1 June to 31 August, advised that there had been no change in the demarcation situation since its report of 30 May (see p. 356).

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (September)

On 13 September [5259], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1622(2005). The draft [S/2005/569] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Stressing its unwavering commitment to the peace process, including through the role played by the United Nations Mission in Ethiopia and Eritrea, and to the full and expeditious implementation of the comprehensive Peace Agreement signed by the Governments of Ethiopia and Eritrea (hereinafter referred to as the parties) on 12 December 2000 and the preceding Agreement on Cessation of Hostilities signed on 18 June 2000 ("the Algiers Agreements"), and the delimitation decision of the Eritrea-Ethiopia Boundary Commission of 13 April 2002, embraced by the parties as final and binding in accordance with the Algiers Agreements,

Stressing that lasting peace between Ethiopia and Eritrea, as well as in the region, cannot be achieved without the full demarcation of the border between the parties,

Deeply concerned by the continuing lack of progress in the implementation of the final and binding decision of the Boundary Commission, and by Ethiopia's ongoing rejection of significant parts of the decision of the Boundary Commission,

Noting with deep concern the continuing high concentration of troops in the areas adjacent to the Temporary Security Zone,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General, and welcoming the observations made therein,

2. Approves the reconfiguration of the military component of the Mission, including an increase in the number of military observers by 10, within the existing overall mandated strength of the Mission, and the assistance to the parties in the mine action sector, as recommended by the Secretary-General in paragraphs 11 and 42 of his report;

3. Calls upon both parties to refrain from any action which may lead to an escalation of the tension, and in this respect urges both parties to give serious consideration to returning to the 16 December 2004 levels of deployment and, more generally, to refrain from any threat of use of force against each other;

4. Reaffirms that Ethiopia and Eritrea have the primary responsibility for the implementation of the Algiers Agreements and the decision of the Eritrea-Ethiopia Boundary Commission, by making full use of the existing framework of the Boundary Commission;

9. Calls upon both parties to achieve a full normalization of their relations, including through political dialogue between them for the adoption of further confidence-building measures and to consolidate progress achieved so far;

10. Expresses its concern at the ongoing food insecurity in Ethiopia and Eritrea and its potential to create greater instability, and calls upon Member States to continue to provide generous support for both humanitarian and development activities to improve food security in Ethiopia and Eritrea;

11. Calls upon Eritrea to lift all restrictions imposed on the operations of aid organizations, to enable them to carry out their humanitarian activities;

12. Decides to continue monitoring closely the steps taken by the parties in the implementation of their commitments under the relevant resolutions of the Security Council and under the Algiers Agreements, including through the Boundary Commission, and to review any implications for the Mission;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to take the necessary measures to achieve actual compliance in the Mission with the United Nations zero-tolerance policy on sexual exploitation and abuse, including the development of strategies and appropriate mechanisms to prevent, identify and respond to all forms of misconduct, including sexual exploitation and abuse, and the enhancement of training for personnel to prevent misconduct and ensure full compliance with the United Nations code of conduct, also requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action in accordance with the Secretary-General's bulletin on special measures for protection from sexual exploitation and sexual abuse and to keep the Council informed, and urges troop-contributing countries to take appropriate preventive action, including conducting predeployment awareness training, and to take disciplinary action and other action to ensure full accountability in cases of such conduct involving their personnel;

14. Also requests the Secretary-General to continue to monitor the situation closely, to review the mission's mandate in the light of progress made in the peace process and changes made to the Mission;

15. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Restrictions on UNMEE

On 4 October [meeting 5276], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2005/47 on behalf of the Council:

> The Security Council expresses its grave concern at the decision of the Government of Eritrea to restrict all types of United Nations Mission in Ethiopia and Eritrea helicopter flights within Eritrean airspace or coming to Eritrea, effective from 5 October 2005, which will have serious implications for the ability of the Mission to carry out its mandate and for the safety of the staff.
> Recalling all its previous resolutions and the statements by its President regarding the situation between Ethiopia and Eritrea, the Council emphasizes that the aforementioned decision of the Government of Eritrea gravely contravenes the Council's call upon the parties, in resolution 1312(2000), to provide the Mission with the access, assistance, support and protection required for the performance of its duties, as well as the Agreement on Cessation of Hostilities signed at Algiers on 18 June 2000 by the Government of the Federal Democratic Republic of Ethiopia and the Government of the State of Eritrea.
> The Council further underlines the need for implementation of the decision of the Eritrea-Ethiopia Boundary Commission without further delay, which will enable the Mission to fulfil its mandate.
> The Council reaffirms that both parties bear the primary responsibility for the implementation of the Algiers Agreements and the decision of the Boundary Commission.
> The Council calls upon the Government of Eritrea to immediately reverse its decision and to provide the Mission with the access, assistance, support and protection required for the performance of its duties. It also calls upon both parties to cooperate fully and expeditiously with the Mission in the implementation of its mandate.
> The Council also calls upon both parties to show maximum restraint and to refrain from any threat of use of force against each other.
> The Council reiterates its call upon both parties to achieve a full normalization of their relations, including through political dialogue between them for the adoption of further confidence-building measures and to consolidate progress achieved so far.

Communications. The Secretary-General informed the Security Council President on 24 October [S/2005/668] that the situation with regard to UNMEE had seriously deteriorated, stating that the current state of affairs constituted a crisis requiring the international community's full attention and urgent and specific action, without which the situation could escalate and lead to another round of devastating hostilities. He said the Council had been thoroughly briefed on the latest turn of events affecting UNMEE, most recently on 19 October, both in informal consultations and at a special meeting with the troop-contributing countries.

Underlined at those briefings was Eritrea's decision to restrict all types of UNMEE helicopter flights within Eritrean airspace, thus severely inhibiting the Mission's capacity to implement its monitoring mandate, as requested by the parties in the June 2000 Agreement on Cessation of Hostilities and authorized by Council resolutions 1312(2000) and 1320(2000) [YUN 2002, pp. 173, 174, 176]. As such, the decision also seriously affected prospects for the implementation of the December 2000 comprehensive Peace Agreement between Eritrea and Ethiopia [ibid., p. 180]. In addition, the Eritrean restriction dramatically affected the security of UN peacekeepers and their operations to the extent that 18 out of 40 observation posts and deployment sites in isolated places had become unsustainable and no longer operationally viable.

At the meeting with the troop-contributing countries, India and Jordan expressed alarm at the implications of the helicopter ban and other restrictions, which their Governments regarded as unacceptable. They appealed for a strong and unequivocal message from the Council to reverse the untenable situation. At the same time, Ethiopia stated to the press that members of the Eritrean Defence Force had infiltrated the Temporary Security Zone and urged the United Nations to "take measures to restore the status quo".

The Secretary-General said that he had conveyed his serious concern about the restrictions to the President of Eritrea, who replied on 20 October that the Council and the Secretary-General had forfeited their "relevance" on matters relating to the peace process.

The Secretary-General further expressed concern over the restrictions on humanitarian operations in Eritrea, including significant delays in relief food distributions, the impoundment of UN project vehicles and lack of access to some of the UN warehouses and containers.

He called on the Council to exert its maximum influence to avert a further deterioration of the situation and to secure the lifting of the restrictions. He said it was imperative for the Council to address the underlying causes of the stalemate in the peace process, including those relating to the Ethiopian position on the delimitation decision of the Boundary Commission. He stood ready to work with the Council collectively and with key stakeholders individually to bring the crisis to an end, to conclude the peace process, and to re-establish vital humanitarian activities in Eritrea.

Eritrea, on 28 October [S/2005/688], drew attention to what it called the Council's failure to carry out its obligations to maintain regional peace and security under the Charter of the United Nations and the Algiers Agreements. Citing Ethiopia's repeated obstruction of the work of the Boundary Commission, Eritrea claimed those acts were condoned by the Council, which took no remedial action to ensure the rule of law in that regard. It referred to Ethiopia's presence in Badme and other areas north of the delimitation line as forcible occupation of sovereign Eritrean territory, and to Ethiopia's disregard of the 2002 Council instructions to dismantle its illegal settlements [YUN 2002, p. 189]. Eritrea said it had suffered immeasurably from Ethiopia's occupation of almost six years, which had held its people hostage, condemned them to live in makeshift camps under traumatic physical and psychological conditions, and hampered Eritrea's development objectives, with resultant substantial losses to its economy.

Eritrea further said that the Council's unwillingness to enforce the rule of law and to ensure respect for the sovereignty and territorial integrity of a UN Member State had compromised the Council's credibility and legal and moral authority. Eritrea had shown maximum patience and restraint throughout the Ethiopian occupation; the measures it was taking to protect its sovereignty and territorial integrity were legal acts of self-defence, recognized as such by the Charter. It could not be blamed for the grave situation currently facing the region, and attempts by the Council to blame it were legally and politically unwarranted.

Eritrea attached its letters of 2 and 15 March 2004: the first reiterated its views on the appointment of the Special Envoy for Ethiopia and Eritrea [YUN 2004, p. 266], namely, that the appointment was tantamount to establishing a "new mechanism" that would only cause unnecessary complications; the second questioned the actions of the Special Envoy.

Ethiopia, on 31 October [S/2005/690], laid out its view on what it called Eritrea's violation of the Agreement on Cessation of Hostilities between them. Ethiopia said its opinion of the 2002 delimitation decision by the Boundary Commission would never change: it was unfair, unjust and indefensible. Ethiopia recalled its repeated statement that its acceptance of the decision "in principle" did not mean a return to the drawing board, nor did it imply the introduction of a precondition; its request for dialogue on the implementation of the demarcation was consistent with international demarcation practice. The crisis between it and Eritrea did not grow out of their dispute over the boundary, and to claim that normalization and durable peace could be achieved only with the completion of the demarcation process, would be naive and dishonest; at the root of the crisis were more weighty issues that needed to be addressed. It was this conviction that prompted Ethiopia to present its comprehensive five-point peace proposal [YUN 2004, p. 271]. Despite Eritrea's latest steps to cripple UNMEE and degrade its capacity for monitoring the Zone, Ethiopia reassured the troop-contributing countries and the Council that it would continue to do whatever was humanly possible to support

UNMEE to fulfil its obligation; it would not allow itself to be provoked by Eritrea.

Fact-finding mission. On 2 November [S/2005/694], the Security Council informed the Secretary-General that it had authorized Kenzo Oshima (Japan), in his capacity as Chairman of the Council's Working Group on Peacekeeping Operations, to conduct a fact-finding mission in Ethiopia and Eritrea, from 6 to 9 November, regarding the current situation involving UNMEE.

In his report on the mission, transmitted to the Council on 16 November [S/2005/723], Mr. Oshima stated that he had exchanged views with UNMEE officials and those representing the troop contributors, as well as with the Foreign Minister of Ethiopia, in Addis Ababa, on 7 November; and with the Acting Commissioner of the Military Coordination Commission and the Director of the Office of the President of Eritrea, in Asmara, on 8 November. On his way to Asmara, he visited Sub-Sector East headquarters in Assab, Eritrea.

His discussions with Special Representative Legwaila and briefings from the Force Commander of UNMEE revealed that the situation was tense and potentially volatile, and could deteriorate further. Ethiopia had been reinforcing its military in areas adjacent to the Zone; Eritrea could be doing the same outside the Zone, which UNMEE could not verify owing to the restrictions imposed on it by Eritrea. The restrictions, especially the ban on helicopter flights, had reduced UNMEE's monitoring capabilities by 60 per cent and seriously affected medical evacuations. UNMEE was concerned that, if the two sides continued to strengthen their military postures, a possible resumption of armed conflict through miscalculation could not be excluded. Troop contributing countries were unified in their appeal for the urgent removal of the restrictions. Many believed that UNMEE's withdrawal would have devastating consequences.

The Foreign Minister of Ethiopia reiterated his country's position as set out in his 31 October letter (above). In response to a request for clarification of Ethiopia's acceptance "in principle" of the Boundary Commission's delimitation decision, the Minister stressed that Ethiopia was not asking for partial or total renegotiation of the decision, but rather for implementation of the decision in a practical rather than in a mechanical manner, pointing to locations to be reviewed where Ethiopian and Eritrean communities would be affected. As to the Council's concern over the situation in and around the Zone, he stated that Ethiopia would exercise maximum restraint: it would not be the first to fire nor would it allow itself to be provoked.

The Eritrean Director stressed that only the full and faithful implementation of the Boundary Commission's decision could resolve the impasse. He criticized the Council for failing to compel Ethiopia to accept the border ruling, as provided for in the Algiers Agreements, and to proceed with demarcation without preconditions. He rejected the idea of a special envoy, as well as the expansion of the mandate of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General to include political matters. The Director took note of the Council's concern over the situation, of Mr. Oshima's urging for the exercise of maximum restraint, and of the issue of the risks to UNMEE personnel resulting from the helicopter flight ban. The Director pointed out that Ethiopia's military build-up was provocative, and that a large number of Eritreans living near the border could be affected if armed conflict resumed because of the Council's continuing failure to address the major issue of demarcation.

Mr. Oshima observed that, to avoid a resumption of hostilities, the Council needed to: give serious attention to the question of how to help break the stalemate between the two countries; consider a new resolution strongly urging Eritrea to lift its restrictions, and another urging Ethiopia to accept and implement fully the Boundary Commission's decision; and ask the Secretary-General and the countries with influence on the two parties to launch a new series of vigorous diplomatic initiatives to break the stalemate. As the idea of a special envoy was unacceptable to one of the parties, diplomatic efforts should continue to engage both to end the crisis; a Council resolution in support of those efforts should be carefully crafted.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (November)

On 23 November [meeting 5308], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1640 (2005). The draft [S/2005/732] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Reaffirming all its previous resolutions and the statements by its President pertaining to the situation between Eritrea and Ethiopia, and the requirements contained therein, including in particular resolution 1622(2005) of 13 September 2005 and the statement by its President of 4 October 2005,

Expressing once again its grave concern at the decision of the Government of Eritrea of 4 October 2005 to restrict all types of United Nations Mission in Ethiopia and Eritrea helicopter flights within Eritrean airspace or coming to Eritrea, effective from 5 October 2005, and the additional restrictions on the freedom of movement of the Mission imposed since then, which have serious implications for the ability of the Mission to carry out its mandate and for the safety of its staff and the forces of the troop contributors,

Alarmed by the implications and potential impact of the aforementioned decision made and restrictions imposed by the Government of Eritrea with regard to the maintenance of peace and security between Eritrea and Ethiopia, and the principles governing United Nations peacekeeping operations,

Reaffirming the integrity of the Temporary Security Zone as provided for in the Agreement on Cessation of Hostilities of 18 June 2000, and recalling the objectives behind its establishment,

Stressing that lasting peace between Eritrea and Ethiopia, as well as in the region, cannot be achieved without the full demarcation of the border between the parties,

Expressing its grave concern at the Government of Ethiopia's failure, to date, to accept without preconditions the implementation of the final and binding decision of the Eritrea-Ethiopia Boundary Commission of 13 April 2002,

Expressing its appreciation to Ambassador Kenzo Oshima for his visit to Ethiopia and Eritrea from 6 to 9 November 2005, in his capacity as Chairman of the Security Council Working Group on Peacekeeping Operations, taking note of his report, and welcoming the observations made therein,

Noting with deep concern the high concentration of troops on both sides of the Temporary Security Zone, and stressing that the continuation of the situation would constitute a threat to international peace and security,

1. Deeply deplores the continued imposition by Eritrea of restrictions on the freedom of movement of the United Nations Mission in Ethiopia and Eritrea, and demands that the Government of Eritrea reverse, without further delay or preconditions, its decision to ban Mission helicopter flights, as well as additional restrictions imposed on the operations of the Mission, and provide the Mission with the access, assistance, support and protection required for the performance of its duties;

2. Calls upon both parties to show maximum restraint and to refrain from any threat or use of force against each other, and demands that both parties return to the 16 December 2004 levels of deployment, beginning with immediate effect and completing this redeployment within thirty days, in order to prevent aggravation of the situation;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to monitor compliance by the parties with the demands in paragraphs 1 and 2 above and to report to the Security Council forty days after the adoption of the present resolution;

4. Expresses its determination to consider further appropriate measures, including under Article 41 of the Charter of the United Nations, if one or both parties fail to comply with the demands in paragraphs 1 and 2 above;

5. Demands that Ethiopia accept fully and without further delay the final and binding decision of the Eritrea-Ethiopia Boundary Commission and take immediately concrete steps to enable, without preconditions, the Commission to demarcate the border completely and promptly, and expresses its determination to monitor closely the actions of both parties in relation to the demarcation of the border and to keep this matter under consideration;

6. Expresses its deep appreciation for the contribution and dedication of the troop-contributing countries to the work of the Mission and, in the light of the risk of further deterioration of the situation, appeals to them to persevere in maintaining their presence and contribution to the activities of the Mission, despite the immense difficulties which they are facing;

7. Calls upon both parties to work, without preconditions, to break the current stalemate through diplomatic efforts;

8. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Communications. Following adoption of the foregoing resolution, Eritrea issued a press release on 24 November [S/2005/737] accusing the Security Council of adopting yet another deplorable resolution on the Eritrea-Ethiopia conflict, which was lopsided in favour of Ethiopia. Eritrea recounted Ethiopia's repeated violations of the comprehensive Peace Agreement and the Council's failure in each case to exercise its responsibility and take remedial action, all of which had led to the stoppage of demarcation activities and closure of the Commission's offices. Eritrea said that, in a perverted logic, the Council would not invoke, as it should, Chapter VII in the face of Ethiopia's continued violation of the Peace Agreement and the Charter. It had chosen instead to focus on derivative and secondary clauses and arrangements to impose sanctions on Eritrea.

Ethiopia, commenting on resolution 1640 (2005), in a statement addressed to the Council on 9 December [S/2205/774], stressed that the ongoing crisis had been created by Eritrea, which should not be rewarded for escalating tensions along the border. Ethiopia had reacted with consistent moderation in the face of Eritrea's continuing bellicose actions. Unlike Eritrea, which had violated the integrity of the Temporary Security Zone, Ethiopia had no troops within the Zone, and its current troop deployment was fully consistent with its obligations under the Algiers Agreement. In the interests of peace, Ethiopia was prepared to redeploy its forces in compliance with paragraph 2 of the resolution, even if doing so could put its security at risk. Should Eritrea take advantage of that unilateral compliance and cause harm to Ethiopia's security, Ethiopia was convinced that the Council would shoulder its responsibility by taking the necessary action.

Ethiopia wrote the Secretary-General, also on 9 December, to convey the same information.

Further report of Secretary-General. The Secretary-General later reported [S/2006/1] that, on 18 November, elements of Ethiopia's armed forces took up position at Peak 885, a site inside the Temporary Security Zone in Sub-Sector East vacated by UNMEE the day before, but withdrew on 23 November following formal protests by UNMEE. They again made a brief incursion into the area of Adi Melele in Sector West on 29 November. Until the adoption of Security Council resolution 1640(2005), Ethiopia had continued reinforcing its troops and conducting military exercises near the southern boundary of the Zone. Eritrea had also engaged in considerable troop movements towards the northern boundary.

On 6 December, Eritrea wrote UNMEE requesting that its personnel of Canadian, European, Russian Federation and United States nationality leave the country within 10 days, giving no reason for the decision. In a statement issued on 7 December, the Secretary-General condemned the decision and once again appealed to Asmara to reverse all restrictions imposed on UNMEE. At his request, the Under-Secretary-General for Peacekeeping Operations, Jean-Marie Guéhenno, together with the Department of Peacekeeping Operations military adviser, visited the region (16-21 December) to meet with the parties, the diplomatic community and UNMEE personnel to discuss the current situation and how to move the peace process forward. Although Ethiopia's Prime Minister received Mr. Guéhenno, no senior Eritrean official agreed to do so, nor did Eritrea respond to his two letters urging a reconsideration of its decision to withdraw certain UNMEE staff from the country. Likewise, Eritrea did not respond to the Secretary-General's calls to rescind that decision.

On 15 and 16 December, UNMEE temporarily redeployed 77 of its civilian staff—including those specified by Eritrea and others who could no longer perform their functions effectively in Asmara owing to Eritrea's restrictions—and 61 military personnel from Eritrea to Ethiopia. The move was with the agreement of the Council, which expressed its intention to review options for UNMEE's future deployment and functions, in the context of its original purpose. (See presidential statement S/PRST/2005/62 on p. 363.)

Implementation of Security Council resolution 1640(2005). The meeting of the Military Coordination Commission (Nairobi, 25 November) discussed the demands of resolution 1640(2005) on the parties, principally the lifting of all restrictions on UNMEE, the need to show maximum restraint and a return to the pre-16 December 2004 levels of military deployment within 30 days. While the Ethiopian delegation agreed to redeploy its troops accordingly, the Eritrean delegation argued that the provision did not apply to Eritrea as it had not moved any troops forward.

Upon Ethiopia's presentation on 27 November of the plan for redeploying its forces to the levels specified, UNMEE developed a monitoring and verification plan of the troops to be pulled back, and ascertained their presence at the forward positions and scheduled pull back. UNMEE confirmed the departures and, where possible, the arrivals at the designated pre-16 December 2004 locations; thereafter, it reconfirmed that each of the vacated locations had not been reoccupied by Ethiopia. The entire exercise was conducted by UNMEE military observers in cooperation with Ethiopian authorities. On 23 December, UNMEE confirmed that Ethiopia had completed the planned withdrawal of eight of its divisions from the forward positions. On the same date, Ethiopia informed the Council that it had responded "receptively" to the resolution; it would refrain from initiating any armed hostilities and would work to resolve its differences with Eritrea peacefully, adding, however, that "the range of possibilities open to Ethiopia" would be "limited" until Eritrea demonstrated a similar resolve, including normal diplomatic dialogue.

Eritrea reversed neither its ban on UNMEE helicopter flights nor the additional restrictions, as demanded by the resolution. Instead of providing the Mission with access, support and protection required for the performance of its duties, Eritrea had put in place additional restrictions on ground patrols, especially in large areas of Sector West and Sector Centre, where they were restricted to main roads and precluded from night patrolling. Challenge inspections were blocked by Eritrean militia at a number of locations. In Eritrea's view, the demand for redeployment of troops to the 16 December 2004 levels did not apply to it. Eritrea had taken no observable steps towards such redeployment, and vacant military locations in areas adjacent to the Zone were presumed vacated by Eritrean troops for destinations undetermined by the Mission. At the same time, armed Eritrean personnel had been observed in 15 to 17 locations inside the Zone, in numbers ranging from 80 to 150 per location. Some who claimed to be militia refused to show identity cards. Eritrea insisted that it had no soldiers inside the Zone, merely some militia engaged in agricultural activities.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (7 and 14 December)

On 7 December [meeting 5317], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2005/59 on behalf of the Council:

> The Security Council condemns the decision of the Government of Eritrea to request some members of the United Nations Mission in Ethiopia and Eritrea to leave the country within 10 days, effective from 6 December 2005, which is inconsistent with the obligations of the Government of Eritrea to respect the exclusively international nature of the peacekeeping operation. In this regard, the Council unequivocally demands that Eritrea immediately reverse its decision without preconditions.

The Council recalls that, in its resolution 1640 (2005), it demanded that the Government of Eritrea reverse all restrictions imposed on the operations of the Mission.

The Council will be consulting on how to respond to this completely unacceptable action by Eritrea.

On 14 December [meeting 5326], following consultations among Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2005/62 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council has agreed, in consultation with the Secretary-General, to temporarily relocate military and civilian staff of the United Nations Mission in Ethiopia and Eritrea from Eritrea to Ethiopia. The Council intends to maintain a military presence of the Mission in Eritrea during the period in which it is reviewing future plans for the Mission.

The Council has approved this decision solely in the interests of the safety and security of Mission staff. The lack of cooperation with the Mission by the Eritrean authorities has produced conditions on the ground which prevent the Mission from implementing its mandate satisfactorily.

The Council strongly condemns Eritrea's unacceptable actions and restrictions on the Mission, which have drastically reduced any meaningful operational capacity for the mission and will have, if they are sustained, implications for the future of the Mission. The Council recalls its demand, expressed in resolution 1640(2005), that Eritrea reverse such restrictions and provide the Mission with the access, assistance, support and protection required for the performance of its duties.

In this regard, the Council intends, with the Secretariat, to review promptly all options for the deployment and functions of the Mission in the context of its original purpose, its capacity to act effectively and the different military options available.

The view of the Council on the fundamental issue of implementation of the delimitation decision of the Eritrea-Ethiopia Boundary Commission remains unchanged and the Council emphasizes the urgent need for progress in implementation of the decision of the Boundary Commission.

North Africa

Western Sahara

For another year in 2005, the United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara successfully monitored compliance by Morocco and the Frente Popular para la Liberación de Saguía El-Hamra y de Río de Oro (Frente Polisario) with the 1991 ceasefire that ended their armed hostilities over their dispute regarding the governance of the Territory of Western Sahara, thus maintaining the conditions conducive to the achievement of an agreed political solution. All UN efforts to that end notwithstanding, a solution remained elusive.

In a bid to break the long-standing political deadlock on the question, the Secretary-General, in July, appointed a new Personal Envoy, Peter van Walsum (Netherlands), to explore with the two parties, as well as with Algeria, where thousands of Saharans had sought asylum from the conflict, and the other neighbouring countries, how best to achieve a mutually acceptable solution. During the Envoy's exploratory mission, Morocco reiterated its non-acceptance of a referendum that would include the option of independence. For Frente Polisario, the only way forward was to implement either the 2003 peace plan proposed by the previous Personal Envoy, James Baker III, or the 1991 settlement plan proposed by the Secretary-General, both approved by the Security Council and both providing for self-determination through a referendum, with independence as an option.

A significant and encouraging development during the year was the release in August of the last remaining 404 prisoners of war held by Frente Polisario, some for over 20 years. In that connection, the Council called on both parties, in cooperation with the International Committee of the Red Cross, to resolve the fate of persons unaccounted for since the beginning of the conflict.

Following a comprehensive review of the administrative and operational structure of the Mission, the military and civilian components of the Mission were reorganized in order to integrate their activities, thereby to enhance their effectiveness. The Council extended the Mission's mandate twice, the second time until 30 April 2006.

The Council and the General Assembly again called for the full cooperation of the parties and States of the region with the Secretary-General and his Personal Envoy to end the current impasse and achieve progress towards a political solution.

MINURSO

The United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara (MINURSO), established by Security Council resolution 690(1991) [YUN 1991, p. 794], continued in 2005 to monitor compliance with the 1991 formal ceasefire between Frente Polisario and Morocco [ibid., p. 796]. Monitoring was carried out by the Mission's military observers through a combination of ground and air patrols and observation posts, and through inspections of larger-than-company-size military units of the Frente Polisario forces and the Royal Moroccan Army (RMA). The main focus was on military activities close to the "berm" cutting across Western Sahara, extending from the north-east corner down to the south-west, near the Mauritanian border.

Military agreement No.1, signed between MINURSO and separately with the parties [YUN 1998, p. 194], remained the basic legal instrument governing the ceasefire monitoring of the five parts into which, for operational purposes, the disputed Territory of Western Sahara was divided: one five-kilometre-wide buffer strip to the east and south of the berm; two restricted areas—one, 25 kilometres wide east of the berm and the other, 30 kilometres wide west of it; and two areas with limited restrictions that encompassed the remainder of the Territory. Bilateral military agreements Nos. 2 and 3 [YUN 1999, p. 180], committing both parties to cooperate with MINURSO in the exchange of mine-related information, marking of mined areas, and clearance and destruction of mines and unexploded ordnance, remained in force.

MINURSO maintained its headquarters in Laayoune, Western Sahara; a liaison office in Tindouf, Algeria, and nine military-observer team sites located across the Territory, four on the Moroccan-controlled side and five on the Frente Polisario side.

On the recommendation of the Secretary-General, the Council extended the mandate of MINURSO twice during the year, the first time until 31 October 2005 and the second until 30 April 2006.

Appointments. By an exchange of letters between the Secretary-General and the Security Council on 4 and 8 August [S/2005/511 & S/2005/512], Francesco Bastagli (Italy) was appointed Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Western Sahara and Head of MINURSO, with effect from 1 September.

By a further exchange of letters on 6 and 9 September [S/2005/570 & S/2005/571], Brigadier General Kurt Mosgaard (Denmark) was appointed Force Commander of MINURSO, from 12 September, to succeed Major General Gyorgy Szaraz (Hungary), who completed his tour of duty on 11 August.

Restructuring. During the year, MINURSO, in cooperation with the Department of Peacekeeping Operations, developed a new concept of operations that went into effect on 1 October, which fully integrated military and civilian activities so as to enhance the Mission's operational effectiveness. The military structure was reorganized by closing two sector headquarters and redeploying their military observers to the nine team sites, thus increasing MINURSO's patrol capabilities. The military headquarters was restructured to include a joint civilian-military mission analysis centre and a joint operations centre to enhance data collection and information management. Night observation patrols and temporary observation posts were to be introduced, for which night vision equipment would be provided.

A comprehensive review of the structure of the Mission's administrative and other civilian components was also completed. Its recommendations included a reduction by 57 posts (47 international and 10 local), to be offset by an increase of 18 posts (international) and the creation of 24 United Nations Volunteer posts. The recommendations were to be phased in and completed by mid-2006.

Financing

The General Assembly, at its resumed fifty-ninth session, considered the performance report on the MINURSO budget for 1 July 2003 to 30 June 2004 [A/59/619], showing a total expenditure of $38,850,800 for the period out of an apportionment of $41,529,500, resulting in an unencumbered balance of $2,678,700; the MINURSO budget for 1 July 2005 to 30 June 2006 [A/59/629] showing estimated requirements of $46,328,400; and the related report of ACABQ [A/59/736/Add.5].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 June [meeting 104], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/59/839], adopted resolution 59/308 without vote [agenda item 137].

In December [A/60/634], the Secretary-General submitted the performance report on the MINURSO budget for 1 July 2004 to 30 June 2005.

Peacemaking efforts

In response to Security Council resolution 1570(2004) [YUN 2004, p. 277], the Secretary-General submitted three interim reports during the year on the evolving situation concerning Western Sahara and the status of MINURSO as it related to the political and operational environment. The reports consistently noted that Western Sahara and Morocco remained deadlocked regarding the 2003 peace plan for self-determination for the people of Western Sahara [YUN 2003, p. 259]. They also underscored the continued support and cooperation provided by the AU to MINURSO throughout the reporting periods.

Report of Secretary-General (January). In his January report [S/2005/49], the Secretary-General stated that MINURSO continued its ground and air patrols to visit and inspect units larger than company size of RMA and Frente Polisario military forces, in accordance with military agreement No. 1 (see p. 364). Both forces continued to conduct routine maintenance and training activities. Frente Polisario remained insistent on limiting the Mission's ground and air patrolling of the Territory east of the berm, which it controlled. A smaller-than-company-size Frente Polisario unit was observed in the area known as Spanish fort within the restricted area east of the berm, as were activities to enhance RMA radar monitoring capability along the berm. Those actions were undertaken ostensibly to deter the movement of illegal migrants and smugglers. MINURSO drew the parties' attention to the prohibitions under the agreement of troop movements and tactical reinforcement of equipment within the restricted areas. The parties agreed in principle to inform MINURSO in detail of their proposed actions to address the problem of illegal migration and to cooperate with it to diminish any possible friction between them as a result of such actions.

Because of the significant increase in the smuggling of migrants through Western Sahara in the previous two years, the parties had requested the Mission to increase its patrolling of known smuggling routes. The International Organization for Migration (IOM) confirmed, on 3 November, the successful repatriation to Bangladesh and India of 23 migrants found near Mijek in 2004. Frente Polisario informed the Mission that of the 21 migrants found near Tifariti, it had released 20, who were Pakistanis, to the border with Mauritania; arrangements for the repatriation of the remaining migrant, a Bangladeshi, were under consideration.

A relief and recovery programme for Western Saharan refugees, budgeted at some $40 million for the two-year period from September 2004 to August 2006, continued to be carried out by the World Food Programme (WFP). WFP and the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) had been increasing their monitoring and logistical capacity in the Tindouf refugee camps, a programme to which the EU had contributed 5.5 million euros.

An evaluation of the pilot phase (March-August 2004) of the confidence-building programme, led by UNHCR with MINURSO support and aimed at facilitating person-to-person contacts between the refugees in the Tindouf camps and their relatives in the Territory, yielded positive results. The parties expressed support for continuing the exchange of family visits and telephone service under existing arrangements. Since its inception in March 2004, a total of 1,476 persons, 754 from the refugee camps and 722 from the Territory, had benefited from the programme.

The Secretary-General noted that the 1991 ceasefire continued to be respected by the parties and monitored by MINURSO to the extent of its ability. He remained concerned, however, that the prolonged political deadlock might lead to a deterioration of the situation in Western Sahara. In that regard, he would examine the parties' reiteration of their desire for increasing the Mission's strength and reinforcing its patrolling capacity.

Report of Secretary-General (April). According to the April report of the Secretary-General [S/2005/254], Morocco protested the occasional demonstrations in the buffer strip by Frente Polisario civilian supporters (mainly from outside the region) allegedly escorted by armed military personnel. For its part, Frente Polisario protested the alleged shooting of a civilian from across the berm and the mistreatment of clandestine migrants by Morocco. Investigation of the allegations by MINURSO were inconclusive. In March, MINURSO completed a database of the parties' compliance with the military agreements that facilitated the tracking and analysis of information obtained by military observers. In that regard, MINURSO confirmed that compliance with military agreement No. 1 had seriously deteriorated. RMA continued installing and upgrading its radar and surveillance capability in over 40 locations along the entire length of the berm, improving its defence infrastructure, including constructing a second strand of the berm, and conducting live-fire military exercises that occasionally extended to the restricted areas towards the north-east corner of the Territory. Frente Polisario continued deployment of a unit of armed personnel with anti-aircraft weapons in the Spanish fort, repeated incursions into the buffer strip by vehicles carrying armed military personnel, and restricting the Mission's freedom of movement. Both parties, instead of submitting prior notifications or requests for engaging in regulated or restricted actions, submitted their requests after the fact.

In addition to the continuing cooperation of the parties with MINURSO in marking and disposing of mines and unexploded ordnance, MINURSO was cooperating with the Geneva International Centre for Humanitarian Demining to develop an information management system for mine action and a comprehensive database to support a wider mine action campaign.

On 22 March, MINURSO transported the Bangladeshi found in the Tifariti area (above) to Mauritania, where he was transferred to IOM for repatriation; it visited an additional 46 migrants, reportedly from Bangladesh, also stranded in Tifariti since April. MINURSO's capacity to assist in the repatriation operation of illegal migrants was limited to lending logistical support on a humanitarian basis.

A joint WFP and UNHCR monitoring mission (5-12 March) to the Tindouf refugee camps was organized to look into the recurrent breakdown of food distribution mechanisms there. Together with MINURSO, the two agencies also facilitated a visit by donors (16-19 March).

In early January, following consultations with the Special Representative, UNHCR submitted a new action plan for implementing the 2005 phase of the confidence-building measures programme. UNHCR hosted a donors meeting (Geneva, 3 February), which by the reporting date had resulted in $1.8 million in contributions received and pledged. Frente Polisario and Algeria had approved the plan, while Morocco intended to consider it further.

The Secretary-General expressed concern at the scale of the violations of military agreement No. 1 and felt the need for the parties to reconfirm their commitment to the ceasefire and military agreements. He also registered his concern over the recently reported statement by the Frente Polisario leadership that a "return to arms" might be "closer than ever". In view of the gravity of some of the violations described, consideration could be given to strengthening MINURSO. He therefore recommended the extension of its mandate for a further six months, to 31 October 2005.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (April)

On 28 April [meeting 5170], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1598(2005). The draft [S/2005/275] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,
