Asia and the Pacific

The Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific (ESCAP) held its sixty-first session in Bangkok, Thailand, in two parts: the senior officials segment from 12 to 14 May and the ministerial segment from 16 to 18 May [E/2005/39]. The session's theme topic was "Implementing the Monterrey Consensus in the Asian and Pacific Region: Achieving Coherence and Consistency". The Commission discussed policy issues for the ESCAP region; key developments and activities at the regional level; least developed, landlocked and island developing countries; management issues; technical cooperation activities; reports of regional intergovernmental bodies; and the activities of the Advisory Committee of Permanent Representatives and Other Representatives Designated by Members of the Commission [E/ESCAP/1352 & Add.1].

The Ministerial Round Table on Financing for Development was divided into two sessions. The first session consisted of presentations on the theme topic (see above) and on development, investment requirements and resource mobilization issues of the region; the second session heard presentations on domestic resource mobilization: role of the private sector and on an Asian investment fund: what it will do and why needed. The Round Table had before it a note by the secretariat [E/ESCAP/1332] on implementing the Monterrey Consensus [YUN 2002, p. 953], adopted at the 2002 International Conference on Financing for Development [ibid.], in the Asian and Pacific region.

A meeting of the High-level Panel on Tsunami Recovery Development also took place (see p. 1107).

Economic trends

According to the summary of the Economic and Social Survey of Asia and the Pacific, 2006 [E/2006/18], the growth rate of the region's developing countries decelerated moderately in 2005. Those countries achieved a real GDP growth rate of 6.6 per cent compared to 7.4 per cent in 2004. The slowdown was primarily the result of high and volatile oil prices and a softening of global trade. More expensive oil also led to a very slight increase in inflation.

East and North-East Asia achieved an impressive average economic growth rate of 6.9 per cent in 2005, led by China, which achieved a rate of 9.6 per cent. The countries of North and Central Asia experienced the seventh successive year of growth in GDP, achieving 6.9 per cent for the year. Although high energy and commodity prices were driving such growth rates in the subregion, domestic demand also played an important role.

Not including Bangladesh, a least developed country (LDC), South and South-West Asia saw a rise in GDP of 7.0 per cent in 2005. South Asian countries maintained their growth momentum despite rising oil prices. Aided by normal monsoon rains, the reforms and structural changes initiated earlier had begun to pay off. The increasing integration of the subregion into the global economy, rising consumer spending and generally supportive policies were also helping the pace of growth. In South-West Asia, high energy prices continued to underpin the performance of Iran, but caused the economy to slow in Turkey.

Economic growth in the South-East Asian subregion, not including the LDCs, eased to 5.4 per cent in 2005 after an unusually good performance of 6.4 per cent in 2004, when strong global demand for manufactures, especially electronics and ICT products, had driven growth. Despite the doubling of oil prices between 2002 and 2004 and their continued rise in 2005, the region did not experience any marked increase in price pressures until the second quarter of 2005.

Lack of reliable data was a major constraint in reporting on the Pacific island countries, but there were indications that, despite continued political instability in the subregion, most of the economies expanded in 2005, due mainly to the growth of tourism, ongoing diversification in agriculture and the development of the aquaculture and fishing industries.

Among LDCs in the region, Bangladesh was experiencing steady growth. Inclement weather and internal conflict in Nepal led to slower growth in agriculture and in the broader economy. In Cambodia, the Lao People's Democratic Republic and Myanmar, the pace of GDP growth was broadly maintained, but price pressures increased. As a group, the LDCs in the region posted an economic growth rate of 5.2 per cent for the year.

The developed countries of the region saw an average growth of 2.5 per cent for 2005. Japan was witnessing a recovery in private consumption, which buttressed higher investment expenditures by corporations. In Australia and New Zealand, GDP growth eased in 2005 compared with 2004 but remained close to its long-term trend. Strong export growth was partly offset by weaker domestic demand.

Policy issues

The policy challenges facing Asia and the Pacific in 2005 included oil prices, which had doubled since the beginning of 2004 and tripled since 2002. As the region was highly dependent on oil, it remained vulnerable to any significant future increases. Both oil-importing and oil-exporting countries needed to develop a longer-term policy response to reduce oil dependency, improve energy efficiency and promote energy conservation.

Another policy issue was that of widening imbalances in the external accounts of the larger world economies, which posed a major economic risk for the ESCAP region. A precipitous spiralling of those imbalances could create large upheavals in the international financial markets and cause significant exchange rate instability involving not only the dollar but perhaps several currencies in the region as well. As there was only limited scope to address that problem at the national level, regional or international-level policy responses were required.

A further important issue was the potentially adverse impact on growth of a combination of tighter fiscal and monetary policies. The policy challenge was therefore to mix fiscal and monetary policies judiciously in order to ensure steady output growth over the following 12 to 18 months. Governments were advised to develop medium-term scenarios for GDP growth, inflation, budgetary and balance-of-payments outcomes through a process of consultation with all relevant stakeholders.

Avian influenza presented a potential threat to the region in both human and economic terms. There was an urgent need for collective preparedness involving stockpiling medical supplies and taking joint action on possible control measures, such as travel restrictions. It was also important from the standpoint of cost-effectiveness to concentrate resources and action on controlling the disease at the source before it developed into a more rapidly spreading contagion.

Although the Asian and Pacific region had been growing faster economically than most parts of the world for two decades or more, the eradication of poverty remained its most important challenge. While rapid economic growth remained the surest route for reducing both income and non-income poverty, in countries where poverty was widespread, jobs and income growth alone would not have a positive impact on non-income poverty. Governments needed to intervene to make the growth process more equitable by expanding the provision of and access to public goods, particularly for and by the poor. Inequitable growth was a major issue in many smaller economies, including LDCs and Pacific island States. Their national efforts could be severely undermined by the paucity of financial and non-financial resources and further eroded by physical remoteness, as in the case of the Pacific island States. Without regional and international aid and support, the prospects for sustained long-term growth and poverty reduction were very limited.

Remittances sent by migrant workers on contract abroad had helped greatly to raise the standard of living of some of the poorest sections of society in South and South-East Asia and the Pacific. Countries with high levels of underemployment and with limited opportunities for formal sector employment could follow the example set by the Philippines and systematically promote the temporary export of workers as part of a national development and poverty-reducing strategy.

With regard to the WTO programme, developing economies in the ESCAP region were likely to be challenged in the upcoming months to make concessions of a commercial value so that developed countries would remain committed to the Doha Development Agenda, adopted by WTO in 2001 [YUN 2001, p. 1432]. The trade-dependent economies of the region would therefore need to consider how they might harness the traditional reciprocity dynamics of WTO to move forward on their market access expectations.

At its 2005 session, ESCAP considered a report on the current economic situation in the region and related policy issues [E/ESCAP/1331] and the Economic and Social Survey of Asia and the Pacific, 2005 [ST/ESCAP/2349].

While noting the importance of economic growth for sustained poverty reduction, the Commission pointed out that it was also necessary to ensure that economic benefits reached society's vulnerable groups, including women, children, young people, older persons and persons with disabilities. In that regard, the State was responsible for providing public goods and social safety nets to protect the neediest, and for enacting policies to ensure adequate investment in health and education. Given that demographic changes in most countries could result in older people constituting an increasingly large proportion of the population, the Commission asked the secretariat to consider the role of traditional support systems and identify ways to strengthen and weave those systems into broader national programmes to support ageing populations and formulate strategies to finance social security schemes and pensions.

In view of the crucial role that human resources development played in tackling poverty, the Commission urged that special measures be promoted to enhance access to livelihoods and the skills development and education of women, particularly women heading households and those with disabilities. It also urged the full implementation of the commitments made in the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action [YUN 1995, p. 1170], adopted at the Fourth World Conference on Women [ibid., p. 1168], and the achievement of the MDG related to gender equality and the empowerment of women [YUN 2000, p. 51]. The Commission highlighted the need to increase women's political participation and economic opportunities and to eliminate violence against women and the trafficking of women and children. It asked the secretariat to examine the best practices of countries with effective programmes to combat human trafficking and issues related to international migration.

Drawing attention to the proclamation by the General Assembly, in resolution 53/197 [YUN 1998, p. 785], of 2005 as the International Year of Microcredit (see p. 928), the Commission emphasized the role of microfinance and microcredit in poverty reduction. It asked the secretariat to play a leading role in promoting microfinancing initiatives in the region, including by facilitating studies of best practices in member countries and sharing information on microcredit strategies.

Poverty reduction

The Commission had before it a note by the secretariat on key issues relating to poverty reduction [E/ESCAP/1334], which analysed the poverty situation in the region and discussed briefly the impact of the 2004 tsunami [YUN 2004, p. 000] on poverty in the affected countries. It also considered the reports of the first sessions of the Subcommittee on Poverty Reduction Practices [E/ESCAP/CPR(2)/4] and the Subcommittee on Statistics [E/ESCAP/CPR(2)/6], held in 2004 [YUN 2004, p. 1005]. The Commission endorsed the recommendations made at the 2004 sessions of the two subcommittees but observed that some prioritization was needed in terms of the areas on which the secretariat should focus. It noted that while significant progress had been made in reducing poverty, it still remained a major challenge. The 2004 tsunami and other natural disasters had had a negative impact on the poverty reduction process.

The Commission called for coherent policies and strategies, along with broad consensus, political will and a sense of purpose about the range of actions needed to reduce poverty. It called for greater collaboration between government, the private sector, civil society and the international community, so that stakeholders could play their vital roles in advocacy, planning and implementation of poverty reduction programmes. It urged that concrete steps be taken to support women's economic activities and called for comprehensive strategies and policies aimed at employment creation, community empowerment, capacity-building and social protection.

The secretariat was asked to place more emphasis on the development of the agricultural and rural sectors, as the prevalence of poverty and the so-called "hard-core poor" tended to be highest in them. As agricultural productivity had not increased, rural industrialization could be considered an alternative approach to poverty reduction in rural areas.

The Commission underscored the secretariat's role in promoting regional cooperation, exchange of information and experience and capacity-building to assist members in reducing poverty and promoting good governance. It invited the secretariat to continue its efforts to build the capacity of governments at the national, subnational and local levels. As data collection and analysis and utilization of geographical information systems and other technologies were deemed important for sound policy formulation and programme planning, the secretariat and agencies of the UN system were called on to continue to provide technical and financial support to developing countries.

Given the fact that equitable trade, official development assistance (ODA) and debt relief were important in meeting the goals of poverty reduction and development, the Commission requested the secretariat to continue to follow, analyse and report on the issue of developed country subsidies and protection of agriculture and to examine innovative ways to address the chronic debt problem in the developing countries of the region. Some members of the Commission also urged developed countries to allocate 0.7 per cent of their GNP for ODA.

At its second session (Bangkok, 23-25 November), the Committee on Poverty Reduction [E/ESCAP/1364] discussed the process of decentralization and its implications for poverty reduction. It also addressed a number of issues related to the poverty reduction activities of ESCAP. It endorsed the reports of the Subcommittees on Poverty Reduction Practices and on Statistics on their 2004 sessions [YUN 2004, p. 1005]. The Committee further discussed the follow-up to the High-level Plenary Meeting of the sixtieth session of the General Assembly (see p. 47), issues related to the vital role of population and housing censuses in policy- and decision-making at local levels, and a revision of the international recommendations for statistics on economic activities. It also considered programme planning and the evaluation of a selected flagship project in the area of poverty reduction.

Statistics

Having considered the 2004 report of the Subcommittee on Statistics [E/ESCAP/CPR(2)/6], the Commission noted that the revision of the international standards on consumer price indices and household income and expenditure surveys would improve the accuracy of poverty measurement in the region. As household income and expenditure surveys were the most important instruments for collecting poverty data, the Commission recognized the need for them to be well designed and conducted in a manner that would permit poverty to be better understood. It commended efforts by the secretariat to develop its revised plan of action for poverty statistics and to strengthen the statistical capacity of the national and sectoral agencies of ESCAP members, especially the capacity necessary to measure achievements towards the MDGs.

The Commission also had before it the report of the Statistical Institute for Asia and the Pacific (SIAP) [E/ESCAP/1348], which reviewed SIAP's administrative and financial status, the implementation of the 2004 work programme and action taken by the SIAP Governing Board at its tenth (2004) session. On 18 May [E/2005/39 (res. 61/2)], the Commission adopted a revised statute of SIAP, which it recommended to the Economic and Social Council for adoption (see below).

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

Managing globalization

The Commission had before it four reports by the secretariat on key developments and activities at the regional level with regard to managing globalization [E/ESCAP/1335-1338]. Noting that many countries had not been able to benefit fully from the growth opportunities (increased trade flows, investment and information) that had opened up due to globalization, the Commission called on the secretariat to continue assisting members and associate members in enhancing and strengthening regional development cooperation and managing globalization more effectively. It recognized the importance of intersectoral projects in helping countries enhance capacity-building for the facilitation of trade and transport, formulating coherent trade and environment policies, promoting trade more effectively through knowledge management, and integrating ICT into the development process.

The Commission noted the adoption of the New Asian-African Strategic Partnership at the Asia-Africa Summit (Jakarta, Indonesia, 22-23 April) and requested the secretariat to support that partnership process. It expressed appreciation for the initiative taken by the secretariat in organizing the International Conference on Strengthening Regional Cooperation for Managing Globalization (Moscow, 28-30 September).

The second session of the Committee on Managing Globalization (Bangkok, 12-14 October) [E/ESCAP/1366] urged the secretariat to enhance its technical assistance activities in such areas as entrepreneurship promotion, FDI promotion and facilitation, brand name development and diversification, training in trade facilitation measures, particularly for LDCs and landlocked and transit developing countries, and other aspects of supply-side capacity-building. The secretariat was asked to continue its efforts to coordinate the regional preparations for the second phase of the World Summit on the Information Society (see p. 933) and to implement its outcome, and to consider undertaking a study to identify primary sources of air pollution in mega-cities to enable the formulation of effective abatement strategies. The Committee called on the secretariat to expand its capacity-building activities regarding the accession of ESCAP members to WTO and commended the secretariat for having organized, with the International Trade Centre, the meeting "Delivering on the WTO Round: High-level Government-Business Dialogue for Development (Macao, China, 4-6 October) in preparation for the Sixth WTO Ministerial Conference, to be held in December (see p. 1041). The Committee also asked the secretariat to continue to develop, promote and replicate the approach of public-private partnership initiatives, such as micro-hydropower electricity generation, and to facilitate the microfinancing of similar initiatives for the benefit of poor rural communities in the region. In view of rising oil prices, it further asked the Secretariat to initiate analytical work to develop policy options for energy security in order to improve eco-efficiency and promote commercial alternative energy options.

Least developed, landlocked and island developing countries

Special Body on Least Developed and Landlocked Developing Countries

The Commission had before it the report of the Special Body on Least Developed and Landlocked Developing Countries on its seventh session (Bangkok, 10-11 May) [E/ESCAP/1342], which considered: achieving the MDGs in the LDCs and landlocked developing countries through trade, debt relief and aid, in preparation for the Millennium +5 Summit (see p. 47); and information, communication and space technology (ICST) for meeting development challenges, in preparation for the second phase of the World Summit on the Information Society (see p. 933). It also reviewed the programme of work for the 2004-2005 biennium and requested the secretariat to conduct a mid-term review of the implementation of the Programme of Action for the LDCs for the Decade 2001-2010 [YUN 2001, p. 770].

The Commission stressed the importance of ICST policies and programmes for the development of education, health, business, commerce and disaster prevention and requested the secretariat to continue to assist members in the use of ICST. To ensure expansion of the economies in the region and secure their integration into the global economy, the Commission urged landlocked developing countries, transit developing countries and donor countries to deepen their cooperation in economic infrastructure development, trade facilitation and regional cooperation. In that regard, the 2003 Almaty Programme of Action [YUN 2003, p. 875] provided the framework for partnership for the development of transit transport.

In an 18 May resolution [E/2005/39 (res. 61/11)], the Commission requested the Executive Secretary to integrate the implementation of the Almaty Programme of Action into the relevant work programmes of the secretariat. He was also asked to further expand the secretariat's programme to support the landlocked and transit developing countries in improving their transit transport systems and to report to the Commission in 2007 on progress in that regard.

By resolution 60/208, the General Assembly called for specific actions related to the particular needs of landlocked developing countries (see p. 951).

Economic and technical cooperation

In 2005, ESCAP received $25.4 million for technical cooperation activities [E/ESCAP/1383], representing an increase of almost 300 per cent over 2004. Of that amount, some $4 million was received from the UN system. Of the $20.1 million contributed by individual countries, $14 million came from three developing member countries: China, the Republic of Korea and Thailand. Other major donors were Japan and Sweden, which gave a total of $4.9 million. In addition to cash contributions, countries provided, on a non-reimbursable basis, a total of 137 work-months of the services of experts in various disciplines.

Transport, communications, tourism and infrastructure development

The Commission noted that the 2003 Intergovernmental Agreement on the Asian Highway Network [YUN 2003, p. 1010] would enter into force on 4 July 2005, thereby contributing to the improvement of transport infrastructure in participating countries. It requested the secretariat to continue to promote the development of the network and mobilize financial and technical assistance and urged it to continue to work towards the development of an integrated, international intermodal transport network in the region. The secretariat was requested to undertake capacity-building activities with regard to intermodal transport development and planning.

The Working Group on the Asian Highway, at its first meeting (Bangkok, 14-15 December) [TTD/WGAH/Rep.], requested member States to designate focal points responsible for matters related to the implementation of the Intergovernmental Agreement on the Asian Highway Network.

The third Expert Group Meeting on Developing Euro-Asian Transport Linkages (Istanbul, Turkey, 27-29 June), organized by ESCAP and ECE, considered progress already made with regard to identifying selected Euro-Asia routes for priority development, and discussed the main areas of focus for its next phase and the modalities to follow up on the project after its completion.

The Commission recognized the progress achieved at the November 2004 Regional Meeting to Draft an Intergovernmental Agreement on the Trans-Asian Railway Network [YUN 2004, p. 1008], and expressed support for the agreement. The Intergovernmental Meeting to Develop the Intergovernmental Agreement on the Trans-Asia Railway Network (Bangkok, 28-30 November) [E/ESCAP/TARN/Rep.] finalized the text of the Agreement.

With regard to the tourism industry in Asia and the Pacific, the Commission recognized the importance of its role in socio-economic development and poverty alleviation and eradication. It recommended that capacity-building for sustainable development in tourism be accorded high priority. Noting that the December 2004 tsunami [YUN 2004, p. 952] had severely affected tourism in several countries in the region, the Commission asked the secretariat to assist those countries in addressing the impact of the crises. The Commission endorsed the 2004 proposal of the Subcommittee on Transport Infrastructure and Facilitation and Tourism [YUN 2004, p. 1008] for a second phase (2006-2012) of the Plan of Action for Sustainable Tourism Development in the Asian and Pacific Region (1999-2005) [YUN 1999, p. 929].

The High-level Intergovernmental Meeting on Sustainable Tourism Development (Bali, Indonesia, 7-9 December) [E/ESCAP/1369] reviewed achievements resulting from the implementation of the Plan of Action for Sustainable Tourism Development in the Asian and Pacific Region (1999-2005). It also identified the challenges that lay ahead and addressed the strategies and approaches required to achieve sustainable tourism development. The Meeting proposed that a regional study on the role of tourism in socio-economic development be undertaken by the secretariat and include proposals for a common approach to monitoring the Plan of Action and measuring its benefits. It adopted the Bali Declaration on Sustainable Tourism Development, including phase II (2006-2012) of the Plan of Action and its Regional Action Programme for Sustainable Tourism Development. The Meeting was preceded by the Inter-agency/Expert Group Meeting on Tourism and Poverty Reduction (6 December).

Science and technology

Having considered the report of the Asian and Pacific Centre for Transfer of Technology (APCTT) on its 2004 activities and on the nineteenth session of its Governing Board (November 2004) [E/ESCAP/1345], the Commission recommended that the technical assistance activities of APCTT include the areas of ICT, biotechnology and nanotechnology, and that APCTT promote information exchange and collaboration among researchers in member countries.

The Commission adopted a resolution [E/2005/39 (res. 61/4)] on the Statute of the Asian and Pacific Centre for Transfer of Technology, which it recommended to the Economic and Social Council for adoption (see below).

The Commission also had before it the report of the Coordinating Committee for Geoscience Programmes in East and Southeast Asia (CCOP) [E/ESCAP/1353]. It took note of the high level of activities conducted by CCOP, including initiatives in response to the December 2004 tsunami. The forty-second session of CCOP (Beijing, 13-18 September) was followed by the forty-sixth meeting of the CCOP Steering Committee (19-20 September).

The Commission recognized the increasing role of the private sector in providing services based on space technology. It requested the secretariat to conduct studies of success stories with a view to advocating public-private partnerships that would help member countries to benefit from such services.

Information and communication technologies

The Commission expressed appreciation for the secretariat's role in leading and coordinating the regional preparations for the first [YUN 2003, p. 857] and second (see p. 933) phases of the World Summit on the Information Society. In particular, it supported the outcomes of the subregional conferences (Fiji, Indonesia, Kyrgyzstan, Nepal) organized by the secretariat, in collaboration with the host Governments, the International Telecommunication Union and the Asia-Pacific Development Information Programme. It also expressed support for the formulation of a draft regional action plan towards the information society, and called for the early implementation of the Geneva Plan of Action and Declaration of Principles [ibid.]. The Commission called on all countries to participate actively in the High-level Asia-Pacific Conference for the World Summit on the Information Society (Tehran, Iran, 31 May–2 June). It took the view that the regional action plan to be finalized at the conference should take into account the need to bridge the digital divide by providing rural areas with Internet access and empowering socially disadvantaged groups. The Commission expressed the hope that the High-level Conference would result in the development of regional common principles to help define the meaning and scope of Internet governance; in that regard, the secretariat was asked to conduct a study of the principles common to Internet governance at both the international and domestic levels.

The High-level Asia-Pacific Conference for the World Summit on the Information Society adopted the Tehran Declaration and the Regional Action Plan towards the Information Society for Asia and the Pacific. The Regional Action Plan addressed key issues relating to the application of ICT and, among other things, outlined a plan for ICT projects and programmes at the regional level that would help to realize the vision of an inclusive and sustainable information society.

The Commission adopted an 18 May resolution [E/2005/39 (res. 61/6)] on the establishment of the Asian and Pacific Training Centre for Information and Communication Technology for Development, which it recommended to the Economic and Social Council for adoption (see below).

Environment and sustainable development

The fifth Ministerial Conference on Environment and Development in Asia and the Pacific (Seoul, Republic of Korea, 24-29 March) [E/ESCAP/1337] resulted in three main outcomes: the Ministerial Declaration on Environment and Development in Asia and the Pacific, 2005; the Regional Implementation Plan for Sustainable Development in Asia and the Pacific, 2006-2010; and the Seoul Initiative on Environmentally Sustainable Economic Growth (Green Growth).

In an 18 May resolution [E/2005/39 (res. 61/9)], the Commission requested all members and associate members to participate actively in the implementation of the recommendations of the Ministerial Conference in order to ensure the formulation of programmes and strategies to implement the Regional Implementation Plan at the national, regional and subregional levels; encourage Governments, the private sector and civil society to participate in activities forming part of the Seoul Initiative, including the establishment of the Seoul Initiative Network on Green Growth; and provide information on such programmes and activities to assist the ESCAP secretariat to review and assess the progress made in implementing the recommendations of the Ministerial Conference. All relevant UN bodies and specialized agencies, multilateral financial institutions, donor countries, agencies and NGOs were invited to contribute technical and financial resources to implement the Conference's recommendations. The Commission called on the members of the Thematic Working Group on Environment and Development under the Regional Coordination Mechanism to play an effective role in the implementation of the Regional Implementation Plan and its regional initiatives, including the Seoul Initiative. The Executive Secretary was asked to mobilize human and financial resources to the greatest extent possible for the implementation of the Conference's recommendations; assist countries in the region by providing technical assistance in the realization of the Regional Implementation Plan and relevant national strategies and action; ensure effective coordination and joint pursuit of the activities of concerned UN bodies and specialized agencies in facilitating the implementation of the recommendations; encourage the active participation of all stakeholders in the implementation of the recommendations; and undertake a periodic review of progress made in implementing the Regional Implementation Plan and include an assessment of the results in the agenda of the sixth Ministerial Conference on Environment and Development, to be held by the year 2010.

In other action on environment and sustainable development, the Commission, in the light of rising oil prices, emphasized the need for joint efforts to reduce the use of fossil fuels and promote the use of alternative energy sources, including renewable energy. It requested the secretariat to strengthen its efforts to build national capacity and awareness among members and associate members in the areas of energy efficiency and renewable energy.

The Commission expressed support for the International Decade for Action, "Water for Life", 2005-2015 (see p. 1130), and requested the secretariat to strengthen cooperation in managing water resources in an integrated manner, particularly in order to reduce the effects of water shortages and drought. It encouraged the secretariat to take an active part in the preparations for the Fourth (2006) World Water Forum, which could be linked to regional efforts in connection with the Johannesburg Plan of Implementation [YUN 2002, p. 822] of the 2002 World Summit on Sustainable Development [YUN 2002, p. 821] with regard to water resources management. It also expressed support for an active role by the secretariat in providing a forum for and facilitating discussions at the regional level on a thematic cluster of issues, encompassing energy for sustainable development, industrial development, air pollution and climate change, as a modality for the regional preparations for the fourteenth (2006) and fifteenth (2007) sessions of the Commission on Sustainable Development.

Agriculture and development

The annual report of the Asian and Pacific Centre for Agricultural Engineering and Machinery (APCAEM) [E/ESCAP/1346] reviewed the major activities and implementation of the work programme of APCAEM in 2004, aimed at developing a research and analysis programme on agricultural engineering and machinery for increased food security and poverty reduction in the region. It contained the recommendations of the third session of the APCAEM Governing Board (December 2004) relating to the APCAEM plan of activities for 2005 and the programme of work for the 2006-2007 biennium.

By an 18 May resolution [E/2005/39 (res. 61/3)], the Commission adopted the revised Statute of the United Nations Asian and Pacific Centre for Agricultural Engineering and Machinery, which it recommended to the Economic and Social Council for adoption (see below).

The first session of the Governing Council of the Centre for Alleviation of Poverty through Secondary Crops Development in Asia and the Pacific (Bogor, Indonesia, 5-6 April) [E/ESCAP/1347] discussed the Centre's activities during the 2004-2005 biennium, plans for resource mobilization and the realigned programme of work for 2006-2007. It noted Indonesia's request that the Centre assist in tsunami reconstruction and rehabilitation in rural areas and recommended that resources be sought to follow up on that request.

On 18 May [res. 61/5], the Commission adopted a resolution on the Centre, which it recommended to the Council for action (see below). The Council also approved the revised Statute of the Centre (resolution 2005/39), which had been adopted by the Commission in 2004 [YUN 2004, p. 1009].

Members and associate members elected to the Governing Board of the former CGPRT Centre at the fifty-ninth session of the Commission will serve as members of the Governing Council of CAPSA until the sixty-second session of the Commission, in 2006.

Social development

The Commission had before it reports on: key issues relating to emerging social issues [E/ESCAP/1339], which highlighted the outcomes of the first session of the Subcommittee on Socially Vulnerable Groups (Bangkok, 13-15 September 2004); the implementation of the 2001 Declaration of Commitment on HIV/AIDS, contained in General Assembly resolution S-26/2 [YUN 2001, p. 1126], and the Asia-Pacific Leadership Forum on HIV/AIDS and Development on its activities in 2003 and 2004 [E/ESCAP/1340]; the High-level Intergovernmental Meeting to Review Regional Implementation of the Beijing Platform for Action and Its Regional and Global Outcomes (Bangkok, 7-10 September 2004) [E/ESCAP/1341], which adopted the Bangkok Communiqué as the regional contribution to the review and appraisal of the implementation of the 1995 Beijing Declaration and Platform of Action, adopted at the Fourth World Conference on Women [YUN 1995, p. 1169]; and the Regional Framework for Strategic Action: Promoting Health and Sustainable Development [E/ESCAP/1358], which represented the key outcome of the first session of the Subcommittee on Health and Development (Bangkok, 1-3 December 2004).

The Commission called for continuous efforts to meet the goals and commitments made at the 1995 World Summit for Social Development [YUN 1995, p. 1113], and the twenty-fourth (2000) special session of the General Assembly [YUN 2000, p. 1012] that reviewed the implementation of the Copenhagen Declaration and the Programme of Action adopted at the Summit, especially in the three major areas of poverty reduction, employment expansion and social integration. It urged that the social impact of globalization and the interlinkages between economic and social policies be examined and asked the secretariat to assist members and associate members in achieving the internationally agreed development goals and commitments, particularly with regard to the social integration of disadvantaged groups, the strengthening of cross-generational linkages and social protection and security. The Commission emphasized the need to mainstream issues relating to youth, the family, ageing and disability into national development, particularly national poverty reduction strategies, and encouraged the adoption of socially oriented economic policies that reflected interlinkages among poverty reduction, social security, migration and the empowerment of women, youth and persons with disabilities.

The Commission called for assistance and protection to be extended to the family in recognition of its role as a fundamental unit of society, an untapped resource for economic and social development and a source of support for older persons. It emphasized the importance of the renewed commitment to combating the commercial sexual exploitation of children expressed at the Post-Yokohama Mid-term Review of the East Asia and Pacific Regional Commitment and Action Plan against the Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children (Bangkok, November 2004) and requested the secretariat to promote and coordinate regional initiatives on combating trafficking and the commercial sexual exploitation of women and girls. Noting that international migration was a consequence of globalization and had an impact on the development process of both sending and receiving countries, the Commission urged the adoption of policies and strategies to facilitate its management. It noted with concern the plight of migrant workers, the majority of whom, in some countries, were women. The Commission asked the secretariat to continue to provide assistance in addressing the issue of population ageing through technical assistance, advisory services and policy-oriented research and analysis, including an assessment of the future impact of population ageing on social services expenditure, pensions and long-term health-care and investment trends, and to develop regional projects on fostering supportive and enabling environments, in order to promote intergenerational support and reciprocity between older persons and their families.

In an 18 May resolution [E/2005/39 (res. 61/7)] on regional cooperation for the protection of vulnerable people through the promotion of economic and social aspects of human security as a follow-up to the Shanghai Declaration on cooperation in the Asia and Pacific region, which was endorsed by the Economic and Social Council in resolution 2004/6 [YUN 2004, p. 1001], the Commission requested the Executive Secretary to continue seeking means to support the secretariat's technical cooperation work in the area of community-building and human development in order to protect and enhance the capabilities of vulnerable people. He was also asked to report in 2006 on measures to support regional cooperation for the protection of vulnerable people through promoting economic and social aspects of human security as a follow-up to the Shanghai Declaration.

With regard to gender concerns, the Commission stressed the strategic role and responsibilities of national mechanisms for promoting gender equality and women's empowerment and asked the secretariat to provide technical assistance in strengthening the capacity of those mechanisms. It reaffirmed the urgent need to combat the spread of violence against women, including human trafficking, which was transnational in nature and required international cooperation by all stakeholders.

In an 18 May resolution [res. 61/10], the Commission reaffirmed its important role in implementing the 1995 Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action [YUN 2000, p. 1082], adopted at the Fourth World Conference on Women, and the outcome of the twenty-third (2000) special session of the General Assembly (Beijing +5), adopted by resolution S/23-2 [YUN 2000, p. 1084]. ESCAP members and associate members were called on to: strengthen efforts to promote an active and visible policy to mainstream a gender perspective into the design, implementation and evaluation of programmes, especially in poverty reduction; continue to implement economic policies that were designed and monitored with the full and equal participation of women and enhance women's entrepreneurial potential by providing them with access to and control over resources; promote the protection of women in disaster areas and enhance the active role of women in disaster management; contribute to collaborative approaches and strategies aimed at protecting and promoting the rights and welfare of women migrant workers and forge international understanding and cooperation to combat trafficking in women; strengthen and improve the collection, processing and analysis of sex-disaggregated data and gender statistics at the local, national, regional and international levels for the effective monitoring and assessment of gains and gaps; and forge partnerships in further studying the positive and negative impacts of globalization on women and formulate a comprehensive and integrative strategy to address its effects on women. Members, associate members, agencies, regional and international financial institutions and the private sector were encouraged to provide countries in the region, particularly LDCs, with financial and technical support in implementing the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action and the outcome of Beijing +5. The Commission requested the Executive Secretary to: continue promoting the implementation of the outcome of Beijing +5, specifically by intensifying efforts to build a database listing by region all programmes and projects by UN system organizations, and facilitate the dissemination of that information and evaluate their impact on women's empowerment; and mainstream gender assessments into all programmes to enable member countries to involve women in economic, social and political decision-making.

The Commission noted progress made in implementing the Biwako Millennium Framework for Action towards an Inclusive, Barrier-free and Rights-based Society for Persons with Disabilities in Asia and the Pacific during the Decade of Disabled Persons, 2003-2012 [YUN 2003, p. 1014]. It commended the secretariat on its efforts to promote a shift from a charity-based approach to a rights-based approach, which had a positive influence on disability policies and programmes at the local and national levels. It emphasized the importance of introducing disability-sensitive, propoor development strategies. Noting discrepancies in the reporting of disability prevalence, the Commission urged the secretariat to continue its efforts to develop a common and standardized system for defining and classifying disability. It recommended that the secretariat assist in following up on the proposal to establish an Association of Southeast Asian Nations (ASEAN) disability commission.

In an 18 May resolution [res. 61/8], the Commission, noting that a mid-point review of the Biwako Millennium Framework should be conducted in 2007, called on members and associate members to renew their commitment to the implementation of the Framework and support and contribute to the ongoing work of the Ad Hoc Committee on a Comprehensive and Integral International Convention on the Protection and Promotion of the Rights and Dignity of Persons with Disabilities. They were encouraged to further strengthen their efforts to achieve the Framework's priorities, targets and strategies, with particular emphasis on: holistic and comprehensive approaches to disability-inclusive and responsive policies and programmes; support for capacity-building for persons with disabilities and their organizations; promotion of community approaches for empowerment and poverty alleviation; the mainstreaming of disability into overall national development plans, programmes and projects for poverty alleviation; and promotion of disability-inclusive international and regional cooperation. Governments and other stakeholders were invited to continue contributing to the ESCAP technical assistance trust fund for the Asian and Pacific Decade of Disabled Persons, 2003-2012 [YUN 2002, p. 991], and those that had not yet done so were asked to consider signing the Proclamation on the Full Participation and Equality of People with Disabilities in the Asian and Pacific Region [YUN 1992, p. 490]. The Commission requested the Executive Secretary to: provide Governments with technical support for the continued monitoring of the implementation of the Biwako Millennium Framework; hold in 2007 a high-level intergovernmental meeting on the mid-point review of the Decade; support the inclusion of disability in the regional preparations for the first five-year review of the UN Millennium Declaration and related outcomes of major UN conferences and summits; and further strengthen the partnership between ESCAP and the Asia-Pacific Development Centre on Disability.

The Commission broadly endorsed the recommendations contained in the Regional Framework for Strategic Action: Promoting Health and Sustainable Development [E/ESCAP/1358], which had been adopted by the Subcommittee on Health and Development at its first session [YUN 2004, p. 1010]. In the context of the tsunami disaster, concern was expressed over the emergence of non-communicable diseases and injuries as a leading cause of death, which were rapidly overtaking communicable diseases in the Asian and Pacific region, despite the recent outbreaks of SARS and avian influenza. The Commission requested enhanced secretariat action on the promotion in the region of financing of health for development. The continuous spread of HIV/AIDS and its linkages with poverty constituted a challenge to the region's socio-economic development. The Commission noted the need for increased technical and financial assistance in enhancing preventive efforts targeted at vulnerable populations, including youth, women, drug users, migrants and those working in the entertainment industry, and urged that regional collaboration in addressing HIV/AIDS be increased.

At the High-level Forum on Health Millennium Development Goals in Asia and the Pacific (Tokyo, 21-22 June) [A/60/337], health, development and finance ministers from the region and representatives from donor countries, international and regional organizations and relevant foundations and partnerships discussed progress made in achieving the health-related MDGs and identified remaining challenges.

In an 18 May resolution on a regional call for action to enhance capacity-building in public health [res. 61/12], the Commission urged members and associate members to: scale up their investments in the health sector through resource mobilization strategies; further integrate public health into their economic and social development strategies; raise professional and public awareness of the importance of public health and mobilize the participation of educational institutions, civil society and the mass media in promoting good public health practices; unite in securing a regional commitment to strengthening cooperation on capacity-building in public health; and improve regional public health preparedness and response systems to better cope with major diseases, such as in cases of global or regional outbreaks. Donors, including Governments, the private sector, UN bodies and specialized agencies, and regional and international financial institutions were encouraged to continue to support countries in the region by: providing funding and technical support to countries in their efforts to combat infectious diseases and epidemics; facilitating South-South and North-South cooperation in order to build effective public health institutions and practices; integrating health dimensions into their strategies, work programmes, budget plans, projects and activities to strengthen regional public health capacity-building; and considering participation in the Global Fund to Fight AIDS, Tuberculosis and Malaria and encouraging the private sector to contribute to the Fund. The Commission requested the Executive Secretary to coordinate closely with the World Health Organization and other relevant organizations to: assist members and associate members in their capacity-building by mainstreaming health concerns into diverse development sectors in support of the fulfilment of the internationally agreed development goals; promote coordinated regional action in strengthening public health capacity-building through the Subcommittee on Health and Development and other ESCAP health-related institutions; and undertake advocacy for a public policy to create enabling environments for health promotion that strengthened physical, mental and spiritual health resilience and well-being, with an emphasis on community, school and workplace participation, towards a "healthy Asia-Pacific". The Executive Secretary was asked to report in 2006 on the implementation of the resolution.

The Committee on Emerging Social Issues, at its second session (Bangkok, 1-3 November) [E/ESCAP/CESI(2)/Rep.], requested the secretariat to, among other things: draw on good national experiences in implementing the MDGs related to social development to help developing members and associate members to map out strategies and build capacity to achieve their commitments; promote regional dialogue and cooperation through the exchange of information and best practices regarding the management of international migration; conduct a systematic regional study on international migration in order to identify knowledge gaps, determine its developmental impacts and ensure that migration policies were consistent with broad development goals; and provide technical support to member countries in strengthening publicly financed health schemes to achieve universal coverage, including social health insurance. The secretariat was further urged to: provide more opportunities for members and associate members to share national experiences on social protection and youth employment; assist members and associate members in implementing the Regional Framework for Strategic Action: Promoting Health and Sustainable Development; and work with UN agencies and international organizations to assist countries in strengthening their national capacity to develop effective responses to avian influenza and prevent the disease from becoming a pandemic.

Natural disasters

The Commission had before it a note by the secretariat [E/ESCAP/1333] that discussed emerging issues in response to tsunamis and other natural disasters. The report reviewed the economic and social losses incurred as a result of the 2004 tsunami [YUN 2004, p. 952], which killed around 300,000 people and affected several million. It examined national and regional experiences in disaster management and preparedness and made recommendations on formulating and adopting a regional strategy on disaster risk management and building community resilience in response to tsunamis and natural disasters in Asia and the Pacific.

The Commission also had before it the reports of the Mekong River Commission [E/ESCAP/1354], the Typhoon Committee [E/ESCAP/1355] and the Panel on Tropical Cyclones [E/ESCAP/1356] on their 2004 activities. It recommended that the secretariat organize workshops to facilitate the sharing of information, experience and lessons learned with regard to risk assessment, detection, warning and contingency planning. The secretariat was asked to conduct studies on the feasibility of enhancing detection and warning systems.

The Commission noted that the Panel on Tropical Cyclones, at its thirty-second session (New Delhi, India, February), had organized a technical conference on water-related disasters with special reference to storm surges and tsunamis and related early warning systems, as part of an effort to integrate possible regional activities related to tsunamis into the existing framework of cyclone-related disaster preparedness.

The High-level Panel on Tsunami Recovery Development met at the outset of the ministerial segment of the Commission's sixty-first session. The Commission was informed of the progress made by six tsunami-affected countries—India, Indonesia, Malaysia, Maldives, Sri Lanka and Thailand. It underlined the need to establish an effective regional tsunami early warning system and noted that several international initiatives had already been launched, many of them under the auspices of UN bodies. At the national level, good progress had been made on early warning systems in several countries, and some countries had expressed readiness to establish a regional, multi-hazard and multi-nodal early warning system, to be linked to their national systems as appropriate. The Commission noted with concern the limited capacity of small and less developed countries to effectively meet disaster preparedness needs and agreed that more urgent efforts should be made to enhance disaster preparedness in the region. In that regard, it noted with appreciation Thailand's proposal to establish the Voluntary Trust Fund on Tsunami Early Warning Arrangements in the Indian Ocean and Southeast Asia, to be administered by the secretariat.

The Commission called on the United Nations to support all national efforts to create regional and multi-nodal systems whereby the rapid response capacities of States could be strengthened to save lives and reduce economic loss. In particular, the Commission endorsed the following recommended areas for priority activities to be undertaken by the secretariat: conducting regional assessments of socio-economic impacts by sector; organizing technical cooperation activities in natural disaster preparedness and management; assisting the Typhoon Committee in identifying ways to enhance its work on disaster preparedness; supporting national and regional efforts to link recovery to risk management for sustainable development and community resilience; promoting the application of space technology to disaster management; and promoting a regional standby arrangement for disaster relief.

Programme and organizational questions

The Commission endorsed ESCAP's draft work programme for 2006-2007 [E/ESCAP/1344], which included a new subprogramme on Pacific island developing countries and territories and fully incorporated the planned activities of the regional institutions into the relevant subprogrammes. It urged all development partners to support the implementation of the work programme and, to avoid duplication and achieve cost-effectiveness, encouraged the secretariat to coordinate its work with other UN agencies. It also encouraged further enhancement of the evaluation component. The Executive Secretary informed the Commission that the statutes of all the regional institutions (APCTT, APCAEM, CAPSA, SIAP) had been harmonized so that their workplans were subject to the established intergovernmental review and approval process.

Monitoring and evaluation

On 23 December, the General Assembly, in resolution 60/248, section IX (see p. 1495), welcomed ESCAP's efforts in rationalization of monitoring and evaluation in accordance with Assembly resolution 58/269 [YUN 2003, p. 1395], especially in carrying out self-evaluation activities in a systematic and comprehensive manner. It requested ESCAP to report on its activities in that area in the proposed programme budget for the 2008-2009 biennium.

OIOS report. The Commission had before it a 2004 OIOS report on its audit of the regional commissions [E/ESCAP/1349] and a summary of the key recommendations as they related to ESCAP and the actions taken to respond to them [E/ESCAP/1350]. The Commission urged the secretariat to further enhance its collaboration with other UN organizations and requested it to provide further information on the results of actions related to the OIOS audit.

Midterm review of ESCAP conference structure

On 18 May, the Commission, having considered a secretariat note on the midterm review concerning the functioning of its conference structure [E/ESCAP/1343], adopted a resolution [E/2005/39 (res. 61/1)] on the subject, which it recommended to the Economic and Social Council for adoption (see below).

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 July [meeting 39], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of ESCAP [E/2005/15/Add.1], adopted resolution 2005/35 without vote [agenda item 10].

Midterm review concerning the functioning of the conference structure of the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific resolutions 143(XXX) of 5 April 1974, 210(XXXVI) of 29 March 1980, 262(XLIII) of 30 April 1987, 47/3 of 10 April 1991, 48/2 of 23 April 1992, 51/3 of 1 May 1995 and 53/1 of 30 April 1997 on the conference structure of the Commission,

Recalling also General Assembly resolution 50/227 of 24 May 1996 on further measures for the restructuring and revitalization of the United Nations in the economic, social and related fields,

Recalling further General Assembly resolution 40/243 of 18 December 1985 on the pattern of conferences, in which the Assembly decided that United Nations bodies may hold sessions away from their established headquarters when a Government issuing an invitation for a session to be held within its territory has agreed to defray, after consultation with the Secretary-General as to their nature and possible extent, the actual additional costs directly or indirectly involved,

Recalling Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific resolution 58/1 of 22 May 2002 on restructuring the conference structure of the Commission, in particular paragraph 6 thereof on a midterm review to be conducted during the sixty-first session,

Recalling also Commission resolution 60/6 of 28 April 2004 on the revitalization of the United Nations ESCAP Pacific Operations Centre, in particular paragraphs 1 and 2 thereof regarding the terms of reference of the Special Body on Pacific Island Developing Countries and the establishment of an Advisory Council for the Centre,

Recalling further Commission resolution 60/5 of 28 April 2004 on the Centre for Alleviation of Poverty through Secondary Crops Development in Asia and the Pacific, by which it revised the statute of the Regional Coordination Centre for Research and Development of Coarse Grains, Pulses, Roots and Tuber Crops in the Humid Tropics of Asia and the Pacific and changed the name of the Centre,

Taking into account Commission resolutions 61/2 of 18 May 2005 on the statute of the Statistical Institute for Asia and the Pacific, 61/3 of 18 May 2005 on the statute of the United Nations Asian and Pacific Centre for Agricultural Engineering and Machinery, 61/4 of 18 May 2005 on the statute of the Asian and Pacific Centre for Transfer of Technology, in which it revised the statutes of the respective regional institutions, and 61/6 of 18 May 2005 on the establishment of the Asian and Pacific Centre for Information and Communication Technology for Development as a follow-up to the World Summit on the Information Society (all of the above-mentioned institutions being collectively referred to hereunder as "the regional institutions"),

Recognizing that a complete meeting cycle of the thirteen subsidiary bodies of the Commission was concluded at the end of 2004, which makes it possible at the current session of the Commission to review the efficiency and effectiveness of the new conference structure established in accordance with Commission resolution 58/1, while bearing in mind that the new conference structure came into effect only in 2003,

Recognizing also the need for the reporting process under the conference structure to be more streamlined so that the Commission can take timely action on the reports of its subsidiary bodies,

Taking note of the evaluations and recommendations of members and associate members concerning the outcomes of sessions of the Commission and its subsidiary bodies held under the new conference structure, which provide a useful basis for the midterm review,

Reiterating its support for keeping the work of the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific focused on three key thematic areas: poverty reduction; managing globalization; and addressing emerging social issues,

Aware of the need for the conference structure to be kept in line with the process of overall reform of the United Nations,

1. Notes with appreciation that, since the adoption of Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific resolution 58/1 on 22 May 2002, a new conference structure has been established in accordance with the pattern set out in paragraph 1 of that resolution;

2. Commends the Executive Secretary of the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific for his efforts to prepare and organize the conferences and meetings under the new structure in an effective and efficient way and to make them correspond more fully to the three key thematic areas of poverty reduction, managing globalization and addressing emerging social issues;

3. Also commends the Executive Secretary for having completed the reorganization of the secretariat as requested in paragraph 2 of Commission resolution 58/1;

4. Decides that, as a result of the midterm review of the functioning of the conference structure, the following points should override or be integrated into the present pattern of its conference structure, as prescribed in paragraph 1 of Commission resolution 58/1 and, where relevant, the respective terms of reference annexed to the resolution:

(a) Subsidiary structure

The thematic committees shall be retained to keep the work of the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific focused on three key thematic areas: poverty reduction; managing globalization; and addressing emerging social issues. The work of the subcommittees shall be subsumed under the respective thematic committees beginning in 2006, as a means of strengthening their integration within their respective thematic contexts;

To ensure that the key sectoral issues formerly dealt with by the subcommittees can be addressed more effectively within a thematic framework, the format of the sessions of the thematic committees shall include segments as follows:

(i) Committee on Poverty Reduction: Poverty reduction practices and statistics;

(ii) Committee on Managing Globalization:
Part I: International trade and investment, and transport infrastructure and facilitation and tourism;
Part II: Information, communication and space technology, and environment and sustainable development;

(iii) Committee on Emerging Social Issues: socially vulnerable groups, and health and development;

To ensure timely review of emerging issues as well as reporting to the Commission, the thematic committees, including parts I and II of the Committee on Managing Globalization, shall meet separately and annually after the session of the Commission for a maximum duration of five days for each session, with the duration depending on the agenda of the committee in question;

The segments under three of the above committees shall be convened either consecutively or simultaneously. The segments under one of the above committees shall be convened consecutively. The secretariat will provide interpretation services in the working languages of the Commission;

(b) Special bodies

The Special Body on Pacific Island Developing Countries shall hold its sessions prior to the sessions of the Commission, in alternate years with the Special Body on Least Developed and Landlocked Developing Countries. The maximum duration of the sessions of each of the special bodies will be two days;

The Advisory Council of the United Nations ESCAP Pacific Operations Centre, comprising representatives of the Governments of Pacific island developing countries and territories, and also of Australia and New Zealand, shall meet biennially for a maximum duration of one day at the venue of the relevant session of the Special Body on Pacific Island Developing Countries to provide advice on the Centre's work programme priorities;

(c) Regional institutions of the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific

The regional institutions of the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific shall continue to function under the terms of reference stipulated in the relevant resolutions, namely, resolutions 60/5, 61/2, 61/3, 61/4 and 61/6;

The programmes of work of the regional institutions shall be aligned with the thematic priorities of the Commission under the strategic framework;

5. Requests the Executive Secretary to ensure that the thematic sessions of the committees are conducted in a results-oriented manner that yields concrete outcomes aimed at strengthening the focus and impact of the work of the Commission;

6. Also requests the Executive Secretary, in accordance with paragraph 6 of Commission resolution 58/1, to report to the Commission at subsequent sessions on the implementation of the present resolution, focusing in particular on whether the conference structure has served the purpose of improving efficiency and attracting higher and wider representation from members and associate members, which would serve in particular as the basis for the comprehensive review to be conducted during the sixty-third session concerning the functioning of the conference structure;

7. Decides to review the conference structure of the Commission, including its thematic and sectoral priorities and subsidiary structure, and to consider the possibility of further revising its structure at its sixty-third session.

ESCAP sixty-second session

The Commission welcomed the offer of Indonesia to host the sixty-second session from 20 to 26 April 2006. It endorsed "Enhancing regional cooperation in infrastructure development, including that related to disaster management" as the theme topic for that session.

By decision 2005/297 of 26 July, the Economic and Social Council approved the holding of the sixty-second session of the Commission in Indonesia in 2006.

Europe

The Economic Commission for Europe (ECE), at its sixtieth session (Geneva, 22-25 February) [E/2005/37], considered the economic situation in Europe on the basis of the Economic Survey of Europe, 2005, No. 1 [Sales No. E.05.II.E.7]. The Commission convened two round tables to discuss follow-up to the 2002 International Conference on Financing for Development [YUN 2002, p. 953]. The topic of the first was "Exchange of experiences with domestic policies that have successfully increased resources for development in the ECE region" and that of the second, "The role of regional cooperation in financing for development in the ECE region". The Commission recognized the need to pursue implementation of the commitments made at the Conference.

With regard to sustainable development, the Commission stressed that there was a need to speed up efforts to meet the internationally agreed development goals and the commitments contained in the Johannesburg Plan of Implementation, adopted at the 2002 World Summit on Sustainable Development [YUN 2002, p. 822]. The Commission agreed to the proposal that a Chairperson's summary, based on the Executive Secretary's report on sustainable development in the ECE region [E/ECE/1421], be presented as ECE's contribution to the Intergovernmental Preparatory Meeting for the Commission on Sustainable Development (see p. 917). It decided to organize the second ECE Regional Implementation Forum in preparation for the fourteenth (2006) session of the Commission on Sustainable Development.

The Commission welcomed the signature, in 2004, of a memorandum of understanding between ECE and the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe (OSCE). It was emphasized, however, that support for OSCE should not detract from other ECE activities.

In the context of ECE reform, the Commission welcomed the start of work by a team of external evaluators on a comprehensive report on the state of ECE, which was expected to be delivered by the end of June 2005. It underlined that the outcome of the review should be taken into account in the 2006-2007 programme of work.

Having discussed a secretariat note on an e-strategy for ECE [E/ECE/1422], the Commission agreed that the use of ICT should be promoted in the ECE work programme with the aim of increasing efficiency and efficacy, but stressed that ICT was a tool to implement the programme and not a goal in itself. The secretariat was urged to put all materials available in the three languages of the Commission (English, French, Russian) on its website.

Following consideration of secretariat notes on the programme of work planning and evaluation processes [E/ECE/1423] and the recommendations of the Group of Experts on the Programme of Work on the programme planning processes [E/ECE/1423/Add.1], the Commission requested the Executive Secretary to provide clear and complete figures on the allocation of resources to all ECE activities. The Commission adopted the recommendations of the Group of Experts concerning new programme planning processes and stressed the need for the secretariat to expedite the preparation of the guide on evaluation methods, as outlined in its note on the programme of work planning and evaluation processes. The Commission took note of the reports of its Bureau on its meetings held between April and December 2004 [E/ECE/1428] and its Group of Experts on the Programme of Work on its meetings held between March and December 2004 [E/ECE/1429].

The Executive Secretary submitted a note on achieving the internationally agreed development goals, including the MDGs [E/ECE/1424], which reviewed ECE's contributions to achieving the goals within the region. The Commission noted the linkages between ECE activities and a number of major internationally agreed development goals, including the MDGs, and observed that ECE should continue to mainstream gender into its work.

The Commission also had before it a note by the Executive Secretary on major policy issues and their impact on the ECE work programme [E/ECE/1425], which highlighted the need for ECE to address issues such as globalization, transition and environmental policies within its mandate; and a report by the Executive Secretary on achievements of and constraints faced by ECE in 2004 [E/ECE/1426], which addressed, among other subjects, the difficulty of implementing the programme of work amid increasing demands for new activities and a zero-growth budget. The Commission stressed the importance of continuing to produce tangible results in keeping with the challenges and priorities of ECE's member States. In response to resource constraints, it asked the Executive Secretary to work with member States to ensure that the distribution of resources reflected the priorities set by the Commission.

The Commission also discussed ECE's technical cooperation activities in 2004 (see p. 1113). It stressed the need to increase assistance to low-income countries in a targeted and systematic manner and encouraged the development of joint technical cooperation projects in cooperation with other organizations.

The Commission held an ad hoc session on 2 December, at which it adopted the World Plan on ECE Reform [E/ECE/1434/Rev.1] (see p. 1114).

Economic trends

The ECE summary of main economic developments and risks and opportunities faced by the economies in its region in 2005 [E/2006/16] observed that the deceleration of economic growth in the United States in 2005 was expected to continue in 2006 and the growth outlook for Western Europe remained lacklustre. In the euro area, average annual economic growth was only 1.3 per cent in 2005, significantly below the estimated growth of potential output, which was itself moderate at some 2 per cent. Annual GDP growth rates of individual member countries of the euro area continued to diverge significantly: Italy and Germany achieved below-average growth of 0.1 per cent and 0.8 per cent, respectively, while France posted a somewhat stronger 1.6 per cent growth rate. Among non-euro EU members, economic growth in the United Kingdom slowed to 1.8 per cent in 2005, while Sweden and Denmark showed growth of 2.5 per cent and 2.4 per cent, respectively.

In contrast, economic activity in most of the eight new EU member States from Central Europe and the Baltic region continued to be dynamic in 2005. However, the pace of growth was uneven across countries. Aggregate GDP in the region grew by some 4 per cent in 2005, down from 5.4 per cent in 2004, but that decline reflected mainly the economic slowdown in Poland, where GDP grew by slightly more than 3 per cent. The Baltic States remained the fastest growing of the new EU members; on average, they posted a GDP growth rate of some 7 per cent in 2005.

Vibrant growth prevailed in South-East Europe in 2005, with aggregate GDP increasing by some 5 per cent. Bulgaria, Croatia and Romania, the EU accession candidates in the subregion, continued to benefit from rising investor and consumer confidence, while economic consolidation gained momentum in the remainder of South-East Europe.

The pace of economic expansion in the Commonwealth of Independent States (CIS) countries slowed somewhat in 2005, after two years of exceptionally strong growth. After achieving 8.1 per cent in 2004, the CIS countries posted an aggregate GDP of just over 6 per cent in 2005. That outcome reflected a moderation of growth of the two largest economies, the Russian Federation and Ukraine.

Trade, industry and enterprise development

The Committee for Trade, Industry and Enterprise Development, at its ninth session (Geneva, 23-27 May) [ECE/TRADE/360], approved: the renewal of the mandates of the Public-Private Partnership Alliance, and the Team of Specialists on Internet Enterprise Development; the change in the name of the Team of Specialists on Industrial Restructuring to the "Team of Specialists on Industrial Restructuring and Competitiveness", its updated terms of reference and the renewal of its mandate; new activities on entrepreneurship and enterprise development directly under the Working Party on Industry and Enterprise Development; the changes to the 2004-2007 Programme of Work [TRADE/2004/4 & Add.1-5], as proposed in the summary of proposed changes to the draft programme of work, 2004-2007 [TRADE/2005/20]; and, for submission to the Group of Experts on the Programme of Work, the list of underfunded technical cooperation priorities contained in the annex to the secretariat note on capacity-building and technical cooperation in support of the Committee's programme of work [ECE/TRADE/2005/15].

The Committee requested the secretariat to prepare a document on the results of the 2005 Executive Forum on "After 15 Years of Market Reforms in Transition Economies: New Challenges and Perspectives for the Industrial Sector" (Geneva, 24-25 May) [TRADE/360/Add.1], invited its subsidiary bodies to follow up on the results, and requested the secretariat to report on the follow-up at the Committee's 2006 session. It approved the proposal for a 2007 forum on "The impact of the results from WTO Doha Development Round Negotiations on the Committee's work and, particularly, on Trade Facilitation" [TRADE/2005/21].

The Committee invited ECE to give its full attention to the importance of regional advisers to enable countries in transition to benefit fully from the programme of work. It also asked the secretariat to provide the Committee with written information on resources available and their use under the scope of the Industrial Restructuring and Enterprise Development programme budget. Having considered secretariat notes on building trade partnerships in the CIS region [TRADE/2005/17] and ECE instruments to address trade facilitation in the WTO Doha work programme: review of articles V, VIII and X of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade 1994 [TRADE/2005/18], the Committee requested the Bureau to define follow-up activities.

Timber

The Timber Committee, at its sixty-third session (Geneva, 27-30 September) [ECE/TIM/2005/2], held a policy forum on "Forest Certification—Do Governments Have a Role?" together with the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO) European Forestry Commission. It asked the Working Party on Forest Economics and Statistics, with FAO, the International Tropical Timber Organization and other partners, to consider how to improve the quality of data on production, consumption and trade of certified forest products. Having reviewed the markets for forest products and considered forecasts for 2005 and 2006, with a focus on how forest certification policies influenced forest product markets in the ECE region, the Committee approved a market statement. It also reviewed the ECE/FAO contribution and role in the global and regional forest dialogues in a changing international environment.

The Committee adopted its 2008 work programme and approved a proposal for the strategic framework for its work for 2008-2009. In the context of ECE reform, the Committee considered a proposal by its Chairman that the Timber Subprogramme expand its monitoring and analysis activities to include policy and institutions of the forest and timber sector that were not monitored consistently by any body, in order to, among other things, support capacity-building in forest sector institutions through exchange of experience.

Transport

The sixty-seventh session of the Inland Transport Committee (Geneva, 15-17 February) [ECE/TRANS/162], reviewed, among other topics: intersectoral activities; the transport situation in ECE member countries and emerging development trends; transport and security; assistance to countries with economies in transition; status of application of international ECE transport agreements and conventions; transport trends and economics; road transport; road traffic safety; harmonization of vehicle regulations; rail and inland water transport; intermodal transport and logistics; border crossing facilitation; transport of dangerous goods and perishable foodstuffs; transport statistics; and the relationship between the Committee's strategic objectives and programme of work

The Committee adopted the final text of the draft Convention on International Customs Transit Procedures for the Carriage of Goods by Rail under Cover of SMGS Consignment Notes [TRANS/2005/13 & Corr.1] and decided that the Convention should be open for signature in Geneva from 1 August 2005 until 31 July 2006. The Committee also adopted the final version of the NST/2000 [TRANS/WP.6/2004/1/Rev.1], a new Pan European classification that linked the classes of goods in transport directly to the international classifications of production of goods by activity.

Energy

The Committee on Sustainable Energy, at its fourteenth session (Geneva, 27-30 June) [ECE/ENERGY/65], discussed the stabilization of the European energy market, focusing on South-East Europe and development of the energy market in that subregion. On 28 June, it held a High-level Meeting on Energy Security in the Caspian Sea Region. On 29 June, a special session took place on the implementation of the 1997 Kyoto Protocol [YUN 1997, p. 1048] to the 1992 UN Framework Convention on Climate Change [YUN 1992, p. 681], energy efficiency and climate change mitigation. The Committee also approved the recommendations of its Extended Bureau [ENERGY/2004/6] and reviewed the activities of its subsidiary bodies. It changed the name of its Ad Hoc Group of Experts on Supply of Fossil Fuels to the Ad Hoc Group of Experts on the Harmonization of Energy Reserves/Resources Terminology and endorsed the establishment of the Ad Hoc Group of Experts on Coal Mine Methane and of the Task Force on the Economic Benefits of Improving Mine Safety through Extraction and Use of Coal Mine Methane as part of the Group of Experts' programme of work.

Environment

The Committee on Environmental Policy, at its twelfth session (Geneva, 10-12 October) [ECE/CEP/127], considered the environmental performance reviews (EPRs) of Belarus and the Republic of Moldova and adopted their recommendations. It discussed mechanisms for enforcement and compliance and management of eco-funds in countries in transition. It agreed on the proposed structure of the second round of EPRs [CEP/2005/6] and provided guidance on the preparation of a progress report on the implementation of the Eastern Europe, the Caucasus and Central Asia Strategy. The Committee took note of the draft "Environment for Europe" communication strategy and asked the Working Group of Senior Officials to revise it for the sixth Ministerial Conference "Environment for Europe", to be held in 2007, after the Conference agenda had been defined. It welcomed the adoption of the ECE Strategy for Education for Sustainable Development (ESD) and the "Vilnius framework for implementation" by a High-level Meeting of Environment and Education Ministries (Vilnius, Lithuania, 17-18 March), and noted the preparations for the first meeting of the ESD Steering Committee (Geneva, 13-14 December). It also welcomed the cross-sectoral work on the environment and health, and transport, environment and health.

The third session of the Steering Committee for Transport, Health and Environment Pan-European Programme (Geneva, 11-12 April) [ECE/AC.21/2005/13] assessed progress made in implementing its work programme for 2003-2005 and adopted a new work programme, extending to 2007. It held preliminary discussions on preparations for the third High-level Meeting on Transport, Environment and Health, to be held in 2007.

The Second ECE Regional Implementation Forum on Sustainable Development (Geneva, 15-16 December) [E/ECE/1442] reviewed Europe's progress in implementing the commitments adopted at the 2002 World Summit on Sustainable Development [YUN 2002, p. 821]. It focused on the thematic cluster for the fourteenth (2006) and fifteenth (2007) sessions of the Commission for Sustainable Development (see p. 920): energy for sustainable development, industrial development, air pollution/atmosphere and climate change. The report of the Forum would be presented to the Commission in 2006.

Human settlements

The Committee on Human Settlements, at its sixty-sixth session (Geneva, 19-21 September) [ECE/HBP/136], having considered the question of its own reform, renamed itself the Committee on Housing and Land Management (subject to editorial changes) and agreed to further streamline its activities, putting emphasis on high-profile tasks and discontinuing two elements in the programme of work, namely, development of human settlements statistics; and major trends characterizing human settlements development. In consultation with the United Nations Human Settlements Programme (UN-Habitat), the Committee agreed to take an active part in the 2006 World Urban Forum and to organize ECE side events that would provide a platform for disseminating ECE experience and good practice in implementing major policy issues regarding the housing sector, land administration and, in particular, social housing and housing finance. The Committee supported the work on the main principles of Public/Private Partnership in land administration and noted its relevance to other areas of its work, such as housing and spatial planning. It adopted its programme of work for 2006-2007 and agreed on the draft biennial programme plan for 2008-2009.

Statistics

The Conference of European Statisticians, at its fifty-third session (Geneva, 13-15 June) [ECE/CES/68], considered the implications of the meetings of its parent bodies—the February session of ECE (see p. 1109) and the March session of the UN Statistical Commission (see p. 1368)—and agreed that the Bureau of the Conference, the Conference itself, and the Statistical Division should continue to contribute actively to strengthening ECE. The Conference, among other things, decided to follow the ECE external evaluation process and implement the recommendations for adjusting its work; asked the ECE Statistical Division to continue to be involved in technical cooperation activities through the Regional Adviser Programme, seek ways to increase its technical assistance and regularly draw the attention of Conference members to statistical areas where the less developed statistical offices in the ECE region needed help but the technical assistance activities were currently underfunded.

Having considered the Integrated Presentation (IP) of the international statistical work programmes and their coordination, the Conference adopted a revised classification for transport statistics, which was part of a new Pan-European classification, NST/2000 (see above). It also asked the Bureau to consider the appointment of a Steering Group to develop a workplan with regard to migration statistics. The possibility of eventually expanding that Steering Group into a global body would be explored within the Statistical Commission.

During the Conference session, seminars were held on improved data reporting and on sustainable development.

Operational activities

Operational activities in 2004, as described in a note by the Executive Secretary [E/ECE/1427], were mostly carried out through capacity-building workshops, seminars, study tours, policy advisory services and field projects. Activities were funded from the UN regular budget and the UN Development Account, together with extrabudgetary resources. Of the $1,119,028 from the regular budget, 25.7 per cent went to trade development, 16.2 per cent to transport, 15.6 per cent to sustainable energy, 14 per cent to industrial restructuring and enterprise development, 13.7 per cent to statistics, 13.5 per cent to environment and 1.3 per cent to management of technical cooperation activities. Extrabudgetary expenditure, from ECE general trust funds, local trust funds and other sources, totalled $5,736,623.

In accordance with the ECE technical cooperation strategy, adopted in 2004 [YUN 2004, p. 1014], which called for more focused and effective technical assistance to Central Asia, the Executive Secretary issued a report on the ECE/ESCAP Strategy for Central Asia and the future orientation of the UN Special Programme for the Economies of Central Asia (SPECA) [E/ECE/1427/Add.1], in which he stated that ECE and ESCAP had initiated consultations with the Governments of the subregion on a new joint strategic approach. Based on a lessons learned exercise, the two commissions had developed a broad range of proposals aimed at reforming and strengthening SPECA. Those proposals, together with the ECE/ESCAP workplan for 2005-2007 in support of SPECA, were considered at the International Conference on Strengthening Subregional Economic Cooperation in Central Asia and the Future Role of SPECA (Astana, Kazakhstan, 25-27 May) [ECE/TCU/CONF.1/2005/1].

Programme and organizational questions

ECE reform

On 30 June, the team of external evaluators, which the Commission had decided in 2004 [YUN 2004, p. 1014] to entrust with carrying out a comprehensive review of ECE, submitted its report "The state of UNECE". The evaluation team found that: the Commission's governance was too heavy and unnecessarily complex; the permanent subsidiary bodies had too much freedom to establish their own ad hoc working groups and task forces, and recommended that those bodies be streamlined and provided with clear mandates, time frames and budgets; a number of changes needed to be made to ECE's divisions and subprogrammes, including the discontinuation of the subprogrammes on human settlements, industrial restructuring and enterprise development, and economic analysis; and ECE should establish more partnerships with European organizations.

Having considered the report, the Commission, at an ad hoc session on 2 December, adopted the workplan on ECE Reform [E/ECE/1434/Rev.1], which contained a renewed mission statement and outlined changes to be made in: governance structure; priorities of the programme of work; technical cooperation; cross-sectoral issues; relations with other organizations; management; and resources. Under the workplan, the Commission established eight sectoral committees to replace the existing principal subsidiary bodies. The first session of the newly established Committee on Economic Cooperation and Integration would take place in 2006.

On 23 December, the General Assembly, in resolution 60/248, section X (see p. 1495), welcomed the ECE workplan on reform, decided that the Commission should implement the measures outlined therein and requested the Secretary-General to allocate the necessary resources from the proposed 2006-2007 programme budget [A/60/6].

Latin America and the Caribbean

The Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean (ECLAC) did not meet in 2005. The Commission's thirty-first session was to be held in 2006.

Economic trends

A report on the economic situation in and outlook for Latin America and the Caribbean, 2005-2006 [E/2006/19], stated that the region's economy grew in 2005 for the third consecutive year and GDP expanded by an estimated 4.4 per cent, equal to a per capita GDP growth rate of almost 3 per cent. That satisfactory performance was reflected in most of the countries of the region, all of which, except Guyana, posted positive growth rates; the highest rates were achieved by Venezuela (9.3 per cent) and Argentina (9.1 per cent). However, there were sharp differences among subregions.

Regional economic expansion continued to be fuelled by exports, and the growth of the world economy once again had a positive impact on regional terms of trade, which improved by 4.8 per cent in 2005. Exports increased by 19.1 per cent and imports by 18 per cent, a slight slowdown compared with 2004. The merchandise trade balance was positive for the fourth consecutive year, standing at $77.8 billion. The most outstanding feature of the period of economic growth was the expanding surplus on the balance of payments current account. The surplus for 2005 was equivalent to 1.3 per cent of GDP. Those results were coupled with a positive flow of FDI into the Latin American countries.

The relatively rapid rate of job creation that began in the region in 2003 continued in 2005, with the employment rate estimated to have risen by 0.5 per cent. The accumulated increase over the 2003 to 2005 period was 1.5 per cent, a key factor in lifting 13 million people over the poverty line in the preceding two years. The unemployment rate dropped by more than 1 per cent to 9.1 per cent in 2005. Regional inflation continued its downward trend with a rate of 6.2 per cent, compared to 7.4 per cent in 2004.

Development policy and regional economic performance

The ECLAC Economic Development Division continued to report on the macroeconomic performance of both individual countries and the region as a whole in its publications Economic Survey of Latin America and the Caribbean and Preliminary Overview of the Economies of Latin America and the Caribbean. It also continued to publish working documents in the Macroeconomics of Development Series. The Division considered the implications of the proposed free trade area of the Americas for national macroeconomic policies and their regional coordination. In order to enhance decision-making in both the public and private sectors, it provided support to countries in the formulation of economic policy proposals, follow-up of results and expansion of information systems.

In the context of its project on integrating young people into the labour market, the Division conducted a seminar on analyses, challenges and proposals for youth employment (Santiago, Chile, 6-7 July) at which the main findings from the five countries under review (Chile, Ecuador, El Salvador, Paraguay, Peru) were presented. Work continued on the Macroeconomic Dialogue Network (REDIMA) project. The Network provided a high-level forum for discussion of macroeconomic issues linked to the integration process. Several meetings were held and a number of documents published under REDIMA II, the second phase of the project, which was launched in 2005.

The Latin American and Caribbean Institute for Economic and Social Planning (ILPES), which executed the ECLAC subprogramme on public administration planning, focused on: public administration; decentralization, land-use planning and management of territorial development; investment projects and planning; and cooperation between planning agencies in Latin America and the Caribbean. It organized several intergovernmental meetings, technical seminars and national, subregional and international courses, in addition to producing technical documents and teaching materials and carrying out technical assistance missions. The 16 international and subregional courses provided by ILPES in 2005 reached 519 participants from public, private, academic and other institutions; 6 courses were also provided by ECLAC, with ILPES support, and they reached 245 participants.

The twenty-third meeting of the Presiding Officers of the Regional Council for Planning of ILPES (Havana, Cuba, 29 June) reviewed the report of activities for the 2004-2005 period and the draft programme of work for 2006-2007. The States members adopted resolutions approving the ILPES programme of work for the 2006-2007 biennium and recommending that ILPES should incorporate planning issues more explicitly as part of its activities. ILPES also organized the seventeenth regional seminar on fiscal policy (Santiago, 24-27 January).

International trade and integration

The 2005 activities of the ECLAC Division of International Trade and Integration concentrated on: trade and regional integration trends; international trade regulations, regional integration and trade policies; analysis of specific markets of interest to the region; and trade facilitation. In response to challenges posed by changes in the world economy, it carried out analytical and empirical studies and formulated policy recommendations in order to help regional Governments to improve their linkages with the international economy and to encourage them to seize the opportunities offered by such changes. It also monitored multilateral, subregional and hemispheric negotiations and supported countries in the negotiation and implementation of trade agreements.

The Division's comparative study on East Asian and Latin American information technology industries culminated in the publication of a book detailing seven national case studies in Latin America and six in Asia. It also published Latin America and the Caribbean in the World Economy, 2004: Trends 2005 [LC/G.2283-P], which contained a chapter devoted to the analysis of trends in world trade since the emergence of China as a major force in that sphere.

The Division set up a database, called the Interactive Graphic System on International Trade, with information on trade among 33 Latin American and Caribbean countries, 15 from the EU, and other selected countries. It also launched a database containing information on all cases being processed under the WTO Dispute Settlement Body and under various regional dispute settlement mechanisms.

The Division continued to implement a project on the application of ICT to trade facilitation and organized, with UNCTAD, an international seminar on trade facilitation and transport (Santiago, 29-30 November).

Social development and equity

The main activities of ECLAC's Social Development Division in 2005 consisted of improving the exchange and compilation of social information on the ECLAC region, producing social assessments to assist in the formulation of national social policies and programmes, supporting Governments with respect to the systems of management, monitoring and evaluation of social policies and programmes and promoting human rights, democracy and peace.

The 2005 edition of the Social Panorama of Latin America covered: the poverty dynamic and income distribution; demographic changes and their health implications; the socio-economic situation of youth; changes in household structure and the role of families; trends in social spending; and health policy reforms. On the basis of knowledge acquired from producing the Social Panorama, the Division's technical team continued to support and participate in the design and dissemination of methodologies, harmonization of objectives and training for the follow-up to the MDGs by UN system organizations and national agencies.

By 2005, the Latin American and Caribbean Network of Social Institutions formed a virtual network of 1,055 social institutions from 41 countries and territories in the region. The purpose of the Network was to facilitate the exchange of good practices, share experiences in the area of social policy and improve the capacity of national social institutions in terms of analysis and assessment of policies and programmes. Major activities in 2005 included virtual forums on early education, homeless people and violence against children and adolescents.

The third phase of the ECLAC/World Food Programme agreement began in 2005 with the preparation of studies on the cost of hunger and the cost-effectiveness, costs and benefits of reducing undernutrition in the region. Those studies considered the cases of Chile and Peru and assessed undernutrition in the Caribbean Basin. Requests were received for those studies to be repeated in the Central American countries.

Technical cooperation was provided to Brazil's National Education Development Fund in the form of training modules in management, supervision and evaluation of social programmes. ECLAC also collaborated with the UN Stabilization Mission in Haiti (see p. 389) to support the transition efforts.

Sustainable development and human settlements

During 2005 the ECLAC Sustainable Development and Human Settlements Division focused on: assessment of advances in sustainable development in the region; follow-up to public policies and international and regional agreements on sustainable development; analysis of the relationship between the economy and the environment; and land-use and human settlement development. It went online with a set of databases and georeferenced indicators from all the countries of the region to reflect the social, economic, environmental and institutional dimensions of sustainable development.

The Division organized various workshops and seminars, including a workshop on sustainable development indicators for Latin America and the Caribbean (Río de Janeiro, Brazil, 24-28 October), and a regional workshop on mainstreaming sustainability in carbon markets and in investment environments (Santiago, 13-14 September). It also offered the first distance-learning course on strategies to overcome poverty and substandard living conditions—a sustainable urban agenda (5 September–25 November) as part of the project "Urban Poverty: an Action Oriented Strategy for Urban Governments and Institutions in Latin America and the Caribbean".

The fourth Regional Meeting of Ministers and High-level Authorities of the Housing and Urban Development Sector in Latin America and the Caribbean (Santiago, November) exchanged knowledge and experience on human settlements at the sectoral level.

Population and development

In 2005, ECLAC's Latin American and Caribbean Demographic Centre (CELADE), or Population Division, focused on: technical cooperation and training in population and development; demographic analysis and population projections; activities relating to the development, adaptation and use of methodologies for generating and disseminating information on population; and incorporating socio-demographic variables into development policies and programmes. It also supported countries in the region to facilitate and coordinate their interactions and exchange of experiences in population and development and to assess progress in implementing the objectives of the Programme of Action of the 1994 International Conference on Population and Development [YUN 1994, p. 955].

As a follow-up to the regional strategy approved by the Regional Intergovernmental Conference on Ageing [YUN 2003, p. 1022], a governmental and expert meeting on ageing in South American countries (Buenos Aires, Argentina, 14-16 November) was organized in conjunction with other international organizations. An international seminar on indigenous peoples and Afrodescendants in Latin America and the Caribbean: relevance of sociodemographic information to policies and programmes (Santiago, 27-29 April) was organized by CELADE and the Fund for the Development of the Indigenous People of Latin America and the Caribbean.

CELADE worked with the ECLAC Subregional Headquarters for the Caribbean to organize an expert meeting on international migration in the Caribbean (Port of Spain, Trinidad and Tobago, 14-15 September). Other international migration activities included an expert meeting on international migration and development (Mexico City, 30 November–2 December), which was jointly organized by the National Population Council (Mexico), the United Nations Fund for Population Activities, the UN Department of Economic and Social Affairs and ECLAC in preparation for the High-level Dialogue on International Migration and Development to take place during the 2006 General Assembly.

Integration of women in development

The work of ECLAC's Women and Development Unit in 2005 focused on supporting Latin American and Caribbean countries in their efforts to mainstream the gender perspective in public policies and consolidate the role of institutions that sought to reduce gender inequality in various spheres of development. To that end, the Unit stepped up technical cooperation activities for the design of public policies aimed at achieving gender equality in the operation of markets, institutions and society as a whole. The Unit made significant advances at the technical level and in terms of cooperation with countries in the region, especially concerning the consultation processes on economic labour policies.

Newly established subregional networks focused on issues of political culture and reform of electoral systems; poverty, gender and race; and social policies, gender and poverty. A regional network of women experts was set up to deal with governance issues, and new virtual communication networks on gender issues were established between ministers and authorities, and between the latter and civil society. ECLAC continued to consolidate its role as inter-agency focal point for gender equity activities carried out in the region by organizations in the UN system.

The thirty-eighth meeting of the Presiding Officers of the Conference on Women in Latin America and the Caribbean (Mar del Plata, Argentina, 7-8 September) [LC/L.2430(MDM.38/4)] reviewed the activities carried out with regard to the implementation of the 2004 Mexico City Consensus [YUN 2004, p. 1024], adopted at the ninth session of the Regional Conference on Women in Latin American and the Caribbean.

Economic statistics and technical cooperation

During 2005, the work of the ECLAC Statistics and Economic Projections Division centred on: statistical databanks and the dissemination of statistics and regional indicators; economic statistics and the System of National Accounts; technical cooperation with member States and with regional and international statistical organizations; evaluation and prospective analysis of the economic development process in countries of the region; and statistics and quantitative analysis of social processes.

In addition to publishing the Statistical Yearbook for Latin America and the Caribbean, the Division collaborated with various other parts of the ECLAC secretariat on reports such as the Economic Survey of Latin America and the Caribbean and the Social Panorama of Latin America. It contributed towards the aims of the REDIMA project (see p. 1115) by providing statistics and models for macroeconomic coordination. Databanks of statistics were updated and extended and user access enhanced.

In 2005, ECLAC convened two major meetings on statistical issues: the third meeting of the Statistical Conference of the Americas of ECLAC (Santiago, 1-3 June); and the fifth meeting of the Executive Committee of the Statistical Conference (Mexico City, 14-15 November). Participants adopted the revised draft strategic plan, 2005-2015, and defined the programme of regional statistical work for Latin America and the Caribbean, July 2005–June 2007.

Natural resources and infrastructure

The ECLAC Natural Resources and Infrastructure Division conducted work on: the participation of the private sector and regulation of the provision of public services; sustainable management of natural resources; natural resources and infrastructure in linkages with the global economy and regional integration processes; national and international legal instruments governing natural resources and infrastructure; and sustainability, efficiency and equity in land transport systems. One focus of the Division was the Initiative for the Integration of Regional Infrastructure in South America (IIRSA), through which the 12 South American States were collaborating on the construction of a new infrastructure network for the continent. In the context of IIRSA, ECLAC was actively involved in designing the guidelines for the Amazon Hub, which had the aim of building a multi-modal transport system to join the Atlantic and Pacific oceans, and in providing technical assistance to standardize regulations on the provision of infrastructure services, particularly intermodal transport, port infrastructure and maritime services.

As to the sustainable management of natural resources, priority was given to the process of energy integration, especially within the Andean Community and the Southern Common Market (MERCOSUR). The Division organized several workshops with other regional bodies, which resulted in the conclusion of a cooperation agreement to boost energy integration and the sustainable development of energy resources. Countries of the region exchanged experiences on mining environmental liabilities, and greater emphasis was placed on corporate responsibility, community relations and the equitable distribution of income from mining and exploitation of energy resources.

Production and management

The ECLAC Division of Production, Productivity and Management was responsible for activities regarding: analysis of production trends; policy design aimed at improving the business environment; strengthening the key agents of industrial and agricultural development; and fostering development and adapting and incorporating new technologies, in particular information technologies and biotechnologies. It continued to offer the annual Summer School on Latin American Economies to postgraduate students and collaborated with the World Intellectual Property Organization in organizing two regional courses on technological management and intellectual property in Latin America and the Caribbean. The Division improved and updated software containing information on export and industrial production patterns and developed a methodology that was used by 11 international organizations to harmonize a set of key indicators for household and business surveys on ICT. It produced several documents, such as Foreign Investment in Latin America and the Caribbean, which were disseminated widely on the Internet through the ECLAC portal.

The Division acted as technical secretariat for the Regional Preparatory Ministerial Conference of Latin America and the Caribbean (Río de Janeiro, 8-10 June) for the second phase of the World Summit on the Information Society (see p. 933). Regional Governments adopted the Plan of Action for the Information Society in Latin America and the Caribbean, which included concrete initiatives and activities and measurable targets based on the Plan of Action adopted at the World Summit's first (2003) phase [YUN 2003, p. 857] and the Río de Janeiro Commitment, a regional political declaration oriented towards sustainable development, digital inclusion and regional solidarity.

Subregional activities

Caribbean

The ECLAC subregional headquarters for the Caribbean in Port of Spain, which was also the secretariat of the Caribbean Development and Cooperation Committee (CDCC), carried out activities in: macroeconomic policies and economic development; linkages with the international economy, integration and cooperation; statistics and information management for development; and sustainable development in the Caribbean. It organized training workshops on social and trade statistics and natural disaster impact assessment. Participants from member States, UN agencies and regional and subregional institutions took part in training exercises in the use of the Caribbean Social Statistics Database and the development of a social vulnerability index geared towards the formulation of social policy for small island developing States in the Caribbean.

In order to improve the timeliness and enhance the success of activities, the subregional headquarters constructed databases on: trade statistics; social statistics; and selected statistical indicators. It also constructed a bibliographic database, a database on women and development and the Caribbean Digital Library. The subprogramme contributed to the formulation of policies and programmes in the area of migration by intergovernmental bodies such as the Caribbean Community (CARICOM), the Regional Nursing Body and the Commonwealth Secretariat, particularly in relation to the brain drain in the health sector. During the 2004-2005 biennium, the subprogramme substantially increased the amount of technical assistance provided to member States and to regional and subregional institutions. Member and associate member States received substantive support in their preparations for participation in global conferences such as the International Meeting to Review the Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States (see p. 946) and the second phase of the World Summit on the Information Society.

Mexico and Central America

The ECLAC subregional headquarters in Mexico provided analyses, training and technical assistance to countries of the subregion. It also helped to strengthen the trade-related and analytical capacities of member States through a project that included training on intellectual property, studies on fiscal impact in 13 member States and seminars on selected issues. The subregional headquarters facilitated the sharing of experiences and best practices by providing advisory services and organizing regional workshops with the Central American member States under a framework project being executed in conjunction with the International Development Research Centre. It undertook a new study on the impact of macroeconomic policies, exchange rates and external shocks in terms of poverty and inequality in Costa Rica, El Salvador and Honduras and on the effects of volatility in economic growth on employment, real income, public social expenditure and income distribution in Central America.

Analysis of oil supplies, prices, margins and the level of competition in national oil markets was expanded to respond to the urgent demand in that area. In addition, support was provided for the definition of projects for inclusion in the Meso-American Initiative for Energy Interconnection, which formed part of the Puebla-Panama Plan to promote regional integration and development. The subregional headquarters also executed a technical cooperation project on capacity-building in macroeconomic policy analysis for the central banks of the five Central American countries, the Dominican Republic and the Central American Monetary Council.

Under the subprogramme, ECLAC continued to act as a focal point for issues related to disasters, strengthening member States' capacity to evaluate and respond to natural disasters based on the disaster assessment methodology. It carried out training activities at the national level, conducted disaster evaluations, provided rapid quantifications of losses and their effects, and participated in the World Conference on Disaster Reduction (see p. 1015).

Programme and organizational questions

ECLAC associate member countries

At its resumed organizational session, the Economic and Social Council had before it a draft resolution on implementation of resolutions concerning the participation of associate member countries of ECLAC in the follow-up to UN world conferences and in the work of the Council [E/2004/15/Add.2]. By that draft, the Council would have noted the continued support of the international community for the addition of a category allowing for the participation of associate members of the regional commissions in world conferences and in special sessions of the General Assembly, and would have decided to establish the necessary mechanisms for the participation of associate members in the work of the Council and its subsidiary bodies. On 28 April, the Council deferred consideration of the draft until its 2005 substantive session (decision 2005/214).

On 27 July, the Council decided to take no further action on the matter (decision 2005/302).

Observer status

On 23 November, the General Assembly, by resolution 60/25 (see p. 1542), granted observer status to the Latin American Integration Association in the work of the Assembly.

Admission of Germany

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 July [meeting 39], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of ECLAC [E/2005/15/Add.1], adopted resolution 2005/41 without vote [agenda item 10].

Admission of Germany as a member of the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean

The Economic and Social Council,

Bearing in mind that the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean was set up by Economic and Social Council resolution 106(VI) of 25 February 1948, which states that membership in the Commission shall be open to Members of the United Nations in North, Central and South America and in the Caribbean area, and to France, the Netherlands and the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland,

Bearing in mind also that the Commission was set up on the basis of the participation of all the countries of Latin America and the Caribbean and those which have had special relations of a historical, cultural, geographical or economic nature with the region,

Recalling that, in this spirit, the Commission subsequently admitted Spain in 1979, Portugal in 1984 and Italy in 1990,

Considering that the Government of Germany has communicated to the Commission, through the Executive Secretary of the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean, its desire to be admitted to membership in the Commission,

Taking into account the continuous historical, cultural and economic links that have existed between Germany and the Latin American and Caribbean countries throughout the history of the region and the important and growing contributions that German cooperation agencies have been making through the Commission to the development of Latin America and the Caribbean in recent years,

1. Welcomes with satisfaction the request of the Government of Germany for admission as a member of the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean;

2. Approves the admission of Germany as a member of the Commission and to this effect authorizes the amendment of paragraph 3 (a) of the terms of reference of the Commission by the insertion of the word "Germany", between the words "and to" and the word "France".

Western Asia

The Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia (ESCWA), at its twenty-third session (Damascus, Syrian Arab Republic, 9-12 May) [E/2005/41], adopted the Damascus Declaration on the Realization of the MDGs, which it submitted to the Economic and Social Council for action (see p. 1121). It also adopted a number of other resolutions, which it brought to the Council's attention (see below).

The main documents before the Commission were the report of the Executive Secretary on the activities of ESCWA since the Commission's twenty-second (2003) session [E/ESCWA/23/5, Part I & Adds. 1-4, Part II, Part III & Adds. 1-3 & Part IV] and a report by the ESCWA secretariat on priority issues in the Western Asia region [E/ESCWA/23/4 & Parts I, II & III].

The Commission decided that, as from 2006, it would hold its biennial sessions in even years in order to be in harmony with the submission of the UN strategic framework.

Economic and social trends

Economic trends

In 2005, the economies of ESCWA member countries grew for the third straight year after two decades of stagnation, according to the summary of the survey of economic and social developments in the ESCWA region, 2005-2006 [E/2006/20]. Excluding Iraq and Palestine, GDP growth in the ESCWA region stood at 6.3 per cent in 2005, compared to 6.4 per cent in 2004. However, the growth was relatively jobless and dependent on an unsustainable surge in the price of oil. For the members of the Gulf Cooperation Council (GCC) (Bahrain, Kuwait, Oman, Qatar, Saudi Arabia, United Arab Emirates), the oil boom was well into its third year. The GDP growth rates for those countries hovered around 7 per cent, whereas the per capita GDP rate for the year was 3.9 per cent. The demand-led portion of the economic expansion had benefited the non-oil private sectors, mainly in banking services, trade, construction and real estate. The more diversified economies (Egypt, Jordan, Lebanon, Syrian Arab Republic, Yemen) maintained their gradual acceleration in economic expansion during 2005 and, as a group, recorded a GDP growth rate of 4.8 per cent, with per capita income growth of 2.5 per cent. Favourable external conditions, a high level of global liquidity, rapid growth in trade in services such as tourism, and a stable inflow of workers' remittances from abroad loosened foreign exchange constraints, which allowed economic expansion to take place at a rapid pace. Positive external economic conditions helped Lebanon to avoid a large decline in its economy in the face of a deteriorating security situation. However, in the conflict-affected economies of Iraq and the Occupied Palestinian Territory, persistent security-related tensions blighted prospects for socio-economic stability and induced widespread poverty. Iraq's real GDP growth decreased from 23 per cent in 2004 to 10 per cent in 2005 and the Palestinian economy experienced weak growth, estimated at 4.9 per cent, up from 2 per cent in 2004.

Economic growth was unable to make a dent in the region's high unemployment rate, especially the high rate among young people. With unemployment holding steady at the 15 per cent mark, despite three successive years of economic growth, it was estimated that the ESCWA region needed to create 35 million jobs during the following decade in order to meet its development targets.

Oil

In 2005, the price of West Texas Intermediate Cushing (a representative brand of crude oil) averaged $56.6 per barrel, compared with $41.5 in 2004. The region's near-maximum level of oil production continued, with a slight increase of 2.3 per cent over its 2004 level. With the exception of Iraq, the region's member States of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries (OPEC) (Kuwait, Qatar, Saudi Arabia, United Arab Emirates) produced 4.7 per cent more than their average crude oil production in 2004. Among the non-OPEC countries, Bahrain, Egypt, Oman, the Syrian Arab Republic and Yemen saw a 2.9 per cent decline in oil production compared to 2004. Gross oil export revenue in the region was estimated at $307 billion, a 40.4 per cent increase over 2004.

Trade

In 2005, the total gross value of ESCWA member countries' merchandise exports, including re-exports, was estimated at $462 billion, while merchandise imports were estimated at $273 billion. The GCC countries accounted for 87 per cent of those exports and 71 per cent of total imports. Oil and oil-related products continued to be the major export group of the ESCWA region and, despite the rise in oil prices, the 65 per cent share of oil exports in total exports barely changed from 2004. It was evident, therefore, that non-oil exports were growing at the same rate as oil exports.

The apparel sector in Jordan and the steel industry in Egypt became established as export revenue earners.

Activities in 2005

In 2005, ESCWA activities under its 2004-2005 work programme [YUN 2003, p. 1028] focused on four pivotal priorities: water and energy resources, social policies, globalization, and technology; and on the interdisciplinary issues of the empowerment and advancement of women, national statistical capacity-building, especially in monitoring the attainment of the MDGs, and the special needs of countries emerging from conflict.

Attainment of the MDGs

During the Commission's twenty-third session, a round-table discussion took place on the achievement of the MDGs, adopted by the General Assembly in 2000 [YUN 2000, p. 51], in ESCWA member countries. The round table had before it an ESCWA secretariat report [E/ESCWA/23/4 (Part II)], which reviewed progress made at the national level in ESCWA countries in implementing the goals and identified the most significant challenges confronting the countries of the region in that regard.

On 12 May, the Commission adopted the Damascus Declaration on the Realization of the MDGs and submitted it to the Economic and Social Council for action.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 27 July [meeting 40], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of ESCWA [E/2005/15/Add.1], adopted resolution 2005/50 without vote [agenda item 10].

The Damascus Declaration and the role of the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia in the achievement of the internationally agreed development goals, including those contained in the Millennium Declaration

The Economic and Social Council,

Reaffirming the United Nations Millennium Declaration, which was adopted by the General Assembly in its resolution 55/2 of 8 September 2000,

Also reaffirming the commitments made in partnership between developed and developing countries for the achievement of the internationally agreed development goals, including those contained in the Millennium Declaration,

Affirming the importance of intensifying cooperation between the countries of the region in order to realize the internationally agreed development goals, including those contained in the Millennium Declaration, by 2015,

Commending the efforts of the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia in that field and the report on progress made towards realizing the Millennium Development Goals in that region, submitted to the Commission at its twenty-third session,

1. Takes note of the Damascus Declaration, adopted by the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia at its twenty-third session;

2. Affirms the importance of increasing economic growth and linking that growth to the formulation of strategies for the eradication of poverty and unemployment and the achievement of social integration, with a view to realizing the internationally agreed development goals, including those contained in the Millennium Declaration, including by adopting the general policies necessary in respect of employment generation, social security, the improvement of living conditions, particularly for vulnerable persons, combating corruption and the strengthening of accountability;

3. Stresses the need for member countries of the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia to coordinate at the regional level in support of the achievement of the internationally agreed development goals, including those contained in the Millennium Declaration;

4. Urges the United Nations organizations that are working in the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia region to coordinate their activities in order to meet regional needs and to focus, in the meetings of the regional coordination group organized by the Commission, on the progress of the region towards the realization of those goals;

5. Requests the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia to provide support to member countries in realizing the internationally agreed development goals, including those contained in the Millennium Declaration, including by building capacities to formulate policies, monitor the progress made, measure its impact and prepare regional reports;

6. Requests the Executive Secretary to submit a report on the progress made in this regard to the Commission at its twenty-fourth session.

Economic development and cooperation

The Technical Committee on Liberalization of Foreign Trade and Economic Globalization in the Countries of the ESCWA Region, at its fourth session (Beirut, 7-8 March) [E/ESCWA/GRID/2005/IG.2/5], discussed a number of issues on the WTO Doha Development Agenda [YUN 2001, 1432]; developments in foreign trade and economic globalization; and issues of concern to Arab countries, including agriculture, access to markets for non-agricultural products, trade facilitation, trade in services and trade-related aspects of intellectual property rights.

On 12 May [E/2005/41 (res. 254(XXIII))], the Commission, having considered the Executive Secretary's report on action taken in 2004-2005 in response to its 2003 resolution on science and technology [YUN 2003, p. 1026], requested her to produce a detailed study, financed by extrabudgetary resources, on the establishment of a technology centre to undertake activities aimed at building national technological capacities and harnessing those capacities to achieve the MDGs and strengthen economic and social development and regional and international cooperation in technological fields. She was also asked to submit that study to the ESCWA Consultative Committee on Scientific and Technological Development and Technological Innovation before reporting to the Commission's twenty-fourth (2006) session.

Development and unstable conditions

In response to a 2003 Commission request [YUN 2003, p. 1027], the ESCWA secretariat submitted a report on peace and security in the region [E/ESCWA/23/4(Part I)]. The Executive Secretary submitted a report [E/ESCWA/23/5(Part I)/Add.2/Supp.3] on progress made by ESCWA with regard to the requests made in the 2003 resolution. Also in response to a 2003 request [YUN 2003, p. 1027], the Executive Secretary submitted a report on rehabilitation and economic and social reconstruction in Palestine [E/ESCWA/23/5(Part I)/Add.2/Supp.13].

On 12 May [res. 260(XXIII)], the Commission, commending secretariat initiatives to support rehabilitation and development in Palestine, Iraq and Southern Lebanon, urged the Executive Secretary to provide early warning of the potential dangers posed by lack of security in the region to economic and social development and regional integration and to intensify endeavours to build capacities and support countries in the region that had suffered and were suffering from lack of stability, including through analytical activities in sustainable economic and social development fields. It urged member countries to produce policies that would strengthen regional cooperation and integration at the economic and social levels and appealed to them and to donor bodies to contribute to the rehabilitation and reconstruction of the countries of the region that had suffered or continued to suffer from instability. The Executive Secretary was asked to report in 2006 on progress made.

Technical cooperation

In response to a 2003 Commission request [YUN 2003, p. 1028], the Executive Secretary submitted the ESCWA Technical Cooperation Strategy [E/ESCWA/23/5(Part III)/Add.1] to help clarify the Commission's strategic position with respect to the provision of technical cooperation, improve its delivery, effectiveness and efficiency, and lay the ground for its development.

On 12 May [res. 258(XXIII)], the Commission approved the Strategy and requested the Executive Secretary to take all necessary measures to implement it. She was also asked to establish a technical cooperation information and knowledge-sharing network with member countries in order to strengthen and coordinate technical cooperation activities, to submit a progress report to the Commission in 2006 and to inform it of any amendments to the Strategy.

The Commission also considered reports by the Executive Secretary on strengthening consultancy services and technical cooperation activities in ESCWA [E/ESCWA/23/5(Part I)/Add.2/Supp.11] and on technical cooperation activities undertaken in 2004 [E/ESCWA/23/5(Part III)/Add.2].

In another 12 May resolution [res. 263(XXIII)], the Commission expressed the hope that member countries would provide all possible financial support to the ESCWA Trust Fund for Regional Activities with a view to enabling the secretariat to increase its operational activities. It requested donors at the national, regional and international levels to increase their financial support for ESCWA, including for technical cooperation activities. The Executive Secretary was asked to identify, establish and develop strategic partnerships and undertake collaborative initiatives with regional and international donors in the priority areas of work and to prepare a multi-year funding plan to submit to the Commission in 2006.

Transportation

The Committee on Transport, at its sixth session (Beirut, 22-24 March) [E/ESCWA/GRID/2005/IG.1/5], recommended the adoption by the Commission of three draft resolutions concerning: the selection of the routes to be given priority in the implementation of the Agreement on International Roads in the Arab Mashreq [YUN 2001, p. 928]; regional cooperation with respect to road traffic safety; and the adoption of the Memorandum of Understanding (MOU) on Maritime Transport Cooperation in the Arab Mashreq.

In other action, the Committee urged countries that had not signed or ratified the Agreement on International Railways in the Arab Mashreq [YUN 2002, p. 1019] to do so and asked the ESCWA secretariat to develop an action plan for the Agreement's implementation. It also recommended that the secretariat address member countries regarding the acceleration of the measures necessary for establishment and activation of national committees for the facilitation of transport and trade and stated that those committees should provide ESCWA with detailed reports on their activities. The Committee also made recommendations with regard to: organizational matters pertaining to the MOU on Maritime Transport Cooperation in the Arab Mashreq; the regional road transport information system; road safety; the amended strategic framework and proposed programme of work for the biennium 2006-2007; and the annual follow-up reports on the implementation of the Committee's recommendations.

On 12 May [res. 256(XXIII)], the Commission adopted the MOU on Cooperation in the Field of Maritime Transport in the Arab Mashreq [E/ESCWA/23/6] and urged members to sign and ratify it as soon as possible. The Executive Secretary was asked to report to the Commission in 2006 on implementation of the resolution.

By another resolution of the same date [res.257(XXIII)] on the selection of the routes to be given priority in the implementation of the Agreement on International Roads in the Arab Mashreq [YUN 2001, p. 928], the Commission adopted Agreement routes M40 and M45 as priority routes. It requested member countries through whose territories the routes passed to accelerate preparation of a detailed plan of action for the projects that needed to be carried out in respect of those routes, to be completed by 30 September 2007, and to begin taking measures to develop the routes to the standard required by the Agreement as soon as possible. The Executive Secretary was asked to provide technical assistance in the preparation of the plans of action, follow up their implementation and report to the Commission in 2008.

By a further 12 May resolution [res. 265(XXIII)], the Commission called on member countries to link the issue of road safety to their development programmes, with a view to increasing awareness of traffic safety measures through the audio-visual and written media, educational curriculums, cooperation with relevant regional and international institutions, and allocation of the necessary budgets. It also called on them to participate in the activities that ESCWA would undertake, including the preparation of studies, regional workshops on good traffic safety practices and preparations for the international traffic week that was scheduled for 2007, and to participate effectively in any General Assembly discussions on the issue. The Executive Secretary was asked to report to the Commission on implementation of the resolution in 2006.

Statistics

The Commission had before it reports by the Executive Secretary, submitted in response to the Commission's 2003 requests [YUN 2003, p. 1027], on the participation of ESCWA member countries in the International Comparison Programme (ICP) [E/ESCWA/23/5(Part I)/Add.2/Supp.10] and the development of statistical work in the ESCWA region [E/ESCWA/23/5(Part I)/Add.2/Supp.9].

On 12 May [res. 262(XXIII)], the Commission, having also considered the 2004 recommendations of the ESCWA Statistical Committee [YUN 2004, p. 1029] and of the UN Statistical Commission (see p. 1368), called on member countries to adopt national statistical strategies aimed at providing the data and indicators necessary to measure progress made towards economic and social development goals, particularly the MDGs, by carrying out censuses and household surveys, including surveys on the workforce and family income and expenditure. They were also called on to issue, at least once every two years, a national statistical report showing the progress made towards the MDGs and providing economic and social indicators for that purpose, in order to assist ESCWA in updating its databases. The Commission requested member countries to mainstream ICP operations in their national statistical programmes and organizational structures in the form of independent units or as part of units that produced price statistics, in order to formulate a purchasing power parity indicator and price comparison figures. Countries were further called on to strengthen the capacities of their statistical bodies to conduct the sectoral surveys necessary to apply the bases for the preparation of national accounts in accordance with the 1993 System of National Accounts [YUN 1993, p. 1112]. Surveys should also be carried out on the unofficial sector. The Executive Secretary was asked to provide consultancy services to member countries in the area of economic, social and environmental statistics and to report on progress made in implementing the Commission's resolution in 2006.

Natural resources, energy and environment

The Commission had before it a report by the Executive Secretary [E/ESCWA/23/5(Part I)/Add.2/Supp.6] on measures it had taken in response to the Commission's 2003 resolution [YUN 2003, p. 1027] on cooperation between ESCWA members with regard to water resources and the establishment of the Arab network for the integrated management of water resources.

On 12 May [res. 255(XXIII)], the Commission asked the Executive Secretary to prepare a feasibility study on the establishment of a regional mechanism for building member countries' capacities to manage shared water resources and to submit it to the ESCWA Committee on Water Resources. The Executive Secretary was also asked to continue her support for activities and programmes relevant to the aims of the proposed mechanism and to report to the Commission in 2006.

Social development

The Committee on Social Development, at its fifth session (Beirut, 29-30 March) [E/ESCWA/SDD/2004/IG.1/12], reviewed reports on social development policies and programmes in the ESCWA region, focusing on: social policies; local development; population and development; urban development; housing; and social statistics and indicators. Its recommendations included, among other things, that member countries be called on to: appoint permanent focal points on integrated social policies and adopt measures for their implementation and follow-up; adopt the country profiles on the social situation prepared by ESCWA; make use of the ESCWA programme on building the capacities of workers, trainers and researchers in the local community development field; use the Regional Campaign on Secure Housing and Land Tenure and Good Urban Governance as a guide and work to achieve its aims; implement the Arab Decade for Persons with Disabilities, 2004-2013; adopt the internationally recognized statistical concepts, definitions and classifications and employ them in the collation and presentation of data and in making regional and international comparisons, and allocate resources for the national statistical apparatus to provide precise and reliable data for the formulation and monitoring of the implementation of development policies and programmes; and follow up activities aimed at monitoring progress towards the MDGs and building national capacities to enable member countries to prepare the indicators necessary to produce national reports. The Committee further recommended that the needs of local communities be investigated and solutions put forward to the problems that they faced. In that regard, civil society should be encouraged to cooperate with Government institutions, and youth should be encouraged to contribute.

On 12 May [res. 259(XXIII)], the Commission noted that developments in the area of social policy in ESCWA countries were not keeping pace with the speed of economic and technological developments at the global level. It requested member countries to appoint permanent focal points to discuss the integrated social policies programme and adopt appropriate measures for its implementation and follow-up; they should also implement the next stage of that programme, which required national coordination in order to formulate social policies appropriate to each country. The Executive Secretary was asked to present to member countries for adoption the national reports on social policies being prepared by the Commission, with the proviso that those reports should be updated and submitted in their amended form to the Committee on Social Development.

Women

The Commission had before it a report by the Executive Secretary on the first and second (2004) sessions [YUN 2004, p. 1030] of the ESCWA Committee on Women, which was established by the Economic and Social Council by resolution 2003/9 [YUN 2003, p. 1028]. The report also reviewed the activities of the ESCWA subprogramme on the advancement and empowerment of women.

On 12 May [res. 264(XXIII)], the Commission requested member countries to adopt policies that took into consideration gender issues and to put in place national strategies for the empowerment of women and the institutional frameworks for their implementation, with a view to mainstreaming women's issues into activities, policies and programmes. It called on member countries to intensify efforts to implement the Beirut Declaration on Arab Women Ten Years after Beijing: Call for Peace [YUN 2004, p. 1030], the outcomes of the forty-ninth session of the Commission on the Status of Women (see p. 1274) and those of the 2000 comprehensive review and evaluation [YUN 2000, p. 1084] of the Beijing Platform for Action [YUN 1995, p. 1170], and to prepare national reports on progress made and obstacles faced in that regard. The Executive Secretary was asked to submit a progress report in 2006.

Programme and organizational questions

The Commission had before it a report by the Executive Secretary on progress made during 2004 in implementing the 2004-2005 programme of work [E/ESCWA/23/5(Part I)/Add.1]. The report also indicated major factors that had influenced modifications to the programme of work and described the resulting changes.

On 12 May [res. 267(XXIII)], the Commission adopted the amendments made to the 2004-2005 programme of work and requested the Executive Secretary to follow up its implementation and, if necessary, include activities to address any changes that might take place in the ESCWA region. She was also asked to include information on any further amendments in the progress report to be distributed to member countries.

By other resolutions of the same date, the Commission adopted the draft programme budget for the 2006-2007 biennium [E/ESCWA/23/7] and requested the Executive Secretary to distribute it to member countries following its adoption by the General Assembly and to submit a report in 2006 on progress made in its implementation, describing any amendments [res. 266(XXIII)]; and adopted the recommendations contained in the reports of ESCWA's subsidiary bodies and those relating to the convening of subcommittee meetings in the 2006-2007 biennium and called on member countries to cooperate with ESCWA in ensuring that those recommendations were implemented [res. 268(XXIII)].

Cooperation with LAS

On 12 May [res. 261(XXIII)], the Commission, having considered the Executive Secretary's report on cooperation between ESCWA and the League of Arab States (LAS) [E/ESCWA/23/8], called for a strategic partnership to be forged between the two organizations based on the comparative advantages enjoyed by each. It requested the Executive Secretary to submit to LAS her views on means of developing cooperation in all economic and social sectors and to provide the Commission with her proposals and a report on the progress of the cooperation arrangements. The Commission urged Governments and donor agencies, international financial institutions, members of the UN system and the private sector to support joint projects between ESCWA and LAS members in the economic and social development fields.

ESCWA twenty-fourth session

In an April note [E/ESCWA/23/9], the ESCWA secretariat invited the Commission to review the timing of its sessions. It recalled that in 2003 the General Assembly, by resolution 58/269 [YUN 2003, p. 1395], had replaced the four-year medium-term plan with a two-year strategic framework. Given that new context, the secretariat was of the view that, in order for the Commission to be actively involved in the review and appraisal of the strategic frameworks for 2008-2009 and subsequent bienniums, it should consider meeting in even years; its twenty-fourth session would therefore be held in 2006 instead of 2007. The Commission approved the suggestion.

Chapter VI

Energy, natural resources and cartography

The development of energy solutions through the promotion of renewable energy sources and the conservation of natural resources were discussed in 2005 by several UN bodies, including the Commission on Sustainable Development, which completed its initial two-year work cycle on the theme: water, sanitation and human settlements.

The energy concerns of both developed and developing nations were the main focus of many UN activities in 2005. Renewable energy issues were discussed at a number of international dialogues, including the UN Symposium on Hydropower and Sustainable Development (October) and the International Renewable Energy Conference (November), both held in Beijing, China.

A 2005 highlight was the award of the Nobel Peace Prize to the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) and its Director General, Mr. Mohamed ElBaradei, for their efforts to prevent nuclear energy from being used for military purposes and to ensure that nuclear energy for peaceful purposes was used in the safest possible way. In his annual address to the General Assembly in October, the IAEA Director General said that nuclear energy was re-emerging in a way that few would have predicted.

After several years of planning, 2005 saw the beginning of the International Decade for Action, "Water for Life", 2005-2015. Several UN departments and agencies collaborated on programmes to develop better drinking water resources and to integrate water management solutions for all peoples. UN-Water, a UN system-wide mechanism, coordinated the efforts and defined a list of priorities for the Decade.

The Eighth United Nations Regional Cartographic Conference for the Americas, held in July/August, took action on the further development and dissemination of spatial data collection and on policy strategies to make cartographic data more accessible to all countries in the Americas.

Energy and natural resources

The Commission on Sustainable Development, at its thirteenth session (New York, 11-22 April) [E/2005/29] (see p. 917), considered the issue of natural resources, particularly safe and clean water resources, in line with its 2003 decision [YUN 2003, p. 1030] to focus on the overarching theme of water for its first two-year work cycle (2004-2005) and on energy for the second (2006-2007).

The Commission, at its high-level segment (20-22 April), discussed how to meet the Millennium Development Goals (MDGs) [YUN 2000, p. 52] that related to water, sanitation and human settlements. It agreed, among other things, that lack of financial resources was a main obstacle to achieving progress towards the agreed goals.

Documents before the Commission included the Chairman's summary of the Second International Forum on Partnerships for Sustainable Development (Marrakesh, Morocco, 21-23 March) [E/CN.17/2005/7], which was attended by stakeholders involved or interested in partnership initiatives, particularly those engaged in the day-to-day operations of existing water- or energy-related partnerships.

On 22 April, the Commission adopted a resolution on policy options and practical measures to expedite implementation in water, sanitation and human settlements (see p. 1130).

Also on 22 April, the Commission recommended to the Economic and Social Council the adoption of a draft decision approving the provisional agenda for the Commission's fourteenth (2006) session. The thematic cluster for the Commission's 2006/2007 implementation cycle would be: energy for sustainable development; industrial development; air pollution/atmosphere; and climate change. By decision 2005/229 of 20 July, the Council adopted the draft.

In preparation for the fourteenth session, a number of international meetings were held in 2005 on the subject of energy for development: the fifth meeting of the Global Forum on Sustainable Energy (Vienna, 11-13 May) [E/CN.17/2006/13]; the UN Symposium on Hydropower and Sustainable Development (Beijing, 27-29 October) [E/CN.17/2006/10]; and the International Renewable Energy Conference 2005 (Beijing, 7-8 November) [E/CN.17/2006/9].

World Solar Programme (1996-2005)

In response to General Assembly resolution 58/210 [YUN 2003, p. 1031], the Secretary-General submitted a July report [A/60/154] on the promotion of new and renewable sources of energy, including the culmination of the World Solar Programme (1996-2005). He provided an overview of recent trends and advances in the development and use of new and renewable sources of energy and of international programmes to advance the use of such energy sources. He also provided a summary of the Programme and of follow-up efforts on renewable sources of energy under the Johannesburg Plan of Implementation, adopted in 2002 at the World Summit on Sustainable Development [YUN 2002, p. 821].

The Secretary-General noted that, in recent years, the share of energy derived from renewable resources had grown and policymakers in many countries had taken steps to increase the utilization of those energy sources. Many countries had intensified research and development efforts in support of energy from renewable sources, including electricity supply using grid and off-grid means, wind, solar photovoltaic, biomass and biogas co-generation, hydropower, tidal and geothermal solutions. Markets for modern renewable energy technologies were expanding at an annual rate of some 30 per cent for wind energy and about 20 per cent for solar photovoltaics, which had also experienced significant cost reductions over the years. Nevertheless, the total share of commercial energy gained from renewable sources remained far below its economic potential.

With regard to the World Solar Programme, launched at the World Solar Summit (Harare, Zimbabwe, 16-17 June 1996), endorsed by the Assembly in resolution 53/7 [YUN 1998, p. 976] and implemented by the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO), the Secretary-General stated that UNESCO's contribution to the Programme's implementation included a series of capacity-building projects and initiatives aimed at disseminating relevant scientific knowledge and technology. UNESCO had also carried out a number of training activities for participants from developing countries, particularly in Africa. Although the Programme's initial plan comprised a vast array of proposed projects, the number of projects eventually funded did not meet expectations. Nevertheless, the Programme had raised global awareness of renewable energy sources.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December [meeting 68], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee [A/60/488/Add.6], adopted resolution 60/199 without vote [agenda item 52 (f)].

Promotion of new and renewable sources of energy, including the implementation of the World Solar Programme

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 53/7 of 16 October 1998, 54/215 of 22 December 1999, 55/205 of 20 December 2000, 56/200 of 21 December 2001 and 58/210 of 23 December 2003 on the promotion of new and renewable sources of energy, including the implementation of the World Solar Programme 1996-2005,

Recalling also the 2005 World Summit Outcome,

Noting that the World Solar Programme 1996-2005 made a contribution to raising awareness of the increased role that new and renewable sources of energy can play in the global energy supply,

Recalling the recommendations and conclusions contained in the Plan of Implementation of the World Summit on Sustainable Development ("Johannesburg Plan of Implementation") concerning energy for sustainable development,

Welcoming initiatives that aim to improve access to reliable, affordable, economically viable, socially acceptable and environmentally sound energy services for sustainable development in order to contribute to the achievement of the internationally agreed development goals, including those set out in the United Nations Millennium Declaration,

Emphasizing that the increased use and promotion of all forms of new and renewable energy for sustainable development, including solar-thermal, photovoltaic, biomass, wind, hydro, tidal, ocean and geothermal forms, could make a significant contribution towards the achievement of sustainable development and the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals,

Welcoming efforts by Governments and institutions that have embarked on policies and programmes that seek to expand the use of new and renewable energy for sustainable development, and recognizing the contributions of regional initiatives as well as of institutions in supporting the efforts of countries, in particular developing countries, in this respect,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Reaffirms that the Johannesburg Plan of Implementation is the intergovernmental framework for energy for sustainable development agreed to at the World Summit on Sustainable Development, and calls for its full implementation;

3. Emphasizes the need to intensify research and development in support of energy for sustainable development, which will require increased commitment on the part of all stakeholders, including Governments and the private sector, to deploy financial and human resources for accelerating research efforts;

4. Calls upon Governments, as well as relevant regional and international organizations and other relevant stakeholders, to combine, as appropriate, the increased use of renewable energy resources, more efficient use of energy, greater reliance on advanced energy technologies, including advanced and cleaner fossil fuel technologies, and the sustainable use of traditional energy resources, which could meet the growing need for energy services in the longer term to achieve sustainable development;

5. Encourages national and regional initiatives on new and renewable energies to promote access to energy, including new and renewable sources of energy, for the poorest and to improve energy efficiency and conservation by resorting to a mix of available technologies, taking into full account he provisions of the Johannesburg Plan of Implementation concerning energy for sustainable development;

6. Calls upon Governments to take further action to mobilize the provision of financial resources, technology transfer, capacity-building and the diffusion of environmentally sound technologies, as set out in the Johannesburg Plan of Implementation;

7. Welcomes the holding of the Beijing International Renewable Energy Conference 2005, organized by the Government of the People's Republic of China and supported by the Government of the Federal Republic of Germany, on 7 and 8 November 2005, in follow-up to the International Conference for Renewable Energies held in Bonn from 1 to 4 June 2004;

8. Takes note of ongoing activities related to the promotion of new and renewable sources of energy within the United Nations system;

9. Encourages the United Nations system to continue to raise awareness of the importance of energy for sustainable development, including the need for the promotion of new and renewable sources of energy and of the increased role they can play in the global energy supply, particularly in the context of sustainable development and poverty eradication;

10. Requests the Secretary-General, in his report on energy to the Commission on Sustainable Development at its fourteenth session, to present an overview of the implementation of the World Solar Programme 1996-2005;

11. Stresses that the wider use of available renewable sources of energy requires technology transfer and diffusion on a global scale, including through North-South and South-South cooperation;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its sixty-second session a report on the implementation of the present resolution;

13. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its sixty-second session, under the item entitled "Sustainable development", a sub-item entitled "Promotion of new and renewable sources of energy".

Nuclear energy

By an August note [A/60/204], the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly the 2004 report of the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA). Presenting the report to the Assembly on 31 October [A/60/PV.40], the IAEA Director General said that he viewed the recent award of the 2005 Nobel Peace Prize as recognition of IAEA's ceaseless efforts to ensure that nuclear energy was used exclusively for peaceful purposes and as an affirmation of the value and importance of multilateral approaches to addressing global security challenges. The Director General outlined the Agency's progress on many fronts, including nuclear safety and security, health, food and environment. He underscored the re-emergence of nuclear energy as a source of power, stating that the renewed consideration of nuclear energy was being shaped by fast-growing global energy demands, an increased emphasis on the security of energy supplies and the risk of climate change. Near-term nuclear energy growth was centred in Asia and Eastern Europe: the Russian Federation intended to double its capacity by 2020; China planned a nearly sixfold expansion by the same date; and India anticipated a tenfold increase by 2022. The Director General hoped that, in the future, there would be an explicit focus on the need for energy for development. He observed that the IAEA International Project on Innovative Nuclear Reactors and Fuel Cycles was working to ensure that the future needs of all countries, including developing countries, were considered when innovative nuclear systems were evaluated.

The Director General described IAEA's nuclear verification efforts in connection with the Democratic People's Republic of Korea (see p. 1565) and Iran. He noted that the lack of agreement at the Review Conference of the States parties to the 1968 Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons had spotlighted an unprecedented array of challenges to the non-proliferation and arms control regime (see p. 597).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 31 October [meeting 41], the General Assembly adopted resolution 60/6 [draft: A/60/L.13 & Add.1)] by recorded vote (137-1-0) [agenda item 84].

Natural resources

Water resources

The Commission on Sustainable Development, at its thirteenth session (New York, 11-22 April) [E/2005/29], completed its two-year work cycle on the thematic cluster of water, sanitation and human settlements, in accordance with Economic and Social Council resolution 2003/61 [YUN 2003, p. 842]. The Commission had before it the Secretary-General's report on freshwater management: policy options and possible actions to expedite implementation [E/CN.17/2005/2], in which he presented proposals to achieve the goals on water set in Agenda 21—a programme of action for sustainable development worldwide, adopted at the 1992 United Nations Conference on Environment and Development [YUN 1992, p. 672]—and the Johannesburg Plan of Implementation, adopted at the 2002 World Summit on Sustainable Development [YUN 2002, p. 821]. The report noted that, while some progress had been made towards the goals, strengthened donor commitment and attention from national and local governments were needed, backed by adequate budgetary and aid allocations and strategies to raise low-cost financing. Resources were needed for infrastructure, and also for strengthening decentralized water governance and institutional capacity-building.

The Commission also considered the Secretary-General's report on sanitation: policy options and possible actions to expedite implementation [E/CN.17/2005/3], which suggested ways to meet the sanitation target contained in the Johannesburg Plan of Implementation. The report noted that sanitation was beginning to be recognized as a national development priority that needed to be supported by adequate policies and budgetary allocations. Giving small-scale service providers easier access to credit and service contracts could contribute to expanding sanitation coverage.

Other documents before the Commission on the thematic cluster included the report of the Commission's Intergovernmental Preparatory Meeting (New York, 28 February–4 March)

[E/CN.17/2005/6], a note by the Secretariat on major groups' (mainly non-governmental organizations) priorities for action in water, sanitation and human settlements [E/CN.17/2005/5], and the Secretary-General's report on human settlements: policy options and possible actions to expedite implementation [E/CN.17/2005/4] (see p. 1165).

On 22 April [E/2005/29 (res. 13/1)], the Commission adopted a resolution on policy options and practical measures to expedite implementation in water, sanitation and human settlements and recommended that the Economic and Social Council transmit it to the High-level Meeting of the General Assembly (see p. 47). The Commission called on Governments and the UN system and invited international financial institutions and other international organizations to take action on a series of recommendations concerning access to basic water services and integrated water resources management; access to basic sanitation, sanitation and hygiene education, and wastewater collection, treatment and reuse; and integrated planning and management of human settlements, access to affordable land, housing and basic services, and employment and enterprise promotion. The resolution also contained recommendations on interlinkages and cross-cutting issues and international institutional arrangements for monitoring and follow-up of the Commission's decisions on water, sanitation and human settlements.

In response to General Assembly resolution 59/228 [YUN 2004, p. 1034], the Secretary-General submitted a July report [A/60/158] on the activities planned within the UN system for the International Decade for Action, "Water for Life", 2005-2015, proclaimed by the Assembly in resolution 58/217 [YUN 2003, p. 1034]. The report outlined the activities that were organized for the launch of the Decade on 22 March, initial actions at the regional level, and proposals for a public information strategy and a communications plan for raising awareness. It also contained recommendations for action to be taken during the course of the Decade.

UN-Water, the UN system-wide mechanism for water-related issues, was responsible for coordinating the activities for implementing the Decade by the UN system and non–UN partners. It had defined a group of thematic initiatives for its work over the Decade, including coping with water scarcity and pollution; sanitation, safe drinking water and health; gender mainstreaming in water and sanitation; integrated water resources management; transboundary issues; and disaster risk reduction.

The report also described Decade-related activities being undertaken by the Advisory Board on Water and Sanitation, established by the Secretary-General on World Water Day (22 March) 2004; the UN Inter-agency Task Force on Gender and Water; the Joint Monitoring Programme on water supply and sanitation; the Global Programme of Action for the Protection of the Marine Environment from Land-based Activities and associated programmes; UNESCO's International Hydrological Programme; the Water for African Cities and Water for Asian Cities programmes of the United Nations Human Settlements Programme (UN-Habitat); the United Nations International Strategy for Settlements Programme (UN-Habitat); the United Nations International Strategy for Disaster Reduction; regional initiatives being carried out by the five UN regional commissions; and assistance to country programmes. The report also described the communications strategy for the Decade and partnership initiatives.

In conclusion, the Secretary-General noted that Member States might wish to consider setting up national committees or designating focal points to facilitate and promote the Decade's activities. He also stated that special focus needed to be placed on Africa's water development and management and on gender, water and sanitation initiatives. Member States and national and international organizations were urged to make voluntary contributions to advance the Decade's goals, and interested stakeholders were encouraged to link their water-related activities to the Decade.

By decision 60/542 of 22 December, the General Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's report.

Cartography

UN Regional Cartographic Conference for the Americas

In accordance with Economic and Social Council decision 2001/232 [YUN 2001, p. 941], the Eighth United Nations Regional Cartographic Conference for the Americas was held in New York from 27 June to 1 July [E/CONF.96/3]. In July, an excerpt of the Conference report [E/2005/83] was submitted to the Council. The Conference provided a forum for government officials, scientists and experts from the Americas to report on programmes undertaken to develop spatial data infrastructures in the region and to discuss common problems, needs and experiences in cartography and geographical information. The Conference was organized into three technical committees that addressed strategy, policy, economic and institutional issues; spatial data infrastructures and their development in the Americas; and geospatial data collection, management and dissemination.

The Conference adopted and recommended to the Council for adoption 14 draft resolutions covering: the benefits of developing a spatial data infrastructure; a partnership approach in developing a spatial data infrastructure; training, education and spatial standards discussion; policy and reform; outreach and related areas; global mapping and second administrative level boundaries projects; Geocentric Reference System for the Americas project; satellite data; spatial data dissemination; funding issues; the proposed 2006 meeting on geospatial data infrastructure and information of the Americas for sustainable development; the recommendation for an interregional meeting to consider, among other things, common problems; the recommendation for the Ninth United Nations Regional Cartographic Conference for the Americas to be convened in 2009; and a vote of thanks to those who had provided substantive and other support to the Conference.

By decision 2005/231 of 20 July, the Council endorsed the recommendations contained in the excerpt from the Conference report.

Chapter VII

Environment and human settlements

In 2005, the United Nations and the international community continued to work towards protecting the environment through legally binding instruments and the activities of the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP).

The twenty-third session of the UNEP Governing Council/sixth Global Ministerial Environment Forum adopted the Bali Strategic Plan for Technology Support and Capacity-building and an updated UNEP water policy and strategy. The Governing Council also adopted decisions on strengthening environmental emergency response and developing disaster prevention, preparedness, mitigation and early-warning systems in the aftermath of the 2004 Indian Ocean tsunami; chemicals management; poverty and the environment; and gender equality in the field of the environment. A summary of discussions on the environmental underpinnings of the Millennium Development Goals, held during the session by ministers and delegation heads, was submitted by the Governing Council President as a contribution to the High-level Plenary Meeting of the General Assembly (2005 World Summit) in September.

The Millennium Ecosystem Assessment (MA), a four-year international assessment to evaluate the state of major ecosystems and their links with human well-being, was completed in 2005, and two MA reports were released. The Global International Waters Assessment, which studied international waters and causes of environmental problems in 66 water regions, was also concluded and several reports on its findings were published. A second International Workshop on the regular process for global reporting and assessment of the state of the marine environment, including socio-economic aspects, known as the Global Marine Assessment, was convened in June. In November, the Assembly endorsed the Workshop's conclusions and decided to launch an "assessment of assessments", to be completed within two years.

The Montreal Protocol to the 1992 United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change entered into force on 16 February; the first Conference of the Parties serving as the Meeting of the Parties to the Protocol was convened in November/December. The first meeting of the Conference of the Parties to the 2001 Stockholm Convention on Persistent Organic Pollutants was held in May.

The Assembly declared 2008 the International Year of Planet Earth and encouraged Member States, the UN system and other actors to take advantage of the Year to increase awareness of the importance of Earth sciences for the achievement of sustainable development and to promote action at the local, national, regional and international levels.

The United Nations Human Settlements Programme (UN-Habitat) continued to support the implementation of the 1996 Habitat Agenda, the Johannesburg Plan of Implementation of the 2002 World Summit on Sustainable Development and the Millennium Development Goals, with a focus on the Goal aimed at improving the lives of slum-dwellers. It supported local, national and regional human settlements development activities, including through the placement of Habitat Programme Managers in 32 countries. Among other measures, the Programme's Governing Council decided to accelerate the implementation of a cooperation framework with the World Bank Group and regional development banks, to increase resources and capacities for improving access to basic services for all and to strengthen the Slum Upgrading Facility of UN-Habitat.

Environment

UN Environment Programme

Governing Council/Ministerial Forum

The sixth Global Ministerial Environment Forum (GMEF), also serving as the twenty-third session of the Governing Council (GC) of the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP), was held at UNEP headquarters in Nairobi, Kenya, from 21 to 25 February [A/60/25]. On 25 February [dec. 23/12], the Governing Council decided to hold its ninth special session in Dubai, United Arab Emirates, from 7 to 9 February 2006 and its twenty-fourth session in Nairobi, from 5 to 9 February 2007, and approved the provisional agendas for those sessions.

Ministerial consultations (21-23 February) discussed the implementation of the internationally agreed development goals of the Millennium Declaration, also known as the Millennium Development Goals (MDGs) [YUN 2000, p. 51], including the MDGs on the eradication of extreme poverty and hunger, environmental sustainability, and the promotion of gender equality and the empowerment of women [ibid., p. 52]. A summary of the discussions [A/60/25/Add.1], prepared by the Governing Council President as a contribution to the High-level Plenary Meeting of the United Nations General Assembly (2005 World Summit) (see p. 47), contained recommendations addressed to the international community and UNEP for the accelerated and sustainable implementation of the three goals.

The Committee of the Whole (21-25 February) [UNEP/GC.23/11] considered assessment, monitoring and early warning: state of the environment (see p. 1135); international environmental governance (see p. 1134); cooperation and coordination matters (see p. 1139); and the UNEP programme of work (see p. 1135), the Environment Fund (see p. 1143) and administrative and other budgetary matters (ibid.).

On 27 July, the Economic and Social Council took note of the Governing Council's report on its twenty-third session (decision 2005/312).

Subsidiary body

In 2005, the Committee of Permanent Representatives, which was open to representatives of all UN Member States and members of specialized agencies, held an extraordinary meeting on 1 February [UNEP/CPR/90/3] and regular meetings on 15 March [UNEP/CPR/91/2], 9 June [UNEP/CPR/92/2], 12 September [UNEP/CPR/93/2] and 28 December [UNEP/CPR/94/2]. The Committee discussed, among other matters, preparations for the Governing Council's ninth (2006) special session, the fourteenth (2005) session of the Commission on Sustainable Development (see p.920) and the 2005 World Summit (see p. 47); implementation of UNEP's programme of work and the relevant decisions of the Council's eighth special session [YUN 2004, p. 1036] and its twenty-second [YUN 2003, p. 1036] and twenty-third (2005) sessions; UNEP relations with the United Nations Office at Nairobi (UNON); and the status of the Environment Fund.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December [meeting 68], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee [A/60/488], adopted resolution 60/189 without vote [agenda item 52].

International environmental governance

The Governing Council considered a report of the Executive Director on international environmental governance [UNEP/GC.23/6], which discussed progress achieved with regard to the universal membership of GC/GMEF (see below); the Bali Strategic Plan on Technology Support and Capacity-building (see p. 1135); strengthening UNEP's scientific base (see p. 1136) and UNEP financing (see p. 1143); multilateral environmental agreements (see p. 1145); and enhanced coordination across the UN system, including the Environmental Management Group (see p. below).

The report summarized the divergent views on the universal membership of GC/GMEF submitted by Governments participating in an international seminar on the future of UNEP governance, hosted by Sweden (Stockholm, 22-23 November 2004). Those views related to strengthening UNEP, decision-making, voting rights, and administrative costs, among other issues.

On 25 February [A/60/25 (dec. 23/1, section III)], the Governing Council decided to review further and consider the issue of universal membership at its ninth (2006) special session, with a view to providing inputs to the Secretary-General's report to the General Assembly at its sixty-first (2006) session. Also before the Council was a report of the Executive Director on the outcomes of intergovernmental meetings of relevance to GC/GMEF [UNEP/GC.23/4].

Environmental Management Group

The Environmental Management Group (EMG), an inter-agency advisory group set up in 1999 to coordinate UN system activities in addressing the major challenges in the UNEP work programme [YUN 1999, p. 974], held its tenth meeting in Geneva on 8 February.

The Executive Director, in a report on environmental governance [UNEP/GC.23/6], reported that, with the assistance of an independent expert in institutional arrangements, he had conducted a comprehensive assessment on the secretariat's location. The assessment, in the form of an EMG study, examined the mandate and other aspects of EMG and suggested that EMG should address interests and issues of common concern to all of its members and that the Group be provided with the resources commensurate with its system-wide responsibilities. An excerpt from the study was included in the Executive Director's report.

On 25 February [dec. 23/1, sec. VI], the Governing Council acknowledged the 2004 report on EMG's work [YUN 2004, p. 1039] and the assessment of the location of the EMG secretariat. In that regard, it called upon the Executive Director to discuss the issue with EMG members and the Committee of Permanent Representatives and report to the Council on the outcome of those discussions in 2007. The Executive Director was asked to continue to promote UN system-wide coordination on environmental activities through EMG's work.

Bali Strategic Plan on Technology Support and Capacity-building

UNEP action. On 25 February [dec. 23/1, sec. I], the Governing Council adopted the Bali Strategic Plan on Technology Support and Capacity-building, first adopted by the High-level Open-ended Intergovernmental Working Group on an Intergovernmental Strategic Plan for Technology Support and Capacity-building in 2004 [YUN 2004, p. 1040]. The Council requested the Executive Director to: give high priority to the effective and immediate implementation of the Bali Strategic Plan; undertake, as a matter of priority, the necessary steps regarding coordination mechanisms, as provided for in the Plan; work out a resource-mobilization strategy and coordinate with other funding agencies to ensure immediate and sustained implementation; and report, in 2006, on measures taken for the full implementation the Plan and on the further implementation thereof in 2007. Governments in a position to do so were invited to provide additional financial resources for the Plan's full implementation.

The Governing Council took further action with regard to the Bali Strategic Plan in a decision on its budget and work programme [dec. 23/3] (see p. 1143).

Report of Executive Director. A December note by the Executive Director [UNEP/GCSS.IX/INF/14] contained the report of the high-level consultation on South-South Cooperation in environment in the context of the Bali Strategic Plan (Jakarta, Indonesia, 23-24 November). A central objective of the consultation was to examine the scope, extent and potential of South-South cooperation in environment; explore the means to build on existing experiences, capacities and programmes; and improve the coordination and participation of countries in the South. The consultation considered the modalities of a strategy to promote South-South cooperation in environment in the context of the Bali Strategic Plan and made a series of recommendations towards that end. UNEP was requested to develop a comprehensive programme of action for South-South cooperation, taking into consideration a number of elements presented in the report, to be submitted to the Governing Council in 2007. UNEP should incorporate the recommendations into the Executive Director's report on the implementation of the Bali Strategic Plan for submission to the Governing Council in 2006. The Governing Council President concluded that the recommendations would be used as the road map and programme of actions to be undertaken by UNEP in collaboration with relevant international organizations, and would constitute essential elements in the operationalization of the Bali Strategic Plan.

UNEP activities

In his February policy statement [UNEP/GC.23/2], the Executive Director discussed the outcomes of major intergovernmental meetings dealing with environmental issues; international environmental governance; and the proposed 2006-2007 UNEP programme and budget. The twenty-third (2005) GC/GMEF session would stress the twin themes of implementation and placing environment clearly in the context of development. UNEP would also continue its efforts in its five areas of concentration: environmental information, assessment and early warning; enhanced coordination of environmental conventions and development of environmental policy instruments; freshwater; technology transfer and industry; and support to Africa. The Bali Strategic Plan (see above) provided a blueprint for UNEP to assist in moving to a more stable future and its operationalization and adequate funding would be a lasting legacy of the twenty-third (2005) GC/GMEF session.

Monitoring and assessment

In response to a 2004 Governing Council decision [YUN 2004, p. 1041], the Executive Director submitted a report [UNEP/GC.23/3] evaluating the conclusions and recommendations of the intergovernmental consultation on strengthening UNEP's scientific base, also known as the Science Initiative. It proposed the development of a coherent, dynamic assessment framework, tentatively called "Environment Watch", for assessing the global environmental situation and providing policy-relevant recommendations to decision makers at all levels. The report also described priority actions for strengthening UNEP's scientific base, including efforts to: map the assessment landscape; design the fourth Global Environment Outlook report (see p. 1142); conduct thematic assessments; promote environmental early warning, observing and monitoring; strengthen regional dimensions of assessment, monitoring and early warning activities; promote the use of environmental indicators; revitalize networking structures for information and data management; and promote links between the ongoing multi-stakeholder consultative process to strengthen UNEP's scientific base, and the intergovernmental strategic plan for technology support and capacity-building (see p. 1135).

A note by the Executive Director [UNEP/GC.23/INF/18 & Corr.1] contained the evaluation of the conclusions and recommendations of the intergovernmental consultation on strengthening UNEP's scientific base and UNEP's response thereon; described in greater detail the characteristics and components of the proposed "Environment Watch" framework; outlined plans to revitalize networking structures to support the new framework; and provided more detailed information on proposed actions by UNEP with respect to environmental indicators as a key element of the framework. Other annexes provided information on ongoing thematic assessments undertaken by UNEP in collaboration with other partners; the regional dimensions of assessment and early warning activities; a progress report on the Global Assessment of the State of the Marine Environment (see p. 1158); a summary of the outcome of the First Plenary Meeting of the International Assessment of Agricultural Science and Technology for Development (Nairobi, Kenya, 30 August 2004); and background information on the ad hoc intergovernmental Group on Earth Observations and the Global Earth Observations System of Systems.

A further note by the Executive Director [UNEP/GC.23/INF/15] assessed the collection of data on environmental statistics conducted jointly by UNEP and the United Nations Statistics Division in 2004. It also detailed information on proposed actions by UNEP with respect to environmental statistics as a key element of the proposed new "Environment Watch" framework.

Governing Council action. On 25 February [dec. 23/1, sec. II], the Governing Council requested the Executive Director to update his proposal for the "Environment Watch" framework, taking into account the recommendations of the intergovernmental consultation on strengthening UNEP's scientific base (Nairobi, Kenya, 14-15 January 2004) [UNEP/SI/IGC/3] and the outcome of the intergovernmental and multi-stakeholder consultation on the fourth Global Environment Outlook (Nairobi, 19-20 February 2005) [UNEP/DEWA/GEO/IGC.1/2] (see p. 1142), and to submit that update to Governments for their views, so as to enable the submission of a report to the Governing Council in 2006. It invited Governments in a position to do so and other development partners to provide funding, including through in-kind support for the participation of national scientific experts and institutions, particularly from developing countries and countries with economies in transition, for the further strengthening UNEP's scientific base.

Support to Africa

In a December report on the state of the environment and UNEP's contributions to addressing substantive environmental challenges [UNEP/GCSS.IX/10], the Executive Director said that the preparation of the second Africa Environment Outlook (AEO-2) report had been completed. AEO-2 highlighted the central role Africa's environment continued to play in sustaining livelihoods, and discussed opportunities for Africans to use their environmental resources to reduce absolute poverty. Its recommendations were adopted unanimously by African environment ministers at the second Partners' Conference on the Environment Initiative of the New Partnership for Africa's Development (NEPAD) (Dakar, Senegal, 15-16 March).

On 10 January, UNEP and the NEPAD secretariat signed a three-year agreement (2005-2008) aimed at enhancing the human and institutional capacities of the subregional African Economic Communities for the implementation of the NEPAD Environment Initiative. UNEP and the African Institute for Capacity Development jointly organized a technical workshop (Nairobi, Kenya, 21-25 November), which trained participants in environmental impact assessments, geographical information systems and tools, synergies and integrated reporting and coordinated response. From April to July, UNEP, in partnership with the NEPAD secretariat, the African Regional Economic Communities and the African Ministerial Conference on the Environment organized consultative meetings (Algeria, Botswana, Djibouti, Gabon, Nigeria) to review the first draft of the NEPAD subregional environmental action plan.

In 2005, 12 UNEP/Global Environment Facility (GEF) projects devoted exclusively to Africa were approved, with total funding of $106.1 million.

Water policy and strategy

Based on the discussions of the Committee of Permanent Representatives to UNEP and further informal consultations on UNEP's updated water policy and strategy, submitted in 2004 [YUN 2004, p. 1042], the Executive Director, in February [UNEP/GC.23/3/Add.5/Rev.1 & Add 1], submitted a revised (2005) version of the updated policy and strategy together with an explanatory note on the revisions. The section of the strategy dealing with the environmentally sound management of freshwater was substantially amended to provide a better indication of UNEP's intended freshwater-related activities for the 2005-2007 period, and the link between UNEP's work and that of other UN water-related activities and programmes. The revised text also included a new section dealing with coral reefs (see p. 1159).

On 25 February [dec. 23/2], the Governing Council adopted the 2005 updated water policy and strategy as a general framework and guidance for UNEP's activities in the field of water and sanitation for the period 2005-2007. It recommended that the Executive Director, in reviewing the updated policy and strategy, take into account ecosystem approaches to integrated water resource management; emerging concepts; global assessment and monitoring; innovative instruments; participation and water governance; support to regional and subregional water bodies; groundwater; the final report of the World Commission on Dams; and conceptual precision in the use of the terms "global waters", "international waters" and "transboundary waters" applied to oceans, seas and inland bodies of water. The Executive Director should, in respect of the updated water policy and strategy, monitor its implementation, intensify collaborative activities with Governments, organizations and agencies in that regard, and circulate a report on the implementation and resource allocation before the ninth (2006) GC/GMEF special session. He should also support developing countries and countries with economies in transition through UNEP's implementation of activities under the policy and strategy and ensure that it contributed to the achievement of the MDGs [YUN 2000, p. 51] and the Johannesburg Plan of Implementation of the 2002 World Summit on Sustainable Development [YUN 2002, p. 821]. He should revise, in collaboration with the United Nations Human Settlements Programme (UN-Habitat) and other agencies, the Strategic Action Plan on Municipal Wastewater [YUN 2002, p. 1055] of the Global Programme of Action (GPA) for the Protection of the Marine Environment from Land-based Activities (see p. 1158), for consideration by the Governing Council in its review of the updated water policy and strategy in 2007. The Executive Director was also asked to facilitate the further development of the UNEP Global Environment Monitoring System on Water to ensure its growing role in the development of water-quality indicators to support the achievement of the water-related MDGs and the goals contained in the Johannesburg Plan of Implementation; and its continued provision of inputs to the UN World Water Assessment Programme and its World Water Development Report. The Council asked the Executive Director to organize the second GPA Intergovernmental Review Meeting and urged Governments to support the costs associated with the meeting. It also asked the Executive Director to ensure that UNEP in its environment-related water and sanitation activities, took into account the work of Governments, other organizations, multilateral environmental agreements and UN agencies, as well as the UNEP/United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) memorandum of understanding (see p. 1141), in order to avoid duplication and promote synergies. The Council requested that a draft updated water policy and strategy be circulated in time for the ninth (2006) GC/GMEF special session, and a final draft no later than September 2006 for consideration by the Council in 2007. Governments, intergovernmental bodies and international organizations were asked to respond positively to the Executive Director's resource-mobilization efforts to support implementation of the water policy and strategy, particularly by the relevant subprogrammes for 2005-2007. The Executive Director was asked to report to the Council in 2007.

The atmosphere

In 2005, UNEP assessed the impact of aerosol pollution on regional climate, the hydrological cycle, agriculture and human health in the Asia and Pacific region. The Atmospheric Brown Cloud project continued to study a three kilometre-deep pollution blanket that formed over parts of Asia during the monsoon season. UNEP capacity-building activities included the establishment of three observatory stations and training programmes for Asian scientists, and a team to assess the impact of the atmospheric brown cloud on agriculture, water resources and public health.

In June, UNEP, along with the World Bank's Community Development Carbon Fund and the UNEP Risoe Centre on Energy, Climate and Sustainable Development, launched the Carbon Finance for Sustainable Energy in Africa initiative. The $1.2 million, one-year project was designed to build public and private sector capacity in five sub-Saharan African countries to identify, develop and implement projects under the Clean Development Mechanism of the 1992 United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change [YUN 1992, p. 681]. UNEP was implementing a $2.5 million project in the Asia and the Pacific region to reduce industrial greenhouse gas emissions.

Environment and sustainable development

In response to a 2004 Governing Council decision [YUN 2004, p. 1043], the Executive Director submitted, in January [UNEP/GC.23/3/Add.6/Rev.1], an updated report on the outcome of the International Meeting to Review the Implementation of the 1994 Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States (SIDS) (Barbados Programme of Action) [YUN 1994, p. 783] (Port Louis, Mauritius, 10-14 January), which adopted the Mauritius Declaration and Strategy for the Further Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States (see p.946). The report examined UNEP's mandate for SIDS-related activities and UNEP's contributions to the Review Meeting and follow-up activities.

In preparation for the review of the Programme of Action, UNEP provided SIDS with substantive and financial support for the preparation of national assessment reports, the organization of thematic workshops, participation in regional preparatory meetings and the elaboration and dissemination of technical reports. Together with partners, UNEP organized several side events with direct links to the Meeting, and was a major actor in the elaboration of the Mauritius Strategy and the Programme of Action. In terms of follow-up action, further attention would be paid within the UNEP programmatic areas during the 2004-2005 and 2006-2007 biennia to several elements of the Strategy, including good governance and South-South cooperation in capacity-building, disaster management and other environmental issues. UNEP would renew its cooperation with the South Pacific Regional Environment Programme; strengthen cooperation with the Atlantic, Indian Ocean, Mediterranean and South China Seas group of States; and link its cooperation with the Atlantic and Indian Ocean small island developing States with the NEPAD Environment Initiative. In the aftermath of the 2004 Indian Ocean tsunami disaster [YUN 2004, p. 952], it would concentrate on assessing damage to coastlines and coral reefs and on identifying restoration measures. In the Caribbean, UNEP's work would be framed within the context of a Caribbean small island developing States programme. The report also contained updated information on modalities for the effective implementation of the recommendations contained in the 2004 Governing Council decision on SIDS [ibid., p. 1043].

Governing Council action. On 25 February [dec. 23/5], the Council noted the outcomes of the International Meeting and requested the Executive Director to continue strengthening UNEP's SIDS-related activities and to rationalize UNEP's delivery in the Pacific, the Atlantic, the Indian Ocean, the South China Seas and the Caribbean regions. He should also ensure that UNEP's SIDS-related activities contributed to the implementation of the Mauritius Strategy and report to the Council in 2007.

Commission on Sustainable Development action. The Commission on Sustainable Development, at its thirteenth session (New York, 11-22 April) [E/2005/29], considered the thematic cluster for its 2004/2005 implementation cycle in water, sanitation and human settlements, in accordance with Economic and Social Council resolution 2003/61 [YUN 2003, p. 842]. On 22 April [E/2005/29 (res. 13/1)], it adopted a resolution on policy options and practical measures to expedite implementation in water and sanitation (see p. 1129) and human settlements (see p. 1165).

Follow-up to World Summit on Sustainable Development (2002)

A report of the Executive Director [UNEP/GC.23/5] contained an overview of recent UNEP activities contributing to the implementation of the outcomes of the 2002 World Summit on Sustainable Development [YUN 2002, p. 821] with regard to water, sanitation and human settlements. It examined UNEP's contribution to the Commission on Sustainable Development; to poverty, gender and environment; technology support and capacity-building; regional support; international environmental governance; and other areas of progress.

On 25 February [dec. 23/10], the Governing Council requested the Executive Director to enhance UNEP's activities in all regions to promote understanding of the linkages between poverty and the environment, and assist Governments to integrate environmental decision-making into social and economic policy on poverty eradication, in accordance with UNEP's mandate and in line with its programme of work.

Policy and advisory services

Trade and the environment

In 2005, UNEP participated in sessions of the World Trade Organization (WTO) Committee on Trade and Environment. In cooperation with the Worldwide Fund for Nature, UNEP convened a high-level ministerial dialogue and a technical workshop on fisheries subsidies at the sixth WTO Ministerial Conference (Hong Kong, China, 13-18 December) (see p. 1041). It launched a four-year initiative on integrated assessment of trade-related policies and biodiversity to support the 1992 Convention on Biological Diversity [YUN 1992, p. 638].

Coordination and cooperation

Business and industry

In 2005, UNEP finalized a training package on the Global Compact Environmental Principles, which was launched at the Global Compact Summit (Shanghai, China, 30 November–1 December). UNEP continued its involvement in the Global Reporting Initiative (GRI), a multi-stakeholder process and independent institution launched in 2002 [YUN 2002, p. 1038] to develop and disseminate globally applicable, sustainable reporting guidelines. It participated in expert group meetings to develop the third revised version of the GRI guidelines [ibid.] for 2006. UNEP also released the first new tool developed by the Global e-Sustainability Initiative to help companies introduce their social and environmental expectations and engage with factory-level management of their supply chains.

Environmental emergencies

On 25 February [dec. 23/7], the Governing Council noted efforts to develop a five-pillar strategy for responding to the 2004 Indian Ocean tsunami disaster [YUN 2004, p. 952], in close coordination with the UN Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs (OCHA) and Governments of affected countries. It supported the efforts of Governments and the international community to develop a worldwide early-warning system for natural and human-induced disasters, taking into consideration the framework of the International Strategy for Disaster Reduction (ISDR) [YUN 1999, p. 859]. It invited Governments and UN agencies, funds and programmes to continue cooperating with UNEP and OCHA through the Joint UNEP/OCHA Environment Unit (see below) in providing emergency assistance to countries, in particular developing countries facing environmental emergencies and natural disasters with environmental impacts. The Council also invited Governments and relevant institutions to provide extrabudgetary resources for technical cooperation and capacity-building, within the context of the Bali Strategic Plan for Technology Support and Capacity-building, adopted by the Council in February (see p. 1135), for strengthening national- and local-level capacity for coping with the environmental aspects of hazard and risk reduction, early warning, preparedness, response and mitigation. The Executive Director should continue to cooperate with the Governments of countries affected by the Indian Ocean tsunami, the scientific community and other UN bodies, in providing expertise to support emergency environmental planning and assistance; assessing environmental impacts of the tsunami and any subsequent risks to human health and livelihoods; promoting the integration of environmental considerations into wider mitigation, rehabilitation and reconstruction efforts; promoting international cooperation in the use of renewable energy technologies, particularly in reconstruction efforts; and supporting short- and long-term environmental restoration and management. He should also support the Intergovernmental Oceanographic Commission in coordinating UN efforts to establish the tsunami early-warning system for the Indian Ocean and South-East Asia regions and other high-risk areas. The Council asked the Executive Director to cooperate closely with Governments and relevant international organizations and inter-agency mechanisms, ISDR, OCHA and the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) to promote the environmental components of such systems, including by making use of local observations and indigenous knowledge, and by assisting countries in developing strategies for enhancing ecosystems that mitigated the impact of tsunami and other disasters. The Executive Director was further asked to continue developing, in close consultation with Governments, relevant international institutions and secretariats of multilateral environment agreements, an environmental approach to the identification and assessment of areas potentially at risk from disasters, and guidelines outlining procedures and methodologies for environmental assessments of disasters; and to report to the Council in 2006.

Report of Executive Director. The Executive Director submitted a December report [UNEP/GCSS.IX/5] on environmental emergency response and disaster prevention, preparedness, mitigation and early-warning systems. The report summarized UNEP's assistance to the countries affected by the 2004 Indian Ocean tsunami; highlighted the activities of the Joint UNEP/OCHA Environment Unit; and noted UNEP's continuing role within the United Nations International Strategy for Disaster Reduction in reducing disaster vulnerability and implementing the Hyogo Framework for Action 2005-2015, adopted by the World Conference on Disaster Reduction (Kobe, Hyogo, Japan, 18-22 January) (see p. 1015).

In a joint workshop (Nairobi, Kenya, 31 October and 1 November), OCHA and UNEP reaffirmed their determination to enhance the international community's ability to assist countries affected by, and vulnerable to, natural disasters and environmental emergencies, and to strengthen further their collaboration through the Joint Unit. UNEP would continue to provide technical expertise to the UN system and affected countries to ensure that environmental issues were integrated into disaster response and post-disaster recovery and reconstruction plans.

In response to requests from Indonesia, Maldives, Seychelles, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Thailand and Yemen, UNEP established the Asian Tsunami Disaster Task Force (ATDTF) and deployed nearly 30 environmental experts to the countries affected by the Indian Ocean tsunami to assist environmental authorities in assessing damage and reconstruction needs. A preliminary report entitled "After the Tsunami—Rapid Environmental Assessment", containing a summary of the main impact and recovery needs, was released on 22 February. UNEP also provided expertise to support environmental assessments, strengthen the capacity of environmental authorities, promote sound environmental solutions and provide management tools for integrating environmental factors into recovery and reconstruction plans. It supported the implementation of environmental rehabilitation and recovery activities in Indonesia, Maldives, Sri Lanka and Thailand. In conjunction with ATDTF and GPA, the Regional Organization for the Conservation of the Environment of the Red Sea and Gulf of Aden hosted a meeting on coastal zone rehabilitation management for the tsunami-affected region (Cairo, 17 February), which adopted 12 guiding principles for environmentally-sound coastal rehabilitation and reconstruction, known as the Cairo Principles. As a follow-up to the Cairo meeting, the GPA coordinating office mobilized resources to support national-level dialogue in the Seychelles, Sri Lanka and Thailand. Through the flash appeal on strengthening early-warning systems in tsunami-affected countries, which was launched in January (see p. 1024), UNEP assisted Governments in building their capacity for early warning and disaster risk reduction. In February, UNEP organized a technical meeting on debris and waste management, as part of its contribution to the United Nations Post-tsunami Waste Management Plan. In Indonesia, Maldives and Sri Lanka, UNEP was helping build capacity to guide the reconstruction process and monitor the environmental situation, and to conduct environmental impact screening of reconstruction activities and strategic environmental assessments of proposed plans and programmes.

In response to the South Asia earthquake of 8 October (see p. 1034), the Joint UNEP/OCHA Environment Unit deployed two United Nations Disaster Assessment and Coordination (UNDAC)-trained environmental experts with UNDAC teams to Islamabad, Mansehra and Muzaffarabad, Pakistan. The teams identified urgent environmental needs and recommended the immediate deployment of additional assistance in the areas of waste management, deforestation and landslides. With support from Sweden and Switzerland, the Joint Unit deployed two waste management experts to ensure that waste management was fully integrated into the response phase, especially in the areas of water and sanitation, camp management and health. In mid-October, UNEP was invited to contribute to the UN post-earthquake early recovery needs assessment and to lead the environment sector. At the request of Pakistan's Ministry of Environment, UNEP, in cooperation with OCHA, compiled a preliminary environmental assessment report, launched on 19 November in Islamabad, which was used to promote immediate recovery and meet longer-term environmental needs. Also in collaboration with the Ministry, UNEP was designing an environmental recovery programme.

Other activities of the Joint UNEP/OCHA Unit included interventions concerning forest fires in Indonesia and Peru; risk and needs assessments regarding a natural dam for retaining Lake Nyos in Cameroon, which was in danger of collapse; and floods and mudslides in Guatemala caused by Hurricane Stan. The Joint Unit also led a multi-stakeholder capacity-building mission to Iran in July to assist in the development of an environmental emergency centre; developed a chapter on environmental emergencies as part of the UNDAC Field Handbook; and facilitated, with the Swedish Rescue Services Agency, the North Atlantic Treaty Organization Partnership for Peace international course on environmental disaster operations. The Joint Unit facilitated training on secondary environmental impacts during natural disaster response at the UNDAC induction course for Asia, held in Singapore in August and September.

The sixth meeting of the Advisory Group on Environmental Emergencies (AGEE), convened jointly by UNEP and OCHA (Geneva, 22-24 June), discussed the UNEP Strategic Framework on Emergency Prevention, Preparedness, Assessment, Mitigation and Response, as well as the environmental response to the 2004 Indian Ocean tsunami. The UNEP Awareness and Preparedness for Emergencies at the Local Level (APELL) programme was strengthened as a key vehicle for local level disaster-related work. To further promote the APELL process, UNEP was revisiting, adapting and developing new tools and methods to repackage it as a multi-hazard disaster reduction programme. Pursuant to ISDR findings, UNEP initiated the establishment of the Working Group on Environment and Disaster Risk Reduction, which aimed to foster understanding of environmental concerns and integrate them into the implementation of the Hyogo Framework for Action.

Global Environment Facility

The Global Environment Facility (GEF), a joint programme of UNDP, UNEP and the World Bank, established in 1991 [YUN 1991, p. 505] to help solve global environmental problems, was the designated financial mechanism for the 1992 Convention on Biological Diversity [YUN 1992, p. 683] (see p. 1148), the 1992 United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change [ibid., p. 681] (see p. 1146), and the 1994 United Nations Convention to Combat Desertification [YUN 1994, p. 944] (see p. 1150), and served as the interim financial mechanism for the 2001 Stockholm Convention on Persistent Organic Pollutants (POPs) [YUN 2001, p. 971] (see p. 1162).

At the end of 2005, the cumulative UNEP/GEF work programme was financed to $1.1 billion, including $529 million in GEF resources, for activities in 153 countries. Through GEF enabling activities related to biodiversity, climate change, POPs and capacity-building needs assessment for global environmental management, UNEP assisted 139 countries in meeting their obligations to the global environmental conventions and building capacity to implement them.

Fifty new UNEP/GEF initiatives were approved in 2005, with funding of $325.8 million, including $96.8 million in GEF grant financing.

Memorandum of understanding

On 5 January [UNEP/GC.23/INF/13], UNEP signed a memorandum of understanding (MOU) with UNDP, by which the two Programmes would inform each other of their respective capacity development and other initiatives and actively seek mutual involvement. The MOU built on existing collaborative arrangements between them and sought to further enhance effectiveness and avoid duplication.

Participation of civil society

Under its Tunza strategy (2003-2008) for the engagement and involvement of young people in environmental issues [YUN 2002, p. 1040], UNEP organized the Children's World Summit for the Environment (Aichi, Japan, 26-29 July), which brought together 600 children between the ages of 10 and 14 from 65 countries. The Summit, part of the 2005 World Exposition (Aichi, Japan, 25 March–25 September), explored how to better involve children in implementing decisions from the 1992 Conference on Environment and Development [YUN 1992, p. 670] and the 2002 World Summit on Sustainable Development [YUN 2002, p. 821]. Among the outcomes of the Children's World Summit were a declaration of commitments by participants and a petition challenging world leaders to set examples for sustainable development and create and enforce laws to improve efficiency in the production, consumption and conservation of energy.

The second Tunza International Youth Conference (Bangalore, India, 12-18 October), was organized by UNEP and India's Centre for Environmental Education (CEE) to discuss the MDGs [YUN 2000, p. 51] and cooperation among youth organizations. The Conference brought together 150 young adults aged 15 to 24, who shared experiences on community-based environmental action and developed joint strategies to promote environmental protection. Conference outcomes included individual commitments by participants, the establishment of partnership projects and model action plans for youth organizations, and a CEE international internship programme.

UNEP and the Global Sports Alliance co-organized the Sport Summit for the Environment (Nagoya, Japan, 30-31 July), which was also part of the 2005 World Exposition. UNEP and the International Olympic Committee organized the sixth World Conference on Sport and the Environment (Nairobi, Kenya, 9-11 November), which highlighted the link between sport, peace and the environment. The Declaration of the Conference called on the world of sport to identify and share examples of best practice in providing leadership and training in achieving peace and sustainable development through sport.

The sixth Global Civil Society Forum (Nairobi, 19-20 February) [UNEP/GCS/6/1] discussed draft Governing Council decisions; the UNEP programme of work and national committees; civil society engagement in GC/GMEF; and the aftermath of the 2004 Indian Ocean tsunami (see p. 1024).

A January note by the Executive Director [UNEP/GC.23/INF/16] contained the global civil society statement to the twenty-third (2005) session of GC/GMEF. A number of statement by regional civil society organizations from the African, Asia and the Pacific, European and Central Asian, Latin America and the Caribbean, North American, and West Asian regions were submitted also to the Forum [UNEP/GC.23/INF/16/Add.1-6].

Cooperation with UN-Habitat

A January report [UNEP/GC.23/INF/22] prepared jointly by the Executive Directors of UNEP and UN-Habitat described cooperation between the two organizations in the areas of assessment; policy; development and implementation of joint initiatives; cooperation in Africa, Europe, Asia and the Pacific and Latin America and the Carribean region; and opportunities for future cooperation.

Gender and the environment

Governing Council action. On 25 February [dec. 23/11], the Governing Council adopted a four-part decision on gender equality in the field of the environment. With regard to equal participation in decision-making, the Governing Council invited Governments to promote women's participation in environmental decision-making at all levels, with the aim of achieving broad gender balance. It encouraged the Executive Director to work with other UN agencies to assist Governments in promoting the equal participation of women and men in policy formulation, decision-making, implementation, monitoring and reporting on sustainable development; the sharing of good examples of gender-sensitive environmental initiatives; and the development of a mentorship programme to encourage young women to take an active role in environmental policy formulation and decision-making. He should also enhance the development and dissemination of gender-disaggregated analyses, and data and information on UNEP issues and activities, and strengthen further the involvement of women in those activities.

On the issue of gender mainstreaming in environmental policies and programmes, the Council called on the Executive Director to develop and promote gender-equality criteria for the implementation of programmes and to apply the UNEP gender-sensitivity guidelines. In the implementation of the Bali Strategic Plan on Technology Support and Capacity-building [YUN 2004, p. 1040], the Executive Director should take into account the Plan's objective with regard to gender-mainstreaming and the participation of women in environmental decision-making [ibid.]. He was also asked to give an account of lessons learned about gender-related aspects of environmental issues in conflict situations and to apply the conclusions drawn from them to UNEP's post-conflict assessment work.

As to assessing the effects of environmental policies on women, the Council requested the Executive Director, in collaboration with UNDP, to assist Governments in building capacity for gender mainstreaming in the context of the Bali Strategic Plan; collaborate with scientific institutions to promote research-exchange programmes on gender and the environment as an input to the United Nations Decade of Education for Sustainable Development (2005-2014), proclaimed by the General Assembly in resolution 57/254 [YUN 2002, p. 826], and work with the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination Against Women and other relevant human rights bodies in identifying lessons learned on gender-related aspects of environmental issues.

With regard to implementation, the Council invited Governments, in accordance with its 1999 decision on women in environment and development [YUN 1999, p. 979], to designate gender focal points and to notify the Executive Director thereof, and involve all stakeholders in their gender-equality and environment-related activities. The Executive Director was invited to explore options, in consultation with Governments, for developing an action plan for gender mainstreaming within UNEP's work, to integrate further gender-equality and environment activities into the Programme's work, communicate the current decision to the United Nations Commission on the Status of Women (see p. 1274) and report to the Council in 2007.

UNEP activities. The creation of a Gender and Environment Unit within UNEP's Major Groups and Stakeholders Branch in July 2005, strengthened women's capacity to participate in and shape environmental policy and action at all levels. Gender equality was a cross-cutting priority in all UNEP activities, and UNEP was systematically integrating gender perspectives into its programme design and implementation, along with measurable goals and indicators. The Capacity Building of Women for Energy and Water Management in the Himalayas project, conducted in Bhutan, India and Nepal, aimed to empower women to meet their water and energy needs.

General Assembly issues

In January [UNEP/GC.23/INF/3], the Executive Director provided information on the issues arising from resolutions adopted by the General Assembly in 2004 that called for action by, or were of relevance to, UNEP.

Global Environment Outlook

A February note by the Executive Director [UNEP/DEWA/GEO/IGC.1/2] addressed key aspects of the preparation, by 2007, of the fourth comprehensive Global Environment Outlook (GEO) report, as mandated by the Governing Council in 2003 [YUN 2003, p. 1039]. The note contained suggested elements for a proposed statement by the Global Intergovernmental and Multi-Stakeholder Consultation on the fourth GEO (Nairobi, Kenya, 19-20 February), reflecting its conclusions and recommendations on the GEO report's scope and process, and background information on the GEO process, the mandate for the report and its role in strengthening UNEP's scientific base. The note also outlined the proposed process, scope and overall structure of the fourth GEO report, together with proposed key questions to be considered by experts within the assessment process.

On 25 February [dec. 23/6], the Governing Council acknowledged the findings of the GEO Yearbook 2004-2005 [YUN 2004, p. 1048], published in February, and welcomed its focus on gender, poverty and environment. It called on Governments and intergovernmental organizations to mainstream gender considerations into their relevant environmental policies, plans, programmes and activities, in particular through promoting: gender-balanced participation in environmental assessments, monitoring, policy and decision making; gender perspectives in the design of assessment, monitoring and early-warning processes and identifying priority environment-related data sets for gender disaggregation; and gender dimensions in the formulation of environmental policies, decisions and actions. The Council decided that the feature focus of the 2005-2006 GEO Yearbook should be energy and air pollution, which were also the corresponding thematic cluster of issues for the programme of work of the Commission on Sustainable Development for 2006-2007 (see p. 920). It noted the importance of environmental management in controlling emerging and re-emerging infectious diseases; in that connection, it called on Governments to promote cooperation between health and environmental authorities and requested the Executive Director to keep the human health aspects of environmental change under review in cooperation with the scientific community and relevant international organizations, in particular the World Health Organization (WHO). The Council noted emerging scientific evidence relating to global climate change and its impacts and encouraged the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change (see p. 1154) to take such evidence into account in its fourth assessment report. It encouraged Governments, the private sector and civil society to continue to address the serious challenges of global climate change, including through the implementation of international agreements. Noting the environmental indicators presented in the GEO Yearbook and the cooperation between the Executive Director and the United Nations Statistics Division on environment statistics, the Council called on Governments to undertake national networking for data collection and dissemination, provide data of high quality and credibility for GEO Yearbook indicators, and respond to the United Nations Statistics Division/UNEP questionnaire on environment statistics. It invited Governments and international organizations to support capacity-building for data collection and management in support of the GEO Yearbook environmental indicators and for the broader collaboration between the United Nations Statistics Division and UNEP. The Executive Director was asked to establish a process for developing the fourth GEO report as an integrated assessment of the global environment. Governments and relevant institutions were called upon to provide extrabudgetary resources for technical cooperation and capacity-building.

UNEP secretariat

OIOS audit and inspection services

The Secretary-General submitted, in September [A/60/346], the report of the Office of Internal Oversight Services (OIOS) for the period from 1 July 2004 to 30 June 2005, which highlighted OIOS reports submitted to UNEP programme managers on: audit of the secretariat of the Convention on the Conservation of Migratory Species of Wild Animals and co-located agreement secretariats; audit of the Post-Conflict Assessment Unit; and Investigation into allegations of misconduct in that Unit.

Administrative and budgetary matters

Environment Fund

In a February note [UNEP/GC.23/INF/6], the Executive Director provided information on the status of the Environment Fund and other sources of UNEP funding, as well as an overview of the availability of resources and their use over the 2004-2005 biennium.

Following consideration of the proposed 2006-2007 biennial programme and support budget [UNEP/GC.23/8 & Corr.1] and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) [UNEP/GC.23/8/Add.1], the Governing Council, on 25 February [dec. 23/3], approved appropriations for the Environment Fund in the amount of $144 million, including $16 million for the support budget and $6 million for the Fund programme reserve. It noted that an increase in funding from the UN regular budget for UNON or UNEP in 2006-2007 would decrease the requirement under the support budget, and the released resources should be reallocated for programme activities or the Environment Fund reserve. Governments were urged to support further strengthening of the Environment Fund through the options envisaged by the Council in its 2002 decision [YUN 2002, p. 1032], including the voluntary indicative scale of contributions. The Executive Director was authorized to reallocate resources between budget lines up to a maximum of 10 per cent of the appropriation to which the resources were reallocated, and up to 20 per cent, if needed, in consultation with the Committee of Permanent Representatives. He was also authorized to enter into forward commitments not exceeding $20 million for Fund programme activities for the 2008-2009 biennium, and to increase the level of the financial reserve to $20 million as and when carry-over resources became available over and above those needed to implement the programme approved for the 2004-2005 and 2006-2007 biennia. He should step up efforts to mobilize resources from all sources, in order to broaden further the donor base and to enhance income levels.

The Council requested the Executive Director to provide financial details of the work programme to Governments, as well as information on progress made in its implementation twice yearly and to the Committee of Permanent Representatives, on a quarterly basis, with comprehensive information on all financial arrangements made available for UNEP, including core funding, the Environment Fund, earmarked funds and payments by GEF and other sources. He was asked to: propose, in consultation with the Committee of Permanent Representatives, ways of addressing the balance between non-earmarked and earmarked funding of the work programme and ensure clarity with respect to resources and expected results; prepare for the 2008-2009 biennium a work programme consisting of Environment Fund programme activities amounting to $130 million; and submit, in consultation with the Committee of Permanent Representatives, a prioritized, results-oriented and streamlined draft budget and work programme for the 2008-2009 biennium for consideration and approval by the Governing Council in 2007. He was further asked to submit a detailed proposal for the further implementation of the Bali Strategic Plan for Technology Support and Capacity-building [YUN 2004, p. 1040] to the Council in 2006, including an assessment of the availability of requisite technical and financial resources, as well as the implications for UNEP's work programme and budget.

Trust funds

The Executive Director submitted a proposal [UNEP/GC.23/9] to reduce the number of trust funds in support of the UNEP work programme, and information on the management of the existing trust funds. Of the 70 trust funds reviewed to determine whether they should have their activities rapidly completed and be closed, the Executive Director expected, that by the end of the 2004-2005 biennium, that number would be reduced to about 31, and another five would have their activities completed and would be closed in 2006.

The Executive Director developed a new partnership agreement policy, whereby donor Governments would provide funding for a number of UNEP programmes and/or activities, and instead of several trust funds for each programme activity, a single trust fund was established for each partnership agreement. Through the new policy, the Executive Director expected to reduce to the minimum the number of trust funds in support of the work programme, especially since most of the trust funds to be closed would not be replaced.

Another possible option for the reduction of trust funds would be to merge into one the 14 personnel trust funds that were expected to be active in 2006-2007. However, the Executive Director was reluctant to reconsider that option, since there was no support for it.

Seventy-four UNEP-administered trust funds were active as at 15 November 2004, including those that supported the UNEP work plan.

On 25 February, the Governing Council approved the actions proposed by the Executive Director to reduce the number of trust funds in support of the work programme [dec. 23/4, section A]. It also approved the establishment of 16 trust funds, the extension of 24 and the closure of 20 others.

Financial reserve loan

On 25 February [dec. 23/4], the Governing Council noted the Executive Director's report on administrative and other budgetary matters [UNEP/GC.23/9], which included information on the loan from the Environment Fund financial reserve and the progress achieved in the implementation of the first phase of the construction of additional office accommodation at UNON [YUN 2002, p. 1041]. The Executive Director was asked to report to the Committee of Permanent Representatives on further progress on loan drawdowns and the status of the construction project.

Flow of financial information

On 25 February [dec. 23/4], the Governing Council requested the Executive Director, in conjunction with the executive secretaries of conventions for which UNEP was the trustee, to explore possibilities for further improving the financial information flows to ensure that accurate, up-to-date information was available to convention secretariats at all times, and to report to the Committee of Permanent Representatives thereon.

Strengthening UNEP's financing

The Executive Director, in a note on strengthening UNEP financing [UNEP/GC.23/INF/12], reported on measures taken in that regard, including implementation of the voluntary indicative scale of contributions pilot phase, which began in 2003 [YUN 2003, p. 1048] and was extended to 2004-2005 [YUN 2000, p.1049]; efforts to mobilize supplementary and earmarked funds; development of cooperation mechanisms, such as the partnership agreement; and efforts to secure increased contributions from the UN regular budget as an important element in the financing of UNEP core activities.

On 25 February [dec. 23/1], the Governing Council reaffirmed its support for the provision of adequate, stable and predictable financing of UNEP as a prerequisite for strengthening its capacity and functions, as well as effective coordination of the environmental component of sustainable development. It encouraged Governments to move towards contributions to the Environment Fund in preference to contributions to earmarked trust funds, with a view to enhancing the Council's role in setting UNEP's work agenda and priorities and to make their voluntary contributions to the Fund based on either the voluntary indicative scale of contributions or any of the other voluntary options identified in the Council's 2002 decision on international environmental governance [YUN 2002, p. 1032]. The Council requested the Executive Director, in accordance with that decision, to notify member States of the proposed voluntary indicative scale of contributions for the 2006-2007 biennium, and urged them to inform the Executive Director of their intention to use the proposed scale. He was also asked to: prepare a report to enable the Council at its twenty-fourth (2007) session to assess the operation of the extended pilot phase of the voluntary indicative scale of contributions and the other voluntary options identified in its 2002 decision; continue to seek an increase in funding from all sources to strengthen UNEP's financial base; and report on all aspects of financial strengthening for consideration by the Council in 2006.

General Assembly action. The General Assembly, in resolution 60/189 of 22 December (see p. 1133), welcomed the progress made in strengthening UNEP's role and financial situation, including the significant broadening of its donor base and the increase in total contributions to the Environment Fund.

Environmental and equity considerations in procurement practices

On 25 February [dec. 23/8], the Governing Council invited Governments to share with UNEP their experiences, lessons learned and best practices related to environmental and equity considerations in procurement practices. It requested the Executive Director to prepare a compilation report on environmental and equity considerations regarding current UNEP procurement practices and an assessment of their performance, for the Council's consideration in 2007. He was also asked to report on the implementation of the Council's 1995 decision on environmental standards within the UN system [YUN 1995, p. 1089].

Extension of term of office of Executive Director

In a November note [A/60/553], the Secretary-General informed the General Assembly of Mr. Klaus Töpfer's decision not to seek a further term as UNEP's Executive Director, and his proposal to extend Mr. Töpfer's appointment, which was to end on 31 January 2006, for two months, to allow time to identify a suitable successor and ensure continuity in the work of UNEP and its Governing Council.

By decision 60/409 of 23 November, the Assembly extended Mr. Töpfer's term of office until the end of March 2006.

International conventions and mechanisms

In a January note [UNEP/GC.23/INF/8], the Executive Director provided information on the status of new and existing conventions and protocols in the field of the environment, covering the period 1 January 2003 to 31 December 2004.

MEAs

On 25 February [dec. 23/1, sec. V], the Governing Council requested the Executive Director, in accordance with its 2002 decision on international environmental governance [YUN 2002, p. 1033], to continue to focus on improving coordination among, synergy between and effectiveness of multilateral environmental agreements (MEAs), taking into account the autonomous decision-making authority of the conferences of the parties to such agreements and the need to promote the environmental dimension of sustainable development among relevant UN organizations. He was also asked to intensify efforts to support implementation by parties to MEAs of their obligations under such agreements, including through the provision of technical assistance.

Report of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolutions 59/234 [YUN 2004, p. 1051], 59/235 [ibid., p. 1055] and 59/236 [ibid., p. 1054], the Secretary-General, by a July note [A/60/171], transmitted reports submitted by the secretariats of the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change (see below), the United Nations Convention to Combat Desertification in Those Countries Experiencing Serious Drought and/or Desertification, Particularly in Africa (see p. 1150), and the Convention on Biological Diversity (see p. 1148), respectively.

Climate change convention

As at 31 December, the number of parties to the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change (UNFCCC), which was opened for signature in 1992 [YUN 1992, p. 681] and entered into force in 1994 [YUN 1994, p. 938], remained at 188 States and the European Community (EC).

As at 31 December, 156 States and the EC were parties to the Kyoto Protocol to the Convention [YUN 1997, p. 1048]. The Protocol entered into force on 16 February.

Conference of Parties

The eleventh session of the Conference of the Parties to UNFCCC and the first Conference of the Parties serving as the Meeting of the Parties to the Kyoto Protocol (Montreal, Canada, 28 November–10 December) [FCCC/CP/2005/5 & Add.1-2] adopted the five-year programme of work of the Subsidiary Body for Scientific and Technological Advice (SBSTA) on impacts, vulnerability and adaptation to climate change. It also adopted tables of the common reporting format for land use, land-use change and forestry. Other decisions related to: a dialogue on long-term cooperative action to address climate change by enhancing UNFCCC implementation; the operation of the Least Developed Countries Fund; extension of the mandate of the Least Developed Countries Expert Group; the development and transfer of technologies; review processes during the 2006-2007 period for parties included in the Convention's annex I list of industrialized countries and countries with economies in transition; submission of communications from parties not included in annex I; research needs related to the Convention; flexibility for Croatia under article 4 of the Convention relating to commitments; institutional linkage of the Convention secretariat to the United Nations; adjustments under article 5 of the Protocol; and other administrative and financial matters.

In October, the Executive Board of the Kyoto Protocol's clean development mechanism issued its first annual report to the Conference of the Parties serving as the Meeting of the Parties to the Protocol [FCCC/KP/CMP/2005/4 & Add. 1.], covering the periods from November 2004 to September 2005 and from 30 September to 27 November 2005.

The twenty-second sessions of SBSTA (19-27 May) [FCCC/SBSTA/2005/4 & Amend.1 & Add.1] and of the Subsidiary Body for Implementation (SBI) (20-27 May) [FCCC/SBI/2005/10 & Add.1] were held in Bonn, Germany. In conjunction with those sessions, the UNFCCC secretariat organized a seminar of governmental experts (Bonn, 16-17 May) to discuss actions relating to the mitigation of, and adaptation to, climate change, and policies and measures adopted by the participants' respective Governments that supported the implementation of their commitments under UNFCCC and the Kyoto Protocol. SBSTA [FCCC/SBSTA/2005/10] and SBI [FCCC/SBI/2005/23] also held their twenty-third sessions (Montreal, Canada, 28 November–6 December).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December [meeting 68], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/60/488/Add.4], adopted resolution 60/197 without vote [agenda item 52 (d)].

Protection of global climate for present and future generations of mankind

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 54/222 of 22 December 1999, its decision 55/443 of 20 December 2000 and its resolutions 56/199 of 21 December 2001, 57/257 of 20 December 2002, 58/243 of 23 December 2003 and 59/234 of 22 December 2004 and other resolutions relating to the protection of the global climate for present and future generations of mankind,

Recalling also the provisions of the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change, including the acknowledgement that the global nature of climate change calls for the widest possible cooperation by all countries and their participation in an effective and appropriate international response, in accordance with their common but differentiated responsibilities and respective capabilities and their social and economic conditions,

Recalling further the Johannesburg Declaration on Sustainable Development, the Plan of Implementation of the World Summit on Sustainable Development ("Johannesburg Plan of Implementation"), the Delhi Ministerial Declaration on Climate Change and Sustainable Development, adopted by the Conference of the Parties to the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change at its eighth session, held in New Delhi from 23 October to 1 November 2002, the outcome of the ninth session of the Conference of the Parties held in Milan, Italy, from 1 to 12 December 2003, and the outcome of the tenth session of the Conference of the Parties, held in Buenos Aires from 6 to 18 December 2004,

Reaffirming the Mauritius Declaration and the Mauritius Strategy for the Further Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States,

Remaining deeply concerned that all countries, in particular developing countries, including the least developed countries and small island developing States, face increased risks from the negative effects of climate change, and stressing the need to address adaptation needs relating to such effects,

Noting that one hundred and eighty-nine States and one regional economic integration organization have ratified the Convention,

Noting also that, to date, the Kyoto Protocol to the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change has attracted one hundred and fifty-six ratifications, including from parties mentioned in annex I to the Convention, which account for 61.6 per cent of emissions,

Noting further the work of the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change and the need to build and enhance scientific and technological capabilities, inter alia, through continuing support to the Panel for the exchange of scientific data and information, especially in developing countries,

Recalling the United Nations Millennium Declaration, in which Heads of State and Government resolved to make every effort to ensure the entry into force of the Kyoto Protocol and to embark on the required reduction in emissions of greenhouse gases,

Reaffirming its commitment to the ultimate objective of the Convention, namely, to stabilize greenhouse gas concentrations in the atmosphere at a level that prevents dangerous anthropogenic interference with the climate system,

Taking note of the report of the Executive Secretary of the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change on the work of the Conference of the Parties to the Convention,

1. Calls upon States to work cooperatively towards achieving the ultimate objective of the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change;

2. Notes that States that have ratified the Kyoto Protocol to the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change welcome the entry into force of the Kyoto Protocol on 16 February 2005 and strongly urge States that have not yet done so to ratify it in a timely manner;

3. Notes with interest the activities undertaken under the flexible mechanisms established by the Kyoto Protocol;

4. Takes note of the decisions adopted by the Conference of the Parties at its tenth session, and calls for their implementation;

Convention to combat desertification

As at 31 December, the total number of parties to the 1994 United Nations Convention to Combat Desertification in those Countries Experiencing Serious Drought and/or Desertification, particularly in Africa (UNCCD) [YUN 1994, p. 944], which entered into force in 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 958], stood at 190 States and the EC.

The third session of the Committee for the Review of the Implementation of the Convention (CRIC) (Bonn, Germany, 2-11 May) [ICCD/CRIC(3)/9] discussed thematic issues pertaining to the Convention implementation process in Africa and those under global review, and made recommendations relating to both of those issues and on the implementation of the Convention in Africa. At its fourth session (Nairobi, Kenya, 18-27 October), CRIC submitted further recommendations to the seventh session of the Conference of the Parties to the Convention (see below). The Committee on Science and Technology (Nairobi, 18-21 October), a Conference subsidiary body, also made a number of recommendations to the Conference.

The seventh session of the Conference of the Parties to the Convention (Nairobi, 17-28 October) [ICCD/COP(7)/16 & Add.1] renewed the mandate of CRIC as a subsidiary body of the Conference of the Parties, up to and including the eighth (2007) session of the Conference, and established an ad hoc working group make proposals to improve the procedures for the communication of information, particularly at the national level, as well as the quality and format of reports on the implementation of the Convention. The Conference also adopted decisions on strengthening the implementation of the Convention in Africa; follow-up to the outcome of the 2002 World Summit on Sustainable Development [YUN 2002, p. 821] relevant to UNCCD; adjustments to the elaboration process and the implementation of action programmes with regard to the Convention; mobilization of resources for the implementation of the Convention; collaboration between UNCCD and the Global Environment Facility (GEF); institutional arrangements for regional coordination units; the promotion and strengthening of relationships with other relevant conventions and international organizations, institutions and agencies; the roster of independent experts; the Millennium Ecosystem Assessment (see p. 1154); traditional knowledge; benchmarks and indicators; the development of early warning systems; the Land Degradation Assessment in Drylands; procedures and institutional mechanisms for the resolution of questions on implementation and arbitration and conciliation procedures; the International Year of Deserts and Desertification (2006) (see p. 1152), declared by the General Assembly in 2003 [YUN 2003, p. 1055]; relations between the UNCCD secretariat and the host country (Germany); and administrative and budgetary matters, including the 2006-2007 UNCCD programme and budget for the 2006-2007 biennium.

The Conference approved the continuation of the institutional linkage and related administrative arrangements between the UNCCD secretariat and the UN Secretariat for a further five years, to be reviewed by the General Assembly and the Conference no later than 31 December 2011. It decided to hold the eighth (2007) session of the Conference in Spain, and the fifth (2006) session of CRIC in Argentina. The Conference adopted the Nairobi Declaration on the Implementation of the United Nations Convention to Combat Desertification, in which participants declared their commitment to reduce poverty significantly as a prerequisite for promoting sustainable development, review progress on the implementation of the Convention after 10 years and mainstream national action plans into national development policies, programmes, strategies and implementation modalities. Annexed to the report of the session was the Declaration of the sixth Round Table of Members of Parliament (Nairobi, 25-26 October) on the role of members of parliament in enhancing implementation of UNCCD obligations.

JIU report. An August note by the UNCCD secretariat [ICCD/COP(7)/4] contained a report of the United Nations Joint Inspection Unit (JIU) reviewing the secretariat's management, administration and activities. The report contained recommendations for dealing with policy; governance; secretariat functions and activities; the relationship between the secretariat and the Global Mechanism, a UNCCD subsidiary body dealing with financial issues; financial, budgetary, administrative and management issues; and coordination and cooperation with relevant international bodies and conventions. JIU also compared the secretariats of UNCCD, UNFCCC and CBD, collectively referred to as the Rio Conventions. It concluded that, UNCCD was not provided with sufficient financial and human resources, as compared with the other two Conventions.

In a decision on follow-up to the JIU report, the seventh session of Conference of the Parties (see above) established an ad hoc, intergovernmental, intersessional working group to review the JIU report and develop a draft ten-year strategic plan and framework to enhance the implementation of UNCCD by addressing, among other things, the recommendations contained in the report.

Environmental activities

Follow-up to the 2000 Millennium Summit

In January [UNEP/GC.23/10], the Executive Director submitted a background paper for the ministerial-level consultations held during the Governing Council's twenty-third session (21-23 February) (see p. 1133) on implementation of the internationally agreed development goals, known as the Millennium Development Goals (MDGs), of the Millennium Declaration, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 55/2 [YUN 2000, p. 49]. The paper contained information on poverty reduction and environmental stability; water, sanitation and human settlements; and gender and the environment.

2005 World Summit

The Secretary General, in a March report, entitled "In larger freedom: towards development, security and human rights for all" [A/59/2005] (see p. 67), submitted to the High-level Plenary Meeting of the United Nations General Assembly (World Summit) in September (see.p. 47), discussed the implementation of the Millennium Declaration, including the MDG on ensuring environmental sustainability. He said that national poverty reduction strategies had to include investments in improved environmental management and make the structural changes required for environmental sustainability. In addition, regional and global efforts for environmental priorities, including shared waterways, forests, marine fisheries and biodiversity, had to be strengthened. The risk of harmful radiation appeared to be receding under the 1987 Montreal Protocol [YUN 1987, p. 686] to the 1985 Vienna Convention for the Protection of the Ozone Layer [YUN 1985, p. 804]. The international community had to support and implement the 1994 United Nations Convention to Combat Desertification in Those Countries Experiencing Serious Drought and/or Desertification, Particularly in Africa [YUN 1994, p. 944]. Governments should take steps to implement the 1992 Convention on Biological Diversity [YUN 1992, p. 638], and the commitment made in the Johannesburg Plan of Implementation [YUN 2002, p. 822] of the 2002 World Summit on Sustainable Development [ibid., p. 821] to reduce the loss of biodiversity by 2010. The 1997 Kyoto Protocol [YUN 1997, p. 1048] to the 1992 United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change [YUN 1992, p. 681] came into force in February (see p. 1146), but was extended only until 2012; a more inclusive framework had to be developed beyond 2012, with broader participation by all major emitters of both developed and developing countries, to mitigate climate change, taking into account the principle of common but differentiated responsibilities.

The 2005 World Summit Outcome, adopted by the Assembly in resolution 60/1 of 16 September (see p. 48), included measures for the management and protection of the environment in the context of sustainable development.

Millennium Ecosystem Assessment

The Millennium Ecosystem Assessment (MA), a four-year international assessment launched in 2001 [YUN 2001, p. 961] to evaluate the state of major ecosystems and their links with human well-being, was completed in 2005. The specific objectives of the MA were to identify priorities for action; provide tools for planning and management; provide foresight concerning the consequences of decisions affecting ecosystems; identify response options for achieving human development and sustainability; and help build individual and institutional capacity to undertake integrated ecosystem assessments and act on their findings. Two MA reports were released in 2005: Living Beyond Our Means: Natural Assets and Human Well-being, a statement by the MA Board containing 10 key messages and conclusions drawn from the Assessment; and Ecosystems and Human Well-being: Synthesis, a summary for decision-makers of the main MA synthesis report. Other synthesis reports issued dealt with biodiversity, desertification, opportunities and challenges for business and industry, wetlands and water, and health. The MA found that 60 per cent of the world's ecosystems were in decline or degraded to an extent that societies could no longer rely on them for climate regulation, clean air and water, fertile land and productive fisheries.

Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change

The twenty-third session of the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change (IPCC) (Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, 6-8 April), accepted the actions of the second joint session of IPCC Working Groups I and III held on the same dates. At its twenty-fourth session (Montreal, Canada, 26-28 September), IPCC discussed progress on its Fourth Assessment Synthesis Report, which was to be adopted and approved by IPCC in 2007; its National Greenhouse Gas Inventories Programme; further work on emissions scenarios; outreach; and administrative matters. It adopted the revised programme budget for 2006.

Terrestrial ecosystems

In 2005, UNEP launched An Ecosystem Approach to Restoring West African Drylands and Improving Rural Livelihoods through Agroforestry-based Land Management Interventions, a project to help build the scientific and technical capacity of some of the world's poorest dryland countries, including in the semi-arid lands of the West Africa subregion. In response to requests from Governments in northeast Asia, UNEP, the Asian Development Bank, the UN Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific and UNCCD developed a project on the prevention and control of dust and sandstorms, funded by GEF and the Asian Development Bank. The project included the establishment of a UNEP-led regional monitoring and early-warning network and an investment strategy to strengthen mitigation measures to address the root causes of dust and sandstorms.

Deforestation and forest degradation

United Nations Forum on Forests

The United Nations Forum on Forests (UNFF), at its fifth session (New York, 16-17 May) [E/2005/42], adopted two decisions that were brought to the attention of the Economic and Social Council. It decided to accredit two intergovernmental organizations: the Montreal Process and the secretariat of the Amazon Cooperation Treaty Organization [dec. 5/1]. In a decision on the review process of the fifth UNFF session [dec. 5/2], the Forum decided to complete consideration at its sixth (2006) meeting of items outlined in its multi-year programme of work, based on a draft text annexed to the decision. UNFF recommended a draft resolution for adoption by the Council on the report of its fifth session and the provisional agenda for its sixth session (see below).

The Forum had before it reports of the Secretary-General on a review of the effectiveness of the international arrangement on forests [E/CN.18/2005/6]; linkages between forests and the internationally agreed development goals, including the MDGs [YUN 2000, p. 51] [E/CN.18/2005/7]; and a review of progress and consideration of future UNFF actions [E/CN.18/2005/8]. Notes by the Secretary-General discussed the high-level ministerial segment of UNFF fifth session [E/CN.18/2005/4] and the parameters of a mandate for developing a legal framework on all types of forests [E/CN.18/2005/9]. Secretariat notes provided information on the Forum's fifth multi-stakeholder dialogue [E/CN.18/2005/3 & Add.1-8]; enhanced cooperation and policy and programme coordination [E/CN.18/2005/5]; and accreditation of intergovernmental organizations to UNFF [E/CN.18/2005/17]. A further secretariat note transmitted the statement from the Ministerial Meeting on Forests, convened by the Director-General of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO) (Rome, 14 March) [E/CN.18/2005/14]. The Forum considered reports of the workshop co-organized by Indonesia and Switzerland on decentralization, federal systems in forestry and national forest programmes, known as the Interlaken Workshop (Interlaken, Switzerland, 27-30 April 2004) [E/CN.18/2005/10], as well as reports on country-led initiatives in support of UNFF in forest landscape restoration implementation (Petrópolis, Brazil, 4-8 April 2005), submitted by Brazil and the United Kingdom [E/CN.18/2005/15]; innovative financial mechanisms: searching for viable alternatives to secure the basis for the financial sustainability of forests (San José, Costa Rica, 29 March–1 April), submitted by Costa Rica [E/CN.18/2005/13]; and the future of the International Arrangement on Forests (Guadalajara, Mexico, 25-28 January), submitted by Mexico and the United States [E/CN.18/2005/11]. Also before the Forum were the Collaborative Partnership on Forests Framework 2005 [E/CN.18/2005/INF/1]; an 11 April letter from the United Kingdom transmitting the report of the meeting of the Forests Dialogue on "Practical actions to combat illegal logging" (Hong Kong, China, 7-10 March) [E/CN.18/2005/12]; and the organizational initiative report, submitted by Costa Rica on 20 April [E/CN.18/2005/16], on the Expert Meeting on Traditional Forest-related Knowledge and the Implementation of Related International Commitments (San José, Costa Rica, 6-10 December 2004).

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 22 July [meeting 36], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the United Nations Forum on Forests [E/2005/42], adopted resolution 2005/29 without vote [agenda item 13 (i)].

Report of the United Nations Forum on Forests on its fifth session and provisional agenda for its sixth session

Recalling its resolution 2000/35 of 18 October 2000,

1. Takes note of the report of the United Nations Forum on Forests on its fifth session;

2. Acknowledges in particular the need to consider forest issues for the preparation of the input of the Economic and Social Council to the High-level Plenary Meeting of the sixtieth session of the General Assembly;

3. Notes that the United Nations Forum on Forests will continue its examination of its methods of work, as per General Assembly resolution 57/270B of 23 June 2003, through the implementation of decision 5/2, adopted by the Forum at its fifth session;

4. Decides to hold the sixth session of the Forum from 13 to 24 February 2006 in New York;

5. Also decides that the Forum, at its sixth session, should consider the venue and dates of its seventh session;

6. Further decides that the Forum, at its sixth session, should ensure the opportunity to receive and consider inputs from representatives of major groups as identified in Agenda 21, and in this regard that the Bureau should provide the opportunity for the major groups, as a priority, to hold side events during the sixth session of the Forum, to permit them to present their points of view on the issues to be addressed during the session;

7. Approves the provisional agenda for the sixth session of the Forum as set out below:

PROVISIONAL AGENDA FOR THE SIXTH SESSION OF THE UNITED NATIONS FORUM ON FORESTS

1. Election of officers.
2. Adoption of the agenda and other organizational matters.
3. Implementation of decision 5/2 of the fifth session of the United Nations Forum on Forests.
4. Date and venue for the seventh session of the Forum.
5. Provisional agenda for the seventh session of the Forum.
6. Adoption of the report of the Forum on its sixth session.

8. Calls upon interested donors to make voluntary financial contributions to the trust fund of the United Nations Forum on Forests in order to facilitate, in particular, travel of representatives from developing countries, with priority to the least developed countries, as well as from countries with economies in transition, taking into account General Assembly decision 58/554 of 23 December 2003.

Sustainable mountain development

In response to General Assembly resolution 58/216 [YUN 2003, p. 1063], the Secretary-General submitted a September report [A/60/309] describing the status of sustainable mountain development at the national, regional and international levels. The report also discussed communications and networking on mountain issues; the activities of the International Partnership for Sustainable Development in Mountain Regions, launched as an outcome of the 2002 World Summit on Sustainable Development [YUN 2002, p. 821]; education and research activities; and resource mobilization and funding mechanisms for sustainable mountain development. The report stated that, despite increased awareness and positive achievements, key challenges to sustainable development and poverty alleviation in mountains remained, including a growing demand for water and other natural resources; the consequences of global climate change; tourism growth; increasing rates of outmigration; conflicts; and the pressures of industry, mining and agriculture. Higher levels of funding and investment in mountain areas, better coordinated cooperation and a stronger enabling environment with more supportive laws, policies and institutions were also required. The report contained recommendations for the Assembly to promote and sustain development in mountain regions within the existing policy context, including chapter 13 of Agenda 21 [YUN 1992, p. 672] on sustainable mountain development, the Johannesburg Plan of Implementation of the World Summit on Sustainable Development [YUN 2002, p. 821] and the MDGs [YUN 2000, p. 51].

Mountain Partnership Declaration. A 25 October letter from Peru [A/C.2/60/4] contained the Declaration of the Andes, adopted by the Second Global Meeting of Members of the International Partnership for Sustainable Development in Mountain Regions (Cusco, Peru, 28-29 October 2004). In the Declaration, Partnership members reaffirmed their commitment to fulfil the goals of the United Nations Convention on Biological Diversity, the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change, the United Nations Convention to Combat Desertification, and other universally agreed multilateral instruments relevant to sustainable mountain development.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December [meeting 68], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/60/488/Add.5], adopted resolution 60/198 without vote [agenda item 52 (e)].

Sustainable mountain development

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 53/24 of 10 November 1998, by which it proclaimed 2002 the International Year of Mountains,

Recalling also its resolutions 55/189 of 20 December 2000, 57/245 of 20 December 2002 and 58/216 of 23 December 2003,

Recalling further its resolution 59/238 of 22 December 2004 on rendering assistance to poor mountain countries to overcome obstacles in socio-economic and ecological areas,

Recognizing chapter 13 of Agenda 21 and all relevant paragraphs of the Plan of Implementation of the World Summit on Sustainable Development ("Johannesburg Plan of Implementation"), in particular paragraph 42 thereof, as the overall policy frameworks for sustainable development in mountain regions,

Noting the International Partnership for Sustainable Development in Mountain Regions ("Mountain Partnership"), launched during the World Summit on Sustainable Development, with benefits from the committed support of forty-four countries, fourteen intergovernmental organizations and sixty-eight organizations from major groups, as an important approach to addressing the various interrelated dimensions of sustainable development in mountain regions,

Noting also the Bishkek Mountain Platform, the outcome document of the Bishkek Global Mountain Summit, held at Bishkek from 28 October to 1 November 2002, which was the concluding event of the International Year of Mountains,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General entitled "Sustainable mountain development";

2. Notes with appreciation that a growing network of Governments, organizations, major groups and individuals around the world recognize the importance of sustainable development of mountain regions for poverty eradication, as well as the global importance of mountains as the source of most of the Earth's freshwater, as repositories of rich biological diversity, as popular destinations for recreation and tourism and as areas of important cultural diversity, knowledge and heritage;

3. Notes with concern that there remain key challenges to achieving sustainable development, eradicating poverty in mountain regions and protecting mountain ecosystems, and that populations in mountain regions are frequently among the poorest of a given country;

4. Notes that the growing demand for natural resources, including water, the consequences of erosion, deforestation and other forms of watershed degradation, the occurrence of natural disasters, as well as increasing outmigration, the pressures of industry, transport, tourism, mining, agriculture and the consequences of global climate change are some of the key challenges in fragile mountain ecosystems to implementing sustainable development and eradicating poverty in mountains, consistent with the Millennium Development Goals;

5. Expresses its deep concern at the number and scale of disasters and their increasing impact within recent years, which have resulted in massive loss of life and long-term negative social, economic and environmental consequences for vulnerable societies throughout the world, in particular in mountain regions, especially those in developing countries;

6. Underlines the fact that action at the national level is a key factor in achieving progress in sustainable mountain development, welcomes its steady increase in recent years with a multitude of events, activities and initiatives, and invites the international community to support the efforts of developing countries to develop and implement strategies and programmes, including, where required, enabling policies and laws for the sustainable development of mountains, within the framework of national development plans;

7. Encourages the further establishment of committees or similar multi-stakeholder institutional arrangements and mechanisms at the national level to enhance intersectoral coordination and collaboration for sustainable development in mountain regions;

8. Also encourages increased involvement of relevant stakeholders, including civil society and the private sector, in the development and implementation of programmes and activities related to sustainable development in mountains;

9. Underlines the need for improved access to resources for women in mountain regions as well as the need to strengthen the role of women in mountain regions in decision-making processes that affect their communities, cultures and environments;

10. Stresses that indigenous cultures, traditions and knowledge, including in the field of medicine, are to be fully considered, respected and promoted in development policy and planning in mountain regions, and underlines the importance of promoting full participation and involvement of mountain communities in decisions that affect them and of integrating indigenous knowledge, heritage and values in all development initiatives;

11. Recognizes that many developing countries as well as countries with economies in transition need to be assisted in the formulation and implementation of national strategies and programmes for sustainable mountain development, through bilateral, multilateral and South-South cooperation, as well as through other forms of collaborative approaches;

12. Notes that funding for sustainable mountain development has become increasingly important, especially in view of the greater recognition of the global importance of mountains and the high level of extreme poverty, food insecurity and hardship facing mountain communities;

13. Invites Governments, the United Nations system, the international financial institutions, the Global Environment Facility, all relevant United Nations conventions and their funding mechanisms, within their respective mandates, and all relevant stakeholders from civil society and the private sector to consider providing support, including through voluntary financial contributions, to local, national and international programmes and projects for sustainable development in mountain regions;

14. Underlines the importance for sustainable development in mountains of exploring a wide range of funding sources, such as public-private partnerships, increased opportunities for microfinance, including microinsurance, small housing loans, savings, education and health accounts, and support for entrepreneurs seeking to develop small and medium-sized businesses and, where appropriate, on a case-by-case basis, debt for sustainable development swaps;

15. Underlines also the importance of enhancing the sustainability of ecosystems that provide essential resources and services for human well-being and economic activity and developing innovative means of financing for their protection;

16. Notes with satisfaction the recent adoption by the Conference of the Parties to the Convention on Biological Diversity, of the programme of work on mountain biological diversity, the overall purpose of which is the significant reduction of the loss of mountain biological diversity by 2010 at the global, regional and national levels, and its implementation, which aims at making a significant contribution to poverty eradication in mountain regions;

17. Recognizes that mountain ranges are usually shared among several countries, and in this context encourages transboundary cooperation approaches, where the States concerned agree, to the sustainable development of mountain ranges and information-sharing in this regard;

18. Notes with appreciation in this context the Convention on the Protection of the Alps, which promotes constructive new approaches to integrated, sustainable development of the Alps, including through its thematic protocols on spatial planning, mountain farming, conservation of nature and landscape, mountain forests, population and culture, tourism, soil protection, energy and transport, and welcomes the recent membership of the Convention in the International Partnership for Sustainable Development in Mountain Regions;

19. Also notes with appreciation the Framework Convention on the Protection and Sustainable Development of the Carpathians, adopted and signed by the seven countries of the region to provide a framework for cooperation and multisectoral policy coordination, a platform for joint strategies for sustainable development and a forum for dialogue between all involved stakeholders;

20. Stresses the importance of capacity-building, institutional strengthening and educational programmes in order to foster sustainable mountain development at all levels and to enhance awareness of good practices in sustainable development in mountain regions and of the nature of relationships between highland and lowland areas;

21. Encourages the development and implementation of global, regional and national communication programmes to build on the awareness and momentum for change created by the International Year of Mountains and the opportunity provided annually by International Mountain Day on 11 December;

22. Also encourages Member States to collect and produce information and to establish databases devoted to mountains so as to capitalize on knowledge to support interdisciplinary research, programmes and projects and to improve decision-making and planning;

23. Further encourages all relevant entities of the United Nations system, within their respective mandates, to further enhance their constructive efforts to strengthen inter-agency collaboration to achieve more effective implementation of relevant chapters of Agenda 21, including chapter 13 and paragraph 42 and other relevant paragraphs of the Johannesburg Plan of Implementation, taking into account the inter-agency group on mountains and the need for the further involvement of the United Nations system, in particular the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the United Nations Environment Programme, the United Nations University, the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and the United Nations Children's Fund, as well as international financial institutions and other relevant international organizations;

24. Recognizes the efforts of the Mountain Partnership implemented in accordance with Economic and Social Council resolution 2003/61 of 25 July 2003, invites the international community and other relevant stakeholders, including civil society and the private sector, to consider joining the Mountain Partnership, and invites the Partnership Secretariat to report on its activities and achievements to the fourteenth meeting of the Commission on Sustainable Development in 2006, including in regard to the thematic cluster issues of energy, climate change, air pollution and atmosphere and industrial development;

25. Notes with appreciation in this context the efforts of the Mountain Partnership to cooperate with existing multilateral instruments relevant to mountains, such as the Convention on Biological Diversity, the United Nations Convention to Combat Desertification in Those Countries Experiencing Drought and/or Desertification, Particularly in Africa, the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change, the International Strategy for Disaster Reduction and mountain-related regional instruments such as the Convention on the Protection of the Alps and the Framework Convention on the Protection and Sustainable Development of the Carpathians;

26. Takes note of the conclusions of the second global meeting of the members of the Mountain Partnership, held in Cusco, Peru, on 28 and 29 October 2004, at the invitation of the Government of Peru;

27. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its sixty-second session on the implementation of the present resolution, under a subitem entitled "Sustainable mountain development" of the item entitled "Sustainable development".

Marine ecosystems

Oceans and seas

The sixth meeting of the United Nations Open-ended Informal Consultative Process in Oceans and Law of the Sea (New York, 6-10 June) [A/60/99] (see p. 1436) discussed fisheries and their contribution to sustainable development and marine debris. Among the reports considered by the meeting, was an April overview report submitted by the UNEP Regional Seas Programme [A/AC.259/14], which described the issue of marine litter and UNEP's activities to address the problem. The meeting proposed actions to be taken by the General Assembly to address the issues of fisheries and marine debris. With regard to cooperation and coordination, the meeting proposed that the Assembly welcome the work of the secretariats of UN system agencies, programmes and funds, as well as those of international conventions, to enhance inter-agency coordination and cooperation on ocean issues. It also proposed that the Assembly encourage States to work closely with and through international organizations, funds and programmes, as well as UN system specialized agencies and relevant international conventions, to identify emerging areas of focus and the best way to address ocean issues.

The Assembly took action with regard to the Consultative Process and coordination and cooperation issues in parts XIII and XIV, respectively, of resolution 60/30 (see p. 1443).

Report of Executive Director. In response to decisions adopted by the Governing Council in 2003 [YUN 2003, p. 1041 & pp. 1065-68], the Executive Director submitted a February progress report [UNEP/GC.23/3/Add.5/Rev.1/Add.2] on UNEP's water-related activities, including implementation of the Global Programme of Action for the Protection of the Marine Environment from Land-based Activities; the Regional Seas Programme; coral reefs; and activities related to marine safety and the protection of the marine environment from accidental pollution (see relevant sections below).

Global waters assessment

The Global International Waters Assessment (GIWA), inaugurated in 2000 [YUN 2000, p. 982] to assess international waters and causes of environmental problems in 66 water regions, focusing on the aquatic environment in transboundary waters, was concluded in 2005. In all, 14 reports were printed, 13 others were published on the Internet, and a further 11 were awaiting publication, including the project's final report. GIWA outputs were used by some new GEF projects, including the Lake Chad Basin Commission and the Pan African Global Change System for Analysis, Research and Training secretariat projects. The Assessment also provided input to intergovernmental processes, including the International Meeting to Review the Implementation of the 1994 Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island States [YUN 1994, p. 783].

International Workshop. In June [A/60/91], the Secretary-General submitted a report on the results of the second international workshop convened in accordance with General Assembly resolution 59/24 [YUN 2004, p. 1333] on the regular process for global reporting and assessment of the state of the marine environment, known as the Global Marine Assessment (GMA), including the socio-economic aspects (New York, 13-15 June). The workshop considered the start-up phase, known as the "assessment of assessments" as a preparatory stage towards the establishment of the regular process of assessments. Before it was an 8 June note from Iceland [A/AC.271/1] to the Secretary General, indicating its intention not to participate in the second international workshop due to its concern over the mixing of scientific and management issues. In its conclusions, which were recommended to the Assembly for consideration, the workshop described the features and aims of, and organizational arrangements for, the "assessment of assessments".

The Assembly, in section XI of resolution 60/30 (see p. 1442), endorsed the workshop's conclusions and decided to launch the "assessment of assessments", to be completed in two years. It established the Ad Hoc Steering Group to oversee the execution of the "assessment of assessments". The Assembly invited UNEP and the Intergovernmental Oceanographic Commission to jointly undertake the role of lead agencies, under the guidance of the Ad Hoc Steering Group, and determined the actions to be undertaken by the Group, including the establishment of a group of experts to assess the assessments and report to the Assembly. It decided that the execution of the "assessment of assessments", including the activities of the Ad Hoc Steering Group and the group of experts, would be financed through voluntary contributions and other resources available to participating organizations and bodies, and invited Member States in a position to do so to make contributions.

Global Programme of Action

A December note by the Executive Director [UNEP/GCSS.IX/INF/10] contained information on the Global Programme of Action (GPA) for the Protection of the Marine Environment from Land-based Activities. Key principles, directed mainly towards Governments, industrial/business associations and UN and intergovernmental bodies to provide guidance for the sustainable development and management of four economic sectors (aquaculture, ports and harbours, tourism and mining), were developed and adopted. The 12 Guiding Principles for Integrated Coastal Area and River Basin Management were finalized and published. UNEP was cooperating closely with China and other Governments, intergovernmental bodies, UN institutions and other stakeholders in preparing for the second Intergovernmental Review Meeting of GPA, scheduled to take place in Beijing, China, from 16 to 22 October 2006; a joint UN-Oceans/UN-Water task force was set up to provide guidance on the preparatory work for the Meeting. UNEP/GPA provided substantive support to Governments to develop national programmes of action (NPAs) for GPA implementation, including advice and assistance on GPA programme components and cross cutting issues. As a result of that support, over 40 countries were in the process of, or had finalized their NPAs. In May 2005, UNEP signed a memorandum of understanding with the South Pacific Regional Environment Programme.

In section IX of resolution 60/30 of 29 November (see p. 1441), the General Assembly called on States to advance the implementation of GPA and the 2001 Montreal Declaration on the implementation of GPA [YUN 2001, p. 965].

Regional Seas Programme

A December note by the Executive Director [UNEP/GCSS.IX/INF/10] provided information on the activities of the UNEP Regional Seas Programme. Under the Global Regional Seas Strategic Directions for 2004-2007, agreed to at the Sixth (2004) Global Meeting of Regional Seas Conventions and Action Plans [YUN 2004, p. 1060], a database providing an overview of all major actors and players in the conservation and management of marine and coastal environment of the various regional seas programmes was developed. The Mediterranean Strategy for Sustainable Development for the Mediterranean Action Plan, developed with the assistance of the UNEP Regional Seas Programme, was adopted by the Fourteenth Meeting of the Contracting Parties to the 1995 Barcelona Convention for the Protection of the Marine Environment and the Coastal Region of the Mediterranean, and its Protocols (Portoroz, Slovenia, 8-11 November) [UNEP(DEPI)/MED IG.16/13]. The Regional Seas Programme provided advice and guidance for translating regional seas conventions and protocols into national legislation in the Mediterranean, East Asia, Northwest Pacific and Caribbean regions. It conducted a training workshop on compliance and enforcement for regional seas conventions and related conventions in the wider Caribbean and Pacific regions. The Seventh Global Meeting of Regional Seas Conventions and Action Plans (Helsinki, Finland, 18-20 October) [UNEP(DEC)/RS.7] focused on strengthening the financial components of the regional seas programmes. In March, UNEP and the UNESCO Intergovernmental Oceanographic Commission signed an MOU which provided a framework for collaboration between the Global Ocean Observing System and the Regional Seas Programme. The seventh meeting of the Contracting Parties (Libreville, Gabon, 22-23 March) [UNEP(DEC)/WAF/CP.7/8] to the 1981 Abidjan Convention for Cooperation in the Protection and Development of the Marine and Coastal Environment of the West and Central African Regions [YUN 1981, p. 840] developed project proposals to coordinate with the New Partnership for Africa's Development Environmental Action Plan, strengthened linkages with large marine ecosystem programmes and supported small island developing States' projects. Under the South-east Pacific Action Plan, adopted in 1981 [ibid., p. 833], a workshop was held on GPA development and implementation at the regional and national levels (Chile, January). The Regional Seas Programme also worked to promote synergies and coordinated regional implementation of relevant multilateral environmental agreements and initiatives to develop and promote ecosystems-based marine and coastal management, and enhance its visibility.

In 2005, seven Regional Seas Programme national action plans were adopted by Governments for integration into sustainable development planning, and goals and targets developed for a regional strategic action plan.

Conservation of wildlife

In September, the Great Apes Survival Project (GRASP) held the First Intergovernmental Meeting on Great Apes and the Great Apes Survival Project and the first GRASP Council Meeting (Kinshasa, Democratic Republic of the Congo, 5-9 September). The Intergovernmental Meeting adopted the Kinshasa Declaration on Great Apes to secure the long-term survival for all great ape species and their habitat. The GRASP Council adopted the Global Strategy for the Survival of Great Apes and their Habitat. UNEP's World Atlas of Great Apes and their Conservation was launched during the meetings.

Protection against harmful products and waste

Chemical safety

As at 31 December, 100 States and the EC were parties to the 1998 Rotterdam Convention on the Prior Informed Consent (PIC) Procedure for Certain Hazardous Chemicals and Pesticides in International Trade [YUN 1998, p. 997], which entered into force in 2004 [YUN 2004, p. 1063].

The Chemical Review Committee, established by the Conference of the Parties to the Rotterdam Convention as a subsidiary body in 2004 [ibid, p. 1064], held its first meeting (Geneva, 11-18 February) [UNEP/FAO/RC/CRC.1/28], during which it reviewed the notifications of final regulatory actions and the supporting documentation for 14 candidate chemicals submitted in accordance with article 5 of the Convention. The Committee also considered a note on the review of its role and mandate [UNEP/FAO/RC/CRC.1/3], as well as working procedures and policy guidance for the Committee, which were submitted by the Conference of the Parties.

The second meeting of the Conference of the Parties to the Convention (Rome, 27-30 September) [UNEP/FAO/RC/COP.2/19] established a compliance committee; adopted a work plan for regional and national delivery of technical assistance for 2006 and a process for the preparation of guidance documents; approved arrangements by the UNEP Executive Director and the FAO Director-General for the performance of Convention secretariat functions, to be concluded on the basis of a proposed MOU [UNEP/FAO/RC/COP.2/14/Add.1]; confirmed the appointment of members of the Chemical Review Committee; and amended the financial and budgetary arrangements for the 2005-2006 biennium. The Convention secretariat was asked to contribute to a study on cooperation and synergies with the secretariats of the 1989 Basel Convention on the Control of Transboundary Movements of Hazardous Wastes and their Disposal [YUN 1989, p. 420] and the 2001 Stockholm Convention on Persistent Organic Pollutants [YUN 2001, p. 971].

The Open-ended Ad Hoc Working Group on Non-Compliance held its first session (Rome, 26-27 September) [UNEP/FAO/RC/OEWG.1/3].

International chemicals management

In February, the UNEP Governing Council, having considered the Executive Director's 2004 report on chemicals management [YUN 2004, p. 1064], adopted a multi-part decision on that issue [dec. 23/9]. In the part dealing with cooperation between UNEP, relevant multilateral environmental agreements and other organizations [dec. 23/9 I], the Council requested the Executive Director to strengthen support for the 1989 Basel Convention on the Control of Transboundary Movements of Hazardous Wastes and their Disposal [YUN 1989, p. 420], the 1998 Rotterdam Convention on the Prior Informed Consent Procedure for Certain Hazardous Chemicals and Pesticides in International Trade [YUN 1998, p. 997] and the 2001 Stockholm Convention on Persistent Organic Pollutants [YUN 2001, p. 971], and to promote full cooperation and synergies between the secretariats of those Conventions and the UNEP Chemicals Branch. He was also asked to: promote cooperation between the secretariats of the 1987 Montreal Protocol on Substances that Deplete the Ozone Layer [YUN 1987, p. 686], the Basel, Rotterdam and Stockholm Conventions, the UNEP Chemicals Branch, and the World Customs Organization in addressing international illegal trafficking of hazardous chemicals and wastes; promote cooperation with the Basel Convention regional training centres in the implementation of activities of related multilateral environmental agreements and institutions; and report to the Council in 2007.

In the part of the decision dealing with the strategic approach to international chemicals management (SAICM) [dec. 23/9 II], the Council requested Governments in a position to do so and other stakeholders to contribute the extrabudgetary resources needed to support the further development of SAICM. The Executive Director was asked to provide funding towards that end and to report to the Governing Council in 2006 on the outcomes of that process of development. He should make preparations for a third and final meeting of the Preparatory Committee for the Development of SAICM, to be held in Vienna in September (see below), and, in cooperation with the other co-conveners, for the International Conference on Chemicals Management, scheduled to take place in conjunction with the ninth (2006) special session of the Governing Council. He was asked, as a matter of high priority, to provide for the implementation of UNEP's responsibilities under SAICM, once adopted, and to support developing countries and countries with economies in transition in implementing the strategic approach, taking into account the Bali Strategic Plan for Technology Support and Capacity-building (see p. 1135), and to report in 2007.

Preparatory Committee meeting. The third and final session of the Preparatory Committee for the Development of SAICM (Vienna, 19-24 September) [SAICM/PREPCOM.3/5] considered the SAICM global programme of action, its overarching policy strategy and a high-level declaration, which together were to form the tripartite structure for SAICM, as agreed by the Committee in 2004 [YUN 2004, p. 1064]. Draft texts of those three SAICM elements were annexed to the Committee's report and were to be forwarded to the 2006 International Conference on Chemicals Management for consideration.

In October [UNEP/GCSS.IX/6], the Executive Director reported that the third session of the Preparatory Committee agreed provisionally that he should be requested to perform secretariat functions for SAICM during its implementation phase. A number of issues remained to be resolved and various elements of the SAICM documents to be finalized, including sections of the policy strategy dealing with financial considerations and principles and approaches. The Committee President convened a meeting of an expanded bureau (Jongny, Switzerland, 4-5 November) to consider possible avenues for consensus, make final preparations for the International Conference on Chemicals Management and finalize and adopt SAICM and refer it to the governing bodies of relevant intergovernmental organizations, including GC/GMEF, for consideration.

Lead and cadmium

On 25 February [dec. 23/9 III], the Governing Council reaffirmed its 2003 decision on lead [YUN 2003, p. 1071] and requested the Executive Director to review available scientific information, focusing on long-range environmental transport, in order to inform future discussions on the need for global action in relation to lead and cadmium. Governments and other stakeholders were asked to increase contributions to facilitate the timely implementation of the decision, and the Executive Director was asked to report to the Council in 2007.

On 27 December, UNEP announced that vehicle fuels in sub-Saharan Africa would be lead-free as at 1 January 2006, meeting the phase-out date set by African Governments and their partners, including UNEP, in 2001.

Mercury

On 25 February [dec. 23/9 IV], the Governing Council reiterated the conclusion of the UNEP Global Mercury Assessment [YUN 2002, p. 1064] that there was sufficient evidence of significant global adverse impacts from mercury and its compounds to warrant further international action to reduce the risks to human health and the environment from the release of mercury and its compounds into the environment, and the Council's 2003 decision [YUN 2003, p. 1071] regarding the initiation of national, regional and global actions to reduce or eliminate such releases. It continued to urge all countries to adopt goals and to take national action to identify exposed populations and ecosystems and reduce anthropogenic mercury releases that affected human health and the environment. The Council requested the Executive Director to develop further the UNEP mercury programme and to prepare and publicize a report summarizing supply, trade and demand information for mercury, including in artisanal and small-scale gold mining. He should propose possible further actions in those areas for the Council's consideration in 2007, with the aim of facilitating and conducting technical assistance and capacity-building activities to support the efforts of countries in taking action regarding mercury pollution.

Governments were encouraged to promote and improve evaluation and communication methods, based on, among other things, guidance from WHO and FAO. Governments, the private sector and international organizations should take immediate action to reduce the risks to human health and the environment posed on a global scale by mercury in products and production processes. Governments in a position to do so should assist developing countries and countries with economies in transition through technology transfer, capacity-building and access to financial resources to achieve the goals of the Council's 2003 decision on mercury [ibid.], and with intergovernmental organizations, non-governmental organizations (NGOs) and the private sector develop and implement partnerships to reduce the risks to human health and the environment from the release of mercury and its compounds to the environment, with a view to achieving those goals. The Executive Director was asked to invite Governments, particularly of developing countries and countries with economies in transition, to identify, in consultation with stakeholders, a set of pilot partnerships by 1 September. He should also compile and report on needs identified to execute the partnerships and assist in mobilizing resources to support them; share and disseminate information submitted by partnerships on progress, lessons learned and emerging best practices and report on the results of those partnerships; report on the partnership programme at the third (2005) session of the SAICM Preparatory Committee (see p. 1161) and the 2006 International Conference on Chemicals Management and on partnership implementation, in 2007. The Council indicated a number of elements to be identified in each partnership and encouraged Governments, intergovernmental organizations, NGOs and the private sector to form a partnership to assist the Executive Director in resources mobilization. The Executive Director was asked to facilitate work between the UNEP mercury programme and Governments, other international organizations, NGOs, the private sector and the partnerships to: improve global understanding of international mercury emission sources, fate and transport; promote the development of inventories of mercury uses and releases and environmentally sound disposal and remediation practices; and increase awareness of environmentally sound recycling practices. Governments and stakeholders, especially in developed countries, and relevant international organizations, were encouraged to mobilize technical and financial resources to support partnerships.

The Council requested the Executive Director to report in 2007 on progress in implementing its decision and decided to assess, on the basis of the progress report, the need for further action on mercury, including the possibility of a legally binding instrument, partnerships and other actions.

Persistent organic pollutants

As at 31 December, 114 States and the EC were parties to the 2001 Stockholm Convention on Persistent Organic Pollutants (POPs) [YUN 2001, p. 971], which entered into force in 2004 [YUN 2004, p. 1066].

The first meeting of the Conference of the Parties to the Stockholm Convention (Punta del Este, Uruguay, 2-6 May) [UNEP/POPS/COP.1/31] accepted Switzerland's offer to host the Convention secretariat in Geneva and approved the operational budget of $5,366,136 for 2006 and an indicative operational budget of $4,213,264 for 2007. It adopted its rules of procedure; an arbitration procedure for the settlement of disputes among parties; and financial rules for the Conference of the Parties, its subsidiary bodies and the Convention secretariat. The Conference also adopted a memorandum of understanding between itself and Council of the Global Environment Facility; the guidance for assisting countries in preparing national implementation plans [UNEP/POPS/COP.1/INF/13 & Add.1]; guidance on technical assistance; the review process for entries in the Register of Specific Exemptions; the revised format for reporting under article 15 of the Convention; and formats for the Register of Specific Exemptions and the register for the synthetic pesticide dichloro-diphenyl-trichloroethane (DDT). It established the Persistent Organic Pollutants Review Committee as a subsidiary body and the Expert Group on Best Available Techniques and Best Environmental Practices. Other decisions dealt with evaluation; non-compliance; technical assistance provided to regional and subregional centres; enhancing synergies within the chemicals and waste cluster; best available techniques and best environmental practices; technical guidelines for the environmentally sound management of POPs waste; and financial and administrative matters.

The first meeting of the Persistent Organic Pollutants Review Committee (Geneva, 7-11 November) [UNEP/POPS/POPRC.1/10] adopted decisions on provisional confidentiality arrangements; a process for inviting experts to participate in Committee meetings; and the chemicals pentabromodiphenyl ether, chlordecone, hexabromobiphenyl, lindane, and perfluorooctane sulfonate.

Hazardous wastes

As at 31 December, the number of parties to the 1989 Basel Convention on the Control of Transboundary Movements of Hazardous Wastes and their Disposal [YUN 1989, p. 420], which entered into force in 1992 [YUN 1992, p. 685], rose to 166. The 1995 amendment to the Convention [YUN 1995, p. 1333], not yet in force, had been ratified, accepted or approved by 61 parties. During the year, the number of parties to the 1999 Basel Protocol on Liability and Compensation for Damage resulting from Transboundary Movements of Hazardous Wastes and their Disposal [YUN 1999, p. 998] rose to seven.

The first meeting (Geneva, 12-22 June) [UNEP/SBC/BUREAU/7/1/11] of the Expanded Bureau of the seventh (2004) meeting of the Conference of the Parties to the Convention discussed the Convention's partnership programme and resource mobilization strategy, the outcome of the first (2005) meeting of the Conference of the Parties to the 2001 Stockholm Convention on POPs (see p. 1162), and financial and administrative matters.

The fourth session of the Open-ended Working Group of the Convention (Geneva, 4-8 July) [UNEP/CHW/OEWG/4/18] agreed to the prioritization of its 2005-2006 work programme and approved, with amendments, the instruction manual for the implementation of the Basel Protocol on Liability and Compensation contained in a secretariat note [UNEP/CHW/OEWG/4/8]. Other decisions dealt with: the Basel Convention Partnership Programme; the Mobile Phone Partnership Initiative; the Joint Working Group of the International Labour Organization, the International Maritime Organization and the Convention on Ship Scrapping; the environmentally sound management of ship dismantling; the abandonment of ships on land or in ports; illegal traffic in hazardous wastes; sustainable financing and other financial matters; the preparation of technical guidelines on POPs and on the environmentally sound management of wastes resulting from surface treatment of metals and plastics; work on hazard characteristics; harmonization of the forms for the notification and movement of documents and related instructions; and resource mobilization.

Other matters

Occupied Palestinian and other Arab territories

In a February note [UNEP/GC.23/INF/30], the Executive Director provided information on the environment in the Occupied Palestinian Territory. UNEP organized, with the Palestinian Environment Quality Authority and the UNDP Programme of Assistance to the Palestinian People, three one-day workshops in Ramallah (29-31 January) on public awareness for senior Palestinian decision makers; solid waste for municipalities; and environmental education and awareness raising for schoolteachers. A capacity building seminar on hazardous waste in the Middle East (Helsinki, Finland, 7-9 February), organized in cooperation with Finland, was attended by Egyptian, Israeli, Jordanian and Palestinian participants.

Environment and security

A January note by the Executive Director [UNEP/GC.23/INF/21] provided information on UNEP's activities with regard to environment and security. The Executive Director said that the relationship between environmental degradation and political instability was poorly understood. A more systematic assessment of the links between environment and security and a more careful consideration of the links between environmental resources/degradation and development were needed. Efforts to address the relationship between environment and conflict were relatively undeveloped, with few major international institutions attempting to tackle that agenda collaboratively. Approaches that needed to be assessed, included conservation strategies that promoted cooperation; integration of development and environmental policy; incorporation of environmental security into urban development and planning; deepening the understanding of environmental policies in post-conflict situations; and rigorous assessment of the effectiveness and sustainability of interventions.

UNEP, UNDP and the Organization for Security and Co-operation in Europe launched the Environment and Security Initiative, a strategy to address conflict-prone environmental problems and implement opportunities that advanced and protected peace and the environment simultaneously, while promoting and securing sustainable development patterns.

UNEP intended to strengthen its role and involvement in environment and security issues, while expanding the scope of its work. Elements under consideration for UNEP's global agenda for environment and security included a global security assessment, a mapping exercise and an awareness campaign.

International Year of Planet Earth (2008)

On 22 December [meeting 68], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/60/488/Add.1], adopted resolution 60/192 without vote [agenda item 52 (a)].

International Year of Planet Earth, 2008

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming Agenda 21, the Plan of Implementation of the World Summit on Sustainable Development ("Johannesburg Plan of Implementation") and the Hyogo Framework for Action 2005-2015,

Noting that the wealth of scientific information available on planet Earth remains largely untapped and hardly known to the public or to policymakers and decision makers,

Convinced that education in Earth sciences provides humankind with tools for the sustainable use of natural resources and for building the scientific infrastructure essential for sustainable development,

Welcoming the decision of the General Conference of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization to support the declaration of 2008 as the International Year of Planet Earth with a view to highlighting the importance of Earth sciences,

Taking into account the crucial role the Year could play, inter alia, in raising public awareness of the importance for sustainable development of the Earth's processes and resources; disaster prevention, reduction and mitigation; and capacity-building for the sustainable management of resources; and its important contribution to the United Nations Decade of Education for Sustainable Development,

1. Decides to declare 2008 the International Year of Planet Earth;

2. Designates the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization as the lead agency and the focal point for the Year to organize activities to be undertaken during the Year, in collaboration with the United Nations Environment Programme and other relevant entities of the United Nations system, as well as the International Union of Geological Sciences and other Earth science societies and groups throughout the world, and in this regard agrees that the activities of the International Year of Planet Earth will be funded from voluntary contributions, including, inter alia, from industry and major foundations mobilized by a consortium of international organizations, led by the International Union of Geological Sciences;

3. Encourages all Member States, the United Nations system and all other actors to take advantage of the Year to increase awareness of the importance of Earth sciences for the achievement of sustainable development and to promote action at the local, national, regional and international levels;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its sixty-second session on the progress of the preparations for the International Year of Planet Earth.

Human settlements

Follow-up to the 1996 UN Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II) and the 2001 General Assembly special session

Report of Secretary-General. In July [A/60/168], the Secretary-General, in response to General Assembly resolution 59/239 [YUN 2004, p. 1070], reported on follow-up to the Assembly's twenty-fifth (2001) special session [YUN 2001, p. 973] to review and appraise the implementation of the Habitat Agenda [YUN 1996, p. 994], adopted by the 1996 United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II) [ibid., p. 992], and on the strengthening of the United Nations Human Settlements Programme (UN-Habitat). During the reporting period, UN-Habitat made significant progress in strengthening the United Nations Habitat and Human Settlements Foundation. General purpose funds from Governments rose from $8.3 million in 2003 to $10.5 million in 2004, while earmarked contributions rose from $17.2 million to $22.2 million. The twentieth session of the UN-Habitat Governing Council (see p. 1168) noted the imbalance between earmarked and non-earmarked contributions and called upon Governments and other Habitat Agenda partners to increase their funding to the Foundation and to give priority to non-earmarked, multi-year funding. UN-Habitat launched its newest subprogramme, the Human Settlements Financing Division, providing the Foundation with an operational platform for mobilizing resources at the country level. It also launched the Slum Upgrading Facility, a three-year pilot project. UN-Habitat expanded its efforts at the country level to build the capacity of States to achieve the Millennium Development Goals (MDGs) [YUN 2000, p. 51], especially the targets on slums. It expanded its technical assistance to over 80 States, and responded to demands for disaster mitigation and post-conflict humanitarian assistance and reconstruction. UN-Habitat placed national Habitat Programme Managers in 32 countries. The Programme adjusted its monitoring and research activities to support member States in monitoring implementation of the MDGs and in analysing policies and practices to help them achieve those targets, including documenting and disseminating best practices and undertaking seminal research on urban economic conditions, rural-urban linkages and effective strategies for improving urban self-employment and livelihood for the urban poor.

UN-Habitat created forums for global networking and established several strategic partnerships. It agreed to establish with the World Bank a cooperation agreement to provide greater coherence to urban development interventions at the country level, with an emphasis on promoting housing finance and placing urban development more squarely in the national development agenda. It signed agreements with the Asian Development Bank, the Inter-American Development Bank and the African Development Bank for joint projects and programmes in the areas of water, sanitation, housing and urban development, focusing on the living conditions of the urban poor. UN-Habitat also participated in regional ministerial meetings on housing and land and urban development in Latin America, Africa and Asia. It convened, with the African Union, the inaugural session of the African Ministerial Conference on Housing and Urban Development (Durban, South Africa, 31 January–4 February),which agreed to establish an enhanced implementation framework for promoting sustainable cities and towns in Africa. The Global Campaign for Secure Tenure and the Global Campaign on Urban Governance were launched in over 10 countries, within the framework of the MDG targets and the Plan of Implementation of the World Summit on Sustainable Development [YUN 2002, p. 821], with follow-up activities directed towards building local capacities. The Inter-agency Advisory Group on Forced Evictions, an international task force to facilitate negotiated policy alternatives to unlawful eviction, was established, and progress made in implementing the Water for African Cities and Water for Asian Cities programmes.

The Secretary-General noted that the crisis of rapid urbanization and the unique opportunity presented by slum upgrading for the attainment of the MDGs called for Governments to adopt pro-poor, urban policies and action plans. He encouraged Governments to strengthen UN-Habitat and the Human Settlements Foundation by providing non-earmarked, predicable funding and regular budget resources for core programme activities; and to contribute to the Water and Sanitation Trust Fund, the Slum Upgrading Facility and other technical cooperation trust funds.

Commission on Sustainable Development consideration. The Commission on Sustainable Development, at its thirteenth session (New York, 11–22 April) [E/2005/29] (see p. 920), considered policy options in the thematic areas of water, sanitation and human settlements. The Commission's intergovernmental preparatory meeting [E/CN.17/2005/6] discussed aspects of an integrated approach to land use, housing development, the delivery of water and sanitation services, transportation infrastructure, education and healthcare facilities and employment. It addressed the goals of providing improved housing and associated services to the urban poor; creating jobs and promoting enterprises; and developing finance institutions and financial products suitable to the needs of the urban poor. The Commission also considered the interlinkages among water, sanitation and human settlements.

The Commission had before it the reports of the Secretary-General on human settlements: policy options and possible actions to expedite implementation [E/CN.17/2005/4], and major groups' priorities for action in water, sanitation and human settlements [E/CN.17/2005/5]. The report on policy options discussed aspects of housing, tenure security and urban land management, including those relating to the urban poor, and considered the challenge of devising strategies and policies for increasing the productivity of urban areas, while supporting economic growth that benefitted the poor. Stating that such strategies needed to recognize the contribution of the informal sector to economic development and employment, the report also discussed issues relating to the development of a policy environment supportive of employment and enterprise. With respect to mobilizing the estimated $70 to $100 billion needed to achieve the MDG goal of improving the lives of at least 100 million slum-dwellers by 2020, the Secretary-General considered several options, including promoting community-based approaches to financing, promoting and scaling-up microfinancing schemes and developing market-based instruments and institutions. The report considered the participation of Governments, local authorities, UN agencies and other relevant actors in the development of a framework for action on the issue.

On 22 April [E/2005/29 (res. 13/1)], the Commission adopted a resolution on policy options and practical measures to expedite implementation in water, sanitation and human settlements. The resolution called upon Governments and the UN system, international financial institutions and other international organizations to provide an enabling policy and regulatory environment and to mobilize the requisite means of implementation for the promotion of sustainable human settlements development in both urban and rural areas, in accordance with national priorities. It supported integrated planning and management, among other activities, to prevent new slum dwellings and assist in providing access for the poor in urban and rural areas to descent and affordable housing and basic services, taking into account employment and enterprise promotion and other interlinkages and cross-cutting issues. The Commission requested UN-Habitat to facilitate effective global monitoring of progress in the implementation of human settlements goals and targets, as well as measures agreed at the current session of the Commission regarding human settlements. It also called upon member States to strengthen the UN-Habitat capacities to provide increased assistance to developing countries and countries with economies in transition, including through the pilot phase of the Slum Upgrading Facility.

Coordinated implementation of Habitat Agenda

In May [E/2005/60], in accordance with a 2004 Economic and Social Council request [YUN 2004, p. 1070], the Secretary-General reported on the coordinated implementation of the Habitat Agenda, in particular the work of UN-Habitat with regard to its four subprogrammes: shelter and sustainable human settlements development; monitoring of the Habitat Agenda; regional and technical cooperation; and human settlements financing. It also considered the UN-Habitat's cooperation and collaboration with its partners , including the World Bank and regional financial institutions and described innovations in its work, including on the debt-for-land swap programme between Kenya and Finland, the Slum Upgrading Facility, the launch of the UN-Habitat Water and Sanitation Trust Fund, and the implementation of an enabling strategy for civil society within cities. The report also reviewed UN-Habitat's financial, human resource and information management.

The Secretary-General encouraged Governments to include human settlements in their national development plans and to promote city and metropolitan planning in their poverty reduction strategies and their UN development assistance frameworks; assess conditions and trends in their urban slums and create a pro-poor policy environment that placed the highest priority on improving the living environment of slum dwellers; participate and support the participation of Habitat partners from developing countries in the third session of the World Urban Forum, to be held in Vancouver, Canada in 2006; and increase the non-earmarked component of their contributions.

On 26 July, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 2005/298, took note of the Secretary-General's report and decided to transmit it to the General Assembly for consideration at its sixtieth (2005) session. It requested the Secretary-General to submit a further report for consideration by the Council in 2006.

In accordance with the Council's decision, the Secretary-General, by a September note [A/60/347], transmitted his May report on the coordinated implementation of the Habitat Agenda to the Assembly.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December [meeting 68], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/60/489], adopted resolution 60/203 without vote [agenda item 53].

Implementation of the outcome of the United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II) and strengthening of the United Nations Human Settlements Programme (UN-Habitat)

The General Assembly,

global campaigns on secure tenure and urban governance are strategic points of entry for the effective implementation of the Habitat Agenda, especially for guiding international cooperation in respect of adequate shelter for all and sustainable human settlements development,

Conscious of the unique opportunity provided by the Cities Without Slums Initiative mentioned in the Millennium Declaration for realizing economies of scale and substantial multiplier effects in helping to attain the other Millennium Development Goals,

Acknowledging the significance of the urban dimension of poverty eradication and the need to integrate water and sanitation issues within a broad-based approach to human settlements,

Expressing its appreciation to the regular Assembly of Ministers and High-level Authorities of the Housing and Urban Development Sector in Latin America and the Caribbean and its recent plan of action on the implementation of the Millennium Development Goals,

Expressing its appreciation also to the African Union, UN-Habitat and the Government of South Africa for convening and hosting the first African conference of housing and urban development ministers in Durban from 31 January to 4 February 2005, which established the African Ministerial Conference on Housing and Urban Development to promote sustainable human settlements in Africa,

Expressing its appreciation further to the Government of Canada and the city of Vancouver for their willingness to host the third session of the World Urban Forum in June 2006 and to the Government of China and the city of Nanjing for their willingness to host the fourth session of the World Urban Forum in 2008,

UN Human Settlements Programme

Governing Council

In 2005, the Governing Council of the United Nations Human Settlements Programme (UN-Habitat) held its twentieth session (Nairobi, 4-8 April) [A/60/8]. The Council adopted 21 resolutions and one decision regarding various aspects of UN-Habitat's work and future sessions of the Governing Council. In a resolution on housing as a component to an adequate standard of living for vulnerable or disadvantaged persons [res. 20/13], the Council requested the Executive Director to integrate the protection of such persons into all UN-Habitat activities, develop or strengthen mechanisms for monitoring the impact of human settlement policies and programmes on the lives and work of disadvantaged persons in cities, and report in 2007. Welcoming progress made in the work of UN-Habitat Best Practices and Local Leadership Programme [res. 20/6], the Council encouraged the Executive Director to make resources available in support of best practices, good urban practices and enabling legislation, and to report in 2007.

The Council took note of a draft strategy for enhancing the engagement of youth in UN-Habitat's work [HSP/GC/20/2/Add.5], and requested the Executive Director to finalize the Youth Strategy for Enhanced Engagement and to develop an action plan for its implementation, including an internal evaluation which would take into consideration input from youth organizations (res. 20/1). The Executive Director was also asked to strengthen and mainstream UN-Habitat's work on the engagement of young people in human settlements development and in addressing the problems of young people at risk, especially girls and young women; study the effects of social and economic conditions related to urbanization on the intergenerational transfer of values conducive to good citizenship and how national and local governments could assist that process; support youth organizations to develop partnerships with each other; facilitate the participation of youth representatives at important UN-Habitat meetings; and report in 2007. The Council also had before it a theme paper on enhancing the involvement of civil society in local governance [HSP/GC/20/4]. In a related resolution [res.20/16], the Executive Director was requested to continue compiling lessons learned and best practices and, in close collaboration with other parts of the UN system and with other partners, improve their dissemination and exchange, promote civil society involvement in UN-Habitat projects, and report to the Council in 2007.

The Council considered the Executive Director's report on progress made in implementing UN-Habitat's global campaign on secure tenure and urban governance, launched in 2000 [YUN 2000, p. 995] [HSP/GC/20/INF/6] and endorsed the conclusion of an independent evaluation of the campaign [HSP/GC/20/INF/7]. The Executive Director was asked to ensure that the campaign had a higher global visibility and to further mainstream its principles through UN-Habitat activities and programmes. She was further requested to report on the matter in 2007 [res. 20/12].

Welcoming the establishment of the African Ministerial Conference on Housing and Urban Development (see p. 1165) [res. 20/2], the Council requested the Executive Director to work closely with the Conference in achieving the aims of the Habitat Agenda and in accelerating the achievement of the MDGs in Africa; support the activities of the Conference and the implementation of the Cities Programme of the New Partnership for Africa's Development (NEPAD), and to report in 2007 on progress made by the Conference [res. 20/4]. The Executive Director was invited to mainstream the implementation of the Brussels Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries [YUN 2001, p. 771] in UN-Habitat activities, as called for in General Assembly resolution 56/227 [ibid., p. 773], and to contribute to its effective implementation. Having considered a theme paper on post-conflict, natural and man-made disaster assessment and reconstruction [HSP/GC/20/5], the Council noted the guiding principles contained in the document and asked the Executive Director to elaborate them. She was requested to develop a strategic policy for UN-Habitat's role in addressing the sustainable human settlements aspect of human-made and natural disaster management for review by the Committee of Permanent Representatives before the end of 2005, and mobilize the financial resources required for such a strategy [res. 20/17]. In a further resolution [20/9], she was asked to assist in raising international awareness of the challenges faced by small island developing States with regard to sustainable human settlements development; assist those States in disaster preparedness, land registration, urban planning guidelines, and hurricane-resistant housing, among other areas; and to further strengthen cooperation with relevant UN agencies, funds and programmes related to small island developing States.

With regard to the sustainable development of Arctic cities [res. 20/8], the Council took note of the establishment of a North-North network for promoting and facilitating cooperation between cities located in the Arctic region. It requested the Executive Director to assist in raising international awareness of the sustainable development challenges of the far north and Arctic region, including those faced by indigenous people residing in those areas; consult with the United Nations and other partners and stakeholders on the matter; compile information on training activities in that region as a basis of further cooperation between UN-Habitat and relevant partners; and report on the implementation of the resolution to the Council in 2007.

Having considered the report of the Executive Director on progress in the implementation of the Special Human Settlements Programme for the Palestinian People [HSP/GC/20/2/Add.3], the Council welcomed progress made and reiterated its invitation to the donor community and financial institutions to support the programme [res. 20/14].

In a resolution on strengthening the Slum Upgrading Facility of UN-Habitat and the Human Settlements Foundation [res. 20/11], the Council invited Governments and others to continue to contribute financially to the Facility, capitalizing it to a minimum level of $30 million. It requested the Executive Director to accelerate efforts to implement a cooperation framework between UN-Habitat and the World Bank Group and similar framework agreements with regional development banks, and to report to the Council in 2007 on progress made regarding the Slum Upgrading Facility. As to the preservation and sustainable development of oases [res. 20/3], the Council asked the Executive Director to take into account the specific needs of oases in UN-Habitat global programmes, particularly in the Sustainable Cities and Localizing Agenda 21 programmes [YUN 1992, p. 672], and to strengthen consultation and partnership mechanisms on the matter. Having considered a report of the Executive Director [HSP/GC/20/7] on the decentralization and strengthening of local authorities, the Council took note of the draft guidelines prepared by the Advisory Group of Experts on Decentralization (AGRED) [YUN 2004, p. 1074]. It invited Governments to provide comments on the draft guidelines before the end of 2005 and requested the Executive Director, with AGRED support, to revise and finalize the guidelines during 2006 and to submit them to the Council in 2007. She was further requested to continue to develop the concept of a global observatory that would assess, monitor and evaluate the state of decentralization and accountability around the world [res. 20/18].

The Governing Council [res. 20/10] took note of the Executive Director's report [HSP/GC/20/2/Add.1,2] on the second session of the World Urban Forum [YUN 2004, p. 1073], and noted that the outcomes of the Forum had been taken into account in the preparation of the Secretary-General's report to the thirteenth session of the Commission on Sustainable Development on human settlements, and recommended that UN-Habitat be the focal point for following up and monitoring the outcomes of that session pertaining to human settlements. It invited the Executive Director to include the topic of interrelations between human settlements, energy and sustainable development in the agenda of the third World Urban Forum; prepare a report on energy consumption in human settlements, including examples of policy approaches for consideration by the Council and the Commission in 2007; inform Governments, through the Committee of Permanent Representatives, on the relevant outcomes of the thirteenth session of the Commission; and to report in 2007.

In further action, the Council [res. 20/19] approved the 2006-2007 draft integrated work programme and budget [HSP/GC/20/9], which included a general-purpose budget of $27,601,000, and a special-purpose budget of $55,148,000. It authorized the Executive Director to adjust the level of allocations for programme activities with the actual level of income, and to re-allocate general-purpose resources between subprogrammes up to a maximum 25 per cent of that budget. It requested the Executive Director to develop a resource-mobilization strategy for presentation to the Governing Council in 2007, including options for broadening the donor base and encouraging non-earmarked contributions. She was further requested to report periodically on the work programme.

The Council had before it a report of the Executive Director [HSP/GC/20/13] relating to the themes for the twenty-first (2007) and other future sessions of the Governing Council. The Council endorsed the recommendations of the Committee of Permanent Representatives on improving preparations for its sessions, and decided that its special themes would no longer be chosen two years in advance but by its Bureau at least six months before the start of each session, on the advice of the Executive Director, and in consultation with the Committee of Permanent Representatives. The Council requested the Committee of Permanent Representatives, in 2007, to recommend further proposals for improving the Committee's structure and organizational arrangements, and the Executive Director to prepare a background paper on the subject for use by the Committee [res. 20/21].

Among other documents, the Governing Council also considered a joint progress report of the Executive Directors of UN-Habitat and UNEP on their respective activities [YUN 2004, p. 1073]; a report on the work of the Committee of Permanent Representatives during the intersessional period [ibid., p. 1072]; and reports on implementing [HSP/GC/20/6] and monitoring the implementation of the MDG on improving the lives of slum dwellers [HSP/GC/20/6/Add.1].

Resolutions were also adopted on access to basic services for all within the context of sustainable human settlements [res. 20/5], regional and technical cooperation [res. 20/15] and gender equality in human settlements development [res. 20/7] (see below).

UN-Habitat activities

In 2005, UN-Habitat responded to the humanitarian challenges posed by the December 2004 Indian Ocean tsunami [YUN 2004, p. 953] and the earthquake in Pakistan on 8 October (see p. 1034). UN-Habitat was involved in rebuilding activities in Pakistan, Indonesia, Maldives, Sri Lanka and Thailand that were affected by the tsunami. UN-Habitat programmes in post-conflict areas, such as Afghanistan, Iraq, Kosovo (Serbia and Montenegro) and Somalia, remained active during the year, while new ground was broken for the Special Human Settlements Programme for the Palestinian People. In June, the Security Council appointed UN-Habitat's Executive Director, Anna Tibaijuka, as Special Envoy of the Secretary-General on Human Settlements in Zimbabwe. The Special Envoy visited that country (26 June–8 July) to assess reports of some 700,000 evictions of poor people by the Government (see p. 371). Following the submission of the mission's report, UN-Habitat reached an agreement with the Government to explore more equitable housing and land tenure solutions.

UN-Habitat accelerated implementation of its Water and Sanitation Slum Upgrading initiatives, with the aim of strengthening the UN-Habitat and Human Settlements Foundation and expanding working arrangements and partnerships with international and domestic financial institutions, the private sector, local government and the urban poor. During the year, UN-Habitat proposed innovative financial and institutional packages to help meet the slum upgrading and water and sanitation targets of the Millennium Declaration [YUN 2000, p. 49]. At the invitation of the United Kingdom, UN-Habitat participated in the work of the Commission for Africa [YUN 2004, p. 993] and continued its involvement in the annual meetings of Ministers of Housing and Urbanism of the Latin American and Caribbean Countries.

UN-Habitat's Global Campaign for Urban Governance and its Global Campaign for Secure Tenure continued to assist in implementing national Campaign activities. The Programme expanded its collaboration with the five UN regional commissions, with a view to expanding both Campaigns at the regional level. Within the framework of the Campaigns, UN-Habitat collaborated with partners, including advocacy groups, regional networks, UNDP, WHO, UNICEF and the World Bank to mainstream the Campaigns' objectives and more effectively synchronize UN-Habitat activities in the field. Collaboration with partners were initiated in producing toolkits, conducting capacity-building workshops and facilitating stakeholder consultations. The two Campaigns were also involved in a research project on transnational migration.

The Programme's operational activities focused on supporting Governments in formulating policies and strategies to create a self-reliant management capacity. As at 31 December, UN-Habitat was operating 95 technical programmes and projects in 60 countries around the world, with the majority in the least developed countries. The Programme's Monitoring and Research Division published the Global Report on Human Settlements–Financing Urban Shelter, as well as four issues of its magazine, Habitat Debate.

In October, the Secretary-General appointed Inga Bjork-Klevby (Sweden) as Assistant-Secretary-General and Deputy Executive Director of UN-Habitat.

Access to basic services

On 8 April [res. 20/5], the Governing Council, taking note of proposals made to the twelfth session of the Commission on Sustainable Development [YUN 2004, p. 831] to develop a set of codes and recommendations on partnerships and on the role of various actors regarding access to basic services for all, reaffirmed the importance of developing partnerships between central and local governments, the private sector, civil society and populations themselves, with a view to increasing national and local financial resources and capabilities for improving access to those services. The Executive Director, in cooperation with other relevant UN bodies, was asked to compile best practices on policies, norms and institutional capacities related to the delivery of basic services within the context of sustainable human settlements, focusing on the respective roles and responsibilities of national Governments, local authorities and other Habitat Agenda partners, and to identify underlying principles which could be drawn from them for discussion by the Committee of Permanent Representatives. She was requested also to invite relevant UN bodies, Governments and interested stakeholders to comment on her report on the issue, which should be taken into account in finalizing options on the way forward, including recommendations on guiding principles on the delivery of and access to basic services for all, for submission to the Council in 2007.

Regional and technical cooperation

The Governing Council, on 8 April [res. 20/15], acknowledged that Habitat Programme Managers reported to regional offices, while contributing to all normative, advocacy and monitoring activities of UN-Habitat, and to the UN resident coordinator on a regular basis. It stressed that all UN-Habitat activities at the national level, including the work of Habitat Programme Managers, should be aligned with host-country national development strategies and plans and that normative operational activities should respond to national challenges. The Council agreed that the work of Programme Managers would focus on promoting the integration of sustainable urbanization into UN development assistance frameworks and national development strategies and plans, as well as the global and normative mandate, programmes and campaigns of UN-Habitat; and support UN-Habitat operational activities at the national and local levels.

The Council requested the Executive Director to comply, in the deployment of Habitat Programme Managers, with the budgetary allocation from the Foundation's general-purpose contributions envisaged for that purpose in the 2006-2007 work programme and budget and to continue to deploy Programme Managers as other sources of funding were secured. She was further requested to undertake an independent strategic evaluation of the performance and impact of Habitat Programme Managers before the end of 2006, for submission to the Council in 2007, and to include the issue of their further deployment as part of the medium-term strategic and institutional plan, to be developed for the Council's 2007 session. Governments that were in a position to do so were invited to support the financial viability of the Habitat Programme Manager network, ideally through multi-year contributions, as well as UN-Habitat regional offices.

Role of women

On 8 April [res. 20/7], the Governing Council took note of the Executive Director's report [HS/GC/20/2] on progress made in the implementation of its 2003 resolution on women's roles and rights in human settlements and slum upgrading [YUN 2003, p. 1083]. Concerned by the persistence of discriminatory practices that limited women's participation in decision-making and prevented their ownership of land, the Council requested Governments and local authorities to involve women in decision-making at all levels of government and to encourage their participation in human settlements development planning, and to strengthen gender mainstreaming in local governance. Governments and local authorities should address violence and causes of violence against women in human settlements and develop partnerships with relevant organizations. Governments were urged to recognize and address, in a non-discriminatory way, the special needs, vulnerabilities, priorities and capacities of women in post-conflict and disaster situations, and review or revise discriminatory policies, laws and other practices, especially with regard to women's property rights.

The Executive Director was asked to ensure that all normative and operational activities of UN-Habitat addressed gender equality and women's empowerment in human settlements development by incorporating gender impact assessment and gender disaggregated data criteria in the design, implementation, monitoring and evaluation of their activities. In cooperation with Habitat Agenda partners, she should prepare information material and disseminate best practices on gender mainstreaming and women's empowerment in human settlements development at the local, municipal and national levels and report in 2007 on the implementation of the Council's resolution.

OIOS review

In an April note [E/AC.51/2005/3], the Secretary-General transmitted a report of the Office of Internal Oversight Services (OIOS) on the in-depth evaluation of UN-Habitat. The report, prepared in response to General Assembly resolution 59/272 [YUN 2004, p. 1370], reviewed the achievements and shortcomings of the Programme, considering such aspects as the advocacy of its norms, monitoring and research functions, operational activities, funding approaches, and executive direction and cross-cutting issues. With regard to its global campaigns, OIOS agreed that the Global Campaign on Urban Governance and the Global Campaign for Secure Tenure had raised awareness of the norms of good urban governance and secure tenure and led to changes at the policy and institutional levels in the countries in which the campaigns were launched. However, both Campaigns lacked clear strategies and plans and faced financial constraints. There were gaps in the Programme's research agenda and there was a need to establish clearer priorities and provide guidance to the network of academic and research institutions assisting UN-Habitat in its analytical work. OIOS also found that, despite some capacity, security and time frame constraints, clients were satisfied with the products of UN-Habitat's regional and technical cooperation projects, which had contributed to introducing new norms and policies at the national and local levels. The appointment of UN-Habitat Programme Managers (see p. 1171) had the potential to enhance the Programme's capacity to achieve its development goals and to help integrate shelter and urban poverty issues into UN development assistance frameworks.

With regard to financing, despite the fourfold increase in bilateral extrabudgetary contributions and the efforts to develop innovative approaches to financing, OIOS was concerned over the substantial proportion of bilateral governmental contributions and the reliance on a small number of donors. The new subprogramme on human settlement financing lacked clarity with respect to responsibility for coordinating and raising funds for the various programmes and activities. Other concerns included the continued absence of a full-time Deputy Executive Director and problems of capacity and funding of UN-Habitat's monitoring and evaluation functions. Recommendations were made to: further sharpen the focus of the Programme; improve the planning, management and funding of campaigns; mainstream housing rights; consolidate flagship reports; eliminate gaps in research; enhance the integration of the Best Practices and Local Leadership Programme into the UN-Habitat work programme; conduct an independent strategic evaluation of the role and effectiveness of UN-Habitat Programme Managers early in 2007; ensure the early involvement of human settlements experts in post-conflict and disaster assessment and reconstruction; improve the coordination of fund-raising activities; strengthen secretariat support to member States; and strengthen the capacity of the Evaluation and Monitoring Unit in its analytical work.

CPC action. On 10 and 13 June, the Committee for Programme and Coordination (CPC) [A/60/16 & Corr.1] considered the OIOS report. It urged UN-Habitat to continue to support the work of regional bodies, in particular the African Ministerial Conference on Housing and Urban Development (see p. 1165). It recommended that the General Assembly endorse the report's recommendations (see above), except those relating to the mainstreaming of housing rights and the consolidation of flagship reports; that the OIOS recommended deadline for an independent strategic evaluation of the role of the UN-Habitat Programme Managers be changed from before 2007 to the end of 2006; and that UN-Habitat Financial Rules and Regulations be adopted no later than the end of 2005.

Population

In 2005, the world's population reached 6.5 billion, as compared with 6.4 billion in 2004. Growing at the rate of about 1.2 per cent annually, world population was projected to reach the 7 billion mark in 2012, and long-range projections suggested that it could ultimately stabilize at about 9 billion people.

United Nations population activities continued to be guided, in 2005, by the Programme of Action adopted at the 1994 International Conference on Population and Development (ICPD) and the key actions for its further implementation adopted at the twenty-first special session of the General Assembly in 1999. The Commission on Population and Development, the body responsible for monitoring, reviewing and assessing the implementation of the Programme of Action, considered as its special theme "Population, development and HIV/AIDS, with particular emphasis on poverty". It also discussed how the implementation of the Programme of Action contributed to the achievement of internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals (MDGs); financial resources for implementing the Programme of Action; world population monitoring; world demographic trends; and the activities of the UN Population Division. The Population Division continued to analyse and report on world demographic trends and policies and to make its findings available in publications and on the Internet.

The United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA) continued, in 2005, to assist countries in implementing the ICPD agenda and the MDGs. It participated in the preparatory process leading to the 2005 World Summit review of progress made towards achieving the objectives and targets of the Millennium Declaration. In the World Summit Outcome, adopted by the General Assembly in September, world leaders reaffirmed the ICPD goal of achieving universal access to reproductive health as critical to the realization of the MDGs, and committed themselves to achieving universal access to reproductive health by 2015 and integrating that goal in strategies to attain the internationally agreed development goals aimed at reducing maternal mortality, improving maternal health, reducing child mortality, promoting gender equality, combating HIV/AIDS and eradicating poverty.

The United Nations made preparations, in 2005, for convening a High-level Dialogue on International Migration and Development. In December, the General Assembly decided that the High-level Dialogue would be held in New York on 14 and 15 September 2005 and would discuss the overall theme of the multidimensional aspects of international migration and development, in order to identify appropriate ways to maximize its development benefits and minimize its negative impacts. The Assembly also decided on the format of the session and the themes of four interactive round tables, as well as on related arrangements.

Follow-up to 1994 Conference on Population and Development

Implementation of the Programme of Action

Commission on Population and Development action. In follow-up to the recommendations of the 1994 International Conference on Population and Development (ICPD) [YUN 1994, p. 955], the Commission on Population and Development, at its thirty-eighth session (New York, 4-8 and 14 April) [E/2005/25], considered as its special theme "Population, development and HIV/AIDS, with particular emphasis on poverty", and discussed the flow of financial resources for assisting in the implementation of the Programme of Action. The Commission also considered the contribution of the implementation of the ICPD Programme of Action to the achievement of the internationally agreed development goals, including the United Nations Millennium Development Goals (MDGs) [YUN 2000, p. 51].

Population, development and HIV/AIDS

The special theme for the Commission's 2005 session was "Population, development and HIV/AIDS, with particular emphasis on poverty". For the Commission's discussion, the Secretary-General submitted a report [E/CN.9/2005/3] on world population monitoring, focusing on the theme of the session. The report provided an overview of population, HIV/AIDS and poverty, and examined the determinants of HIV/AIDS; mortality, population growth and orphanhood; fertility and sexual behaviour; geographical mobility; HIV/AIDS development and poverty; government views and policies; and prevention, treatment and care.

The report found that the HIV/AIDS pandemic had expanded rapidly since 1980 and had afflicted all regions of the world, both the rich and the poor. The hardest-hit countries were, however, among the poorest in the world, with a prevalence rate nine times higher than in the more developed regions.

Prevention was the central pillar of action against HIV/AIDS, the report concluded, and awareness of the behaviours that increased the risk of contracting HIV and resultant behavioural change were the key to prevention. When prevention actions failed, the next line of action was treatment with antiretroviral drugs to mitigate its effects and prolong life. Yet only about 1 in 10 of those needing treatment had access to antiretroviral therapy. During 2004, about 3 million people died of AIDS and 39 million people worldwide were infected with the disease. Households and families bore the burden of HIV/AIDS since they had to cope with the disease and its consequences. By placing heavy economic and social burden on families and households and eroding inter-generational support systems, AIDS increased poverty. In addition, it strained resources of the health and education sectors in poorer countries. Africa was the most affected, but steep increases in HIV infections had been recently observed in some countries in Asia and Eastern Europe. HIV prevalence in the Caribbean was the second highest in the world; and in some of the more developed countries, prevention efforts were not keeping pace with the growth of the epidemic. Most Governments reported having implemented HIV/AIDS prevention programmes, yet in many countries those most in need lacked access to basic prevention services.

The international community had recognized the terrible consequences of the epidemic and was taking steps to respond. However, unless more vigorous actions were undertaken to combat the disease and its effects, the HIV/AIDS epidemic portended a grim future for many countries, especially the poorer ones. There were, however, hopeful signs of improved HIV/AIDS awareness, of greater political commitment and of increased financial resources, particularly from the Global Fund to fight AIDS, Tuberculosis and Malaria, which by mid-2004 had approved over 300 grants in 128 countries totalling $3 billion. Nevertheless, financing for AIDS response was far short of the amount needed.

The Commission also considered the Secretary-General's report [E/CN.9/2005/4] on the monitoring of population programmes, focusing on population, development and HIV/AIDS, with particular emphasis on poverty. The report also discussed progress towards implementation of the ICPD Programme of Action, especially as it related to HIV/AIDS population and reproductive health, the five-year review of its implementation, the 2001 Declaration of Commitment HIV/AIDS, adopted at the twenty-sixth session of the General Assembly by resolution S-26/2 [YUN 2001, p. 1126], and the MDGs. It highlighted the effects of HIV/AIDS on population dynamics, including population losses, decreasing life expectancy, slower economic growth and greater extreme poverty.

The Secretary-General concluded that, since 1994 when the ICPD Programme of Action was adopted, the impact of HIV/AIDS in many countries had been devastating. While there had been some progress to increase access to antiretroviral treatment for those infected, much more needed to be done. Committed leadership, multisectoral approaches, partnerships, coordination and scaled-up efforts were all essential elements of an effective response. It was crucial also that prevention efforts be intensified, with strategies that addressed the wider issues of equality and social justice. Access to sexual and reproductive health information and services were essential for HIV prevention programmes. The Secretary-General encouraged countries to recognize and stress the linkages between reproductive health and HIV/AIDS in the various UN forums. AIDS had to be treated as both an emergency and a long-term development issue, and addressed through a wide array of efforts.

By a 14 April resolution [E/2005/25 (res. 2005/1)], which it brought to the attention of the Economic and Social Council, the Commission reaffirmed the ICPD Programme of Action, as well as the goals, targets and actions set forth in the Declaration of Commitment on HIV/AIDS; ICPD + 5 and internationally agreed development goals, including the MDGs; underscored the importance of actions by Governments and the international community to respond to the HIV/AIDS epidemic and reaffirmed the need for Governments to intensify national efforts and international cooperation in implementing the Declaration of Commitment on HIV/AIDS. Stressing that HIV/AIDS was contributing to the intensification of poverty in many countries, the Commission urged the international community to complement and supplement, through increased international development assistance, the efforts of developing countries that were committing increased national funds to fighting HIV/AIDS, particularly in Africa and the Caribbean. It also stressed the need for an integrated approach in national responses to the HIV/AIDS epidemic that would include an action framework to facilitate the coordination of work by all partners—one national HIV/AIDS framework, one national HIV coordinating body and one agreed country-level monitoring and evaluation system—the "Three Ones" strategy [YUN 2004, p. 1219] for the coordination of resources. The resolution also called for specified actions by Government, relevant United Nations and other international organizations and the international community to respond to the global HIV/AIDS epidemic.

In accordance with General Assembly resolution 50/124 [YUN 1995, p. 1094], the Secretary-General submitted to the Commission a January report [E/CN.9/2005/5] on the flow of financial resources for assisting in the implementation of the ICPD Programme of Action. It examined the flow of funds from donor countries and domestic expenditures for population activities in developing countries for 2003, as well as estimates for 2004 and projections for 2005. Although the financial targets of the Programme of Action for 2000 ($17 billion for reproductive health programme) were not met, it was encouraging that both international donor assistance and domestic expenditures for population activities had increased since then. Donor assistance was estimated at $4.2 billion in 2003, up from $3.2 billion in 2002, and domestic expenditures were estimated at almost $11 billion, up from 2000-2002 levels, for a total global estimate of just over $15 billion in 2003. To reach the 2005 target of $18.5 billion, the international community would have to increase levels of assistance and developing countries mobilize additional domestic resources. Estimates for 2004 and projections for 2005 were encouraging. Donor assistance was estimated to have increased to $4.5 billion in 2004 and was projected to increase to almost $6.4 billion in 2005. Resources mobilized by developing countries were estimated to reach $12.5 billion for 2004 and $12.7 billion in 2005. While the largest share of funding was currently going to AIDS-related activities, the increased resources were still not adequately addressing the growing AIDS pandemic.

The largest share of funding went to AIDS-related activities but funding for family planning and reproductive health, which had been lagging behind, needed to increase proportionately with current needs. The challenge for the international community was remaining on track to reach the 2005 target. Without a firm commitment to population, reproductive health and gender issues, and adequate allocation of financial resources in all areas, it was unlikely that any of the goals and targets of ICPD and the Millennium Summit [YUN 2000, p. 48] would be reached.

In response to decision 2004/1 of the Commission on Population and Development [YUN 2004, p. 1086], the Secretary-General submitted a January report [E/CN.9/2005/6] on the contribution of the implementation of the ICPD Programme of Action, in all its aspects, to the achievement of the internationally agreed development goals, including those contained in the United Nations Millennium Declaration [YUN 2000, p. 49]. The report concluded that full implementation of the Programme of Action and related actions would contribute significantly to the achievement of universally agreed development goals. It would help accelerate the transition to low fertility in those developing countries with high fertility rates, and thus slow population growth, thereby improving the ability of those countries to adjust to future population increases, combat poverty, protect and repair the environment, and set the conditions for sustainable development. The reduction of fertility would result in a "demographic bonus", whereby the proportion of the population of working age would increase relative to that of children and the elderly—a change that could contribute significantly to economic growth and poverty reduction. Its fulfilment would also ensure the achievement of equivalent goals in the Millennium Declaration, in particular the reduction of child and maternal mortality, universal access to primary education, parity in access to secondary and higher education between boys and girls, reductions in the spread of HIV, and the achievement of gender equality and women's empowerment. Its implementation would also contribute to international objectives concerning urbanization, ageing and vulnerable groups. However, implementation depended on building a partnership for global development where all actors, including Governments, multilateral and donor agencies, civil society and the private sector, cooperated to realize its goals and objectives.

By a 14 April resolution [E/2005/25 (res. 2005/2)], which it brought to the attention of the Economic and Social Council, the Commission emphasized the importance of integrating the goal of universal access to reproductive health by 2015 into strategies to attain the development goals; the need to strengthen policy and programme linkages and coordination between HIV/AIDS and sexual and reproductive health and their inclusion in national development plans; and the importance of paying closer attention to the interrelations between population structure and trends, including population ageing, and poverty and development. It urged Member States and the UN system to strengthen international cooperation in international migration and development. The Commission welcomed the increase in domestic expenditures and international donor assistance for achieving ICPD goals, encouraged Governments, international organizations and financial institutions, and other relevant stakeholders to assist developing countries and countries with economies in transition in implementing the Programme of Action through technical assistance and capacity-building activities; and called for the provision of adequate resources to all areas of the Programme of Action.

International migration and development

In response to General Assembly resolution 59/241 [YUN 2004, p. 1077], the Secretary-General submitted an August report [A/60/205] on the organizational details of a high-level dialogue on international migration and development, to be held during the Assembly's sixty-first (2006) session. By resolution 58/208 [YUN 2003, p. 1087], the Assembly had decided to convene the high-level dialogue to discuss the multidimensional aspects of international migration and development, in order to identify appropriate ways to maximize its development benefits and minimize its negative impacts. The Secretary-General suggested that the high-level dialogue be held on 14 and 15 September 2006; that Member States be encouraged to participate at the ministerial level and other stakeholders at the highest possible level. He also suggested topics for five round tables. Annexed to the report was a proposed programme for the event.

Transfer costs of migrant remittances

On 22 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/60/490/Add.3], adopted resolution 60/206 without vote [agenda item 54 (c)].

Facilitation and reduction of the cost of transfer of migrant remittances

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 58/208 of 23 December 2003 and 59/241 of 22 December 2004,

Acknowledging the important nexus between international migration and development and the need to deal with the challenges and opportunities that migration presents to countries of origin, destination and transit, and recognizing that migration brings benefits as well as challenges to the global community,

Recognizing that remittance flows constitute sources of private capital and that remittances have increased over time, complement domestic savings and are instrumental in improving the well-being of recipients,

Recognizing also that remittance flows constitute one of the important aspects of international migration and that they particularly benefit the households of migrants and could impact the economies of recipient countries,

Recognizing further that there is a need to address and to promote conditions for cheaper, faster and safer transfers of remittances in both source and recipient countries, and the need to facilitate the potential of their productive use in recipient countries by beneficiaries that are willing and able to do so,

Noting that, despite some recent initiatives to facilitate and to reduce the costs of remittance transfers, the costs incurred by migrants remain high and could be reduced,

Noting also the fact that many migrants without access to regular financial services may resort to informal means of transferring remittances,

1. Reaffirms the importance of reducing the transfer costs of migrant remittances, facilitating their flow and, as appropriate, encouraging opportunities for development-oriented investment in recipient countries by beneficiaries that are willing and able to do so;

2. Encourages Governments and other relevant stakeholders to consider adopting measures, in accordance with national legislation, that facilitate migrant remittance flows to recipient countries, including through, inter alia:

(a) Simplifying procedures and facilitating access to formal means of remittance transfers;

(b) Promoting access to, and awareness of the availability and use of, financial services for migrants;

3. Invites development partners and relevant international organizations to support developing countries in their capacity-building efforts to facilitate the flows of migrant remittances;

4. Looks forward to the High-level Dialogue of the General Assembly on International Migration and Development to be held in 2006, which will offer an opportunity to discuss the multidimensional aspects of international migration and development in order to identify appropriate ways and means to maximize its development benefits and minimize its negative impacts;

5. Invites interested countries to voluntarily convey to the Secretary-General information on their practices, initiatives and proposals in regard to the facilitation and the reduction of the cost of migrant remittances, in the context of the preparation of the Secretary-General's comprehensive overview for the High-level Dialogue.

In accordance with a 2003 request by the Executive Board of United Nations Development Programme/United Nations Population Fund (UNDP/UNFPA) [YUN 2003, p. 1090] and its decision 2004/20 [YUN 2004, p. 1083] the UNFPA Executive Director submitted her report covering 2005 [DP/FPA/2006/2 (Part I & Add.1, Part II)], which discussed highlights and issues pertaining to organizational effectiveness. It also discussed the Fund's response to the new development aid environment, including follow-up to the 2005 World Summit (see p. 47), UN reform, and policy dialogue and national development frameworks. It presented programme highlights from the Fund's three priority areas of work as defined in the multi-year funding framework (MYFF), namely, reproductive health, population and development, and gender (see below); and delineated UNFPA's efforts on investing in organizational effectiveness, including the emphasis on results-based programming and accountability.

The year 2005 was a banner one for UNFPA in terms of financial and political support, the Executive Director stated. The crowning achievement came at the 2005 World Summit, when Heads of State and Government reaffirmed the ICPD goal of achieving universal access to reproductive health as critical to the realization of the MDGs. In the 2005 World Summit Outcome (see p. 48), world leaders committed themselves to achieving universal access to reproductive health by 2015, and to integrating that ICPD goal into national development strategies. UNFPA's top priority for 2006 would be follow-up to the World Summit to ensure that population dynamics, reproductive health and gender equality were incorporated into national development strategies, policies and budgets.

Throughout 2005, UNFPA assisted countries in implementing the ICPD agenda and the MDGs. It worked within UN country teams to ensure that universal access to reproductive health by 2015 was integrated into national strategies and in monitoring at country and regional levels. In order to efficiently deliver assistance to countries in the MYFF priority areas of reproductive health, population and development, and gender, UNFPA strengthened its organizational effectiveness at all levels by advancing results-based management and aligning organizational processes, systems, structures and culture with its strategic direction. In response to the new aid environment, UNFPA focused attention on better equipping its country offices to effectively engage in national MDG situation analyses and strategy formulation. Towards that end, it developed an electronic package of support, which included software for costing reproduction services, guidance for engaging in poverty reduction strategies and a checklist for linking sexual and reproductive health and HIV/AIDS. It was also exploring regionalization options to enhance its ability to deliver high quality programming at the country level and strengthen its presence at the regional level, which would allow it to pursue simplification and harmonization through co-location and common services.

Regular income for UNFPA totalled $365.8 million in 2005, an increase of 11.6 per cent over 2004 income of $327.7 million. Contributions to other resources totalled $193.7 million, some 13 per cent over 2004. UNFPA expanded its donor base to 172 from 166 in 2004, and that number included all countries in sub-Saharan Africa. By programme area, the largest share of resources, 61.5 per cent, went to reproductive health activities; 21.3 percent to population and development strategies; 12 per cent to programme coordination and assistance; and 5.2 per cent to gender equality and women's empowerment. The highest priority for allocation of assistance, 67.5 per cent, was for Group A countries, which included all the least developed countries. By region, sub-Saharan Africa accounted for 33.3 per cent of programme assistance; Asia and the Pacific, 32.2 per cent; the Arab States and Europe, 12.1 per cent; and Latin America and the Caribbean, 9.1 per cent; and intercountry and interregional activities, 13.2 per cent.

The Executive Director reported jointly with UNDP [DP/FPA/2006/2 (Part II)] on the recommendations of the Joint Inspection Unit (JIU) in 2005. The report provided a synopsis of UNDP/UNFPA management responses to key JIU recommendations that were relevant to them. Of the nine reports issued by the JIU in 2005, four had cross-agency impact, with recommendations on how to improve country office performance; for a common payroll for UN system organizations; for the use of open-source software for development; and measures to strengthen UN system support for the New Partnership for Africa's Development (NEPAD) (see p. 1003).

On 28 January [E/2005/35 (dec. 2005/9)], the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board took note of the report of the UNFPA Executive Director to the Economic and Social Council [E/2005/5-DP/FPA/2005/2], which addressed the implementation of the Secretary-General's reform programme, the provisions of the triennial comprehensive policy review and follow-up to the international conferences and the MDGs. It requested UNFPA to maintain a sharp focus in following up on the Triennial Comprehensive Policy Review contained in General Assembly resolution 59/250; and encouraged it to participate in the preparatory process leading to the 2005 review of the progress made towards achieving the objectives and targets contained in the 2000 Millennium Declaration and the MDGs.

On 23 June [ibid., (dec. 2005/25)], the Executive Board noted the report of the Executive Director for 2004 [YUN 2004, p. 1079] and emphasized the need to forge innovative partnerships among development partners, Governments, civil society and the private sector to achieve the ICPD goals and the MDGs. The Board recognized the progress being made to improve UNFPA's organizational effectiveness and encouraged it to continue to develop its managing-for-results framework and to present a cumulative progress report in 2007.

By decision 2005/230 of 20 July, the Economic and Social Council took note of the annual report of the UNFPA Executive Director [E/2005/5-DP/FPA/2005/2]; the report of the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board on its work during 2004 [E/2004/35]; and the Board's report on its first regular session of 2005 [E/2005/35].

Reproductive health

In 2005, UNFPA invested 61.5 per cent of its financial resources in reproductive health, underscoring the ICPD goal of universal access to reproductive health information and services, including family planning and maternal health services. Reducing maternal mortality and morbidity remained a priority area for UNFPA, which, together with partners, supported safe motherhood interventions in some 90 countries and launched the Partnership for Maternal, Newborn and Child Health. It expanded the international initiative to mainstream emergency obstetric care. The Campaign to End Fistula grew significantly and was currently active in over 30 countries in Africa, Asia and the Arab States. Needs assessments were completed also in six new countries, and 15 countries were currently implementing strategies in prevention, treatment and rehabilitation. In the area of family planning, UNFPA focused its efforts on increasing the coverage of the population and service utilization, and collaborated with the World Health Organization (WHO) and other organizations in holding regional workshops and various activities. UNFPA and its partners were working to ensure that reproductive health, including family planning, was given high priority in national development planning for achieving the MDGs.

UNFPA provided reproductive health commodities to countries in all regions, and, with its partners, developed a global programme to enhance reproductive health commodity security. UNFPA was also working with its partners to intensify HIV prevention and strengthen HIV/AIDS and sexual and reproductive health linkages.

Population development and poverty

In monitoring progress towards the MDGs, UNFPA in 2005, focused support on data collection, analysis and use, specifically by strengthening the capacity of developing countries to monitor such progress. In collaboration with the UN Statistics Division, UNFPA increased its support to population and housing censuses, particularly the 2010 round, and was organizing regional workshops to sensitize developing countries on the importance of censuses and data collection.

Population ageing and international migration were important and emerging issues which needed to be accorded higher priority in policy dialogues and poverty reduction strategies. In 2005, UNFPA continued to provide technical guidance and financial support to train policymakers from developing countries to build national capacity to address the challenges of population ageing. In April, it convened an advisory group meeting on ageing issues in Malta. It worked closely with the UN programme on ageing, collaborated with WHO on a study of the determinants that impacted women's health and supported research into the social and economic policy implications of demographic transitions, including ageing. The Fund also supported country-level capacity development for formulating migration policy through its support for the International Migration Policy Programme review, and, together issued a publication entitled "Meeting the Challenges of Migration: Progress Since the ICPD". In May, it hosted an expert group meeting on international migration and the MDGs in Marrakech, Morocco and collaborated with the United Nations Institute for Training and Research in organizing workshops on key migration issues.

Gender equality and empowerment of women

In 2005, UNFPA continued to mainstream gender concerns into all population and development programming as a primary means of achieving gender equality, equity and the empowerment of women, and supported capacity development of governments officials, NGOs and human rights institutions. It focused attention and technical and financial resources for addressing gender-based violence, particularly through the development of a regional programme for 20 countries in Africa. Under its Women, Peace and Security Initiative, UNFPA sponsored a workshop in Bucharest, Romania, in October, on reassessing institutional support for Security Council resolution 1325 (2000) [YUN 2000, p. 1113] on women, peace and security, and helped to institutionalize elements of that resolution in the armed forces and the police in 14 countries in Latin America and the Caribbean. Several initiatives were aimed at integrating gender mainstreaming and culturally sensitive and rights-based programming, and UNFPA and the United Nations Development Fund for Women were collaborating on a number of gender-related activities and studies. The involvement of men and boys was becoming a full component of the Fund's work on gender equality, with UNFPA-supported projects in Peru, Uganda and Viet Nam.

Country and intercountry programmes

UNFPA's provisional project expenditures for country and intercountry (regional and interregional) programmes in 2005 totalled $234.3 million, compared to $221.9 million in 2004, according to the Executive Director's statistical overview report [DP/FPA/2006/2 (Part I, Add.1)]. The 2005 figure included $186.7 million for country programmes and $47.6 million for intercountry activities. In accordance with the Board's procedure for allocating resources according to its categorization of countries laid down in 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 989], total expenditures in 2005 for Group A countries amounted to $126.1 million, compared to $121.1 million in 2004.

Africa. Provisional expenditures for UNFPA programmes in sub-Saharan Africa totalled $78 million in 2005, compared to $78.1 million in 2004. Most of that amount (57.1 per cent) went to reproductive health and family planning, followed by population and development strategies (22.9 per cent), programme coordination and assistance (13.9 per cent) and gender equality and women's empowerment (6.1 per cent). On 28 January [E/2005/35 (dec. 2005/14)], the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board approved UNFPA country programmes for Angola, Burundi and Madagascar. On 23 June [dec. 2005/31], it took note of the draft country programme documents for Burkina Faso, Ghana, Namibia and Uganda; and on 9 September [dec. 2005/42], for Chad, Swaziland and Cape Verde, as well as the Cape Verde results and resources frameworks.

Arab States and Europe. Provisional expenditures for UNFPA programmes in the Arab States and Europe totalled $28.4 million, compared to $28.7 million on 2004. Most (63.1 per cent) was spent on reproductive health and family planning, followed by population and development strategies (21.5 per cent), programme coordination and assistance (10.8 per cent) and gender equality and women's empowerment (4.6 per cent). On 28 January [dec. 2005/14], the Executive Board approved UNFPA country programmes for Armenia, Azerbaijan, Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, Romania, Tajikistan, Turkmenistan and Uzbekistan. On 23 June [dec. 2005/31], it took note of the draft country programme documents for Albania, Georgia, The Occupied Palestinian Territory, Turkey and Ukraine and on 9 September [dec. 2005/42], for Afghanistan.

Asia and the Pacific. Provisional expenditures for UNFPA programmes in Asia and the Pacific amounted to $75.5 million, compared to $65.9 million in 2004. Most of those expenditures (72 per cent) went to reproductive health and family planning, followed by population and development strategies (18.7 per cent), programme coordination and assistance (6.3 per cent) and gender equality and women's empowerment (3.1 per cent). On 28 January [dec. 2005/14], the Executive Board approved UNFPA country programmes for Iran and the Philippines. On 23 June [dec. 2005/31], it took note of the draft country programme documents for Bangladesh, Cambodia, China and Viet Nam, of the report on the implementation of the UNFPA special programme of assistance to Myanmar [DP/FPA/2005/11] and also of the first one-year extension of the first programme of special assistance to Myanmar [DP/FPA/2005/12]. The Board approved the two-year extension of the first country programme for Timor-Leste [DP/FPA/2005/12]; on 9 September [dec. 2005/42], it took note of the draft country programme documents for Afghanistan and Indonesia.

Latin America and the Caribbean. Provisional expenditures for UNFPA programmes in Latin America and the Caribbean totalled $21.4 million in 2005, compared to $21.1 million in 2004. As in other regions, most of the total (43.2 per cent) went to reproductive health and family planning, followed by population and development (27.4 per cent), programme coordination and assistance (15.1 per cent) and gender equality and women's empowerment (14.4 per cent). On 28 January [dec. 2005/14], the Executive Board approved a UNFPA country programme for Guatemala, and on 23 June [dec. 2005/31], took note of the draft country programme document for Peru.

Interregional programmes. Provisional expenditures for UNFPA intercountry and interregional programmes totalled $31 million in 2005 compared to $28.1 million in 2004. Most of that total (58 per cent) went to reproductive health and family planning, followed by programme coordination and assistance (20.4 per cent), population and development (19.2 per cent) and gender equality and women's empowerment (2.4 per cent).

Financial and management questions

Financing

UNFPA income from all sources totalled $565 million in 2005, compared to $502.1 million in 2004 [DP/FPA/2006/13], comprising $365.8 million from regular resources and $199.2 million from other resources. Expenditures totalled $523.3 million in 2005, up from $451.5 million in 2004, comprising $334.8 million from regular resources and $188.6 million from other resources, resulting in an excess of $41.6 million.

Contributions to regular resources from donor Governments and a private contribution from the Mars Trust totalled $351.2 million in 2005, reflecting an 8.9 per cent increase over 2004. Contributions to trust funds, cost-sharing arrangements and other sources totalled $193.7 million, with interest income of $5.5 million, bringing to $199.2 million the total income from other sources.

On 8 September [E/2005/35 (dec. 2005/38)], the Executive Board took note of the annual financial review, 2004 [DP/FPA/2005/15]. It recognized the significance of increasing and achieving stability and predictability in contributions to regular resources, that timeliness in the payment of contributions was essential to maintaining liquidity and facilitating continuous programme implementation, and that more balanced burden-sharing was essential to UNFPA's long-term financial sustainability.

In a July report [DP/FPA/2005/13], the Executive Director submitted to the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board the estimates for the 2006-2007 biennial support budget, totalling $209 million (gross) and $196.4 million (net). The estimates were based on a resource framework of $910 million for total income, consisting of $747 million in regular resources and $163 million in other resources. The regular resources projection was strong, despite the loss of funding from a major donor for the last four years. It was based on recent trends of a widening donor base and the large number of contributors from the euro area. Along with income for the biennium, there was an opening balance of over $1 billion in total resources available for programme and support activities in 2006-2007. The budget reflected a strategic investment in areas where needs were greatest: staffing in Africa and other country office locations; learning and training initiatives; staffing in strategic planning and resource mobilization; operational support for the Enterprise Resource Planning (Atlas) system; and staff costs, security and insurance.

Commenting, in August [DP/FPA/2005/14], on the estimates for the 2006-2007 biennial support budget, ACABQ noted UNFPA's commitment to implementing results-based budgeting and the steps being taken to ensure that by 2008, the Fund's MYFF document and the biennial support budget would be better integrated. ACABQ recommended that the harmonization process be given high priority, trusting that UNFPA would take into account lessons learned by other UN entities that had already implemented those techniques. Noting the increase in projected regular resource income for the 2006-2007 biennium, ACABQ encouraged UNFPA to continue to intensify its fund-raising activities, not only to maintain the level of resources but to attain further positive results. With regard to the estimated $400.6 million expenditure on programmes, ACABQ believed that there was greater potential for channelling more funds to programme activities by reducing costs on programme support and management and administration.

On 9 September [E/2005/35 (dec. 2005/37)], the Executive Board approved gross appropriations totalling $209 million ($196.4 net) for UNFPA's 2006-2007 support budget and resolved that income estimated of $12.6 million would be used to offset the gross appropriations, resulting in estimated net appropriations of $196.4 million. It authorized the Executive Director to redeploy resources between appropriation lines up to a maximum of 5 per cent; authorized extrabudgetary expenditures of $8.9 million for the Atlas project, as well as additional funding expenditures of $4.7 million to replenish the security reserve. The Board also took note of the ACABQ report [dec. 2005/42].

Revision of financial regulations and recovery of indirect costs

In January, the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board considered reports by the Executive Director on revisions to UNFPA financial regulations, and on recovery of indirect costs for co-financing, as well as ACABQ's comments and recommendations thereon [YUN 2004, p. 1082].

On 28 January [E/2005/35 (dec. 2005/11)], the Board took note of those reports and approved the proposed revisions to the financial regulations, as amended. Regarding the financing of donor agreements, the Board requested the Executive Director to establish guidelines on standards for identifying and assessing risk factors, requirements for mitigating risk as a condition for approval and limitations on the actual disbursement of cash prior to the receipt of contributions.

On the same date [dec. 2005/12], the Board took note of the harmonized cost-recovery principles contained in the report on the recovery of indirect costs for co-financing, recognizing that their adoption by UN organizations constituted a step towards increased transparency and comparability of cost recovery throughout the UN system; and endorsed, on an interim basis, the UNFPA-specific implementation of those harmonized principles and their application in the recovery policy for indirect costs, consisting of a rate of 5 per cent on nationally executed cost-sharing expenditures financed by programme countries and 7 per cent on all co-financed expenditures. It confirmed the current rate of 5 per cent for third-party procurement expenditures and the limits of indirect cost recovery by NGOS and UN agencies, as authorized by the Board in 2000 [YUN 2000, p. 1005]. The Board stressed that UNFPA should ensure full recovery of all actual costs for implementing activities financed from other (non-core) resources and requested the Executive Director to report, in 2007, on the indirect cost-recovery policy. It encouraged UNFPA to continue to refine its strategic cost-management system, including through the implementation of the Atlas system, in order to better attribute indirect costs to programmes and projects.

Audit reports

The Executive Director submitted to the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board a report [DP/FPA/2005/1] on follow-up action by UNFPA to recommendations by the UN Board of Auditors for 2002-2003 [YUN 2004, p. 1397]. On 28 January [E/2005/ 35 (dec. 2005/8)], the Executive Board took note of the UNFPA report; stressed the importance of adequate follow-up to the Auditors' recommendations, particularly on improving internal management control; and requested that future reports indicate the priority of the recommendations and a time frame for their implementation.

In an April report [DP/FPA/2005/9], the Executive Director described UNFPA's internal audit and oversight activities carried out in 2004. Those included: management audits of eight offices (four in Africa, three in Latin America and the Caribbean, and one in the Arab States and Europe region); a review of 458 audit reports covering 2003 activities for projects executed by Governments and NGOS; management audits in eight country offices in the Africa region; and contracted audits in four country offices in the Asia and the Pacific region and six country offices in the Arab States and Europe region. Of the 18 reports issued in 2004, the level of internal controls and the compliance with financial, administrative and programme requirements were found to be satisfactory in four offices, partially satisfactory in 10 and deficient in four. A total of 743 recommendations were issued in 2004. UNFPA instituted several measures to strengthen its internal control systems, including the establishment of the Audit Services Branch and the posting of Operations managers in 44 country offices to enhance managerial capacity and ensure more consistent field control. It presented a framework for resolving issues contained in internal audit reports. The report also outlined the measures taken to address recommendations arising from previous audits, described the 2004 policy application review conducted by the Oversight and Evaluation Branch in the Asia and Pacific region; and summarized the 2004 activities of the Fund's organizational committees, established to improve oversight and accountability: the Oversight, Management and Programme Committees.

On 23 June [E/2005/35 (dec. 2005/19)], the Executive Board took note of the Executive Director's report and urged UNFPA to base its oversight and accountability activities on a corporate risk model and develop risk-assessment functions in its audit offices. It concurred with the need to strengthen analysis of the outcomes of audits, and requested UNFPA to provide adequate training to staff to interpret and follow up on audit findings and recommendations. UNFPA should explain the selection criteria of the country offices audited, and present an analysis of the follow-up to the 2003 and 2004 internal audit recommendations, and an in-depth review of the level of internal audit resources, as well as a management response to its internal audit reports at the Board's annual session, including the status of follow-up recommendations of previous audit reports.

Resource allocation

In response to Executive Board decision 2000/19 [YUN 2000, p. 1005], the UNFPA Executive Director submitted a quinquennial review of the system for allocating resources to country programmes [DP/FPA/2005/6]. The report provided an overview of the evolution of the Fund's resource allocation system and reviewed the experience with the current system. Proposals for updating the system included simplifying it by mainstreaming the countries with economies in transition into the country categories, harmonizing indicators with the MDGs and the 2004-2007 MYFF indicators, revising the threshold levels of indicators and simplifying the definitions of country categories. Annexed to the report were indicators used in the resource allocation system, the source data and the classification of countries resulting from the 2005 review of the resource allocation.

On 29 January [E/2005/35 (dec. 2005/13)], the Executive Board approved the approach, effective January 2005, for resource allocation, including the mainstreaming of the countries with economies in transition, synchronizing the resource allocation system cycle with the MYFF cycle, and amending the indicators and their threshold levels towards meeting the ICPD goals, ICPD+ 5 targets and the MDGs; endorsed the procedure for categorizing countries into Groups A, B and C; requested the Executive Director to indicate in her annual reports the share of regular resources to Group A countries, LDCs and low-income countries, and recommended flexibility in the distribution of resources to individual countries, particularly to those changing categories, to ensure that the gains already made were not compromised.

Multi-year funding commitments

In May [DP/FPA/2005/8 & Corr.1], the Executive Director submitted to the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board updated estimates of regular and other resources for 2005 and future years in the multi-year funding framework (MYFF). As at 1 April, 83 countries had submitted written pledges to UNFPA for 2005, 34 of which were multi-year pledges, five of them from major donors.

In 2004, UNFPA received regular contributions from a record 166 donor Governments. Total contributions received amounted to $331.6 million an increase of 13.4 per cent, as a result of substantially increased contributions from nine major donors and favourable exchange rates. Contributions for co-financing arrangements also increased by $41.2 million, to $131.1 milllion. Four countries (the Netherlands, Norway, Sweden and the United Kingdom) accounted for about half of UNFPA's regular resources. To achieve financial stability, UNFPA was focusing on maintaining its donor base and securing a higher level of pledges for 2005 from major donors. It was also trying to convince others that were contributing below the $1 million benchmark to become major donors. UNFPA anticipated that regular resources in 2005 would increase to $360 million or higher, with further increases expected in both 2006 and 2007. One proposal for increasing regular resources was for donor countries to increase the percentage of official development assistance allocated for population assistance. Discussions were ongoing with many major donor countries to increase their regular contributions in order to broaden the base of support to the Fund's regular resources.

On 23 June, [E/2005/35 (dec. 2005/24)], the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board welcomed the substantial increase in 2004 regular income and co-financing income levels, the contributions made by programme countries which had enabled the Fund to reach its highest ever number of donors, and the projected increase in the 2005 regular income level. It recognized that sustaining and improving the UNFPA funding level would require countries able to do so to augment their funding efforts during MYFF 2004-2007.

Programming process

In 2005, the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board considered the joint UNDP/UNFPA reports on experiences in joint programming [YUN 2004, p. 1084]; and on progress in implementing decision 2001/11 [YUN 2001, p. 1000] on the UNDP/UNFPA programming process, which addressed the issue of the time frame for developing country programme documents [DP/2005/28-DP/FPA/2005/10] (see p. 970). The Board took action on those reports in decisions [2005/35 (dec. 2005/10)] and [2005/35 (dec. 2005/28)].

In other action [dec. 2005/30] on UNDP/UNFPA programme performance information at the country level, the Board again took note of the joint report on progress in implementing decision 2001/11, and the Executive Director's report for 2004 on progress in implementing the MYFF, 2004-2007 [YUN 2004, p. 1083]; and requested UNDP and UNFPA, in consultation with relevant agencies, to make a proposal, at the first regular session in 2006, on cost-efficient approaches to providing programme-level data to their respective Boards as part of their programming and reporting cycles.

Technical Advisory Programme

In response to a 2004 Executive Board request [YUN 2004, p. 1084], the Executive Director submitted, in July [DP/FPA/2005/16], a review of the UNFPA Technical Advisory Programme against strategic goals contained in the MYFF 2004-2007. The Advisory Programme, an inter-agency arrangement for providing UNFPA assistance to countries for population and development activities, constituted the Fund's strategy for increasing the efficiency, effectiveness and impact of its technical support in reproductive health, population and development, and gender empowerment, and was composed of nine multidisciplinary Country Technical Services Teams (CSTS).

The report described the main findings of an independent evaluation of the Programme, which revealed that it was beneficial to the effective implementation of the ICPD. The Programme provided UNFPA with a coherent system for delivering technical support to countries, increased the accessibility and use of technical information, was a cost-effective way of supporting capacity-building at all levels, and had been instrumental in supporting country office implementation of UN reform processes. However, the implementation of the Programme required adjustments to ensure more effectiveness and responded to the needs of a changing environment. Proposals for actions were made in five areas: managing multiple demands; participation of CSTS in national development frameworks and UN programming processes; contribution to capacity development; planning technical assistance; and the strategic partnerships programme.

It also proposed a two-year extension of the Programme, during which a vision of future UNFPA technical assistance would be articulated. Since the Programme would be harmonized with the UNFPA biennial support budget, the MYFF and the intercountry programme beginning in 2008, it also proposed a longer-term strategy to determine the appropriate structure of technical and strategic support consistent with UN reforms and the needs of partner countries, and define a cohesive format for the joint planning and delivery of technical assistance. It would also develop a corporate capacity development strategy and a clear vision for its technical support activities during the next cycle (2008-2011).

On 9 September [E/2005/35 (dec. 2005/39)], the Executive Board welcomed the UNFPA report and the proposals contained therein; approved the extension of the Technical Advisory Programme for a two year period, 2006-2007; authorized the Executive Director to maintain the current level of funding and to commit $40 million over that period for its implementation. It also requested the Executive Director to report on the implementation of the Programme during 2006-2007, as well as on the implementation of the recommendations of the external evaluation, and present to the Board in 2007 the new arrangements for providing technical assistance to programme countries during the period 2008-2011.

UNFPA role in emergency situations

In response to Executive Board decision 2000/13 [YUN 2000, p. 1003], UNFPA reported in August on its role in emergency preparedness, humanitarian response and transition and recovery [DP/FPA/2005/18]. According to the report, UNFPA, as a member of the Inter-Agency Standing Committee on Humanitarian Affairs and the United Nations Development Group, played a role in UN-wide policy deliberations on a range of peacebuilding and humanitarian issues. The growing recognition of data, gender and reproductive health needs in emergencies had resulted in increased demand for UNFPA technical and programme support in crisis situations. Activities included rapid assessments and other data collection, support for reproductive health through training, technical support and the deployment of reproductive health commodities and hygiene supplies, support for women's empowerment and the strengthening of emergency preparedness and response. However, a review of the environment and experience in the field had indicated that UNFPA had to adopt a paradigm shift in the way it worked. Through a series of consultative meetings a strategy was developed to strengthen UNFPA programming for humanitarian assistance and transition and recovery over a three-year period. The strategy identified steps for improving UNFPA capacity to adapt and respond to crises and for playing an integral role in national recovery processes. It was accompanied by workplans for action in five areas: enhancing human resources; strengthening strategic partnerships; increasing funding; reinforcing logistics, security and administration; and improving communication. The process was to be completed by January 2008, in time for the new MYFF cycle (2008-2011).

On 9 September [E/2005/35 (dec. 2005/40)], the Executive Board took note of the report and of the critical importance of UNFPA work in humanitarian and transition settings; recognized UNFPA plans to strengthen its institutional capacity in emergency preparedness, humanitarian response, and transition and recovery, and encouraged continued consultations with the Board in that regard. It requested the Executive Director to report, in 2007, on a comprehensive corporate strategy, including resource and staff implications, for those activities. The Board decided, as an interim measure, to raise the ceiling of the existing emergency fund from $1 million to $3 million to enable UNFPA to better respond to crisis situations, and requested the Executive Director to report on the utilization of the funds.

UN Population award

The 2005 United Nations Population Award was presented to Mercedes Concepcion (Philippines), Professor Emeritus at the College of Social Sciences and Philosophy, University of the Philippines, and a member of the Board of Commissioners of the Philippine Commission on Population, in the individual category, and to the Asociación Pro Bienestar de la Familia de Guatemala (APROFAM) in the institutional category. Professor Concepcion was selected for her significant contributions to population research and policy in the Philippines, where her studies on population growth were important in the formation of the national population policy. She ensured that valid and reliable systems were in place so that the national population could be monitored and evaluated on an ongoing basis. APROFAM was selected for providing excellent reproductive health services to lower-income families in Guatemala, including family planning, reproductive health education and sexual health counselling and training. It also undertook scientific investigations in the field of population and development and disseminated sociodemographic data in Guatemala to develop an information base for population policies and programmes.

The Award was established by General Assembly resolution 36/201 [YUN 1981, p. 792], to be presented annually to individuals or institutions for outstanding contributions to increasing awareness of population problems and to their solutions. In September, the Secretary-General transmitted to the Assembly the report of the UNFPA Executive Director on the Population Award [A/60/397].

Other population activities

Commission on Population and Development

The Commission on Population and Development, at its thirty-eighth session (New York, 4-8 and 14 April) [E/2005/25], considered as its special theme "Population, development and HIV/AIDS, with particular emphasis on poverty", which was discussed in the context of the follow-up to the 1994 ICPD (see p. 1173). Documents before the Commission included the report of its Bureau on the intersessional meeting (Lima, Peru, 16-19 October 2004) [E/CN.9/2005/2]; report of the Secretary-General on: world population monitoring, focusing on population, development and HIV/AIDS, with particular emphasis on poverty [E/CN.9/2005/3] (see p. 1173); monitoring of population programmes, focusing on population, development and HIV/AIDS, with particular emphasis on poverty [E/CN.9/2005/4] (see p. 1174); the flow of financial resources for implementation of the ICPD Programme of Action [E/CN.9/2005/5] (see p. 1175); the contribution of the implementation of the ICPD Programme of Action, in all its aspects, to the achievement of the internationally agreed development goals, including the MDGs [E/CN.9/2005/6] (see p. 1175); the working methods of the Commission on Population and Development [E/CN.9/2005/7]; world demographic trends [E/CN.9/2005/8]; and programme implementation and progress of work in the field of population in 2004 [E/CN.9/2005/9].

The Commission adopted and brought to the Economic and Social Council's attention resolutions on population, development and HIV/AIDS, with particular emphasis on poverty [E/2005/25 (res. 2005/1)] (see p. 1174) and on the contribution of the implementation of the ICPD Programme of Action, in all its aspects, to the achievement of the internationally agreed development goals, including those contained in the United Nations Millennium Declaration [res. 2005/2]. The Commission decided that the special theme for its fortieth (2007) session would be "The changing age structures of populations and their implications for development" [dec. 2005/1]. The Commission adopted a decision [dec. 2005/2] on improving its methods of work (see below). In other action [dec. 2005/3], the Commission took note of the documents it had considered at its thirty-eighth session. At a resumed meeting on 14 April, the Commission recommended to the Council the draft provisional agenda for its thirty-ninth (2006) session.

By decision 2005/245 of 22 July, the Economic and Social Council took note of the report of the Commission on Population and Development on its thirty-eighth (2005) session, and approved the provisional agenda for its thirty-ninth (2006) session.

In preparation for its thirty-ninth session, the Commission's Bureau held an intersessional meeting (Banjul, Gambia, 19-20 December) [E/CN.9/2006/2].

Improving the Commission's methods of work

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 2005/213 of 31 March, decided, in order to improve the work of the Commission on Population and Development, that with effect from the Commission's thirty-eighth (2005) regular session, and immediately following the closure of each regular session, the Commission would hold the first meeting of the subsequent session to elect a new Chairman and other members of the Bureau. It also decided that the terms of reference of Commission members would be for four regular sessions; and in that regard, extended the terms of office of those members that were to expire on 31 December 2005 to the conclusion of the thirty-ninth (2006) regular session, on 31 December 2006 until the conclusion of the fortieth (2007) regular session, on 31 December 2007 until the end of the forty-first (2008) regular session, and on 31 December 2008 until the end of the forty-second (2009) regular session. The pertinent provision of General Assembly resolution 1798(XVII) [YUN 1962, p. 558] would apply only to the substantive part of the Commission session.

In April, the Commission considered a Secretary- General's report on the working methods of the Commission [E/CN.9/2005/7], submitted in response to Assembly resolution 57/270 B [YUN 2003, p. 1468]. The report reviewed the Commission's work, particularly with respect to enhancing the implementation of, and follow-up to, ICPD and subsequent conferences and made recommendations for improving those methods.

The Commission decided [dec. 2005/2] that the regular geographical rotation of the chair would start with the election held at its thirty-ninth (2006) session, in alphabetical order; to establish, at that session, a multi-year programme of work for covering a series of general themes based on the ICPD Programme of Action and its implementation; and in examining the themes, to promote increased sharing of national, regional and international experiences through focused and interactive dialogues among experts and practitioners.

In a report on programme implementation and progress of work of the UN Population Division in 2005 [E/CN.9/2006/6], the Secretary-General described the Division's major activities and outputs dealing with the analysis of fertility, mortality and international migration; world population estimates and projections; population policies, population and development interrelationship; and monitoring, coordination and dissemination of population information.

The Division's work in fertility and family planning analysis included a wallchart entitled World Contraceptive Use 2005, which showed the most recent data on selected contraceptive practice indicators. The data showed that 61 per cent of women age 15 to 49 who were married or in union were using contraceptives; and that the level of use (69 per cent) was higher in the more developed regions compared to 59 per cent in the less developed regions. Among the latter group, Africa had the lowest level of use, at 27 per cent, contrasted with Asia and Latin America and the Caribbean which had levels of use similar to that of the more developed regions. Overall, contraceptive use had increased in less developed regions, with contraceptive prevalence increasing by at least one percentage point every year in the majority of the developing countries, while remaining fairly stable at high levels in developed countries. The Division also issued a CD-ROM on the subject, and prepared the Database on Marriage, containing indicators of marital status for 202 countries or areas.

On mortality and health, the Division issued the World Mortality Report 2005, an overview of mortality changes in all countries in the latter half of the twentieth century. The report, the first of its kind produced by the Division, compiled and summarized available information about levels and trends of mortality and life expectancy for national populations, and presented estimates of key mortality indicators for 192 countries and areas, including countries with a population of 100,000, or greater in 2000.

Concerning international migration, the Division organized an expert group meeting to explore key aspects of international migration and development. The Division also organized a fourth coordination meeting on international migration (26 and 27 October), which focused on the implications of the report and recommendations of the Global Commission on International Migration for the United Nations system's work in international migration and for the General Assembly's high-level dialogue on international migration and development in 2006. The Division also issued a database entitled Trends in Total Migrant Stock: The 2005 Revision, and was finalizing the International Migration Report 2005, the second in a series that presented information on international migration levels and policies, as well as other related indicators.

With regard to world population projections, the Division issued the results of the 2004 Revision of the biennial World Population Prospects, which showed that world population would continue to grow, increasing from 6.5 billion in 2005 to 9.1 billion in 2050; that currently 95 per cent of all population growth was absorbed by the developing world; and that by 2050, the population of the more developed countries as a whole would be declining slowly by about 1 million persons a year, while the developing world would still be adding 35 million annually, 22 million of them in the LDCs. The Division completed preparation of the 2005 Revision of World Urbanization Prospects, which was also available on CD-ROM. Two wallcharts and an executive summary in all UN official languages were being prepared. The Division also organized, on 10 and 11 May, an expert meeting on software for demographic HIV/AIDS.

As to population policies, the Division's publication, World Population Policies 2005, found that Governments viewed HIV/AIDS as the most significant demographic issue facing them. Others included high infant and child mortality and high maternal mortality in the developing countries. Of particular concern in the developed countries, were low fertility, population ageing and the small size of the working age population. The Division also completed evaluation and analysis of the United Nations Ninth Inquiry among Governments on Population and Development, the results of which had been incorporated into its publications. The wallchart International Migration 2005 provided background information for the Commission on Population and Development and for the forthcoming high-level dialogue on international migration and development. Another wallchart, Population and HIV/AIDS 2005, provided an essential backdrop to the Assembly's high-level meeting on HIV/AIDS (see p. 1322) and focused on combating the disease.

With regard to population and development, the Division, along with co-sponsors, convened in Mexico City (30 November–2 December) [E/CN.9/2006/7], an expert group meeting on the social and economic implications of changing population age structures. A new version of the database Population, Resources, Environment and Development was released on CD-ROM and an Internet version would follow in 2006.

On monitoring population trends and policies, the Division updated and issued the latest edition of its annual monitoring report to the 2005 session of the Commission on population, development and HIV/AIDS, with particular emphasis on poverty (see p. 1173). In time for the 2005 World Summit (see p. 47), the Division issued Population Challenges and Development Goals. In disseminating population information and data, the Division continued to update and expand its website (www.unpopulation.org) to provide timely access by Governments and civil society to population information. Complementing the website was the Population Information Network (POPIN) (www.popin.org), which provided a portal to population information and data available throughout the UN system.

Chapter IX

Social policy, crime prevention and human resources development

In 2005, the United Nations continued to promote social, cultural, and human resources development, and to strengthen its crime prevention and criminal justice programme.

The Commission for Social Development considered as its priority theme the review of further implementation of the outcome of the 1995 World Summit for Social Development and the twenty-fourth (2000) special session of the General Assembly. It adopted a declaration on the tenth anniversary of the World Summit, as a contribution to the five-year review of the 2000 Millennium Declaration.

The Secretary-General reported on follow-up activities undertaken in regard to the tenth International Year of the Family. Work also continued by the Ad Hoc Committee on the Comprehensive and Integral International Convention on the Protection and Promotion of the Rights and Dignity of Persons with Disabilities. The United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization promoted religious and cultural understanding. Various activities were undertaken to celebrate the International Year of Sport and Physical Education.

The Eleventh United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, held in Bangkok, Thailand, in April, adopted the Bangkok Declaration on Synergies and Responses: Strategic Alliances in Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice, which addressed major crime and criminal justice issues of concern to the international community. The Congress focused on five topics: effective measures to combat transnational organized crime; international cooperation against terrorism and links between terrorism and other criminal activities in the context of the work of the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime (UNODC); threats and trends of corruption in the twenty-first century; economic and financial crimes; and making standards work, based on fifty years of standard-setting in crime prevention and criminal justice.

The Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice, at its fourteenth session, gave priority to the conclusions of the Eleventh Congress. It also focused, among other things, on bilateral agreement on the sharing of confiscated proceeds of crime or property, action against transnational organized crime and protocols related to terrorism within the UNODC framework.

The Secretary-General also reported on the work of the United Nations Institute for Training and Research.

Social policy and cultural issues

Social development

Follow-up to the 1995 World Summit and to the General Assembly special session

In response to General Assembly resolution 59/146 [YUN 2004, p. 1089], the Secretary-General submitted a May report [A/60/80] on the implementation of the Copenhagen Declaration on Social Development and the Programme of Action, adopted at the 1995 World Summit for Social Development [YUN 1995, p. 1113], and of the further initiatives for social development adopted by the Assembly's twenty-fourth (2000) special session [YUN 2000, p. 1012]. The report provided an overview of the activities for celebrating the tenth anniversary of the World Summit, which took place during the forty-third session of the Commission for Social Development (New York, 9-18 February) (see p. 1190). It noted that a number of trends had adversely affected social development since the convening of the Summit in Copenhagen. The broad concept of social development affirmed by all world leaders in Copenhagen had become less comprehensive and was severely weakened in global policymaking. While poverty was key in development policy and discourse, the other two core issues of the 1995 Summit—employment and social integration—had suffered from a general disconnect between economic and social policymaking. The report noted that the centrality of employment and the fundamental contribution of social integration to economic and social development were absent in the Millennium Development Goals (MDGs) [YUN 2000, p. 51] and that the injection of those missing links into the goals was needed to shore up efforts to build more inclusive, just and stable societies.

The panel discussion with the executive secretaries of the regional commissions on regional perspectives on the implementation of the outcome of the World Summit focused primarily on the core issues of poverty, employment and social integration. Mixed progress was reported by all of the commissions, especially since rising levels of income inequality within and among countries threatened the possibility of lifting people out of poverty, promoting employment and fostering social integration.

The Secretary-General's report on the world social situation in 2005 was transmitted to the Assembly in July (see p. 1193).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December [meeting 64], the General Assembly, on recommendations of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee [A/60/500], adopted resolution 60/130 without vote [agenda item 61].

Implementation of the outcome of the World Summit for Social Development and of the twenty-fourth special session of the General Assembly

The General Assembly,

Recalling the World Summit for Social Development, held at Copenhagen from 6 to 12 March 1995, and the twenty-fourth special session of the General Assembly, entitled "World Summit for Social Development and beyond: achieving social development for all in a globalizing world", held at Geneva from 26 June to 1 July 2000,

Reaffirming that the Copenhagen Declaration on Social Development and the Programme of Action and the further initiatives for social development adopted by the General Assembly at its twenty-fourth special session, as well as a continued global dialogue on social development issues, constitute the basic framework for the promotion of social development for all at the national and international levels,

Recalling the United Nations Millennium Declaration and the development goals contained therein, as well as the commitments made at major United Nations summits, conferences and special sessions, including the commitments made at the 2005 World Summit,

Recalling also its resolution 57/270 B of 23 June 2003 on the integrated and coordinated implementation of and follow-up to the outcomes of the major United Nations conferences and summits in the economic and social fields,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Also takes note with appreciation of the report on the world social situation, 2005 and one of its main findings, that the development agenda cannot be advanced without addressing the challenges of inequality within and between countries and that the failure to address this inequality predicament will ensure that social justice and better living conditions for all people will remain elusive and that communities, countries and regions will remain vulnerable to social, political and economic upheaval;

3. Welcomes the outcome of the ten-year review of the World Summit for Social Development, which took place during the forty-third session of the Commission for Social Development, in February 2005;

4. Also welcomes the reaffirmation by Governments of their will and commitment to continue implementing the Copenhagen Declaration on Social Development and the Programme of Action, in particular to eradicate poverty, promote full and productive employment and foster social integration to achieve stable, safe and just societies for all;

5. Reaffirms the recognition that the implementation of the Copenhagen commitments and the attainment of the internationally agreed development goals, including those contained in the United Nations Millennium Declaration, are mutually reinforcing and that the Copenhagen commitments are crucial to a coherent, people-centred approach to development;

6. Recognizes that, while action taken to implement the outcomes of the major United Nations summits, conferences and special sessions in the economic, social and related fields held during the past ten years will further promote social development, strengthened and effective international and regional cooperation and assistance for development and progress towards increased participation, greater social justice and improved equity in societies will also be required;

7. Also recognizes that the broad concept of social development affirmed by the World Summit for Social Development and the twenty-fourth special session of the General Assembly has been weakened in national and international policymaking and that, while poverty eradication is a central part of development policy and discourse, further attention should be given to the other commitments agreed to at the Summit, in particular those concerning employment and social integration, which have also suffered from a general disconnect between economic and social policymaking;

8. Emphasizes that poverty eradication policies should attack poverty by addressing its root and structural causes and manifestations, and that equity and the reduction of inequalities need to be incorporated in those policies;

9. Reaffirms the commitment to employment policies that promote full and productive employment and decent work for all under conditions of equity, equality, security and dignity, and also reaffirms that employment creation should be incorporated into macroeconomic policies;

10. Reaffirms also that social integration policies should seek to reduce inequalities, promote access to basic social services, education and health care, increase the participation and integration of social groups and address the challenges posed by globalization and market-driven reforms on social development in order for all people in all countries to benefit from globalization;

11. Reaffirms further that the Commission for Social Development will continue to have the primary responsibility for the follow-up and review of the World Summit for Social Development and the outcome of the twenty-fourth special session of the General Assembly and that it serves as the main United Nations forum for an intensified global dialogue on social development issues, and encourages Governments, the relevant specialized agencies, funds and programmes of the United Nations system and civil society to enhance their support to its work;

12. Reaffirms the commitments made in "Meeting the special needs of Africa" at the 2005 World Summit, underlines the call of the Economic and Social Council for enhanced coordination within the United Nations system and the ongoing efforts to harmonize the current initiatives on Africa, and requests the Commission for Social Development to continue to give due prominence in its work to the social dimensions of the New Partnership for Africa's Development;

13. Reaffirms also that each country has the primary responsibility for its own economic and social development and that the role of national policies and development strategies cannot be overemphasized, and underlines the importance of adopting effective measures, including new financial mechanisms as appropriate, to support the efforts of developing countries to achieve sustained economic growth, sustainable development, poverty eradication and the strengthening of their democratic systems;

14. Reaffirms further, in this context, that international cooperation has an essential role in assisting developing countries, including the least developed countries, in strengthening their human, institutional and technological capacity;

15. Reaffirms that social development requires the active involvement of all actors in the development process, including civil society organizations, corporations and small businesses, and that partnerships among all relevant actors are increasingly becoming part of national and international cooperation for social development, and also reaffirms that, within countries, partnerships among the Government, civil society and the private sector can contribute effectively to the achievement of social development goals;

16. Underlines the responsibility of the private sector, at both the national and the international levels, including small and large companies and transnational corporations, regarding not only the economic and financial but also the development, social, gender and environmental implications of their activities, their obligations towards their workers and their contributions to achieving sustainable development, including social development, and emphasizes the need to take concrete actions within the United Nations system and through the participation of all relevant stakeholders on corporate responsibility and accountability, including for the prevention or prosecution of corruption;

17. Invites the Secretary-General, the Economic and Social Council, the regional commissions, the relevant specialized agencies, funds and programmes of the United Nations system and other intergovernmental forums, within their respective mandates, to continue to integrate into their work programmes and give priority attention to the Copenhagen commitments and the Declaration on the tenth anniversary of the World Summit for Social Development, to continue to be actively involved in their follow-up and to monitor the achievement of those commitments and undertakings;

18. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its sixty-first session the item entitled "Implementation of the outcome of the World Summit for Social Development and of the twenty-fourth special session of the General Assembly", and requests the Secretary-General to submit a report on the question to the Assembly at that session.

Commission for Social Development

The Commission for Social Development, at its forty-third session (New York, 9-18 February) [E/2005/26], considered the priority theme, "Review of further implementation of the World Summit for Social Development and the outcome of the twenty-fourth special session of the General Assembly". The Commission held a two-day high-level segment devoted to the 10-year review of the 1995 World Summit for Social Development. It adopted the Declaration on the tenth anniversary of the World Summit (see below), reaffirming that the Copenhagen Declaration and Programme of Action and the further initiatives for social development adopted by the General Assembly at its twenty-fourth special session constituted the basic framework for the promotion of social development for all at the national and international levels. The Declaration recognized that the implementation of the 1995 Copenhagen commitments and the attainment of the MDGs were mutually reinforcing and that the Copenhagen commitments were crucial to a coherent, people-centred approach to development. As part of the high-level segment, the Commission held round table discussions on each of the core issues addressed by the Summit, namely, poverty eradication, promotion of full employment and fostering social integration. Annexed to the report were summaries of the round table discussions.

The Commission adopted a resolution on the implementation of the social objectives of the New Partnership for Africa's Development (NEPAD) (see p. 1003). It recommended to the Economic and Social Council for adoption two draft resolutions concerning persons with disabilities. In the first, on the further promotion of equalization of opportunities by, for, and with persons with disabilities and the protection of their human rights, the Commission recommended that the Council renew the mandate of the Special Rapporteur on Disability of the Commission for Social Development through 31 December 2008. In the second draft resolution, on the comprehensive and integral international convention to promote and protect the rights and dignity of persons with disabilities, the Commission recommended that the Council request the Commission for Social Development to continue to contribute to the process of negotiation of a draft convention.

In consideration of the situation pertaining to social groups, the Commission held its general debate and a panel discussion on youth in the context of the 10-year review of the World Programme of Action for Youth and the upcoming five-year review of the MDGs.

The Commission considered the Secretary-General's report [E/CN.5/2005/2] on the review of its work methods, submitted in accordance with Assembly resolution 57/270 B [YUN 2003, p. 1468].

Review of further implementation of the 1995 World Summit

The Secretary-General, in response to Economic and Social Council decision 2004/241 [YUN 2004, p. 1091], transmitted a report [E/CN.5/2005/6] on the review of further implementation of the World Summit for Social Development and the outcome of the twenty-fourth Special Session of the General Assembly. The report reviewed the implementation, from 1995 to 2005, of the ten commitments embodied in the Copenhagen Declaration on Social Development. The report consisted of four major chapters that included: comprehensive policy framework for people-centred development set forth by the Copenhagen Declaration; current prospects for an enabling environment for social development, as envisaged by the Summit; major trends in social development since the Summit with respect to poverty, employment, social integration, gender equality and education and health; and the way forward in terms of policy recommendations. Annexed to the report were the historical background on the international agenda on social development leading up to and including the World Summit; the ten commitments from the Copenhagen Declaration in their original wording; and an overview of the significance of the five-year review of implementation, after the Summit, at the twenty-fourth special session of the General Assembly held in 2000.

Declaration of the Commission for Social Development

On 21 July, the Economic and Social Council decided to transmit the Declaration of the Commission for Social Development on the tenth anniversary of the World Summit for Social Development to the General Assembly, including the Assembly's High-level Plenary Meeting on the review of the United Nations Millennium Declaration (decision 2005/234).

Declaration on the tenth anniversary of the World Summit for Social Development

We, the representatives of Governments gathering at the forty-third session of the Commission for Social Development, in New York, on the occasion of the tenth anniversary of the World Summit for Social Development, held at Copenhagen in 1995, in the context of the review of the outcome of the Summit and of the twenty-fourth special session of the General Assembly and its contribution to the High-level Plenary Meeting of the General Assembly on the review of the United Nations Millennium Declaration, to be held from 14 to 16 September 2005,

1. Reaffirm that the Copenhagen Declaration on Social Development and the Programme of Action adopted by the World Summit for Social Development and the further initiatives for social development adopted by the General Assembly at its twenty-fourth special session constitute the basic framework for the promotion of social development for all at the national and international levels;

2. Recognize that the implementation of the Copenhagen commitments and the attainment of the internationally agreed development goals, including those contained in the Millennium Declaration, are mutually reinforcing and that the Copenhagen commitments are crucial to a coherent, people-centred approach to development;

3. Stress that policies and programmes designed to achieve poverty eradication should include specific measures to foster social integration, including by providing marginalized socio-economic sectors and groups with equal access to opportunities;

4. Reaffirm that an employment strategy that aims to promote full, freely chosen and productive employment with full respect for fundamental principles and rights at work under conditions of equity, equality, security and dignity should constitute a fundamental component of any development strategy. We further reaffirm that macroeconomic policies should, inter alia, support employment creation. The social impact and dimension of globalization deserve further attention;

5. Recommit ourselves to promoting social integration by fostering societies that are stable, safe and just and that are based on the promotion and protection of all human rights, as well as on non-discrimination, tolerance, respect for diversity, equality of opportunity, solidarity, security and participation of all people, including disadvantaged and vulnerable groups and persons;

6. Reaffirm the importance of promoting and attaining the goals of universal and equitable access to quality education, the highest attainable standard of physical and mental health and the access of all to primary health care as part of the effort to eradicate poverty, promote full and productive employment and foster social integration. We also recognize the continued need to address the impact of HIV/AIDS and other major infectious diseases on social and economic development;

7. Recognize that gender equality and the full participation of women in society are integral to building a society for all and must be at the centre of all economic and social development. We recommit ourselves to the urgent goal of achieving gender equality, to eliminating discrimination against women and to ensuring their full participation in all areas of life and at all levels;

8. Reaffirm that enhanced international cooperation and action at the national level are essential to the implementation of the Copenhagen Declaration and the Programme of Action. We underline the importance of adopting effective measures, including new financial mechanisms, as appropriate, to support the efforts of developing countries to achieve sustained economic growth, sustainable development, poverty eradication and strengthening of their democratic systems. We reaffirm that each country has primary responsibility for its own economic and social development and that national policies have the leading role in the development process. We also reaffirm that good governance is essential to sustainable development;

9. Recognize that ten years after Copenhagen, despite the efforts made and progress achieved in economic and social development, the situation of many developing countries, particularly in Africa and the least developed countries, as well as countries with economies in transition, requires further attention and action. We renew our commitment to support national efforts to promote a favourable environment for social and economic development, including the provision of technical and financial assistance, as appropriate, including through regional and other initiatives such as the New Partnership for Africa's Development;

10. Dedicate ourselves, a decade after Copenhagen, on the basis of our common pursuit of social development, to building solidarity, and renew our invitation to all people in all countries and in all walks of life, as well as the international community, to join in realizing our shared vision for a more just and equitable world. Therefore, we reaffirm our will and commitment to continue implementing the Copenhagen Declaration and the Programme of Action, in particular to eradicate poverty, promote full and productive employment and foster social integration to achieve stable, safe and just societies for all.

On 21 July, the Council took note of the Commission's report on its forty-third session and approved the provisional agenda and documentation for its forty-fourth (2006) session (decision 2005/235).

Future organization and methods of work of the Commission for Social Development

On 21 July [meeting 35], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission for Social Development [E/2005/26], adopted resolution 2005/11 without vote [agenda item 14 (b)].

Future organization and methods of work of the Commission for Social Development

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 57/270 B of 23 June 2003, in which the Assembly requested each functional commission of the Economic and Social Council to examine its methods of work in order to better pursue the implementation of the outcomes of the major United Nations conferences and summits, and to report to the Council no later than 2005 on the outcome of that examination,

Recalling also the primary responsibility of the Commission for Social Development for the follow-up to the World Summit for Social Development and the review of the Copenhagen Declaration on Social Development and Programme of Action of the World Summit for Social Development and the outcome of the twenty-fourth special session of the General Assembly,

1. Recognizes that the organization of work of the Commission for Social Development should contribute to advancing the implementation of the Copenhagen Declaration on Social Development and Programme of Action of the World Summit for Social Development and the outcome of the twenty-fourth special session of the General Assembly, bearing in mind links with the internationally agreed development goals, including those contained in the United Nations Millennium Declaration;

2. Decides that in order to fulfil its mandate, beginning with its forty-fifth session, the work of the Commission will be organized in a series of two-year action-oriented implementation cycles, which will include a review segment and a policy segment, and that the Commission should strengthen the connection between its review of implementation and its policy recommendations;

3. Also decides that, in its sessions, the Commission will also continue to review plans and programmes of action pertaining to social groups, including in relation to the priority theme;

4. Further decides that, in its review of the implementation of the Copenhagen Declaration and Programme of Action and the outcome of the twenty-fourth special session of the General Assembly, the Commission should emphasize increased exchange of national, regional and international experiences, focused and interactive dialogues among experts and practitioners, and sharing of best practices and lessons learned;

5. Decides that the Commission should invite all relevant stakeholders to continue to participate in its work at an appropriately high level;

6. Invites the regional commissions, in collaboration with the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the Secretariat, to consider organizing regional meetings and activities, as necessary and appropriate, in order to contribute to the work of the Commission, in collaboration, as appropriate, with other regional and subregional intergovernmental organizations and bodies and the regional offices of funds and programmes of the United Nations system;

7. Decides that the Commission at its forty-fourth session should consider further its methods of work, bearing in mind its own experiences and those of other functional commissions, and that its consideration should include the nature of its outcomes, negotiated and otherwise, the inclusion of emerging issues within its programme of work and the choice of themes for the 2007/2008 cycle;

8. Also decides that the Commission, at its forty-sixth session, should review the functioning of the two-year review and policy cycle, in order to ensure that this approach enhances the effectiveness and functioning of the Commission.

2005 Report on the World Social Situation

In July [A/60/117 & Rev.1], the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly a report on the World Social Situation in 2005, which reviewed traditional aspects of inequalities in health, education, and opportunities for social and political participation. It also noted the impact of structural adjustment, market reforms, globalization and privatization on economic and social indicators. The report identified four areas of particular importance: addressing worldwide asymmetries derived from globalization; incorporating specific measures for reducing inequality in policies and programmes designed to achieve poverty reduction; expanding opportunities for employment, with particular attention to improving conditions in the informal economy; and promoting social integration and cohesion as a key development, peace and security.

By decision 60/528 of 16 December, the Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's report.

Cooperatives in social development

Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 58/131 [YUN 2003, p. 1102], the Secretary-General, in July [A/60/138], submitted the replies he had received from Governments and international organizations on progress achieved in the resolution's implementation, particularly in promoting a supportive environment for the development of cooperatives and their contribution to poverty eradication, the generation of a full and productive environment and the enhancement of social integration.

The Secretary-General recommended promoting greater participation of cooperatives in poverty reduction. In order to enhance growth and sustainability of cooperatives, a legislative enactment, amendment or review was needed to broaden and deepen cooperatives' outreach among the poor, particularly for those in the rural or agriculture sector. In addition, he noted that greater impetus was needed to support programmes that entailed technology support from donors and created a political, social and economic environment conducive to autonomy and the democratic principles of cooperatives.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December [meeting 64], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/60/501], adopted resolution 60/132 without vote [agenda item 62].

Cooperatives in social development

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 47/90 of 16 December 1992, 49/155 of 23 December 1994, 51/58 of 12 December 1996, 54/123 of 17 December 1999, 56/114 of 19 December 2001 and 58/131 of 22 December 2003 concerning cooperatives in social development,

Recognizing that cooperatives, in their various forms, promote the fullest possible participation in the economic and social development of all people, including women, youth, older persons and persons with disabilities, and are becoming a major factor of economic and social development,

Recognizing also the important contribution and potential of all forms of cooperatives to the follow-up to the World Summit for Social Development, the Fourth World Conference on Women, the second United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II) and their reviews, the World Food Summit, the Second World Assembly on Ageing, the International Conference on Financing for Development and the World Summit on Sustainable Development,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Draws the attention of Member States to the recommendations contained in the report of the Secretary-General for further action to promote the greater participation of cooperatives in poverty reduction, in particular in the design, implementation and monitoring of poverty reduction strategy papers, where they exist;

3. Encourages Governments to keep under review, as appropriate, the legal and administrative provisions and requirements governing the activities of cooperatives in order to enhance the growth and sustainability of cooperatives in a rapidly changing socio-economic environment, to broaden and deepen the outreach of cooperatives among the poor, in particular those in rural areas or in the agricultural sector, and to promote the participation of women and vulnerable groups in cooperatives across all sectors;

4. Urges Governments, relevant international organizations and the specialized agencies, in collaboration with national and international cooperative organizations, to give due consideration to the role and contribution of cooperatives in the implementation of and follow-up to the outcomes of the World Summit for Social Development, the Fourth World Conference on Women, the second United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II) and their reviews, the World Food Summit, the Second World Assembly on Ageing, the International Conference on Financing for Development, the World Summit on Sustainable Development and the 2005 World Summit by, inter alia:

(a) Utilizing and developing fully the potential and contribution of cooperatives for the attainment of social development goals, in particular the eradication of poverty, the generation of full and productive employment and the enhancement of social integration;

(b) Encouraging and facilitating the establishment and development of cooperatives, including taking measures aimed at enabling people living in poverty or belonging to vulnerable groups to engage on a voluntary basis in the creation and development of cooperatives;

(c) Taking appropriate measures aimed at creating a supportive and enabling environment for the development of cooperatives by, inter alia, developing an effective partnership between Governments and the cooperative movement, inter alia, through joint consultative councils and/or advisory bodies and by promoting and implementing better legislation, training, research, sharing of good practices and human resources development;

(d) Taking steps to improve the collection and dissemination of information and data on the role of cooperatives in poverty reduction and their contribution to social and economic development;

5. Invites Governments, in collaboration with the cooperative movement, to develop programmes aimed at enhancing capacity-building of cooperatives, including by strengthening the organizational, management and financial skills of their members, and to introduce and support programmes to improve the access of cooperatives to new technologies;

6. Invites Governments, relevant international organizations, the specialized agencies and local, national and international cooperative organizations to continue to observe the International Day of Cooperatives annually, on the first Saturday of July, as proclaimed by the General Assembly in its resolution 47/90;

7. Requests the Secretary-General, in cooperation with the relevant United Nations and other international organizations and national, regional and international cooperative organizations, to render support to Member States, as appropriate, in their efforts to create a supportive environment for the development of cooperatives, to continue to provide assistance for human resources development, technical advice and training and to promote an exchange of experience and best practices through, inter alia, conferences, workshops and seminars at the national and regional levels;

8. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its sixty-second session a report on the implementation of the present resolution, focusing on the role of cooperatives in promoting full and productive employment.

Follow-up to and celebration of International Year of the Family (1994)

In accordance with General Assembly resolutions 59/147 [YUN 2004, p. 1096] and 59/111 [ibid.], the Secretary-General submitted a July report [A/60/155] on the follow-up to and celebration of the tenth anniversary of the International Year of the Family. The tenth anniversary was celebrated throughout 2004, and owing to the importance of the issue of the family to Member States, the United Nations and civil society organizations, celebratory events continued into 2005. The Assembly noted that the follow-up to the tenth anniversary would form an integral part of the agenda of the Commission for Social Development until 2006.

According to the report, national coordination mechanisms were established and charged with creating and implementing a plan for observing the tenth anniversary, raising public awareness of family issues, and identifying priority issues for concrete actions. At the national level, Governments continued to work toward strengthening and empowering families by promoting social and economic well-being. Numerous countries also reviewed their constitutions and legal systems on issues relating to families, children, adolescents, older persons and people with disabilities.

The UN programme on the family within the Department of Economic and Social Affairs (DESA) undertook and supported a range of activities in family related issues, including the organization of seminars and policy workshops on HIV/AIDS and family well-being.

The Secretary-General recommended that the Assembly could encourage the programmes, funds and specialized agencies to consider how they could integrate a family perspective into their activities and to identify a focal point on family matters within their offices. The Assembly could further request DESA to disseminate a compilation of existing UN system development cooperation activities to strengthen cooperation in the area of the family. Acknowledging the need for additional capacity-building at the national level to promote and facilitate the development and implementation of family policies, the Assembly could also encourage Governments to support the United Nations Family Trust Fund to enable DESA to provide expanded assistance to countries. In addition, the Assembly could recommend that Governments encourage research activities that provided input for public policies with a family perspective, utilizing participatory methodologies and techniques to elaborate on priority issues and family needs, identify family structures and composition and collect opinions, attitudes and values of different generations.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December [meeting 64], the General Assembly adopted resolution 60/133 [draft: A/60/501] without a vote [agenda item 62].

Noting also that the family-related provisions of the outcomes of the major United Nations conferences and summits of the 1990s and their follow-up processes continue to provide policy guidance on ways to strengthen family-centred components of policies and programmes as part of an integrated comprehensive approach to development,

Cognizant that the tenth anniversary of the International Year of the Family in 2004 provided an impetus for integrating family concerns into the national development planning process,

Aware that the basic objective of the follow-up to the tenth anniversary of the International Year of the Family is to support families in performing their societal and developmental functions and to build upon their strengths, in particular at the national and local levels,

Recognizing the need to assist families in their supporting, educating and nurturing roles in contributing to social integration,

Convinced of the necessity of ensuring an action-oriented follow-up to the tenth anniversary of the International Year of the Family beyond 2004,

Recognizing the important catalytic and supportive role of United Nations bodies, the specialized agencies and the regional commissions in promoting international cooperation by ensuring an action-oriented follow-up in the field of the family,

Cognizant of the need for continued inter-agency cooperation on the family in order to generate greater awareness of family issues among the governing bodies of the United Nations system,

Recognizing that civil society, including research and academic institutions, has a pivotal role in advocacy, promotion, research and policymaking in respect of family policy development,

Taking note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General,

1. Encourages Governments to continue to make every possible effort to realize the objectives of the International Year of the Family and to integrate a family perspective into policymaking;

2. Invites Governments to maintain the national coordination mechanisms established or revitalized during the observance of the tenth anniversary of the International Year of the Family to coordinate policies, programmes and strategies in order to bring about positive transformations by integrating family issues into national development planning;

3. Recommends that Governments, in cooperation with concerned academic and research centres as well as relevant non-governmental organizations, encourage action-oriented research that addresses public policies with a family perspective and contributes to the development of strategies, policies and programmes aimed at strengthening the economic and sustainable livelihood of families, and encourages the United Nations programme on the family to support and conduct action-oriented research, including through the issuance of research and publications on relevant topics, with the aim of supplementing the research activities of Governments;

4. Encourages Governments to support the United Nations Trust Fund on Family Activities to enable the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the Secretariat to provide expanded assistance to countries, upon their request;

5. Urges States, the specialized agencies and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to address family-related concerns within the framework of the commitments undertaken at relevant major United Nations conferences and in their follow-up processes;

6. Urges Member States to create a conducive environment to strengthen and support all families, recognizing that equality between women and men and respect for all the human rights and fundamental freedoms of all family members are essential to family well-being and to society at large, noting the importance of the reconciliation of work and family life, and recognizing the principle that both parents have common responsibilities for the upbringing and development of the child;

7. Encourages continued and increased inter-agency cooperation within the United Nations system on family-related issues, and encourages the programmes, funds and specialized agencies of the United Nations system to identify focal points on family matters within their offices to support the integration of family issues in their work;

8. Calls upon the Secretariat to continue its important role on family issues within the United Nations system, and in this regard encourages the Department of Economic and Social Affairs to continue cooperation with Governments, the United Nations system and civil society in strengthening national capacities through the implementation of the mandated objectives of the International Year of the Family;

9. Invites Member States to undertake a review of the role and functions of existing national machineries for the family in order to better integrate family issues into national development programmes;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report on the implementation of the present resolution to the General Assembly at its sixty-second session;

11. Decides to consider the topic "Follow-up to the tenth anniversary of the International Year of the Family" at its sixty-second session under the item entitled "Social development, including questions relating to the world social situation and to youth, ageing, disabled persons and the family".

Persons with disabilities

World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons

The Secretary-General, in response to General Assembly resolution 58/132 [YUN 2003, p. 1105], transmitted an August report [A/60/290] on the implementation of the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons. The report was based on contributions received from 26 Governments, 14 UN agencies or programmes and two non-governmental organizations (NGOs). It addressed the international policy framework on disability; progress made towards the equalization of opportunities for persons with disabilities; initiatives aimed at promoting a disability perspective in development; and actions to improve accessibility at the United Nations. Proposals for action to the Assembly included options for more effective synergy in monitoring the implementation of the two special international instruments—the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons and the Standard Rules on Equalization of Persons with Disabilities [E/CN.5/ 2005/5].

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 21 July [meeting 35], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission for Social Development [E/2005/26], adopted resolution 2005/9 without vote [agenda item 14 (b)].

Further promotion of equalization of opportunities by, for and with persons with disabilities and protection of their human rights

Recalling General Assembly resolution 37/52 of 3 December 1982, by which the Assembly adopted the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons, resolution 48/96 of 20 December 1993, by which it adopted the Standard Rules on the Equalization of Opportunities for Persons with Disabilities, resolution 56/168 of 19 December 2001, by which it established the Ad Hoc Committee on a Comprehensive and Integral International Convention on the Protection and Promotion of the Rights and Dignity of Persons with Disabilities, resolutions 58/132 of 22 December 2003 and 59/198 of 20 December 2004, as well as Assembly decision 59/521 of 20 December 2004 on the issue of the proposed supplement to the Standard Rules,

Recalling also its resolutions 2002/26 of 24 July 2002 and 2004/15 of 21 July 2004 on further promotion of equalization of opportunities by, for and with persons with disabilities and protection of their human rights,

Encouraged by the elaboration of a convention carried out in the Ad Hoc Committee,

Mindful of the need to adopt and implement effective strategies and policies to promote the rights and the full and effective participation of persons with disabilities in economic, social, cultural and political life on the basis of equality in order to achieve a society for all,

Noting with satisfaction that the Standard Rules play an increasingly important role in the equalization of opportunities for persons with disabilities,

Noting with grave concern that persons with disabilities are, in some circumstances, among the poorest of the poor and that they continue to be excluded from the benefits of development, such as education and access to gainful employment,

Encouraging States to further participate actively in international cooperation for the equalization of opportunities for persons with disabilities,

1. Welcomes the work of the Special Rapporteur on Disability of the Commission for Social Development, and takes note of her report;

2. Urges Governments, the Secretary-General, intergovernmental organizations and non-governmental organizations, and invites relevant human rights treaty bodies, relevant bodies and organizations of the United Nations system, including the Bretton Woods institutions, multilateral development agencies and regional commissions, to create greater awareness of and support for the further implementation of the Standard Rules on the Equalization of Opportunities for Persons with Disabilities, to work closely with the United Nations programme on persons with disabilities, to promote the enjoyment of all human rights and fundamental freedoms of persons with disabilities and to improve consultation, exchange of information and coordination;

3. Encourages Governments, non-governmental organizations and the private sector to continue to contribute to the United Nations Voluntary Fund on Disability in order to support the activities of the Special Rapporteur as well as new and expanded initiatives to strengthen national capacities for equalization of opportunities by, for and with persons with disabilities;

4. Decides to renew the mandate of the Special Rapporteur through 31 December 2008 to further the promotion and monitoring of the Standard Rules in accordance with the provisions set down in section IV of the Standard Rules, including the human rights dimensions of disability;

5. Requests the Special Rapporteur to take into account the general ideas contained in the proposed supplement to the Standard Rules in the accomplishment of her mandate;

6. Encourages the Special Rapporteur to continue to participate in and contribute to the work of the Ad Hoc Committee on a Comprehensive and Integral International Convention on the Protection and Promotion of the Rights and Dignity of Persons with Disabilities;

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December [meeting 64], the General Assembly, on recommendation of the Third Committee [A/60/501], adopted resolution 60/131 without vote [agenda item 62].

Implementation of the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons: realizing the Millennium Development Goals for persons with disabilities

The General Assembly,

Recalling the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations, and reaffirming the obligations contained in relevant human rights instruments, including the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women and the Convention on the Rights of the Child,

Recalling also its relevant resolutions, in particular resolution 37/52 of 3 December 1982, by which it adopted the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons, resolution 48/96 of 20 December 1993, by which it adopted the Standard Rules on the Equalization of Opportunities for Persons with Disabilities, and resolution 58/132 of 22 December 2003, as well as the relevant resolutions of the Economic and Social Council and its functional commissions,

Recalling further the adoption of the United Nations Millennium Declaration on 8 September 2000 and of the 2005 World Summit Outcome on 16 September 2005 by Heads of State and Government, stressing the need to promote and protect the full enjoyment of all human rights and fundamental freedoms by persons with disabilities, and recognizing the importance of incorporating the disability perspective in the implementation of the outcomes of the major United Nations conferences and summits, with a view to achieving the internationally agreed development goals, including those contained in the Millennium Declaration,

Noting with appreciation the initiatives and actions of Governments to implement the World Programme of Action, the Standard Rules and relevant resolutions that give special attention to the questions of accessible environments and information and communication technologies, health, education and social services, employment and sustainable livelihoods, including the relevant activities of intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, which reflect the strong commitment to the equalization of opportunities, the rights of persons with disabilities and the promotion and protection of the full enjoyment of all human rights by persons with disabilities, including in the context of development,

Reaffirming the outcomes of the major United Nations conferences and summits and their respective follow-up reviews,

Noting that the Madrid International Plan of Action on Ageing, 2002, adopted by the Second World Assembly on Ageing, considers "older persons and disabilities" as a specific issue for policy concern,

Welcoming the progress of the Ad Hoc Committee on a Comprehensive and Integral International Convention on the Protection and Promotion of the Rights and Dignity of Persons with Disabilities in preparing a draft text of the convention,

Acknowledging the complementary contributions of all existing international frameworks on disability,

Aware of the fact that there are at least 600 million persons with disabilities worldwide, of whom approximately 80 per cent live in developing countries,

Recognizing the important role of the World Programme of Action in the achievement of the Millennium Development Goals,

Recognizing also that the achievement of the purposes of the World Programme of Action is congruent with economic and social development, extended services provided to the whole population in the humanitarian area, the redistribution of resources and income and an improvement in the living standards of the population,

Acknowledging the important role of non-governmental organizations, in particular organizations of persons with disabilities, in the promotion and protection of the full enjoyment of all human rights by persons with disabilities, and noting in this regard their work in promoting the elaboration of an international convention on the rights of disabled persons,

Noting with appreciation the important contributions of regional intergovernmental organizations and the regional commissions of the United Nations in promoting awareness and building capacities for the full participation and equality of persons with disabilities, as well as the outcome of international conferences relating to persons with disabilities,

Mindful of the need to adopt and implement effective policies and strategies in all Member States, United Nations agencies, regional intergovernmental organizations and regional commissions of the United Nations to promote the rights and the full and effective participation of persons with disabilities at all levels,

Recognizing the importance of accessibility both of the physical environment and of information and communication in enabling persons with disabilities to enjoy fully their human rights and to play an active part in the development of society,

Reiterating that technology, in particular information and communication technologies, provides new possibilities for improving accessibility and employment for persons with disabilities and for facilitating their full and effective participation and equality, stressing in this regard the importance of enhancing cooperation among countries for the transfer of technology and technical and economic cooperation in the development and dissemination of appropriate disability-related technologies and know-how, and welcoming the initiatives of the United Nations and contributions from regional groups in promoting information and communication technologies as a means of achieving the universal goal of a society for all,

Recognizing the importance of timely and reliable data on disability-sensitive topics, programme planning and evaluation and the need for the further development of practical statistical methodology for the collection and compilation of data on populations with disabilities, and welcoming the initiatives of various United Nations agencies and regional groups in the area of collection of disability-related data and information,

Recognizing also the need to address the challenge of better incorporating the disability perspective in development and technical cooperation activities,

Recognizing further the need to improve the quality of life of persons with disabilities worldwide through the enhancement of awareness of and sensitivity to disability issues and respect for the full enjoyment of all human rights by persons with disabilities and by ensuring that the benefits of development programmes also reach them,

Recognizing that, because the vast majority of persons with disabilities continue to be excluded from the benefits of development and denied the full and equal recognition and enjoyment of their human rights, the impact of poverty on the conditions of persons with disabilities, especially in rural areas, should be given prominent consideration in the elaboration of national and international development strategies,

Expressing grave concern that situations of armed conflict continue to have especially devastating consequences for the human rights of persons with disabilities,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons, including his recommendations to mainstream the disability perspective in United Nations international and national development frameworks and to consider the effective synergy in monitoring the implementation of the existing international frameworks on disability;

4. Urges Governments and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to promote effective measures, as elaborated in the World Programme of Action, for the prevention of disability and the provision of appropriate habilitation and rehabilitation services for persons with disabilities in a manner respectful of the dignity and integrity of persons with disabilities;

6. Encourages Governments to continue and to strengthen their support to non-governmental organizations and other groups, including organizations of persons with disabilities, that contribute to the implementation of the World Programme of Action;

7. Also encourages Governments to involve persons with disabilities in the formulation of strategies and plans, in particular those pertaining to them;

8. Urges relevant organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, including the development agencies and funds, relevant human rights treaty bodies and the regional commissions, as well as intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and institutions, to incorporate the disability perspective in their activities, as appropriate, and to continue to work closely with the Division for Social Policy and Development of the Secretariat for the equalization of opportunities for persons with disabilities and the promotion of the full enjoyment of all human rights and fundamental freedoms by persons with disabilities, including in activities at the field level;

9. Stresses the importance of improving data and statistics on persons with disabilities, in compliance with national legislation on the protection of personal data, so that they can be compared internationally and domestically for purposes of policy design, planning and evaluation from the disability perspective, urges Governments, in this regard, to cooperate with the Statistics Division of the Secretariat in the continuing development of global statistics and indicators on disability, and encourages them to avail themselves of the technical assistance of the Division to build national capacities for national data-collection systems;

13. Encourages Governments, intergovernmental organizations, concerned non-governmental organizations and the private sector to continue to support the United Nations Voluntary Fund on Disability, with a view to strengthening its capacity to support catalytic and innovative activities to implement fully the World Programme of Action and the Standard Rules, including the work of the Special Rapporteur, and to support activities to build national capacities, with emphasis on priorities for action identified in the present resolution;

14. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to support the initiatives of relevant organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, as well as those of regional, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and institutions, for the further implementation of the World Programme of Action, including the promotion of the full enjoyment of all human rights by, and non-discrimination in respect of, persons with disabilities, as well as efforts to integrate persons with disabilities in technical cooperation activities, both as beneficiaries and as decision makers;

Cultural development

Dialogue among civilizations

In response to General Assembly resolution 56/6 [YUN 2001, p. 1014], the Secretary-General transmitted a report, in August [A/60/259], on the Global Agenda for Dialogue among Civilizations. The report discussed activities undertaken by the Member States and the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO), among others. It outlined a suggestion for a way forward, which could be achieved by securing the commitment of Governments; mobilizing role models in societies; and by changing shared narratives to reflect the increased interdependence among peoples, societies and youth. The Global Agenda for Dialogue had been a key initiative in the promotion of greater understanding among people around the world through activities, such as study tours, cultural festivals, educational exchange programmes, joint scientific research projects and conferences. The Secretariat received information on the implementation of the Global Agenda from 31 Member States and one Observer State.

On 14 July, following the proposals of Spain and Turkey, a major initiative entitled, "Alliance of Civilizations", was launched by the Secretary-General. It aimed to address efforts by the international community to bridge divides and overcome prejudice, misconceptions and polarization that potentially threatened world peace.

In the view of the Secretary-General, the most urgent task was to devise a strategy for creating a coalition of all those people who did not believe in inciting violence or supporting extremism and who made up the great majority of humankind. The Alliance of Civilizations initiative, which hopefully would receive the support of Governments, regional organizations and civil society, appeared to be the appropriate forum for the strategy. Movement towards such a coalition had to be driven by a new narrative in international relations, which would be based on the historical reality of continuous interaction among civilizations at the local, national and international levels, and on many societies where people of different cultures and religions had worked successfully together. It would recognize that confrontation was being pursued only by small (though determined) minorities. That narrative, in other words, would encompass aspirations for the future rather than the scars of the past; inclusion rather than the paradigm of "us and them"; a win-win paradigm rather than a zero-sum game. Dialogue among civilizations, like many ideas of global significance, needed to be pursued at a local level. The challenge was therefore to establish a dialogue within the confines of individual cities and countries, as well as to engage in dialogue across national and other boundaries. It was perhaps at that level that the lack of a real dialogue, between ethnically and culturally different groups sharing the same nationality, had proved most dangerous. Each culture had to develop its own narrative within its own boundaries. The hearts and minds of the next generation were the real object of a dialogue among civilizations. That meant that new narratives, if they were to catch on, needed to be validated by individuals who could inspire the young and fire their imagination. Those individuals—the role models of our societies—needed to be mobilized by the international community. They could be found in different social sectors: sport, entertainment, the media, science, education and business, and needed to be encouraged to take on an advocacy role.

Communications. On 13 May [A/60/77], the Islamic Republic of Iran transmitted to the Secretary-General a statement made by its President that was addressed to the UNESCO Conference on Dialogue among Civilizations (Paris, France, 5 April). In August [A/60/311], Iran also transmitted to the Secretary-General a national report on the implementation of the Global Agenda for Dialogue among Civilizations.

7. Invites the United Nations system to continue to encourage and facilitate dialogue among civilizations and formulate ways and means to promote dialogue among civilizations in the activities of the United Nations in various fields;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to explore enhancing implementation mechanisms for the Global Agenda and for the present resolution and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its sixty-fifth session.

Culture of peace

In resolution 60/3 of 20 October on the International Decade for a Culture of Peace and Non-Violence for the Children of the World, 2001-2010 (see p. 746), the General Assembly encouraged the appropriate authorities to provide education for children that included lessons in mutual understanding, tolerance, active citizenship, human rights and the promotion of a culture of peace. It also invited Member States to observe 21 September each year as the International day of peace, and as a day of global ceasefire and non-violence, in accordance with Assembly resolution 55/282 [YUN 2001, p. 575].

Religious and cultural understanding

By a 5 August report [A/60/201], the Secretary-General transmitted replies from 17 Member States and two UN agencies in response to a UN Secretariat request for information on steps taken to implement General Assembly resolution 59/23 [YUN 2004, p. 1102], which dealt with the promotion of interreligious dialogue. The report also provided information on the implementation of Assembly resolution 59/142 [ibid.] on the promotion of religious and cultural understanding, harmony and cooperation.

UNESCO designated the promotion of interfaith dialogue as a flagship activity of the organization in its draft programme and budget for 2006 and 2007 and intensified its activities in the field of dialogue among civilizations, cultures and peoples. The United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA) was engaged in growing collaboration with members of religious communities to create, among other things, bridges of dialogue between the United Nations and the different religious establishments in the world.

The Secretariat's Department of Public Information launched a series of seminars in 2004 on the subject of "Unlearning Intolerance", which examined different manifestations of intolerance and explored ways to promote respect and understanding among peoples. The first two seminars focused on anti-Semitism and Islamophobia.

In related developments, the Assembly had before it UNESCO's midterm global review of the International Decade for a Culture of Peace and Non-Violence for the Children of the World, 2001-2010 [A/60/279] (see p. 746). The Assembly also took note of several initiatives on interreligious, intercultural and intercivilizational dialogues and cooperation for peace, including the Asia-Europe Meeting on Interfaith Dialogue (Bali, Indonesia, 21-22 July), co-hosted by Indonesia and the United Kingdom, which concluded with the Bali Declaration on Building Interfaith Harmony within the International Community [A/60/254]; the Conference on Interfaith Cooperation for Peace: Enhancing Interfaith Dialogue and Cooperation Towards Peace in the Twenty-first Century (New York, 22 June) [A/60/269-E/2005/91]; and the Informal Meeting of Leaders on Interfaith Dialogue and Cooperation for Peace (New York, 13 September) [A/60/383].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 3 November [meeting 43], the General Assembly adopted resolution 60/10 [draft: A/60/L.4/Rev.1 &Add.1], without vote [agenda item 43].

2. Takes note with appreciation of the work of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization on interreligious dialogue in the context of its efforts to promote dialogue among civilizations, cultures and peoples, as well as activities related to a culture of peace, welcomes its focus on concrete action at both the global and the regional and subregional levels and its new flagship activity on the promotion of interfaith dialogue, and encourages relevant bodies of the United Nations to work closely with the Organization and coordinate their efforts in this regard;

3. Invites the Secretary-General to continue to bring the promotion of interreligious dialogue to the attention of all Governments, regional organizations and relevant international organizations, including ways to strengthen the linkages and focus more on practical actions in the implementation of the initiatives on interreligious dialogue and cooperation for peace;

Promotion of religious and cultural understanding, harmony and cooperation

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the purposes and principles enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, in particular the right to freedom of thought, of conscience and of religion,

Recalling the Global Agenda for Dialogue among Civilizations and the Universal Declaration on Cultural Diversity of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, as well as the principles contained therein,

Underlining the importance of promoting understanding, tolerance and friendship among human beings in all their diversity of religion, belief, culture and language, and recalling that all States have pledged themselves under the Charter to promote and encourage universal respect for and observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms for all, without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion,

Taking note of the adoption of the 2005 World Summit Outcome at the High-level Plenary Meeting of the General Assembly, which acknowledges the importance of respect and understanding for religious and cultural diversity throughout the world, and emphasizing the commitment contained therein to advance human welfare, freedom and progress everywhere, as well as to encourage tolerance, respect, dialogue and cooperation among different cultures, civilizations and peoples, in order to promote international peace and security,

Recalling its resolutions 59/23 of 11 November 2004 and 59/142 and 59/143 of 15 December 2004, and all other relevant resolutions,

Recognizing that interreligious dialogue and understanding, including the awareness of differences and commonalities among peoples and civilizations, contribute to the peaceful resolution of conflicts and disputes and reduce the potential for animosity, clashes and even violence,

Taking note of the valuable contribution of various initiatives at the national, regional and international level, such as the Alliance of Civilizations initiative, the Bali Declaration on Building Interfaith Harmony within the International Community, the Congress of Leaders of World and Traditional Religions, the Dialogue among Civilizations and Cultures, the strategy of "enlightened moderation", the Informal Meeting of Leaders on Interfaith Dialogue and Cooperation for Peace and the Islam-Christianity Dialogue, which are all mutually inclusive, reinforcing and interrelated,

Recognizing all efforts made by the United Nations system and other international and regional organizations to promote understanding, tolerance and friendship among human beings in all their diversity of culture, religion, belief and language,

Alarmed that serious instances of intolerance and discrimination on the grounds of religion or belief, including acts of violence, intimidation and coercion motivated by religious intolerance, are on the increase in many parts of the world and threaten the enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Considering that tolerance for cultural, ethnic, and religious and linguistic diversities, as well as dialogue among and within civilizations, is essential for peace, understanding and friendship among individuals and people of different cultures and nations of the world, while manifestations of cultural prejudice, intolerance and xenophobia towards different cultures and religions generate hatred and violence among peoples and nations throughout the world,

Emphasizing that combating hatred, prejudice, intolerance and stereotyping on the basis of religion or culture represents a significant global challenge that requires further action,

1. Takes note of the report transmitted by the Secretary-General in accordance with resolutions 59/142 and 59/143;

7. Further recognizes that, while the significance of national and regional particularities and various historical, cultural and religious backgrounds must be borne in mind, it is the duty of States, regardless of their political, economic and cultural systems, to promote and protect all human rights and fundamental freedoms;

8. Reaffirms that the promotion and protection of the rights of persons belonging to national or ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities contribute to political and social stability and peace and enrich the cultural diversity and heritage of society as a whole in the States in which such persons live, and urges States to ensure that their political and legal systems reflect the multicultural diversity within their societies and, where necessary, to improve democratic and political institutions, organizations and practices so that they are more fully participatory and avoid the marginalization and exclusion of, and discrimination against, specific sectors of society;

9. Encourages Governments to promote, including through education, as well as the development of progressive curriculums and text books, understanding, tolerance and friendship among human beings in all their diversity of religion, belief, culture and language, which will address the cultural, social, economic, political and religious sources of intolerance, and to apply a gender perspective while doing so, in order to promote understanding, tolerance, peace and friendly relations among nations and all racial and religious groups, recognizing that education at all levels is one of the principal means to build a culture of peace;

12. Also urges States to take effective measures to prevent and eliminate discrimination on the grounds of religion or belief in the recognition, exercise and enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms in all fields of civil, economic, political, social and cultural life and to make all efforts to enact or rescind legislation, where necessary, to prohibit any such discrimination, and to take all appropriate measures to combat intolerance on the grounds of religion or beliefs;

13. Further urges States to ensure that, in the course of their official duties, members of law enforcement bodies and the military, civil servants, educators and other public officials respect different religions and beliefs and do not discriminate against persons professing other religions or beliefs, and that any necessary and appropriate education or training is provided;

14. Welcomes the efforts of States, relevant entities of the United Nations system and other intergovernmental organizations, civil society, including religion-based and other non-governmental organizations, and the media in developing a culture of peace, and encourages them to continue such efforts, including the promotion of interreligious and intercultural interaction within and among societies through, inter alia, congresses, conferences, seminars, workshops, research work and related processes;

16. Also requests the Secretary-General, in the context of his report to the General Assembly at its sixty-first session under the item entitled "Culture of peace", to include information on the implementation of the present resolution.

Sports for development and peace

International Year of Sport and Physical Education (2005)

In response to resolution 58/5 [YUN 2003, p. 1111], in which the General Assembly proclaimed 2005 as the International Year of Sport and Physical Education, the Secretary-General reported, in August [A/60/217], on activities planned for the observance of the Year and on the status of the drafting of an international convention against doping in sport.

The activities and initiatives to commemorate the International Year highlighted the significant role that sport could play in accelerating progress towards the achievement of the MDGs by 2015 and added an impetus to efforts to better integrate sport into the development agenda. Sport-related activities of Governments and NGOs, undertaken with the United Nations and other partners within the framework of the International Year, were widespread and gaining momentum. Programmes promoting sport for development and peace had received greater attention and resources from Governments, civil society and private sector partners.

In order to capitalize on both the accomplishments and the potential for sport that the International Year was demonstrating, further initiatives were needed to incorporate sport as a useful tool in programmes for development and peace and to include sports-based initiatives in country programmes of the UN system, as appropriate and according to local needs. It was imperative that the programmes and institutional and advocacy initiatives that advanced sport for development and peace during the International Year lead to sustained long-term effects within the United Nations and among Governments, the private sector and civil society partners. Further steps included continuing to work according to the business plan of the United Nations Communications Group Working Group on Sport for Development and Peace and expanding and strengthening UN partnerships with Governments, international sports organizations and the private sector. Specific actions would include furthering efforts to encourage additional Member States to establish national focal points and national committees that would ideally become an integral part of governmental structures to ensure the sustainable continuation of mainstream sporting activities within society.

Crime prevention and criminal justice

Eleventh UN Crime Congress

The Eleventh United Nations Congress on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice, held in Bangkok, Thailand from 18 to 25 April [A/CONF.203/18], adopted the Bangkok Declaration on Synergies and Responses: Strategic Alliances in Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice. The Declaration addressed major crime and criminal justice issues of concern to the international community, such as transnational organized crime, trafficking in human beings, corruption, terrorism, money-laundering, cybercrime, treatment of prisoners, juvenile justice and restorative justice, and called for enhanced international cooperation, including through the implementation of existing international instruments on crime prevention and terrorism and through the provision of technical assistance. The Congress also approved the report of the Credentials Committee.

The Congress was attended by 129 States, observers from UN offices, intergovernmental organizations, NGOs and over 1,100 experts. It was held under the theme "Synergies and responses: strategic alliances in crime prevention and criminal justice".

The Congress considered five major topics, with corresponding working papers prepared by the secretariat on: effective measures to combat transnational organized crime [A/CONF.203/4]; international cooperation against terrorism and links between terrorism and other criminal activities in the context of the work of UNODC [A/CONF.203/5]; corruption: threats and trends in the twenty-first century [A/CONF.203/6]; economic and financial crimes: challenges to sustainable development [A/CONF.203/7]; and making standards work: fifty years of standard-setting in crime prevention and criminal justice [A/CONF.203/8] (see p. 1235).

A report entitled "Fifty years of United Nations congresses on crime prevention and criminal justice: past accomplishments and future prospects" [A/CONF.203/15] was prepared by the secretary-general of the Congress as a background document. According to the report, past UN congresses on crime prevention and criminal justice had managed to develop material that might be regarded as "legislative", in the sense that it set out normative standards applicable to all States. Most of the material was "soft law", contained in resolutions of the relevant UN bodies. Increasingly, however, some of the material was being incorporated into treaty language or finding its way into the corpus of customary international law. Being the product of over a half a century of work, that material could hardly be described as a complete code of recommended practices. The instruments represented areas on which it was possible to gain a wide degree of consensus at a particular time. Their impact on the development of criminal justice, the strengthening of the notion of the rule of law and, more generally, a universal conscience of propriety, liberty and respect for common values was unquestionable. However, much work remained to be done and more challenges were emerging daily, such as new forms of economic crime or cybercrime.

The Congress also had before it a report on the state of crime and criminal justice worldwide [A/CONF.203/3], prepared by the Secretary-General in accordance with General Assembly resolution 59/151 [YUN 2004, p. 1108]. A more elaborate draft study on trends in crime and justice, carried out jointly by the United Nations Interregional Crime and Justice Research Institute and UNODC, was made available to the Congress for comment.

In accordance with Assembly resolution 59/151, a high-level segment of the Congress was held from 23 to 25 April. The government ministers and other high-level government officials who participated in the high-level segment highlighted the broad range of issues on the agenda of the Congress and the many changes that had taken place since the Tenth Congress, held in Vienna in April 2000 [YUN 2000, p. 1040]. It was noted that terrorism, weapons of mass destruction and organized crime had become global threats. The Congress offered the international community a unique opportunity to exchange experiences and views on how to deal with those new challenges, especially in view of their interconnected nature and their serious impact on security, stability and development, as reflected in the report of the High-level Panel on Threats, Challenges and Change entitled "A more secure world: our shared responsibility" [YUN 2004, p. 54], and the report of the Secretary-General entitled "In larger freedom: towards development, security and human rights for all" (see p. 67).

The Eleventh Congress elected Suwat Liptapanlop (Thailand) as its President.

The Secretary-General, in a statement read by the secretary-general of the Congress at the opening of the Eleventh Congress, said that organized crime was a leading threat to international peace and security and that the UN congresses on crime prevention and criminal justice should serve as a reminder of how much more needed to be done to tackle that threat. He noted the progress made in building a framework of international standards and norms for the fight against organized crime and terrorism, though he emphasized that a global strategy for that fight had to include the universal ratification and implementation of the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime and the Protocols thereto [YUN 2000, p. 1048], the United Nations Convention against Corruption [YUN 2003, p. 1127], and universal counter-terrorism instruments.

The Secretary-General submitted to the Assembly, in July, the report on the Eleventh Congress [A/60/172], highlighting the main features of the Congress, including the high-level segment, the discussions on the substantive items on its agenda and the outcome of the workshops held within the framework of the Congress.

On 16 December, the Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's report on the Eleventh Congress (decision 60/536).

Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice

The Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice, at its fourteenth session (Vienna, 23-27 May) [E/2005/30], considered the unedited report of the Eleventh Congress and a May note by the Secretariat [E/CN.15/2005/5] containing the Bangkok Declaration. The note recalled that the General Assembly, in resolution 59/151, had requested the Commission to give priority in 2005 to the conclusions and recommendations of the Eleventh Congress, with a view to recommending, through the Economic and Social Council, follow-up by the Assembly at its sixtieth (2005) session.

Following deliberations, the Commission recommended to the Council 6 draft resolutions for adoption by the Assembly and 4 draft resolutions and 3 draft decisions for adoption by the Council. The draft resolutions for adoption by the Assembly contained in Chapter I, Section A of the report related to the preparations for the Eleventh Congress, a bilateral agreement on the sharing of confiscated proceeds of crime or property, action against transnational organized crime, corruption and strengthening of international cooperation in the implementation of universal conventions, and protocols related to terrorism within the framework of UNODC activities. The draft resolutions and decisions for adoption by the Council related to witness protection, child victims, strengthening the rule of law and crime reporting, capital punishment and the holding of a roundtable on Africa. (see specific headings below.)

A thematic discussion was held on the conclusions and recommendations of the Eleventh Congress. The Commission also considered plans of action for the implementation of the Vienna Declaration on Crime and Justice (see p. 1211), strategic management and programme questions, and the provisional agenda for its fifteenth (2006) session.

On 22 July, the Council decided not to recommend for adoption by the Assembly the draft resolutions contained in chapter I, section A of the report of the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice on its fourteenth session (decision 2005/246).

It took note of the Commission's report on its fourteenth session and approved the provisional agenda and documentation for the fifteenth session (decision 2005/249).

By a 19 December note [E/CN.15/2006/6], the Secretary-General transmitted to the Commission the report of the Board of Trustees of the United Nations Interregional Crime and Justice Research Institute. The Board, which held its fifteenth session (Turin, Italy, 17-18 November), reviewed and evaluated the Institute's 2005 activities and considered the 2006-2007 work programme and related budget proposals.

Strategic management and programme questions

At its fourteenth session, the Commission reviewed its strategic management and programme questions. It considered a March report [E/CN.15/2005/17] by the Secretary-General, submitted in response to General Assembly resolution 59/152 [YUN 2004, p. 1107], on assistance to least developed countries to ensure their participation in the sessions of the Commission and of States parties. The report stated that the review process of the implementation of crime prevention instruments at the conferences of States parties stood to benefit from the participation of all States parties to the instruments. By participating in the meetings of the Commission and the conferences, least developed countries would be able to express their concerns and also obtain information and knowledge to help them develop capacities for crime prevention and criminal justice.

In response to Economic and Social Council resolution 2003/24 [YUN 2003, p. 1123], the UNODC Executive Director presented a report [E/CN.15/2005/18] entitled "Work of the Centre for International Crime Prevention, including the management of the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Fund". The three intersessional meetings of the Commission, which were held in March 2005, discussed the status of preparations, as well as organizational matters for the Eleventh United Nations Congress on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice and finalized the provisional agenda, documentation and arrangements for the fourteenth session of the Commission.

On the area of management, initiatives to maintain and strengthen dialogue with Member States continued, especially in the context of UNODC's programme management reforms. In addition, the Executive Director and senior staff met frequently with the chairmen of regional groups and representatives of Member States to update them on latest developments.

As at 15 March, total contributions and pledges to the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Fund from January 2004 to 2005 totalled $19,135,306. By June, the amount had increased to $27,825,470, or 104 per cent over the previous year. Of those contributions, $26,174,054 (or more than 94 per cent) were earmarked for specific projects.

Follow-up to Vienna Declaration on Crime and Justice

The Secretary-General, in response to General Assembly resolution 59/151 [YUN 2004, p.1108], submitted an April report [E/CN.15/2005/12] on the follow-up to the 2002 plans of action for the implementation of the Vienna Declaration on Crime and Justice: Meeting the challenges of the twenty-first century [YUN 2002, p. 1099]. The Vienna Declaration was adopted by the Assembly in December 2000 [YUN 2000, p. 1091]. The report highlighted the measures adopted by 22 Member States, 7 intergovernmental and 3 non-governmental organizations on the formulation of legislative policies and programmes in crime prevention and criminal justice at the national and international levels. The States adopted measures to address the problem of transnational organized crime, corruption, trafficking, smuggling of migrants, illicit manufacturing of firearms, money-laundering, terrorism, crime prevention, prison overcrowding, witnesses and victims of crime, high-technology and computer-related crime, juvenile justice, special needs of women in the criminal justice system, standards and norms, and restorative justice. Intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations affirmed the need for securing political, social and economic fairness in order to address the causes of criminality.

Crime prevention programme

At its fourteenth session, the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice considered the UNODC Executive Director's report entitled "Development, security and justice for all" [E/CN.7/2005/6-E/CN.15/2005/2], and examined the Office's 2004 strategy to counter problems of organized crime and corruption, drug abuse, trafficking and terrorism. It highlighted UNODC's work in peace and security, poverty eradication, and the rule of law and good governance. UNODC assisted States in complying with international conventions on international drug control, organized crime, corruption and terrorism, through the provision of legal and technical assistance and law enforcement support in the context of its Global Programme against Corruption, Global Programme against Money Laundering and Global Programme against Terrorism. Special emphasis was placed on HIV/AIDS prevention in the context of drug abuse.

UNODC advised Governments in enhancing their capacity to administer criminal law. In Afghanistan, legal assistance activities aimed at supporting the Afghan authorities in implementing a new drug control law and strengthening the drug control machinery were launched. In addition, UNODC helped major seaports in Africa, Asia and Latin America by establishing a container programme aimed at disrupting the flow of illicit commodities. In law enforcement, UNODC trained judges, magistrates, prosecutors and investigators from Eastern and Southern Africa on drug cases. It also supported improvements in the law enforcement capacity at points of entry in several countries in Eastern and Southern Africa, aimed at reducing the flow of drugs and other contraband, including precious metals, endangered species and stolen vehicles trafficked by organized crime syndicates.

The Commission also considered the Secretary-General's report [E/CN.15/2005/15] on action taken to promote effective crime prevention, submitted in response to Economic and Social Council resolution 2002/13 [YUN 2002, p. 1125]. The report stated that capacity in crime prevention was a renewable and sustainable resource that could flourish when community participation and democratic values were promoted. Crime prevention had to be a well-targeted technical cooperation activity that facilitated knowledge-based crime reduction. Towards that end, the Commission could invite Member States, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and the institutes of the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme network to apply the Guidelines for the Prevention of Crime and to support the development of the UNODC technical assistance programme in sustainable crime prevention, including pilot intervention projects for the generation and dissemination of knowledge.

Annex

Bangkok Declaration on Synergies and Responses: Strategic Alliances in Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice

We, the States Members of the United Nations,

Having assembled at the Eleventh United Nations Congress on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice, held in Bangkok from 18 to 25 April 2005, to decide to take more effective concerted action, in a spirit of cooperation, to combat crime and seek justice,

Convinced that the United Nations congresses on crime prevention and criminal justice, which constitute a major intergovernmental forum, have contributed to national policies and practices by facilitating the exchange of views and experience, mobilizing public opinion and recommending policy options at the national, regional and international levels, thus making a significant contribution to progress and the promotion of international cooperation in crime prevention and criminal justice,

Recalling the work of the ten previous United Nations congresses,

Reaffirming the responsibility vested in the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme to work, together with Member States and regional and international organizations, in the fields of crime prevention and criminal justice,

Greatly concerned by the expansion and dimensions of transnational organized crime, including illicit drug trafficking, money-laundering, trafficking in persons, smuggling of migrants, illegal arms trafficking and terrorism, and any existing links among them, and by the increasing sophistication and diversification of the activities of organized criminal groups,

Emphasizing that enhancing dialogue among civilizations, promoting tolerance, preventing the indiscriminate targeting of different religions and cultures and addressing development issues and unresolved conflicts will contribute to international cooperation, which is among the most important elements to combat terrorism in all its forms and manifestations, and reaffirming that no terrorist act can be justified in any circumstance,

Reaffirming that States must ensure that any measures taken to combat terrorism comply with all of their obligations under international law and that they should adopt such measures in conformity with the Charter of the United Nations and international law, in particular international human rights, refugee and humanitarian law,

Alarmed by the rapid growth, geographical extent and effects of new economic and financial crimes, which have emerged as significant threats to national economies and the international financial system,

Highlighting the need for an integrated and systemic approach to combating corruption and money-laundering, within existing frameworks and instruments, in particular those under the aegis of the United Nations, since those crimes can be conducive to the perpetration of other criminal activities,

Noting with appreciation the work of the regional preparatory meetings for the Eleventh United Nations Congress on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice,

Declare as follows:

1. We proclaim our political will and commitment to achieve the aspirations and objectives as set out in the present Declaration.

2. We reaffirm our continued support for and commitment to the United Nations and to the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme, especially the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice and the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime, the United Nations Interregional Crime and Justice Research Institute and the institutes of the Programme network, and resolve to strengthen the Programme further through sustained funding, as appropriate.

3. In a spirit of common and shared responsibility, we reaffirm our readiness to seek to improve international cooperation in the fight against crime and terrorism, at the multilateral, regional and bilateral levels, in areas including, among others, extradition and mutual legal assistance. We seek to ensure our national capacity and, where appropriate, the coherence of our international capacity, through the United Nations and other relevant global and regional organizations, to engage in international cooperation, in particular in the prevention, investigation, prosecution and adjudication of transnational organized crime and terrorism and in the discovery of any existing links among them.

4. We welcome the entry into force of the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime and two of its Protocols. We call upon all States that have not yet done so to seek to ratify or accede to and implement the provisions of that Convention and its Protocols, as well as the provisions of the United Nations Convention against Corruption and the international instruments against terrorism. In implementing the provisions of those instruments, we commit ourselves to full compliance with our obligations under international law, in particular international human rights, refugee and humanitarian law. We support every effort to facilitate the implementation of those instruments.

5. We call upon donor States and financial institutions to continue to make adequate voluntary contributions on a regular basis for the provision of technical assistance to developing countries and to countries with economies in transition, in order to help build their capacity to prevent and tackle crime in all its forms and apply the United Nations standards and norms in crime prevention and criminal justice and, in particular, to facilitate their becoming parties to and implementing the international instruments against terrorism and the relevant international instruments against crime, such as the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime and the Protocols thereto, the United Nations Convention against Corruption and the international drug control conventions.

6. We support a more integrated approach within the United Nations in relation to the provision of assistance for building capacity in crime prevention and criminal justice, and in cooperation in criminal matters of a transnational character, as a contribution to the establishment and strengthening of the rule of law.

7. We seek to improve our responses to crime and terrorism nationally and internationally, inter alia, by collecting and sharing information on crime and terrorism and on effective countermeasures, in accordance with national legislation. We welcome the important work done by the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime and the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme network in the area of trends in crime and justice.

8. We are convinced that upholding the rule of law and good governance and proper management of public affairs and public property at the local, national and international levels are prerequisites for creating and sustaining an environment for successfully preventing and combating crime. We are committed to the development and maintenance of fair and efficient criminal justice institutions, including the humane treatment of all those in pretrial and correctional facilities, in accordance with applicable international standards.

9. We recognize the role of individuals and groups outside the public sector, such as civil society, non-governmental organizations and community-based organizations, in contributing to the prevention of and the fight against crime and terrorism. We encourage the adoption of measures to strengthen this role within the rule of law.

10. We recognize that comprehensive and effective crime prevention strategies can significantly reduce crime and victimization. We urge that such strategies address the root causes and risk factors of crime and victimization and that they be further developed and implemented at the local, national and international levels, taking into account, inter alia, the Guidelines for the Prevention of Crime.

11. We note that countries emerging from conflict are particularly vulnerable to crime, in particular organized crime and corruption, and therefore recommend that Member States, regional organizations and international entities such as the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime, in coordination with the Department of Peacekeeping Operations of the Secretariat and other relevant entities, provide more effective responses to these problems, in order to re-establish, strengthen or sustain the rule of law and deliver justice in post-conflict situations.

12. With regard to the increased involvement of organized criminal groups in the theft of and trafficking in cultural property and illicit trafficking in protected species of wild flora and fauna, we recognize the importance of combating these forms of crime and, bearing in mind the relevant international legal instruments, such as the Convention on the Means of Prohibiting and Preventing the Illicit Import, Export and Transfer of Ownership of Cultural Property, the Convention on International Trade in Endangered Species of Wild Fauna and Flora and the Convention on Biological Diversity, we call upon Member States to take effective measures to strengthen international cooperation.

13. We note with concern the rise in kidnapping and trafficking in persons, which constitute serious, profitable and inhumane forms of organized crime, often committed with the objective of funding criminal organizations and, in some cases, terrorist activities, and hence recommend that measures be devised to combat these crimes and that attention be given to the creation of practical mechanisms for countering them. We recognize the need to implement measures intended to provide adequate assistance and protection to victims of kidnapping and trafficking in persons and their families.

14. Mindful of General Assembly resolution 59/156 of 20 December 2004 on preventing, combating and punishing trafficking in human organs, we note the serious concerns raised about the illicit removal of and trafficking in human organs and will examine with interest the report of the Secretary-General requested in that resolution.

15. We reaffirm the fundamental importance of the implementation of existing instruments and the further development of national measures and international cooperation in relation to criminal matters, such as consideration of strengthening and augmenting measures, in particular against cybercrime, money-laundering and trafficking in cultural property, as well as extradition, mutual legal assistance and the confiscation, recovery and return of proceeds of crime.

16. We note that, in the current period of globalization, information technology and the rapid development of new telecommunication and computer network systems have been accompanied by the abuse of those technologies for criminal purposes. We therefore welcome efforts to enhance and supplement existing cooperation to prevent, investigate and prosecute high-technology and computer-related crime, including through the development of partnerships with the private sector. We recognize the important contribution of the United Nations to regional and other international forums in the fight against cybercrime and invite the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice, taking into account that experience, to examine the feasibility of providing further assistance in that area under the aegis of the United Nations, in partnership with other similarly focused organizations.

17. We recognize the importance of giving special attention to the need to protect witnesses and victims of crime and terrorism, and we commit ourselves to strengthening, where needed, the legal and financial framework for providing support to such victims, taking into account, inter alia, the Declaration of Basic Principles of Justice for Victims of Crime and Abuse of Power.

18. We call upon Member States to take steps, in accordance with their domestic laws, to promote access to justice, to consider the provision of legal aid to those who need it and to enable the effective assertion of their rights in the criminal justice system.

19. We note with concern the problem of trafficking in illicit drugs and the serious socio-economic consequences it entails, and therefore call for the strengthening of international cooperation in combating that form of organized crime.

20. We will strengthen international cooperation in order to create an environment that is conducive to the fight against crime, including by promoting growth and sustainable development and eradicating poverty and unemployment by means of effective and balanced development strategies and crime prevention policies.

21. We call upon States that have not yet done so to become parties to and implement the universal instruments against terrorism. In order to enhance the capacity of States to become parties to and implement those instruments and to comply with the relevant Security Council resolutions against terrorism, we express our support for the continuing efforts of the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime, within its mandate and in coordination with the Counter-Terrorism Committee and the Counter-Terrorism Committee Executive Directorate of the Security Council, to assist States in their efforts to ratify and implement those instruments, through the provision of technical assistance upon request. This might include assistance to criminal justice systems to facilitate the effective implementation of those instruments.

22. We express the hope that the ongoing negotiation of the draft comprehensive convention on international terrorism will be concluded as soon as possible. In this context, we recognize that arriving at a possible definition of terrorism is one of the key issues to be resolved. We call upon Member States to consider signing and ratifying the International Convention for the Suppression of Acts of Nuclear Terrorism.

23. We are convinced that the expeditious entry into force and subsequent implementation of the United Nations Convention against Corruption are central to the efforts made at the international level to fight corruption and therefore accord high priority to supporting efforts to that end and call upon all States that have not yet done so to seek to sign, ratify or accede to the Convention.

24. We are also convinced that the proper management of public affairs and public property and the rule of law are essential to the prevention and control of corruption, including, inter alia, through effective measures for its investigation and prosecution. Furthermore, we recognize that, in order to curb corruption, it is necessary to promote a culture of integrity and accountability in both the public and the private sector.

25. We are convinced that asset recovery is one of the essential components of the United Nations Convention against Corruption and, for that reason, we emphasize the need to adopt measures to facilitate asset recovery that are consistent with the principles of that Convention.

26. We are conscious of the challenge of investigating and prosecuting complex cases involving economic and financial crimes, including money-laundering. We call upon Member States to strengthen policies, measures and institutions for national action and international cooperation in the prevention, investigation and prosecution of economic and financial crimes, including money-laundering, and such crimes conducted by means of, or facilitated by, information technologies, in particular in connection with the financing of terrorism and trafficking in illicit drugs.

27. We are conscious of the crucial importance of tackling document and identity fraud in order to curb organized crime and terrorism. We seek to improve international cooperation, including through technical assistance, to combat document and identity fraud, in particular the fraudulent use of travel documents, through improved security measures, and encourage the adoption of appropriate national legislation.

28. We recommend that voluntary contributions and appropriate technical assistance be made available to developing countries to strengthen their capacity in order to support their efforts to fight effectively economic and financial crimes.

29. As appropriate, we endeavour to use and apply the United Nations standards and norms in our national programmes for crime prevention and criminal justice reform and to undertake, as needed, efforts to ensure their wider dissemination. We endeavour to facilitate appropriate training for law enforcement officials, including prison officials, prosecutors, the judiciary and other relevant professional groups, taking into account those norms and standards and best practices at the international level.

30. We recommend that the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice give consideration to reviewing the adequacy of standards and norms in relation to prison management and prisoners.

31. We note with concern that the physical and social conditions associated with imprisonment may facilitate the spread of HIV/AIDS in pretrial and correctional facilities and thus in society, thereby presenting a critical prison management problem; we call upon States to develop and adopt measures and guidelines, where appropriate and in accordance with national legislation, to ensure that the particular problems of HIV/AIDS are adequately addressed in such facilities.

32. To promote the interests of victims and the rehabilitation of offenders, we recognize the importance of further developing restorative justice policies, procedures and programmes that include alternatives to prosecution, thereby avoiding possible adverse effects of imprisonment, helping to decrease the caseload of criminal courts and promoting the incorporation of restorative justice approaches into criminal justice systems, as appropriate.

33. We affirm our determination to pay particular attention to juvenile justice. We will consider ways to ensure the provision of services to children who are victims of crime and children in conflict with the law, in particular those deprived of their liberty, and to ensure that those services take into account their gender, social circumstances and developmental needs and the relevant United Nations standards and norms, as appropriate.

34. We stress the need to consider measures to prevent the expansion of urban crime, including by improving international cooperation and capacity-building for law enforcement and the judiciary in that area and by promoting the involvement of local authorities and civil society.

35. We express our profound gratitude to the people and the Government of Thailand for their warm and generous hospitality towards the participants and for the excellent facilities provided for the Eleventh Congress.

The Round Table for Africa was held in Nigeria from 5 to 6 September. The programme of action endorsed at the Round Table charted a five-year plan to strengthen the rule of law on the continent. Model agreement on disposal of confiscated proceeds of crime

Pursuant to Economic and Social Council resolution 2004/24 [YUN 2004, p. 1119], the Secretary-General submitted a February report [E/CN.15/2005/7] on the establishment of an intergovernmental expert group to prepare a draft model bilateral agreement on disposal of confiscated proceeds of crime covered by the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime and the United Nations Convention against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances of 1988 [YUN 1988, p. 690]. The expert group discussed how the confiscation of proceeds of crime or property and their disposal were regulated in their respective countries. The group unanimously agreed on the text of the draft model bilateral agreement as contained in the annex to the report and decided to submit it to the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice. The Commission, at its fourteenth session (see p. 1210) recommended to the Economic and Social Council for approval a revised draft resolution for adoption by the General Assembly. However, the Council decided not to recommend the draft resolution for adoption by the Assembly. The Council adopted a resolution on the model bilateral agreement.

On 22 July [meeting 36], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice [E/2005/30], adopted resolution 2005/14 without vote [agenda item 14 (c)].

Model bilateral agreement on the sharing of confiscated proceeds of crime or property covered by the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime and the United Nations Convention against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances of 1988

Recalling its resolution 2004/24 of 21 July 2004,

Recalling also the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime and the United Nations Convention against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances of 1988,

Convinced that a model bilateral agreement on sharing confiscated proceeds of crime or property could be a useful tool to facilitate greater international cooperation in that area, as one of the principal objectives of the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime and the United Nations Convention against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances of 1988,

Noting the importance of the reference in article 3 of the Model Bilateral Agreement on the Sharing of Confiscated Proceeds of Crime or Property to article 14, paragraph 2, of the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime, in which it is stated that States parties shall, to the extent permitted by domestic law, give priority consideration to returning the confiscated proceeds of crime or property to the requesting State party so that it can give compensation to the victims of the crime or return such proceeds of crime or property to their legitimate owners,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the intergovernmental expert group to prepare a draft model bilateral agreement on disposal of confiscated proceeds of crime covered by the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime and the United Nations Convention against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances of 1988 for having prepared the draft model bilateral agreement on the sharing of confiscated proceeds of crime or property;

2. Adopts the Model Bilateral Agreement on the Sharing of Confiscated Proceeds of Crime or Property, annexed to the present resolution, as a useful model that could be of assistance to States interested in negotiating and concluding bilateral agreements to facilitate the sharing of proceeds of crime;

3. Stresses that the Model Bilateral Agreement will not prejudice the principles set forth in the United Nations Convention against Corruption or the development, at a later stage, of any appropriate mechanism to facilitate the implementation of that Convention;

4. Invites Member States, in concluding agreements with other States in the area of sharing proceeds of crime pursuant to article 14 of the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime and article 5 of the United Nations Convention against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances of 1988 or in revising, where necessary or useful, existing bilateral agreements in that area, to take into account the Model Bilateral Agreement;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to bring to the attention of Member States the present resolution, together with the Model Bilateral Agreement;

6. Encourages Member States to inform the Secretary-General voluntarily of efforts undertaken in the area of sharing confiscated proceeds of crime or property, in particular the establishment of agreements in that area;

7. Requests the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime to convey to the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice information regarding efforts undertaken by Member States in the area of sharing confiscated proceeds of crime or property;

8. Also requests the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime to provide to Member States, at their request, technical assistance and advice, within available extrabudgetary resources, not excluding the use of existing resources from the regular budget of the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime, to give effect to the arrangements to be made pursuant to agreements to be negotiated on the basis of the Model Bilateral Agreement.

Deeply concerned about the impact of corruption on the political, social and economic stability and development of societies,

Bearing in mind that the prevention and combating of corruption is a common and shared responsibility of the international community, necessitating cooperation at the bilateral and multilateral levels,

Reaffirming its support and commitment to the goals of the United Nations in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice, in particular the objectives set forth in the Vienna Declaration on Crime and

Justice: Meeting the Challenges of the Twenty-first Century,

On 16 December, the Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's report (decision 60/536).

On 22 July [meeting 36], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice [E/2005/30], adopted resolution 2005/16 without vote [agenda item 14 (c)].

Action against transnational organized crime: protection of witnesses

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 55/25 of 15 November 2000, by which it adopted the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime, the Protocol to Prevent, Suppress and Punish Trafficking in Persons, Especially Women and Children, supplementing the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime, and the Protocol against the Smuggling of Migrants by Land, Sea and Air, supplementing the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime,

Concerned about the negative political, economic and social implications of the activities of organized criminal groups and the possible expansion of such activities,

Convinced of the need to strengthen local, regional and international cooperation in the effective prevention and combating of such activities wherever they occur,

Determined to facilitate the testimony of witnesses in order to ensure prosecution of those who participate in or profit from transnational organized crime, and thus to prevent the provision of safe havens for such persons,

Reaffirming the growing recognition of the key role of witnesses in criminal proceedings, especially in cases involving organized crime, and the need to encourage their collaboration and to provide them with effective protection from retaliation or intimidation,

Terrorism

In April [E/CN.15/2005/13], the Secretary-General, in response to General Assembly resolution 59/153 [YUN 2004, p. 1125], submitted a report on strengthening international cooperation and technical assistance in promoting the implementation of the universal conventions and protocols related to terrorism within the framework of UNODC activities. The report reviewed the technical assistance activities of the Terrorism Prevention Branch of UNODC Division for Treaty Affairs and presented guidelines and proposals concerning the future approach to technical assistance for consideration by the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice. The report also provided data on the status of ratification of the conventions and protocols related to terrorism and on voluntary contributions received by the Branch.

On 10 March, the Secretary-General presented to the International Summit on Democracy, Terrorism and Security (Madrid, Spain, 8-11 March) a report entitled "A Global Strategy for Fighting Terrorism", which included an examination of the role of the United Nations in implementing the Strategy. The Strategy was devised to complement the work of the UNODC Terrorism Prevention Branch in providing assistance to States in reviewing and revising national legislation against terrorism. UNODC developed a variety of technical tools, based on best practices identified by international experts that were used in training judicial and prosecutorial personnel in the proper implementation of the universal conventions and protocols related to terrorism. In international cooperation, UNODC continued to work on a series of specialized manuals and model laws on extradition and mutual legal assistance intended to allow States to make use of the guidance provided, in order to prepare bilateral agreements and to draft relevant legislation against terrorism.

In March [A/59/754-S/2005/197], Croatia transmitted to the Secretary-General the Zagreb Declaration on International Cooperation on Counter-Terrorism, Corruption and the Fight against Transnational Organized Crime, adopted at the expert workshop on "International cooperation on counter-terrorism, corruption and fight against transnational organized crime" (Zagreb, Croatia, 7-9 March).

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 22 July [meeting 36], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice [E/2005/30], adopted resolution 2005/19 without vote [agenda item 14 (c)].

Strengthening international cooperation and technical assistance in promoting the implementation of the universal conventions and protocols related to terrorism within the framework of the activities of the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling all General Assembly and Security Council resolutions on terrorism,

Welcoming the adoption and the forthcoming opening for signature of the International Convention for the Suppression of Acts of Nuclear Terrorism,

Taking note with appreciation of the Bangkok Declaration on Synergies and Responses: Strategic Alliances in Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice, adopted at the high-level segment of the Eleventh United Nations Congress on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice, held in Bangkok from 18 to 25 April 2005, which expresses the hope that the ongoing negotiation of the draft comprehensive convention on international terrorism will be concluded as soon as possible and recognizes that arriving at a possible definition of terrorism is one of the key issues to be resolved,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 59/46 of 2 December 2004, in which it reiterated that criminal acts intended or calculated to provoke a state of terror in the general public, a group of persons or particular persons for political purposes are in any circumstances unjustifiable, whatever the considerations of a political, philosophical, ideological, racial, ethnic, religious or other nature that may be invoked to justify them,

Stressing the need for Member States to ensure that any measures taken to combat terrorism comply with all their obligations under international law, in particular the Charter of the United Nations and international human rights, refugee and humanitarian law,

Mindful of the essential need to strengthen international, regional and subregional cooperation to effectively prevent and suppress terrorism in all its forms and manifestations, in particular by enhancing the national capacity of States,

Recalling Security Council resolution 1566(2004) of 8 October 2004, and reaffirming the obligation of States to cooperate fully in the fight against terrorism, especially with those States where or against whose citizens terrorist acts are committed, in accordance with their obligations under international law, in order to find, deny safe haven to and bring to justice, on the basis of the principle to extradite or prosecute, any person who supports, facilitates, participates or attempts to participate in the financing, planning, preparation or commission of terrorist acts or provides safe havens,

Mindful that acts, methods and practices of terrorism are contrary to the purposes and principles of the United Nations,

Reaffirming its unequivocal condemnation of terrorism in all its forms and manifestations, wherever and by whomsoever committed,

Noting that the Bangkok Declaration emphasizes that enhancing dialogue among civilizations, promoting tolerance, preventing the indiscriminate targeting of different religions and cultures and addressing development issues and unresolved conflicts will contribute to international cooperation, which is among the most important elements to combat terrorism in all its forms and manifestations, and reaffirming that no terrorist act can be justified in any circumstances,

Deeply concerned that acts of terrorism continue to be perpetrated, endangering the lives and well-being of individuals worldwide, and expressing its deepest sympathy and condolences to the victims of terrorist attacks and their families,

Noting the establishment of a working group pursuant to Security Council resolution 1566(2004),

Recalling General Assembly resolution 59/159 of 20 December 2004, in which it, inter alia, reaffirmed the importance of the work of the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime in the fulfilment of its mandate in crime prevention and criminal justice, including to contribute to preventing and combating terrorism, and resolution 59/153 of 20 December 2004, in which it requested the Office to intensify its efforts to provide technical assistance, upon request, in preventing and combating terrorism, by facilitating the implementation of the universal conventions and protocols related to terrorism, including training of judicial and prosecutorial personnel, working in coordination with the Counter-Terrorism Committee and the Counter-Terrorism Committee Executive Directorate,

Mindful of General Assembly resolution 59/46 of 2 December 2004, in which it welcomed the continuing efforts of the Terrorism Prevention Branch of the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime to assist States to become parties to and to work towards implementing the relevant international conventions and protocols related to terrorism,

Recalling that the Security Council, in its resolution 1535(2004) of 26 March 2004, recognized the need for the Counter-Terrorism Committee, where appropriate, to visit States, with the consent of the States concerned, and to engage in a detailed discussion to monitor the implementation of Council resolution 1373(2001) of 28 September 2001, and that such visits should be conducted, when appropriate, in close cooperation with relevant international, regional and subregional organizations and other United Nations bodies, including the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime, in particular with its Terrorism Prevention Branch, taking special care of the assistance that might be available to address the needs of States,

Welcoming the initiative by the Secretary-General to establish a task force in his Office for the coordination of the counter-terrorism efforts of the Secretariat,

Welcoming also the adoption of Commission on Human Rights resolution 2005/80 of 21 April 2005, especially the appointment, for a period of three years, of a special rapporteur on the promotion and protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms while countering terrorism,

1. Commends the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime for its contributions towards preventing and combating terrorism through the provision of technical assistance to States, upon request, in close consultation with the Counter-Terrorism Committee and the Counter-Terrorism Committee Executive Directorate, for the implementation of Security Council resolution 1373(2001), in particular for promotion of the ratification of, accession to and implementation of the universal conventions and protocols related to terrorism, as well as for its continuing close cooperation with international, regional and subregional organizations, and requests the Office to continue such work with international organizations, in particular the specialized agencies and other relevant entities of the United Nations system;

2. Welcomes the holding of regional and subregional workshops in San José, Tashkent, Port Louis, Praia and Lisbon to follow up on technical assistance activities conducted by the Terrorism Prevention Branch of the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime in 2003 and 2004 by further familiarizing national experts and criminal justice officials with the requirements of Security Council resolution 1373(2001) and the requirements for becoming parties to and implementing the universal conventions and protocols related to terrorism and international cooperation agreements, and emphasizes the need for close cooperation, in that context, between the Terrorism Prevention Branch and the Counter-Terrorism Committee, the Counter-Terrorism Committee Executive Directorate and the Office of Legal Affairs of the Secretariat, as appropriate;

3. Welcomes also the holding of a subregional workshop in Zagreb from 7 to 9 March 2005, which resulted in the Zagreb Declaration on International Cooperation on Counter-Terrorism, Corruption and the Fight against Transnational Organized Crime, and encourages the Terrorism Prevention Branch, in coordination with the Counter-Terrorism Committee and within available extrabudgetary resources, not excluding the use of existing resources from the regular budget of the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime, to continue to ensure proper follow-up to its technical assistance activities, in cases where such follow-up is requested by Member States;

4. Calls upon Member States that have not yet done so to consider becoming parties to, and to implement, the universal conventions and protocols related to terrorism as a matter of urgency and, where appropriate, to request assistance to that end from the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime and relevant international, regional and subregional organizations, in coordination with the Counter-Terrorism Committee;

5. Takes note of the legislative assistance tools developed by the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime, and requests the Office, within available extrabudgetary resources, not excluding the use of existing resources from the regular budget of the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime, to finalize the draft guide for legislative incorporation and implementation of the universal instruments against terrorism and to develop it further to serve as a training tool when providing assistance to States, upon request, in capacity-building for the implementation of the universal instruments related to terrorism;

6. Urges Member States to strengthen, to the greatest extent possible, international cooperation in order to prevent and combat terrorism, including, when necessary, entering into bilateral treaties on extradition and mutual legal assistance within the framework of the relevant Security Council resolutions, as well as the universal conventions and protocols related to terrorism and other relevant United Nations resolutions and in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations and international law, and to ensure adequate training of all relevant personnel in executing international cooperation, and calls upon Member States to request assistance to that end from the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime and relevant international, regional and subregional organizations, when appropriate;

7. Requests the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime, within available extrabudgetary resources, not excluding the use of existing resources from the regular budget of the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime, to intensify its efforts to provide Member States with technical assistance, upon request, to strengthen international cooperation, including in international, national, regional and subregional forums, in preventing and combating terrorism through the facilitation of the implementation of the universal conventions and protocols related to terrorism, in particular through training in the judicial and prosecutorial fields in the proper implementation of the universal conventions and protocols related to terrorism, with particular emphasis on the need to coordinate such work with the Counter-Terrorism Committee and the Counter-Terrorism Committee Executive Directorate;

8. Recognizes the role of fair and effective criminal justice systems within the overall framework of the rule of law as an integral component of any strategy to counter terrorism, and requests the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime, whenever appropriate, to take into account in its technical assistance programme to counter terrorism the elements necessary for building national capacity in order to strengthen criminal justice systems and the rule of law with a view to facilitating the effective implementation of the universal conventions and protocols related to terrorism and relevant Security Council resolutions;

9. Notes the discussions during the Eleventh United Nations Congress on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice, held in Bangkok from 18 to 25 April 2005, on its agenda item entitled "International cooperation against terrorism and links between terrorism and other criminal activities in the context of the work of the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime", and requests the Secretariat to take into account any existing links between terrorism and other forms of crime and to pursue an integrated, comprehensive approach in the delivery of technical assistance, emphasizing the transversal relevance of international cooperation;

10. Urges Member States to consider the early signing and ratifying of the International Convention for the Suppression of Acts of Nuclear Terrorism, and requests the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime, upon request, to promote, in the course of its technical assistance activities, the speedy ratification and full implementation of the Convention;

11. Expresses its appreciation to all Member States that have supported the technical assistance activities of the Terrorism Prevention Branch of the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime, and invites all Member States to consider making voluntary financial contributions, in-kind contributions or both;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its sixty-first session on the implementation of the present resolution.

International commercial fraud

Pursuant to Economic and Social Council resolution 2004/26 [YUN 2004, p. 1123], the Secretary-General reported on the progress of preparation by the Intergovernmental Expert Group of a study on fraud, criminal misuse and falsification of identity. A preliminary meeting of the Intergovernmental Expert Group was held in Vienna on 17 and 18 March. A number of speakers emphasized that fraud was a serious concern for their Governments and echoed the concerns raised in the work of the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law (UNCITRAL), both in the range of frauds being committed and their expansive geographical scope and diversity. Delegates indicated that modern technologies had fuelled the evolution of offences, including the spread of offender expertise, the actual use of technologies by offenders to target victims and the use of technologies to transfer, conceal and launder proceeds. They also discussed the need for integrated public criminal law and private commercial law approaches, in particular in developing preventive measures involving commercial practices.

The Group recommended that the study should be conducted by volunteer experts and Member States and should encompass the full range of fraud offences, as well as offences involving criminal misuse and falsification of identity. The results of the study would be reviewed at a further meeting of the Intergovernmental Expert Group, subject to the availability of extrabudgetary resources.

Combating trafficking in persons

In response to General Assembly resolution 58/137 [YUN 2003, p. 1151], the Secretary-General, in a March report [E/CN.15/2005/8], highlighted steps taken to strengthen international cooperation in preventing and combating trafficking in persons and protecting victims of such trafficking. The report contained an analysis of the replies received from 37 States on the implementation of the resolution. The report also drew on information provided by relevant UN entities and international organizations within the framework of the activities of the United Nations System Chief Executives Board for Coordination on measures taken to curb trafficking in human beings.

The report noted that a considerable number of States had ratified or acceded to the 2000 Protocol to Prevent, Suppress and Punish Trafficking in Persons, Especially Women and Children, supplementing the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime (Trafficking in Persons Protocol) [YUN 2000, p. 1063], many of which had adopted legislation translating their obligations under the Protocol into national law. In addition, regional organizations had followed up with regional instruments and action plans. Nevertheless, in a considerable number of States, implementing legislation was lacking or only certain aspects of the Protocol were being addressed. As more than half of the Member States had not yet ratified the Protocol, the promotion of ratification remained an important issue. The challenge for States parties would be to ensure effective fulfilment of the Protocol obligations at the national level, including the provisions concerning international cooperation.

Although there had been a significant increase in information on trafficking in persons in recent years, such information generally related to individual cases or had been prepared for advocacy purposes. Reliability of data remained a major problem. A lack of a systematic collection of data made it hard to establish the magnitude of trafficking, whether on a national or a global scale. Even with legislation in place, many Governments did not yet have the necessary knowledge or capacity to address trafficking in persons in its multidimensional aspects, in particular as it related to the transnationality of such crimes. Only a limited number of Governments had adopted national action plans, created inter-agency coordination mechanisms or ombudspersons, addressed demand reduction or identified the role of all of the different departments concerned in countering trafficking crimes in a coordinated multidisciplinary way. Only some national services had the expertise and training to investigate and prosecute transnational crimes, including human trafficking, and convictions for such crimes were still rare. There was a strong need for curriculum development, preparation of training tools, training at the national, bilateral and international levels, gathering and sharing of police intelligence and coordination of investigations and prosecutions, including in relation to issues such as asset forfeiture, extradition and mutual legal assistance. In a number of countries, increased awareness of the seriousness of the violations of the human rights of victims of trafficking had led to the creation of victim protection and assistance schemes in line with the requirements of the Trafficking in Persons Protocol. However, most countries still had to establish proper victim protection schemes. Effective responses to trafficking in persons would also need to address the root causes, such as poverty, gender inequalities, unemployment and other socio-economic factors, which were major issues highlighted by a number of respondents. Apart from the need to secure proper funding for initiatives to combat trafficking in persons, the readiness of all actors concerned, countries of origin, transit and destination alike, to cooperate closely among themselves and with all relevant agencies and civil society would be key to countering trafficking in persons more effectively in the future.

UN standards and guidelines

The Eleventh United Nations Congress on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice held a general discussion on a working paper prepared by the UN Secretariat entitled "Making standards work: fifty years of standard-setting in crime prevention and criminal justice" (see p. 1209). There was broad agreement among representatives on the need to continue giving priority to the implementation of standards and norms, both in developing and developed countries. There was also general agreement on the need for innovative approaches in the administration of justice, including the use of alternatives to imprisonment for minor offences, especially by first-time offenders, juvenile offenders and drug abusers, the use of restorative justice, including mediation and conciliation, and the need to take into consideration the rights of victims, in particular those of women and children.

The Committee in charge of reviewing the working paper recommended that the use and application of UN standards and norms in crime prevention and criminal justice should continue to be accorded high priority within the UN system and remain a standing item on the agenda of the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice. In that context, the Congress commended the cluster approach in the assessment of the use and application of standards and norms, in accordance with Economic and Social Council resolution 2003/30 [YUN 2003, p. 1155]. Future reviews of their application should focus on identifying difficulties and problems, as well as best practices to overcome them, with a view to facilitating international cooperation through the sharing of such information and enhancing the impact of technical cooperation activities. In addition, States should ensure that relevant applicable human rights laws were integrated into their criminal justice systems and that the relevant international human rights instruments were consistently applied. States should also consider mechanisms to promote the widest possible application of UN standards and norms, including by coordinating the work of national authorities and agencies involved, as well as promoting the exchange of information between them. Such mechanisms should have the support of relevant non-governmental and civil society organizations. UNODC should publish an updated version of the Compendium of United Nations Standards and Norms in Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice in the six official languages of the Organization and, where possible, translate it into other languages to ensure its widest possible dissemination. UNODC should be provided with adequate resources to enable it to offer technical assistance in criminal justice reform to States, upon request. Considering that remand prisoners constituted the majority of the prison population in many countries and that, because of prison overcrowding, many prisoners were housed in inhumane conditions and often subjected to gross violations of human rights and even to torture and inhuman or degrading treatment, consideration should be given to the standards and norms in relation to prison management and prisoners. The Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice should consider the recommendations contained in the report of the Intergovernmental Expert Group Meeting to Develop Guidelines on Justice in Matters involving Child Victims and Witnesses of Crime (see below), and should give consideration to reviewing the adequacy of standards and norms in relation to prison management and prisoners. Furthermore, since mandatory sentences restricted the discretion of the courts in considering the circumstances of each offender and in applying alternative sanctions, States that had not yet done so should consider enacting legislation that provided for flexibility in sentencing, as well as for the imposition of non-custodial measures.

The Secretary-General submitted to the Commission an April report [E/CN.15/2005/14] on UN standards and norms in crime prevention and criminal justice, in response to Economic and Social Council resolution 2004/28 [YUN 2004, p. 1131]. The report provided an overview of activities undertaken to disseminate UN standards and norms in crime prevention and criminal justice and described advisory services and technical cooperation delivered.

Guidelines on justice for child victims and witnesses

Pursuant to Economic and Social Council resolution 2004/27 [YUN 2004, p. 1132], the Secretary-General submitted to the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice the report of the Intergovernmental Expert Group Meeting to Develop Guidelines on Justice in Matters involving Child Victims and Witnesses of Crime (Vienna, Austria, 15-16 March) [E/CN.15/2005/14/Add.1 & Corr.1]. Annex

Guidelines on Justice in Matters involving Child Victims and Witnesses of Crime

I. Objectives

1. The present Guidelines on Justice for Child Victims and Witnesses of Crime set forth good practice based on the consensus of contemporary knowledge and relevant international and regional norms, standards and principles.

2. The Guidelines should be implemented in accordance with relevant national legislation and judicial procedures as well as take into consideration legal, social, economic, cultural and geographical conditions. However, States should constantly endeavour to overcome practical difficulties in the application of the Guidelines.

3. The Guidelines provide a practical framework to achieve the following objectives:

(a) To assist in the review of national and domestic laws, procedures and practices so that these ensure full respect for the rights of child victims and witnesses of crime and contribute to the implementation of the Convention on the Rights of the Child, by parties to that Convention;

(b) To assist Governments, international organizations, public agencies, non-governmental and community-based organizations and other interested parties in designing and implementing legislation, policy, programmes and practices that address key issues related to child victims and witnesses of crime;

(c) To guide professionals and, where appropriate, volunteers working with child victims and witnesses of crime in their day-to-day practice in the adult and juvenile justice process at the national, regional and international levels, consistent with the Declaration of Basic Principles of Justice for Victims of Crime and Abuse of Power;

(d) To assist and support those caring for children in dealing sensitively with child victims and witnesses of crime.

4. In implementing the Guidelines, each jurisdiction should ensure that adequate training, selection and procedures are put in place to protect and meet the special needs of child victims and witnesses of crime, where the nature of the victimization affects categories of children differently, such as sexual assault of children, especially girls.

5. The Guidelines cover a field in which knowledge and practice are growing and improving. They are neither intended to be exhaustive nor to preclude further development, provided it is in harmony with their underlying objectives and principles.

6. The Guidelines could also be applied to processes in informal and customary systems of justice such as restorative justice and in non-criminal fields of law including, but not limited to, custody, divorce, adoption, child protection, mental health, citizenship, immigration and refugee law.

II. Special considerations

7. The Guidelines were developed:

(a) Cognizant that millions of children throughout the world suffer harm as a result of crime and abuse of power and that the rights of those children have not been adequately recognized and that they may suffer additional hardship when assisting in the justice process;

(b) Recognizing that children are vulnerable and require special protection appropriate to their age, level of maturity and individual special needs;

(c) Recognizing that girls are particularly vulnerable and may face discrimination at all stages of the justice system;

(d) Reaffirming that every effort must be made to prevent victimization of children, including through implementation of the Guidelines for the Prevention of Crime;

(e) Cognizant that children who are victims and witnesses may suffer additional hardship if mistakenly viewed as offenders when they are in fact victims and witnesses;

(f) Recalling that the Convention on the Rights of the Child sets forth requirements and principles to secure effective recognition of the rights of children and that the Declaration of Basic Principles of Justice for Victims of Crime and Abuse of Power sets forth principles to provide victims with the right to information, participation, protection, reparation and assistance;

(g) Recalling international and regional initiatives that implement the principles of the Declaration of Basic Principles of Justice for Victims of Crime and Abuse of Power, including the Handbook on Justice for Victims and the Guide for Policy Makers, both issued by the United Nations Office for Drug Control and Crime Prevention in 1999;

(h) Recognizing the efforts of the International Bureau for Children's Rights in laying the groundwork for the development of guidelines on justice for child victims and witnesses of crime;

(i) Considering that improved responses to child victims and witnesses of crime can make children and their families more willing to disclose instances of victimization and more supportive of the justice process;

(j) Recalling that justice for child victims and witnesses of crime must be assured while safeguarding the rights of accused and convicted offenders;

(k) Bearing in mind the variety of legal systems and traditions, and noting that crime is increasingly transnational in nature and that there is a need to ensure that child victims and witnesses of crime receive equivalent protection in all countries.

III. Principles

8. As stated in international instruments and in particular the Convention on the Rights of the Child as reflected in the work of the Committee on the Rights of the Child, and in order to ensure justice for child victims and witnesses of crime, professionals and others responsible for the well-being of those children must respect the following cross-cutting principles:

(a) Dignity. Every child is a unique and valuable human being and as such his or her individual dignity, special needs, interests and privacy should be respected and protected;

(b) Non-discrimination. Every child has the right to be treated fairly and equally, regardless of his or her or the parent's or legal guardian's race, ethnicity, colour, gender, language, religion, political or other opinion, national, ethnic or social origin, property, disability and birth or other status;

(c) Best interests of the child. While the rights of accused and convicted offenders should be safeguarded, every child has the right to have his or her best interests given primary consideration. This includes the right to protection and to a chance for harmonious development:

(i) Protection: Every child has the right to life and survival and to be shielded from any form of hardship, abuse or neglect, including physical, psychological, mental and emotional abuse and neglect;

(ii) Harmonious development: Every child has the right to a chance for harmonious development and to a standard of living adequate for physical, mental, spiritual, moral and social growth. In the case of a child who has been traumatized, every step should be taken to enable the child to enjoy healthy development;

(d) Right to participation. Every child has, subject to national procedural law, the right to express his or her views, opinions and beliefs freely, in his or her own words, and to contribute especially to the decisions affecting his or her life, including those taken in any judicial processes, and to have those views taken into consideration according to his or her abilities, age, intellectual maturity and evolving capacity.

IV. Definitions

9. Throughout these Guidelines, the following definitions apply:

(a) "Child victims and witnesses" denotes children and adolescents, under the age of 18, who are victims of crime or witnesses to crime regardless of their role in the offence or in the prosecution of the alleged offender or groups of offenders;

(b) "Professionals" refers to persons who, in the context of their work, are in contact with child victims and witnesses of crime or are responsible for addressing the needs of children in the justice system and for whom these Guidelines are applicable. This includes, but is not limited to, the following: child and victim advocates and support persons; child protection service practitioners; child welfare agency staff; prosecutors and, where appropriate, defence lawyers; diplomatic and consular staff; domestic violence programme staff; judges; court staff; law enforcement officials; medical and mental health professionals; and social workers;

(c) "Justice process" encompasses detection of the crime, making of the complaint, investigation, prosecution and trial and post-trial procedures, regardless of whether the case is handled in a national, international or regional criminal justice system for adults or juveniles, or in a customary or informal system of justice;

(d) "Child-sensitive" denotes an approach that balances the child's right to protection and that takes into account the child's individual needs and views.

V. The right to be treated with dignity and compassion

10. Child victims and witnesses should be treated in a caring and sensitive manner throughout the justice process, taking into account their personal situation and immediate needs, age, gender, disability and level of maturity and fully respecting their physical, mental and moral integrity.

11. Every child should be treated as an individual with his or her individual needs, wishes and feelings.

12. Interference in the child's private life should be limited to the minimum needed at the same time as high standards of evidence collection are maintained in order to ensure fair and equitable outcomes of the justice process.

13. In order to avoid further hardship to the child, interviews, examinations and other forms of investigation should be conducted by trained professionals who proceed in a sensitive, respectful and thorough manner.

14. All interactions described in these Guidelines should be conducted in a child-sensitive manner in a suitable environment that accommodates the special needs of the child, according to his or her abilities, age, intellectual maturity and evolving capacity. They should also be conducted in a language that the child uses and understands.

VI. The right to be protected from discrimination

15. Child victims and witnesses should have access to a justice process that protects them from discrimination based on the child's, parent's or legal guardian's race, colour, gender, language, religion, political or other opinion, national, ethnic or social origin, property, disability and birth or other status.

16. The justice process and support services available to child victims and witnesses and their families should be sensitive to the child's age, wishes, understanding, gender, sexual orientation, ethnic, cultural, religious, linguistic and social background, caste, socio-economic condition and immigration or refugee status, as well as to the special needs of the child, including health, abilities and capacities. Professionals should be trained and educated about such differences.

17. In certain cases, special services and protection will need to be instituted to take account of gender and the different nature of specific offences against children, such as sexual assault involving children.

18. Age should not be a barrier to a child's right to participate fully in the justice process. Every child should be treated as a capable witness, subject to examination, and his or her testimony should not be presumed invalid or untrustworthy by reason of the child's age alone as long as his or her age and maturity allow the giving of intelligible and credible testimony, with or without communication aids and other assistance.

VII. The right to be informed

19. Child victims and witnesses, their parents or guardians and legal representatives, from their first contact with the justice process and throughout that process, should be promptly and adequately informed, to the extent feasible and appropriate, of, inter alia:

(a) The availability of health, psychological, social and other relevant services as well as the means of accessing such services along with legal or other advice or representation, compensation and emergency financial support, where applicable;

(b) The procedures for the adult and juvenile criminal justice process, including the role of child victims and witnesses, the importance, timing and manner of testimony, and ways in which "questioning" will be conducted during the investigation and trial;

(c) The existing support mechanisms for the child when making a complaint and participating in the investigation and court proceedings;

(d) The specific places and times of hearings and other relevant events;

(e) The availability of protective measures;

(f) The existing mechanisms for review of decisions affecting child victims and witnesses;

(g) The relevant rights of child victims and witnesses pursuant to the Convention on the Rights of the Child and the Declaration of Basic Principles of Justice for Victims of Crime and Abuse of Power.

20. In addition, child victims, their parents or guardians and legal representatives should be promptly and adequately informed, to the extent feasible and appropriate, of:

(a) The progress and disposition of the specific case, including the apprehension, arrest and custodial status of the accused and any pending changes to that status, the prosecutorial decision and relevant post-trial developments and the outcome of the case;

(b) The existing opportunities to obtain reparation from the offender or from the State through the justice process, through alternative civil proceedings or through other processes.

VIII. The right to be heard and to express views and concerns

21. Professionals should make every effort to enable child victims and witnesses to express their views and concerns related to their involvement in the justice process, including by:

(a) Ensuring that child victims and where appropriate witnesses are consulted on the matters set forth in paragraph 19 above;

(b) Ensuring that child victims and witnesses are enabled to express freely and in their own manner their views and concerns regarding their involvement in the justice process, their concerns regarding safety in relation to the accused, the manner in which they prefer to provide testimony and their feelings about the conclusions of the process;

(c) Giving due regard to the child's views and concerns and, if they are unable to accommodate them, explain the reasons to the child.

IX. The right to effective assistance

22. Child victims and witnesses and, where appropriate, family members should have access to assistance provided by professionals who have received relevant training as set out in paragraphs 40 to 42 below. This may include assistance and support services such as financial, legal, counselling, health, social and educational services, physical and psychological recovery services and other services necessary for the child's reintegration. All such assistance should address the child's needs and enable him or her to participate effectively at all stages of the justice process.

23. In assisting child victims and witnesses, professionals should make every effort to coordinate support so that the child is not subjected to excessive interventions.

24. Child victims and witnesses should receive assistance from support persons, such as child victim/witness specialists, commencing at the initial report and continuing until such services are no longer required.

25. Professionals should develop and implement measures to make it easier for children to testify or give evidence to improve communication and understanding at the pre-trial and trial stages. These measures may include:

(a) Child victim and witness specialists to address the child's special needs;

(b) Support persons, including specialists and appropriate family members, to accompany the child during testimony;

(c) Where appropriate, to appoint guardians to protect the child's legal interests.

X. The right to privacy

26. Child victims and witnesses should have their privacy protected as a matter of primary importance.

27. Information relating to a child's involvement in the justice process should be protected. This can be achieved by maintaining confidentiality and restricting disclosure of information that may lead to identification of a child who is a victim or witness in the justice process.

28. Measures should be taken to protect children from undue exposure to the public by, for example, excluding the public and the media from the courtroom during the child's testimony, where permitted by national law.

XI. The right to be protected from hardship during the justice process

29. Professionals should take measures to prevent hardship during the detection, investigation and prosecution process in order to ensure that the best interests and dignity of child victims and witnesses are respected.

30. Professionals should approach child victims and witnesses with sensitivity, so that they:

(a) Provide support for child victims and witnesses, including accompanying the child throughout his or her involvement in the justice process, when it is in his or her best interests;

(b) Provide certainty about the process, including providing child victims and witnesses with clear expectations as to what to expect in the process, with as much certainty as possible. The child's participation in hearings and trials should be planned ahead of time and every effort should be made to ensure continuity in the relationships between children and the professionals in contact with them throughout the process;

(c) Ensure that trials take place as soon as practical, unless delays are in the child's best interests. Investigation of crimes involving child victims and witnesses should also be expedited and there should be procedures, laws or court rules that provide for cases involving child victims and witnesses to be expedited;

(d) Use child-sensitive procedures, including interview rooms designed for children, interdisciplinary services for child victims integrated in the same location, modified court environments that take child witnesses into consideration, recesses during a child's testimony, hearings scheduled at times of day appropriate to the age and maturity of the child, an appropriate notification system to ensure the child goes to court only when necessary and other appropriate measures to facilitate the child's testimony.

31. Professionals should also implement measures:

(a) To limit the number of interviews: special procedures for collection of evidence from child victims and witnesses should be implemented in order to reduce the number of interviews, statements, hearings and, specifically, unnecessary contact with the justice process, such as through use of video recording;

(b) To ensure that child victims and witnesses are protected, if compatible with the legal system and with due respect for the rights of the defence, from being cross-examined by the alleged perpetrator: as necessary, child victims and witnesses should be interviewed, and examined in court, out of sight of the alleged perpetrator, and separate courthouse waiting rooms and private interview areas should be provided;

(c) To ensure that child victims and witnesses are questioned in a child-sensitive manner and allow for the exercise of supervision by judges, facilitate testimony and reduce potential intimidation, for example by using testimonial aids or appointing psychological experts.

XII. The right to safety

32. Where the safety of a child victim or witness may be at risk, appropriate measures should be taken to require the reporting of those safety risks to appropriate authorities and to protect the child from such risk before, during and after the justice process.

33. Professionals who come into contact with children should be required to notify appropriate authorities if they suspect that a child victim or witness has been harmed, is being harmed or is likely to be harmed.

34. Professionals should be trained in recognizing and preventing intimidation, threats and harm to child victims and witnesses. Where child victims and witnesses may be the subject of intimidation, threats or harm, appropriate conditions should be put in place to ensure the safety of the child. Such safeguards could include:

(a) Avoiding direct contact between child victims and witnesses and the alleged perpetrators at any point in the justice process;

(b) Using court-ordered restraining orders supported by a registry system;

(c) Ordering pre-trial detention of the accused and setting special "no contact" bail conditions;

(d) Placing the accused under house arrest;

(e) Wherever possible and appropriate, giving child victims and witnesses protection by the police or other relevant agencies and safeguarding their whereabouts from disclosure.

XIII. The right to reparation

35. Child victims should, wherever possible, receive reparation in order to achieve full redress, reintegration and recovery. Procedures for obtaining and enforcing reparation should be readily accessible and child-sensitive.

36. Provided the proceedings are child-sensitive and respect these Guidelines, combined criminal and reparations proceedings should be encouraged, together with informal and community justice procedures such as restorative justice.

37. Reparation may include restitution from the offender ordered in the criminal court, aid from victim compensation programmes administered by the State and damages ordered to be paid in civil proceedings. Where possible, costs of social and educational reintegration, medical treatment, mental health care and legal services should be addressed. Procedures should be instituted to ensure enforcement of reparation orders and payment of reparation before fines.

XIV. The right to special preventive measures

38. In addition to preventive measures that should be in place for all children, special strategies are required for child victims and witnesses who are particularly vulnerable to recurring victimization or offending.

39. Professionals should develop and implement comprehensive and specially tailored strategies and interventions in cases where there are risks that child victims may be victimized further. These strategies and interventions should take into account the nature of the victimization, including victimization related to abuse in the home, sexual exploitation, abuse in institutional settings and trafficking. The strategies may include those based on government, neighbourhood and citizen initiatives.

XV. Implementation

40. Adequate training, education and information should be made available to professionals working with child victims and witnesses with a view to improving and sustaining specialized methods, approaches and attitudes in order to protect and deal effectively and sensitively with child victims and witnesses.

41. Professionals should be trained to effectively protect and meet the needs of child victims and witnesses, including in specialized units and services.

42. This training should include:

(a) Relevant human rights norms, standards and principles, including the rights of the child;

(b) Principles and ethical duties of their office;

(c) Signs and symptoms that indicate crimes against children;

(d) Crisis assessment skills and techniques, especially for making referrals, with an emphasis placed on the need for confidentiality;

(e) Impact, consequences, including negative physical and psychological effects, and trauma of crimes against children;

(f) Special measures and techniques to assist child victims and witnesses in the justice process;

(g) Cross-cultural and age-related linguistic, religious, social and gender issues;

(h) Appropriate adult-child communication skills;

(i) Interviewing and assessment techniques that minimize any trauma to the child while maximizing the quality of information received from the child;

(j) Skills to deal with child victims and witnesses in a sensitive, understanding, constructive and reassuring manner;

(k) Methods to protect and present evidence and to question child witnesses;

(l) Roles of, and methods used by, professionals working with child victims and witnesses.

43. Professionals should make every effort to adopt an interdisciplinary and cooperative approach in aiding children by familiarizing themselves with the wide array of available services, such as victim support, advocacy, economic assistance, counselling, education, health, legal and social services. This approach may include protocols for the different stages of the justice process to encourage cooperation among entities that provide services to child victims and witnesses, as well as other forms of multidisciplinary work that includes police, prosecutor, medical, social services and psychological personnel working in the same location.

44. International cooperation should be enhanced between States and all sectors of society, both at the national and at the international levels, including mutual assistance for the purpose of facilitating the collection and exchange of information and the detection, investigation and prosecution of transnational crimes involving child victims and witnesses.

45. Professionals should consider utilizing the present Guidelines as a basis for developing laws and written policies, standards and protocols aimed at assisting child victims and witnesses involved in the justice process.

46. Professionals should be enabled to periodically review and evaluate their role, together with other agencies in the justice process, in ensuring the protection of the rights of the child and the effective implementation of the present Guidelines.

Human resources development

In response to General Assembly resolution 58/207 [YUN 2003, p. 1159], the Secretary-General, in an August report [A/60/318], discussed the need for promoting comprehensive and cross-sectoral approaches to human resources development. The report emphasized the mutually reinforcing relationship between human resources development and the realization of the internationally agreed development goals, including those contained in the Millennium Declaration [YUN 2000, p. 49], and how both should be pursued in the context of national development strategies. The report focused on the need for investment in human resource development, gender mainstreaming and equality, the role of information and communication technologies, the role of the public sector and its broad-based engagement in the formulation and implementation of national and local policies to promote human resource development and the role of UN system support. It also addressed the impact of the movement of highly-skilled and educated people on human resources development in developing countries and made a number of related recommendations.

In a later report [A/60/687], the Secretary-General transmitted to the Assembly the report of the World Summit on the Information Society (Tunis, Tunisia, 16-18 November). The assembled world leaders, with the input of representatives from the private sector and civil society, agreed on the Tunis Commitment and Tunis Agenda for the Information Society (see p. 933).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December [meeting 68], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/60/492/Add.3], adopted resolution 60/211 without [agenda item 56 (c)].

Human resources development

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 52/196 of 18 December 1997, 54/211 of 22 December 1999, 56/189 of 21 December 2001 and 58/207 of 23 December 2003,

Recalling also the 2005 World Summit Outcome,

Stressing that human resources development is key to the efforts to achieve the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals, and to expand opportunities for people, in particular for the most vulnerable groups of the population,

Recognizing that globalization and the evolution of information and communication technologies can make the challenge of human resources development more complex for developing countries, and recognizing also the increasing development gap between developed and developing countries, including the gap in knowledge and in access to information and communication technologies, and the disparity of income within and among nations and its adverse impact on human resources development in developing countries,

Noting the impact of the movement of highly skilled people and those with an advanced education on human resources development and sustainable development in developing countries, and stressing the need for a global and comprehensive approach to maximize the positive impact of skilled labour mobility on human resources development,

Stressing that Governments have the primary responsibility for defining and implementing appropriate policies for human resources development and the need for greater support from the international community for the national efforts of developing countries,

Stressing also that health and education are at the core of human resources development and the need to ensure that, by 2015, children everywhere, boys and girls alike, will be able to complete a full course of primary schooling and will have equal access to all levels of education,

Emphasizing the continuing need for coordination and collaboration among the organizations of the United Nations system, within their mandates, in assisting developing countries, in particular the least developed countries, in fostering their human resources development,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Recognizes the importance of human resources development in promoting sustainable development, and encourages Governments to integrate human resources development policies in their national development strategies;

3. Stresses that investment in human resources development should be an integral part of national development policies and strategies, and in this regard calls for the adoption of policies to facilitate investment focused on infrastructure and capacity development, including, inter alia, education, health and science and technology, including information and communication technologies;

4. States the importance of ensuring adequate resources for education as a fundamental aspect of eradicating poverty and promoting development with a view to achieving sustainable economic growth and human development, and, in this regard, encourages Governments to manage resources assigned to education in a responsible, accurate and transparent way and to ensure accountability;

5. Calls for enhanced cooperation among all development partners, including those within the United Nations system, other international organizations, donors and private sector and non-governmental organizations, to support the human resources development efforts of developing countries as articulated in national development strategies;

6. Also calls for steps to integrate gender perspectives in human resources development, including through policies, strategies and targeted actions aimed at promoting women's capacities and access to productive activities, and in this regard emphasizes the need to ensure the full participation of women in the formulation and implementation of such policies, strategies and actions;

7. Urges the adoption of cross-sectoral approaches to human resources development, which combine, among other factors, economic growth, poverty eradication, the provision of basic social services, sustainable livelihoods, the empowerment of women, the involvement of young people, the needs of vulnerable groups of society and of local indigenous communities, political freedom, popular participation and respect for human rights, justice and equity, all of which are essential for enhancing human capacity in order to meet the challenge of development;

8. Encourages the strategic and innovative use of information and communication technologies in national development policies and programmes to facilitate education, training, knowledge-sharing, recruitment and job creation, stresses the importance of implementing the Tunis Commitment and the Tunis Agenda for the Information Society, adopted during the second phase of the World Summit on the Information Society, held at Tunis from 16 to 18 November 2005, as step towards addressing these challenges, and calls upon the international community to support the efforts of developing countries in this regard;

9. Calls upon the relevant entities of the United Nations system to give priority to the objectives of human resources development through, inter alia, integrating in their development programmes explicit support for building science and technology capacities compatible with local needs, resources, culture and practices;

10. Calls upon the international community, including the entities of the United Nations system, to support the efforts of developing countries to address the adverse effects of HIV/AIDS, malaria, tuberculosis and other infectious diseases on their human resources;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its sixty-second session a report on the implementation of the present resolution with a focus on the role of science and technology in promoting human resources development;

12. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its sixty-second session the sub-item entitled "Human resources development".

UN Institute for Training and Research

In response to General Assembly resolution 59/252 [YUN 2004, p. 1139], the Secretary-General submitted an August report [A/60/304] on the United Nations Institute for Training and Research (UNITAR). The report reviewed UNITAR's ongoing training and capacity-building programmes, highlighting recent methodologies such as e-learning and web-based interactive platforms, knowledge managements and new approaches to public-private partnerships. It also proposed ways in which UNITAR could provide more systematically specialized common services to UN system, funds, programmes and organizations. While voluntary contributions remained low, UNITAR's financial situation improved, owing to the increase of special-purpose grants.

In a September report [A/60/360], submitted in response to Assembly resolution 59/276 [YUN 2004, p. 1383], the Secretary-General reviewed UNITAR's financial viability, including proposals to address long-term funding sources for rent and maintenance costs. In order to maintain and expand the current training programmes for international cooperation and multilateral diplomacy, the Secretary-General recommended providing UNITAR with an annual subvention. He further noted that the Assembly might wish to consider the report in the context of biennium proposed programme budget for the 2006-2007 biennium.

In accordance with Assembly resolutions 52/212 B [YUN 1998, p. 1288] and 58/249 A [YUN 2003, p. 1428], the Chairman of the Board of Auditors transmitted to the Assembly the Board's report [A/60/113] on implementation and recommendations relating to the 2002-2003 biennium. In the absence of any initiative by UNITAR to establish a new funding mechanism that allowed resources to be secured, the Board noted, among other things, that funding sources for UNITAR's General Fund remained fragile and dependent on UNITAR's level of activity and the interest of donors in its projects. The Board was of the view that the creation of an operating reserve would be prudent.

The Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ), in a related report [A/60/7/Add.4], considered the Secretary-General's September report and the Board of Auditors' report.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December [meeting 68], the General Assembly, on recommendation of the Second Committee [A/60/494/Add.1], adopted resolution 60/213 without vote [agenda item 58 (a)].

United Nations Institute for Training and Research

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 51/188 of 16 December 1996, 52/206 of 18 December 1997, 53/195 of 15 December 1998, 54/229 of 22 December 1999, 55/208 of 20 December 2000, 56/208 of 21 December 2001, 57/268 of 20 December 2002, 58/223 of 23 December 2003 and 59/252 of 22 December 2004,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General,

Acknowledging the work of the Board of Trustees of the United Nations Institute for Training and Research on the functioning of the Institute,

Noting the continued progress made by the Institute in its various programmes and activities, including the strengthened cooperation with other organizations of the United Nations system and with regional and national institutions,

Expressing its appreciation to the Governments and private institutions that have made or pledged financial and other contributions to the Institute,

Noting the slight improvement in the financial situation of the Institute, and expressing its appreciation to those who have contributed to this improvement,

Noting also, however, that the bulk of the resources contributed to the Institute are directed to the Special Purpose Grants Fund rather than to the General Fund, stressing the need to address that unbalanced situation, and also noting that the participation of the developed countries in training programmes in New York and Geneva is increasing,

Noting further that the Institute is funded from voluntary contributions and that it delivers, free of charge, training courses to diplomats and delegates accredited to United Nations Headquarters in New York and to the United Nations offices at Geneva, Vienna and Nairobi,

Noting the various ongoing training programmes of the Institute, including those in the field of sustainable development,

Reiterating that training activities should be accorded a more visible and larger role in support of the management of international affairs and in the execution of the economic and social development programmes of the United Nations system,

1. Reaffirms the importance of a coordinated United Nations system-wide approach to research and training, based on an effective coherent strategy and an effective division of work among the relevant institutions and bodies;

2. Also reaffirms the relevance of the United Nations Institute for Training and Research, in view of the growing importance of training within the United Nations and the training requirements of States and local authorities, and the relevance of the training-related research activities undertaken by the Institute within its mandate;

3. Welcomes the progress made in building partnerships between the Institute and other organizations and bodies of the United Nations system with respect to their training programmes, and in this context underlines the need to develop further and to expand the scope of those partnerships, in particular at the country level;

4. Requests the Board of Trustees of the Institute to continue to ensure fair and equitable geographical distribution and transparency in the preparation of the programmes and in the employment of experts, and in this regard stresses that the courses of the Institute should focus primarily on development issues and the management of international affairs;

5. Renews its appeal to all Governments, in particular those of developed countries, and to private institutions that have not yet contributed financially or otherwise to the Institute to give it their generous financial and other support, and urges the States that have interrupted their voluntary contributions to consider resuming them in view of the successful restructuring and revitalization of the Institute;

6. Encourages the Board of Trustees to consider diversifying further the venues of the events organized by the Institute and to include among those venues the cities hosting regional commissions, in order to promote greater participation and reduce costs;

7. Stresses the need for the expeditious resolution of the issues related to the Institute's rent, rental rates and maintenance costs, taking into account its financial situation, as recommended in the report of the Secretary-General;

8. Encourages the Board of Trustees of the Institute to continue its efforts to resolve the critical financial situation of the Institute, in particular with a view to broadening its donor base and further increasing the contributions to the General Fund;

9. Urges the Board of Trustees of the Institute to complete expeditiously the implementation of the recommendations of the Board of Auditors made in respect of the biennium 2002-2003;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its sixty-second session a report on the implementation of the present resolution, including details on the status of contributions to and the financial situation of the Institute;

11. Invites the Secretary-General, after consultation with the Board of Trustees of the Institute, in accordance with article XI of the statute of the Institute, to consider the desirability of reformulating article V, paragraph 2 (j), of the statute so that the report of the Secretary-General may be submitted to the Economic and Social Council rather than to the General Assembly, and include the findings in his report to the General Assembly at its sixty-second session.

On the same date, the Assembly took note of the report [A/60/494] of the Second Committee (decision 60/548).

On 23 December, the Assembly, in section XII of resolution 60/248, decided to provide UNITAR with the amount of $242,400, being the equivalent of the amount of rental, maintenance and other administrative costs associated with conducting the core training programme for the 2006-2007 biennium. It also reiterated that, in order to ensure stability of the funding for the General Fund and the viability of repaying the United Nations its debt, UNITAR should systematically charge 13 per cent of programme support costs to special purpose grants whenever possible.

United Nations System Staff College

On 22 December, the General Assembly, in resolution 60/214 (see p. 1527) on the United Nations System Staff College, called upon all organizations of the United Nations system to make full and effective use of the facilities of the College and invited the College to strengthen further its engagement in knowledge-sharing and staff training and learning that could serve to advance the capacity of the United Nations system to contribute to the follow-up to the outcomes of major United Nations conferences and summits, as well as to support the timely and full realization of the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals, with the aim of helping to provide multilateral solutions to problems in the areas of development, peace and collective security and reinforcing system-wide coherence.

It encouraged the College to continue to provide strategic leadership in order to increase operational effectiveness, promote inter-agency collaboration and strengthen management culture, including the development of new systems of performance management, flexible and collaborative work structures and cost-effective means of delivering services to clients and beneficiaries.

Chapter X

Women

During 2005, UN efforts to advance the status of women worldwide and ensure their rights continued to be directed by the principles and guidelines of the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action, adopted at the Fourth (1995) World Conference on Women, and the outcome of the General Assembly's twenty-third (2000) special session, which reviewed progress in their implementation (Beijing+5). The occasion of the tenth anniversary of the World Conference inspired renewed efforts to implement the two instruments, which continued to be a driving force behind many high-level meetings and commemorative events throughout the year.

At its forty-ninth session in March, the Commission on the Status of Women convened a high-level plenary meeting focusing on the two thematic issues of the review of the implementation of the Beijing Platform for Action and the outcome documents of the twenty-third special session, and current challenges and forward-looking strategies for the advancement of women and girls. The Commission recommended to the Economic and Social Council for adoption a declaration on the occasion of the tenth anniversary of the Fourth World Conference on Women, which the Council endorsed in July. It also adopted resolutions on assistance to Palestinian women, women and girls in Afghanistan, and mainstreaming a gender perspective into all UN system policies and programmes.

In December, in follow-up to the Fourth World Conference and the outcome of the special session, the Assembly adopted a resolution requesting all UN bodies to ensure that programmes, plans and budgets visibly targeted the mainstreaming of gender perspectives, and calling on the UN system to play an active role in ensuring the effective and accelerated implementation of the Beijing Platform for Action and the outcome of the twenty-third special session. The Assembly also adopted resolutions on an in-depth study on all forms of violence against women; improvement of the situation of women in rural areas; violence against migrant workers; the girl child; women in development; and the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women.

The United Nations Development Fund for Women focused on the implementation of its multi-year funding framework, which targeted goals in four key areas: feminized poverty, violence against women, the spread of HIV/AIDS and gender equality in democratic governance and in post-conflict countries. In July, the Economic and Social Council took action on the results of an independent assessment of UNIFEM, which had been commissioned by its Consultative Committee in 2004.

In 2005, the United Nations continued to strengthen and revitalize the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women (INSTRAW). The Office of Internal Oversight Services transmitted a report on the follow-up audit it conducted in December 2004, which revealed that, while there had been improvement in INSTRAW governance structure, further strengthening of programmatic and administrative oversight was needed. INSTRAW's financial situation remained precarious and a subcommittee was established to analyse a proposed fund-raising strategy.

Follow-up to the Fourth World Conference on Women and Beijing+5

During 2005, the Commission on the Status of Women, the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly considered follow-up to the 1995 Fourth World Conference on Women, particularly the implementation of the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action [YUN 1995, p. 1170] and the political declaration and further actions and initiatives to implement both instruments, adopted at the twenty-third (2000) special session of the Assembly (Beijing+5) by resolution S/23-2 [YUN 2000, p. 1084]. The Declaration had reaffirmed the commitment of Governments to the goals and objectives of the Fourth World Conference and to the implementation of the 12 critical areas of concern outlined in the Platform for Action: women and poverty; education and training of women; women and health; violence against women; women and armed conflict; women and the economy; women in power and decision-making; institutional mechanisms for the advancement of women; human rights and women; women and the media; women and the environment; and the girl child (see p. 1256 for action taken regarding the critical areas of concern). The issue of mainstreaming a gender perspective into UN policies and programmes continued to be addressed (see p. 1270).

Ten-year anniversary of Fourth World Conference

In 2005, the occasion of the ten-year anniversary of the Fourth (1995) World Conference on Women inspired renewed efforts to implement the Beijing Platform for Action and the outcome of the Assembly's twenty-third special session and was a driving force behind many meetings and commemorative events throughout the year, including the March high-level plenary meeting of the Commission on the Status of Women to review and appraise progress achieved in the implementation of those two instruments, which adopted a declaration reaffirming its commitment to ensure their implementation (see below). Other declarations adopted to commemorate the tenth anniversary of the Conference included one in February [E/CN.6/2005/10] by the European Conference of Ministers responsible for gender equality policy (Luxembourg, 4 February), and another, the "Beijing Plus 10 Declaration" [A/60/371], by representatives of Governments, intergovernmental organizations and civil society, including non-governmental organizations (NGOs), at the close of the Beijing Plus 10 Conference (29-31 August, Beijing).

Report of Secretary-General. Pursuant to General Assembly resolution S/23-2 [YUN 2000, p. 1084], the Secretary-General submitted a report [E/CN.6/2005/2 & Corr.1] to the Commission on the Status of Women, which appraised progress made in national level implementation of the Beijing Platform for Action and the outcome of the Assembly's special session. The report covered the two themes mandated in the Commission's multi-year work programme: "Review of the implementation of the Beijing Platform for Action and the outcome documents of the twenty-third session" and "Current challenges and forward-looking strategies for the advancement and empowerment of women and girls". The report gave an overview of the major trends in implementation of the Platform for Action; an analysis of the implementation of each of the 12 critical areas of concern and other related issues; an overview of progress achieved in institutional arrangements; and indicated priority areas for future action.

The overview of trends revealed that, over the past 10 years, the status and role of women had changed significantly, although not at an equal pace in all regions. There was greater awareness of gender equality issues among Governments and the public at large; increased participation of women in public life; reduced child and maternal mortality; and improved worldwide access to education and the literacy of women and girls. Governments were tackling such issues as violence against women, human trafficking and the situation of women with special needs. There was a clear trend towards additional legislation to eliminate discrimination and promote gender equality. However, gaps remained between policy and practice and public attitudes towards the advancement of women had not changed at the same pace as policy, legal and institutional frameworks. Explicitly addressing persistent stereotypical attitudes and discriminatory practices would be critical to the full implementation of the Platform for Action and the outcome document. Achievements, obstacles and challenges were outlined for each of the 12 critical concerns, as well as for other issues, such as trafficking in women and girls; women and HIV/AIDS; indigenous women; information and communication technologies; the Millennium Development Goals (MDGs) [YUN 2000, p. 51]; and the role of men and boys in achieving gender equality. While many Governments identified priority areas for future action in relation to all critical areas of concerns, they gave considerable attention to the challenges and action required in relation to institutional development in support of gender equality and women's empowerment. A number of Governments cited the role of men and boys as critical for the achievement of gender equality and had elaborated plans for further work in that area.

Commission action. On 4 March [E/2005/27], the Commission on the Status of Women, meeting on the occasion of International Women's Day, adopted a draft declaration [E/CN.6/2005/L.1] in commemoration of the tenth anniversary of the Fourth World Conference on Women, which it transmitted to the Economic and Social Council for action.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 21 July [meeting 34], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on the Status of Women [E/2005/27 & Corr.1], adopted decision 2005/232 without vote [agenda item 14 (a)], by which it decided to transmit the following declaration to the General Assembly and its High-level Plenary Meeting on the review of the United Nations Millennium Declaration.

Declaration of the Commission on the Status of Women on the occasion of the tenth anniversary of the Fourth World Conference on Women

We, the representatives of Governments gathering at the forty-ninth session of the Commission on the Status of Women, in New York, on the occasion of the tenth anniversary of the Fourth World Conference on Women, held in Beijing in 1995, in the context of the review of the outcomes of the Conference and of the twenty-third special session of the General Assembly, entitled "Women 2000: gender equality, development and peace for the twenty-first century", and its contribution to the High-level Plenary Meeting of the General Assembly on the review of the United Nations Millennium Declaration, to be held from 14 to 16 September 2005,

1. Reaffirm the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action adopted at the Fourth World Conference on Women and the outcome documents of the twenty-third special session of the General Assembly;

2. Welcome the progress made thus far towards achieving gender equality, stress that challenges and obstacles remain in the implementation of the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action and the outcome documents of the twenty-third special session of the General Assembly, and, in this regard, pledge to undertake further action to ensure their full and accelerated implementation;

3. Emphasize that the full and effective implementation of the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action is essential to achieving the internationally agreed development goals, including those contained in the Millennium Declaration, and stress the need to ensure the integration of a gender perspective in the High-level Plenary Meeting of the General Assembly on the review of the Millennium Declaration;

4. Recognize that the implementation of the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action and the fulfilment of the obligations under the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women are mutually reinforcing in achieving gender equality and the empowerment of women;

5. Call upon the United Nations system, international and regional organizations, all sectors of civil society, including non-governmental organizations, as well as all women and men, to fully commit themselves and to intensify their contributions to the implementation of the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action and the outcome of the twenty-third special session of the General Assembly.

Communication. On 27 July [A/60/210], the Council President, pursuant to Council decision 2004/309 [YUN 2004, p. 1145], transmitted the Declaration to the Assembly.

Report of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 59/168 [YUN 2004, p. 1145], the Secretary-General, in a July report [A/60/170], reviewed steps taken by the Assembly and its Main Committees during its fifty-ninth (2004) session to promote the achievement of gender equality through the gender mainstreaming strategy. The report reviewed outcomes of major events during the year, such as the International Meeting to Review the Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States (see p. 946); the World Conference on Disaster Reduction (see p. 1015); the Eleventh United Nations Congress on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice (see p. 1208); and the high-level meeting on HIV/AIDS (see p. 1322). It also assessed the extent to which Assembly resolutions and reports of the Secretary-General had taken gender perspectives into account, particularly in relation to follow-up to major summits and conferences. The inclusion of gender perspectives in the preparations for the second phase of the World Summit on the Information Society (see p. 933) was also covered in the report.

The Secretary-General observed that the Assembly's Second (Economic and Financial) and Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committees had paid greater attention to gender perspectives than other Assembly Committees. Although reports submitted to the various Committees contained a degree of gender analysis, they did not systematically include recommendations on further action. Resolutions also lacked qualitative analyses and specific recommended actions tended to reflect proposals made in reports of the Secretary-General. He recommended that the Assembly call for the integration of gender perspectives in reports submitted to it and in resolutions adopted by its subsidiary bodies, based on qualitative gender analysis and containing concrete recommendations for further action. The Assembly should request reporting on progress achieved, ensure gender mainstreaming in the implementation and follow-up to international conferences and summits, in particular in the context of the 2005 World Summit (see p. 47), as well as the outcome of the World Summit on the Information Society.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December [meeting 64], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/60/504], adopted resolution 60/140 without vote [agenda item 65].

Follow-up to the Fourth World Conference on Women and full implementation of the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action and the outcome of the twenty-third special session of the General Assembly

The General Assembly,

Recalling its previous resolutions on the question, including resolution 59/168 of 20 December 2004,

Deeply convinced that the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action and the outcome of the twenty-third special session of the General Assembly entitled "Women 2000: gender equality, development and peace for the twenty-first century", are important contributions to the achievement of gender equality and the empowerment of women and must be translated into effective action by all States, the United Nations system and other organizations concerned,

Reaffirming its commitment to the full, effective and accelerated implementation of the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action and the outcome of the twenty-third special session,

Recalling the United Nations Millennium Declaration and the commitments to gender equality and the advancement of women contained therein, the commitments made at the major United Nations summits, conferences and special sessions, as well as the commitments made at the 2005 World Summit in this regard,

Welcoming progress made towards achieving gender equality, but stressing that challenges and obstacles remain in the implementation of the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action and the outcome of the twenty-third special session,

Recognizing that the responsibility for the implementation of the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action and the outcome of the twenty-third special session rests primarily at the national level and that strengthened efforts are necessary in this respect, and reiterating that enhanced international cooperation is essential for full, effective and accelerated implementation,

Reaffirming that gender mainstreaming is a globally accepted strategy for promoting the empowerment of women and achieving gender equality by transforming structures of inequality, and reaffirming also the commitment to actively promote the mainstreaming of a gender perspective in the design, implementation, monitoring and evaluation of policies and programmes in all political, economic and social spheres, as well as the commitment to strengthen the capabilities of the United Nations system in the area of gender equality,

Reaffirming also that the full realization of all human rights and fundamental freedoms is essential for the empowerment of women and girls,

Reaffirming further that the full representation and full and equal participation of women in political, social and economic decision-making in society enhances social and economic development policies and that the empowerment of women is a critical factor in the eradication of poverty,

3. Emphasizes that the full, effective and accelerated implementation of the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action and the outcome of the twenty-third special session is integral to achieving the internationally agreed development goals, including those contained in the United Nations Millennium Declaration and the outcomes of United Nations summits, conferences and special sessions, as well as the commitments made at the 2005 World Summit;

4. Calls upon Governments, the United Nations system and other international and regional organizations, all sectors of civil society, including non-governmental organizations, as well as all women and men to fully commit themselves and to intensify their contributions to the implementation of the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action and the outcome of the twenty-third special session;

5. Recognizes that the implementation of the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action and the fulfilment of the obligations under the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women are mutually reinforcing in achieving gender equality and the empowerment of women, and in this regard welcomes the contributions of the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women to promoting the implementation of the Platform for Action and the outcome of the twenty-third special session, and invites States parties to the Convention to include information on measures taken to enhance implementation at the national level in their reports to the Committee under article 18 of the Convention;

6. Calls upon States parties to comply fully with their obligations under the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women and the Optional Protocol thereto and to take into consideration the concluding comments as well as the general recommendations of the Committee, and also calls upon those Member States that have not yet done so to consider signing, ratifying or acceding to the Optional Protocol;

7. Reaffirms that the Commission on the Status of Women will continue to play a central role in the follow-up to and review of the implementation of the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action and the outcome of the twenty-third special session and in this regard welcomes their reaffirmation in the outcome of the forty-ninth session of the Commission, calls upon the Commission to give particular attention to the sharing of experiences and good practices in overcoming challenges to full implementation at the national and international levels, and in this regard encourages all actors, inter alia, Governments, the United Nations system, other international organizations and civil society, to continue to support the work of the Commission;

8. Calls upon Governments, the relevant funds and programmes, organs and specialized agencies of the United Nations system, within their respective mandates, and invites the international financial institutions and all relevant actors of civil society, including non-governmental organizations, to intensify action to achieve the full and effective implementation of the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action and the outcome of the twenty-third special session, through:

(a) Sustained political will and commitment at the national, regional and international levels to take further action, inter alia, through the mainstreaming of gender perspectives, including through the development and use of gender equality indicators, as applicable, in all policies and programmes and the promotion of full and equal participation and empowerment of women, and enhanced international cooperation;

(h) Encouraging joint responsibility of men and boys with women and girls in the promotion of gender equality;

9. Reaffirms that States have an obligation to exercise due diligence to prevent violence against women and girls, provide protection to the victims and investigate, prosecute and punish the perpetrators of violence against women and girls, and that failure to do so violates and impairs or nullifies the enjoyment of their human rights and fundamental freedoms, and calls upon Governments to elaborate and implement strategies in this regard;

10. Strongly encourages Governments to continue to support the role and contribution of civil society, in particular non-governmental organizations and women's organizations, in the implementation of the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action and the outcome of the twenty-third special session;

11. Notes that, at its fiftieth session, the Commission on the Status of Women will continue to discuss its working methods and develop a new programme of work to begin in 2007, and in this respect requests the Secretary-General to report to the Commission with recommendations for enhancing the work of the Commission as well as proposals for future themes;

12. Encourages the Economic and Social Council to continue its efforts to ensure that gender mainstreaming is an integral part of its work and that of its subsidiary bodies, through, inter alia, implementation of its agreed conclusions 1997/2 of 18 July 1997 and its resolution 2004/4 of 7 July 2004;

16. Also reaffirms the commitment made at the 2005 World Summit to the full and effective implementation of Security Council resolution 1325(2000) of 31 October 2000, while noting the fifth anniversary of its adoption and the open debates in the Council on women and peace and security;

17. Recognizes the important role of women in the prevention and resolution of conflicts and in peacebuilding, and urges Governments and the United Nations system to take further steps to ensure the integration of a gender perspective and the full and equal participation of women in all efforts to promote peace and security, as well as to increase their role in decision-making at all levels, including through the development of national action plans and strategies;

18. Calls upon all parts of the United Nations system to continue to play an active role in ensuring the full, effective and accelerated implementation of the Beijing Platform for Action and the outcome of the twenty-third special session, as reaffirmed in the declaration adopted by the Commission on the Status of Women at its forty-ninth session, through, inter alia, the work of the Office of the Special Adviser on Gender Issues and Advancement of Women and the Division for the Advancement of Women and the maintenance of gender specialists in all entities of the United Nations system, as well as by ensuring that all personnel, especially in the field, receive training and appropriate follow-up, including tools, guidance and support, for gender mainstreaming;

Critical areas of concern

Violence against women

In compliance with General Assembly resolution 50/166 [YUN 1995, p. 1188], the Secretary-

General transmitted a December report [E/CN.6/2006/10-E/CN.4/2006/60] of the United Nations Development Fund for Women (UNIFEM), which covered its 2005 activities towards the elimination of violence against women (see p. 1276). Efforts focused on the implementation of the first year of UNIFEM's 2005-2008 revised strategy for the United Nations Trust Fund in Support of Actions to Eliminate Violence against Women. The strategy, based on lessons learned from the first eight years of the Trust Fund's operations, devolved decision-making to the subregional level. Grant-making during the year focused on providing support for the implementation of laws, policies and plans to combat violence against women and innovative approaches for addressing the interlinkages between HIV/AIDS and violence against women. In November, the Trust Fund, under the tenth grant-making cycle, provided $1.8 million to 24 initiatives in 30 countries. The Secretary-General concluded that violence against women was the most pervasive violation of human rights, occurring every day, in every country, in every region, regardless of income or level of development. His in-depth study on violence against women, to be released in 2006, would provide guidance to Governments, the UN system and the broader community on how to address the issue (see below). He also proposed that support for combating violence against women should be effective and be significantly increased, and that innovative approaches be replicated.

On 25 July, by decision 2005/266, the Economic and Social Council requested the Special Rapporteur on violence against women, its causes and consequences, to present an oral report to the Assembly at its sixtieth (2005) session (see p. 852).

In-depth study on violence against women

In response to General Assembly resolution 58/185 [YUN 2003, p. 1172], the Secretary-General submitted an August report [A/60/211], which provided a summary of the status of preparations for the in-depth study on all forms of violence against women and a preliminary discussion of substantive issues. It outlined the context, goals and scope of the study, and gave an overview of ongoing and planned preparatory activities.

Two consultative mechanisms, a task force, comprising representatives of UN system entities and NGOs and an advisory committee, consisting of 10 high-level, internationally recognized experts in the field of violence against women, were established to support the preparation of the study. The study would draw from contributions received from Member States, UN system entities, NGOs, as well as from research and literature available on the topic. Some 45 States had provided updates in response to a March 2005 note verbale and others were encouraged to provide such information by October 2005. Other activities furthering the preparatory process for the study included two expert group meetings (11-14 April and 17-20 May): one on the question of data and statistics on violence against women and another on good practices in combating and eliminating violence against women. The Division for the Advancement of Women convened a consultative workshop (6-7 September, New York) to discuss violence against women and its links with the MDGs and identify key issues to be addressed in the study. A preliminary outline of the study was annexed to the report. The Secretary-General, emphasizing that the preparation of the in-depth study was an opportunity to challenge a culture that allowed violence against women to persist, encouraged the active involvement and contributions of stakeholders during the preparatory process. He recommended that the Assembly take note of the interim report and consider the question of violence against women at its sixty-first (2006) session.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December [meeting 64], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/60/503], adopted resolution 60/136 without vote [agenda item 64].

In-depth study on all forms of violence against women

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 58/185 of 22 December 2003 entitled "In-depth study on all forms of violence against women",

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the status of preparations for the study;

2. Welcomes:

(a) The work undertaken so far in conducting the study, in particular at the expert group meeting on data and statistics on violence against women, held in Geneva from 11 to 14 April 2005, and the expert group meeting on good practices in combating violence against women, held in Vienna from 17 to 20 May 2005;

(b) The initiatives taken at the national, regional and international levels to highlight the study and contribute to its preparation, including the workshop on violence against women, held in Paris on 28 and 29 April 2005, and the consultation held at United Nations Headquarters on 6 and 7 September 2005;

3. Stresses once again the importance, when conducting the study, of close cooperation with:

(a) All relevant United Nations bodies, funds and programmes, including the United Nations Development Fund for Women, the United Nations Children's Fund, the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Population Fund, the World Health Organization and the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women;

(b) All relevant parts of the Secretariat, in particular the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and the regional commissions;

(c) United Nations treaty bodies, in particular the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women;

(d) Special procedures of the Commission on Human Rights, in particular the Special Rapporteur on violence against women, its causes and consequences;

4. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To seize all opportunities to raise awareness of the conduct of the study and solicit contributions, and in this regard notes with appreciation the launch of a website dedicated to the study and the online discussion that took place from 26 September to 14 October 2005;

(b) To ensure that the conduct of the in-depth study on all forms of violence against women will be carried out in close cooperation with the in-depth study on the question of violence against children requested in its resolution 56/138 of 19 December 2001 so as to enable the exchange of appropriate information;

(c) To continue to provide opportunities for consultations with Member States and other stakeholders and to solicit information, including on strategies, policies, programmes and best practices, including from regional organizations;

(d) To continue and, where appropriate, to strengthen cooperation with relevant non-governmental organizations in the preparation of the study on all forms of violence against women;

5. Urges all relevant United Nations bodies, funds and programmes to cooperate fully with the Secretary-General in the conduct of the study and, whenever possible, draw attention to it, so as to expand opportunities for contribution to its preparation and follow-up;

6. Encourages Member States to contribute to the funding of the study in order to meet the budgetary requirements for the study and to provide, as applicable, the Secretary-General with updated information on issues to be covered by the study;

7. Decides:

(a) To extend the deadline for submission of the report mentioned in subparagraph (d) of its resolution 58/185 to its sixty-first session, at the latest by early September 2006, in time for an in-depth consideration at that session;

(b) To consider the report at its sixty-first session under the item entitled "Advancement of women".

Women migrant workers

In response to General Assembly resolution 58/143 [YUN 2003, p. 1173], the Secretary-General submitted a July report [A/60/137 & Corr.1] on violence against women migrant workers, which summarized the activities undertaken by UN system entities and other organizations to address the issue. As at 16 May, 23 Member States and one Observer State had provided information on measures taken. The Commission on Human Rights had also adopted resolutions relating to the elimination of violence against women and the human rights of migrants. Many Member States also submitted information on legislative measures adopted to combat trafficking in women and girls. The feminization of migration was highlighted in several responses, as women constituted the highest percentage of workers who migrated annually, particularly in Indonesia, where 70 per cent of the 350,000 migrant workers were women. As to the human rights aspects, as at 17 June, 30 States had become parties to the International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of their Families [YUN 1990, p. 594]. Special rapporteurs of the Commission on Human Rights had devoted attention to the situation of migrant workers and migrant domestic workers (see p. 767); violence against women (see p. 1251); and trafficking in persons, especially women and children (see p. 1259). Some UN entities providing information on efforts to combat violence against women migrant workers included: the Division for the Advancement of Women, which launched the World Survey on the Role of Women in Development 2004: Women and International Migration on 3 March; the International Labour Organization (ILO), which published in May the report A Global Alliance against Forced Labour; and the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), which reported on the implementation of several activities on migration and human trafficking.

The Secretary-General concluded that, while no specific legislation had been adopted by Member States during the period under review, legislation to protect migrant women from all forms of violence and to prevent discrimination and sexual harassment in relation to employment had benefited them. However, more information was needed on the impact of the measures taken, trends in violence against women migrant workers, settings in which violence occurred, and their use of available support services. Greater efforts were needed to monitor continuously and assess the effectiveness of legislative measures, as well as policy, prevention and support measures in order to take further corrective measures. Improvements were needed in the areas of research, surveys and data collection to design more effective and sustainable responses and in women's access to legal channels to reduce their vulnerability to exploitation, ill-treatment and human trafficking. Further exploration of the links between migration and trafficking was also stressed. The Secretary-General recommended that States provide sensitization training on violence against women migrant workers to government officials, law-enforcement agents, police officers, social workers, community leaders and other professionals likely to come in contact with that group and that Governments ratify international instruments, which addressed migration issues.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December [meeting 64], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/60/503], adopted resolution 60/139 without vote [agenda item 64].

Violence against women migrant workers

The General Assembly,

Recalling all of its previous resolutions on violence against women migrant workers and those adopted by the Commission on the Status of Women, the Commission on Human Rights and the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice, and the Declaration on the Elimination of Violence against Women,

Reaffirming the provisions concerning women migrant workers contained in the outcome documents of the World Conference on Human Rights, the International Conference on Population and Development, the Fourth World Conference on Women and the World Summit for Social Development and their five-year reviews,

Noting with appreciation the various activities initiated by entities of the United Nations system, such as the Regional Programme on Empowering Women Migrant Workers in Asia of the United Nations Development Fund for Women and the high-level panel discussion held by the Commission on the Status of Women at its forty-ninth session on the integration of gender perspectives in macroeconomics, which included a discussion on the protection of women migrant workers, as well as other activities through which the plight of women migrant workers continues to be assessed and alleviated, Recognizing the increasing feminization of international migration, which requires greater gender sensitivity in all policies and efforts related to the subject of international migration,

Noting the large numbers of women from developing countries and some countries with economies in transition who continue to venture forth to more affluent countries in search of a living for themselves and their families as a consequence of poverty, unemployment and other socio-economic conditions, and acknowledging the duty of the countries of origin, in cooperation with the international community, to try to create conditions that provide employment and economic security for their citizens,

Acknowledging the economic benefits that accrue to both the country of origin and the country of destination from the employment of women migrant workers,

Expressing deep concern at the continuing reports of grave abuses and acts of violence committed against women migrant workers, including, inter alia, sexual and gender-based violence, trafficking, domestic and family violence, racist and xenophobic acts and abusive labour practices,

Noting the tendency of many migrant women to be employed in the informal economy and in less skilled work compared with that of men, which puts those women at greater risk of abuse and exploitation,

Emphasizing the need for objective, comprehensive and broad-based information, possibly including a database for research and analysis, and a wide exchange of experience and lessons learned by individual Member States and civil society in the formulation of policies and concrete strategies to address the problem of violence against women migrant workers,

Encouraging the continuing participation of civil society in developing and implementing appropriate measures to support innovative partnerships among public agencies, non-governmental organizations and other members of civil society for combating violence against women migrant workers,

Realizing that the movement of a significant number of women migrant workers may be facilitated and made possible by means of fraudulent or irregular documentation and sham marriages with the object of migration, that this may be facilitated through, among other things, the Internet, and that those women migrant workers are more vulnerable to abuse and exploitation,

Recognizing the importance of joint and collaborative approaches and strategies at the bilateral, regional, interregional and international levels in protecting and promoting the rights and welfare of women migrant workers,

Recognizing also the importance of exploring the link between migration and trafficking in order to further efforts towards protecting women migrant workers from violence, discrimination, exploitation and abuse,

Encouraged by some measures adopted by some countries of destination to alleviate the plight of women migrant workers residing in their areas of jurisdiction, such as the establishment of protection mechanisms for migrant workers, facilitating their access to mechanisms for reporting complaints or providing assistance during legal proceedings,

Underlining the important role of relevant United Nations treaty bodies in monitoring the implementation of human rights conventions and the relevant special procedures, within their respective mandates, in addressing the problem of violence against women migrant workers and in protecting and promoting their rights and welfare,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Also takes note of the reports of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on the human rights of migrants and the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on violence against women, its causes and consequences, with regard to violence against women migrant workers, and encourages all special rapporteurs whose mandates relate to the subject of violence against women migrant workers to address the issue of violence against women migrant workers and their human rights, in particular the problems of gender-based violence and of discrimination, as well as trafficking in women;

3. Notes the findings contained in the World Survey on the Role of Women in Development, 2004: Women and International Migration, including its recommendations for concrete actions aimed at helping to empower migrant women, including women migrant workers, and reducing their vulnerability to abuse;

4. Acknowledges with appreciation the entry into force of the International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families on 1 July 2003;

5. Requests all Governments to continue to cooperate fully with the Special Rapporteurs mentioned in paragraph 2 above in the performance of their tasks and mandated duties, including by making available to them requested information on violence against women migrant workers and by reacting promptly to their urgent appeals, and encourages Governments to give serious consideration to inviting them to visit their countries;

6. Calls upon all Governments to incorporate a gender perspective in all policies on international migration, including, inter alia, for the protection of migrant women from violence, discrimination, exploitation and abuse;

7. Urges concerned Governments, in particular those of the countries of origin and destination, to strengthen further their national efforts to protect and promote the rights and welfare of women migrant workers, including through sustained bilateral, regional, interregional and international cooperation, by developing strategies and joint action and taking into account the innovative approaches and experiences of individual Member States, and to establish and maintain continuing dialogues to facilitate the exchange of information;

8. Also urges concerned Governments, in particular those of the countries of origin and destination, to support and allocate appropriate resources for programmes aimed at strengthening preventive action, in particular information for target groups, education and campaigns to increase public awareness of this issue at the national and grass-roots levels, in cooperation with non-governmental organizations;

9. Notes with appreciation the adoption by Member States, including countries of origin, transit and destination, of measures to inform women migrant workers of their rights and the benefits to which they are entitled, and encourages other Member States to adopt appropriate measures in this regard;

10. Calls upon concerned Governments, in particular those of the countries of origin and destination, if they have not done so, to put in place penal and criminal sanctions to punish perpetrators of violence against women migrant workers and, to the extent possible, to provide, and to encourage non-governmental organizations to provide, victims of violence with the full range of immediate assistance and protection, such as counselling, legal and consular assistance, temporary shelter and other measures that will allow them to be present during the judicial process, as well as to establish reintegration and rehabilitation schemes for returning women migrant workers to their countries of origin;

11. Encourages concerned Governments, in particular those of the countries of origin and destination, to support and, if they have not done so, to formulate and implement training programmes for their law enforcers, prosecutors and service providers with a view to instilling among those public-sector workers the necessary skills and attitude to ensure the delivery of proper and professional interventions for women migrant workers who are subjected to abuse and violence;

12. Also encourages concerned Governments to adopt measures or strengthen existing ones that protect the human rights of women migrant workers, regardless of their immigration status, including, inter alia, in policies that regulate the recruitment and deployment of women migrant workers and appropriate legal measures against intermediaries who deliberately encourage the clandestine movement of workers and who exploit women migrant workers, so as to reduce the vulnerability of migrant women to exploitation, ill treatment and trafficking, and to consider expanding dialogue among States on devising innovative methods to promote legal channels of migration, inter alia, in order to deter illegal migration;

13. Invites Governments, the United Nations system and non-governmental organizations to cooperate towards a better understanding of the problems of women and international migration, including to improve the collection, dissemination and analysis of the kind of data that can explain the causes and consequences of those problems, explore the links between migration and trafficking, and identify the causes of undocumented migration and its economic, social and demographic impact, as well as its implications for the formulation and application of social, economic and migration policies, including those relating to women migrant workers;

14. Encourages concerned Governments, in particular those of the countries of origin, transit and destination, to avail themselves of the expertise of the United Nations, including the Statistics Division of the Secretariat and other relevant bodies, such as the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women, to develop appropriate national data-collection methodologies that will generate comparable data on violence against women migrant workers as bases for research and analysis of the subject;

15. Encourages Member States to consider signing and ratifying or acceding to relevant International Labour Organization conventions and to consider signing and ratifying or acceding to the International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families, as well as all human rights treaties that contribute to the protection of the rights of women migrant workers;

16. Welcomes the entry into force of the Protocol to Prevent, Suppress and Punish Trafficking in Persons, Especially Women and Children, supplementing the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime on 25 December 2003, and the Protocol against the Smuggling of Migrants by Land, Sea and Air, supplementing the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime on 28 January 2004, and encourages Governments to consider signing and ratifying or acceding to the Protocols;

17. Encourages the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women to consider developing a general recommendation on the situation of women migrant workers;

18. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its sixty-second session on the problem of violence against women migrant workers and on the implementation of the present resolution, taking into account updated information from the organizations of the United Nations system, in particular the International Labour Organization, the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Development Fund for Women and the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women, and the International Organization for Migration, as well as the reports of the Special Rapporteurs mentioned in paragraph 2 above, and other relevant sources, including non-governmental organizations.

Women, peace and security

The Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations, at its 2005 sessions [A/59/19 & Add.1] (see p. 128) encouraged Member States and the Secretariat to increase women's participation in all aspects and levels of peacekeeping operations, both civilian and military. The Committee also considered the report [A/59/710] by the Secretary-General's Adviser on Sexual Exploitation and Abuse by the United Nations Peacekeeping Personnel entitled "A comprehensive strategy to eliminate future sexual exploitation and abuse in UN peacekeeping operations" (see p. 119).

Report of Secretary-General. As requested by the Security Council in presidential statement S/PRST/2004/40 [YUN 2004, p. 1152], the Secretary-General submitted an October report [S/2005/636] on women and peace and security across the UN system, which provided information on the preparation of the system-wide action plan for the implementation of Council resolution 1325(2000) [YUN 2000, p. 1113], as well as conclusions and recommendations for moving forward. The action plan, which was annexed to the report, drew on contributions received from 37 entities and was structured according to 12 areas of action: conflict prevention and early warning; peacemaking and peacebuilding; peacekeeping operations; humanitarian response; post-conflict reconstruction and rehabilitation; disarmament, demobilization and reintegration; preventing gender-based violence in armed conflict; preventing sexual exploitation and abuse by UN staff, related personnel and UN partners; gender balance; coordination and partnership; monitoring and reporting; and financial resources.

The Secretary-General observed that the system-wide action plan provided a wealth of information on the activities being carried out by the UN system for women in conflict and post-conflict areas. It was a tool for better coordination and building synergies of the UN system and it would enable the system to align its activities with the goals of resolution 1325(2000) and provide an opportunity to draw on the expertise and resources of the entire system. He made recommendations for action to be undertaken at the intergovernmental, system-wide, UN entity and field levels for strengthening UN capacity to implement resolution 1325(2000) and related presidential statements. He also recommended that the Security Council introduce a biennial report on the overall implementation of the system-wide action plan.

Communications. On 23 October [S/2005/664], Romania indicated that the Security Council was scheduled to hold a debate on the subject "Women's participation in peace processes" on 27 October, which would also commemorate the fifth anniversary of the adoption of resolution 1325(2000). On 24 October [A/60/444-S/2005/669], Sweden forwarded the report of the High-level meeting on "Building partnerships for promoting gender justice in post-conflict societies" (25-26 August, Stockholm), which was organized in cooperation with UNIFEM and the International Legal Assistance Consortium.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 27 October [meeting 5294], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2005/52 on behalf of the Council:

> The Security Council reaffirms its commitment to the continuing and full implementation of its resolution 1325(2000) and recalls the statements by its President of 31 October 2001, 31 October 2002 and 28 October 2004, as reiterating that commitment.
> The Council recalls the 2005 World Summit Outcome, the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action, the outcomes of the Conference and of the twenty-third special session of the General Assembly, entitled 'Women 2000: gender equality, development and peace for the twenty-first century', and the declaration of the Commission on the Status of Women at its forty-ninth session on the occasion of the tenth anniversary of the Fourth World Conference on Women.
> While welcoming the progress achieved so far, the Council stresses the importance and urgency of accelerating the full and effective implementation of resolution 1325(2000).
> The Council reaffirms the importance of full and equal participation of women in peace processes at all levels and urges Member States, regional and subregional organizations and the United Nations system to enhance the role of women in decision-making with regard to all peace processes and post-conflict reconstruction and rebuilding of societies.
> The Council welcomes the various initiatives and actions undertaken by Member States, the United Nations entities, civil society organizations and other relevant actors, focused on supporting and increasing the representation of women in peace negotiations and mainstreaming gender perspectives into peace agreements.
> The Council recognizes and welcomes the roles of, and contributions made by, women as mediators, educators, peacemakers, peacebuilders and advocates for peace, as well as their active contribution to reconciliation efforts and disarmament, demobilization and reintegration processes.

The Council recognizes the constant underrepresentation of women in formal peace processes and is deeply concerned about persistent obstacles and challenges resulting from situations such as violence against women, shattered economies and social structures, lack of rule of law, poverty, limited access to education and resources, various forms of discrimination and stereotypes. The Council believes that more must be done in order to achieve the greater participation and effective contribution of women at the negotiating table and in developing and implementing post-conflict strategies and programmes.

The Council encourages Member States and the Secretary-General to maintain regular contacts with local women's organizations and networks, to utilize their knowledge, expertise and resources and to ensure their involvement in reconstruction processes, particularly at the decision-making level.

The Council also encourages Member States, donors and civil society to provide financial, political and technical support, as well as adequate training for women's peacebuilding initiatives and networks.

The Council welcomes the system-wide action plan for the implementation of resolution 1325 (2000) across the United Nations system, contained in the report of the Secretary-General on women and peace and security, and requests the Secretary-General to update, monitor and review its implementation and integration on an annual basis, and report to the Council, starting in October 2006. In this context, the Council urges the Secretary-General to proceed with the appointment of a gender adviser within the Department of Political Affairs of the Secretariat and to continue to identify women candidates for senior-level positions within the United Nations system, including as special representatives. In this regard, the Council invites Member States to provide the Secretary-General with candidates, as appropriate.

The Council reiterates its call to Member States to continue to implement resolution 1325(2000), including through the development of national action plans or other national level strategies.

The Council welcomes the decision taken in the 2005 World Summit Outcome to establish the Peacebuilding Commission and looks forward to its contribution to the full implementation of resolution 1325(2000), inviting the Commission to pay particular attention to the knowledge and understanding that women can bring, through their participation and empowerment, to peacebuilding processes.

The Council requests the Secretary-General to ensure that all peace accords concluded with United Nations assistance address the specific effects of armed conflict on women and girls, as well as their specific needs and priorities in the post-conflict context. Within this framework, the Council underlines the importance of a broad and inclusive political consultation with various components of civil society, in particular women's organizations and groups.

The Council reaffirms its commitment to integrate gender perspectives into the terms of reference of Council visits and missions and to include gender specialists in its teams wherever possible.

The Council condemns sexual and other forms of violence against women, including trafficking in persons, calls upon all parties to armed conflict to ensure full and effective protection of women and emphasizes the necessity to end impunity of those responsible for gender-based violence.

The Council reiterates its condemnation, in the strongest terms, of all acts of sexual misconduct by all categories of personnel in United Nations peacekeeping missions. The Council welcomes the comprehensive report on sexual exploitation and abuse by United Nations peacekeeping personnel. The Council also welcomes the report of the Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations on its 2005 resumed session and, taking into account General Assembly resolution 59/300, urges the Secretary-General and troop-contributing countries to ensure that the recommendations of the Special Committee which fall within their respective responsibilities are implemented without delay. In this connection, the Council expresses its support to the efforts of the United Nations to fully implement codes of conduct and disciplinary procedures to prevent and respond to sexual exploitation and enhance monitoring and enforcement mechanisms, and notes the strategies and actions included in the system-wide action plan to fully implement those codes of conduct and disciplinary procedures. The Council urges troop-contributing countries to take appropriate preventive action, including conducting predeployment awareness training, and to take disciplinary action and other action to ensure full accountability in cases of misconduct involving their personnel.

Women's health

Women, the girl child and HIV/AIDS

In a March resolution on women, the girl child and HIV/AIDS [E/2005/27 (res. 49/1)], the Commission on the Status of Women stressed that the HIV/AIDS emergency, with its devastating scale and impact, required urgent actions in all fields and at all levels. It welcomed the commitment by the World Health Organization (WHO) and the Joint United Nations Programme on HIV/AIDS (UNAIDS) to work with the international community to support developing countries in achieving the "3 by 5 target" of providing antiretroviral medicines to three million people infected with HIV/AIDS by the end of 2005 (see p. 1325) . It called on Governments to ensure that the necessary resources were made available, in particular from donor countries and also from national budgets, in line with the Declaration of Commitment on HIV/AIDS, adopted by the twenty-sixth session of the General Assembly in resolution S-26/2 [YUN 2001, p. 1126].

The girl child

On 16 December [meeting 64], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/60/505 & Corr.1], adopted resolution 60/141 without vote [agenda item 67].

The girl child

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 58/156 of 22 December 2003 and all relevant resolutions, including the agreed conclusions of the Commission on the Status of Women, in particular those relevant to the girl child,

Reaffirming the equal rights of women and men as enshrined, inter alia, in the Preamble to the Charter of the United Nations, the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women and the Convention on the Rights of the Child,

Recalling all human rights and other instruments relevant to the rights of the child, in particular the girl child, including the Optional Protocols to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the involvement of children in armed conflict and on the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography, and the Protocol to Prevent, Suppress and Punish Trafficking in Persons, Especially Women and Children, supplementing the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime,

Reaffirming the United Nations Millennium Declaration adopted on 8 September 2000, and the commitments relevant to the girl child as contained in the 2005 World Summit Outcome adopted on 16 September 2005,

Reaffirming also the outcome document of the twenty-seventh special session of the General Assembly on children, entitled "A world fit for children", and the Declaration of Commitment on HIV/AIDS adopted at the twenty-sixth special session of the General Assembly on HIV/AIDS, entitled "Global Crisis—Global Action",

Reaffirming further all other relevant outcomes of major United Nations summits and conferences relevant to the girl child, as well as their five- and ten-year reviews, including the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action adopted at the Fourth World Conference on Women, the outcome of the twenty-third special session of the General Assembly entitled "Women 2000: gender equality, development and peace for the twenty-first century", the Programme of Action of the International Conference on Population and Development and the Programme of Action of the World Summit for Social Development, and welcoming the declaration adopted on 4 March 2005 by the Commission on the Status of Women at its forty-ninth session,

Reaffirming the Dakar Framework for Action adopted at the World Education Forum,

Recognizing the efforts of the international community to strengthen the standards for combating sexual abuse and exploitation, and in this regard taking note of the Secretary-General's bulletin on special measures for protection from sexual exploitation and sexual abuse and other policies and codes of conduct developed by the United Nations system to prevent and address such incidents,

Recognizing also the need to achieve gender equality to ensure a just and equitable world for girls,

Deeply concerned about discrimination against the girl child and the violation of the rights of the girl child, which often result in less access for girls to education, nutrition and physical and mental health care and in girls enjoying fewer of the rights, opportunities and benefits of childhood and adolescence than boys and often being subjected to various forms of cultural, social, sexual and economic exploitation and to violence and harmful practices, such as female infanticide, rape, incest, early marriage, forced marriage, prenatal sex selection and female genital mutilation,

Deeply concerned also that, in situations of poverty, war and armed conflict, girl children are among those most affected and that their potential for full development is thus limited,

Concerned that the girl child has furthermore become the victim of rape, sexually transmitted diseases and, increasingly, of HIV, which have a serious impact on the quality of her life and leave her open to further discrimination, violence and neglect,

Emphasizing that increased access to education, including in the areas of sexual and reproductive health, for young people, especially girls, dramatically lowers their vulnerability to preventable diseases, in particular HIV/AIDS infection and sexually transmitted diseases,

Concerned by the increasing number of child-headed households, in particular those headed by orphan girls, including those orphaned by the HIV/AIDS pandemic,

Deeply concerned that early childbearing and limited access to sexual and reproductive health care, including in the area of emergency obstetric care, causes high levels of fistula and maternal mortality and morbidity,

Convinced that racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance reveal themselves in a differentiated manner for women and girls and can be among the factors leading to a deterioration in their living conditions, poverty, violence, multiple forms of discrimination and limitation or denial of their human rights,

1. Stresses the need for full and urgent implementation of the rights of the girl child as guaranteed to her under all human rights instruments, including the Convention on the Rights of the Child and the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, as well as the need for universal ratification of those instruments;

2. Urges States to consider signing, ratifying or acceding to the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women and the Optional Protocols to the Convention on the Rights of the Child;

3. Urges all States to take all necessary measures and to institute legal reforms to ensure the full and equal enjoyment by the girl child of all human rights and fundamental freedoms and to take effective action against violations of those rights and freedoms;

4. Urges all Governments and the United Nations system to strengthen efforts bilaterally and with international organizations and private-sector donors in order to achieve the goals of the World Education Forum, in particular that of eliminating gender disparities in primary and secondary education by 2005, and to implement the United Nations Girls' Education Initiative as a means of reaching this goal, and reaffirms the commitment contained in the United Nations Millennium Declaration in this regard;

5. Calls upon all States to take measures to address the obstacles that continue to affect the achievement of the goals set forth in the Beijing Platform for Action, as contained in paragraph 33 of the further actions and initiatives to implement the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action, where appropriate, including the strengthening of national mechanisms to implement policies and programmes for the girl child and, in some cases, to enhance coordination among responsible institutions for the realization of the human rights of girls, as indicated in the further actions and initiatives;

6. Urges States to enact and strictly enforce laws to ensure that marriage is entered into only with the free and full consent of the intending spouses, to enact and strictly enforce laws concerning the minimum legal age of consent and the minimum age for marriage and to raise the minimum age for marriage where necessary;

7. Also urges States to fulfil their obligations under the Convention on the Rights of the Child and the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, as well as the commitment to implement the Beijing Platform for Action and the outcomes of the twenty-third special session of the General Assembly entitled "Women 2000: gender equality, development and peace for the twenty-first century" and of the twenty-seventh special session on children;

8. Urges all States to promote gender equality and equal access to basic social services, such as education, nutrition, health care, including sexual and reproductive health care, vaccinations and protection from diseases representing the major causes of mortality, and to mainstream a gender perspective in all development policies and programmes;

9. Also urges all States to enact and enforce legislation to protect girls from all forms of violence and exploitation, including female infanticide and prenatal sex selection, female genital mutilation, rape, domestic violence, incest, sexual abuse, sexual exploitation, child prostitution and child pornography, trafficking and forced labour, and to develop age-appropriate safe and confidential programmes and medical, social and psychological support services to assist girls who are subjected to violence;

10. Urges States to formulate comprehensive, multidisciplinary and coordinated national plans, programmes or strategies to eliminate all forms of violence against women and girls, which should be widely disseminated and should provide targets and timetables for implementation, as well as effective domestic enforcement procedures through the establishment of monitoring mechanisms involving all parties concerned, including consultations with women's organizations, giving attention to the recommendations relating to the girl child of the Special Rapporteurs of the Commission on Human Rights on violence against women, its causes and consequences, and on trafficking in persons, especially women and children;

11. Calls upon all States and international and nongovernmental organizations, individually and collectively, to implement further the Beijing Platform for Action, in particular the strategic objectives relating to the girl child, and the further actions and initiatives to implement the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action;

12. Urges States to ensure that the right of children to express themselves and participate in all matters affecting them, in accordance with their age and maturity, is fully and equally enjoyed by girls;

13. Recognizes that a considerable number of children, including orphans, children living on the street, internally displaced and refugee children, children affected by trafficking and sexual and economic exploitation and children who are incarcerated, live without parental support, and in this regard urges States to take special measures to support such children and the institutions, facilities and services that care for them, and to build and strengthen children's abilities to protect themselves;

14. Urges States to take appropriate measures to address the needs of orphan girls by implementing national policies and strategies to build and strengthen governmental, family and community capacities to provide a supportive environment for orphans and girls and boys infected with and affected by HIV/AIDS, including by providing appropriate counselling and psychosocial support, and ensuring their enrolment in school and access to shelter, good nutrition and health and social services on an equal basis with other children; and to protect orphans and vulnerable children from all forms of abuse, violence, exploitation, discrimination, trafficking and loss of inheritance;

15. Also urges States to take special measures for the protection of girls affected by armed conflicts and by post-conflict situations and in particular to protect them from sexually transmitted diseases, such as HIV/AIDS, gender-based violence, including rape and sexual abuse, and sexual exploitation, torture, abduction and forced labour, paying special attention to refugee and displaced girls, and to take into account the special needs of girls affected by armed conflicts in the delivery of humanitarian assistance and disarmament, demobilization, rehabilitation assistance and reintegration processes;

16. Deplores all the cases of sexual exploitation and abuse of women and children, especially girls, in humanitarian crises, including those cases involving humanitarian workers and peacekeepers;

17. Urges all States and the international community to respect, protect and promote the rights of the child, taking into account the particular vulnerabilities of the girl child in pre-conflict, conflict and post-conflict situations, and calls for special initiatives designed to address all of the rights and needs of girls affected by armed conflicts;

18. Calls upon Governments, civil society, including the media, and non-governmental organizations to promote human rights education and the full respect for and enjoyment of the human rights of the girl child, inter alia, through the translation, production and dissemination of age-appropriate and gender-sensitive information material on those rights to all sectors of society, in particular to children;

19. Calls upon States and international and nongovernmental organizations to mobilize all necessary resources, support and efforts to realize the goals, strategic objectives and actions set out in the Beijing Platform for Action and the further actions and initiatives to implement the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action;

20. Requests the Secretary-General, as Chairman of the United Nations System Chief Executives Board for Coordination, to ensure that all organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, individually and collectively, in particular the United Nations Children's Fund, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the World Food Programme, the United Nations Population Fund, the United Nations Development Fund for Women, the World Health Organization, the United Nations Development Programme, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and the International Labour Organization, take into account the rights and the particular needs of the girl child in country programmes of cooperation in accordance with national priorities, including through the United Nations Development Assistance Framework;

21. Requests all human rights treaty bodies, special procedures and other human rights mechanisms of the Commission on Human Rights and its Subcommission on the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights to adopt regularly and systematically a gender perspective in the implementation of their mandates and to include in their reports information on the qualitative analysis of violations of the human rights of women and girls, and encourages the strengthening of cooperation and coordination in that regard;

22. Stresses the importance of a substantive assessment of the implementation of the Beijing Platform for Action with a life-cycle perspective so as to identify gaps and obstacles in the implementation process and to develop further actions for the achievement of the goals of the Platform for Action;

23. Requests Member States to ensure that, in preventing and addressing HIV/AIDS, particular attention and support is given to the girl child infected with and affected by HIV/AIDS, including adolescent mothers;

24. Urges Member States to dramatically increase resources at all levels, particularly in the education and health sectors, to enable young people, especially girls, to gain the knowledge, attitudes and skills that they need to prevent HIV/AIDS and to enjoy the highest attainable standard of physical and mental health, including sexual and reproductive health;

25. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to the General Assembly at its sixty-second session on the implementation of the present resolution, including an emphasis on fistula, using information provided by Member States, the organizations and bodies of the United Nations system and non-governmental organizations, with a view to assessing the impact of the present resolution on the well-being of the girl child.

Women and human rights

Division for the Advancement of Women and OHCHR activities

In January, the Secretary-General submitted a report [E/CN.4/2005/68] (see p. 853) on integrating the human rights of women and the gender perspective throughout the UN system and indicated that it should be read together with the joint workplan of the UN Division for the Advancement of Women and the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR) [E/CN.4/2006/59-E/CN.6/2006/9], which provided a review of the implementation of the joint workplan for 2005 and the plan for 2006.

Special rapporteur on laws that discriminate against women

In a March resolution [E/2005/27 (res. 49/3)] on the appointment of a special rapporteur on laws that discriminate against women, the Commission on the Status of Women indicated that legislative and regulatory gaps, as well as the lack of implementation and enforcement of legislation and regulations had perpetuated inequality and discrimination, and in some cases, new laws discriminating against women had been introduced. It decided to consider, at its fiftieth (2006) session, the advisability of the appointment of a special rapporteur on laws that discriminate against women and requested the Secretary-General to report to the Commission on the implications of the creation of the position, including the views of Member States and relevant UN bodies.

Trafficking in women and girls

In March, the Commission on the Status of Women, in resolution [E/2005/27 (res. 49/2)] on eliminating demand for trafficked women and girls for all forms of exploitation, acknowledged that the majority of trafficked persons were women and girls, particularly from developing countries and countries with economies in transition. It welcomed the appointment of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on trafficking in persons, especially women and children (see p. 853) and called on Governments to take appropriate measures to eliminate the demand for trafficked women and girls. It also encouraged Governments and civil society to increase their efforts to raise public awareness of human trafficking.

Women in Afghanistan

As requested by Economic and Social Council resolution 2004/10 [YUN 2004, p. 1163], the Secretary-General submitted to the Commission a report [E/CN.6/2005/5] on the situation of women and girls in Afghanistan, which contained information on political, social and economic developments affecting Afghan women in 2004, with particular focus on the new Constitution, and on women's participation in the electoral process. It included activities taken by the UN system in support of the Government of Afghanistan towards the advancement of women and gender equality. The Secretary-General reported that the Afghan Constitution, which was finalized in January 2004 [YUN 2004, p. 311], contained a number of articles imposing obligations on the State for the advancement of women. However, it did not include a comprehensive definition of equality and protection from discrimination on the basis of sex, neither did it explicitly address protections to ensure women's right to freely choose a spouse and to citizenship. In preparation for the Afghan elections, 4 million, or 41.3 per cent of the 10.5 million registered voters were women. However, women did not register evenly throughout the country, due to the overall security situation, high levels of illiteracy, cultural restrictions, hostility from male family members and household and family responsibilities. There were numerous reports of women being threatened when they attempted to register. For the presidential election in October, one woman ran as an independent candidate.

To strengthen the capacity for gender mainstreaming within line ministries, the Ministry of Women's Affairs conducted, with UNDP support, training for senior officials from several ministries. A gender adviser was also placed in the Ministry of Rural Rehabilitation and Development and Planning and gender units were to be established in other ministries.

Women and girls were specifically affected by the country's lack of security, limiting their freedom of movement to reach schools, health-care facilities and work. Many of them were subject to violent attacks, especially women government officials, journalists, potential candidates, teachers, NGO activists and humanitarian aid workers. Women and girls continued to be abducted for forced marriage, debt release, dispute settlement and honour crimes. Women's access to the judicial system remained a challenge to addressing violations of their rights. Their access to quality health care was also affected by restrictions on movement, security concerns and the lack of trained female health staff. Maternal mortality rates remained high, especially in Badakhshan province. The Ministry of Health, with the support of UNICEF and NGO partners, was establishing or upgrading one obstetric health facility per province, UNFPA was providing reproductive health kits and WHO was supporting the training of midwives and nurses. In the area of education, UNICEF estimated that 80 per cent of women over 15 years were illiterate and girls accounted for only 34 per cent of total enrolment in schools throughout the country. Further intensified efforts were needed to accelerate the building of schools, increase the number of teachers (especially female teachers), overcome the resistance to girls' education, increase their enrolment rates and support those women and girls who were excluded in the past.

The Secretary-General made a number of recommendations for strengthening the status of women and girls in Afghanistan.

On 22 March, the Commission on the Status of Women took note of the Secretary-General's report [E/2005/27 (dec. 49/103)].

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 21 July [meeting 34], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on the Status of Women [E/2005/27 & Corr.1], adopted resolution 2005/8 without vote [agenda item 14 (a)].

Situation of women and girls in Afghanistan

The Economic and Social Council,

Reaffirming that all States have an obligation to promote and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms and the duty to fulfil the obligations they have undertaken under the various instruments in this field,

Recalling that Afghanistan is a party to several international human rights instruments, including the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women,

Recalling further that the new Constitution states that the citizens of Afghanistan, whether men or women, are equal before the law and that it guarantees the rights of women to serve in the National Assembly,

Recognizing that, in spite of recent improvements, women in Afghanistan continue to face serious violations of their human rights in many parts of the country, in particular in rural areas,

Strongly emphasizing that a safe environment, free from violence, discrimination and abuse, for all Afghans, is essential for a viable and sustainable recovery and reconstruction process,

Stressing the need to integrate a gender perspective when formulating and implementing programmes and policies,

1. Welcomes:

(c) The ongoing security sector reform processes being undertaken by the Government of Afghanistan with the support of the international community, including the demobilization, disarmament and reintegration of former combatants and the recruitment of a new cadre of women police;

(g) The efforts by the Afghan Government to develop a national action plan on gender equality;

2. Also welcomes the report of the Secretary-General to the Commission on the Status of Women on the situation of women and girls in Afghanistan;

3. Urges the Government of Afghanistan:

(a) To fully implement the Constitution and all international treaties to which Afghanistan is a State party, including the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women;

(b) To ensure that legislative, administrative and other measures support the full enjoyment by women and girls of human rights and fundamental freedoms, including by mainstreaming gender issues into policies and programmes at all levels, and to organize sustained awareness-raising campaigns on the equality of women and men;

(c) To enable the full, equal and effective participation of women and girls in civil, cultural, economic, political and social life throughout the country at all levels;

(d) To ensure that women, including through ensuring women's security, are able to register, run for office, campaign and vote in the upcoming National Assembly elections scheduled for 2005;

(e) To strengthen women's economic empowerment and their access to income-generating activities, credit, means of production, technology and resources, inter alia, by guaranteeing the property and inheritance rights of women and girls;

Palestinian women

In response to Economic and Social Council resolution 2004/56 [YUN 2004, p. 484], the Secretary-General reported [E/CN.6/2005/4] to the Commission on the Status of Women on the situation of and assistance to Palestinian women during the period from October 2003 to September 2004 (see p. 533). The Commission took note of the Secretary-General's report on 22 March [E/2005/27 (dec. 49/103)].

On 26 July, the Council took action on the situation of and assistance to Palestinian women in resolution 2005/43 (see p. 534).

Women and development

In response to General Assembly resolution 58/206 [YUN 2003, p.1178], the Secretary-General submitted a July report [A/60/162 & Corr.1] on the impact of globalization on women's employment and empowerment, which reviewed the benefits and challenges faced by women as a result of service sector growth. It examined the gender perspectives of the World Trade Organization's General Agreement on Trade in Services and provided examples of activities to promote gender equality in the service sector, based on contributions from UN system entities.

The Secretary-General observed that, although the service sector had provided women with increased job opportunities, including in non-traditional sectors, such as information and communication technology and tourism, women continued to predominate in the traditionally female sectors of health and education. However, the impacts of globalization were complex and inequalities between men and women, including in terms of access to and control over productive resources and access to technology and market information, could limit women's employment options and restrict their participation in economic decision-making. An enabling environment should be created to ensure that both women and men could take advantage of globalization. He proposed for the Assembly's consideration a series of recommendations on gender equality in the economy, including developing policies, to enable both men and women to benefit from opportunities in the service sector and mitigate the negative effects on women; the gender wage gaps and segmentation of the labour market and improving the women's employment security; and identifying and addressing the gender perspectives of trade liberalization in the private sector and receiving national policies and practices to eliminate discrimination against migrant women's employment in the service sector.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December [meeting 68], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/60/492/Add.2], adopted resolution 60/210 without vote [agenda item 56 (b)].

Women in development

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 52/195 of 18 December 1997, 54/210 of 22 December 1999, 56/188 of 21 December 2001, 58/206 of 23 December 2003 and 59/248 of 22 December 2004 and all its other resolutions on the integration of women in development, and the relevant resolutions and agreed conclusions adopted by the Commission on the Status of Women, including the Declaration adopted at its forty-ninth session,

Reaffirming the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action and the outcome of the twenty-third special session of the General Assembly, entitled "Women 2000: gender equality, development and peace for the twenty-first century", and recalling the outcomes of all other relevant major United Nations conferences and summits,

Reaffirming also the United Nations Millennium Declaration, which affirms that the equal rights and opportunities of women and men must be assured, and calls for, inter alia, the promotion of gender equality and the empowerment of women as being effective and essential to eradicating poverty and hunger, in combating diseases and in stimulating development that is truly sustainable,

Recognizing that access to basic affordable health care, preventive health information and the highest standard of health, including in the areas of sexual and reproductive health, is critical to women's economic advancement, that lack of economic empowerment and independence increases women's vulnerability to a range of negative consequences, including the risk of contracting HIV/AIDS, and that the neglect of the full enjoyment of human rights by women severely limits their opportunities in public and private life, including the opportunity for education and economic and political empowerment,

Reaffirming that gender equality is of fundamental importance for achieving sustained economic growth, poverty eradication and sustainable development, in accordance with the relevant General Assembly resolutions and United Nations conferences, and that investing in the development of women and girls has a multiplier effect, in particular on productivity, efficiency and sustained economic growth, in all sectors of the economy, especially in key areas such as agriculture, industry and services,

Reaffirming also the significant contribution that women make to the economy, that women are key contributors to the economy and to combating poverty through both remunerated and unremunerated work at home, in the community and in the workplace and that the empowerment of women is a critical factor in the eradication of poverty,

Recognizing that the difficult socio-economic conditions that exist in many developing countries, in particular the least developed countries, have resulted in the acceleration of the feminization of poverty,

Recognizing also that population and development issues, education and training, health, nutrition, the environment, water supply, sanitation, housing, communications, science and technology, and employment opportunities are important elements for effective poverty eradication and the advancement and empowerment of women,

Recognizing further, in this context, the importance of respect for all human rights, including the right to development, and of a national and international environment that promotes, inter alia, justice, gender equality, equity, civil and political participation and civil, political and fundamental freedoms for the advancement and empowerment of women,

Reaffirming the need to eliminate gender disparities in primary and secondary education by the earliest possible date and at all levels by 2015 and that equal access to education and training at all levels, in particular, inter alia, in business, trade, administration, information and communication technologies and other new technologies, as well as the need to eliminate gender inequalities at all levels, are essential for gender equality, the empowerment of women and poverty eradication and to allow women's full and equal contribution to, and equal opportunity to benefit from, development,

Recognizing that poverty eradication and the achievement and preservation of peace are mutually reinforcing, and recognizing also that peace is inextricably linked to equality between women and men and to development,

Aware that, while globalization and liberalization processes have created employment opportunities for women in many countries, they have also made women, especially in developing countries and in particular in the least developed countries, more vulnerable to problems caused by increased economic volatility, including in the agricultural sector, and that special support, particularly for women who are small-scale farmers, and empowerment are necessary to enable them to take advantage of the opportunities of agricultural market liberalization,

Recognizing that enhanced trade opportunities for developing countries, including through trade liberalization, will improve the economic condition of those societies, including women, which is of particular importance in rural communities,

Expressing its concern that, while women represent an important and growing proportion of business owners, their contribution to economic and social development is constrained by, inter alia, the denial and lack of equal rights and access of women to education, training, information, support services and credit facilities, and control over land, capital, technology and other areas of production,

Also expressing its concern about the underrepresentation of women in political and economic decision-making, and stressing the importance of mainstreaming a gender perspective in the formulation, implementation and evaluation of all policies and programmes,

Noting the importance of the organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, in particular its funds and programmes, including the United Nations Development Fund for Women, in facilitating the advancement of women in development, and noting the work done by the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;

6. Acknowledges that the gender segmentation of the labour market creates an additional challenge for women in the economy, restricting opportunities for them in sectors traditionally dominated by men, and calls upon Governments and all other stakeholders, where appropriate, to make further efforts to address the gender wage gaps and gender segmentation of the labour market and to improve the conditions and security of women's employment in all sectors of the economy;

7. Calls upon all Governments to incorporate a gender perspective in all policies on international migration, including, inter alia, for the protection of women migrants from violence, discrimination, trafficking, exploitation and abuse;

9. Recognizes the mutually reinforcing links between gender equality and poverty eradication, as well as the need to elaborate and implement, where appropriate, in consultation with civil society, comprehensive gender-sensitive poverty eradication strategies that address social, structural and macroeconomic issues;

10. Recognizes also that violence against women and girls is one of the obstacles to the achievement of the objectives of equality, development and peace and the implications of violence against women and girls for the social and economic development of communities and States, and calls upon States to elaborate and implement, at all appropriate levels, plans of action to eliminate violence against women and girls;

11. Recognizes further the need to strengthen the capacity of Governments to incorporate a gender perspective in policies and decision-making, and encourages all Governments, international organizations, including the United Nations system, and other relevant stakeholders to assist and support developing countries in integrating a gender perspective in all aspects of policymaking, including through the provision of technical assistance and financial resources;

12. Stresses the importance of developing national strategies for the promotion of sustainable and productive entrepreneurial activities that will generate income among disadvantaged women and women living in poverty;

13. Urges all Governments to ensure women's equal rights with men and their full and equal access to education, training, employment, technology and economic and financial resources, including credit, in particular for rural women and women in the informal sector, and to facilitate, where appropriate, the transition of women from the informal to the formal sector;

14. Encourages Governments, the private sector, non-governmental organizations and other actors of civil society to promote and protect the rights of women workers, to take action to remove structural and legal barriers as well as stereotypical attitudes to gender equality at work and to initiate positive steps to promote equal pay for equal work or work of equal value;

15. Urges all Governments to take all appropriate measures to eliminate discrimination against women with regard to their access to bank loans, mortgages and other forms of financial credit, giving special attention to poor, uneducated women, and to support women's access to legal assistance;

16. Calls upon Governments and entrepreneurial associations to facilitate the access of women, including young women and women entrepreneurs, to education and training in business, administration and information and communication technologies;

17. Recognizes the role of microfinance, including microcredit, in the eradication of poverty, the empowerment of women and the generation of employment, notes in this regard the importance of sound national financial systems, and encourages the strengthening of existing and emerging microcredit institutions and their capacities, including through the support of international financial institutions;

18. Stresses the need for assistance to enable women in developing countries, particularly grass-roots women's groups, to have full access to and use of new technologies, including information technologies, for their empowerment;

19. Urges States to design and revise laws that ensure that women are accorded full and equal rights to own land and other property, including through inheritance, and to undertake administrative reforms and other necessary measures to give women the same right as men to credit, capital and appropriate technologies and access to markets and information;

20. Calls upon Governments to encourage the financial sector to mainstream gender perspectives in its policies and programmes;

21. Also calls upon Governments to promote, inter alia, through legislation and family-friendly and gender-sensitive work environments, the facilitation of breastfeeding for working mothers and the provision of the necessary care for working women's children and other dependants and to consider promoting policies and programmes, as appropriate, to enable men and women to reconcile their work, social and family responsibilities;

22. Recognizes the need to empower women economically and politically, particularly poor women, and in this regard encourages Governments, with the support of their development partners, to invest in appropriate infrastructure and other projects, as well as to create opportunities for economic empowerment, in order to alleviate for women and girls the burden of time-consuming everyday tasks;

23. Expresses its concern that the HIV/AIDS pandemic reinforces gender inequalities, that women and girls bear a disproportionate share of the burden imposed by the HIV/AIDS crisis, that they are more easily infected, that they play a key role in care and that they have become more vulnerable to poverty as a result of the HIV/AIDS crisis;

24. Reaffirms the commitment to achieve universal access to reproductive health by 2015, as set out at the International Conference on Population and Development, integrating this goal in strategies to attain the internationally agreed development goals, including those contained in the United Nations Millennium Declaration aimed at reducing maternal mortality, improving maternal health, reducing child mortality, promoting gender equality, combating HIV/AIDS and eradicating poverty;

27. Recognizes that a substantial increase in official development assistance and other resources will be required if developing countries are to achieve the internationally agreed development goals and objectives, including those contained in the Millennium Declaration, and that in order to build support for official development assistance, cooperation will be needed in further improving policies and development strategies, both nationally and internationally, to enhance aid effectiveness;

28. Encourages the international community, the United Nations system, the private sector and civil society to continue to provide the necessary financial resources to assist national Governments in their efforts to meet the development targets and benchmarks agreed upon at the World Summit for Social Development, the Fourth World Conference on Women, the International Conference on Population and Development, the Millennium Summit, the International Conference on Financing for Development, the World Summit on Sustainable Development, the Second World Assembly on Ageing, the twenty-third and twenty-fourth special sessions of the General Assembly and other relevant United Nations conferences and summits;

30. Urges Governments to create and maintain a non-discriminatory and gender-sensitive legal environment by reviewing legislation, with a view to striving to remove discriminatory provisions as soon as possible and eliminating legislative gaps that leave women and girls without protection of their rights and without effective recourse against gender-based discrimination, and encourages assistance to countries in achieving this aim;

Situation of women in rural areas

The Secretary-General submitted an October report [A/60/165] on the improvement of the situation of women in rural areas, in response to General Assembly resolution 58/146 [YUN 2003, p. 1181]. The report focused on women's empowerment, including in relation to access to education and training; control over resources; participation in decision-making processes; changes in household structure; and the impact of HIV/AIDS, migration and information and communication technologies. He also reported on activities undertaken by UN system organizations to respond to the challenges facing rural women by implementing policies and programmes addressing different aspects of their situation, such as land ownership, microfinance, access to markets and trade, trafficking and knowledge-sharing, education and training.

The Secretary-General concluded that the process of globalization had direct and indirect effects on the empowerment of rural women. Benefits included increased opportunities for off-farm activities, wage employment in non-agricultural sectors and participation in local decision-making and networking, including through information and communication technologies. On the other hand, rural women continued to experience the effects of unequal household divisions of labour, inaccessible education and health services, discriminatory and stereotypical attitudes and practices and violence. He stressed that the situation of rural women should be given explicit attention in the context of the High-level Plenary Meeting of the General Assembly (see p. 47), as well as, in the World Summit on the Information Society in Tunis, Tunisia (see p. 933). He emphasized the need for Governments, UN entities and other relevant stakeholders to support legislation, policies and programmes that strengthened the positive effects of globalization on the empowerment of rural women and made recommendations on specific interventions that could be undertaken towards that end.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December [meeting 64], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/60/503], adopted resolution 60/138 without vote [agenda item 64].

Eradication of poverty

In an 18 May letter [A/60/79] to the Secretary-General and the General Assembly President, Qatar announced the establishment of a trust fund for non-governmental organizations (NGOs) to assist them in strengthening their capacities to eradicate poverty, ameliorate the livelihood of poor families and communities, and reinforce the role of women in sustainable development.

On 9 June [A/60/84], Burkina Faso transmitted to the Secretary-General the Plan of Action for Promotion and Employment and Poverty Alleviation, adopted at the extraordinary session of the African Union on employment and poverty alleviation (Ouagadougou, Burkina Faso, 3-9 September 2004). One of the 11 key priority areas identified for reversing the trend of persistent poverty and unemployment, included the empowerment of women by integrating them into labour markets and enabling them to participate in the development of poverty reduction strategies, policies and programmes.

Gender Advisory Board

On 26 May [E/2005/31], the Commission on Science and Technology for Development at its eighth session (23-27 May) (see p. 929) considered the mandate of the Gender Advisory Board, an expert group established in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 849] by the Commission to facilitate its future deliberations on the gender implications of science and technology for developing countries.

The Council, by decision 2005/307 of 27 July, extended the Board's mandate as recommended.

Economic advancement for women

The Commission on the Status of Women adopted a March resolution [E/2005/27 (res. 49/8)] on the economic advancement for women, in which it noted that hundreds of millions of women and girls worldwide lived in poverty, with the majority living in rural areas where their livelihoods were dependent upon subsistence and small-holder agriculture and employment in the informal sector. The Commission, among other actions, called on Member States to strengthen efforts to implement national and international commitments that would advance women's equality; promote gender mainstreaming in all phases of economic and social policy development. It further requested them to build the capacity for the effective collection, dissemination and analysis of gender-sensitive statistical indicators and statistics that were disaggregated by sex and other relevant factors to facilitate better policy development, monitoring and evaluation of the economic and social advancement of women. The Commission also requested the Secretary-General to report on the implementation of the resolution at its fiftieth (2006) session.

Post-disaster relief and reconstruction

In a resolution [E/2005/27(res. 49/5)] on integrating a gender perspective in post-disaster relief, recovery, rehabilitation and reconstruction efforts, the Commission on the Status of Women, citing the Hyogo Framework for Action 2005-2015, adopted by the World Conference on Disaster Reduction (see p. 1015), which recognized that a gender perspective should be integrated into all disaster risk-management policies and stressing that women and children account for the majority of those adversely affected by natural disasters and their aftermath, called on UN entities and international and local humanitarian relief organizations to strengthen the gender dimensions of their responses to disaster situations. It also called on Governments to involve women in all levels of decision-making in disaster situations and to take the particular needs of women and girls into account. The Commission requested the Secretary-General to report on UN coordinated efforts to integrate gender dimensions in situations of natural disasters, including the Indian Ocean tsunami disaster, in his reports to the General Assembly at its sixtieth (2005) session.

Indigenous women

In a March resolution [E/2005/27 (res. 49/7)] on indigenous women: beyond the ten-year review of the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action, the Commission on the Status of Women welcomed the fact that the theme of the third session of the Permanent Forum of Indigenous Issues [YUN 2004, p. 798] focused on indigenous women and took note of the recommendations, which emphasized equality, non-discrimination, the diversity of cultural identities and social organization of indigenous women and girls. It called on Governments, intergovernmental agencies, the private sector and civil society to ensure the full participation of indigenous women in all aspects of society.

Institutional mechanisms for the advancement of women

Inter-Agency Network. The United Nations Inter-Agency Network on Women and Gender Equality (IANWGE), at its fourth annual session (New York, 22-25 February) [IANWGE/2005/REPORT], endorsed decisions and recommendations made by task forces and working groups regarding the integrated and coordinated follow-up to major conferences on women as they related to the ten-year review of the Beijing Platform for Action at the forty-ninth session of the Commission on the Status of Women and beyond; the five-year review of the Millennium Declaration and the MDGs; gender statistics and indicators; human rights issues; human resources and the status of women in the UN system; women, peace and security; mainstreaming a gender perspective in the common country assessment/United Nations Development Assistance Framework (CCA/UNDAF); WomenWatch; gender and trade; gender and water; indigenous women; gender mainstreaming in evaluation, monitoring and programme reporting; and the ten-year review of the Beijing Platform for Action. The Network held a workshop entitled "Ten-year review of gender mainstreaming: focusing on results". On IANWGE methods of work, Network members concurred that the agenda covered too many areas, with insufficient time to analyse each issue. To allow for increased interaction among members and presenters and utilization of shared analyses on emerging issues, it recommended that the IANWGE agenda for its fifth (2006) session should correspond to that of the Commission on the Status of Women session for that year. Suggestions were also made on changing IANWGE timing to a much earlier date than the Commission on the Status of Women, reducing the duration of the meeting to three days and meeting in a location other than New York. The Network also made recommendations on the work methods of the task forces.

Report of Secretary-General. Responding to Commission resolution 48/4 [YUN 2004, p. 1167], the Secretary-General submitted a report [E/CN.6/2005/3] on measures taken and progress achieved in the follow-up to the Fourth World Conference on Women and to the General Assembly's twenty-third special session in mainstreaming a gender perspective throughout the UN system. The report provided information on achievements, lessons learned and best practices based on an analysis of inputs received from UN system entities.

The Secretary-General observed that many UN entities had shifted towards a more comprehensive approach to achieving gender equality, through the adoption of gender-sensitive policies, procedures and programming. Entities had developed institutional mechanisms to facilitate implementation and some of them incorporated gender perspectives into results-based planning and budgeting. Gender equality was increasingly incorporated into UN system programmes and operational activities. The Department of Public Information had raised awareness of gender equality, and several trust funds were established to support gender equality activities. Constraints to full implementation of gender mainstreaming included high staff turnover; scepticism with regard to gender issues; lack of incentive to participate in training; underdeveloped reporting, monitoring and evaluation mechanisms; the lack of data disaggregated by sex; and the limited inclusion of existing data into mainstream statistical analysis. Lack of accountability and of financial resources were major challenges to effective implementation. The Secretary-General made recommendations to the Commission for encouraging UN entities to develop action plans with measurable goals and targets; establish mechanisms for holding staff and senior managers accountable for results; make gender training mandatory for all staff; and increase the exchange of experiences, good practices and lessons learned among entities of the UN system, as well as Governments and civil society.

Commission on the Status of Women. In March [E/2005/27 (res. 49/4)], the Commission on the Status of Women called on the international community, including the UN system and other regional organizations, to support Government efforts to strengthen their national mechanisms for gender mainstreaming; encourage donor and development agencies to include assistance activities for strengthening national machineries in their programmes; provide technical cooperation and other assistance to developing countries; and facilitate the sharing of information on guidelines, methodologies and best practices. It also requested that the Secretary-General report on progress in mainstreaming a gender perspective in the development, implementation and evaluation of national policies and programmes at the Commission's fiftieth (2006) session.

Further report of Secretary-General. Pursuant to Economic and Social Council resolution 2004/4 [YUN 2004, p. 1167] on the review of agreed conclusions 1997/2 on mainstreaming a gender perspective into all UN system policies and programmes, the Secretary-General submitted an April report [E/2005/54] on follow-up to the Fourth World Conference, which was based on the inputs of UN system bodies and organizations. The report outlined gaps between policy and practice and focused on action plans and other measures to promote gender mainstreaming. Approximately one fourth of the responding entities had adopted gender mainstreaming action plans and many of those that lacked corporate or overall action plans were guided by gender mainstreaming policies, strategies or frameworks, with the intent to draw up action plans in the future. The report concluded that, in response to the outcome of the review of the agreed conclusions 1997/2, UN entities continued to identify gaps between policy and practice in gender mainstreaming in their respective areas. Steps taken by entities to address those challenges, including the adoption of gender mainstreaming action plans, had been instrumental in moving them beyond policy formulation and towards implementation. Recommendations to the Council included encouraging UN entities to develop action plans with clear guidelines on the implementation of gender mainstreaming in policies and programmes; fully incorporate gender perspectives into programme budgets, multi-year funding frameworks and all results-based budgeting processes, as well as operational mechanisms; and strengthen accountability systems for all staff for gender mainstreaming, including through performance appraisals. The need to further develop and institutionalize monitoring and evaluation tools and gender impact analysis methodologies and to ensure the collection and use of sex-disaggregated data was also emphasized.

UNDP consideration. In response to United Nations Development Programme/United Nations Population Fund (UNDP/UNFPA) Executive Board decisions 2004/21, 2004/22 and 2004/38 [YUN 2004, p. 1167], UNDP presented respectively, its corporate gender strategy and action plan [DP/2005/7 & Corr.1], the UNDP gender mainstreaming scorecard [ibid.] and an update [DP/2005/CRP.2] on progress achieved in the partnership between UNDP and UNIFEM. The Executive Board requested UNDP to develop the gender action plan through 2007, including the results matrix, and to report on the medium-term action plan in 2006, building on the management response to the independent gender evaluation [E/2005/35 (dec. 2005/27)].

Convention on the elimination of discrimination against women

As at 31 December 2005, 180 States were parties to the 1979 Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 34/180 [YUN 1979, p. 895]. During the year, Monaco acceded to the Convention. At year's end, 47 States parties had also accepted the amendment to article 20, paragraph 1, of the Convention in respect of the meeting time of the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women, which was adopted by the States parties in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 1178]. The amendment would enter into force when accepted by a two-thirds majority of States parties.

The Optional Protocol to the Convention, adopted by the Assembly in resolution 54/4 [YUN 1999, p. 1100] and which entered into force in 2000 [YUN 2000, p. 1123], had 74 States parties as at 31 December 2005.

The Secretary-General submitted his annual report to the Assembly on the status of the Convention as at 31 July [A/60/206].

CEDAW

In 2005, the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW), established in 1982 [YUN 1982, p. 1149] to monitor compliance with the 1979 Convention, held two regular sessions in New York [A/60/38].

At its thirty-second session (10-28 January), CEDAW reviewed the initial or periodic reports of Algeria, Croatia, Gabon, Italy, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Paraguay, Samoa and Turkey on measures they had taken to implement the Convention. CEDAW considered a Secretariat report on ways to expedite work [CEDAW/C/2005/I/4] and a report on the status of submission of reports by States parties under article 18 of the Convention, including a list of reports that had been submitted but not considered by the Committee [CEDAW/C/2005/I/2]. Three specialized agencies, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO), the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) and the International Labour Organization (ILO) had submitted reports in accordance with article 22 of the Convention [CEDAW/C/2004/I/3 & Add.1, 3 & 4]. By two decisions, CEDAW adopted statements on the occasion of the ten-year review and appraisal of the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action, to be brought to the attention of the forty-ninth session of the Commission on the Status of Women [A/60/38 (dec. 32/I)]; and on the gender aspects of the 2004 Indian Ocean tsunami disaster [YUN 2004, p. 952] [ibid. (dec. 32/II)]. In other actions, the Committee, in respect of issues arising from article 2 of the Optional Protocol, adopted views under article 7, paragraph 3, of the Optional Protocol (annexed to the report) and continued its work under article 8 of the Optional Protocol. In a summary of the Committee's activities concerning the inquiry into allegations of abduction, rape and murder of women in the Ciudad Juárez area of Chihuahua, Mexico, the Committee reiterated its 2004 decision [YUN 2004, p. 1170] to issue at a future date the substantive findings and recommendations emanating from its inquiry, which the Committee issued, together with the Mexican Government's observations, on 27 January [CEDAW/C/2005/OP8/Mexico]. The Committee requested the Government of Mexico to submit additional information on the follow-up to the Committee's recommendations, by 1 May. It invited the three NGOs that had submitted the information that led to the Committee's decision to conduct an inquiry and provide their views in a report to the Committee, also by that date, particularly their evaluation of the Government's actions in response to the Committee's findings and recommendations. It decided to consider Mexico's follow-up response, together with any information received from NGOs at its thirty-third session.

At its thirty-third session (5-22 July), CEDAW reviewed the initial or periodic reports of Benin, Burkina Faso, the Gambia, Guyana, Ireland, Israel, the Democratic People's Republic of Korea and Lebanon. It also considered reports on implementation of article 21 of the Convention [CEDAW/C/ 2005/II/3 and Add.1, 3 & 4] and on ways of expediting the Committee's work [CEDAW/C/2005/II/2, CEDAW/C/2005/II/4]. The Committee requested the General Assembly: to authorize it to hold three annual sessions of three weeks each, with a one-week, pre-sessional working group for each session, effective January 2006; to meet on a temporary basis in 2006 and 2007, for part of its three annual sessions, in parallel working groups, to consider reports of States parties submitted under article 18 of the Convention; and to meet for up to seven days in parallel working groups during its third (2006), first and third (2007) annual sessions. The Committee intended to evaluate its experience, as well as the need for parallel working groups in July and August 2007. It further requested the Assembly to continue to authorize two annual sessions of the Working Group on Communications under the Optional Protocol to the Convention [A/60/38 (dec. 33/I)]. The Committee also adopted a statement on the situation of women in Iraq [ibid. (dec. 33/II)].

In other action, the Committee, in respect of issues arising from article 2 of the Optional Protocol, took note of the reports of the Working Group on Communications under the Optional Protocol on its fifth and sixth sessions (annexed to the report), and continued its work under article 8 of the Optional Protocol. Acting under article 9, paragraph 2 of the Optional Protocol, the Committee considered information received from Mexico on measures taken in response to its recommendations concerning killing and abduction of women in the Ciudad Juárez area of Mexico, as well as from the three NGOs that had submitted the information that led the Committee to conduct an inquiry (see above). The Committee invited the Government of Mexico to include in its sixth periodic report, to be submitted by November 2005, details of any further measures taken in response to the Committee's findings, comments and recommendations.

In July, the Economic and Social Council took note of the report of CEDAW on the work of its thirty-second and thirty-third sessions by decision 2005/296.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 23 December [meeting 69], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/60/503], adopted resolution 60/230 by recorded vote (127-1-0) [agenda item 64].

It also recommended a draft decision for Council adoption on its report of the forty-ninth (2005) session and the provisional agenda for the fiftieth (2006) session (see below). The Commission also adopted and brought to the attention of the Council a declaration on the occasion of the tenth-anniversary of the Fourth World Conference on Women and resolutions on women, the girl child and HIV/AIDS (see p. 1256); eliminating demand for trafficked women and girls (see p. 1259); appointing a special rapporteur on laws that discriminated against women (see p. 1259); mainstreaming a gender perspective into all national policies and programmes (see p. 1270); integrating a gender perspective in post-disaster relief, recovery, rehabilitation and reconstructive efforts (see p. 1268); strengthening of the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women (INSTRAW) (see p. 1278); indigenous women (see p. 1268); and the economic advancement of women (see p. 1268). The Commission further adopted three decisions, which were brought to the Council's attention: one regarding the proposed 2006-2007 work programme of the Office of the Special Adviser on Gender Issues and Advancement of Women and the Division for the Advancement of Women 2006-2007 [dec. 49/102]; one to continue discussion of the Commission's working methods at its fiftieth (2006) session [dec. 49/101]; and one taking note of documents before it [dec. 49/103], among them the UNIFEM report on the elimination of violence against women [E/CN.6/2005/7-E/CN.4/2005/70] and the joint workplan of the Division for the Advancement of Women and OHCHR [E/CN.4/2005/69-E/CN.6/2005/6].

By decision 2005/299 of 26 July, the Council took note of the Commission's report on its forty-ninth session and approved the provisional agenda for its fiftieth (2006) session.

Communications on the status of women

Working Group. At two meetings, one in February and a second in March [E/2005/27], the Commission considered the report [E/CN.6/2005/CRP.5] of the Working Group, which considered 18 confidential communications received directly by the Division for the Advancement of Women (including one communication with allegations of 40 separate instances of discriminatory legislation) and three confidential communications received by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR). No non-confidential communications were received. The Group noted that one communication that had been selected from the 1503 procedure material covered the same case as a communication that had been submitted directly to the Division. The Working Group also noted that Governments had replied to five of the 18 communications received and to all three of those transmitted by OHCHR. Replies were received alleging discriminatory legislation in 40 separate States. Communications were most frequently submitted on sexual violence against women; abduction and rape of young women by private individuals and the failure to provide protection and assistance to victims or investigate such cases; other forms of violence against women, including honour crimes, dowry-related violence and forced marriage and marital rape; threatening or pressuring victims of violence to retract complaints, and arbitrary prosecution and punishment of victims; torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment and violations of the rights to freedom of expression, association and movement, as well as the right to participate in political and public life; abuse of power, lack of due process, arbitrary detention and failure to grant a fair trial and inhumane treatment in detention; differential application of punishments in law based on sex without the right to appeal; and violations of human rights of women belonging to minorities. The Working Group was concerned about the climate of impunity in many cases where violence against women was perpetrated by security forces and police and the lack of commitment by some States to tackle impunity; their failure to exercise due diligence to prevent violence against women and adequately investigate crimes and punish perpetrators; the large number of cases where women victims and/or their family members who made complaints were pressured into retracting their statements or where victims were arbitrarily punished or detained instead of receiving redress for crimes committed against them; and the existence of legislation or practices intended to or with the effect of discriminating against women, despite the international obligations and commitment of States and their constitutional provisions to outlaw such discrimination. From the replies received, the Working Group noted that a number of Governments had already taken or were taking measures to repeal discriminatory laws.

UN Development Fund for Women (UNIFEM)

In June, the Executive Board of the United Nations Development Programme and of the United Nations Population Fund (UNDP/UNFPA), by decision [E/2005/35 (dec. 2005/22)], took note of the midterm report on the UNIFEM multi-year funding framework (MYFF), 2004-2007 [DP/2005/24] and encouraged UNIFEM to continue to track the progress of its MYFF according to the goals, outcomes and indicators in its results frameworks. It also encouraged countries to assist UNIFEM in reaching the targeted level of regular resources, including through multi-year pledges. In September [ibid. (dec. 2005/34)], the Board took note of the June report of the UNDP Administrator on the 2006-2007 budget estimates for UNIFEM [DP/2005/31] and approved a gross appropriation in the amount of $16,374,400 for UNIFEM.

Independent assessment. In 2004, the UNIFEM Consultative Committee submitted the report [A/60/62-E/2005/10] on an independent assessment of UNIFEM it had commissioned in 2004 [YUN 2004, p. 1172] entitled "Organizational Assessment: UNIFEM Past, Present and Future". The report examined a number of challenges facing UNIFEM, including the ambiguity in its autonomy, authority, status, resources and key constituencies. It made proposals for a stronger UNIFEM by enabling it to follow the course taken by UNFPA.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 27 July [meeting 40], the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 2005/54 [draft: E/2005/L.44] without vote [agenda item 14 (a)].

United Nations Development Fund for Women

The Economic and Social Council,

Recognizing that mainstreaming a gender perspective into all aspects of the work of the United Nations is an ongoing process and that further concrete steps are required, as a matter of urgency, to ensure full implementation of its agreed conclusions 1997/2 of 18 July 1997, and its resolution 2004/4 of 7 July 2004,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 39/125 of 14 December 1984, in which the Assembly set forth the arrangements for association between the United Nations Development Fund for Women and the United Nations Development Programme,

Recalling also General Assembly resolution 59/250 of 22 December 2004, in which the Assembly called upon the United Nations development system to avail itself of the technical experience of the United Nations Development Fund for Women on gender issues,

Invites the Executive Board of the United Nations Development Programme to consider the report on the organizational assessment of the United Nations Development Fund for Women, as appropriate, in 2006.

UNIFEM activities. In 2005 [A/61/292], UNIFEM continued to focus on the implementation of its 2004-2007 MYFF, which contained a strategic results framework that highlighted the four key UNIFEM goals: reducing feminized poverty and exclusion; ending violence against women; halting and reversing the spread of HIV/AIDS; and achieving gender equality in democratic governance and in post-conflict countries. Reports from the second year of implementation of MYFF 2004-2007 indicated that UNIFEM provided support for legislative and policy change to strengthen gender equality through initiatives in more than 30 countries; strengthened the capacity of national and local partners to institutionalize tools, such as sex-disaggregated data in 39 instances and gender-responsive budgets in 20 countries; expanded the capacity of regional networks of gender equality advocates, such as ministries of gender or women's affairs in some 55 instances; supported women as candidates or parliamentarians in 16 countries; increased the reach of media organizations and professionals that generated messages in support of gender equality in 23 countries; and contributed to the establishment of more than 30 institutional mechanisms to address gender-based violence.

A UNIFEM task team worked with a UNDP management consultant team to conduct functional analyses and identify priorities for alignment and harmonization measures. UNIFEM will prioritize the strengthening of its human and operational capacities in early 2006.

In 2005, UNIFEM total income reached a record high of $57.6 million. It exceeded its overall multi-year funding framework target of $43.4 million. Core contributions in 2005 stood at $22 million, against the $25.4 million anticipated in the framework. In 2005, a total of 42 bilateral donors contributed to UNIFEM core funds, compared to 43 in 2004.

By decision 60/547 of 22 December, the General Assembly took note of the report [A/60/274] on UNIFEM's 2004 activities [YUN 2004, p. 1172], transmitted by the Secretary-General in August.

INSTRAW

The report of the Executive Board of the United Nations International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women (INSTRAW) (second session, New York, 1 June) [E/2005/75] provided a review of the implementation of the programme of work during the period October 2004–May 2005; the presentation of the proposed workplan, operational budget for 2006; and consideration of matters relating to fund-raising activities. The Board approved the proposed workplan, endorsed the operational budget for 2006 and agreed to consider recommendations for submission to the General Assembly regarding financial support for the Institute. It also agreed on the importance of seeking medium-term sustainable financial resources for the Institute and requested the Executive Director, in consultation with the UN Secretariat and the Board's President, to prepare a detailed report, including actions the Board could take and proposals for achieving the medium- and long-term sustainability of the Institute, and to consider recommendations to be submitted to the Assembly in 2006.

In July, by decision 2005/296, the Economic and Social Council took note of the report of the INSTRAW Executive Board.

Commission on the Status of Women. In a March resolution [E/2005/27 (res. 49/6)] on the revitalization and strengthening of INSTRAW, the Commission on the Status of Women welcomed INSTRAW's contributions to the ten-year review and appraisal of the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action and the outcome of the twenty-third session. It invited voluntary contributions by Member States to the UN Trust Fund for INSTRAW. The Commission requested the Executive Director of the Institute to report to the Commission at its fiftieth (2006) session on the implementation of its work programme and strategic plan 2004-2007, in particular as it related to the follow-up to the Fourth World Conference.

OIOS report. In August [A/60/281], the Office of Internal Oversight Services (OIOS) transmitted a report on the follow-up audit it conducted in December 2004 to determine the implementation status of recommendations contained in a previous OIOS report on the audit of INSTRAW [YUN 2002, p. 1165], which addressed issues concerning the sustainability and effectiveness of the Institute. The follow-up audit revealed that, although the establishment of an executive board had resulted in some improvements in the INSTRAW governance structure, further strengthening of programmatic and administrative oversight was needed. Concerns included inadequate documentation and the need for updated materials on the implementation of INSTRAW's work programme; the need to implement a training strategy and to improve website management; and non-performance on the OIOS recommendation to abolish the Institute's autonomous status, which had not been reflected in the revised INSTRAW statute in Economic and Social Council resolution 2003/57 [YUN 2003, p. 1195]. OIOS recommended that the Secretary-General should initiate consideration by intergovernmental bodies on ways to strengthen the Inter-Agency Network on Women and Gender Equality, and in that regard, suggested that delegation of formal authority for programme coordination beyond facilitation and information-sharing be given to the Secretary-General's Special Adviser on Gender Issues and Advancement of Women, as Chair of the Network. It also recommended a series of improvements in the strategic, programmatic and administrative management of INSTRAW.

By decision 60/529 of 16 December, the General Assembly took note of the OIOS report.

Future of INSTRAW

Report of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 59/260 [YUN 2004, p. 1173], the Secretary-General submitted a September report [A/60/372] on the future operation of INSTRAW. In efforts to further the revitalization process, INSTRAW undertook initiatives to implement its work programme, including developing a research framework for gender analysis on remittances and methodologies for conducting country case studies, expanding its collection of gender-training materials, strengthening its partnerships with other UN system entities and intensifying implementation of its fund-raising campaign. The implementation of INSTRAW strategic framework 2004-2007 and its 2005 work programme were making a contribution to programmes that benefited women in developing countries. Its two-pronged strategy to strengthen research and training capacities and to develop a comprehensive project portfolio for extrabudgetary funding provided the flexibility and increased efficiency of fund-raising efforts. The Secretary-General observed that, while the Institute had experienced increasing financial support, full implementation of the Institute's programmes and its ability to sustain its activities in 2006 would be contingent on Governments providing the required level of resources.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

3. Also requests the Institute, in accordance with its mandate, to collaborate with the United Nations system, national machinery, non-governmental organizations and the private sector in promoting international cooperation to foster women's empowerment and gender equality, including through, inter alia, the promotion of better access to education for women and girls, and the mainstreaming of a gender perspective in all policies and programmes;

4. Further requests the Institute, in accordance with its mandate and in close coordination with the United Nations Population Fund, the United Nations Children's Fund and other relevant United Nations programmes and funds, to actively participate in and contribute to discussions on issues related to international migration and development, in particular in the preparations for and during the high-level dialogue thereon to be held in September 2006, during the sixty-first session of the General Assembly;

10. Decides to provide its full support to the current efforts to revitalize the Institute and, in this regard, to provide it with the requisite funds to enable it to carry out its core functions for the biennium 2006-2007;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its sixty-second session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Financial situation

Report of Secretary-General. In a September report [A/60/366] on the financial situation of INSTRAW, the Secretary-General indicated that the available balance of the INSTRAW Trust Fund as at 1 January amounted to $959,675. For the period 1 January to 31 August 2005, $696,185 in additional income was received, comprising $691,295 in voluntary contributions and $4,890 in miscellaneous income. As the Fund balance as at 31 August was estimated at $896,368 and anticipated expenditures for September-December 2005 amounted to $424,208, it was determined that the Institute would have adequate resources to function until the end of 2005, with a projected closing balance of $472,160. However, funds had been neither pledged nor received to finance operations in 2006. INSTRAW estimated the budget for 2006 core requirements at $1,314,352. The Secretary-General concluded that under the circumstances, the General Assembly would need to consider the future viability of the Institute.

Communication. On 15 November [A/C.3/60/11], Spain, on behalf of the INSTRAW Executive Board, informed the General Assembly that a Subcommittee had been established to analyse the proposed fund-raising strategy for INSTRAW [INSTRAW/EB/2005/R.6] and prepare recommendations for making the Institute financially stable. The Board called on the Assembly to provide sufficient financial assistance so that INSTRAW could carry out its activities until the suggestions in the strategy report had been examined and decided upon.

Statement of Secretary-General. In a November statement [A/C.5/60/16] on programme budget implications of draft resolution [A/C.3/60/L.15/Rev.1], the Secretary-General indicated that financial requirements for 2006 were estimated at $1,314,352. As it was anticipated that the balance available for allocation in the INSTRAW Trust Fund as at 1 January 2006 would amount to approximately $272,200, an additional amount of $1,042,200 might be required from the UN regular budget to maintain the Institute in 2006.

ACABQ report. In November [A/60/7/Add.20], the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, recommended that the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee inform the Assembly that, should it adopt the draft resolution (above), additional requirements of up to $1,042,200 would arise under section 9, Economic and social affairs, of the 2006-2007 programme budget.

Fifth Committee consideration. The Fifth Committee, at its 23 December meeting [A/60/619], informed the Assembly accordingly and requested the Assembly to appropriate $1,042,200 against the contingency fund, to be used for the functioning of the Institute in 2006.

Chapter XI

Children, youth and ageing persons

In 2005, the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) continued its efforts to ensure that every child received the best possible start in life; was fully immunized and protected from disease, including HIV/AIDS, and disability; had access to quality primary school education; and was protected from violence, abuse, exploitation and discrimination.

Further progress was made towards mainstreaming children's priorities into national policy. Of the 190 countries that had adopted "A world fit for children"—the outcome document of the General Assembly's 2002 special session on children—at least 172 had taken action on or planned to initiate policies to put the four major goals of the session into practice.

UNICEF's 2005 income was 40 per cent higher than in 2004, largely due to the significant increase in contributions, mostly from private sources, in response to the late 2004 Indian Ocean tsunami and the October 2005 earthquake in South Asia. UNICEF completed the final year of its medium-term strategic plan (MTSP) for 2002-2005 under its five organizational priorities. In September, the UNICEF Executive Board approved the MTSP for 2006-2009 with the same focus areas.

In observance of the tenth anniversary of its adoption of the World Programme of Action for Youth to the Year 2000 and Beyond, the Assembly, in October, devoted two plenary meetings to evaluating progress in implementing the 10 priority areas identified in the 1995 Programme of Action and the five new concerns recognized in 2003. The plenary meetings, at which many Member States were represented by youth delegates, culminated in the adoption of a resolution that called for strengthened efforts to implement the Programme of Action.

United Nations efforts to implement the 2002 Madrid International Plan of Action on Ageing continued during 2005. In December, the Assembly called on Governments and the UN system to ensure that the challenges of population ageing and the concerns of older persons were adequately incorporated into their programmes and projects.

Children

Follow-up to the 2002 General Assembly special session on children

In response to General Assembly resolution 59/261 [YUN 2004, p. 779], the Secretary-General submitted his third report [A/60/207] on the follow-up to the Assembly's twenty-seventh (2002) special session on children [YUN 2002, p. 1168]. The report provided an update on progress achieved in realizing the commitments set out in the session's final document, "A world fit for children", adopted in resolution S-27/2 [ibid., p. 1169]. That document, which consisted of a Declaration and a Plan of Action, committed Governments to a set of goals for children and young people, with a particular focus on health, education, protection from abuse, exploitation and violence, and combating HIV/AIDS.

Overall progress in 2005 in translating the commitments of "A world fit for children" into concrete actions was more encouraging than the previous year. By May, at least 172 countries had either taken or anticipated taking action to put the session's goals into operation; 41 countries had completed national plans of action for children, 45 national plans were under formulation and 14 countries planned doing so. In addition, many countries had chosen to incorporate the goals and commitments of the document into other national policy or planning instruments, such as poverty reduction strategies, national development plans and sector plans. In some cases, the follow-up process was slowed by external factors, including political instability, armed conflict and other crises. Nevertheless, some Governments faced with those problems had used the goals of "A world fit for children" and the Millennium Development Goals (MDGs) [YUN 2000, p. 51] to provide a unifying agenda in the process of social recovery. The report observed that regions had pursued the follow-up to the special session at different speeds and had shown varying preferences regarding the best way to proceed. Information on progress achieved was broken down by region and/or subregion. The report described the strengths and weaknesses in the special session follow-up process.

Noting that the Plan of Action of "A world fit for children" emphasized the importance of monitoring progress towards the adopted goals, the report stated that the broad international focus on the MDGs had led to the improvement of national monitoring systems. However, mechanisms in national plans of action for children were more variable, with some not including a central monitoring mechanism. Also, while many countries had well-established systems related to child health and education, data availability remained weak in the area of child protection.

UNICEF and other agencies were supporting a new round of Multiple Indicator Cluster Surveys (MICS) to provide the largest single source of data for reporting on progress towards the goals of "A world fit for children" and those of the MDGs. Comparable child-related data would also be produced by demographic and health surveys. Nearly 90 countries were engaged in household surveys during 2005 and 2006 to provide data for the commemorative plenary meeting devoted to the follow-up to the outcome of the special session for children that the Assembly had decided, in resolution 58/282 [YUN 2004, p. 1175], to hold in 2007. The surveys would also assist in closing some of the major information gaps, such as those related to child protection. Some 44 countries had adopted the DevInfo database system for compiling and presenting child-related data.

Following an analysis of progress in the four major areas of "A world fit for children", the Secretary-General concluded that most of the goals would only be achieved through a major intensification of action. While there were numerous, but often isolated, examples of rapid progress, many action plans had yet to be fully linked to national budgeting, implementation and monitoring mechanisms. Ongoing efforts needed to be expanded and better supported by resource allocations and at the political level.

The Secretary-General suggested that possible ways forward could include: the establishment of high-level national councils for children; capacity-building of national children's agencies and collaboration with parliamentarians and civil society organizations in the promotion of child-focused budgets; strengthening local government agencies to assist in the development, implementation and monitoring of child-centred programmes; and giving higher priority to developing structures and processes to facilitate ongoing involvement of civil society, including children and young people. The Secretary-General noted that regular reporting to the public on progress towards the goals was an important means of encouraging social mobilization and strengthening accountability. He also noted that, at the international level, the Committee on the Rights of the Child (see p. 731) had the potential to promote a closer linkage between follow-up on the special session goals, the MDGs and periodic reports by States parties on the Convention on the Rights of the Child. Use should be made of the Committee's concluding observations on State party reports to maintain government and public mobilization with respect to the goals for children. The Secretary-General observed that regional mechanisms could be further used to facilitate the intercountry exchange of experience and good practice in child-related programmes.

With regard to the commemorative plenary meeting to be held in 2007, the Secretary-General noted that all countries would be requested to hold a participatory review with stakeholders and provide a progress report before the end of 2006.

General Assembly action. The Assembly, in resolution 60/231 on the rights of the child (see p. 855), taking note with appreciation of the Secretary-General's report (above), and called for action on a number of aspects of child welfare. In resolution 60/1 on the World Summit Outcome (see. p. 48), the Assembly made commitments to protect children in situations of armed conflict and to respect and ensure the rights of each child without discrimination of any kind. The Assembly, in resolution 60/3 (see p. 746), encouraged activities to promote the International Decade for a Culture of Peace and Non-Violence for the Children of the World 2001-2010 and, in resolution 60/141 (see p. 1257), called for full respect for the human rights of the girl child.

United Nations Children's Fund

Throughout 2005, UNICEF continued its commitment to achieving the MDGs [YUN 2000, p. 51] and the goals contained in the outcome document, "A world fit for children", adopted in resolution S-27/2 [YUN 2002, p. 1169] by the General Assembly at its twenty-seventh (2002) special session on children [ibid., p. 1168] (see above). UNICEF's work was also guided by the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child, adopted by the Assembly in resolution 44/25 [YUN 1989, p. 560], and its Optional Protocols (see p. 730). Its mission was to defend children's rights, help meet their basic needs, ensure their survival and increase their opportunities to flourish. It was also mandated to rally political will and resources to invest in children's well-being; respond to emergencies to protect children and work with partners to provide a rapid response for those in need; and ensure special protection for the most disadvantaged children, such as victims of war, disasters, extreme poverty and all forms of violence and exploitation and those with disabilities. The Fund further aimed to promote equal rights for boys and girls and encourage their full participation in developing their communities; and work towards the human development goals adopted by the world community and the realization of the vision of peace, justice and social progress enshrined in the United Nations Charter. In 2005, UNICEF continued to focus its efforts on its five organizational priorities: girls' education; integrated early childhood development; immunization "plus"; fighting HIV/AIDS; and improved protection of children from violence, exploitation, abuse and discrimination.

UNICEF's annual flagship publication, The State of the World's Children 2005, focused on how poverty, conflict and HIV/AIDS threatened the ideal of childhood as a time for children to grow and develop to their full potential. It observed that the rights of over 1 billion children, as enshrined in the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child, were violated because they were denied one or more of the basic services required to survive and develop. It noted that millions of children were severely deprived of nutrition, water, sanitation facilities, access to basic health care services, shelter, education and information, while tens of millions were victims of exploitation, violence and abuse. In conflict situations, children who were not killed or injured could be abducted, orphaned or left with psychological and psychosocial distress, or suffering in conditions of inadequate shelter and from disease and poor nutrition. The HIV/AIDS pandemic had left some 15 million children under the age of 18 orphaned by the end of 2003, affecting their safety, health and development. The report stressed that children's rights would only be fulfilled when the world reaffirmed its moral and legal responsibilities to children; applied a human rights–based approach to social and economic development; adopted socially responsible policies that kept children specifically in mind; and invested additional funds in children, through increased official development assistance and improvements in national public finances.

UNICEF cooperated with 157 countries, areas and territories: 45 in sub-Saharan Africa; 35 in Latin America and the Caribbean; 35 in Asia; 20 in the Middle East and North Africa; and 22 in Central and Eastern Europe, the Commonwealth of Independent States (CIS) and the Baltic States.

Total expenditures, including write-offs, amounted to $2,197 million (compared to $1,606 million in 2004), of which 95.7 per cent ($2,103 million) was for programme assistance and support; 4 per cent ($88 million) for management and administration; and 0.3 per cent ($7 million) for write-offs. UNICEF operations in 2005, including an update on the mid-term review of the medium-term strategic plan (MTSP), were described in the UNICEF Annual Report, covering the period 1 January to 31 December 2005; the annual report of the Executive Director [E/2006/6]; and the report of the Executive Director on results achieved for children in support of the Millennium Summit agenda [YUN 2000, p. 49] through UNICEF's 2002-2005 MTSP [E/ICEF/2006/11].

In 2005, the UNICEF Executive Board held its first regular session (17-20 and 24 January), its annual session (6-10 June) and its second session (28-30 September), all in New York [E/2005/34/Rev.1], during which it adopted 20 decisions.

At its first regular session, the Board paid tribute to Carol Bellamy, whose second term as UNICEF's Executive Director expired on 30 April. She was succeeded by Ann Veneman.

By decision 2005/230 of 20 July, the Economic and Social Council took note of the Board's report on the work of its first, second and annual sessions of 2004 [E/2004/34/Rev.1]; the Board's report on the work of its 2005 sessions [E/2005/34/Rev.1]; and the annual report of the Executive Director covering the year 2004 [E/2005/6], which was transmitted in accordance with a January decision of the Board [E/2005/34/Rev.1 (dec. 2005/1)].

On 29 September, the Executive Board adopted the programme of work and dates for its 2006 sessions [dec. 2005/17].

Programme policies

In her annual report to the Economic and Social Council covering 2005 [E/2006/6], the Executive Director described UNICEF's contribution towards implementing the MDGs [YUN 2000, p. 51], the Secretary-General's reform programme and the provisions of the triennial comprehensive policy review, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 59/250 [YUN 2004, p. 868]. She described UNICEF's working relationships with UN agencies, non-governmental organizations (NGOs) and donor and programme countries as they collaborated in order to achieve the MDGs; gave an update on the funding of operational activities for development of the UN system; provided information on UNICEF's support for national capacity-building in the context of the MDGs and "A world fit for children" targets [YUN 2002, p. 1173]; and outlined efforts to strengthen the role of resident coordinators. She noted that, by the end of 2006, all countries, except those in crisis, were expected to have introduced the common country programming process, which placed UN system assistance in the context of the MDGs and national plans to achieve them, and indicated that UNICEF remained involved in training and technical support for countries implementing the new processes. The Executive Director also addressed the use of common premises and services with other UN organizations; monitoring and evaluation; gender mainstreaming; collaboration with the World Bank; and the follow-up to the Assembly's special session on children (see p. 1281).

Medium-term strategic plan (2002-2005)

In her third annual report on the 2002-2005 MTSP [E/ICEF/2005/6], the Executive Director provided information on progress, partnerships, constraints and key results achieved in 2002-2004 in the five organizational priority areas of the MTSP (see p. 1283), on cross-cutting strategies and on UNICEF income and expenditures for 2004.

On 10 June [dec. 2005/8], the Executive Board requested the Executive Director to strengthen the analytical content of her annual reports to the Board to include both qualitative and quantitative measures of progress against the MTSP targets.

Medium-term strategic plan (2006-2009)

The UNICEF Executive Board had before it a July report [E/ICEF/2005/11] on the 2006-2009 MTSP, which identified five focus areas for the four-year period: young child survival and development; basic education and gender equality; HIV/AIDS and children; child protection from violence, exploitation and abuse; and policy advocacy and partnerships for children's rights. The MTSP described UNICEF's support to the implementation of the MDGs [YUN 2000, p. 51]; elaborated on the links between the MDGs and the focus areas; gave details regarding the strategies, key results and targets for each of the focus areas; referred to the plan's major cross-cutting strategies; and outlined the plan's resource implications, fund-raising strategy and financial targets.

On 30 September [E/2005/34/Rev.1 (dec. 2005/18)], the Executive Board welcomed the 2006-2009 MTSP and approved: the organizational focus areas; the financial plan, including $697 million in programme expenditures from regular resources, to be submitted in 2006; and the transfer to the funded reserve of $20 million per year for after-service health insurance for 2005 and 2006 and $10 million per year for 2007-2009. The Executive Director was asked to assess progress towards the key results established in the MTSP in her annual report to the Board.

Evaluation system

In her report on the 2002-2005 MTSP [E/ICEF/2005/6], the Executive Director informed the Executive Board that the scope of the evaluation function had expanded in 2004 through reviews of organizational performance and testing of methodologies for country programme evaluations. Studies were completed on immunization "plus", the African Girls' Education Initiative and external support to basic education. Evaluations were also undertaken of UNICEF preparedness and initial response in Iraq and Liberia.

On 10 June [dec. 2005/8], the Board recalled its 2004 decision on evaluations [YUN 2004, p. 1180], which requested that key findings be presented and discussed at the Board's meetings and that they be fully integrated into the Executive Director's annual report.

Emergency assistance

During the 2002-2005 period [E/ICEF/2006/11], approximately one third of the countries with which UNICEF cooperated were responding to crises and emergencies. In 2005, emergency funding reached $1 billion, in large part for the response to the Indian Ocean tsunami of December 2004 (see p. 1024) and other emergencies.

As a result of UNICEF's contribution to the tsunami response, child deaths from preventable diseases were avoided, most students were able to return to school rapidly and early fears of trafficking and exploitation were allayed. The crisis demonstrated the vital role of the private sector in providing funds, supplies and technical assistance and the importance of investing in early warning and preparedness at national and local levels. The earthquake that struck Pakistan, India and Afghanistan in October 2005 (see p. 1034) killed more than 75,000 people, over half of them children. Pre-positioned stocks enabled UNICEF to provide large-scale assistance within 48 hours. By the end of 2005, there had been no major disease outbreaks in Pakistan and systems were put in place to monitor the health, nutrition and protection status of affected children. UNICEF supported the Indian Government in immunizing children against measles, providing vitamin A and oral rehydration salts, water storage and treatment supplies for about 50,000 people.

In 2005, the Caribbean was affected by 14 hurricanes, three of which were classified as Category 5. UNICEF provided early assistance with water and sanitation materials, emergency kits, advocacy for child protection and psychosocial support. The Fund also provided technical support and supplies to families affected by Hurricane Katrina in the United States. In the Sudan, UNICEF and its partners reached 2 million people, some 60 per cent of the affected population, with essential health-care services, and it provided 900,000 people with safe water supplies. The Fund led the nutrition response to the emergency in the Niger, where insufficient rainfall and locust invasions placed nearly 3.3 million people in a situation of acute food insecurity.

In 2005, the Inter-Agency Standing Committee for the coordination of humanitarian assistance agreed upon a "cluster lead" approach, with UNICEF assuming the lead role for nutrition, water and environmental sanitation and data communications. The Fund also assumed a leadership role in some aspects of child protection and an important implementing role in health. The cluster lead approach was being tested and its initial performance reviewed. The Core Commitments for Children in Emergencies (CCCs) guided UNICEF's humanitarian response. The Fund continued to play a key role in building the capacities of Governments to protect children against natural disasters.

UNICEF programmes by region

In 2005 [E/ICEF/2006/11], UNICEF regional programme expenditure totalled $1,966 million, of which $872 million (45 per cent) went to sub-Saharan Africa (including programme assistance for Djibouti and the Sudan); $687 million (35 per cent) to Asia; $181 million (9 per cent) to the Middle East and North Africa; $99 million (5 per cent) to the Americas and the Caribbean; $62 million (3 per cent) to Central and Eastern Europe and CIS; and $64 million (3 per cent) to interregional programmes. Programme support costs amounted to an additional $137 million.

Programme expenditures were highest in countries with low income and high, or very high, under-five mortality rates. The 60 lowest income countries—defined as those with a per capita gross national income of $765 or less—which had a total child population in 2003 of 1.02 billion, or constituting 52 per cent of all children worldwide, received 62 per cent of total programme expenditures.

In September, the Executive Board considered summaries of midterm reviews and major evaluations of country programmes in Eastern and Southern Africa [E/ICEF/2005/P/L.23], West and Central Africa [E/ICEF/2005/P/L.24], Americas and the Caribbean [E/ICEF/2005/P/L.25], East Asia and the Pacific [E/ICEF/2005/P/L.26], South Asia [E/ICEF/2005/P/L.27], and Central and Eastern Europe, CIS and the Baltic States [E/ICEF/2005/P/L.28]. The reports reviewed the results achieved, the lessons learned and the need for adjustments in the country programmes.

Field visits

On a visit to Ethiopia (17-22 April) [E/ICEF/2005/CRP.5], Executive Board members observed that the implementation of UNICEF's country programmes focused on six areas: health and nutrition; water, sanitation and hygiene education; HIV/AIDS; basic education, with special interventions for girls' education; gender and child protection; and capacity-building of regional and woreda (district) institutions in programme monitoring and evaluation. Addressing emergencies that jeopardized food security and providing humanitarian assistance had become a major component of UNICEF operations in Ethiopia. The Board concluded that there was a need for more comprehensive, objective-oriented and clear-cut programming regarding children who lived or worked on the street, child trafficking, female genital mutilation, HIV/AIDS orphans and other vulnerable children. There was also an urgent need to scale up the focus on maternal health, since more than 80 per cent of women lacked adequate access to health and reproductive services. The Board emphasized the need to strengthen collaboration between UNICEF and the entire UN country team, the regional government and NGOs to combat chronic water shortage; low health indicators; poor sanitation; high rates of school dropout, especially among girls; food insecurity; and gender inequality.

Members of the Executive Boards of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP)/United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA), UNICEF and the World Food Programme (WFP) made a joint field visit to Azerbaijan (8-15 May) [E/ICEF/2005/CRP.6]. They concluded that the UN country team should continue its advocacy with the Government to protect vulnerable groups through policy change. A pressing requirement was to increase and rationalize resources for health, education and child protection.

In Morocco (18-25 June) [E/ICEF/2005/CRP.11], UNICEF Executive Board members noted that the country programme comprised: support to national policies in education and health; support to children in rural environments; child protection; and promoting and monitoring implementation of the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child [YUN 1989, p. 560] (see also p. 730). They concluded that UNICEF added value in Morocco, not only because of the organization's financial contribution, but, more importantly, because of its strategic and policy contribution, technical cooperation, advocacy efforts, work in child rights, research activities and the development of intervention models and innovative tools.

UNICEF programmes by sector

In 2005, UNICEF programme expenditures, which were linked to the five organizational priorities established in 2001 under the 2002-2005 MTSP [YUN 2001, p. 1093], totalled $1,966 million [E/ICEF/2006/11], a 46 per cent increase over 2004. The largest share of total expenditure, $746 million (38 per cent), was spent on early childhood development (ECD), followed by $432 million (22 per cent) on girls' education; $367 million (19 per cent) on immunization "plus"; $196 million (10 per cent) on child protection; and $165 million (8 per cent) on HIV/AIDS. Some $60 million (3 per cent) was expended in other areas. Programme support costs amounted to an additional $137 million.

The shares for the five priority areas of the MTSP as part of total expenditure for programme assistance mostly remained stable during the four-year period. However, total programme spending for all five priority areas increased rapidly between 2002 and 2005, with ECD experiencing the highest percentage growth, followed by girls' education, HIV/AIDS, child protection and immunization "plus".

Early childhood development

In response to the findings of the 2004 MTSP mid-term review [YUN 2004, p. 1179], UNICEF worked increasingly with national partners in 2004-2005 to emphasize the convergence of initiatives for young children and to facilitate the efforts of national partners working across the social sectors. The focus on developing the capacities of families and communities to improve young child survival, growth and development was also strengthened.

In the area of child mortality reduction, UNICEF continued to implement the Accelerated Child Survival and Development Strategy (ACSD) in 11 African countries. It was estimated that the Strategy, which covered 17 million people, was preventing over 18,000 child deaths per year. Major gains were seen in the use of insecticide-treated bednets (ITNs) and routine preventive health services (immunization, vitamin A supplementation and antenatal care). UNICEF programme assistance for the ACSD strategy in the 11 countries came to less than $0.50 per beneficiary per year and the approximate average cost in ACSD districts was $407 per life saved. The low cost was attributed to a dramatic increase in vitamin A supplementation, measles immunization and ITN coverage in very poor areas with very high mortality rates. In July, the African Union requested UNICEF and other partners to extend the programme to the whole continent, and called for its member States to integrate it into their national health policies, poverty reduction strategies and health sector reforms.

Child mortality reduction efforts also included parenting programmes and the Integrated Management of Childhood Illnesses (IMCI) approach. An independent review in 2004 and 2005 in Malawi, South Africa, the United Republic of Tanzania and Uganda showed that the IMCI approach had led to improved knowledge and family care practices in all areas. UNICEF-assisted parenting education programmes combined interventions for child survival, development and protection.

UNICEF doubled its annual resources for fighting malaria during the MTSP period, accelerating the coverage of known effective malaria prevention and control interventions. In 2005, UNICEF procured 17 million ITNs; played a lead role in bringing Roll Back Malaria partners [YUN 1998, p. 1384] together in support of country-led action plans; expanded household access to ITNs in a number of countries; and procured $10.5 million in antimalarial drugs, including $8.5 million worth of artemisinin-based combination therapies (ACT).

UNICEF also supported the introduction of improved formulations of both oral rehydration salts and zinc as part of the diarrhoea treatment package. Diarrhoea and pneumonia remained the two main killers of children. UNICEF's support for diarrhoea prevention was closely linked with water and sanitation programmes and the training of community health workers, and formed part of integrated approaches.

UNICEF's efforts to promote breastfeeding and complementary feeding during the MTSP period included the Baby-Friendly Hospital Initiative, advocacy for the International Code of Marketing of Breast-milk Substitutes and community approaches. By the end of 2005, 19,798 hospital and maternity facilities had been designated as "baby friendly" since the Initiative was launched in 1991 [YUN 1991, p. 693], compared to 15,165 in 2001. In 2005, UNICEF supported efforts to increase the registration of births in 83 countries.

In 2005, 23 per cent of Governments had a comprehensive policy on early childhood development, compared to 22 per cent in 2004; 52 per cent had an official national coordinating structure or mechanism for ECD, compared to 48 per cent in 2004; and 61 per cent had a national system for monitoring young child growth and/or development, compared to 53 per cent in 2004.

UNICEF continued to assist countries in reducing maternal mortality, supporting over 3,500 facilities in nearly 70 countries to provide emergency obstetric care services for pregnant women. The UNICEF contribution included: national-level advocacy; support to emergency obstetric care assessments and programme design; upgrading facilities with equipment, medications and staff training; support for communities in recognizing danger signs and providing transportation; and promoting integration with health sector plans. UNICEF was working with Governments to identify ways to integrate efforts for newborns into emergency obstetric care efforts, IMCI and community programmes, and had joined UNFPA and WHO to assist Governments in Africa to develop "road maps" for improving maternal health.

UNICEF increased its focus on integrated approaches to addressing anaemia, a major cause of maternal deaths and of cognitive deficits in young children. In Bhutan, UNICEF and WFP were supporting girls' education and iron supplementation in schools. UNICEF promoted food fortification as a strategy to prevent anemia and deficiencies in vitamin A and other micronutrients. With regard to the elimination of iodine deficiency disorders (IDD), UNICEF noted that 69 per cent of households in the developing world were consuming adequate amounts of iodized salt; 30 countries had reached the 2005 goal of sustainable elimination of IDD. UNICEF also stepped up its role in responding to nutritional emergencies in the second half of the MTSP period, including in Kenya, Malawi, the Niger and the Sudan, and worked with partners to dramatically expand an integrated package of child survival strategies for emergencies in Ethiopia.

Over the MTSP period, UNICEF expanded its support for water supply, sanitation and hygiene, assisting 95 countries by 2005, compared with 78 at the beginning of the decade. The Fund's assistance enabled large number of families in poverty to gain access to drinking water from protected sources in a number of countries, including the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Ethiopia, Iraq, Nigeria and the Darfur region of the Sudan. More emphasis was placed on water quality, with a dramatic increase in the testing and protection of drinking water.

Immunization "plus"

Immunization was the only public health intervention to have consistently reached over 70 per cent of young children in recent years. It was making a significant contribution towards achieving the MDG on child mortality [YUN 2000, p. 52] and had the potential to prevent some 2.5 million child deaths each year.

In 2005, Governments were financing 100 per cent of routine vaccination costs in 73 countries; 89 countries had a national strategy for immunizing hard-to-reach groups; and 81 countries had a national communication strategic plan for immunization. However, 27 million children under one year and 40 million pregnant women, often among the poorest population groups, did not receive routine immunization services in 2004 and 19 countries had no government funding allocated to routine vaccinations.

Core UNICEF strengths for immunization continued to include its presence and capacities in vaccine procurement, supply management and programme communication. Since 2002, UNICEF and WHO had jointly promoted the Reaching Every District (RED) approach, whereby attention was shifted to low-performing areas based on local data. Evidence from the Democratic Republic of the Congo (DRC), Ethiopia, Kenya, Madagascar and Zimbabwe suggested an almost 50-per-cent fall in the number of unimmunized children after RED implementation.

Global coverage for three doses of the diphtheria/pertussis/tetanus vaccine (DTP3) reached 78 per cent worldwide in 2004, compared to 73 per cent in 2001. However, only 38 UNICEF-assisted countries met the target of 80 per cent DTP3 coverage in every district. Strong progress was observed in measles immunization; UNICEF and its other Measles Initiative partners surpassed the target to reduce measles mortality by half by 2005. Global measles mortality declined from an estimated 871,000 deaths in 1999 to 454,000 in 2004, with preliminary estimates suggesting an additional 9 per cent reduction in 2005. The Global Polio Eradication Initiative made significant progress towards the goal of interrupting endemic virus transmission; more than half of the 1,906 polio cases in 2005 occurred in non-endemic countries. India and Pakistan reduced the number of new polio cases by 50 per cent in 2005, setting the stage for final interruption of transmission. UNICEF facilitated the accelerated introduction of monovalent oral polio vaccines types 1 and 3, undertook targeted communications to reach marginalized children in Afghanistan, India, Nigeria and Pakistan—the last remaining polio-endemic countries— and, in Nigeria, focused on the northern states, where transmission was still high. UNICEF and the Maternal and Neonatal Tetanus (MNT) Elimination Partnership reduced the number of annual neonatal deaths from MNT from 215,000 in 1999 to 180,000 in 2002, although uncertainty about funding continued to affect their efforts. In 2005, 2.8 million women at risk received doses of the anti-tetanus vaccine in Ethiopia, 2.6 million in Bangladesh and over 1 million in both Mali and Myanmar.

UNICEF procured and distributed nearly 3 billion doses of vaccines worth $439 million in 2005, a 17 per cent increase from 2004, and an additional $53 million in cold-chain and safe injection equipment. Procurement of polio vaccine alone amounted to 2.1 billion doses, and the Micronutrient Initiative supplied 500 million vitamin A capsules through UNICEF. By improving its vaccine-supply forecasting, UNICEF exceeded 80 to 90 per cent accuracy across 90 countries. Where data was available, the number of countries affected by national stock-outs for any antigen in routine immunization fell to 37 in 2005, compared to 48 in 2004.

UNICEF continued to support safe injection practices, reporting that, in 2005, 85 programme countries exclusively used auto disable syringes for routine immunization, an increase from 72 in 2004.

Global Immunization vision and strategy

The Executive Board had before it a UNICEF secretariat note [E/ICEF/2005/9] on the draft global strategy on immunization, prepared jointly by UNICEF and WHO and presented to the Fifty-Eighth World Health Assembly (Geneva, 16-25 May). The strategy provided Governments and international organizations with a framework for planning and collaborating to meet the immunization challenges of the coming decade (2006-2015). Its aim was to protect people against disease, introduce new vaccines and technologies, and integrate immunization with other health interventions into the health system, with the goal of reaching at least an 80-per-cent immunization coverage in every district of every country by 2010.

On 9 June [dec. 2005/7], the Executive Board welcomed the UNICEF/WHO Global Immunization Vision and Strategy and urged countries to adopt it as a framework for strengthening national immunization programmes between 2006 and 2015. It requested the Executive Director to report regularly on progress in achieving the global immunization targets, and to strengthen relations with WHO, the Global Alliance for Vaccines and Immunization, and other partners to mobilize resources and support implementation. The World Health Assembly had adopted a similar resolution on 25 May.

Girls' education

The MDGs [YUN 2000, p. 51] continued to have a galvanizing effect in increasing investments and more efficient national implementation of strategies to meet the target of gender parity in primary education. UNICEF's role focused increasingly on the use of advocacy and partnerships to influence sector-based policies and to leverage resources. In the second half of the MTSP period, UNICEF played a greater role in helping countries prepare quality plans for support from the Education for All (EFA) Fast Track Initiative. An external evaluation of the African Girls' Education Initiative concluded that efforts by UNICEF and its partners had influenced the policy landscape and strengthened the profile of gender issues in education in all parts of Africa. The Fund also revitalized the United Nations Girls' Education Initiative for strengthening action on girls' education at all levels. The Initiative grew from just a few countries in 2002 to at least 25 in 2005.

In Liberia, a comprehensive Girls' Education Policy was completed with UNICEF support. In Mozambique, Nepal and Nigeria, new national policies to accelerate girls' education were also developed. In 52 per cent of UNICEF-assisted countries, Governments and/or the Fund had undertaken a gender review of the education sector. By 2005, 81 national EFA plans included explicit measures to help girls who were not in school and to reduce their number. The Governments of 54 countries were taking specific measures to boost the percentage of girls entering post-primary school. Three regions—the Middle East and North Africa, South Asia and West and Central Africa—did not meet the goal of gender parity in primary education by 2005; while 125 countries were on course to achieving gender parity, overall enrolment of both boys and girls remained unacceptably low.

Local UNICEF support sometimes took the form of single measures such as supplying learning materials, school meals, construction of classrooms or conditional cash transfers to households. However, those interventions were stop-gap solutions for highly disadvantaged populations. UNICEF also promoted models of good practice that could be adapted to country circumstances: major "back to school" campaigns were supported in 13 countries, resulting in significant increases in primary enrolment rates for girls and boys, and 93 countries developed or were developing standards for child-friendly, gender-sensitive school environments. In Haiti, a major "back to school" campaign brought back 38,000 children, 60 per cent of them girls; in Somalia, an enrolment drive registered 114,000 primary-school-aged children; and in Iraq,

4.6 million children received UNICEF-supplied educational kits. In Afghanistan, UNICEF support resulted in the new enrolment of 529,000 girls in schools. In Nepal, the "Welcome to School" initiative went nationwide in 2005, resulting in an almost 12 per cent increase in primary enrolment. The Fund also supported initiatives to increase enrolment in the Comoros, India and Nigeria.

In tsunami-affected countries, UNICEF constructed 213 temporary or semi-permanent schools and provided emergency education supplies to approximately 1.5 million children, helping to bring 90 per cent of them back to school within three months. It also supported initiatives in Nigeria, Uganda and the United Republic of Tanzania on sanitation and hygiene promotion in schools, which were associated with significant increases in girls' enrolment and retention rates. Other UNICEF-assisted education programmes included HIV/AIDS-prevention education and strategies to secure access for orphaned children. UNICEF procured a total of $86 million in education supplies in 2005, up 22 per cent from 2004. That growth was driven by emergency education (especially the "school in a box" and recreation kits, which were used as a first response for the restoration of education in emergencies) and ongoing support to girls' education activities.

Protection from violence, abuse, exploitation and discrimination

In 2005, UNICEF continued to expand partnerships with other UN agencies, intergovernmental organizations, regional bodies and national partners in order to enhance child protection efforts. It also promoted the close linkages between child protection and the MDGs. International experience remained weak in child protection compared to other priority areas for children within the Millennium agenda. However, almost all MTSP indicators for child protection showed a positive trend over the plan period: in 2005, 26 countries had national standards in place that adequately protected children deprived of liberty, double the number in 2002; public statements were made by 78 Governments recognizing the problem of child trafficking, compared to 64 in 2002, and by 85 Governments recognizing the problem of child sexual exploitation, 15 more than in 2002. In addition, 91 countries reviewed the legal standards that protected children from violence within the preceding three years, 30 more than in 2002; 118 countries initiated an analysis of the impact on children of violence, abuse, exploitation and discrimination, compared to 91 in 2002; and 57 Governments collected routine data on the worst forms of child labour, 10 more than in 2002. UNICEF worked with the International Labour Organization and other partners to develop indicators for the worst forms of child labour, to be phased into the 2006-2009 MTSP. Indicators were also in use for monitoring children in public care, juvenile justice, child marriage, female genital mutilation/ cutting and violence. In Brazil, UNICEF promoted the inclusion of over 100,000 child workers in schools and supported a public awareness-raising campaign on child labour; in Senegal, the eradication of child labour was identified as a priority for the utilization of debt relief funds from Italy; and in the Middle East, 1,000 children formerly involved in camel racing were repatriated for family reunification.

UNICEF supported the development of action plans on commercially sexually exploited children and trafficking of women and children in Mongolia, Pakistan and Papua New Guinea, and worked with the tourism industry to take action against both child labour and the sexual and commercial exploitation of children. In Burkina Faso, Eritrea, Myanmar, Pakistan, the Sudan and elsewhere, UNICEF supported the reintegration of children who had been trafficked and/or exploited into communities. UNICEF reported that agreements against child trafficking were signed by nine West African countries; bilateral agreements were reached between Cambodia and China and between Cambodia and Viet Nam; and the new Council of Europe Convention on Action against Trafficking in Human Beings incorporated child trafficking provisions.

With regard to children in armed conflict, UNICEF led efforts for the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration (DDR) of children in many conflict-affected countries, particularly in West Africa, South Asia and Latin America. It trained humanitarian personnel and peacekeepers on child protection and the special needs of women and children in a number of countries. Working with 14 other UN agencies, the Fund led the preparation of an approach on children and DDR as part of the UN integrated system. Its assistance had reached over 2,500 child soldiers in Colombia since 1999, and nearly 800 child soldiers were demobilized in Burundi and 200 in Sri Lanka.

UNICEF made special efforts to build capacities for child protection in emergencies and supported the establishment of a practitioners' network to promote learning among humanitarian and academic organizations regarding the needs of children and families for psychosocial support following conflicts or natural disasters. In response to the Indian Ocean tsunami, UNICEF worked to ensure that all separated and unaccompanied children who lost one or both parents were rapidly registered, and nearly all were placed with extended family within a few months.

UNICEF also participated in the development and dissemination of guidelines and training on HIV/AIDS in emergencies. Partly due to its advocacy, the Maputo (Mozambique) Protocol to the African Charter on Human and People's Rights on the Rights of Women in Africa, which prohibited female genital mutilation, entered into force in November. UNICEF observed that in Burkina Faso the incidence of female genital mutilation had decreased from 66 per cent in 1996 to 40 per cent in 2005, and that several states in Nigeria had passed laws against the practice.

Limited growth of regular resources income over the MTSP period and some difficulties in raising other resources continued to affect overall performance in child protection.

On 10 June [dec. 2005/10], the UNICEF Executive Board requested the Executive Director to support Member States in their efforts to combat violence against children and adolescents and decided to consider in 2006 an oral report on activities on violence related to children and adolescents in conflict with the law.

HIV/AIDS

The UNICEF Executive Director stated that a child under the age of 15 was dying of an AIDS-related illness every minute and almost 1,800 new paediatric infections were occurring per day [E/ICEF/ 2006/11]. Globally, 15 million children had lost at least one parent to HIV/AIDS. By 2010, there were expected to be 18 million such children in sub-Saharan Africa alone. In October, UNICEF launched the Unite for Children, Unite against AIDS campaign in partnership with the Joint United Nations Programme on HIV/AIDS (UNAIDS) (see p. 1305) and other partners. The campaign promoted a child-focused framework for action around the "four P" imperatives: preventing mother-to-child HIV (PMTCT); providing paediatric treatment; preventing infection among adolescents and young people; and protecting and supporting children affected by HIV/AIDS. UNICEF contributed to significant expansion of PMTCT services in a number of countries including Namibia, Nigeria, Swaziland, Uganda and Zambia. It also supported initiatives to increase PMTCT access to isolated and indigenous communities in Nicaragua and Peru. As UNAIDS co-sponsors, UNICEF and WFP moved towards joint programmes for making strategic use of food in support of scaling up PMTCT care and treatment, and UNICEF continued to collaborate with the United States President Emergency Plan for AIDS Relief and with WHO on PMTCT and paediatric treatment issues.

UNICEF reported that the response to the HIV/AIDS epidemic was entering a new era. There was a distinct move from global-level advocacy to strong support for country-level implementation of comprehensive nationally led programmes in which UNICEF offices were increasingly playing a strategic role. In China, UNICEF assisted in the development of the first provincial-level policy on children affected by HIV/AIDS and a number of West and Central African countries established strategic national AIDS plans for 2006-2010.

Following agreement during the 2004 mid-term review [YUN 2004, p. 1179] that HIV/AIDS care and support needed greater attention, UNICEF convened consultations that identified a range of urgent actions: finalization of paediatric diagnosis and clinical staging guidelines; review of current treatment guidelines; expansion of PMTCT programmes; modelling of comprehensive care, support and treatment responses; negotiation of price reductions for paediatric formulations; and the development of information and forecasting systems. UNICEF also consulted with major pharmaceutical companies on the production of paediatric formulations for use in poor countries, which were expected to become available in mid-2006. The UNICEF/WHO paediatric care, support and treatment consultations on drug formulations, treatment guidelines and cotrimoxazole helped to provide guidance for implementation.

UNICEF provided leadership in developing a framework to guide the work of partners in assisting children orphaned or made vulnerable by HIV/AIDS (OVCs). It assisted in carrying out surveys of the situation of those children in several African countries, and supported a cash subsidy initiative for OVCs in Kenya; given that initiative's positive initial impact, a larger pilot was planned for 2006. By 2005, 60 countries had adopted strategies for the care and protection of OVCs, compared to 31 in 2002. However, major challenges remained, including aligning national responses to OVCs with existing HIV/AIDS plans and the weak capacities of social affairs ministries.

The Fund continued to sponsor a wide range of studies and assessments to improve national knowledge of HIV/AIDS, including national situation analyses in Bangladesh and Viet Nam; infant feeding and HIV/AIDS studies in Rwanda and the United Republic of Tanzania; and studies on awareness in schools in Djibouti and Zambia. At the end of 2005, national situation analyses on HIV/AIDS and children/youth had been conducted in 75 countries, compared to 70 in 2002.

UNICEF almost doubled the value of its antiretroviral (ARV) drug procurement to $33.5 million in 2005, from $18.4 million in 2004, with an additional $8 million spent on other HIV/AIDS-related supplies and equipment, substantially increasing the number of children and adults with access to therapy. The Fund helped to achieve a major reduction in ARV costs in the Russian Federation.

UNAIDS programme coordination

In September, the UNICEF Executive Board had before it an August report [E/ICEF/2005/12] on UNICEF's contribution to the sixteenth (December 2004) [YUN 2004, p. 1219] and seventeenth (June 2005) meetings of the UNAIDS Programme Coordinating Board (see p. 1327). The report described its contribution to the Unified Budget and Work Plan for 2006-2007, and outlined the recommendations of the Global Task Team on Improving AIDS Coordination among Multilateral Institutions and International Donors (GTT) (see p. 1327). UNICEF's share of the UNAIDS core budget of $320 million amounted to $19.8 million.

On 30 September [dec. 2005/19], the Executive Board approved the GTT recommendations and requested the Fund to work with UNAIDS and other co-sponsors to develop annual priority action plans at the country level. UNICEF was encouraged to provide effective technical support to national Governments and to focus on areas of comparative advantage. It was also asked to intensify HIV prevention by developing an action plan based on the UNAIDS policy position paper entitled "Intensifying HIV prevention".

Operational and administrative matters

UNICEF finances

In 2005, UNICEF income totalled $2,762 million, an increase of $784 million (40 per cent) over 2004, a result of a significant increase in contributions to other resources, largely from private sources and in response to emergencies, which accounted for 71 per cent of total income in 2005. Income to regular resources increased by 3 per cent to $812 million. Total contributions were 20 per cent higher than forecast in the financial plan. UNICEF derived its income primarily from Governments, which contributed $1,472 million (53 per cent), and from private sector sources, which contributed $1,235 million (45 per cent). The balance of $55 million came from other sources.

In January, the Executive Board took note of UNICEF's financial report and audited financial statements for the biennium ended 31 December 2003 [A/59/5/Add.2], action on which was deferred in 2004 [YUN 2004, p. 1187]. In September, the Board noted UNICEF's interim financial report and statements for the year ended 31 December 2004 [E/ICEF/2005/AB/L.4].

Budget appropriations

On 9 June [dec. 2005/4], the Executive Board approved recommendations for the aggregate indicative budgets for 19 country programmes for the period 2006-2010 and a programme for Palestinian children and women for the period 2006-2007, amounting to the following totals for regular and other resources, respectively, by region: Africa, $101,386,000 and $164,385,000; the Americas and the Caribbean, $4,500,000 and $18,170,000; Asia, $208,249,000 and $460,770,000; Central and Eastern Europe, CIS and the Baltic States, $27,094,000 and $76,160,000; and Middle East and North Africa, $4,000,000 and $24,240,000.

On the basis of the Executive Director's recommendation, contained in a 1 April report [E/ICEF/2005/P/L.21], the Board, on 9 June [dec. 2005/5], approved additional regular resources for 54 country programmes for 2005 and 2006, amounting to $80,397,731. On the same date [dec. 2005/6], the Board approved additional other resources for the approved country programmes of 20 countries, totalling $371,031,000.

On 29 September [dec. 2005/11], the Board approved the aggregate indicative budgets for five country programmes for 2006-2010, and for the DRC and Afghanistan for 2006-2007 for the following amounts from regular and other resources respectively: Swaziland, $3,755,000 and $21,250,000; Cape Verde, $3,300,000 and $2,150,000; Chad, $18,445,000 and $30,000,000; DRC $43,858,000 and $50,000,000; Guyana, $3,345,000 and $2,000,000; Indonesia, $26,500,000 and $100,000,000; and Afghanistan, $41,397,000 and $126,000,000. For the Cape Verde country programme, the Board only approved the UNICEF portion of the aggregate indicative budget.

The Board also considered a report recommending the allocation of funds to cover overexpenditures for 22 programmes, amounting to $1,061,196.63 [E/ICEF/2005/P/L.38]. On 29 September [dec. 2005/13], the Board approved the funding from regular resources.

Additionally, the Board considered a proposal for a supplementary appropriation for the 2004-

2005 biennium [E/ICEF/2005/AB/L.7] of $3 million for security-related costs. It also had before it a note from the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) [E/ICEF/2005/AB/L.8] recommending approval of the supplementary appropriation. On 29 September [dec. 2005/15], the Board approved the appropriation, increasing security-related costs from $14 million to $17 million.

On the recommendation of the Executive Director [E/ICEF/2005/P/L.37], the Board, on 29 September [dec. 2005/12], approved a five-year extension (2006-2010) of the programme of cooperation with the PolioPlus programme of Rotary International and an increase in funding from other resources of $10 million, subject to the availability of specific-purpose contributions from Rotary International. The Board also approved a five-year extension of the Vaccine Independence Initiative for the period 2006 to 2010.

Budget approval process

In accordance with a 2004 Executive Board decision [YUN 2004, p. 1187], whereby the UNICEF 2006-2007 biennial support budget would be reviewed at the Board's January 2006 session, the Executive Director, on 3 August [E/ICEF/2005/AB/L.3], recommended that the Board approve an interim one-month allocation for the support budget in the amount of $25,600,000 to cover January 2006, pending its approval of the biennial support budget. On 29 September [dec. 2005/16], the Board approved the allocation.

Audits

In an April report on internal audit activities in 2004, the Office of Internal Audit (OIA) stated that it had completed 35 audits in 2004 [E/ICEF/2005/AB/L.2]: 29 field audits; four headquarters audits; an audit of the termination of UNICEF activities and handover of assets related to the oil-for-food programme in Iraq; and one global summary report. In its audits of headquarters, OIA found that controls for the administration of travel services and the procurement of supplies and consultancy services were satisfactory. In country offices, controls were generally satisfactory, particularly for fund-raising and donor reporting, with considerable room for improvement in finance, basic programme management, cash assistance and supply assistance. The profile of country offices' risk-management practices in 2004 was similar to that of 2003, indicating that there was continuing scope for improving the programmatic and operational support from regional offices, and regional and global monitoring of the status of country offices' practices in areas of common weakness. The Executive Board took note of the report in June.

In a July report [E/ICEF/2005/AB/L.6] to the UN Board of Auditors and ACABQ, UNICEF described steps taken to implement the recommendations of the Board of Auditors on the Fund's accounts for the 2002-2003 biennium. The report focused on those recommendations that either were not implemented or only partially implemented at the time of the previous report [YUN 2004, p. 1187].

Resource mobilization

UNICEF continued to collaborate with Governments to mobilize both regular and other resources. At the sixth annual pledging event in January, 50 countries pledged a total of $255.7 million. By year's end, 109 Governments had contributed $469 million in regular resources and $1,003 million in other resources, increasing their contributions to regular resources by 7 per cent, compared to 2004. However, there was a small decline in private sector contributions to regular resources that, combined with the unprecedented response to emergencies, left UNICEF with the lowest ever percentage of regular resources to total resources in 2005 at 29 per cent. The United States remained the largest donor to regular resources, with a contribution of $124 million, followed by Sweden ($55 million), Norway ($47 million), the Netherlands ($37 million), the United Kingdom ($35 million), Japan ($24 million), and Canada ($11 million).

Thematic funding in 2005 increased nearly fourfold over 2004, with the top 10 thematic donors (a mix of Governments and national committees) contributing a total of $495.4 million. The largest increase was for humanitarian response, with most thematic funding coming from the private sector. The number of government contributors to consolidated, flash and humanitarian action report appeals rose from 23 to 47.

Private Sector Division

Net income from UNICEF Private Sector Division (PSD) activities for the year ended 31 December 2005 totalled $288.6 million for regular resources, $2.6 million (0.9 per cent) lower than the $291.1 million raised in 2004 [E/ICEF/2006/AB/L.7]. The total included income of $255.7 million from private sector fund-raising activities, $63.6 million from the sale of UNICEF cards and gifts, deductions relating to a negative exchange rate adjustment of $14.3 million and investment fund expenditures of $16.4 million. In addition, $769.6 million ($218.8 million in 2004) was raised from private sector fund-raising activities for other resources, an increase of $550.8 million. That large increase was due to the unprecedented donor response to UNICEF emergency appeals for the Indian Ocean tsunami and the South Asian earthquake. Earmarked funding for non-emergencies also increased significantly, with $185.7 million raised in 2005, compared to $143.5 million in 2004. The net consolidated income for 2005, including both regular and other resources, amounted to $1,058.2 million, an increase of $548.3 million (107.5 per cent), compared with the 2004 net consolidated income of $509.9 million.

On 18 January [dec. 2005/2], the Executive Board approved budgeted expenditures of $96.9 million for the PSD work plan for 2005 [E/ICEF/2005/AB/L.1]. The Executive Director was authorized to redeploy resources between the various budget lines, up to a maximum of 10 per cent of the amounts approved, and to spend an additional amount between Executive Board sessions, up to the amount caused by currency fluctuations, to implement the 2005 approved work plan. The Board renewed investment funds with $17.1 million established for 2005; authorized the Executive Director to incur expenditures in 2005 related to the cost of goods delivered (production/purchase of raw materials, cards and other products) for 2006, up to $35 million; and approved the PSD medium-term plan for 2006 to 2009.

In September, the Board took note of the PSD financial report and statements for the year ended 31 December 2004 [E/ICEF/2005/AB/L.5].

Country programme approval process

The Executive Board had before it an April report [E/ICEF/2005/8] containing a review of the modified procedures for consideration and approval of proposals for country cooperation programmes, as requested by the Board in 2002 [YUN 2002, p. 1191]. The report gave an update on progress in implementing the modified procedures. A total of 35 country programme documents for new cooperation programmes had been approved by the Board, and a further 27 were expected to be presented for consideration and approval in 2005. The modified procedure supported better quality, result-oriented documents and promoted the harmonized and joint programming process with national partners and among UN agencies at the country level, while giving the Board the opportunity to provide substantive comments on new programmes.

On 10 June [dec. 2005/9], the Executive Board requested the Executive Director to present in 2006 a joint report with UNDP and UNFPA on possible options to further improve and streamline the current harmonized country programme approval procedure.

Joint programming

On 19 January [dec. 2005/3], the Executive Board considered the 2004 report of the Executive Director on the assessment of UNICEF experience in joint programming [E/ICEF/2004/10], which had been deferred in 2004 [YUN 2004, p. 1189]. The Board requested the Executive Director, in cooperation with the other agencies of the United Nations Development Group (UNDG), to ensure that joint programming had an improved impact on development by, where appropriate: further harmonizing country programme preparation, implementation, monitoring and evaluation processes and improving communication between UN agencies during the whole programme cycle; effective delivery of programme goals and reduction of transaction costs; and promotion of common monitoring and reporting processes to governing bodies and joint approaches to evaluations. The Executive Director was asked to submit a comprehensive report on the implementation of joint programming in 2006.

On 30 September [dec. 2005/20], the Board encouraged the joint meetings of the Executive Boards of UNICEF, UNDP/UNFPA and WFP to discuss and comment on one country case as a practical illustration of joint UN work in the field and invited UN agencies, funds and programmes to participate.

JIU reports

In January the Executive Board considered a secretariat note [E/ICEF/2005/4] on the activities of the Joint Inspection Unit (JIU) of specific relevance to UNICEF. The document provided information on reports prepared between September 2003 and September 2004, actions taken by the Fund in response to those reports, and the views of the Executive Director on the issues raised by the JIU inspectors.

Innocenti Research Centre

In July [E/ICEF/2005/13], UNICEF submitted to the Executive Board a progress report on the activities of its Innocenti Research Centre (IRC) (Florence, Italy), established in 1988 [YUN 1988, p. 649] as the International Child Development Centre to strengthen the capacity of UNICEF and its cooperating institutions to respond to the evolving needs of children and to promote a strong global ethic for them. The report reviewed IRC's implementation of its 2003-2005 work programme, focusing on its research on issues pertaining to the implementation of the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child [YUN 1989, p. 560] (see also p. 730), which assessed the impact of economic and social policies on children. An evaluation of the Centre's work over the previous three programme cycles found that its studies were used to influence strategic policy processes within and beyond UNICEF, and benefited from partnerships and cross-disciplinary expertise; and that collaboration between IRC and UNICEF headquarters, regional and country offices and national committees had been further consolidated. The report presented a proposed work programme for 2006-2008, which would include further research on the impact of socio-economic policies on child poverty, developing research on children's rights to raise awareness of the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child and its Optional Protocols, and supporting improved research methodologies in the areas of child trafficking, violence and the impact of armed conflict on children.

On 29 September [dec. 2005/14], the Executive Board authorized a three-year extension of the programme for the period 2006-2008, with a total allocation of $17 million in other resources, of which Italy pledged a minimum of 5.43 million euros (about $6.5 million) for its core activities. The Board invited all donors to contribute to the Centre's programme activities in order to meet the full cost of implementing its 2006-2008 programme.

Youth

World Programme of Action for Youth

Tenth anniversary

In 2005, the United Nations observed the tenth anniversary of its adoption, in resolution 50/81 [YUN 1995, p. 1211], of the World Programme of Action for Youth to the Year 2000 and Beyond.

As decided by the General Assembly in resolution 59/148 [YUN 2004, p. 1190], two plenary meetings, held on 6 October [A/60/PV.27, 28], were devoted to the evaluation of progress made in implementing the Programme of Action. During the debate, many Member States were represented by national youth delegates and representatives from youth organizations attended as observers. Also in accordance with Assembly resolution 59/148, the plenary sessions were preceded on 5 October by an interactive round table on the theme "Young people: making commitments matter".

The plenary sessions culminated in the adoption of resolution 60/2 (see p. 1296).

Implementation

UN policies and programmes on youth during the year continued to focus on the implementation of the 1995 World Programme of Action for Youth to the Year 2000 and Beyond, which addressed problems faced by youth worldwide and identified ways to enhance youth participation in national and international policy- and decision-making. The Programme of Action identified 10 priority issues for youth: education; employment; hunger and poverty; health; environment; drug abuse; juvenile delinquency; leisure-time activities; girls and young women; and participation in society and decision-making. The Assembly, by resolution 58/133 [YUN 2003, p. 1217], had noted five additional issues of concern to young people: globalization; the increased use of information and communication technology (ICT); HIV/AIDS; the increased participation of young people in armed conflict, both as victims and perpetrators; and the growing importance of intergenerational relations in an ageing global society. In resolution 60/2 (see p. 1296), the Assembly added those issues as additional priority areas for the implementation of the World Programme.

During the forty-third session of the Commission for Social Development (New York, 9-18 February) [E/2005/26], a panel discussion took place that highlighted the youth development agenda of the Programme of Action and its linkages to the MDGs [YUN 2000, p. 51] and internationally agreed targets. In addition, several workshops were organized in the Arab region on youth policies and strategies in the context of the MDGs (Bahrain, 28-29 May; Sana'a, Yemen, 21-23 June; Rabat, Morocco, 6-8 July). In order to develop a draft set of indicators to monitor and measure the global situation of youth, an expert group meeting on youth development indicators was organized (New York, 12-14 December).

Report of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 58/133 [YUN 2003, p. 1217], the Secretary-General submitted a July report [A/60/156] summarizing the views and recommendations of young people regarding the 10-year review of the World Programme of Action for Youth to the Year 2000 and Beyond. The inputs were collected from young people through consultative meetings (Coimbra, Portugal, 31 January–4 February; New York, 14-17 February; Cairo, Egypt, 27-29 May) and in response to a booklet entitled "Making commitments matter: a toolkit for young people to evaluate national youth policy", published by the UN Department of Economic and Social Affairs in 2004. The views collected were grouped into three clusters, reflecting the 15 youth concerns identified by the Assembly (see p. 1294).

The report concluded that the response to the request for inputs to the 10-year review indicated that the World Programme of Action for Youth continued to have importance in the lives of young people. The process of gathering the inputs had generated a great deal of interest and commitment at regional and national levels.

World Youth Report 2005

In response to General Assembly resolution 58/133 [YUN 2003, p. 1217], the Secretary-General submitted an abridged version of the World Youth Report 2005 [A/60/61-E/2005/7], an overview of the global situation of young people on the occasion of the tenth anniversary of the adoption of the World Programme of Action for Youth to the Year 2000 and Beyond. The report was also considered at the forty-third session of the Commission for Social Development [E/2005/26] (see p. 1190). The report stated that between 1995 and 2005, the world's youth population (persons between 15 and 24 years of age) grew from 1,025 million to 1,153 million, 85 per cent of whom were living in developing countries. It also reviewed progress with regard to the 10 priority areas of the World Programme of Action and, in an annex, highlighted the five additional concerns (see p. 1294).

The report noted that the current generation of young people faced more complex challenges than previous generations. Over 200 million youth were living in poverty, 130 million were illiterate, 88 million were unemployed and 10 million were living with HIV/AIDS. While some progress had been achieved in a number of priority areas of the Programme of Action, the case for a renewed commitment to its goals was clear.

Recommendations presented by the Secretary-General for the Assembly's consideration included: the scaling-up of investments in youth; the inclusion of young people as partners in achieving the MDGs; the development of integrated youth policies by Governments, paying special attention to the various disadvantaged groups of young people, including those with disabilities, young migrants and indigenous youth; the continuous evaluation of youth policy by Governments and the involvement of young people in the evaluation; and the development of a verifiable set of indicators that would allow for better measurement of progress achieved for young people in the future. The Secretary-General further recommended that the Assembly endorse the five additional issues of concern (see p. 1294) to complement the priority areas of the World Programme of Action and call on the UN system to enhance synergies among relevant system activities.

An expanded version of the Secretary-General's report, World Youth Report 2005: Young People Today, and in 2015 [Sales No. E.05.IV.6], was launched as a UN sales publication on 4 October.

Youth employment

In response to General Assembly resolution 58/133 [YUN 2003, p. 1217], the Secretary-General submitted a July report [A/60/133 & Corr.1] containing a global analysis and evaluation of national action plans on youth employment. In an overview of the challenges relating to youth employment, the report observed that the International Labour Organization (ILO) estimated that around 88 million young people were unemployed worldwide. Of the 186 million unemployed persons in the world, young people accounted for 47 per cent, despite making up only 25 per cent of the global working-age population. ILO also reported an increase in intermittent work and insecure arrangements for young people in both industrialized and developing economies. As at 30 June 2005, 39 Member States had submitted a plan or progress report on the elaboration of national reviews and action plans on youth employment, and many others had prepared, or were in the process of preparing, national action plans or other documents addressing the matter.

The report noted that the urgency of the commitment to give young people access to decent and productive work had only increased since the adoption of the Millennium Declaration in 2000 [YUN 2000, p. 49]. Unemployment and underemployment of young people were not only a social concern, but also had economic and political dimensions. In countries with social protection, such as unemployment insurance, youth unemployment represented an enormous drain on budgets and a waste of capabilities. In others without social protection, the burden was felt by families and communities. Based on a review of national plans, the report presented a number of broad conclusions: policies to address youth employment required a coherent and integrated approach that prepared young people for the labour market and the labour market for young people; youth employment policies tended to focus on the supply side and needed to be accompanied by measures to create additional employment opportunities; policies favouring youth employment should be promoted with a view to improving the employment situation for people of all ages in the labour market; and the participation of representative youth organizations in the preparation of action plans was weak and the involvement of employers' and workers' organizations inadequate. In addition, most countries not only had a lot to learn from one another, but would welcome information and knowledge on how to address youth unemployment. The report also noted that meeting the Millennium Declaration commitment relating to youth employment required concerted and coordinated action at the local, national and international levels, and that developing strategies and programmes for youth employment provided a powerful tool for building political consensus and policy coherence in other areas, including security, peacebuilding and development. Finally, the report noted that the proposal of the High-Level Panel on Youth Employment of the Youth Employment Network (formed by the Secretary-General in collaboration with ILO and the World Bank in 2001 [YUN 2001, p. 1100]) for a major new policy and action-oriented initiative on the links between youth employment and collective security merited serious consideration and support.

Recommendations by the Secretary-General for the Assembly's consideration included: encouraging countries to prepare or implement national reviews and action plans on youth employment, and to submit their reports to the Youth Employment Network as soon as possible and encouraging countries to develop their plans in collaboration with youth, worker and employer organizations and civil society, and to integrate action plans into development and poverty reduction strategy documents. Governments were encouraged to develop appropriate policy-oriented indicators to monitor and evaluate progress in implementing national action plans. The Youth Employment Network should coordinate its core partners' work to improve indicators and Member States should be encouraged to consider youth employment as integral to their overall development and collective security strategies, giving renewed attention to the Millennium Declaration commitment concerning decent and productive work for young people. The Secretary-General also recommended that the Assembly renew its invitation, made in resolutions 57/165 [YUN 2002, p. 1192] and 58/133 [YUN 2003, p. 1217], to the Youth Employment Network to support Governments in the elaboration and implementation of national reviews and action plans; and to strengthen the Network's Youth Consultative Group so that its constituent youth organizations could play a more active role in the development of action plans. He further recommended that the Assembly invite new countries and organizations to join the Network; encourage the lead countries to strengthen the Network as a peer exchange, support and review mechanism; and encourage Member States to provide additional financial resources to expand its work. He also recommended inviting ILO to update annually the global analysis of progress made in developing and implementing national reviews and action plans on youth employment.

At the fourth meeting of the High-Level Panel on Youth Employment (Beijing, 20-21 May), members concluded that the original vision for the Youth Employment Network [YUN 2001, p. 1100] had been achieved and proposed a strategy for its future direction, including the following three areas of action: capacity-building for sustainable partnership engagement; knowledge management and communication; and coordination and facilitation, including leveraging and pooling political, technical and financial resources for youth employment initiatives.

Ageing persons

Follow-up to the Second World Assembly on Ageing (2002)

Report of Secretary General. In response to General Assembly resolution 59/150 [YUN 2004, p. 1193], the Secretary-General submitted a July report [A/60/151] on follow-up to the Second (2002) World Assembly on Ageing [YUN 2002, p. 1193]. He provided information on activities carried out by Member States at the national level in 2004/05 to implement the Madrid International Plan of Action on Ageing [ibid., p. 1194], which was adopted at the Second World Assembly. He also described action taken by the UN Secretariat and the funds and programmes of the UN system, and by major NGOs, in support of national implementation and their efforts to mainstream ageing issues into international programmes. The report described progress made by countries in implementing the Plan of Action's road map [YUN 2003, p. 1219], noting that action was being taken in several areas, including national capacity-building and promotion of institutional follow-up to the Madrid Plan; ageing-specific policy and programmes; and mainstreaming efforts.

The report noted that the UN Department of Economic and Social Affairs (DESA) was continuing to work on the technical assistance initiative, launched in 2003, to support Member States in implementing the Madrid Plan of Action, including undertaking advisory missions to Kyrgyzstan in 2004 and to Egypt in 2005. However, lack of awareness of the Madrid Plan or its contents remained an obstacle to implementation in some regions, and even among UN staff in field offices. Overall, there was a need to strengthen the strategy for raising the visibility of the Madrid Plan at both the national and international levels. The report observed that mainstreaming ageing in national plans and international strategies also remained a challenge. It also noted that ageing and the situation of older persons often continued to be addressed from a humanitarian perspective that ignored the potential of older persons to contribute to reaching national development objectives. It further noted that national capacity-building was essential for the implementation of the Madrid Plan, but the human and financial resources available to the UN system, and specifically to DESA, for providing technical assistance remained severely limited.

The Secretary-General suggested that the Assembly consider calling on States, UN system funds and agencies and NGOs to reinforce their advocacy campaigns aimed at informing major societal actors about the decisions taken at the Second World Assembly on Ageing. The Assembly should reiterate its recommendation that the situation of older persons should be taken into account in reaching development goals and stress the need for additional capacity-building at the national level in order to implement the Madrid Plan of Action.

International Conference. On 24 August [A/60/377-E/2005/92], Qatar transmitted to the Secretary-General and the General Assembly President the Declaration of the Doha International Conference on Ageing in View of Present-Day Changes (Doha, Qatar, 4-6 April). The Declaration contained recommendations relating to care and concern for the elderly and their participation in development, and appealed for the drafting of a universal declaration of the rights of the elderly, to be promulgated on the International Day of Older Persons (designated as 1 October by the Assembly in resolution 45/106 [YUN 1990, p. 820]).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December [meeting 64], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee [A/60/502 & Corr.1], adopted resolution 60/135 without vote [agenda item 63].

Follow-up to the Second World Assembly on Ageing

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 57/167 of 18 December 2002, in which it endorsed the Political Declaration and the Madrid International Plan of Action on Ageing, 2002, its resolution 58/134 of 22 December 2003, in which it took note, inter alia, of the road map for the implementation of the Madrid Plan of Action, and its resolution 59/150 of 20 December 2004,

Recalling also Economic and Social Council resolution 2003/14 of 21 July 2003, in which the Council invited Governments, the United Nations system and civil society to participate in a "bottom-up" approach to the review and appraisal of the Madrid Plan of Action,

Recalling further Commission for Social Development resolution 42/1 of 13 February 2004 entitled "Modalities for the review and appraisal of the Madrid International Plan of Action on Ageing, 2002", in which the Commission decided to undertake the review and appraisal of the Madrid Plan of Action every five years, with each review and appraisal cycle to focus on one of the priority directions of the Madrid Plan of Action,

Recognizing that in many parts of the world, awareness of the Madrid Plan of Action remains limited or non-existent, which limits the scope of implementation efforts,

1. Calls upon Governments, the organizations and bodies of the United Nations system and the non-governmental community to reinforce their advocacy campaigns aimed at informing all major societal actors, including older persons and their organizations, about the decisions taken at the Second World Assembly on Ageing;

2. Recommends that ongoing efforts to achieve the internationally agreed development goals, including those contained in the United Nations Millennium Declaration, take into account the situation of older persons;

3. Calls upon Governments and, within their mandates, the agencies and organizations of the United Nations system, and encourages the non-governmental community, to ensure that the challenges of population ageing and the concerns of older persons are adequately incorporated into their programmes and projects;

4. Invites Member States and the organizations and bodies of the United Nations system to take into account the needs and concerns of older persons in decision-making at all levels;

5. Stresses the need for additional capacity-building at the national level in order to promote and facilitate implementation of the Madrid International Plan of Action on Ageing, 2002, and in this connection encourages Governments to support the United Nations Trust Fund for Ageing to enable the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the Secretariat to provide expanded assistance to countries, upon their request;

6. Calls upon Governments to consult and utilize the Research Agenda on Ageing for the Twenty-first Century, adopted by the Valencia Forum in April 2002, as a tool for strengthening national capacity on ageing for the implementation, review and appraisal of the Madrid Plan of Action;

7. Invites Governments, intergovernmental organizations and non-governmental organizations to encourage and support comprehensive, diversified and specialized research on ageing in all countries;

8. Invites the functional commissions of the Economic and Social Council to integrate the issues of population and individual ageing into their work in order to promote implementation of the Madrid Plan of Action;

9. Recommends that the Commission on the Status of Women continue to consider the situation of older women, in particular those who are most vulnerable, including those living in rural areas;

10. Encourages those regional commissions that have not yet done so to elaborate a regional strategy for the implementation of the Madrid Plan of Action;

11. Takes note of Commission for Social Development resolution 42/1, and in this context requests the Secretary-General to present his proposals for conducting the review and appraisal exercise at the regional and global levels to the Commission at its forty-fourth session;

12. Requests the organizations and bodies of the United Nations system to continue to strengthen the capacity of the focal points on ageing and to provide them with adequate resources for further implementation of the Madrid Plan of Action, in particular through appropriate mainstreaming action;

13. Stresses the importance of the collection of data and population statistics disaggregated by age and sex on all aspects of policy formulation by all countries, and encourages the relevant entities of the United Nations system to support national efforts in capacity-building, especially those of developing countries and countries with economies in transition, takes note in this context of the establishment by the United Nations of an Internet-accessible database on ageing, and invites States to submit, whenever possible, information for inclusion in the database;

14. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General, and requests that it be forwarded to the Commission for Social Development at its forty-fourth session in order to assist the Commission in its deliberations;

15. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its sixty-first session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Chapter XII

Refugees and displaced persons

In 2005, although the total number of persons of concern to the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) rose by 8 per cent to 20.8 million, from 19.2 million in 2004, the refugee population worldwide fell to its lowest level in almost a quarter century and mass refugee outflows into neighbouring countries were also the lowest in 29 years. Refugees accounted for 40 per cent of the 2005 population of concern, followed by internally displaced persons (IDPs), 32 per cent and stateless persons, 11 per cent. UNHCR maintained efforts to find durable solutions for those groups, encouraging voluntary repatriation or return as the preferred solution. In that regard, an estimated 1.1 million refugees returned to their countries of origin during the year. With UNHCR's assistance, thousands other refugees found solutions through resettlement elsewhere, or were integrated locally. To facilitate that process, the UNHCR Executive Committee had adopted a Conclusion on Local Integration, setting out a framework for related activities. New refugee outflows totalled some 136,000 recorded arrivals in 19 asylum countries, most notably in Chad (32,400), Benin (25,500), Ghana (13,600), Uganda (24,000) and Yemen (13,200). Those outflows resulted mainly from the ongoing conflict in Sudan's Darfur region and the consequent decline in the security situation in the Chad/Darfur area, instability in parts of the Central African Republic and violence in regions of Côte d'Ivoire, the Democratic Republic of the Congo (DRC) and Somalia, among other places. Overall, up to 5 million of the world's refugee population remained in protracted situations, including Afghans (1.7 million), Burundians (394,000), Congolese from the DRC (308,000), Somalis (229,000) and Sudanese (364,000). Others affected were Saharawi refugees in the Tindouf camps in Algeria, Bhutanese in Nepal and the Rohingyas in Bangladesh. UNHCR maintained efforts to find durable solutions for those caught in protracted situations, including through the restructuring of its Department of International Protection and the creation of a Solutions and operations support section, charged with reviewing such situations and enhancing resettlement services.

Despite improvements in many aspects of the protection environment during the year, UNHCR continued to face significant challenges in addressing protection gaps relating to sexual and gender-based violence and restrictive practices regarding reception and access to asylum procedures. Other difficulties included security-related concerns, as well as the major challenge of working with States to identify comprehensive approaches to using all durable solutions for persons of concern. Ongoing efforts to implement the "Convention Plus" initiative, launched in 2003 to help strengthen the commitment of States and UNHCR partners to resolving refugee situations through multilateral action plans, focused on concluding negotiations to better address secondary movements and target development assistance for durable solutions. During the year, the Commonwealth of Independent States (CIS) Conference process, launched in 1996 to address the unique and complex mix of problems facing refugees and other displaced people in those States, concluded with the adoption of a final statement and the examination of a successor framework for considering Euro-Asian cooperation on migration.

Appointment. On 27 May, the General Assembly, by decision 59/420, appointed Mr. Antônio Manuel de Oliveira Guterres as United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees for a period of five years.

Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees

Programme policy

Executive Committee Action. At its fifty-sixth session (Geneva, 3-7 October) [A/60/12/Add.1], the Executive Committee of the UNHCR Programme, in a conclusion on international protection, expressed concern at the human rights violations perpetuating displacement within and beyond national borders and called on States to promote and protect the rights of all refugees and other persons of concern, with special attention to those with specific needs, particularly children. It encouraged States, UNHCR, intergovernmental organizations and non-governmental organizations (NGOs) to redouble efforts to implement the Agenda for Protection [YUN 2002, p. 1205], the multi-year programme of action for enhancing the protection of refugees and asylum-seekers. Reflecting on the need for UNHCR to strengthen its presence in the field, the Committee called on States to support its efforts in that regard with the timely provision of resources and by ensuring the safety and security of all UNHCR personnel and property and that of other humanitarian organizations discharging UNHCR-mandated functions. The Committee noted proposals to strengthen the Programme's humanitarian system and encouraged it to explore the feasibility of assuming coordination responsibilities for the protection of internally displaced persons (IDPs), camp management and shelter in conflict situations. The Committee also adopted conclusions on the legal provision on international protection, including through complementary forms of protection and on local integration. It approved the creation of a post of Assistant High Commissioner (Protection) at the Assistant Secretary-General level, effective 1 January 2006; and adopted decisions on enhancing the independence of the Office of the Inspector-General; and on administrative, financial and programme matters.

In his opening statement to the Committee, the High Commissioner, highlighting aspects of the 2005 World Summit Outcome (see p. 48) that could open up new opportunities for addressing the root causes of the conflicts resulting in forced displacement, noted contradictions in areas crucial to UNHCR's work. Such a situation was at odds with UNHCR as a non-political humanitarian body. He stressed that the Office was primarily a protection agency concerned with the need to create a space where rights could be enjoyed fully and where the rule of law prevailed. That was one of the main reasons for his proposals to establish the position of Assistant High Commissioner for Protection [YUN 2004, p. 1200] and to reorganize UNHCR's field support services for effective protection delivery. The High Commissioner resolved to reform UNHCR's structures, rules and procedures, with the aim of ensuring that protection informed all its policies and activities, particularly regarding women, children and older persons of concern. From that perspective, mainstreaming the effective implementation of UNHCR policies, guidelines and actions on gender, age and diversity would be a top priority in 2006, as would continuing efforts to eradicate malnutrition and increase the capacity to combat HIV/AIDS and other serious health risks. The physical security of refugees and returnees also remained high on UNHCR's protection agenda, as was the security of its staff and partners. Its operational priority was to build up the requisite capacity by 2007, to ensure a quick and effective response to unexpected refugee crises that might affect up to 500,000 people.

To further meet its challenges, UNHCR needed to demonstrate vision and results, strong partnerships, a viable funding base, transparency, accountability and structural reform. To that end, it was making efforts to strengthen the Office of the Inspector-General and its independence, and was committed to establishing a results-based management system, with clear objectives, a measurable process for achieving them and an organization-wide accountability framework. For the first time, the Office issued the Global Strategic Objectives at the beginning of the planning cycle to instruct and guide the budget and programming process.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December [meeting 64], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee [A/60/499], adopted resolution 60/129 without vote [agenda item 39].

Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees on the activities of his Office and the report of the Executive Committee of the Programme of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees on the work of its fifty-sixth session and the conclusions and decisions contained therein,

Recalling its previous annual resolutions on the work of the Office of the High Commissioner since its establishment by the General Assembly,

Expressing its appreciation for the leadership shown by the High Commissioner, commending the staff and implementing partners of the Office of the High Commissioner for the competent, courageous and dedicated manner in which they discharge their responsibilities, and underscoring its strong condemnation of all forms of violence to which humanitarian personnel and United Nations and associated personnel are increasingly exposed,

1. Endorses the report of the Executive Committee of the Programme of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees on the work of its fifty-sixth session;

2. Welcomes the important work undertaken by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and its Executive Committee in the course of the year, and notes in this context the adoption of the general conclusion on international protection, the conclusion on the provision of international protection, including through complementary forms of protection, and the conclusion on local integration, which are aimed at strengthening the international protection regime, consistent with the Agenda for Protection, and at assisting Governments in meeting their protection responsibilities in today's changing international environment;

3. Reaffirms the 1951 Convention relating to the Status of Refugees and the 1967 Protocol thereto as the foundation of the international refugee protection regime, recognizes the importance of their full and effective application by States parties and the values they embody, notes with satisfaction that one hundred and forty-six States are now parties to one instrument or to both, encourages States not parties to consider acceding to those instruments, underlines in particular the importance of full respect for the principle of non-refoulement, and recognizes that a number of States not parties to the international refugee instruments have shown a generous approach to hosting refugees;

4. Notes that fifty-eight States are now parties to the 1954 Convention relating to the Status of Stateless Persons and that thirty States are parties to the 1961 Convention on the Reduction of Statelessness, and encourages the High Commissioner to continue his activities on behalf of stateless persons;

5. Notes with interest the Mexico Plan of Action to Strengthen International Protection of Refugees in Latin America, endorsed by States participating in the meeting commemorating the twentieth anniversary of the Cartagena Declaration on Refugees convened in Mexico City on 15 and 16 November 2004, and expresses its support for the efforts of interested States and the Office of the High Commissioner to promote its implementation, with the cooperation and assistance of the international community;

6. Welcomes the successful conclusion of the follow-up process to the 1996 Geneva Conference on the problems of refugees, displaced persons, migration and asylum issues in the countries of the Commonwealth of Independent States, and encourages States, the Office of the High Commissioner and other relevant actors to continue to work collaboratively, building on the successes of the Conference process to date;

7. Re-emphasizes that the protection of refugees is primarily the responsibility of States, whose full and effective cooperation, action and political resolve are required to enable the Office of the High Commissioner to fulfil its mandated functions;

8. Urges all States and relevant non-governmental and other organizations, in conjunction with the Office of the High Commissioner, in a spirit of international solidarity and burden- and responsibility-sharing, to cooperate and to mobilize resources with a view to enhancing the capacity of, and reducing the heavy burden borne by, countries that have received large numbers of refugees and asylum-seekers, and calls upon the Office to continue to play its catalytic role in mobilizing assistance from the international community to address the root causes as well as the economic, environmental and social impact of large-scale refugee populations in developing countries, in particular the least developed countries, and countries with economies in transition;

9. Emphasizes that international protection of refugees is a dynamic and action-oriented function that is at the core of the mandate of the Office of the High Commissioner and that it includes, in cooperation with States and other partners, the promotion and facilitation of, inter alia, the admission, reception and treatment of refugees in accordance with internationally agreed standards and the ensuring of durable, protection-oriented solutions, bearing in mind the particular needs of vulnerable groups and paying special attention to those with specific needs, and notes in this context that the delivery of international protection is a staff-intensive service that requires adequate staff with the appropriate expertise, especially at the field level;

10. Notes the activities undertaken in pursuit of the objectives of the Convention Plus initiative, and encourages the High Commissioner and interested States to strengthen the international protection regime through the development of specific, multilateral, comprehensive and practical approaches to resolving refugee situations, including improving international burden- and responsibility-sharing and realizing durable solutions within a multilateral context;

11. Welcomes the progress that has been achieved in increasing the number of refugees resettled and the number of States offering opportunities for resettlement, notes that the Multilateral Framework of Understandings on Resettlement sets out the strategic use of resettlement as part of a comprehensive approach to refugee situations aimed at improving access to durable solutions for a greater number of refugees, and invites interested States, the Office of the High Commissioner and other relevant partners to make use of the Multilateral Framework, where appropriate and feasible;

12. Recalls the important role of effective partnerships and coordination in meeting the needs of refugees and other displaced persons and in finding durable solutions to their situations, welcomes the efforts under way, in cooperation with countries hosting refugees and countries of origin, including their respective local communities, United Nations agencies and other development actors, to promote a framework for durable solutions, particularly in protracted refugee situations, which includes the "4Rs" approach (repatriation, reintegration, rehabilitation and reconstruction) to sustainable return, and encourages States, in cooperation with United Nations agencies and other development actors, to support, inter alia, through the allocation of funds, the development and implementation of the 4Rs and other programming tools to facilitate the transition from relief to development;

13. Strongly reaffirms the fundamental importance and the purely humanitarian and non-political character of the function of the Office of the High Commissioner of providing international protection to refugees and seeking permanent solutions to refugee problems, and recalls that these solutions include voluntary repatriation and, where appropriate and feasible, local integration and resettlement in a third country, while reaffirming that voluntary repatriation, supported by necessary rehabilitation and development assistance to facilitate sustainable reintegration, remains the preferred solution;

14. Acknowledges that the provision by States of complementary forms of protection to ensure that persons in need of international protection actually receive it is a positive way of responding pragmatically to certain situations, and affirms that measures to provide complementary forms of protection should be implemented in a manner that strengthens the existing international refugee protection regime;

15. Notes that local integration in the refugee context is a sovereign decision and an option to be exercised by States guided by their treaty obligations and human rights principles and that it is a dynamic and multifaceted two-way process that requires efforts by all parties concerned, including a preparedness on the part of refugees to adapt to the host society without having to forego their own cultural identity and a corresponding readiness on the part of host communities and public institutions to welcome refugees and to meet the needs of a diverse population, and acknowledges that the process of local integration is complex and gradual, comprising three distinct but interrelated legal, economic, and social and cultural dimensions, all of which are important to the ability of refugees to integrate successfully;

16. Acknowledges that the global refugee situation represents an international challenge requiring that international burden- and responsibility-sharing be addressed effectively, and recognizes that allowing for local integration, where applicable, is an act of States that is a durable solution for refugees, which contributes to the said burden- and responsibility-sharing, without prejudice to the specific situation of certain developing countries facing mass influxes;

17. Emphasizes the obligation of all States to accept the return of their nationals, calls upon States to facilitate the return of their nationals who have been determined not to be in need of international protection, and affirms the need for the return of persons to be undertaken in a safe and humane manner and with full respect for their human rights and dignity, irrespective of the status of the persons concerned;

18. Condemns all acts that pose a threat to the personal security and well-being of refugees and asylum-seekers, such as refoulement, unlawful expulsion and physical attacks, and calls upon all States of refuge, in cooperation with international organizations where appropriate, to take all necessary measures to ensure respect for the principles of refugee protection, including the humane treatment of asylum-seekers;

19. Affirms the importance of mainstreaming the protection needs of women and children to ensure their participation in the planning and implementation of programmes of the Office of the High Commissioner and State policies and the importance of according priority to addressing the problem of sexual and gender-based violence;

20. Encourages the Office of the High Commissioner to continue to improve its management systems and to ensure effective and transparent use of its resources, recognizes that adequate and timely resources are essential for the Office to continue to fulfil the mandate conferred upon it through its statute and by subsequent General Assembly resolutions on refugees and other persons of concern, recalls its resolutions 58/153 of 22 December 2003, 58/270 of 23 December 2003 and 59/170 of 20 December 2004 concerning the implementation of paragraph 20 of the statute of the Office, and urges Governments and other donors to respond promptly to annual and supplementary appeals issued by the Office for requirements under its programmes;

21. Requests the High Commissioner to report on his activities to the General Assembly at its sixty-first session.

Strengthening UNHCR

Oral report of High Commissioner. Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 58/153 [YUN 2003, p. 1226] on strengthening UNHCR's capacity to carry out its mandate, a UNHCR representative presented a 21 July oral update of the High Commissioner to the Economic and Social Council [E/2005/SR.35] on the coordination aspects of the work of the Office. UNHCR was working more closely with other actors within the UN system, as partnerships were the only means of helping conflict-torn countries create conditions for sustainable return. On the humanitarian front, UNHCR was collaborating with the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs (OCHA) in a number of areas, including participation in an interagency process aimed at improving assistance and protection to internally displaced persons. It was cooperating with the World Food Programme (WFP) to secure adequate levels of food and water to refugees and exploring ways to enhance ties with the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) and the Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights. The Office was also strengthening its cooperation with the Department of Peacekeeping Operations in the field of disarmament, demobilization and reintegration in peacekeeping missions. It also supported the establishment of a Peacebuilding Commission (see p. 113) and hoped to contribute to the planned peacebuilding support office. In terms of longer-term recovery strategies, the Office's membership in the United Nations Development Group (UNDG) was beginning to show concrete results, as UNHCR was participating actively in the joint UNDG/World Bank needs assessments for countries emerging from conflict and in transition from relief to development.

Pursuant to Assembly resolution 59/172 [YUN 2004, p. 1208], which requested the Secretary-General to report orally to the Economic and Social Council on assistance to refugees, returnees and displaced persons in Africa (see p. 1311), the Representative noted that some 4.5 million people, including approximately 2.8 million refugees were of concern to UNHCR on the continent. Voluntary repatriation continued to be a key objective of its operations on the continent, and the challenge in such operations was to ensure the sustainability of returns by addressing the reintegration needs of returnees and IDPs, and the post-conflict reconstruction priorities of communities in the areas of return.

Coordination of emergency humanitarian assistance

In 2005 [A/61/12], UNHCR actively supported UN system reform and improvements to the global humanitarian response capacity through discussions on policy and implementation, notably regarding peace and security, system-wide coherence, development, and strengthening of the Resident Coordinator and Humanitarian Coordinator systems. It was engaged with the Peacebuilding Commission, whose work should play a crucial role in supporting the sustainable reintegration of returning refugees and IDPs. The Office also continued to participate in other key coordination bodies, including the United Nations Chief Executives Board for Coordination (CEB) and its subsidiary bodies, the UNDG and the Executive Committee for Humanitarian Affairs (ECHA). Together with the Joint United Nations Programme on HIV/AIDS (UNAIDS) and other partners, it maintained efforts to help combat HIV and AIDS among persons of concern and to ensure their inclusion within host country programmes on the disease. UNHCR continued to function as the secretariat of the UN sub-cluster on humanitarian response and post-conflict recovery in the African Union's (AU) New Partnership for Africa's Development (NEPAD) programme (see p. 1080). Bilateral collaboration helped make its interventions more effective in such areas as food security and nutrition, upholding human rights, advocacy in combating restrictive asylum measures, the rights of IDPs, and in respect of the many challenges posed by the asylum-migration nexus. Its partnerships with NGOs continued to evolve towards more comprehensive collaboration and involvement in the assessment, planning, implementation and evaluation phases of operations, as well as in revising various guidelines and policies. In 2005, over 20 per cent of UNHCR's budget was channelled through partnerships with nearly 650 NGOs, approximately 80 per cent of which were national NGOs. The bulk of the funding covered education, legal assistance and protection, health and nutrition, shelter and other infrastructure, community services, and transport and logistics.

Evaluation activities

UNHCR, in a July report [A/AC.96/1014], updated information on the activities of its Evaluation and Policy Analysis Unit (EPAU). During the year, the Unit published numerous evaluation reports, tools and reviews and worked on a variety of projects expected to be completed by year's end or early in 2006. Those included the revision of its urban refugee policy and fast-track programme; an evaluation of its protection staffing capacity, the Protection Information Section and vehicle fleet around the world; its joint evaluation of the Norwegian Refugee Committee's secondments to the Office and its pilot food distribution in five countries; and an update and follow-up to the 2004 evaluation of its Medical Service. The evaluation policy adopted in 2003 [YUN 2003, p. 1224] had been implemented, but showed distinct shortcomings owing to the lack of capacity to meaningfully train staff in evaluation, among other reasons. While noting the need for EPAU to also hone its policy analysis capacity, the report highlighted efforts to assess its practices and review UNHCR's evaluation policy and institutional framework, in order to meet the criteria set by the UN System-wide agreed Norms and Standards for Evaluation, contained in General Assembly resolution 59/250 [YUN 2004, p. 868]. Also in line with those norms and standards, the Unit intended to professionalize its team during 2005 and 2006. According to UNHCR's Global Report 2005, one of its key concerns was ensuring that evaluation findings and recommendations were effectively utilized by UNHCR. Thus, to support the use of lessons learned in programming and decision-making, the Unit designed a database which indexed all recommendations contained in evaluation reports, thereby allowing for better performance and accountability in planning and implementing UNHCR's operational activities.

Inspections

In 2005 [A/61/12], the High Commissioner revised the terms of reference of the role, functions and methods of work of the Inspector-General's Office (IGO), providing a new charter aimed at ensuring its independence. It also introduced a policy of wider dissemination of inspection reports and updating IGO's operational policies and procedures, in line with relevant administrative instructions from the Secretary-General. In October, the Executive Committee adopted a decision on enhancing IGO's independence to enable it to better fulfil its functions. IGO continued during the year to increase its investigation capacity through the training of 80 staff members in the Investigation Learning Programme. Quality standards were established to increase professionalism in the conduct of investigations and to provide the basis for quality assurance initiatives in the future.

During the year, IGO carried out ten inspections at the country level and one at headquarters, resulting in over 300 recommendations to address recurring problems. Those included patterns of use of United Nations Volunteers and United Nations Office for Project Services arrangements for meeting field staffing needs; assignment of critical front-line responsibilities in field operations to inexperienced staff; limited engagement of country offices with situations of statelessness; the lack of adequate information sharing with implementing partners in planning processes; and the lack of clarity in roles, responsibilities, authority levels and communication channels in field operations. IGO received 99 new reports of possible misconduct; investigative findings supported a conclusion of misconduct in 21 per cent of those cases.

During the reporting period, the UN Office of Internal Oversight Services (OIOS) audited operations and activities with expenditure amounting to $172 million in over 20 UNHCR field operations and several headquarters Units. It continued to use a measurement system to rate the effectiveness of the application of key internal controls in audited operations, which facilitated benchmarking between country operations, provided assurances that activities were adequately administered and assisted in identifying operations where prompt corrective action was required. UNHCR initiated a Risk Management Framework, which would help develop a risk-based audit plan for activities beginning in 2008.

Enlargement of the Executive Committee

On 22 July (decision 2005/243) and 21 October (decision 2005/314), respectively, the Economic and Social Council took note of the requests of Jordan [E/2005/46] and Portugal [E/2005/93] for membership in the UNHCR Executive Committee and recommended that the General Assembly take a decision at its sixtieth (2005) session on the question of enlarging the Committee's membership from 68 to 70 States.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December [meeting 64], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/60/499], adopted resolution 60/127 without vote [agenda item 39].

Enlargement of the Executive Committee of the Programme of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees

The General Assembly,

Taking note of Economic and Social Council decisions 2005/243 of 22 July 2005 and 2005/314 of 21 October 2005 concerning the enlargement of the Executive Committee of the Programme of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees,

Taking note also of the requests regarding the enlargement of the Executive Committee contained in the letter dated 8 March 2005 from the Permanent Representative of Jordan to the United Nations addressed to the Secretary-General and the letter dated 12 September 2005 from the Permanent Representative of Portugal to the United Nations addressed to the Secretary-General,

1. Decides to increase the number of members of the Executive Committee of the Programme of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees from sixty-eight to seventy States;

2. Requests the Economic and Social Council to elect the additional members at its resumed organizational session for 2006.

Financial and administrative questions

UNHCR's initial annual programme budget target for 2005 was set at $974.6 million by the Executive Committee in 2004 [YUN 2004, p. 1200]. Total income for 2005 amounted to some $1,216 million. Contributions and miscellaneous income (including a carry-over from 2004) provided $843.6 million for the annual programme budget and $317.2 million for the supplementary programme budgets, with $16.1 million provided for the Junior Professional Officers (JPO) programme, and $39.3 million received from the UN regular budget. Expenditure totalled $1,141.6 million, with the highest amount going to Africa ($529 million), followed by Central Asia, South-West Asia, North Africa and the Middle East ($165.2 million), Europe ($108.3 million), Asia and the Pacific ($82.7 million) and the Americas ($31.4 million).

In October, the Executive Committee approved the revised annual programme budget for 2005, amounting to $980.5 million, including the UN regular budget contribution of $34.6 million, which, with the provisions for JPOs of $8.5 million and the needs under supplementary programmes of $370.2 million, brought total requirements in 2005 to $1,359.2 million.

The Committee also approved $1,136.8 million for the 2006 annual programme budget, including an operational reserve of $75.8 million, and agreed to continue on a further trial basis in 2006, to provide appropriation authority for fully funded additional activities. Together with $8.5 million for JPOs, those provisions brought requirements for 2006 to $1,145.3 million. The Committee authorized the High Commissioner, within the total appropriation, to effect adjustments in regional and global programmes and in headquarters budgets, create supplementary programmes and issue special appeals when emergency needs could not be met fully from the operational reserve.

The Committee decided to move to a biennial programme/budget cycle with effect from the 2008-2009 biennium and requested UNHCR to begin the necessary preparatory work, including the revision to its Financial Rules. The Committee extended the pilot period of the operational reserve, category II, to allow for an independent evaluation of its use and effectiveness, and enable a final decision on it to be made at the Committee's 2006 session. It also requested UNHCR, in 2006, to elaborate the criteria for and financial consequences of the non-inclusion of supplementary programmes in the annual programme budget.

Accounts (2004)

The audited financial statements of voluntary funds administered by UNHCR for the year ended 31 December 2004 [A/60/5/Add.5] showed total expenditures of $1,065.3 million and total available funds of $1,207 million, with a reserve balance of $141.7 million.

The Board of Auditors found that: expenditures had increased by 8 per cent, to $1,065 million, which exceeded the increase in income and led to a deficit of $58 million; the reserve and fund balance at year's end remained, at $142.4 million in real terms; and UNHCR was not able to obtain confirmation of the $4.5 million spent on its behalf by the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), due to deficiencies in UNDP's new enterprise resource planning system. The Board further found that there was no proper segregation of financial duties in several instances for the posting of cash-related transactions; the amounts in previous subprojects covered by audit certificates decreased from 77 per cent in mid-June 2004 to 58 per cent in mid-June 2005; UNHCR failed to seek reimbursement to cover the cost of processing payments made for the United Nations Compensation Commission; and had not completely phased out the use of "project staff" by the 2001 deadline. In addition, the consistency and quality of public protection and resettlement activities and information could be further enhanced; results-based management and multi-year planning improved with regard to the definition of indicators of achievement and the evaluation process; and the management of field offices and the New York Office needed to be improved in the areas of delegation of authority, asset management and planning. The Board made recommendations to improve financial management and reporting and programme management. It observed that UNHCR had actively responded to most recommendations, although some had not yet been implemented.

UNHCR, in August [A/AC.96/1010/Add.1], reported on measures taken or proposed to respond to the Board's recommendations.

In a September report [A/60/387], the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) noted that UNHCR's financial situation was a continuing cause for concern, especially given its $58 million budget deficit, which was larger than in previous years. It expected the Board to address the underlying causes of the deficit and to develop management audit recommendations to assist UNHCR in reducing it without negatively affecting its operations. ACABQ expected the Office to prepare its budgets for 2007 and the 2008-2009 biennium using results-based budgeting guidelines, and asked for more details about its procurement activities. ACABQ expressed concern about unfunded liabilities for after-service health insurance, accrued annual leave and termination benefits amounting to $336 million. It noted, in that regard, that UNHCR had not fully implemented the Board's recommendation to phase out the use of project staff and requested an update on the situation of staff in between assignments in the Board's follow-up report.

The Executive Committee, in a decision on administrative, financial and programme matters [A/60/12/Add.1], requested that it be regularly informed on the measures taken to address the recommendations and observations made by the Board of Auditors and ACABQ.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 23 December [meeting 69], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee [A/60/561], adopted resolution 60/234 A without vote [agenda item 121].

Financial reports and audited financial statements, and reports of the Board of Auditors

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 59/264 A of 23 December 2004 and 59/264 B of 22 June 2005,

Having considered the audited financial statements and the report of the Board of Auditors on the voluntary funds administered by the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees for the year ended 31 December 2004, the note by the Secretary-General transmitting to the General Assembly the letter dated 1 July 2005 from the Chairman of the Board of Auditors transmitting the report of the Board on implementation of its recommendations relating to the biennium 2002-2003, and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Recognizing the difficult conditions under which the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees does its work,

1. Accepts the financial report and audited financial statements and the report and audit opinion of the Board of Auditors regarding the voluntary funds administered by the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees for the period from 1 January to 31 December 2004;

2. Endorses the recommendations of the Board of Auditors contained in its report;

3. Also endorses the conclusions and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, subject to the provisions of the present resolution;

4. Takes note of paragraph 18 of the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, and invites the Advisory Committee, in its future consideration of the report on the implementation of the recommendations of the Board of Auditors, to provide further advice on this proposal;

5. Commends the Board of Auditors for the quality of its report and the streamlined format thereof;

6. Recognizes the efforts of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees in implementing the recommendations of the Board of Auditors, and requests the High Commissioner to intensify his efforts to continue to implement the recommendations of the Board and to report regularly to the relevant governing bodies on progress made in this regard;

7. Notes the concerns of the Board of Auditors about the general financial situation of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, including the further depletion of the reserves of the Office, and encourages Member States to respond in a timely manner to the appeal of the Office for resources;

8. Recalls paragraph 7 of its resolution 58/249 A of 23 December 2003, by which the General Assembly requested the Secretary-General to report to it on the full extent of unfunded staff termination and post-service liabilities in the United Nations and its funds and programmes and to propose measures that would ensure progress towards fully funding such liabilities;

9. Takes note of the note by the Secretary-General transmitting to the General Assembly the letter dated 1 July 2005 from the Chairman of the Board of Auditors transmitting the report of the Board on implementation of its recommendations relating to the biennium 2002-2003;

10. Requests the Secretary-General, in accordance with paragraph 6 of its resolution 59/264 A, to take the necessary measures to ensure that the editing and translation of the reports of the Board of Auditors are completed in a manner that would ensure that they are submitted to the General Assembly in accordance with the six-week rule and thereby enable Member States to have adequate time to consider the large volume of reports prior to the sixty-first session of the General Assembly;

11. Requests the Secretary-General and the executive heads of the funds and programmes of the United Nations to include in future reports on the implementation of the recommendations of the Board of Auditors information on the setting of time frames, the identification of office holders and priorities for the implementation of the recommendations of the Board;

12. Emphasizes that the implementation of the recommendations of the Board of Auditors is essential to ensuring efficient operations and effective internal controls, and decides to monitor closely these efforts.

Management and administrative review

In connection with the High Commissioner's proposal for the establishment of the post of Assistant High Commissioner (Protection) [YUN 2004, p. 1200], UNHCR commissioned an independent study to review its senior management structure, in order to determine how such a position might affect that structure. The study, undertaken by the Geneva-based management consultancy firm, MANNET, examined the weaknesses and challenges facing UNHCR in carrying out its protection and durable solutions mandate; the relationship between the field, the UNHCR headquarters (the bureaux) and its Department of International Protection (DIP); the strategies and plans which the Office had adopted for its work; and the advantages and disadvantages of creating the proposed post.

The study found that UNHCR faced substantial problems regarding protection and durable solutions and that a persistent cause of those problems was related to the interface between its Operations Department and DIP. While reaffirming the status of the UNHCR headquarters as the primary platform for the management of operations, it held that DIP needed to be more operationally and field oriented and more dynamic on several policy and management issues. It acknowledged UNHCR's strategies and activities designed to strengthen protection and durable solutions but noted that better results would be achieved if those strategies and activities were brought together in a comprehensive organizational-strengthening or change-management context. The study raised questions pertaining to the advantages and disadvantages of the proposed post of Assistant High Commissioner, most notably in terms of its potential to help enhance UNHCR's ability to promote and advocate protection externally, strengthen its protection and durable solutions programme, enhance working relations between its operations department and DIP, reinforce the executive management group and strengthen its staffing situation. Other questions addressed the financial implications of creating the post and other alternatives. The study concluded that, although it did not find an overwhelming case for the proposed post of Assistant High Commissioner for Protection by upgrading the post of Director in DIP to that of Assistant Secretary-General level, such a position would be desirable, as it could significantly support UNHCR's overall capacity in protection and durable solutions and would also help improve the interface between operations and DIP. It therefore supported the High Commissioner's revised proposal for the new position, with the proviso that it be established within the context of a comprehensive organizational strengthening programme. That should not warrant any significant changes to UNHCR's structure, given that many of the problems preventing its headquarters from providing adequate support and guidance to the field were not primarily caused by organizational design but by cumbersome and inefficient processes rooted in the issues of organizational culture and leadership.

In October, the Executive Committee of the UNHCR Programme approved the creation of the post of Assistant High Commissioner (Protection) with effect from 1 January 2006, to oversee refugee protection and the related advocacy role of the Office.

Standing Committee

The UNHCR Standing Committee held three meetings in 2005: (8-11 March) [A/AC.96/1007]; (28-30 June) [A/AC.96/1017]; (21-22 September) [A/AC.96/1019]. It considered issues relating to UNHCR's programme budgets and funding; international protection; regional activities and global programmes; programme/protection policy; coordination; management, financial control, administrative oversight and human resources; governance; and consultations.

In October [A/60/12/Add.1], the Executive Committee reaffirmed its 2004 decision [YUN 2004, p. 1203] on the framework for the Standing Committee's programme of work for 2005, decided to integrate into its 2006 programme the work and activities of the High Commissioner's Forum and Convention Plus, and asked it to report on its work in 2006.

Staff safety

At the September meeting of the Standing Committee (21-22 September) [A/AC.96/1019], the Deputy Head of UNHCR Emergency and Security Service and the Chief of the Field Safety Section updated information on staff safety and security management, outlining the factors necessitating a comprehensive review of security management; the main issues of its two-year security work plan; the high priority accorded training and capacity building; a summary of the minimum operating security standards survey; collaboration with the UN Department of Safety and Security (DSS) and other UN organizations; and the future focus on staff safety. In response to questions regarding funding, notably a $10 million gap in funding, both executives clarified that the Office had not included security funding needs in the 2006 annual programme budget because field offices had not submitted up-to-date information. Of the options available, the highest priority was being given to seeking funding from UN common funds. Collaboration with DSS would be further strengthened, which should allow UNHCR to decrease the number of Field Safety Advisors deployed.

Refugee protection and assistance

Protection issues

In his annual report covering 2005 [A/61/12], the High Commissioner observed that, although the protection environment had improved in many areas, significant challenges persisted, including sexual and gender-based violence, often linked to limited livelihood alternatives and sub-standard food rations; restrictive practices regarding reception and access to asylum procedures; and instances of detention and refoulement in countries that had previously been strong adherents to refugee rights. UNHCR took steps to ensure that it could continue to strengthen its protection capacity in the light of changing developments, including systematizing dialogue on crosscutting issues at senior management levels, establishing a Field Reference Group on Protection Policies, developing a protection monitoring tool, and creating an innovative age, gender and diversity mainstreaming (AGDM) accountability framework (see p. 51). As the reporting period had witnessed further restrictions on access to and enjoyment of asylum, against a backdrop of growing national security concerns, UNHCR had intensified its advocacy, notably through training activities with border officials and the police. It continued to promote accession to the 1951 Convention relating to the Status of Refugees [YUN 1951, p. 520] and its 1967 Protocol [YUN 1967, p. 477].

In addition, UNCHR was engaging Governments to raise awareness of international protection needs and responsibilities, and to promote regional cooperation for protecting refugees within broader migration movements, cooperating as necessary with the International Organization for Migration (IOM). The Office worked with various other partners to ensure that legislation to criminalize trafficking included measures to protect and support the victims. The Office promoted ways of sharing burdens and responsibilities more equitably and building capacities to receive and protect refugees, and through its Strengthening Protection Capacity Project, consolidated and expanded its work to develop a comprehensive and sustainable capacity-building methodology. In a bid to address security-related concerns more effectively, it made efforts to sensitize refugees and local communities, as well as relevant government officials and the judiciary, on how best to address sexual and gender-based violence. It also stepped up its interventions against the military recruitment of children, in collaboration with UNICEF. As part of ongoing efforts to reinforce the search for durable solutions, the restructuring of UNHCR's Department of International Protection included the creation of a Solutions and Operations Support Section, charged primarily with reviewing protracted refugee situations. The restructuring also enhanced the Resettlement Service.

In a July note on international protection [A/AC.96/1008], the High Commissioner outlined the main challenges encountered by States and the international community, while addressing protection issues, and the actions taken to address them. He noted that, despite a reduction for the third consecutive year of the number of asylum-seekers in many industrialized countries and the fact that progress had been made in reducing decision-making backlogs in some countries and in building capacity in new asylum countries, refugees were not always safe in many asylum countries, owing to continuing conflicts. In some situations, the generosity of developing States that had hosted large numbers of refugees for many years showed signs of strain and the challenge was to maintain the momentum of the Agenda for Protection in an environment of "asylum fatigue". That could be done by making reporting on implementation a genuinely joint undertaking, whereby UNHCR, States and NGOs could jointly draft a comprehensive progress report five years after the Agenda's endorsement by the Executive Committee, outlining a common overview of gaps, challenges and future directions. Several of the recommendations contained in the Secretary-General's report entitled "In Larger Freedom" (see p. 68) could also significantly enhance the protection of the displaced.

The Executive Committee, in October [A/60/12/Add.1], noted the need for UNHCR to continue to strengthen its protection presence in the field, including female protection staff, and called on States to support its efforts through the timely and predictable provision of resources. It acknowledged the value of a focused range of activities aimed at strengthening the protection capacity of States, particularly those dealing with protracted refugee situations, and encouraged States, UNHCR, other intergovernmental organizations and NGOs to redouble their efforts to implement the Agenda for Protection and to explore the merits of a consolidated report to the Executive Committee on its implementation. In its conclusion on the provision of international protection, including through complementary forms of protection, it prescribed action and recommended measures for further strengthening the international refugee protection regime.

International instruments

In 2005, the number of States parties to the 1951 Convention relating to the Status of Refugees [YUN 1951, p. 520] and to its 1967 Protocol [YUN 1967, p. 477] rose to 143, following the accession of Afghanistan. Senegal's accession to the 1954 Convention relating to the Status of Stateless Persons [YUN 1954, p. 416] and the 1961 Convention on the Reduction of Statelessness [YUN 1961, p. 533] increased the number of States parties to those instruments to 58 and 30, respectively.

Convention Plus

In 2005, the "Convention Plus" initiative, launched in 2003 [YUN 2003, p. 1229] to help strengthen the commitment of States and UNHCR partners to resolving refugee situations, focused on concluding negotiations in order to address better secondary movements, target development assistance for durable solutions and explore opportunities for applying the Multilateral Framework of Understandings on Resettlement [YUN 2004, p. 1204]. The initiative encouraged UNHCR and the international community to place the resolution of protracted refugee situations higher on the international agenda, including through the adoption of comprehensive approaches to durable solutions, such as making more strategic use of resettlement and underpinning related durable solutions with development assistance. The initiative also engendered innovative methodologies for bridging gaps in protection, highlighted the complexity of addressing irregular secondary movements and provided a forum for clarifying the concerns and positions of States regarding those issues. At the meeting of the High Commissioner's Forum devoted to the "Convention Plus" (Geneva, 17 November), it was announced that the initiative would be mainstreamed into UNHCR's operations.

Assistance measures

The total population of concern to UNHCR increased from 19.5 million persons at the beginning of 2005 to 20.8 million by year's end. Of that number, stateless persons accounted for 11 per cent, IDPs 32 per cent and refugees, the largest group, 40 percent. However, the level of new refugee outflows during the year was the lowest since 1976, with a total of 136,000 prima facie refugee arrivals recorded in 19 asylum countries, notably Chad (32,400), Benin (25,500), Uganda (24,000), Ghana (13,600) and Yemen (13,200). Situations of particular concern included the ongoing conflict in the Sudan's Darfur region; a steady deterioration in the security situation in the Chad/Sudan border area and related military recruitments in refugee camps in eastern Chad, which chased 15,000 Chadians out of the country and displaced tens of thousands more inside; instability in parts of the Central African Republic, which resulted in further refugee movements into Chad; and continuing conflicts in parts of Côte d'Ivoire, the DRC, and Somalia uprooting people from their homes. IDPs worldwide numbered approximately 24 million, an increase of 22 per cent over the previous year and reflecting newly reported IDP situations in Iraq (1.2 million) and Somalia (400,000). Several countries reported a decrease in IDP numbers, including Bosnia and Herzegovina (126,500), Liberia (261,000) and the Russian Federation (164,000). No significant change, however, was recorded by Azerbaijan and Colombia, which had some 580,000 and 2 million IDPs, respectively. UNHCR assisted an estimated 1.1 million refugees to return to their places of origin, with the main returns occurring in Afghanistan (752,100), Angola (53,800), Burundi (68,300), Iraq (56,200) and Liberia (70,300). Many other refugees were resettled elsewhere, including Australia (11,700), Canada (10,400), Finland (770), the Netherlands (420), Norway (750), Sweden (1,300) and the United States (53,800). The main beneficiaries were from Afghanistan, Liberia, Myanmar, Somalia and the Sudan. Those assisted to find durable solutions through the local integration process of being granted citizenship by their host countries were absorbed by Armenia (2,300), Belgium (2,300), Ireland (580), Kyrgyzstan (3,400), Mexico (1,200), Turkmenistan (10,000) and the United States (58,900).

At year's end, there were an estimated 2.4 million stateless persons in 47 countries. That number was expected to increase as new data became available. During the year, UNHCR assisted concerned States to reduce protracted situations of statelessness by resolving the nationality status of stateless populations on their territories.

Refugees and the environment

During the year, UNHCR continued to implement its environmental policy and related activities, particularly with regard to safeguarding the institution of asylum in host countries where the presence of refugees had affected the environment. In accordance with its Environmental Guidelines, which were revised in 2005, it integrated environmental issues into field operations, which involved the dissemination of handbooks on forestry, livestock and sustainable agriculture. Repatriation operations in Africa would be assisted to develop country-specific rehabilitation strategies, in partnership with government authorities, NGOs, the World Conservation Union, the United Nations Human Settlements Programme (UN-Habitat), the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP) and other concerned agencies. UNHCR piloted various technologies and approaches to encourage the use of scarce natural resources more sustainably, including through the use of permaculture, techniques to reduce and substitute biomass materials for wood in cooking and construction, and the use of mud bricks and related construction materials needed by refugees. Other initiatives included the introduction of firewood-efficient stoves and of alternative energy sources, such as ethanol, biogas, solar and briquettes in Ethiopia, Nepal, Rwanda and Zambia. In November, the toolkit for the Framework for Assessing, Monitoring and Evaluation of Environment in Refugee Operations was completed. The mechanism, a pilot version of which was launched shortly thereafter, was benefitting refugee communities in Chad, Nepal, Uganda and the United Republic of Tanzania. According to the UNHCR Global Report 2005, funding for environmental impact-related projects in refugee-hosting countries was a fundamental issue that needed to be addressed in 2006.

Refugees and HIV/AIDS

In 2005, combating HIV/AIDS among persons of concern and ensuring full respect for the rights of those living with the disease remained policy priorities for UNHCR and were integral components of its strategic objective in programmes protection and assistance. It issued its 2005-2007 HIV/AIDS Strategic Plan, which drew on recent evidence on HIV/AIDS and forced displacement and on lessons learned from its previous strategic plan. Indicators of achievement in 2005 included the implementation of pilot projects and cooperation with UNAIDS co-sponsors for the inclusion and integration of refugees into host countries' HIV/AIDS policies and programmes. In addressing the linkage between sexual violence, protection and HIV/AIDS, UNHCR, together with the United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA), expanded its support to six country programmes in the area of post-exposure prophylaxis for rape victims. UNHCR gave technical and financial support to 29 country programmes. Globally, its HIV/AIDS interventions included voluntary counseling and testing in over 30 refugee camps in 11 countries for approximately 900,000 people; prevention of mother-to-child transmission programmes in over 18 camps in eight countries for approximately 650,000 people; and antiretroviral therapy to a number of refugees in 26 countries.

Refugee women

In 2005, UNHCR continued to implement its action plan to address the critical areas highlighted by the three evaluations it completed in 2002 [YUN 2002, p. 1201] on refugee women, refugee children and the role of community services, through targeted action to support groups facing discrimination. It continued to implement its pilot project on age, gender and diversity mainstreaming, launched in 2004 [YUN 2004, p. 1205]. It also dealt with the prevention of and response to sexual and gender-based violence, as well as gender equality.

Refugee children

The implementation of UNHCR's education policies was strengthened in 2005 through regional workshops on the application of field guidelines and strategic partnerships on education in Colombia, and on education and a community approach in Senegal. Some 1,000 students continued to receive university scholarships under the Albert Einstein German Refugee Initiative. UNHCR encouraged the establishment of national education committees to promote greater refugee access to quality education. To counter increasing trends of acute undernourishment among refugee children and women, it collaborated with the World Food Programme (WFP) in reducing the malnutrition rates among them to less than 10 per cent.

Report of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 58/150 [YUN 2003, p. 1231], the Secretary-General submitted an August report on assistance to unaccompanied refugee minors [A/60/300]. The report addressed a rights-based approach to securing the interests of affected minors, and global priority issues relating to refugee children, including separation from family and caregivers, military recruitment, sexual exploitation, abuse and violence, education and the specific protection concerns of unaccompanied and separated adolescent girls and boys. It also highlighted other concerns and challenges, such as trafficking in refugee children, the situation of internally displaced girls and boys and unaccompanied children and HIV/AIDS.

The Secretary-General noted the strengthening of efforts and progress in addressing the protection of and assistance to unaccompanied and separated refugee children. Cooperation continued to be enhanced among UN agencies and with other partners, particularly the International Committee of the Red Cross, NGOs and government counterparts, largely as a result of the elaboration of common goals and principles in 2003-2004. However, serious challenges remained, including a lack of accountability for violations, security concerns for both refugees and staff, insufficient human and financial resources, discrimination against girls and a lack of political will by States to implement or comply with relevant international norms and standards. The Secretary-General urged States to comply with those standards and to ensure that adequate resources were provided to allow girls and boys to enjoy their rights, including the right to education and to prevent the risk of being sexually abused, recruited into armed groups or trafficked. There was a continuing need for a clearer understanding of what constituted an effective child protection system, as well as for enhanced and more sustained attention by all actors to more adequate and effective identification, registration, tracing, and family reunification of unaccompanied girls and boys. There was also a need to strengthen all children-in-care arrangements to prevent abuse, neglect and the denial of other rights.

On 16 December, the Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's report (decision 60/527).

Regional activities

Africa

In 2005, the total population of concern to UNHCR in Africa, excluding North Africa, totalled 4.9 million, a slight increase over the 4.5 million recorded in 2004 [YUN 2004, p. 1206]. Of that number, 2.6 million were refugees, 1.5 million IDPs and 239,539 asylum-seekers.

The Secretary-General, in an August report [A/60/293], submitted in response to General Assembly resolution 59/172 [YUN 2004, p. 1208], updated information on assistance to refugees, returnees and displaced persons in Africa, covering 2004 and the first half of 2005. On a positive note, he observed that the end or prospects for resolving a number of difficult conflicts on the continent had provided large groups of African refugees with a unique opportunity for voluntary repatriation. Completed within the year were repatriation operations for Sierra Leonean and Somali refugees in Ethiopia, with those for Angolan, Burundian and Rwandan refugees underway. New operations were also launched for repatriating those from Liberia and the Congo, and it was expected that similar operations for Sudanese refugees would start within the year. Despite those encouraging developments, relentless political unrest and social tensions in other regions resulted in movements of refugees and IDPs, mainly in West Africa (Côte d'Ivoire, Togo), the Great Lakes region (Central African Republic, Democratic Republic of the Congo) and the Sudan. Overall, although the number of refugees in Africa declined slightly from 2.8 million in 2004 [YUN 2004, p. 1206] to 2.6 million in 2005, the continent still accounted for about one third of the global refugee population, and in that regard, the tragedy in Darfur (see p. 315) was of particular concern. Governmental, United Nations, international, regional and NGO partners reinforced cooperation to meet protection and assistance needs through improved coordination, joint missions, the development of field guidelines and improved methodologies and tools.

The report provided a regional overview of the refugee situation on the continent and described specific areas of inter-agency cooperation. Particularly positive developments were noted in the area of regional cooperation to reinforce protection for refugees on the continent, notably the decision of the African Union (AU) Heads of States (Abuja, Nigeria, 24-31 January) to convene in 2006, a ministerial conference on refugees, IDPs and returnees, as well as the reactivation of the Coordinating Committee on Assistance to Refugees, Returnees and Displaced Persons by AU leaders. UNHCR collaborated with the Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS) to organize a regional experts' meeting on sustainable solutions to situations of forced displacement, aimed at identifying best practices. On behalf of refugees for whom voluntary repatriation remained elusive, the Office continued to pursue other durable solutions, particularly local integration in host countries and related resettlement. Nonetheless, chronic funding shortfalls and difficulties in bridging the gap between humanitarian assistance and development activities, especially in return situations, continued to pose problems. The Secretary-General concluded that, in order to end forced displacement and resolve the problem of refugees and other displaced persons in Africa, concerted efforts by the international community to address the root causes of conflicts on the continent should remain a priority, including those relating to socio-economic deprivation, political repression, inter-communal disputes, unemployment, the lack of basic infrastructure and services, and the depletion of natural resources.

Subregional developments

UNHCR report. According to UNHCR's Global Report 2005, in Central Africa and the Great Lakes subregion, UNHCR offered protection to some 750,000 refugees and asylum-seekers, assisted over 470,000 others, and facilitated the return of over 90,000 refugees to several States in that area. The main repatriation operations enabled 61,400 refugees from the United Republic of Tanzania to return to their homes in Burundi; 6,700 return to the DRC's South Kivu province, while over 7,000 others departed from the Congo to the Equateur province, also in the DRC. Patterns of return reflected political and humanitarian conditions in the countries of origin. Accordingly, the rate of return to Burundi, which peaked following the installation of the country's new Government, began to fall by year's end owing to a drought and consequent food insecurity, which undermined the scope of reintegration activities in the country. Political progress in the DRC had also encouraged a steady flow of returnees, especially towards the end of the year. On a negative note, a deteriorating security situation in the Central African Republic forced 18,000 people to flee to Chad. Of concern to UNHCR was the expulsion of some 5,000 Rwandan asylum-seekers from Burundi, following an agreement between the two Governments. Resettlement remained a tool for the international protection of refugees in the subregion, with some 300 cases submitted to third countries for that purpose. UNHCR provided support for processes and initiatives designed to address HIV/AIDS as it affected persons of concern in the subregion and led inter-agency efforts to tackle internal displacements there.

In East Africa and the Horn of Africa, the volatile security situation in some countries, compounded by the lack of sustainable development in that subregion, posed major challenges for UNHCR. Most of its operations were affected by problems relating to camp safety and security and by access and funding constraints. An estimated 7 million people in that subregion faced severe food shortages brought on by drought and other factors which could increase displacement and sharply reduce the likelihood for further returns. Following the signing of Sudan's Comprehensive Peace Agreement, UNHCR began to plan the voluntary return of some 380,000 Sudanese refugees from seven countries, but of the 64,000 it had expected to repatriate during the year, only 131 went home, owing mainly to the lack of infrastructure needed to absorb large numbers of returnees in South Sudan. During the year, preparations also continued for a multi-pronged Comprehensive Plan of Action for Somalia, designed to benefit some 350,000 returnees, 400,000 refugees, 400,000 IDPs and the local communities in which they lived. Within that framework, over 12,200 Somali refugees were assisted to return from Djibouti, Ethiopia and Kenya to Somaliland and Puntland, while some 6,500 refugees were resettled in countries outside the region, including Kenya, Ethiopia, Uganda and Eritrea. To facilitate the development of a favourable environment for durable solutions for refugees and other persons of concern in the subregion, UNHCR, through its regional office in Addis Ababa, strengthened its partnership with regional and subregional organizations and programmes, the private sector and Governments in addressing peace and security issues, educational and other training facilities for women, and in exploring ways of deepening the knowledge and understanding of the plight of refugees.

In West Africa, as the general refugee situation continued to improve, UNHCR facilitated the return of 38,000 Liberian refugees, mainly from Côte d'Ivoire, Ghana, Guinea, Nigeria and Sierra Leone, while 150,000 returned spontaneously. Some 260,000 IDPs also went back to their places of origin, with UNHCR's assistance. At the end of the year, UNHCR phased out its integration programme for Sierra Leonean returnees and handed over that responsibility to the country's Government and agencies. The overall number of persons of concern to UNHCR in the subregion decreased from 465,000 at the beginning of the year to 371,000 by year's end. One of the main challenges for the Office was the relatively slow return of Liberian refugees, owing to the decision of many refugees to await the end of the electoral process, and to the limited availability of basic services following 14 years of civil war. Other notable challenges and concerns included the socio-economic situation of most of the populations in that subregion, particularly regarding the problems of extreme poverty and massive youth unemployment. In April, violence surrounding presidential elections in Togo led to the exodus of approximately 40,000 refugees to Benin and Ghana, many of whom received UNHCR assistance, especially those who, by year's end, did not consider the political scene in Togo sufficiently changed to assure repatriation in safety and dignity. Despite continuous discussions in 2005, no change was observed in the status of the nearly 26,000 Mauritanian refugees in Mali and Senegal. In Cameroon, contingency plans were updated, as growing tensions in Chad and the Central African Republic highlighted the need for such preparation.

In Southern Africa, progress was made in safeguarding gender equality and in ensuring respect for the rights of refugee women and children. Another positive development was the repatriation of 52,000 Angolans from the DRC, Namibia and Zambia, organized by UNHCR. UNHCR extended the use of its registration system to more subregional States, which enabled a reliable database of refugees to be set up, in order to improve the delivery of assistance and protection, implement durable solutions and underpin the planning of a phased-out strategy. UNHCR was not able to persuade host governments to enact less restrictive refugee legislation to pave the way for sustainable local integration. It was also of notable concern in the subregion that the HIV/AIDS pandemic was not abating, and in that regard, UNHCR focused on protection, rights-based advocacy, prevention, care and treatment, training and capacity-building to address the impact of the disease on refugees and host communities.

Other developments. The Executive Council of the AU, at its seventh ordinary session (Sirte, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, 28 June–2 July), adopted a decision (EX.CL/Dec.127(V) on the situation of refugees, returnees and displaced persons in Africa, by which the member States expressed concern over the persisting problem and undertook to promote mass voluntary repatriation, resettlement and rehabilitation of those affected.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December [meeting 64], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/60/499], adopted resolution 60/128 without vote [agenda item 39].

Assistance to refugees, returnees and displaced persons in Africa

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 59/172 of 20 December 2004,

Recalling also the Organization of African Unity Convention governing the specific aspects of refugee problems in Africa of 1969 and the African Charter on Human and Peoples' Rights,

Reaffirming that the 1951 Convention relating to the Status of Refugees, together with the 1967 Protocol thereto, as complemented by the Organization of African Unity Convention of 1969, remains the foundation of the international refugee protection regime in Africa,

1. Takes note of the reports of the Secretary-General and the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees;

2. Notes the need for African States to address resolutely the root causes of all forms of forced displacement in Africa and to foster peace, stability and prosperity throughout the African continent so as to forestall refugee flows;

3. Notes with great concern that, despite all of the efforts made so far by the United Nations, the African Union and others, the situation of refugees and displaced persons in Africa remains precarious, and calls upon States and other parties to armed conflict to observe scrupulously the letter and spirit of international humanitarian law, bearing in mind that armed conflict is one of the principal causes of forced displacement in Africa;

4. Welcomes decision EX.CL/Dec.197(VII) on the situation of refugees, returnees and displaced persons in Africa adopted by the Executive Council of the African Union at its seventh ordinary session, held at Sirte, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, from 28 June to 2 July 2005;

5. Expresses its appreciation for the leadership shown by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, and commends the Office for its ongoing efforts, with the support of the international community, to assist African countries of asylum and to respond to the protection and assistance needs of refugees, returnees and displaced persons in Africa;

6. Recognizes that, among refugees, returnees and internally displaced persons, women and children are the majority of the population affected by conflict and bear the brunt of atrocities and other consequences of conflict, and calls upon States to promote and protect the human rights of all refugees and other persons of concern, paying special attention to those with specific needs, and to tailor their protection responses appropriately;

7. Reiterates the importance of the full and effective implementation of standards and procedures, including the monitoring and reporting mechanism outlined in Security Council resolution 1612(2005) of 26 July 2005, to better address the specific protection needs of refugee children and adolescents and to safeguard rights and, in particular, to ensure adequate attention to unaccompanied and separated children and children affected by armed conflict, including former child soldiers in refugee settings, as well as in the context of voluntary repatriation and reintegration measures;

8. Recognizes the importance of early registration and effective registration systems and censuses as a tool of protection and as a means to enable the quantification and assessment of needs for the provision and distribution of humanitarian assistance and to implement appropriate durable solutions;

9. Recalls the conclusion on registration of refugees and asylum-seekers adopted by the Executive Committee of the Programme of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees at its fifty-second session, notes the many forms of harassment faced by refugees and asylum-seekers who remain without any form of documentation attesting to their status, recalls the responsibility of States to register refugees on their territories, reiterates in this context the central role which early and effective registration and documentation can play, guided by protection considerations, in enhancing protection and supporting efforts to find durable solutions, and calls upon the Office of the High Commissioner, as appropriate, to help States to conduct this procedure should they be unable to register refugees on their territory;

10. Calls upon the international community, including States and the Office of the High Commissioner and other relevant United Nations organizations, within their respective mandates, to take concrete action to meet the protection and assistance needs of refugees, returnees and displaced persons and to contribute generously to projects and programmes aimed at alleviating their plight and facilitating durable solutions for refugees and displaced persons;

11. Reaffirms the importance of timely and adequate assistance and protection for refugees, also reaffirms that assistance and protection are mutually reinforcing and that inadequate material assistance and food shortages undermine protection, notes the importance of a rights- and community-based approach in engaging constructively with individual refugees and their communities to achieve fair and equitable access to food and other forms of material assistance, and expresses concern in regard to situations in which minimum standards of assistance are not met, including those in which adequate needs assessments have yet to be undertaken;

12. Also reaffirms that respect by States for their protection responsibilities towards refugees is strengthened by international solidarity involving all members of the international community and that the refugee protection regime is enhanced through committed international cooperation in a spirit of solidarity and burden- and responsibility-sharing among all States;

13. Further reaffirms that host States have the primary responsibility to ensure the civilian and humanitarian character of asylum, and calls upon States, in cooperation with international organizations, within their mandates, to take all necessary measures to ensure respect for the principles of refugee protection and, in particular, to ensure that the civilian and humanitarian nature of refugee camps is not compromised by the presence or the activities of armed elements or used for purposes that are incompatible with their civilian character;

14. Condemns all acts that pose a threat to the personal security and well-being of refugees and asylum-seekers, such as refoulement, unlawful expulsion and physical attacks, calls upon States of refuge, in cooperation with international organizations, where appropriate, to take all necessary measures to ensure respect for the principles of refugee protection, including the humane treatment of asylum-seekers, notes with interest that the High Commissioner has continued to take steps to encourage the development of measures to better ensure the civilian and humanitarian character of asylum, and encourages the High Commissioner to continue those efforts, in consultation with States and other relevant actors;

15. Deplores the continuing violence and insecurity which constitute an ongoing threat to the safety and security of staff members of the Office of the High Commissioner and other humanitarian organizations and an obstacle to the effective fulfilment of the mandate of the Office and the ability of its implementing partners and other humanitarian personnel to discharge their respective humanitarian functions, urges States, parties to conflict and all other relevant actors to take all necessary measures to protect activities related to humanitarian assistance, prevent attacks on and kidnapping of national and international humanitarian workers and ensure the safety and security of the personnel and property of the Office and that of all humanitarian organizations discharging functions mandated by the Office, and calls upon States to investigate fully any crime committed against humanitarian personnel and bring to justice the persons responsible for such crimes;

16. Calls upon the Office of the High Commissioner, the African Union, subregional organizations and all African States, in conjunction with agencies of the United Nations system, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and the international community, to strengthen and revitalize existing partnerships and forge new ones in support of the international refugee protection system, notes with interest the result of the Humanitarian Response Review, welcomes the proposals made by the Secretary-General and the General Assembly to strengthen the United Nations humanitarian system, and takes note of deliberations by the Inter-Agency Standing Committee aimed at following up on the Humanitarian Response Review and bringing about greater consistency in the response to humanitarian emergencies;

17. Calls upon the Office of the High Commissioner, the international community and other concerned entities to intensify their support to African Governments through appropriate capacity-building activities, including training of relevant officers, disseminating information about refugee instruments and principles, providing financial, technical and advisory services to accelerate the enactment or amendment and implementation of legislation relating to refugees, strengthening emergency response and enhancing capacities for the coordination of humanitarian activities;

18. Reaffirms the right of return and the principle of voluntary repatriation, appeals to countries of origin and countries of asylum to create conditions that are conducive to voluntary repatriation, recognizes that, while voluntary repatriation remains the pre-eminent solution, local integration and third-country resettlement, where appropriate and feasible, are also viable options for dealing with the situation of African refugees who, owing to prevailing circumstances in their respective countries of origin, are unable to return home, and welcomes in this regard the conclusion on local integration adopted by the Executive Committee of the Programme of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees at its fifty-sixth session;

19. Also reaffirms that voluntary repatriation should not necessarily be conditioned on the accomplishment of political solutions in the country of origin in order not to impede the exercise of the refugees' right to return, and recognizes that the voluntary repatriation and reintegration process is normally guided by the conditions in the country of origin, in particular that voluntary repatriation can be accomplished in conditions of safety and dignity;

20. Welcomes the development by the High Commissioner, in cooperation with other United Nations agencies and development actors, of the framework for durable solutions, aimed at promoting lasting solutions, particularly in protracted refugee situations, including the "4Rs" approach (repatriation, reintegration, rehabilitation and reconstruction) to sustainable return;

21. Calls upon the international donor community to provide financial and material assistance that allows for the implementation of community-based development programmes that benefit both refugees and host communities, as appropriate, in agreement with host countries and consistent with humanitarian objectives, and recognizes that promoting the self-reliance of refugees from the outset will contribute towards enhancing the ability of refugee communities to become self-reliant, as and when appropriate, with adequate support from the international community for the host country and the refugees living there;

22. Appeals to the international community to respond positively, in the spirit of solidarity and burden- and responsibility-sharing, to the third-country resettlement needs of African refugees, notes in this regard the importance of using resettlement strategically, as part of situation-specific comprehensive responses to refugee situations, and to this end encourages interested States, the Office of the High Commissioner and other relevant partners to make full use of the Multilateral Framework of Understandings on Resettlement, where appropriate;

23. Calls upon the international donor community to provide material and financial assistance for the implementation of programmes intended for the rehabilitation of the environment and infrastructure affected by refugees in countries of asylum;

24. Urges the international community, in the spirit of international solidarity and burden-sharing, to continue to fund generously the refugee programmes of the Office of the High Commissioner and, taking into account the substantially increased needs of programmes in Africa, inter alia, as a result of repatriation possibilities, to ensure that Africa receives a fair and equitable share of the resources designated for refugees;

25. Encourages the Office of the High Commissioner and interested States to identify protracted refugee situations which might lend themselves to resolution through the development of specific, multilateral, comprehensive and practical approaches to resolving such refugee situations, including improvement of international burden- and responsibility-sharing and realization of durable solutions, within a multilateral context;

26. Expresses grave concern about the plight of internally displaced persons in Africa, calls upon States to take concrete action to pre-empt internal displacement and to meet the protection and assistance needs of internally displaced persons, recalls in that regard the Guiding Principles on Internal Displacement, and encourages the Office of the High Commissioner to continue to explore, with other relevant actors, the feasibility of taking on coordination responsibilities for clusters related to the protection of internally displaced persons, camp management and shelter in conflict situations as part of a broader United Nations coordination effort in support of United Nations humanitarian coordinators, without prejudice to its core mandate of refugee protection and assistance;

27. Invites the Representative of the Secretary-General on the human rights of internally displaced persons to continue his ongoing dialogue with Member States and the inter-governmental and non-governmental organizations concerned, in accordance with his mandate, and to include information thereon in his reports to the Commission on Human Rights and the General Assembly;

28. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a comprehensive report on assistance to refugees, returnees and displaced persons in Africa to the General Assembly at its sixty-first session, taking fully into account the efforts expended by countries of asylum, under the item entitled "Report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, questions relating to refugees, returnees and displaced persons and humanitarian questions", and to present an oral report to the Economic and Social Council at its substantive session of 2006.

The Americas

Important developments in North America and the Caribbean during 2005 included efforts by the United States to strengthen its refugee protection capacity through the creation of a new Refugee Corps to guide overseas adjudications for resettlement and the continuing improvement of its procedures for unaccompanied and separated children. Regarding its asylum policy and programmes, however, challenges remained, as legislators called for improved border security and the United States Congress passed legislations further restricting access to United States asylum procedures. The Congress increased, from $1 million to $2 million, its funding of the Legal Aid Orientation Programme for detained immigrants, which included refugees and asylum-seekers, and abolished limitations on the numbers of people granted asylum who could become eligible each year for permanent residency. With supplementary resettlement funding allocated by the Government, UNHCR referred 25,000 refugees to the United States, thereby exceeding its target of 20,000 referrals. In Canada, negative publicity in early 2005 of problems in the country's refugee system, including the failure to remove rejected asylum-seekers and alleged abuse of the asylum system, hardened public attitudes towards affected persons. The challenge for UNHCR and refugee advocates was to find ways to promote a more balanced view of asylum-seekers and counteract their negative portrayal as criminals. In that regard, refugees and others of concern to UNHCR featured prominently in Canada's new foreign policy statement. Canada achieved its overall government-assisted resettlement target for the year. In the Caribbean, instability in Haiti continued to preoccupy UNHCR, which launched a major contingency planning effort in neighbouring States. It continued to focus on its system of honorary liaison representatives, who played a key role in helping to maintain the rights of individuals seeking asylum. It also focused on refugee status determination and initiatives and made efforts to improve capacity-building there.

Central American countries and Mexico continued to receive a small but steady flow of asylum-seekers from Latin America and beyond, while the refugee population remained relatively stable at some 4,500. The principal durable solution promoted by UNHCR continued to be local integration, through permanent residency and naturalization. Efforts to improve access to asylum procedures yielded results, with Mexico receiving 687 asylum claims, 70 per cent more than in 2004 and more than twice as many in 2003. UNHCR promoted the protection of asylum-seekers and refugees in countries, such as El Salvador, Honduras and Guatemala. Of particular concern to the Office, was the increasing number of unaccompanied minors within mixed migratory flows. During the year, over 5,500 unaccompanied children, mainly from El Salvador, Guatemala and Honduras were intercepted and returned by Mexican migration authorities. As to urban refugees, UNHCR assisted some of them to find employment and began later in the year to implement its age, gender and diversity mainstreaming strategy, the results of which would be used to strengthen local integration and self-sufficiency strategies in 2006.

A major development in northern South America was the escalating conflict in Colombia, which caused an estimated 500,000 refugees to flee their homes but who did not officially seek protection for fear of deportation or discrimination, or because they were not aware of asylum procedures. UNHCR concentrated on finding solutions for those affected through local integration and resettlement. As the year marked the first year of implementation of the Mexico Plan of Action, launched in 2004 [YUN 2004, p. 1210] for strengthening the international protection of refugees in Latin America, UNHCR aligned its strategy with that of the Plan. Within that framework, UNHCR's Resettlement Units in Costa Rica and Ecuador referred some 955 refugees to an increasing number of resettlement countries, including Argentina, Brazil and Chile, which had just acquired that status. The community support and integration programmes in border areas helped UNHCR increase its protection presence through access to remote and underdeveloped border communities.

In southern South America, half of the subregion's 9,200 refugees and asylum-seekers received UNHCR support, with national and local authorities and social networks covering 40 per cent of their needs. Protection networks were strengthened to increase border monitoring and the region expanded its emerging resettlement programme. During the year, UNHCR's lobbying and advocacy resulted in the drafting or adoption of favourable refugee legislation in many subregional States, and the Office facilitated the functioning of national refugee commissions and promoted the implementation of procedures and criteria according to international standards. A number of recommendations to improve refugee status determination procedures were submitted to subregional Governments, with promising results. In 2005, total UNHCR expenditure in the Americas amounted to $31.4 million, for a population of concern of 3.2 million.

Asia and the Pacific and the Arab States

In 2005, UNHCR spent $82.7 million on activities in Asia and the Pacific, for a total population of concern of 2.2 million. Expenditures for operations in Central Asia, South-West Asia, North Africa and the Middle East amounted to $165.2 million, for a population of concern of 5.7 million.

South Asia

In 2005, progress towards solutions in the South Asian subregion was marked by the return of some 27,200 IDPs to their places of origin in Sri Lanka, in addition to 1,200 refugees who repatriated from India, with UNHCR's assistance. To address the protracted situation of Bhutanese refugees in Nepal, the Office encouraged an initiative by a number of subregional Governments to actively engage in finding comprehensive solutions, including the possibility of resettlement. That renewed hope for a revival of negotiations between Nepal and Bhutan, which should help resolve the situation of those refugees. UNHCR also made sustained efforts to define better access to naturalization as a durable solution for Hindu and Sikh Afghan refugees in India. However, the situation of the residual ethnic Afghan refugees remained problematic, highlighting the need for access to resettlement opportunities. A major concern for the Office was the lack of prospects for resolving the protracted situation of an estimated 20,000 refugees in camps in Bangladesh and Nepal. As a subregional priority, in its efforts to find durable solutions for those in need, UNHCR continued to expand its prevention and response capacities to sexual and gender-based violence.

East Asia and the Pacific

In 2005, UNHCR, increased its cooperation with subregional Governments and made significant progress in providing protection and finding solutions for persons of concern in that subregion. A January Memorandum of Understanding (MOU) signed by UNHCR, Vietnam and Cambodia allowed for the accommodation, for the first time, of the Montagnards (inhabitants of the Central Highlands) from Vietnam seeking asylum in Cambodia. Inside Vietnam, international access was granted to returnees areas, where micro projects were implemented. Elsewhere, the prospects for peace between the Indonesian Government and the Free Aceh Movement paved the way for the eventual return of displaced people to the Province of Nanggroe Aceh Darussalam. There were also positive changes in Thailand and Malaysia, including improved asylum policies and standards, which enhanced the prospects for durable solutions for groups seeking refuge there. In Japan, refugee protection was enhanced through a legal amendment calling for the establishment of basic reception conditions and local integration schemes for refugees other than Indo-Chinese nationals. Progress was also made towards finding solutions for persons of concern in Australia, Papua New Guinea, Republic of Korea, the Philippines and Timor-Leste. Notable concerns in the subregion included the issue of nationals from the Democratic People's Republic of Korea attempting to seek refuge in China and Southeast Asian countries, for whom UNHCR maintained efforts to facilitate safe passage where the option existed. Additional challenges related to refugee status determination and resettlement in Hong Kong, China, and political uncertainty and restrictions to humanitarian agencies in Myanmar.

Central Asia, South-West Asia, North Africa and the Middle East

A major development in Central Asia was the cessation of refugee status, declared in December and to be implemented in 2006, regarding Tajik refugees who had fled the civil war in their country between 1992 and 1997. Many of them had been able to integrate into their countries of asylum, 9,500 of whom some were granted citizenship by Turkmenistan, while 3,370 others gained citizenship in Kyrgyzstan. With the support of key resettlement countries, UNHCR found durable solution for Afghan refugees in Central Asia, over 2,000 of whom were resettled in Tajikistan. Thereafter, the local integration of the remaining Afghans in Tajikistan became the priority of UNHCR and the Government. Activities addressing HIV/AIDS and sexual and gender-based violence were streamlined in all UNHCR operations in the Central Asian subregion, and the Office continued to provide legal and medical assistance to persons of concern there and to guarantee education for their children. Despite those achievements, the subregion experienced increasing protection challenges, most notably concerning the growing number of asylum-seekers and refugees, resulting in a highly politicized environment. Deportations and refoulement of those affected took place, in violation of human rights principles and minimum standards of international refugee law. Other challenges related to the Uzbek refugee crisis and continuing political volatility in much of Central Asia, the absence of national refugee legislation in Kazakhstan and tensions in Kyrgyzstan. In South-West Asia, major developments included the repatriation of over half a million Afghans from Pakistan and the Islamic Republic of Iran, with UNCHR assistance. However, Afghanistan's limited absorption capacity and lack of access to land undermined reintegration for the returnees. Finding that a considerable number of Afghans moved back and forth across borders in the subregion, UNHCR convened strategic consultations with the Governments there, international organizations and interested States, which resulted in an understanding that, while voluntary return would continue, many Afghans would probably remain in the neighbouring countries of asylum.

During the year, North African States witnessed a significant increase in the flow of asylum-seekers and economic migrants in transit from sub-Saharan Africa to Europe. To address better the situation, UNHCR developed a regional strategy to strengthen the institution of asylum in the area by increasing the capacity of national authorities to identify asylum-seekers and refugees among mixed migratory flows. However, structural deficiencies in the protection system in some of those States and UNHCR's limited resources were most evident towards year's end when hundreds of asylum-seekers in North African countries were expelled, including several recognized refugees. Considering that a solution to the plight of the Saharawi refugees in the Tindouf camps in Algeria did not seem imminent, UNHCR continued to assist them, making communication with their communities of origin possible by telephone and family visits. With a few exceptions, only a small number of refugees in North African countries opted for voluntary repatriation, and even fewer were resettled to third countries. Overall, no significant long-term solutions were identified for the asylum and migration problems facing the subregional States.

In the Middle East, the volatile security situation in Iraq remained the dominant issue, leading to uncertainty as to the future of thousands of Iraqi nationals still seeking refuge in neighbouring countries. The reintegration programme implemented during the year improved the conditions of up to 70,000 Iraqi returnees through infrastructure, housing and income generation projects and promotion of reconciliation. In terms of solutions, UNHCR focused on capacity building of local counterparts in the Gulf countries and on the promotion of refugee law, while the countries of the Gulf Cooperation Council (GCC) increased interest in partnership with the Office. Although refugee status determination in Egypt remained suspended during the year, some 4,000 refugees in the country benefited from the resettlement programme that was implemented during the year. Elsewhere, thousands of Somali and Ethiopian asylum-seekers continued to undertake risky sea journeys to Yemen, where an estimated 78,000 refugees resided. Other concerns included security incidents in Yemen, which affected UNHCR's programme delivery, and several refugee demonstrations that resulted in violent clashes with the authorities and serious security problems in the subregion.

Europe

In 2005, UNHCR's expenditures in Europe amounted to $108.3 million, for a population of concern of 4.8 million. More than one third of that amount ($43.6 million) was spent on some 707,809 persons of concern in South-Eastern Europe.

Western, Central and Eastern Europe

In Western Europe, the downward trend in asylum applications continued, with the region as a whole showing a 14 per cent decrease. France remained the leading asylum destination with an estimated 50,000 asylum claims, although that represented a 15 per cent decrease compared to 2004. The majority of asylum-seekers came from Serbia and Montenegro, which accounted for some 20,000 applications, and Iraq, from where over 10,600 applications were filed. Others were from Bulgaria, China, Colombia, Eritrea, Haiti, Syria, the Russian Federation and Turkey. However, the political environment in Europe continued to resist attempts to stimulate constructive discussion on asylum and protection issues, as Governments maintained focus on irregular migration, the fight against terrorism and the related perception that increased security precautions were necessary. Measures to control migration and increasing doubts in some quarters about how readily non-Europeans would integrate in European society also influenced the consideration of asylum issues. UNHCR continued to cooperate closely with European Union (EU) institutions in addressing the EU's refugee policy and resource mobilization. In February, the High Commissioner and the European Commissioner for External Relations signed a strategic partnership agreement regarding protection and assistance to refugees and other persons of concern in third countries. Following the subsequent adoption of the first-phase asylum instruments at the EU level, focus shifted to the external dimension of refugee policy, particularly regarding improving protection in regions of origin. In that regard, UNHCR worked closely with the EU and its member States to elaborate concrete proposals. It also promoted and encouraged resettlement possibilities for refugees worldwide in European countries, provided support in the negotiation and implementation of tripartite agreements with several European countries for the return of Afghans, and helped to foster better integration programmes for refugees. Notable concerns for UNHCR related to the process of transforming EU directives into national law in EU countries, which the Office feared might lower standards, as European countries introduced more restrictive laws and administrative provisions for asylum-seekers. UNHCR monitored the process to ensure that asylum-seekers removed from one EU member State to another were not subjected to indirect refoulement owing to differences in standards.

Consistent with the situation in much of Europe during the year, Central Europe and the Baltic States recorded an overall decline of 38 per cent in the number of asylum claims. Slovenia was the only subregional State that witnessed a significant increase, with 1,600 applications, which was 25 per cent more than in 2004. UNHCR's efforts to promote burden sharing and resettlement in the area were bolstered by the resettlement of Uzbek refugees in Finland, Germany, Romania, the Netherlands, the Czech Republic, Sweden, Switzerland and the United States, with further resettlement scheduled in other countries in 2006. UNHCR continued to urge States to accept a broad and inclusive interpretation of the refugee definition, and in assisting them in addressing the complex challenges they faced, sharing lessons learned and best protection practices. Notable challenges and concerns in the subregion related to gaps in the right to access national territory and asylum procedures, inadequate scope for people to present their claim and the quality of decision-making, including the standards of interpretation and application of legal protection. Other concerns included the willingness and ability of EU member States to cope with the pressures they faced from asylum-seekers and the lack of a comprehensive integration strategy and limited expertise within the institutions responsible for refugee integration in the subregion. Such pressures had contributed to overcrowded reception facilities, increased detention of asylum-seekers and an unclear criteria for the imposition of immigration measures.

In Eastern Europe, with UNHCR support, all Governments undertook comprehensive analysis of the protection situation, aimed at identifying gaps in related capacity. The analysis gave a clear picture of the legislative and administrative institutions involved in refugee protection, established the constraints encountered in each country and constituted the basis for a regional analysis that was subsequently presented to the final meeting of the Commonwealth of Independent States (CIS) Conference process (see below). In Armenia, UNHCR helped analyse gaps in the protection and asylum framework, as well as needs and situations not sufficiently addressed by existing protection activities. It also formulated a burden-sharing strategy on housing solutions involving both governmental and non-governmental partners and assisted the Government in a national re-registration of refugees. In Azerbaijan, where the return of relative political and financial stability had raised hopes for the return of most of the country's IDPs, UNHCR and the Government took steps to design a return plan. In Belarus, the Republic of Moldova, and Ukraine, UNHCR continued to support governmental efforts to establish adequate reception facilities and advocated and facilitated the local integration of refugees as a durable solution. In the course of the year, the asylum authorities in those countries processed approximately 2,000 new asylum claims. In Ukraine in particular, UNHCR was engaged with the legal integration of formerly deported persons, of whom some 3,100 who had returned became naturalized citizens. In Georgia, where 235,000 IDPs lived in difficult conditions owing to the country's two unresolved internal conflicts, over 100 refugees were resettled in third countries and UNHCR continued to seek expanded resettlement opportunities for those who had no other durable solutions. It also urged the Government to promote local integration, including through granting citizenship or permanent residency to Chechen refugees with strong family ties in the country.

Follow-up to the 1996 Conference of CIS countries and neighbouring States

In response to General Assembly resolution 58/154 [YUN 2003, p. 1240], the Secretary-General submitted an August report [A/60/276] on follow-up to the 1996 Regional Conference to Address the Problems of Refugees, Displaced Persons, Other Forms of Involuntary Displacement and Returnees in the Countries of the Commonwealth of Independent States and Relevant Neighbouring States [YUN 1996, p. 1117]. The report provided information on progress in implementing the Conference's Programme of Action, the process of which was concluded in 2005 with a final meeting (see below). It concluded that, during the 10-year duration, the process had been successful in fulfilling many of the original goals by developing strategies and practical tools for more effective capacity-building and programme enhancement; promoting adherence to international standards and practices; and facilitating cooperation through partnerships at the regional and international levels. A second generation of intervention was being witnessed, informed by the full range of interests in the EU and by an overhauled global security agenda.

Final meeting of CIS Conference Process. The final meeting of the CIS Conference Process (Geneva, 10 October), held to conclude the ten-year initiative, adopted a final statement and considered a possible new framework for Euro-Asian cooperation on migration, asylum and displacement issues.

South-Eastern Europe

During the year, UNCHR provided protection and facilitated durable solutions for a total of some 600,000 people in South-Eastern Europe, of whom 164,000 were refugees and 436,000 IDPs. While that represented a significant drop from the 2004 total of some 870,000 people, the reduction had occurred almost entirely in the number of refugees and IDPs displaced by the conflicts in Croatia and Bosnia and Herzegovina, while the number of IDPs in Kosovo (Serbia and Montenegro) remained more or less stable at some 250,000. Persistent inter-ethnic violence in Kosovo, uncertainty over the province's future, unresolved disputes over property, restricted freedom of movement and limited access to basic services continued to hamper the return and sustainable integration of ethnic minorities originating from there. Only 2,500 returned in 2005, and the appointment of a Minister for Returns within the Kosovo Provisional Institutions of Self-Government did not result in significant positive change. Returns to Bosnia and Herzegovina decreased sharply in 2005 from 20,400 the previous year to 6,400 just as repatriation to Croatia from Serbia and Montenegro and Bosnia and Herzegovina decreased from approximately 7,500 in 2004, to nearly 5,300 in 2005. However, there was substantial local integration and naturalization of refugees from Croatia and Bosnia and Herzegovina in Serbia and Montenegro. At the regional level, UNHCR implemented the asylum component of the European Community Assistance for Reconstruction, Development and Stabilization project in Albania, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia, The former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia and Kosovo (Serbia and Montenegro). By so doing, the Office contributed to building the capacity of middle-level decision makers, NGOs and judges, and also strengthened regional cooperation on asylum issues and ensured the adoption of country progress reports. During the year, Ministers from Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia and Serbia and Montenegro signed the Sarajevo Declaration, by which they committed their countries to working together to solve outstanding displacement problems by the end of 2006.

Chapter XIII

Health, food and nutrition

In 2005, the United Nations continued to promote human health, coordinate food aid, promote food security, and support research in nutrition.

At the end of the year, about 40 million people globally were living with the human immunodeficiency virus or the acquired immunodeficiency syndrome (HIV/AIDS). An estimated 4.1 million people became infected with the virus, while 2.8 million died due to AIDS-related illnesses. The Human Development Report 2005 identified AIDS as having inflicted the single greatest reversal in human development, although there were encouraging signs that the epidemic was beginning to be contained. The Joint United Nations Programme on HIV/AIDS (UNAIDS) continued to coordinate UN activities for AIDS prevention and control, appointing a Global Task Team to simplify and streamline multilateral procedures and practices to facilitate more effective country-led responses. UNAIDS also adopted a new policy approach to HIV prevention.

In 2005, the Roll Back Malaria Partnership conducted a comprehensive review of the epidemiological status of malaria and progress made in fighting the disease. It published the first World Malaria Report, which found that, while malaria remained a major global problem, substantial progress had been made in addressing the disease over the last several years.

Although tuberculosis trends were stable or in decline in the other World Health Organization (WHO) regions of the world, WHO Regional Committee for Africa declared tuberculosis an emergency in the African region, and urged member States in the region to step up interventions.

The United Nations Road Safety Collaboration defined a framework for collaboration on road safety issues, and initiated efforts to facilitate implementation of General Assembly resolution 58/289 on improving road safety and the recommendations of the World Report on Road Traffic Injury Prevention.

The WHO Framework Convention on Tobacco Control entered into force on 27 February and the World Health Assembly approved the revised International Health Regulations, which laid out the role of WHO and countries in identifying and responding to public health emergencies.

The year 2005 was very challenging for humanitarian aid according to the World Food Programme (WFP). The Indian Ocean tsunami, drought and locusts in the Niger, continuing conflict in the Darfur region of Western Sudan, hurricanes Katrina and Stan, and the earthquake in Kashmir took thousands of lives and destroyed many homes and livelihoods. In response to those and other crises, WFP distributed 4.2 million metric tons of food to 96.7 million people in 82 countries.

The Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO) continued to implement the Plan of Action adopted at the 1996 World Food Summit for meeting the commitments to halve the number of undernourished people worldwide by 2015. In support of an FAO resolution highlighting the importance of the potato as a staple food around the world, the Assembly declared 2008 the International Year of the Potato.

Health

The Secretary-General, in his March report [A/59/2005] entitled "In larger freedom: towards development, security and human rights for all" (see p. 67), discussed, among other subjects, progress and shortfalls in global public health, and made recommendations for improvement. The Secretary-General noted that the HIV/AIDS pandemic posed an unprecedented threat to human development and security and, in addition to being a public health crisis, undermined economic and social stability. Since 2000, some successes had been achieved in the fight against AIDS at the national level through integrated administrative structures, and at the international level through the Global Fund to Fight AIDS, Tuberculosis and Malaria [YUN 2002, p. 1217]. Nevertheless, the epidemic demanded an exceptional response and much remained to be done to reduce HIV incidence and provide antiretroviral treatment in the coming decade. He therefore called on the international community to provide urgently the resources needed for a comprehensive response to HIV/AIDS and to provide full funding for the Global Fund.

The Secretary-General also noted the slow and under-resourced international response to other evolving pandemics. He called for a concerted international response to strengthen existing mechanisms for timely and effective international cooperation and upon Member States to agree on the revision of the International Health Regulations at the World Health Assembly in May 2005 (see below).

The World Summit Outcome document, adopted by the Assembly in resolution 60/1 (see p. 48), recognized that HIV/AIDS, malaria, tuberculosis and other infectious diseases posed severe risks for the entire world and serious challenges to the achievement of the Millennium Development Goals (MDGs) [YUN 2000, p. 51]. World leaders committed themselves to increasing investment and building on existing mechanisms to improve health systems in developing countries and those with economies in transition, in order to achieve the health-related MDGs by 2015. They further undertook to fully implement all the commitments established by the Declaration of Commitment on HIV/AIDS (see below), their obligations under the International Health Regulations (2005) adopted by the fifty-eighth World Health Assembly in May and the "Three Ones" principles, with the aim of coordinating the work of multiple institutions and international partners under one agreed HIV/AIDS framework.

AIDS prevention and control

Follow-up to the twenty-sixth special session

General Assembly 2005 High-level Meeting. In accordance with its resolution 58/313 [YUN 2004, p. 1216], the General Assembly held a High-level Meeting on 2 June to review progress achieved in realizing the commitments set out in the Declaration of Commitment on HIV/AIDS contained in resolution S-26/2 [YUN 2001, p. 1126], adopted by the Assembly's twenty-sixth special session.

The Meeting consisted of two plenary sessions and five interactive round tables covering areas related to the implementation of the Declaration of Commitment, particularly prevention, treatment, care and support, and human rights, including gender, orphans and resources. It was attended by representatives of Member States of all regions, multilateral organizations, especially those representing people living with HIV/AIDS, and civil society, in accordance with decision 59/553 of 20 January. The meeting had before it for consideration the Secretary-General's April report [A/59/765], submitted in accordance with Assembly resolution 58/236 [YUN 2003, p. 1245], summarizing progress achieved in realizing the obligations in the Declaration of Commitment, a discussion paper [A/59/CRP.1] for the round table on orphans and children made vulnerable by HIV/AIDS, and a note by the Assembly President transmitting the summaries of the discussions of the five round tables [A/59/852].

The Secretary-General's report observed that, although there were encouraging signs that the epidemic was beginning to be contained, overall, it continued to expand, with much of the world at risk of failing to reach the targets set forth in the Declaration. Eleven countries in sub-Saharan Africa were likely to lose more than one tenth of their labour force to AIDS by 2006, and its detrimental effect on agricultural sectors played a pivotal role in the recent food crisis in Southern Africa. The epidemic was also undermining the foundations of whole societies.

The report found that many of the most affected countries were falling short of the target of reducing by 2005 the level of infection among young people aged 15 to 24, and only 12 per cent of those needing antiretroviral therapy were receiving it as at December 2004; treatment programmes were insufficient; globally, 15 million children were orphaned by AIDS, and national efforts and donor support were currently insufficient to address the growing crisis; an acute shortage of trained personnel was a further hindrance to the implementation and expansion of essential AIDS programmes; many countries had yet to adopt legislation to prevent discrimination against people living with HIV, and few had enacted measures to promote and protect the human rights of vulnerable populations; and while political commitment to the AIDS response had become significantly stronger since 2001, it remained inadequate in many countries.

Since 2001, the resources available from all sources, including national spending in low- and middle-income countries, had increased dramatically and were projected to total some $8 billion in 2005 and $10 billion by 2007. Despite that increase, and successful efforts in mobilizing the funds called for in the Declaration, additional data analyses indicated that significantly increased resources would be required in future years to sustain a comprehensive response.

Among its recommendations, the report suggested scaling up successful prevention activities; reviewing national testing policies to encourage more widespread knowledge of serostatus and increasing donor financial support for testing initiatives; taking global action to further reduce the price and increase accessibility of antiretroviral therapy regimens; increasing accessibility to treatment through an integrated care approach; and using various approaches to target efforts towards vulnerable populations. The report called for the mobilization of international resources for an expanded, comprehensive response to the epidemic, including full funding for the Global Fund to Fight AIDS, Tuberculosis and Malaria, and for securing the commitment of low- and middle-income countries to increase allocations to AIDS from national budgets.

In his conclusions, the Secretary-General stated that in 2006, the Assembly would receive a comprehensive report on international progress in implementing the Declaration of Commitment on HIV/AIDS, with special reference to the targets set for 2005.

In accordance with resolution 58/313 [YUN 2004, p. 1216], the summaries of the round-table discussions were submitted to the Assembly's High-level Plenary Meeting in September (see p. 47).

Preparations for 2006 review meeting

On 23 December [meeting 69], the General Assembly adopted resolution 60/224 [draft: A/60/L.43] without vote [agenda item 45].

Preparations for and organization of the 2006 follow-up meeting on the outcome of the twenty-sixth special session: implementation of the Declaration of Commitment on HIV/AIDS

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its commitment to resolution S-26/2 of 27 June 2001 entitled "Declaration of Commitment on HIV/AIDS", and recalling its undertaking to devote sufficient time and at least one full day of the annual session of the General Assembly to review a report of the Secretary-General and make recommendations on action needed to achieve further progress,

Reaffirming the importance of the follow-up process prescribed in the Declaration of Commitment, which included the setting of specific time-bound targets, which fall due in 2005 and 2010, and noting in this regard the holding on 2 June 2005 of the High-level Meeting of the General Assembly to review progress achieved in realizing the commitments set out in the Declaration of Commitment,

Recalling the 2005 World Summit Outcome adopted at the meeting held from 14 to 16 September 2005, including the commitment to full implementation of the Declaration of Commitment,

Recognizing that progress has been made in containing the HIV/AIDS epidemic in a small but growing number of countries, but remaining deeply concerned by the overall expansion and feminization of the epidemic,

Recognizing also the primary role and responsibility of Governments in responding to HIV/AIDS and the essential need for the efforts and engagement of all sectors of society to generate an effective response,

Recognizing further the important role of the international community and international cooperation in order to assist Member States, particularly developing countries, and to complement national efforts for generating an effective response to HIV/AIDS,

Recognizing the essential role played in the response to AIDS by civil society, including national and international non-governmental organizations and organizations and networks representing people living with HIV/AIDS, women, men, young persons, girls and boys, orphans, community and faith-based organizations, families and the private sector,

1. Decides to undertake on 31 May and 1 June 2006 a comprehensive review of the progress achieved in realizing the targets set out in the Declaration of Commitment on HIV/AIDS and to convene on 2 June 2006 a high-level meeting aimed at continuing the engagement of world leaders in a comprehensive global response to HIV/AIDS;

2. Invites Member States and observers to be represented at the high-level meeting at the highest level;

3. Decides that the organizational arrangements for the comprehensive review should be as follows:

(d) In order to promote interactive and substantive discussions, participation in each round table will be limited to a maximum of forty to forty-five participants, including Member States, observers, representatives of entities of the United Nations system, civil society organizations and other invitees, and their participation will be limited to one round table; every effort will be made to ensure equitable geographical representation, taking into account the importance of ensuring a mix of countries in terms of size, HIV prevalence rates and levels of development; a representative of each of the regional groups will chair each round table with support from the co-sponsoring agencies of the Joint Programme; and between five and ten representatives of accredited and invited civil society organizations will participate in each round table, with due regard to equitable geographical representation after accommodation of all Member States;

(e) The chairpersons of the round tables and the informal interactive civil society hearing will present summaries of the discussions to the plenary meeting scheduled for 1 June 2006;

4. Decides also that the organizational arrangements for the comprehensive review and the high-level meeting, including the identification of the civil society representative to speak at the opening plenary meeting, the identification of themes for the round tables, the assignment of participants to round tables, the finalization of the panel discussions, the identification of chairpersons for the round tables and the format of the informal interactive hearing, will be finalized by the President of the General Assembly, with support from the Joint Programme and in consultation with Member States;

8. Requests the President of the General Assembly, following appropriate consultations with Member States, to draw up, not later than 15 February 2006, a list of other relevant civil society representatives, in particular associations of people living with HIV/AIDS, non-governmental organizations, including organizations of women and young people, girls and boys and men, faith-based organizations and the private sector, especially pharmaceutical companies and representatives of labour, including on the basis of the recommendations of the Joint Programme and taking into account the principle of equitable geographical representation, and to submit the list to Member States for consideration on a no-objection basis for a final decision by the Assembly on participation in the review and the high-level meeting, including round tables and panel discussions;

9. Decides that the arrangements outlined in paragraph 8 above shall not be considered a precedent for other similar events;

10. Encourages the timely submission of national reports by all Member States on their implementation of the Declaration of Commitment, noting the request for those submissions by 31 December 2005 as inputs to the report of the Secretary-General;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a comprehensive and analytical report at least six weeks prior to its consideration by the General Assembly on progress achieved and challenges remaining in realizing the commitments set out in the Declaration of Commitment, in particular those set for 2005;

13. Invites Member States to consider the adoption of a short declaration aimed at reaffirming and expressing recommitment to the full implementation of the Declaration of Commitment, including by giving due consideration to, inter alia, the assessment referred to in paragraph 12 above and the report of the Secretary-General.

Bangkok Declaration. The Eleventh United Nations Congress on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice (Bangkok, Thailand, 18-25 April) adopted the Bangkok Declaration on Synergies and Responses: Strategic Alliances in Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice (see p. 1208). The Declaration addressed the problem of HIV/AIDS, noting with concern that the physical and social conditions associated with imprisonment might facilitate the spread of the disease in pre-trial and correctional facilities and thus in society, thereby presenting a critical prison management problem. The Declaration called upon States to develop and adopt measures and guidelines, in accordance with national legislation, to ensure that the particular challenges of HIV/AIDS were adequately addressed in prisons.

Declaration of San Salvador. On 28 December [A/60/672], El Salvador transmitted the Declaration of San Salvador, adopted by the Heads of State and Government of the Central American Integration System (SICA), meeting within the subregional framework for addressing sexually transmitted illnesses (STIs) and HIV/AIDS (San Salvador, El Salvador, 11 November). They firmly committed themselves to combating HIV/AIDS, ensuring that national and regional responses were harmonized and coordinated, and making progress towards the goal of universal access to treatment by 2010, as well as to refocusing HIV/AIDS prevention efforts.

Joint UN Programme on HIV/AIDS

The Joint United Nations Programme on HIV/AIDS (UNAIDS), which became fully operational in 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 1121], continued to serve as the main advocate for global action on HIV/AIDS. UNAIDS was mandated to lead, strengthen and support an expanded response to the epidemic, with the aim of preventing the transmission of HIV, providing care and support, reducing the vulnerability of individuals and communities to HIV/AIDS, and alleviating the socio-economic and human impact of the epidemic.

Report of UNAIDS Executive Director. In response to Economic and Social Council resolution 2003/18 [YUN 2003, p. 1249], the Secretary-General, by a May note [E/2005/59], transmitted a report of the UNAIDS Executive Director, which provided an update on the status of the epidemic, summarized steps taken by UNAIDS to promote the implementation of the 2001 Declaration of Commitment on HIV/AIDS [YUN 2001, p. 1126] and other key developments in advancing a more effective and coordinated UN system response to the epidemic, and took account of the Programme Coordinating Board's (PCB) decisions, recommendations and conclusions taken following the Council's substantive session in 2003.

The Executive Director recommended that the Council endorse the PCB recommendation for intensified efforts by civil society groups, Governments and UN agencies to make the AIDS response work for women and girls, as well as the decision of the sixteenth meeting of PCB [YUN 2004, p. 1219] calling for a revitalized global approach to prevention. The Council should encourage UNAIDS and its partners to intensify efforts to reach the "3 by 5" target, and to strengthen monitoring and evaluation at the global and country levels, particularly through the provision of technical advice and the posting of specialist staff.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 27 July [meeting 40], the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 2005/47 [draft: E/2005/L.20/Rev.1] without vote [agenda item 7(g)].

Joint United Nations Programme on HIV/AIDS (UNAIDS)

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolution 2003/18 of 22 July 2003,

Having considered the report of the Executive Director of the Joint United Nations Programme on HIV/AIDS (UNAIDS),

Recalling the goals and targets set forth in the Declaration of Commitment on HIV/AIDS, adopted by the General Assembly at its twenty-sixth special session in 2001, and the HIV/AIDS-related goals contained in the United Nations Millennium Declaration of 8 September 2000,

Reaffirming the importance of the follow-up process prescribed in the Declaration of Commitment, which included the setting of specific time-bound targets, which fall due in 2005 and 2010, and noting in this regard the holding on 2 June 2005 of the High-level Meeting of the General Assembly to review progress achieved in realizing the commitments set out in the Declaration of Commitment,

Noting with profound concern that 39.4 million people worldwide are living with HIV/AIDS, that the pandemic claimed 3.1 million lives in 2004, with 4.9 million new HIV infections, and that it has orphaned 15 million children to date,

Deeply concerned that the global HIV/AIDS pandemic has a disproportionate impact on women and girls and that the majority of new infections occur among young people,

Expressing serious concern about the continued global spread of HIV/AIDS, which exacerbates poverty and poses a major threat to economic and social development and to food security in heavily affected regions,

Noting the need for greater coherence and accountability in the responses to the HIV/AIDS pandemic,

Recognizing the importance of partnerships at the national, regional and international levels as part of the responses to HIV/AIDS, including for prevention, care, support and treatment, as well as the importance of enhanced support for human and institutional capacity development and of considerably increased financial resources,

Welcoming the World Food Programme and the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees as the ninth and tenth co-sponsors of the Joint Programme,

1. Urges the Joint United Nations Programme on HIV/AIDS (UNAIDS) and the organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, within their respective mandates, to intensify their support to Governments, with a view to achieving the goals contained in the United Nations Millennium Declaration, as well as the goals and targets contained in the Declaration of Commitment on HIV/AIDS;

2. Encourages Governments to report fully in preparation for the report of the Secretary-General to the sixtieth session of the General Assembly on the implementation of the Declaration of Commitment on HIV/AIDS;

3. Welcomes the support given by the Programme Coordinating Board of UNAIDS at its fifteenth, sixteenth and seventeenth meetings to the commitment of the Joint Programme to expanding technical support, building capacity and promoting coordinated and comprehensive responses at the country level, in particular through the implementation of the "three ones" principle for country-level coordination, and in taking into consideration the recommendations of the Global Task Team on Improving HIV Coordination among Multilateral Institutions and International Donors;

4. Also welcomes the intensification of joint regional United Nations action on HIV/AIDS, through improved communications between agencies at the regional level and through initiatives such as the regional support teams established by the Joint Programme to mobilize and leverage technical, financial and political support for the joint country-level efforts by the United Nations, largely through the country offices of the Programme in their respective regions, to assist national HIV/AIDS responses;

5. Encourages the Joint Programme and the World Health Organization to intensify their work with the international community in achieving the "3 by 5" target;

6. Also encourages the Joint Programme to continue to promote and support countries in the development of evidence-informed HIV/AIDS strategies, including efforts towards universal access to prevention, treatment and care services, recognizing the importance of a comprehensive approach to HIV/AIDS;

7. Takes note with interest of the endorsement by the Programme Coordinating Board at its seventeenth meeting, of the policy position paper of the Joint Programme entitled "Intensifying HIV Prevention", and urges the Programme to strengthen its leadership of global and regional efforts, as appropriate, and support national efforts to intensify HIV prevention as part of a comprehensive, coordinated and coherent response to HIV/AIDS;

8. Encourages the activities of the Joint Programme to strengthen, streamline and harmonize monitoring and evaluation efforts at the global, regional and country levels, in particular its efforts to rapidly improve monitoring and evaluation systems in priority countries through the provision of technical support and the posting of specialist staff in these and other countries;

9. Commends the Joint Programme and its partners for launching the Global Coalition on Women and AIDS, and calls for strengthened and improved action related to women and HIV/AIDS through intensified efforts by Governments, United Nations agencies, civil society and the private sector;

10. Takes note with appreciation of the endorsement of the Programme Coordinating Board, at its seventeenth meeting, of the recommendations of the Global Task Team on Improving AIDS Coordination among Multilateral Institutions and International Donors, and calls upon the Programme and the wider United Nations system and invites other multilateral institutions to implement the recommendations, as appropriate;

11. Supports the efforts of the Joint Programme to advocate that increased resources be devoted to the response to HIV/AIDS and to explore innovative options for expanding the funding base, both nationally and internationally;

12. Commends the Joint Programme for strengthening the results-based management framework and simplifying the 2006-2007 unified budget and work plan, as requested by the Programme Coordinating Board at its sixteenth meeting;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit to the Economic and Social Council, at its substantive session of 2007, a report prepared by the Executive Director of the Joint Programme, in collaboration with other relevant organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, which should include information on progress made in implementing the coordinated response of the United Nations system to the HIV/AIDS pandemic as well as the decisions, recommendations and conclusions of the Programme Coordinating Board taken subsequent to the substantive session of the Council in 2005.

Trends

According to UNAIDS, at the end of 2005, close to 40 million people globally were living with HIV, of whom 36 million were adults and just over 2 million were children under the age of 15. An estimated 4.1 million new infections were recorded and approximately 2.8 million people died as a result of AIDS-related illnesses. While women made up 41 per cent of adults living with HIV in 1998, in 2005, that number had risen to nearly 50 per cent globally, and in sub-Saharan Africa the percentage was close to 60.

The epidemic continued to expand in sub-Saharan Africa, where an estimated 24.5 million people were living with the virus, resulting in a prevalence rate of 6.1 per cent. Around 2 million Africans died of AIDS-related illnesses in 2005, and some 2.7 million persons were newly infected with HIV. However, some declines were noted, especially among young people in Burkina Faso, Burundi, Ethiopia, Kenya, Uganda and Zimbabwe.

In Asia, approximately 8.3 million people were living with HIV, and 930,000 new infections were recorded. East Asia was experiencing the fastest growth in the world, mainly due to the growing epidemic in China, where an estimated 650,000 people were living with the disease. India's national prevalence rate stood at less than 1 per cent, which translated into around 5.7 million people living with the virus. Asian countries that had introduced large-scale prevention programmes—notably Cambodia and Thailand—had seen significant reductions in risk behaviour, and recorded declining levels of new HIV and other sexually transmitted infections.

The level of infection in Oceania was still very low, although Papua New Guinea was a country of concern, with the highest prevalence rate in the region of 1.8 per cent of the adult population or roughly 60,000 people living with HIV.

Available data from the Middle East and North Africa pointed to an increase in infection rates, and an estimated 440,000 people living with HIV.

In Eastern Europe and Central Asia, around 1.5 million people were living with HIV, and an estimated 53,000 people died of AIDS-related illnesses. Most of those infected were under the age of 30, with Estonia, Latvia, the Russian Federation and Ukraine being the worst-affected countries.

Latin America, which had around 1.6 million people living with HIV, recorded some 140,000 AIDS-related deaths in 2005. The Caribbean, the second most affected region of the world, with a prevalence rate of 1.6 per cent, had some 330,000 people living with the disease. At least three countries, the Bahamas, Haiti and Trinidad and Tobago, had far higher HIV prevalence rates of around 3 per cent.

An estimated 2 million people were living with HIV in high-income countries and some 30,000 died of AIDS-related illnesses, although the introduction of antiretroviral therapy dramatically reduced AIDS-related mortality. However, transmission of the disease among heterosexuals increased sharply and the epidemic was progressively shifting into poorer and marginalized sectors.

Since the establishment in 2003 of the "3 by 5" initiative [YUN 2003, p. 1248] for providing antiretroviral therapy to 3 million people in developing and transition countries by 2005, the number of people in those countries receiving therapy more than tripled to 1.3 million but was still substantially less than initially hoped. Access to antiretroviral therapy in sub-Saharan Africa, the world's hardest-hit region, had increased by more than 800 per cent. It was estimated that in 2005, between 250,000 and 350,000 deaths were averted because treatment was available. The ongoing effort to expand access to antiretroviral therapy had brought about positive change and paved the way for far greater advances towards the ultimate goal of universal access to HIV treatment and care.

UNAIDS activities

Leaders from donor and developing countries, civil society, UN agencies and other multilateral and international institutions met in London on 9 March to review the global response to AIDS under the theme "Making the Money Work: The Three Ones in Action". They agreed to form a Global Task Team to recommend ways the multilateral system could address duplication and gaps in the global response to AIDS and streamline, simplify and further harmonize procedures and practices to improve the effectiveness of country-led responses.

The Global Task Team, in its report issued in June [UNAIDS/PCB(17)/05.02], made recommendations to accelerate and improve AIDS response in the areas of: empowering inclusive national leadership and ownership; alignment and harmonization; reform for a more effective multilateral response; and accountability and oversight. Those recommendations were endorsed by the UNAIDS Programme Coordinating Board (PCB) at its seventeenth meeting (Geneva, 27-29 June), which also requested that action plans be developed to implement them and that the UNAIDS secretariat and co-sponsors, in cooperation with the Global Fund to Fight AIDS, Tuberculosis and Malaria [YUN 2002, p. 1217], report in 2006 on progress in their implementation.

HIV prevention strategy. In response to a 2004 PCB request regarding the development of a new strategy for intensifying HIV prevention [YUN 2004, p. 1219], UNAIDS, in a policy paper on the subject [UNAIDS/05.18E], outlined the principles, policy and programmatic actions that were needed to get ahead of the HIV epidemic. The new strategy was aimed at providing universal access to HIV prevention and treatment. It highlighted the gaps in HIV prevention actions and policies for bridging them, especially at the national level. The paper also identified UNAIDS's role in strengthening prevention. PCB endorsed the UNAIDS policy position paper and requested that UNAIDS create an action plan based thereon and on the Global Task Team recommendations (see above) and report to PCB by December 2005. It should also provide a progress report, in 2006, on efforts to intensify HIV prevention.

PCB, at its seventeenth meeting [UNAIDS/PCB(17)/05.10], also considered the report of its Executive Director [UNAIDS/PCB(17)/05.1.4], financial and budgetary updates as at 31 March 2005 [UNAIDS/PCB(17)/05.6.2], a progress report on implementation of the "Three Ones" approach [UNAIDS/PCB(17)/05.6.1], and the UN System Strategic Framework on HIV/AIDS 2006-2010 [UNAIDS/PCB(17)/05.5]. It endorsed the 2006-2007 unified budget and workplan [UNAIDS/PCB(17)/05.4], approved the core budget of $320.5 million. PCB also asked the UNAIDS secretariat to examine the possible establishment of a contingency fund and a midterm review; align the unified budget and workplan with the Global Task Team's recommendations (see above); and to identify the financial implications.

UNDP/UNFPA consideration. As a follow-up to the sixteenth [YUN 2004, p. 1219] and seventeenth (see above) PCB meetings, UNDP [DP/2005/40] and UNFPA [DP/FPA/2005/17] issued reports on their responses to and implementation of the PCB recommendations. The reports elaborated on their efforts in, among other areas, strengthening linkages between sexual and reproductive health and HIV/AIDS, the Global Task Team recommendations on Improving AIDS Coordination among Multilateral Institutions and International Donors, scaling up HIV treatment, the UNAIDS policy position paper on intensifying HIV prevention, the unified budget and workplan, 2006-2007, and women, gender and AIDS.

On 9 September [E/2005/35 (dec. 2005/41)], the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board took note of both reports and requested that both agencies work with the UNAIDS secretariat and co-sponsors to develop action plans based on the recommendations of the Global Task Team and report on progress towards the implementation of those recommendations at the joint meeting of the UNDP/UNFPA, UNICEF and WFP Executive Boards in January 2006, and a special session of the PCB scheduled for June of the same year. The Board also asked both agencies to formulate an action plan based on the UNAIDS policy position paper on intensifying HIV prevention (see above).

HIV/AIDS and peacekeeping

On 18 July [meeting 5228], during the Security Council's consideration of HIV/AIDS and UN peacekeeping (see p. 116), the UNAIDS Executive Director gave an update on progress made in implementing Security Council resolution 1308 (2000) [YUN 2000, p. 82] on the provision of training for peacekeeping personnel in preventing the spread of HIV/AIDS. He stated that an Office on AIDS, Security and Humanitarian Response had been created in the UNAIDS secretariat, which, along with the Department of Peacekeeping Operations (DPKO), was pursuing a strategy to ensure that the United Nations set the highest possible standards in protecting both peacekeepers and the populations they served from HIV. In pursuit of that goal, one million AIDS-awareness cards had been distributed in 13 languages through peacekeepers and national forces, and a peer education kit, available in 11 languages, was currently part of the military training curricula in several troop-contributing countries. The Executive Director also pointed to the need to address HIV/AIDS among national uniformed services as a critical step in dealing with the larger issue of HIV/AIDS and peacekeeping. UNAIDS was assisting 53 Member States with comprehensive programmes to deal with returning national forces. However, two key challenges existed: the need to expand significantly access to HIV testing and counselling; and to ensure that the implementation of AIDS programmes consistently reached all levels of the uniformed services.

The Executive Director also presented the UNAIDS progress report "On the front line" [UNAIDS/05.16E], which detailed efforts made by UNAIDS in addressing AIDS and security.

The Security Council, in presidential statement S/PRST/2005/33 (see p. 118), reaffirmed its commitment to the full implementation of resolution 1308(2000).

Tobacco

The World Health Organization (WHO) Framework Convention on Tobacco Control (FCTC), adopted in May 2003 by the World Health Assembly [YUN 2003, p. 1251], with WHO as the interim secretariat, entered into force on 27 February 2005, 90 days after the fortieth instrument of ratification was deposited. As at 31 December, 115 States and the European Community were parties to the Convention.

In preparation for the first session of the Conference of the Parties of the WHO FCTC, which, according to article 23 of the FCTC, was to be convened within one year of its entry into force, the Open-ended Intergovernmental Working Group on the Framework Convention held its second session (Geneva, 31 January–4 February) to: finalize its input to the first session of the Conference of the Parties to be held in Geneva from 6 to 17 February 2006, including recommendations for the designation of the permanent secretariat and arrangements for its functioning; propose a draft budget for the first financial period, draft rules of procedure and financial rules for the Conference of the Parties; and draw up the terms of reference for a study of potential sources and mechanisms of assistance.

Ad Hoc Inter-Agency Task Force

At its seventh session (Geneva, 30 November–1 December), the Ad Hoc Inter-Agency Task Force on Tobacco Control discussed smoke-free workplaces, illicit trade of tobacco products, the link between tobacco control and economic development, and preparations for FCTC implementation in member countries.

Roll Back Malaria initiative

The Secretary-General, pursuant to General Assembly resolution 59/256 [YUN 2004, p. 1222], transmitted an August report [A/60/208], prepared by WHO, on the Decade to Roll Back Malaria in Developing Countries, Particularly in Africa (2001-2010), which was proclaimed by the Assembly in resolution 55/284 [YUN 2001, p. 1139].

The report provided an update on activities undertaken and progress made to meet the 2010 malaria goals. The WHO report drew attention to the findings of the report published by the United Nations Millennium Project entitled "Coming to grips with malaria in the new millennium", which showed that five years after the launching of the Roll Back Malaria Initiative, country-level implementation of malaria efforts had been severely limited by a lack of resources and that more resources had to be mobilized to meet needs.

In terms of funding and resource mobilization, the WHO report stated that some $3 billion was needed worldwide to effectively roll back malaria. The Global Fund to Fight AIDS, Tuberculosis and Malaria had, by the end of 2004, allocated $1.8 billion on a five-year basis to 69 countries, including 38 in Africa. The Roll Back Malaria Partnership had worked to improve resource allocation for malaria at the country level to complement funding available through the Global Fund and external donors. In April, the World Bank announced a substantial increase in its support to combat malaria with a total commitment of $500 million to $1 billion over the next five years. In June, the United States Government announced a new international malaria initiative, targeting up to 35 high-burden countries over five years. It proposed increasing its current annual contribution of $200 million, through the bilateral Programme and the Global Fund, by $30 million in 2006, $135 million more in 2007 and an additional $300 million per year from 2008 to 2010. The United States asked major donors to provide $1.2 billion per year with the aim of exceeding the 2015 MDG goal for malaria.

The Summit of the Group of Eight (G-8) most industrialized countries (Scotland, United Kingdom, 6-8 July) called for an additional $1.5 billion annually to help ensure access to insecticide-treated nets, artemisinin-based combination therapies, intermittent preventive treatment for pregnant women and infants, indoor residual spraying and to build the capacity of African health services.

In terms of the treatment of malaria, the rapid shift to artemisinin-based combination treatment policies in 2004 and 2005 and the resulting surge in demand had led to a shortfall in artemisinin and artemisinin-based combination therapies. During the year, the industry made efforts to increase production and to ensure that the shortfall was remedied by the end of 2005. Projects in many African countries sought to establish the feasibility and effectiveness of using artemisinin-based combination therapies in the context of home management of malaria, a package that included education for mothers, training of community-level providers and the supply of pre-packaged medicines.

In the light of the need for new malaria medicines to replace those being lost to parasite resistance, the Drugs for Neglected Diseases Initiative and the drug company Sanofi Aventis announced plans to develop and seek pre-qualification for two new fixed-dose artemisinin-based combination therapies. In the meantime, research on the development of an effective malaria vaccine continued to be more complex than anticipated. The WHO Initiative for Vaccines Research and the Special Programme for Research and Training in Tropical Diseases continued to support those initiatives.

The WHO report also stated that the Roll Back Malaria Partnership had developed an overarching Roll Back Malaria Global Strategic Plan 2005-2015, aimed at achieving 80 per cent coverage of populations, a 50 per cent reduction of the malaria burden by 2010, and the achievement of the MDG for malaria by 2015. At a meeting with major partners, organized by WHO in November 2004, best practices for acute and chronic emergency situations were developed. As a follow-up to that meeting, the Malaria in Emergencies Network was set up in 2005. WHO also published in 2005 a handbook entitled Malaria Control in Complex Emergencies: An Inter-agency Field Handbook [WHO/HTM/MAL/2005.1107], which provided practical guidance on designing, implementing and monitoring measures to reduce malaria morbidity and mortality, addressing the needs of both the displaced and host populations in complex emergencies.

The Secretary-General urged the General Assembly to call on malaria-endemic countries to: increase domestic resource allocation for malaria control; ensure the recruitment, training and retention of health personnel; and establish national policies and operational plans to ensure that at least 80 per cent of those at risk or suffering from malaria benefited from major preventive and curative interventions by 2010. He called on the international community to: support the development of new medicines and technologies that prevented and treated malaria; increase financial support to the Global Fund to Fight AIDS, Tuberculosis and Malaria and other mechanisms so that insecticide-treated mosquito nets, insecticide for indoor spraying and effective antimalarial combination treatments were fully accessible and free; and establish universal protection of young children and pregnant women in malaria-endemic areas of Africa, providing them on a sustainable basis with insecticide-treated nets.

The first World Malaria Report [WHO/HTM/MAL/2005.1102], published by WHO and UNICEF in 2005, provided a global update on the epidemiological situation and progress made in the implementation of controls in all malaria-endemic countries throughout the world. It also examined global financing of malaria initiatives and discussed how to improve the Roll Back Malaria monitoring and evaluation.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 23 December [meeting 69], the General Assembly adopted resolution 60/221 [draft: A/60/L.44 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 47].

2001-2010: Decade to Roll Back Malaria in Developing Countries, Particularly in Africa

The General Assembly,

Recalling that the period 2001-2010 has been proclaimed the Decade to Roll Back Malaria in Developing Countries, Particularly in Africa by the General Assembly, and that combating HIV/AIDS, malaria, tuberculosis and other diseases is included in the internationally agreed development goals, including those contained in the United Nations Millennium Declaration,

Recalling also its resolutions 49/135 of 19 December 1994, 50/128 of 20 December 1995, 55/284 of 7 September 2001, 57/294 of 20 December 2002, 58/237 of 23 December 2003 and 59/256 of 23 December 2004 concerning the struggle against malaria in developing countries, particularly in Africa,

Bearing in mind the relevant resolutions of the Economic and Social Council relating to the struggle against malaria and diarrhoeal diseases, in particular resolution 1998/36 of 30 July 1998,

Taking note of the declarations and decisions on health issues adopted by the Organization of African Unity, in particular the declaration and plan of action on the "Roll Back Malaria" initiative adopted at the Extraordinary Summit of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity, held in Abuja on 24 and 25 April 2000, as well as decision AHG/Dec.155(XXXVI) concerning the implementation of that declaration and plan of action, adopted by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity at its thirty-sixth ordinary session, held in Lomé from 10 to 12 July 2000,

Also taking note of the Maputo Declaration on Malaria, HIV/AIDS, Tuberculosis and Other Related Infectious Diseases, adopted by the Assembly of the African Union at its second ordinary session, held in Maputo from 10 to 12 July 2003,

Recognizing the linkages in efforts being made to reach the targets set at the Abuja Summit as necessary and important for the attainment of the "Roll Back Malaria" goal and the targets of the Millennium Declaration by 2010 and 2015, respectively,

Also recognizing that malaria-related ill health and deaths throughout the world can be substantially eliminated with political commitment and commensurate resources if the public is educated and sensitized about malaria and appropriate health services are made available, particularly in countries where the disease is endemic,

Emphasizing the importance of implementing the Millennium Declaration, and welcoming in this connection the commitment of Member States to respond to the specific needs of Africa,

Commending the efforts of the World Health Organization, the United Nations Children's Fund and other partners to fight malaria over the years, including the launching of the Roll Back Malaria Partnership in 1998,

Recalling resolution 58.2 adopted by the World Health Assembly on 23 May 2005 urging a broad range of national and international actions to scale up malaria control programmes,

Taking note of the Roll Back Malaria Global Strategic Plan 2005-2015 developed by the Roll Back Malaria Partnership,

1. Takes note of the note by the Secretary-General transmitting the report of the World Health Organization, and calls for support for the recommendations contained therein;

2. Welcomes the increased funding for malaria interventions and for research and development of preventative and control tools from the international community, including from the Group of Eight, the United States of America, the World Bank and the Bill and Melinda Gates Foundation, as well as the European Commission and other sources of bilateral funding;

3. Calls upon the international community to continue to support the "Roll Back Malaria" partner organizations, including the World Health Organization and the United Nations Children's Fund, as vital complementary sources of support for the efforts of malaria-endemic countries to combat the disease;

4. Appeals to the international community to work towards increased and sustained bilateral and multilateral assistance to combat malaria, including support for the Global Fund to Fight HIV/AIDS, Tuberculosis and Malaria, in order to assist States, in particular malaria-endemic countries, to implement sound national plans to control malaria in a sustained and equitable way that, inter alia, contributes to health system development;

5. Urges malaria-endemic countries to work towards financial sustainability, to increase, to the extent possible, domestic resource allocation to malaria control and to create favourable conditions for working with the private sector in order to improve access to good-quality malaria services;

6. Calls upon Member States, in particular malaria-endemic countries, to establish and/or strengthen national policies and operational plans, aspiring to ensure that at least 80 per cent of those at risk of or suffering from malaria may benefit from major preventive and curative interventions by 2010, in accordance with the technical recommendations of the World Health Organization, so as to ensure a reduction in the burden of malaria by at least 50 per cent by 2010 and 75 per cent by 2015;

7. Urges Member States to assess and respond to the needs for integrated human resources at all levels of the health system, in order to achieve the targets of the Abuja Declaration on Roll Back Malaria in Africa and the internationally agreed development goals of the United Nations Millennium Declaration, and to take actions, as appropriate, to effectively govern the recruitment, training and retention of health personnel;

8. Calls upon the international community, inter alia, by helping to meet the financial needs of the Global Fund to Fight HIV/AIDS, Tuberculosis and Malaria and through country-led initiatives with adequate international support, to create conditions for full access to insecticide-treated mosquito nets, insecticides for indoor residual spraying for malaria control and effective antimalarial combination treatments, including through the free distribution of such nets where appropriate;

9. Requests relevant international organizations, in particular the World Health Organization and the United Nations Children's Fund, to assist efforts of national Governments to establish universal protection of young children and pregnant women in malaria-endemic countries, particularly in Africa, with insecticide-treated nets as rapidly as possible, with due regard to ensuring sustainability through full community participation and implementation through the health system;

10. Encourages all African countries that have not yet done so to implement the recommendations of the Abuja Summit to reduce or waive taxes and tariffs for nets and other products needed for malaria control, both to reduce the price of nets to consumers and to stimulate free trade in insecticide-treated nets;

11. Expresses its concern about the increase in resistant strains of malaria in several regions of the world;

12. Encourages all Member States experiencing resistance to conventional monotherapies to replace them with combination therapies, as recommended by the World Health Organization, in a timely manner;

13. Recognizes the importance of the development of effective vaccines and new medicines to prevent and treat malaria and the need for further and accelerated research, including by providing support to the United Nations Children's Fund/United Nations Development Programme/World Bank/World Health Organization Special Programme for Research and Training in Tropical Diseases and through effective global partnerships such as the various malaria vaccine initiatives and the Medicines for Malaria Venture, where necessary stimulated by new incentives to secure their development;

14. Calls upon the international community to support investment in the development of new medicines to prevent and treat malaria, especially for children and pregnant women, sensitive and specific diagnostic tests, effective vaccines, and new insecticides and delivery modes in order to enhance effectiveness and delay the onset of resistance, including through existing partnerships;

15. Also calls upon the international community to support ways to expand access to artemisinin-based combination therapy for populations at risk of exposure to resistant strains of falciparum malaria in Africa, including the commitment of new funds, innovative mechanisms for the financing and national procurement of artemisinin-based combination therapy and the scaling up of artemisinin production to meet the increased need;

16. Applauds the increased level of public-private partnerships for malaria control and prevention, including the financial and in kind contributions of companies operating in Africa, as well as increased engagement of non-governmental service providers;

17. Calls upon malaria-endemic countries to encourage regional and intersectoral collaboration, both public and private, at all levels, especially in education, agriculture, economic development and the environment, to advance malaria control objectives;

18. Calls upon the international community to support increased interventions, in line with the recommendations of the Roll Back Malaria Partnership, in order to ensure their rapid, efficient and effective implementation, to strengthen health systems, to monitor for counterfeit anti-malarial medicines and prevent the distribution and use of them, and to support coordinated efforts, inter alia, by providing technical assistance to improve surveillance, monitoring and evaluation systems and their alignment with national plans and systems so as to better track and report changes in coverage and the need for scaling up recommended interventions and subsequent reductions in the burden of malaria;

19. Urges Member States, the international community and all relevant actors, including the private sector, to promote the coordinated implementation and enhance the quality of malaria-related activities, including via the Roll Back Malaria Partnership, in accordance with national policies and operational plans that are consistent with the technical recommendations of the World Health Organization and recent efforts and initiatives, including the Paris Declaration on Aid Effectiveness;

20. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its sixty-first session on the implementation of the present resolution under the agenda item entitled "2001-2010: Decade to Roll Back Malaria in Developing Countries, Particularly in Africa".

Access to medication

On 15 April [E/2005/23 (res. 2005/23)] (see p. 848), the Commission on Human Rights, in a resolution on access to medication in the context of pandemics such as HIV/AIDS, tuberculosis and malaria, called on Governments to pursue policies that ensured access by all to pharmaceutical products and medical technologies for the prevention and treatment of pandemics, such as HIV/AIDS, tuberculosis and malaria. The Commission urged Governments to refrain from denying or limiting equal access to such products or technologies, and to consider enacting legislation in order to use to the fullest extent the flexibilities contained in the World Trade Organization Agreement on the Trade-Related Aspects of Intellectual Property Rights (TRIPS) and public health [YUN 2001, p. 1432].

In 2005, the fifty-eighth World Health Assembly and the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) Executive Board approved a new strategy entitled "Global Immunization Vision and Strategy, 2006-2015" [WHO/IVB/05.05], aimed at addressing the challenges foreseen in immunization over that decade, including financing new and underused vaccines and ensuring adequate supply and access for all.

Global public health

On 23 May, the World Health Assembly, at its fifty-eighth session (Geneva, 16-25 May), adopted, by resolution 58.3, the revised International Health Regulations (International Health Regulations, 2005) for managing public health emergencies of international concern, which were to come into force on 23 May 2007, replacing the original regulations adopted in 1969 [YUN 1969, p. 876]. The revised regulations were to govern the roles of countries and WHO in identifying and responding to those emergencies and sharing information about them.

The Assembly also adopted resolution 58.5 on strengthening pandemic-influenza preparedness and response, including the avian influenza.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 30 November [meeting 58], the General Assembly adopted resolution 60/35 [draft: A/60/L.26 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 120].

Enhancing capacity-building in global public health

The General Assembly,

Recalling the United Nations Millennium Declaration, adopted at the Millennium Summit of the United Nations, and the development goals contained therein, in particular the health-related development goals, and its resolutions 58/3 of 27 October 2003 and 59/27 of 23 November 2004,

Recalling also the 2005 World Summit Outcome, adopted by Heads of State and Government at the High-level Plenary Meeting of the sixtieth session of the General Assembly, held in New York from 14 to 16 September 2005, including the commitments on HIV/AIDS, malaria, tuberculosis and other health issues,

Recognizing that health is central to the achievement of the internationally agreed development goals, including all those contained in the Millennium Declaration, and that such goals create an opportunity to position health as a core part of the development agenda and to raise political commitment and financial resources for the sector,

Noting with concern the deleterious impact on humankind of HIV/AIDS, tuberculosis, malaria and other major infectious diseases and epidemics, and the heavy disease burden borne by poor people, especially in developing countries, including the least developed countries, as well as countries with economies in transition, and in this regard noting with appreciation the work of the Joint United Nations Programme on HIV/AIDS, its co-sponsoring agencies and the Global Fund to Fight HIV/AIDS, Tuberculosis and Malaria,

Also noting with concern the serious damage and loss of life caused by natural disasters and their negative impact on public health and health systems,

Bearing in mind the fact that the fight against new and re-emerging diseases, such as the severe acute respiratory syndrome and a human influenza pandemic arising from avian influenza, is far from over, and in this regard welcoming the efforts of the World Health Organization, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations and the World Organization for Animal Health in developing international strategies and collaboration, as well as the recent appointment by the Secretary-General of a Senior United Nations System Coordinator for Avian and Human Influenza,

Emphasizing that Member States have primary responsibility for strengthening their capacity-building in public health to detect and respond rapidly to outbreaks of major infectious diseases, through the establishment and improvement of effective public health mechanisms, while recognizing that the magnitude of the necessary response may be beyond the capabilities of many countries, in particular developing countries, as well as countries with economies in transition,

Convinced that strengthening public health systems is critical to the development of all Member States and that economic and social development are enhanced through measures that strengthen capacity-building in public health, including strategies for training, recruitment and retention of sufficient public health personnel, and systems of prevention and of immunization against infectious diseases,

Acknowledging that rapid progress will require political commitment and a scaling-up of more efficient and effective strategies and actions, greater investment of financial resources, adequately staffed and effective health systems, capacity-building in the public and private sectors, a clear focus on equity in access and outcomes, and collective action within and between countries,

Recognizing the need to strengthen national health and social infrastructures to reinforce measures to eliminate discrimination in access to public health, information and education for all people, especially for the most underserved and vulnerable groups,

Recognizing also the need for greater international and regional cooperation to meet new and existing challenges to public health, in particular in promoting effective measures such as safe, affordable and accessible vaccines, as well as assisting developing countries in securing vaccines against preventable infectious diseases and supporting the development of new vaccines,

Welcoming the Doha Declaration on the Agreement on Trade-Related Aspects of Intellectual Property Rights and Public Health, adopted on 14 November 2001, and noting the decision of the World Trade Organization General Council of 30 August 2003 on the implementation of paragraph 6 of the Declaration,

Recognizing the expertise of the World Health Organization and its role in, inter alia, coordinating actions with Member States in the areas of information exchange, personnel training, technical support, resource utilization, the improvement of global public health preparedness and response mechanisms and stimulating and advancing work on the prevention, control and eradication of epidemic, endemic and other diseases, as well as the work of the World Health Organization office dedicated to communicable disease surveillance and response,

Welcoming the efforts of the World Health Organization, in cooperation with Member States, the United Nations system, the Bretton Woods institutions, the private sector and civil society, in enhancing capacity-building in global public health and in promoting public health at the country level,

Underscoring the importance of the International Health Regulations (2005), adopted by the World Health Assembly in its resolution 58.3 of 23 May 2005, as an instrument for ensuring the maximum possible protection against the international spread of diseases with minimum interference in international traffic,

1. Urges Member States to further integrate public health into their national economic and social development strategies, including through the establishment and improvement of effective public health mechanisms, in particular networks of disease surveillance, response, control, prevention, treatment and information exchange and the recruitment and training of national public health personnel;

2. Urges Member States and the international community to increase investment, building on existing mechanisms and through partnership, to improve health systems in developing countries and countries with economies in transition with the aim of providing sufficient health workers, infrastructures, management systems and supplies to achieve the health-related Millennium Development Goals by 2015;

3. Calls upon Member States and the international community to take action, as appropriate, to address shortages of human resources for health by, inter alia, developing, financing and implementing policies, within national development strategies, to improve training and management and effectively govern the recruitment, retention and deployment of health workers;

4. Also calls upon Member States and the international community to raise awareness of good public health practices, including through education and the mass media;

5. Emphasizes the importance of active international cooperation in the control of infectious diseases, based on the principles of mutual respect and equality, with a view to strengthening capacity-building in public health, especially in developing countries, including through the exchange of information and the sharing of experience, as well as research and training Programme focusing on surveillance, prevention, control, response, and care and treatment in respect of infectious diseases, and vaccines against them;

6. Calls for the improvement of the global public health preparedness and response systems, including systems of prevention and monitoring of infectious diseases, to better cope with major diseases, in particular a human influenza pandemic arising from avian influenza;

7. Recognizes World Health Assembly resolution 58.5 of 23 May 2005 on strengthening pandemic-influenza preparedness and response, and in this regard calls upon Member States to develop, implement and strengthen their national response plans, welcomes the ongoing collaboration across multiple forums to address issues to further national efforts and international cooperation on preparedness, contingency planning and response and containment of avian and pandemic influenza, and takes note with interest of the initiative of the International Partnership on Avian and Pandemic Influenza and its core principles;

8. Calls upon Member States to take all appropriate measures for furthering the purpose and eventual implementation of the International Health Regulations (2005), adopted by the World Health Assembly in its resolution 58.3 of 23 May 2005, pending their entry into force, including development of the necessary public health capacities and of legal and administrative provisions, and encourages them to implement the Regulations as early as possible and to support the Global Outbreak Alert and Response Network of the World Health Organization;

9. Encourages Member States to participate actively in the verification and validation of surveillance data and information concerning public health emergencies of international concern and, in close collaboration with the World Health Organization, to exchange information and experience in a timely and open manner on epidemics and the prevention and control of emerging and re-emerging infectious diseases that pose a risk to global public health;

10. Urges Member States and the international community to promote long-term funding, including public-private partnerships, where appropriate, for academic and industrial research as well as for the development of new vaccines and microbicides, diagnostic kits, drugs and treatments to address major pandemics, tropical diseases and other diseases, such as avian influenza and the severe acute respiratory syndrome, and to take forward work on market incentives, where appropriate, through such mechanisms as advance purchase commitments;

11. Stresses the importance of enhancing international cooperation in the area of public health in the aftermath of natural disasters to support national efforts to cope in all phases of the response, and urges Member States and the international community to strengthen their cooperation programmes, preparedness, mitigation, response and recovery in this regard;

12. Invites the regional commissions of the Economic and Social Council, as appropriate, to cooperate closely with Member States, the private sector and civil society, when requested, in their capacity-building in public health, as well as in regional cooperation to diminish and eliminate the deleterious impact of major infectious diseases;

13. Encourages Member States, as well as United Nations agencies, bodies, funds and programmes, in accordance with their respective mandates, to continue to address public health concerns in their development activities and programmes, and to actively support capacity-building in global public health and health-care institutions, such as through the provision of technical and other relevant assistance to the developing countries, as well as countries with economies in transition;

14. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its sixty-first session a report on the implementation of the present resolution.

Avian influenza

The World Health Assembly (Geneva, 16-25 May), in its resolution 58.5 on strengthening pandemic-influenza preparedness and response, stressed the need for all countries, especially those affected by highly pathogenic avian influenza, to collaborate with WHO and the international community to lessen the risk of a pandemic among humans that might be caused by the H5N1 influenza virus. The WHO Director-General was asked to develop plans and capacity for responding to a pandemic by providing capacity-building and technology transfer related to H5N1 influenza vaccines and diagnostics to developing countries.

The High-Level Committee on Programmes (HLCP) of the United Nations System Chief Executives Board for Coordination (CEB), in a briefing by WHO at its tenth session (Frascati, Italy, 6-8 October) [CEB/2005/7] on the latest developments regarding avian influenza, learned that, while several cases of transfer from birds to humans had been detected, there were no known cases in which the influenza had been transmitted from human to human. However, concern existed that the virus might mutate to acquire that capacity, which was an alarming possibility given the lack of vaccine and the limited quantities of medicine available to curtail the symptoms in humans. The influenza was already at a full-blown crisis stage among wild birds and poultry, with devastating economic effects on poor Asian farmers, many of whom were at risk of sliding back into extreme poverty.

On 29 September, the Secretary-General appointed Dr. David Nabarro of WHO to coordinate the UN response to the influenza.

Communication. The United States, on 31 October [A/60/530], transmitted to the Secretary-General a statement of core principles, adopted at a meeting (6-7 October) of the International Partnership on Avian and Pandemic Influenza, which dealt with the need for global cooperation to address the avian influenza and other international health emergencies.

Road safety

The Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly an August report [A/60/181 & Corr.1], prepared by WHO, which updated the status of implementation of the Assembly's recommendations contained in resolution 58/289 on improving global road safety [YUN 2004, p. 1224]. According to the report, the United Nations Road Safety Collaboration, a group developed by WHO in collaboration with the Economic Commission for Europe (ECE) and other regional commissions to address issues of road safety, comprised, as at March, 11 UN entities and 31 other international agencies working on road safety.

At its 2005 (16-17 March) meeting, participants of the Collaboration defined a common framework for collaboration on the implementation of Assembly resolution 58/289 and the recommendations of the 2004 World Report, on Road Traffic Injury Prevention [YUN 2004, p. 1223]; and agreed to concentrate on addressing a few specified areas identified in the World Report such as helmets, seat belts and child restraints, drinking and driving, speed and infrastructure. The Collaboration also identified a number of specific products, the creation of which would be directly relevant to achieving its objectives.

Among other initiatives, WHO developed an online global road safety legislation database and "The United Nations Road Safety Collaboration: a handbook of partner profiles". A series of "how to" manuals to guide countries on how to implement recommendations in the World Report on Road Traffic Injury Prevention were to be completed. A World Day of Remembrance for Road Crash Victims was called for the third Sunday in November, and the ECE was to host the First United Nations Global Road Safety Week, focusing on young road users, in April 2007.

The report concluded that, although the issue of road safety had not received the level of attention and resources commensurate with the magnitude of the problem, global awareness of the need for action and the momentum to do so had increased over the previous year. Groups that historically had not been very active in global dialogues on road safety had been engaged by the United Nations Road Safety Collaboration.

The recommendations in the report called upon the Assembly to encourage Member States to, among other national actions, bring national legislation in line with the Conventions on Road Traffic and Road Signs and Signals; continue using the World Report on Road Traffic Injury Prevention as a framework for road safety efforts; include road safety within projects aimed at tackling the MDGs; develop work programmes in road safety; support and participate in the Global Road Safety Week in 2007; and recognize the World Day of Remembrance for Road Crash Victims.

In other developments, the United Nations Road Safety Collaboration, at its third meeting (London, 14-15 November), finalized the goal and objectives for collaboration and discussed specific issues related to road safety, including data collection and indicators, policy, capacity development, alcohol and speed, seat belts and helmets.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 26 October [meeting 38], the General Assembly adopted resolution 60/5 [draft: A/60/L.8 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 60].

Improving global road safety

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 57/309 of 22 May 2003, 58/9 of 5 November 2003 and 58/289 of 14 April 2004 on improving global road safety,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the global road safety crisis,

Commending the World Health Organization for its role in implementing the mandate conferred upon it by the General Assembly in its resolution 58/289 to act, working in close cooperation with the United Nations regional commissions, as a coordinator on road safety issues within the United Nations system,

Also commending the United Nations regional commissions and their subsidiary bodies for having responded to the above-mentioned resolutions and to the report of the Secretary-General by accelerating or expanding their road safety activities,

Noting with satisfaction the progress made by the United Nations Road Safety Collaboration as described in the report of the Secretary-General, as well as the road safety initiatives undertaken by relevant United Nations agencies and international partners,

Underlining the importance for Member States to continue using the World Report on Road Traffic Injury Prevention as a framework for road safety efforts and implementing its recommendations by paying particular attention to the five risk factors identified, namely, the non-use of safety belts and child restraints; alcohol; the non-use of helmets; inappropriate and excessive speed; and the lack of infrastructure,

Welcoming the proposal of the Economic Commission for Europe to host the first United Nations Global Road Safety Week, in Geneva in April 2007, targeted at young road users, including young drivers,

Also welcoming the proposal to designate the third Sunday in November as the World Day of Remembrance for Road Traffic Victims, in recognition of road traffic victims and their families' loss and suffering,

Convinced that responsibility for road safety rests at the local, municipal and national levels,

Recognizing that many developing countries and countries with economies in transition have limited capacities to address these issues, and underlining, in this context, the importance of international cooperation towards further supporting the efforts of developing countries, in particular, to build capacities in the field of road safety and of providing the financial and technical support associated with such efforts,

1. Expresses its concern at the continued increase, in particular in developing countries, in traffic fatalities and injuries worldwide;

2. Reaffirms the importance of addressing global road safety issues and the need for the further strengthening of international cooperation, taking into account the needs of developing countries, by building capacities in the field of road safety, and providing financial and technical support for their efforts;

3. Encourages Member States and the international community, including international and regional financial institutions, to lend financial, technical and political support, as appropriate, to the United Nations regional commissions, the World Health Organization and other relevant United Nations agencies for their efforts to improve road safety;

4. Invites the United Nations regional commissions, relevant United Nations agencies and international partners to continue the existing road safety initiatives, and encourages them to take up new ones;

5. Encourages Member States to adhere to the 1949 Convention on Road Traffic and the 1968 Convention on Road Traffic and Convention on Road Signs and Signals, in order to ensure a high level of road safety in their countries, and also encourages them to strive to reduce road traffic injuries and mortality in order to achieve the Millennium Development Goals;

6. Stresses the importance of the improvement in the international legal road traffic safety norms, and welcomes in this regard the work of the Working Party on Road Traffic Safety of the Inland Transport Committee of the Economic Commission for Europe in the elaboration of a substantial package of amendments to the 1968 Conventions on Road Traffic and Road Signs and Signals;

7. Invites Member States to implement the recommendations of the World Report on Road Traffic Injury Prevention, including those related to the five main risk factors, namely, the non-use of safety belts and child restraints; the non-use of helmets; drinking and driving; inappropriate and excessive speed; as well as the lack of appropriate infrastructure;

8. Also invites Member States to establish a lead agency, on a national level, on road safety and to develop a national action plan to reduce road traffic injuries, by passing and enforcing legislation, conducting necessary awareness-raising campaigns and putting in place appropriate methods to monitor and evaluate interventions that are implemented;

9. Invites the United Nations regional commissions and the World Health Organization to organize jointly, within their resources as well as with voluntary financial assistance from concerned stakeholders from government, civil society and the private sector, the first United Nations Global Road Safety Week to serve as a platform for global and regional, but mainly national and local, activities to raise awareness about road safety issues and to stimulate and advance responses as appropriate for these settings, and to convene a second road safety stakeholders' forum in Geneva as part of the Global Road Safety Week to continue work begun at the first forum held at United Nations Headquarters in 2004;

10. Invites Member States and the international community to recognize the third Sunday in November of every year as the World Day of Remembrance for Road Traffic Victims as the appropriate acknowledgement for victims of road traffic crashes and their families;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its sixty-second session on the progress made in improving global road safety;

12. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its sixty-second session the item entitled "Global road safety crisis".

Food and agriculture

Food aid

World Food Programme

At its 2005 substantive session in July, the Economic and Social Council had before it two reports pertaining to the World Food Programme (WFP): the annual report [E/2005/14] of the Executive Director for 2004 and a report [E/2005/36] of the Executive Board containing the decisions and recommendations of its 2004 sessions. By decision 2005/230 of 20 July, the Council took note of those reports.

The WFP Executive Board, at its 2005 sessions [E/2006/36] held in Rome: first regular session (31 January–2 February), annual session (6-10 June), and second regular session (7-11 November), decided on organizational and programme matters and approved a number of projects. In November, the Board approved its biennial programme of work for 2006-2007 [WFP/EB.2/2005/10] and invited its Bureau, with the assistance of its secretariat, to update the programme of work in the light of the decisions taken at the sessions.

WFP activities

WFP's 2005 Annual Performance Report (APR) [WFP/EB.A/2006/4 & Corr.1] measured its activities during the year in line with the performance and results framework laid out in the 2004-2007 strategic plan and the 2004-2005 biennial management plan approved in October 2003 [YUN 2003, p. 1259].

At the close of 2005, the overall global food aid deliveries were 8.2 million tons, an increase of about 9 per cent from the 7.5 million tons delivered in 2004. Of that amount, WFP distributed 4.2 million metric tons of food to 96.7 million people in 82 countries, a decrease of about 16.8 per cent from the 113 million people reached in 2004. Of those assisted, 35 million were reached through emergency operations, 38.1 million through protracted relief and recovery operations and 23.6 million through development projects.

The Sudan was the single largest country operation in 2005. In Darfur alone, WFP reached 3.4 million people in an operation totalling $398.7 million. Natural disasters in 2005 challenged WFP to meet large unforeseen needs in demanding environments. Hurricanes Katrina, Rita and Stan, drought and locusts in the Niger and the earthquake in Kashmir prompted large-scale responses from WFP, which also continued to assist 2.2 million survivors of the 2004 Indian Ocean tsunami. Additionally, WFP was involved in addressing the food emergency in southern Africa.

WFP continued to focus assistance on children, with the aim of ending child hunger. It provided assistance to 58 million children, 30 per cent of whom were five years of age and under. Nearly 52 per cent of beneficiaries receiving food assistance were women or girls. Some 2.1 million beneficiaries were refugees, and 8.3 million were internally displaced persons.

With regard to direct expenses, at the regional level, sub-Saharan Africa received the largest share, 71 per cent, then Asia, 18 per cent, Latin America and the Caribbean, the Middle East and North Africa, 3 per cent each, and Eastern Europe and the Commonwealth of Independent States, 1 per cent.

Administrative and financial matters

Continued progress was made in addressing WFP's organizational weaknesses and strengthening core management processes. Sixty per cent of performance indicator targets aimed at strengthening management processes were either met or exceeded in 2005. Lessons from major operations were analysed and management decisions were made to improve responses. Further progress was made in reporting results by strategic priorities, allowing WFP to highlight outputs aligned with corporate priorities. However, challenges remained in standardizing outcome-level reporting of food interventions. WFP was working to improve reporting on corporate outcome indicators in emergencies, and to develop, with humanitarian agencies, coordinated approaches and standards.

WFP's Executive Board, in a joint meeting (New York, 20-24 January) with the Executive Boards of UNDP/UNFPA and UNICEF, discussed, among other matters, simplification and harmonization relating to the United Nations Development Group initiatives on common country programming, common services and premises, and resource transfer modalities.

Resources and financing

In 2005, operational expenditures totalled $2.9 billion, the same as in 2004. Confirmed contributions reached $2.76 billion, a slight increase over the 2004 figure of $2.2 billion. The United States was again the largest contributor, providing some $1.2 billion to the Programme. Of the total contributions, $1.4 billion went to protracted relief and recovery operations, $756 million to the International Emergency Food Reserve, $269 million to development activities, $262 million to special operations, $18.6 million to the Immediate Response Account and $79.3 million to other initiatives.

Food security

Communication. On 11 August [E/2005/90], the Director-General of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO) confirmed that the FAO Council, at its one hundred and twenty-seventh session (Rome, 22-27 November, 2004), endorsed the Voluntary Guidelines to Support the Progressive Realization of the Right to Adequate Food in the Context of National Food Security, which were previously endorsed by the FAO Committee on World Food Security. The Guidelines, designed to facilitate Governments' efforts to implement the right to food, covered actions to be taken at the national level to enable people to feed themselves in dignity and establish safety nets for those unable to do so. Approval of the Voluntary Guidelines marked the first time an intergovernmental body agreed on the implications of the right to food for government policies and on how to implement such an approach.

Follow-up to the 1996 World Food Summit

At its one hundred and twenty-eighth session (Rome, 20-25 June) [CL 128/10], the FAO Council considered two reports of the FAO's Committee on World Food Security (CFS) on assessment of the world food security situation [CFS:2005/2] and a new reporting format for the follow-up to the implementation of the World Food Summit Plan of Action [CFS:2005/3]. The Council also considered a summary of the multi-stakeholder dialogue held in preparation for the 2006 Special Forum to review implementation of the Plan of Action, adopted at the 1996 World Food Summit [YUN 1996, p. 1129], which called on countries to halve the number of undernourished people by 2015.

According to the CFS assessment of world food security, as at March 2005, 36 countries, 23 in Africa, 7 in Asia/Near East, 5 in Latin America and 1 in Europe faced serious food shortages. Although various factors contributed to the shortages, civil strife and adverse weather were the most common. Concern was expressed that, at the current rate of progress, the goal of halving the world's hungry by 2015 might not be reached.

International Year of Rice

Communication. In a 24 August letter [A/C.2/60/3], the FAO Director-General transmitted to the General Assembly President a report on the outcome of the International Year of Rice, 2004, proclaimed by Assembly resolution 57/162 [YUN 2002, p. 1226]. The report noted that more than 800 activities in 68 countries marked the International Year of Rice, and the successful implementation of the Year had raised global awareness of the important role rice played in development and the fight against hunger. It also resulted in increased support for the development of sustainable rice-based production systems. The report recommended the broadening of research and development in rice-based production systems and further efforts by FAO and other relevant organizations to assist national Governments in the improvement and transfer of rice production technologies.

International Year of the Potato

On 25 November, the Conference of FAO (Rome, 19-26 November) adopted resolution 4/2005, declaring 2008 the International Year of the Potato. The potato was recognized as an important international staple food that played an important role in ensuring food security and alleviating poverty. The General Assembly, in resolution 60/191 (see below), joined FAO in declaring 2008 the International Year of the Potato.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 Decmber 2005 [meeting 68], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee [A/60/488], adopted resolution 60/191 without vote [agenda item 52].

International Year of the Potato, 2008

The General Assembly,

Noting that the potato is a staple food in the diet of the world's population,

Recalling resolution 4/2005 of the Conference of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, adopted on 25 November 2005,

Affirming the need to focus world attention on the role that the potato can play in providing food security and eradicating poverty in support of achievement of the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals,

1. Decides to declare 2008 the International Year of the Potato;

2. Invites the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations to facilitate the implementation of the International Year of the Potato, in collaboration with Governments, the United Nations Development Programme, Consultative Group on International Agricultural Research centres and other relevant organizations of the United Nations system, as well as relevant non-governmental organizations.

Nutrition

Standing Committee on Nutrition

At its thirty-second session (Brasilia, Brazil, 14-18 March), the United Nations System Standing Committee on Nutrition (SCN) conducted a symposium on realizing the right to adequate food to help achieve the Millennium Development Goals (MDGs) [YUN 2000, p. 51]. Among other things, the symposium examined case studies of four countries, focusing on strengthening the food and nutrition aspects of national development plans in order to achieve the MDGs. The Committee also considered reports from working groups on nutrition, ethics and human rights; breastfeeding and complementary feeding; nutrition and HIV/AIDS; capacity development in food and nutrition; nutrition in emergencies; household food security; and nutrition throughout the life cycle. Plenary lectures were organized by working groups focusing on anaemia and iron deficiencies and the double burden of disease in developing countries.

UNU activities

The United Nations University (UNU), through its Food and Nutrition Programme for Human and Social Development (FNP), continued to assist developing regions to enhance individual, organizational and institutional capacity; carried out coordinated global research activities; and served as the academic arm for the UN system in areas of food and nutrition that were best addressed in a non-regulatory, non-normative environment.

In 2005, FNP was to finalize a global scientific review for harmonization of approaches for developing nutrient-based dietary standards that were to result in the resolution of differences arising in: the setting of national and international nutrient standards; the designing of national and international food policies; and enhancing the transparency of the application of national standards to trade and other regulatory/normative activities. Ten papers related to that issue were commissioned by FNP, which served as core documents for the jointly sponsored UNU/FAO/WHO consultation held in December.

During the year, FNP completed a global regional network of capacity development task forces in Southern, Eastern and West/Central Africa, Latin America, Asia, the Middle East and Eastern Europe. It also spearheaded the establishment of the African Nutrition Graduate Students Network, a cooperative network of African nationals enrolled in graduate nutrition programmes throughout the world.

Five UNU-Kirin Fellows from Asia completed their 12-month training programme at the National Food Research Institute in Tsukuba, Japan, in March, and five new Fellows began their training in April.

UNU continued its publication of the Food and Nutrition Bulletin and the Journal of Food Composition and Analysis.

Chapter XIV

International drug control

The United Nations continued in 2005 to strengthen international cooperation in countering the world drug problem, mainly through the Commission on Narcotic Drugs, the International Narcotics Control Board (INCB) and the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime (UNODC). The UN system's drug control activities focused on carrying out the 1999 Action Plan for the Implementation of the Declaration on the Guiding Principles of Drug Demand Reduction.

UNODC coordinated the drug control activities of UN organizations and provided technical expertise to Member States. As the custodian of international conventions to counter the world drug problem, it assisted States in complying with those conventions and supported INCB in monitoring their implementation. States and the international community were assisted in improving data collection and analysis. UNODC also contributed to a strengthened international drug control system through its integrated portfolio of global programmes and regional and country projects. In addition, support was provided for the design and implementation of alternative development programmes and projects in all regions where illicit drugs were cultivated.

The Commission on Narcotic Drugs—the main UN drug control policymaking body—recommended a number of draft resolutions to the Economic and Social Council and adopted resolutions on the follow-up to the General Assembly's twentieth (1998) special session on countering the world drug problem, implementation of the international drug control treaties, demand reduction and the prevention of drug abuse, alternative development, illicit drug trafficking and supply, administrative and budgetary matters and strengthening UN machinery for international drug control. In July, the Council urged Governments to continue to contribute to maintaining a balance between the licit supply of and demand for opiate raw materials for medical and scientific needs, to prevent their illicit production or diversion and to remove barriers to the medical use of opioid analgesics. It encouraged the development, implementation and strengthening of measures for the prevention and suppression of illicit drug trafficking and to promote demand reduction in transit States. The Council called on the international community to support Afghanistan's counter-narcotics objectives and requested UNODC to ensure that multilateral support was provided. That call was echoed by the Assembly in December. Also in December, the Assembly adopted an omnibus resolution on international cooperation against the world drug problem that addressed data collection and research; community capacity-building; demand reduction; illicit synthetic drugs; control of substances; judicial cooperation; countering money-laundering; and illicit crop eradication and alternative development.

INCB reviewed the implementation of alternative development programmes, highlighting best practices and models for increasing their effectiveness. It continued to oversee the implementation of the three major international drug control conventions, analyse the drug situation worldwide and draw the attention of Governments to weaknesses in national control and treaty compliance, making suggestions and recommendations for improvements at the national and international levels.

Follow-up to the twentieth special session

Report of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 59/163 [YUN 2004, p. 1229], the Secretary-General, in a July report [A/60/130], provided an overview of international cooperation aimed at combating the world drug problem, in particular the implementation of mandates relating to the outcome of the Assembly's 1998 twentieth special session on countering the world drug problem [YUN 1998, p. 1135], and the Action Plan for the Implementation of the Declaration on the Guiding Principles of Drug Demand Reduction, adopted by the Assembly in resolution 54/132 [YUN 1999, p. 1157]. The report reviewed follow-up action taken by the Commission on Narcotic Drugs and its subsidiary bodies and by Governments and through international cooperation to counter the world drug problem. It also described UN system activities, including work on drug demand reduction; supply reduction and law enforcement; alternative livelihoods and protecting the environment; and strengthening the drug programme of the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime (UNODC).

The Secretary-General concluded that, although progress had been made to enhance international cooperation, much remained to be done with regard to the implementation of legislative measures. The countries most affected by illicit crop cultivation needed further capacity-building, programme coordination, monitoring and impact evaluation systems and long-term socio-economic development in order to sustain illicit crop eradication and alternative development and to prevent the re-emergence of illicit crops. Efforts were required to strengthen precursor control and combat the illicit manufacture of and trafficking in amphetamine-type stimulants (ATS). More should be done to develop systems to assess the problem of all illicit drugs and establish prevention programmes and treatment and rehabilitation services. The Secretary-General suggested that the Assembly call upon the Commission on Narcotic Drugs to monitor the progress made by Governments towards meeting the goals and targets set at the Assembly's twentieth special session and invite States to respond to the biennial reports questionnaire on those efforts and on the implementation of measures to enhance international cooperation to counter the world drug problem.

Commission on Narcotic Drugs. In January, the UNODC Executive Director submitted to the Commission on Narcotic Drugs his third biennial report on the world drug problem [E/CN.7/2005/2 & Add.1-6]. The report, prepared in response to Commission resolutions 42/11 [YUN 1999, p. 1191] and 44/2 [YUN 2001, p. 1143], was based on the replies from States to the third biennial reports questionnaire, for the period from June 2002 to June 2004. That information dealt with national drug control strategies; drug demand reduction; the Action Plan against Illicit Manufacture, Trafficking and Abuse of Amphetamine-type Stimulants and their Precursors, contained in resolution S-20/4 A, [YUN 1998, p. 1139]; countering money-laundering; the Action Plan on Eradication of Illicit Drug Crops and on Alternative Development, contained in resolution S-20 E [ibid., p. 1148]; judicial cooperation; and control of precursors. It also contained information on the implementation of the 2003 Commission resolution on supporting the international drug control system through joint action [YUN 2003, p. 1268].

The Commission, by an 11 March resolution [E/2005/28/Rev.1 (res. 48/8)], called on Member States to: identify and promote strategies for international cooperation in the development and dissemination of best practices and relevant research, including the monitoring of drug trends; give attention to the development of their research workforces; and adopt, implement and evaluate best practices and research-based evidence for policy and workforce development and programme delivery. It urged UNODC to promote the transfer of knowledge across international borders by coordination and dissemination efforts; consider the role of multidisciplinary research structures in countering illicit drugs; and promote models of good practice. Governments and researchers were encouraged to disseminate best practices and relevant research.

World Summit Outcome. In the World Summit Outcome document, contained in resolution 60/1 (see p. 48), the Assembly reaffirmed its determination to overcome the world narcotic drug problem and resolved to strengthen UNODC's capacity to assist Member States to eliminate both the supply of and demand for illicit drugs.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December [meeting 64], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee [A/60/511], adopted resolution 60/178 without vote [agenda item 107].

International cooperation against the world drug problem

The General Assembly,

Recalling the United Nations Millennium Declaration, its resolution 59/163 of 20 December 2004 and its other previous resolutions,

Welcoming the unwavering determination and commitment of Heads of State and Government gathered at the 2005 World Summit, held in New York from 14 to 16 September 2005, as set out in the 2005 World Summit Outcome, to overcome the world drug problem through international cooperation and national strategies to eliminate both the illicit supply of and demand for illicit drugs, and taking note of the resolve they expressed to strengthen the capacity of the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime, within its existing mandates, to provide assistance to States in those tasks upon request,

Reaffirming the Political Declaration adopted by the General Assembly at its twentieth special session and the importance of meeting the objectives targeted for 2008, the joint ministerial statement adopted at the ministerial segment of the forty-sixth session of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs, the Action Plan for the Implementation of the Declaration on the Guiding Principles of Drug Demand Reduction and the Action Plan on International Cooperation on the Eradication of Illicit Drug Crops and on Alternative Development,

Aware that significant progress continues to be made by Member States in meeting the goals set for 2008 at the twentieth special session of the General Assembly, as reflected in the biennial reports of the Executive Director of the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime, taking note of the fact that the third biennial report drew attention to areas requiring further efforts by the international community, and recognizing that the drug problem is still a global challenge that constitutes a serious threat to public health and safety and the well-being of humankind, in particular children and young people, and that it undermines socio-economic and political stability and sustainable development, including efforts to reduce poverty, and is linked to violence and crime, including in urban areas,

Concerned by the serious challenges and threats posed by the continuing links between illicit drug trafficking and terrorism and other national and transnational criminal activities, inter alia, trafficking in human beings, especially women and children, money-laundering, corruption, trafficking in arms and trafficking in chemical precursors, and reaffirming that strong and effective international cooperation is needed to counter these threats,

Concerned also that risk-taking behaviour, which can be increased by continued drug use, including injecting drug use and sharing of needles, is a significant route for the transmission of HIV/AIDS and other blood-borne diseases,

Acknowledging that community capacity-building is an essential component of effective drug policies and programmes,

Taking note of the adoption on 16 December 2005 of its resolution 60/179 entitled "Providing support to Afghanistan with a view to ensuring effective implementation of its Counter-Narcotics Implementation Plan", welcoming the ongoing efforts of Afghanistan in the fight against drug trafficking, and calling upon the Government of Afghanistan to intensify those efforts,

Bearing in mind that international cooperation in countering drug abuse and illicit production and trafficking has shown that positive results can be achieved through sustained and collective efforts, and expressing its appreciation for the initiatives in this regard,

I

Respect for the principles enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations and other provisions of international law in countering the world drug problem

1. Reaffirms that countering the world drug problem is a common and shared responsibility that must be addressed in a multilateral setting, requires an integrated and balanced approach and must be carried out in full conformity with the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations and other provisions of international law, and in particular with full respect for the sovereignty and territorial integrity of States, the principle of non-intervention in the internal affairs of States and all human rights and fundamental freedoms, and on the basis of the principles of equal rights and mutual respect;

2. Urges all States to ratify or accede to, and States parties to implement all the provisions of, the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs of 1961 as amended by the 1972 Protocol, the Convention on Psychotropic Substances of 1971 and the United Nations Convention against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances of 1988;

3. Invites all States, as a matter of priority, to sign, ratify or accede to, and States parties to fully implement, the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime and the Protocols thereto and the United Nations Convention against Corruption, in order to counter comprehensively the transnational criminal activities that are related to illicit drug trafficking;

II

International cooperation to counter the world drug problem and follow-up to the twentieth special session

1. Emphasizes that the world drug problem must be addressed in multilateral, regional, bilateral and national settings and that, in order to succeed, action to counter it has to involve all Member States, that action must be supported by strong international and development cooperation and must be further included in national development priorities, and that it requires a balance between supply reduction and demand reduction, as well as a comprehensive strategy that combines alternative development, including, as appropriate, preventive alternative development, eradication, interdiction, law enforcement, prevention, treatment and rehabilitation as well as education;

2. Calls upon all States to strengthen their efforts in the fight against the world drug problem, in order to achieve the objectives targeted for 2008 in the Political Declaration adopted by the General Assembly at its twentieth special session, and calls upon all relevant actors to promote and implement the outcome of the special session, as well as the outcome of the ministerial segment of the forty-sixth session of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs;

3. Urges Member States to fulfil their reporting obligations on the follow-up action to implement the outcome of the twentieth special session of the General Assembly on the world drug problem and to report fully on all measures agreed upon at the special session;

4. Takes note with appreciation of the outcome of the round-table meeting on the theme "Crime and drugs as impediments to security and development in Africa", held in Abuja on 5 and 6 September 2005, in the form of a comprehensive programme of action, 2006-2010;

Data collection and research

5. Stresses that data collection, analysis and evaluation of the results of ongoing national and international policies are essential tools for further developing sound, evidence-based drug control strategies, and therefore encourages Member States to further develop and institutionalize monitoring and evaluation tools and to utilize existing available data to exchange and share information at all levels;

6. Calls upon Member States to consider providing additional reporting and analysis on women-specific data relating to the use of illicit substances and access to appropriate treatment services;

Community capacity-building

7. Encourages all States to support community capacity-building through the development and dissemination of information on drug abuse trends and to provide training and encourage the formation of community networks at all levels, with a view to drawing on best practices and sharing experience;

Demand reduction

8. Urges all Member States to implement the Action Plan for the Implementation of the Declaration on the Guiding Principles of Drug Demand Reduction and to strengthen their national efforts to counter the abuse of illicit drugs in their population, in particular among children and young people;

9. Calls upon States and organizations with expertise in community capacity-building to provide, as needed, access to treatment, health care and social services for drug users, in particular those living with HIV/AIDS and other blood-borne diseases, and to extend support to States requiring such expertise, consistent with the international drug control treaties;

10. Urges States, in order to achieve a significant and measurable reduction of drug abuse by 2008:

(a) To further implement comprehensive demand reduction policies and programmes, including research, covering all the drugs under international control, in order to raise public awareness of the drug problem, paying special attention to prevention and education and providing, especially to young people and others at risk, information on developing life skills, making healthy choices and engaging in drug-free activities;

(b) To further develop and implement comprehensive demand reduction policies, including risk reduction activities, under the supervision of competent health authorities, that are in line with sound medical practice and the international drug control treaties and that reduce the adverse health and social consequences of drug abuse, and to provide a wide range of comprehensive services for the treatment, rehabilitation and social reintegration of drug abusers, with appropriate resources being devoted to such services, since social exclusion constitutes an important risk factor for drug abuse;

(c) To enhance early intervention programmes that dissuade children and young people from using illicit drugs, including, inter alia, polydrug use and the recreational use of substances such as cannabis and synthetic drugs, especially amphetamine-type stimulants, and to encourage the active participation of the younger generation and their families in campaigns against drug abuse;

(d) To consider strengthening and implementing broadly based prevention and treatment programmes and to ensure that such programmes adequately address the gender-specific barriers that limit access for young girls and women, taking into account all attendant circumstances, including social and clinical histories, in the context of education, the family and the community, as appropriate;

Illicit synthetic drugs

11. Urges States to renew their efforts, at the national, regional and international levels, to implement the comprehensive measures covered in the Action Plan against Illicit Manufacture, Trafficking and Abuse of Amphetamine-type Stimulants and Their Precursors, to make special efforts to counter the abuse and recreational use of amphetamine-type stimulants, especially by young people, and to disseminate information on the adverse health, social and economic consequences of such abuse;

12. Calls upon Member States to transmit voluntarily information on emerging substances of abuse to the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime so that it may quickly share the knowledge available about those substances, indications of their abuse and other health hazards, if known, as well as synthesis techniques, diversion channels and trafficking patterns;

Control of substances

13. Encourages States to establish or strengthen mechanisms and procedures to ensure strict control of substances used to manufacture illicit drugs, to support international operations aimed at preventing their diversion, including through coordination and cooperation between regulatory and enforcement services involved in precursor control, in cooperation with the International Narcotics Control Board, and to counter smuggling networks effectively, particularly in source and transit countries, by conducting, inter alia, backtracking law enforcement investigations;

14. Urges all States and relevant international organizations to cooperate closely with the International Narcotics Control Board, in particular in Operation Purple, Operation Topaz and Project Prism, in order to enhance the success of those international initiatives and to initiate, where appropriate, investigations by their law enforcement authorities into seizures and cases involving the diversion or smuggling of precursors and essential equipment, with a view to tracking them back to the source of diversion in order to prevent continuing illicit activity;

Judicial cooperation

15. Calls upon all States to strengthen international cooperation among judicial and law enforcement authorities at all levels in order to prevent and combat illicit drug trafficking and to share and promote best operational practices in order to interdict illicit drug trafficking, including by establishing and strengthening regional mechanisms, providing technical assistance and establishing effective methods for cooperation, in particular in the areas of air, maritime, port and border control and in the implementation of extradition treaties;

16. Acknowledges the work of the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime in the field of international cooperation, in particular through the provision of legal advisory assistance and the development of best practice guidance, and encourages States to make use of those services and tools in the enhancement of national laws and practice;

17. Urges Member States, consistent with their legal systems, to cooperate with a view to enhancing the effectiveness of law enforcement action in relation to the use of the Internet to combat drug-related crime;

Countering money-laundering

18. Urges States to strengthen action, in particular international cooperation and technical assistance aimed at preventing and combating the laundering of proceeds derived from drug trafficking and related criminal activities, with the support of the United Nations system, international institutions such as the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund, as well as regional development banks and, where appropriate, the Financial Action Task Force on Money

Laundering and similarly styled regional bodies, to develop and strengthen comprehensive international regimes to combat money-laundering and its possible links with organized crime and the financing of terrorism and to improve information-sharing among financial institutions and agencies in charge of preventing and detecting the laundering of those proceeds;

19. Calls upon States to consider including provisions in their national drug control plans for the establishment of national networks to enhance their respective capabilities to prevent, monitor, control and suppress serious offences connected with money-laundering and the financing of terrorism, to counter in general all acts of transnational organized crime and to supplement existing regional and international networks dealing with money-laundering;

International cooperation in illicit crop eradication and alternative development

20. Recognizes the efforts made by States to implement innovative alternative programmes, inter alia, in reforestation, agriculture and small and medium enterprises, and stresses the importance of the United Nations system and the international community contributing to the economic and social development of the communities that benefit from such programmes;

21. Calls for a comprehensive approach integrating alternative development programmes, including, where appropriate, preventive alternative development, into wider economic and social development programmes;

22. Calls upon States, where appropriate:

(a) To enhance support, including, where appropriate, through the provision of new and additional resources, for alternative development; security and rule of law, as necessary; environmental protection and eradication programmes undertaken by countries affected by the illicit cultivation of cannabis, especially in Africa, of opium poppy and of coca bush, in particular national programmes that seek to reduce social marginalization and promote sustainable economic development;

(b) To enhance joint strategies, through international and regional cooperation, to strengthen, including by training, education and providing technical assistance, alternative development, eradication and interdiction capacity, with the aim of eliminating illicit crop cultivation and fostering economic and social development;

(c) To encourage international cooperation, including, as appropriate, preventive alternative development, to prevent illicit crop cultivation from emerging in or being relocated to other areas;

(d) To provide, in accordance with the principle of shared responsibility, greater access to their markets for products of alternative development programmes, which are necessary for the creation of employment and the eradication of poverty;

(e) To establish or reinforce, where appropriate, national mechanisms to monitor and verify illicit crops;

(f) To continue to contribute to the maintenance of a balance between the licit supply of and demand for opiate raw materials used for medical and scientific purposes and to cooperate in preventing the proliferation of sources of production of opiate raw materials;

(g) To share and disseminate their experience with alternative development, including, as appropriate, preventive alternative development, and with illicit crop eradication, and to involve both the benefiting communities and academic and research institutions in that process, with a view to deepening the knowledge base;

23. Calls upon Member States and national and international development organizations to increase their efforts to empower local communities and authorities in project areas and to enhance their participation in the decision-making process in order to increase their ownership of the development measures undertaken in accordance with national legislation and the sustainability of those measures and to create law-abiding and prosperous rural society;

24. Calls upon Member States and international organizations to strengthen their partnerships with the private sector and civil society, in accordance with national legislation, in order to support social and licit economic development in areas in which illicit drugs are produced, taking into account the role of the private sector and civil society in promoting social responsibility and in the production and marketing of products of alternative development programmes;

III

Action by the United Nations system

1. Emphasizes that the multidimensional nature of the world drug problem calls for the promotion of integration and coordination of drug control activities throughout the United Nations system, including in the follow-up to major United Nations conferences, as well as in other relevant multilateral institutions and organizations;

2. Reaffirms its resolve to continue to strengthen the United Nations machinery for international drug control, in particular the Commission on Narcotic Drugs, the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime and the International Narcotics Control Board, in order to enable them to fulfil their mandates, bearing in mind the recommendations contained in Economic and Social Council resolution 1999/30 of 28 July 1999 and the measures taken and recommendations adopted by the Commission on Narcotic Drugs since its forty-fourth session, aimed at the enhancement of its functioning;

3. Encourages the Commission on Narcotic Drugs, as the global coordinating body in international drug control and as the governing body of the drug programme of the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime, and the International Narcotics Control Board to continue their useful work on the control of precursors and other chemicals used in the illicit manufacture of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances;

4. Notes that the International Narcotics Control Board needs sufficient resources to carry out all its mandates, including those that will enable it to perform effectively its task within the framework of Operation Purple, Operation Topaz and Project Prism, and therefore urges Member States to commit themselves in a common effort to assigning adequate and sufficient budgetary resources to the Board, in accordance with Economic and Social Council resolution 1996/20 of 23 July 1996, emphasizes the need to maintain its capacity, inter alia, through the provision of appropriate means by the Secretary-General and adequate technical support by the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime, and calls for enhanced cooperation and understanding between Member States and the Board in order to enable it to implement all its mandates under the international drug control conventions;

5. Welcomes the efforts of the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime to implement its mandate, and requests the Office to continue:

(a) To strengthen dialogue with Member States and also to ensure continued improvement in management, so as to contribute to enhanced and sustainable programme delivery and further encourage the Executive Director to maximize the effectiveness of the drug programme of the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime, inter alia, through the full implementation of Commission on Narcotic Drugs resolutions, in particular the recommendations contained therein;

(d) To allocate, while keeping the balance between supply and demand reduction programmes, adequate resources to allow it to fulfil its role in the implementation of the Action Plan for the Implementation of the Declaration on the Guiding Principles of Drug Demand Reduction, and support countries, upon their request, to further develop and implement drug demand reduction policies;

(e) To develop action-oriented strategies to assist Member States to implement the Action Plan for the Implementation of the Declaration;

(f) To strengthen dialogue and cooperation with multilateral development banks and with international financial institutions so that they may undertake lending and programming activities related to drug control in interested and affected countries to implement the outcome of the twentieth special session, and to keep the Commission on Narcotic Drugs informed of further progress made in this area;

(g) To take into account the outcome of the twentieth special session, to include in its report on the illicit traffic in drugs an updated, objective and comprehensive assessment of worldwide trends in illicit traffic and transit in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances, including methods and routes used, and to recommend ways and means of improving the capacity of States along those routes to address all aspects of the drug problem;

(h) To publish the World Drug Report, with comprehensive and balanced information about the world drug problem, and to seek additional extrabudgetary resources for its publication in all the official languages;

8. Requests the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime, subject to the availability of resources and the Commission on Narcotic Drugs guidelines for the use of general-purpose funds, together with international financial institutions and the organizations involved in preventing and suppressing money-laundering and drug trafficking, to facilitate the provision of training and advice through technical cooperation in States, when requested, taking into account, inter alia, the recommendations on money-laundering and the financing of terrorism formulated by the Financial Action Task Force on Money Laundering and its regional groups;

9. Urges all Governments to provide the fullest possible financial and political support to the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime by widening its donor base and increasing voluntary contributions, in particular general-purpose contributions, to enable it to continue, expand and strengthen its operational and technical cooperation activities, and recommends that a sufficient share of the regular budget of the United Nations be allocated to the Office to enable it to carry out its mandates and to work towards securing assured and predictable funding;

10. Encourages the meetings of Heads of National Drug Law Enforcement Agencies and of the Subcommission on Illicit Drug Traffic and Related Matters in the Near and Middle East of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs to continue to contribute to the strengthening of regional and international cooperation, taking into account the outcome of the twentieth special session of the General Assembly and of the ministerial segment of the forty-sixth session of the Commission;

11. Calls upon the relevant United Nations agencies and entities, other international organizations and international financial institutions, including regional development banks, to mainstream drug control issues into their programmes, and calls upon the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime to maintain its leading role by providing relevant information and technical assistance;

12. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General, and, taking into account the promotion of integrated reporting, requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its sixty-first session a report on the implementation of the present resolution with a focus on transit countries.

Conventions

International efforts to control narcotic drugs were governed by three global conventions: the 1961 Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs [YUN 1961, p. 382], which, with some exceptions of detail, replaced earlier narcotics treaties and was amended in 1972 by a Protocol [YUN 1972, p. 397] to strengthen the role of the International Narcotics Control Board (INCB); the 1971 Convention on Psychotropic Substances [YUN 1971, p. 380]; and the 1988 United Nations Convention against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances [YUN 1988, p. 690].

As at 31 December, 177 States were parties to the 1961 Convention, as amended by the 1972 Protocol. During the year, Bhutan acceded to the Convention.

The number of parties to the 1971 Convention stood at 179 as at 31 December, with the accession of Angola, Bhutan, Cambodia and Honduras during the year.

At year's end, 177 States and the European Community were parties to the 1988 Convention, with Angola, Cambodia, Cook Islands, the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Liberia, Micronesia, Samoa and Switzerland acceding in 2005.

Commission action. In March [E/2005/28/Rev.1], the Commission on Narcotic Drugs reviewed implementation of the international drug control treaties. It had before it the INCB report covering 2004 activities [YUN 2004, p. 1237] and the 2004 INCB technical report on the implementation of Article 12 of the 1988 Convention entitled "Precursors and Chemicals Frequently Used in the Illicit Manufacture of Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances" [E/INCB/2004/4].

The Commission welcomed INCB efforts to promote the maintenance of a global balance between the supply of and demand for opiate raw materials used for medical and scientific purposes, as required under the 1961 Convention as amended by the 1972 Protocol. However, it was concerned that some States used seized material for the licit manufacture of pharmaceuticals, despite several Economic and Social Council resolutions against that practice. The importance of adherence to and implementation of the international treaties was stressed, and INCB and UNODC were requested to assist States whose national systems for controlling drugs and substances used in illicit manufacture needed improvement. The Commission, noting with concern the increase in the illicit cultivation and production of, and trafficking in, opiates in Afghanistan (see p. 1356), agreed that support should be provided to that State and neighbouring and transit countries. It expressed concern at the increasing number of Internet sites that were illicitly selling pharmaceuticals containing internationally controlled substances and urged Governments to intensify their cooperation to investigate and prosecute such cases. Regarding article 12 of the 1988 Convention, the Commission emphasized the importance of its effective implementation and of universal adherence to it. The Commission noted the successes achieved by Project Prism, Operation Purple and Operation Topaz (see p. 1348). In view of the increasing illicit heroin manufacture in Afghanistan, it called on the international community to strengthen support for Operation Topaz and recommended that the Operation's Steering Committee should improve investigations of seized acetic anhydride in order to track its manufacturers and examine the feasibility of tagging products to determine at which points along the distribution chain diversions were taking place.

On 11 March [E/2005/28/Rev.1 (res. 48/11)], the Commission called on Member States to enact legislation to implement the 1988 Convention; develop the "know-your-client" principle referred to in Council resolution 2003/39 [YUN 2003, p. 1269] and Assembly resolution 59/162 [YUN 2004, p. 1234]; and strengthen the use of the pre-export notification mechanism. It urged States to investigate cases involving the diversion or smuggling of precursors; strengthen cooperation with associations, persons or companies engaged in activities involving precursors; and cooperate with INCB, in particular in Operation Purple, Operation Topaz and Project Prism. The Commission also encouraged States and INCB to address the use of substitute precursor chemicals by trafficking networks and urged INCB to follow up seizures and cases involving the diversion or smuggling of precursors; and to evaluate cases of attempted diversions and incorporate the findings in its annual Report on Precursors and Chemicals Frequently Used in the Illicit Manufacture of Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances. It called upon States to take note of the third biennial report of the Executive Director on the world drug problem (see p. 1340). The Executive Director was requested to report in 2006.

On the same date [res. 48/1], the Commission requested UNODC to gather from Member States information on emerging substances of abuse; called upon States to transmit that information voluntarily to UNODC and to share it at the bilateral, regional and international levels. The Commission encouraged States to use the monitoring mechanisms provided for by the limited international special surveillance list of non-scheduled substances, covering substitute and new chemicals for which information existed on their use in illicit drug manufacture, which was maintained and reviewed by INCB.

INCB action. In its report covering 2005 [Sales No. E.06.XI.2], INCB urged States that were not parties to any of the international drug control treaties to accede to them without delay. It also urged Governments to furnish in a timely manner all statistical reports required under the treaties and to establish their own estimates of narcotic drug requirements for medical needs. The Board urged manufacturing and exporting countries of psychotropic substances to submit annual statistical reports within the deadline, in conformity with the provisions of the 1971 Convention, and encouraged all Governments to update the assessments of their medical and scientific requirements for psychotropic substances. It also urged States that had not done so to comply with their treaty obligations and submit information on substances frequently used in the illicit manufacture of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances, as required under article 12 of the 1988 Convention.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 22 July [meeting 36], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs [E/2005/28/Rev.1], adopted resolution 2005/26 without vote [agenda item 14 (d)].

Demand for and supply of opiates used to meet medical and scientific needs

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolution 2004/43 of 21 July 2004 and previous relevant resolutions,

Recognizing that the medical use of narcotic drugs, including opiates, is indispensable for the relief of pain and suffering,

Emphasizing that the need to balance the global licit supply of opiates against the legitimate demand for opiates used to meet medical and scientific needs is central to the international strategy and policy of drug control,

Noting the fundamental need for international cooperation with the traditional supplier countries in drug control to ensure universal application of the provisions of the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs of 1961 and that Convention as amended by the 1972 Protocol,

Reiterating that a balance between consumption and production of opiate raw materials was achieved in the past as a result of efforts made by the two traditional supplier countries, India and Turkey, together with established supplier countries,

Expressing deep concern at the level of licit global production of opiate raw materials and the significant accumulation of stocks over the past few years as a consequence of the operation of market forces, which has the potential to upset the delicate balance between the licit supply of and demand for opiates for medical and scientific purposes,

Emphasizing the importance of adhering to the estimates, based on actual consumption and utilization of narcotic drugs, furnished to and confirmed by the International Narcotics Control Board on the extent of cultivation and production of opiate raw materials, especially in view of the current oversupply,

Recalling the Joint Ministerial Statement adopted during the ministerial segment of the forty-sixth session of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs, in which ministers and other government representatives called upon States to continue to contribute to the maintenance of a balance between the licit supply of and demand for opiate raw materials used for medical and scientific purposes and to cooperate in preventing the proliferation of sources of production of opiate raw materials,

Considering that opiate raw materials and opiates derived therefrom are not just ordinary commodities that can be subjected to the operation of market forces, and that, therefore, market economy considerations alone should not determine the cultivation of opium poppy,

Reiterating the importance of medically appropriate use of opiates in pain relief therapy, as advocated by the World Health Organization,

Noting that countries differ significantly in their level of consumption of narcotic drugs and that in most developing countries the use of narcotic drugs for medical purposes has remained at an extremely low level,

1. Urges all Governments to continue to contribute to maintaining a balance between the licit supply of and demand for opiate raw materials used for medical and scientific purposes, the achievement of which would be facilitated by maintaining, insofar as their constitutional and legal systems permit, support to the traditional and established supplier countries, and to cooperate in preventing the proliferation of sources of production of opiate raw materials;

2. Urges Governments of all producer countries to adhere strictly to the provisions of the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs of 1961 and that Convention as amended by the 1972 Protocol, and to take effective measures to prevent the illicit production or diversion of opiate raw materials to illicit channels, welcomes the study carried out by the International Narcotics Control Board on the relative merits of different methods of producing opiate raw materials, and encourages improvements in practices in the cultivation and production of opiate raw materials;

3. Urges Governments of consumer countries to assess their licit needs for opiate raw materials realistically on the basis of actual consumption and utilization of opiate raw materials and opiates derived therefrom and to communicate those needs to the International Narcotics Control Board in order to ensure easy supply, calls upon Governments of countries producing opium to limit the cultivation of opium poppy, taking into account the current level of global stocks, to the estimates furnished to and confirmed by the Board, in accordance with the requirements of the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs of 1961, and urges that, in providing estimates of such cultivation, producer countries consider the actual demand requirements of importing countries;

4. Urges the Governments of all countries where opium poppy has not been cultivated for the licit production of opiate raw materials, in the spirit of collective responsibility, to refrain from engaging in the commercial cultivation of opium poppy, in order to avoid the proliferation of supply sites;

5. Commends the International Narcotics Control Board for its efforts in monitoring the implementation of the relevant Economic and Social Council resolutions and, in particular:

(a) In urging the Governments concerned to adjust global production of opiate raw materials to a level corresponding to actual licit requirements and to avoid unforeseen imbalances between the licit supply of and demand for opiates caused by the exportation of products manufactured from seized and confiscated drugs;

(b) In inviting the Governments concerned to ensure that opiates imported into their countries for medical and scientific use do not originate in countries that transform seized and confiscated drugs into licit opiates;

(c) In arranging informal meetings, during the sessions of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs, with the main States that import and produce opiate raw materials;

6. Requests the International Narcotics Control Board to continue its efforts in monitoring the implementation of the relevant Economic and Social Council resolutions in full compliance with the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs of 1961 and that Convention as amended by the 1972 Protocol;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit the text of the present resolution to all Member States for consideration and implementation and to report to the Commission on Narcotic Drugs at its forty-ninth session on progress made in the implementation of the present resolution.

Also on 22 July [meeting 36], the Council, on the recommendation of the Commission [E/2005/28/Rev.1], adopted resolution 2005/25 without vote [agenda item 14 (d)].

Treatment of pain using opioid analgesics

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolutions 1995/19 of 24 July 1995, 1996/19 of 23 July 1996, 1997/38 of 21 July 1997, 1998/25 of 28 July 1998, 1999/33 of 28 July 1999, 2000/18 of 27 July 2000, 2001/17 of 24 July 2001, 2002/20 of 24 July 2002, 2003/40 of 22 July 2003 and 2004/43 of 21 July 2004, in which it reiterated the importance of medically appropriate use of opiates in pain relief therapy as advocated by the World Health Organization,

Bearing in mind the report of the International Narcotics Control Board for 1999, especially its chapter I, entitled "Freedom from pain and suffering", in which the Board reminded all Governments that the medical use of narcotic drugs continued to be indispensable for the relief of pain and suffering and that adequate provision must be made to ensure the availability of narcotic drugs for such purposes,

Recalling the document entitled "Achieving balance in national opioids control policy: guidelines for assessment", prepared in 2000 by the World Health Organization in consultation with the International Narcotics Control Board to help Governments to achieve better pain management by identifying and overcoming the barriers to opioid availability, in which it was emphasized that opioids such as morphine were the drugs of choice in the treatment of severe pain and that they should be available at all times in adequate amounts and in the appropriate dosage forms to satisfy the health-care needs of the majority of the population,

Recalling also that, in May 2004, the Executive Board of the World Health Organization recommended for adoption by the Fifty-eighth World Health Assembly, to be held in May 2005, a draft resolution on cancer prevention and control, in which the Assembly would urge member States to ensure the medical availability of opioid analgesics according to international treaties and recommendations of the World Health Organization and the International Narcotics Control Board and subject to an efficient monitoring and control system,

Welcoming the fact that the World Health Organization is developing a strategy to integrate the availability of opioid pain medication into palliative care for HIV/AIDS, cancer and other chronic diseases,

Calling attention to the assessment of the International Narcotics Control Board in its report for 2004 according to which low consumption of opioid analgesics for the treatment of moderate to severe pain, especially in developing countries, continued to be a matter of great concern to the Board,

Noting, on the basis of that report, the disparities in the consumption of such medicines existing between developing and developed countries, and recalling that, in 2003, six countries together accounted for 79 per cent of global consumption of morphine, while developing countries, representing about 80 per cent of the world's population, accounted for only about 6 per cent of global consumption of morphine,

Bearing in mind that, in its report for 2004, the International Narcotics Control Board encouraged Member States that had not yet done so to examine the extent to which their health-care systems and laws and regulations permitted the use of opioids for medical purposes, to identify possible impediments to such use and to develop plans of action for the development of long-term pain management strategies, with a view to facilitating the supply and availability of narcotic drugs for all appropriate indications,

Recalling that, in its report for 1999, the International Narcotics Control Board stated that the development of a new, non-profit mechanism for the use of otherwise unused narcotic products should be considered and observed that the impediments to opioid availability that were frequently reported by government authorities were impediments originating in the regulatory and drug control system, medical/therapeutic impediments, economic impediments and social and cultural impediments,

1. Recognizes the importance of improving the treatment of pain, including by the use of opioid analgesics, as advocated by the World Health Organization, especially in developing countries, and calls upon Member States to remove barriers to the medical use of such analgesics, taking fully into account the need to prevent their diversion for illicit use;

2. Invites the International Narcotics Control Board and the World Health Organization to examine the feasibility of a possible assistance mechanism that would facilitate the adequate treatment of pain using opioid analgesics and to inform the Commission on Narcotic Drugs at its forty-ninth session of the results of that examination;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit the text of the present resolution to all Member States for their consideration and implementation and to report on the implementation of the resolution to the Commission on Narcotic Drugs at its forty-ninth session.

In other action, the Council, by resolution 2005/14 (see p. 1226), adopted the Model Bilateral Agreement on the Sharing of Confiscated Proceeds of Crime or Property covered by the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime and the United Nations Convention against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances of 1988.

International Narcotics Control Board

The 13-member International Narcotics Control Board held its eighty-second (31 January–4 February), eighty-third (2-13 May) and eighty-fourth (1-18 November) sessions, all in Vienna.

In performing the tasks assigned to it under the international conventions, the Board monitored the implementation of those conventions and maintained a permanent dialogue with Governments, using the information received to identify the enforcement of treaty provisions requiring them to limit to medical and scientific purposes the licit manufacture of, trade in and distribution and use of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances. The Board, which was requested by the treaties to report annually on the drug control situation worldwide, noted weaknesses in national control and treaty compliance and made recommendations for improvements at the national and international levels.

The Board's 2005 report [Sales No. E.06.XI.2] examined the issue of alternative development, by which illegal drug crops could be substituted by legal cash crops to provide growers with similar or even higher incomes. It stated that alternative development programmes should take into account the context of livelihoods; be combined with law enforcement and drug prevention activities; and include drug abuse prevention and treatment and the development of infrastructure to transport legal crops to markets and to provide education and health care assistance. Alternative development should be integrated into broader development and investment efforts and long-term strategies. The Board recommended that Governments enhance joint strategies to strengthen alternative development programmes; ensure that those strategies were suited to the area concerned; anticipate changes in drug abuse and trafficking patterns; and ensure that law enforcement activities in illicit crop cultivation areas contributed to the building of trust between local communities and authorities and promoted the participation of crop growers in the formulation of policies.

With regard to the diversion of pharmaceutical products containing narcotic drugs, INCB urged Governments to collect information on their diversion and abuse and draw the attention of medical personnel to the good prescribing and dispensing practices recommended by the World Health Organization (WHO). It encouraged UNODC to assist Governments to monitor trends and prevent diversion and abuse. Noting that diversion of pharmaceuticals containing psychotropic substances was, together with illegally operating Internet pharmacies, the most important source for illicit drug suppliers (benzodiazepines and amphetamine-type stimulants (ATS) being the most abused), the Board urged Governments to collect information on the extent of diversion, monitor their consumption levels and raise awareness about the consequences of their abuse. INCB noted the increasing trafficking in and abuse of gamma-hydroxybutyric acid (GHB), a sedative-hypnotic, and called on Governments to increase their vigilance and develop appropriate abuse prevention programmes.

As to precursors, INCB remained the international focal point for the exchange of information under Project Prism, Operation Purple and Operation Topaz. Under Project Prism, the international initiative against diversion of ATS precursors, several diversion attempts were uncovered involving ephedra, the plant material not under international control from which ephedrine and pseudoephedrine were extracted. Also, efforts were made to gather information on the exports from South-East Asia of safrole-rich oils used in the illicit manufacture of methylenedioxymethamphetamine (MDMA) (Ecstasy and related drugs). Under Operation Purple, Governments continued to prevent the diversion of potassium permanganate for use in the illicit manufacture of cocaine. The Board called on them to investigate stopped shipments of the substance, improve information exchange on seizures and stopped shipments and dismantle the networks concerned. The monitoring of international trade under Operation Topaz, which tracked acetic anhydride used in heroin manufacture, continued. However, not all countries had appropriate mechanisms to report seizures. In October, the steering committees of Operations Purple and Topaz launched a new phase, named Project Cohesion, which introduced a regional approach to operational work and time-limited regional activities and provided for the exchange of real-time information, intelligence-gathering and backtracking investigations. Countries in West Asia were urged to develop countertrafficking activities focusing on the substances used in the illicit manufacture of heroin and on acetic anhydride in particular. They were invited to use the mechanism established under Project Cohesion to receive advice and practical assistance in investigations.

With regard to ensuring the availability of drugs for medical purposes, INCB recommended that global stocks of opiate raw materials should be maintained at a level sufficient to cover global demand for about one year, in case of a production shortfall, and to reduce the risk of diversion associated with excessive stocks. It requested producer countries to submit cultivation estimates; to maintain cultivation within the limits of the estimates confirmed by the Board, or to furnish supplementary estimates; and to report the amounts of raw materials produced, as well as the alkaloids obtained from them. The Board welcomed Economic and Social Council resolution 2005/25 (see p. 1347) and requested Governments to promote the rational use of narcotic drugs for medical treatment, including the use of opioid analgesics, in accordance with WHO recommendations. It called on Governments to maintain a balance between the licit supply of and demand for opiate raw materials and to cooperate in preventing the proliferation of sources of their production. Having studied the relative merits of different methods of producing opiate raw materials, INCB invited producing countries to review their production systems and examine their production control measures.

INCB observed that the illicit sale of pharmaceuticals containing internationally controlled narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances through the Internet had increased. Noting that only a limited number of countries had adopted specific measures to prevent such misuse of the Internet, the Board called on Governments: to increase the awareness of law enforcement, regulatory and drug control authorities regarding the need to counteract those activities; identify focal points for activities related to illegal Internet pharmacies; and provide details of legislation and regulations related to such sites and to the use of the mail for shipping controlled drugs. Awareness-raising campaigns to alert the public to the dangers of illegal Internet pharmacies and close cooperative working relationships between the different agencies involved needed to be established at the national level. Increased international cooperation and networking were also required. The Board urged international organizations, particularly the Universal Postal Union, the International Criminal Police Organization (Interpol), the World Customs Organization and UNODC, to confront the problems of illicitly operating Internet pharmacies and the smuggling of controlled drugs by mail and to share their experiences with the Board. Governments should ensure the training of staff and the technical aid required for drug identification and provide information on seizures of drugs smuggled by mail to the countries of destination and international entities, in order to develop concerted international action. Every Government should also ensure that its national legislation provided for the control of all routes of international mail leading into and out of the country.

The INCB report was supplemented by three technical reports: Narcotic Drugs: Estimated World Requirements for 2006; Statistics for 2004 [E/INCB/2005/2]; Psychotropic Substances: Statistics for 2004; Assessments of Annual Medical and Scientific Requirements for Substances in Schedules II, III and IV of the Convention on Psychotropic Substances of 1971 [E/INCB/2005/3]; and Precursors and Chemicals Frequently Used in the Illicit Manufacture of Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances: Report of INCB for 2005 on the Implementation of Article 12 of the UN Convention against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances of 1988 [E/INCB/2005/4].

By decision 2005/251 of 22 July, the Economic and Social Council took note of the INCB report for 2004 [YUN 2004, p. 1237].

World drug situation

In its 2005 report [Sales No. E.06.XI.2], INCB presented a regional analysis of world drug abuse trends and control efforts, so that Governments would be kept aware of situations that might endanger the objectives of international drug control treaties.

Africa

Cannabis remained the most widely grown, trafficked and abused drug in Africa. The region was the second largest producer of cannabis herb (after North America), accounting for 28 per cent of global production. It was abused by over 34 million people and illicitly produced in all subregions. In West and Central Africa, cannabis continued to be cultivated for commercial purposes, and constituted a significant commercial crop in Eastern Africa, especially in the Comoros, Ethiopia, Kenya, Madagascar, Uganda and the United Republic of Tanzania. The largest producers in Southern Africa were (in decreasing order) South Africa, Malawi, Lesotho and Swaziland. More than 40 per cent of the world's cannabis resin was produced in Morocco, which was the source of 80 per cent of the resin abused in Europe, the world's largest market. Illicit trafficking in cannabis resin continued to be a major problem in the Rif area of Morocco, where an eradication campaign was launched by the Government in May.

The African region, particularly Western and Northern Africa, was increasingly used for smuggling cocaine from South America into Europe and North America. There was an increased interdiction of cocaine (shipped from Brazil) in South Africa and on the eastern coast of Africa. Despite the increase in the volume of cocaine seized in Africa, its abuse remained low and was confined mainly to Nigeria, Senegal and South Africa. There was some concern, however, that as cocaine trafficking routes evolved, there would be a spillover effect and abuse would spread.

Although opiate abuse remained limited in Africa, it was becoming a cause for concern, particularly in countries along the Indian Ocean. Heroin interdiction rates remained low in the region, but significant seizures were made in Eastern Africa at the airports of Addis Ababa (Ethiopia), Nairobi (Kenya) and Dar es Salaam and Zanzibar City (United Republic of Tanzania); as countermeasures were taken, traffickers shifted their operations to other African countries, including Malawi, Rwanda, Uganda and Zambia. Heroin abuse had increased in Eastern Africa, particularly in Kenya, Mauritius and the United Republic of Tanzania, and in Rwanda, Somalia and Uganda. In Nigeria, there was growing abuse by injection. In Northern Africa, there were significant levels of heroin abuse in Egypt.

The availability of illicitly manufactured and diverted pharmaceutical products containing narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances in unregulated markets was a major problem. In most countries, a wide range of licit narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances were available without a prescription and on street markets following their diversion from licit channels.

In South Africa, the illicit manufacture of ATS, mainly cathinone, methcathinone, MDMA (Ecstasy) and methamphetamine, continued. Of particular concern was the emergence of abuse of methamphetamine (commonly called "tic") in the Cape Town area. Despite law enforcement efforts, methaqualone (Mandrax) abuse continued unabated. It was smuggled out of India and China, but some of it was also manufactured in South Africa. African countries were increasingly used by traffickers to divert precursor chemicals.

The widespread abuse of khat, a substance not under international control that was cultivated in Eastern Africa, had become a serious threat to reconstruction efforts in Somalia. With regard to regional cooperation, the African Union (AU) assigned to its Economic, Social and Cultural Council, an advisory body established in March, the responsibility of advising it on drug-related matters. The second Ministerial Conference on Drug Control in Africa (Grand Baie, Mauritius, December 2004), the theme of which was "Mainstreaming drug control in socio-economic development into Africa", was attended by experts from 28 AU member States. A regional meeting of the International Drug Enforcement Conference (Abuja, Nigeria, February) formulated a common position on money-laundering, international drug trafficking organizations and precursor chemicals control. The Arab Conference for Protecting Youth from Drug Abuse (Cairo, Egypt, June) formulated the Cairo Action Plan, containing recommendations on enhancing coordination among participating Arab countries in abuse prevention. For the first time in Africa, a subregional workshop on precursor control was held in Eastern Africa (Mombasa, Kenya, July), organized by UNODC, in cooperation with INCB. At the national level, Algeria and South Africa adopted national drug control master plans, while Lesotho prepared a comprehensive programme framework for abuse prevention, and Malawi took initiatives to address drug control issues. The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya enhanced programming and implementation capacities in demand reduction, and Kenya appointed a precursor control steering committee to address inadequate precursor control and to draft appropriate legislation.

In September, INCB sent a mission to Cape Verde, which had emerged as part of a major transit route for consignments of cocaine originating in South America en route to Europe. The Board encouraged the Government to strengthen the interdiction capabilities of its national drug law enforcement agencies and to assess the drug abuse situation. In January, the Board visited Ghana, which it encouraged to update legislation on narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances, draft legislation on precursor chemical control and elaborate abuse prevention and demand reduction programmes. Following an August mission to Lesotho, INCB encouraged the Government to enact precursor control legislation, eradicate cannabis plant cultivation and introduce alternative development programmes. In August, an INCB mission visited Swaziland, where legislation used to control the licit and illicit movements of drugs dated back to the 1920s. The Board observed that a new drug bill was before the Parliament and encouraged the Government to adopt and implement it, as well as measures to control precursor chemicals. INCB urged the Government to take a stand against the legalization of cannabis plant cultivation, strengthen its eradication efforts and introduce alternative development programmes. Also in August, the Board visited Zambia and urged the Government to adopt and implement measures to control precursor chemicals; eradicate the illicit cultivation of cannabis; and introduce alternative development programmes. The Board encouraged the Government to provide drug law enforcement and pharmaceutical regulatory bodies with adequate resources.

Americas

Central America and the Caribbean

Central America and the Caribbean continued to be used as major trans-shipment points for consignments of illicit drugs, mainly cocaine, originating in South America and destined for the United States and Europe. The annual amount of cocaine seized in the region remained high (about 30 tons), with Panama accounting for the largest quantity seized (7 tons). The most significant increase in cocaine seizures was registered in Nicaragua, while seizures increased in Belize, Costa Rica and El Salvador.

The total volume of cannabis seized increased in Central America but declined in the Caribbean. In 2004, the largest total volume of cannabis seized (1,700 tons) was reported by Trinidad and Tobago. Jamaica remained the main producer and exporter of cannabis on a larger scale. Cannabis abuse continued to rise in the region.

To deal with the problem of opium poppy cultivation in Guatemala, the Government implemented a successful eradication programme during 2004, eliminating more than 5.4 million opium poppy plants. Guatemala saw the diversion of pharmaceutical preparations containing narcotic drugs from licit distribution channels for illicit use, and significant quantities of pharmaceutical preparations were smuggled from El Salvador, Honduras and Mexico. Heroin trafficking increased in El Salvador and Guatemala.

In 2004, cases involving MDMA (Ecstasy) from the Netherlands were reported in Costa Rica and the Dominican Republic.

With regard to regional cooperation, the Board welcomed the Meeting on Transnational Criminal Youth Gangs: Characteristics, Importance and Public Policies (Tapachula, Mexico, June), organized by the Inter-American Drug Abuse Control Commission (CICAD) of the Organization of American States. In October 2004, the Caribbean Epidemiology Centre, with UNODC and CICAD support, established drug information networks to guide efforts to reduce illicit drug supply and demand in the Caribbean. At the national level, almost all of the countries in Central America and the Caribbean had designed national plans to deal with the drug problem. However, they experienced difficulties in implementing them, mainly because of lack of human and financial resources. Most countries had no epidemiological studies on drug abuse, and measures for the control of pharmaceutical preparations, including rules regarding their prescription, distribution and sale, needed to be enhanced. The need for control measures had increased as pharmaceuticals, including pseudoephedrine, ATS, phentermine, hydrocodone and oxycodone, were sold over the Internet. In Honduras, the implementation of drug control legislation was hampered by corrupt practices. Also, the National Assembly had yet to adopt legislation to reform the statute covering illegal drugs and to make money-laundering a crime. Costa Rica promulgated a decree aimed at strengthening drug control. The Bahamas launched its first national drug control plan and signed a comprehensive maritime agreement to fight maritime drug trafficking. In Jamaica, the Board was concerned that illegal use of MDMA (Ecstasy) was subject to light penalties and encouraged the Government to include it in the list of drugs covered in the Dangerous Drugs Act.

North America

In the United States, declining abuse of cannabis, cocaine and MDMA (Ecstasy), particularly among adolescents and youth, was counteracted by an increase in the abuse of prescription drugs, in particular painkillers, and an increase in inhalant abuse. Methamphetamine manufacture, trafficking and abuse were on the rise, particularly in rural areas. Some 8 per cent of the population aged 12 and above were current users of illicit drugs; the main drug of abuse was cannabis, followed by prescription drugs and cocaine. Prescription drugs were diverted from domestic distribution channels or obtained from illegal Internet pharmacies. Most of the cocaine and much of the heroin, cannabis and methamphetamine available on the illicit markets in the United States were smuggled into the south-west from Mexico. Despite efforts by the Government to counter illicit drug manufacture and trafficking, Mexico remained the primary transit country for the cocaine and one of the main manufacturers of the heroin, methamphetamine and cannabis found in the United States. The smuggling of drugs over the border between Canada and the United States declined; however, cannabis and methamphetamine continued to be smuggled into the United States, while heroin and cocaine continued to be smuggled into Canada. Trafficking in and use of controlled synthetic drugs became entrenched in the drug culture in Canada, where the illicit market had evolved into a huge profit-making opportunity.

Cannabis remained the most abused drug in all three countries in the region. Its abuse increased in Canada and Mexico but declined in the United States. Domestic production increased in the United States, in part because of large-scale production by criminal groups, while Mexican cannabis was the principal type of foreign-produced cannabis available. Although Canada was not a primary source for cannabis found in the United States, 2 per cent of all cannabis seized on United States borders came through there. In Canada, cannabis plant cultivation continued to spread throughout the country due to the significant demand, particularly among youth.

In the United States, some 2.3 million persons were users of cocaine. In Canada, the annual prevalence of cocaine abuse increased between 1994 and 2004 from 0.7 to 1.9 per cent. The volume of cocaine passing through the corridor of Central America and Mexico to the United States increased, accounting for 92 per cent of the total volume entering the country. Most of the cocaine available on the illicit market in Canada was supplied by commercial trucks passing through the United States.

In the United States, heroin abusers represented 0.1 per cent of the population. The most prevalent types of heroin continued to be Colombian and Mexican. Despite its relatively small share of global opium production (less than 5 per cent), Mexico was the second largest supplier of heroin to the illicit market in the United States. About 60 per cent of the trafficked heroin was smuggled out of Colombia through Mexico, the remainder being manufactured in Mexico itself. While most of the heroin available in Canada continued to originate in South-East and South-West Asia, heroin of Latin American origin was being encountered more frequently.

All three countries in North America experienced an increase in the abuse of pharmaceutical preparations containing narcotic drugs. In Mexico, it was nearly as frequent as cocaine abuse; in Canada, an illegal street market for many prescription drugs had been confirmed; and in the United States, the non-medical use of all major groups of prescription drugs, as well as illegal sale of prescription drugs via the Internet, often through Internet-based pharmacies, had increased sharply.

In the United States, over 3 million persons abused prescription drugs containing psychotropic substances, mostly tranquillizers, stimulants and, to a lesser extent, sedatives. Due to the high prescription level of stimulants used for the treatment of attention deficit disorder, those preparations were also found on the illicit market. In Mexico, the abuse of tranquillizers was higher and growing faster among women. GHB had become a matter of concern in the United States and Canada. In Mexico, the abuse of psychotropic substances was growing. The availability of MDMA (Ecstasy) decreased in the United States, while the demand for it increased in Canada, especially among adolescents and young adults. In the United States, the use of phencyclidine (PCP) and lysergic acid diethylamide (LSD) decreased to a very low level. In Canada, psilocybine, PCP and LSD continued to be available on the illicit market in small quantities.

While methamphetamine abuse among adolescents in the United States declined, its overall increase, particularly in rural areas, remained a matter of concern. The number of methamphetamine laboratories dismantled increased from over 9,000 in 2002 to more than 17,000 in 2004. Illicit drug markets in the United States were increasingly being supplied with methamphetamine manufactured in Mexico. The manufacture and distribution of a form of methamphetamine commonly called “ice” (with a higher purity level) by Mexican criminal groups increased sharply. The illicit manufacture of and trafficking in methamphetamine increased dramatically in Canada.

As to substances not under international control, ketamine abuse was reported in all three countries in North America. In Canada, ketamine was among the more popular drugs introduced in the “rave” subculture and stricter controls over it were implemented in Mexico. Inhalants abused in Mexico and the United States were easily accessible in the form of household and office products. In the United States, one out of 11 teenagers abused over-the-counter cough medications containing dextromethorphan.

The excellent cooperation between the three countries continued. The Canada–United States Cross-Border Crime Forum was the principal bilateral cooperative initiative between the two countries in fighting cross-border crime. Mexico and the United States improved cooperation in law enforcement, and a number of joint operations were conducted by Canada, Mexico and the United States. All three countries were members of the Financial Action Task Force on Money Laundering and of CICAD. As to national action, the United States National Drug Control Strategy included plans to increase drug abuse prevention and treatment efforts, to support drug court programmes, and to address the abuse of prescription drugs. In Canada, five provinces implemented programmes for tracking multiple-copy prescriptions in order to reduce the diversion of drugs at a high risk of being diverted and abused. In April, the Drug Strategy Community Initiatives Fund was launched to provide funds for illicit drug demand reduction and abuse prevention in Canada. Mexico increased the resources set aside for control of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances.

An INCB mission to Mexico in January noted the efforts made in combating illicit drug production, manufacture, trafficking and abuse. However, the Board was concerned that trafficking organizations continued to impede drug control efforts and urged the Government to curb the influence of organized crime and to fight corruption at all levels. With regard to the illicit cultivation of cannabis plant and opium poppy, the Board recommended the adoption of means to prevent its resurgence.

South America

Cannabis continued to be the most abused narcotic drug in South America. The illicit cultivation of cannabis destined mainly for local or regional markets was taking place in most countries, as evidenced by increasing seizures. Paraguay was the principal source of the cannabis resin found in the region. Only 10 per cent of the cannabis cultivated within that country was abused locally; the rest was destined for Argentina, Brazil and Chile.

The level of illicit coca bush cultivation remained significantly lower in 2004 than in the peak year of 2000, although it increased compared with 2003. Intensified eradication and law enforcement efforts by Colombia led to a decrease in illicit coca bush cultivation in that country; however, cultivation increased in others, in particular in Bolivia and Peru.

In 2004, the area under coca bush cultivation in Bolivia, Colombia and Peru increased by 3 per cent (to 158,000 hectares) over 2003 and continued to spread to areas previously not affected. Significant replanting of coca bush was reported in Colombia at the end of 2004. In Peru, the total area under coca leaf cultivation was estimated at 50,300 hectares in 2004, an increase of 14 per cent over 2003. More than 10,000 hectares of coca bush were eradicated in 2004, but opposition to crop eradication was growing. Almost one quarter of the area cultivated with coca bush in Peru was in national parks and other locations not suitable for agriculture. Moreover, in 2005, several local governments issued ordinances legalizing the cultivation of coca bush for traditional purposes, such as chewing and making infusions. In Bolivia, where political and social tensions limited the Government's ability to deal with the increasing coca bush cultivation and the eradication policy was undermined by agreements with coca growers, the area under cultivation increased by 17 per cent to 27,700 hectares in 2004. Illicit coca bush cultivation was reported in Ecuador and Venezuela, near their borders with Colombia, although it was limited. Cocaine manufacture and drug trafficking continued to spread in the region despite intensified interdiction efforts. The bulk of the world's cocaine continued to be manufactured in Colombia, but illicit manufacture also took place in all other countries in the region except Paraguay. Drug traffickers responded to Colombia's intensified interdiction efforts by shifting manufacture to other countries and using new trafficking routes. Although cocaine abuse was a problem in South America, the amounts smuggled into the region were destined mainly for the United States or Europe. Brazil, Ecuador, Suriname and Venezuela were the countries most affected by cocaine trafficking, although Argentina and Chile were experiencing growing transit traffic. Precursor chemicals smuggled in South America continued to be from within the region. Cocaine was the second most abused narcotic drug in South America; however, the extent of abuse varied from country to country.

Illicit cultivation of opium poppy and trafficking in heroin did not diminish in South America. In Colombia in 2004, almost 4,000 hectares were used for opium poppy cultivation, which also continued in Peru and Venezuela. Heroin manufacture took place mainly in Colombia and, to a lesser degree, in Peru; it was mostly destined for the United States. Venezuela was one of the main transit countries for heroin shipments bound for the United States.

While the illicit manufacture of psychotropic substances in South America remained limited, their availability and abuse increased in a number of countries. The diversion and overprescribing of pharmaceuticals containing psychotropic substances continued. In Argentina, Chile and Uruguay, the abuse of sedatives (benzodiazepines) was second after cannabis and the abuse of stimulants (such as femproporex) was similar to or even higher than that of cocaine.

Ketamine was readily available in Peru on the illicit market and therefore abused extensively, despite the fact that officially its sale was restricted to hospitals. Its abuse was also detected in Uruguay.

With regard to regional cooperation, South American countries continued to participate in the multilateral cooperation mechanisms of CICAD for countries in the Americas. CICAD assisted them in preparing reports under the Multilateral Evaluation Mechanism and the development of the Inter-American Observatory on Drugs. It also carried out drug supply reduction and control activities and provided guidance in developing the integrated drug treatment system. Together with UNODC, CICAD was also establishing a drug information network to ensure common standards among countries and comparability of surveys. Regional cooperation included Operation Andes II, a regional tracking initiative for precursors carried out in collaboration with Interpol and the World Customs Organization, and joint activities carried out by Member States (Argentina, Brazil, Paraguay and Uruguay) and associated States (Bolivia and Chile) of the Common Market of the Southern Cone (MERCOSUR). In addition, multilateral and bilateral agreements between States with common geographical traits or shared borders continued to be upheld, and the United States and countries in Europe provided resources for drug control in South America through bilateral and multilateral agreements. At the national level, Argentina approved, in January, the Federal Plan for Integral Prevention of Drug Abuse and Drug Trafficking for 2005-2007. In Ecuador, a new national drug strategy for 2004-2008 and its implementation plan came into effect in 2004. In June, Guyana published a five-year drug control strategy for 2000-2005. Colombia strengthened its efforts in the area of law enforcement. A regional initiative aimed at combating the illicit use of chemicals in cocaine and heroin manufacture continued under Operation Seis Fronteras; it involved Bolivia, Brazil, Colombia, Ecuador, Peru and Venezuela, as well as the United States.

An INCB mission to Paraguay, in April, found that the legislative basis for the control of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances was adequate. Nevertheless, the resources for drug control were insufficient and coordination between the agencies involved was lacking. The Board advised the Government to keep a balanced approach in its drug control policy, ensuring the reduction of both demand and supply of illicit drugs.

Asia

East and South-East Asia

Opiates, followed by ATS, continued to be the main drugs of abuse in East and South-East Asia. Heroin was the most commonly abused drug in the majority of countries, with the exception of Myanmar, where it was opium, and Japan, the Philippines, the Republic of Korea and Thailand, where it was methamphetamine. Heroin was the drug of choice in China (including the Hong Kong and Macao Special Administrative Regions (SARs) of China), Indonesia, Malaysia and Viet Nam. Some countries made progress in preventing opium abuse, particularly the Lao People's Democratic Republic.

In 2005, as a result of continued eradication efforts by Myanmar, the main source of illicit opium in the region, illicit opium poppy cultivation declined to 32,800 hectares, a decrease of 26 per cent compared with 2004. The Lao People's Democratic Republic further reduced illicit opium poppy cultivation from 6,600 hectares in 2004 to 1,800 hectares in 2005 and joined Thailand and Viet Nam as countries that were no longer significant suppliers of opiates on the world's illicit markets. However, it was faced with cannabis plant cultivation and trafficking and was emerging as a transit country for the smuggling of ATS and heroin. In 2004, several countries, such as Indonesia and Malaysia, reported an increase in the volume of opium seized.

The illicit manufacture of ATS continued mainly in China and the border area between China and Myanmar and, to a lesser extent, in Indonesia, Malaysia and the Philippines; many countries reported large seizures of ATS and other seizures of a significant quantity of sedatives and hallucinogens in 2004; Japan seized 310 kilograms of benzodiazepines and Indonesia over 1 million tablets of hallucinogens. Sizeable quantities of MDMA (Ecstasy) continued to be seized in Indonesia and Japan and also in the Hong Kong and Macao SARs of China. Although over half of the methamphetamine smuggled into the Republic of Korea originated in China, the Philippines was increasingly a significant source, and the Lao People's Democratic Republic emerged as a transit country for consignments of ATS originating in Myanmar. Pseudoephedrine and ephedrine continued to be seized in the region. Most countries reported increases in the abuse of methamphetamine and MDMA (Ecstasy).

The illicit cultivation of cannabis plants continued throughout East and South-East Asia, and several countries continued to seize substantial quantities. Indonesia, Japan, Myanmar and the Republic of Korea reported an increase in the volume of cannabis seized for 2004.

With regard to regional cooperation, the signatories of the 1993 memorandum of understanding on drug control between the countries in the Mekong area (Cambodia, China, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Myanmar, Thailand and Viet Nam) adopted, in May, the Siemreap (Cambodia) Declaration, which focused on collaboration in many areas, including: the control of precursor chemicals and ATS; drug abuse treatment and prevention; the development of a package of interventions related to drug abuse and HIV/AIDS; sustainable alternative development; and technical and financial assistance. The second International Association of Southeast Asian Nations (ASEAN) and China Cooperative Operations in Response to Dangerous Drugs (ACCORD) Congress was held in Beijing in October. At the national level, China adopted new laws strengthening control over narcotic drugs, psychotropic substances and precursor chemicals. Japan continued to place high priority on drug control in its national planning. In March, Viet Nam approved a national drug control master plan for the period up to 2010. In December 2004, Cambodia approved a drug control master plan for 2005-2010.

South Asia

Drug trafficking and abuse problems in South Asia continued to be both serious and multifaceted. Owing to its proximity to opium poppy cultivation areas in West Asia and South-East Asia, there continued to be significant trafficking in and abuse of opiates, in particular heroin. In India, despite strict controls, some diversion from licit opium poppy cultivation continued, and the total area under licit opium poppy cultivation decreased in 2004, as a result of self-imposed restrictions by the Government. Some of the diverted opium was abused in India, and some was smuggled into other countries. Large quantities of heroin of West Asian origin were increasingly being seized in India, destined for illicit markets in that country, in Sri Lanka and in other regions, including Europe. Low-quality heroin base known as "brown sugar" continued to be abused in Bangladesh, India, Maldives, Nepal and Sri Lanka. After declining for several years, the volume of heroin seized along the border between India and Pakistan was increasing. There was a shift in drug abuse patterns in India, from inhaling to injecting drugs (mainly heroin and buprenorphine).

The abuse of pharmaceutical preparations containing narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances diverted from licit channels remained one of the main drug control issues in South Asia. India was a major manufacturer of pharmaceuticals, accounting for approximately 10 per cent of global output. Despite strict controls, pharmaceuticals continued to be diverted in India and smuggled into countries in South Asia and other regions. Trafficking in such substances, particularly codeine-based cough syrups, dextropropoxyphene and buprenorphine, in India was a major concern for its neighbouring countries. There was also evidence of pharmaceuticals from India being smuggled into Myanmar, Pakistan (via Dubai) and States members of the Commonwealth of Independent States. Diazepam and nitrazepam were also diverted, to be abused in India or smuggled into other countries. In Bhutan, drug abuse was increasing, including abuse of cannabis and pharmaceutical preparations containing narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances.

India remained the main illicit manufacturer of methaqualone, most of which was smuggled into other countries, primarily South Africa, its main consumer. INCB noted the growing illicit trade in India in the substance commonly called "synthetic heroin", a drug prepared by crushing tablets of phenobarbital, a psychotropic substance in Schedule IV of the 1971 Convention.

Illicit cannabis plant cultivation and cannabis abuse continued in the region. The cannabis plant grew wild in several countries, including India, Sri Lanka, and Nepal; cannabis resin was produced in large quantities in Nepal and was abused locally and smuggled into other countries, primarily India. In Sri Lanka, the total volume of cannabis seized decreased in 2004. In Bangladesh, the decrease in the volume of seizures in 2004 was offset by a significant increase in trafficking in heroin and buprenorphine. According to a national household survey conducted in India, there were approximately 8.7 million cannabis abusers in the country.

With regard to regional cooperation, India and Pakistan, in August, agreed to enter into a memorandum of understanding to intensify mutual cooperation and liaison on drug control issues. Nationally, India imposed strict measures to control the sale of medicines in retail and wholesale establishments. INCB noted that Nepal needed to strengthen drug control legislation, particularly to regulate precursors, a major cause of concern, since the country was situated between China and India, two large precursor manufacturers. In June, Sri Lanka announced that controls would be strengthened at the international airport and its coast guard capabilities extended. Bangladesh expanded the capacity of its main centre for drug abuse treatment. The Board noted that drug abuse treatment facilities in the region remained inadequate and treatment programmes for female addicts were lacking in some countries.

In April, an INCB mission to Bangladesh noted that the Department of Narcotics Control did not receive sufficient resources from the Government and that cooperation between Government agencies involved in drug control was not adequate. The Board encouraged the Government to strengthen its capacity in drug abuse treatment and to conduct a survey on the scope of the drug addiction problem.

West Asia

Afghanistan remained the main producer of illicit opium poppy, accounting for 87 per cent of global production in 2005. Its share of the illicit manufacture of opiates, mainly heroin, increased, as the country continued to be a supplier of illicit morphine and heroin, as well as illicit opiate raw materials. Although the total area under illicit opium poppy cultivation in Afghanistan decreased by 21 per cent, from 131,000 hectares in 2004 to 104,000 in 2005, higher crop yields meant that actual opium production remained at almost the same level. Together, the central and provincial governments of Afghanistan eradicated 5 per cent of illicit poppy crops in 2005; not all provincial governments were committed to eradication efforts, however. According to the Government, the failure to provide alternative livelihoods for opium poppy growers, the security situation and the involvement of provincial officials in drug trafficking were the main reasons for the continuation of illicit opium poppy cultivation in the country. The abuse of drugs, including prescription drugs smuggled into the country, continued to increase. In Pakistan, illicit opium poppy cultivation, while not on the same scale as in Afghanistan, had increased; INCB urged the Government to intensify its eradication efforts. In Lebanon, despite eradication efforts and public information campaigns, illicit cultivation of the cannabis plant and, on a much smaller scale, opium poppy, took place. In several countries in Central Asia, opium poppy was cultivated on a small scale, and ephedra and cannabis plants continued to grow wild. The United Arab Emirates had become a trans-shipment point for heroin consignments destined for Europe from South Asia and South-West Asia. Cannabis, heroin and opium shipments originating in Afghanistan passed through Iran and Pakistan and were then sent overland through Oman and the United Arab Emirates to Europe. An estimated 60 per cent of Afghan opiates passed first through Iran and then Turkey before reaching Europe. Approximately 20 per cent passed through Central Asia, in particular Tajikistan, and 20 per cent was smuggled through Pakistan. Turkmenistan also continued to be used as a transit country. Uzbekistan continued to be an important transit country for consignments destined for Europe; they were smuggled mainly by road and rail through Kyrgyzstan and Tajikistan, as well as directly from Afghanistan. The increased availability of heroin and opium continued to fuel the abuse of narcotic drugs in West Asia and beyond. The southern Caucasus was emerging as an important transit area for trafficking and recent surveys revealed a significant increase in drug abuse in Azerbaijan and Georgia.

Seizure data for countries neighbouring Afghanistan showed an increase in the illicit manufacture of heroin and morphine since the 1990s. Pakistan remained the country with the largest seizures of opiates. However, seizures of heroin decreased significantly, from 6.4 tons in 2003 to 3.5 tons in 2004. Seizures of opiates in Turkey almost tripled, from 5.7 tons in 2003 to 14.7 tons in 2004. In Iran, the country with the largest volume of seized opium, seizures increased to 174 tons in 2004, nearly twice the figure recorded in 2003. The drug abuse situation in Iran worsened; opiates were the main drug of abuse, but crystalline methamphetamine and MDMA (Ecstasy) abuse had risen. In Central Asia, drug abuse increased, especially heroin.

Cannabis remained the main drug of abuse in countries on the Arabian peninsula, many of which continued to be used as transit countries for consignments of cannabis and opiates destined for Europe. Although the volume of drug seizures remained low in the southern Caucasus, drug abuse was increasingly becoming a problem.

While cocaine abuse was not a major issue in West Asia and INCB had no information regarding its illicit manufacture, a large amount of potassium permanganate continued to be imported into Iran.

The abuse of pharmaceuticals, especially benzodiazepines, remained of concern in West Asia. In Israel, a survey indicated that 6.1 per cent of students in secondary schools abused pharmaceuticals, a figure higher than that for cannabis or heroin. Fenetylline (Captagon) continued to be widely abused on the Arabian peninsula. As its licit manufacture had ceased, the substance was manufactured clandestinely, primarily in southern Europe, and trafficked into the Arabian peninsula through the Syrian Arab Republic and Jordan.

Regionally, the fight against trafficking of Afghan opiates remained central to cooperation between countries in West Asia and other countries. At the third annual Afghanistan Development Forum (Kabul, April), the development of legitimate alternative livelihoods in rural areas in Afghanistan was stressed. In 2005, countries in West Asia established a number of bilateral arrangements to combat drug trafficking. Turkey entered into agreements with Bosnia and Herzegovina, Kazakhstan and Kuwait to strengthen efforts against drug trafficking, terrorism and organized crime. In May, Iran and the United Arab Emirates signed a memorandum of understanding to combat drug trafficking. Jordan and the Syrian Arab Republic concluded a security agreement that provided for the redrawing of their common border and resulted in the seizure of large quantities of illicit drugs.

At the national level, Afghanistan continued to strengthen its administrative structures in the area of drug control. Following the establishment of the new Ministry of Counter-Narcotics in late 2004, the Cabinet Sub-Committee on Counter-Narcotics was formed. One of its key tasks in 2005 was the preparation of the alternative livelihood development plan, in which key areas requiring urgent assistance were identified. The Government strengthened its efforts in supply reduction and created the Counter-Narcotics Trust Fund, administered by the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP). The Fund would support legitimate alternative livelihoods for opium poppy growers. Iraq established a national drug control committee and was developing a national drug control plan; the Board welcomed its commitment to fight illicit drug trafficking and other criminal activities.

In September, an INCB mission visited Saudi Arabia. It noted the Government's commitment to drug control, reflected in its adoption of a new national drug control strategy in 2005. However, mechanisms for the collection of data and providing it to the Board needed to be improved.

Afghanistan

In a March report on the situation in Afghanistan and its implications for international peace and security [A/59/744-S/2005/183] (see also p. 397), the Secretary-General noted that the illicit narcotics industry dominated Afghanistan's economy, generating income equivalent to an estimated 60 per cent of the legal gross domestic product; more than 350,000 families (10 per cent of the population) were economically dependent on the poppy economy. Anti-drug activities included the launching, on 16 February, by Afghanistan and the United Kingdom, of the 2005 Counter-Narcotics Implementation Plan, which concentrated on eradication and the creation of alternative livelihoods in the provinces most affected by opium production.

INCB, concerned that opium poppy cultivation and illicit drug trade continued to threaten the establishment of the rule of law and effective governance in Afghanistan, urged the Government to ensure that the situation was remedied. It also urged the international community to renew its efforts to combat opium production in the country and the associated corruption, so that the goals in the national drug control strategy could be achieved within the established time schedule.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 22 July [meeting 36], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs [E/2005/28/Rev.1], adopted resolution 2005/24 without vote [agenda item 14 (d)].

Providing support to Afghanistan with a view to ensuring effective implementation of its Counter-Narcotics Implementation Plan

The Economic and Social Council

Recommends to the General Assembly the adoption of the following draft resolution:

[For text, see General Assembly resolution 60/179 below.]

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December [meeting 64], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/60/511], adopted resolution 60/179 without vote [agenda item 107].

Providing support to Afghanistan with a view to ensuring effective implementation of its Counter-Narcotics Implementation Plan

The General Assembly,

Noting with concern the report of the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime entitled "Afghanistan: Opium Survey 2004", which emphasizes that the cultivation of opium poppy in Afghanistan has increased to an unprecedented level, and stresses the threats to the security and stability of that country, neighbouring regions and the entire world that have emanated from the increased illicit cultivation of opium poppy and production of and trafficking in illicit drugs,

Recognizing the political will and continued commitment of Afghanistan to eliminate opium poppy cultivation by 2013, and welcoming in this context the Counter-Narcotics Implementation Plan of Afghanistan, launched in February 2005, which formalized the establishment of the new counter-narcotics ministry,

Taking note of the Constitution of Afghanistan, in article 7 of which the Government of Afghanistan expresses its strong resolve to fight against the illicit cultivation of opium poppy and the production of and trafficking in opium and other illicit narcotic drugs,

Encouraging the Government of Afghanistan to intensify its efforts to achieve an effective legislative counter-narcotics framework,

Welcoming the establishment by the Government of Afghanistan of a counter-narcotics police force in support of its counter-narcotics campaign, in the context of strengthening the law enforcement regime,

Noting with appreciation the achievements of the Government of Afghanistan during 2004 in implementing law enforcement measures leading to the elimination of thousands of acres of opium poppy cultivation, the interdiction of drug traffickers, the seizure of substantial amounts of illicit drugs, precursors and small arms and munitions and the dismantling of hundreds of clandestine laboratories used for illicit drug production, and noting the commitment of the Government to increasing its efforts substantially in those areas,

Noting the priority given by the Government of Afghanistan to ensuring a credible, targeted and reinforced illicit crop eradication campaign and to working with international partners through the national development budget and the newly established counter-narcotics trust fund in order to facilitate the provision of sustainable alternative livelihoods in targeted areas,

Bearing in mind that the fight against the illicit cultivation of opium poppy and the production of and trafficking in illicit narcotic drugs is a common and shared responsibility to be addressed through international efforts, as recognized by Member States in the Political Declaration adopted by the General Assembly at its twentieth special session,

Recalling the United Nations Millennium Declaration, and the goals contained therein, which focused on economic development, peace and security and the establishment of the required framework for international cooperation to achieve those goals,

Recalling also various other United Nations resolutions and recommendations, including General Assembly resolution 59/161 of 20 December 2004 and the recommendations of the International Narcotics Control Board in its report for 2004, requesting the international community to support the Government of Afghanistan in its fight against the illicit cultivation of opium poppy and trafficking in illicit narcotic drugs,

1. Notes with appreciation the bilateral and multilateral support being provided to Afghanistan by the international community through the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime and other international entities;

2. Commends the Counter-Narcotics Implementation Plan of Afghanistan, which comprises an eight-point strategy that includes:

(a) Building counter-narcotics institutions and provincial structures;

(b) Increasing the awareness of the Afghan population about the problems and threats emanating from the illicit cultivation of opium poppy and the production of and trafficking in illicit narcotic drugs;

(c) Provision of alternative livelihoods and creation of the national development budget and the counter-narcotics trust fund to provide financial support;

(d) Interdiction and elimination of heroin-manufacturing laboratories through the national counter-narcotics police force;

(e) Strengthening legal and judicial institutions;

(f) A credible, targeted and verified eradication campaign;

(g) Demand reduction and treatment of addicts;

(h) Regional cooperation with neighbouring countries aimed at strengthening security belts in the region and countering the threat posed by the illicit cultivation of opium poppy and the production of and trafficking in illicit narcotic drugs;

3. Calls upon the international community to provide the necessary support to the counter-narcotics objectives of the Government of Afghanistan, by continued technical assistance and financial commitment, in particular, to all eight pillars of the Counter-Narcotics Implementation Plan;

4. Encourages all stakeholders to strengthen measures for global demand reduction, thereby enhancing efforts to combat illicit drug production and trafficking;

5. Urges Afghanistan to maintain illicit drug control among its highest priorities, as stipulated in its Constitution and the Counter-Narcotics Implementation Plan, with a view to enhancing its efforts to combat the illicit cultivation of opium poppy, the production of illicit drugs and trafficking in illicit drugs and precursors;

6. Requests the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime to strengthen its efforts to ensure that multilateral support is provided to Afghanistan in line and in coordination with the Counter-Narcotics Implementation Plan.

Europe

Cannabis remained the most commonly abused drug in Europe. The plant was cultivated in several countries, in particular Albania and the Netherlands. Morocco continued to be a major source of cannabis resin, as well as Afghanistan, Pakistan and countries in Central Asia. Large amounts of cannabis resin were smuggled through Portugal. The European School Survey Project on Alcohol and Other Drugs found that the lifetime prevalence of cannabis among secondary school students 15-16 years old had risen by an annual average of almost 25 per cent between 1999 and 2003. In the Czech Republic, 44 per cent of students abused cannabis or cannabis resin.

The volume of cocaine seizures increased, particularly in Western Europe, partly as a result of strengthened law enforcement measures in the Netherlands. Although most of the cocaine smuggled into Europe entered through Spain or the Netherlands, the use of other countries had increased. New trends in cocaine trafficking included a route leading from the Andean subregion through Western Africa to Europe. Colombian trafficking groups were shipping cocaine to Spain through the islands off the coast of Mauritania and Senegal. Increased seizures of cocaine in Europe also reflected its increased abuse. In the Netherlands and Spain, cocaine was the second most commonly reported drug in specialist treatment centres after heroin. The annual prevalence rate for cocaine abuse rose among young persons in Denmark, Germany, Spain and the United Kingdom, as well as in some areas of Austria, Greece, Ireland and Italy.

The illicit demand for heroin was estimated to be about 170 tons, about half of which was abused in Western and Central Europe. Almost all of the heroin encountered on the illicit market in Europe was from Afghanistan. Most of the heroin seizures took place in the United Kingdom, Italy, Germany, the Netherlands, France and the Russian Federation (in that order). The smuggling of Afghan heroin into the Russian Federation increased significantly. Despite the increased availability of heroin in Europe as a whole, its abuse was stable or declining in Western Europe. Italy and the United Kingdom continued to report a high level of abuse. According to UNODC, the annual prevalence for the abuse of opiates in Europe was 0.8 per cent. In individual Eastern European countries, the rate was higher than the average for Europe as a whole. The number of drug abusers in the Russian Federation was as high as 6 million, or 4 per cent of the population.

It was estimated that up to 80 per cent of the MDMA (Ecstasy) abused worldwide was illicitly manufactured in laboratories in European countries. MDMA (Ecstasy) from Europe was smuggled into Australia, Canada, Japan and South Africa. It was the second most commonly abused drug in Europe after cannabis. The main sources of amphetamine found on the illicit markets in Europe were Belgium, the Netherlands and Poland. Bulgaria, Estonia and Lithuania also played an important role in illicit amphetamine manufacture. The illicit manufacture and abuse of methamphetamine remained limited to the Czech Republic and some of the Baltic States. Preparations containing buprenorphine were smuggled into Finland from France and, in 2005, Estonia emerged as a significant source of the buprenorphine preparations found on illicit markets in Finland. Tranquillizers or sedatives were most commonly abused in Poland (17 per cent), followed by Lithuania, France and the Czech Republic.

With regard to regional cooperation, the Council of the European Union (EU), in December 2004, endorsed the European Union Drugs Strategy for 2005-2012, which focused on illicit drug supply and demand reduction, and on international cooperation and research, information and evaluation. In June 2005, the EU Council endorsed the European Union Action Plan on Drugs for 2005-2008, covering the priority areas of the new strategy. In July, the Netherlands and the United States signed an agreement outlining areas for collaboration in drug demand reduction. In May, the EU Council adopted a decision on information exchange, risk assessment and the control of new psychoactive substances.

At the national level, the Drugs Act 2005 entered into force in the United Kingdom in April, giving new powers to drug law enforcement agencies. In September, the Russian Federation adopted a national programme for the prevention of drug abuse and trafficking for 2005-2009. Spain launched an action plan for 2005-2008 as part of the implementation of its national drug control strategy for 2000-2008.

INCB expressed concern over national drug control legislation and administrative mechanisms in Bosnia and Herzegovina, which had turned the country into a safe haven for traffickers. In June, the Board sent a mission to Bulgaria, where the percentage of persons who abused drugs by injection was a cause for serious concern. In order to address the problem of large-scale smuggling of counterfeit Captagon tablets from illicit laboratories in Bulgaria into the Arabian peninsula, INCB urged the Government to initiate a multilateral operation to investigate its trafficking. An INCB mission to the Russian Federation in May encouraged the Government to provide additional resources for drug control and to improve coordination among the drug control bodies. The Board noted with concern the extent of drug abuse in the country and requested the Government to facilitate the systematic collection and analysis of epidemiological data on drug abuse and to ensure the availability of drug dependence treatment.

Oceania

The illicit cultivation and abuse of cannabis continued to constitute serious problems in most countries in Oceania, including Australia, Fiji, Micronesia, New Zealand, Papua New Guinea and Samoa. Cannabis was the drug of choice throughout the region, due to its availability and low price. Cannabis originating in Papua New Guinea was seized in Australia and New Zealand. New Zealand reported a new form of cannabis resin commonly called “ice hash”, which was manufactured from cannabis buds and smoked in pipes. Cannabis was often abused in combination with other drugs.

Both Australia and New Zealand reported increased seizures of cocaine. New Zealand appeared to be used increasingly as a major transit area for illicit drugs destined for Australia and the United States. In Australia, authorities continued to seize heroin in small quantities.

ATS continued to be illicitly manufactured in Oceania. Australia and New Zealand dismantled large numbers of clandestine laboratories and reported an increase in seizures of crystalline methamphetamine, mainly from China or Malaysia. In New Zealand, seizures of ephedrine and pseudoephedrine, precursor chemicals frequently used in the illicit manufacture of methamphetamine, increased. Australia reported that the lifetime prevalence rate for MDMA (Ecstasy) abuse was higher than the rate for all other drugs, except cannabis and methamphetamine. Trafficking in and abuse of MDMA (Ecstasy) became significant problems, in particular in Australia and New Zealand, where substantial quantities were seized. Seizures of ketamine, GHB and gamma-butyrolactone increased in New Zealand, which also reported increased seizures of khat.

Regionally, the Pacific Islands Forum continued to play a central role in promoting regional cooperation. At its annual meeting (Auckland, New Zealand, June) the Regional Security Committee of the Pacific Islands Forum discussed various security issues, including the need to strengthen legislation to prevent illicit drug manufacture and trafficking. At the national level, New Zealand strengthened its precursor control legislation by passing the Misuse of Drugs Amendment Bill in June. New Zealand also launched its Illicit Drug Monitoring System, a database containing information on drug abuse, illicit manufacture and trafficking.

UN action to combat drug abuse

UN Office on Drugs and Crime

The United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime (UNODC) implemented the Organization's drug and crime programmes in an integrated manner, addressing the interrelated issues of drug control, crime prevention and international terrorism in the context of sustainable development and human security. The drug programme continued to be implemented in accordance with General Assembly resolution 45/179 [YUN 1990, p. 874]. The Office served as the central drug control entity responsible for coordinating all UN drug control activities, and as the repository of technical expertise in international drug control for the UN Secretariat. It acted on behalf of the Secretary-General in fulfilling his responsibilities under the terms of international treaties and resolutions relating to drug control, and provided services to the Assembly, the Economic and Social Council, and committees and conferences dealing with drug control matters.

The UNODC Executive Director described the Office's 2005 activities in a report to the Commission on Narcotic Drugs and to the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice [E/CN.7/2006/5-E/CN.15/2006/2]. UNODC promoted the adoption and implementation of the three international drug control conventions and supported INCB in monitoring their implementation. The Office analysed, collected and published data on global drug problems. In 2005, it launched an investigation into the value of illicit drug markets and developed a global illicit drug index, which was presented in its World Drug Report 2005 [Sales No. E.05.XI.10]. In collaboration with Member States, UN agencies and national organizations, UNODC facilitated policymaking on drugs, suggested strategic directions and mobilized resources. It also delivered knowledge-based expertise to strengthen Member States' capacity to prevent and reduce drugs and crime. Technical assistance was crucial in reaching those goals.

In the area of illicit crop monitoring and eradication, UNODC surveys provided Governments and the donor community with data for the planning and design of alternative livelihoods and drug law enforcement assistance programmes. In 2005, surveys were conducted in Afghanistan, Bolivia, Colombia, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Morocco, Myanmar and Peru. New coca surveys were launched in Ecuador and Venezuela, a price monitoring database was developed for Latin America and significant improvements were introduced in the use of remote sensing for illicit crop surveying. UNODC hosted an expert group meeting in December to review the thematic evaluation of alternative development and identify options for future activities. As part of its assistance to efforts to eliminate drug crops in Afghanistan, UNODC established a database on alternative livelihood projects and areas of investment to support local planning of alternative livelihoods. In Peru, the Office worked with over 6,000 families previously dependent on coca bush cultivation and assisted farmers' organizations in obtaining fair trade or organic certification for coffee and cacao crops. In Colombia, it expanded its alternative development programme and worked with the national forest warden family programme in the recovery of ecosystems affected by illicit economies. In the Lao People's Democratic Republic, support was provided to the Government in its efforts to eliminate opium poppy cultivation through community-based alternative development and the treatment and rehabilitation of opium addicts. During the year, UNODC published Coca Cultivation in the Andean Region: a Survey of Bolivia, Colombia and Peru; Afghanistan: Opium Survey 2005; and Morocco: Cannabis Survey 2004.

With regard to drug abuse prevention, UNODC continued to disseminate good practices through its Global Youth Network against Drug Abuse. It organized the regional forum for Central Asian mass media leaders (Almaty, Kazakhstan, 14 June), an initiative for drug abuse prevention with the help of mass media, civil society and non-governmental organizations. Pilot activities on drug abuse prevention targeting street children were undertaken, and 40 journalists were trained in the use of modern communication methodologies for advocating illicit drug supply and demand reduction. UNODC implemented a locally sustained evidence-based treatment and rehabilitation plan, building on its treatment and rehabilitation initiatives and networks in Africa, Central America, Central Asia and South-East Asia, as well as in the Russian Federation and its neighbouring countries.

In the area of data collection and drug abuse epidemiology, the Office, through the Global Assessment Programme on Drug Abuse, assisted 51 countries in training, situation analyses and network establishment.

UNODC supported the UN Reference Group on HIV/AIDS Prevention and Care among Injecting Drug Users in Developing and Transitional Countries. In 2005, it organized several consultative meetings on HIV/AIDS and undertook projects in cooperation with WHO and the Joint United Nations Programme on HIV/AIDS (UNAIDS) in Africa and the Middle East.

UNODC contributed to enhancing national capacity for drug testing and the quality of scientific support provided to national criminal justice systems and health services. It also supported member States of ASEAN and ACCORD through improving forensic capability in the profiling of ATS and their precursors. The Office focused on areas requiring further work, especially relating to drug abuse and implementation of legislative measures for international cooperation. It convened a workshop for experts (Vienna, 31 October–2 November) on measuring progress in drug demand reduction in relation to the 1998 twentieth special session of the General Assembly [YUN 1998, p. 1135].

UNODC supported health-care providers in five Eastern African countries with training on guidelines for estimating drug requirements. To counter the increasing problems of drug trafficking into and through the Persian Gulf area, UNODC and the United Arab Emirates cooperated in drug control coordination, training and policy development in that country and its neighbouring countries. In Cape Verde, a law enforcement initiative on promoting drug control and justice and countering money-laundering and organized crime was launched. In Asia, UNODC cooperation with ASEAN in drug control was strengthened with the second International ASEAN/ACCORD Congress (Beijing, October) and the renewed commitment to make ASEAN member States free of illicit drugs. In Central America, a partnership was forged with CICAD in the context of the subregional project on drug information systems, involving Argentina, Bolivia, Chile, Ecuador, Peru and Uruguay, as well as training for law practitioners.

In Central Asia and Afghanistan, UNODC and the World Bank cooperated under a joint action plan and shared information on the impact of the Afghan drug situation on neighbouring countries.

Administrative and budgetary matters

In a January report [E/CN.7/2005/8], the Executive Director presented to the Commission on Narcotic Drugs a consolidated outline of all UNODC activities planned for 2006-2007 and the resources required for their implementation. The 2006-2007 proposed budget for the United Nations Drug Control Programme (UNDCP) Fund totalled $194.7 million, an increase of $7.3 million (4 per cent), compared with the 2004-2005 budget. It was expected that the increase would be covered by voluntary resources, while funding from the UN regular budget would grow by only 1 per cent over the 2004-2005 biennium.

The Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ), in a March report [E/CN.7/2005/9], called on UNODC to examine which of its programme activities could be duplicative of programmes carried out by other UN entities and to ascertain the status of donor pledges so as to obtain more accurate information on support expected.

On 11 March [E/2005/28/Rev.1 (res. 48/13)], the Commission considered that the proposed outline and budget totalling $194.7 million provided a basis for the submission of the proposed initial 2006-2007 budget. Also on 11 March [res. 48/3], the Commission requested the Executive Director to broaden, in cooperation with Member States, the donor base; increase voluntary contributions to the UNDCP Fund; and monitor the ratio between the programme and the support budgets. It recommended that a sufficient share of the UN regular budget should be allocated to UNODC, and requested UNODC to examine whether its programme activities were duplicative of programmes carried out by other UN entities and to avoid such duplication. The Executive Director was asked to keep Member States informed on the use of general-purpose funds, to make proposals to donors, in accordance with the guidelines for the use of those funds, and to report in 2006 on progress made in securing assured and predictable voluntary funding.

The Executive Director, in a September report on the consolidated budget for the 2006-2007 biennium for UNODC [E/CN.7/2005/12 & Add.1], stated that the final 2004-2005 budget for UNDCP amounted to $170 million, representing a decrease of $17.4 million, or 9.3 per cent, over the initial budget. The initial 2006-2007 budget amounted to $182.4 million, reflecting an increase of $12.3 million, or 7.2 per cent, over the final 2004-2005 budget. In its financial overview, the report stated that, in the 2004-2005 biennium, special-purpose income for the Fund was stable at $128 million and programme expenditure increased by $21 million (20 per cent), from $104 million in 2002-2003 to $125 million. Owing to improved programme implementation, a further $14 million increase (12 per cent) was projected for 2006-2007 over 2004-2005. Core fund income was projected to decrease by $5 million (15 per cent), from $33.6 million in 2004-2005 to $28.6 million in 2006-2007. Core fund expenditure was also budgeted to decrease by $6.6 million (19 per cent), from $35.6 million in 2004-2005 to $29 million in 2006-2007.

In a November report [E/CN.7/2005/13], ACABQ commented on the consolidated budget outline for UNODC for 2004-2007.

The Commission on Narcotic Drugs [E/2005/28/Rev.1 (res. 48/14)] approved an appropriation of $41 million for the infrastructure for the 2004-2005 biennium funded under the UNDCP Fund for programme support and management and administration and an appropriation of $14.8 million for the final core programme budget; it also endorsed the final resource allocation for technical cooperation activities in the amount of $109.7 million for that biennium. The Commission approved an appropriation of $38.4 million for the initial infrastructure for the 2006-2007 biennium for programme support and management and administration and an appropriation of $16.7 million for the initial core programme budget. It authorized the Executive Director to redeploy resources between appropriation lines in the support and core budgets up to a maximum of 5 per cent of the appropriation to which the resources were redeployed. The Commission endorsed the initial resource allocation for technical cooperation activities in the amount of $122.2 million. It also endorsed the programme and budget strategy for 2006-2007 and noted that implementation of the budget and additional priority programmes was subject to the availability of funding. The Commission urged UNODC to develop, in consultation with Member States, an overarching strategy, taking into account clearly defined objectives, improved benchmarks and performance indicators that would measure the impact of the Office's work. The Secretariat was asked to present a report on the matter in 2006.

Commission on Narcotic Drugs

The Commission on Narcotic Drugs, at its forty-eighth session, (Vienna, 7-11 March), recommended four resolutions and two decisions for adoption by the Economic and Social Council and one resolution to be recommended by the Council to the General Assembly for adoption. It also adopted thirteen resolutions, which it brought to the attention of the Council. It held a reconvened forty-eighth session on 7 and 8 December, also in Vienna, at which it adopted a resolution on the 2004-2005 final budget and the initial budget for 2006-2007 for the UNDCP Fund (see above) and brought it to the Council's attention.

Following the closure of its reconvened forty-eighth session on 8 December, the Commission opened its forty-ninth session to elect the new chairman and other bureau members.

By decision 2005/250 of 22 July, the Council took note of the Commission's report on its forty-eighth session [E/2005/28/Rev.1] and approved the provisional agenda and documentation for the forty-ninth (2006) session, on the understanding that intersessional meetings would be held in Vienna, at no additional cost, to finalize the items to be included in the provisional agenda and the documentation requirements for the forty-ninth session.

Drug demand and abuse reduction

The Commission on Narcotic Drugs had before it a January Secretariat [E/CN.7/2005/3] report that provided an overview of trends in drug abuse for the period 1998-2003, based on information received from Member States, in response to the annual reports questionnaire. Analysis of the responses indicated the following trends: cannabis abuse increased in most of Asia, Africa and Europe, while remaining stable elsewhere; abuse of opioids decreased in Europe and Oceania, increased in most of Asia and remained stable in North America; cocaine abuse was stable in the Americas, although still widespread, and was increasing and becoming problematic in Europe; abuse of ATS had increased in Asia and Europe and was stable in America and Oceania. The report also addressed the question of drug abuse treatment demand, basing its analysis on data provided by States between 2001 and 2003. The major issues were: opioid and cocaine abuse accounted for the majority of cases involving treatment, but the abuse of ATS and cannabis was regarded increasingly often as the primary reason for treatment; the mean age of people requiring treatment varied between 27 and 29, but demand for treatment by young cannabis users under 20 was increasing in many regions; men accounted for the majority of users and of seekers of treatment in all regions and, in many regions, women experienced difficulties in utilizing specialized treatment services; gender differences were smaller with regard to ATS abuse and larger with regard to cannabis and opioids; and, overall, there was a lack of standardized treatment data. As requested by the Commission in a 2004 resolution [YUN 2004, p. 1248], the report reviewed UNODC activities to improve the global information base on substance abuse in collaboration with other international agencies and expert bodies.

On 11 March [E/2005/28/Rev.1 (res. 48/6)], the Commission called on Member States to provide additional reporting and analysis on women-specific data relating to the use of illicit substances and access to appropriate treatment services; consider implementing broadly based prevention and treatment programmes for young girls and women; and give priority to providing both treatment for pregnant women who used illicit drugs and post-natal support services for mothers and children. It urged States to review barriers to treatment access by women and work towards their elimination, and requested UNODC to assist States in the elimination of such barriers by disseminating examples of programmes and policies that constituted good practice. The Commission requested UNODC to ensure that gender issues were given appropriate attention in future reporting on the world situation with regard to drug abuse.

Also on 11 March [res. 48/10], the Commission encouraged the international community to support developing countries in preventing drug abuse and treating and rehabilitating drug users, and to support producer, transit and consumer countries in their efforts to implement abuse prevention programmes, with an emphasis on children and adolescents. It encouraged Member States to share their experience with demand reduction programmes; strengthen the implementation of drug abuse prevention policies; and continue demand reduction programmes, paying attention to early intervention, rehabilitation and social reintegration, in order to prevent the transmission of HIV/AIDS and other diseases associated with drug abuse.

On the same date [res. 48/7], the Commission invited Member States to specify the skills and competencies needed to respond effectively to drug abuse and to assess the skills of personnel engaged in doing so. It recommended that Member States consider creating strategies to: recruit, support and retain workers with key skills; build the capacity and willingness of other relevant professional groups to respond effectively to people affected by drug abuse; and disseminate best practices and relevant research initiatives.

Also on 11 March [res. 48/4], the Commission urged Member States to monitor and update their policies for abuse prevention and to promote awareness among youth of the social and psychological problems that could result from drug abuse. Member States were also encouraged to promote lifestyles that were free from the use of illicit drugs.

HIV/AIDS and other blood-borne viruses

On 11 March [E/2005/28/Rev.1 (res. 48/12)], the Commission called on Member States to provide treatment, health care and social services for drug users living with HIV/AIDS and other blood-borne diseases and to strengthen advocacy programmes aimed at curbing prejudice against them. It called on Member States to: incorporate substance abuse prevention, treatment and health care into their national drug control strategies in order to reduce the spread of HIV/AIDS and other blood-borne diseases and drug abuse; and encourage linkages between national HIV/AIDS strategies and drug control strategies. They were also encouraged to incorporate prevention and treatment measures in relation to HIV/AIDS and other blood-borne diseases into their socio-economic development programmes, especially programmes designed to enhance the empowerment of women and child welfare, and to ensure that substance abuse treatment was accessible and affordable to drug users living with HIV/AIDS and other blood-borne diseases, and to eliminate barriers to access for drug users in need of HIV/AIDS care. The Commission called on UNODC and other entities involved in demand reduction and public awareness campaigns to design and implement their programmes in a sustainable manner, and requested UNODC to facilitate, in coordination with UNAIDS and other relevant UN entities, the collection and dissemination of information on the relationship between HIV/AIDS and drug abuse. The UNODC Executive Director was requested to report in 2007.

Drug control and related crime prevention assistance

In response to Economic and Social Council resolution 2004/39 [YUN 2004, p. 1249] and 2004/25 [ibid., p. 1111], the UNODC Executive Director submitted to the Commission on Narcotic Drugs a January report [E/CN.7/2005/10] on drug control and related crime prevention assistance for countries emerging from conflict. He described the nature and extent of UNODC projects being implemented in those countries and reviewed ongoing debates within the UN system on post-conflict restructuring and peacebuilding and UNODC's role therein. Technical assistance provided by UNODC increasingly recognized the importance of the links between issues related to drug control and trafficking, organized crime, corrupt practices and, possibly, terrorist activity in post-conflict areas. It therefore provided support in developing drug control and related crime strategies, including legal assistance, training and capacity-building, policy development, justice reform and HIV/AIDS prevention. A key challenge in many post-conflict countries was that State structures were not sufficiently developed to implement effective drug control plans or strategies. Therefore, an initial step was to build greater capacity within the State itself. An internal challenge for UNODC was to ensure that issues related to drug control, crime prevention and criminal justice were integrated into assistance programmes. The Office had therefore designed a programme of activities for Iraq and one for Afghanistan, aimed at capacity-building in the criminal justice system. Resources to provide for immediate assistance (advice, training and basic equipment) would facilitate work in post-conflict environments and enable UNODC to react to the needs of countries in transition, including those emerging from conflict. It was suggested that the Commission might provide guidance to UNODC by discussing how its position in the UN system as a specialized body dealing with drugs and crime could best be reflected in its operational activities in countries emerging from conflict. The Commission might also wish to urge States to increase their support for the work of the Office in such countries.

Illicit cultivation, manufacture and trafficking

On 22 July [meeting 36], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs [E/2005/28/Rev.1], adopted resolution 2005/27 without vote [agenda item 14 (d)].

International assistance to States affected by the transit of illicit drugs

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolutions 2001/16 of 24 July 2001, 2002/21 of 24 July 2002 and 2003/34 of 22 July 2003,

Recalling also the Political Declaration adopted by the General Assembly at its twentieth special session, the Action Plan for the Implementation of the Declaration on the Guiding Principles of Drug Demand Reduction and the measures to enhance international cooperation to counter the world drug problem,

Taking note of the third biennial report of the Executive Director of the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime on the implementation of the outcome of the twentieth special session of the General Assembly and other relevant reports submitted to the Commission on Narcotic Drugs at its forty-eighth session, including the report on the world situation with regard to drug trafficking and the report on the world situation with regard to drug abuse,

Bearing in mind that all States are affected by the devastating consequences of drug abuse and trafficking in illicit drugs,

Taking into account the multifaceted challenges faced by States situated along international trafficking routes and the effects of trafficking in illicit drugs, including related crime and drug abuse, resulting from the transit of drugs through the territory of transit States,

Considering that a large number of transit States are developing countries or countries with economies in transition, which need international assistance to support their efforts to prevent and suppress illicit drug trafficking and reduce illicit drug demand,

Reiterating the principle of shared responsibility and the need for all States to promote and implement the actions necessary to counter the world drug problem in all its aspects,

1. Reaffirms its commitment to promoting coordinated drug control strategies and unified responses to drug trafficking, and, in that context, encourages the development, effective implementation and further strengthening of measures for the prevention and suppression of illicit drug trafficking and the reduction of illicit drug demand in transit States, as well as cooperation in areas such as border control, mutual legal assistance, law enforcement and exchange of information between transit States, countries of destination and countries of origin;

2. Welcomes the fact that the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime has led the follow-up to the Paris Pact initiative that emerged from the Paris Statement, which was issued at the end of the Conference on Drug Routes from Central Asia to Europe, held in Paris on 21 and 22 May 2003, and encourages the Office to develop similar strategies in other regions for countries affected by the transit of illicit drugs through their territory;

3. Calls upon Member States and the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime, subject to the availability of voluntary funds, which might be either from general-purpose funds, in accordance with the guidelines for the use of general-purpose funds adopted by the Commission on Narcotic Drugs, or from earmarked funds, to further strengthen such initiatives by providing assistance and technical support to States affected by the transit of illicit drugs, in particular developing countries, as well as countries with economies in transition, that are in need of such assistance and support;

4. Stresses the need to integrate projects, where appropriate, for illicit drug demand reduction and to strengthen treatment and rehabilitation services for drug abusers in the programmes for international assistance to those transit States which are affected by drug abuse as a result of the transit of illicit drugs through their territory, to enable them to deal effectively with the problem;

5. Urges international financial institutions and other potential donors to provide financial assistance to States affected by the transit of illicit drugs through their territory, including for empowering and building the capacity of locally available human resources, so that those States may intensify their efforts to combat drug trafficking and drug abuse and deal with their consequences;

6. Requests the Executive Director of the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime to report to the Commission on Narcotic Drugs at its forty-ninth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Secretariat report. A report by the Secretariat [E/CN.7/2006/3] described global trends in illicit drug crop cultivation and the production of plant-based drugs during 2004-2005 and global and regional trends in illicit drug trafficking up to 2004. The trafficking trends described in the report were mainly based on drug seizures data. Information on cultivation and production was drawn from UNODC's crop monitoring surveys, and the primary sources of information on seizures were the replies submitted by Governments to the annual reports questionnaire for 2004 and previous years; other sources included reports on significant drug seizures and other reports received by UNODC or submitted to the Commission on Narcotic Drugs and its subsidiary bodies.

In 2005, the area under illicit poppy cultivation in Afghanistan declined by 21 per cent. However, because of good weather, opium production fell only slightly. In South-East Asia, cultivation continued to decline in both the Lao People's Democratic Republic and Myanmar, resulting in a fall in potential heroin manufacture to 467 tons. In the Andean countries, illicit coca bush cultivation increased in 2004, after three consecutive years of declines. Potential cocaine production was estimated at 687 tons in 2004, a 2 per cent increase over 2003.

Increased seizures of all drugs, except ATS, took place in 2004. Global seizures of Ecstasy-type substances increased by 77 per cent, however. Record-high volumes of both heroin (59 tons) and cocaine (578 tons) were seized. Global interdiction of cannabis herb rose by 7 per cent and that of cannabis resin by 6 per cent.

Internet drug sales

On 11 March [E/2005/28/Rev.1 (res. 48/5)], the Commission on Narcotic Drugs, expressing concern at the growing tendency of criminal groups to use modern technologies in their activities, urged Member States to cooperate in enhancing the effectiveness of law enforcement action in relation to the use of the Internet to combat drug-related crime, and to use modern law enforcement techniques to prevent drug-related crime through the Internet. It encouraged States to establish joint teams to identify illegal drug-related Internet sites and to strengthen cooperation among law enforcement agencies at the national and international levels. Member States with the appropriate expertise were invited to assist other States in planning and implementing training programmes designed to share expertise in preventing the use of the Internet to commit drug-related crime.

Alternative development

On 11 March [E/2005/28/Rev.1 (res. 48/9)], the Commission on Narcotic Drugs called on Member States and international development organizations to take into consideration the negative impact of illicit drug crop cultivation on development efforts, social and political stability and security and to integrate drug issues into their work. They were urged to foster a strong political commitment to alternative development programmes, including preventive alternative development, and to strengthen partnerships with the private sector and civil society. The Commission called for a comprehensive approach, integrating alternative development programmes into wider economic and social development programmes, to include: environmental conservation; access to financial mechanisms and micro-credit; access to land ownership; and capacity-building of local communities, institutions and authorities. States and the international community were called upon to promote a favourable economic environment and to provide access to their markets for products of alternative development programmes. The Commission reiterated that, in formulating and implementing drug control strategies, Member States and UN entities should ensure that measures of law enforcement, interdiction, eradication and alternative development were applied in a balanced manner and that there was coordination between the institutions involved. It urged States to review their policies and strategies in the light of the recent thematic evaluation of alternative development, and to share their experience with alternative development and illicit crop eradication. The Commission urged international financial institutions and other donors to provide financial assistance to States that were adopting and implementing measures to eradicate illicit drug crops, and called on UNODC to strengthen its capacity in alternative development. The Executive Director was asked to report in 2006. It decided to devote part of a future session of the Commission to alternative development.

Regional cooperation

In a December report [E/CN.7/2006/4], the Secretariat reviewed action taken by subsidiary bodies of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs in 2005. Following a review of drug trafficking trends and regional and subregional cooperation, each subsidiary body addressed drug law enforcement issues of priority in its region and made recommendations. The fortieth session of the Subcommission on Illicit Drug Traffic and Related Matters in the Near and Middle East (Baku, Azerbaijan, 12-16 September) [UNODC/SUBCOM/2005/5] considered strengthening border controls; countering money-laundering and controlling non-institutional financial and value transfer arrangements; and measures taken to counteract new trends in the use of technology by drug trafficking and organized criminal groups. It recommended to the Commission on Narcotic Drugs a draft resolution on the Baku Accord on Regional Cooperation against Illicit Drugs and Related Matters: a Vision for the Twenty-first Century, for adoption by the Economic and Social Council. The fifteenth meeting of Heads of National Drug Law Enforcement Agencies (HONLEA), Africa (Ouagadougou, Burkina Faso, 29 March–1 April) [UNODC/HONLAF/2005/5] considered the impact on African States of the transit traffic in illicit drugs; the underlying threat of illegal cannabis production in Africa; and the protection of witnesses. The fifteenth meeting of HONLEA, Latin America and the Caribbean (Santa Marta, Colombia, 17-21 October) [UNODC/HONLAC/2005/5] examined drug trafficking trends and illicit drug distribution networks: law enforcement countermeasures; links between drug trafficking and other forms of organized crime; and measures to counteract new trends in the use of technology by groups engaged in drug trafficking and organized crime. The twenty-ninth meeting of HONLEA, Asia and the Pacific (Hanoi, Viet Nam, 7-11 November) [UNODC/HONLAP/2005/5] considered regional countermeasures against heroin trafficking; measures to counteract new trends in the use of technology by drug trafficking and related organized criminal groups; responses to the threat posed by the manufacture of ATS within the region; and good practice procedures in law enforcement processing of drug abusers with HIV/AIDS.

A February report by the Secretariat [E/CN.7/2005/5 & Add.1] described action taken at the sixth meeting of HONLEA, Europe (Vienna, Austria, 7-11 February) [UNODC/HONEURO/2005/5]. The meeting considered illicit heroin in Europe: current trafficking trends, modus operandi and criminal organizations; reviewing controls over sea container traffic; the cocaine threat in Europe; and witness protection. It recommended to the Commission a draft resolution on the frequency of meetings of HONLEA, Europe, for adoption by the Council.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 22 July [meeting 36], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs [E/2005/28/Rev.1], adopted resolution 2005/28 without vote [agenda item 14 (d)].

Frequency of meetings of Heads of National Drug Law Enforcement Agencies, Europe

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolutions 53/115 of 9 December 1998, 54/132 of 17 December 1999, 55/65 of 4 December 2000, 56/124 of 19 December 2001, 57/174 of 18 December 2002, 58/141 of 22 December 2003 and 59/163 of 20 December 2004, in which the Assembly stressed the importance of the meetings of heads of national drug law enforcement agencies in all regions of the world, and of the Subcommission on Illicit Drug Traffic and Related Matters in the Near and Middle East of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs, and encouraged them to continue to contribute to the strengthening of regional and international cooperation, taking into account the outcome of the twentieth special session of the Assembly,

Recalling also that, in its resolution 1990/30 of 24 May 1990, it decided to establish a Meeting of Heads of National Drug Law Enforcement Agencies, European Region, with the status of a subsidiary organ of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs,

Recalling further its resolution 1992/28 of 30 July 1992, entitled "Improvement of the functioning of the subsidiary bodies of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs", in which it requested the Commission to examine further, on a regular basis, the functioning of its subsidiary bodies,

Recalling its resolution 1993/36 of 27 July 1993, entitled "Frequency of and arrangements for meetings of Heads of National Drug Law Enforcement Agencies, Europe", in which it invited the Executive Director of the United Nations International Drug Control Programme to convene the Third Meeting of Heads of National Drug Law Enforcement Agencies, Europe, in 1995, and thereafter to convene such meetings every three years,

Alarmed at the serious and growing threat posed by organized criminal groups involved in drug trafficking, money-laundering and various other forms of organized crime and their potential and, in some cases, actual links with terrorist groups,

Convinced that further action is required to strengthen cooperation and coordination between the members of Heads of National Drug Law Enforcement Agencies, Europe, in order to effectively tackle drug trafficking within the region,

Also convinced that it is essential for the heads of all national drug law enforcement agencies in Europe to meet regularly to discuss trends in the illicit traffic in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances and action taken to combat it, Invites the Executive Director of the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime to convene the Seventh Meeting of Heads of National Drug Law Enforcement Agencies, Europe, in 2007 and thereafter to convene such meetings every two years under the auspices of the Office.

Strengthening UN mechanisms

The Commission on Narcotic Drugs had before it a report by the Executive Director on strengthening UNODC and the role of the Commission [E/CN.7/2005/7]. The report, prepared in response to a 2004 Commission resolution [YUN 2004, p. 1254], described action taken to facilitate dialogue between Member States and UNDCP; operations and management; and UNDCP funding.

On 11 March [E/2005/28/Rev.1 (res. 48/2)], the Commission encouraged the process of UNODC reform, designed to create more effective and efficient organizational practices, and requested the Office to maintain a culture of continuous improvement in management practices. It asserted that the strength of UNODC continued to stem from staff of the highest competence and integrity, representing wide geographical distribution and gender balance, and requested the Executive Director to ensure that recruitment, selection and appraisal systems reflected that. It stressed that the effective functioning of UNODC country and regional offices depended on, among other things, their receiving the necessary administrative and managerial support and requested the Executive Director to ensure that such support was given. The Commission encouraged the Executive Director to implement the recommendations of the Independent Evaluation Unit and asked him to ensure that evaluation became an integral part of the design, monitoring and implementation of all UNODC projects. It welcomed the establishment of the Strategic Planning Unit in UNODC; encouraged the ongoing review of financial management; and supported the efforts of the Executive Director to ensure that issues relating to the world drug problem became an integral part of the sustainable development agenda. The Executive Director was requested to report in 2006.

Chapter XV

Statistics

The United Nations continued its statistical work programme in 2005, mainly through the activities of the Statistical Commission and the United Nations Statistics Division. In March, the Statistical Commission recommended to the Economic and Social Council the adoption of a draft resolution launching the 2010 World Population and Housing Census Programme; the Council adopted the resolution in July. The Commission also endorsed the 2006-2007 work programme for the Statistics Division, and approved the Commission's multi-year programme of work for 2005-2008.

The Commission reviewed the work of groups of countries and international organizations in various areas of economic, social, demographic and environment statistics and made specific recommendations and suggestions.

Work of Statistical Commission

The Statistical Commission, in accordance with Economic and Social Council decision 2004/236 [YUN 2004, p. 1255], held its thirty-sixth session in New York from 1 to 4 March [E/2005/24]. Among other actions, the Commission: recommended to the Council a draft resolution launching the 2010 World Population and Housing Census Programme (see p. 1372) and requested the Statistics Division to act as the umbrella organization for setting standards, providing technical expertise and training and setting priorities; requested the Statistics Division to revise and update the Principles and Recommendations for Population and Housing Censuses; endorsed the creation of a Committee on Environmental-Economic Accounting; recommended the creation of an intersecretariat working group on service statistics; and endorsed the recommendations of the Intersecretariat Working Group on National Accounts (ISWGNA) for enhancing the implementation of the System of National Accounts, 1993 (1993 SNA) [YUN 1993, p. 1112] and noted that the Statistics Division would take the lead in devising a strategy to address the impediments to implementing the 1993 SNA.

The Commission supported the proposed strategic focus for the technical cooperation activities of the Statistics Division; welcomed the start of data collection in the context of the International Comparison Programme (ICP) and the increase in participating countries; noted the progress in preparing the United Nations Handbook on Poverty Statistics; and welcomed the efforts of the Statistics Division to keep the revision of the International Standard Industrial Classification of All Economic Activities (ISIC) on schedule. It noted the work carried out by the Inter-Agency Expert Group on Millennium Development Goal Indicators; welcomed the efforts of the World Health Organization (WHO) to address the concerns expressed by the Commission at its thirty-fourth [YUN 2003, p. 1293] and thirty-fifth [YUN 2004, p. 1259] sessions; and reaffirmed the need for a better and more effective involvement of the international community of official statisticians at all stages of the development of health statistics. It also encouraged the Delhi Group on Informal Sector Statistics to continue to develop clearer definitions for producing data on the informal sector and to measure its contribution to gross domestic product and employment. The Commission endorsed the 2006-2007 Statistics Division work programme, and approved its own multi-year programme of work for 2005-2008.

On 22 July (decision 2005/244), the Council took note of the Commission's report on its thirty-sixth session [E/2005/24], decided that the thirty-seventh session should be held in New York from 7 to 10 March 2006 and approved the provisional agenda and documentation for that session.

National accounts

In response to a 2004 Statistical Commission request [YUN 2004, p. 1256], the Secretary-General submitted the ISWGNA report [E/CN.3/2005/4] on progress made in updating the 1993 SNA [YUN 1993, p. 1112]. The report also described 1993 SNA implementation and addressed the Commission's 2004 request [YUN 2004, p. 1256] for an assessment of the factors impeding implementation in developing countries. ISWGNA provided information on the progress made on some of the 44 issues considered by the Advisory Expert Group on National Accounts in 2004 [ibid.], including balance of payments and public finance matters. It also discussed action taken to respond to the Statistical Commission's emphasis on transparency and broad involvement in the update programme [ibid.], which included the creation of the 1993 SNA website. ISWGNA also reviewed progress in implementing the 1993 SNA, including the results of a data availability analysis that reflected an improvement in both reporting on and implementation of the 1993 SNA in Member States. As requested by the Statistical Commission in 2004 [ibid.], the Statistics Division sent a questionnaire to all Member States and territories to enable it to determine the factors impeding implementation of the 1993 SNA. The survey revealed that the main factors impeding implementation were data inadequacy, lack of statistical training and inadequate staff resources, particularly in Africa. ISWGNA drew four main recommendations from the survey for the Commission's consideration: developing countries, particularly in Africa, might wish to increase the staffing of their national accounts departments; a study could be carried out among Member States on sharing human resources management experiences; another to determine best practices in operating domestic statistical training programmes; and a further one on data-collection best practices and strategies.

In March [E/2005/24], the Commission concluded that delivering the 1993 SNA update by 2008 would require focus, discipline and significant effort. It recommended maintaining the timetable for completing the 1993 SNA update and urged ISWGNA to prioritize the contingency plans for issues that might turn out to be intractable by applying the decision-making structure embedded in the governance structure.

The Commission endorsed the ISWGNA recommendations for enhancing implementation in developing countries and noted that the Statistics Division would take the lead in devising a strategy to address the impediments to implementation, which should focus on Africa. The Commission encouraged countries to intensify advocacy and reach out to high-level users and policy-makers in order to strengthen their awareness of the importance and usefulness of national accounts, thereby facilitating increased funding for the implementation of the 1993 SNA and for the budgets of National Statistical Offices or other agencies responsible for national accounts.

Service statistics

The Statistical Commission had before it a report of the Organisation for Economic Cooperation and Development (OECD) on service statistics [E/CN.3/2005/5], which noted that services were increasingly important in modern economies, contributing some 68 per cent of value added to the world economy in 2002. OECD had submitted an interim report on the subject in 2004 [YUN 2004, p. 1256]. The report identified priority areas for improving service statistics, including engaging more countries in the service statistics agenda; improving implementation of existing guidelines within countries; and ensuring a clearer assignment of roles and responsibilities between organizations in addressing service statistics recommendations to countries. Annexed to the report was a document from the Voorburg Group on Service Statistics, which discussed its strategic vision for 2005-2008, focusing on classification issues, output measures and price indices.

In March [E/2005/24], the Commission recommended the creation of an intersecretariat working group on service statistics to identify the division of labour among international organizations regarding the maintenance and update of recommendations, such as those stemming from the Voorburg Group, and knowledge transfer. It would also promote the use of best practices. The Commission agreed that OECD should continue to coordinate international work on service statistics and provide a single annual report on the work undertaken by the various expert and city groups on service statistics, as mandated by the Commission in 2003 [YUN 2003, p. 1291]. The Commission agreed that the Voorburg Group should continue to develop internationally comparable concepts and methods in service statistics related to the measurement of output and prices and use of classifications.

The Commission also had before it the report of the Task Force on Statistics of International Trade in Services [E/CN.3/2005/6], which reviewed its own progress and that of its Technical Subgroup on the Movement of Natural Persons, and discussed future plans for increasing the quality of data, including promoting the implementation of the Manual on Statistics of International Trade in Services. The Task Force also outlined its continuing contribution to the current revisions of the basic economic statistics frameworks and classifications, as they affected trade in services, particularly the revision of the International Monetary Fund (IMF) Balance of Payments Manual, fifth edition.

In March [E/2005/24], the Commission noted the policy interest in improving data on remittances.

International Comparison Programme

The Statistical Commission had before it the Secretary-General's note transmitting a World

Bank report on the International Comparison Programme (ICP) [E/CN.3/2005/7], which discussed the Programme's financial and organizational status, described its research and development activities and the status of regional programmes, and reviewed data-collection and publishing plans. The report noted that the ICP Global Office was coordinating the Global Ring Comparison programme and was preparing the ICP Operational Manual and Price Collector's Guide for national coordinators. Other ICP activities included: overhauling the ICP website; development of an integrated software system, the ICP Tool Pack; revision of the ICP Handbook; and the generation of poverty-focused purchasing power parities (PPPs).

In March [E/2005/24], the Commission welcomed the start of data collection in most regions and the increase in the number of participating countries, which stood at over 150. It also welcomed the actions of the ICP Executive Board, the ICP Global Office of the World Bank and the African Regional Coordinator to ensure that price collection commenced in Africa as soon as possible. The Commission expressed satisfaction with the positive outlook for producing preliminary results by the end of 2006 in accordance with the current timetable.

Other economic statistics

Energy statistics

The Statistical Commission had before it a report prepared by Statistics Norway [E/CN.3/2005/3] reviewing the work undertaken in energy statistics by the main organizations involved in regional and international statistics. The report emphasized the need for high-quality energy statistics, and identified a number of problems regarding the quality of those statistics, including insufficient resources, duplication and differences in definitions and methodology. Statistics Norway's recommendations for addressing those problems included: reassessing the resources needed to meet the increased workload and objectives; better integration of the energy statistics and energy policy communities; and increased harmonization and integration of energy statistics activities of international/regional organizations, such as revising and updating the reference methodological handbooks and user manuals, and putting in place clear agreements on data sharing. It was also recommended that a forum be established for the main organizations involved in regional and international statistics with a mandate to strengthen international cooperation.

In March [E/2005/24], the Commission acknowledged the importance of quality energy statistics from both a socio-economic and an environmental perspective, particularly in terms of their timeliness, coverage, reliability and transparency. It emphasized the importance of energy statistics in greenhouse gas emissions inventories, particularly in the context of the implementation of the Kyoto Protocol [YUN 1997, p. 1048] to the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change [YUN 1992, p. 681]. The Commission noted the need to meet the international demand for energy statistics, while limiting the reporting burden on countries, and underlined the need to assist countries, particularly developing countries, in strengthening their capacity to produce energy statistics. It stressed the importance of the exchange of best practices in improving the quality of energy statistics, and recognized the Joint Oil Data Initiative as a good example of collaboration among countries and international organizations. The Commission also emphasized that energy statistics should be better integrated with other statistical systems, especially those linked to economic development, environment and national accounts.

The Commission recommended that the Statistics Division convene an ad hoc expert working group to: prioritize the wide range of technical and other issues covered in the Statistics Norway report; identify the most appropriate forums within which to address those issues; and report to the Bureau of the Commission, which would take up the group's recommendations to ensure that their implementation began in advance of the Commission's 2006 session.

As requested by the Commission, the ad hoc expert working group on energy statistics met in New York from 23 to 25 May [E/CN.3/2006/10]. It recommended the creation of a city group to contribute to the development of improved methods and international standards for national official energy statistics, and an intersecretariat working group to enhance international collaboration and coordination.

Price indexes and statistics

The Statistical Commission had before it the report of the Ottawa Group on Price Indexes [E/CN.3/2005/8], which indicated that, since its 2003 report to the Commission [YUN 2003, p. 1292], it had held two meetings. The Group noted the key role played by the Universal Standard Products and Services Classification (UNSPSC) in deriving price indexes for international comparison, and registered its support for the international statistics community to be involved in the development and maintenance of that classification under the supervision of the Statistics Division. The Group acknowledged the significant achievement of the Intersecretariat Working Group on Price Statistics (ISWGPS) in producing international manuals on consumer and producer price indexes, and supported the view that the manuals be seen as "living documents". Also before the Commission was the ISWGPS report [E/CN.3/2005/9], which focused on progress made in developing the series of price index manuals.

In March [E/2005/24], the Commission noted the existence of classification schemes related to electronic commerce, such as UNSPSC, and supported the Ottawa Group's proposal that the Statistics Division investigate its potential as a "derived" classification and consider the establishment of correspondence tables with existing international statistical classifications.

Informal sector statistics

The Statistical Commission had before it the report of the Delhi Group on Informal Sector Statistics [E/CN.3/2005/10], which outlined the issues discussed at the Group's seven meetings held between 1997 and 2004 and indicated its achievements in and plans for improving the quality and comparability of informal sector statistics.

In March [E/2005/24], the Commission encouraged the Delhi Group to continue its work on developing clearer definitions for producing data on the informal sector and measuring its contribution to the gross domestic product and employment. The Delhi Group should study the social aspects of the informal sector to supplement its current focus on the economic dimension. The Commission noted that ISWGNA would collaborate with the Delhi Group to improve the presentation of the concept of the informal sector in the updated 1993 SNA.

Environment statistics

The Statistical Commission had before it the Secretary-General's report on environmental-economic accounting [E/CN.3/2005/15], which discussed a proposal by a joint Statistics Division/United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP) meeting (Copenhagen, Denmark, 20-21 September 2004) for the creation of a Committee on Environmental-Economic Accounting. The new body would coordinate the further development of the Accounting Framework, ensure its successful implementation in Member States to meet policy needs and facilitate the systematic compilation of related environment statistics.

Also before the Commission was the report of the Intersecretariat Working Group on Environment Statistics [E/CN.3/2005/16], which described its 2004 activities and outlined plans for 2005/2006.

In March [E/2005/24], the Commission endorsed the creation of a Committee on Environmental-Economic Accounting, noting that its work programme should have a long-term perspective. It requested that the Committee's terms of reference be prepared and submitted to the Bureau of the Commission for approval. The Commission reconfirmed the role of the London Group on Environmental Accounting as the expert body in charge of methodological issues, which would support the role of the Committee. The Commission recognized the need for assisting countries in the implementation of environmental-economic accounting through the development of detailed compilation manuals and coordinated technical programmes, which should proceed in parallel with the improvement of environment statistics.

Demographic and social statistics

Population and housing censuses

The Statistical Commission had before it a Secretary-General's report on population and housing censuses [E/CN.3/2005/11 & Corr.1], which summarized the preparations carried out by the Statistics Division and the UN regional commissions with regard to the 2010 round of population and housing censuses, in response to the Commission's 2004 requests [YUN 2004, p. 1258]. Specifically, the report described actions taken to ensure the success of the 2010 round, including the initiation of the 2010 World Population and Housing Census Programme, to be implemented from 2005 to 2014. Annexed to the report were: the conclusions and recommendations of the United Nations Symposium on Population and Housing Censuses (New York, 13-14 September 2004); elements of a draft resolution on the 2010 World Population and Housing Census Programme for the Commission to recommend to the Economic and Social Council for adoption (see below); and the conclusions and recommendations of the United Nations Expert Group Meeting to Review Critical Issues Relevant to the Planning of the 2010 Round of Population and Housing Censuses (New York, 15-17 September 2004).

In March [E/2005/24], the Commission endorsed the recommendations of the Symposium and Expert Group Meeting and asked the Statistics Division to act as the umbrella organization for setting standards, providing technical expertise and training and setting priorities, as needed, for the 2010 round. It also asked that the umbrella strategy evolve around regional arrangements to the fullest possible extent. The Commission requested that work proceed on updating the Principles and Recommendations for Population and Housing Censuses. It noted the establishment of the Population and Housing Census Trust Fund, coordinated by the Statistics Division, which would be used, according to regional needs, to bridge the distance between national statistical offices in exchanging resources and support. The Commission was concerned that the Economic Commission for Africa was not undertaking activities directly related to population and housing censuses and requested the Statistics Division to explore the possibility of maintaining a focus on Africa in the context of the 2010 census round. The Commission requested the Statistics Division to report in 2006 on action taken in response to its requests.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 22 July [meeting 36], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Statistical Commission [E/2005/24], adopted resolution 2005/13 without vote [agenda item 13 (c)].

2010 World Population and Housing Census Programme

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolution 1995/7 of 19 July 1995, in which it requested the Secretary-General to proceed with the development of the 2000 World Population and Housing Census Programme and urged States Members of the United Nations to carry out population and housing censuses during the period 1995-2004, as well as its earlier resolutions endorsing previous decennial programmes,

Having reviewed the efforts made by Member States to carry out population and housing censuses as part of the 2000 World Population and Housing Census Programme and also the activities of the United Nations and funding agencies in support of national efforts in that regard,

Recognizing the increasing importance of the 2010 round of population and housing censuses for meeting data needs for the follow-up activities to the Millennium Summit of the United Nations, held in New York from 6 to 8 September 2000, the International Conference on Population and Development, held in Cairo from 5 to 13 September 1994, the World Summit for Social Development, held in Copenhagen from 6 to 12 March 1995, the Fourth World Conference on Women, held in Beijing from 4 to 15 September 1995, and the United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II), held in Istanbul from 3 to 14 June 1996, and to other regional and national meetings,

Considering the importance of the population and housing census to the preparation of a meaningful core set of national data and information necessary for socio-economic planning and governance,

Stressing that, for a country as a whole and for each administrative area therein, periodic population and housing censuses are one of the primary sources of data needed for effective development planning and for the monitoring of population issues and socio-economic and environmental trends, policies and programmes,

1. Supports the 2010 World Population and Housing Census Programme, consisting of a number of activities aimed at ensuring that Member States conduct a population and housing census at least once during the period from 2005 to 2014;

2. Urges Member States to carry out a population and housing census and to disseminate census results as an essential source of information for small-area, national, regional and international planning and development and to provide census results to national stakeholders as well as the United Nations and other appropriate intergovernmental organizations to assist in studies on population, environment and socio-economic development issues and programmes;

3. Emphasizes the importance of the 2010 World Population and Housing Census Programme for socio-economic planning, and requests increased support for the Programme;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to implement the 2010 World Population and Housing Census Programme.

Health statistics

In response to a 2004 Statistical Commission request [YUN 2004, p.1259], WHO submitted a report on health statistics [E/CN.3/2005/12], which described efforts to coordinate strategically the generation of health statistics and support countries in strengthening their health information systems. In particular, it covered: international programmes on the production of health statistics; support to statistical capacity-building at the country level; coordination of international programmes on the production of health statistics; harmonization of definitions, classifications and methodologies; collaboration at the regional level between WHO and other agencies involved in health statistics; and alternative methods of estimating the prevalence of HIV/AIDS. The report also described the future work of the WHO-based Health Metrics Network (the goal of which was to catalyse the development of country health information systems), which was awaiting the receipt of formal funding. WHO also reported that, in response to the Statistical Commission's 2004 request [YUN 2004, p. 1259], it had, together with the Statistics Division, established the Intersecretariat Working Group on Health Statistics to develop a coordinated and integrated agenda on the production of health statistics.

In March [E/2005/24], the Commission welcomed the WHO report and reaffirmed the need for better and more effective involvement of the community of official national and international statisticians at all stages of health statistics development. It recognized that the Health Metrics Network offered a promising approach for strengthening health information systems, particularly those of developing countries, while noting that the Network was not the appropriate forum for a strategic review of international programmes on the production of health statistics. The Commission stressed the need for the Intersecretariat Working Group on Health Statistics to continue its work on a coordinated and integrated agenda on the production of health statistics and asked for stronger involvement of country experts in its work; it agreed that WHO was best suited to lead the work of the Intersecretariat Working Group. The Commission welcomed WHO's announcement that it would make available a timetable regarding the planned release of microdata from the World Health Survey (2002-2003); it stressed the need for good metadata to accompany the publication of the microdata.

Poverty statistics

The Statistical Commission had before it the report of the Secretary-General on poverty statistics [E/CN.3/2005/13], which contained an update on the preparation of the United Nations Handbook on Poverty Statistics, including information on modifications made to the outline of the Handbook to address concerns raised by the Commission at its 2004 session [YUN 2004, p. 1259].

In March [E/2005/24], the Commission recognized that, while the current scope of the Handbook was adequate, future work might be needed to address new and emerging aspects of poverty. It welcomed the proposed work of the Statistics Division in poverty statistics, particularly capacity-building. The Commission also noted that the Rio Group on Poverty Statistics would publish a Compendium on Poverty Statistics in 2005, which would complement the Handbook. It further noted that the Rio Group intended to conclude its work in 2005.

Disability statistics

The Statistical Commission had before it the report of the Washington Group on Disability Statistics [E/CN.3/2005/14] summarizing the results of its 2004 meeting (Bangkok, Thailand, 29 September–1 October), which included agreement on a draft set of questions for the general disability measure, and the formation of a new working group to develop the protocols for implementing the general disability measure effectively.

In March [E/2005/24], the Commission thanked the World Bank for the grant to support the Group, noting that the funds would facilitate the participation of more developing countries in the Group's activities, help to develop disability measures for generating comparable data, and pay for the testing of protocols in selected countries in every region of the world.

Other statistical activities

Information and communication technologies statistics

The Statistical Commission had before it the report of the Partnership on Measuring Information and Communication Technologies for Development [E/CN.3/2005/23], which gave an overview of the progress made internationally with respect to the collection of information and communication technologies statistical indicators, in particular in developing countries. It described international community action to harmonize those efforts and to agree on a set of core indicators as a basis for developing comparable statistics. Partnership activities would be brought to the attention of the World Summit on the Information Society in November (see p. 933).

International economic and social classifications

The Statistical Commission considered the Secretary-General's report on international economic and social classifications [E/CN.3/2005/19], which described the status of the revision of the International Standard Industrial Classification of All Economic Activities, the Central Product Classification, the International Standard Classification of Occupations, the Standard International Trade Classification, the Balance of Payments Manual and the Extended Balance of Payments Services Classification, and the agricultural classifications.

In March [E/2005/24], the Commission noted the progress made regarding the 2007 round of classifications revisions. It welcomed the expedited efforts of the Statistics Division to keep the revision of the International Standard Industrial Classification of All Economic Activities on schedule, and urged that similar efforts be made for the Central Product Classification. The Commission noted with concern that a technical expert group was no longer being convened to assist in the revision of the International Standard Classification of Occupations and urged the International Labour Organization to establish such a group.

Statistical capacity-building

The Statistical Commission had before it a report of the Secretary-General on statistical capacity-building [E/CN.3/2005/17], which described the 2004 technical cooperation programme of the Statistics Division and its funding mechanisms.

Also before the Commission was the report of the Partnership in Statistics for Development in the Twenty-first Century (PARIS 21) on statistical capacity-building [E/CN.3/2005/18], which outlined how national strategies for the development of statistics could assist a country to strengthen statistical capacity across the national statistical system. The report also described the support PARIS 21 could offer to countries in developing their national strategies.

In March [E/2005/24], the Commission reaffirmed the critical importance of statistical capacity-building, particularly in the context of increased national and international demand for development information. It supported the Statistics Division's proposed strategic focus for technical cooperation activities, and stressed the need for technical cooperation to be demand-driven, responsive to local conditions, nationally controlled and better coordinated. While recognizing the role of the Statistics Division in donor coordination, the Commission recommended that the Division work with the Committee for the Coordination of Statistical Activities to review what coordination mechanisms would be most suitable and effective.

The Commission also noted the effectiveness of the regional and subregional approach to statistical capacity-building programmes, which allowed for the exchange of practical experiences relevant to the local socio-economic context; it further noted that countries that did not belong to subregional groupings might require special attention. As part of the sustained capacity-building effort, the Commission emphasized the importance of strengthening statistical training centres and supporting in-house training; it also pointed to the need for training in management and programme planning skills alongside statistical training. The Commission requested a regular report, beginning in 2006, on the ability of countries to produce individual indicators on how metadata should be presented to accompany indicators on all Millennium Development Goals (MDGs) [YUN 2000, p. 51]. It agreed to form a Friends of the Chair group to define the modalities of the report and develop suggestions on processes for bridging the information gap between users and producers of MDG indicators; the group would report its recommendations to the Commission.

The Commission welcomed the activities of PARIS 21 in supporting statistical capacity-building in developing countries. It cautioned that efforts to formulate national statistical development strategies should not take away resources needed for core statistical activities, and stressed that the strategies should be flexible enough to accommodate local needs.

Follow-up to UN conferences and summits

The Statistical Commission had before it a report of the Secretary-General on indicators for monitoring the MDGs [YUN 2000, p. 51] and for follow-up to the outcomes of major UN conferences and summits in the economic and social fields [E/CN.3/2005/20]. The report described the work of the Inter-Agency and Expert Group on MDG Indicators in 2004-2005 in compiling and analysing those indicators, reviewing methodologies related to the agreed indicators, coordinating data compilation at the global level and coordinating support to countries that were establishing country-led programmes of data collection, analysis and reporting for indicators.

In March [E/2005/24], the Commission took note of the advances made by the Inter-Agency Expert Group on MDG Indicators in compiling indicators for global monitoring. Observing that many countries still lacked the capacity to produce the necessary data and that a review of indicators being produced at the national level was necessary for all the MDGs, the Commission stated that an opportunity was available to inform policymakers of the realistic level of statistical capacity necessary to produce the MDG indicators.

Presentation and standards for statistical data and metadata

The Statistical Commission had before it an OECD report on the presentation of statistical data and metadata [E/CN.3/2005/21], which outlined progress in developing the second draft of the Data and Metadata Reporting and Presentation Handbook, and included a timetable for its launching by the end of 2005.

The Commission also had before it the report of the task force to establish standards on data and metadata exchange [E/CN.3/2005/22], which described the Task Force's progress since March 2004, and outlined the next steps for the Statistical Data and Metadata Exchange initiative.

The Commission took note of the two reports.

Coordination and integration of statistical programmes

The Secretary-General submitted to the Statistical Commission the report of the Committee for the Coordination of Statistical Activities (CCSA) on its third (New York, 1 March 2004) and fourth (New York, 1-3 September 2004) meetings [E/CN.3/2005/24]. Issues covered in the report included: progress in harmonizing the base year for index numbers to 2000 by the end of 2005; development of a draft declaration of principles for statistical activities in international organizations; information and communication technology indicators; statistics and the subnational level; and strategic issues related to the MDG indicators.

In March [E/2005/24], the Commission requested CCSA to make proposals regarding the use of national data by international organizations.

CCSA held two meetings in 2005: the fifth (New York, 28 February) and sixth (Rome, 12-14 September) [E/CN.3/2006/30]. Subjects discussed included: principles for statistical activities in international organizations; the implementation of good statistical practices in international organizations; and coordination of technical cooperation activities.

Follow-up to Economic and Social Council policy decisions

In response to a 2004 request by the Statistical Commission [YUN 2004, p. 1261], the Secretary-General submitted the report of the Bureau of the Statistical Commission on the review of the Commission's working methods [E/CN.3/2005/2], which suggested a number of improvements.

In March [E/2005/24], the Commission agreed to implement the suggested working procedures on a trial basis for its current (thirty-sixth) session, at the end of which their effectiveness would be reviewed. The Commission decided that there was no need to review its terms of reference as set out in Economic and Social Council resolution 1566(L) [YUN 1971, p. 331], as they were sufficiently broad to cover the Commission's current work.

Programme and institutional questions

In March [E/2005/24], the Commission approved changes to the Statistics Division's 2004-2005 work programme [YUN 2003, p. 1276], and endorsed its 2006-2007 proposed programme of work [E/CN.3/2005/25].

The Commission also approved its 2005-2008 multi-year programme of work [E/CN.3/2005/26]; recommended that the topic for the programme review in 2007 be education statistics; approved the provisional agenda and documentation for its thirty-seventh (2006) session; and recommended that the 2006 session be held in New York from 7 to 10 March.

PART FOUR

Legal questions

Chapter I

International Court of Justice

In 2005, the International Court of Justice (ICJ) delivered three Judgments, made four Orders and had 14 contentious cases pending before it.

In a 27 October address to the General Assembly, the ICJ President noted that the disputes resolved by the Court represented a level of activity unprecedented in its history. Faced with a growing caseload, ICJ had made efforts to increase its judicial efficiency, while maintaining the quality of its work. Among other reforms, it had modernized the organization of the Registry, reviewed and adapted its internal working methods, and modified its Rules where necessary. More States were accepting its jurisdiction to resolve their disputes with other nations. The ICJ President also noted that the Secretary-General, in his May report "In Larger Freedom: towards development, security and human rights for all" (see p. 67), had urged States to recognize ICJ's role in adjudicating their disputes and to consider how to further strengthen the Court's work.

Judicial work of the Court

During 2005, the Court delivered a Judgment on the merits of the case concerning the Armed activities in the Territory of the Congo (Democratic Republic of the Congo v. Uganda), and a Judgment on the preliminary objections raised by the respondent Party in the case concerning Certain Property (Liechtenstein v. Germany). The Chamber of the Court, formed to deal with the case concerning Frontier Dispute (Benin/Niger), also delivered a Judgment on the merits in that case.

During the year, the Court was seized of one new case: Dispute regarding Navigational and Related Rights (Costa Rica v. Nicaragua).

It held public hearings in the cases concerning Frontier Dispute (Benin/Niger); Armed Activities on the Territory of the Congo (Democratic Republic of the Congo v. Uganda) and Armed Activities on the Territory of the Congo (New Application: 2002) (Democratic Republic of the Congo v. Rwanda).

The Court or its President further made Orders on the conduct of the proceedings in the cases concerning Frontier Dispute (Benin/Niger); Sovereignty over Pedra Branca/Pulau Batu Puteh, Middle Rocks and South Ledge (Malaysia/Singapore); Certain Criminal Proceedings in France (Republic of the Congo v. France); and Dispute regarding Navigational and Related Rights (Costa Rica v. Nicaragua).

During the year, there were no new developments in the cases concerning Application of the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide (Bosnia and Herzegovina v. Serbia and Montenegro) [YUN 1993, p. 1138]; Gabcikovo-Nagymaros Project (Hungary/Slovakia) [YUN 1998, p. 1186]; Ahmadou Sadio Diallo (Guinea v. Democratic Republic of the Congo) [ibid., p. 1190]; Maritime Delimitation between Nicaragua and Honduras in the Carribean Sea (Nicaragua v. Honduras) [YUN 1999, p. 1210]; Territorial and Maritime Dispute (Nicaragua v. Colombia) [YUN 2001, p. 1195]; and Maritime Delimitation in the Black Sea (Romania v. Ukraine) [YUN 2004, p. 1265].

ICJ activities in 2005 were covered in two reports to the General Assembly, for the periods 1 August 2004 to 31 July 2005 [A/60/4] and 1 August 2005 to 31 July 2006 [A/61/4]. On 27 October 2005, the Assembly took note of the 2004/2005 report (decision 60/507).

Application of the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide (Bosnia and Herzegovina v. Serbia and Montenegro)

Bosnia and Herzegovina instituted proceedings in 1993 [YUN 1993, p. 1138] against Serbia and Montenegro, then known as the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, for alleged violations of the 1948 Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 260 A (III) [YUN 1948-49, p. 959]. The Court delivered its Judgment in 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 1179], rejecting the preliminary objections raised by Serbia and Montenegro in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 1307]. In 1997, Serbia and Montenegro filed a Counter-Memorial that included counterclaims against Bosnia and Herzegovina [YUN 1997, p. 1315]. Bosnia and Herzegovina filed a Reply in 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 1186], and Serbia and Montenegro filed a Rejoinder in 1999 [YUN 1999, p. 1204].

By an Order of 10 September 2001, the President of the Court placed on record the withdrawal by Serbia and Montenegro of the counterclaims submitted in its Counter-Memorial [YUN 2001, p. 1184].

Serbia and Montenegro had submitted to the Court, on 4 May 2001, a document entitled "Initiative to the Court to reconsider ex officio Jurisdiction over Yugoslavia". Submissions presented in the document were, firstly, that the Court had no jurisdiction ratione persona over Serbia and Montenegro and, secondly, that the Court should suspend proceedings regarding the merits of the case until a decision on the jurisdictional issue had been rendered. In a 12 June 2003 letter, the ICJ Registrar informed the Parties that the Court had decided that it could not effect a suspension of the proceedings in the circumstances of the case [YUN 2003, p. 1302].

Application for Revision of Judgment of 11 July 1996 concerning Application of the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide (Bosnia and Herzegovina v. Yugoslavia), Preliminary Objections (Yugoslavia v. Bosnia and Herzegovina)

On 24 April 2001 [YUN 2001, p. 1184], the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (FRY), currently known as Serbia and Montenegro, filed an Application for revision of the Judgment delivered by the Court on 11 July 1996 in the case concerning Application of the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide (Bosnia and Herzegovina v. Yugoslavia), Preliminary Objections [YUN 1996, p. 1179] (see above).

Public hearings were held on the question of the admissibility of the Application for revision in 2002 [YUN 2002, p. 1264].

In its Judgment of 3 February 2003 [YUN 2003, p. 1302], the Court found that the Application submitted by FRY for revision of the Judgment of 11 July 1996 was inadmissible.

The Court fixed 27 February 2006 as the date for the opening of the hearings.

Armed activities on the territory of the Congo (Democratic Republic of the Congo v. Uganda)

The Democratic Republic of the Congo (DRC) instituted proceedings against Burundi, Rwanda and Uganda on 23 June 1999 [YUN 1999, p. 1209], for acts of armed aggression perpetrated in flagrant violation of the Charter of the United Nations and the Charter of the Organization of African Unity (OAU). In 2001 [YUN 2001, p. 1191], the DRC notified the Court that it wished to discontinue the proceedings against Burundi and Rwanda. The President of the Court, in Orders of 30 January 2001, placed the discontinuance by the DRC on record and ordered the removal of the case from the List.

In the case of Uganda, the Court, taking into account an agreement of the Parties in 1999 [YUN 1999, p. 1210], fixed 21 January 2000 as the time limit for the filing of a Memorial by the DRC and 21 April 2001 for the filing of a Counter-Memorial by Uganda. The Memorial of the DRC was filed within the prescribed time limit.

On 19 June 2000 [YUN 2000, p. 1218], the DRC requested the Court to indicate provisional measures requiring, among other things, the withdrawal of Uganda's army from Kisangani and the cessation of military and other activities by Uganda within the territory of the DRC. Public sittings were held to hear the oral observations of the parties on the request for the indication of provisional measures. By an Order of 1 July both Parties had to, forthwith, prevent and refrain from any action, particularly armed action, which might prejudice the rights of the other Party in respect of whatever judgment the Court might render, or which might aggravate or extend the dispute before the Court or make it more difficult to resolve; both Parties had to, forthwith, take measures to ensure full respect within the zone of conflict for fundamental human rights and for the application of provisions of humanitarian law. Judges Oda and Koroma appended declarations to the Order.

Uganda filed its Counter-Memorial, which contained counterclaims, within the time limit set by the Court's Order of 21 October 1999 [YUN 1999, p. 1210].

By an Order of 29 November 2001 [YUN 2001, p. 1192], the Court found that two of the counterclaims submitted by Uganda against the DRC were "inadmissible as such and [formed] part of the current proceedings", but that the third was not. In view of those conclusions, the Court considered it necessary for the DRC to file a Reply and Uganda a Rejoinder, addressing the claims of both Parties, and fixed 29 May 2002 as the time limit for the filing of the Reply and 29 November 2002 for the Rejoinder. Furthermore, in order to ensure strict equality between the Parties, the Court reserved the right of the DRC to present its views in writing a second time on the Uganda counterclaims in an additional pleading to be the subject of a subsequent Order. The Reply was filed within the time limit [YUN 2002, p. 1268]. By an Order of 7 November 2002 [ibid.], the Court extended the time limit for the filing by Uganda of its Rejoinder to 6 December 2002. The Rejoinder was filed within the time limit.

By an Order of 29 January 2003 [YUN 2003, p. 1303], the Court authorized the DRC's submission of an additional pleading relating solely to the counterclaims submitted by Uganda, and fixed 28 February 2003 as the time limit for its filing. The written pleading was filed within the fixed time limit [ibid.]. The Court then fixed 10 November 2003 as the date for the opening of the hearings.

In a 5 November 2003 letter, the DRC raised the question of whether the hearings might be adjourned to April 2004, to enable the diplomatic negotiations engaged by the Parties to be conducted in an atmosphere of calm. A 6 November 2003 letter by Uganda [ibid.] indicated that it supported the proposal and adopted the DRC's request.

By a 6 November 2003 letter, the ICJ Registrar informed the Parties that the Court had decided that the opening of the oral proceedings would be postponed and that a date would be fixed subsequently [ibid.].

Public hearings on the merits of the cases were held from 11 to 29 April 2005. At the conclusion of the hearings, the Parties presented submissions to the Court. The DRC requested the Court to adjudge and declare that Uganda, by engaging in military and paramilitary activities against it, by occupying its territory and by actively extending military, logistic, economic and financial support to irregular forces operating there, had violated principles of conventional and customary law, including that of non-use of force in international relations and the respect for the sovereignty of States; that it had committed acts of violence against nationals of the DRC, including by killing and injuring them or despoiling them of their property; that it had engaged in the illegal exploitation of Congolese national resources; and that it had violated the Order of the Court on provisional measures of 1 July 2000 [YUN 2000, p. 1218] by failing to comply with those measures. The DRC further requested the Court to declare that the stated violations of international law constituted wrongful acts attributable to Uganda, which had engaged its international responsibility, that Uganda cease forthwith all continuing internationally wrongful acts, that it provide specific guarantees and assurances that it would not repeat the wrongful acts complained of, and that Uganda was under obligation to the DRC to make reparation for all injury caused to the latter, with the nature, form and amount of the reparation to be determined by the Court.

Uganda requested the Court to declare the DRC requests inadmissible for the reasons set forth in Chapter XV of the Counter-Memorial [YUN 2001, p. 1192] and reaffirmed in the oral pleadings; that the requests of the DRC be rejected; and that Uganda's counterclaims, presented in Chapter XVIII of the Counter-Memorial, and reaffirmed in Chapter VI of the Rejoinder, as well as in the oral proceedings, be upheld. It further requested that Court reserve the issue of reparation in relation to Uganda's counterclaims for a subsequent stage of the proceedings.

In its Judgment of 19 December 2005, the Court, by four separate votes of 16 votes to 1, found that Uganda had violated the principle of non-use of force in international relations and the principle of non-intervention; that it had committed acts of killing, torture and other forms of inhuman treatment of the Congolese civilian population; that it had violated obligations owed to the DRC under international law relating to the exploitation of its natural resources; and upheld the objection of the DRC to the admissibility of the second counterclaim submitted by Uganda relating to the maltreatment of individuals other than Ugandan diplomats at Ndjili International Airport in 1998. By 15 votes to 2, it found that Uganda did not comply with the Order of the Court on provisional measures on 1 July 2000 [YUN 2000, p. 1218]. By 14 votes to 3, it found that the first counterclaim submitted by Uganda could not be upheld. In further votes, the Court found unanimously that the claim submitted by the DRC relating to alleged violations of international humanitarian and human rights law by Uganda in the course of hostilities between Ugandan and Rwandan military forces in Kisangani was admissible; that the DRC maltreated Ugandan diplomats and other individuals on the Embassy premises and at the Ndjili Airport; that Uganda was under obligation to make reparation to the DRC for the injury caused; and that, failing agreement between the Parties, the question of reparation due to the DRC would be settled by the Court. It rejected unanimously the objections of the DRC to the admissibility of Uganda's first counterclaim and to the admissibility of the part of the second counterclaim submitted by Uganda relating to the breach of the Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations of 1961. The Court found unanimously that the DRC was under obligation to make reparation to Uganda for the injury caused; and that, failing agreement between the Parties, the question of reparation due to Uganda would be settled by the Court.

Appended to the Judgment were: declarations by Judges Koroma and Tomka and by Judge ad hoc Vanhoeven; separate opinions by Judges Parra-Aranguren, Kooijmans, Elarby and Simma; and a dissenting opinion by Judge Kateka.

Certain property (Liechtenstein v. Germany)

On 1 June 2001 [YUN 2001, p. 1194], Liechtenstein filed an Application instituting proceedings against Germany's decisions to treat certain property of Liechtenstein nationals as German assets, seized for the purposes of restitution as a consequence of the Second World War, without ensuring any compensation.

In the Application, Liechtenstein requested the Court to adjudge and declare that Germany had incurred international legal responsibility and was bound to make appropriate reparation to Liechtenstein for the damage and prejudice suffered. Liechtenstein further requested that the nature and amount of such reparation should, in the absence of agreement between the Parties, be assessed and determined by the Court, if necessary, in a separate phase of the proceedings. As a basis for the Court's jurisdiction, Liechtenstein invoked article 1 of the European Convention for the Peaceful Settlement of Disputes, signed at Strasbourg, France, on 29 April 1957.

By an Order of 28 June 2001 [ibid.], the Court fixed 28 March and 27 December 2002, respectively, as the time limits for the filing of a Memorial by Liechtenstein and of a Counter-Memorial by Germany. The Memorial was filed within the fixed time limit.

On 27 June 2002 [YUN 2002, p. 1271], Germany filed certain preliminary objections to the jurisdiction of the Court and the admissibility of the Application; the proceedings on the merits were suspended in accordance with Article 79 of the Rules of the Court. Within the 15 November 2002 time limit fixed by the Court, Liechtenstein filed a written statement of its observations and submissions with regard to the preliminary objections raised by Germany.

Public hearings on those objections were held from 14 to 18 June 2004.

Germany requested the Court to adjudge and declare that it lacked jurisdiction over the claims brought against it and that those claims were inadmissible to the extent specified in its preliminary objections.

Liechtenstein requested the Court to adjudge and declare that the Court had jurisdiction over the claims presented in its Application and that they were admissible; and, accordingly, to reject Germany's preliminary objections in their entirety.

In its Judgment of 10 February 2005, the Court, by 15 votes to 1, rejected the preliminary objection that there was no dispute between Liechtenstein and Germany. By 12 votes to 4, it upheld the preliminary objection that Liechtenstein's Application should be rejected on the grounds that the Court lacked jurisdiction ratione temporis to decide the dispute. By 12 votes to 4, it found that it had no jurisdiction to entertain the Application filed by Liechtenstein on 1 June 2001 [YUN 2001, p. 1194].

Appended to the Judgment were dissenting opinions by Judges Kooijmans, Elaraby and Owada, and Judge ad hoc Berman; and a declaration by Judge ad hoc Fleischhauer.

Frontier dispute (Benin/Niger)

In 2002 [YUN 2002, p. 1271], Benin and the Niger jointly notified the Court of a Special Agreement, which was signed between them on 15 June 2001 and entered into force on 11 April 2002. Under article 1 of the Agreement, the Parties agreed to submit their boundary dispute to a chamber to be formed by the Court, pursuant to Article 26, paragraph 2, of the Court's Statute, and that each of them would choose a judge ad hoc. Article 2 of the Agreement stated that the Court was requested to determine the course of the boundary between Benin and the Niger in the River Niger sector; specify which State owned each of the islands in the River Niger, in particular Lété Island; and determine the course of the boundary between the two States in the River Mekrou sector. Article 10 contained a "special undertaking" as follows: "Pending the Judgment of the Chamber, the Parties undertake to preserve peace, security and quiet among the peoples of the two States".

By an Order of 27 November 2002 [ibid.], the Court decided to accede to the Parties' request and form a special chamber of five judges; the Court formed a Chamber of three members of the Court, together with two judges ad hoc chosen by the Parties. The Court fixed 27 August 2003 as the time limit for the filing of a Memorial by each Party. The Memorials were filed within the time limit.

By an Order of 11 September 2003 [YUN 2003, p. 1305], the President of the Court fixed 28 May 2004 as the time limit for the filing of a Counter-Memorial by each of the Parties; the Counter-Memorials were filed within the time limit fixed. On 20 November 2003 [ibid.], the Court held its first public sitting to enable the two judges ad hoc to make the solemn declaration required by the Statute and the Rules of Court.

By an Order of 9 July 2004 [YUN 2004, p. 1269], the President of the Chamber, taking into account the wish of the Parties to be authorized to submit a third pleading as provided for by the Special Agreement, authorized the submission of a Reply by each of the parties, and fixed 17 December 2004, as the time limit for the filing of that pleading. The Replies were deposited within the time limit thus prescribed.

Public hearings were held by the Court from 7 to 11 March 2005. Benin requested the Court to decide that the boundary between Benin and Niger took the course of a particular set of coordinates, and that sovereignty over all of the islands in the River Niger, and particularly Lété Island, lay with Benin. Niger requested the Court to adjudge and declare that the boundary between the countries took the course of another set of coordinates, insofar as that line could be established as it was at the date of independence and determine which islands belonged to each Party. It further requested the Court to declare that the attribution of islands to Benin and Niger according to the line of deepest soundings, as determined at the date of independence, should be regarded as final; that the boundary between the Parties passed through the middle of the Gaya and Malanville bridges; and that the line ran through the River Mekrou sector in two parts, with particular sets of coordinates.

In its Judgment of 12 July 2005, the Court, by 4 votes to 1, decided on the delimitation of the boundary between Benin and Niger in the River Niger and the coordinates thereof. By two further votes, each of 4 votes to 1, it found that the islands situated in the River Niger belonged to Benin or Niger as indicated in paragraph 117 of the Court's Judgment, and that the boundary between the countries on the bridges between Gaya and Malanville followed the boundary in the river. The Court found unanimously that the boundary between the two Parties in the River Mekrou sector followed the median line of that river, from the intersection of the said line with the line of deepest soundings of the main navigable channel of the River Niger as far as the boundary of the Parties with Burkina Faso.

Appended to the Judgment was a dissenting opinion by Judge ad hoc Bennouna.

Armed activities on the territory of the Congo (New Application: 2002) (Democratic Republic of the Congo v. Rwanda)

On 28 May 2002 [YUN 2002, p. 1271], the DRC filed an Application instituting proceedings against Rwanda in respect of a dispute concerning "massive, serious and flagrant violations of human rights and of international humanitarian law" resulting "from acts of armed aggression perpetrated by Rwanda on the territory of the Democratic Republic of the Congo in flagrant breach of the sovereignty and territorial integrity of the [latter], as guaranteed by the United Nations and OAU Charters." The DRC requested the Court to adjudge and declare that, by violating human rights, Rwanda had violated and was violating the UN Charter, as well as articles 3 and 4 of the OAU Charter; that it further violated a number of instruments protecting human rights; that, by shooting down a Boeing 727 owned by Congo Airlines on 9 October 1998 in Kindu, thereby causing the deaths of 40 civilians, Rwanda had violated certain conventions regarding international civil aviation; and that, by engaging in killing, slaughter, rape, throat-slitting and crucifying, Rwanda was guilty of genocide against more than 3.5 million Congolese, including the victims of massacres in the city of Kisangani, and had violated the sacred right to life provided for in certain instruments protecting human rights, as well as the 1948 Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide [YUN 1948-49, p. 959]. It further asked the Court to adjudge and declare that all Rwandan armed forces should be withdrawn from Congolese territory and that the DRC was entitled to compensation. In its Application, the DRC, in order to found the jurisdiction of the Court, relied on a number of compromissory clauses in treaties.

Also on 28 May 2002 [YUN 2002, p. 1272], the DRC submitted a request for the indication of provisional measures. Following public hearings on the request, the Court delivered its Order, by which, having found that it had no prima facie jurisdiction, it rejected the request of the DRC. In the Order, the Court also rejected the submissions by Rwanda seeking the removal of the case from the Court's List.

By an Order of 18 September 2002 [ibid.], the Court decided, in accordance with Article 79, paragraphs 2 and 3, of the revised Rules of the Court, that the written pleadings would first be addressed to the questions of the jurisdiction of the Court and the admissibility of the Application, and fixed 20 January 2003 as the time limit for the Memorial of Rwanda and 20 May 2003 for the DRC's Counter-Memorial. The pleadings were filed within the time limits [YUN 2003, p. 1306].

Public hearings addressed to the questions of the jurisdiction of the Court and the admissibility of the Application were held from 4 to 8 July 2005. At the conclusion of those hearings, the Parties presented their final submissions to the Court. Rwanda requested the Court to adjudge and declare that it lacked jurisdiction over the claims brought against Rwanda by the DRC, and that the claims brought against Rwanda by the DRC were inadmissible. The DRC asked the Court to find that the objections to jurisdiction and admissibility raised by Rwanda were unfounded, and that the Court had jurisdiction to entertain the case on those merits and that the Application of the DRC was admissible as submitted. It further asked the Court to proceed with the case on the merits.

Certain criminal proceedings in France (Republic of the Congo v. France)

On 9 December 2002 [YUN 2002, p. 1263], the Republic of the Congo filed an Application by which it sought to institute proceedings against France seeking the annulment of the investigation and prosecution measures taken by the French judicial authorities further to a complaint for crimes against humanity and torture filed by various associations against the President of the Congo, Denis Sassou Nguesso, the Congolese Minister of the Interior, Pierre Oba, and other individuals, including General Norbert Dabira, Inspector General of the Congolese Armed Forces. The Application further stated that, in connection with the proceedings, an investigating judge of the Meaux (France) tribunal de grande instance had issued a warrant for the President of the Congo to be examined as witness.

The Congo contended that by "attributing to itself universal jurisdiction in criminal matters and by arrogating to itself the power to prosecute and try the Minister of the Interior of a foreign State for crimes allegedly committed by him in connection with the exercise of his powers for the maintenance of public order in his country", France violated "the principle that a State may not, in breach of the principle of sovereign equality among all Members of the United Nations exercise its authority on the territory of another State". The Congo further submitted that, in issuing a warrant instructing police officers to examine the President of the Congo as witness in the case, France violated "the criminal immunity of a foreign Head of State, an international customary rule recognized by the jurisprudence of the Court".

In its Application, the Congo indicated that it sought to found the jurisdiction of the Court, pursuant to Article 38, paragraph 5, of the Rules of Court, "on the consent of the French Republic, which will certainly be given". In accordance with that provision, the Application by the Congo was transmitted to France and no further action was taken in the proceedings at that stage.

By an 8 April 2003 letter [YUN 2003, p. 1308], France stated that it "consent[ed] to the jurisdiction of the Court to entertain the Application pursuant to Article 38, paragraph 5. That consent made it possible to enter the case in the Court's List and to open the proceedings. In its letter, France added that its consent to the Court's jurisdiction applied strictly within the limits "of the claims formulated by the Republic of the Congo" and that "Article 2 of the Treaty of Co-operation signed on 1 January 1974 by the French Republic and the People's Republic of the Congo, to which the latter refers in its Application, does not constitute a basis of jurisdiction for the Court in the present case".

The Application of the Congo was accompanied by a request for the indication of a provisional measure "seek[ing] an order for the immediate suspension of the proceedings being conducted by the investigating judge of the Meaux tribunal de grande instance".

Taking into account the consent given by France and, in accordance with Article 74, paragraph 3, of the Rules of Court, the President of the Court fixed 28 April 2003 as the date for the opening of the public hearings on the request for the indication of a provisional measure submitted by the Congo. The hearings were held on 28 and 29 April 2003 [ibid.].

On 17 June 2003 [ibid.], the President of the Court read the Order, by which the Court found, by 14 votes to 1, that the circumstances, as they presented themselves to the Court, were not such as to require the exercise of its power under Article 41 of the Statute to indicate provisional measures. Judges Koroma and Vereshchetin appended a joint separate opinion to the Order, and Judge ad hoc de Cara a dissenting opinion.

By an Order of 11 July 2003 [ibid.], the President of the Court fixed 11 December 2003 as the time limit for the Memorial of the Congo and 11 May 2004 as the time limit for the Counter-Memorial of France. The Memorial was filed within the time limit.

By an Order of 17 June 2004 [YUN 2004, p. 1270], the Court, taking account of the agreement of the Parties and of the particular circumstances of the case, authorized the submission of a Reply by the Congo and a Rejoinder by France, and fixed 10 December 2004 and 10 June 2005 as the respective time limits for the filing of those pleadings. By Orders of 8 and 29 December 2004, the President of the Court, taking account of the reasons given by the Congo and of the agreement of the Parties, extended to 10 January and 10 August 2005, those respective timelimits [ibid.].

By an Order of 11 July 2005, the President of the Court again extended the respective time limits for the filing of the pleadings to 11 July 2005 and 11 August 2006 and later to 11 January 2006 and 10 August 2007.

Sovereignty over Pedra Branca/Pulau Batu Puteh, Middle Rocks and South Ledge (Malaysia/Singapore)

On 24 July 2003 [YUN 2003, p. 1308], Malaysia and Singapore jointly notified the Court of a Special Agreement, which was signed between them on 6 February 2003 at Putrajaya, Malaysia, and entered into force on 9 May 2003. In article 2 of the Special Agreement, the Parties requested the Court to determine whether sovereignty over Pedra Branca/Pulau Batu Puteh, Middle Rocks and South Ledge belonged to Malaysia or Singapore. In article 6, the Parties agreed to accept the judgment of the Court as final and binding upon them. The Parties further set out their views on the procedure to be followed.

By an Order of 1 September 2003 [ibid., p. 1309], the Court, taking into account the provisions of article 4 of the Special Agreement, fixed 25 March 2004 and 25 January 2005 as the respective time limits for the filing, by each of the Parties, of a Memorial and of a Counter-Memorial. The Memorials were filed within the time limit [YUN 2004, p. 1271].

By an Order of 1 February 2005, the Court, taking into account the provisions of the Special Agreement, fixed 25 November 2005 as the time limit for the filing of a Reply by each of the Parties.

Dispute regarding Navigational and Related Rights (Costa Rica v. Nicaragua)

On 29 September 2005, Costa Rica filed an Application instituting proceedings against Nicaragua in respect of a dispute concerning navigational and related rights on the San Juan River. Costa Rica stated in its Application that it sought "the cessation of [the] Nicaraguan conduct which prevent[ed] the free and full exercise and enjoyment of the rights that Costa Rica possess[ed] on the San Juan River, and which also prevent[ed] Costa Rica from fulfilling its responsibilities" under certain agreements between itself and Nicaragua. It stated that Nicaragua had, in particular since the late 1990s, imposed restrictions on the navigation of Costa Rican boats and their passengers on the San Juan River, in violation of Article VI of the Treaty of Limits, signed in 1858 between the two Parties, which granted Nicaragua sovereignty over the waters of the river, while recognizing at the same time important rights to Costa Rica. It maintained that those rights were confirmed and interpreted on 28 March 1888 by the then President of the United States, Grover Cleveland, and by a judgment of the Central American Court of Justice of 1916, as well as by the Agreement Supplementary to Article IV of the [1949] Pact of Amity of 9 January 1956. Costa Rica contended that the above-mentioned restrictions were "of a continuing character".

Costa Rica argued further that on 28 September 2005, the National Assembly of Nicaragua passed a resolution threatening to impose economic sanctions on Costa Rica in the event of its bringing the dispute to the Court, to which was annexed the text of a draft law imposing a 35 per cent import tax on all goods and services of Costa Rican origin. Costa Rica added that it had proposed many times to Nicaragua a diplomatic solution and the use of available mechanisms of peaceful resolution of differences, including mediation through the Organization of American States (OAS) and international arbitration, but that the Government of Nicaragua had rejected those alternatives.

Costa Rica requested the Court to adjudge and declare that Nicaragua had violated its obligations to facilitate and expedite traffic on the San Juan River within the terms of the 1858 Treaty and interpretation by the 1988 arbitration; to allow Costa Rican boats and their passengers to navigate freely and without impediment on the river for commercial purposes, and to moor freely on any of the river's banks without paying any charges, unless expressly agreed by both Governments. It further asked the Court to adjudge and declare that Nicaragua had violated its obligations not to require Costa Rican boats and their passengers to stop at any Nicaraguan post along the river; not to impose any charges or fees on Costa Rican boats and their passengers for navigating on the river; to allow Costa Rica the right to navigate the river in accordance with the Cleveland Award; to allow Costa Rica the right to navigate the San Juan River in official boats for supply purposes, for the exchange of personnel of the border posts along the river, and for the purposes of protection, as established in the pertinent instruments; to collaborate with Costa Rica in order to carry out those undertakings and activities which required a common effort by both States in order to facilitate and expedite traffic along the river, within the terms of the Treaty; and not to aggravate and extend the dispute by adopting measures against Costa Rica, including unlawful economic sanctions. Costa Rica requested the Court to determine the reparation to be made by Nicaragua.

As a basis for the Court's jurisdiction, Costa Rica invoked the declarations of acceptance of the Court's jurisdiction, made by Costa Rica in 1973 and by Nicaragua in 1979, as well as several other agreements between the parties.

By an Order of 29 November 2005, the Court fixed 29 August 2006 and 29 May 2007 as the time limits for the filing of a Memorial by Costa Rica and a Counter-Memorial by Nicaragua.

Communication. On 29 September [A/60/417-S/2005/632], Costa Rica informed the Secretary-General of its intention to bring the case concerning its navigational rights on the San Juan River (see above) before ICJ.

Composition of the Court

Election of judges

By October 2004 notes [A/59/237, S/2004/830], the Secretary-General informed the General Assembly and the Security Council that Judge and former President of the Court, Gilbert Guillaume, whose term was to expire on 5 February 2009, intended to resign effective 11 February 2005. In accordance with the Statute of the Court, the Secretary-General invited the national groups of States parties to make nominations for a new member of the Court and fixed the deadline for nominations.

On 15 February 2005, the Assembly and the Council elected Ronny Abraham (France) to replace Mr. Guillaume as a member of the Court for a term of office beginning on 15 February and expiring on 5 February 2009 (decision 59/415).

By a July 2005 memorandum [A/60/186-S/2005/446], the Secretary-General informed the Assembly and the Council that, on 5 February 2006, the terms of office of five additional members of the Court would expire. He asked the Assembly, during its sixtieth (2005) session, to elect five judges for a term of office of nine years, beginning on 6 February 2006, and fixed the deadline for those nominations.

On 7 November, the Assembly and the Council elected five members of the Court to fill the vacancies occurring on 5 February 2006 (decision 60/408).

Trust Fund to Assist States in the Settlement of Disputes

In September [A/60/330], the Secretary-General reported on the activities and status of the Trust Fund to Assist States in the Settlement of Disputes through ICJ since the submission of his 2004 report [YUN 2004, p. 1274]. The Fund, established in 1989 [YUN 1989, p. 818], provided financial assistance to States for financial expenses incurred in connection with a dispute submitted to ICJ by way of a special agreement or the execution of a judgment resulting from such an agreement.

During the period under review (1 July 2004–30 June 2005), three States contributed to the Fund. As at 30 June, the Fund's balance stood at approximately $2 million.

The Fund did not receive any applications from States during the reporting period.

Noting that, since its inception, the Fund had had a decreasing level of resources, the Secretary-General urged States and other relevant entities to consider making substantial and regular contributions.

Chapter II

International tribunals and court

In 2005, the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991 (ICTY) made significant progress in accomplishing its mandate by 2010. As part of that effort, a pilot e-Court system was implemented in February, integrating all documents into a central electronic database. In March, a Special War Crimes Chamber was established within the State Court of Bosnia and Herzegovina to receive cases from ICTY and take over cases of lower-level accused not being pursued by the Tribunal. In August, the Security Council amended ICTY Statute to extend the terms of office of some short-term judges, to allow them to finish adjudicating the cases on which they had begun working.

During the year, the International Criminal Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Genocide and Other Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of Rwanda and Rwandan Citizens Responsible for Genocide and Other Such Violations Committed in the Territory of Neighbouring States between 1 January and 31 December 1994 (ICTR) rendered three judgments and commenced three new trials. The Tribunal was on course to completing all trials by 2008. Meanwhile, outreach programme activities continued to be a priority for ICTR, with the Information Centre in Rwanda being its focal point. To that end, seminars and workshops on international humanitarian and criminal law were held for Rwandan legal practitioners.

The International Criminal Court (ICC), in its second year of functioning, began its operational phase, conducting investigation into situations of concern in three countries. In June, the Security Council referred to it the situation in the Darfur region of the Sudan.

International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia

In 2005, the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia (ICTY) advanced the implementation of its completion strategy [YUN 2002, p. 1275], adopting further reforms to ensure compliance with Security Council resolutions 1503 (2003) [YUN 2003, p. 1330] and 1534(2004) [YUN 2004, p. 1292]. In February, ICTY amended the following rules of its Rules of Procedure and Evidence: rule 11 bis requiring the President to designate a "Referral Bench" of three permanent judges selected from the Trial Chambers, rather than having the Trial Chamber alone determine whether a case should be referred to the authorities of a State, and rules 124 and 28. In July, ICTY amended rule 15 (B), relating to the disqualification of a judge at the request of a party, and to confer the decision on another Trial Chamber than the one of which the challenged judge was a member; rules 42 (A) and 43 (i) to harmonize them with rule 62, by removing the requirement that the accused speak the language in which he was informed of his rights; and rules 15 (C) and (D), 54 bis, 65 (D) and (E), 72 (E) and 127, to remove the requirement that a party seek leave from a bench of three judges for the right to appeal certain decisions.

The Referral Bench constituted by the President granted four transfers and denied one. ICTY conducted extensive training for judges and staff of the Special Chamber and assisted in its own investigations. It was also involved in building the region's national judicial capacity, hosting visits to Serbia and Montenegro and Croatia. The Tribunal was also active in the reconciliation process by making activities accessible, transparent and relevant. By the end of the year, one of the most notorious fugitives, Ante Gotovina, after evading justice for more than four years, was arrested and transferred to the Tribunal.

The activities of ICTY, established by Security Council resolution 827(1993) [YUN 1993, p. 440], were covered in two reports to the Council and the General Assembly, for the periods 1 August 2004 to 31 July 2005 [A/60/267-S/2005/532] and 1 August 2005 to 31 July 2006 [A/61/271-S/2006/666]. On 10 October, the Assembly took note of the 2004/2005 report (decision 60/506).

The Chambers

The judicial activities of the Tribunal's three Trial Chambers and of its Appeals Chamber included first instance and appeals proceedings against judgements, interlocutary decisions and State requests for review; proceedings regarding the Tribunal's primacy; and contempt cases. ICTY had a total of 30 judges—16 permanent judges, 2 ICTR judges in the Appeals Chamber and 12 ad litem judges.

New arrests and surrenders

Savo Todovic, whose initial indictment was made public in 2001, surrendered and was transferred to the Tribunal on 15 January. He was charged with crimes against humanity and violations of the laws or customs of war for events that took place at the Foca Kazneno-Popravni Dom prison, in Bosnia and Herzegovina. He pleaded not guilty to all charges on 17 February. On 25 July, the prosecution and Mr. Todovic filed notices of appeal against the partly confidential decision by the Referral Bench on 8 July, ordering that the case be referred to the authorities of the State of Bosnia and Herzegovina.

The indictment of Zdravko Tolimir, Radivoje Miletic and Milan Gvero was confirmed on 10 February. They were all charged with violations of the laws or customs of war and crimes against humanity allegedly committed against Muslim populations in the Srebrenica and Zepa enclaves. While Tolimir remained at large, both Miletic and Gvero surrendered to the authorities in February and were transferred to the Tribunal on 24 and 28 February, respectively. They pleaded not guilty to all counts and were given provisional release, following a Trial Chamber's decision of 19 July. Their trial was to commence in 2006. Earlier, on 10 June, the prosecution had filed a motion seeking joinder of the case concerning events in Srebrenica with those of Vujadin Popovic, Ljubisa Beara, Drago Nikolic, Ljubomir Borovcanin, Vinko Pandurevic and Milorad Trbic (see below). On 29 June, the Tribunal President issued an order referring the joinder motion to the Trial Chamber.

Rasim Delic, commander of the main staff of the Army of Bosnia-Herzegovina, was indicted on 15 February and charged, on the basis of his superior command responsibility, with four counts of violations of the laws or customs of war. Following his transfer to The Hague on 28 February, he pleaded not guilty to all charges at an initial appearance on 3 March, and was granted provisional release on 6 May. Momcilo Perisic, chief of the general staff of the Yugoslav Army, was transferred to the Tribunal on 7 March, and charged with eight counts of crimes against humanity and five counts of violations of the laws or customs of war for crimes allegedly perpetrated against civilians in Sarajevo. He pleaded not guilty to all charges at his initial appearance on 9 March. On 9 June, the Trial Chamber granted the accused provisional release.

Ramush Haradinaj and Lahi Brahimaj, who belonged to the Kosovo Liberation Army (KLA), surrendered to the Tribunal on 9 March 2005. Idriz Balaj, who was serving a sentence pursuant to a conviction in 2002, was also transferred to the Tribunal on the same day. The indictment, confirmed on 4 March, charged the accused with 37 counts of crimes against humanity and violations of the laws or customs of war. On 6 June, a motion filed by his counsel for provisional release was granted by the Trial Chamber.

The indictment against Ljube Boskoski and Johan Tarculovski was confirmed on 9 March 2005. Mr. Tarculovski was arrested in the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia (FYROM) and handed over to the Tribunal on 16 March. Mr. Boskoski, who was in custody in a Croatian prison, was transferred to the Tribunal on 24 March. In April, both pleaded not guilty to charges of three counts of violations of the laws or customs of war, allegedly committed in August 2001, in FYROM.

Gojko Jankovic, military police commander for Serb Forces, surrendered on 14 March. Following initial appearances before the Tribunal on 18 March and 15 April, he pleaded not guilty to all counts. On 22 July, the Referral Bench granted the transfer of the case, which took place on 8 December, to the authorities of the State of Bosnia and Herzegovina.

In August, two accused were located and arrested: Milan Lukic, in Argentina, who was originally indicted in 1998 for the killing of Muslim men, women and children in the eastern Bosnian town of Visegrad; and Dragan Zelenovic, in the Russian Federation, indicted for torture and rape in the Bosnian town of Foca. Both were awaiting transfer to the Tribunal. The indictment against Goran Borovnica, which was confirmed in 1995, was withdrawn, owing to the presumed death of the accused.

Josip Jovic and Marijan Krizic were indicted on 29 August for contempt of court for publishing the protected witnesses' testimony. Their trial was to commence in 2006.

After evading arrest for almost four years since his 2001 indictment [YUN 2001, p. 1199], Ante Gotovina, a former high-ranking Croatian military officer, was arrested on 7 December in the Canary Islands by the Spanish authorities, and transferred to The Hague.

Ongoing cases and trials

The trial of Vidoje Blagojevic and Dragan Jokic, charged jointly with other accused in 2001

[YUN 2001, p. 1199] for their alleged involvement in events in and around Srebrenica in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 529], began in 2003 [YUN 2003, p. 1312] and ended in 2004 [YUN 2004, p. 1280]. In judgements passed against the two accused on 17 January 2005, the Trial Chamber acquitted Mr. Blagojevic on one count of extermination and Mr. Jokic on one count of murder. It found Mr. Blagojevic guilty for complicity to commit genocide, crimes against humanity and violations of the laws or customs of war and sentenced him to 18 years in prison. The Chamber found Mr. Jokic guilty for crimes against humanity and violations of the laws or customs of war and sentenced him to 9 years in prison.

On 25 January, Ivica Marijacic and Markica Rebic were indicted for disclosing information to a Croatian newspaper about the identity of a protected Tribunal witness revealed during the trial of Tihomir Blaskic [YUN 2004, p. 1282], in violation of a closed session order. Both respondents, who were charged with one count for contempt of the Tribunal, pleaded not guilty at their initial appearance on 14 June.

The trial of Sefer Halilovic, who was charged with one count of murder for the killing of Bosnian Croat civilians committed by subordinate brigades in Grabovica and Uzdol (Bosnia and Herzegovina) in September 1993, commenced on 31 January 2005. In a judgement issued on 16 November, the Trial Chamber found Mr. Halilovic not guilty.

By a 31 January judgement against General Pavle Strugar [YUN 2003, p. 1314; YUN 2004, p. 1279], the Trial Chamber found that it had not been established that the accused was responsible for having ordered or aided and abetted the unlawful shelling of the Old Town of Dubrovnik. He was, however, found guilty on two counts of failure to prevent or punish those involved in attacks on civilians and the destruction of, or wilful damage to, institutions dedicated to religion, charity and education, the arts and sciences, and historic monuments. He was sentenced to eight years' imprisonment. Appeals by the prosecution and the defence were currently pending before the Appeals Chamber.

In the case against Dragomir Milosevic, Chief Commander, Romanija Corps of the Bosnian Serb Army, who was indicted in 1999 for crimes in Sarajevo, a prosecution motion filed on 31 January for the indictment to be referred to the authorities of Bosnia and Herzegovina to be tried in their own courts was denied on 8 July. His trial was expected to commence towards the end of 2006.

Stjepan Seselj and Domagoj Margetic, publisher and editor, respectively, of a Croatian weekly magazine were indicted on 1 February for contempt for having disseminated excerpts of closed-session testimony of a protected witness in the Blaskic case [YUN 2004, p. 1282]. In an initial appearance before the Tribunal on 14 June, both accused pleaded guilty to two counts of contempt. The case was pending before the Trial Chamber.

Vladimir Lazarevic, Sreten Lukic and Nebojsa Pavkovic, indicted in 2003 [YUN 2003, p. 1312] on four counts of crimes against humanity (deportation; other inhumane acts; murder; and persecutions on political, racial and religious grounds) and one count of violations of the laws or customs of war (murder) for acts allegedly committed against Kosovo Albanians, were transferred to the Tribunal on 3 February and 4 and 24 April, respectively. All three accused pleaded not guilty to charges at their initial appearance. Mr. Lazarevic filed a request for provisional release, which was granted on 14 April. Mr. Pavkovic and Mr. Lukic applied for provisional release on 10 June and 20 May, respectively. On 1 April, the prosecution filed a motion seeking joinder of the case with that of former Serb officials Milan Milutinovic, Dragoljub Ojdanic and Nikola Sainovic [YUN 1999, p. 1214]. The Trial Chamber granted the motion on 8 July and ordered the prosecution to submit a consolidated indictment by 15 August.

In the appeal of Dragan Nikolic, filed in 2004 [YUN 2004, p. 1278] from the Trial Chamber sentencing judgement of 23 years in prison [YUN 2003, p. 1314], the Appeals Chamber, on 4 February, while supporting the appellant's position that the Trial Chamber had erred in taking into account the time he would actually serve in detention, dismissed the grounds of appeal in all other respects and imposed a new sentence on Mr. Nikolic of 20 years in prison.

In the case of Miroslav Kvoka and Others [YUN 2001, p. 1201], the Appeals Chamber, in a judgment issued on 28 February, allowed, in part, his fourth and fifth grounds of appeal, but dismissed the remaining grounds of appeal in all other aspects and affirmed his conviction and sentence of seven years' imprisonment as imposed by the Trial Chamber. In the case against Zoran Zigic, who was sentenced to 20 years in prison [YUN 2001, p. 1201], the Chamber, while allowing the accused grounds of appeal concerning his responsibility for crimes committed in the Omarska camp, affirmed his sentence. On 28 February, the Appeals Chamber dismissed all grounds of appeal of Mlado Radic and Dragoljub Prcac and affirmed the sentences of 20 years and 5 years' imprisonment imposed on them, respectively. Mr. Radic's request for provisional release was denied on 13

July and he was awaiting transfer to serve the remainder of his sentence.

Stanislav Galic, sentenced to 20 years' imprisonment in 2003 [YUN 2003, p. 1315], with one of the judges filing a separate and partially dissenting opinion, with an alternative recommendation of 10 years in prison, filed an appeal brief in 2004, including four rule 115 motions for the admission of additional evidence. On 22 March, the Appeals Chamber rejected the second rule motion. The following day, the Appeals Chamber granted him provisional release, from 31 March to 3 April, to attend the memorial service for his late sister. On 30 June, the Appeals Chamber rendered a consolidated decision and dismissed Mr. Galic's first and third motions for the admission of additional evidence. The Appeals Chamber was in the process of considering the fourth rule 115 motion.

In the case of Vinko Pandurevic and Milorad Trbic, Mr. Pandurevic, initially indicted in 2001 [YUN 2001, p. 1200], was transferred to the Tribunal on 23 March, and Mr. Trbic on 7 April. By an order dated 24 March, a new indictment was confirmed against them and both pleaded not guilty to all the charges on 3 and 11 May, respectively. On 10 June, the prosecution filed a motion seeking joinder of the case with those of Vujadin Popovic, Ljubisa Beara, Drago Nikolic, Ljubomir Borovcanin, Zdravko Tolimir, Radivoje Miletic and Milan Gvero and for all nine accused to be jointly charged and tried under one indictment. The motion was granted on 29 June.

The defence closed the cases for Enver Hadzihasanovic and Amir Kubura on 11 April and 15 July, respectively. Both of the accused had pleaded not guilty in 2001 [YUN 2001, p. 1199] and, by a third amended indictment, were further charged in 2003 with violations of the laws or customs of war [YUN 2003, p. 1314], and were provisionally released in 2004 [YUN 2004, p. 1278].

On 14 April, Milan Milutinovic, Dragoljub Ojdanic and Nikola Sainovic were granted provisional release, subject to a stay pending possible appeal by the prosecution. The following day, the prosecution decided not to appeal the Chamber's decision. On 1 April, it had filed a motion seeking joinder of the case with that of Nebojsa Pavkovic, Vladimir Lazarevic, Vlastimir Dordevic (who remained at large) and Sreten Lukic, and for all seven accused to be jointly charged and tried under one joint indictment. On 8 July, the Chamber granted the prosecution's motion and issued an order for a consolidated indictment by 15 August. The trial was to commence in 2006.

Vujadin Popovic, who was originally indicted in 2002, and charged, along with Ljubisa Beara, Drago Nikolic, Ljubomir Borovcanin, Vinko Pandurevic and Zdravko Tolimir, with genocide and conspiracy to commit genocide, as well as five counts of crimes against humanity and one count of violation of the laws or customs of war, surrendered on 14 April and was transferred to The Hague on the same day. At his initial appearance on 18 April, he pleaded not guilty to all charges. Mr. Popovic's request for provisional release, filed on 22 June, was refused by the Trial Chamber on 22 July, as it was not satisfied that the accused would appear for the trial if released. The defence submitted an application for leave to appeal against the decision of the Trial Chamber on 27 July. The trial was expected to commence in 2006.

The trial of Momcilo Krajisnik, charged in 2001 [YUN 2000, p. 1221] with eight counts of genocide, crimes against humanity, and violations of the laws or customs of war in more than 30 municipalities in Bosnia and Herzegovina during 1991 and 1992, began in 2004 [YUN 2004, p. 1279]. The Trial Chamber issued a scheduling order on 26 April, which allowed the prosecution's case to be completed by July. After hearing closing arguments by the defence, a judgement was expected to be rendered in 2006.

Kosta Bulatovic, a witness in the trial of Slobodan Milosevic, was charged with knowingly and wilfully interfering with the administration of justice on 19 and 20 April, by contumaciously refusing to answer the prosecution's questions. The trial was held on 6 May and a week later, the Trial Chamber found that the respondent was in contempt of the Tribunal. The Chamber imposed a sentence of four months' imprisonment; however, it suspended the operation of that sentence for a period of two years. On 27 May, Mr. Bulatovic filed an appeal, which was rejected by the Appeals Chamber.

Beqe Beqaj, indicted in 2004 [YUN 2004, p. 1277], was found guilty for contempt or attempted contempt for allegedly interfering or attempting to interfere with potential witnesses in the trial against Fatmir Limaj, Haradin Bala and Isak Musliu [YUN 2003, p. 1311]. He was provisionally released on 7 March and called back for trial on 22 April. The trial commenced on 25 April, and the Trial Chamber, in a judgement rendered on 30 April, found the accused guilty of contempt, but acquitted him for incitement to contempt. He was sentenced to four months' imprisonment, which he had already served in pre-trial detention and was released the following day.

In the case against Radovan Stankovic, who was charged in 2002, along with others [YUN 2002, p. 1277], of crimes against humanity and violations of the laws or customs of war for acts allegedly committed against Muslim women, the Prosecutor's motion [YUN 2004, p. 1281] requesting the referral of the case to the State Court of Bosnia and Herzegovina in Sarajevo was granted on 17 May. The decision was appealed on its merits by Mr. Stankovic, whereas the Prosecutor filed a notice of appeal on 30 May against the part of the decision requiring her to monitor the process in Sarajevo and report regularly to the Referral Bench. On 22 July, the Referral Bench granted the transfer of Mr. Stankovic.

On 8 June, Naser Oric, who had pleaded not guilty in 2004 [YUN 2004, p. 1280] to six counts of violations of law or customs of war, was acquitted by the Trial Chamber on both counts of alleged plunder of public or private property. The Chamber ordered the continuation of the case in relation to the other counts that were set out in the indictment. The Appeals Chamber granted an interlocutory appeal on 20 July that allowed the defence to call more witnesses and discuss more issues than originally outlined by the Trial Chamber.

On 29 June, the prosecution, in the case of Ljubisa Beara, who was indicted in 2004 [YUN 2004, p. 1277] for crimes committed in Srebrenica, filed a motion on 10 June, seeking a joinder of the case with those of Vujadin Popovic, Drago Nikolic, Ljubomir Borovcanin, Zdravko Tolimir, Radivoje Miletic and Milan Gvero and Vinko Pandurevic and Milorad Trbic (see p. 1390). On 29 June, the Tribunal President issued an order referring the joinder motion to the trial Chamber.

In the case against Zeljko Mejakic, Momcilo Gruban, Dusen Fustar and Dusko Knezevic, charged jointly in 2002 [YUN 2002, p. 1279], the Referral Bench, by its decision of 20 July, granted the Prosecutor's motion [YUN 2004, p. 1281] to refer the case to Bosnia and Herzegovina.

In the case against Milan Babic, sentenced to 13 years' imprisonment in 2004 for crimes against humanity and violations of the laws and customs of war [YUN 2004, p. 1277], the Appeals Chamber rendered its judgement in his appeal on 18 July and unanimously found that the Trial Chamber had erred in finding that the appellant's conduct subsequent to the crime of persecution could not be considered in mitigation solely because it did not include the alleviation of the suffering of victims, and had committed an error of law in not taking into account the appellant's attempts to further peace as a mitigating circumstance. While allowing the corresponding ground of appeal in part, the Appeals Chamber found that the error did not have an impact on the sentence. It unanimously dismissed each of the remaining grounds of appeal and affirmed the sentence of 13 years' imprisonment imposed by the Trial Chamber.

On 19 July, the Prosecutor filed a motion seeking a joinder of the case of Vojislav Seselj, charged in 2003 [YUN 2003, p. 1311; YUN 2004, p. 1277] in a 14-count indictment alleging crimes against humanity and violations of the laws or customs of war, with those of Milan Martic, Jovica Stanisic and Franko Simatovic [YUN 2003, p. 1311; YUN 2004, p. 1279], and for all four accused to be jointly charged and tried under one joint indictment.

Miroslav Deronjic, arrested in 2002 [YUN 2002, p. 1276], pleaded guilty in 2003 [YUN 2003, p. 1315] to charges brought against him and was sentenced in 2004 to 10 years' imprisonment [YUN 2004, p. 1278], which he appealed. On 20 July, the Appeals Chamber unanimously dismissed all the grounds of appeal filed by the appellant and affirmed the sentence imposed by the Trial Chamber.

In the case of Pasko Ljubicic [YUN 2001, p. 1200; YUN 2002, p. 1279; YUN 2003, p. 1313; YUN 2004, p. 1282], the Prosecutor, on 21 July, requested that it be referred to Bosnia and Herzegovina.

The trial against Mile Mrksic, Miroslav Radic and Veselin Sljivancanin commenced on 10 October. The three accused, who had been indicted jointly in 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 1322], were charged with five counts of crimes against humanity and four counts of violations of the laws or customs of war in relation to the mass killings in the Vukovar Hospital in November 1991. Earlier, on 8 February, the prosecution had filed a request with the Referral Bench to refer the case to Serbia and Montenegro or Croatia, which was later withdrawn.

Ivica Rajic pled guilty on 26 October to four counts of wilful killing, inhuman treatment, extensive destruction and appropriation of property in the area of Stupni Do in central Bosnia in 1993.

In the trial against Fatmir Limaj, Haradin Bala and Isak Musliu, who were arrested in 2003 [YUN 2003, p. 1311], the Trial Chamber in a judgement delivered on 30 November, acquitted Mr. Limaj and Mr. Musliu but found Mr. Bala guilty on three counts of violations of the laws or customs of war, torture, and cruel treatment and murder committed during 1998 in a Kosovo Liberation Army prison camp in the village of Llapushnik in central Kosovo (Serbia and Montenegro) and in the nearby Berisha mountains. He was sentenced to 13 years' imprisonment.

By a 7 December decision of the Trial Chamber, Miroslav Bralo was sentenced to 20 years' imprisonment, after he changed his plea of not guilty to guilty on 19 July, to charges including persecutions, murder and torture, for his role in an attack on the village of Ahmici in Bosnia and Herzegovina in 1993.

The trial of Milan Martic commenced on 13 December. He was indicted in 2002 [YUN 2002, p. 1276] for charges alleging crimes against humanity and violations of the laws or customs of war against Croat civilians committed by military and police organizations in the SAO Krajina (later Republic of Serbian Krajina) between 1991 and 1995. The trial was expected to conclude towards the end of 2006.

In the case against Slobodan Milosevic, the former President of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (FRY) (Serbia and Montenegro), whose trial commenced in 2002 [YUN 1999, p. 1214; YUN 2001, p. 1201; YUN 2002, p. 1277, YUN 2004, p. 1278], and who was charged with 66 counts of grave breaches of the 1949 Geneva Conventions, violations of the laws or customs of war, genocide or complicity in genocide and crimes against humanity, committed in Croatia, Bosnia and Herzegovina, and Kosovo, the Chamber ordered that the accused have the same amount of time to present his defence case as the prosecution. The parties indicated that they intended to bring cases in rebuttal and rejoinder, after the close of the defence case.

Judges of the Court

Ad litem judges

Extension of terms of office

The Secretary-General, on 7 January [A/59/666-S/2005/9], transmitted a letter to the General Assembly and Security Council Presidents, respectively, requesting the extension of the terms of office of seven short-term or ad litem judges of the Tribunal, which were expiring on 11 June, to allow them to finish adjudicating the cases on which they had begun working. Since those judges were not eligible for re-election, each trial would have to start anew with fresh panels of jurists, the rehearing of witnesses and representation of arguments if they were not allowed to continue, with substantial financial consequences and would negatively impact the target dates of the Tribunal's completion strategy. The Secretary-General also requested the appointment of two additional members from the current pool of ad litem judges to try cases anticipated to continue beyond 11 June.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 18 January [meeting 5112], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1581(2005). The draft [S/2005/31] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Taking note of the letter dated 6 January 2005 from the Secretary-General to the President of the Security Council,

Recalling its resolutions 1503(2003) of 28 August 2003 and 1534(2004) of 26 March 2004,

Bearing in mind the statement made to the Security Council at its 5086th meeting on 23 November 2004 by the President of the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia, in which he expressed the commitment by the International Tribunal to the Completion Strategy,

Expressing its expectation that the extension of the terms of office of the ad litem judges concerned will enhance the effectiveness of trial proceedings and contribute towards ensuring the implementation of the Completion Strategy,

1. Decides, in response to the request by the Secretary-General, that:

(a) Judge Rasoazanany and Judge Swart, once replaced as ad litem judges of the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia, finish the Hadzihasanovic case, which they have begun before expiry of their term of office;

(b) Judge Brydensholt and Judge Eser, once replaced as ad litem judges of the International Tribunal, finish the Oric case, which they have begun before expiry of their term of office;

(c) Judge Thelin and Judge Van den Wyngaert, once replaced as ad litem judges of the International Tribunal, finish the Limaj case, which they have begun before expiry of their term of office;

(d) Judge Canivell, once replaced as an ad litem judge of the International Tribunal, finish the Krajisnik case, which he has begun before expiry of his term of office;

(e) Judge Szenasi, if appointed to serve in the International Tribunal for the trial of the Halilovic case, proceed, once replaced as an ad litem judge of the International Tribunal, to finish that case, which he would have begun before expiry of his term of office;

(f) Judge Hanoteau, if appointed to serve in the International Tribunal for the trial of the Krajisnik case, proceed, once replaced as an ad litem judge of the International Tribunal, to finish that case, which he would have begun before expiry of his term of office;

2. Takes note, in this regard, of the intention of the International Tribunal to finish the Hadzihasanovic case before the end of September 2005, the Halilovic case before the end of October 2005, the Oric and Limaj cases before the end of November 2005 and the Krajisnik case before the end of April 2006.

The General Assembly, by decision 59/406 B of 20 January, endorsed the Secretary-General's recommendations, which were also endorsed by the Council in resolution 1581(2005) (see above).

Election of judges

The Secretary-General, on 24 February [S/2005/127], informed the Security Council that, in response to the request for nominations to replace the 27 ad litem judges whose terms of office were to expire on 11 June, 11 nominations had been received for the election of ad litem judges of the Trial Chambers within the statutory 60-day period. Since those nominations were short of the minimum number of 54 required by the Court's Statute, he requested the Council to extend the deadline for nominations by 30 days. On 14 March [S/2005/159], the Council agreed to extend the deadline until 31 March. On 11 April [S/2005/236], the Secretary-General forwarded to the Council and the General Assembly, respectively, the list of 22 nominations received, together with their curricula vitae.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 20 April [meeting 5165], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1597(2005). The draft [S/2005/261] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolutions 827(1993) of 25 May 1993, 1166(1998) of 13 May 1998, 1329(2000) of 30 November 2000, 1411(2002) of 17 May 2002, 1431(2002) of 14 August 2002, 1481(2003) of 19 May 2003, 1503(2003) of 28 August 2003 and 1534(2004) of 26 March 2004,

Having considered the letter dated 24 February 2005 from the Secretary-General to the President of the Security Council transmitting the list of candidates for election as ad litem judges of the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia,

Noting that the Secretary-General had suggested that the deadline for nominations be extended until 31 March 2005 and that the President indicated in his reply of 14 March 2005 that the Security Council had agreed to the extension of the deadline,

Having considered the letter dated 11 April 2005 from the Secretary-General to the President of the Security Council, in which the Secretary-General suggested that the deadline for the nomination of candidates for election as ad litem judges be further extended,

Noting that the number of candidates continues to fall short of the minimum number required by the statute of the Tribunal to be elected,

Considering that the twenty-seven ad litem judges elected by the General Assembly at its 102nd plenary meeting on 12 June 2001 whose term of office expires on 11 June 2005 should be eligible for re-election, and wishing to amend the statute for that purpose,

Noting that, should the cumulative period of service of an ad litem judge of the Tribunal amount to three years or more, this will not result in any change in their entitlements or benefits and, in particular, will not give rise to any additional entitlements or benefits other than those that already exist and which will, in such an eventuality, be extended pro-rata by virtue of the extension of service,

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Decides to amend article 13 ter of the statute of the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia and to replace that article with the provision set out in the annex to the present resolution;

2. Decides, further to the letter dated 11 April 2005 from the Secretary-General to the President of the Security Council to extend the deadline for nominations of ad litem judges under the amended provision of the statute for a further thirty days from the date of the adoption of the present resolution;

3. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Annex

Article 13 ter Election and appointment of ad litem judges

(c) The Secretary-General shall forward the nominations received to the Security Council. 2. During any term, ad litem judges will be appointed by the Secretary-General, upon request of the President of the International Tribunal, to serve in the Trial Chambers for one or more trials, for a cumulative period of up to, but not including three years. When requesting the appointment of any particular ad litem judge, the President of the International Tribunal shall bear in mind the criteria set out in article 13 of the statute regarding the composition of the Chambers and sections of the Trial Chambers, the considerations set out in paragraphs 1 (b) and (c) above and the number of votes the ad litem judge received in the General Assembly.

On 27 May [S/2005/346], the Secretary-General informed the Council that the number of nominations stood at 27 and requested that it extend further the deadline for nominations for the ad litem judges by another 30 days from the date of the Council's decision. The Council, by a 7 June letter to the Secretary-General [S/2005/371], postponed the deadline for nominations until 7 July. By a 1 August note [A/59/888], the Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly the curricula vitae of the 34 candidates nominated.

Permanent judges

On 14 September [A/60/362-S/2005/593], the Secretary-General forwarded to the Security Council and the General Assembly a request from the President of the Tribunal to have Judge Christine Van Den Wyngaret (Belgium), whose term of office as an ad litem judge was extended by Council resolution 1581(2005) (see p. 1392) to 30 November, to commence her term of office as a permanent judge on 3 October for the Mrksic et al case; Judge Van Den Wyngaret had been elected by Assembly decision 59/406 [YUN 2004, p. 1283] to serve as a permanent judge of the Tribunal, beginning on 17 November.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 30 September [meeting 5273], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1629 (2005). The draft [S/2005/615] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Taking note of the letter dated 14 September 2005 from the Secretary-General to the President of the Security Council, Decides that, notwithstanding article 12 of the statute of the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991 and notwithstanding the fact that Judge Christine Van Den Wyngaert's elected term as a permanent judge of the Tribunal will, in accordance with article 13 bis of the statute of the Tribunal, only begin on 17 November 2005, she shall be assigned as a permanent judge to the Mrksic et al. case, which is due to commence on 3 October 2005.

The Assembly endorsed the Council's action on 4 October (decision 60/402).

Office of the Prosecutor

During the year, there was a significant increase in pretrial, trial and appellate work outputs. No new indictments (except for contempt of court) were issued. Efforts were made to obtain full cooperation of relevant countries, resulting in several arrests and better production of documents. The Office of the Prosecutor continued to assist in the reform of the judicial systems of the countries of the Former Yugoslavia. It continued to transfer cases to national courts and cooperated with the national authorities on non-referred war crimes cases. Altogether, 13 motions for the transfer of 21 accused were filed.

Cooperation continued with relevant Governments and international institutions to secure arrests or surrenders. Cooperation of the entity government of the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina, and the Government of Croatia, with regard to requests for assistance, information, archives, witnesses and suspects, were satisfactory. However, the authorities of Serbia and Montenegro, in particular the Government of Serbia, and the authorities of the entity government of the Republika Srpska (Bosnia and Herzegovina) failed to arrest a single fugitive.

The Registry

The Registry continued to provide administrative and judicial support to the Tribunal, and facilitated the work of the Chambers and the Office of the Prosecutor and the defence. It also managed the Detention Unit, the Victims and Witnesses Section, the legal aid office and the interpretation and translation service. The Registry also facilitated the implementation of the Tribunal's completion strategy, initiated in 2002 [YUN 2002, p. 1275], including the action plan to relocate protected witnesses and their families. In 2005, the Detention Unit successfully moved all detainees, staff and infrastructure from two physically separate units into a single facility of 84 cells, thereby facilitating a more cohesive programme of remand for all detainees and allowing for better flexibility to hold high-profile accused. The former Public Information Service and Outreach Programme were reorganized into the Communications Services. The Web Unit of the Media/Web Outreach Office continued to develop the Tribunal website in English, French and Bosnian/Croatian/Serbian as well as information in Albanian and Macedonian and maintained internet broadcast of courtroom proceedings.

The Secretary-General updated the costing parameters in December [A/60/600]. The revised figure of $305,137,300 took into account the effects of changes in the rates of exchange and inflation.

International Tribunal for Rwanda

In 2005, the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda (ICTR), in Arusha, the United Republic of Tanzania, delivered 3 trial judgements. In May [S/2005/336], the ICTR President submitted an updated and revised completion strategy (see p. 1402), which confirmed that the Tribunal was on course to complete the trials by 2008. The lifting of the freeze on the recruitment of new staff at the Tribunal at the beginning of 2005, allowed the Tribunal to recruit key personnel directly related to court proceedings. A fourth court room, inaugurated on 1 March through voluntary contributions from Norway and the United Kingdom, would allow full-day sessions of trials.

The activities of ICTR, established by Security Council resolution 955(1994) [YUN 1994, p. 299], were covered in two reports to the Council and the General Assembly, for the periods 1 July 2004 to 30 June 2005 [A/60/229-S/2005/534] and 1 July 2005 to 30 June 2006 [A/61/265-S/2006/658]. On 10 October, the Assembly took note of the 2004/2005 report (decision 60/505).

The Chambers

New cases

Following his indictment of 22 July, Joseph Serugendo, former Technical Chief of Radio Rwanda and Radio Télévision Libre des Milles Collines (RTLM), was arrested on 16 September in Libreville, Gabon, and transferred to the Tribunal's Detention Facility in Arusha on 23 September. According to the indictment, the accused acted in concert with others, to organize and conduct the 1994 genocide in Rwanda.

Callixte Kalimanzira, acting Minister of Interior of Rwanda in 1994, surrendered to the Tanzanian authorities on 8 November and was immediately transferred to the Detention Facility. He was charged with genocide, in the alternative complicity in genocide and with direct and public indictment to commit genocide.

Ongoing trials

On 25 January, the prosecution closed its case against Athanase Seromba, the Catholic priest of Nyange Parish in the Kivumu Commune, Kibuye Prefecture, whose trial commenced in 2004 [YUN 2004, p. 1288]. The defence case was scheduled to commence on 10 May; however, on 15 April, the accused requested a withdrawal of his assigned lead counsel, which resulted in a delay in the resumption of trial. On 8 June, the Registrar appointed a new lead counsel. The defence started its case on 31 October.

By a decision of 28 January, the Appeals Chamber in the case against Joseph Nzabirinda, disposed his notice of appeal of the Trial Chamber's "Decision on Joseph Nzabirinda's Motion to Set Aside the Registrar's Decision to Withhold the Amount Owed to Him in Meeting the Cost of His Defence". The Appeals Chamber held that the impugned decision was without interlocutory appeal and that it lacked jurisdiction to consider the Appellant's notice of appeal. Mr. Nzabirinda, a former investigator working for the defence team of Sylvain Nsabimana, was alleged to have carried out crimes in Ngoma commune together with Joseph Kanyabashi. He was arrested in 2001 [YUN 2001, p. 1208] and transferred to the Tribunal in 2002 [YUN 2002, p. 128].

In the joint trial against Pauline Nyiramasuhuko, Arsène Shalom Ntahobali, Sylvain Nsabimana, Alphonse Nteziryayo, Joseph Kanyabashi and Elie Ndayambaje, referred to as the "Butare" case, which began in 2001 [YUN 2001, p. 1208], the defence commenced its proceeding on 31 January following the prosecution's closure of its case in 2004. [YUN 2004, p. 1287].

A separate and amended indictment against André Rwamakuba, a former Minister of Primary and Secondary Education, who was indicted with three other accused in the case of Karemera and Others, was filed on 23 February. His trial commenced on 9 June and was expected to end in 2006.

On 14 March, Vincent Rutaganira, who had pleaded not guilty in 2002 [YUN 2002, p. 1285], but entered a guilty plea for crimes against humanity (extermination) in 2004 [YUN 2004, p. 1288], was sentenced to 6 years in prison.

The defence case of four senior Rwandan military officers (Théoneste Bagosora, Gratien Kabiligi, Anatole Nsengiyumva, Aloys Ntabakuze), which was originally scheduled for 12 January, had to be adjourned following the withdrawal of an assigned lead counsel by the Registrar. The trial, which began in 2002 [YUN 2002, p. 1285] and was referred to as the "Military I" case, resumed on 11 April. The presentation of defence evidence was scheduled to conclude in 2006.

The case against Mikaeli Muhimana, which commenced in 2004 [YUN 2004, p. 1287], closed on 20 January. On 28 April, he was convicted of genocide and crimes against humanity (murder and rape) and sentenced to imprisonment for life. Following the judgment, he was granted an extension of time for filing the notice of appeal until no more than 30 days from when the French text of the judgment, expected in 2006, would become available.

In a judgement delivered on 20 May, the Appeals Chamber, in the case against Laurent Semanza, whose trial began in 2000 [YUN 2000, p. 1226, YUN 2001, p. 1208, YUN 2002, p. 1286,YUN 2004, p. 1288], partly reversed a conviction for complicity in genocide; reversed an acquittal for genocide and entered a conviction for genocide; partly reversed a conviction for aiding and abetting extermination as a crime against humanity and entered a conviction for ordering extermination; reversed acquittals for two counts of serious violations of common article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions and the 1977 Additional Protocol thereto and entered convictions under those counts for aiding and abetting murders, instigating rape, torture and murder and for committing torture and intentional murder. It affirmed the remainder of the convictions entered by the Trial Chamber, quashed the sentence of 25 years' imprisonment and entered a new sentence of 35 years' imprisonment.

On 23 May, in the case of Juvénal Kajelijeli, the Appeals Chamber, vacating the convictions for genocide and extermination insofar as they were based on a finding of superior responsibility and having found that the accused rights were seriously violated during his arrest and pre-trial detention, set aside the two life sentences and one sentence of 15 years in prison imposed by the Trial Chamber in 2003 [YUN 2003, p. 1321], and converted them into a single sentence of 45 years' imprisonment.

On 23 June, the prosecution closed its case against Casimir Bizimungu, Justin Mugenzi, Jérôme Bicamumpaka and Prosper Mugiraneza, referred to as the "Government II" case [YUN 1999, pp. 1222 & 1223, YUN 2003, p. 1321]. The Appeals Chamber had earlier dismissed the prosecution's appeal against the Trial Chamber's decision denying leave to amend the indictment [YUN 2004, p. 1286]. The presentation by the defence for Mr. Mugenzi, the former Minister of Commerce of Rwanda, commenced on 1 November.

On 20 July, the prosecution closed its case against Tharcisse Muvunyi, the former colonel and commander of the École sous-officiers, whose trial commenced in 2004, after having called a total of 24 witnesses. The defence case started on 5 December and was expected to close by May 2006.

In the case of Jean de Dieu Kamuhanda, who had appealed the life sentences imposed on him by the Trial Chamber in 2004 [YUN 2004, p.1286], the Appeals Chamber, on 19 May, reaffirmed the convictions for genocide and extermination as crimes against humanity, vacated convictions for instigating and aiding and abetting genocide and extermination and affirmed the two concurrent sentences of imprisonment for life.

A fresh joint trial against Edouard Karemera, Andre Rwamakuba, Matthieu Ngirumpatse and Joseph Nzirorera commenced on 19 September. The trial, which had originally started in 2003 [YUN 2003, p. 1321] and was referred to as the "Government I" case [YUN 1999, pp. 1222 & 1223], was terminated when the Appeals Chamber, in 2004 [YUN 2004, p. 1287], disqualified the judges and ordered a new trial to commence in 2005. However, Mr. Rwamakuba (see above), by a decision of 14 February, was severed from the case and was tried as a single accused (see below).

The trial against Jean Mpambara, former bourgmestre of Rukara commune, who was arrested in 2001 [YUN 2001, p. 1207], commenced on 19 September. He was charged with one count of genocide, and a judgment was expected in 2006.

The trial against Protais Zigiranyirazo commenced on 3 October. He was arrested in 2001 [YUN 2001, p. 1207], and charged with extermination or murder as a crime against humanity and held membership of the Akazu, the inner circle of the late President of Rwanda, Juvénal Habyarimana. The defence was expected to present its case in October 2006.

On 17 November, Paul Bisengimana, the former bourgmestre of Gikoro commune, who was arrested in 2001 and pleaded not guilty to charges in 2002 [YUN 2002, p. 1285], entered a guilty plea to murder and extermination as crimes against humanity. Following the Chamber's initial rejection of the plea, the prosecution filed an amended indictment on 7 December, to which he subsequently pleaded guilty.

On 13 December, Aloys Simba, a retired military officer who was convicted of genocide and crimes against humanity (extermination and murder) for his role in massacres in Gikongoro Prefecture, was sentenced to 25 years' imprisonment. He had earlier pleaded not guilty to charges made against him in 2002 [YUN 2002, p. 1285] and his trial commenced in 2004 [YUN 2004, p. 1287].

Office of the Prosecutor

The Prosecutor continued to implement the completion strategy, in consultation with the President of the Tribunal. Further efforts were made in identifying States willing to try Tribunal indictees that were referred to them. During the year, various measures were taken to improve the prosecution's information and evidence management capacity and implementation of prosecutorial best practices. In that regard, impetus was given towards staff training and continuing education in the pursuit of the completion strategy. The Office of the Prosecutor stepped up its tracking activities to ensure that as many fugitives as possible were arrested sufficiently early to enable the Chambers to complete their trials before the end of 2008. In addition, the Prosecutor visited a number of African countries in which some of the fugitives were suspected to be and urged national authorities to cooperate more significantly in their arrest.

The Registry

The Registry continued to support the judicial process by servicing the Tribunal's other organs, participating in implementing the completion strategy and seeking support from States, international organizations and other stakeholders in the conduct of proceedings. During the year, it stepped up its outreach activities through judicial visits to the Tribunal and capacity-building training for members of the Rwandan judiciary and universities. It also maintained high-level diplomatic contacts and drafted numerous agreements with States or international organizations to ensure the continued cooperation of Member States and international organizations with the Tribunal. Meanwhile, the Press and Public Affairs Unit increased its monitoring and internal circulation of Tribunal-related media reports and continued to improve the Tribunal's website.

Report of Secretary-General. In December [A/60/573], the Secretary-General submitted, in response to General Assembly resolution 59/273 [YUN 2004, p. 1290], the second performance report of ICTR for the 2004-2005 biennium, which reflected a decrease in requirements of $3,307,300 gross ($3,875,900 net) as compared with the revised appropriation of $255,909,500 (gross) for the 2004-2005 biennium. The reduction in requirements was due to the combined effect of exchange rates and inflation ($1,285,100 gross) and decreases in post incumbency and other changes ($4,592,400 gross). The General Assembly was requested to revise the appropriation for 2004-2005 to $252,602,200 gross ($227,630,600 net) for the Special Account for ICTR.

ACABQ's comments and observations on the performance report were contained in its December report [A/60/591].

Functioning of the Tribunals

Staff retention

In response to General Assembly resolutions 59/273 [YUN 2004, p. 1290] and 59/274 [ibid., p. 1286], the Secretary-General submitted an October report [A/60/436] on staff retention and legacy issues. According to the report, as the Tribunals moved closer to the completion of their mandates, it was expected that the number of staff departures would increase, as they sought more attractive benefits and/or longer-term appointments in other United Nations and common system organizations than those offered by the Tribunals. To ensure the timely completion of the mandates of the Tribunals, it was necessary to curtail the flow of departures of experienced staff, avoid the slow down of trials and the financial costs of recruiting and training new staff. The Secretary-General therefore proposed, in addition to a number of other measures, that a retention bonus be introduced for staff until specific posts were no longer needed.

On the question of legacy issues, the statutes of the Tribunals provided for the continuation of a number of functions after the completion of their mandates, which included judicial, legacy and administrative issues, such as, supervision of the enforcement of sentences, witness monitoring and their protection. On the administrative side, arrangements and related provisions were required for the payment of pensions to judges and surviving spouses after the closure of the Tribunals, and the liabilities associated with the after-service health insurance scheme for retired staff members; the legal nature, composition and location of the entity to be entrusted with the responsibility of carrying out those functions. Both Tribunals were currently considering those issues with a view to developing a final position and recommendation to the Assembly.

ACABQ, in its December report [A/60/591], believed that the idea of a retention bonus should be pursued and recommended that an analysis of the financial and other implications of introducing such a measure be provided to the Assembly.

Implementation of completion strategies

Progress assessment

ICTY

In response to Security Council resolutions 1503(2003) [YUN 2003, p. 1330] and 1534(2004) [YUN 2004, p. 1292], the President of ICTY submitted reports in May [S/2005/343 & Corr. 1] and December [S/2005/781] revising and updating the ICTY completion strategy and detailing progress made towards its implementation.

In May, the President outlined measures taken to implement the completion strategy, including the establishment of two working groups—the Working Group on Speeding up Trials and the Working Group on Speeding up Appeals—to examine procedures and practices, with a view to improving working methods. He reported that it was definitely not feasible to envisage an end of all trial activity at the Tribunal by the end of 2008 due to the large number of indictees and fugitives who had arrived at the Tribunal since his last report [YUN 2004, p. 1293], as well as the filing and confirmation of seven new trials or amended indictments by the prosecution involving 13 accused. He predicted that trials would have to run into 2009. In December, the President confirmed that fact. Moreover, whether trials would conclude by the end of 2009 was subject to several factors. Since the May report, four contempt cases involving six accused were in progress. Of primary importance were the trials of the Tribunal's three most notorious suspects—Radovan Karadzic, Ratko Mladic, both of whom were indicted in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 1314], as well as the recently arrested Ante Gotovina, who was indicted in 2001 [YUN 2001, p. 1199]. If the other two fugitives were arrested in the near future, then the completion of all trials at the close of 2009 remained feasible. If not, their delivery date might well push the completion of all trials beyond that date.

ICTR

In response to Security Council resolutions 1503(2003) [YUN 2003, p. 1330] and 1534(2004) [YUN 2004, p. 1292], the President of ICTR submitted reports in May [S/2005/336] and December [S/2005/782] revising and updating the ICTR completion strategy and detailing progress made towards its implementation.

The reports reviewed recent judgments and trials in progress; cases for transfer to national jurisdictions for trial; the actual number of persons brought to trial at ICTR; and tracking and apprehension of fugitives. Although Council resolution 1503(2003) anticipated that all the work of ICTR and ICTY should be completed by 2010, the report noted that it was difficult at the current stage to indicate a completion strategy for the ICTR Appeals Chamber, as it was linked to the ICTY completion strategy. It was anticipated that the Appeals Chamber's workload would continue to increase. The report noted that the number of judges at the Appeals Chamber needed to be increased, if there were to be any reasonable prospects of completing the appeals by 2010. At the same time, 17 detainees were awaiting the commencement of their trials. Those cases would result in single-accused trials, some of which were expected to start in 2006, depending on Trial Chamber capacity. There were currently 26 accused in 10 cases, five of which were joint trials. It was estimated that by 2008, ICTR could complete trials and judgments involving sixty-five to seventy persons, depending on the progress of current and future trials. The Security Council considered those reports on 13 June [meeting 5199] and 15 December [meeting 5328].

International Criminal Court

The International Criminal Court (ICC), established by the Rome Statute [YUN 1998, p. 1209] as a permanent institution with jurisdiction over persons accused of the most serious crimes of international concern (genocide, crimes against humanity, war crimes and the crime of aggression), began the judicial phase of its operations in 2005. As at 31 December, the Statute had 139 signatories and 100 States parties.

In 2005, three States parties—Uganda, the Democratic Republic of the Congo (DRC) and the Central African Republic—referred situations in their respective territories to the Prosecutor. In March, following recommendations made by the International Commission of Inquiry for Darfur (see p. 323), the Security Council, by resolution 1593(2005) (see p. 324), referred the situation of Darfur to ICC.

One non-State party, Côte d'Ivoire, lodged a declaration accepting the jurisdiction of the Court. Based on available information, the Prosecutor initiated investigations in the DRC, Uganda and Darfur (the Sudan). The Prosecutor had also received more than 1,300 communications relating to situations that fell within the jurisdiction of the Court. In addition to the situations under investigation, the Prosecutor was monitoring eight other situations around the world, including in the Central African Republic and Côte d'Ivoire. The Pre-Trial Chamber began the first judicial proceedings and the first trial proceedings were expected to begin in 2006, provided the Court received sufficient cooperation from States in arresting and tranferring persons.

The activities of the Court were covered in an August report [A/60/177] transmitted by the Secretary-General to the General Assembly.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 23 November [meeting 53], the General Assembly adopted resolution 60/29 [draft: A/60/L.25 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 81].

Assembly of States Parties

The Assembly of States Parties to the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court met in The Hague for its fourth annual session (28 November–3 December [ICC-ASP/4/32].

The Assembly took note of its President's report on the activities of the Bureau, which had met 19 times since the last report [YUN 2004, p. 1296] to discuss the Court's progress and to review issues entrusted to it. In accordance with the Assembly's decision, the Bureau established two informal working groups: one, based in New York, to consider issues related to the relationship with the United Nations, including an ICC liaison office, the draft regulations of the trust fund for victims and the arrears of States parties to the Court; and the other, based in The Hague, to consider issues relating to the permanent premises of the Court, host country issues, including the Headquarters Agreement and the draft code of professional conduct for counsel.

The Assembly approved the programme budget for 2006 and the Working Capital Fund, with total appropriations of 82,464,400 euros. It took note of the reports of the external auditors on the audit of the financial statement of the Court and the Victims Trust Fund for the period ended 31 December 2004. It decided that if the term of office of members of the Board of the Trust Fund expired before the Assembly met to elect new members, those members would continue to serve until the election date.

The Assembly took note of the report to the Special Working Group on the Crime of Aggression and related reports and the report of the Working Group on the Trust Fund for Victims. It adopted the draft Code of Professional Conduct for Counsel. The Assembly agreed that the pension scheme for judges should be funded on an accrual basis and managed externally. It asked the Court to report on the most cost-effective option for managing the pension scheme, including the option of joining the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund. The Assembly requested that Committee on Budget and Finance to consider and report on the issue of including, for the purposes of determining pensions payable by the Court, pensions payable to individual judges who had served at other international tribunals and organizations. It established the guidelines for the selection and engagement of gratis personnel at the Court.

The Assembly decided to establish a Liaison Office in New York and took note of the report of the Working Group on the Permanent Premises.

The Chambers

The judicial activities of the Court were conducted by the Chambers, which consisted of 18 judges, organized in three divisions: the Appeals Division, the Trial Division and the Pre-Trial Division.

The Court began its first judicial proceedings at the pre-trial level. The Presidency constituted three Pre-Trial Chambers: Pre-Trial Chamber I–DRC, and Darfur (the Sudan); Pre-Trial Chamber II–Uganda; Pre-Trial Chamber III–Central African Republic. On 17 February, Pre-Trial Chamber I issued the first judicial decision in a case, deciding to convene a status conference with the Prosecutor and his representatives on the situation in the DRC. The other case before the Court was that of Joseph Kony, Vincent Otti, Okot Odhinambo and Dominic Ongwen (Uganda). Also before the Court was the situation in Darfur, the Sudan (see p. 1403).

Office of the Prosecutor

Investigations

The Office of the Prosecutor initiated investigations into three situations (the DRC, Uganda and Darfur, the Sudan) and was also collecting information on eight other situations of concern. Its investigations in the situation in Uganda involved allegations of large-scale abductions, killings, torture and sexual violence. The majority of alleged abductees were children. The investigation was at an advanced stage after 10 months. The Office concluded a cooperation agreement with the Government of Uganda and made several missions to engage with local groups to establish relationships for cooperation and assessing the interests of victims. The Office also invited community leaders to The Hague to discuss how to coordinate its efforts with those of community leaders. The Office of the Prosecutor and the Registry established a field office in Uganda.

The investigation of the situation in the DRC involved allegations of thousands of deaths by mass murder and summary execution since 2002, as well as large-scale patterns of rape, torture and use of child soldiers. Numerous armed groups active in the DRC were allegedly involved in crimes. Given the scale of the situation, the investigation of the cases would proceed in sequence; cases selected on the basis of gravity were prioritized in 2005, while others would be developed subsequently. The first investigations were progressing well. The Office of the Prosecutor and the Registry established a field office in Kinshasa and a field presence in Bunia and concluded a cooperation agreement with the Government. However, because of logistical challenges and the lack of effective control over many areas, the Government's ability to cooperate with the Office remained a great challenge for the investigation.

The Office of the Prosecutor was also investigating in the Darfur region of the Sudan, allegations of the killing of thousands of civilians and widespread destruction and looting of villages, leading to the displacement of approximately 1.9 million civilians, as well as allegations of a pervasive pattern of rape and sexual violence and persistent targeting and intimidation of humanitarian personnel. Following the referral of the case to ICC by the Security Council in resolution 1593(2005) (see p. 324), the Office collected more than 2,500 items from the International Commission of Inquiry for Darfur (see p. 323), as well as over 3,000 documents from other sources. The Office was in contact with more than 100 groups and individuals and interviewed more than 50 experts. On 1 June, the Prosecutor initiated an investigation and informed Pre-Trial Chamber I. The Prosecutor reported to the Security Council in June [meeting 5216] and December [meeting 5321] on progress made in the investigations. The Office would identify those individuals who bore the greatest responsibility for the crimes and assess the admissibility of the selected cases.

The Registry

The Registry worked to build the operational and administrative support structures for the Court, while also establishing mechanisms, policies and regulations to pursue its mandate in the areas of victim's participation and reparations, witness protection, defence and outreach. To enable the Court to operate efficiently and to work in a web-based environment, the Registry established a number of information systems. The Registry continued efforts to raise awareness of the Court and its activities. It strengthened the Court's public information capacity to support its outreach services in countries where the Court was active, including the establishment of a documentation centre and a website. It also undertook comparative studies relating to the establishment of the permanent premises of the Court, and developed a legal aid scheme to ensure sufficient means for the defence.

The Registry also provided administrative support to the Court's field operations, especially to support victims, witnesses, defence and outreach.

Support for those operations also entailed, among other things, providing security, which could vary between situations. The Registry undertook a number of training programmes for local authorities.

Chapter III

Legal aspects of international political relations

In 2005, the International Law Commission (ILC) continued to examine topics suitable for the progressive development of codification of international law. It considered aspects of State liability, the responsibility of States to cooperate in cases of mutual interest, and the scope of such questions as diplomatic protection and unilateral State actions, and reconstituted a study group to examine the increasing fragmentation of international law. Special Rapporteurs presented reports on the examination of treaties and international agreements. ILC also considered two new agenda items, the expulsion of aliens and the effects of armed conflicts on treaties.

United Nations instruments for the suppression of international terrorism continued their work during 2005. The Secretary-General's annual report on the implementation of the 1994 Declaration on Measures to Eliminate International Terrorism addressed the status of State and international organization participation in anti-terrorism measures. The Ad Hoc Committee on the convention for suppression of nuclear terrorism met for its ninth session, and recommending to the General Assembly a resolution on that topic. The Assembly adopted the International Convention on the Suppression of Acts of Nuclear Terrorism. It also adopted the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Safety of United Nations and Associated Personnel.

International Law Commission

The International Law Commission (ILC) held its fifty-seventh session in Geneva in two parts (2 May–3 June; 11 July–5 August) [A/60/10]. During the second part, the International Law Seminar held its forty-first session, which was attended by 24 participants, mostly from developing countries. They observed ILC meetings, attended specially arranged lectures and participated in working groups on specific topics.

ILC, assisted by working groups and a Drafting Committee, continued to advance its work on reservations to treaties by adopting two draft guidelines dealing with the definition of objections to reservations and to the late formulation or widening of the scope of a reservation. It also heard a briefing from the Special Rapporteur on the topic of diplomatic protection and adopted nine draft articles on responsibility of international organizations and reviewed the work of previous sessions on international liability in the case of loss from transboundary hazardous activities. In addition, ILC considered the Special Rapporteur's report on shared natural resources and established a working group on transboundary groundwaters to review the 25 draft articles submitted by the Rapporteur. On the issue of the unilateral acts of States, the Commission considered analyses of 11 cases of State practice and conclusions thereon and reconstituted the working group on the topic. It exchanged views on the topic of the fragmentation of international law: difficulties arising from the diversification and expansion of international law, based on a briefing by the chairman of the study group on the subject.

ILC considered the Special Rapporteur's first report on the effects of armed conflicts on treaties, containing a set of 14 draft articles. It endorsed the Special Rapporteur's suggestion that a written request for information be circulated to Member Governments. ILC decided to include in its current programme of work the topic "the obligation to extradite or prosecute (aut dedere aut judicare)", and appointed Zdzislaw Galicki (Poland) as Special Rapporteur for that topic. ILC also reiterated that the reduction of the payment of honorarium to the nominal amount of one dollar by Assembly resolution 56/272 [YUN 2002, p. 1402] mostly affected Special Rapporteurs, particularly those from developing countries, as it compromised support for their research. It decided to hold its fifty-eighth session in two parts: from 1 May to 9 June and from 3 July to 11 August 2006.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 23 November [meeting 53], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Sixth (Legal) Committee [A/60/516], adopted resolution 60/22 without vote [agenda item 80].

21. Recommends that the debate on the report of the International Law Commission at the sixty-first session of the General Assembly commence on 23 October 2006.

Unilateral acts of States

ILC considered the eighth report on unilateral acts of States [A/CN.4/557] by Special Rapporteur Victor Rodríguez Cedeño (Venezuela), which presented for consideration certain acts considered relevant for a more detailed study of practice relating to those acts and conclusions which could inform the practice. In an effort to formulate general rules applicable to all unilateral acts, and with a view to promoting the stability of relations between States, the Working Group on the topic examined several cases considered as unilateral acts: a note dated 22 November 1952 from the Minister for Foreign Affairs of Colombia; the declaration of the Minister for Foreign Affairs of Cuba concerning the supply of vaccines to the Eastern Republic of Uruguay; Jordan's waiver of claims to the West Bank territories; the Egyptian declaration of 24 April 1957; statements made by France concerning the suspension of nuclear tests in the South Pacific; protests by the Russian Federation against Turkmenistan and Azerbaijan; statements made by nuclear-weapon States; the Ihlen Declaration of 22 July 1919; the Truman Proclamation of 28 September 1945; statements concerning the United Nations and its staff members (tax exemptions and privileges); and the conduct of Thailand and Cambodia with reference to the Temple of Preah Vihear case. The report noted that the acts considered were unilateral and expressed in very different ways, including official notes, public declarations, presidential proclamations, political speeches and even conduct signifying acceptance or acquiescence. It concluded that form was relatively unimportant in determining whether one was dealing with a unilateral legal act that could produce legal effects on its own without the need for its acceptance, or for any other reaction on the part of the addressee. However, it might be that the formality of the act had a role to play in determining the intent of the author. Also, in the cases considered, the addressee also varied widely, including States, the international community, an entity that had not yet been consolidated as a State, or an international organization. Acts with which the Committee was concerned involved only those formulated by States, including acts formulated by a State and addressed to an international organization. Another relevant question was the need to establish the moment at which the acts produced legal effects from the time of their formulation, without the need for their acceptance or for any reaction conveying such acceptance. In the cases considered, it seemed difficult to determine the moment at which an act produced legal effects. The Rapporteur said that the report might serve as a basis for progress on work on the topic, despite its complexity, and ILC might consider adopting a definition of unilateral acts and consider some of the draft articles already referred to the Drafting Committee separately from the study of practice relating to unilateral acts.

Responsibility of international organizations

ILC considered the third report on the topic of responsibility of international organizations [A/CN.4/553] by Special Rapporteur Giorgio Gaja (Italy). The report dealt with the breach of an international obligation on the part of an international organization and the responsibility of an international organization in connection with the act of a State or other international organization. It proposed draft articles 8 to 16 relating to the existence of a breach of an international obligation; international obligation in force for an international organization; extension in time of the breach of an international obligation; and breach consisting of a composite act; aid or assistance in the commission of an internationally wrongful act; direction and control exercised over the commission of an internationally wrongful act; and coercion of a State or another international organization. ILC adopted the report of the Drafting Committee on those articles, as well as the commentaries thereto.

ILC also had before it a May report [A/CN.4//556], submitted pursuant to General Assembly resolution 58/77 [YUN 2003, p. 1334], which contained information received from the UN Secretariat and five international organizations concerning their practice relevant to the topic of responsibility of international organizations, including cases in which States members of such organizations might be regarded as responsible for the organization's actions.

Fragmentation of international law

In 2005, ILC reconstituted the study group established in 2002 [YUN 2002, p. 1304] on the topic of fragmentation of international law: difficulties arising from the diversification and expansion of international law. The study group considered a memorandum on regionalism in the context of the study on "the function and scope of the lex specialis rule and the question of self-contained regimes and studies on the interpretation of treaties in the light of any relevant rules of international law applicable in the relations between the parties" (article 31 (3) (c) of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties), in the context of general developments in international law and concerns of the international community; the application of successive treaties relating to the same subject matter (article 30 of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties); the modification of multilateral treaties between certain of the parties only (article 41) of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties); and hierarchy in international law: jus cogens, obligations erga omnes, Article 103 of the Charter of the United Nations, as conflict rules. It also had before it an informal paper on the "Disconnection Clause". The study group reaffirmed its approach to focus on the substantive aspects of fragmentation in the light of the 1969 Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties. It reiterated its intention to attain an outcome that would be concrete and of practical value. The study group reaffirmed its intention to develop a collective document for submission to ILC in 2006. The document would comprise a substantive study on fragmentation and a concise summary containing the proposed conclusions and, if appropriate, guidelines on how to deal with such fragmentation.

Shared natural resources

ILC considered the third report on shared natural resources [A/CN.4/551 & Corr.1 & Add.1] by Special Rapporteur Chusei Yamada (Japan), which proposed 25 draft articles for a convention on the law of transboundary aquifers, taking into account comments and suggestions previously offered by the Commission and the Sixth Committee. The addendum to the report contained important references to State practice and international instruments. The Special Rapporteur stated that he was aware of the scarcity of State practice and legal instruments on the subject and was making efforts to collect any available material. The replies from Governments and relevant international organizations [A/CN.4/555 & Add.1] to the Commission's 2004 questionnaire [YUN 2004, p. 1302] would facilitate the preparation of the study on groundwaters. Annexed to the report was the draft convention on the law of transboundary aquifers.

ILC took note of the report of its Working Group on Transboundary Groundwaters, which it had established to consider the Special Rapporteur's report, and expressed appreciation of the progress made in reviewing and revising eight draft articles. ILC took note of the Working Group's proposal that it be reconvened in 2006 to complete its work.

Expulsion of aliens

In June, ILC considered for the first time a preliminary report on the expulsion of aliens [A/CN.4/554] by Special Rapporteur Maurice Kamto (Cameroon). The report examined the issues raised by the idea of the "expulsion of aliens" and gave an overview of the right to expel in international law, the grounds for expulsion invoked in practice and the rights at stake during expulsion. It also examined the methodological problems associated with the consideration of the topic.

In examining the concepts of the expulsion of aliens and the right to expel, the Special Rapporteur held the view that customary international law was not in question. However, the reasons for expulsion could vary and were not all permissible under international law, bringing into play rights, particularly fundamental human rights, to which international law attached legal consequences to their violation. The Special Rapporteur looked at questions of terminology: whether to speak of "expulsion" of aliens, which in national legislation covered a more limited phenomenon, and whether the reference to "aliens" was sufficiently accurate and covered all the categories of persons under consideration. On the question of methodology, the Special Rapporteur sought the Commission's guidance on what treatment should be given to existing conventional rules, found in a number of human rights treaties. His inclination was to elaborate a complete regime, bearing in mind that, although treaty law would offer elements which might be included in the draft articles, a number of those rules arose initially from national legislation and international jurisprudence developed in the context of global and regional human rights judicial instances. The Special Rapporteur requested that the Secretariat prepare a compilation of applicable national and international instruments, texts and jurisprudence on the topic. ILC noted that its task was to consider carefully all the rules on the topic existing in customary international law, treaties and international agreements, State practice and internal laws; to develop them further where possible or appropriate; and to codify them for clearer and better application.

Effects of armed conflicts on treaties

In May, ILC considered the first report on the effects of armed conflicts on treaties by Special Rapporteur Ian Brownlie (United Kingdom) [A/CN.4/552], as well as a memorandum prepared by the Secretariat on the effect of armed conflict on treaties: an examination of practice and doctrine [A/CN.4/550 & Corr. 1]. The report presented a complete set of draft articles with commentaries, which were intended to clarify the legal position and promote and enhance the security of legal relations between States, thereby limiting the occasions on which the incidence of armed conflict had an effect on treaty relations. The draft articles were intended to be compatible with the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties. Acknowledging that the subject of a peaceful settlement of disputes was missing from the draft articles, the Special Rapporteur suggested that the subject be dealt with near the completion of a substantive draft, as there was a close relationship between the matters of substance and the appropriate type of dispute settlement mechanism.

The Special Rapporteur identified several policy questions requiring further consideration, including the question of the applicable lex specialis in the draft articles and the question of a distinction between bilateral and multilateral treaties. Due to the preliminary nature of the current discussion, the Special Rapporteur opposed the referral of the draft articles to the Drafting Committee or the establishment of a working group and recommended that a request be circulated to Governments asking for information about their practice on the topic, especially contemporary practice.

During consideration of the Special Rapporteur's report, ILC supported the decision to present a complete set of draft articles and found the memorandum helpful in understanding the complexity of the issues. ILC endorsed the Special Rapporteur's request.

International State relations and international law

Jurisdictional immunities of States and their property

In 2004, the General Assembly, by resolution 59/38, adopted the Convention on Jurisdictional Immunities of States and Their Property [YUN 2004, p. 1304]. The Convention was opened for signature from 17 January 2005 until 17 January 2007 at UN Headquarters in New York. As at 31 December 2005, 17 countries had signed the Convention.

International terrorism

Conventions on international terrorism and for suppression of acts of nuclear terrorism

Ad Hoc Committee

In accordance with General Assembly resolution 59/46 [YUN 2004, p. 1311], the Ad Hoc Committee on the convention for suppression of nuclear terrorism, established by Assembly resolution 51/210 [YUN 1996, p. 1208], held its ninth session (New York, 28 March–1 April) to continue, within the framework of a working group of the Sixth Committee, the elaboration of a draft comprehensive convention on international terrorism, with appropriate time allocated to the continued consideration of outstanding issues.

The Ad Hoc Committee exchanged views on issues within its mandate and held informal consultations regarding the draft comprehensive convention on international terrorism and written amendments and four new proposals by Cuba relating to the draft international convention for the suppression of acts of nuclear terrorism, which were later withdrawn. The Committee finalized on 1 April the text of the draft international convention for the suppression of acts of nuclear terrorism, prepared by its Bureau [A/59/766] and recommended it to the Assembly for adoption. By resolution 59/290 of 13 April, the Assembly adopted the Convention (below), which was opened for signature from 14 September until 31 December 2006. As at 31 December 2005, 96 countries had signed the Convention.

Also on 1 April, the Ad Hoc Committee adopted its report [A/60/37], to which were annexed the text of the draft convention for the suppression of acts of nuclear terrorism, the Chairman's informal summary of the general discussion, the coordinators' reports and amendments and proposals submitted to the Committee in connection with the elaboration of a draft comprehensive convention on international terrorism and a draft international convention for the suppression of acts of nuclear terrorism.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 13 April [meeting 91], the General Assembly, on the basis of the report of the Ad Hoc Committee established by Assembly resolution 51/210 of 17 December [A/59/766], adopted resolution 59/290 without vote [agenda item 148].

International Convention for the Suppression of Acts of Nuclear Terrorism

The General Assembly,

Having considered the text of the draft international convention for the suppression of acts of nuclear terrorism elaborated by the Ad Hoc Committee established by General Assembly resolution 51/210 of 17 December 1996 and the Working Group of the Sixth Committee,

1. Adopts the International Convention for the Suppression of Acts of Nuclear Terrorism annexed to the present resolution, and requests the Secretary-General to open the Convention for signature at United Nations Headquarters in New York from 14 September 2005 to 31 December 2006;

2. Calls upon all States to sign and ratify, accept, approve or accede to the Convention.

Annex

International Convention for the Suppression of Acts of Nuclear Terrorism

The States Parties to this Convention,

Having in mind the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations concerning the maintenance of international peace and security and the promotion of good-neighbourliness and friendly relations and cooperation among States,

Recalling the Declaration on the Occasion of the Fiftieth Anniversary of the United Nations of 24 October 1995,

Recognizing the right of all States to develop and apply nuclear energy for peaceful purposes and their legitimate interests in the potential benefits to be derived from the peaceful application of nuclear energy,

Bearing in mind the Convention on the Physical Protection of Nuclear Material of 1980,

Deeply concerned about the worldwide escalation of acts of terrorism in all its forms and manifestations,

Recalling the Declaration on Measures to Eliminate International Terrorism annexed to General Assembly resolution 49/60 of 9 December 1994, in which, inter alia, the States Members of the United Nations solemnly reaffirm their unequivocal condemnation of all acts, methods and practices of terrorism as criminal and unjustifiable, wherever and by whomever committed, including those which jeopardize the friendly relations among States and peoples and threaten the territorial integrity and security of States,

Noting that the Declaration also encouraged States to review urgently the scope of the existing international legal provisions on the prevention, repression and elimination of terrorism in all its forms and manifestations, with the aim of ensuring that there is a comprehensive legal framework covering all aspects of the matter,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 51/210 of 17 December 1996 and the Declaration to Supplement the 1994 Declaration on Measures to Eliminate International Terrorism annexed thereto,

Recalling also that, pursuant to General Assembly resolution 51/210, an ad hoc committee was established to elaborate, inter alia, an international convention for the suppression of acts of nuclear terrorism to supplement related existing international instruments,

Noting that acts of nuclear terrorism may result in the gravest consequences and may pose a threat to international peace and security,

Noting also that existing multilateral legal provisions do not adequately address those attacks,

Being convinced of the urgent need to enhance international cooperation between States in devising and adopting effective and practical measures for the prevention of such acts of terrorism and for the prosecution and punishment of their perpetrators,

Noting that the activities of military forces of States are governed by rules of international law outside of the framework of this Convention and that the exclusion of certain actions from the coverage of this Convention does not condone or make lawful otherwise unlawful acts, or preclude prosecution under other laws,

Have agreed as follows:

Article 1

For the purposes of this Convention:

1. "Radioactive material" means nuclear material and other radioactive substances which contain nuclides which undergo spontaneous disintegration (a process accompanied by emission of one or more types of ionizing radiation, such as alpha-, beta-, neutron particles and gamma rays) and which may, owing to their radiological or fissile properties, cause death, serious bodily injury or substantial damage to property or to the environment.

2. "Nuclear material" means plutonium, except that with isotopic concentration exceeding 80 per cent in plutonium-238; uranium-233; uranium enriched in the isotope 235 or 233; uranium containing the mixture of isotopes as occurring in nature other than in the form of ore or ore residue; or any material containing one or more of the foregoing;

Whereby "uranium enriched in the isotope 235 or 233" means uranium containing the isotope 235 or 233 or both in an amount such that the abundance ratio of the sum of these isotopes to the isotope 238 is greater than the ratio of the isotope 235 to the isotope 238 occurring in nature.

3. "Nuclear facility" means:

(a) Any nuclear reactor, including reactors installed on vessels, vehicles, aircraft or space objects for use as an energy source in order to propel such vessels, vehicles, aircraft or space objects or for any other purpose;

(b) Any plant or conveyance being used for the production, storage, processing or transport of radioactive material.

4. "Device" means:

(a) Any nuclear explosive device; or

(b) Any radioactive material dispersal or radiation-emitting device which may, owing to its radiological properties, cause death, serious bodily injury or substantial damage to property or to the environment.

5. "State or government facility" includes any permanent or temporary facility or conveyance that is used or occupied by representatives of a State, members of a Government, the legislature or the judiciary or by officials or employees of a State or any other public authority or entity or by employees or officials of an intergovernmental organization in connection with their official duties.

6. "Military forces of a State" means the armed forces of a State which are organized, trained and equipped under its internal law for the primary purpose of national defence or security and persons acting in support of those armed forces who are under their formal command, control and responsibility.

Article 2

1. Any person commits an offence within the meaning of this Convention if that person unlawfully and intentionally:

(a) Possesses radioactive material or makes or possesses a device:

(i) With the intent to cause death or serious bodily injury; or

(ii) With the intent to cause substantial damage to property or to the environment;

(b) Uses in any way radioactive material or a device, or uses or damages a nuclear facility in a manner which releases or risks the release of radioactive material:

(i) With the intent to cause death or serious bodily injury; or

(ii) With the intent to cause substantial damage to property or to the environment; or

(iii) With the intent to compel a natural or legal person, an international organization or a State to do or refrain from doing an act.

2. Any person also commits an offence if that person:

(a) Threatens, under circumstances which indicate the credibility of the threat, to commit an offence as set forth in paragraph 1 (b) of the present article; or

(b) Demands unlawfully and intentionally radioactive material, a device or a nuclear facility by threat, under circumstances which indicate the credibility of the threat, or by use of force.

3. Any person also commits an offence if that person attempts to commit an offence as set forth in paragraph 1 of the present article.

4. Any person also commits an offence if that person:

(a) Participates as an accomplice in an offence as set forth in paragraph 1, 2 or 3 of the present article; or

(b) Organizes or directs others to commit an offence as set forth in paragraph 1, 2 or 3 of the present article; or

(c) In any other way contributes to the commission of one or more offences as set forth in paragraph 1, 2 or 3 of the present article by a group of persons acting with a common purpose; such contribution shall be intentional and either be made with the aim of furthering the general criminal activity or purpose of the group or be made in the knowledge of the intention of the group to commit the offence or offences concerned.

Article 3

This Convention shall not apply where the offence is committed within a single State, the alleged offender and the victims are nationals of that State, the alleged offender is found in the territory of that State and no other State has a basis under article 9, paragraph 1 or 2, to exercise jurisdiction, except that the provisions of articles 7, 12, 14, 15, 16 and 17 shall, as appropriate, apply in those cases.

Article 4

1. Nothing in this Convention shall affect other rights, obligations and responsibilities of States and individuals under international law, in particular the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations and international humanitarian law.

2. The activities of armed forces during an armed conflict, as those terms are understood under international humanitarian law, which are governed by that law are not governed by this Convention, and the activities undertaken by military forces of a State in the exercise of their official duties, inasmuch as they are governed by other rules of international law, are not governed by this Convention.

3. The provisions of paragraph 2 of the present article shall not be interpreted as condoning or making lawful otherwise unlawful acts, or precluding prosecution under other laws.

4. This Convention does not address, nor can it be interpreted as addressing, in any way, the issue of the legality of the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons by States.

Article 5

Each State Party shall adopt such measures as may be necessary:

(a) To establish as criminal offences under its national law the offences set forth in article 2;

(b) To make those offences punishable by appropriate penalties which take into account the grave nature of these offences.

Article 6

Each State Party shall adopt such measures as may be necessary, including, where appropriate, domestic legislation, to ensure that criminal acts within the scope of this Convention, in particular where they are intended or calculated to provoke a state of terror in the general public or in a group of persons or particular persons, are under no circumstances justifiable by considerations of a political, philosophical, ideological, racial, ethnic, religious or other similar nature and are punished by penalties consistent with their grave nature.

Article 7

1. States Parties shall cooperate by:

(a) Taking all practicable measures, including, if necessary, adapting their national law, to prevent and counter preparations in their respective territories for the commission within or outside their territories of the offences set forth in article 2, including measures to prohibit in their territories illegal activities of persons, groups and organizations that encourage, instigate, organize, knowingly finance or knowingly provide technical assistance or information or engage in the perpetration of those offences;

(b) Exchanging accurate and verified information in accordance with their national law and in the manner and subject to the conditions specified herein, and coordinating administrative and other measures taken as appropriate to detect, prevent, suppress and investigate the offences set forth in article 2 and also in order to institute criminal proceedings against persons alleged to have committed those crimes. In particular, a State Party shall take appropriate measures in order to inform without delay the other States referred to in article 9 in respect of the commission of the offences set forth in article 2 as well as preparations to commit such offences about which it has learned, and also to inform, where appropriate, international organizations.

2. States Parties shall take appropriate measures consistent with their national law to protect the confidentiality of any information which they receive in confidence by virtue of the provisions of this Convention from another State Party or through participation in an activity carried out for the implementation of this Convention. If States Parties provide information to international organizations in confidence, steps shall be taken to ensure that the confidentiality of such information is protected.

3. States Parties shall not be required by this Convention to provide any information which they are not permitted to communicate pursuant to national law or which would jeopardize the security of the State concerned or the physical protection of nuclear material.

4. States Parties shall inform the Secretary-General of the United Nations of their competent authorities and liaison points responsible for sending and receiving the information referred to in the present article. The Secretary-General of the United Nations shall communicate such information regarding competent authorities and liaison points to all States Parties and the International Atomic Energy Agency. Such authorities and liaison points must be accessible on a continuous basis.

Article 8

For purposes of preventing offences under this Convention, States Parties shall make every effort to adopt appropriate measures to ensure the protection of radioactive material, taking into account relevant recommendations and functions of the International Atomic Energy Agency.

Article 9

1. Each State Party shall take such measures as may be necessary to establish its jurisdiction over the offences set forth in article 2 when:

(a) The offence is committed in the territory of that State; or

(b) The offence is committed on board a vessel flying the flag of that State or an aircraft which is registered under the laws of that State at the time the offence is committed; or

(c) The offence is committed by a national of that State.

2. A State Party may also establish its jurisdiction over any such offence when:

(a) The offence is committed against a national of that State; or

(b) The offence is committed against a State or government facility of that State abroad, including an embassy or other diplomatic or consular premises of that State; or

(c) The offence is committed by a stateless person who has his or her habitual residence in the territory of that State; or

(d) The offence is committed in an attempt to compel that State to do or abstain from doing any act; or

(e) The offence is committed on board an aircraft which is operated by the Government of that State.

3. Upon ratifying, accepting, approving or acceding to this Convention, each State Party shall notify the Secretary-General of the United Nations of the jurisdiction it has established under its national law in accordance with paragraph 2 of the present article. Should any change take place, the State Party concerned shall immediately notify the Secretary-General.

4. Each State Party shall likewise take such measures as may be necessary to establish its jurisdiction over the offences set forth in article 2 in cases where the alleged offender is present in its territory and it does not extradite that person to any of the States Parties which have established their jurisdiction in accordance with paragraph 1 or 2 of the present article.

5. This Convention does not exclude the exercise of any criminal jurisdiction established by a State Party in accordance with its national law.

Article 10

1. Upon receiving information that an offence set forth in article 2 has been committed or is being committed in the territory of a State Party or that a person who has committed or who is alleged to have committed such an offence may be present in its territory, the State Party concerned shall take such measures as may be necessary under its national law to investigate the facts contained in the information.

2. Upon being satisfied that the circumstances so warrant, the State Party in whose territory the offender or alleged offender is present shall take the appropriate measures under its national law so as to ensure that person's presence for the purpose of prosecution or extradition.

3. Any person regarding whom the measures referred to in paragraph 2 of the present article are being taken shall be entitled:

(a) To communicate without delay with the nearest appropriate representative of the State of which that person is a national or which is otherwise entitled to protect that person's rights or, if that person is a stateless person, the State in the territory of which that person habitually resides;

(b) To be visited by a representative of that State;

(c) To be informed of that person's rights under subparagraphs (a) and (b).

4. The rights referred to in paragraph 3 of the present article shall be exercised in conformity with the laws and regulations of the State in the territory of which the offender or alleged offender is present, subject to the provision that the said laws and regulations must enable full effect to be given to the purposes for which the rights accorded under paragraph 3 are intended.

5. The provisions of paragraphs 3 and 4 of the present article shall be without prejudice to the right of any State Party having a claim to jurisdiction in accordance with article 9, paragraph 1 (c) or 2 (c), to invite the International Committee of the Red Cross to communicate with and visit the alleged offender.

6. When a State Party, pursuant to the present article, has taken a person into custody, it shall immediately notify, directly or through the Secretary-General of the United Nations, the States Parties which have established jurisdiction in accordance with article 9, paragraphs 1 and 2, and, if it considers it advisable, any other interested States Parties, of the fact that that person is in custody and of the circumstances which warrant that person's detention. The State which makes the investigation contemplated in paragraph 1 of the present article shall promptly inform the said States Parties of its findings and shall indicate whether it intends to exercise jurisdiction.

1. The State Party in the territory of which the alleged offender is present shall, in cases to which article 9 applies, if it does not extradite that person, be obliged, without exception whatsoever and whether or not the offence was committed in its territory, to submit the case without undue delay to its competent authorities for the purpose of prosecution, through proceedings in accordance with the laws of that State. Those authorities shall take their decision in the same manner as in the case of any other offence of a grave nature under the law of that State.

2. Whenever a State Party is permitted under its national law to extradite or otherwise surrender one of its nationals only upon the condition that the person will be returned to that State to serve the sentence imposed as a result of the trial or proceeding for which the extradition or surrender of the person was sought, and this State and the State seeking the extradition of the person agree with this option and other terms they may deem appropriate, such a conditional extradition or surrender shall be sufficient to discharge the obligation set forth in paragraph 1 of the present article.

Article 12

Any person who is taken into custody or regarding whom any other measures are taken or proceedings are carried out pursuant to this Convention shall be guaranteed fair treatment, including enjoyment of all rights and guarantees in conformity with the law of the State in the territory of which that person is present and applicable provisions of international law, including international law of human rights.

Article 13

1. The offences set forth in article 2 shall be deemed to be included as extraditable offences in any extradition treaty existing between any of the States Parties before the entry into force of this Convention. States Parties undertake to include such offences as extraditable offences in every extradition treaty to be subsequently concluded between them.

2. When a State Party which makes extradition conditional on the existence of a treaty receives a request for extradition from another State Party with which it has no extradition treaty, the requested State Party may, at its option, consider this Convention as a legal basis for extradition in respect of the offences set forth in article 2. Extradition shall be subject to the other conditions provided by the law of the requested State.

3. States Parties which do not make extradition conditional on the existence of a treaty shall recognize the offences set forth in article 2 as extraditable offences between themselves, subject to the conditions provided by the law of the requested State.

4. If necessary, the offences set forth in article 2 shall be treated, for the purposes of extradition between States Parties, as if they had been committed not only in the place in which they occurred but also in the territory of the States that have established jurisdiction in accordance with article 9, paragraphs 1 and 2.

5. The provisions of all extradition treaties and arrangements between States Parties with regard to offences set forth in article 2 shall be deemed to be modified as between States Parties to the extent that they are incompatible with this Convention.

Article 14

1. States Parties shall afford one another the greatest measure of assistance in connection with investigations or criminal or extradition proceedings brought in respect of the offences set forth in article 2, including assistance in obtaining evidence at their disposal necessary for the proceedings.

2. States Parties shall carry out their obligations under paragraph 1 of the present article in conformity with any treaties or other arrangements on mutual legal assistance that may exist between them. In the absence of such treaties or arrangements, States Parties shall afford one another assistance in accordance with their national law.

None of the offences set forth in article 2 shall be regarded, for the purposes of extradition or mutual legal assistance, as a political offence or as an offence connected with a political offence or as an offence inspired by political motives. Accordingly, a request for extradition or for mutual legal assistance based on such an offence may not be refused on the sole ground that it concerns a political offence or an offence connected with a political offence or an offence inspired by political motives.

Article 16

Nothing in this Convention shall be interpreted as imposing an obligation to extradite or to afford mutual legal assistance if the requested State Party has substantial grounds for believing that the request for extradition for offences set forth in article 2 or for mutual legal assistance with respect to such offences has been made for the purpose of prosecuting or punishing a person on account of that person's race, religion, nationality, ethnic origin or political opinion or that compliance with the request would cause prejudice to that person's position for any of these reasons.

Article 17

1. A person who is being detained or is serving a sentence in the territory of one State Party whose presence in another State Party is requested for purposes of testimony, identification or otherwise providing assistance in obtaining evidence for the investigation or prosecution of offences under this Convention may be transferred if the following conditions are met:

(a) The person freely gives his or her informed consent; and

(b) The competent authorities of both States agree, subject to such conditions as those States may deem appropriate.

2. For the purposes of the present article:

(a) The State to which the person is transferred shall have the authority and obligation to keep the person transferred in custody, unless otherwise requested or authorized by the State from which the person was transferred;

(b) The State to which the person is transferred shall without delay implement its obligation to return the person to the custody of the State from which the person was transferred as agreed beforehand, or as otherwise agreed, by the competent authorities of both States;

(c) The State to which the person is transferred shall not require the State from which the person was transferred to initiate extradition proceedings for the return of the person;

(d) The person transferred shall receive credit for service of the sentence being served in the State from which he or she was transferred for time spent in the custody of the State to which he or she was transferred.

3. Unless the State Party from which a person is to be transferred in accordance with the present article so agrees, that person, whatever his or her nationality, shall not be prosecuted or detained or subjected to any other restriction of his or her personal liberty in the territory of the State to which that person is transferred in respect of acts or convictions anterior to his or her departure from the territory of the State from which such person was transferred.

Article 18

1. Upon seizing or otherwise taking control of radioactive material, devices or nuclear facilities, following the commission of an offence set forth in article 2, the State Party in possession of such items shall:

(a) Take steps to render harmless the radioactive material, device or nuclear facility;

(b) Ensure that any nuclear material is held in accordance with applicable International Atomic Energy Agency safeguards; and

(c) Have regard to physical protection recommendations and health and safety standards published by the International Atomic Energy Agency.

2. Upon the completion of any proceedings connected with an offence set forth in article 2, or sooner if required by international law, any radioactive material, device or nuclear facility shall be returned, after consultations (in particular, regarding modalities of return and storage) with the States Parties concerned to the State Party to which it belongs, to the State Party of which the natural or legal person owning such radioactive material, device or facility is a national or resident, or to the State Party from whose territory it was stolen or otherwise unlawfully obtained.

3. (a) Where a State Party is prohibited by national or international law from returning or accepting such radioactive material, device or nuclear facility or where the States Parties concerned so agree, subject to paragraph 3 (b) of the present article, the State Party in possession of the radioactive material, devices or nuclear facilities shall continue to take the steps described in paragraph 1 of the present article; such radioactive material, devices or nuclear facilities shall be used only for peaceful purposes;

(b) Where it is not lawful for the State Party in possession of the radioactive material, devices or nuclear facilities to possess them, that State shall ensure that they are placed as soon as possible in the possession of a State for which such possession is lawful and which, where appropriate, has provided assurances consistent with the requirements of paragraph 1 of the present article in consultation with that State, for the purpose of rendering it harmless; such radioactive material, devices or nuclear facilities shall be used only for peaceful purposes.

4. If the radioactive material, devices or nuclear facilities referred to in paragraphs 1 and 2 of the present article do not belong to any of the States Parties or to a national or resident of a State Party or was not stolen or otherwise unlawfully obtained from the territory of a State Party, or if no State is willing to receive such items pursuant to paragraph 3 of the present article, a separate decision concerning its disposition shall, subject to paragraph 3 (b) of the present article, be taken after consultations between the States concerned and any relevant international organizations.

5. For the purposes of paragraphs 1, 2, 3 and 4 of the present article, the State Party in possession of the radioactive material, device or nuclear facility may request the assistance and cooperation of other States Parties, in particular the States Parties concerned, and any relevant international organizations, in particular the International Atomic Energy Agency. States Parties and the relevant international organizations are encouraged to provide assistance pursuant to this paragraph to the maximum extent possible.

6. The States Parties involved in the disposition or retention of the radioactive material, device or nuclear facility pursuant to the present article shall inform the Director General of the International Atomic Energy Agency of the manner in which such an item was disposed of or retained. The Director General of the International Atomic Energy Agency shall transmit the information to the other States Parties.

7. In the event of any dissemination in connection with an offence set forth in article 2, nothing in the present article shall affect in any way the rules of international law governing liability for nuclear damage, or other rules of international law.

Article 19

The State Party where the alleged offender is prosecuted shall, in accordance with its national law or applicable procedures, communicate the final outcome of the proceedings to the Secretary-General of the United Nations, who shall transmit the information to the other States Parties.

Article 20

States Parties shall conduct consultations with one another directly or through the Secretary-General of the United Nations, with the assistance of international organizations as necessary, to ensure effective implementation of this Convention.

Article 21

The States Parties shall carry out their obligations under this Convention in a manner consistent with the principles of sovereign equality and territorial integrity of States and that of non-intervention in the domestic affairs of other States.

Article 22

Nothing in this Convention entitles a State Party to undertake in the territory of another State Party the exercise of jurisdiction and performance of functions which are exclusively reserved for the authorities of that other State Party by its national law.

Article 23

1. Any dispute between two or more States Parties concerning the interpretation or application of this Convention which cannot be settled through negotiation within a reasonable time shall, at the request of one of them, be submitted to arbitration. If, within six months of the date of the request for arbitration, the parties are unable to agree on the organization of the arbitration, any one of those parties may refer the dispute to the International Court of Justice, by application, in conformity with the Statute of the Court.
2. Each State may, at the time of signature, ratification, acceptance or approval of this Convention or accession thereto, declare that it does not consider itself bound by paragraph 1 of the present article. The other States Parties shall not be bound by paragraph 1 with respect to any State Party which has made such a reservation.
3. Any State which has made a reservation in accordance with paragraph 2 of the present article may at any time withdraw that reservation by notification to the Secretary-General of the United Nations.

Article 24

1. This Convention shall be open for signature by all States from 14 September 2005 until 31 December 2006 at United Nations Headquarters in New York.

3. This Convention shall be open to accession by any State. The instruments of accession shall be deposited with the Secretary-General of the United Nations.

Article 25

1. This Convention shall enter into force on the thirtieth day following the date of the deposit of the twenty-second instrument of ratification, acceptance, approval or accession with the Secretary-General of the United Nations.
2. For each State ratifying, accepting, approving or acceding to the Convention after the deposit of the twenty-second instrument of ratification, acceptance, approval or accession, the Convention shall enter into force on the thirtieth day after deposit by such State of its instrument of ratification, acceptance, approval or accession.

Article 26

1. A State Party may propose an amendment to this Convention. The proposed amendment shall be submitted to the depositary, who circulates it immediately to all States Parties.
2. If the majority of the States Parties request the depositary to convene a conference to consider the proposed amendments, the depositary shall invite all States Parties to attend such a conference to begin no sooner than three months after the invitations are issued.
3. The conference shall make every effort to ensure amendments are adopted by consensus. Should this not be possible, amendments shall be adopted by a two-thirds majority of all States Parties. Any amendment adopted at the conference shall be promptly circulated by the depositary to all States Parties.
4. The amendment adopted pursuant to paragraph 3 of the present article shall enter into force for each State Party that deposits its instrument of ratification, acceptance, accession or approval of the amendment on the thirtieth day after the date on which two thirds of the States Parties have deposited their relevant instrument. Thereafter, the amendment shall enter into force for any State Party on the thirtieth day after the date on which that State deposits its relevant instrument.

Article 27

1. Any State Party may denounce this Convention by written notification to the Secretary-General of the United Nations.
2. Denunciation shall take effect one year following the date on which notification is received by the Secretary-General of the United Nations.

Measures to eliminate terrorism

In accordance with General Assembly resolution 50/53 [YUN 1995, p. 1330], the Secretary-General, in August, issued his annual report [A/60/228] on measures taken by 26 States, 5 UN system entities and 5 intergovernmental organizations to implement the 1994 Declaration on Measures to Eliminate International Terrorism, approved by Assembly resolution 49/60 [YUN 1994, p. 1293] and Security Council resolution 1269(1999) [YUN 1999, p. 1240]. It listed 27 international instruments pertaining to terrorism, indicating the status of State participation in each, and provided information on workshops and training courses on combating terrorism by three UN bodies. The report noted the publication of the second volume of the United Nations Legislative Series, entitled National Law and Regulations on the Prevention and Suppression of International Terrorism.

In other action, the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice, at its fourteenth session (23-27 May) [E/2005/30], recommended to the Economic and Social Council a resolution entitled "Strengthening international cooperation and technical assistance in promoting the implementation of the universal conventions and protocols relating to terrorism within the framework of the activities of the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime". The resolution was approved on 22 July by the Council as resolution 2005/19 (see p. 1232).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December [meeting 61], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Sixth Committee [A/60/519], adopted resolution 60/43 without vote [agenda item 108].

Noting the role of the Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 1373(2001) concerning counter-terrorism in monitoring the implementation of that resolution, including the taking of the necessary financial, legal and technical measures by States and the ratification or acceptance of the relevant international conventions and protocols,

Mindful of the need to enhance the role of the United Nations and the relevant specialized agencies in combating international terrorism, and of the proposals of the Secretary-General to enhance the role of the Organization in this respect,

Mindful also of the essential need to strengthen international, regional and subregional cooperation aimed at enhancing the national capacity of States to prevent and suppress effectively international terrorism in all its forms and manifestations,

Reiterating its call upon States to review urgently the scope of the existing international legal provisions on the prevention, repression and elimination of terrorism in all its forms and manifestations, with the aim of ensuring that there is a comprehensive legal framework covering all aspects of the matter,

Emphasizing that tolerance and dialogue among civilizations, and enhancing interfaith and intercultural understanding, are among the most important elements in promoting cooperation and success in combating terrorism, and welcoming the various initiatives to this end,

Reaffirming that no terrorist act can be justified in any circumstances,

Recalling Security Council resolution 1624(2005) of 14 September 2005, and bearing in mind that States must ensure that any measure taken to combat terrorism complies with their obligations under international law, in particular international human rights, refugee and humanitarian law,

Noting regional efforts to prevent, combat and eliminate terrorism in all its forms and manifestations, wherever and by whomsoever committed, including through the elaboration of and adherence to regional conventions,

Recalling its decision in resolutions 54/110 of 9 December 1999, 55/158 of 12 December 2000, 56/88 of 12 December 2001, 57/27 of 19 November 2002, 58/81 of 9 December 2003 and 59/46 of 2 December 2004 that the Ad Hoc Committee established by General Assembly resolution 51/210 of 17 December 1996 should address, and keep on its agenda, the question of convening a high-level conference under the auspices of the United Nations to formulate a joint organized response of the international community to terrorism in all its forms and manifestations,

Aware of its resolutions 57/219 of 18 December 2002, 58/187 of 22 December 2003 and 59/191 of 20 December 2004,

17. Welcomes the publication by the Secretariat, as part of the United Nations Legislative Series, of the second volume of National Laws and Regulations on the Prevention and Suppression of International Terrorism, prepared by the Codification Division of the Office of Legal Affairs of the Secretariat pursuant to paragraph 10 (b) of the Declaration on Measures to Eliminate International Terrorism;

24. Requests the Ad Hoc Committee to report to the General Assembly at its sixtieth session in the event of the completion of the draft comprehensive convention on international terrorism;

25. Also requests the Ad Hoc Committee to report to the General Assembly at its sixty-first session on progress made in the implementation of its mandate;

26. Welcomes any update by the Secretary-General of the comprehensive inventory of the response of the Secretariat to terrorism as part of his report on measures to eliminate international terrorism;

27. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its sixty-first session the item entitled "Measures to eliminate international terrorism".

Safety and security of United Nations and associated personnel

Ad Hoc Committee consideration. The Ad Hoc Committee on the Scope of Legal Protection under the 1994 Convention on the Safety of United Nations and Associated Personnel [YUN 1994, p. 1289], established by General Assembly resolution 56/89 [YUN 2001, p. 1227], held its fourth session (New York, 11-15 April) on ways to expand the scope of the legal protection under the Convention, including by means of a legal instrument.

The Committee had before it a revised proposal submitted by Costa Rica on the relationship between the Convention and international humanitarian law; a report by the Secretary-General [YUN 2004, p. 1315] on the scope of legal protection under the Convention; and a related proposal submitted by China, Japan, Jordan and New Zealand. The discussion focused on the text of a draft Protocol to the Convention compiled by the Committee's Chairman. Delegates considered the adoption of additional preambular paragraphs and sought further clarifications to articles II and III of the draft, in order to reflect the specific matters discussed at the meeting.

On 15 April, the Ad Hoc Committee adopted its report [A/60/52], to which was annexed the Chairman's revised text and the proposals by delegations, and recommended the report to the General Assembly for consideration. It also recommended work to expand the scope of the Convention during the Assembly's sixtieth (2005) session and that the revised text be used by the working group of the Sixth Committee. It further recommended that Costa Rica's proposal be considered separately by the Ad Hoc Committee.

Sixth Committee working group. On 3 October, the Sixth Committee established a working group to continue the work of the Ad Hoc Committee. The report on the group's work [A/C.6/60/L.4] contained details of its discussions on the expansion of the scope of legal protection under the Convention, based on the Chairman's text, which was annexed to the report. The working group did not have sufficient time to consider the proposals by Costa Rica and Venezuela. The working group adopted its report at its fourth meeting on 10 October.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December [meeting 61], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Sixth Committee [A/60/518], adopted resolution 60/42 without vote [agenda item 83].

Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Safety of United Nations and Associated Personnel

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 59/47 of 2 December 2004 on the scope of legal protection under the Convention on the Safety of United Nations and Associated Personnel,

Recalling also its resolution 49/59 of 9 December 1994, by which it adopted the Convention on the Safety of United Nations and Associated Personnel ("the Convention"),

Noting that the Convention, which entered into force on 15 January 1999, has been ratified or acceded to by seventy-nine States as at the date of the present resolution,

Reaffirming, in the context of the Convention and its Optional Protocol, the importance of maintaining the integrity of international humanitarian law,

Reaffirming also the obligation of all humanitarian personnel and United Nations and associated personnel to respect the national laws of the country in which they are operating, in accordance with international law and the Charter of the United Nations,

Deeply concerned by the increasing dangers and security risks faced by United Nations and associated personnel at the field level, and mindful of the need to provide the fullest possible protection for their security,

Having considered the report of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Scope of Legal Protection under the Convention on the Safety of United Nations and Associated Personnel, established pursuant to resolution 56/89 of 12 December 2001, and the report of the Working Group of the Sixth Committee,

Recalling paragraph 167 of the 2005 World Summit Outcome, which stressed the need to conclude negotiations on a protocol expanding the scope of legal protection of United Nations and associated personnel during the sixtieth session of the General Assembly,

Underlining the need to promote the universality of the Convention and thereby strengthen the safety and security of United Nations and associated personnel,

Encouraging States to enact national legislation, as necessary, in order to enable the implementation of the Convention and the Protocol,

1. Adopts, therefore, the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Safety of United Nations and Associated Personnel, which is contained in the annex to the present resolution, and requests the Secretary-General as depositary to open it for signature;

2. Invites States to become parties to the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Safety of United Nations and Associated Personnel.

Annex

Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Safety of United Nations and Associated Personnel

The States Parties to this Protocol,

Recalling the terms of the Convention on the Safety of United Nations and Associated Personnel, done at New York on 9 December 1994,

Deeply concerned over the continuing pattern of attacks against United Nations and associated personnel,

Recognizing that United Nations operations conducted for the purposes of delivering humanitarian, political or development assistance in peacebuilding and of delivering emergency humanitarian assistance which entail particular risks for United Nations and associated personnel require the extension of the scope of legal protection under the Convention to such personnel,

Convinced of the need to have in place an effective regime to ensure that the perpetrators of attacks against United Nations and associated personnel engaged in United Nations operations are brought to justice,

Have agreed as follows:

Diplomatic relations

Protection of diplomatic and consular missions and representatives

As at 31 December, the States parties to the following conventions relating to the protection of diplomatic and consular relations were: 184 States parties to the 1961 Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations [YUN 1961, p. 512], 51 parties to the Optional Protocol concerning the acquisition of nationality [ibid., p. 516] and 63 parties to the Optional Protocol concerning the compulsory settlement of disputes [ibid.].

The 1963 Vienna Convention on Consular Relations [YUN 1963, p. 510] had 168 parties, the Optional Protocol concerning acquisition of nationality [ibid., p. 512] had 39, and the Optional Protocol concerning the compulsory settlement of disputes [ibid.] had 45, after the United States withdrew from that Protocol in March 2005.

Parties to the 1973 Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of Crimes against Internationally Protected Persons, including Diplomatic Agents [YUN 1973, p. 775], numbered 153.

ILC consideration. ILC, at its fifty-seventh session [A/60/10], had before it the sixth report of Special Rapporteur Christopher John R. Dugard (South Africa) on diplomatic protection [A/CN.4/546]. The report examined the non-applicability of the clean hands doctrine (no action arises from wilful wrongdoing: ex dolo malo non oritur actio) to disputes involving inter-State relations properly so called, and cases of its application in the context of diplomatic protection, as well as the question of admissibility. According to the doctrine, a State which was guilty of illegal conduct might be deprived of the necessary locus standi in judicio for complaining of corresponding illegalities on the part of other States. In the context of diplomatic protection, the doctrine might be invoked to preclude a State from exercising diplomatic protection if the national it sought to protect had suffered an injury in consequence of his or her own wrongful conduct. The report addressed the arguments in support of the suggestion that the clean hands doctrine be included in the draft articles on diplomatic protection, approved by the Commission in 2004 [YUN 2004, p. 1317], according to which the doctrine did not apply to disputes relating to inter-State relations where a State did not seek to protect a national; it did apply to cases of diplomatic protection in which a State sought to protect an injured national; and it produced an effect only in the context of diplomatic protection.

The Special Rapporteur concluded that the evidence in favour of the clean hands doctrine was inconclusive and that there was no clear authority to support the applicability of the doctrine to cases of diplomatic protection. He saw no reason to include a provision dealing with the doctrine in the draft articles on diplomatic protection. General support was expressed in the Commission for the Special Rapporteur's conclusion on the clean hands doctrine, and that it was more appropriate for it to be invoked at the stage of the examination of merits since it related to the attenuation or exoneration of responsibility rather than admissibility.

Treaties and agreements

Reservations to treaties

ILC, at its sixtieth session [A/60/10], considered the tenth report of Special Rapporteur Alain Pellet (France) relating to the validity of reservations to treaties [A/CN.4/558, Add.1, Add.2], which complemented his ninth report [YUN 2004, p. 1319] on the object and definition of objections. ILC decided to send draft guidelines 3.1 (freedom to formulate reservations), 3.1.1 (reservations expressly prohibited by the treaty), 3.1.2 (definition of specified reservations), 3.1.3 (reservations implicitly permitted by the treaty) and 3.1.4 (non-specified reservations authorized by the treaty) to the Drafting Committee. It also sent to the Drafting Committee previously adopted draft guidelines (1.6 and 2.1.8) for revision in the light of the terms selected, and agreed to consideration of the tenth report in 2006. It provisionally adopted draft guidelines 2.6.1 (definition of objections to treaties) and 2.6.2 (definition of objections to the late formulation or widening of the scope of a reservation). It also adopted the commentary to those draft guidelines and reproduced in its report the text of draft guidelines on reservations to treaties provisionally adopted thus far by the Commission.

Treaties involving international organizations

The 1986 Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties between States and International Organizations or between International Organizations [YUN 1986, p. 1006], which had not yet entered into force, had 40 States parties as at 31 December 2005.

Registration and publication of treaties by the United Nations

During 2005, 1,683 international agreements were received and 2,688 subsequent actions were registered or filed and recorded by the Secretariat. In addition, 1,382 formalities concerning agreements for which the Secretary-General performed depositary functions were registered. Twelve issues of the Monthly Statement of Treaties and International Agreements were published.

In addition, the texts of international agreements registered or filed and recorded were published in the UN Treaty Series (UNTS) in 72 volumes in the original languages, with translations into English and French where necessary. The United Nations Treaty Collection on the Internet (UNTC), which contained published UNTC volumes up to 2005, the League of Nations Treaty Series, the Treaty Handbook, Multilateral Treaties Deposited with the Secretary-General, the Summary of Practice of the Secretary-General as Depositary of Multilateral Treaties, the Focus Books, information on training and a range of materials on treaty law and practice received an average of 1.7 million hits per month in 2005.

Multilateral treaties

The UN Treaty Series and the regularly updated status of multilateral treaties deposited with the Secretary-General were available on the Internet at the UN Treaty Collection website.

New multilateral treaties concluded under UN auspices

The following treaties, concluded under UN auspices, were deposited with the Secretary-General during 2005:

Information for 2005 regarding all multilateral treaties deposited with the Secretary-General was contained in Multilateral Treaties Deposited with the Secretary-General: Status as at 31 December 2005, vols. I & II [ST/LEG/SER.E/24], Sales No. E.06.V.2.

Chapter IV

Law of the sea

The United Nations continued in 2005 to promote universal acceptance of the 1982 United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea and its two implementing Agreements on the conservation and management of straddling fish stocks and highly migratory fish and on the privileges and immunities of the International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea.

The three institutions created by the Convention—the International Seabed Authority, the International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea and the Commission on the Limits of the Continental Shelf—held sessions during the year.

UN Convention on the Law of the Sea

Signatures and ratifications

In 2005, Burkina Faso and Estonia ratified or acceded to the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea (UNCLOS), bringing the number of parties to 149. The Convention, which was adopted by the Third United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea in 1982 [YUN 1982, p. 178], entered into force on 16 November 1994 [YUN 1994, p. 1301].

Meeting of States Parties

The fifteenth Meeting of States Parties to the Convention (New York, 16-24 June) [SPLOS/135] discussed the 2004 activities of the International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea [YUN 2004, p. 1330] and took action on a number of Tribunal-related financial and administrative issues. Also discussed were the 2004 activities of the International Seabed Authority (see p. 1433) and of the Commission on the Limits of the Continental Shelf (see p. 1434) and matters related to article 319 of the Convention, including issues relating to the implementation of the Convention.

Agreement relating to the Implementation of Part XI of the Convention

During 2005, the number of parties to the 1994 Agreement relating to the Implementation of Part XI of the Convention (governing exploitation of seabed resources beyond national jurisdiction), adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 48/263 [YUN 1994, p. 1301], reached 122. The Agreement, which entered into force on 28 July 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 1215], was to be interpreted and applied together with the Convention as a single instrument, and in the event of any inconsistency between the Agreement and Part XI of the Convention, the provisions of the Agreement would prevail. Any ratification of or accession to the Convention after 28 July 1994 represented consent to be bound by the Agreement. Parties to the Convention prior to the Agreement's adoption had to deposit a separate instrument of ratification of or accession to the Agreement.

Agreement relating to conservation and management of straddling fish stocks and highly migratory fish stocks

As at 31 December, the number of parties to the 1995 Agreement for the Implementation of the Provisions of the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea of 10 December 1982 relating to the Conservation and Management of Straddling Fish Stocks and Highly Migratory Fish Stocks [YUN 1995, p. 1334] reached 56. Referred to as the Fish Stocks Agreement, it entered into force on 11 December 2001 [YUN 2001, p. 1232].

Report of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 59/25 [YUN 2004, p. 1322], the Secretary-General submitted an August report [A/60/189] on the status of implementation of the Fish Stocks Agreement. The report contained information on initiatives taken or recommended to improve the conservation and management of fishery and other marine living resources, with a view to achieving sustainable fisheries and protecting marine ecosystems and biodiversity.

The report emphasized the importance of the full implementation by States of all international fishery instruments, whether legally binding or voluntary. It invited States to cooperate in all aspects of fishery conservation and management, including the establishment of regional fisheries management organizations; apply both the precautionary and ecosystem approaches; and collect and exchange fishery data and statistics. The report included information on actions taken to address lost or abandoned gear, marine debris, destructive fishing practices and the regulation of bottom fisheries. A report on the status and activities of the United Nations Fish Stocks Agreement Assistance Fund was included.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 29 November [meeting 56], the General Assembly adopted resolution 60/31 [draft: A/60/L.23 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 75 (b)].

Sustainable fisheries, including through the 1995 Agreement for the Implementation of the Provisions of the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea of 10 December 1982 relating to the Conservation and Management of Straddling Fish Stocks and Highly Migratory Fish Stocks, and related instruments

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its resolutions 46/215 of 20 December 1991, 49/116 and 49/118 of 19 December 1994, 50/25 of 5 December 1995 and 57/142 of 12 December 2002, as well as other resolutions on large-scale pelagic driftnet fishing, unauthorized fishing in zones of national jurisdiction and on the high seas, fisheries by-catch and discards, and other developments, its resolutions 56/13 of 28 November 2001 and 57/143 of 12 December 2002 on the Agreement for the Implementation of the Provisions of the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea of 10 December 1982 relating to the Conservation and Management of Straddling Fish Stocks and Highly Migratory Fish Stocks ("the Agreement"), and its resolutions 58/14 of 24 November 2003 and 59/25 of 17 November 2004,

Recalling the relevant provisions of the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea ("the Convention"), and bearing in mind the relationship between the Convention and the Agreement,

Recognizing that, in accordance with the Convention, the Agreement sets forth provisions concerning the conservation and management of straddling fish stocks and highly migratory fish stocks, including provisions on compliance and enforcement by the flag State and subregional and regional cooperation in enforcement, binding dispute settlement and the rights and obligations of States in authorizing the use of vessels flying their flags for fishing on the high seas, and specific provisions to address the requirements of developing States in relation to the conservation and management of straddling fish stocks and highly migratory fish stocks and the development of fisheries for such stocks,

Noting that the Code of Conduct for Responsible Fisheries of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations ("the Code") and its associated international plans of action set out principles and global standards of behaviour for responsible practices for the conservation of fisheries resources and the management and development of fisheries,

Noting with concern that effective management of marine capture fisheries has been made difficult in some areas by unreliable information and data caused by unreported and misreported fish catch and fishing effort and the contribution this lack of data makes to continued overfishing in some areas,

Noting with satisfaction the Strategy for Improving Information on Status and Trends of Capture Fisheries, recently adopted by the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, and recognizing that the long-term improvement of the knowledge and understanding of fishery status and trends is a fundamental basis for fisheries policy and management for implementing the Code,

Recognizing the need to implement, as a matter of priority, the Plan of Implementation of the World Summit on Sustainable Development ("Johannesburg Plan of Implementation"), in relation to achieving sustainable fisheries, including the objective to maintain or restore stocks to levels that can produce the maximum sustainable yield with the aim of achieving these goals for depleted stocks on an urgent basis and where possible not later than 2015,

Recognizing also the significant contribution of sustainable fisheries to food security, income and wealth for present and future generations,

Deploring the fact that fish stocks, including straddling fish stocks and highly migratory fish stocks, in many parts of the world are overfished or subject to sparsely regulated and heavy fishing efforts, as a result of, inter alia, unauthorized fishing, inadequate flag State control and enforcement, including monitoring, control and surveillance measures, inadequate regulatory measures, harmful fisheries subsidies and overcapacity,

Concerned that illegal, unreported and unregulated fishing threatens seriously to deplete certain fish stocks and to significantly damage marine habitats and ecosystems, to the detriment of sustainable fisheries as well as the food security and the economies of many States, particularly developing States,

Welcoming the outcomes of the twenty-sixth session of the Committee on Fisheries of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, held from 7 to 11 March 2005,

Welcoming also the 2005 Rome Declaration on Illegal, Unreported and Unregulated Fishing, adopted by the Ministerial Meeting on Fisheries of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations on 12 March 2005, which renewed the resolve of the international community to prevent, deter and eliminate illegal, unreported and unregulated fishing,

Welcoming further the 2005 Rome Declaration on Fisheries and the Tsunami, adopted by the Ministerial Meeting on 12 March 2005, which addressed the issue of rehabilitation in relation to the tsunami disaster,

Noting the efforts of the International Labour Organization in relation to work in the fishing sector,

Recognizing that the interrelationship between ocean activities, such as shipping and fishing, and environmental issues needs further consideration,

Concerned that marine pollution from all sources, including vessels and, in particular, land-based sources, constitutes a serious threat to human health and safety, endangers fish stocks, marine biodiversity and marine habitats and has significant costs to local and national economies,

Recognizing that marine debris is a global transboundary pollution problem and that, due to the many different types and sources of marine debris, different approaches to its prevention and removal are necessary,

Recognizing also the need for appropriate measures to address lost or abandoned gear, including catches by derelict fishing gear, which adversely affects, inter alia, fish stocks and habitats,

Noting that the contribution of sustainable aquaculture to global fish supplies continues to respond to opportunities in developing countries to enhance local food security and poverty alleviation and, together with efforts of other aquaculture producing countries, will make a significant contribution to meeting future demands in fish consumption, bearing in mind article 9 of the Code,

Calling attention to the circumstances affecting fisheries in many developing States, in particular African States and small island developing States, and recognizing the urgent need for capacity-building, including the transfer of marine technology, to assist such States in meeting their obligations and exercising their rights under international instruments, in order to realize the benefits from fisheries resources,

Noting the obligation of all States, pursuant to the provisions of the Convention, to cooperate in the conservation and management of straddling fish stocks and highly migratory fish stocks, and recognizing the importance of coordination and cooperation at the global, regional, subregional as well as national levels in the areas, inter alia, of data collection, information-sharing, capacity-building and training for the conservation, management and sustainable development of marine living resources,

Recognizing the duty provided in the Convention, the Agreement to Promote Compliance with International Conservation and Management Measures by Fishing Vessels on the High Seas ("the Compliance Agreement"), the Agreement and the Code for flag States to exercise effective control over fishing vessels flying their flag and vessels flying their flag which provide support to such vessels, and to ensure that the activities of such vessels do not undermine the effectiveness of conservation and management measures taken in accordance with international law and adopted at the national, subregional, regional or global levels,

Recognizing also the urgent need for action at all levels to ensure the long-term sustainable use and management of fisheries resources through the wide application of a precautionary approach, and through appropriate measures to reduce waste, discards and other factors which adversely affect fish stocks,

Recognizing further the economic and cultural importance of sharks in many countries, the biological importance of sharks in the marine ecosystem, the vulnerability of certain shark species to over-exploitation and the need for measures to promote the long-term sustainability of shark populations and fisheries, and the relevance of the International Plan of Action for the Conservation and Management of Sharks, adopted by the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations in 1999, in providing development guidance of such measures,

Reaffirming its support for the initiative of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations and relevant regional and subregional fisheries management organizations and arrangements on the conservation and management of sharks, while noting with concern that only a small number of countries have implemented the International Plan of Action for the Conservation and Management of Sharks,

Welcoming the Ministerial Declaration of the "Conference on the Governance of High Seas Fisheries and the United Nations Fish Agreement—Moving from Words to Action", held in St. John's, Canada, from 1 to 5 May 2005, acknowledging that it is an initiative to improve high seas fisheries governance, including effective implementation of the Agreement,

Noting with satisfaction the outcomes of the fourth round of informal consultations of States parties to the Agreement, held in New York from 31 May to 3 June 2005,

Taking note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General, in particular its useful role in gathering and disseminating information on or relating to the sustainable development of the world's marine living resources,

Expressing concern that the practice of large-scale pelagic drift-net fishing remains a threat to marine living resources, although the incidence of this practice has continued to be low in most regions of the world's oceans and seas,

Emphasizing that efforts should be made to ensure that the implementation of resolution 46/215 in some parts of the world does not result in the transfer to other parts of the world of drift nets that contravene the resolution,

Expressing concern over reports of continued losses of seabirds, particularly albatrosses and petrels, as well as other marine species, including sharks, fin-fish species and marine turtles, as a result of incidental mortality in fishing operations, particularly longline fishing, and other activities, while recognizing considerable efforts to reduce by-catch in longline fishing through various regional fisheries management organizations and arrangements,

Recognizing the endorsement of the Guidelines to Reduce Sea Turtle Mortality in Fishing Operations by the Committee on Fisheries at its twenty-sixth session,

Welcoming the fact that a growing number of States, and entities referred to in the Convention and in article 1, paragraph 2 (b), of the Agreement, as well as regional and subregional fisheries management organizations and arrangements, have taken measures, as appropriate, towards the implementation of the provisions of the Agreement,

I

Achieving sustainable fisheries

1. Reaffirms the importance it attaches to the long-term conservation, management and sustainable use of the marine living resources of the world's oceans and seas and the obligations of States to cooperate to this end, in accordance with international law, as reflected in the relevant provisions of the Convention, in particular the provisions on cooperation set out in Part V and Part VII, section 2, of the Convention, and where applicable, the Agreement;

2. Emphasizes the obligations of flag States to discharge their responsibilities, in accordance with the Convention and the Agreement, to ensure compliance by vessels flying their flag with the conservation and management measures adopted and in force with respect to fisheries resources on the high seas;

3. Calls upon all States that have not done so, in order to achieve the goal of universal participation, to become parties to the Convention, which sets out the legal framework within which all activities in the oceans and seas must be carried out, taking into account the relationship between the Convention and the Agreement;

4. Calls upon all States, directly or through regional fisheries management organizations and arrangements, to apply, in accordance with international law, the precautionary approach and an ecosystem approach widely to the conservation, management and exploitation of fish stocks, including straddling fish stocks and highly migratory fish stocks, and also calls upon States parties to the Agreement to implement fully the provisions of article 6 of the Agreement as a matter of priority;

5. Welcomes and encourages the work of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations and its Committee on Fisheries, in particular the recent call to effectively implement the various instruments already developed to ensure responsible fisheries;

6. Urges States to eliminate barriers to trade, including tariff peaks, high tariffs and non-tariff barriers and measures which are not consistent with their obligations under the World Trade Organization agreements, taking into account the importance of the trade of fisheries products, particularly for developing countries;

7. Welcomes the 2005 International Guidelines for the Ecolabelling of Fish and Fishery Products from Marine Capture Fisheries of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, acknowledges the role of certification and ecolabelling schemes, which are to be consistent with international law, including relevant World Trade Organization agreements, and notes ongoing discussions in the World Trade Organization on such schemes;

8. Urges States and relevant international and national organizations to provide for participation of small-scale fishery stakeholders in related policy development and fisheries management strategies in order to achieve long-term sustainability for such fisheries, consistent with the duty to ensure the proper conservation and management of fisheries resources;

II
Implementation of the 1995 Agreement for the Implementation of the Provisions of the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea of 10 December 1982 relating to the Conservation and Management of Straddling Fish Stocks and Highly Migratory Fish Stocks

9. Calls upon all States, and entities referred to in the Convention and in article 1, paragraph 2 (b), of the Agreement, that have not done so to ratify or accede to the Agreement and in the interim to consider applying it provisionally;

Institutions created by the Convention

International Seabed Authority

Through the International Seabed Authority, established by UNCLOS and the 1994 Implementation Agreement [YUN 1994, p. 1301], States organized and conducted exploration of the resources of the seabed and ocean floor and subsoil beyond the limits of national jurisdiction. In 2005, the Authority, which had 149 members as at 31 December, held its eleventh session (Kingston, Jamaica, 15-26 August). Its subsidiary bodies, namely, the Assembly, the Council, the Legal and Technical Commission and the Finance Committee, also met during the session.

The Assembly considered the annual report of the Authority's Secretary-General [ISBA/11/A/4 & Corr.1], who reported that in 2005, the secretariat continued to develop a geological model of the polymetallic deposits of the Clarion-Clipperton fracture zone in the Pacific Ocean, as part of the 2005-2007 work programme [YUN 2004, p. 1330]. The project would be reviewed in 2006 and a workshop held in 2007 to examine its results. The Secretary-General drew the Assembly's attention to the Authority's efforts to promote marine scientific research in the Area, and his proposal to establish a trust fund to promote marine scientific research and to provide opportunities for qualified scientists from developing countries to participate in international research activities. The report also discussed the Authority's relations with the United Nations and other bodies.

The first meeting of Oceans and Coastal Agencies (UN-Oceans), an inter-agency coordination mechanism established by the General Assembly, in resolution 58/240 [YUN 2003, p. 1361] was held in Paris (25-29 January). A second meeting was held in New York in May preceding the sixth meeting of the United Nations Open-ended Informal Consultative Process on the Law of the Sea.

The Assembly considered the report of the Finance Committee and approved the recommendations contained therein [ISBA/11/C/8-ISBA/11/C/9].

The Legal and Technical Commission reported on its work during the eleventh session [ISBA/11/C/8]. The Commission considered the annual reports of contractors submitted pursuant to the Regulations on Prospecting and Exploration for Polymetallic Nodules in the Area [ISBA/6/A/18, annex] and explanatory notes to the draft regulations for prospecting and exploration for polymetallic sulphides and cobalt-rich ferromanganese crusts in the Area. The Commission reviewed the application for the approval of a plan of work for exploration for polymetallic modules submitted by Germany and considered recommendations of the workshop on polymetallic sulphides and cobalt-rich crusts: their environment and considerations for the establishment of environmental baselines and an associated monitoring programme for exploration. The Commission also considered an update on progress with the geological model of the Clarion-Clipperton Fracture Zone and on the Kaplan project on the study of the biodiversity in the Clarion-Clipperton Zone.

The Commission noted that its technical work was becoming more specialized and pointed to the need to strengthen its expertise in certain disciplines, including marine geology and geophysics, biology, oceanology, protection of the marine environment, and economic and legal matters relating to ocean mining. It recommended that the Council draw the attention of States parties to the issue and nominate such experts as candidates in the 2006 election of members of the Commission. It also requested that environmental issues be included in its agenda for 2006.

International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea

The International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea held its nineteenth (7-18 March) and twentieth (26 September–7 October) sessions, both in Hamburg, Germany [SPLOS/136].

In the Case concerning The Conservation and Sustainable Exploitation of Swordfish Stocks in the South-Eastern Pacific Ocean (Chile/European Community) [YUN 2003, p. 1353] , the Special Chamber (28-29 December) established for that purpose, at the request of the parties, extended the time limit for making preliminary objections until 1 January 2008 and maintained the rights of the parties to revive the proceedings at any time.

In the Juno Trader Case (Saint Vincent and the Grenadines v. Guinea-Bissau) [YUN 2004, p. 1330], on 1 February, the Deputy Agent of Saint Vincent and the Grenadines informed the Tribunal of the difficulties encountered by the Juno Trader owner concerning the terms and posting of the bank guarantee with the Guinea-Bissau authorities. On 29 March, the counsel for Saint Vincent and the Grenadines informed the Registrar that, following an 18 March confidential agreement between Guinea-Bissau and the Juno Trader, the vessel was released and left Guinea-Bissau's exclusive zone on 27 March.

In the Case concerning Land Reclamation by Singapore in and around the Straits of Johor (Malaysia v. Singapore) [ibid., p. 1331], on 26 April, Malaysia and Singapore signed a settlement agreement to terminate the case upon agreed terms. On 1 September, upon the joint request of the parties, the arbitral tribunal rendered a final award in accordance with the terms specified in the settlement agreement.

Commission on the Limits of the Continental Shelf

In 2005, the Commission on the Limits of the Continental Shelf, established in 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 1362], held its fifteenth (4-22 April) [CLCS/44] and sixteenth (29 August–16 September) [CLCS/48 & Corr.1] sessions, both in New York.

At its fifteenth session, the Commission was informed that the training manual for the delineation of the outer limits of the continental shelf beyond 200 miles and for the preparation of submissions to the Commission had been prepared. The first training course based on the manual was conducted in Fiji (February/March) and others were planned. The Commission decided to seek a legal opinion from the UN Legal Counsel on the application of the Commission's rules of procedure regarding the additional material and information by Brazil to its 2004 submission [YUN 2004, p. 1331] relating to the limits of its continental shelf or substantial part thereof. The Commission also considered a submission from Australia, and established a subcommission to consider the matter. The Commission discussed its workload and was of the opinion that, under current arrangements, it might not be able to deliver on its functions. The Commission concluded that the matter should be brought to the attention of States parties at their next meeting.

At its sixteenth session, the Commission considered the submission by Ireland and continued consideration of submissions by Brazil and Australia. Following the request made at the fifteenth session (see above), the Commission considered the opinion of the Legal Counsel [CLCS/48], and acting accordingly, agreed to invite Brazil to transmit an addendum or corrigendum to its submission to the Commission through the Secretary-General. The Commission forwarded the legal opinion to the four States that had made submissions so far. The report discussed mechanisms by which coastal States might be apprised of the recommendations of a subcommission to the Commission and given the opportunity to express an opinion thereon. The Commission, based on the proposals of a working group established to examine the issue, adopted amendments to section III (6) and section VI (15) of annex III of its rules of procedure. The subject was to be considered further at its seventeenth session. The Commission also agreed to refer the matter of its heavy workload and the related financial implications to the General Assembly and the Meeting of States Parties.

Other developments related to the Convention

In response to General Assembly resolution 59/24 [YUN 2004, p. 1333], the Secretary-General submitted a March report, with later addenda, on oceans and the law of the sea [A/60/63 & Add.1, 2], describing the status of UNCLOS and its two implementing Agreements, and discussed issues related to maritime space; developments relating to institutions established by UNCLOS; capacity-building; developments relating to international shipping activities; maritime security and crimes at sea; the marine environment, marine resources and sustainable development; areas of focus at the sixth meeting of the Consultative Process; the Indian Ocean tsunami and international cooperation and coordination; and scientific, technical, economic, environmental, socio-economic and legal issues and the activities of the United Nations and other relevant international organizations.

The Secretary-General concluded that, to address the threats posed to the oceans and seas by climate change, natural disasters, environmental degradation, depletion of fisheries, loss of biodiversity and ineffective flag State control, and to achieve security and sustainability, concerted actions had to be taken by the international community. Those included ratification and full implementation of UNCLOS and other ocean-related instruments; more effective control by States over their vessels and refusal of registration to those vessels over which they could not exercise such control; encouragement by States to address the threat of climate change, including sea level rise and coral bleaching; increased implementation of the Global Programme of Action for the Protection of the Marine Environment from Land-based Activities; fostering environmentally sound waste management practices, including measures to deal with fisheries-related marine debris; support for work on preventing further destruction of marine ecosystems and associated losses of biodiversity and participation in discussions on the conservation and sustainable use of marine biodiversity in the General Assembly's ad hoc working group; and efforts by States to launch the initial phase of the process for global reporting and assessment of the state of the marine environment.

The Secretary-General noted that the United Nations Open-ended Informal Consultative Process on Oceans and Law of the Sea (see p. 1436) had reached the end of its second three-year cycle and was due for review and renewal by the Assembly. The tenth anniversary of the Global Programme of Action would be celebrated in 2006 and the International Maritime Organization had adopted instruments dealing with all aspects of international shipping. However, serious problems remained, including labour conditions, persons in distress at sea and incidents of piracy and armed robbery. He also noted the continuing work on waste management and ship recycling as well as international response to the tsunami disaster.

Marine environment: Global Marine Assessment

Responding to General Assembly resolution 59/24 [YUN 2004, p. 1333], the Secretary-General submitted a June report [A/60/91] providing an account of the second Global Marine Assessment (GMA) international workshop on the regular process for global reporting and assessment of the state of the marine environment, including socio-economic aspects (New York, 13-15 June). The workshop discussed the start-up phase, the Assessment of Assessments, as a preparatory stage towards the establishment of the regular process provided for in the Plan of Implementation of the World Summit on Sustainable Development (Johannesburg Plan of Implementation) [YUN 2002, p. 821] and resolutions 57/141 [YUN 2002, p. 1322] and 58/240 [YUN 2003, p. 1355]. The second international workshop established the modalities for conducting the Assessment of Assessments, particularly the establishment of an ad hoc steering group to oversee its execution, which were forwarded to the Assembly for consideration.

United Nations Open-ended Informal Consultative Process

In response to General Assembly resolution 59/24 [YUN 2004, p. 1333], the sixth meeting of the United Nations Open-ended Informal Consultative Process on Oceans and the Law of the Sea (New York, 6-10 June) [A/60/99] focused on fisheries and their contribution to sustainable development and marine debris. The meeting agreed on most of the elements relating to fisheries and their contribution to sustainable development. However, as it was unable to finalize the elements relating to marine debris and cooperation and coordination, it agreed that the co-Chairpersons' proposed elements, set out in section 2 of the report, would be forwarded to the Assembly. Delegations submitted proposals for additional issues to be considered by the Consultative Process; the application of an ecosystem approach to oceans management; integrated management approaches to address marine pollution; human and labour rights of those employed in the fishing and maritime sectors; short-, medium-, and long-term ecosystem management mechanisms to address and prevent the decline and extinction of associated species; promotion of marine scientific research, as well as capacity-building for the development of scientific information; international legal and institutional frameworks for the protection of marine mammals; naturally occurring mesoscale marine ecosystems; and coastal hazard preparedness.

The Informal Consultative Process reached the end of its second three-year cycle and was due for review and renewal by the Assembly at the sixtieth (2005) session.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 29 November [meeting 56], the General Assembly adopted resolution 60/30 [draft: A/60/L.22 & Add.1] by recorded vote (141-1-4) [agenda item 75 (a)].

Oceans and the law of the sea

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 49/28 of 6 December 1994, 52/26 of 26 November 1997, 54/33 of 24 November 1999, 57/141 of 12 December 2002, 58/240 of 23 December 2003, 59/24 of 17 November 2004 and other relevant resolutions concerning the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea ("the Convention"),

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General, the addendum thereto and also the reports on the sixth meeting of the United Nations Open-ended Informal Consultative Process on Oceans and the Law of the Sea ("the Consultative Process"), the second International Workshop on the regular process for global reporting and assessment of the state of the marine environment, including socio-economic aspects, and the fifteenth Meeting of States Parties to the Convention,

Emphasizing the pre-eminent contribution provided by the Convention to the strengthening of peace, security, cooperation and friendly relations among all nations in conformity with the principles of justice and equal rights and to the promotion of the economic and social advancement of all peoples of the world, in accordance with the purposes and principles of the United Nations as set forth in the Charter of the United Nations, as well as for the sustainable development of the oceans and seas,

Emphasizing also the universal and unified character of the Convention, and reaffirming that the Convention sets out the legal framework within which all activities in the oceans and seas must be carried out, and that its integrity needs to be maintained, as recognized also by the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development in chapter 17 of Agenda 21,

Conscious that the problems of ocean space are closely interrelated and need to be considered as a whole through an integrated, interdisciplinary and intersectoral approach, and reaffirming the need to improve cooperation and coordination at national, regional and global levels, in accordance with the Convention, to support and supplement the efforts of each State in promoting the implementation and observance of the Convention, and the integrated management and sustainable development of the oceans and seas,

Reiterating the essential need for cooperation, including through capacity-building and transfer of marine technology, to ensure that all States, especially developing countries, in particular the least developed countries and small island developing States, as well as coastal African States, are able both to implement the Convention and to benefit from the sustainable development of the oceans and seas, as well as to participate fully in global and regional forums and processes dealing with oceans and law of the sea issues,

Emphasizing the need to strengthen the ability of competent international organizations to contribute, at the global, regional, subregional and bilateral levels, through cooperation programmes with Governments, to the development of national capacity in marine science and the sustainable management of the oceans and their resources,

Recalling that marine science is important for eradicating poverty, contributing to food security, conserving the world's marine environment and resources, helping to understand, predict and respond to natural events and promoting the sustainable development of the oceans and seas, by improving knowledge, through sustained research efforts and the evaluation of monitoring results, and applying such knowledge to management and decision-making,

Recalling also its decision, in resolutions 57/141 and 58/240, to establish a regular process under the United Nations for global reporting and assessment of the state of the marine environment, including socio-economic aspects, both current and foreseeable, building on existing regional assessments, as recommended by the World Summit on Sustainable Development, and noting the need for cooperation among all States to this end,

Reiterating its concern at the adverse impacts on the marine environment and biodiversity, in particular on vulnerable marine ecosystems, including corals, of human activities, such as overutilization of living marine resources, the use of destructive practices, physical impacts by ships, the introduction of alien invasive species and marine pollution from all sources, including from land-based sources and vessels, in particular through the illegal discharge of oil and other harmful substances, the loss or release of fishing gear and the dumping of hazardous waste such as radioactive materials, nuclear waste and dangerous chemicals,

Recognizing that hydrographic surveys and nautical charting are critical to the safety of navigation and life at sea, environmental protection, including the protection of vulnerable marine ecosystems, and the economics of the global shipping industry, and recognizing also in this regard that the move towards electronic charting not only provides significantly increased benefits for safe navigation and management of ship movement, but also provides data and information that can be used for sustainable fisheries activities and other sectoral uses of the marine environment, the delimitation of maritime boundaries and environmental protection,

Noting with concern the continuing problem of transnational organized crime and threats to maritime safety and security, including piracy, armed robbery at sea and smuggling, and noting the deplorable loss of life and adverse impact on international trade resulting from such activities,

Noting the important role of the Commission on the Limits of the Continental Shelf ("the Commission") in assisting States parties in the implementation of Part VI of the Convention, through the examination of information submitted by coastal States regarding the outer limits of the continental shelf beyond 200 nautical miles, and also noting the need to ensure the effective functioning of the Commission during a period of rapidly increasing workload, and noting in particular the need to ensure participation of the members of the Commission in its subcommissions,

Recognizing the importance and the contribution of the work over the past six years of the Consultative Process established by resolution 54/33 to facilitate the annual review of developments in ocean affairs by the General Assembly and extended for three years by resolution 57/141,

Noting the responsibilities of the Secretary-General under the Convention and related resolutions of the General Assembly, in particular resolutions 49/28, 52/26 and 54/33, and in this context the increase in activities of the Division for Ocean Affairs and the Law of the Sea of the Office of Legal Affairs of the Secretariat ("the Division"), in particular in view of the growing number of requests to the Division for additional outputs and servicing of meetings, the increasing capacity-building activities and assistance to the Commission, and the role of the Division in inter-agency coordination and cooperation,

Emphasizing that underwater archaeological, cultural and historical heritage, including shipwrecks and watercrafts, holds essential information on the history of humankind and that such heritage is a resource that needs to be protected and preserved,

I

Chapter V

Other legal questions

The Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization continued in 2005 to consider, among other items, proposals relating to the maintenance of international peace and security in order to strengthen the Organization and the implementation of Charter provisions on assistance to third States affected by the application of sanctions under Chapter VII.

The Committee on Relations with the Host Country continued to address a number of issues raised by permanent missions to the United Nations, including transportation and parking issues, acceleration of immigration and customs procedures, delays in issuing visas, travel regulations and tax exemption.

The General Assembly approved the United Nations Declaration on Human Cloning, in which it called upon Members States to: adopt all measures necessary to protect adequately human life in the application of life sciences; prohibit all forms of human cloning, that were incompatible with human dignity and the protection of human life; and adopt measures to prohibit the application of genetic engineering techniques that might be contrary to human dignity.

The Assembly adopted the United Nations Convention on the Use of Electronic Communications in International Contracts, as recommended by the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law (UNCITRAL). The Convention aimed to remove obstacles to electronic commerce in existing uniform law conventions and trade agreements.

In addition to finalizing and approving the draft convention on electronic commerce, UNCITRAL, at its thirty-eighth session, continued revisions of Model Laws on public procurement and on international commercial arbitration; and continued drafting an instrument on the carriage of goods wholly or partly by sea, as well as a legislative guide on security interests. It also reviewed implementation of the 1958 New York Convention on the Recognition and Enforcement of Foreign Arbitral Awards, the work on the collection and dissemination of case law on UNCITRAL texts, as well as training and technical assistance activities. The Commission approved a plan to hold, in 2007, a Congress to review the results of its past work programmes and the related work of other organizations active in the field of international trade law, to assess current work programmes and to consider and evaluate topics for future work.

The Assembly granted observer status to the Hague Conference on Private International Law, an intergovernmental organization based at The Hague.

International organizations and international law

Strengthening the role of the United Nations

Special Committee on United Nations Charter

In accordance with General Assembly resolution 59/44 [YUN 2004, p. 1344], the Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization, at its sixtieth session (New York, 14-18 March) [A/60/33], continued to consider proposals relating to: the maintenance of international peace and security, according priority to the implementation of the provisions of the Charter of the United Nations on assistance to third States affected by the application of sanctions; the peaceful settlement of disputes between States; proposals concerning the Trusteeship Council; the improvement of the Committee's working methods; and the status of the publications Repertory of Practice of United Nations Organs and Repertoire of the Practice of the Security Council.

With regard to the first item, the Russian Federation introduced revised provisions of its working paper, entitled "Declaration on the basic conditions and standard criteria for the introduction and implementation of sanctions and other coercive measures", which it had submitted in 2004 [YUN 2004, p. 1342]. The Special Committee's Working Group of the Whole reviewed the revised working paper. The Chairman invited the Russian Federation to consult with interested delegations on how to proceed further with the proposal.

The Special Committee also considered the revised working paper (2002) submitted by the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya on the strengthening of certain principles concerning the impact and application of sanctions [ibid.]. Libya reiterated that the Russian Federation's proposal (see above) shared two of the three central elements of its own proposal, and indicated that the third element was being considered by the International Law Commission in its work on the topic "Responsibility of international organizations" (see p. 1408). Should the Russian Federation's proposal be adopted, the two elements of Libya's proposal would be considered as covered. However, that should not be interpreted as withdrawal of its proposal. Some delegations suggested that the salient points raised in Libya's revised working paper be incorporated into the Russian proposal.

Discussion continued on the Russian Federation proposal (1998) entitled "Fundamentals of the legal basis for United Nations peacekeeping operations in the context of Chapter VI of the Charter of the United Nations". The sponsor reiterated the importance of elaborating a legal framework for peacekeeping operations under Chapter VI, which could serve as a useful guide in establishing future peacekeeping operations and proposed the elaboration of a standard classification of definitions for peacekeeping activities. While acknowledging that the issue was being discussed in other UN forums, the sponsor stressed that the Special Committee had a responsibility to address the question from a legal perspective and recalled the possibility of considering the matter jointly with the Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations.

Regarding the working papers submitted by Cuba (1997 and 1998) entitled "Strengthening of the role of the Organization and enhancing its effectiveness", the sponsor explained that the objective was to analyse the respective functions and competencies assigned to the General Assembly and the Security Council under the Charter in the maintenance of international peace and security, with a view to enhancing the Assembly's role. It observed that the topic fell within the mandate of the Special Committee and its consideration would not duplicate the work of other bodies.

Libya emphasized the importance of its revised proposal (1998) on strengthening the role of the United Nations in the maintenance of international peace and security, which could be considered with those of Cuba on the same topic. Its proposal was aimed at analysing the relationship between the Council and the Assembly in the maintenance of international peace and security, focusing on the question of unanimity of the permanent members of the Council and defining decisions of a procedural nature under the Charter. Libya suggested that the Special Committee should recommend that the Sixth (Legal) Committee consider the legal aspects of the Libyan and Cuban proposals and make recommendation to the Assembly.

The Special Committee considered the revised working paper jointly submitted by Belarus and the Russian Federation (2001) proposing that an advisory opinion be sought from the International Court of Justice (ICJ) on the legal consequences of a State's resort to the use of force without prior Security Council authorization, except in the exercise of the right to self-defence. Belarus observed that, in the light of new approaches that had recently emerged concerning the use of armed force, including a unilateral use of force without Council authorization, an advisory opinion of the Court would contribute to the uniform interpretation and application of the relevant Charter provisions. On 17 March, both countries submitted a revised version of their working paper for consideration by the Special Committee in 2006.

During the exchange of views on the peaceful settlement of disputes, some delegations underscored the need to make use of the existing methods and procedures for doing so. The importance of fact-finding was acknowledged, as well as the role played by Special Representatives of the Secretary-General. It was also pointed out that discussion of the agenda item would continue to be of little practical value as long as there was no specific proposal for consideration by the Committee.

On the future of the Trusteeship Council, the views were expressed that it should either be abolished since its mandate had been fulfilled and a proposal to that end addressed to the Assembly and the Special Committee; or that it be assigned new functions in the context of future amendments to the Charter. Others held that it would be premature to abolish the Council or change its status, and that those matters be considered in the overall context of the reform of the Organization and the amendments to the Charter. It was suggested that those States whose territories or neighbouring territories were placed under trusteeship in the past be invited to present their views on the issue at future sessions of the Special Committee.

On the exchange of views on the Repertory of Practice of United Nations Organs and the Repertoire of the Practice of the Security Council, the representative of the Secretariat pointed out that, while the preparation of individual studies continued in 2004-2005 with regards to the Repertory, the work had slowed down considerably and had even stopped in some offices, owing to a lack of funds. Progress had been achieved in eliminating the backlog in regard to the Repertoire, including by posting the studies on the website and producing a more streamlined version. However, the trust fund for updating the Repertoire that had made that possible was depleted. The Special Committee recommended that the Assembly encourage voluntary contributions to the trust fund for updating the Repertoire and the trust fund for eliminating the backlog; the sponsoring, on a voluntary basis, and at no cost to the United Nations, of associate expert positions to assist in the preparation of the studies of both publications; and that the Secretary-General enhance cooperation with academic institutions and use the internship programme for the preparation of the studies for both publications.

Regarding the revised working paper (2004) submitted by Japan, Australia, the Republic of Korea, Thailand and Uganda on the importance of improving the working methods of the Special Committee and enhancing its efficiency, the Working Group of the Whole considered the revised provisions, after which the co-sponsors submitted a further revised working paper. The text of the agreed points was reproduced in the Committee's report.

Concerning the identification of new subjects, the Special Committee expressed its readiness to implement any decisions that might be taken at the 2005 High-level Plenary Meeting of the General Assembly (World Summit) (see p. 47) that concerned the UN Charter and any amendments thereto.

Report of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 59/44 [YUN 2004, p. 1344], the Secretary-General submitted a July report [A/60/124] outlining the progress made in updating the Repertory of Practice of United Nations Organs and the Repertoire of the Practice of the Security Council. With respect to the Repertory, the Secretary-General concluded that the Assembly might wish to note the progress made in the preparation of Repertory studies and in their posting on the Internet in English, French and Spanish; and to consider the Special Committee's recommendations (see above). With regard to the Repertoire, the Secretary-General concluded that the Assembly might wish to: note the progress made towards its updating; encourage contributions to the trust fund, note Greece's further contribution and the support of Germany and Italy for associate experts; and encourage other States to consider providing such assistance.

Concerned about the special economic problems confronting certain States arising from the carrying out of preventive or enforcement measures taken by the Security Council against other States, and taking into account the obligation of Members of the United Nations under Article 49 of the Charter of the United Nations to join in affording mutual assistance in carrying out the measures decided upon by the Council,

Recalling the right of third States confronted with special economic problems of that nature to consult the Security Council with regard to a solution of those problems, in accordance with Article 50 of the Charter,

Recalling also that the International Court of Justice is the principal judicial organ of the United Nations, and reaffirming its authority and independence,

Taking note of the ongoing debate on the revised working papers on the working methods of the Special Committee,

Taking note also of the report of the Secretary-General on the Repertory of Practice of United Nations Organs and the Repertoire of the Practice of the Security Council,

Taking note further of paragraphs 106 to 110, 176 and 177 of the 2005 World Summit Outcome,

Mindful of the decision of the Special Committee, in which it expressed its readiness to engage, as appropriate, in the implementation of any decisions that may be taken at the High-level Plenary Meeting of the sixtieth

Recalling the provisions of its resolutions 50/51 of 11 December 1995, 51/208 of 17 December 1996, 52/162 of 15 December 1997, 53/107 of 8 December 1998, 54/107 of 9 December 1999, 55/157 of 12 December 2000, 56/87 of 12 December 2001, 57/25 of 19 November 2002, 58/80 of 9 December 2003 and 59/45 of 2 December 2004,

Recalling also its resolution 59/44 of 2 December 2004,

Having considered the report of the Special Committee on the work of its session held in 2005,

Noting with appreciation the work done by the Special Committee to encourage States to focus on the need to prevent and to settle peacefully their disputes which are likely to endanger the maintenance of international peace and security,

17. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its sixty-first session the item entitled "Report of the Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization".

Charter provisions relating to sanctions

Special Committee consideration. During the Special Committee's consideration of the implementation of the Charter provisions related to assistance to third States affected by sanctions [A/60/33], support was expressed for the continued consideration of the issue within the Committee and through a working group of the Sixth Committee. The view was expressed that attention should be paid to discussions of the subject in other UN forums, such as the Security Council's informal working group on general issues of sanctions and the Analytical Support and Sanctions Monitoring Team. It encouraged greater interaction between the various sanctions committees and the General Assembly. Noting that the report of the High-level Panel on Threats, Challenges and Change [YUN 2004, p. 54] contained recommendations relating to sanctions, the Committee said that, while it would be useful to explore different procedural measures aimed at reducing the impact of sanctions on States, generic efforts or controls that placed restrictions on the ability to impose sanctions would be unacceptable. Some delegations expressed disappointment that the recommendations and main findings of the ad hoc expert group had not yet been reviewed by the Special Committee, since those recommendations, together with the views of States and international organizations, constituted a solid basis for achieving concrete results in the Committee. Regret was expressed that none of the reports requested had been written, nor had the seminars, workshops or studies on the application of sanctions and their adverse effects taken place in, or focused on, Africa, even though 10 of the 13 States on which sanctions had been imposed by the Security Council in the last 15 years were in Africa.

The Special Committee recommended that the Assembly continue to consider the results of the 1998 expert group's deliberations and findings on developing a methodology for assessing the consequences incurred by third States as a result of preventive or enforcement measures [YUN 1998, p. 1235], taking into account the Committee's current debate; the views of States, UN system organizations, international financial institutions and other relevant organizations, as contained in the reports of the Secretary-General in 1999 [YUN 1999, p. 1252] and 2000 [YUN 2000, p. 1271]; his views on the main findings of the ad hoc expert group [YUN 2002, p. 1333]; and the information he was to submit on the follow-up to a 1999 Security Council note [YUN 1999, p. 1252]. The Committee also recommended that the Assembly address further the implementation of the Charter provisions related to assistance to third States affected by the application of sanctions called for by Assembly resolutions yearly since 1995, the latest being resolution 59/45 [YUN 2004, p. 1346].

Report of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 59/45, the Secretary-General submitted an August report [A/60/320] highlighting measures for further improving the procedures and working methods of the Security Council and its sanctions committees related to assistance to third States affected by the application of sanctions. It also reviewed the Secretariat's capacity and modalities for implementing intergovernmental mandates and the recommendations of the ad hoc expert group meeting [YUN 1998, p. 1235] on assistance to such States, and recent developments on the roles of the Assembly and the Economic and Social Council in that regard.

By decision 2005/312 of 27 July, the Economic and Social Council took note of the Secretary-General's note [E/2005/62] on assistance to third States affected by the application of sanctions and of his 2004 report on the implementation of the Charter provisions related to such assistance [YUN 2004, p. 1345].

Security Council consideration. By a January note [S/2005/4], the President of the Security Council announced the Council's agreement that Augustine P. Mahiga (the United Republic of Tanzania) would serve as Chairman of the informal working group of the Security Council on general issues relating to sanctions, established in 2000 [YUN 2000, p. 1270], until 31 December 2005. In December [S/2005/842], the Council President transmitted to the Council the report submitted by the Chairman of the informal working group on the group's 2005 activities. He also announced, in a 29 December note [S/2005/841], that the Council had extended the working group's mandate [YUN 2004, p. 1345] until 31 December 2006.

UN Programme for the teaching and study of international law

In response to General Assembly resolution 58/73 [YUN 2003, p. 1370], the Secretary-General submitted an October report [A/60/441] on the United Nations Programme of Assistance in the Teaching, Study, Dissemination and Wider Appreciation of International Law during 2004 and 2005. Activities in the biennium included the holding of the forty-first session of the International Law Seminar (Geneva, 11-29 July) (see p. 1406). Under the International Law Fellowship Programme, the Secretary-General awarded, at the request of Governments of developing countries, 20 fellowships in 2004 and 17 in 2005. Lectures, seminars and study visits were organized by the UN Office of Legal Affairs (OLA) and the United Nations Institute for Training and Research (UNITAR). The Government of Thailand hosted a regional course on international law issues for countries of the Asian region (Bangkok, 25 October–5 November).

The OLA Codification Division participated in the electronic dissemination of information regarding UN work on the codification and progressive development of international law and its application and maintained a number of websites on other legal information. The United Nations Commission on International Trade Law (UNCITRAL) continued to expand its technical assistance programme, and organized seminars and symposiums in many developing countries to assist them in adopting and implementing UNCITRAL texts. The Treaty Section of OLA expanded its technical assistance programme on treaty law and practice. It organized, jointly with UNITAR, two training sessions at UN Headquarters and held training seminars in Viet Nam, Barbados and Geneva. At a treaty event "Focus 2005: responding to global challenges", held during the 2005 World Summit (see p. 75), 265 treaty actions were undertaken. Other programmes included the Hamilton Shirley Amerasinghe Memorial Fellowship on the Law of the Sea (see p. 1444), awarded annually by OLA; and the Fellowship Programme on the International Civil Service.

The report also described the legal publications issued during the year, proposed guidelines and recommendations regarding the execution of the Programme of Assistance in the 2006-2007 biennium, and outlined the administrative and financial implications of UN participation in the Programme for the 2004-2005 and 2006-2007 bienniums.

The Advisory Committee on the Programme held its thirty-ninth and fortieth sessions on 11 November 2004, and on 17 October 2005, respectively.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 23 November [meeting 53], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Sixth Committee [A/60/514], adopted resolution 60/19 without vote [agenda item 78].

United Nations Programme of Assistance in the Teaching, Study, Dissemination and Wider Appreciation of International Law

The General Assembly,

Taking note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the United Nations Programme of Assistance in the Teaching, Study, Dissemination and Wider Appreciation of International Law and the guidelines and recommendations on future implementation of the Programme which were adopted by the Advisory Committee on the Programme and are contained in section III of the report,

Considering that international law should occupy an appropriate place in the teaching of legal disciplines at all universities,

Noting with appreciation the efforts made by States at the bilateral level to provide assistance in the teaching and study of international law,

Convinced, nevertheless, that States and international organizations and institutions should be encouraged to give further support to the Programme and increase their activities to promote the teaching, study, dissemination and wider appreciation of international law, in particular those activities which are of special benefit to persons from developing countries,

Reaffirming its resolutions 2464(XXIII) of 20 December 1968, 2550(XXIV) of 12 December 1969, 2838 (XXVI) of 18 December 1971, 3106(XXVIII) of 12 December 1973, 3502(XXX) of 15 December 1975, 32/146 of 16 December 1977, 36/108 of 10 December 1981 and 38/129 of 19 December 1983, in which it stated or recalled that in the conduct of the Programme it was desirable to use as far as possible the resources and facilities made available by Member States, international organizations and others, as well as its resolutions 34/144 of 17 December 1979, 40/66 of 11 December 1985, 42/148 of 7 December 1987, 44/28 of 4 December 1989, 46/50 of 9 December 1991, 48/29 of 9 December 1993, 50/43 of 11 December 1995, 52/152 of 15 December 1997, 54/102 of 9 December 1999, 56/77 of 12 December 2001 and 58/73 of 9 December 2003, in which, in addition, it expressed or reaffirmed the hope that, in appointing lecturers for the seminars to be held within the framework of the fellowship programme in international law, account would be taken of the need to secure the representation of major legal systems and balance among various geographical regions,

1. Approves the guidelines and recommendations contained in section III of the report of the Secretary-General and adopted by the Advisory Committee on the United Nations Programme of Assistance in the Teaching, Study, Dissemination and Wider Appreciation of International Law, in particular those designed to achieve the best possible results in the administration of the Programme within a policy of maximum financial restraint;

2. Authorizes the Secretary-General to carry out in 2006 and 2007 the activities specified in his report, including the provision of:

(a) A number of international law fellowships in both 2006 and 2007, to be determined in the light of the overall resources for the Programme and to be awarded at the request of Governments of developing countries;

(b) A minimum of one scholarship in both 2006 and 2007 under the Hamilton Shirley Amerasinghe Memorial Fellowship on the Law of the Sea, subject to the availability of new voluntary contributions made specifically to the fellowship fund;

(c) Subject to the overall resources for the Programme, assistance in the form of a travel grant for one participant from each developing country, who would be invited to possible regional courses to be organized in 2006 and 2007; and to finance the above activities from provisions in the regular budget, when appropriate, as well as from voluntary financial contributions earmarked for each of the activities concerned, which would be received as a result of the requests set out in paragraphs 12 to 14 below;

3. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for his constructive efforts to promote training and assistance in international law within the framework of the Programme in 2004 and 2005, in particular for the organization of the fortieth and forty-first sessions of the International Law Seminar, held at Geneva in 2004 and 2005, respectively, and for the activities of the Office of Legal Affairs of the Secretariat related to the fellowship programme in international law and to the Hamilton Shirley Amerasinghe Memorial Fellowship on the Law of the Sea, carried out, respectively, through its Codification Division and its Division for Ocean Affairs and the Law of the Sea;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to consider the possibility of admitting, for participation in the various components of the Programme, candidates from countries willing to bear the entire cost of such participation;

5. Also requests the Secretary-General to consider the relative advantages of using available resources and voluntary contributions for regional, subregional or national courses, as against courses organized within the United Nations system;

6. Further requests the Secretary-General to continue to provide the necessary resources to the programme budget for the Programme for the next and the future bienniums with a view to maintaining the effectiveness of the Programme;

7. Recognizes the importance of the United Nations recurrent legal publications listed in the report of the Secretary-General, and strongly encourages their continued publication;

8. Welcomes the efforts undertaken by the Office of Legal Affairs to bring up to date the United Nations Treaty Series and the United Nations Juridical Yearbook, as well as efforts made to place on the Internet the Treaty Series and other legal information;

9. Expresses its appreciation to the United Nations Institute for Training and Research for its participation in the Programme through the activities described in the report of the Secretary-General;

10. Also expresses its appreciation to The Hague Academy of International Law for the valuable contribution it continues to make to the Programme, which has enabled candidates under the fellowship programme in international law to attend and participate in the Programme in conjunction with the Academy courses;

11. Notes with appreciation the contributions of The Hague Academy to the teaching, study, dissemination and wider appreciation of international law, and calls upon Member States and interested organizations to give favourable consideration to the appeal of the Academy for a continuation of support and a possible increase in their financial contributions, to enable the Academy to carry out its activities, particularly those relating to the summer courses, regional courses and programmes of the Centre for Studies and Research in International Law and International Relations;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to publicize the Programme and periodically to invite Member States, universities, philanthropic foundations and other interested national and international institutions and organizations, as well as individuals, to make voluntary contributions towards the financing of the Programme or otherwise to assist in its implementation and possible expansion;

13. Reiterates its request to Member States and to interested organizations and individuals to make voluntary contributions, inter alia, for the International Law Seminar, the fellowship programme in international law, the Hamilton Shirley Amerasinghe Memorial Fellowship on the Law of the Sea and the United Nations Audiovisual Library in International Law, and expresses its appreciation to those Member States, institutions and individuals that have made voluntary contributions for this purpose;

14. Urges in particular all Governments to make voluntary contributions for the organization of regional refresher courses in international law by the United Nations Institute for Training and Research, especially with a view to covering the amount needed for the financing of the daily subsistence allowance for up to twenty-five participants in each regional course, thus alleviating the burden on prospective host countries and making it possible for the Institute to continue to organize the regional courses;

15. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its sixty-second session on the implementation of the Programme during 2006 and 2007 and, following consultations with the Advisory Committee on the Programme, to submit recommendations regarding the execution of the Programme in subsequent years;

16. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its sixty-second session the item entitled "United Nations Programme of Assistance in the Teaching, Study, Dissemination and Wider Appreciation of International Law".

Observer status for Hague Conference on Private International Law

On 23 November, the General Assembly, by resolution 60/27 (see p. 1543) granted observer status for the Hague Conference on Private International Law in the work of the Assembly.

Host country relations

In four meetings held in New York (15 April, 6 July, 28 September and 28 October), the Committee on Relations with the Host Country considered the following aspects of relations between the UN diplomatic community and the United States, the host country: transportation issues regarding the use of motor vehicles, parking and related matters; acceleration of immigration and customs procedures; entry visas issued by the host country; exemption from taxes; and host country travel regulations. The recommendations and conclusions on those items, approved by the Committee at its October meeting, were incorporated in its report [A/60/26].

Transportation

The Committee heard complaints from Mali, Nigeria, the Russian Federation, Venezuela, Viet Nam and the Syrian Arab Republic regarding difficulties experienced in the implementation of the Parking Programme for Diplomatic Vehicles, in force since November 2002 [YUN 2002, p. 1338]. The complaints centred around the slow responses to parking ticket issues; the withholding of vehicle registration; insufficient parking spaces; the non-receipt of monthly reports on parking tickets; the distance between allocated parking spaces and the missions; and the unsatisfactory resolution of outstanding issues related to fines. Complaints were made about the authorities' refusal to renew licence plates when a mission had been issued more than two parking tickets and about the lack of clarity in parking signs.

The United States undertook to arrange trilateral meetings with the City of New York and delegations to discuss their parking complaints, and explained, with respect to the non-renewal of registrations for private vehicles belonging to mission staff, that in accordance with the Parking Programme, a mission-owned vehicle with too many outstanding tickets would prevent the renewal of another vehicle's registration. He referred to two recent diplomatic notes from the United States Mission requesting missions to notify the New York hotline, as well as the United States Mission, when encountering parking difficulties.

In its recommendations and conclusions, the Committee stated that it continued to review the implementation of the 2002 Parking Programme for Diplomatic Vehicles, with a view to ensuring that it was fair, non-discriminatory, effective and consistent with international law. It requested the host country to continue to bring to the attention of New York City officials, the problems experienced by the permanent missions or their staff with regard to the Programme, in order to improve its functioning and to promote compliance with international norms concerning diplomatic privileges and immunities.

Immigration and customs procedures

The Committee heard from Costa Rica, Jamaica, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Malaysia, Mali, the Russian Federation, the Syrian Arab Republic and Venezuela about their experiences with US immigration and customs procedures. Requests were made for the exemption in the screening of official delegations at ports of entry to be extended to the staff of diplomatic missions, particularly the exemption from fingerprinting and photographing; that the exemption from body search applied at the ministerial level be extended to permanent representatives accredited to the United Nations, and that the host country should extend its review of the delays at airports to other ports of entry. Complaints were made that the new customs procedures were excessively lengthy and affected the departure of aircraft; and diplomats were being subjected to improper and unpleasant treatment and to secondary screening searches. Objections were also raised to the requirement of a 24-hour notice for travel plans. The Committee heard calls for the training of airport and airline personnel concerning diplomatic privileges and immunities, and for strengthened coordination between the Department of Homeland Security and the Department of State to ensure respect for privileges and immunities.

The United States representative responded that the new programme entitled "US Visit", which required all those entering the country to be fingerprinted, exempted "G" visa holders and their dependants, and asked to be informed of cases where that did not occur. He offered to direct the matter of the body search exemption for permanent representatives to the competent authorities. The procedures for airline arrivals were outside the scope of work of the Committee; however, where delays had occurred in the clearance of "G" visa holders, the United States Mission planned to meet with airport officials. A meeting between the Mission, the Department of Homeland Security and airport immigration authorities to discuss immigration procedures at the airports had resulted in a significant reduction of complaints.

At the September meeting, the United States representative acknowledged the positive comments made regarding the improvements introduced in connection with airport procedures and other areas; offered to meet with a representative of Venezuela to discuss that delegation's concerns; reported that United States authorities deemed it impossible to extend airport courtesies granted to cabinet-rank officials to permanent representatives, because airport security was under the control of transportation security agencies rather than the State Department; and pointed out that secondary screening at airports was determined by individual airlines based on certain booking characteristics, and not by the Department of Homeland Security or the State Department, and should be taken up with the airlines concerned. He underlined that the secondary screening was not directed at any particular diplomat or country, and invited all delegations to notify the Host Country Affairs Section of the United States Mission immediately of any incident at a port of entry or exit, rather than wait for the next meeting of the Committee to raise those complaints.

The Committee, considering that the maintenance of appropriate conditions for delegations and missions accredited to the United Nations was in the interest of the Organization and all Member States, appreciated the efforts made by the host country to that end, and anticipated that all the issues raised at its meetings would be duly settled in a spirit of cooperation and in accordance with international law.

Entry visas

The Committee heard complaints regarding delays in issuing entry visas from Cuba, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Nepal, Nigeria, the Russian Federation, Syrian Arab Republic and Venezuela.

Cuba deplored the fact that the President of the Cuban National Assembly had been prevented from participating in the second World Conference of Speakers of Parliament convened by the Inter-Parliamentary Union (IPU) at UN Headquarters from 7-9 September (see p. 76) and complained about the difficulties encountered by his delegation in relation to the High-level Plenary Meeting of the Assembly's sixtieth session (see p. 47). Venezuela complained about difficulties encountered by the delegation of President Hugo Chávez Frías regarding access to that same meeting and deplored the lack of compliance with the Headquarters Agreement and the rules and regulations on the attendance of Heads of State and high diplomatic officials at UN meetings. The Russian Federation reiterated that the 15-working-day time frame for granting visas was too long and constantly created difficulties for Russian representatives invited to perform official functions in the host country. The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya representative, while noting that a number of problems encountered previously had been overcome and all travel restrictions applicable to Libyan citizens had been lifted, the visa for the Prime Minister to attend the Assembly's High-level Plenary Meeting had been received two months after the application was submitted. Syria called upon the United States authorities to comply with international law and the Headquarters Agreement and suggested that the Committee should recommend a higher level of commitment from the host country in facilitating intergovernmental work.

The United States representative responded that its Mission was doing its utmost to ensure that visas were delivered on time. However, the 15-working-day application procedures for granting visas had to be maintained. He encouraged all delegations to contact the Mission when problems regarding the issuance of visas were anticipated or had occurred. He said that the Mission had worked very closely with the Cuban and Russian Missions, which had led to significant improvement. He suggested that unreasonable delays or emergency requests for visas be brought to the attention of the Host Country Affairs Section. More specifically, he said that the President of the Cuban National Assembly and other Cuban parliamentarians had been denied "B" (tourist) visas based on ineligibilities which were consistent with United States domestic immigration policies, and the National Assembly President was denied a "G" visa because the IPU Conference was not an official UN meeting. As for the Assembly's High-level Plenary Meeting, the Cuban Foreign Minister had been issued a visa on 13 September, and he regretted that the Minister had been unable to travel on that day. He also offered clarifications with respect to the entry on United States territory of the Venezuelan delegation.

The Committee anticipated that the host country would enhance its efforts to ensure the issuance, in a timely manner, of entry visas to representatives of Member States to travel to New York on official UN business, including to attend official UN meetings, noting that some delegations had requested shortening the time frame applied by the host country for issuing entry visas. The Committee also anticipated that the host country would enhance efforts to facilitate participation, including visa issuance, of representatives of Member States in other UN meetings, as appropriate.

Exemption from taxes

On the question of tax exemption, the Committee heard comments by Jamaica that many vendors refused to accept the tax exemption cards; as well as from Zambia and the Syrian Arab Republic.

The United States invited missions having problems with a particular vendor to contact the Office of Foreign Missions in New York, which was responsible for dealing with sales tax exemptions. The State of New York had declined the specific request of that Office to abandon the requirement for tax exemption forms. However, the issue would be revisited. In cases where sales taxes had been paid in New York State, there were possibilities of reimbursement, subject to the completion of formal procedures. He invited any mission not taking advantage of the utility tax and gasoline tax exemption programmes to apply.

Travel regulations

The Committee heard complaints, in July and September, from Cuba and the Russian Federation regarding the host country's policy of restrictions on their mission personnel and nationals working at the Secretariat. The United States explained that travel restrictions were applied to nationals of certain missions for national security reasons. Concerning the Russian Mission, a further relaxation of the travel restrictions had been introduced at border entry and exit points to include Atlanta, Georgia, and would also apply to Russian nationals working at the Secretariat.

The Committee, noting that some travel restrictions had been removed during the past year, continued to urge the host country to remove the remaining ones as soon as possible.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 23 November [meeting 53], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Sixth Committee [A/60/520], adopted resolution 60/24 without vote [agenda item 153].

Report of the Committee on Relations with the Host Country

3. Notes that the Committee will continue to review the implementation of the Parking Programme for Diplomatic Vehicles, with a view to addressing the problems experienced by some permanent missions in that respect and continuously ensuring its proper implementation in a manner that is fair, non-discriminatory, effective and therefore consistent with international law and that it shall remain seized of the matter;

4. Expresses its appreciation for the efforts made by the host country, and hopes that the issues raised at the meetings of the Committee will continue to be resolved in a spirit of cooperation and in accordance with international law;

5. Notes that during the reporting period some travel restrictions previously imposed by the host country on staff of certain missions and staff members of the Secretariat of certain nationalities were removed, and requests the host country to consider removing the remaining travel restrictions, and in this regard notes the positions of affected States, as reflected in the report of the Committee, and the positions of the Secretary-General and of the host country;

6. Notes also that the Committee anticipates that the host country will enhance its efforts to ensure the issuance, in a timely manner, of entry visas to representatives of Member States, pursuant to article IV, section 11, of the Agreement between the United Nations and the United States of America regarding the Headquarters of the United Nations, for travel to New York on United Nations business, and notes that the Committee anticipates that the host country will enhance efforts, including visa issuance, to facilitate the participation of representatives of Member States in other United Nations meetings as appropriate;

7. Notes further that a number of delegations have requested a shortening of the time frame applied by the host country for the issuance of entry visas to representatives of Member States, since the time frame poses difficulties for the full-fledged participation of Member States in United Nations meetings;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to remain actively engaged in all aspects of the relations of the United Nations with the host country;

9. Requests the Committee to continue its work in conformity with General Assembly resolution 2819 (XXVI);

10. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its sixty-first session the item entitled "Report of the Committee on Relations with the Host Country".

Convention against cloning of human beings

Pursuant to General Assembly decision 59/547 [YUN 2004, p. 1351], the Sixth Committee met on 18 February to resume consideration of an international convention against the reproductive cloning of human beings. It had before it the report [A/C.59/L.27/Rev.1] of the open-ended Working Group established pursuant to Assembly decision 59/547 to finalize the text of a United Nations declaration on human cloning. Due to a lack of consensus, the Working Group was unable to agree on a draft text and submitted to the Committee for consideration draft proposals by Honduras and Italy and amendments by Belgium, together with an informal proposal, all of which were annexed to the report.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 March [meeting 82], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Sixth Committee [A/59/516/Add.1], adopted resolution 59/280 by recorded vote (84-34-37) [agenda item 150].

United Nations Declaration on Human Cloning

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 53/152 of 9 December 1998, by which it endorsed the Universal Declaration on the Human Genome and Human Rights,

Approves the United Nations Declaration on Human Cloning annexed to the present resolution.

Annex

Recalling also its resolution 53/152 of 9 December 1998, by which it endorsed the Universal Declaration on the Human Genome and Human Rights,

Aware of the ethical concerns that certain applications of rapidly developing life sciences may raise with regard to human dignity, human rights and the fundamental freedoms of individuals,

Reaffirming that the application of life sciences should seek to offer relief from suffering and improve the health of individuals and humankind as a whole,

Emphasizing that the promotion of scientific and technical progress in life sciences should be sought in a manner that safeguards respect for human rights and the benefit of all,

Mindful of the serious medical, physical, psychological and social dangers that human cloning may imply for the individuals involved, and also conscious of the need to prevent the exploitation of women,

Convinced of the urgency of preventing the potential dangers of human cloning to human dignity,

Solemnly declares the following:

(a) Member States are called upon to adopt all measures necessary to protect adequately human life in the application of life sciences;

(b) Member States are called upon to prohibit all forms of human cloning inasmuch as they are incompatible with human dignity and the protection of human life;

(c) Member States are further called upon to adopt the measures necessary to prohibit the application of genetic engineering techniques that may be contrary to human dignity;

(d) Member States are called upon to take measures to prevent the exploitation of women in the application of life sciences;

(e) Member States are also called upon to adopt and implement without delay national legislation to bring into effect paragraphs (a) to (d);

International economic law

In 2005, legal aspects of international economic law continued to be considered by the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law (UNCITRAL) and by the Sixth Committee of the General Assembly.

International trade law

At its thirty-eighth session (Vienna, 4-15 July), UNCITRAL finalized and approved the draft convention on the use of electronic communications in international contracts, and recommended it for adoption by the General Assembly at the sixtieth session. It continued its work on public procurement, arbitration, transport law, and security interests. It also reviewed the implementation of the 1958 New York Convention on the Recognition and Enforcement of Foreign Arbitral Awards (the New York Convention) [YUN 1958, p. 390], the work on the collection and dissemination of case law on UNCITRAL texts (CLOUT), and training and technical assistance activities.

The report of the session [A/60/17] described actions taken on those topics. (For details, see below.)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 23 November [meeting 53], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Sixth Committee [A/60/515], adopted resolution 60/20 without vote [agenda item 79].

Report of the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law on the work of its thirty-eighth session

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 2205(XXI) of 17 December 1966, by which it established the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law with a mandate to further the progressive harmonization and unification of the law of international trade and in that respect to bear in mind the interests of all peoples, in particular those of developing countries, in the extensive development of international trade,

Reaffirming its belief that the progressive modernization and harmonization of international trade law, in reducing or removing legal obstacles to the flow of international trade, especially those affecting the developing countries, would contribute significantly to universal economic cooperation among all States on a basis of equality, equity and common interest and to the elimination of discrimination in international trade and, thereby, to the well-being of all peoples,

Having considered the report of the Commission on the work of its thirty-eighth session,

Reiterating its concern that activities undertaken by other bodies in the field of international trade law without adequate coordination with the Commission might lead to undesirable duplication of efforts and would not be in keeping with the aim of promoting efficiency, consistency and coherence in the unification and harmonization of international trade law,

Reaffirming the mandate of the Commission, as the core legal body within the United Nations system in the field of international trade law, to coordinate legal activities in this field, in particular to avoid duplication of efforts, including among organizations formulating rules of international trade, and to promote efficiency, consistency and coherence in the modernization and harmonization of international trade law, and to continue, through its secretariat, to maintain close cooperation with other international organs and organizations, including regional organizations, active in the field of international trade law,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law on the work of its thirty-eighth session;

2. Commends the Commission for the finalization and approval of a draft convention on the use of electronic communications in international contracts;

3. Also commends the Commission for the progress made in its work on a revision of its Model Law on Procurement of Goods, Construction and Services, on model legislative provisions on interim measures in international commercial arbitration, on a draft instrument on transport law and on a draft legislative guide on secured transactions;

4. Endorses the efforts and initiatives of the Commission, as the core legal body within the United Nations system in the field of international trade law, aimed at increasing coordination of and cooperation on legal activities of international and regional organizations active in the field of international trade law, and in this regard appeals to relevant international and regional organizations to coordinate their legal activities with those of the Commission, to avoid duplication of efforts and to promote efficiency, consistency and coherence in the modernization and harmonization of international trade law;

5. Reaffirms the importance, in particular for developing countries, of the work of the Commission concerned with technical assistance in the field of international trade law reform and development, and in this connection:

(a) Welcomes the initiatives of the Commission towards expanding, through its secretariat, its technical assistance programme;

(b) Expresses its appreciation to the Commission for carrying out technical assistance activities in Azerbaijan, Brazil, China, Ethiopia (for the Common Market for Eastern and Southern Africa), Serbia and Montenegro, Slovenia, South Africa (for the Association of Law Reform Agencies of Eastern and Southern Africa) and Thailand;

(c) Expresses its appreciation to the Governments whose contributions enabled the seminars and briefing missions to take place, and appeals to Governments, the relevant bodies of the United Nations system, organizations, institutions and individuals to make voluntary contributions to the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law Trust Fund for Symposia and, where appropriate, to the financing of special projects, and otherwise to assist the secretariat of the Commission in carrying out technical assistance activities, in particular in developing countries;

(d) Reiterates its appeal to the United Nations Development Programme and other bodies responsible for development assistance, such as the World Bank and regional development banks, as well as to Governments in their bilateral aid programmes, to support the technical assistance programme of the Commission and to cooperate and coordinate their activities with those of the Commission;

6. Takes note with regret that, since the thirty-sixth session of the Commission, no contributions have been made to the trust fund established to provide travel assistance to developing countries that are members of the Commission, at their request and in consultation with the Secretary-General, stresses the need for contributions to the trust fund in order to increase expert representation from developing countries at sessions of the Commission and its working groups, and reiterates its appeal to Governments, the relevant bodies of the United Nations system, organizations, institutions and individuals to make voluntary contributions to the trust fund;

7. Decides, in order to ensure full participation by all Member States in the sessions of the Commission and its working groups, to continue, in the competent Main Committee during the sixtieth session of the General Assembly, its consideration of granting travel assistance to the least developed countries that are members of the Commission, at their request and in consultation with the Secretary-General;

8. Recalls that the responsibility for the work of the Commission lies with the meetings of the Commission and its intergovernmental working groups, and stresses in this regard that information should be provided regarding meetings of experts, which bring an essential contribution to the work of the Commission;

9. Also recalls its resolutions on partnerships between the United Nations and non-State actors, in particular the private sector, and in this regard encourages the Commission to further explore different approaches to the use of partnerships with non-State actors in the implementation of its mandate, in particular in the area of technical assistance, in accordance with the applicable principles and guidelines and in cooperation and coordination with other relevant offices of the Secretariat, including the Global Compact Office;

10. Reiterates its request to the Secretary-General, in conformity with the General Assembly resolutions on documentation-related matters, which, in particular, emphasize that any reduction in the length of documents should not adversely affect either the quality of the presentation or the substance of the documents, to bear in mind the particular characteristics of the mandate and work of the Commission in implementing page limits with respect to the documentation of the Commission;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to continue providing summary records of the Commission's meetings relating to the formulation of normative texts;

12. Stresses the importance of bringing into effect the conventions emanating from the work of the Commission for the global unification and harmonization of international trade law, and, to this end, urges States that have not yet done so to consider signing, ratifying or acceding to those conventions;

13. Takes note with appreciation of the preparation of digests of case law relating to the texts of the Commission, in particular a digest of case law relating to the United Nations Convention on Contracts for the International Sale of Goods and a digest of case law relating to the Model Law on International Commercial Arbitration of the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law, which will assist in dissemination of information on those texts and promote their use, enactment and uniform interpretation;

14. Welcomes the decision of the Commission to hold, in the context of its fortieth session in 2007, a congress on international trade law in Vienna, with a view to reviewing the results of the past work of the Commission as well as related work of other organizations active in the field of international trade law, assessing current work programmes and considering topics and areas for future work, and acknowledges the importance of holding such a congress for the coordination and promotion of activities aimed at the modernization and harmonization of international trade law;

15. Notes that 2006 will mark the thirtieth anniversary of the adoption by the Commission of the Arbitration Rules of the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law, used worldwide in the settlement of disputes concerning international trade and investment, and in this regard welcomes initiatives being undertaken to organize conferences and other similar events to provide a forum for assessing the experience with the Rules, as well as discussing their possible revision;

16. Recalls its resolutions affirming the importance of high-quality, user-friendly and cost-effective United Nations websites and the need for their multilingual development, maintenance and enrichment, commends the Commission's restructured website in the six official languages of the United Nations, and welcomes the continuous efforts of the Commission to maintain and improve its website in accordance with the applicable guidelines.

Procurement

UNCITRAL [A/60/17] took note of the reports of Working Group I (Procurement) on its sixth (Vienna, 30 August–3 September 2004) [A/CN.9/568] and seventh (New York, 4-8 April) [A/CN.9/575] sessions relating to the revision of the UNCITRAL Model Law on Procurement of Goods, Construction and Services, in response to the Commission's 2004 request [YUN 2004, p. 1356]. UNCITRAL was informed that, at its sixth session, Working Group I had begun preparing proposals for the revision of the Model Law, with the preliminary consideration of 13 topics, and, at its seventh session, had started in-depth consideration of topics related to the use of electronic communications and technologies in the procurement process.

UNCITRAL noted the Working Group's decision to accommodate the use of electronic communications and technologies (including electronic reverse auctions), as well as the investigations of abnormally low tenders in the Model Law, and to consider those revisions to the Model Law at its eighth session. UNCITRAL commended the Working Group for the progress made, and reaffirmed its support for the review being undertaken and for the inclusion of novel procurement practices in the Model Law.

International commercial arbitration

UNCITRAL [A/60/17] took note of the progress made by Working Group II (Arbitration and Conciliation) at its forty-first [YUN 2004, p. 1353] and forty-second (New York, 10-14 January) [A/CN.9/573] sessions, during which the Group continued discussions on a draft text for a revision of article 17 of the UNCITRAL Model Law on International Commercial Arbitration on the power of an arbitral tribunal to grant interim measures of protection on an ex parte basis; a draft provision on the recognition and enforcement of interim measures of protection issued by an arbitral tribunal (17 bis); and a draft article dealing with interim measures issued by state courts in support of arbitration (17 ter). UNCITRAL noted that the Group had yet to finalize its work on those draft articles, including the form in which the current and revised provisions could be presented in the Arbitration Model Law, and expressed its expectation that the Group would be able to present its proposals for final review and adoption to UNCITRAL's thirty-ninth (2006) session.

With respect to future work in the field of settlement of commercial disputes, UNCITRAL noted the Group's suggestion that priority consideration should be given to arbitrability of intra-corporate disputes and related issues, and those issues arising from online dispute resolution and the possible revision of the UNCITRAL Arbitration Rules. UNCITRAL was informed that 2006 would mark the thirtieth anniversary of the Arbitration Rules, and that conferences to celebrate that anniversary were expected to be organized in different regions, including one in Vienna on 6 and 7 April 2006, under the auspices of the International Arbitral Centre of the Austrian Federal Economic Chamber.

Implementation of the 1958 New York Convention

Under the ongoing project approved by UNCITRAL in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 1364], aimed at monitoring the legislative implementation of the 1958 New York Convention [YUN 1958, p. 390], UNCITRAL [A/60/17] considered an interim report [A/CN.9/585] it had requested of the Secretariat in 2004 [YUN 2004, p. 1353]. The report set out the issues raised in the replies received to the questionnaire relating to the legal regime in States parties to the Convention governing the recognition and enforcement of foreign arbitral awards. It included additional questions UNCITRAL might want to put to States in order to obtain more comprehensive information regarding implementation practice.

UNCITRAL welcomed the progress reflected in the interim report. It was pointed out that, taking into account that questionnaires had been circulated since 1995, the work should be finalized in due course, and that given the limited resources of the Secretariat, care should be taken to ensure that the project did not duplicate the extensive ongoing research on the implementation of the Convention. UNCITRAL considered the approach taken in preparing the interim report, including the naming of States and the possibility of appointing national experts on international arbitration, arbitration centres or academic organizations to assist the Secretariat in completing the work. UNCITRAL agreed that the Secretariat should have flexibility in determining the time frame for completing the project, the level of detail, whether individual States should be identified, the extent of references to case law, and in ensuring that the work was not duplicative of work in other forums.

Transport law

UNCITRAL [A/60/17] considered the reports of Working Group III (Transport Law) on its fourteenth [YUN 2004, p. 1354] and fifteenth (New York, 18-28 April) [A/CN.9/576] sessions, describing its continuing work on the provisions of a draft instrument on the carriage of goods wholly or partly by sea. UNCITRAL was informed that the Working Group had proceeded with its second reading of the draft instrument and had made good progress on a number of difficult issues, including those regarding the basis of liability pursuant to the draft instrument, as well as the scope of application of the instrument and related freedom of contract issues. The Group also considered the chapters of the draft instrument on jurisdiction and arbitration and had an initial exchange of views on the right of control and transfer of rights. Following consultations with Working Group IV (Electronic Commerce), the Group considered for the first time, at its fifteenth session, provisions in the draft instrument relating to electronic commerce. The Group was expected to complete its work at the end of 2006, with a view to presenting a draft instrument for possible adoption by UNCITRAL in 2007.

UNCITRAL commended the Working Group for the progress made. It noted that the Group's working methods should be compatible with the production of official documents in all official languages; that in meetings convened by the Secretariat, experts should be allowed to express themselves in UN working languages; and the translation of documents into all official languages should be considered by the Working Group. With respect to a time frame for completing the draft instrument, UNCITRAL agreed that 2007 would be a desirable goal for its completion and adoption, but that the matter should be revisited in 2006.

Electronic commerce

UNCITRAL, at its thirty-eighth session [A/60/17], considered the revised draft convention on the use of electronic communications in international contracts, which had been deliberated by Working Group IV at its forty-fourth session [YUN 2004, p. 1354]. It took note of the summary of the deliberations on the draft convention since the thirty-ninth session of the Working Group and of the background information provided [A/CN.9/577/Add.1], as well as of the comments on the draft convention submitted by Governments and international organizations [A/CN.9/578 & Add. 1-17]. After finalizing the draft convention, UNCITRAL requested the Secretariat to prepare, for its thirty-ninth session, the explanatory notes to the text. Also before UNCITRAL was a note by the Secretariat [A/CN.9/579] on current work by other international organizations in the area of electronic commerce.

On 15 July, UNCITRAL approved and submitted to the General Assembly for adoption at its sixtieth session, a UN convention on the use of electronic communications in international contracts, contained in an annex. The draft convention was aimed at removing possible legal obstacles to electronic commerce that might arise under existing international trade-related instruments.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 23 November [meeting 53], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Sixth Committee [A/60/513], adopted resolution 60/21 without vote [agenda item 79].

United Nations Convention on the Use of Electronic Communications in International Contracts

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 2205(XXI) of 17 December 1966, by which it established the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law with a mandate to further the progressive harmonization and unification of the law of international trade and in that respect to bear in mind the interests of all peoples, in particular those of developing countries, in the extensive development of international trade,

Considering that problems created by uncertainties as to the legal value of electronic communications exchanged in the context of international contracts constitute an obstacle to international trade,

Convinced that the adoption of uniform rules to remove obstacles to the use of electronic communications in international contracts, including obstacles that might result from the operation of existing international trade law instruments, would enhance legal certainty and commercial predictability for international contracts and may help States gain access to modern trade routes,

Recalling that, at its thirty-fourth session, in 2001, UNCITRAL decided to prepare an international instrument dealing with issues of electronic contracting, which should also aim at removing obstacles to electronic commerce in existing uniform law conventions and trade agreements, and entrusted its Working Group IV (Electronic Commerce) with the preparation of a draft,

Noting that the Working Group devoted six sessions, from 2002 to 2004, to the preparation of the draft Convention on the Use of Electronic Communications in International Contracts, and that UNCITRAL considered the draft Convention at its thirty-eighth session in 2005,

Being aware that all States and interested international organizations were invited to participate in the preparation of the draft Convention at all the sessions of the Working Group and at the thirty-eighth session of the Commission, either as members or as observers, with a full opportunity to speak and make proposals,

Noting with satisfaction that the text of the draft Convention was circulated for comments before the thirty-eighth session of the Commission to all Governments and international organizations invited to attend the meetings of the Commission and the Working Group as observers, and that the comments received were before the Commission at its thirty-eighth session,

Taking note with satisfaction of the decision of the Commission at its thirty-eighth session to submit the draft Convention to the General Assembly for its consideration,

Taking note of the draft Convention approved by the Commission,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law for preparing the draft Convention on the Use of Electronic Communications in International Contracts;

2. Adopts the United Nations Convention on the Use of Electronic Communications in International Contracts, which is contained in the annex to the present resolution, and requests the Secretary-General to open it for signature;

3. Calls upon all Governments to consider becoming party to the Convention.

Annex

United Nations Convention on the Use of Electronic Communications in International Contracts

The States Parties to this Convention,

Reaffirming their belief that international trade on the basis of equality and mutual benefit is an important element in promoting friendly relations among States,

Noting that the increased use of electronic communications improves the efficiency of commercial activities, enhances trade connections and allows new access opportunities for previously remote parties and markets, thus playing a fundamental role in promoting trade and economic development, both domestically and internationally,

Considering that problems created by uncertainty as to the legal value of the use of electronic communications in international contracts constitute an obstacle to international trade,

Convinced that the adoption of uniform rules to remove obstacles to the use of electronic communications in international contracts, including obstacles that might result from the operation of existing international trade law instruments, would enhance legal certainty and commercial predictability for international contracts and help States gain access to modern trade routes,

Being of the opinion that uniform rules should respect the freedom of parties to choose appropriate media and technologies, taking account of the principles of technological neutrality and functional equivalence, to the extent that the means chosen by the parties comply with the purpose of the relevant rules of law,

Desiring to provide a common solution to remove legal obstacles to the use of electronic communications in a manner acceptable to States with different legal, social and economic systems,

Have agreed as follows:

Chapter I
Sphere of application

Article 1
Scope of application

1. This Convention applies to the use of electronic communications in connection with the formation or performance of a contract between parties whose places of business are in different States.

2. The fact that the parties have their places of business in different States is to be disregarded whenever this fact does not appear either from the contract or from any dealings between the parties or from information disclosed by the parties at any time before or at the conclusion of the contract.

3. Neither the nationality of the parties nor the civil or commercial character of the parties or of the contract is to be taken into consideration in determining the application of this Convention.

Article 2
Exclusions

1. This Convention does not apply to electronic communications relating to any of the following:

(a) Contracts concluded for personal, family or household purposes;

(b) (i) Transactions on a regulated exchange; (ii) foreign exchange transactions; (iii) inter-bank payment systems, inter-bank payment agreements or clearance and settlement systems relating to securities or other financial assets or instruments; (iv) the transfer of security rights in sale, loan or holding of or agreement to repurchase securities or other financial assets or instruments held with an intermediary.

2. This Convention does not apply to bills of exchange, promissory notes, consignment notes, bills of lading, warehouse receipts or any transferable document or instrument that entitles the bearer or beneficiary to claim the delivery of goods or the payment of a sum of money.

Article 3
Party autonomy

The parties may exclude the application of this Convention or derogate from or vary the effect of any of its provisions.

Chapter II
General provisions

Article 4

(b) "Electronic communication" means any communication that the parties make by means of data messages;

(d) "Originator" of an electronic communication means a party by whom, or on whose behalf, the electronic communication has been sent or generated prior to storage, if any, but it does not include a party acting as an intermediary with respect to that electronic communication;

(e) "Addressee" of an electronic communication means a party who is intended by the originator to receive the electronic communication, but does not include a party acting as an intermediary with respect to that electronic communication;

(f) "Information system" means a system for generating, sending, receiving, storing or otherwise processing data messages;

(g) "Automated message system" means a computer program or an electronic or other automated means used to initiate an action or respond to data messages or performances in whole or in part, without review or intervention by a natural person each time an action is initiated or a response is generated by the system;

(h) "Place of business" means any place where a party maintains a non-transitory establishment to pursue an economic activity other than the temporary provision of goods or services out of a specific location.

Article 5
Interpretation

1. In the interpretation of this Convention, regard is to be had to its international character and to the need to promote uniformity in its application and the observance of good faith in international trade.

2. Questions concerning matters governed by this Convention which are not expressly settled in it are to be settled in conformity with the general principles on which it is based or, in the absence of such principles, in conformity with the law applicable by virtue of the rules of private international law.

Article 6
Location of the parties

1. For the purposes of this Convention, a party's place of business is presumed to be the location indicated by that party, unless another party demonstrates that the party making the indication does not have a place of business at that location.

2. If a party has not indicated a place of business and has more than one place of business, then the place of business for the purposes of this Convention is that which has the closest relationship to the relevant contract, having regard to the circumstances known to or contemplated by the parties at any time before or at the conclusion of the contract.

3. If a natural person does not have a place of business, reference is to be made to the person's habitual residence.

4. A location is not a place of business merely because that is: (a) where equipment and technology supporting an information system used by a party in connection with the formation of a contract are located; or (b) where the information system may be accessed by other parties.

5. The sole fact that a party makes use of a domain name or electronic mail address connected to a specific country does not create a presumption that its place of business is located in that country.

Article 7
Information requirements

Nothing in this Convention affects the application of any rule of law that may require the parties to disclose their identities, places of business or other information, or relieves a party from the legal consequences of making inaccurate, incomplete or false statements in that regard.

Chapter III
Use of electronic communications in international contracts

Article 8
Legal recognition of electronic communications

1. A communication or a contract shall not be denied validity or enforceability on the sole ground that it is in the form of an electronic communication.

2. Nothing in this Convention requires a party to use or accept electronic communications, but a party's agreement to do so may be inferred from the party's conduct.

Article 9
Form requirements

1. Nothing in this Convention requires a communication or a contract to be made or evidenced in any particular form.

2. Where the law requires that a communication or a contract should be in writing, or provides consequences for the absence of a writing, that requirement is met by an electronic communication if the information contained therein is accessible so as to be usable for subsequent reference.

3. Where the law requires that a communication or a contract should be signed by a party, or provides consequences for the absence of a signature, that requirement is met in relation to an electronic communication if:

(a) A method is used to identify the party and to indicate that party's intention in respect of the information contained in the electronic communication; and

(b) The method used is either:

(i) As reliable as appropriate for the purpose for which the electronic communication was generated or communicated, in the light of all the circumstances, including any relevant agreement; or

(ii) Proven in fact to have fulfilled the functions described in subparagraph (a) above, by itself or together with further evidence.

4. Where the law requires that a communication or a contract should be made available or retained in its original form, or provides consequences for the absence of an original, that requirement is met in relation to an electronic communication if:

(a) There exists a reliable assurance as to the integrity of the information it contains from the time when it was first generated in its final form, as an electronic communication or otherwise; and

(b) Where it is required that the information it contains be made available, that information is capable of being displayed to the person to whom it is to be made available.

5. For the purposes of paragraph 4 (a):

(a) The criteria for assessing integrity shall be whether the information has remained complete and unaltered, apart from the addition of any endorsement and any change that arises in the normal course of communication, storage and display; and

(b) The standard of reliability required shall be assessed in the light of the purpose for which the information was generated and in the light of all the relevant circumstances.

Article 10
Time and place of dispatch and receipt of electronic communications

1. The time of dispatch of an electronic communication is the time when it leaves an information system under the control of the originator or of the party who sent it on behalf of the originator or, if the electronic communication has not left an information system under the control of the originator or of the party who sent it on behalf of the originator, the time when the electronic communication is received.

2. The time of receipt of an electronic communication is the time when it becomes capable of being retrieved by the addressee at an electronic address designated by the addressee. The time of receipt of an electronic communication at another electronic address of the addressee is the time when it becomes capable of being retrieved by the addressee at that address and the addressee becomes aware that the electronic communication has been sent to that address. An electronic communication is presumed to be capable of being retrieved by the addressee when it reaches the addressee's electronic address.

3. An electronic communication is deemed to be dispatched at the place where the originator has its place of business and is deemed to be received at the place where the addressee has its place of business, as determined in accordance with article 6.

4. Paragraph 2 of this article applies notwithstanding that the place where the information system supporting an electronic address is located may be different from the place where the electronic communication is deemed to be received under paragraph 3 of this article.

Article 11
Invitations to make offers

A proposal to conclude a contract made through one or more electronic communications which is not addressed to one or more specific parties, but is generally accessible to parties making use of information systems, including proposals that make use of interactive applications for the placement of orders through such information systems, is to be considered as an invitation to make offers, unless it clearly indicates the intention of the party making the proposal to be bound in case of acceptance.

Article 12
Use of automated message systems for contract formation

A contract formed by the interaction of an automated message system and a natural person, or by the interaction of automated message systems, shall not be denied validity or enforceability on the sole ground that no natural person reviewed or intervened in each of the individual actions carried out by the automated message systems or the resulting contract.

Article 13
Availability of contract terms

Nothing in this Convention affects the application of any rule of law that may require a party that negotiates some or all of the terms of a contract through the exchange of electronic communications to make available to the other party those electronic communications which contain the contractual terms in a particular manner, or relieves a party from the legal consequences of its failure to do so.

Article 14
Error in electronic communications

1. Where a natural person makes an input error in an electronic communication exchanged with the automated message system of another party and the automated message system does not provide the person with an opportunity to correct the error, that person, or the party on whose behalf that person was acting, has the right to withdraw the portion of the electronic communication in which the input error was made if:

(a) The person, or the party on whose behalf that person was acting, notifies the other party of the error as soon as possible after having learned of the error and indicates that he or she made an error in the electronic communication; and

(b) The person, or the party on whose behalf that person was acting, has not used or received any material benefit or value from the goods or services, if any, received from the other party.

2. Nothing in this article affects the application of any rule of law that may govern the consequences of any error other than as provided for in paragraph 1.

If a Contracting State has two or more territorial units in which different systems of law are applicable in relation to the matters dealt with in this Convention, it may, at the time of signature, ratification, acceptance, approval or accession, declare that this Convention is to extend to all its territorial units or only to one or more of them, and may amend its declaration by submitting another declaration at any time.

2. These declarations are to be notified to the depositary and are to state expressly the territorial units to which the Convention extends.

3. If, by virtue of a declaration under this article, this Convention extends to one or more but not all of the territorial units of a Contracting State, and if the place of business of a party is located in that State, this place of business, for the purposes of this Convention, is considered not to be in a Contracting State, unless it is in a territorial unit to which the Convention extends.

2. Any Contracting State may exclude from the scope of application of this Convention the matters it specifies in a declaration made in accordance with article 21.

Article 20
Communications exchanged under other international conventions

1. The provisions of this Convention apply to the use of electronic communications in connection with the formation or performance of a contract to which any of the following international conventions, to which a Contracting State to this Convention is or may become a Contracting State, apply:

The provisions of this Convention apply further to electronic communications in connection with the formation or performance of a contract to which another international convention, treaty or agreement not specifically referred to in paragraph 1 of this article, and to which a Contracting State to this Convention is or may become a Contracting State, applies, unless the State has declared, in accordance with article 21, that it will not be bound by this paragraph.

3. A State that makes a declaration pursuant to paragraph 2 of this article may also declare that it will nevertheless apply the provisions of this Convention to the use of electronic communications in connection with the formation or performance of any contract to which a specified international convention, treaty or agreement applies to which the State is or may become a Contracting State.

4. Any State may declare that it will not apply the provisions of this Convention to the use of electronic communications in connection with the formation or performance of a contract to which any international convention, treaty or agreement specified in that State's declaration, to which the State is or may become a Contracting State, applies, including any of the conventions referred to in paragraph 1 of this article, even if such State has not excluded the application of paragraph 2 of this article by a declaration made in accordance with article 21.

2. When a State ratifies, accepts, approves or accedes to this Convention after the deposit of the third instrument of ratification, acceptance, approval or accession, this Convention enters into force in respect of that State on the first day of the month following the expiration of six months after the date of the deposit of its instrument of ratification, acceptance, approval or accession.

Article 24

DONE at New York, this [...] day of [...] 2005, in a single original, of which the Arabic, Chinese, English, French, Russian and Spanish texts are equally authentic.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF the undersigned plenipotentiaries, being duly authorized by their respective Governments, have signed this Convention.

Security interests

UNCITRAL [A/60/17] took note of the reports of Working Group VI (Security Interests) on its sixth [YUN 2004, p. 1355] and seventh (New York, 24-28 January) [A/CN.9/574] sessions, at which the Working Group continued the development of an efficient legal regime for security rights in goods involved in a commercial activity, in the form of a legislative guide.

UNCITRAL commended the Working Group for the progress it had achieved so far, noting that a complete consolidated set of legislative recommendations would be before the Working Group at its eighth (2006) session, including recommendations on inventory, equipment and trade receivables, as well as on negotiable instruments, negotiable documents, bank accounts and proceeds from independent undertakings. It also noted the progress made in the coordination of the Group's work with the Hague Conference on Private International Law, the International Institute for the Unification of Private Law (Unidroit), the World Bank and the World Intellectual Property Organization. UNCITRAL requested the Group to expedite its work so as to submit the draft legislative guide to the Commission for approval in principle, in 2006, and for final adoption in 2007.

Case law on UNCITRAL texts

UNCITRAL [A/60/17] noted the ongoing work under the system for the collection and dissemination of case law on UNCITRAL texts (CLOUT), consisting of the preparation of case abstracts and research aids and analytical tools, such as thesauri and indices, and the compilation of full texts of decisions. A total of 46 issues of CLOUT had been published, dealing with 530 cases.

UNCITRAL expressed its appreciation to the national correspondents for their work in selecting decisions and preparing case abstracts. It noted that the digest of the case law on the United Nations Sales Convention had been published in December 2004 [YUN 2004, p. 1356], and that the first draft of a digest of case law related to the Arbitration Model Law would be before CLOUT national correspondents at their July meeting.

Training and technical assistance

UNCITRAL [A/60/17] had before it a note by the Secretariat [A/CN.9/586] describing the technical assistance activities undertaken since 2004 and the direction of future activities. Among activities reported were 10 seminars organized to promote understanding of international commercial law conventions, model laws and other legal texts; assistance with legislative and other drafting; and participation in 43 seminars, conferences and courses examining UNCITRAL texts for possible adoption or use. UNCITRAL also co-sponsored the twelfth Willem C. Vis International Commercial Arbitration Moot (Vienna, 19-24 March) to disseminate information about uniform law texts and the teaching of international trade law.

UNCITRAL noted that the technical assistance unit had identified its goals and taken steps to draft guidelines addressing the requirements for organizing, implementing and reporting on technical assistance activities, and was beginning to identify national and regional needs for technical assistance, as well as opportunities for developing joint programmes with, and participating in, programmes of organizations providing technical assistance in trade law reform.

UNCITRAL reiterated its appeal to all States, international organizations and other interested entities to contribute to its trust funds to enable it to meet the increasing demands for its training and technical legislative assistance and for travel assistance to Commission members from developing countries.

Future work

In 2005, UNCITRAL discussed its future work programme based on Secretariat notes on insolvency law [A/CN.9/582 & Add. 1-7], specifically on the treatment of corporate groups in insolvency, cross-border insolvency protocols in transnational cases, post-commencement financing and commercial fraud and insolvency, as well as on electronic commerce [A/CN.9/579].

UNCITRAL agreed to hold an international colloquium on insolvency in Vienna from 14 to 16 November, to facilitate further consideration and obtain the views and benefit from the expertise of international organizations and insolvency experts. As to future work on electronic commerce, UNCITRAL agreed that the Secretariat should prepare a more detailed study, with proposals as to the form and nature of the reference document that would be envisaged, and taking into account the recommendations for future work proposed by Working Group IV, for the Commission's consideration at its thirty-ninth (2006) session.

UNCITRAL approved a plan, in the context of its fortieth (2007) session, to hold a congress similar to the 1992 [YUN 1992, p. 1012] UNCITRAL Congress on Uniform Commercial Law in the Twenty-first Century. The 2007 Congress would review the results of UNCITRAL work programme, as well as the related work of other organizations active in the field of international trade law, assess current work programmes and consider and evaluate topics for future work.

PART FIVE

Institutional, administrative and budgetary questions

Chapter I

Strengthening and restructuring of the United Nations system

During 2005, the implementation of the Secretary-General's programme of reform of the Organization continued, with actions centred around the UN system's role in addressing the core challenges of development. In a report on the implementation of the Millennium Declaration, the Secretary-General considered issues relating to the use of monitoring, evaluation and reporting by the UN system, and stressed the importance of integrating and aligning UN development policies with the priorities and strategies of national Governments. In January, the Millennium Project, an independent advisory body commissioned by the Secretary-General in 2002, issued its final report on strategies for the implementation of the Millennium Development Goals (MDGs). A Development Cooperation Forum was established to review global, regional, and national strategies and policies for development cooperation and to provide guidance on the matter.

During the year, the Independent Inquiry Committee (IIC) established in 2004 to investigate the oil-for-food-programme issued several reports on its findings, including a September report on the programme's management. In response to the recommendations contained in the report, as well as the decisions of the General Assembly taken at its High-level Plenary meeting in September, action was taken to introduce reforms, such as the establishment of a new Ethics Office to serve as a focal point within the UN Secretariat for issues including financial disclosure, the protection of staff against retaliation for reporting misconduct, and the development of standards, training and education on ethics issues. Other changes in the UN's structure included the replacement of the Accountability Panel with the Management Performance Board, which would advise the Secretary-General on matters concerning the performance of individual senior managers, and the creation of an Audit Advisory Committee to assist the Secretary-General in his oversight responsibilities. A review of UN system governance arrangements, including an external evaluation of the auditing and oversight system, was to be conducted. The Assembly also adopted measures to strengthen its functioning.

Programme of reform

General aspects

In his annual report on the work of the Organization [A/61/1], the Secretary-General stated that, since 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 1389], when an ongoing UN reform package was first established, much of his reform agenda had been implemented. Changes had been made to work programmes, structures and systems, both at Headquarters and in the field, but not all reforms had been accepted by Member States and the Organization needed to continue to improve. Noting that Member States at the 2005 World Summit had reaffirmed their commitment to a more efficient and effective United Nations (see p. 63), the Secretary-General addressed issues relating to the Organization's intergovernmental machinery, as well as the Secretariat, its mandates, cooperation with regional organizations and system-wide coherence.

During 2005, reforms of the Secretariat included the introduction of measures to strengthen accountability and improve ethical conduct in the Organization. An Ethics Office was established in December (see p. 1476) to administer new policies on protection for reporting misconduct and financial disclosure, and procurement reforms efforts were validated by an independent review conducted by the United States National Institute of Government Purchasing. Following the revelation of criminal misconduct concerning a UN procurement official, the Secretary-General ordered a complete review of internal and financial controls. Two senior management committees were created to improve executive decision-making and a Management Performance Board established to improve senior managerial accountability.

To strengthen and update the UN programme of work, leaders at the World Summit, responding to the Secretary-General's proposal contained in his report "In larger freedom: towards development, security and human rights for all" (see p. 67), requested the General Assembly and other relevant organs to review all mandates that were older than five years. They also supported a stronger relationship between the United Nations and regional and subregional organizations and resolved to expand cooperation with such organizations. At the sixth high-level meeting with the heads of regional organizations, convened in July (see p. 96), a standing committee was established to provide overall guidance to the process of creating a more structured relationship between the United Nations and regional organizations. The World Summit outcome document also called for stronger UN system-wide coherence, in particular across development-related organizations, agencies, funds and programmes (see p. 65). It requested the Secretary-General to further strengthen the management and coordination of UN operational activities, as well as the governance, management and coordination of the Organization.

Agenda for change

Strengthening of the UN system

Report of the Secretary-General to the 2005 World Summit

In his March report "In larger freedom" (see p. 67), the Secretary-General noted that most of the reform elements contained in his 2002 "agenda for further change" [YUN 2002, p. 1353] had been implemented, resulting in a thoroughly revised programme budget for 2004-2005; a shorter, more efficient cycle of planning and budgeting for the 2006-2007 biennium; a reduction in the quantity of reports and meetings; and a greater integration of human rights elements in the work of the UN country teams. However, as progress in a number of other areas had been slow, the Secretary-General launched, in 2005, a two-track package of Secretariat reform: one to be pursued under his own authority; and another to be taken up in the context of the wider proposals contained in the report. The measures set for immediate implementation included initiatives to address serious concerns raised by UN staff in an integrity perception survey, the recommendations of the Independent Inquiry Committee investigating the oil-for-food programme (see p. 1475), and to improve the performance of senior management, enhance oversight and accountability and ensure ethical conduct and transparency.

In 2005, the Senior Management Group, an internal information-sharing and coordination tool established in 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 1390], was replaced with two smaller senior committees—one for policy issues and the other for management reform matters. A more transparent system for the selection of new UN leaders was introduced, using an open selection process based on predetermined criteria, and a more structured system of induction put in place to ensure that senior officials were properly briefed on UN rules, regulations, codes of conduct and managerial systems. To address the need for better tools to ensure accountability, a Management Performance Board was created to assess the performance of individual managers and advise the Secretary-General on corrective action where necessary. A new Oversight Committee was also established to ensure that appropriate management action was taken to implement the recommendations of the various oversight bodies.

The Organization was moving ahead to strengthen ethical conduct, including introducing a new policy for the protection of whistleblowers and taking swift and appropriate disciplinary action against all proven cases of sexual misconduct. Measures to improve training, impose a new standard of conduct, establish credible complaint mechanisms and review welfare and recreational needs for personnel in the field were also underway, as were the introduction of a more expansive requirement for financial disclosure by senior officials and the better dissemination of code of conduct requirements. The Organization was also developing a clear and consistent policy for sharing different categories of UN information, which would increase transparency, while ensuring confidentiality. Alongside the proposed review of all mandates older than five years, the Secretary-General proposed a one-time buy-out for UN personnel whose skills and profiles no longer matched the needs of the Secretariat, and asked the General Assembly to approve a thorough review of all budgetary and human resources rules governing the Secretariat.

In the World Summit outcome document, world leaders asked the Secretary-General to submit, in early 2006, proposals for implementing management reforms to the Assembly for consideration and decisions in those areas of identified need (see p. 65).

Implementation of the Millennium Declaration

Reports of Secretary-General. In a May report to the Economic and Social Council [E/2005/56], the Secretary-General identified core issues relevant to the achievement of the Millennium Development Goals (MDGs), first elaborated in the section of the UN Millennium Declaration [YUN 2000, p. 49] that dealt with development and poverty eradication [ibid., p. 51], and reviewed progress made in implementing those Goals. The MDGs, which were eight in number, were to eradicate extreme hunger; achieve universal primary education; promote gender equality and empower women; reduce child mortality; improve maternal health; combat HIV/AIDS, malaria and other diseases; ensure environmental sustainability; and develop a global partnership for development.

Noting that the achievement of the MDGs and the implementation of the wider development agenda were interlinked, the report also reviewed progress made in the integrated and coordinated implementation of the outcomes and commitments of major UN development conferences and summits. It highlighted the core challenges addressed by those meetings, including eradicating poverty, hunger and malnutrition; advancing education and literacy; providing health services, preventing disease and reducing mortality; promoting gender equality and empowering women; promoting employment; achieving social integration and addressing vulnerabilities of social groups; ensuring environmental sustainability and managing the natural resource base for development; promoting democracy, good governance and human rights; and addressing challenges of countries with special needs. Key instruments essential for the implementation of the MDGs—strengthening global partnership for development, making macroeconomic policies work for sustained employment-generating economic growth, promoting science and technology for development and enhancing the role of civil society and the private sector in development—were also examined. Those areas would serve as tools for developing integrated policy frameworks at the national and international levels, strengthening direct linkages with strategies to achieve the MDGs, and facilitating effective monitoring and evaluation of the implementation of the UN development agenda. The Secretary-General addressed the progress and gaps in the implementation of each of the core challenges highlighted in the report and considered the key instruments for achieving the UN development agenda.

The Secretary-General concluded that progress in the implementation of the development agenda had been made in several areas but was slow and uneven. Given the current pace, neither the MDGs, nor the broader UN development agenda, would be achieved, unless both were truly embraced at the national and international levels, backed by practical targets and long-term commitments; sectorial approaches to development replaced by a more integrated, synergistic and holistic framework; the necessary resources invested in pursuit of the agenda; institutional impediments at the national and international levels addressed; and constant monitoring and evaluation arrangements put in place to ensure that the process remained on track.

He outlined the principles guiding the implementation of the comprehensive UN development agenda, which included undertaking development and investment strategies, identifying and assessing needs, vulnerabilities and capacities; recognizing and building on interlinkages within the system; making the process particpatory and inclusive; mainstreaming the broader development objectives into macroeconomic policy; enhancing the role of civil society and the private sector in development; strengthening the role of science and technology; ensuring resources and international partnership for achieving the development agenda; and monitoring, evaluating and reporting in order to measure progress, identify impediments and take corrective actions.

To achieve the comprehensive UN development agenda, UN system organizations had to integrate and align fully their policies and programmes with the priorities of national Governments, international commitments and the agreed goals and targets embodied in that agenda, including the MDGs; develop coherent and integrated system-wide approaches to the achievement of key development objectives, which could be translated into national policies and strategies; design UN operational activities at the country level to support such strategies; strengthen the linkages between that work and the normative work of the Organization; and coordinate with other actors in the field.

At the intergovernmental level, there should be a coherent, coordinated and integrated monitoring and evaluation of the implementation of the development agenda. The Secretary-General recommended that the Economic and Social Council review progress in the implementation of the UN development agenda, particularly the MDGs, with a view to strengthening the system's capacity for a comprehensive monitoring and evaluation of its implementation and promoting effective policies and strategies at all levels. Towards that end, the Council should organize peer reviews of progress. An existing meeting or segment of the Council could be transformed once every two years into a Development Cooperation Forum, where global, regional and national strategies and policies for development cooperation could be reviewed and policy guidance provided. The Council should pursue a continuous policy dialogue within the UN system to enhance policy coherence, coordination and cooperation. It should mount coordinated responses to natural disasters and other actual or imminent threats to development and provide timely inputs or address developments in other forums that had major implications for achieving the development goals.

By decision 2005/222 of 6 July, the Council noted the Secretary-General's report.

CEB action. The High-level Committee on Programmes (HLCP) of the United Nations System Chief Executives Board for Coordination (CEB), at its ninth session (Rome, Italy, 23-25 February) [CEB/2005/4], discussed the 2005 review of the implementation of the Millennium Declaration. It reviewed progress in the elaboration of a CEB report on the UN system response to the Declaration. It had before it a revised draft of that report, an updated annex on major collaborative initiatives to support the implementation of the Declaration and a summary of comments and suggestions by HLCP members on the draft. A revised version of the draft report was to be prepared for the April session of CEB, as part of the preparations for the high-level segment of the Economic and Social Council, as well as the discussions leading to the High-level Plenary Meeting of the General Assembly (World Summit). The report would also be brought to the attention of relevant agency governing bodies. HLCP established a task force to pursue a 2004 proposal [YUN 2004, p. 1364] of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO) to enhance the role of the UN system in economic development as a means of advancing the achievement of the MDGs. The task force should report in September and submit a final report in 2006.

CEB, at its first 2005 regular session (Mont Pèlerin, Switzerland, 9 April) [CEB/2005/1], in considering follow-up to the Millennium Declaration [YUN 2000, p. 49], discussed the Secretary-General's report to the World Summit entitled "In larger freedom: towards development, security and human rights for all" (see p. 67). The HLCP Chairman briefed CEB on the HLCP report entitled "One United Nations—catalyst for progress and change", the main purpose of which was to illustrate how the UN system had responded to the Millennium Declaration and the ways in which the follow-up to the Declaration was contributing to greater coherence and effectiveness in the system's work. CEB also considered UN system support for Africa's development, highlighting the challenges of mobilizing adequate resources to support the New Partnership for Africa's Development (NEPAD) (see p. 1003) and the implementation of the MDGs in Africa. CEB took note of the HLCP report "One United Nations" and endorsed its conclusions.

Final report of Millennium Project. In March [A/59/727], the Secretary-General transmitted an overview of the final report of the Millennium Project entitled Investing in Development: A practical Plan to Achieve the Millennium Development Goals (see p. 70), prepared by Professor Jeffrey D. Sachs, the Secretary-General's special adviser on the MDGs, who had been commissioned to conduct research to map out how those goals, based on the Millennium Declaration, could be achieved. The report was submitted to the 2005 World Summit.

(For the General Assembly's review of the Millennium Declaration, see chapter on the 2005 World Summit on p. 47.)

Managerial reform and oversight

Management reform

In accordance with General Assembly resolution 59/275 [YUN 2004, p. 1401], the Secretary-General, in a September report [A/60/342], examined the efforts of the Department of Management to improve its practices and reviewed the implementation of measures to reduce duplication, complexity and bureaucracy in UN administrative processes and procedures. Management improvement measures, which were in various stages of implementation, focused on improved practices in centralized support services, human resources management and budgetary and financial management. With regard to centralized support services, the Department of Management had implemented an automatic space management system for updating office space floor plans; an automated asset management system; a vehicle usage system; a requisition tracking system; inter-agency system for contracts; a global airline agreement for UN organizations, funds and programmes; a website for registering potential vendors, called the United Nations Global Marketplace; strengthened computer network operations; improved information and communication technology risk management; a reorganization of the UN Postal Administration; and the extension of the UN Integrated Management Information System (IMIS) to all peacekeeping missions.

Human resources management improvements centred around the implementation of a generic job profiles project intended to streamline vacancy announcements through a global database; new human resource data reports; an Electronic Performance Appraisal System (e-PAS); human resource action plans; and other projects. The Department's Office of Programme Planning, Budget and Accounts had improved a number of practices in the budget process, banking procedures and capacities, financial reporting and financial services to staff. Among other measures, it accomplished the linkage of the 2006-2007 budget with the biennial programme plan (see p. 1489), began providing system-wide access to pertinent budgetary information through the UN Intranet and was implementing a treasury banking project to assist peacekeeping missions.

The Secretary-General reviewed the implementation status of the efficiency measures recommended by OIOS and proposed time frames for their final implementation. Among those measures, the Procurement Service and DPKO were developing a common procurement management system to improve the efficiency and oversight of the Secretariat's global procurement activities. Legal requirements for the project had been initiated and would be submitted to the Information and Communications Technology Board Project Review Committee by the end of 2005. The proposed automation of the UN travel process had been given priority status by the IMIS User Group. A "My UN" portal was initiated in 2004, providing staff members with access to vacancy applications, emergency contact recordings and other human resources materials.

Managing for results

Note by Secretary-General. The Secretary-General, by a February note [A/59/617/Add.1], transmitted his comments and those of CEB on the Joint Inspection Unit (JIU) report on managing for results in the UN system [YUN 2004, p. 1372]. In its general comments, CEB found the JIU report to be useful and a valuable reference from a system-wide perspective. It was in broad agreement with the findings and conclusions. However, the two main recommendations on the use of benchmarks for measuring progress towards the effective implementation of results-based-management in respective UN system organizations, and that CEB should pay more attention to harmonizing that implementation, should be considered in the light of specific situations and requirements of the organizations of the system, as well as in relation to the inter-agency mechanisms in place within the CEB framework. While agreeing in principle with the practical benefits of utilizing benchmarks, the Secretary-General said that each organization should adapt them to its particular circumstances, programmes and outputs before they could be applied.

Procurement

By a March note [A/59/721], the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly a JIU report reviewing procurement practices within the UN system [YUN 2004, p. 1365]. In a June addendum [A/59/721/Add.1], he further transmitted his comments and those of CEB on the report. CEB was in general agreement with JIU'S findings and recommendations concerning the rationalization processes, establishment of unified reporting and accountability, training of staff, use of procurement manuals, common services, electronic methods and capacity-building in public procurement agencies in recipient countries.

The Assembly also considered the OIOS reports on the audit of safeguarding air safety standards while procuring air services for UN peacekeeping missions [YUN 2004, p.101] and on the audit of the functioning of the Headquarters Committee on Contracts [YUN 2003, p. 1386].

Oversight

Internal oversight

Appointment of Under-Secretary-General. In April [A/59/109], the Secretary-General informed the General Assembly of his proposal to appoint Inga-Britt Ahlenius (Sweden) as Under-Secretary-General for Internal Oversight Services for one fixed term of five years. The effective date of the appointment would be communicated to the Assembly later.

By decision 59/418 of 5 May, the Assembly approved the appointment, beginning on 15 July 2005 and ending on 14 July, 2010.

In later addendum [A/59/109/Add.1], the Secretary-General confirmed those dates.

OIOS activities. In September, the Secretary-General transmitted the eleventh annual report of OIOS covering its activities from 1 July 2004 to 30 June 2005 [A/60/346 & Corr.1]. During that period, OIOS issued several reports, which the Secretary-General transmitted to the Assembly. In addition to reports on its own activities, those issued in 2005, were on: proposals on the strengthening and monitoring of programme performance and evaluation [A/60/73]; a review of operational capacity of United Nations Military Observers [A/59/764]; an audit of field security management [A/59/702]; an audit of mission subsistence allowance policies and procedures [A/59/698]; an investigation into allegations of sexual exploitation/abuse in the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo (MONUC) [A/59/661]; inspection of programmes and administrative management of the subregional office of the Economic Commission for Africa [A/60/120]; audit of the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women [A/60/281]; audit of the Capital Master Plan [A/60/288]; audit of the utilization and management of funds for strengthening the security and safety of UN premises [A/60/291]; review of effectiveness of military information management in peacekeeping operations [A/60/596]; and review of military involvement in civil assistance in peacekeeping operations [A/60/588]. OIOS reports transmitted to the Committee for Programme and Coordination (CPC) were on: an evaluation of linkages between Headquarters and field activities: a review of best practices for poverty eradication in the framework of the Millennium Declaration [E/AC.51/2005/2]; an in-depth evaluation of UN-Habitat [E/AC.51/2005/3]; a triennial review of the implementations made by CPC at its forty-second session on the in-depth evaluation of General Assembly and Economic and Social Council support and coordination [E/AC.51/2005.4]; and a triennial review of the implementation of the recommendations made by CPC at its forty-second session on the in-depth evaluation of legal affairs [E/AC.51/2005/5].

During the period under review, OIOS issued 2,167 recommendations to improve accountability mechanisms, internal controls and organizational efficiency and effectiveness, 779, or approximately 43.5 per cent of which were classified as critical. The overall implementation rate for all recommendations during the reporting period was approximately 50 per cent. As at 30 June 2005, the implementation of 34 recommendations issued in 2001/2002 (including two critical), 28 recommendations issued in 2002/2003 (including seven critical) and 124 recommendations issued in 2003/2004 (including 35 critical) had not yet started. The Office identified a total of $35.1 million in recommended savings, $18 million of which was actually saved and recovered. Approximately $3 million was identified as loss or waste of resources.

The report highlighted the oversight results of various risk areas, including management of peacekeeping operations; safety and security; human resources management; administration and finance; procurement; information and communication technology; programme management; the Office of the United Nations High Commission for Refugees, the UN Joint Staff Pension Fund and the UN Compensation Commission. During the reporting period, OIOS undertook a comprehensive risk assessment of the December 2004 Indian Ocean tsunami, in collaboration with Secretariat departments and UN funds and programmes. It was working with DPKO to ensure that serious cases of misconduct identified in MONUC were handled swiftly, in collaboration with troop-contributing countries. It conducted audits of procurement by peacekeeping missions and the risks associated with the capital master plan on the refurbishment of the UN Secretariat (see p. 1494). Investigations conducted dealt with allegations of corrupt behaviour by UN staff; accountability for theft of UN property; and collusion between UN staff and vendors. OIOS initiated a working group which prepared the drafts for the Organization's first whistleblower protection policy and conducted a thematic evaluation of poverty eradication. It collaborated with JIU to report to the General Assembly on strengthening the results-based management culture, produced a tutorial and glossary on the issue, and conducted training to enhance programme performance monitoring and reporting.

By decision 60/551 of 23 December, the General Assembly deferred until its resumed sixtieth (2006) session consideration of the Secretary-General's report on OIOS activities.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 13 April [meeting 91], the General Assembly, having considered the OIOS report on strengthening the investigative function in the United Nations [YUN 2004, p. 1374], adopted, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/59/652/Add.1], resolution 59/287 without vote [agenda item 107].

External oversight

JIU activities. In its annual report to the General Assembly [A/61/34], JIU gave an overview of its activities in 2005, during which it issued reports on: review of management and administration in the World Intellectual Property Organization (WIPO) [JIU/REP/2005/1]; measures to improve overall performance of the UN system at the country level [JIU/REP/2005/2]; policies of UN system organizations towards the use of open source software in the secretariats [JIU/REP/2005/3] and in development [JIU/REP/2005/7 & Corr. 1]; a common payroll for UN system organizations [JIU/REP/2005/4]; review of management, administration and activities of the secretariat of the United Nations Convention to Combat Desertification [JIU/REP/2005/5]; external review of the implementation of strategic budgeting within a results-based framework in the International Labour Organization [JIU/REP/2005/6]; further measures to strengthen UN system support to the New Partnership for Africa's Development [JIU/REP/2005/8]; and common services in Vienna: Vienna Buildings Management Services [JIU/REP/2005/9]. It had also issued two notes on the review of the implementation of results-based management in the Pan American Health Organization [JIU/NOTE/2005/1] and review of the management of the United Nations laissez-passer [JIU/NOTE/2005/2].

During 2005, JIU's activity was marked by ongoing efforts to improve its method of work and the quality and relevance of its reports. The Unit continued to enhance its procedures for the selection of topics for the annual programme of work. It fine-tuned the methodology for management assessments of participating organizations and completed an additional seven assessments in 2005. To date, 14 assessments had been finalized, with nine planned for completion in 2006. In order to better determine and report on the impact of its recommendations, the Unit adopted a system which defined different categories of impact.

The Unit was revising its follow-up system in order to gather further information on the implementation status of accepted recommendations and the impact achieved. It continued to seek synergies with the work of OIOS and other oversight bodies.

Annexed to the report was the JIU work programme for 2006.

By decision 60/551 of 23 December, the Assembly deferred until its resumed sixtieth (2006) session consideration of the JIU report for 2004 and its programme of work for 2005 [YUN 2004, p. 1372].

On the same date, by section XVI of resolution 60/248 (see p. 1496), the Assembly approved the gross budget for JIU for the biennium 2006-2007 in the amount of $10,511,100.

Appointment of JIU members. By decision 59/416 A of 28 April, the Assembly appointed Juan Luis Larrabure as a member of JIU for a period of office beginning on 28 April 2005 and expiring on 31 December 2008, to replace Christopher Thomas, who had resigned.

In an August note [A/59/889], the Assembly President transmitted to the Assembly the names of four candidates for appointment as members of the Unit for a five-year term beginning on 1 January 2006 and expiring on 31 December 2010.

By decision 59/416 B of 24 August, the Assembly appointed those members.

Oil-for-food programme: Reports of Independent Inquiry Committee

The oil-for-food programme, established by Security Council resolution 986(1995) [YUN 1995, p. 475] authorizing the sale of Iraqi petroleum and petroleum products as a temporary measure to finance humanitarian assistance, thereby alleviating the adverse consequences of the sanctions regime imposed by the Council, was phased out on 21 November 2003 [YUN 2003, p. 362]. In April 2004, following public news reports and commentaries that had called into question the administration and management of the programme, including allegations of fraud and corruption, the Secretary-General established an independent high-level inquiry committee (IIC) on the matter [YUN 2004, p. 364].

During 2005, the IIC, headed by Paul A. Volcker, issued several reports on its findings: a February interim report on the initial procurement of UN contractors, Benon Sevan and oil allocations, internal programme audits and management of the programme's administrative account; a March interim report on the 1998 procurement of the humanitarian goods inspection contract and other conduct of UN officials; an August interim report on the conduct of Benon Sevan and Alexander Yakovlev; the Committee's main report, as well as the report of the Committee's independent working group to examine the impact of the programme on the Iraqi people, both issued in September; and an October report documenting the manipulation of the oil-for-food programme by Saddam Hussein. The first part of the main report issued in September gave an outline of the history of the programme, its framework and the key actors; examined the approval of contracts, the schemes to derive illicit income and the response of the Security Council; maladministration of the programme; the role of UN agencies in the three northern Governates; administrative costs; and control and oversight. Part two of the report examined the sources and amounts of illicit income to Iraq, including illicit payments on contracts, illicit income from smuggling, the impact of distorted prices and a summary of illicit income earned. The report, also contained the conclusions and recommendations of the Committee.

IIC found that the Security Council had struggled in clearly defining the broad purposes, policies and administrative control of the programme, leaving too much initiative and decision-making to the Iraqi regime, while retaining substantial elements of administrative, and therefore operational control. When questions of conflict between political objectives and administrative effectiveness arose, decisions were delayed, bungled, or avoided. The administrative and personnel structures of the programme were not adequate and the Organization and its Secretary-General needed a stronger structure at the top. Most notable among the administrative failures of the programme were an absence of effective controls and audits, and a palpable absence of authority and clear reporting lines, particularly in the Secretariat's senior management. Instances of corruption identified by the Committee reflected control weaknesses in the programme. A lack of effective coordination among UN agencies was also highlighted as there was no simple way to accurately track programme expenditures across agency lines.

Following its analysis, the Committee made a series of major recommendations to the UN system. It proposed the creation of the position of Chief Operating Officer, appointed by the Assembly and reporting to the Secretary-General, with authority over all aspects of administration; establishment of an Independent Oversight Board, which would have functional responsibility for all audits, investigation and evaluation activities, both external and internal across the UN Secretariat and agencies funded by the organization; improvement of coordination and the oversight framework for cross-agency programmes, including by establishing a high-level coordinating body for all major cross-agency relief and emergency programmes, ensuring that each programme had consolidated financial statements that were subject to external and internal audit, and other measures; reform and improvement of management performance, including through mandating periodic, high-level reviews of internal management review processes and through an overhaul of the management hiring, promotion, evaluation, and reward methodology, basing each on key tasks and agreed measures of performance; and the expansion of conflict-of-interest and financial disclosure requirements to lower levels of management. The Committee also proposed that agencies involved in the programme should return up to $50 million in excess compensation secured as a result of work performed under Security Council resolution 1483(2003) [YUN 2003, p. 338].

(See p. 435 for details on the Security Council's consideration of IIC findings.)

On 15 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the General Committee [A/60/250/Add.3], decided to include in the agenda of its sixtieth session an item on the follow-up to the recommendations on administrative management and internal oversight of the Independent Inquiry Committee into the UN oil-for-food programme.

Implementation of 2005 World Summit decisions relating to oversight

In November [A/60/568 & Corr.1, 2], the Secretary-General, as requested in General Assembly resolution 60/1 (see p. 48) on the 2005 World Summit Outcome, presented his proposals for the establishment of an ethics office; a comprehensive review of governance arrangements, including an independent external evaluation of the auditing and oversight system; and the creation of an independent audit advisory committee.

The ethics office, whose objective would be to assist the Secretary-General in ensuring that all staff members observed and performed their functions with the highest standards of integrity, had as its main responsibilities: to administer the Organization's financial disclosure programme; undertake responsibilities assigned it under the UN policy for the protection of staff against retaliation for reporting misconduct; provide confidential advice and guidance to staff on ethical issues; and develop standards, training and education on ethics issues, in coordination with the Office of Human Resources Management. The Office would report regularly to the Secretary-General, giving an overview of its activities and any evaluations and assessments conducted. It would not replace existing mechanisms for reporting misconduct or the resolution of grievances.

The ethics office, which would be the focal point on ethics issues for the global UN Secretariat, would be headquartered in New York, with liaison offices in Geneva, Vienna and Nairobi. The head of the office would be appointed at the level of Assistant Secretary-General for a fixed, non-renewable five-year term.

The Secretary-General also submitted the terms of reference for the comprehensive review of governance arrangements, including an independent external evaluation of the auditing and oversight system within the United Nations and its funds, programmes and specialized agencies. The independent external evaluation to be conducted would consist of a review of best practice governance and oversight structures within the public and private sectors; a comparative analysis of those structures within the UN system; and the development of detailed options for model governance and oversight structures and mechanisms for the UN system. It would review also the Office of Internal Oversight Services (OIOS). The evaluation, be completed in two phases, would identify best international practices and models of governance, oversight and audit within the public and private sectors; study the mission, objectives and mandates of UN system bodies to determine the optimal models of governance and oversight; undertake a review of OIOS to provide a basis for decision-making, with respect to the appropriate level of independence for management; the adequacy of resources compared to its remit, the breadth of its functions, its reporting mechanisms and organization and structure.

Also submitted by the Secretary-General were his proposals for the creation of an independent oversight advisory committee, which he suggested be named the Independent Audit Advisory Committee. The Committee, which would assist the General Assembly in fulfilling its governance and oversight responsibilities, would have as it primary functions to review the OIOS budget and audit work plans, assess its work and effectiveness, and advise on the appointment of the Under-Secretary-General for Internal Oversight Services; review the system of internal control and risk management and any material weakness and compliance with corrective action plans; discuss with the United Nations Board of Auditors the audited financial statements, monitor the integrity of those statements and comment on and make input to the workplan of the Board of Auditors; and consider the effectiveness and objectivity of the internal audit process.

On 9 December [A/C.5/60/19], the Assembly President transmitted the Secretary-General's report to the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee for consideration. In his letter, to the Fifth Committee Chairman, the President reported that the Assembly had held informal consultation on the report on 6 and 9 December, at the conclusion of which the co-chairs of the meeting stated that there was strong agreement of the need for comprehensive reform of the Organization and of the urgency of that process. Regarding the three proposals contained in the Secretary-General's report, there was agreement to create the ethics office, the proposal for which would be finalized in the budget process. There was recognition that the independent external review would take place. However questions were raised concerning the advisability of creating the independent advisory committee before completion of that review. As more technical work needed to be done on the latter two proposals, the Secretary-General was requested to submit his report to the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ). The Assembly President should request Fifth Committee to consider the Secretary-General's proposals on an expedited basis and the recommendations brought to the attention of the Assembly by 19 December so that decisions could be made on all three proposals.

The comments of ACABQ on the three proposals were contained in its December report to the Assembly [A/60/7/Add.23].

On 23 December, by section XIII of resolution 60/248 (see p. 1496), the Assembly approved the resources for the establishment of an ethics office and the conduct of the evaluation study. It decided to establish an Independent Audit Advisory Committee and requested the Secretary-General to propose its terms of reference, ensure coherence with the outcome of the ongoing review of oversight and report to the Assembly at the second part of its resumed sixtieth (2006) session on related resource requirements.

The Ethics Office was established by the Secretary-General's bulletin of 30 December [ST/SGB/2005/22].

Intergovernmental machinery

Revitalization of the work of the General Assembly

In his March report "In larger freedom" [A/59/2005], submitted to the 2005 World Summit, the Secretary-General addressed the strengthening of the Organization through a series of reform measures. He urged the Heads of State and Government to reform, restructure and revitalize the UN's major organs and institutions, including the General Assembly (see p. 69).

Report of Secretary-General. In June, at its resumed fifty-ninth session, the General Assembly had before it a report of the Secretary-General [A/59/860] on the revitalization of the work of the General Assembly. The report, submitted in accordance with Assembly resolution 58/316 [YUN 2004, p. 1374], outlined the draft programme of work of the plenary and the Main Committees of the General Assembly for its sixtieth session.

An addendum to the report [A/59/860/Add.1] contained the status of the documentation for Assembly's the sixtieth session, as at 2 August 2005.

In November, the General Assembly considered a report of the Fourth (Special Political and Decolonization) Committee [A/60/525] on the revitalization of the work of the General Assembly. The Committee Chairman drew the attention of the Committee to two related documents, regarding the approximate dates for the consideration of items by the Fourth Committee at the Assembly's sixty-first (2006) session [A/C.4/60/WP.1], and the revitalization of the Special Political and Decolonization Committee [A/C.4/60/WP.2].

Rotation of the post of Rapporteur of the Third Committee

By decision 60/538 of 16 December, the General Assembly decided that, in order to rationalize its method of work, the Third Committee should elect its Rapporteur on the basis of their experience and personal competence, as well as the rotation among the regional groups. The Committee should elect a candidate nominated by the Group of Western European and Other States to serve as its Rapporteur at the Assembly's sixty-first (2006) session.

Review of Security Council membership and related matters

The Open-ended Working Group on the Question of Equitable Representation on and Increase in the Membership of the Security Council and Other Matters related to the Security Council submitted a report on its work during nine formal and four informal meetings held between 7 February and 1 September [A/59/47]. The Working Group considered the oral and written proposals and position papers of various delegations, which had been submitted in previous sessions and were set out in two clusters: cluster I, concerning increase in Security Council membership and related matters, and cluster II, dealing with the working methods of the Council and the transparency of its work. The discussions of the two clusters were summarized in conference room papers contained in annexes to the report.

At its first session (7 February), the Working Group endorsed the appointment of two Vice-Chairpersons. At its second (14 February) session, as well as at the four subsequent informal meetings (14-16 February), the Working Group considered six topics that were later discussed at length: accountability, in particular the relationship between the Security Council and the General Assembly, including reports of the Council to the Assembly; the relationship between the Council and other principal UN organs; consultations with troop-contributing countries; questions concerning the work of sanctions committees, including Article 50 of the Charter; subsidiary organs of the Council; and the question of the use of the veto. At its ninth meeting (1 September), the Working Group considered and adopted its report to the Assembly, including a recommendation that the Assembly adopt a draft decision on the matter.

By decision 59/566 of 12 September, the Assembly took note of the Working Group's report and urged it to continue to exert efforts during the Assembly's sixtieth session, aimed at achieving progress on all the issues relevant to the question of equitable representation on and increase in the membership of the Security Council and other matters related to the Council. It decided that the question should be considered during the Assembly's sixtieth session, and that the Working Group should continue its work, taking into account progress achieved during the Assembly's forty-eighth (1993) and fifty-ninth (2004) sessions and drawing on the experience of the fifty-ninth session, as well as the views to be expressed in the sixtieth session, and report to the Assembly at its sixtieth (2005) session, including any agreed recommendations.

Revitalization of the United Nations in the economic, social and related fields

Work of the functional commissions

Report of Secretary-General. The Secretary-General, responding to Economic and Social Council resolution 2004/63 [YUN 2004, p. 1379] and earlier resolutions of the General Assembly and the Council, submitted a June report [E/2005/74] on the work of the functional commissions of the Council in 2005. The report focused on the substantive aspects of the commissions' activities and their role in the development and implementation of the internationally agreed development goals, including those contained in the Millennium Declaration [YUN 2000, p. 49]. During the period from 2001 to 2005, the Council's nine functional commissions made contributions towards the achievement of the internationally agreed development goals.

The Secretary-General recommended that the Council invite the commissions to continue to provide concise, action-oriented input to its substantive session in 2006, including to the Council's assessment of progress in achieving the agreed development goals. The Council should continue to consider the outcomes of the functional commissions on the basis of a thematic consolidated report. It should explore further avenues for promoting greater harmony and thematic unity, including through the conclusion of a multi-year programme and/or an indicative list of common themes. He recommended that the Council encourage a further deepening of collaboration among its commissions in advancing education and literacy. It invited the commissions to clearly identify the operational implications of their work in relation to HIV/AIDS and to bring them to the attention of the governing bodies of the UN funds and programmes for consideration and guidance; and consider ways of promoting closer and more effective overall interaction between the work of the commissions.

In other recommendations, the Council was encouraged to devote one of its coordination sessions to the issue of employment and the realization of the development goals, examine the ways in which the functional commissions were integrating that aspect into their work; stimulate substantive exchanges among its functional commissions on the social integration component of social development; and urge the commissions to mainstream the concept of sustainable development in their work. The Secretary-General further recommended that the Council recognize the development-related contributions of the United Nations Information and Communication Technology Task Force and the need to further build on such approaches; encourage Governments and the UN system, notably its commissions, to ensure that science and technology was incorporated into poverty reduction policies and strategies, and urge them to consider ways to strengthen linkages between public research and private industry; request the functional commissions to encourage the launching of multi-stakeholder initiatives on promoting technology transfer and development in the areas of interest to developing countries; and encourage its subsidiary bodies to incorporate a gender perspective in their follow-up to major UN conferences and summits, in their examination of their working methods and the development of themes for their multi-year programmes of work.

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 2005/305 of 27 July, took note of the Secretary-General's report and requested him to submit a consolidated report on the work of the functional commissions in 2006.

Chapter II

United Nations financing and programming

While the overall financial position of the United Nations continued to improve in 2005, with an increasing number of Member States meeting their financial obligations to the regular budget in full, the situation remained fragile. Cash availability under the regular budget stood at $192 million from the beginning of the year through September, making cross-borrowing unnecessary. In October, aggregate assessments decreased to $5.4 billion, compared to $5.9 billion in 2004, due to significantly lower peacekeeping assessments. By the end of the year, unpaid assessments had fallen from $357 million in 2004 to $333 million, cash resources for peacekeeping activities amounted to over $1.6 billion and debt owed to Member States stood at $695 million. The number of Member States paying their regular budget assessments in full and on time increased to 140, up from 124 in 2004.

In December, the General Assembly adopted final budget appropriations for the 2004-2005 biennium, decreasing the amount of $3,737,508,800 approved in 2004 to $3,655,800,600 and increasing income estimates by $20,456,600 to $470,659,100. It also adopted revised budget appropriations for the 2006-2007 biennium of $3,798,912,500, an increase of $177,012,500 over the preliminary estimate in 2004 of $3,621,900,000.

The Committee on Contributions considered the methodology for preparing the scale of assessments for the period 2007-2009 and measures to encourage the payment of arrears, including multi-year payment plans.

Financial situation

Although the overall financial position of the United Nations showed signs of progress in 2005, particularly with regard to the increasing number of Member States meeting their financial obligations to the regular budget in full, the situation remained fragile. In October [A/60/427], the Secretary-General reported that aggregate assessments decreased to $5.4 billion as at 7 October (compared to $5.9 billion in 2004), due to significantly lower peacekeeping assessments. That amount included assessments of $18 million for the capital master plan (see p. 1553). Cash availability under the regular budget and related reserve accounts at the beginning of the year stood at $192 million, making cross-borrowing unnecessary. It was projected that aggregate cash available would be over $100 million higher than at the end of 2004.

As at 7 October, unpaid assessments for the regular budget, peacekeeping and the two international tribunals totaled $2.9 billlion, which included: $2.1 million for peacekeeping (compared to $2.4 billion in 2004), $739 million for the regular budget ($14 million more than in 2004) and $73 million for the tribunals ($38 million less than in 2004). It was forecast that the Organization would owe Member States a total of $779 million as at 31 December 2005, due to a shortage of cash in some peacekeeping missions and delays in the phasing in of troops in the Sudan, the signing of memorandums of understanding with troop providers and the deployment of additional troops and police to missions in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Côte d'Ivoire and Haiti. Member States that had paid their assessments in full as at 7 October numbered 126 (17 more than at 30 September 2004).

In his end-of-year review of the financial situation [A/60/427/Add.1], the Secretary-General noted that the performance of the four indicators of the Organization's financial health was reasonably good: unpaid assessments had fallen from $357 million in 2004 to $333 million; cash resources for peacekeeping activities amounted to over $1.6 billion; amounts outstanding for the tribunals fell from $30 million to $25 million; and the actual debt owed to Member States stood at $695 million. The number of Member States paying their regular budget assessments in full and on time had increased to 140, up from 124 in 2004.

On 12 September, the General Assembly deferred consideration of the agenda item on improving the financial situation of the United Nations and included it in the draft agenda of its sixtieth (2005) session (decision 59/569).

UN budget

Budget for 2004-2005

Final appropriation

In 2005, the General Assembly adopted final budget appropriations for the 2004-2005 biennium, decreasing the amount of $3,737,508,800 approved in resolutions 59/277 A [YUN 2004, p. 1381], 59/282 (see p. 1486), 59/294 (see p. 1488) and 60/244 (see p. 448) by $81,708,200 to $3,655,800,600, and increasing income estimates by $20,456,600 to $470,659,100.

Report of Secretary-General. In his second performance report on the 2004-2005 programme budget [A/60/572], the Secretary-General provided an estimate of the anticipated final levels of expenditure and income for the biennium, based on actual expenditures for the first 22 months of the biennium, projections for the last two months, changes in inflation and exchange rates and cost-of-living adjustments.

The anticipated final level of expenditures and of income represented a net decrease of $120.5 million, reflecting projected additional requirements of $69 million due to changes in exchange rates ($19.2 million), changes in inflation ($19.2 million), commitments entered into under the provisions of Assembly resolutions 58/273 [YUN 2004, p. 1422] and 59/276 [ibid., p. 1383] ($30.6 million); and reduced requirements of $171.5 million due to variations in posts costs and adjustments to other objects of expenditure and a decrease in income ($20.5 million).

The projected expenditure for the biennium was estimated at $3,655.5 million gross, a decrease of $82 million, compared with the revised appropriation of $3,737.5 approved in 2004 and April and June 2005. The projected income was estimated at $470.7 million, an increase of $20.5 million, compared with the revised income of $450.2 million.

The Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ), in December [A/60/597], recalled that previously the analysis was based on 20 months' experience. It welcomed the progress achieved by the Secretariat in financial reporting and recommended that the Assembly take note of the Secretary-General's report.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 23 December, the General Assembly [meeting 69], on the recommendation of the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee [A/60/593/Add.2], adopted resolution 60/245 A-B without vote [agenda item 123].

Questions relating to the 2004-2005 programme budget

The Fifth Committee considered special subjects related to the 2004-2005 programme budget concerning estimates in respect of special political missions, good offices and other political initiatives authorized by the General Assembly and/or the Security Council (see below), as well as revised estimates resulting from resolutions and decisions adopted by the Economic and Social Council in 2005. Other subjects considered included the UN information and communication technology strategy (see p. 1550); conditions of service and compensation for non-Secretariat officials (see p. 1508); and the UN security management system (see p. 1557).

Revised estimates in respect of matters of which the Security Council was seized

In March [A/59/534/Add.3 & Corr.1], the Secretary-General submitted additional resource requirements for the United Nations Assistance Mission for Iraq (UNAMI) and the United Nations Observer Mission in Bougainville (UNOMB) for the periods from 1 May to 31 December and 16 February to 15 August 2005, respectively. Those net requirements were estimated at $83,174,400 net, taking into account the unencumbered balance of $5,267,500 of the existing appropriation.

ACABQ recommended [A/59/569/Add.3] that the General Assembly appropriate that amount, noting that the charging of expenditures against the appropriation for UNAMI beyond 11 August 2005, would be subject to the extension of its current mandate.

In an April addendum [A/59/534/Add.4], the Secretary-General submitted estimated net requirements of $4,171,700 net for the expansion of the United Nations Political Office for Somalia (UNPOS) in 2005 and $13 million, as a subvention, for funding the Special Court for Sierra Leone for the period from 1 July to 31 December 2005, bringing the total appropriation for the period from 1 January to 31 December 2005 to $33 million. The combined requirements for UNPOS and the Court amounted to $37,171,700 net. A further subvention of $7 million for the Special Court would be submitted as a first charge against special political missions of the proposed 2006-2007 programme budget.

ACABQ, in an April report [A/59/569/Add.4], recommended approval of the resources requested for the expanded role of UNPOS but indicated that savings might be achieved, which should be included in the performance report. The Committee also recommended that the Secretary-General should intensify efforts to raise voluntary contributions to support the work of the Special Court for Sierra Leone and, should the Assembly agree to another subvention to meet the expenses of the Court, commitment authority should not exceed $13 million for the period from 1 July to 31 December 2005, bringing the total subvention to $33 million for that period.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 13 April [meeting 91], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/59/448/Add.3], adopted resolution 59/282 without vote [agenda item 108].

Budget for 2006-2007

In introducing the proposed programme budget for the 2006-2007 biennium [A/60/6] before the Fifth Committee on 25 October, the Secretary-General said that the proposed budget, which amounted to approximately $3.6 billion before recosting, envisaged only a slight increase over the 2004-2005 biennium (less than 0.1 per cent). Growth in priority areas was to be funded largely through the reallocation of resources. The budget proposal, which was the first to be submitted in conjunction with a biennial programme plan under the arrangements for aligning the plan and the budget periods pursuant to resolution 59/275 [YUN 2004, p. 1401], included both a significant adjustment in staffing resources, as well as continued investment in information and communication technology and staff training.

With regard to the Organization's work and the changing environment in which it operated, the Secretary-General stated that the implementation of the 2005 World Summit Outcome (see p. 48) would provide an opportunity for programmatic and management changes and that Member States had already been informed about the work plan for that purpose, he announced that a senior adviser on management issues would soon be appointed. Other items to be addressed included the launch of the Peacebuilding Commission by December; budgetary requirements for a new Human Rights Council; financial implications of doubling the budget resources of the Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights over the forthcoming five years; and proposals for strengthening oversight, including the creation of an independent oversight advisory committee and the new ethics office. During the first quarter of 2006, he would submit recommendations to ensure that all Secretariat policies, rules and regulations responded to the Organization's needs and increased its effectiveness. He also planned to facilitate the review of all mandates older than five years to eliminate outdated activities and reprioritize the Organization's plan of work; and to submit a proposal for a one-time staff buyout to establish a staffing profile, which would reflect the General Assembly's new priorities and allow the Secretariat to meet the needs of the twenty-first century. In that regard, over 3,000 obsolete, ineffective or marginally useful outputs had been discontinued. While sustained efforts over the past decade had led to structural, technical and managerial reforms, the process of management reform had to continue.

The Committee for Programme and Coordination (CPC) considered the proposed programme budget at its 2005 session (11 May and 6 June–1 July) [A/60/16 & Corr.1] and recommended that the Assembly approve the programme narratives of the majority of the budget sections subject to certain modifications. Noting that in some sections, the narratives in the budget fascicles, particularly the overview parts, differed from the overall orientation parts in the plan, CPC recommended that the Assembly ensure that the narratives were identical to the respective programmes of the plan and that the Secretary-General ensure the conformity, during implementation, of the overview parts of the budget with the 2006-2007 biennial programme plan. The Secretariat should also provide a list of outputs that would require revision or inclusion in the 2006-2007 programme budget due to legislative decisions taken at the Assembly's fifty-ninth (2004) session. The Committee welcomed the application of the results-based logical framework in several budget sections and requested the Secretary-General to submit proposals to the Assembly, in the context of the 2008-2009 proposed programme budget, for expanding that framework to enhance managerial responsibility for programme implementation. CPC further recommended that all legislative mandates be taken into account when preparing the strategic framework for the 2008-2009 biennium, to be submitted to the Assembly at its sixty-first (2006) session and that the Secretariat ensure the implementation of paragraph 12 of Assembly resolution 58/269 [YUN 2003, p. 1395] with regard to any new or revised mandates.

On 23 December [meeting 69], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/60/608 & Corr.1], adopted resolution 60/246 without vote [agenda item 124].

10. Decides to provide resources at the level sought by the Secretary-General in his statement of programme budget implications arising in respect of the draft resolution relating to Rwanda outreach and the amendment thereto;

Extrabudgetary resources for the 2006-2007 biennium were estimated at $5,631.1 million, comprising $883.7 million for support activities,

$1,676.7 million for substantive activities and $3,071 million for operational activities.

ACABQ, in its first report on the 2006-2007 programme budget [A/60/7 & Corr.1], noted that decisions yet to be taken on the Secretary-General's reform proposals might significantly affect estimates and that revised estimates would be submitted for the International Trade Centre of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development/World Trade Organization (UNCTAD/WTO) and the Office of Internal Oversight Services (OIOS). The Committee agreed with the overall budget level proposed, and made specific recommendations in a number of areas where economies could be achieved.

In September [A/60/355], the Secretary-General submitted a statement on programme budget implications of the draft resolution [A/60/L.1] entitled "2005 World Summit Outcome" (see p. 48), estimated at $80 million. A detailed statement of programme budget implications would be submitted to the Assembly. In November [A/60/537], the Secretary-General submitted revised estimates of additional requirements totaling $73,368,800. ACABQ recommended reductions of $23,367,800 net [A/60/7/Add.13 & Corr.1, 2] to those estimates.

In December [A/60/599], the Secretary-General recommended revised estimates to reflect the latest data on actual inflation experience, the outcome of salary surveys, the movement of post adjustment indices in 2005, the effect of the evolution of operational rates of exchange in 2005 and the adjustment in staff assessment rates on the proposed 2006-2007 programme budget and the revised estimates to the proposed programme budget for the 2005 World Summit Outcome (see above). The recosted level of expenditure amounted to $3,795.8 million and total income was revised to $427.4 million.

Also in December [A/60/600], the Secretary-General recommended revised estimates in the amount of $269.8 million for the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda and $305.1 million for the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia.

ACABQ, in its report on the 2006-2007 programme budget [A/60/7/Add.32], found no technical basis for objecting to the Secretary-General's revised estimates in the two reports and transmitted them to the Fifth Committee.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 23 December [meeting 69], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/60/608 & Corr.1], adopted resolution 60/247 A-C without vote [agenda item 124].

(a) Field security operations: 201,423,900 dollars;

(b) Security and safety services at the United Nations Office at Vienna: 24,258,500 dollars.

Contingency fund

The contingency fund, established by General Assembly resolution 41/213 [YUN 1986, p. 1024], accommodated additional expenditures relating to each biennium that derived from legislative mandates not provided for in the proposed programme budget or from revised estimates. Guidelines for its use were annexed to Assembly resolution 42/211 [YUN 1987, p. 1098].

The Fifth Committee considered the Secretary-General's December report [A/C.5/60/25] containing a consolidated statement of all programme budget implications and revised estimates falling under the guidelines for use of the fund. The consolidated amount of $22,098,100 would be within the approved level of the fund.

ACABQ, in its thirty-second report on the 2006-2007 programme budget [A/60/7/Add.31], said that, should the Assembly accept the assumptions and suggestions contained in the Secretary-General's report, the balance available in the fund would amount to $5,101,900.

Revised estimates in respect of matters of which the Security Council was seized

In December [A/60/585 & Corr.1], as a result of action taken or expected to be taken by the General Assembly and/or the Security Council, the Secretary-General submitted the proposed resource requirements for the period up to 31 December 2006 for 26 special political missions, except for the United Nations Assistance Mission in Afghanistan (UNAMA) and the United Nations Office in Timor-Leste (UNOTIL), which were estimated at $280,803,200 net ($297,498,900 gross). That amount would be charged against the $355,949,300 (before recosting) proposed for special political mission under section 3, Political affairs, of the 2006-2007 proposed programme budget.

In a later addendum [A/60/585/Add.2], in the context of decisions taken by the Security Council regarding three special political missions, (the Office of the Secretary-General's Special Envoy for the future status process for Kosovo, his Special Envoy for the implementation of Security Council resolution 1559(2004) [YUN 2004, p. 506] and the International Investigation Commission concerning the 14 February event in Lebanon), the Secretary-General proposed additional estimated requirements of $22,548,400 net ($25,022,800 gross).

ACABQ, in its thirty-eighth report [A/60/7/Add.37], noted that estimated requirements for the 29 special political missions totaled $303,351,600 for the period from 1 January to 31 December 2006. It recommended a reduction of $324,700 and approved resources amounting to $302,469,500.

Revised estimates resulting from Economic and Social Council action

In a September report [A/60/396], the Secretary-General submitted expenditure requirements resulting from resolutions and decisions adopted by the Economic and Social Council at its 2005 resumed organizational and first substantive sessions related to activities of the Commission on Sustainable Development, the United Nations Forum on Forests, The Ad hoc Advisory Group on Haiti, human rights, conference management, economic and social affairs and administration in Geneva. Those requirements were estimated at $4,143,300, $3,571,300 of which would be absorbed within resources provided for in the 2004-2005 or 2006-2007 programme budget, resulting in a net requirement of $572,700 under the 2006-2007 programme budget, to be charged against the contingency fund.

ACABQ, in its related report [A/60/7/Add.5], stated that, given the relatively minor amount involved, an additional appropriation might not be necessary, and therefore recommended any amount that might be required should be reported in the first performance report on the proposed programme budget for the 2006-2007 biennium.

Working capital fund

In December, the General Assembly established the Working Capital Fund for the 2006-2007 biennium at $100 million, the same level as for the 2004-2005 biennium [YUN 2003, p. 1421]. As in the past, the Fund was to be used to finance appropriations, pending the receipt of assessed contributions, to pay for unforeseen and extraordinary expenses, as well as for miscellaneous self-liquidating purchases and advance insurance premiums, and to enable the Tax Equalization Fund to meet current commitments pending the accumulation of credits.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 23 December [meeting 69], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/60/608 & Corr.1], adopted resolution 60/250 without vote [agenda item 124].

Resolves that:

1. The Working Capital Fund shall be established for the biennium 2006-2007 in the amount of 100 million United States dollars;

2. Member States shall make advances to the Working Capital Fund in accordance with the scale of assessments adopted by the General Assembly for contributions of Member States to the budget for the year 2006;

3. There shall be set off against this allocation of advances:

(a) Credits to Member States resulting from transfers made in 1959 and 1960 from the surplus account to the Working Capital Fund in an adjusted amount of 1,025,092 dollars;

(b) Cash advances paid by Member States to the Working Capital Fund for the biennium 2004-2005 in accordance with General Assembly resolution 58/274 of 23 December 2003;

4. Should the credits and advances paid by any Member State to the Working Capital Fund for the biennium 2004-2005 exceed the amount of that Member State's advance under the provisions of paragraph 2 above, the excess shall be set off against the amount of the contributions payable by the Member State in respect of the biennium 2006-2007;

5. The Secretary-General is authorized to advance from the Working Capital Fund:

(a) Such sums as may be necessary to finance budgetary appropriations pending the receipt of contributions; sums so advanced shall be reimbursed as soon as receipts from contributions are available for that purpose;

(b) Such sums as may be necessary to finance commitments that may be duly authorized under the provisions of the resolutions adopted by the General Assembly, in particular resolution 60/249 of 23 December 2005 relating to unforeseen and extraordinary expenses; the Secretary-General shall make provision in the budget estimates for reimbursing the Working Capital Fund;

(c) Such sums as may be necessary to continue the revolving fund to finance miscellaneous self-liquidating purchases and activities, which, together with net sums outstanding for the same purpose, do not exceed 200,000 dollars; advances in excess of 200,000 dollars may be made with the prior concurrence of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

(d) With the prior concurrence of the Advisory Committee, such sums as may be required to finance payments of advance insurance premiums where the period of insurance extends beyond the end of the biennium in which payment is made; the Secretary-General shall make provision in the budget estimates of each biennium, during the life of the related policies, to cover the charges applicable to each biennium;

(e) Such sums as may be necessary to enable the Tax Equalization Fund to meet current commitments pending the accumulation of credits; such advances shall be repaid as soon as credits are available in the Tax Equalization Fund;

6. Should the provision in paragraph 1 above prove inadequate to meet the purposes normally related to the Working Capital Fund, the Secretary-General is authorized to utilize, in the biennium 2006-2007, cash from special funds and accounts in his custody, under the conditions approved by the General Assembly in its resolution 1341(XIII) of 13 December 1958, or the proceeds of loans authorized by the Assembly.

Unforeseen and extraordinary expenses

Under specific circumstances, the Secretary-General was authorized by the General Assembly to enter into commitments for activities of an urgent nature, without reverting to it for approval under the terms of resolution 58/273 [YUN 2003, p. 1422].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 23 December [meeting 69], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/60/608 & Corr.1], adopted resolution 60/249 without vote [agenda item 124].

Unforeseen and extraordinary expenses for the biennium 2006-2007

The General Assembly

1. Authorizes the Secretary-General, with the prior concurrence of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions and subject to the Financial Regulations and Rules of the United Nations and the provisions of paragraph 3 below, to enter into commitments in the biennium 2006-2007 to meet unforeseen and extraordinary expenses arising either during or subsequent to the biennium, provided that the concurrence of the Advisory Committee shall not be necessary for:

(a) Such commitments not exceeding a total of 8 million United States dollars in any one year of the biennium 2006-2007 as the Secretary-General certifies relate to the maintenance of peace and security;

(b) Such commitments as the President of the International Court of Justice certifies relate to expenses occasioned by:

(i) The designation of ad hoc judges (Statute of the International Court of Justice, Article 31), not exceeding a total of 200,000 dollars;

(ii) The calling of witnesses and the appointment of experts (Statute, Article 50) and the appointment of assessors (Statute, Article 30), not exceeding a total of 50,000 dollars;

(iii) The maintenance in office for the completion of cases of judges who have not been re-elected (Statute, Article 13, paragraph 3), not exceeding a total of 40,000 dollars;

(iv) The payment of pensions and travel and removal expenses of retiring judges and travel and removal expenses and installation grant of members of the Court (Statute, Article 32, paragraph 7), not exceeding a total of 410,000 dollars;

(v) The work of the Court or its Chambers away from The Hague (Statute, Article 22), not exceeding a total of 25,000 dollars;

(c) Such commitments not exceeding a total of 1 million dollars in the biennium 2006-2007 as the Secretary-General certifies are required for security measures pursuant to section XI, paragraph 6, of General Assembly resolution 59/276 of 23 December 2004;

2. Resolves that the Secretary-General shall report to the Advisory Committee and to the General Assembly at its sixty-first and sixty-second sessions all commitments made under the provisions of the present resolution, together with the circumstances relating thereto, and shall submit supplementary estimates to the Assembly in respect of such commitments;

3. Decides that for the biennium 2006-2007, if a decision of the Security Council results in the need for the Secretary-General to enter into commitments relating to the maintenance of peace and security in an amount exceeding 10 million dollars in respect of the decision, that matter shall be brought to the General Assembly, or, if the Assembly is suspended or not in session, a resumed or special session of the Assembly shall be convened by the Secretary-General to consider the matter.

Contributions

According to the Secretary-General's report on improving the financial situation of the United Nations [A/60/427/Add.1], unpaid assessed contributions to the UN budget at the end of 2005 totaled $333 million (compared to $357 million in 2004); outstanding peacekeeping arrears totaled $2,900 million (compared to over $2,500 million in 2004); and total unpaid assessments to the international tribunals were reduced to $25 million (compared to $30 million in 2004).

The number of Member States paying their regular budget assessment in full increased to 140 (compared to 124 at the end of 2004).

Assessments

The Committee on Contributions, at its sixty-fifth session (New York, 6-24 June) [A/60/11], considered a number of issues related to the payment of assessments, including the methodology for preparing the scale of assessments for the period 2007-2009, multi-year payment plans, measures to encourage the payment of arrears and the application of Article 19 of the Charter. The Committee decided to hold its sixty-sixth (2006) session from 5 to 30 June 2006. The General Assembly took action on the Committee's recommendations in July and December.

Application of Article 19

Committee on Contributions. The Committee on Contributions [A/60/11] reviewed requests from 10 Member States for exemption under Article 19, whereby a Member would lose its vote in the General Assembly if the amount of its arrears should equal or exceed the amount of contributions due from it for the preceding two full years. The Committee duly noted the Members' written and oral representations and evaluated them against their payment records and economic and political circumstances.

The Committee decided that it could take no action on the requests of Liberia and the Niger, as they were not submitted within the required two-week period prior to the Committee's session. It recognized the efforts of the Republic of Moldova to meet its financial obligations, despite the serious problems it continued to face and concluded that no action was required by the Assembly, since Moldova did not fall under the provisions of Article 19 in 2005. Determining that the failure of the Central African Republic, the Comoros, Georgia, Guinea-Bissau, Iraq, Somalia and Tajikistan to pay the full minimum amount of their arrears necessary to avoid the application of Article 19 was due to conditions beyond their control, and recalling the Article's provision that a Member might be permitted to vote if the Assembly was satisfied that its failure to pay was due to such conditions, the Committee recommended that they be allowed to vote until 30 June 2006. It urged the Central African Republic to make some payment to reduce or avoid an increase in its arrears and, acknowledging a payment of over $25,000 from the Comoros, urged it to do likewise. It noted Guinea-Bissau's intent to establish a multi-year payment plan and encouraged it to do so as soon as possible, as it was the second occasion that it had declared its intention to do that. The Committee welcomed Iraq's commitment to paying its obligations, as reflected in its multi-year payment plan and expressed its appreciation to the Niger for the payment of its second instalment under its 2005 multi-year payment plan. It also noted that Tajikistan, despite its continuing difficulties, had not only fulfilled the commitments it had made under the plan it submitted in 2000, but had exceeded the payments scheduled in the plan. With regard to Tajikistan's request that its arrears for peacekeeping activities that had accrued before 2000 be written off, the Committee indicated that such a request went beyond its competence as a technical advisory body.

Concerned that the nature and quality of the information provided by Member States requesting Article 19 exemptions varied widely, with some providing little, if any information, to support their requests, the Committee recalled the provisions of General Assembly resolution 54/237 C [YUN 1999, p. 1313] and recommended that the Assembly again urge all Member States requesting exemptions to submit as much information as possible in support of their requests. The Committee also recommended that every effort be made to remind Member States of the established deadline for exemption applications and requested the Secretariat to continue to include an early announcement in the Journal of the United Nations.

At the conclusion of the Committee's session on 24 June, only one Member State, Chad, was in arrears in the payment of its assessed contributions under the terms of Article 19 and had no vote in the Assembly. In addition, ten Members—the Central African Republic, the Comoros, Georgia, Guinea-Bissau, Iraq, Liberia, the Niger, Sao Tome and Principe, Somalia and Tajikistan—had been permitted to vote until 30 June 2005, pursuant to Assembly resolution 59/1 A [YUN 2004, p. 1394].

The Committee noted that Ethiopia and Pakistan, availing themselves of the opportunity afforded by Assembly resolution 58/1 B [YUN 2003, p. 1424], had paid the equivalent of $838,794.22 in currencies other than United States dollars.

Communications. On 24 June [A/59/864], the Chairman of the Committee on Contributions transmitted to the General Assembly the related section of the Committee's report dealing with those requests for exemption under Article 19 submitted to it (see above).

In letters to the Assembly President dated 29 June, and 8 and 13 July [A/59/869, A/59/868, A/59/871], respectively, Sao Tome and Principe, the Niger and Liberia made further requests for exemption under Article 19 and asked that the matter be taken up by the Assembly in plenary session at the beginning of July.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 July [meeting 113], the General Assembly adopted resolution 59/312 [draft: A/59/L.66 & Add.1, orally revised] without vote [agenda item 113].

Requests for exemption under Article 19 of the Charter of the United Nations

The General Assembly,

Having considered the letter dated 24 June 2005 from the Chairman of the Committee on Contributions addressed to the President of the General Assembly regarding the recommendations of the Committee on Contributions on requests for exemption under Article 19 of the Charter of the United Nations,

Reaffirming the obligation of Member States under Article 17 of the Charter to bear the expenses of the Organization as apportioned by the General Assembly,

1. Reaffirms its role in accordance with the provisions of Article 19 of the Charter of the United Nations and the advisory role of the Committee on Contributions in accordance with rule 160 of the rules of procedure of the General Assembly;

2. Also reaffirms its resolution 54/237 C of 23 December 1999;

3. Agrees that the failure of the Central African Republic, the Comoros, Georgia, Guinea-Bissau, Somalia and Tajikistan to pay the full minimum amount necessary to avoid the application of Article 19 of the Charter was due to conditions beyond their control;

4. Decides that the Central African Republic, the Comoros, Georgia, Guinea-Bissau, Somalia and Tajikistan should be permitted to vote in the General Assembly until the Assembly takes a final decision during the main part of its sixtieth session;

5. Takes note of the information provided by Liberia, the Niger and Sao Tome and Principe;

6. Agrees that the failure of Liberia, the Niger and Sao Tome and Principe to pay the full minimum amount necessary to avoid the application of Article 19 of the Charter was due to conditions beyond their control, and invites Liberia, the Niger and Sao Tome and Principe to submit appropriate information to the Committee on Contributions if similar circumstances prevail in the future;

7. Decides that Liberia, the Niger and Sao Tome and Principe should be permitted to vote in the General Assembly until the Assembly takes a final decision during the main part of its sixtieth session.

Reports of Secretary-General. During the year, the Secretary-General reported to the Assembly on payments made by certain Member States to reduce their level of arrears below that specified in Article 19, so that they could vote in the Assembly. As at 11 January [A/59/668], 29 Member States were below the gross amount assessed for the preceding two full years (2003-2004). By 1 July [A/59/861], that number was reduced to 10 and remained at that level through 15 July [A/59/874], before dropping to 9 by 12 September [A/60/345].

Communication. On 12 October [A/C.5/60/2], the Assembly President transmitted to the Chairman of the Fifth Committee a 2 September request from the Niger for exemption under Article 19 to permit it to retain its vote in the Assembly, on account of its continuing economic and social difficulties and the commitment it had shown through the submission of a multi-year payment plan in March 2004 and the two instalment payments it had made, despite the grave economic conditions the country faced.

Statements by Liberia, the Niger and Sao Tome and Principe. During the Fifth Committee's consideration of the item on the scale of assessments for the apportionment of the expenses of the United Nations on 3 November [A/C.5/60/SR.7], Liberia said that its request for exemption under Article 19 had been received by the Committee on Contributions after the established deadline due to continued communication problems in the country. Liberia had not made much progress in paying its arrears due to conditions beyond its control, but hoped that, in 2006, the newly elected Government would be in a position to commit itself to a multi-year payment plan. In that regard, it requested that the Assembly grant an exemption so that Liberia could continue to exercise its vote during the Assembly's current session. The Niger also reiterated its request for exemption, citing the prolonged political instability, the 1999 coup d'état and subsequent humanitarian crisis, as factors contributing to the ongoing difficult economic situation, which had adversely impacted the country's ability to pay its arrears. Sao Tome and Principe said that the decline in world cocoa prices, combined with the increased prices for imports, had depressed incomes and living standards for the country and therefore, it was not in a position to pay its assessed contributions. Indicating that it would meet its financial obligations as soon as the economic situation improved, Sao Tome and Principe also trusted that the Assembly would accede to its request for an exemption.

Other matters related to payment of assessed contributions

The General Assembly also considered the recommendations of the Committee on Contributions on the methodology for future scale of assessments, multi-year payment plans, measures to encourage the payment of arrears, as well as the treatment of the outstanding assessed contributions of the former Yugoslavia [YUN 2003, p. 1428] (see sections below).

Scale Methodology

Committee on Contributions. Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 58/1 B [YUN 2003, p. 1424], the Committee on Contributions continued to review [A/60/11] the different elements of the methodology for preparing future scales of assessments, focusing on elements relating to income measure; conversion rates; criteria for deciding when to replace market exchange rates (MERs); price-adjusted rates of exchange (PAREs); the base period; debt-burden adjustment; low per capita income adjustment; relief measures for Member States facing large scale-to-scale increases; and the annual recalculation of the scale. The Committee had before it additional information from the Statistics Division, as well as information gleaned from its discussion with a World Bank representative on issues related to data on external debt. Emphasizing the importance of its work, especially in the context of its consideration in 2006 of the scale of assessments for the period 2007-2009, the Committee requested the Secretary-General to ensure that sufficient resources were made available for that purpose. With regard to income measure, the Committee recommended that the scale of assessments for 2007-2009 should be based on the most current, comprehensive and comparable data available for the gross national income (GNI). Conversion rates should be based on MERs, and in instances where it would cause excessive fluctuations in the income of some Member States, PAREs or other appropriate conversion rates should be applied. The Committee considered a proposal for a more systematic approach to identifying which MERs should be replaced in preparing the scale of assessments. The Committee decided that it would use the proposed new approach in reviewing the scale of assessments for the period 2007-2009, with threshold figures of plus 50 per cent or minus 33 per cent, for changes in per capita GNI in United States dollars between 1999-2001 and 2002-2004, and MER valuation index levels of 1.2 and.08. However, final thresholds would be fixed after further analysis of the data to be used in preparing the 2007-2009 scale of assessments. The Committee agreed that application of any of the aforementioned criteria would not exclude consideration of other suitable cases for MERs replacement and that Member States could submit additional information to the Committee during its review of the scale. Concluding that, in general, relative PARE was the most technically sound method of adjusting MERs when distortions were identified, the Committee indicated that it would be the default method used when MERs were not appropriate. However, it recognized that other solutions might be needed in specific cases. With regard to the base year calculation of relative PARE, the Committee agreed that it should be decided on a case-by-case analysis.

The Committee decided to consider questions related to the base period, debt-burden adjustment and low per capita income adjustment at its sixty-sixth (2006) session. On the topic of large scale-to-scale increases in rates of assessment, it decided to consider the matter only if mandated to do so by the Assembly. The question of annual recalculation would be studied at its future sessions.

Measures to encourage payment of arrears

Report of Secretary-General. Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 59/1 B [YUN 2004, p. 1395], the Secretary-General submitted a March report [A/60/66] on multi-year payment plans/schedules submitted by Georgia, the Niger, the Republic of Moldova, Sao Tome and Principe and Tajikistan and on the status of their implementation as at 31 December 2004. During the period 2000-2004, Tajikistan significantly exceeded the payments foreseen in its schedule, while payments for 2001-2004, for the Republic of Moldova fell short of its schedule. Sao Tome and Principe, during the period 2002-2004, also fell short of its schedule, with its foreseen payments exceeding the amounts actually received. Both Georgia and the Niger had payments and credits applied to the assessed contributions in 2004, which exceeded the amounts foreseen in their payment plans. The Secretary-General recommended that the Assembly should encourage Member States with significant arrears of contributions to consider submitting multi-year payment plans.

Committee on Contributions. The Committee on Contributions [A/60/11] concluded that, although results thus far were mixed, the system of multi-year payment plans had made a positive impact in encouraging Member States to reduce their unpaid assessed contributions and in providing a way for them to demonstrate their commitment to meeting their financial obligations to the United Nations. The Committee took note of the new payment plan submitted by Iraq, the completion of payments by the Republic of Moldova under its plan, as well as the payments of Georgia, the Niger and Tajikistan. The Committee also noted the considerable effort made by those Member States that had honoured their payment plan commitments and urged those that had not yet done so to do likewise so as to reduce their outstanding assessed contributions.

Noting that 2005 was the eighth year that it had considered the question of measures to encourage the payment of arrears, the Committee indicated that the only measure on which action had been taken was multi-year payment plans. It decided not to consider further the question of measures to encourage the payment of arrears, unless it received guidance thereon from the Assembly.

Outstanding assessed contributions

Pursuant to decision 59/551 B of 13 April, whereby the General Assembly deferred consideration of the question of the outstanding assessed contributions of the former Yugoslavia [YUN 2003, p. 1428], the Secretary-General, in a September report [A/60/140 & Corr.1], updated the information on the unpaid assessed contributions of the former Yugoslavia, consequent upon the admission in 2000 of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, renamed Serbia and Montenegro [ibid., p. 412] to membership of the United Nations. The report also outlined the options considered by the Assembly in earlier sessions and highlighted matters for consideration. The updated information reflected the application of credits arising in 2004 and 2005, bringing the total outstanding assessed amount to $16,135,838.

By decision 60/551 of 23 December, the Assembly deferred until its resumed sixtieth (2006) session the reports of the Secretary-General on outstanding assessed contributions [YUN 2003, p. 1428] and unpaid assessed contributions (above) of the former Yugoslavia, as well as his letter dated 27 December 2001 to the Assembly President [YUN 2001, p. 1325].

Accounts and auditing

The General Assembly, at its resumed fifty-ninth (2005) session, considered the report of the Board of Auditors on UN peacekeeping operations for the period 1 July 2003 to 30 June 2004 [A/59/5 (Vol. II) & Corr.1], together with the Secretary-General's report on the implementation of the Board's recommendations [A/59/704], and related ACABQ comments and recommendations [A/59/736].

On 22 June, the Assembly, in resolution 59/264 B, endorsed the Board's report (see p. 143).

The Assembly, at its sixtieth session, had before it the reports of the Board of Auditors and audited financial statements of the voluntary funds administered by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) [A/60/5/Add.5] (see p. 1300) and on the capital master plan [A/60/5 (Vol. 5)] (see p. 1554) for the period ended 31 December 2004, as well as the Secretary-General's July note, submitted pursuant to resolution 58/249 A [YUN 2003, p. 1428], transmitting the consolidated report of the Board of Auditors on implementation of its recommendations relating to the 2002-2003 biennium [A/60/113] and covering the accounts of 15 organizations.

On 23 December, the Assembly, in resolution 60/234, endorsed the Board's recommendations on the voluntary funds administered by UNHCR.

By decision 60/551 of the same date, it deferred consideration of the Board of Auditors' report on the capital master plan, as well as the related reports of the ACABQ [A/60/387, A/60/7/Add.12], until its resumed sixtieth (2006) session.

Review of UN administrative and financial functioning

On 13 April, by decision 59/556, the General Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's report on the review of the structure and functions of all liaison offices or representation in New York of organizations headquartered elsewhere but funded from the regular budget [A/59/395] and the related ACABQ report [A/59/552].

In compliance with Assembly resolution 54/236 [YUN 1999, p. 1317] and its endorsement of the CPC recommendation that a progress report on the review of the efficiency of the UN administrative and financial functioning be submitted biennially, the Secretary-General transmitted an April report [A/60/70] on progress and impact achieved by management improvement measures across the UN global Secretariat. The analysis drew on the second round of quantitative data from the Organization's online tool for tracking management reforms, the Progress and Impact Reporting System (PIRS). The report incorporated enhanced methodology, further advancing the quantitative assessment of impact and an expansion of the reporting so as to incorporate actions from the Secretary-General's 2002 reform agenda in the sphere of administrative and financial management improvements.

CPC, in June [A/60/16], took note of the Secretary-General's report, as well as the improvements to the presentation of information and the refinement to the methodology, which had taken into account previous comments of the Committee. It recommended that the Secretary-General implement the remaining recommendations, further refine the methodology and extend coverage of the data. The Committee invited the Assembly to review the appropriateness of continued consideration of the agenda item entitled "Review of the efficiency of the administrative and financial functioning of the United Nations" by the Committee, taking into account Assembly resolutions 54/236 and 59/275 [YUN 2004, p. 1401].

By decision 60/503 of 20 September, the Assembly included the item in the agenda of its sixtieth session and allocated it to the Fifth Committee. The Committee had before it the reports of the Secretary-General on measures to strengthen accountability at the United Nations [A/60/312], the contribution made by the Department of Management to improve management practices [A/60/342] and the related ACABQ report [A/60/418].

On 23 December, the Assembly decided that the item on the review of the efficiency of the administrative and financial functioning of the United Nations would remain for consideration at its resumed sixtieth (2006) session (decision 60/551).

Programme planning

CPC, in informal consultations at its June/July session [A/60/16], resumed its consideration of the Secretary-General's report on priority-setting [YUN 2004, p. 1403]. Noting that Member States had been unable to reach an agreement on many aspects of the question, the view was expressed that it was the responsibility of Member States to designate priorities at the macro level for the Organization and that priority-setting was key to the UN programme planning and budgeting process. Difficulties to priority-setting were highlighted, such as the requirement to implement all legislative mandates, the non-sectoral structure of the strategic framework of the medium-term plan, the General Assembly's failure to designate priorities by programme or subprogramme, and the Assembly's decision in resolution 53/207 [YUN 1998, p. 1294] that the priorities contained in the budget outline should conform with those of the medium-term plan. The view was held that the Secretary-General should have the authority to make judgements at the subprogramme level, while others felt that priority-setting at all levels was the prerogative of Member States. It was noted that the majority of the conclusions in the report had been reflected in previous CPC reports.

In view of Assembly resolution 58/269 on strengthening of the United Nations: an agenda for further change [YUN 2003, p. 1395], it was felt that the Committee's recommendations should focus on issues relevant to the question of priority-setting within the context of more recent developments. In conclusion, the Committee emphasized that priority-setting in the Organization was an intergovernmental process and represented its longer-term objectives.

The Committee recommended that the Assembly approve the narrative of programme 27, safety and security, of the biennial programme plan for the 2006-2007 biennium [A/59/806], subject to modifications.

By decision 60/551, the Assembly deferred consideration of the report of the CPC on the work of its forty-forth (2005) session until the Assembly's resumed sixtieth (2006) session.

Programme performance

Evaluation

OIOS report. Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 58/269 [YUN 2003, p. 1395], OIOS, in collaboration with JIU, submitted a report [A/60/73] on proposals for strengthening and monitoring programme performance and evaluation, which contained the final report of the Working Group on Monitoring and Evaluation, established by OIOS to develop proposals and ensure broad support among departments and offices. JIU comments on the report of the Working Group were integrated into the conclusion and the annex to the report.

The Working Group found that, despite recent progress, the current monitoring and evaluation system required improvements in order to have a noticeable impact on future plans and decisions. The roles of the three main stakeholder groups, namely, the intergovernmental bodies, OIOS and programme and senior managers of the Secretariat needed to be clarified and their responsibilities enhanced. Other recommendations by the Working Group emphasized the need for intergovernmental bodies to use monitoring and evaluation findings as a basis for making action-oriented recommendations and decisions; programme planning to remain as a standing item on the agendas of the Assembly, its main committees and intergovernmental bodies; OIOS to strengthen its central monitoring and evaluation facility; and the integration and improvement of the existing results-based management tools and techniques, in particular the development of a new version of the Integrated Monitoring and Documentation Information System (IMDIS), in consultation with programme managers, to increase their use of IMDIS as a monitoring tool.

Concurring with the Working Group's proposals, JIU stressed that the complexity of the performance measurement system, as well as the burden placed on managers for data collection and on the governing bodies for data analysis, represented the largest risk threatening the successful implementation of results-based management. The Group urged the three main stakeholders to complete implementation of the action items contained in the report without delay.

OIOS reports to CPC. The Secretary-General transmitted to CPC a number of OIOS evaluation reports on linkages between headquarters and field activities: a review of best practices for poverty eradication in the framework of the UN Millennium Declaration [YUN 2000, p. 49] [E/AC.51/2005/2]; an in-depth evaluation of the United Nations Human Settlement Programme [E/AC.51/2005/3]; the triennial review of the implementation of CPC recommendations made at its forty-second session on the in-depth evaluation of General Assembly and Economic and Social Council affairs and Economic and Social Council support and coordination [E/AC.51/2005/4]; and the triennial review of the implementation of CPC recommendations made at its forty-second session on the in-depth evaluation of legal affairs [E/AC.51/2005/5].

CPC's comments and recommendations on those reports were contained in the report on its 2005 session [A/60/16]. By decision 2005/225, the Economic and Social Council took note of the CPC report.

On 20 October [A/C.5/60/11], the Assembly President transmitted to the Chairman of the Fifth Committee the deliberations of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee on the first two reports and its additional comments thereon.

The Assembly deferred consideration of the CPC report on the work at its 2005 session and the OIOS report on proposals for strengthening and monitoring programme performance and evaluation, and the letter of its President to the Chairman of the Fifth Committee to its resumed sixtieth (2006) session (decision 60/551).

Chapter III

United Nations staff

During 2005, the General Assembly, through the International Civil Service Commission (ICSC), continued to review the conditions of service of staff of the UN common system. ICSC made recommendations to the Assembly on matters related to the conditions of service of the UN staff, including base/floor salary scale, mobility and hardship allowances and the scale of staff assessment. The Commission also conducted a study of the grade equivalencies between the United Nations and the United States federal civil service, as well as reviews of the pay and benefits system, hazard pay levels and best prevailing conditions of employment in Paris and Montreal.

The Secretary-General reported on: after-service health insurance; measures to strengthen accountability in the United Nations; staff composition; equitable geographic distribution; availability of skills in local labour markets; suspension of recruitment for staff in the General Service and related categories; staff rules and regulations; gratis personnel; financial accountability of staff; redeployment of posts; the UN System Staff College; headquarters agreements; protection from sexual abuse and exploitation; safety and security of UN personnel; conditions of travel; the Administrative Law Unit; the Office of the Ombudsman; criminal behaviour and disciplinary matters; the management review of the appeals process; and the work of the Joint Appeals Board (JAB). The Joint Inspection Unit issued reports on a common payroll and the harmonization of the conditions of travel for the UN system.

In continuing efforts to strengthen accountability in the United Nations, the Secretary-General proposed the establishment of an Oversight Committee to act as an independent advisory body. In April, the Assembly strengthened the investigation function of the Office of Internal Oversight services.

Conditions of service

International Civil Service Commission

The International Civil Service Commission (ICSC), a 15–member body established in 1974 by General Assembly resolution 3357(XXIX) [YUN 1975, p. 875], continued in 2005 to regulate and coordinate the conditions of service and the salaries and allowances of the UN common system.

ICSC held its sixtieth (Bangkok, Thailand, 28 February–11 March) and sixty-first (New York, 11-22 July) sessions, at which it considered, in addition to organizational matters, the conditions of service applicable to both Professional and General Service categories of staff, and those relating specifically to the Professional and higher categories and to the General Service and other locally recruited categories.

The deliberations, recommendations and decisions of ICSC on those matters were detailed in its thirty-first annual report to the Assembly [A/60/30 & Corr.1] (see sections below).

In a 10 October statement on the administrative and financial implications of ICSC decisions and recommendations for the 2006-2007 programme budget [A/60/421 & Corr.1], the Secretary-General estimated the additional resulting requirements at $5,669,300, net of staff assessment, which would be repleted in the recosting of the proposed programme budget.

On 18 October [A/60/7/Add.3], the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) indicated that it had no objection to the Secretary-General's approach and intention to reflect the additional requirements in the re-costing of the 2006-2007 proposed programme budget.

The Assembly, in section XVII of resolution 60/248 of 23 December (see p. 1496) approved the amount of $16,211,300 for ICSC for the 2006-2007 biennium. On the same date, the Assembly deferred consideration of the 2005 ICSC report, the Secretary-General's statement on the programme budget implications of the ICSC recommendations and the related ACABQ report, until its resumed sixtieth (2006) session (decision 60/551).

Functioning of ICSC

The Commission had before it information submitted by its secretariat on the implementation or follow-up by common system organizations to its 2003-2004 decisions and/or recommendations. The Commission noted the high number of responses to its request for information and their clarity and hoped that the trend would continue. Expressing an interest in initiatives introduced by some organizations to encourage mobility and noting that the number of staff in the National Professional Officer category had increased, the Commission requested an update of mobility policies in organizations in 2007; a secretariat review of the status of National Professional Officers; and a report on the use of that category of staff to be presented at the Commission's (2006) session.

The Commission also considered a report on General Assembly actions taken at its fifty-ninth (2004) session concerning the UN common system, as well as details on resolutions and decisions adopted by the governing bodies of common system organizations. Commission members indicated that, while the information was useful, the report should have included a complete reference to specific decisions reflected in the text of the resolution. Emphasis was also placed on the need for quick and easy access to the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee news briefs via the UN intranet.

Strengthening of ICSC

CEB consideration. At its ninth session (Geneva, 4-5 April) [CEB/2005/3], the High-level Committee on Management (HLCM) heard statements by the United Nations Chief Executives Board for Coordination (CEB) secretariat and the spokesperson of the Human Resources (HR) Network on the status of the Fifth Committee's consideration of the report of the High-level Panel on the Strengthening of ICSC [YUN 2004, p. 1410]. The Committee reaffirmed the view that the strengthening of ICSC and its functioning, pursuant to the Panel's recommendations, was of critical importance to the organizations and staff of the UN common system. It requested executive heads to convey that importance to Member States and to urge them to support a constructive review of the Panel's recommendations.

On 13 April, the General Assembly deferred consideration of the High-level Panel's report and the related comments by the Secretary-General and CEB [ibid., p. 1411] (decision 59/551 B). It also decided to consider, as a matter of priority, the question of the strengthening of the ICSC during its sixtieth (2005) session (decision 59/561).

On 23 December, the Assembly further deferred consideration of the High-level Panel's report and the related comments on the report by the Secretary-General and CEB (decision 60/551).

Remuneration issues

Pursuant to the standing mandate in General Assembly resolutions 47/216 [YUN 1992, p. 1055] and 55/223 [YUN 2000, p. 1331], ICSC continued to review the relationship between the net remuneration of UN staff in the Professional and higher categories (grades P-1 to D-2) in New York, and that of the current comparator, the United States federal civil service employees in comparable positions in Washington, D.C. (referred to as the margin). In its 2005 report to the Assembly [A/60/30 & Corr.1], ICSC noted that a net remuneration margin of 111.1 was forecast for 2005, based on existing grade equivalencies between United Nations and United States officials in comparable positions, as shown in annex V to its report. The actual year-to-year (2004 to 2005) gross increase for Washington, D.C., taking into account both the employment cost index and locality pay adjustment, was 3.71 per cent, effective 1 January 2005. In view of the rise in the comparator's civil service salaries as from 1 January 2005, the Commission found that an adjustment of the UN common system's scale of 2.49 per cent would be necessary in 2006 in order to maintain the base/floor scale in line with the comparator. ICSC, therefore, recommended that the base/floor salary scale for the Professional and higher categories be increased by 2.49 per cent through the standard consolidation procedures, on a no-loss/no-gain basis, with effect from 1 January 2006. The proposed staff assessment rates and associated base/floor salary scale were shown in annexes VI and VII of the report.

It further noted that the imbalances in the Tax Equalization Fund would require a reduction in staff assessment to lower the Fund by 20 per cent. While net salaries would not be impacted, gross salaries of the scale would be lower by 20 per cent.

On the basis of the 2003 revised methodology for surveys of best prevailing conditions of employment at Headquarters and non-Headquarters duty stations [YUN 2003, p. 1435], ICSC conducted two surveys of best prevailing conditions of service for the General Service category of staff: one in Paris, France, and the other in Montreal, Canada, with reference dates of October 2004 and April 2005, respectively. The surveys resulted in the recommendation of a new salary scale for each location, as reproduced in annexes IX and X of the ICSC report, and revised rates for dependency allowances. The financial implications associated with the revised salary scales and rates of dependency allowances in Paris were estimated at $750,000 per annum and in Montreal $1.17 million per annum.

The Commission also reviewed dependency allowances, including spouse benefits and the level of children's and secondary dependant's allowances (see p. 1509).

Statement by Secretary-General. In a 10 October statement [A/60/421 & Corr.1] on the administrative and financial implications of ICSC decisions and recommendations for the 2006-2007 programme budget, the Secretary-General indicated that the adjustment of the base/floor salary scale, implemented by standard method on a no-loss/no-gain basis, had been calculated by ICSC on an annual basis in the amount of $2,811,900, which included $2,380,000 for the mobility/hardship allowance and $431,900 for the scale of separation payments. Duty stations with low post adjustment that would otherwise fall below the level of the new base/floor would not be impacted. The financial implications of the ICSC recommendation for the proposed 2006-2007 programme budget would amount to $5,669,300 in additional requirements, net of staff assessment and would be reflected in the recosting of the proposed programme budget estimates, as well as the reduction of $48,890,000 in requirements for staff assessment.

ACABQ report. On 18 October [A/60/7/Add.3], ACABQ stated that it had no objection to the Secretary-General's approach. However, it concluded that the term "no-loss/no-gain" used in the Secretary-General's statement to substantiate a 2.49 per cent increase in the base/floor salary scale, needed further explanation to demonstrate whether or not an upward adjustment of the base/floor salary scale, when implemented through the method of consolidating post adjustment multiplier points, would actually result in no additional cost to United Nations. Questioning the cost neutrality beyond the date of implementation, particularly with regard to the management of the post adjustment system, ACABQ indicated that an explanation should be provided to the Fifth Committee and included in all future statements on ICSC recommendations. It also recommended that if necessary, the term "no-loss/no-gain" should be replaced with another term that would better describe the consolidation of post adjustment multiplier points into the base/floor salary scales.

On 23 December, the General Assembly, in section XI of resolution 60/248 (see p. 1495), approved the new scale of staff assessment recommended by ICSC, with effect from 1 January 2006.

Post adjustment

ICSC continued to keep under review the operation of the post adjustment system, designed to measure cost-of-living discrepancies. It considered the report of its Advisory Committee on Post Adjustment Questions on the work of its twenty-seventh session (New York, 17-25 January). The report included recommendations on methodological issues of the post adjustment index calculations; preparatory activities for the next round of place-to-place surveys scheduled for 2005 at headquarters duty stations and Washington, D.C., and the practical aspects of conducting those surveys; guidelines on further studies to be carried out by the ICSC secretariat with respect to product comparability; and analyses of rent data from staff and external sources. The Commission endorsed the Advisory Committee's recommendations and agreed that it should review the survey results at its next (2006) meeting and submit a recommendation to the Commission in 2006.

Noblemaire principle

In 2005, following its 2004 in-depth review of the Noblemaire principle and its application [YUN 2004, p. 1412], ICSC commenced its study to determine the highest-paid national civil service, utilizing the two-phase methodology it had recommended in 1991 [YUN 1991, p. 905]. At its sixtieth session [A/60/30 & Corr.1], ICSC reviewed the data collected in phase I of the study, which had identified four national civil services for consideration in the phase II analysis, namely those of Belgium, Germany, Singapore and Switzerland. It decided to proceed with the analysis of those civil services and to collect information on remuneration levels of the World Bank and the Organisation for Economic Cooperation and Development (OECD) as a reference check only. At its sixty-first session, the secretariat presented the additional information on Germany, Singapore and Switzerland, but had yet to collect information from Belgium and the organizations earmarked for the reference check. In its discussion, the Commission recalled that both the German and Swiss civil services were included in its previous (1994-1995) Noblemaire study [YUN 1995, p. 1404] and that neither civil service had been deemed appropriate as the Noblemaire comparator. On the basis of current data collected from Germany, the Commission noted that benefit, leave and work-hour provisions had generally deteriorated, or at best had remained the same in a few cases, while salary levels had been subject to constraints since the 1995 exercise. As for Switzerland, the salary system had been revised—suggesting lower salary levels than those of the comparator—and the benefit structure had not indicated any significant improvement since 1995. With regard to Singapore, its confidential-ity requirements had restricted the collection of all relevant salary data by the Commission, other than base salary, which made it difficult to adequately apply the Noblemaire principle. Furthermore, on the basis of a total compensation approach, ICSC did not find the Singaporean civil service better paid than the current comparator.

In the case of all three civil services, the Commission concluded that the resources required to conduct a full phase II study, particularly for the actuarial comparisons of the relevant benefit structures, would not be well spent. It took note of the progress made in the study and decided to discontinue any further study of Germany, Singapore and Switzerland. It would continue the study of Belgium and conduct the reference check with regard to the World Bank and OECD. The Commission requested its secretariat to provide a progress report on the item at its sixty-second (2006) session.

Grade equivalencies

In 2005, keeping with its practice to periodically review grade equivalencies every five years and pursuant to its 2004 decision to conduct a grade-equivalency study for the revised structure of the comparator's Senior Executive Service (SES) [YUN 2004, p. 1412], ICSC considered the item at its sixtieth and sixty-first sessions [A/60/30 & Corr.1]. The study involved the use of two comparison methods: one that assigned a midpoint or average salary to all members of the United States SES positions, and the other that linked the common system grades with the comparator's performance based SES salaries. However, as a result of ongoing changes in the structure of the United States federal civil service, and the consequential difficulties experienced by the secretariat in obtaining relevant data for the SES positions, the Commission deferred consideration of the issue to its sixty-first session.

A July update on progress indicated that during discussions held with the United States Office of Personnel Management, it had been noted that the application of performance pay was contingent on certification of a department's performance management system. Furthermore, there was no uniform application of the broadbanded salary structure, as agencies used different criteria, ranging from performance to responsibility, in order to work criticality for movement through the band. From a random sample of 51 SES positions reviewed, interviews were conducted on 44 positions in 10 departments. An independent evaluation of each position was also carried out. It was found that, if a certified performance management system was in place, the SES pay range was set at $107,550 to $162,100 and where there was none in place, the range was $107,550 to $149,200. Departments were not allowed to utilize the full SES pay range, unless a certified performance system had been implemented. Inconsistencies and variances in banding configurations across departments were also indicated.

In the discussion, the Commission noted that, even though official certification of the performance management systems by the United States Office of Personnel Management was a requirement, decisions concerning the management of pay-for-performance systems, including the size of the payout, were the responsibility of the individual department and had resulted in variances. One member suggested the development of separate pay-for-performance systems for managers in the UN system. Other members questioned the validity of the United States Civil Service SES as an appropriate comparison, since the salaries were based on the person, whereas in the United Nations common system, it was based on the position.

The Commission took note of the progress made and looked forward to a report on the grade equivalency exercise from its secretariat in 2006.

Other remuneration issues

Conditions of service and compensation for non-Secretariat officials

Judges of ICJ and international tribunals

At its resumed fifty-ninth (2005) session, the General Assembly, pursuant to its decision 59/551 [YUN 2004, p. 1413], considered the Secretary-General's report [ibid., p. 1412] on the conditions of service and compensation of members of the International Court of Justice (ICJ), judges of the International Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia (ICTY) and of the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda (ICTR) and ad litem judges for both Tribunals, as well as the related ACABQ report [ibid., p. 1413], in which the Committee had recommended that the annual salary of ICJ members be set at $177,000 effective 1 January 2005.

The Assembly, in section III of resolution 59/282 (see p. 1487), increased both the annual salary of the members of the Court and the judges and ad litem judges of the Tribunals and the annual value of all pensions in payment, by 6.3 per cent, pending a decision, based on the comprehensive report of the Secretary-General, on the question of pensions to be submitted to its sixty-first (2006) session. It also decided, with retroactive effect from 1 January 2005, that Members of the Court maintaining a bona fide primary residence at The Hague for up to nine continuous years during their Court service should be eligible, upon the completion of their appointment and resettlement outside the Netherlands, to receive a prorated lump sum.

Dependency allowances

Pursuant to a 2001 Commission decision [YUN 2001, p. 1341] to undertake a comprehensive review of allowances payable in the UN common system, ICSC conducted a review of dependency benefits in 2005 [A/60/30 & Corr.1], especially spouse benefits (including dependency and single rates, and salary structure) and children's and secondary dependant's allowances. The Commission re-examined the rationale and purpose of the spouse benefit for staff in the Professional and higher categories and identified the appropriate place of the spouse benefit in the overall pay and benefits package of common system staff. It noted that dependency benefits to staff in the Professional and higher categories were provided in the form of higher net salaries for staff with a primary dependant—as compared with those who had no primary dependant—and by flat-rate allowances for children and secondary dependants. While one salary scale was applied equally to staff with or without dependants, lower amounts of staff assessment were applied to gross salary for those staff with either a dependent spouse or child, resulting in a higher net base salary than that for single staff members. Agreeing with the Human Resources Network that one of the principles underlying the current system was that of "equal pay for equal work", the Commission emphasized that gross salary was the same for all UN staff, regardless of marital status or the number of children, and the system took into account the fact that additional expenditures were incurred by staff members with dependents. That principle was also recognized by the United States federal civil service (the current comparator) through its tax system, where single tax payers paid higher tax rates. Higher net salaries for dependency status were also the result of the tax system of most countries. It was noted that the system of base salary and allowances was developed nearly 30 years ago and as work realities and values had evolved, the Commission should examine how best to reflect that fact.

The Commission decided to maintain the distinction in remuneration between staff with and without primary dependants and the current ratios between the single and dependency rates of the base/floor salary scale. Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 59/268 [YUN 2004, p. 1408], the Commission reported to the Assembly that the rationale for doing so was directly linked to the practices of Member States that maintained such a differentiation in their tax systems.

Education grant

Practices of other civil services and international organizations

In response to a General Assembly request in resolution 59/268 [YUN 2004, p. 1408] that it be informed about the practices of other civil services and international organizations with regard to the provision of education grants, ICSC reviewed information that had been recently collected by OECD, which provided details of each education grant scheme for both international organizations and relevant national civil services. The data indicated that all international organizations and some national civil services provided for tertiary education under their schemes. However, as the OECD submission lacked details on UN comparator practices, separate information was provided by the ICSC secretariat, which compared comparator maximum education grant levels to UN common system maximum levels on a country-by-country basis. It also assessed the merits and disadvantages of adopting the comparator practices for UN common system purposes.

The Commission took note of the information provided and requested its secretariat to summarize the results for presentation to the Assembly.

Review of methodology

The Commission, under its ongoing review of the pay and benefits system continued to review the methodology for determining the level of the education grant. It considered its secretariat's proposals relating to the lump-sum approach, including the general outline of that approach, and specific issues relating to the selection of representative schools; the proposed new currency zoning for education grant ceilings; the adjustment of the maxima and cost controls; individual certification requirements; and the periodicity of the review of education grant levels.

The Commission asked its secretariat to continue its work, in collaboration with organizations and staff representatives, on developing proposals on education grant methodologies on the basis of current principles of the scheme, and in particular, the lump-sum approach. It should also develop models illustrating the practicality of the various review proposals, with a view to ensuring fairness, simplification and cost control, and report to the Commission on the issue at its sixty-third (2006) session.

Mobility and hardship allowance

ICSC continued its review of the current mobility and hardship scheme approved in 1989 [YUN 1989, p. 886] to compensate staff for service at difficult duty stations and to encourage operational mobility. At it's fifty-ninth (2004) session the Commission had decided to separate the mobility element from the hardship element and to delink both allowances from the base/floor salary scale [YUN 2004, p. 1415]. It also established a working group to develop options for compensating staff for services at hardship duty stations and for encouraging mobility, estimate the cost of those options and submit its recommendations to the Commission in 2005. The working group, using cost neutrality as the guiding principle and taking constraint into account, proposed the transference of funds from one element to another as an option for attaining cost neutrality. Although each element was treated separately, the group considered the proposal as a single package because of the integrated manner of its design.

For the mobility element, the proposed changes included flat amount payments to replace the percentages linked to the base/floor; the calculation of differentials for single and dependency rates by reference to flat amounts; clustering of the number of assignments for payment purposes; recognizing up to seven moves instead of the current five; no extension of payments for mobility after five years in the same location; and a review of payments every three years. A comparison between the current and proposed mobility scheme reflected a decrease of $22,392, which would be reallocated to support an increase to the hardship component.

Under the changes proposed for the hardship element, flat amount payments would replace the percentages linked to the base/floor; differentials for single and dependency rates would be calculated by reference to flat amounts; payments would be reviewed every three years; and higher payments would be made for assignments to more difficult duty stations. A comparison between the current and proposed hardship scheme reflected an increase of $4,385,069, which was accommodated through decreases in the mobility and the non-removal elements of the current scheme. Changes to the non-removal element were the same as for the hardship element, except that no distinction would be made between the amounts paid for the various duty stations and no extension of payment would be permitted beyond five years. Definitions for mobility and for hardship were also recommended. In determining the degree of hardship, consideration would be given to local conditions of safety and security, health care, education, housing, climate, isolation, or the availability of the basic amenities of life that resulted in less than acceptable standard of living for staff and their families. The concept of mobility would include movement within and across organizations, occupations and geographic locations. For the purpose of the scheme, mobility was defined as the geographic reassignment of a staff member for a period of one year or more from one duty station to another.

With regard to its consideration of assignment grant proposals, the Group recommended that two months' salary representing the assignment grant for the most dangerous duty stations should be paid in its entirety at the beginning of any assignment, which would be three or more years in duration.

The Commission approved the definitions proposed for mobility and hardship and endorsed the new arrangements for mobility, hardship, non-removal and assignment grant, as well as the modalities and review cycle proposed for updating allowances. It also recommended that the General Assembly approve the proposed arrangements and definitions and implement the new systems with effect from 1 July 2006.

CEB consideration. At its tenth session (New York, 10-11 October) [CEB/2005/5], HLCM adopted a statement on the new mobility and hardship scheme proposed by ICSC, which would replace the current matrix format. It was projected that the new scheme would continue to provide incentives to staff to serve at hardship duty stations and to be geographically mobile, as well as be easier to administer and more transparent to staff. The statement also reflected the Organization's disagreement with the decisions of ICSC [YUN 2004, p. 1415] and the General Assembly in resolution 59/268 [ibid. 1408] to decouple the adjustment of the mobility and hardship allowance from the base/floor salary scale.

The Committee approved the CEB statement for transmittal to the Assembly's sixtieth (2005) session, and was later issued as a note by the Secretary-General [A/60/273].

Hazard pay

The Commission, in reviewing the principle for granting hazard pay—payment for employment under conditions where war or active hostilities prevailed and the evacuation of families and non-essential staff had taken place—considered proposals on the level of such pay for locally and internationally recruited staff, for revising the criteria for its payment and for applying the same adjustment mechanism and periodicity for review as that for mobility, hardship and non-removal allowances.

The Commission decided to establish the level of hazard pay for internationally recruited staff at $1,300 per month as of 1 January 2006; retain the current level of hazard pay for locally recruited staff (25 per cent of the midpoint of the local salary scale for General Service staff); and approved a three-year review cycle, to be done simultaneously with the review of the allowances for mobility, hardship and non-removal; and to apply the same indicators used in updating those allowances when reviewing the level of hazard pay. The financial implications for the revised level of hazard pay were estimated at $1,440,990 per month.

Definition of hazard pay. The working group established to develop options for compensating staff for services at hardship duty stations and for encouraging mobility (see above) also considered proposals on hazard pay. The Group recommended to ICSC that the definition of hazard pay be revised to include the risk of life-threatening diseases, such as the severe acute respiratory syndrome (SARS) and the Ebola virus, to which medical personnel were directly exposed in the performance of their duties. The Commission approved the definition of the criteria for hazard pay as proposed in annex III of the report.

Entitlements of staff serving in non-family duty stations

In response to General Assembly resolution 59/266 [YUN 2004, p. 1418], ICSC considered the issue of harmonization of practices relating to the entitlements of staff serving at non-family duty stations. The Commission had before it detailed information on the practices of common system organizations on the subject, as well as a report by the organizations, which, inter alia, explained the rationale for the separate maintenance of the special operations approach and the mission subsistence approach. The special operations approach was used by the funds and programmes for staff assigned to longer but defined periods and with traditional entitlements, whereas mission subsistence allowance was used exclusively for those assigned to special peacekeeping operations and for political and peacebuilding missions. The rationale for maintaining two separate systems was the need to address two situations, which differed with regard to the mandate of the organization or mission, the duration of assignment, the type and limitation of employment, the manner and purpose of deployment, the number of staff in a duty station or mission area, family considerations and eligibility to receive entitlements. An increasing number of field-oriented organizations had applied the special operations approach. Organizations had agreed on a revised procedure to calculate the special operations living allowance, which would be a monthly payment based exclusively on the daily subsistence allowance after 60 days. To help organizations make the adjustment, ICSC would have to update all non-capital-city daily subsistence allowance rates.

The Commission noted that the financial implications relating to the move from mission subsistence allowance rates, where applicable, to the after-60-day daily subsistence allowance were estimated at $2.98 million system-wide. It agreed with the rationale for maintaining two separate approaches under the special operations and mission subsistence regimes and endorsed the proposed change from mission subsistence allowance to the after-60-day daily subsistence allowance rate as the basis for calculating the special operations living allowance under the special operations approach.

After-service health insurance benefits

In response to resolution 58/249 A [YUN 2003, p. 1428], the Secretary-General submitted an October report [A/60/450 & Corr.1] on liabilities and proposed funding for after-service health insurance benefits, which provided overviews on the extent and recognition of liability, UN funding measures, revisions to the after-service health insurance provisions and the valuation reports of the ICTY, ICTR and the UN Compensation Commission. It also included details pertaining to action by funds, programmes and other organizations, along with a historical perspective on the after-service health insurance programme.

Actuarial studies had estimated that the current value of the accrued after-service health insurance liability, as at 31 December 2003, for the United Nations and common system organizations covered in the report, ranged from $0.5 million to $1,484.9 million, with a combined total of $4,022.9 million. Seven organizations had taken steps to both recognize and fund the actuarial liability from several sources, while others had not yet made provisions and were awaiting action by the United Nations prior to finalizing their plans to fund the liabilities.

The Secretary-General indicated that the UN external auditors and those of its agencies had stressed the need for organizations to fund their after-service health benefit obligations. A wide range of funding mechanisms would need to be put into place by the respective organizations with the approval of the appropriate governing bodies. Possible sources of funding for UN liabilities included the surplus held in reserves and special funds. However, if the General Assembly approved to fund the liability from a 4 per cent charge on payroll costs and from General Fund surpluses, it would result in Member States being required to pay more in assessed or pledged contributions.

The Secretary-General proposed changes in the after-service health insurance provisions, including increasing the eligibility requirements for subsidy from 10 to 15 years minimum participation with a "buy-in" provision after 10 years of participation; application of a theoretical pension of a minimum of 25 years of service as the basis for assessing retiree contributions, as opposed to using the actual number of years of service when less than 25; and introducing a minimum participation requirement for eligibility of dependants of at least five years at the time of retirement.

The Secretary-General requested the Assembly to approve, for initial funding of after-service health insurance benefits, an amount of $350,000; for ongoing funding, a charge equivalent to 4 per cent of salary costs; the utilization of unspent budget appropriations and the transfer of any excess income and savings; the proposed changes to the after-service health insurance provisions. It should authorize full recognition of the after-service health-insurance liability on financial statements and approve finding of liabilities as at 1 January 2006 for ICTY and ICTR and the United Nations Compensation Commission.

ACABQ report. In November [A/60/7/Add.11], ACABQ stated that, while the Secretary-General had estimated that the present value as at 31 December 2003 of accrued after-service health insurance liability of future benefits was $1,484.9 million, the underlying methodology for arriving at that estimate had not been clearly explained. Observing that after-service health insurance liabilities had probably escalated since 2003, the Committee stressed that updated data should be made available to the General Assembly before any decision on the matter was taken. It requested detailed information on how other estimates were derived, including those on provisions for current retirees and active employees currently eligible to retire with after-service health insurance benefits. ACABQ agreed in principle with the proposal to charge a certain percentage of salary costs as a means of building a fund for after-service health insurance payments, but wanted more detailed analysis before it could recommend a percentage. Special attention should be paid to the relationship between an additional charge on salary costs and programme support costs applied to extrabudgetary activities. Moreover, the proposal to utilize savings did not appear to be in line with the best management practices, was not transparent, might encourage overbudgeting and was not in keeping with Assembly resolution 56/237 [YUN 2001, p. 810], by which savings achieved through efficiency gains were to be directed to the Development Account. It recommended approval of the changes to the provision of the after-service health insurance programme.

The Assembly deferred consideration of the Secretary-General's report on after-service health insurance and the related ACABQ report until its resumed sixtieth (2006) session (decision 60/551).

Managerial efficiency and strengthening accountability

Senior Management Network

CEB action. At it's ninth regular session [CEB/2005/3] (Geneva, 4-5 April), HLCM considered a progress report on the establishment of a Senior Management Service in the United Nations, which had been approved by CEB in 2004 [YUN 2004, p. 1415] as a means of strengthening managerial and leadership capacity throughout the Organization. Following consultations with members of the Human Resources Network and in response to a request of the General Assembly in resolution 59/268 [ibid., p. 1408], it was proposed to rename the Service as the Senior Management Network, in order to better reflect the purpose for the creation of a system-wide managerial network. Other developments included collaboration between the UN System Staff College and an inter-agency committee in evaluating proposals from institutions interested in developing the leadership programme to underpin the Service.

HLCM endorsed the redesignation of the Senior Management Service as the Senior Management Network and supported the development and implementation of the leadership development programme.

Note of Secretary-General. In an August note [A/60/209], the Secretary-General stated that the Senior Management Network would bring together senior managers throughout the UN system and executive heads would designate staff for participation in the Network and guide its direction. He emphasized that the Network did not involve any change in the conditions of service, compensation or contractual arrangements. The objectives of the Network included strengthening managerial and leadership capacity; building a common corporate culture; facilitating the devolution of responsibility and accountability in relation to core managerial functions; enhancing inter-agency cohesion and coordination and promoting mobility and learning across the system; and signalling a commitment to the professionalism of the management function. He also announced that a system-wide leadership programme being designed to support the Network was expected to be launched in 2006 for groups of senior managers from across the common system.

By decision 60/551 of 23 December, the General Assembly deferred consideration of the Secretary-General's note until its resumed sixtieth (2006) session.

Strengthening accountability at the United Nations

Report of Secretary-General. Responding to General Assembly resolution 59/272 [YUN 2004, p. 1370], the Secretary-General submitted an August report [A/60/312] on measures taken to strengthen accountability at the United Nations, which outlined new measures developed, as well as those already initiated, under five thematic headings: measures for strengthening the accountability framework; strengthening oversight mechanisms; ensuring ethical conduct; enhancing transparency; and other measures. The report also provided information on the Secretariat's analysis of audit committees and the progress made on indicating time frames for the implementation of the recommendations of oversight bodies.

Among the measures adopted to strengthen the accountability framework was the replacement of the Accountability Panel with the Management Performance Board as of 13 May 2005 [ST/SGB/2005/13]. The Board, whose terms of reference and responsibilities were clearer and better defined than those of the Panel, would review the recommendations of the proposed oversight committee (see below); ensure that managers acted on issues identified by oversight bodies; monitor the manner in which senior managers exercised authority delegated to them, including their performance in achieving the objectives of human resources action plans; and review the outcome of the administration of justice proceedings in the Secretariat. As the Senior Management Group established in 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 1390] had proved to be too large for effective and timely decision-making, two smaller senior-level committees, a Policy Committee and a Management Committee, were created in 2005 to improve executive-level decision-making efforts. Mandatory induction programmes for senior officials were introduced, as well as a new method of defining performance expectations for programme delivery and results-based budgeting. Performance indicators for all programmes, including peace-keeping missions were developed and performance measures—baselines and targets—were incorporated into the 2004-2005 and the proposed 2006-2007 programme budget. A revised e-PAS, an electronic enhancement of the original Performance Appraisal System (PAS), was also launched with new features, such as organizational core values and competencies, self-assessment by staff members, managerial competencies for supervisory staff, strengthened links between performance management and career development, and enhanced accountability measures, including an optional section for the comments of staff on supervision received. Conditions under which staff members might be held accountable and/or financially liable to the Organization for their actions were also defined.

The terms of condition for a United Nations oversight committee were also issued. The committee, an independent advisory panel to the Secretary-General, would ensure the systematic implementation of recommendations of oversight bodies; share audit-related information and lessons learned; and ensure that significant risks to the Organization were identified and mitigating measures taken. Other activities highlighted focused on efforts to enhance fraud and corruption prevention mechanisms and to strengthen the Office of Internal Oversight Services (OIOS). In April, by resolution 59/287 (see p. 1474), the Assembly strengthened the OIOS investigation function and decided that the results of all preliminary investigations conducted by programme managers should be reported to the Office. OIOS was thereby delegated independent, residual and exclusive authority to investigate the most serious cases (all "category one" cases involving high-risk complex matters and serious criminal crimes) and designated as the mandatory gateway of all "category two" (lower risk to the Organization) cases.

Efforts to enhance ethical conduct focused on the establishment of a UN Ethics Office (see p. 1476), broadening the financial disclosure policy, protecting against retaliation for reporting alleged misconduct, enhancing the codes of conduct and conflict-of-interest rules, incorporating ethics into staff training programmes, protecting against harassment in the workplace and aggressive pursuit of allegations of sexual abuse and exploitation by field personnel. Dissemination of information on the Secretary-General's decisions on disciplinary cases was emphasized to raise awareness and act as a deterrent, thereby enhancing ethical conduct.

In the area of enhancing transparency, the report summarized efforts to develop a new policy on access to UN information, implement the new process for the selection and appointment of senior officials, which utilized a Senior Appointment Group (SAG) for reviewing candidatures for appointment by the Secretary-General, constitute the Senior Review Group as a standing advisory body on the appointment and promotion to D-2 level posts and develop clear accounting standards.

In the light of issues raised by the Independent Inquiry Committee, which investigated the oil-for-food programme (see p. 1475), particularly the criticism of UN procurement practices, the Secretary-General commissioned a review, completed in June 2005, that compared existing procurement rules and regulations with the best global practices of outside organizations and companies to ensure that the improvements introduced since the mid to late 1990s met the highest global standards. The transparency achieved by the UN Procurement Service website was evaluated positively in the review. It indicated that the open approach of the Service to sourcing and vendor development was in line with that of leading public procurement agencies. In August 2005, the Secretary-General commissioned a full financial and internal control review of the current UN procurement system.

The Secretary-General also submitted a report on the efforts of the Department of Management to improve its practices, and a time-bound plan for the reduction of duplication, complexity and bureaucracy in UN administrative processes [A/60/342] (see p. 1470).

ACABQ report. In October [A/60/418], ACABQ, noting the Secretary-General's bulletin [ST/SGB/2005/18] establishing the Oversight Committee as of 15 September and outlining its role and functions, indicated that it would be difficult for the three internal members of the Oversight Committee to act in an independent capacity while performing their advisory role on the Committee, as specified in the report. Moreover, given the Oversight Committee's small membership, the absence of any one of its members could have a detrimental effect on its performance. ACABQ also expressed doubts over the appropriateness of the Oversight Committee's role in providing advice and suggestions on the priorities, long-term strategy and annual audit work plans of oversight bodies, as it questioned the independence of those bodies. It concluded that the terms of reference, composition and working methods of the Committee would need to be revisited in the light of any decision the General Assembly might take on the follow-up to the World Summit Outcome document (see p. 48).

On 23 December, the Assembly deferred until its resumed sixtieth (2006) session (decision 60/551) consideration of the reports of the Secretary-General and ACABQ on measures to strengthen accountability.

The General Assembly, at its resumed fifty-ninth session in 2005, had before it reports and/or notes of the Secretary-General, consideration of which had been deferred from previous sessions on: implementation of multilingualism in the UN system [YUN 2003, p. 1451]; multilingualism [ibid.]; the report of ICSC on its fifty-sixth and fifty-seventh (2004) sessions [YUN 2004, p. 1408]; measures to prevent discrimination on the basis of nationality, race, gender, religion or language in the United Nations [ibid., p. 1432]; human resources management reform [ibid., p. 1416]; contractual agreements [ibid., p. 1424]; improving gender distribution in the Secretariat [ibid., p. 1428]; the study on the availability in local labour markets of the skills for which international recruitment for the General Service category takes place [ibid., p 1430]; and the review of the Headquarters Agreements concluded by organizations of the UN system on human resources issues affecting staff [ibid., p 1433]; and the list of staff of the United Nations Secretariat in 2004 [A/C.5/59/L.34].

field missions, including the use of the 300 and 100 series of appointments [A/59/762] (see p. 150).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 23 December [meeting 69], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee [A/60/603], adopted resolution 60/238 without vote [agenda item 129].

Human resources management

The General Assembly,

Annex

Amendments to the Staff Regulations

Regulation 1.2 Conflict of interest

For paragraph (n), substitute

(n) All staff members at the D-1 or L-6 level and above shall be required to file financial disclosure statements on appointment and at intervals thereafter as prescribed by the Secretary-General, in respect of themselves, their spouses and their dependent children, and to assist the Secretary-General in verifying the accuracy of the information submitted when so requested. The financial disclosure statements shall include certification that the assets and economic activities of the staff members, their spouses and their dependent children do not pose a conflict of interest with their official duties or the interests of the United Nations. The financial disclosure statements will remain confidential and will only be used, as prescribed by the Secretary-General, in making determinations pursuant to staff regulation 1.2 (m). The Secretary-General may require other staff to file financial disclosure statements as he deems necessary in the interest of the Organization.

Regulation 10.2

For the existing text, substitute

The Secretary-General may impose disciplinary measures on staff members whose conduct is unsatisfactory.

Sexual exploitation and sexual abuse constitute serious misconduct.

The Secretary-General may summarily dismiss a member of the staff for serious misconduct.

Pay and benefits system

In 2005, ICSC, continued its monitoring of the pilot study on pay-for-performance and broadbanding, initiated in 2004 [YUN 2004, p. 1424]. The Human Resources Network expressed concern on the need for flexibility in respect of the banding structure and the ability of organizations to set the bands to suit their individual needs, and on the participation of General Service together with Professional staff in the pilot studies, whereas the Commission's position was restrictive to the Professional category. In its discussion, the Commission addressed a number of issues raised by the volunteer organizations and consultants involved in the study, including study participants, control groups, the broadbanded model, duration of the pilot study, the competency component of the pilot study, peer review, client feed back and legal considerations. The Commission found the discussion useful and was encouraged by the progress made. However, concerned by the direction some of the test modalities had taken, it reminded the volunteer organizations that those modalities were the basis on which the study should be conducted, and any deviation required the Commission's prior approval.

Job Evaluation Master Standard

In 2005, ICSC continued its assessment of the implementation of the Job Evaluation Master Standard, a conceptual model of the new job evaluation system for the Professional and higher categories, presented at its fifty-seventh (2003) session [YUN 2003, p. 1445]. The system, designed to work from an automated platform, linked job design to the development of the competencies and supported performance management in an integrated manner. Having received an interim report in 2004 and a further update at its sixty-first (2005) session, the Commission indicated that of 18 organizations, twelve had implemented the new job evaluation system, resulting in the classification of approximately 1,400 posts, with the remaining six in the process of implementation. Organizations reported that, while the new system was simpler to use and allowed for faster classification action, there were concerns with regard to the clarity of language and interpretation of terminology. Actions discussed and agreed upon by a number of organizations included, a glossary to address interpretation difficulties; updated training materials; alternative security provisions for the web-based job evaluation system; system-wide access to organizational post illustrations; and a virtual network of advisers.

The Commission encouraged organizations to increase the rate of implementation and endorsed the enhancements proposed by its secretariat. The Commission requested its secretariat to ensure that a random sample of UN jobs was classified by reference to the new job evaluation standard in preparation for the grade equivalency study (see p. 1508) with the United States federal civil service and to report in 2006, including on the number of grade levels of posts classified and any changes to those grade levels as a result of classification action taken.

Contractual arrangements

In follow-up to its 2004 decision [YUN 2004, p. 1425], ICSC considered the revised model contract for three contractual categories: continuing appointments, fixed-term appointments and temporary appointments. The Human Resources Network agreed that the proposed text was acceptable as a framework for contractual agreements. The Commission confirmed two types of requirements under temporary appointments: one of a short-term nature for less than one year and the other for functions required up to four years to accommodate urgent operational requirements for defined periods, such as peacekeeping, humanitarian assistance or special projects. Agreeing that it had a consensus on a viable framework that could be implemented by the organizations, the Commission decided to adopt the framework as amended and set out in annex IV of its report and submit its final report to the General Assembly's sixtieth (2005) session.

By decision 60/551 of 23 December, the Assembly deferred consideration of the ICSC report and the Secretary-General's report on contractual arrangements [YUN 2004, p. 1424].

Staff composition

In an August annual report on the United Nations Secretariat's staff composition [A/60/310], the Secretary-General updated information on demographic characteristics of the Secretariat's staff and on the system of desirable ranges for geographical distribution. As at 30 June 2005, Secretariat staff numbered 15,989, some 1,166 more than at 30 June 2004. Of the total, 5,754 were in the Professional or higher categories, 9,226 were in the General Service and related categories, and 1,009 were project personnel; 7,753 were paid from the regular budget and 8,236 from extrabudgetary sources. Staff in posts subject to geographical distribution numbered 2,581, of whom 1,110 (43 per cent) were female. Seventeen Member States were unrepresented in all staff categories, while nine were underrepresented, compared to 15 and 10, respectively, in 2004. Appointments to posts subject to geographical distribution between 1 July 2004 and 30 June 2005 totalled 206. Of those, 25 (12.1 per cent) were nationals of underrepresented Member States, 142 (68.9 per cent) of within-range Member States, and 39 (18.9 percent) of overrepresented Member States.

The report also gave information on the demographic profile of Secretariat staff, staff movement between 1 July 2004 and 30 June 2005, and forecasts of anticipated retirements between 2005 and 2009.

Equitable geographical distribution assessment

In response to General Assembly resolution 57/305 [YUN 2003, p. 1440], the Secretary-General submitted a March report [A/59/724] on the comprehensive assessment of the system of geographical distribution and an assessment of the issues relating to possible changes in the number of posts subject to the system of geographical distribution. The report provided overviews on the origin and initial purpose of the concept of geographical distribution of the staff; current applicable definition of the concept; common factors in equitable geographic distribution in the UN common system; and modifications in the parameters of geographical status and their implications, which presented three scenarios for evaluation in terms of their impact on Member States' representation status.

In the first scenario, weights of the existing factors (membership, population and contribution) were varied within the limits of the existing base figure, which constituted the most common method of adjusting geographical distribution posts. Five variants were considered, with a baseline number of posts of 2,700 and the number of staff posts subject to geographical distribution, which stood at 2,545 as at 31 December 2004, held constant. The second scenario involved changing the number or posts in the base figure through the inclusion of new personnel categories. Four variants, which included staff posts under regular budget and extrabudgetary resources, were considered. Scenario three weighted ranges and posts within the context of the system of desirable ranges.

The Secretary-General noted that the various simulations using the variants described in the report showed that changing the weights of the factors (membership, population and contribution) would result in important changes in the representation status of Member States. The same was true when the base figure was expanded to include staff currently not having geographic status, which would have financial implications. It was projected that the inclusion of staff in the General Service and related categories would cost the Organization approximately $55.5 million annually. He recommended that the Assembly take note of the report.

By decision 59/551 C of 13 April, the Assembly deferred consideration of the Secretary-General's report to its resumed sixtieth (2006) session.

Gratis personnel

Report of Secretary-General. The Secretary-General, in February, submitted to the General Assembly his annual report [A/59/716] on the use of gratis personnel between 1 January 2003 and 31 December 2004. Type I gratis personnel serving under an established regime included interns, associate experts and technical cooperation experts obtained on non-reimbursable loans, while type II gratis personnel comprised personnel provided by a Government or other entity pursuant to Assembly resolution 51/243 [YUN 1997, p. 1469]. The Secretary-General reported that during 2004, the number of type I gratis personnel increased by 12.3 per cent from 1,149 to 1,290. The increase was attributable to an increase in interns, which constituted the majority (93 per cent) of that group of personnel. The number of interns had increased from 142 in 2002 to 1,057 in 2003 and reached 1,201 in 2004. The change in methodology for the compilation and statistical analysis of data for the report, which had been expanded to meet the requirements of Assembly resolution 57/281 B [YUN 2003, p. 1448] also had an impact on the reported number of interns. Associate experts decreased from 78 to 77 and technical cooperation experts from 14 to 12 from 2003 to 2004. The number of type II gratis personnel totalled 53 in 2003, up from one in 2002. Of the 53 persons, 34 served with OCHA relief operations, 21 were under standby arrangements, and the remaining individual was a hydrology expert, hired for a two-year- period that ended 31 December 2003. The increase in type II gratis personnel was primarily due to the expansion of emergency and humanitarian relief operations during the reporting period.

For the first time, as part of change of methodology, details on the breakdown by department, nationality and gender were included. Women comprised 63 per cent of type I gratis personnel in 2003 and 61 per cent in 2004; for type II gratis personnel, women comprised 19 per cent in 2003 and 26 per cent in 2004.

ACABQ report. In April [A/59/786], ACABQ noted that the Secretary-General's report on gratis personnel (see p. 1517) was the first such report presented on a biennial basis and that comparisons with the Committee's earlier report [YUN 2003, p. 1448] could not be drawn as a result of the change in methodology and new format of indicating information on the nationality, duration of service and functions performed of gratis personnel, as well as a breakdown by gender. It maintained that information concerning gratis personnel was a logical component of the Secretary-General's report on the composition of the Secretariat and requested once again that, details on gratis personnel be integrated into that report on a biennial basis, in the first year of the biennium. The Committee recommended that the Assembly take note of the report.

By decision 59/551 C of 13 April, the Assembly deferred until its resumed sixtieth (2006) session consideration of the Secretary-General's report on gratis personnel and the related ACABQ report.

Study of availability of skills in local labour markets

In response to General Assembly resolution 59/266 [YUN 2004. p. 1418], the Secretary-General submitted an August report [A/60/262] covering the study on the availability of skills in local labour markets, for which international recruitment for the General Service category took place. The study, conducted by OHRM in cooperation with the Department for General Assembly and Conference Management (DGACM), took into account recommendations by OIOS in its report on the subject [YUN 2004, p. 1430]. The report provided background information, including a summary of skills required; described outreach efforts made to attract applications from labour markets; and analysed the results of the recruitment campaign.

For the practical purpose of identifying and testing candidates readily available in the local labour market, the recruitment campaign focused mainly on candidates residing in the New York metropolitan area, regardless of their legal status in the United States. The recruitment campaign, which was launched jointly by DGACM and OHRM in 2005, sought potential candidates by advertising vacancy announcements on the UN website and in English and foreign language newspapers, and by soliciting applications from the language departments of universities, language-training institutes, spouses of staff members and permanent missions to the United Nations.

The study presented projected requirements for editorial and desktop publishing assistants and for building a viable roster of qualified candidates. In response to the recruitment campaign, 1,303 applications were received as at 29 July, which included applicants seeking Arabic (166), Chinese (119), English (519), French (166), Russian (106) and Spanish (227) positions.

The Secretary-General concluded that the findings of the 2005 campaign reconfirmed the availability of a sufficient number of qualified candidates from the local labour market to meet the staffing needs of the English Text Processing Unit. For other languages, with the exception of Russian, the campaign indicated that it was possible to identify some qualified candidates locally, but not in sufficient numbers to meet the needs of DGACM. He invited the Assembly to provide guidance on whether a further study should be undertaken to conclusively determine if recruitment from outside the duty station area was necessary to meet the staffing needs of the Arabic, Chinese, French, Russian and Spanish text processing units. He also indicated that additional resources would be required for that study, as indicated in the OIOS report.

On 23 December, the Assembly deferred consideration of the Secretary-General's report on the study of the availability of skills in local labour markets and the related OIOS report to its resumed sixtieth (2006) session (decision 60/551).

Recruitment, promotion and placement

By decision 59/560 of 13 April, the General Assembly decided that, in view of the fact that printed copies of vacancy announcements were not distributed to delegations, as required by resolutions 59/266 [YUN 2004, p. 1418] and 59/276 [ibid., p. 1383] on the establishment of the Department of Safety and Security, the D-2 posts of Deputy to the Under-Secretary-General, Director of the Division of Regional Operations, Director of the Division of Safety and Security Services and the D-1 post of Executive Officer, should on an exceptional basis, be readvertised for 30 days, while the process continued with respect to recruitment actions already under way. It further decided that with regard to the fourteen P-3 to P-5 posts in the Department, for which vacancy announcements were issued from 3 to 31 March in the Galaxy staff recruitment system, but were not distributed in printed form, the deadline for receipt of applications should be extended by 15 days, also on an exceptional basis.

Suspension of recruitment for posts in the General Service and related categories

Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 59/276 [YUN 2004, p. 1383], the Secretary-General submitted a September report [A/60/363] on the issue of lifting the suspension of recruitment for posts in the General Service and related categories for the remainder of the 2004-2005 biennium. The suspension, authorized by resolution 58/270 [YUN 2003, p. 1399] for the period 2004-2005, had resulted in high vacancy rates and staff turnover between offices and departments, as well as significant difficulties with programme implementation across the Secretariat. While the distribution of vacancies within and among programmes fluctuated over the course of the biennium, there had been a clear increase in the overall vacancy rate for posts subject to the suspension. Vacancies in areas requiring specialized skills had been difficult to fill and, as a short-term measure, increased reliance had been placed on individual contractors and overtime for existing staff. However, those interim measures were not sustainable in the long term. Moreover, the filling of vacant posts through the placement or promotion of existing staff members had created other vacancies.

The suspension had also adversely impacted succession planning, as no new entry-level staff were being recruited. Eligible candidates applying for a vacant post in one office were often selected by another office before the selection process was completed, which resulted in the vacancy being readvertised if no other candidate met the requirements of the position. An inordinate amount of time was spent on dealing with vacancies and training new staff.

The Secretary-General recommended that the Assembly lift the suspension of recruitment as from 1 December 2005, as it would not result in any additional costs for the 2004-2005 biennium or the upcoming one, as the normal General Service vacancy rate of 1.5 per cent had been used in the 2006-2007 proposed programme budget in anticipation of the lifting of the suspension.

ACABQ report. In October [A/60/7/Add.2], ACABQ indicated that it would be premature to approve the proposal to lift the suspension of recruitment as of 1 December 2005, while the comprehensive analysis of the functions performed by the General Service staff were still under way. The Committee recommended that the Secretary-General prepare a plan of action on the way forward, whether or not the freeze was continued past its scheduled termination date of 31 December 2005, and requested OHRM to establish a comprehensive list of specialized functions, based on those provided to the Committee. The Committee believed it was incumbent upon the Secretary-General to propose ways for selectively eliminating General Service posts whenever and wherever possible.

Review of General Service staffing

In view of the difficulties being experienced as a result of the suspension of recruitment posts in the General Service and related categories (see above), the Secretary-General submitted, in an August addendum [A/60/572/Add.4] to his second performance report for the 2004-2005 biennium (see p. 1483), a review of General Service staffing, which focused on determining whether the current ratios of General Service to Professional staff was too high; the factors that affected those ratios either positively or negatively; and the impact of technology on the work of General Service staff.

The Secretary-General stated that comparisons of UN staff ratios with other organizations were inherently problematic and not conclusive as to whether UN ratios were too high, as there was no standard or benchmark for determining what was too high. More importantly, the validity of the assumption that a high ratio of support staff to professional staff was a negative development, was questionable. Some organizations might view a high General Service-to-Professional ratio as effective staffing that resulted in a higher proportion of the work done by lower paid staff.

While internal comparisons indicated that nearly all departments had reduced their General Service-to-Professional ratios and that was perceived as a positive development, the Secretary-General emphasized that a much deeper analysis by function and job category would be needed to know how the reductions were achieved, what impact it had on programmes and products and how support staff reductions affected the work and workloads of professional staff.

With regard to technology, services had improved, response times were faster, products were better and information was more accessible internally and externally. It was reasonable to assume that technology was one factor contributing to the ability to handle more work with fewer staff, but further analysis was required to determine what other factors had an impact. He recommended that priorities for technology investments should be defined with regard to improved services and faster response times, expansion and improvement of products, redeployment or reductions of staff and that they be pursued in a rational order that maximized resources, minimized disruptions and maintained morale.

He concluded that it was tempting to seek standards and formulas to set staffing levels, but because of the dynamic nature of work, jobs, structures and staff programmes, the General Service-to-Professional staff ratio was difficult to apply. Each function would require a different standard that fluctuated with the impact of technology on the distribution of responsibilities and authorities and therefore it was not advisable to set rigid organizational standards or benchmarks for staffing ratios. The goal should be optimal staffing to meet the tasks assigned, irrespective of ratios and proportions. He emphasized that job descriptions and job titles would be updated to reflect the realities of General Service work and to conform to the generic job profiles. Attention would also be paid to the best practices and performance metrics of other UN organizations, non-UN organizations and professional associations for specific occupational categories. He indicated that CEB had already collected data on best practices and that ICSC might play a role in obtaining data from non-UN entities.

Redeployment of posts

In a March note [A/59/753], the Secretary-General presented, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 58/270 [YUN 2003, p. 1399], the guideline principles for the redeployment of posts, on an experimental basis, to meet the evolving needs of the Organization in attaining its mandated programmes and activities. He also reported that a total of 17 posts had been deployed during the 2004-2005 biennium. Of those, five posts were redeployed permanently and another 12 posts were redeployed between sections under temporary administrative arrangements to meet immediate needs. He indicated that no implications of the experiment for human resources had been noted thus far. The Secretariat intended to address the progress and lessons learned from the experiment in the comprehensive report to be considered at the General Assembly's sixtieth (2005) session.

Report of Secretary-General. In a December report [A/60/572/Add.3] on the progress of and lessons learned from the redeployment of posts experiment, the Secretary-General indicated that, of the 17 posts redeployed in the 2004-2005 biennium, five that had been previously reported in March (see above) had been taken into account in preparing the proposed 2006-2007 programme budget. The General Assembly would need to authorize the continuation of the 12 posts redeployed since the preparation of the programme budget, where required, in the 2006-2007 biennium. Taking into account the experience thus far, it was proposed to account for five of the 12 redeployments in setting the initial staffing table for the 2006-2007 biennium. While the remaining seven would not be reflected in the initial staffing table for the biennium, provisions would be made for the continuation of those activities where required in the biennium, including the internal redeployment of authorized staffing for the programmes concerned. In addition to the 17 posts, 14 posts, consisting of six P-3 and eight P-2 posts, had been identified for possible redeployment, but were not redeployed during the 2004-2005 biennium and would remain in the respective budget process.

The Secretary-General noted the difficulties encountered in implementing the exercise, which included attempting to arrive at a definitive list of surplus staffing resources within a particular programme that might be available for redeployment. Measures were also taken to ensure that the redeployment policy did not target programmes with high vacancy rates. To ensure there were no resulting human resources implications, the internal reviews identified possible posts for outward redeployment and focused on current and forecasted vacancies and the rationalization of the staffing allocation.

Concluding that the experience to date was quite limited, the Secretary-General indicated that, should the Assembly decide to extend the authorization for deployment of posts to the 2006-2007 biennium, it would continue to monitor and report in the context of the performance reports. He recommended that the Assembly approve the redeployment of the five posts detailed in section II of the annex to the report and extend the authorization to the 2006-2007 biennium.

ACABQ report. In a December report [A/60/597] on the second performance report on the programme budget for the biennium, ACABQ recommended approval of the Secretary-General's proposal.

Common payroll

The Secretary-General, by a December note [A/60/582], transmitted the JIU report on a common payroll for the UN system organizations. The report addressed significant financial savings that would accrue to UN organizations and to Member States should they agree to establishing a common payroll. It examined payroll delivery in different organizations with a view to detecting major obstacles and developing recommendations for future improvement of payroll systems and processes, which would provide a starting point for a future cost-effective solution for payroll delivery across UN organizations system-wide.

Indicating that the UN system operated approximately 17 different payroll-processing systems, which were heavily influenced by organization-unique interpretation of common rules and regulations that unduly complicated payroll administration and modernization, the report projected $100 million in savings from a common payroll system over ten years. Other benefits included the elimination of redundant systems and processes; internal efficiencies and effectiveness; cost reductions; enabling agencies to focus on their core mission; and enhancing standardization, an opportunity to streamline payroll policies and procedures.

JIU recommended that the General Assembly should endorse the development of a common payroll system as the first step toward a common enterprise resource planning system and request the Secretary-General, as Chairman of CEB, to seek the highest level of commitment from UN system organizations by setting up a governance structure to oversee its development and implementation. He should also establish "leader" organizations or common service entities that could provide payroll services on a fee or financial basis to those with old or antiquated systems; harmonize, simplify and standardize the application across the UN system of common rules and regulations related to payroll and allowances; and report back to the Assembly on the status of implementation at its sixty-second (2006) session.

Multilingualism

On 22 June [meeting 104], the General Assembly, having considered the JIU report on the implementation of multilingualism in the UN system and the Secretary-General's report on multilingualism [YUN 2003, p. 1451] adopted resolution 59/309 [draft: A/59/L.62, & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 156].

Multilingualism

The General Assembly,

Recognizing that the United Nations pursues multilingualism as a means of promoting, protecting and preserving diversity of languages and cultures globally,

17. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its sixty-first session the item entitled "Multilingualism".

Staff rules and regulations

In accordance with staff regulation 12.3 stipulating that the full text of provisional staff rules and amendments should be reported annually to the General Assembly, the Secretary-General, in August [A/60/174], outlined amendments to the 100 and 200 series of Staff Rules, together with the rationale for the changes. Amendments to the 100 series related to annual and sick leave, appeals, the last day for pay purposes and maternity and paternity leave, while the amendments under the 200 series pertained to sick, maternity and paternity leave. The Secretary-General recommended that the Assembly take note of the amendments in the annex to the report, which he proposed to implement as from 1 January 2006.

In a September report [A/60/365], the Secretary-General also proposed amendments to the Staff regulations that were needed to enhance the accountability of UN staff with respect to both financial accountability of staff involved in the management of the Organization's resources and disciplinary accountability of staff members who committed acts of sexual exploitation and sexual abuse. The amendment relating to financial accountability extended the requirement to file financial disclosure statements, currently applicable to staff at the Assistant Secretary-General level and above, to all staff at the D1/L-6 and D2/L-7 levels. The Secretary-General further recommended that the Assembly amend staff regulation 1.2 authorizing him to require disclosure statements from additional staff as he deemed necessary.

In order to implement the recommendation in the report [A/59/710] on eliminating future sexual exploitation and abuse in UN peacekeeping operations (see p. 119), to clarify in the Staff Regulations that sexual exploitation and sexual abuse constituted serious misconduct, the Secretary-General proposed the amendment of staff regulation 10.2.

The aforementioned amendments to the Staff Regulations were approved by the Assembly in resolution 60/238 of 23 December (see p. 1515).

Headquarters agreements

JIU report. In February [A/59/526/Add.1], the Secretary-General transmitted his comments and those of CEB on the JIU report entitled "Review of the Headquarters Agreements concluded by the organizations of the United Nations system: human resources issues affecting staff", which had been submitted to the General Assembly in 2004 [YUN 2004, p. 1433].

Members of CEB welcomed the findings of the report and were broadly in agreement with its conclusions and recommendations. They strongly supported the recommendation that legislative bodies of organizations should bring to the attention of the host country the desirability of adopting more liberal policies with regard to work permits or similar arrangements for spouses of staff members and international organization officials, and that the issue of spousal employment remained one of the key factors still posing problems in attracting and retaining the right calibre of staff. The procedure whereby a spouse should have an offer of employment and then apply for a permit was not favoured by some employers. CEB members preferred either the automatic system, wherein the issuance of a visa to a staff accredits the staff member's spouse with a work permit or employment permits were offered prior to seeking employment.

Members also supported the implementation of all measures that would facilitate the exercise of the privileges and immunities relating to the work permits for children and visas for domestic helpers; the acquisition and rental of real property; retirement in the host country and tax exemption benefits. However, the Secretary-General seriously opposed integration into the social security system on the ground that mandatory contributions for social security schemes under national legislation were considered a form of direct taxation on the United Nations and therefore, contrary to article II, section 7, subparagraph (a) of the Convention on Privileges and Immunities of the United Nations [YUN 1946-47, p. 100].

Members expressed reservations with the recommendation that the Secretary-General should request CEB to coordinate the formulation of a model framework headquarters agreement, or standard articles ensuring uniformity for the approval of the Assembly. They noted that it would be difficult to implement system-wide, and unrealistic to expect that a model framework applicable to all organizations of the UN system would be able to capture all possible scenarios, including headquarters and field conditions and special circumstances. Moreover, various existing host country agreements covered fundamentally different activities and operations. Over time, different organizations had evolved customary regimes responsive to their particular activities, locations and unique circumstances, rendering a "one size fits all" approach inapplicable.

Safety and Security

Report of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 59/211 [YUN 2004, p. 1435], the Secretary-General, in August [A/60/223 & Corr.1], updated information on the safety and security of UN personnel between 1 July 2004 to 30 June 2005. He noted that, since 1992, some 229 United Nations civilian staff members had been killed as a result of malicious acts, including 22 during the reporting period. The most significant threats to staff security continued to be physical attacks, threats, robbery and theft. There were three incidents of hostage-taking and 17 kidnappings, as well as four cases of rape and six sexual assaults. A total of 119 incidents of armed robbery involving significant UN assets were reported, as well as nine violent attacks against UN personnel on humanitarian convoys and operations, compared with seven such incidents during the previous reporting period. There were 123 incidents of harassment of humanitarian convoys, 220 incidents in which checkpoints or roadblocks prohibited access to UN personnel and 108 incidents of harassment, abuse or physical assault that had resulted in significant delays.

The Secretary-General said that, although the United Nations had not suffered another catastrophic attack, such as that which had taken place in Bagdad on 19 August 2003 [YUN 2003, p.1452], significant threats and risks remained. In Afghanistan, UN election activities were deliberately targeted throughout the lead-up to the 2004 elections, and were again at risk. Staff members in Iraq had continued to be subjected to the unrelenting hostility of armed groups opposed to their work. While the levels of organized violence had abated, humanitarian activities in Darfur, the Sudan, continued to be plagued by banditry. The security situation in Lebanon also remained fragile.

The report described the need for a more professional security management system that could respond flexibly, based on continuous analysis, with stronger staffing and a capacity to give to the Organization the technical guidance required to function safely in the face of a heightened global threat. It noted that the aim of the management system, under the leadership of the new Department of Safety and Security, was to enable the safe delivery by the Secretariat, as well as by UN agencies, funds and programmes, of mandated activities in the field. However, concern remained over the ongoing difficulties encountered in a few countries in obtaining permission to import communications equipment. Some host Governments continued to be unwilling to provide timely information in the event of the arrest or detention of locally recruited UN personnel, and very few countries had fully investigated attacks or other threats against international and locally recruited United Nations and associated staff members, or held the perpetrators accountable under international and national law. The increase in hostage-taking and kidnappings during the reporting period was particularly disturbing.

The Secretary-General concluded that, while the number of security incidents involving UN personnel appeared to have risen, that was most likely due to the increased number of staff operating in the field and improved reporting capability within the UN security management system. He urged Member States, local authorities and leaders at all levels to take the necessary action to enable UN staff to safely meet the needs of the world.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December [meeting 63], the General Assembly adopted resolution 60/123 [draft: A/60/L.37] without vote [agenda item 73].

Safety and security of humanitarian personnel and protection of United Nations personnel

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its resolution 46/182 of 19 December 1991 on strengthening of the coordination of humanitarian emergency assistance of the United Nations,

Recalling all relevant resolutions on safety and security of humanitarian personnel and protection of United Nations personnel, including its resolution 59/211 of 20 December 2004, as well as Security Council resolution 1502(2003) of 26 August 2003 and relevant statements by the President of the Council,

Recalling also all Security Council resolutions and presidential statements and reports of the Secretary-General to the Council on the protection of civilians in armed conflict,

Recalling further all relevant provisions of international law, including international humanitarian law and human rights law, as well as all relevant treaties,

Reaffirming the need to promote and ensure respect for the principles and rules of international law, including international humanitarian law,

Recalling that primary responsibility under international law for the security and protection of humanitarian personnel and United Nations and associated personnel lies with the Government hosting a United Nations operation conducted under the Charter of the United Nations or its agreements with relevant organizations,

Urging all parties involved in armed conflicts, in compliance with international humanitarian law, in particular their obligations under the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 and the obligations applicable to them under the Additional Protocols thereto, of 8 June 1977, to ensure the security and protection of all humanitarian personnel and United Nations and associated personnel,

Welcoming the fact that the number of States parties to the Convention on the Safety of United Nations and Associated Personnel, which entered into force on 15 January 1999, has continued to rise, the number now having reached seventy-nine, and mindful of the need to promote universality of the Convention,

Deeply concerned by the dangers and security risks faced by humanitarian personnel and United Nations and associated personnel at the field level, as they operate in increasingly complex contexts, as well as the continuous erosion, in many cases, of respect for the principles and rules of international law, in particular international humanitarian law,

Commending the courage and commitment of those who take part in humanitarian operations, often at great personal risk, especially locally recruited staff,

Expressing profound regret at the deaths of international and national humanitarian personnel and United Nations and associated personnel involved in the provision of humanitarian assistance, and strongly deploring the rising toll of casualties among such personnel in complex humanitarian emergencies, in particular in armed conflicts and in post-conflict situations,

Strongly condemning acts of murder and other forms of violence, rape and sexual assault and all forms of violence committed in particular against women, and intimidation, armed robbery, abduction, hostage-taking, kidnapping, harassment and illegal arrest and detention to which those participating in humanitarian operations are increasingly exposed, as well as attacks on humanitarian convoys and acts of destruction and looting of property,

Expressing concern that the occurrence of attacks and threats against humanitarian personnel and United Nations and associated personnel is a factor that increasingly restricts the provision of assistance and protection to populations in need,

Recalling the inclusion of attacks intentionally directed against personnel involved in a humanitarian assistance or peacekeeping mission in accordance with the Charter as a war crime in the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court, and noting the role that the Court could play in appropriate cases in bringing to justice those responsible for serious violations of international humanitarian law,

Reaffirming the need to ensure adequate levels of safety and security for United Nations personnel and associated humanitarian personnel, which constitutes an underlying duty of the Organization, and mindful of the need to promote and enhance the security consciousness within the organizational culture of the United Nations and a culture of accountability at all levels,

1. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General;

8. Expresses deep concern that, over the past decade, threats and attacks against the safety and security of humanitarian personnel and United Nations and associated personnel have escalated dramatically and that perpetrators of acts of violence seemingly operate with impunity;

9. Strongly condemns all threats and acts of violence against humanitarian personnel and United Nations and associated personnel, affirms the need to hold accountable those responsible for such acts, strongly urges all States to take stronger actions to ensure that any such acts committed on their territory are investigated fully and to ensure that the perpetrators of such acts are brought to justice in accordance with international law and national law, and urges States to end impunity for such acts;

14. Requests the Secretary-General to take the necessary measures to ensure full respect for the human rights, privileges and immunities of United Nations and other personnel carrying out activities in fulfilment of the mandate of a United Nations operation, and also requests the Secretary-General to seek the inclusion, in negotiations of headquarters and other mission agreements concerning United Nations and associated personnel, of the applicable conditions contained in the Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the United Nations, the Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the Specialized Agencies and the Convention on the Safety of United Nations and Associated Personnel;

15. Recommends that the Secretary-General continue to seek the inclusion of, and that host countries include, key provisions of the Convention on the Safety of United Nations and Associated Personnel, among others, those regarding the prevention of attacks against members of the operation, the establishment of such attacks as crimes punishable by law and the prosecution or extradition of offenders, in future as well as, if necessary, in existing status-of-forces, status-of-mission, host country agreements and other related agreements negotiated between the United Nations and those countries, mindful of the importance of the timely conclusion of such agreements, and encourages further efforts in this regard;

16. Welcomes ongoing efforts to promote and enhance the security consciousness within the organizational culture of the United Nations system, and requests the Secretary-General to continue to take the necessary measures in this regard, including by further developing and implementing a unified security management system, as well as by disseminating and ensuring the implementation of the security procedures and regulations and by ensuring accountability at all levels, and also welcomes the creation of the Department of Safety and Security of the Secretariat;

17. Emphasizes the importance of paying special attention to the safety and security of United Nations and associated personnel engaged in United Nations peacekeeping and peacebuilding operations;

18. Also emphasizes the need to pay particular attention to the safety and security of locally recruited humanitarian personnel, who are particularly vulnerable to attacks and who account for the majority of casualties;

19. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to take the necessary measures to ensure that United Nations and other personnel carrying out activities in fulfilment of the mandate of a United Nations operation are properly informed about and operate in conformity with the minimum operating security standards and relevant codes of conduct and are properly informed about the conditions under which they are called upon to operate and the standards that they are required to meet, including those contained in relevant national and international law, and that adequate training in security, human rights law and international humanitarian law is provided so as to enhance their security and effectiveness in accomplishing their functions, and reaffirms the necessity for all other humanitarian organizations to provide their personnel with similar support;

20. Stresses the need to ensure that all United Nations staff members receive adequate security training, including physical and psychological training, as well as training to enhance cultural awareness, prior to their deployment to the field, as well as the need to attach a high priority to stress management training and related counselling services for United Nations staff throughout the system;

21. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on a strengthened and unified security management system for the United Nations;

22. Welcomes the ongoing efforts of the Secretary-General to further enhance the security management system of the United Nations, and in this regard invites the United Nations and other humanitarian organizations to strengthen the analysis of threats to their safety and security in order to minimize security risks and to facilitate informed decisions on the maintenance of an effective presence in the field, inter alia, to fulfil their humanitarian mandate;

23. Stresses that the effective functioning at the country level of security operations requires a unified capacity for policy, standards, coordination, communication, compliance and threat and risk assessment;

24. Recognizes the need to continue efforts to achieve a strengthened and unified security management system for the United Nations, both at the headquarters and the field levels, and requests the United Nations system, as well as Member States, to take all appropriate measures to that end;

25. Requests the Secretary-General, inter alia, through the Inter-Agency Security Management Network, to continue to promote increased cooperation and collaboration among United Nations departments, organizations, funds and programmes and affiliated international organizations, including between their headquarters and field offices, in the planning and implementation of measures aimed at improving staff security, training and awareness, and calls upon all relevant United Nations departments, organizations, funds and programmes and affiliated international organizations to support these efforts;

26. Recognizes the need for continued efforts to enhance coordination and cooperation, both at the headquarters and the field levels, between the United Nations and other humanitarian and non-governmental organizations on matters relating to the safety and security of humanitarian personnel and United Nations and associated personnel, with a view to addressing mutual security concerns in the field;

27. Underlines the need to allocate adequate and predictable resources to the safety and security of United Nations personnel, including through the consolidated appeals process, and encourages all States to contribute to the Trust Fund for Security of Staff Members of the United Nations System;

29. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its sixty-first session a comprehensive and updated report on the safety and security of humanitarian personnel and protection of United Nations personnel and on the implementation of the present resolution.

Malicious acts insurance policy

Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 59/276 [YUN 2004, p. 1383], the Secretary-General submitted an August report [A/60/317 & Corr.1] on coverage of staff by the malicious acts insurance policy, which indicated that coverage of UN system staff under the malicious acts insurance policies was closely comparable system wide and most UN organizations maintained supplemental policies to provide coverage in 10 headquarters countries that were excluded under existing insurance policies. The Organization was looking into the possible expansion of the policy to those countries. Quotations were being sought from insurers and the financial implications for participating organizations of such expansion would be discussed by the CEB High-level Committee on Management.

ACABQ, in its November report [A/60/7/Add.9], recommended that the Assembly take note of the Secretary-General's report as an interim report.

Protection from sexual exploitation and abuse

Report of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 57/306 [YUN 2003, p. 1237], the Secretary-General submitted an April report [A/59/782] containing information on the responses by 47 UN entities to the Secretariat's query regarding investigations into cases of sexual exploitation or sexual abuse. In 2004, 41 entities reported that they had received no reports of sexual exploitation or abuse, and 6 reported the opening of investigations into newly reported cases. A total of 121 allegations were reported, more than double the 53 allegations reported in 2003. As at 31 December 2004, the Department of Peacekeeping Operations reported 105 new allegations, of which 89 were against uniformed personnel and 16 were against civilian personnel. Fifteen allegations involved UN staff and one was related to a civilian. Seven of those allegations were sent to UN Headquarters for disciplinary action, seven were pending investigation and one was classified as unsubstantiated.

Of the two cases reported by UNICEF, one was dismissed due to insufficient evidence and the other was sent to UN Headquarters. WFP reported a case that was pending further investigation. OIOS reported a case, which was closed due to the staff member's resignation. UNHCR reported 10 cases; 6 had been classified as unsubstantiated or closed, and 4 were pending further investigation. The United Nations Volunteers Programme (UNV) reported two cases, one of which was dismissed after a preliminary investigation and the other was pending further investigation. It was reported that of all the allegations, 45 per cent involved sex with minors; 15 per cent, rape or sexual assault; 31 per cent, prostitution with women; and 6 per cent, exploitation and abuse of other forms.

The Secretary-General indicated that, while allegations had doubled since 2003, the Secretariat was aware that the data might still not reflect the true extent of those deplorable incidents. Complaints mechanisms needed to be developed in many remote field locations. Although some UN personnel were currently more willing to come forward with complaints as a result of newly implemented measures to prevent and respond to sexual exploitation and abuse, others were still inhibited by a lack of trust. Furthermore, in cases involving exchange of money or employment for sex, there was little incentive, economic or otherwise, for victims to come forward to report, which resulted in a probable under-reporting of those forms of misconduct. The Secretariat continued to work towards improving reporting measures, including designating focal points to facilitate the receipt of complaints and defining better the reporting procedures to encourage staff members to report allegations of misconduct.

The Secretary-General said the Organization remained committed to changing the organizational culture that permitted sexual abuse and exploitation. He also reiterated his commitment to implementing the recommendations made in the comprehensive strategy to eliminate future sexual exploitation and abuse in UN peacekeeping operations (see p. 119).

Staff College

In accordance with General Assembly resolution 55/207 [YUN 2000, p. 1354], the Secretary-General, by a September note [A/60/328], transmitted the second report of the Director of the United Nations System Staff College, covering the period from 1 July 2003 to 30 June 2005. The report outlined the Staff College's objectives and described its outputs, projects and other activities during the reporting period. Human and financial resources available to the College were also considered in the report.

In the 18 months covered by the report, the College organized and/or participated in 139 learning events. In November 2003, the Board of Governors of the College approved a budget for the biennium and a strategic plan, which focused on four thematic targets: training and continuous learning programmes for UN staff members; strengthening organizational capacities to increase operational effectiveness; raising awareness of management issues and promoting collaboration among UN agencies; and strengthening internal capacity-building systems.

The report concluded that the College had made considerable progress as an entity within the UN family, and had been supported in its work by Italy, the host-country. Additional support was provided by voluntary contributions received from other Member States.

In December, the Second Committee considered the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations System Staff College (see above). On 22 December, the Assembly took note of the Second Committee's report [A/60/494 & Add.2] (decision 60/548).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December [meeting 68], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/60/494/Add.2], adopted resolution 60/214 without vote [agenda item 58*(b)*].

United Nations System Staff College in Turin, Italy

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 54/228 of 22 December 1999, 55/207 of 20 December 2000, 55/258 of 14 June 2001 and 58/224 of 23 December 2003,

Recalling also its resolution 55/278 of 12 July 2001, by which it approved the statute of the United Nations System Staff College,

Reaffirming the role of the Staff College as an institution for system-wide knowledge management, training and continuous learning for the staff of the United Nations system, in particular in the areas of economic and social development, peace and security and internal management,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the note by the Secretary-General and the accompanying report;

2. Welcomes the progress made by the United Nations System Staff College since the entry into force of its statute on 1 January 2002 in pursuing the objectives set forth therein;

3. Calls upon all organizations of the United Nations system to make full and effective use of the facilities of the Staff College;

4. Invites the Staff College to strengthen further its engagement in knowledge-sharing and staff training and learning that can serve to advance the capacity of the United Nations system to contribute to the follow-up to the outcomes of major United Nations conferences and summits, as well as to support the timely and full realization of the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals, with the aim of helping to provide multilateral solutions to problems in the areas of development, peace and collective security and reinforcing system-wide coherence;

5. Encourages the Staff College to continue to provide strategic leadership in order to increase operational effectiveness, promote inter-agency collaboration and strengthen management culture by its own example, including the development of new systems of performance management, flexible and collaborative work structures and cost-effective means of delivering services to clients and beneficiaries;

6. Calls upon relevant institutions of the United Nations, including the United Nations University, the United Nations Institute for Training and Research and the Staff College, to collaborate closely to those ends;

7. Welcomes the financial and other support extended by Member States to the work of the Staff College, and invites the international community to strengthen its support to the College through voluntary contributions, in accordance with article VII of its statute, to enable the College to consolidate its distinctive contribution to fostering a cohesive management culture across the United Nations system that is responsive to the requirements of Member States;

8. Decides that article IV, paragraph 5, of the statute of the Staff College should be amended so that the biennial reports on the activities of the College are submitted to the Economic and Social Council rather than to the General Assembly.

UN Joint Staff Pension Fund

As at 31 December 2005, the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund (UNJSPF) had 93,683 active participants as compared to 88,356 at the end of 2004; the number of periodic payments in awards increased from 53,879 to 55,140 over the year. The breakdown of the periodic benefits in award was 17,992 retirement benefits; 12,392 early retirement benefits; 6,656 deferred retirement benefits; 8,923 widows' and widowers' benefits; 8,120 children's benefits; 1,015 disability benefits; and 42 secondary dependants' benefits. In the course of the biennium, 12,345 lump-sum withdrawal and other settlements were paid.

The Fund was administered by the 33-member United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board (UNJSB), which did not meet in 2005 because of the biennialization of the work of the Fifth Committee. Instead, the Board's Standing Committee met on its behalf (New York, 5-8 July) [A/60/183] and discussed, among other subjects, matters relating to Fund's administration and operation, revised budget estimates for the 2004-2005 biennium; budget estimates for the 2006-2007 biennium; and the authorization for contributions to the Emergency Fund for 2006-2007.

ACABQ report. In November [A/60/7/Add.7], having considered the Standing Committee's report, ACABQ recommended approval of the revised estimates of $89,563,100 for the 2004-2005 biennium and of the proposed budget of $108,262,500 for the Fund's administrative expenses for the 2006-2007 biennium. It also agreed with the Standing Committee's proposal to supplement voluntary contributions to the Emergency Fund by an amount not exceeding $200,000 for the 2006-2007 biennium.

In a 9 December report [A/C.5/60/18] on the administrative and financial implications arising from the report of the UNJSB Standing Committee, the Secretary-General indicated that, should the General Assembly approve the Committee's recommendations, as well as those of ACABQ, the revised overall requirements for the United Nations were estimated at $16,539,800 (at 2006-2007 rates). The cost to the regular budget for the biennium 2006-2007 would amount to $10,287,800, with the balance of $6,252,000 being reimbursed to the United Nations by UNDP, UNFPA and UNICEF, resulting in an additional appropriation requirement of $1,079,000 for the proposed 2006-2007 programme budget.

On 13 December [A/60/7/Add.22 & Corr.1], ACABQ recommended that the Fifth Committee report to the Assembly that an additional appropriation of $1,079,000 would need to be included under section 1 of the proposed 2006-2007 programme budget. The provision would represent a charge against the contingency fund.

The Assembly, in section III of resolution 60/248 of 23 December (see p. 1494) approved expenses—chargeable directly to the Fund totaling $91,722,700 net for the 2006-2007 biennium—and a revised estimate of $89,563,100 net for the 2004-2005 biennium. It also approved an additional amount of $1,079,000 as the United Nations share of the cost of the administrative expenses and authorized UNJSB to supplement the voluntary contributions to the Emergency Fund by an amount not to exceed $200,000 for the 2006-2007 biennium.

Pension Fund investments

The market value of UNJSPF assets as at 31 December 2005 was $31.4 billion, an increase of 7.5 per cent from the previous year. The Fund's investment assets were distributed in equities (61.2 per cent), bonds (28.8 per cent), real-estate related instruments (4 per cent) and short-term holdings (5.5 per cent). The total investment return as at 31 March 2005, which took into account the timing of cash flows for the same period, was 10.4 per cent, representing a "real" or inflation-adjusted return of 7.3 per cent.

The Fund's investment income during the 2004-2005 biennium amounted to $4.4 billion, comprising $1.9 billion in interest, dividends, real estate and related securities and $2.5 billion in net profit on sales of investments. Investment management costs amounted to $44.2 million.

The Fund remained one of the most diversified pension funds in the world, with 49.2 per cent of its assets exposed to currencies other than the United States dollar, which was the Fund's unit of account.

Travel-related matters

By decision 59/559 of 13 April, the General Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's 2004 report [YUN 2004, p. 1441] on standards of accommodation for air travel for the two-year period ended 30 June 2004 and the related ACABQ report [ibid.].

Conditions of travel

By a June note [A/60/78], the Secretary-General transmitted the JIU report entitled "Harmonization of the conditions of travel throughout the UN system", which provided a comprehensive analysis and historical review of the administration of travel in the UN system, including the impact of security measures on the time and conditions of travel. JIU found that, although travel practices were being shared among organizations, resulting in increased harmonization of the conditions of travel throughout the UN system, disparities still existed, such as the class of air travel and the lump-sum option. It proposed action for further improving the harmonization of travel policies and practices.

JIU recommended that the Assembly mandate the Secretary-General to review the criteria used to determine travel class for staff members, with a view to adopting a common policy, in particular the minimum travel time for entitlement to business class. On the use of lump-sum payment amounts for home leave, family visit and education travel, a 75 per cent benchmark figure of the full economy fare was suggested. It also recommended that the lump-sum option should be extended to family visit and education travel and the provisions requiring evidence of travel under the lump-sum option be discontinued. The practice of reporting exceptions to the approved class of travel should also be discontinued. Internal control mechanisms should remain in place and clear criteria established for upgrading travel to first class for reasons of eminency and on medical grounds. The use of alternative and more cost-effective modes of transportation was also emphasized, and the Secretary-General should review the current mileage system, with a view to replacing it by a standard rate to be applied worldwide. Other measures proposed related to the regulation of rental car use; the advance payment of subsistence and/or terminal expenses; increasing the threshold for the granting of stopovers for business and other classes of travel; review of standards of travel and entitlements for members of subsidiary organs of the United Nations and UN system organizations; and the adoption of provisions based on best practices with regard to reverse education travel, travel of breastfeeding mothers, travel of single parents, possibility of choosing an alternative place of home leave, taking the nationality of the spouse into account, and the minimum number of days to be spent in the country of home leave.

In August [A/60/78/Add.1], the Secretary-General transmitted his comments, as well as those of CEB on the JIU report. CEB members regarded the report as relevant and timely, particularly with regard to the ever-increasing need for staff members of UN organizations to undertake travel amid changing conditions in the global airline industry and the heightened awareness of the need to improve safety and security. They supported in general the conclusions contained in the report.

By decision 60/551 of 23 December, the Assembly deferred to its resumed sixtieth (2006) session consideration of JIU report on the harmonization of the conditions of travel in the UN system and the Secretary-General's related note transmitting his comments and those of CEB.

Administration of justice

The General Assembly, at its resumed fifty-ninth (2005) session, had before it previously deferred reports of the Secretary-General on the administration of justice in the Secretariat [YUN 2004, p. 1441]; the role of the Panels on Discrimination and Other Grievances [ibid., p. 1442]; the outcome of the work of the Joint Appeals Board (JAB) during 2002 and 2003 [ibid., p. 1443]; the financial independence of the United Nations Administrative Tribunal (UNAT) from the Office of Legal Affairs [ibid.]; the OIOS report on the management review of the appeals process at the United Nations [ibid., p. 1442]; the UNAT report on its activities [ibid., p. 1443]; and the JIU report on the harmonization of the statutes of UNAT and the International Labour Organization Administrative Tribunal [ibid., p. 1444]. It also considered the Secretary-General's note on compensation for UNAT members [ibid. p. 1413] and the letter from the UNAT President to the Fifth Committee Chairman [ibid., p. 1441].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 13 April [meeting 91], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/59/773], adopted resolution 59/283 without vote [agenda items 108 & 120].

Review of the internal justice system

47. Decides that the Secretary-General shall form a panel of external and independent experts to consider redesigning the system of administration of justice;

48. Also decides that the panel shall be composed of a pre-eminent judge or former judge with administrative law experience, an expert in alternative dispute resolution methods, a leading legal academic in international law, a person with senior management and administrative experience in an international organization and a person with United Nations field experience;

49. Further decides that the terms of reference of the redesign panel shall be as follows:

(a) The redesign panel shall propose a model for a new system for resolving staff grievances in the United Nations that is independent, transparent, effective, efficient and adequately resourced and that ensures managerial accountability; the model should involve guiding principles and procedures that clearly articulate the participation of staff and management within reasonable time frames and time limits;

(b) The redesign panel shall:

(i) Consider the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly;

(ii) Receive and review information from all the relevant stakeholders regarding existing mechanisms for the administration of justice in the Organization;

(iii) Consult with United Nations staff, including individual staff members, the Staff Union and managers, in order to form an opinion as to how and why some aspects of the system function effectively while other aspects do not;

(c) The redesign panel shall, in particular:

(i) Consider alternative systems for resolving staff grievances by considering other models of organizational dispute resolution, while acknowledging the uniqueness of the United Nations system, in particular the immunity of United Nations staff from national laws and thus the lack of recourse to national courts;

(ii) In proposing a model, consider the value of creating an effective system for handling staff complaints that involves alternative forms of dispute resolution by which cases can be settled by mutual consent, such as mediation, conciliation, arbitration and/or an ombudsman;

(iii) Consider the peer review;

(iv) Identify proactive measures such as education and training, that the United Nations can implement to minimize the number of disputes that arise;

(v) Examine the functioning of the Office of the Ombudsman and, if needed, present models to provide services tailored to responding to the needs of the Organization;

(vi) Examine and develop the criteria to be used in the categorization of cases;

(vii) Review the functioning of the United Nations Administrative Tribunal and examine the further harmonization of its statute and that of the International Labour Organization Administrative Tribunal with a view to further professionalizing the United Nations Administrative Tribunal;

(viii) Examine the possibility of an integrated judicial system with a two-layer structure of first and second instance, taking into account existing structures;

(ix) Examine the legal representation of the Secretary-General in the system of administration of justice;

50. Decides that the panel shall start its functions no later than 1 February 2006 and shall submit its findings and recommendations by the end of July 2006;

51. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit the report and recommendations of the panel to the General Assembly as a matter of priority;

52. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit his comments on the recommendations contained in the panel's report, along with the estimate of time and resources needed for their implementation, to the General Assembly at the first part of its resumed sixty-first session;

53. Decides that activities requested above that would give rise to additional resource requirements during the biennium 2004-2005 should be included in the proposed programme budget for the biennium 2006-2007.

Follow-up to resolution 57/307

Management review of the appeals process

In a February report [A/59/706], the Secretary-General, in response to an ACABQ request, provided the cost implications of the recommendations relating to the management review of the appeals process at the United Nations, conducted by OIOS in 2004 [YUN 2004, p. 1442]. For the 2004-2005 biennium, the total cost for addressing and eliminating the backlog in conducting administrative reviews and preparing respondents' replies to the Joint Appeals Board amounted to $462,100, which would be accommodated within existing 2004-2005 resources.

Additional resource requirements for the 2006-2007 biennium amounted to $1,021,600. Of that amount, $57,000 would be accommodated under existing resources, leaving a balance of $964,600 in additional resource requirements. The Secretary-General emphasized that those cost requirements represented the recurring resources needed to keep cases current and within time limits, thereby complying with the new timelines as recommended by OIOS.

ACABQ report. In an interim report [A/59/715], ACABQ indicated that the Secretary-General's report (see above) on the cost implications of the OIOS recommendations did not respond fully to the Committee's request for a clear justification of needs or provide a full exposé of what would be achieved through the provision of additional resources. ACABQ intended to revert to the issue in the context of the proposed 2006-2007 programme budget. Its examination would include the relevant activities of the Office of the Ombudsman, OLA, OHRM, the Office of the Under-Secretary-General for Management and UNAT.

In the meantime, ACABQ recommended that the Secretariat be authorized to eliminate the current backlogs using existing resources. Proposals for the 2006-2007 proposed programme budget should address the Committee's concerns for full justification and information provided on the implementation of the Assembly's requests to establish a clear linkage between the administration of justice and personal responsibility and accountability, and to develop an effective system for recovering financial losses to the Organization due to UNAT judgements caused by management irregularities, wrongful actions or negligence of UN Secretariat officials.

The Assembly took action on the Secretary-General's report and that of ACABQ in section I of resolution 59/283 (see p. 1530).

Joint Appeals Board

In response to resolution 55/258 [YUN 2001, p. 1337], the Secretary-General submitted an April report [A/ 60/72 & Corr.1] on the outcome of the work of the Joint Appeals Board (JAB) in 2004. He stated that 74 appeals and suspension-of-action cases were filed with JAB in New York, Geneva, Vienna and Nairobi in 2004, as compared to 145 cases in the previous year. JAB disposed of 143 cases, compared to 121 in 2003. Regarding disciplinary cases, which were accorded priority, 11 such cases were considered in 2004, compared to 18 the previous year. The Secretary-General accepted fully or partially 87 per cent of unanimous JAB decisions favourable to appellants in 2004 and rejected 12 per cent, compared to 84 per cent acceptances and 17 per cent rejections in 2003.

Administrative Law Unit

Pursuant to a General Assembly request in resolution 59/283 (see p. 1529), the Secretary-General submitted a July report [A/59/883] on the administration of justice in the Secretariat, which considered separating the functions of the Administrative Law Unit to avoid the conflict of interest arising from the same Unit handling the multiple functions of administrative review, appeals, disciplinary matters and advisory services. The Secretary-General analysed the situation, taking into account the following requirements: to ensure the necessary means to collect evidence; to advise both the appellant and the respondent; to ensure the uniform application of administrative decisions; to ensure consultations with OHRM and legal experts; and to relay all necessary information to OHRM. He indicated that the Unit was an integral part of OHRM, acted on behalf of the Administration at all stages of the appeals process and made the Unit's role clear to all parties. If no mutually acceptable solution could be found, the staff member's right to proceed to formal litigation was unimpeded.

With regard to evidence collection, the Secretary-General reported that the combination of responsibilities discharged to the Unit resulted in a significant economy of resources at the stage of establishing the facts and legal issues of a case, far better than if those facts had to be established in two separate offices. Since the Unit represented the respondent, the Panel of Counsel and the appellants, the Secretary-General indicated that no conflict of interest existed in advising both parties. As an integral part of OHRM, the Unit had access to all relevant officials and a variety of internal and efficient means to provide or receive information and could ensure the uniform application of administrative decisions. Furthermore, a new system of communications would have to be implemented should the review functions be given to another office. Beyond the substantive aspects of whether the separation of the functions of the Unit was needed, the Secretary-General also determined that it would not be possible to do so through the redeployment of resources, as proposed by the Assembly.

The Secretary-General concluded that it would not be in interest of the Organization to separate the functions of the Unit. The issues raised would also be reviewed in a systematic manner by the redesigned Panel of Counsel, with a view to preparing a comprehensive solution for ensuring that the Organization had the most effective administration of justice system.

Office of Ombudsman

In September, pursuant to General Assembly resolution 59/283 (see p. 1529), the Secretary-General submitted the first report [A/60/376] on the activities of the Ombudsman, which covered the period from 25 October 2002 to 31 August 2005 and presented statistical information on trends and comments on policies, procedures and practices that had come to the attention of the Ombudsman. Since its inception in 2002, nearly 1,400 staff members had sought the assistance of the Office. A peer review conducted after its first year of operation, concluded that staff members generally had their concerns resolved in a timely manner. Feedback from staff who had used the services of the Office indicated that, in over 70 per cent of the closed cases, staff members were satisfied with the outcome. The most important type of issue raised by staff was promotion or career-related (316 cases), followed by termination of contracts (161), interpersonal conflicts (148), entitlement claims (119), conditions of service (103) and standards of conduct (83). The remaining cases were either found to be outside the terms of reference of the Ombudsman or those which the JAB had already commenced hearing, excluding intervention of the Office.

Challenges and issues identified through the review of cases included, disseminating information on existing rules and practices of the Organization; streamlining the various types of contracts; increasing transparency during the staff selection, recruitment and promotion process; fostering managerial excellence; ensuring training for new recruits; recognizing outstanding performance; strengthening the conflict resolution system; establishing a whistle-blower protection policy; addressing discrimination; reviewing the administration of justice system in the Secretariat; preparing mission personnel for deployment to the field; and addressing disparities of salaries, entitlements or security provisions between locally recruited staff and international staff.

The appointment and the terms of reference of the Office of the Ombudsman were annexed to the report.

Criminal behaviour and disciplinary action

In response to General Assembly resolution 59/287 (see p. 1474), the Secretary-General transmitted an August report [A/60/315] on disciplinary matters and cases of criminal behaviour, covering the period from 1 January 2004 to 30 June 2005, which provided information on the disciplinary and/or legal action taken in cases of established misconduct and/or criminal behaviour. An information circular [ST/IC/2005/51] was issued to inform all staff members of the most common examples of misconduct and criminal behaviour and their disciplinary consequences, including any legal action.

The report provided an overview of administrative machinery in disciplinary matters, describing the rules governing the conduct of staff members, the Secretary-General's authority to impose disciplinary measures for misconduct, due process for pursuing a matter as a disciplinary case, various forms of disciplinary measures that could be imposed, as well as non-disciplinary measures that could be applied. A summary was provided for each case that had led to the imposition of one or more disciplinary measures during the period covered, indicating the nature of the misconduct and measures imposed. Of the 24 cases detailed in the report, one dealt with theft and misappropriation, nine with fraud and misrepresentation, three with assault, six with sexual exploitation and abuse and five with other misconduct. However, not every case brought to the attention of the Secretary-General resulted in disciplinary measures being taken. If an OHRM review revealed that there was insufficient evidence to pursue a matter as a disciplinary one or if the staff member provided a satisfactory explanation in response to the allegations, the case was closed. Cases might also be closed if a staff member retired or separated from the Organization before disciplinary proceedings were concluded, as the Secretary-General had no authority to impose disciplinary action on former staff members. In such cases, a record would be placed in the official status file.

When an investigation showed that criminal activity might have occurred, the Secretary-General might decide to refer those cases to relevant national authorities for action. During the reporting period, the Secretary-General referred 32 such cases to national authorities, including 17 cases against identified individuals and 15 cases in which criminal behaviour was identified, but the individuals responsible were not.

UN Administrative Tribunal

In its annual note to the General Assembly [A/INF/60/5], the United Nations Administrative Tribunal (UNAT) reported in December, through the Secretary-General, that it delivered 59 judgements in 2005, relating to cases brought by staff against the Secretary-General or the executive heads of other UN bodies to resolve disputes involving terms of appointment and other issues. The Tribunal met in plenary in New York on 22 November and held two panel sessions (Geneva, 20 June–22 July and 24 October–23 November).

Chapter IV

Institutional and administrative matters

In 2005, the United Nations addressed administrative and institutional matters in order to ensure the efficient functioning of the Organization. The General Assembly resumed its fifty-ninth session and opened its sixtieth session on 13 September. A High-level plenary meeting was convened from 14 to 16 September to commemorate the sixtieth anniversary of the founding of the Organization. The Assembly granted observer status to the Latin American Integration Association, the Common Fund for Commodities, the Hague Conference on Private International Law and the Ibero-American Conference.

The Security Council held 235 formal meetings to deal with regional conflicts, peacekeeping operations and other issues related to the maintenance of international peace and security. The expansion of its membership was again considered by the Assembly.

In addition to its organizational and substantive sessions, the Economic and Social Council held a special high-level meeting with the Bretton Woods institutions (the World Bank Group and the International Monetary Fund), the World Trade Organization and the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development.

The Committee on Conferences examined requests for changes to the 2005 calendar of conferences and meetings and sought ways of optimizing the use of conference-servicing resources. As part of its reform process, it began using e-Meets, the electronic meetings management system.

The Secretary-General reported on progress in the implementation of the capital master plan for the refurbishment of the UN Headquarters complex in New York. The strategy for executing the project was re-examined and the Secretary-General recommended a phased approach to the renovations. The Secretary-General also reported on the establishment of the United Nations Department of Safety and Security.

Information concerning the representatives of 46 other Member States had been communicated also.

The Committee adopted a resolution accepting the credentials received and recommended a draft resolution to the General Assembly for adoption. On 20 December, the Assembly, by resolution 60/181, approved the Committee's report.

Agenda

During the resumed fifty-ninth (2005) session, the General Assembly, by decision 59/503 B, took a number of actions related to its agenda. It decided to reopen consideration of the item on the strengthening of the coordination of humanitarian and disaster relief assistance of the United Nations, including special economic assistance, in order to consider expeditiously a draft resolution [A/59/L.58]; the item on the election of judges of the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991, and agreed to proceed immediately to its consideration in order to take action on the recommendations of the Secretary-General [A/59/666]; and the sub-item on the appointment of members of the Committee on Contributions, in order to consider expeditiously the report of the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee [A/59/583/Add.1]. On 13 April, the Assembly deferred for future consideration the agenda items on the programme budget for the 2004-2005 biennium, the scale of assessments for the apportionment of the expenses of the United Nations, and the UN common system (decision 59/551 B). On the same date, the Assembly decided to: defer until its sixtieth session consideration of the report of the Office of Internal Oversight Services (OIOS) [A/59/373] on the review of the operations and management of UN libraries (decision 59/557); consider, as a matter of priority at the earliest possible period, but no later than the main part of its sixtieth session, the Secretary-General's report [A/59/397] on the review of the regular programme of technical cooperation and the Development Account (decision 59/558); and consider, as a matter of priority during its sixtieth session, the question of the strengthening of the international civil service (decision 59/561).

In section B of the decision, the Assembly deferred until its sixty-first (2006) session consideration of a series of documents related to the item on human resources management.

By decision 60/508 of 31 October, the Assembly decided that the item "The situation in Central America: progress in fashioning a region of peace, freedom, democracy and development" should remain on its agenda, beginning with the sixty-first (2006) session, for consideration upon notification by a Member State. By decision 60/509 of the same date, the Assembly deferred consideration of the item "Zone of peace and cooperation of the South Atlantic" and the related report of the Secretary-General [A/60/253 & Add.1]; included the item in the agenda of its sixty-first (2006) session; and decided to maintain biennial consideration of it thereafter.

Resolutions and decisions of the General Assembly

By decision 60/510 of 3 November, the Assembly deferred consideration of the agenda item "Implementation of the resolutions of the United Nations" and included it in the provisional agenda of its sixty-first (2006) session.

First, Third, Fifth and Sixth Committees

The General Assembly, on 8 December, noted that the Sixth (Legal) Committee had adopted its provisional programme of work for the sixty-first (2006) session of the Assembly as proposed by the Committee's Bureau (decision 60/513). On the same date, the Assembly approved the proposed programme of work and timetable of the First (Disarmament and International Security) Committee for 2006 (decision 60/521). Security Council

The Security Council held 235 formal meetings in 2005, adopted 71 resolutions and issued 67 presidential statements. It considered 48 agenda items (see APPENDIX IV). In a September note [A/60/352], the Secretary-General, in accordance with Article 12, paragraph 2 of the Charter of the United Nations and with the consent of the Council, notified the General Assembly of 61 matters relative to the maintenance of international peace and security that the Council had discussed since his previous annual notification [YUN 2004, p. 1448]. The Secretary-General also listed 81 matters that the Council had not discussed since then. The Assembly, on 11 November, took note of the Secretary-General's note (decision 60/512).

Also on 11 November, the Assembly took note of the Council's report for the period 1 August 2004 to 31 July 2005 [A/60/2 & Corr.1] (decision 60/511).

Membership

The General Assembly continued to examine the question of expanding the Security Council's membership. It considered the report of the Open-ended Working Group on the Question of Equitable Representation on and Increase in the Membership of the Security Council and Other Matters related to the Security Council [A/59/47]. The Assembly took action with regard to the report in decision 59/566 of 12 September (see p. 1480).

Economic and Social Council

The Economic and Social Council held its organizational session for 2005 on 19 January, 4 February, 1 and 31 March; a resumed organizational session on 27 and 28 April and 9 June; and a special high-level meeting with the Bretton Woods institutions (the World Bank Group and the International Monetary Fund), the World Trade Organization (WTO) and the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) on 18 April, all in New York. It held its substantive session from 29 June to 27 July and resumed substantive session on 21 October, in New York. The work of the Council in 2005 was covered in its report to the General Assembly [A/60/3].

On 19 January and 31 March, the Council elected its Bureau (a President and four Vice-Presidents) for 2005 (see APPENDIX III) and adopted the agenda of its organizational session [E/2005/2 & Corr.1 & Add.1 & Corr.1].

On 4 February, the Council approved the change in the dates of its 2005 substantive session from 4-29 July to 29 June–27 July (decision 2005/202), adopted the provisional agenda (decision 2005/203) and decided on the working arrangements for that session (decision 2005/210). On 29 June, it adopted the agenda [E/2005/100] and approved the proposed programme of work of that session [E/2005/L.9]. At the same meeting, it approved the requests for hearings from non-governmental organizations (NGOs) [E/2005/76] (decision 2005/220).

Sessions and segments

During 2005, the Economic and Social Council adopted 55 resolutions and 116 decisions. By decision 2005/210 of 1 March, the Council decided that its high-level segment would be held from 29 June to 1 July; the coordination segment from 5 to 7 July; the operational activities segment from 8 to 12 July; the humanitarian affairs segment from 13 to 18 July; the general segment from 18 to 25 July; and to conclude its work on 26 and 27 July. By decision 2005/211 of the same date, the Council decided that the special high-level meeting with the Bretton Woods institutions, WTO and UNCTAD would be held in New York on 18 April.

On 9 June, the Council deferred until the coordination segment of its 2005 substantive session consideration of the multi-year work programme for that segment (decision 2005/218).

2005 and 2006 sessions

On 4 February (decision 2005/205), the Council decided that the work of its 2005 operational activities segment would be devoted to the progress on and implementation of General Assembly resolution 59/250 [YUN 2004, p. 868] on the triennial comprehensive policy review of operational activities for development of the UN system. On the same date, it decided that the theme for the regional cooperation item at its 2005 substantive session would be "Achievement of the internationally agreed development goals, including those contained in the United Nations Millennium Declaration: a regional perspective" (decision 2005/206). On 31 March, it decided that the theme for the 2005 humanitarian affairs segment would be "Strengthening of the coordination of United Nations humanitarian assistance, including capacity, as well as organizational aspects", and that it would also convene a panel on the theme "Lessons learned from the recent earthquake/tsunami Indian Ocean disaster" (decision 2005/212). On 6 July, the Council adopted as its theme for the coordination segment of its 2006 substantive session "Sustained economic growth for social development, including the eradication of poverty and hunger". It decided that the establishment and implementation of a multi-year work programme for the segment would be guided by considerations set out in the decision, and to continue consultations on such a programme, with a view to finalizing it before the beginning of the 2006 substantive session (decision 2005/221).

On 27 July, the Council, by decision 2005/300, deferred until a later date consideration of the theme for its 2006 high-level segment. By decision 2005/313 of 21 October, the Council adopted the following theme for that segment: "Creating an environment at the national and international levels conducive to generating full and productive employment and decent work for all, and its impact on sustainable development".

Work programme

On 4 February, the Economic and Social Council took note of the list of questions for inclusion in the programme of work of the Council for 2006 [E/2005/1], as orally revised (decision 2005/204).

Coordination, monitoring and cooperation

Institutional mechanisms

CEB activities

According to its annual overview report [E/2006/66], the work of the United Nations System Chief Executives Board for Coordination (CEB) was focused on the preparations for the 2005 World Summit (see p. 47) and the follow-up to its outcome (see p. 48). Those efforts culminated in the publication of the CEB report One United Nations: Catalyst for Progress and Change—How the Millennium Declaration is Changing the Way the United Nations System Works, which, in reviewing progress in implementing the Millennium Declaration, also charted the way forward for the UN system. CEB, through its High-level Committee on Programmes (HLCP) and High-level Committee on Management (HLCM), also addressed the cross-cutting issues of gender mainstreaming and knowledge management. In the programme area, priority issues for inter-agency attention included employment, migration and system support to the New Partnership for Africa's Development (NEPAD), as well as follow-up to the World Summit on the Information Society. In the area of management and administration, efforts focused on: ensuring the safety and security of UN system personnel; promoting transparency and accountability as principles of good governance; improving the use of information and communication technologies in management and operations; enhancing financial and human resources management; and coordinating the UN system response to the threat of avian influenza.

CEB held two regular sessions in 2005: the first in Mont Pèlerin, Switzerland (9 April) [CEB/2005/1] and the second in New York (28 October) [CEB/2005/2]. Its principal subsidiary bodies met as follows: HLCM, ninth (Geneva, 4-5 April) [CEB/2005/3] and tenth (New York, 10-11 October) [CEB/2005/5] sessions; HLCP, ninth (Rome, 23-25 February) [CEB/2005/4] and tenth (Frascati, Italy, 6-8 October) [CEB/2005/7] sessions. HLCP also held its second retreat (Manhasset, United States, 19-21 July) [CEB/2005/6] to take stock of its accomplishments and draw conclusions to help guide its future orientation and work programme.

Report for 2004

The Committee for Programme and Coordination (CPC) [A/60/16 & Corr.1] considered CEB's annual overview report for 2004/2005 [YUN 2004, p. 1449]. It requested CEB to ensure that effective and coordinated support for NEPAD remained a UN system priority, and to update information on further efforts in that regard in its 2005/2006 overview report. CPC underlined the importance of effective coordination of system-wide efforts against hunger and recommended that CEB include in its 2005/2006 overview report information on the obstacles, problems and needs encountered by the inter-agency mechanisms dealing with the problem. It also recommended that the transfer of assets of illicit origin and their return to the countries of origin, as endorsed by the General Assembly in resolution 59/242 [YUN 2004, p. 1121], be added to the list of specific areas identified for joint work in the report. CEB recommended that the Assembly encourage the Secretary-General to improve the presentation of his report on the budgetary and financial situation of UN system organizations by providing information on all contributions, including core and non-core funding, as well as a clear definition of regular and voluntary funding. It also recommended that the Assembly review the inter-organizational mobility accord at its sixty-first (2006) session under the agenda item on human resources management.

On 27 July, the Economic and Social Council took note of CEB's annual overview report for 2004/2005 (decision 2005/225).

Programme coordination

CPC held an organizational meeting on 11 May and its forty-fifth session from 6 June to 1 July, all in New York [A/60/16 & Corr.1].

CPC dealt with questions related to programme planning and the proposed programme budget for the 2006-2007 biennium. It considered OIOS reports on linkages between headquarters and field activities: a review of best practices for poverty eradication in the framework of the Millennium Declaration; the in-depth evaluation of the United Nations Human Settlements Programme; and two triennial reviews of the implementation of CPC recommendations on the in-depth evaluations of legal affairs and General Assembly and Economic and Social Council support and coordination. In addition to its review of CEB's annual overview report for 2004/2005 (see above), CPC considered the Secretary-General's reports on the progress and impact assessment of management improvement measures and UN system support for NEPAD, and a conference room paper on proposals for future thematic evaluations by OIOS.

On 19 July, the Council took note of CPC's report (decision 2005/225).

Joint Inspection Unit

The Joint Inspection Unit (JIU), in its annual report to the General Assembly covering the period 1 January to 31 December 2004 [A/60/34], described its process of reform, which began in 2003 [YUN 2003, p. 1388]. It discussed its 2005 work plan and its reports issued in 2004, the follow-up system for tracking the status of JIU recommendations and its relationship with other oversight bodies.

In section A of decision 60/551 of 23 December, the Assembly deferred consideration of JIU's report until its resumed sixtieth (2006) session. In section XVI of resolution 60/248 (see p. 1496), it approved a gross budget for JIU of $10,511,100 for the 2006-2007 biennium.

Other coordination matters

Follow-up to international conferences

Pursuant to Economic and Social Council resolution 2004/44 [YUN 2004, p. 1451], the Secretary-General submitted, in May [E/2005/61], an updated report on the role of the Council in the integrated and coordinated implementation of the outcomes of and follow-up to major UN conferences and summits. The report was submitted to the Assembly in August [A/60/275].

The review of the work methods of the Assembly and its Second and Third Committees was ongoing and further work would be needed to complete the consultations successfully. With regard to the Council and its subsidiary machinery, progress had been made in several areas, including strengthening thematic unity across the different segments of the Council's substantive session, reviewing the working methods of the functional commissions, and strengthening the role of the UN regional commissions in conference follow-up. Additional efforts were required to enhance cooperation among functional commissions and strengthen cooperation between the regional commissions and UN funds and programmes. The report contained recommendations for strengthening: the role of the Assembly and its Second and Third Committees in the coordinated and integrated follow-up to the comprehensive development agenda; the role of the Council and its subsidiary machinery in the implementation of Assembly resolutions 50/227, 52/12 B and 57/270 B; and the Council's cooperation with the funds and programmes, specialized agencies and inter-agency bodies, and international financial and trade institutions. The report also described efforts to comply with specific Council mandates related to recent international conferences and to enhance the Council's cooperation with, and the role of, civil society and the private sector.

Participation in UN work

Intergovernmental organizations

The Economic and Social Council, on 28 April (decision 2005/215) and 9 June (decision 2005/219), respectively, included in the agenda of its 2005 substantive session the requests of the Global Water Partnership [E/2005/49] and the West African Economic and Monetary Union [E/2005/64] to participate as observers in the Council's work. The Council granted observer status to both organizations on 21 July (decision 2005/233).

Non-governmental organizations

Committee on NGOs

The Committee on Non-Governmental Organizations held its 2005 regular session (5-14 January) [E/2005/32 & Corr.1 (Part I)] and its resumed 2005 session (New York, 5-20 May) [E/2005/32 (Part II)], both in New York. In January, the Committee considered 144 applications for consultative status with the Council, including those deferred from its 1998-2004 sessions. It recommended 87 NGOs for consultative status and deferred consideration of 52 applications. The Committee closed its considerations of two applications and recommended the reclassification of one NGO from special to general consultative status. It took note of 72 quadrennial reports and deferred consideration of 12 others.

The Committee decided that an organization that resulted from the merger of organizations with consultative status with the Council should retain that status, and that the retained status should be the highest category given to the organizations that were party to the merger. It recommended general consultative status to two such NGOs and deferred consideration of three merged NGOs that did not have consultative status.

The Committee recommended four draft decisions on matters calling for action by the Council, including a decision related to the reinstatement of consultative status of an NGO (see below). By the third draft decision, the two days not used by the Committee at its regular session would be added to its resumed session in May (see below); the Council adopted the draft decision on 4 February (decision 2005/209).

The Committee reviewed its working methods relating to the implementation of Council resolution 1996/31 [YUN 1996, p. 1360], including the process of accreditation of NGO representatives. It considered the criteria for the reinstatement by the Council of consultative status to the Asociación para la Paz Continental (ASOPAZCO), an NGO suspended by the Council in 2000. The Committee recommended a draft decision for action by the Council, requesting ASOPAZCO to submit an updated application to be recognized as a consultative entity. The Council adopted the draft decision on 4 February (decision 2005/208).

Also on 4 February, the Council granted consultative status to 75 NGOs and placed 12 others on the Roster; reclassified one NGO from special to general consultative status; and noted that the Committee had taken note of 72 quadrennial reports and closed consideration of requests by two NGOs for consultative status (decision 2005/207).

At its resumed session, the Committee considered 148 applications for consultative status, including applications deferred from previous sessions. It recommended 105 NGOs for consultative status, deferred consideration of 40 applications, and closed consideration of three others. It recommended the reclassification of one NGO from special to general consultative status and one from roster to special consultative status. It deferred reclassification of one NGO. The Committee took note of 44 quadrennial reports and deferred consideration of 14 others.

The Committee adopted one decision for the Council's attention, and recommended five draft decisions for action by the Council. The Committee requested the Secretary-General to examine the causes for the persistent delays in the availability of documentation to the Committee and to report on it in 2006. On 21 July, the Council took note of the decision and requested the Secretary-General to take the actions requested by the Committee (decision 2005/240).

The Committee reviewed its working methods relating to the implementation of Council resolutions 1996/31, including the process of NGO accreditation, and decision 1995/304 [YUN 1995, p. 1445]. It considered implementation of Council decision 2001/295 [YUN 2001, p. 1377] relating to requests by those NGOs referred to in Council decision 1993/220 [YUN 1993, p. 668] to expand participation in other fields of the Council's work; and decision 2004/212 [YUN 2004, p. 831] concerning the participation of accredited NGOs in the 2002 World Summit on Sustainable Development [YUN 2002, p. 821] in future sessions of the Commission on Sustainable Development. The Committee also considered the strengthening of the NGO section of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs.

Following a proposal by Cuba, the Committee, by a role-call vote of 8 to 4, with 6 abstentions, recommended a draft decision for action by the Council to withdraw ASOPAZCO's consultative status. On 21 July, the Council adopted the draft decision (decision 2005/239).

The Committee considered a complaint by China against A Woman's Voice International; China proposed that the consultative status of that NGO be suspended for one year. A proposal by the United States to suspend debate on the issue was rejected by a roll-call vote of 10 to 2, with 5 abstentions. By a further roll-call vote of 15 to 1, with 1 abstention, the Committee recommended a draft decision for action by the Council to suspend the consultative status of A Woman's Voice International for one year. On 21 July, the Council adopted the draft decision (decision 2005/238).

Also on 21 July, the Council granted consultative status to 94 NGOs and placed 11 others on the Roster; reclassified one NGO from roster to general consultative status and another from roster to special consultative status; and noted that the Committee had taken note of 44 quadrennial reports and closed the case of complaints submitted by Member States against two NGOs (decision 2005/237). On the same day, the Council took note of the report of the Committee on its 2005 session (decision 2005/242). It decided that the Committee's 2006 regular session would be held from 19 to 27 January 2006 and its resumed session from 10 to 19 May 2006, and approved the provisional agenda for the Committee's 2006 session (decision 2005/241).

On 13 January, the Committee took note of the closure of the following NGOs that had informed the Secretariat of the termination of their activities: the Committee for European Security and Cooperation, International Family Health, and Oceans Institute of Canada.

Requests for hearing

On 13 May, the Committee on NGOs approved 27 requests from NGOs to be heard during the Council's high-level segment [E/2005/76].

Conferences and meetings

Committee on Conferences

The Committee on Conferences held an organizational meeting on 23 March and its substantive session on 19 and 27 September [A/60/32]. It examined requests for changes to the approved calendar of conferences for 2005 [A/AC.172/2005/2] and reviewed the draft biennial calender of conferences and meetings for 2006-2007 [A/AC.172/2005/CRP.2]. The Committee recommended that, pending confirmation by the Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations of the possible shortening of its session, the draft calendar should indicate a four-week duration for it. It considered the utilization of conference-servicing resources and facilities; requests for exceptions to the Assembly's limitation on meetings during Assembly sessions [YUN 1985, p. 1256]; improving the performance of the UN Department for General Assembly and Conference Management; documentation- and publication-related matters; translation and interpretation related matters; information technology; and other matters. (The Committee's deliberations and recommendations on those matters are detailed in the sections below.)

The Committee approved requests from several bodies for changes to the approved calendar for 2005.

On 19 July, the Economic and Social Council approved the calendar of conferences and meetings for 2006 and 2007 in the economic, social and related fields (decision 2005/226).

On 23 December, the Assembly deferred consideration of the Committee's report until its resumed sixtieth (2006) session (decision 60/551).

the official holidays of Eid al-Fitr and Eid al-Adha, and requests all intergovernmental bodies to observe those decisions when planning their meetings;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure that any modification to the calendar of conferences and meetings is implemented strictly in accordance with the mandate of the Committee on Conferences and other relevant resolutions of the General Assembly;

5. Decides to continue consideration of the item during the first part of its resumed sixtieth session;

6. Also decides to resume consideration of the reports of the Secretary-General on the pattern of conferences and on reform of the Department for General Assembly and Conference Management in order to take action on them.

Reform of the Department for General Assembly and Conference Management

In response to General Assembly resolution 59/265 [YUN 2004, p. 1463], the Secretary-General submitted a July report [A/60/112] on measures taken to reform the Department of General Assembly and Conference Management (DGACM) in the areas of conference management and integrated global management. Annexed to the report was a table containing compliance statistics on the submission of pre-session documents for 2004 and 2005.

The 2006-2007 draft calendar of conferences and meetings for New York-based bodies was generated by e-Meets, the electronic meetings management system, on an experimental basis. To facilitate the global planning of all sessions of calendar bodies, linkage between e-Meets and APG, a software for interpreter assignment, was completed in New York. At the United Nations Office at Geneva (UNOG), the first phase of e-Meets was implemented in February for meetings planning, and the second phase for the electronic processing of requests in June. At the United Nations Office at Vienna (UNOV), e-Meets was used for Vienna-based bodies meeting at headquarters; the system had been in operation at the United Nations Office at Nairobi (UNON) since 2003. APG was fully operational at all four duty stations.

In view of the lack of significant progress in 2004 in both the timely submission and adherence to page limits of documentation, heads of author departments and offices were reminded of the need to establish a transparent accountability system within the Secretariat. DGACM introduced vertical synchronization, which helped to match the capacity of each stage of downstream processing to its expected output. It also initiated horizontal synchronization, which ensured a balance of the processing capacity across languages in the simultaneous distribution of documents in the six official UN languages. The first pilot synchronization project involved the Central Planning and Coordination Service and the Translation Services. To increase transparency, DGACM was developing analytical instruments to identify more effectively the causes and impact of the late submission of documents. With the help of OIOS and the participation of author departments, DGACM also began a pilot self-evaluation project on the effectiveness of the slotting system for document forecasting and planning.

DGACM was establishing new reporting standards to provide greater transparency in documentation services to the intergovernmental bodies. Beginning with the 2005 substantive session of the Economic and Social Council and the sixtieth (2005) session of the General Assembly, DGACM would provide detailed advanced information on the status of pre-session documentation to the relevant intergovernmental bodies and author departments.

The first stage of DGACM's global management project had been completed. The use of common statistical indicators allowed for meaningful comparisons in the delivery of conference services by the four duty stations. A consolidated budget for the 2006-2007 biennium was prepared, which, for the first time, covered DGACM and conference servicing entities at UNOG, UNOV and UNON. DGACM proceeded with the second stage of the project, which aimed at the coordinating conference service operations at the four duty stations and at better utilizing allocated resources in the consolidated results-based budget. As recommended by OIOS in 2004 [YUN 2004, p. 1468], four task teams were established in January, on meeting servicing, examinations and training and documentation. DGACM was compiling a compendium of conference servicing policies, practices and procedures based in order to standardize them across duty stations, with a view to promoting comparability and strengthening planning and coordination. While the two-year global management project focusing on norm-setting would be completed by the end of the year, a long implementation process would continue to evolve in response to new challenges.

The Secretary-General said that DGACM intended to further refine the global management of the calendar and synchronize capacity with expected output, with greater focus on vertical synchronization; identify areas for further improvement following the completion of the self-evaluation project; analyse global information technology systems; and finalize the manual of policies, practices and procedures, and put in place mechanisms to ensure its effective implementation across duty stations.

The Committee on Conferences [A/60/32] supported DGACM's reform process but advised that, the Department should comply fully with relevant Assembly resolutions.

ACABQ report. In October [A/60/433], the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ), having considered the Secretary-General's reports on DGACM reform (see above) and the pattern of conferences (see below), noted the continuing problems cited in those reports concerning the adherence to page limits and submission deadlines under the document slotting system. ACABQ was informed that of the 923 slotted documents in 2004, 236 (25.6 per cent) exceeded the page limit and 424 (45.9 per cent) were submitted late. In ACABQ's opinion, such findings raised the question of the accountability of author departments. ACABQ reiterated that, in order to function effectively, flexibility had to be built into the slotting system. It noted the proactive approach taken by DGACM to deal with compliance with deadlines and page limits, particularly its efforts to help enhance the drafting skills of Secretariat staff responsible for report preparation, and encouraged DGACM to continue to seek such creative solutions.

On 23 December, the Assembly deferred consideration of the Secretary-General's report on DGACM reform and ACABQ's report until its resumed sixtieth (2006) session (decision 60/551).

Use of conference services

The Committee on Conferences [A/60/32] considered the Secretary-General's July report on the pattern of conferences [A/60/93 & Corr.1], in which he discussed utilization of conference-servicing resources and facilities, documentation and publication, translation and interpretation, and information technology. The report also provided meeting statistics of a sample of UN bodies, statistics on conference services for meetings of regional and other groupings of Member States that met at the four duty stations from 1 May 2004 to 30 April 2005, and requests for meetings during the General Assembly's sixtieth (2005) session. The overall utilization factor in 2004 at the four duty stations was 83 per cent, six percentage points higher than in 2003 and exceeding the benchmark of 80 per cent for the first time since 2000. Both cancellations and time lost owing to late starting or early ending had been reduced markedly.

The Committee Chairman reported on his consultations with the bodies that had consistently utilized less than the applicable benchmark figure of their allocated resources for the previous three sessions. He recommended that consultations with those bodies be conducted on a more regular basis and that they be informed weekly of their meetings statistics. The Committee agreed that users should be encouraged to make more efficient use of conferences facilities, and the primary consideration for all users should be to ensure the best use of UN resources system-wide.

In October [A/60/433], ACABQ stated that it continued to be concerned that the methodology used for calculating the utilization factor had not changed significantly since 1993 and did not take into account the specific nature of work of the various bodies that were studied. It continued to believe that a more qualitative analysis was required and that the methodology should be revisited, with a view to developing a more results-based approach.

By decision 60/551 of 23 December, the Assembly deferred until its resumed sixtieth (2006) session consideration of the Secretary-General's report.

Use of regional conference facilities

Nairobi

The Committee on Conferences [A/60/32] was informed that, as a result of vigorous marketing efforts, the United Nations Office at Nairobi (UNON) had been successful in attracting more meetings to its facilities. The utilization rate had increased by 28 per cent during the 2003/2004 period. Charges for conference services were reduced through streamlining, efficiency gains and increased client orientation. The Division of Conference Services intensified its efforts to become a major provider of conference services in the region.

Addis Ababa

The Secretary-General, in his July report on the pattern of conferences [A/60/93 & Corr.1], said that a notable increase in the level of activities at the conference centre at the Economic Commission for Africa (ECA) (Addis Ababa, Ethiopia) had been recorded in the last two years, with about 500 events hosted in 2004 as compared with 446 events in 2003. However, security considerations led to tighter control of access to and restrictions on the use of UN premises for commercial activities, thus limiting the potential to expand the use of the centre.

The Committee on Conferences [A/60/32] expressed concern about the impact of the security restrictions imposed on the conference centre. It requested information on the extent to which the application of headquarters minimum operating security standards had affected conference services at ECA and other duty stations.

Interpretation for regional and other groupings

In July [A/60/93 & Corr.1], the Secretary-General reported on the provision of interpretation services to meetings of regional and other major groupings of Member States for the period 1 May 2004 to 30 April 2005. The Committee on Conferences [A/60/32] noted that there had been a 29 per cent increase in the number of requests by such groupings for meetings held without interpretation, and a 21 per cent increase in the overall number of meetings requested by those groups. The percentage of meetings provided with interpretation during the reporting period decreased, in relative terms, to 85 per cent from 90 per cent during the previous period. In absolute terms, the total number of meetings also decreased. The introduction of the e-Meets electronic meetings management system as a tool for requesting conferences had brought about an improvement in the quality of services. However, there was little remaining capacity for accommodating additional meetings. The Committee expressed concern about the lack of capacity to provide for meetings of regional and other major groupings of Member States during peak periods.

Access of persons with disabilities to conferences services

In a 4 October letter to the General Assembly President [A/C.5/60/9], the Chairman of the Committee on Conferences said that the Committee had considered, at its 2005 substantive session [A/60/32] (see p. 1545), a letter from the Chairman of the Ad Hoc Committee on a Comprehensive and Integral International Convention on the Protection and Promotion of the Rights and Dignity of Persons with Disabilities, requesting assistance in ensuring that delegates with disabilities could participate meaningfully, and on an equal basis, with others in the work of the Ad Hoc Committee. The Committee on Conferences was addressed by the Secretary of the Ad Hoc Committee, who stated that the most urgent need was for official documentation relating to the work of the Ad Hoc Committee to be made available in both electronic format and in Braille. The Committee urged the Secretariat to continue to ensure that the special requirements of the Ad Hoc Committee were taken into account in conference room scheduling and to explore ways of providing the required documentation in electronic format and in Braille. It suggested that the Assembly consider those issues on a priority basis, as well as the larger issue of the access of persons with disabilities to conference services.

By decision 60/551 of 23 December, the Assembly deferred consideration of the letter until its resumed sixtieth (2006) session.

Construction of conference facilities

Additional conference rooms at Headquarters

By decision 59/551 B of 13 April, the General Assembly deferred for future consideration the Secretary-General's 2004 report [YUN 2004, p. 1469] on the plans for three additional conference rooms, to be created as part of the Capital Master Plan (see p. 1553), and viable solutions for allowing natural light into the rooms. By decision 59/551 D of 12 September, the Assembly deferred consideration of the report until its sixtieth (2005) session, and by decision 60/551, it deferred consideration of the report until its resumed sixtieth (2006) session.

Documentation

In response to General Assembly resolutions 58/270 [YUN 2003, p. 1399] and 59/276 [YUN 2004, p. 1476], the Secretary-General, in his July report on the pattern of conferences [A/60/93 & Corr.1], discussed issues related to documentation. Surveys of universities, depository libraries and other institutions, conducted in 2004 by the Dag Hammarskjöld Library, showed hesitancy on the part of institutions to abandon printed documentation to any degree. Although many of the institutions cited limitations in their technological capacity to provide customers with online access to documentation, a few clients were beginning to provide such access, and that trend was expected to continue.

DGACM set up a database to monitor decisions on policy issues, as well as individual cases on control and limitation of documentation, and explored ways to enhance the drafting skills of staff members involved in preparing reports. The Department of Public Information (DPI) continued the simultaneous distribution of documents in all official languages and the posting of parliamentary documentation on the Official Document System (ODS) and the UN website.

In response to resolution 59/265 [YUN 2004, p. 1463], the Secretary-General reported on options for improving the delivery of summary records, including those proposed in 2004 [ibid., p. 1467]. DGACM designed a pilot project to implement, for 2005, the option of concentrating précis-writing in the English Translation Service, which was expected to allow for shorter précis-writing times and records, as well as better planning of the translation capacity in other services involved in précis-writing during Assembly sessions. Under the option on setting a time frame for publication of summary records, DGACM conducted a pilot project aimed at translating the summary records of the main part of the Assembly's fifty-ninth (2004) session during the first quarter of 2005, with a deadline of 31 March for the simultaneous issuance of all records in all languages. The project was completed within the deadline. Experienced revisers conducted refresher courses on précis-writing under the option of shortening summary records. The response from bodies contacted by DGACM to indicate their willingness to review their entitlements to summary records, under the option of reducing the number of entitled bodies, was not encouraging, and further efforts were being made in that regard. Due to mixed reviews given by Member States to the option of replacing hard copies of summary records with digital recordings or electronic versions, that option was not explored further.

The Committee on Conferences [A/60/32] stressed that the timely issuance of documents was of fundamental importance to the work of intergovernmental bodies. Despite DGACM's efforts to meet mandated deadlines, the situation was not ideal. The problem, which appeared to lie in the late submission of documents by author departments, was being addressed by the interdepartmental task force on documentation, chaired by the Assistant Secretary-General for General Assembly and Conference Management. The Committee emphasized that strict adherence to page limits should not impede the provision of adequate information to Member States to enable them to make informed decisions. Similarly, the trend towards combining documents, while useful, could be taken too far. The Committee approved of the provision of training courses to enhance the drafting skills of staff members involved in preparing reports and welcomed the significant improvement in the timeliness of the issuance of summary records.

Workload standards

The Secretary-General, in his July report on the pattern of conferences [A/60/93 & Corr.1], said that a DGACM Task Force set up to review workload standards and performance measurement [YUN 2004, p. 1463] continued its work. The Task Force, which conducted a study in 2004 [ibid., p. 1467], found that the chief benefits of information technology (IT) use were enhanced consistency and accuracy of translation and interpretation. Productivity gains in one area were offset by changes in working methods. The Task Force found no justification for any upward revisions of the existing workload standards at the current stage. Those standards should be supplemented by management data along the lines of the "balanced scorecard" used in public and private institutions, so as to provide a broader picture of DGACM performance from a full-system perspective.

The Committee on Conferences [A/60/32] considered the section of the Secretary-General's report concerning workload standards, as well as a non-paper, which contained a proposed methodology for evaluating the performance of conference services and information on IT tools and their impact on efficiency. The non-paper indicated that the matter required further elaboration.

In October [A/60/433], ACABQ took note of the Task Force findings and stated that the work of the Task Force should be further elaborated. The "balanced scorecard" approach should be expanded and a report submitted to the Assembly.

Translation and interpretation matters

Recruitment in language services

The Secretary-General reported in July [A/60/93 & Corr.1] that a demographic transition in the translation services at Headquarters continued to result in a high vacancy rate. A large number of retirements and the resulting influx of new staff were placing a heavy burden on training capacity and would have an impact on overall productivity. The situation was more stable in Geneva and Vienna. In compliance with General Assembly resolution 59/265 [YUN 2004, p. 1463], efforts were made to fill vacancies in the translation and interpretation services at Nairobi. Despite those efforts, filling vacant posts remained difficult, in particular extrabudgetary posts in Nairobi for language staff that could apply for regular budget posts in Geneva, New York and Vienna.

The Committee on Conferences [A/60/32] stressed the need to improve the quality of translation and interpretation, and to ensure that the terminology used by the translation and interpretation services reflected the latest linguistic norms. It expressed concern about the unequal distribution of resources among the language services and noted that all language services should be provided with equally favourable working conditions and resources, as stipulated in resolution 59/265.

In October [A/60/433], ACABQ welcomed the initiative by DGACM, working with the UN Office of Human Resources Management, to arrange an Arabic language interpretation examination aimed at filling vacant posts in Nairobi. It encouraged DGACM to intensify efforts in that regard, and, in the light of the prolonged vacancy situation, urged it to consider all possible approaches. DGACM was also encouraged to make a concerted effort to develop rosters of qualified applicants in all the official languages to fill posts that were likely to become vacant, after taking into account possible promotions and retirements.

Informational meetings

The Committee on Conferences [A/60/32] expressed support for the holding of informational meetings, organized in response to General Assembly resolution 57/283 B [YUN 2003, p. 1481], to brief Member States on terminology and consult with them on the improvement of language services. As requested in resolution 59/265 [YUN 2004, p. 1463], two such meetings were held in 2005.

UN information systems

Information and communication technology

In March [A/59/265/Add.1], the Secretary-General submitted an addendum to his 2004 report [YUN 2004, p. 1471] on the UN information and communication technology (ICT) strategy [YUN 2002, p. 1454]. The addendum contained proposals for the review of possible arrangements for the migration of financial and technical support to the Galaxy system from the UN Department of Peacekeeping Operations (DPKO) to the Department of Management. Despite the fact that Galaxy was a Secretariat-wide activity, DPKO continued to provide financial and technological support for its development and maintenance. Following a 2004 audit review of the system, OIOS recommended the migration of the technical development, maintenance and support functions from DPKO to the Information Technology Services Division of the Office of Central Support Services of the Department of Management. However, the auditors said that the transfer should not be effected until the Division could assure a continued level of service. A review would be conducted to establish the most appropriate technological infrastructure for the system. In the meantime, the UN Office of Human Resources Management (OHRM) and DPKO would continue their existing partnership to support and develop Galaxy.

On 13 April, the General Assembly, in section II of resolution 59/282 (see p. 1486), took note of the Secretary-General's 2004 report and the related ACABQ report [YUN 2004, p. 1471]. It requested the Secretary-General to report on measures to improve the Galaxy system, and to develop and implement cost-neutral measures to provide Member States with secure access to the information accessible only on the Secretariat's Intranet, known as iSeek, in the working languages of the United Nations.

In a 22 April report [A/59/736], ACABQ recommended that lessons learned and experiences acquired during the development, implementation and roll-out phases of Galaxy should be fully documented and analysed and the results reflected in the Secretary-General's report to the Assembly at its sixtieth session. It recommended that the Assembly take note of the Secretary-General's report.

On 22 June, the Assembly, in section XVIII of resolution 59/296 (see p. 139), having considered the addendum to the Secretary-General's report and the relevant section of ACABQ's report, requested the Secretary-General to ensure full implementation of the ICT strategy in order to avoid unnecessary redundancies.

International cooperation in informatics

In response to Economic and Social Council resolution 2004/51 [YUN 2004, p. 1472], the Secretary-General submitted a May report [E/2005/67] on international cooperation in the field of informatics, which highlighted the increased collaboration between the Secretariat and the Ad Hoc Open-ended Working Group on Informatics. Both the Working Group and the Secretariat considered areas where resources could be redirected to better serve the diplomatic community. The Working Group prioritized the needs of Member States and communicated them to the Secretariat. The Secretariat informed the Working Group about IT initiatives that would affect the diplomatic community and solicited input from the Working Group. The collaboration optimized the use of existing resources by focusing on practical issues.

WiFi technology, which allowed wireless Internet access, had been introduced extensively in Headquarters conference rooms, common hallways, lobbies and in the Dag Hammarskjöld Library. The Secretariat continued to provide electronic mail services and maintained the computer servers that supported services to the missions. It also implemented free ODS access worldwide. In collaboration with the Working Group, the Secretariat launched a new version of the primary web page for missions and produced a guide to Internet services for delegates.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 22 July [meeting 36], the Economic and Social Council, adopted resolution 2005/12 [draft: E/2005/L.33, orally amended] without vote [agenda item 7 (c)].

The need to harmonize and improve United Nations informatics systems for optimal utilization and accessibility by all States

The Economic and Social Council,

Welcoming the report of the Secretary-General on international cooperation in the field of informatics and the initiatives of the Ad Hoc Open-ended Working Group on Informatics,

Recognizing the interest of Member States in taking full advantage of information and communication technologies for the acceleration of economic and social development,

Recalling its previous resolutions on the need to harmonize and improve United Nations information systems for optimal utilization and access by all States, with due regard to all official languages,

Welcoming the intensification of efforts by the Information Technology Services Division of the Department of Management of the Secretariat to provide interconnectivity and unhindered Internet access to all Permanent and Observer Missions at the United Nations,

1. Reiterates once again the high priority that it attaches to easy, economical, uncomplicated and unhindered access for States Members and Observers of the United Nations, as well as non-governmental organizations accredited to the United Nations, to the computerized databases and information systems and services of the United Nations, provided that the unhindered access of non-governmental organizations to such databases, systems and services will not prejudice the access of Member States nor impose an additional financial burden for their use;

2. Requests the President of the Economic and Social Council to convene the Ad Hoc Open-ended Working Group on Informatics for one more year to enable it to carry out, from within existing resources, the due fulfilment of the provisions of the Council resolutions on this item, to facilitate the successful implementation of the initiatives being taken by the Secretary-General with regard to the use of information technology and to continue the implementation of measures required to achieve its objectives, and, in this regard, requests the Working Group to continue its efforts to act as a bridge between the evolving needs of Member States and the actions of the Secretariat;

3. Expresses its appreciation to the Information Technology Services Division for the continuing cooperation it is extending to the Working Group in the endeavour to further improve the information technology services available to all Permanent and Observer Missions at the United Nations and, in particular, for its work in the implementation of the following services: wireless Internet (WiFi) in United Nations conference rooms; revitalization of the website for United Nations delegations; implementation of the new global search in the Official Documents System of the United Nations; and unrestricted access to the Official Documents System;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to extend full cooperation to the Working Group and to give priority to implementing its recommendations;

5. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the Economic and Social Council at its substantive session of 2006 on action taken to follow up the present resolution, including the findings of the Working Group and an assessment of its work and mandate.

Other matters

Common services

UN commercial activities

In response to General Assembly resolution 58/263 [YUN 2003, p. 1497], the Secretary-General reported in April [A/59/793] on the possibility and cost implications of operating bookstores, gift shops and guided tours at UNON. The location of UNON commercial operations within the security boundaries of the UNON compound was reviewed in the context of compliance with the Headquarters Minimum Operating Security Standards. The review indicated the need for the relocation of all commercial operations outside of the compound. The UN gift shop at UNON was temporarily closed for security reasons. UNON conducted a feasibility study for the operation of the gift shop, guided tours and other activities aimed at promoting the image of the United Nations at its premises. The study indicated the possibility of a resumption, in 2007, of the activities of the UN gift shop and the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) card stand at a new, off-site building for UNON commercial operations, which would be part of the measures for strengthening security at the UNON compound. The construction of the new building, for which the Assembly approved funds in resolution 59/276 [YUN 2004, p. 1383], was expected to be completed by the end of 2006. It was envisaged that the gift shop would be run on a full cost-recovery basis, with no financial implications for the UN programme budget.

With regard to guided tours, it was determined that, given the limited number of tourists anticipated at UNON, the costs of operating a visitors' service would significantly exceed the potential revenue, requiring consistent subsidies to cover its financial deficit. The Secretary-General therefore recommended against operating guided tours at UNON.

ACABQ, in its first report on the proposed programme budget for the 2006-2007 biennium

[A/60/7 & Corr.1], concurred with the Secretary-General's recommendation concerning the operation of guided tours at UNON.

The Assembly, in section VIII of resolution 60/248 of 23 December (see p. 1495), requested the Secretary-General to organize, effective 1 January 2006, a guided tour operation at UNON, and report the actual income and expenditures of the operation in the budget performance reports for the 2006-2007 biennium.

Outsourcing practices

On 13 April [meeting 91], the General Assembly, having considered the Secretary-General's 2004 report on outsourcing practices and the related ACABQ report [YUN 2004, p. 1472], and on recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/59/652/Add.1], adopted resolution 59/289 without vote [agenda item 107].

Outsourcing practices

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 54/256 of 7 April 2000, 55/232 of 23 December 2000 and 58/276 and 58/277 of 23 December 2003,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on outsourcing practices and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General, and endorses the observations and recommendations of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions related thereto;

2. Acknowledges that outsourcing should be used in full compliance with the four criteria set out by the General Assembly, and requests the Secretary-General to monitor the quality of activities outsourced;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to consider outsourcing actively in accordance with the guidance and goals mentioned in paragraphs 1 to 3 of resolution 55/232 and to ensure that programme managers satisfy all of the following criteria in their assessment of whether or not an activity of the Organization can be fully, or even partially, outsourced:

(a) Cost-effectiveness and efficiency: this is considered to be the most basic criterion; unless it can be adequately demonstrated that an activity can be done significantly more economically and, at the very least, equally efficiently, by an external party, outsourcing may not be considered;

(b) Safety and security: activities that could compromise the safety and security of delegations, staff and visitors may not be considered for outsourcing;

(c) Maintaining the international character of the Organization: outsourcing may be considered for activities in which the international character of the Organization is not compromised;

(d) Maintaining the integrity of procedures and processes: outsourcing may not be considered if it will result in any breach of established procedures and processes.

UN premises and property

Addis Ababa office facilities

By decision 59/555 of 13 April, the General Assembly took note of Ethiopia's efforts to facilitate the construction of additional office facilities at the Economic Commission for Africa (ECA) in Addis Ababa, as well as the Secretary-General's 2004 report on the related construction project [YUN 2004, p. 1472]. It endorsed the recommendations contained in ACABQ's 2004 report on the project [ibid.].

In response to Assembly resolution 56/270 [YUN 2002, p. 1459], the Secretary-General submitted a November report [A/60/532] on progress made in the ECA construction project. Pursuant to recommendations made by ACABQ in 2004 [YUN 2004, p. 1472], ECA requested the UN offices in Addis Ababa located outside the ECA complex to provide updated estimates of their office space requirements. The survey verified the need for an increase of 2,780 square metres of office space in the new office building to be constructed at ECA headquarters as compared with the initial estimates reported in 2001 [YUN 2001, p. 1396]. The additional cost for the two additional floors was estimated at $2,390,600, bringing the total estimated cost of the project to $8,992,700, compared to the initial cost estimate of $7,711,800 approved by the Assembly in resolution 56/270.

It was anticipated that the bidding process and identification of a contractor could be finalized by March 2006, with construction starting in April 2006, which was expected to be completed by February 2008. If the proposed option to expand the building by two additional floors was approved by the Assembly (see below), completion of the construction would be envisaged for July 2008. It was recommended that the construction of the two additional floors be completed simultaneously with the originally approved project, as that option was the most cost effective. The Secretary-General requested the Assembly to: authorize the expansion of the new office building by two additional floors to a total capacity of 9,550 square metres and total estimated additional costs of $3,671,500; approve an additional appropriation for the additional costs under section 32 of the proposed programme budget for the 2006-2007 biennium (see p. 1489); and endorse a proposed phased approach in financing further requirements for the new building.

ACABQ, in December [A/60/7/Add.21], recommended approval of the total estimated additional costs indicated in the Secretary-General's report (see above) if the Assembly authorized the expansion of the new office building by two additional floors.

The Assembly, in section VII of resolution 60/248 of 23 December (see p. 1495), took note of the Secretary-General's report on the construction of additional office facilities at ECA and endorsed ACABQ's recommendation.

Parking space at Headquarters

By decision 59/551 B of 13 April, the General Assembly deferred for future consideration the Secretary-General's 2004 report on viable options for ensuring sufficient parking space at UN Headquarters [YUN 2004, p. 1473]; by decision 59/551 D of 12 September, the Assembly deferred consideration of the report until its sixtieth (2005) session; and by section A of decision 60/551 of 23 December, the Assembly further deferred consideration of the report until its resumed sixtieth (2006) session.

Capital Master Plan

Implementation of CMP

In May, the Secretary-General submitted an addendum [A/59/441/Add.1] to his 2004 report on the implementation of the capital master plan (CMP) [YUN 2004, p. 1475]. He said that by a 15 March letter, the United States had formally notified the United Nations of its loan offer of $1.2 billion to finance the CMP project and provided the details of the terms of the offer, which were essentially the same as those reported by the Secretary-General in 2004 [ibid.].

The Secretary-General reported that the Legislature of the State of New York did not pass legislation necessary for the United Nations Development Corporation (UNDC) to proceed with the construction of a new building to provide swing space during the CMP implementation, to be known as UNDC-5. In March, the Secretariat engaged a real estate consultant to identify alternatives. However, the commercial alternatives discussed in the report required further study and negotiations with landlords. The Secretary-General believed that the United Nations should proceed with leased space in the New York City area and set 2007 as the on-time refurbishment start date.

The Secretary-General recommended that the Assembly accept the host country's loan offer and authorize him to conclude an agreement with the host country to preserve the Organization's option to borrow up to $1.2 billion at an interest rate not to exceed 5.54 per cent per annum and a duration not to exceed 30 years, provided that the agreement did not create any legal or financial obligation for the United Nations to borrow any part of the $1.2 billion from the host country or in any way restrict the Organization's discretion in deciding whether to borrow such funds, nor the authority of the United Nations to seek funds from any other source. He also recommended that the Assembly: request him to first seek the Assembly's authorization if the United Nations decided to draw down on any part of the loan amount; convert into an appropriation with assessment for the 2004-2005 biennium the full amount of the commitment authority of $26 million approved for that period in resolution 57/292 [YUN 2002, p. 1375]; and request him to report on CMP progress in 2006.

A further May addendum [A/59/441/Add.2] by the UN Legal Counsel stated that, if the United Nations accepted the offer, it would do so in a letter setting out the basic terms and understandings for the loan agreement to be negotiated, provided that acceptance of the offer was subject to the successful conclusion of the agreement. Thus, the letter created no legal obligation for the Organization regarding the loan offer.

ACABQ report. In an oral report presented to the Fifth Committee on 20 May [A/C.5/59/SR.53], the ACABQ Chairman recommended acceptance of the Secretary-General's proposals concerning the host country's loan offer, and that he be authorized by the Assembly to conclude an agreement on the offer and to draw down on the loan amount, with the understanding that if the Assembly's authorization was sought for that purpose, the Secretary-General would provide detailed information on the related conditions. As to the proposed conversion of the full amount of the commitment authority approved for the 2004-2005 biennium, ACABQ pointed out that the $26 million included a provision of $8.2 million budgeted for 2006. It therefore recommended that only $17.8 million should be appropriated and assessed. Commitment authority for the balance of $8.2 million should be renewed pending future action on the appropriation of that amount.

By decision 59/551 B of 13 April, the General Assembly deferred consideration of the following 2004 reports on the CMP: the Secretary-General's report on the status of possible funding arrangements for CMP [YUN 2004, p. 1473]; his second annual report on the implementation of CMP [ibid., p. 1475]; his report on cooperation with the City and State of New York related to CMP [ibid., p. 1474]; and ACABQ's report on CMP [ibid.]. By decision 59/551 D of 12 September, the Assembly deferred until its sixtieth (2005) session consideration of the above reports, along with the May 2005 addenda to Secretary-General's second annual report on CMP implementation and ACABQ's May 2005 oral report (see above).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 June [meeting 104], the General Assembly, on recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/59/448/Add.4], adopted resolution 59/295 without vote [agenda item 108].

Capital master plan

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 54/249 of 23 December 1999, 55/238 of 23 December 2000, 56/234 and 56/236 of 24 December 2001 and 56/286 of 27 June 2002, section II of its resolution 57/292 of 20 December 2002 and its decision 58/566 of 8 April 2004,

1. Decides to convert 17,802,000 United States dollars of the existing commitment authority into an appropriation with assessment for the year 2005 and to renew the existing commitment authority for the balance of 8,198,000 dollars for the year 2006 so as to provide for the continuation of design work and related project management and management of preconstruction services for the baseline scope and scope options of the capital master plan;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at the main part of its sixtieth session on all aspects of the capital master plan, including:

(a) Current estimate of costs and time line for implementation of the capital master plan;

(b) Viable options for swing space during construction, including the costs of all such options;

(c) The status of UNDC-5;

(d) An assessment of the viability of constructing a permanent building on the North Lawn of the premises of United Nations Headquarters to be used as a swing and/or consolidation space;

(e) The range of financing options for the capital master plan and overall cost and full analysis of such options, taking into account that direct assessment would be the simplest and cheapest option for meeting the costs of the capital master plan, as stated in the report of the Secretary-General and the oral report by the Chairman of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

(f) The progress of design and pre-construction work;

(g) Proposals on a working reserve fund;

3. Decides to revert to the issue of the capital master plan before the end of June 2005, including the relevant proposals contained in paragraph 39 of the report of the Secretary-General, not addressed in the present resolution, pertaining to the offer of the host country on an interest-bearing loan for the capital master plan.

Review of CMP

Report of Board of Auditors. In response to General Assembly resolution 57/292 [YUN 2002, p. 1375], the Secretary-General transmitted to the Assembly, in July [A/60/5 (vol. 5)], the report of the Board of Auditors on CMP for the year ended 31 December 2004. The review covered the overall implementation of CMP and nine contracts executed in 2004 for an aggregate amount of $12.4 million for the design development phase. The cumulative expenditure for CMP amounted to $26.2 million. For 2005, the estimated expenditures totalled $25.2 million, consisting of $7.4 million for the design development phase and $17.8 million for the construction documents phase. The Board found that the delay in the approval of the final scope confirmation reports and quality control plans for four design contracts had affected the schedule for the completion of the design development phase. Also, the Administration did not establish an advisory board, approved by the Assembly in 2002 [YUN 2002, p. 1375], to provide advice on financial matters and overall project issues. The Board recommended that the procedures for the coordination of work and activities among the firms engaged in the design phase should be reviewed to ensure that the work was completed within the envisaged time frame and budget, and that the Administration should consider establishing the planned advisory board on CMP financial matters.

OIOS report. In response to Assembly resolution 57/292, OIOS submitted an August report [A/60/288] on CMP for the period from August 2004 to July 2005. During that period, OIOS provided continuous audit coverage of activities related to CMP and the construction phase of the security strengthening project. Between 1 January 2004 and 30 June 2005, seven contracts were awarded, totalling $53,584,166.

OIOS concluded that the resources appropriated by the Assembly for CMP activities were generally utilized in accordance with UN Financial Regulations and Rules. However, UN operating procedures, documents related to construction contracts and contract language utilized by the CMP office needed to be improved. In the view of OIOS, the process used for selecting the real estate broker to provide real estate advisory services and to assist in identifying alternative swing space for occupancy in 2007 was transparent and fair. OIOS recommended that the Secretary-General establish the financial advisory board.

By decision 59/551 B of 13 April, the Assembly deferred consideration of the report of the Board of Auditors on CMP for the 2002-2003 biennium [YUN 2004, p. 1474] and the OIOS August 2003 to July 2004 report on CMP [ibid.], and by decision 59/551 D of 12 September, it deferred consideration of those reports until its sixtieth (2005) session. In section A of decision 60/551 of 23 December, the Assembly deferred until its resumed sixtieth (2006) session consideration of the above reports, along with report of the Board of Auditors on CMP for the 2003-2004 biennium and the OIOS report on CMP for August 2004 to July 2005.

Re-examination of CMP alternatives

In accordance with General Assembly resolution 57/292 [YUN 2002, p. 1375], the Secretary-General submitted, in November, his third annual progress report on the implementation of CMP [A/60/550 & Corr.1,2]. The estimated alternative swing space costs were higher than initially projected, and construction cost had escalated to a new estimate of some $1.6 billion. That called for a re-examination of the strategy and alternatives for CMP and the development of new approaches and schedules to meet the defined scope.

Four main strategies were examined based on the assumption that the Assembly would approve the new approach at the main part of its sixtieth session. Strategy I included vacating the maximum amount of space at Headquarters, moving to four or more commercial swing space sites in Manhattan and the Dag Hammarskjöld Library to a space in Long Island City, Queens; building temporary conference facilities on the North Lawn and renovating the entire Headquarters complex in one major phase. Strategy II included the scope of strategy I for phasing and swing space, but it recommended cutting the approved renovation scope to stay within the initial $1.2 billion estimate.

Strategy III included construction of a new permanent office building on the North Lawn, leasing of space for the Dag Hammarskjöld Library in Long Island City, and building temporary conference facilities on the North Lawn. The Secretariat building would be relocated to the new office tower; the General Assembly building would be renovated, followed by renovation of the Conference building in two phases; and renovation of the Secretariat building deferred for a future project. The cost of strategy III was estimated at $1.5 billion, reflecting a $536 million increase.

Strategy IV represented a phased approach to the renovation. It included leasing approximately 10 floors of office space in Manhattan and space for the Dag Hammarskjöld Library in Long Island City, and building a temporary conference facility on the North Lawn. Ten floors of the Secretariat building would be vacated at each phase to allow for renovation in four phases. The entire General Assembly building would be renovated, followed by the Conference building, which would be renovated in two phases. The strategy would maintain a functional, visible UN Headquarters at its current site and minimize dependency on external elements, including the New York City real estate market. The estimated costs of the project under strategy IV amounted to $1.6 billion, including the costs covered by the amount of $8 million appropriated in 2001 for the preliminary phase and the $43.3 million approved by the Assembly for the design phase from 2002 to 2005. The projected completion date was late 2013, with some minor work in 2014. Following an evaluation of the four strategies, the Secretary-General recommended strategy IV.

An estimated expenditure pattern was also set out in the report, assuming that strategy IV was selected and that construction started in 2007. The accumulated requirements were expected to increase significantly from 2006 as the project moved to the development of construction documents and drawings and the preconstruction planning phase. From 2008, assuming a project duration of seven years, the construction costs would be between $200 million and $250 million annually, increasing to a peak of nearly $300 million in 2011.

The United Nations would be required to maintain a separate CMP funding facility within its accounting system. A working capital reserve was proposed in the amount of $45 million, representing 20 per cent of anticipated annual expenditures. The reserve would be financed through a separate assessment on Member States and phased out at the end of the construction phase, with related contributions credited back to Member States.

The Assembly made no decision at its fifty-ninth session on the CMP loan offer from the host country (see p. 1553). At a 9 September meeting of the Fifth Committee, the host country representative informed the Committee verbally that the offer would be renewed and adjusted. As at 11 November, the Secretary-General had not received formal notification from the host country of the loan offer renewal.

Total CMP expenditures as at 30 September amounted to $22.1 million, including $4.1 million in 2005. It was expected that an additional $3 million would be spent during the remainder of the year, bringing total 2005 estimated expenditures to $7.1 million. Anticipated requirements in 2006 were estimated at $126.9 million. In the light of the new strategic options, the initiation of the construction document phase would likely occur in 2006.

As to the selection of a financial consultant to design and develop the details of an implementation plan for CMP financing, an expression of interest was issued in April and a request for proposals was subsequently issued to 14 firms. Two firms responded, one of which was found to be technically qualified. However, the financial proposal submitted by that firm was considered excessive for the services required.

The Secretary-General recommended that the Assembly approve strategy IV for implementation of CMP, effective 1 January 2006; a revised project budget of $1.6 billion for the strategy, excluding potential scope options; and the CMP funding plan based on a multi-year assessment. The Assembly should endorse his proposal to maintain a separate CMP account for financing the plan and authorize him to proceed in 2006 with respect to early contracts required for the recommended strategy. It should appropriate $108,698,000 for 2006, including the conversion of the 2006 commitment authority in the amount of $8,198,000 into an appropriation for financing CMP design and preconstruction phases, and $45 million for the year 2006 for establishing a working operating reserve under the CMP account; and decide that both appropriations would be financed through an assessment on Member States. He further recommended that the Assembly request the Committee on Contributions to make recommendations to the Assembly at its sixty-first (2006) session on the possibility of imposing interest to be charged for the late payment of assessed contributions to the CMP account, and ask the Secretary-General to report on progress in the implementation of strategy IV in the context of annual progress reports on CMP.

A November addendum to the report [A/60/550/Add.1] contained an explanatory note on outside commercial borrowing.

ACABQ report. In its December report on CMP [A/60/7/Add.12], ACABQ stated that, while it saw merit in strategy IV, as recommended by the Secretary-General, it was of the opinion that the Assembly should be provided with a more comprehensive analysis of all options, particularly strategy III (see p. 1555). It recommended that, given the cost of building and removing a temporary structure on the North Lawn, full information be presented to the Assembly on the relative costs and merits of constructing a permanent structure. ACABQ requested that updated information on cost benefits for UN organizations located in New York that would result from the consolidation of office space into a permanent building be provided to the Fifth Committee, in addition to a detailed analysis and all relevant information on provisions made under strategy IV for contingencies and forward pricing escalation. ACABQ agreed in principle with the creation of a working capital reserve fund but it recommended that the issue be revisited whenever a decision on the main CMP strategy was taken. The Assembly should decide on which of the options should be chosen for CMP financing. In order to minimize further delay and provide for the smooth and continuous implementation of design and planning work, ACABQ recommended an appropriation of $102.7 million, including the existing 2006 commitment authority in the amount of $8.2 million.

In section II of resolution 60/248 of 23 December (see p. 1494), the Assembly authorized the Secretary-General to proceed with CMP design work, related project management and management of pre-construction services to the extent to which those activities could be implemented without prejudice to the decision to be taken by the Assembly at a later stage regarding its selection of the strategy for CMP implementation. It decided to convert $8,198,000 of the existing commitment authority into an appropriation with assessment for 2006, so as to provide for the continuation of design work and related project management and management of the pre-construction phase. It also decided to revert, as a matter of priority, to the issue of CMP at the first part of its resumed sixtieth (2006) session.

In section A of decision 60/551 of 23 December, the Assembly deferred until its resumed sixtieth (2006) session consideration of the Secretary-General's third annual progress report on the implementation of CMP; ACABQ's December report on CMP; and the reports deferred by the Assembly on 12 September (see p. 1553).

Security

Strengthening security of UN operations, staff and premises

OIOS report. In August [A/60/291], OIOS reported on the utilization and management of funds approved by the General Assembly in resolutions 58/295 [YUN 2004, p. 1476] and 59/276 [ibid., p. 1383] for strengthening security and safety at United Nations Headquarters in New York and at the United Nations Office at Geneva (UNOG).

As at 31 May, $35.4 million out of the $41.3 million approved by the Assembly had been obligated for projects at Headquarters and $16.2 million of the $35.1 million approved for one-time security upgrades at UNOG had been spent or pre-encumbered as at 30 April. Of the 18 projects at Headquarters, seven had been fully implemented, three were deferred to be incorporated into the capital master plan (CMP) project and eight were being implemented, with a target completion date of 31 December. Of those eight projects, one was proceeding satisfactorily, one had been delayed, and the remaining six projects were combined into one contract, which was being executed by a private contractor. That set of projects was at least six months behind schedule, at an additional cost of $2.6 million. The contractor submitted a claim for an additional $5.2 million in compensation and requested an eight-month contract extension to complete the construction work by February 2006. OIOS made a number of observations and recommendations regarding the inadequacy of guarantees, project management, change orders and contractor performance.

Project implementation at UNOG was progressing well, but the initial objectives and timelines were too ambitious, given that UNOG's capacity had not increased sufficiently, and at least $6.4 million in appropriations might not be expended by the end of the 2004-2005 biennium. UNOG submitted a draft security plan to the Department of Safety and Security detailing security requirements for the Palais des Nations in Geneva to be compliant with the Headquarters minimum operating security standards. In the view of OIOS, a comprehensive security strategy and detailed plan containing target dates and related cost estimates should be developed and used by UNOG to monitor project implementation.

For major contracts, OIOS found that UNOG had complied with UN procurement procedures, except in one case of a potential breach of confidentiality by the consortium of firms responsible for architectural/engineering work and supervision of the security projects. UNOG responded that the case was conducted in a transparent and fair manner within the Organization, and all contractors would be reminded of UN regulations and ethical standards.

As recommended by OIOS, UNOG conducted a survey of architectural and engineering fees payable in Switzerland, which concluded that the fees being paid by the Geneva office, as a percentage of the total construction cost applied at the time the contract was signed in 2002, were reasonable, but the rates had increased significantly. In the view of OIOS, the situation confirmed that the contract between UNOG and the consortium had not provided the flexibility and resulting savings envisaged by UNOG. The consortium was not fulfilling its responsibilities in a timely manner, and UNOG was encountering difficulties in controlling the resulting cost-determination decisions. In response to the OIOS audit, UNOG included, with effect from 15 August, the standard UN clause for liquidated damages in all tendering documents and resulting contracts related to construction, engineering and/or architectural services.

With the aim of increasing its sourcing, UNOG responded positively to the OIOS suggestion that it align itself to regional practices and publish invitations to bid for higher value construction and related services in national and official journals of the European Union.

Note by Secretary-General. In an October note [A/60/291/Add.1], the Secretary-General, in his supplementary comments on OIOS findings and recommendations, said that the recommendation concerning surrendering the unspent 2002-2003 appropriation relating to projects deferred to CMP, totalling $4.8 million, was inconsistent with the arrangements established by the Assembly for administering the multi-year accounts. Under the terms of the construction-in-progress account, the unspent provisions at the end of the financial period were to remain in the account and used in subsequent financial periods. Therefore, the recommendation should be withdrawn and the case should be closed.

In section A of decision 60/551 of 23 December, the Assembly deferred until its resumed sixtieth (2006) session consideration of the OIOS report and the Secretary-General's note transmitting his comments thereon.

Report of Secretary-General. In response to resolution 59/276, the Secretary-General, in a December report [A/60/572/Add.2], summarized the work undertaken and planned by the Secretariat in 2004 and 2005 to implement approved security-strengthening projects. The total cost of the programme approved by the Assembly amounted to $105,705,100 at revised 2004-2005 rates; that amount was financed from the regular budget and, with respect to the United Nations Office at Vienna (UNOV), on a cost-shared basis with other organizations located at the Vienna International Centre. As at 30 September, $70,531,800, or 67 per cent of the total approved costs, had been committed with respect to that programme. The report detailed the implementation of individual projects at Headquarters, UNOG, UNOV, UNON, the Economic Commission for Africa, the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific, and the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean.

ACABQ report. In December [A/60/597], ACABQ noted with concern the delayed implementation of security-strengthening projects at some duty stations and requested that increased attention be paid to the implementation of those projects as a priority.

Unified security management system

In response to resolution 59/276 [YUN 2004, p. 1383], the Secretary-General submitted an April report [A/59/776] on the strengthened and unified security management system for the United Nations. The report proposed a revised course of action for implementing the standardized access control system at all main duty stations and funding of the project's design phase. A project access control team was to be established to plan and, in the event the project was approved by the Assembly, coordinate the implementation of a comprehensive, fully integrated and standardized access control system, in consultation with the Office of Central Support Services. The team would be set up using existing resources and supplemented by additional resources of up to $180,000, which would be accommodated from within the resources approved for the 2004-2005 biennium and the proposed 2006-2007 programme budget.

In April [A/59/785], ACABQ recommended that the Assembly take note of the report with the expectation that a comprehensive progress report would be presented during the sixtieth session.

In section I of resolution 59/294 of 22 June (see p. 1488), the Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's report on the strengthened and unified security management system for the United Nations and endorsed the observations and recommendation contained in the related ACABQ report (see above).

In October [A/60/424], the Secretary-General, reporting on progress achieved in establishing the strengthened and unified UN security management system, said that immediate action to establish the Department of Safety and Security was taken by the appointment, on 13 January, of the Under-Secretary-General for Safety and Security and the designation of officers-in-charge for the Divisions of Safety and Security Services and Regional Operations. The Under-Secretary-General laid out a number of key themes to govern the way ahead, including: a maximum reliance in safety and security on host Governments; a sharpened primary focus on operational effectiveness at the field level; a vigorous system-wide integration of existing UN security capacities; and a fundamental review of technical security policies, procedures and practices. The Division of Safety and Security Services, which unified the separate structures in New York and at offices away from Headquarters, became operational in April. Of the 383 additional posts authorized by the Assembly for uniformed officers, 116 security officers were recruited by May, with another 149 officers deployed in September and the majority of the remaining officers to be recruited by the end of the year. The Division of Regional Operations subsumed the four regional desks of the former Office of the United Nations Security Coordinator. The Executive Office was initiated on 1 January. The report also discussed field security operations, the Department's Field Support Service and a number of other security issues.

All UN civilian personnel in the field were under the authority of a single senior official, supported by one country security adviser. Heads of peacekeeping missions and special political missions supported by DPKO were appointed as designated security officials wherever appropriate. In Afghanistan, Iraq and the Sudan, DPKO and the Department of Safety and Security formed integrated security management structures so as to incorporate all UN civilian personnel into a single protection system.

At Headquarters, the Under-Secretaries-General for Peacekeeping Operations and for Safety and Security formed a standing committee on security to facilitate dialogue and decisions on matters of mutual concern, including the appointment of designated officials in peacekeeping missions and the further implementation of civilian security management in the field. A detailed procedure was formulated to support DPKO through the establishment of the Peacekeeping Operations Support Section within the Division of Regional Operations, which would be co-located with DPKO.

The Secretary-General concluded that the primary responsibility for the security of UN personnel rested with the host Governments, and to that end, the United Nations would work closely with those Governments. Considerable progress had been achieved in developing an integrated, system-wide security management system that ensured consistency, efficiency and effectiveness in safeguarding UN staff.

In November [A/60/7/Add.9], ACABQ said that, the Secretary-General's report fell short of meeting all requirements for the implementation report it had requested in 2004 [YUN 2004, p. 1478]. ACABQ expected that a comprehensive report on the implementation of resolution 59/276 would be submitted once the Department of Safety and Security became fully operational. It pointed out that expeditious recruitment for all authorized posts should be treated by the Secretariat with the highest priority and with due consideration given to equitable geographical distribution and other concerns expressed by the Assembly. ACABQ stressed the importance of reviewing the level of the post of the deputy to the Under-Secretary-General for Safety and Security in the context of the comprehensive implementation report and careful examination by the implementation management team of the organizational structure of the Department and of its operational requirements. It recommended that the Assembly take note of the Secretary-General's report as an interim report.

In section A of decision 60/551 of 23 December, the Assembly deferred until its resumed sixtieth (2006) session consideration of the Secretary-General's October report on a strengthened and unified security management system for the United Nations and ACABQ's related report.

Security spending by UN organizations

In response to General Assembly resolution 59/276 [YUN 2004, p. 1383], the Secretary-General, in October [A/60/317 & Corr.1], reported on security spending by UN system organizations. A system-wide survey, by CEB, showed that security spending had increased significantly during the 2003-2005 period. The total security-related expenditure for 2005 was expected to reach $286.6 million, compared to $252.4 million in 2004, representing a 14 per cent increase. The largest increase appeared to have occurred in 2004, which showed a 49 per cent increase over 2003. However, since a significant part of the overall spending reported by the organizations was derived from estimates, rather than specific data, owing to the absence of standard budgeting and accounting systems across the UN system, the Secretary-General indicated that the presentation of security-related spending contained in the report should be considered a work in progress. The Secretary-General proposed the establishment of a standardized accounting and budgeting framework for security-related expenditure to improve the accuracy and the clarity of the analysis of expenditure patterns and trends, and to enhance policy review and formulation in that area.

The report discussed methodological issues concerning the collection and presentation of security-related expenditure data, and contained tables dealing with categories of expenditure relating to staff safety and security at the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and the 2003-2005 security-related expenditure of UN organization.

ACABQ, in November [A/60/7/Add.9], said that the data presented in the Secretary-General's report with regard to the organizations' 2003-2005 security-related expenditure raised a number of questions that were not addressed in the report, including the question of why some co-located organizations with seemingly similar security concerns had significantly different security expenditure patterns. ACABQ requested that information to that effect be provided to the Fifth Committee and that future reports on security-related spending contain information on salient factors underlying significant differences in security expenditures across the UN system.

PART SIX

Intergovernmental organizations related to the United Nations

Chapter I

International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA)

In 2005, the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) continued its work under the three pillars of its mandate—technology, safety and verification—with a specific focus to facilitate the development and transfer of peaceful nuclear technologies; to prevent the proliferation of nuclear weapons; and to maintain and expand a global nuclear safety regime, as well as strengthen the security of nuclear and radiological material and facilities.

The forty-ninth session of the IAEA General Conference (Vienna, Austria, 26-30 September) adopted resolutions and decisions on strengthening IAEA's activities in nuclear science, technology and applications; strengthening international cooperation in nuclear, radiation and transport safety and waste management; strengthening the effectiveness and efficiency of the safeguards system; strengthening IAEA technical cooperation activities; applying IAEA safeguards in the Middle East; implementing the safeguards agreement between IAEA and the Democratic People's Republic of Korea (DPRK); and measures to protect against nuclear terrorism.

In October, the 2005 Noble Peace Prize was awarded to IAEA and its Director-General, Mohamed ElBaradei, in recognition of their efforts to prevent nuclear energy from being used for military purposes and to ensure that nuclear energy for peaceful purposes was used in the safest possible way.

During the year, IAEA's membership rose to 139 member States, with the admission of Chad.

Activities

Nuclear safety and security

IAEA continued to support a global nuclear safety regime based on international legal instruments and regulatory infrastructures. During 2005, it conducted more than 120 safety review missions to member States. The Agency organized four international conferences and a number of training courses, seminars and workshops addressing nuclear safety and security. It set up an expanded Incident and Emergency Center to serve as the focal point for States to report emergencies and to facilitate the exchange of information between States on preparedness and response, and the reporting of nuclear security incidents. The implementation of activities to protect against nuclear terrorism, approved by the Board of Governors in 2002 [YUN 2002, p. 1465], was completed in 2005, resulting in improved monitoring capabilities at border crossings; recovery of 70 radioactive sources; and an overall improvement in the preparedness of States in addressing the risk of malicious acts involving nuclear and radioactive materials. The Board approved a new Nuclear Security Plan for implementation between 2006-2009. In 2005, the Convention on the Physical Protection of Nuclear Material (CPPNM) [YUN 1979, p. 1239] was amended to protect nuclear facilities and material in peaceful domestic use, storage and transport. In addition, the amendment provided for expanded cooperation between States in locating and recovering stolen or smuggled nuclear material, mitigating any radiological consequences of sabotage, and preventing and combating related offences. By the end of 2005, there were 116 parties to CPPNM, compared to 109 in 2004.

Radiation Safety

IAEA's radiation safety programme continued to focus on the development of a unified set of safety standards and their application; the implementation of the Agency's radiation protection rules; and the provision of advice and services to member States. In 2005, IAEA published the Guidance on the Import and Export of Radioactive Sources as a supplementary guide to the revised Code of Conduct on the Safety and Security of Radioactive Sources, approved by the Board in 2003. Although neither the Code nor the guide was a legally binding instrument, the Director-General received written notification from 79 States expressing support for the Code and 17 States indicating their commitment to follow the supplementary guide.

Nuclear power

In 2005, IAEA continued to assist member States in planning and implementing programmes for the utilization of nuclear power, supported them in improving safety, and provided them with information and training. In March, IAEA held a conference in Paris, attended by high-level representatives of 74 Governments, to consider the future role of nuclear power. Participants affirmed the potential of nuclear power as a major means of meeting energy needs and sustaining development in the twenty-first century for a large number of both developed and developing countries. The Agency also undertook technical cooperation projects in providing scientific and technical support in the fields of nuclear power and the nuclear fuel cycle.

Nuclear fuel cycle

In February, IAEA transmitted a report on multilateral approaches to the civilian nuclear fuel cycle (MNAs), which cited five approaches to strengthen controls over sensitive nuclear technologies of proliferation concern—uranium enrichment and plutonium separation. In July, the Agency supported an international conference on MNAs in Moscow. IAEA also continued work on developing wide-ranging safety standards for fuel cycle facilities to address both generic and process-specific considerations. Initial guidelines made available in 2005 for evaluating facility safety allowed for self-assessment by a member State and implementation of a new IAEA peer review service entitled "Safety Evaluation During Operation of Fuel Cycle Facilities".

Radioactive waste management

In 2005, IAEA continued to provide guidance on the decommissioning of nuclear facilities. By the end of December, eight power plants worldwide had been completely decommissioned, 17 had been partially dismantled and safely enclosed, 31 were being dismantled prior to eventual site release and 30 were undergoing minimum dismantling prior to long-term enclosure. Regarding the disposal of low and intermediate level radioactive waste, Belgium, Hungary and the Republic of Korea agreed to host the sites for a national waste repository, which were expected to be licensed within the next decade. On safety matters, the Board of Governors approved the Safety Requirements for Geological Disposal in September. In October, the International Conference on the Safety of Radioactive Waste Material Disposal, held in Tokyo, Japan, fostered information exchange on related issues.

Marine environment and water resources

IAEA continued to promote the linkage between water and human development. Recent technological developments, resulting in easier and cheaper means for measuring isotopes in hydrological samples, combined with partnerships with other agencies, allowed the Agency to assist several member States in managing their water resources. A joint IAEA-World Bank isotope investigation had led to an alternative source of water in Bangladesh. The transfer of isotope and nuclear techniques through IAEA's technical cooperation programme also enabled member States to expand their capacity to map underground aquifers, detect and control pollution and monitor the safety of dams.

Food and agriculture

In 2005, the Agency made substantial progress in developing improved crop varieties through mutation induction. Over 25 new and improved varieties of staple food crops, including rice, wheat and millet, were introduced by member States using the technique of mutation induction by radiation, bringing the total number of crop varieties released to 2,300. IAEA cooperation with the Global Rinderpest Eradication Programme in the annual serological surveillance helped a number of African countries to achieve and maintain freedom from rinderpest, an infectious disease of ruminants. The surveillance tests utilized nuclear-related methods and technology, using radioisotopes for differential diagnosis.

Human health

IAEA continued to address needs related to the prevention, diagnosis and treatment of health problems in developing member States through the application of nuclear techniques. The Agency contributed to reducing child and infant mortality rates through technical assistance to member States in the use of stable (non-radioactive) isotope techniques as part of nutrition intervention programmes to combat malnutrition in children. Efforts were strengthened by the creation of the IAEA Nobel Cancer and Nutrition Fund (Nobel Fund) to expand human resources capacity and skills in developing regions of the world in cancer management, radiation oncology and nutrition. IAEA also established the Programme of Action for Cancer Therapy to enhance and expand its technical cooperation programme for improving cancer treatment in the developing world.

Technical cooperation

IAEA continued to transfer nuclear science and technology to developing member States through its technical cooperation programme, which provided training, expert advice and equipment. The Agency's programme focused on food and agriculture, human health, human resource development, nuclear science, physical and chemical applications, radiation and transport safety, radioactive waste management and water resources. In 2005, IAEA's secretariat completed $73.6 million worth of training, expert missions, fellowships and scientific visits, and delivered $33 million in equipment and other assistance to member States. Extrabudgetary resources rose to a new high of $14.9 million, compared to $10.9 million in 2004. The Agency also completed the phased restructuring of its Department of Technical Cooperation.

Safeguard responsibilities

During 2005, IAEA continued its verification programme and inspection activities to ensure States' compliance with their safeguards obligations. IAEA agreements were in force in 156 States and the Agency concluded that all declared nuclear material in those States remained in peaceful nuclear activities or had been accounted for, with the exception of DPRK, where no verification activities had taken place since 2003 and for which no safeguard conclusions could be drawn (see p. 606). In September, the Board of Governors found that Iran's failures and breaches of its obligations to comply with its comprehensive safeguards agreements constituted non-compliance. At the close of 2005, the origin of uranium found at various locations in Iran and the extent and nature of its enrichment programme remained major issues for which verification was ongoing.

Nuclear information

The International Nuclear Information System (INIS), IAEA's database to preserve and maintain nuclear knowledge, continued expanding at a record pace with 100,000 bibliographical records and more than 250,000 electronic text documents added in 2005. INIS had also grown to nearly one million authorized users. In December, IAEA established Nucleus, an information gateway allowing individuals in government, industry, the scientific community and the public to access to the Agency's nuclear knowledge and information resources.

Secretariat

At the end of 2005, IAEA secretariat staff totaled 2,312 for both the Professional and General Service categories.

Budget

The 2005 regular budget amounted to $322 million. A total of $39 million in extrabudgetary funds was provided by member States, the United Nations, international organizations and other sources.

Chapter II

International Labour Organization (ILO)

In 2005, the International Labour Organization (ILO) continued to promote social justice and economic stability and improve labour conditions. ILO's strategic objectives were to promote and realize fundamental principles and rights at work; create greater opportunities for women and men to secure decent employment and income; enhance the coverage and effectiveness of social protection; and strengthen tripartism and social dialogue.

In 2005, ILO membership remained at 178.

Meetings

The ninety-third session of the International Labour Conference (ILC) (Geneva, 31 May–16 June) discussed the urgent need to eliminate forced labour, create jobs for youth, improve safety at work and tackle the global jobs crisis. Other topics discussed at the annual meeting included the situation of workers in the occupied Arab territories, the state of labour standards in Belarus, Colombia and other countries and the Organization's ongoing efforts to stop the use of forced labour in Myanmar. Delegates also considered the current state of working hours and how to balance the need for flexibility with protecting workers' security, health and family life.

Confronted with record levels of youth unemployment in recent years, delegates from more than 100 countries discussed pathways to decent work for youth and the role of the international community in advancing the youth employment agenda. The Conference adopted resolutions relating to youth employment, occupational safety and health, and the arrears of member States. It marked the fourth World Day Against Child Labour by calling for the elimination of child labour in one of the world's most dangerous sectors—small-scale mining and quarrying—within five to 10 years.

Sectoral and other meetings convened in Geneva during 2005 included: Tripartite Meeting on Employment, Social Dialogue, Rights at Work and Industrial Relations in Transport Equipment Manufacturing (10-12 January); Meeting of Experts to Develop Guidelines for Labour Inspection in Forestry (24-28 January); Meeting of Experts to Develop a Revised Code of Practice on Safety and Health in the Iron and Steel Industry (1-9 February); the seventh European Regional Meeting (14-18 February); Tripartite Meeting of Experts to Develop Joint ILO/World Health Organization Guidelines on Health Services and HIV/AIDS (19-21 April); Tripartite Intersessional Meeting on the Follow-up to the Preparatory Technical Maritime Conference (21-27 April); and Tripartite Meeting on Promoting Fair Globalization in Textiles and Clothing in a Post-MFA Environment (24-26 October).

International standards

During the year, ILO activities with regard to Conventions and Recommendations included standard-setting and the supervision and promotion of the application of standards.

In 2005, the campaign for the ratification of ILO's core Conventions continued, with 11 ratifications by eight countries since June 2004, resulting in six countries being added to the list of member States having ratified all of ILO's core Conventions. As at 29 April, 109 States had ratified all eight fundamental Conventions, 26 had ratified seven of them and total ratifications obtained for the instruments had amounted to 1,236 or 87 per cent of the possible 1,424 ratifications.

Employment and development

ILO continued in 2005 to help constituents combat unemployment and poverty through the creation of employment opportunities and improvement of existing jobs. It provided advice and guidance on employment and labour market policies and information and statistical systems. Activities to promote employment included support to constituents to develop entrepreneurship through the creation of cooperatives and small- and micro-enterprises.

In March, the Office submitted to the Committee on Employment and Social Policy the World Employment Report 2004-2005, which found that were trade-offs to be made in striking the right policy balance between employment and income growth, and between productivity growth and poverty reduction. Focus needed to be on the parts of the economy where the majority of people worked, such as agriculture, small-scale activities in the urban and rural informal economy, and services and manufacturing. In relation to the implementation of the Global Employment Agenda and countries' efforts to place employment as a central goal in economic and social policy-making, the Committee also considered the issues of microfinance and decent work; the employment impact of HIV/AIDS; and technological change for higher productivity, job creation and improved standards of living.

Regarding human resources development, ILO emphasized the need for adaptating training policy and delivery to the rapidly changing skill requirements and special needs of vulnerable groups. It also responded to the needs of countries affected by conflict.

Field activities

In 2005, expenditure on technical cooperation programmes totaled $171.3 million, some $33 million more than in 2004. The leading fields of activity were: the standards and fundamental principles and rights at work sector, with 42.7 per cent ($73.2 million); the employment sector, with 29.4 per cent ($50.3 million); the social protection sector with 12 per cent ($20.5 million); and social dialogue with 10.9 per cent ($18.7 million).

In terms of regional distribution, Africa accounted for 24.2 per cent of total expenditure ($41.4 million); Asia and the Pacific, 28.9 per cent ($49.4 million); Latin America and the Caribbean, 16.7 per cent ($28.6 million); Europe, 6.7 per cent ($11.4 million); and the Arab States, 2.0 per cent ($3.4 million). Interregional and global activities accounted for 21.6 per cent ($36.9 million).

Educational activities

The Turin Centre and the International Institute for Labour Studies, both autonomous institutions within ILO, reported to the ILO Governing Body. The Centre continued to carry out training and related activities in a wide range of technical areas as an integral part of ILO technical cooperation activities. The Institute continued to conduct research, encouraged networking related to emerging labour policy issues, and acted as a catalyst for future ILO programme development.

Secretariat

As at 31 December, ILO employed a total of 2,596 full-time staff, of whom 1,213 were in the Professional and higher categories and 1,383 were in the General Service category.

Budget

ILO, in 2003, had adopted a budget of $529.6 million for the 2004-2005 biennium. At its 2005 session, ILC adopted a budget of $594.3 million for the 2006-2007 biennium.

Chapter III

Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO)

The Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO) continued to work towards achieving sustainable global food security by raising nutrition levels and living standards, improving agricultural productivity and advancing the condition of rural populations.

In 2005, FAO's Council held its one hundred and twenty-eighth (20-24 June), one hundred and twenty-ninth (16-18 November) and one-hundred and thirtieth (28 November) sessions, all in Rome, Italy. The FAO Conference, at its thirty-third session (Rome, 19-26 November), adopted reforms, including streamlining administrative and financial processes and restructuring and greater decentralization of staff and operations to developing countries. The Conference, on the occasion of FAO's sixtieth anniversary, also unanimously adopted a Declaration "Ensuring Humanity's Freedom from Hunger".

As part of the follow-up to the World Food Summits held in 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 1397] and 2002 [YUN 2002, p. 1225], FAO helped its members to prepare strategies towards meeting the goals of halving hunger by 2015 and medium-term food security and agricultural development programmes. With the collaboration of financial institutions, FAO also helped to formulate projects that would hasten a reversal of declining resources to agriculture.

At the Organization's November Conference, FAO member States voted to re-elect Jacques Diouf (Senegal) as Director-General for a third six-year term beginning in January 2006.

In 2005, FAO membership, with the admission of Belarus, increased to 188 countries and the European Union.

World food and hunger situation

In 2005, world cereal production increased sharply, reaching 2.065 billion tonnes, a 9 per cent increase over the previous year. World livestock production was estimated at 268.1 million tonnes of meat and 642.6 million tonnes of milk. World fish output in 2004, the latest year for which data were available, stood at 140.5 million tonnes, of which 45.5 were from aquaculture. World capture fisheries production was 95.0 million tonnes, a 5 per cent increase from 2003.

As at October, the number of countries facing serious food shortages world-wide, stood at 39, with 25 in Africa, 11 in Asia, two in Latin America and the Caribbean, and one in Europe. While causes varied, civil strife, adverse weather, including drought, predominated. The HIV/AIDS pandemic was another major contributing factor. Figures indicated that some 852 million people worldwide were chronically undernourished. The Organization calculated that every year that hunger persisted, it would cause death and disability that would affect developing countries future productivity to the value of $500 billion or more.

Activities

FAO continued to provide emergency assistance in the agricultural, livestock and fisheries sectors of developing countries affected by exceptional natural or man-made calamities. Over $400 million in funding for emergency and rehabilitation projects was approved for some 70 countries and regions in 2004-2005, including responses to hurricanes in the Caribbean, drought in the Horn of Africa, armed conflict in the Sudan and the December 2004 tsunami in Asia [YUN 2004, p. 952].

Through its field programmes, FAO provided technical assistance in food and agriculture, fisheries, forestry and rural development totalling $418.1 million, which comprised $170.5 million for emergency agricultural rehabilitation and $247.6 million for development and technical support. FAO's Investment Centre organized more than 600 field missions for some 140 investment projects in 100 countries. The Special Programme for Food Security assisted developing countries, particularly low-income food-deficit countries, to improve national and household food security on an economically and environmentally sustainable basis. By year's end, 102 countries were participating in the programme.

In 2005, FAO continued to participate in activities related to plant biological diversity; crop management and diversification; seed production and improvement; crop protection; agricultural engineering; prevention of food losses; and food and agricultural industries. It also contributed to the development of animal production and health programmes, improved processing and commercialization, as well as better control of animal diseases. The Global Rinderpest Eradication Programme continued its work to eliminate the fatal livestock virus by 2010. Asia was considered free of the disease and the only remaining suspect area was in the Horn of Africa.

The FAO Forestry Department continued its work in forest resource management, policy and planning, and products. It hosted the secretariat of the International Partnership for Sustainable Development in Mountain Regions and continued to work with non-governmental organizations, Governments and the private sector in promoting support for mountain livelihoods, especially for the 270 million mountain people living in developing and transition countries who were suffering from hunger.

The FAO Fisheries Department promoted the sustainable development of responsible fisheries and contributed to food security through activities in fishery resources, policy, industries and information. Implementation of the FAO Code of Conduct for Responsible Fisheries was a priority. At its 2005 meeting, the FAO Committee on Fisheries adopted a set of voluntary guidelines for the ecolabelling of fish products.

FAO provided technical assistance in plant breeding, the safe movement of germplasm, as well as associated systems. Following the 2004 entry into force of the International Treaty on Plant Genetic Resources for Food and Agriculture [YUN 2004, p. 1487], an FAO expert consultation in 2005 recommended that any responsible deployment of genetically modified crops should comprise the whole technology development process, from the pre-release risk assessment to biosafety considerations and post-release monitoring.

During the year, the Codex Alimentarius Commission, responsible for implementing the joint FAO/World Health Organization Food Standards Programme, adopted over 20 new and amended food standards, which included guidelines on vitamin and mineral food supplements and a code of practice to minimize and contain the use of antimicrobials drugs, such as antibiotics in the treatment of human illnesses and animal production.

Secretariat

As at 31 December, FAO employed 3,798 full-time staff, of whom 1,619 were in the Professional or higher categories and 2,179 were in the General Service category.

Budget

The regular programme budget for the 2004-2005 biennium totaled $749.1 million. In November, the FAO Conference approved a $765.7 million work programme for the 2006-2007 biennium.

Chapter IV

United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO)

In 2005, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) continued to promote cooperation in education, science, culture and communication among its member States. The biennial General Conference, at its thirty-third session (Paris, 3-21 October), adopted the organization's 2006-2007 programme budget. The 58-member Executive Board held its one hundred and seventy-first (12-28 April), one hundred and seventy-second (13-29 September) and one hundred and seventy-third (24 October) sessions, all in Paris.

In 2005, UNESCO membership increased to 191 member States, plus six associate members.

Activities

Education

As the lead agency for the United Nations Decade of Education for Sustainable Development (2005-2014) (DESD), launched on 1 March, UNESCO finalized and approved the International Implementation Scheme, providing DESD with a framework for integrating the principles, values and practices of sustainable development into all aspects of education and learning.

UNESCO convened the sixth meeting of the Education For All (EFA) Working Group (Paris, 19-21 July) and the fifth meeting of the EFA High-Level Group (Beijing, China, 28-30 November), which stressed the need for increased focus on basic education, particularly in neglected areas, such as adult literacy and education for rural people. A Ministerial Round Table on EFA (Paris, 7-8 October) emphasized the need for integrated partnerships between Governments and national and international partners. At the General Conference, UNESCO was asked to strengthen its advocacy for EFA and its coordination role by further developing the EFA Global Action Plan.

UNESCO organized the International Conference on the Right to Basic Education as a Fundamental Human Right and the Legal Framework for its Financing (Jakarta, Indonesia, 2-4 December), which adopted a set of recommendations made by high-level experts (Jakarta Declaration). It promoted cooperation between UN agencies and disability organizations on the right to education and the importance of inclusion as a strategy for achieving EFA. In 2005, UNESCO issued reporting guidelines on the implementation of the Convention and the Recommendation against Discrimination in Education.

UNESCO and the Organisation for Economic Development and Cooperation (OECD), implemented a global policy review project on early childhood care and education to help countries identify measures to develop and implement policies to expand access, improve quality and ensure equity. It also provided capacity-building opportunities for government officials on EFA in early childhood and published the UNESCO Policy Brief series on early childhood.

Three core initiatives were launched in 2005 by UNESCO: the Literacy Initiative for Empowerment, which targeted countries with high illiteracy rates or illiterate populations of over 10 million; the Teacher Training Initiative for sub-Saharan Africa, which reinforced national capacities to attract and train quality teachers; and the Global Initiative on HIV/AIDS and Education, which assisted countries in moving towards a comprehensive education sector response to the epidemic.

Natural sciences

In 2005, UNESCO continued its involvement in the Global Earth Observation System of Systems to help countries identify and address challenges, such as climate change and natural disasters. Following the December 2004 Indian Ocean tsunami [YUN 2004, p. 952], the UNESCO Intergovernmental Oceanographic Commission [ibid., p. 1488] worked to coordinate a Tsunami Early Warning and Mitigation System for the region and to promote partnerships to develop warning systems for hazards in other ocean basins. UNESCO's disaster programme also contributed to the World Conference on Disaster Reduction (Kobe, Japan, 18-22 January) (see p. 1015). Other progress included the training of over 200 water specialists from developing countries by UNESCO's Institute for Water Education; the General Conference's approval of four additional water centres to cover ecohydrology, floods, arid lands, and water law and policy; and the publication of a 12-volume series entitled "Water and Ethics" in cooperation with the World Commission on the Ethics of Scientific Knowledge and Technology.

Social and human sciences

At its General Conference, UNESCO adopted the Universal Declaration on Bioethics and Human Rights, which dealt with ethical issues raised by medicine, life sciences and associated technologies as applied to human beings, taking into account their social, legal and environmental dimensions. The International Convention against Doping in Sport was also adopted.

UNESCO's Executive board adopted the Intersectoral Strategy on Philosophy, which would guide the social and human sciences sector in activities in the field of philosophy, based on three pillars of action: philosophy facing world problems; teaching philosophy in the world; and promotion of philosophical thought and research.

The European Regional Coalition, launched in 2004 [YUN 2004, p. 1489] as part of the International Coalition of Cities against Racism and Discrimination, became operational in 2005. Over 50 cities had joined the network and progress had been achieved toward the launch of other regional coalitions in Africa, Asia and the Pacific, and Latin America and the Caribbean in 2006.

Culture

UNESCO continued its activities to safeguard tangible cultural heritage in post-conflict situations. Within the framework of the 2003 Convention for the Safeguarding of the Intangible Cultural Heritage [YUN 2003, p. 1513], the Director-General proclaimed 43 Masterpieces of the Oral and Intangible Heritage of Humanity to raise awareness regarding the importance of safeguarding vulnerable expressions of cultural heritage. By December, 181 States were parties to the 1972 Convention Concerning the Protection of the World Cultural and Natural Heritage. Other activities included the launching of the UNESCO Cultural Heritage Laws Database in February, and the African World Heritage Fund at the twenty-ninth session of the World Heritage Committee (Durban, South Africa, 10-17 July). The General Conference also adopted the Convention on the Protection and Promotion of the Diversity of Cultural Expressions, devoted to those cultural expressions conveyed by cultural activities, goods and services.

Communication

In 2005, UNESCO participated in the second phase of the World Summit on the Information Society (Tunis, Tunisia, 16-18 November) (see p. 933), organizing three events and an exhibition to promote the concept of building "knowledge societies". UNESCO continued to promote freedom of expression and press freedom, worldwide and to lead major programmatic approaches to media assistance in conflict and post-conflict countries, including through its International Programme for the Development of Communication.

Supporting youth and a culture of peace

UNESCO continued its cooperation with youth and intergovernmental organizations. It convened the fourth UNESCO Youth Forum (Paris, 30 September–2 October), which focused on the theme "Young people and the Dialogue Among Civilizations, Cultures and Peoples—Ideas for Action in Education, Sciences, Culture and Communication." Discussions at the Youth Visioning for Island Living Youth Forum (Port Louis, Mauritius, 7-12 January), produced the "Youth Visioning Declaration".

Secretariat

As at 31 December, UNESCO employed 2,113 full-time staff, of whom 1,044 were in the Professional or higher categories and 1,069 were in the General Service category.

Budget

In October, the UNESCO General Conference approved a budget of $610 million for the 2006-2007 biennium.

Chapter V

World Health Organization (WHO)

In 2005, the World Health Organization (WHO) continued to implement its corporate strategy to reduce mortality, morbidity and disability; promote healthy lifestyles and reduce health risk factors; develop health systems that were equitable and responsive to demands; develop an enabling policy and institutional environment in the health sector; and promote an effective health dimension to social, environmental and development policy. Priority areas included malaria, tuberculosis, cancer, cardiovascular diseases and diabetes, tobacco, mental health, making pregnancy safer and children's health, HIV/AIDS, health and the environment, food safety, health systems and blood safety.

The World Health Assembly, WHO's governing body, at its fifty-eighth session (Geneva, 16-25 May), adopted the revised International Health Regulations (2005), which provided a framework for global alert and response to public health emergencies of international concern and for strengthening national core capacities. The Assembly established World Blood Donor Day as an official annual event to be celebrated every 14 June and welcomed a new Global Immunization Strategy. It also adopted resolutions on a wide range of subjects, including strengthening pandemic-influenza preparedness, blood safety, international migration of health personnel, sustainable financing for tuberculosis prevention and control, elimination of iodine deficiency disorders, universal coverage of maternal, newborn and child health interventions, and adequate infant and young child nutrition. The importance of accelerating the achievement of the internationally agreed health-related goals, particularly those contained in the 2000 Millennium Declaration [YUN 2000, p. 49], was also stressed.

The one hundred and fifteenth session of the WHO Executive Board (Geneva, 17-24 January) considered the effects of the earthquake and tsunami in south Asia in December 2004 [YUN 2004, p. 952] and adopted a resolution to ensure strong support from the international community in humanitarian crises; endorsed the proposal for an expanded global smallpox vaccine reserve; and committed to the goal of eradicating poliomyelitis. At its one hundred and sixteenth session (Geneva, 26-27 May), the Board discussed international trade and health, genetic diseases control, nutrition and HIV/AIDS and the global public health response to accidental or deliberate use of biological and chemical agents that caused harm.

In 2005, WHO membership remained at 192, with two associate members.

2005 activities

During the year, WHO's epidemic alert and response operations were reinforced, the Global Outbreak Alert and Response Network was expanded and the WHO Strategic Health Operations Centre became fully operational. WHO provided effective leadership in surveillance, risk assessment, scientific research, capacity strengthening and operational response to the emerging threat of avian influenza and preparedness for a possible influenza pandemic. A senior WHO staff member was assigned to coordinate the UN system response to the avian influenza and a possible human influenza pandemic.

On 27 February, the WHO Framework Convention on Tobacco Control [YUN 2003, p. 1514] entered into force for its first 40 contracting Parties. The treaty provisions contained measures, such as tobacco advertising bans, tobacco price and tax increases, health warning labels on tobacco products and restrictions to protect people from second-hand tobacco smoke.

The WHO/UNAIDS "3 by 5 " initiative, with the goal of putting three million people living with HIV/AIDS on antiretroviral treatment (ARVs) by the end of 2005, provided evidence that it was possible to deliver such treatment in resource-limited settings and that major expansion of treatment was feasible in some of the poorest and most affected countries. The number of people receiving ARVs globally increased threefold between 2003 and 2005. Treatment and preventive efforts were also intensified for malaria and tuberculosis, including the formulation of a new strategy to stop tuberculosis (STOP TB), urgently needed in Africa where the WHO regional committee had declared the disease a regional emergency. Treatment was delivered to some 65 countries by the STOP TB Partnership's Global Drug Facility. WHO also procured and distributed insecticide-treated nets to protect vulnerable people from mosquitoes that transmitted malaria. Continuing WHO's global efforts to eradicate poliomyelitis, two countries had announced confirmation of no indigenous poliovirus for over 12 months, thereby reducing the number of polio-endemic countries to an all-time low of four. In addition, international efforts had stopped an epidemic in all but eight re-infected countries.

The year was marked by the need for unprecedented international response in the aftermath of natural disasters, and presented WHO and its partners with considerable logistical challenges. WHO was actively involved in the world's largest relief operation to help survivors of the Indian Ocean tsunami [YUN 2004, p. 952] by providing temporary health services, while efforts began to rebuild hospitals, clinics, pharmacies and medical stores. WHO also provided prompt support to the Government of Pakistan in the aftermath of the devastating South Asia earthquake. In both situations, WHO's early warning system, in relation to reports of infectious diseases, contributed to avoiding major disease outbreaks.

The WHO World Health Report 2005–Make every mother and child count emphasized that most of the deaths among children under five years of age were attributable to only a few conditions, which were avoidable through existing interventions, and called for a greater use of those interventions. It advocated a "continuum of care" approach for mother and child that would begin before pregnancy and extend through childbirth and into the baby's childhood. Working together with a wide range of partners, WHO launched a series of related initiatives. The Health Metrics Network was created to increase the availability and use of timely, reliable health information and a new Partnership for Maternal, Newborn and Child Health was launched, in which the world's leading professionals in that field formally joined forces to initiate efforts to achieve the international development goals for child and maternal health.

Secretariat

As at 31 December, WHO employed a staff of 4,329, including 1,704 in the Professional and higher categories and 2,347 in the General Service category. The remaining 278 were employed under other contracts. In addition, 3,968 staff held temporary appointments, including consultants.

Budget

WHO, in 2003, had adopted a budget of $880.1 million for the 2004-2005 biennium. Extrabudgetary resources were expected to reach approximately $1,824.5 million, leading to a total effective budget of $2,704.6 million. However, that was later revised to $2,824.1 million. In 2005, the World Health Assembly adopted a total effective budget of $3,313.4 million for the 2006-2007 biennium, an increase of 17 per cent over the previous biennium.

Chapter VI

World Bank (IBRD and IDA)

The World Bank consisted of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development (IBRD) and the International Development Association (IDA). Collectively, the following five institutions were known as the World Bank Group: IBRD, IDA, the International Finance Corporation (IFC) (see p. 1576), the Multilateral Investment Guarantee Agency (MIGA) and the International Centre for Settlement of Investment Disputes (ICSID). On 1 June, Paul Wolfowitz (United States) became the World Bank's tenth President.

In fiscal 2005 (1 July 2004–30 June 2005), the World Bank continued to promote sustainable economic development by providing loans, guarantees and related technical assistance for projects and programmes in developing countries. It also maintained a leading role in the debt relief process under the Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Initiative, in order to increase resources for poverty reduction. The second Global Monitoring Report, published by the Bank and IMF in April, assessed progress towards achieving the Millennium Development Goals (MDGs) [YUN 2000, p. 51]. The Bank had committed more than $2.5 billion to fighting HIV/AIDS in 67 countries. It provided support for expanding prevention, care, treatment, and advisory services to countries and promoted leadership through its global partnerships, especially as a co-sponsor of the Joint United Nations Programme on HIV/AIDS.

At the end of fiscal 2005, IBRD membership remained at 184.

Lending operations

IBRD continued to promote sustainable development through loans, guarantees, risk management products and non-lending, including analytical and advisory services. As at 30 June, its cumulative lending totalled $407.4 billion.

IBRD's lending in fiscal 2005 totalled $13.6 billion for 118 new operations in 37 countries, compared to $11 billion in 2004 for 87 operations in 33 countries. The figure represented the highest volume of IBRD lending in the previous six fiscal years. IBRD lending commitments were highest in Latin America and the Caribbean ($4.9 billion), followed by Europe and Central Asia ($3.6 billion) and South Asia ($2.1 billion). Public administration, including law and justice, received the highest volume of IBRD lending, with $3.4 billion, followed by transportation, with $2.1 billion, and water, sanitation, and flood protection, with $1.6 billion.

In fiscal 2005, the four largest borrowers were Brazil, China, Colombia, India and Turkey, which collectively accounted for 53 per cent of total IBRD lending.

International Development Association

Established in 1960 as the Bank's concessional lending arm, IDA provided interest-free loans and other services to low-income countries to reduce poverty and improve the quality of life. In fiscal 2005, IDA commitments totalled $8.7 billion for 160 operations in 66 countries, compared with $9 billion for 158 operations in 62 countries in fiscal 2004 [YUN 2004, p. 1492]. In addition, IDA provided $2 billion in grants and a guarantee for $0.1 billion. Africa received the largest commitment of IDA resources with $3.9 billion, constituting 45 per cent of total IDA commitments. South Asia and East Asia and the Pacific followed, with $2.9 billion and $1.1 billion, respectively.

In fiscal 2005, about 21 per cent of total IDA financing was provided in the form of grants to the following clients and projects: debt-vulnerable poorest countries ($897 million); post conflict countries ($463 million); poorest countries ($316 million); HIV/AIDS projects ($133 million); and natural disaster reconstruction projects ($49 million).

Public administration, including law and justice, was the leading sector receiving IDA support, with $2.2 billion, or 26 percent of the total.

At the end of fiscal 2005, IDA membership remained at 165 countries.

International Centre for Settlement of Investment Disputes

ICSID, established in 1966, continued to encourage foreign investments by providing international facilities for coordination and arbitration of investment disputes. In fiscal 2005, 25 cases were registered with the Centre. ICSID also conducted research and publishing activities in arbitration and foreign investment law.

In 2005, ICSID membership increased to 142.

Multilateral Investment Guarantee Agency

The Multilateral Investment Guarantee Agency (MIGA), established in 1988, continued to encourage foreign direct investment in developing countries by providing guarantees to foreign investors against losses caused by non-commercial risks. It also provided technical assistance and advisory services to help developing countries strengthen the capacity of investment promotion intermediaries and disseminate information on investment opportunities. In fiscal 2005, MIGA issued $1.2 billion in guarantee coverage, for a cumulative total of $14.7 billion. Its membership remained at 165 countries.

World Bank Institute

The World Bank Institute continued to provide client countries with capacity development programmes, and used knowledge economy, governance and other diagnostic tools to assess critical country capacities. In fiscal 2005, the Institute helped civil society organizations from Benin, Guatemala, Guinea, Sierra Leone and Zambia to develop governance and anti-corruption assessments. Nearly 110,000 clients participated in more than 900 Institute activities, many through distance and e-learning.

Co-financing

Co-financing constituted an arrangement under which funds from the Bank were associated with funds provided by sources outside the recipient country for a specific lending project or programme. Major co-financing partners included the Inter-American Development Bank and the United Kingdom's Department for International Development. By region, most of the co-financing went to Latin America and the Caribbean ($3.3 billion), followed by Africa ($1.7 billion) and South Asia ($1.7 billion).

Financial activities

During fiscal 2005, IBRD raised $13 billion in medium- and long-term debt, roughly the same as in fiscal 2004. IBRD was able to borrow high volumes for long maturities on favorable terms, as a result of its prudent financial policies and practices. Debt securities, with a wide range of maturities and structures, were issued in 13 currencies. As at 30 June, IBRD's outstanding borrowings from capital markets were about $91.5 billion (net of swaps). Total disbursed and outstanding loans were $104.4 billion.

Capitalization

As at 30 June, the total authorized capital of IBRD was $190,811 million, of which $189,718 million had been subscribed. Of the subscribed capital, $11,483 million had been paid in and $178,235 million was callable.

Income and reserves

IBRD's net income was $1.3 billion in fiscal 2005, down from $2.4 billion in fiscal 2004. As at 30 June 2005, the Bank's liquid asset portfolio was $26.4 billion, down from $31 billion in fiscal 2004.

Secretariat

In 2005, the work of IBRD and IDA was performed by some 8,700 staff working in Washington, D.C., and in more than 100 country offices worldwide. A growing proportion of the Bank's work was being done in country offices.

Chapter VII

International Finance Corporation (IFC)

The International Finance Corporation (IFC), part of the World Bank Group, continued in fiscal 2005 (1 July 2004-30 June 2005) to promote sustainable growth in developing countries by financing private sector investments, helping to mobilize capital in international financial markets and providing technical assistance and advice to Governments and businesses. To address the environmental and social consequences of development, IFC continued to focus on sustainability as a priority in its investment and advisory activities.

During fiscal 2005, IFC membership increased to 178.

Financial and advisory services

In fiscal 2005, IFC's total committed portfolio amounted to $19.3 billion, of which $6.5 billion was committed to 236 new projects in 67 countries. Of the $6.45 billion, $5.37 billion came from IFC's own account, and the remaining $1.08 billion was mobilized from other financial institutions. IFC established the Global Trade Finance Programme, which helped banks deliver trade financing by providing risk coverage in difficult markets. It increased investments in renewable sources of energy and helped develop the market for carbon finance.

The Foreign Investment Advisory Service (FIAS) assisted Governments in developing policies and institutions to attract more foreign investment. FIAS completed 74 projects in fiscal 2005, including 16 knowledge management activities. Four regional learning events on investment climate issues were held in Bangkok, Thailand; Cape Town, South Africa; Istanbul, Turkey; and Washington, D. C.

Cumulative contributions to all donor-funded operations managed by IFC reached $1.1 billion through fiscal 2005. The donor community provided cumulative contributions of $203 million to support the Technical Assistance Trust Funds (TATF) programme, which included $17.8 million from IFC's own resources. Donors had approved more than 1,480 technical assistance projects through the programme since its inception in 1988. IFC created the Funding Mechanism for Technical Assistance and Advisory Services, which earmarked a portion of the Corporation's retained earnings as a contribution to support donor-funded operations and other technical assistance and advisory projects. Using funds designated from fiscal 2004 earnings, funding was approved for 46 activities and projects in the amount of $225 million over a six-year period. Expenditure in 2005 was $63 million.

Regional projects

In fiscal 2005, more than 55 per cent of IFC's new investments, for which IFC committed $6.5 billion, were in the financial sector, infrastructure, information technology and health and education.

IFC addressed Africa's development needs by expanding its programmes for smaller businesses, which constituted much of Africa's private sector. For larger projects, the strategy targeted more support at the formative stages of project development, thus expanding IFC's role beyond the provision of finance. IFC's commitments in the region totalled $1.9 billion for 30 projects in 14 countries.

In East Asia and the Pacific, IFC focused on developing stronger banks, strengthening the financial sector through technical assistance and investments in non-bank financial institutions, and promoting the growth of the region's domestic companies. IFC's commitments in the region totalled $3.8 billion for 40 projects in 11 countries.

In South Asia, which remained one of the world's fastest growing regions, IFC promoted sustainable private sector growth through investments in projects that had a high developmental impact. It also provided technical assistance, which helped improve client sustainability, strengthen smaller businesses and support community development programmes. IFC's commitments in the region totalled $2 billion for 20 projects in two countries.

In Europe and Central Asia, IFC was involved in the restructuring and privatization of the financial sector. It continued to support private banks, which improved access to finance for local private companies and smaller businesses. It also fostered the development of non-bank financial institutions, especially in housing finance and leasing. IFC's commitments in the region totalled $6.4 billion for 67 projects in 15 countries.

In Latin America and the Caribbean, IFC financed three operations totalling $96 million in the energy sector, with an emphasis on environmentally friendly sources of energy and on reducing harmful emissions. It also introduced innovative financial products into local capital markets, giving clients new sources of long-term financing, while helping them avoid foreign exchange risk. IFC's commitments in the region totaled $8.3 billion for 54 projects in 17 countries.

IFC's strategy in the Middle East and North Africa aimed to address the main challenges of the region, including employment creation and increased investment. In fiscal 2005, IFC focused on developmental sectors, such as housing and the development of smaller enterprises, and increased its activities related to infrastructure. It used technical assistance to reach its goals and introduce best practices. IFC's total commitment in the region amounted to $1.9 billion for 21 projects in eight countries.

Financial performance

In fiscal 2005, IFC's operating income was $2 billion, compared with $982 million in fiscal 2004. IFC's total committed portfolio at the end of fiscal 2005 was $19.3 billion, up from $17.9 billion in fiscal 2004. The portfolio consisted of loans, equity investments, guarantees and risk management products in 1,314 companies in 119 countries.

Capital and retained earnings

As at 30 June, IFC's net worth reached $9.8 billion, compared with $7.8 billion at the end of fiscal 2004.

Secretariat

IFC employed more than 2,400 staff, representing more than 120 nationalities.

Chapter VIII

International Monetary Fund (IMF)

In 2005, the International Monetary Fund (IMF) continued to work with its members to foster sustainable growth and financial stability through surveillance activities and policy advice; lending, in support of stabilization and reform programmes, and providing technical assistance in formulating sound policies and building robust institutions. IMF supported low-income developing countries through low-interest loans under the poverty reduction and growth facility (PRGF), and through debt relief under the enhanced Heavily Indebted Poor Countries (HIPC) Initiative. It also continued to counter money-laundering and combat the financing of terrorism.

In fiscal 2005 (1 May 2004–30 April 2005), which marked the sixtieth anniversary of the Bretton Woods Agreement establishing the IMF and the World Bank, the Fund's membership remained at 184.

IMF facilities and policies

In fiscal 2005, IMF continued to update its lending policies and policy conditionality—the conditions it attached to its financial assistance—to ensure that they met member country needs. In fiscal 2005, IMF appointed Roderigo de Rato as its new Managing Director. Under his leadership, IMF began a broad strategic review of its activities, focusing on how the Fund could best fulfil its mandate, develop priorities for future activities, and identify trade-offs and possible organizational changes. IMF also concluded a number of reviews targeting different aspects of its work, including a biennial review of Fund surveillance at the global, regional, and country levels, and a new review of conditionality. Reports from the Independent Evaluation Office provided the opportunity to review the growing role of IMF technical assistance and the Fund's overall role in relation to the 2001 capital account crisis in Argentina.

During the year, IMF policy advice provided by the Executive Board reflected concerns about rising oil prices and global imbalances.

Financial assistance

New IMF lending commitments in fiscal 2005 totalled 1.3 billion special drawing rights (SDR) compared with SDR 14.5 billion in fiscal 2004. The decline in part reflected favourable financing conditions for emerging market sovereign borrowers.

IMF approved six new standby arrangements totalling over SDR 1.2 billion, and two existing commitments to Bolivia were augmented by SDR 85.8 million. Drawings under PRGF amounted to SDR 434.4 million, and the Executive Board approved augmentations in existing arrangements for Kenya and Bangladesh totalling SDR 53.3 million and SDR 50 million, respectively. IMF also committed SDR 1.8 billion in HIPC grants to 27 countries, of which SDR 1.5 billion was disbursed.

As at 30 April, 12 standby arrangements and extended arrangements, and 31 PRGF arrangements were in effect with members, while outstanding IMF credit amounted to SDR 49.9 billion, compared with SDR 62.2 billion a year earlier. During fiscal 2005, the Fund approved emergency post-conflict assistance to the Central African Republic, Haiti and Iraq. In addition, emergency natural disaster assistance was provided to Grenada, Maldives and Sri Lanka.

Liquidity

As at 30 April, IMF's usable resources totalled SDR 123 billion, a substantial increase from SDR 103.8 billion in fiscal 2004. Net uncommitted usable resources totalled SDR 99.9 billion at the end of fiscal 2005, compared with SDR 75 billion in fiscal 2004.

The Fund's liquid liability totalled SDR 49.8 billion compared with SDR 62.9 billion in 2004, while the ratio of the Fund's net uncommitted usable resource to its liquid liabilities increased to 200.4 per cent at the end of April 2005, from 119.4 per cent a year earlier.

SDR activity

In fiscal 2005, total transfer of SDRs decreased to SDR 10.6 billion, from SDR 13.8 billion in fiscal 2004.

IMF holdings of SDRs in the general resources account (GRA) increased to SDR 0.6 billion, from SDR 0.5 billion in fiscal 2004, while SDRs held by prescribed holders amounted to SDR 0.3 billion. SDR holdings by participants remained unchanged from fiscal 2004 at SDR 20.6 billion. SDR holdings of industrial and net creditor countries relative to their net cumulative allocations decreased from a year earlier. SDR holdings of non-industrial members amounted to 96 per cent of their net cumulative allocations compared with 76 per cent the previous year.

Policy on arrears

As at 30 April, financial obligations to IMF decreased from SDR 2.1 billion in 2004 to SDR 2 billion. The main reason for the decline was Iraq's settlement in September 2004 of its protracted arrears to the Fund. Most arrears were protracted (outstanding for more than six months), with about 45 per cent representing overdue principal and the remainder constituting of overdue charges and interest. Despite a decline in the Sudan's arrears, that country, together with Liberia, accounted for almost 79 per cent of the overdue financial obligations to the Fund, with Somalia and Zimbabwe accounting for the remainder. Under IMF's strengthened cooperative strategy on arrears, remedial measures were applied against the countries with protracted arrears.

Technical assistance and training

During fiscal 2005, IMF expanded and strengthened its technical assistance initiatives in priority areas, including trade facilitation, to stimulate economic growth in low-income countries. The Fund continued to review the effectiveness of its technical assistance programmes and centres, and sought to leverage its resources by cooperating with other technical assistance providers and mobilizing external funding. IMF spent about $80 million each year on technical assistance to member countries.

The IMF Institute continued to strengthen its training curriculum, delivering 124 courses and seminars to over 3,900 participants. Training was focused on four core areas: macroeconomic management, and financial, fiscal, and external sector policies.

Secretariat

As at 31 December, IMF employed 2,693 staff members, of whom 1,999 were Professional staff and 694 managerial and assistant staff.

Budget

The Fund's administrative budget for fiscal 2005 was approved at $905.1 million ($849.6 million, net of estimated reimbursements). In April, the Board approved $937 million ($876.1 million, net of reimbursements) for fiscal 2006.

Chapter IX

International Civil Aviation Organization (ICAO)

The International Civil Aviation Organization (ICAO) continued in 2005 to promote the safety, security and efficiency of civil air transport by prescribing standards and recommending practices and procedures for facilitating international civil aviation operations. Its objectives were set forth in annexes to the Convention on International Civil Aviation, adopted in Chicago, United States, in 1944 (the Chicago Convention).

In 2005, domestic and international scheduled traffic of the world's airlines increased to some 488 billion tonne-kilometres. Passenger traffic during the year increased by about 7 per cent to reach the 2 billion mark for the first time, while freight carriage remained at some 38 million tonnes. The passenger load factor on scheduled services in 2005 increased to about 75 per cent. Air freight increased by around 3 per cent to 142.5 billion tonne-kilometres, while there was little change in airmail traffic, which remained at about 4.6 billion tonne-kilometres. Overall passenger/freight/mail tonne-kilometres increased by some 6 per cent and international tonne-kilometres increased by about 7 per cent.

ICAO observed International Civil Aviation Day (7 December) under the theme "The Greening of Flight—maximizing compatibility between safe and orderly development of civil aviation and the quality of the environment".

In 2005, ICAO membership increased to 189 countries.

Activities

Air navigation

ICAO continued to update and implement international specifications and regional plans, with particular emphasis on aviation safety, efficiency improvements to the air navigation system, and communications, navigation and surveillance/air traffic management (CNS/ATM) systems. The specifications consisted of International Standards and Recommended Practices contained in 18 technical annexes to the Chicago Convention and Procedures for Air Navigation Services (PANS). In that regard, the ICAO Council adopted amendments to eight annexes and approved an amendment to one PANS document.

Other projects that were given special attention in 2005 included: the development of safety enhancement mechanisms, such as the Unified Strategy Programme to assist States; a procedure for transparency and disclosure of information regarding significant compliance shortcomings with respect to safety-related Standards and Recommended Practices; a new comprehensive systems approach to the Universal Safety Oversight Audit Programme; the harmonization of provisions relating to safety management; an increased emphasis on performance-based standards; the protection of the radio-frequency spectrum allocated to aeronautical safety services; aviation medicine issues, including global influenza preparedness; the integration of new, larger airplanes; and the modernization of the air navigation system, including a revision of the Global Air Navigation Plan for CNS/ATM systems.

Air transport

ICAO's air transport programmes were directed towards economic analysis and policy forecasting and planning; collection and publication of air transport statistics; financial management of airports and air navigation services, including user charges; economic aspects of CNS/ATM systems; environmental protection; facilitation of formalities for international air transport operations; and aviation security.

The seventh meeting of the Committee on Aviation Environmental Protection (Montreal, Canada, 3–7 October) reviewed the progress of ICAO's environmental work programme. The Committee was developing a framework to address the interdependencies of environmental measures and was also exploring tools to evaluate the impact of aircraft noise and local and global emissions related to aviation.

ICAO's Council adopted the nineteenth amendment to annex 9 on facilitation; new standards included obligations for all States to begin issuing machine readable passports no later than April 2010 and to allow non-machine readable passports to expire by 2015.

Progress was made in the implementation of the ICAO Aviation Security Plan of Action. Through the Universal Security Audit Programme, 41 States were audited by ICAO aviation security audit teams, bringing the total number of audited States to 105 by year's end. In November, ICAO launched a new programme to address the aviation security challenges faced by its member States. The Aviation Security Coordinated Assistance and Development Programme was established to assist States in aviation security from the perspective of sustainable development and capacity-building.

Legal matters

On 18 April, the 1989 Protocol relating to an amendment to the Convention on International Civil Aviation, which would increase the membership of the Air Navigation Commission from 15 to 19, entered into force.

The Special Group on the Modernization of the 1952 Rome Convention on Damage Caused by Foreign Aircraft to Third Parties on the Surface met from 10 to 14 January and from 4 to 8 July to refine the text of the draft Convention on Damage Caused by Foreign Aircraft to Third Parties. The Group also considered a supplementary compensation mechanism to cover payments to victims beyond the amounts which might be available through insurance to airlines and other aviation entities.

The Preparatory Commission for the International Registry of Mobile Assets held its third meeting (Montreal, 17-18 January), during which it approved regulations for the Registry, the user-fee schedule and the contract with the Registrar. In October, the Preparatory Commission approved procedures for the Registry.

In June, the ICAO Council established the Special Group on Legal Aspects of Emissions Charges, which met in Montreal in September. The Group agreed on key conclusions relating to emissions charges, in particular regarding the interpretation of article 15 of the Convention, on airport and similar changes.

In March, ICAO conducted a survey on legal measures to deal with new and emerging threats to civil aviation. The Council established a Secretariat study group to further examine the issue.

Technical cooperation

In 2005, ICAO undertook 277 technical cooperation projects in 105 countries. The technical cooperation programmes financed by the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) trust funds, management service agreements and the Civil Aviation Purchasing Service had total expenditures of $115.9 million. Over 95 per cent of that amount was provided by Governments to fund their own projects.

A total of 509 fellowships were awarded in 2005, of which 473 were implemented. ICAO employed 463 experts from 44 countries, of whom 30 were on assignment under UNDP-funded projects and 433 worked on trust fund projects. There were 118 Governments and organizations registered with ICAO in 2005 under its Civil Aviation Purchasing Service. Total procurement for 2005 amounted to $88.5 million, compared with $102.5 million in 2004.

Secretariat

As at 31 December, ICAO employed 753 staff members, including 310 in the Professional and higher categories and 443 in the General Service and related categories.

Budget

Appropriations for the ICAO budget in 2005 amounted to $60,707,231.

Chapter X

Universal Postal Union (UPU)

In 2005, the Universal Postal Union (UPU) worked to promote and develop a fast and reliable universal postal service through collaboration among its member countries. UPU's 190 members remained the largest physical distribution network in the world, with more than 5 million postal employees in some 660,000 post offices.

Activities of UPU organs

Universal Postal Congress

The Universal Postal Congress, UPU's supreme legislative authority, which last met in 2004 in Bucharest, Romania [YUN 2004, p. 1500], was scheduled to meet again in 2008, in Nairobi, Kenya.

Council of Administration

The Council of Administration (CA), which ensured the continuity of the Union's work between Congresses and studied regulatory, administrative, legislative and legal issues, held its annual session (Berne, Switzerland, 10-12 October). It adopted two resolutions on classification of countries for the Quality of Service Fund (QSF), as endorsed by the Terminal Dues Governance Issues Project Group. The terminal dues system involved payments postal services made to each other for the delivery of inbound foreign mail.

The first resolution provided the list of countries in the three categories that would receive 16.5 per cent, 8 per cent or 1 per cent QSF payments for 2006. The second resolution set strict criteria and procedures for countries that requested additional QSF resources under exceptional circumstances. The CA approved the current structure and composition of its bodies, as well as workplans for its project groups (2004) and working parties formed since the CA constituent meeting, held during the twenty-third UPU Congress [YUN 2004, p. 1500].

Postal Operations Council

The Postal Operations Council, at its annual session (Berne, 28 January), examined more than 400 proposals to modify the Letter Post and Parcel Post Regulations.

International Bureau

The UPU Bureau continued to provide support, liaison, information and consultation to the postal administrations of member countries. It studied developments in the postal environment, monitored the quality of global postal service and published information and statistics on international postal services. UPU's Postal Technology Centre continued to introduce new technology applications and information solutions to improve the quality, reliability and speed of national and international postal services.

Budget

Under UPU's self-financing system, contributions were payable in advance by member States based on the following year's budget. The CA approved a budget of 71.4 million Swiss francs for the 2005-2006 budget.

Chapter XI

International Telecommunication Union (ITU)

The International Telecommunication Union (ITU) continued in 2005 to promote the worldwide development and efficient operation of telecommunication systems.

At its annual session (Geneva, 12-22 July), the ITU Council discussed preparations for the second phase of the World Summit on the Information Society (WSIS) (see p. 933), the biennial budget for 2006-2007, the issue of cost-recovery of Satellite Network Filings and the financial consequences of eliminating cancellation fees, Internet issues, as well as general provisions regarding conferences.

During the year, the Union staged numerous events, including a number of WSIS-related thematic meetings, and a major trade exhibition showcasing the latest global technological trends (Salvador da Bahia, Brazil, 3-6 October).

ITU membership remained at 189 in 2005.

Radiocommunication Sector

ITU's Radiocommunication Sector (ITU-R) continued to ensure rational, equitable, efficient and economical use of the radio-frequency spectrum by all radiocommunication services, including those using satellite orbits, and to carry out studies and adopt recommendations on radiocommunication matters. Preparatory work for the 2007 Word Radiocommunication Conference began, and inter-sessional work for the Regional Radiocommunication Conference was implemented during 2005. The increased use of electronic documentation improved the efficiency of Study Group meetings and the Procedure for Simultaneous Adoption and Approval of Recommendations (PSAA) was increasingly implemented. During the year, 212 new and revised recommendations were published, covering such topics as the radiocommunication data dictionary for notification and coordination purposes, use of the Internet over satellite networks, technical characteristics of meteorological systems in the optical frequency range, and the future development of International Mobile Telecommunications 2000 and beyond. ITU-R continued to play a major role in the management of the radio-frequency spectrum and satellite orbits.

Telecommunication Standardization Sector

The Telecommunication Standardization Sector (ITU-T) continued to ensure the efficient and timely production of high-quality standards covering all areas of telecommunications. During the year, ITU-T focused on the next generation of information and communication technologies, cybersecurity, home networking, interactive televison, and international Internet connectivity.

ITU-T approved standards that would facilitate enhanced communication capabilities at lower cost, particularly by providing for interworking between dominant technologies in next generation networks (NGN). ITU-T announced a new NGN Global Standards Initiative that would deliver substantial cost savings through the economies of scale inherent in a single converged network providing mix-and-match implementation and global interoperability.

Telecommunication Development Sector

The Telecommunication Development Sector (ITU-D) continued in 2005 to promote investment and foster the expansion of telecommunication infrastructure in developing countries.

The Telecommunication Development Bureau (BDT) continued to assist countries to reform and restructure their telecommunication sectors through the introduction of new technologies, capacity development to ensure sustainability in management and operations, and by promoting financing and partnerships as a strategy to attract investment. Among other publications, the World Telecommunication Indicators report for 2004-2005 was published.

The sixth annual Global Symposium for Regulators (Hammamet, Tunisia, 14-15 November) gathered regulators, policy makers and service providers from 110 countries to develop a new regulatory framework to promote broadband deployment and access in developing countries.

Secretariat

As at 31 December 2005, ITU had 822 staff members, including 5 elected officials.

Chapter XII

World Meteorological Organization (WMO)

In 2005, the World Meteorological Organization (WMO) continued to facilitate worldwide cooperation in the generation and exchange of meteorological and hydrological information and the application of meteorology to aviation, shipping, water problems, agriculture and other activities. During the fifty-seventh session of the WMO Executive Council (Geneva, 21 June–1 July), participants reviewed the activities of WMO and National Meteorological and Hydrological Services (NMHSs). It also addressed several issues, including WMO management reform; WMO Information System; locust menace in North and West Africa; strengthening regional and subregional offices; and strengthening contributions by NMHSs to hydrometeorological risk assessment at the national level.

WMO's membership remained at 181 States and six Territories at the end of 2005.

Observation systems

In 2005, WMO continued work on the redesign and establishment of an improved composite Global Observing System (GOS), which provided standardized observations of the atmosphere and ocean surfaces through surface- and space-based subsystems. Improvements were made in the availability of data produced by GOS's components, notably marine data and data transmitted from commercial aircraft via the Aircraft Meteorological Data Relay (AMDAR) programme.

Improvements in regional observation activities also continued, including: training seminars on climatological data reporting; the establishment of two new lead centres for global surface and upper-air data monitoring by Australia and Iran, respectively; and the revision of AMDAR training requirements for NMHSs. WMO also continued observation activities in the areas of atmospheric composition, the ozone, climate variability and water resources. In October, the Finnish Meteorological Institute and WMO signed a memorandum of understanding establishing a secretariat in Helsinki to develop an implementation plan for Integrated Global Atmospheric Observations of the ozone (IGACO-Ozone). To assist countries in maintaining their systems for acquiring water-related information and disseminating it to decision makers and various stakeholders, WMO developed the World Hydrological Cycle Observing System (WHYCOS) programme.

World Climate Programme

The World Climate Programme continued to contribute to the infrastructure and human resources capabilities of NMHSs in climate monitoring, prediction and data management for improved climate services, especially in developing countries.

Natural disaster prevention and mitigation

In 2005, progress was made in the area of disaster prevention and mitigation. WMO contributed to the restructured and strengthened International Strategy for Disaster Reduction (ISDR) System for the implementation of the Hyogo Framework for Action: (2005-2015), adopted at the Second World Conference on Disaster Reduction (Kobe, Japan, 18-22 January) (see p. 1015). WMO ensured that strategic areas were reflected in all aspects of the Conference deliberations and outcome documents. Other efforts of WMO in the area of disaster prevention and mitigation included flood management and the coordination of emergency responses to technical and environmental disasters. WMO played an active role in the Indian Ocean tsunami aftermath (see p. 1024), and helped identify gaps in the development of an Indian Ocean Tsunami Early Warning System. It also provided emergency assistance to NMHSs in the South West Pacific and in Afghanistan, Iraq, and in Pakistan following the 8 October earthquake.

Research

In 2005, WMO established advisory boards and working groups for the Observing System Research and Predictability Experiment (THORPEX), and, with the assistance of WMO's regional commissions, programmes of work were developed for a Southern Hemisphere THORPEX Science Plan.

The World Climate Research Programme (WCRP), established in 1980 as a principal component of the World Climate Programme, pursued its objectives through research and observatorial and modelling activities that required international commitment, coordination and collaboration. Significant progress was made in the implementation of a new 10-year strategic framework entitled Coordinated Observation and Prediction of the Earth System. The main aim of that strategy was to facilitate the analysis and prediction of earth system variability and change for use in an increasing range of practical applications of direct relevance, benefit and value to society.

Applications of meteorology

The Applications of Meteorology Programme continued to focus on enhancing the capability of WMO members to provide comprehensive weather and related services, stressing public safety and welfare, and helping the public to understand better NMHS capabilities and how to benefit from them. A major event in 2005 was the Technical Conference on Public Weather Services (St. Petersburg, Russian Federation, 21-22 February), which discussed some of the key advances in technology that were impacting on the range and quality of public weather services provided by NMHSs. Among other developments, the World Area Forecasting System became fully operational on 1 July, providing high-quality forecasts of upper-level winds, temperatures and significant weather.

Hydrology and water resources

The International Decade for Action "Water for Life" (2005-2015), proclaimed by the General Assembly in 2003 [YUN 2003, p. 1034], was launched on 22 March by the Secretary-General, with the primary goal of fulfilling water-related MDGs. WMO participated actively in UN-Water (Global) meetings to ensure better coordination and collaboration with other UN agencies. In March, WMO was selected to chair the regional body in Africa of UN-Water for a period of two years, and worked to support the African Ministers Council on Water to assist African countries in promoting the concept of integrated water resources management. WMO also took part in the third session of the Committee for the Review of the Implementation of the United Nations Convention to Combat Desertification (Bonn, Germany, 2-11 May).

Technical cooperation

In 2005, WMO technical assistance, valued at $17.73 million, was financed by the Voluntary Cooperation Programme ($10.28 million), the United Nations Development Programme ($0.27 million), trust funds ($6.46 million) and WMO regular budget ($0.72 million).

Secretariat

As at 31 December 2005, WMO staff totalled 252.

Budget

A regular budget of 127,169,800 Swiss francs (SwF) for the 2004-2005 biennium was approved by the WMO Executive Council in 2003. The Fourteenth World Meteorological Congress, in 2003, approved a maximum expenditure of SwF 253,800,000 for the fourteenth financial period (2004-2007).

Chapter XIII

International Maritime Organization (IMO)

In 2005, the International Maritime Organization (IMO) continued to facilitate cooperation to improve the safety and security of international shipping and to protect the maritime environment.

IMO's twenty-fourth Assembly (London, 21 November–2 December) adopted 22 resolutions on measures and procedures to strengthen maritime security. It also agreed that IMO should develop a new legally-binding instrument on ship recycling, for consideration and adoption in the 2008-2009 biennium.

In 2005, IMO membership increased to 166 with three associate members.

Activities in 2005

Prevention of pollution

In 2005, the IMO's Marine Environment Protection Committee (MEPC) approved new Guidelines for the Facilitation of Response to a Pollution Incident, which provided concrete guidance on the movement of equipment and personnel across national borders during an oil spill emergency. In addition, a series of web pages on oil spill resources was developed as part of IMO's website to facilitate access to technical information and assistance.

A revised scheme for phasing out single hull oil tankers and a new regulation that banned the carriage of heavy grade oil in single hull tankers entered into force on 5 April. The Regulations for the Prevention of Air Pollution from Ships, contained in Annex VI of the International Convention for the Prevention of Pollution from Ships, 1973, as modified by the Protocol of 1978 relating thereto (MARPOL 73/78), entered into force on 19 May. The regulations set limits on sulphur oxide and nitrogen oxide emissions from ship exhausts.

IMO designated the Torres Straight, the Canary Islands, the Galapagos Archipelago and the Baltic Sea as four new Particularly Sensitive Sea Areas (PSSA).

Ship security and safety at sea

In 2005, IMO's Maritime Safety Committee adopted a number of amendments to the International Convention for the Safety of Life at Sea, aimed at enhancing the safety of ships. In October, a Diplomatic Conference adopted the Protocol to the Convention for the Suppression of Unlawful Acts Against the Safety of Maritime Navigation, 1988 (SUA) [YUN 1988, p. 968], and the Protocol to the Suppression of Unlawful Acts against the Safety of Fixed Platforms Located on the Continental Shelf.

IMO's Secretary-General and the Government of the Republic of Indonesia convened a meeting on enhancing safety, security and environmental protection (Jakarta, Indonesia 7-8 September), which adopted the Jakarta Statement on the Enhancement of Safety, Security, and Environmental Protection in the Straits of Malacca and Singapore.

IMO published the Code of Safety for Fishermen and Fishing Vessels, 2005, and the Voluntary Guidelines for the Design, Construction, and Equipment of Small Fishing Vessels, 2005.

Secretariat

As at 31 December, IMO had 275 staff members, of whom 128 were in the Professional and higher categories and 147 were in the General Service category.

Budget

The IMO Assembly, in 2005, approved budget appropriations of 49,730,300 pounds sterling for the 2006-2007 biennium.

Chapter XIV

World Intellectual Property Organization (WIPO)

The World Intellectual Property Organization (WIPO) continued to help ensure that the rights of creators and owners of intellectual property (IP) were protected worldwide, thus ensuring that inventors and authors were recognized and rewarded for their ingenuity.

During 2005, WIPO membership increased to 183. The number of States adhering to the treaties administered by WIPO also increased: as at 31 December, 168 States were parties to the Paris Convention for the Protection of Industrial Property, 160 to the Berne Convention for the Protection of Literary and Artistic Works, and 128 to the Patent Cooperation Treaty.

World Intellectual Property Day was celebrated on 26 April under the theme "Think, Imagine, Create".

Activities in 2005

Development cooperation

During 2005, WIPO undertook country- and sector-specific activities to assist developing countries in optimizing their protection systems for innovators, businesses, public research institutions and academia. Strategic sectors of the organization worked closely with its regional bureaux to develop programmes and events tailored to the needs of each member State. WIPO assisted the national intellectual property offices of Burkina Faso, Cameroon, Côte d'Ivoire, Ecuador, Guinea and Sri Lanka in placing geographical indications, or signs on goods that possessed qualities or a reputation due to their place of origin. It worked with Bhutan, Lebanon and Tanzania to develop national trademarks and branding strategies. WIPO also assessed the extent of IP use in selected African countries and carried out a peer review among members and potential members of the African Regional Intellectual Property Organization; assisted developing countries and economies in transition with national surveys assessing the economic contribution of their creative sectors; and carried out 68 office automation assistance projects in 53 member States. WIPO also helped to organize a Seminar on Intellectual Property and Development (Geneva, May 2-3) to address the establishment of a development-agenda for WIPO.

Intellectual property law

In 2005, the Standing Committee on the Law of Patents (SCP)—one of three WIPO committees dealing with legal matters—considered ways to advance discussions on the provisions of the draft Substantive Patent Law Treaty, which would provide common requirements for patent applications in different countries, improve the quality of granted patents, and facilitate the sharing of search and examination results between interested countries. At the General Assembly's sixtieth (2005) session, members decided to hold an Open Forum on the draft treaty in 2006 and convene an informal session of the Standing Committee on the Law of Patents to agree on a work programme.

Work continued in the Standing Committee on Copyright and Related Rights (SCCR) on proposals to update the IP rights of broadcasting organizations in the light of new technologies and a growing signal piracy problem, including piracy of pre-broadcast signals. SCCR held six regional consultation meetings on the protection of broadcasting organizations, and in November, at its thirteenth session, examined questions concerning the scope of the proposed new treaty on broadcasters' rights, the economic rights to be granted, and the duration of the protection.

On 28 April, the Patent Law Treaty, adopted in 2000 [YUN 2000, p. 1440] and designed to streamline national or regional requirements for the filing and prosecution of patent applications and the maintenance of patents, entered into force.

Arbitration and Mediation Centre

In 2005, WIPO's Arbitration and Mediation Center dealt with 39 arbitrations and 44 mediations involving parties from around the world. Mediation cases filed in 2005 included a complex dispute arising from an international collaboration agreement for the development of a cancer treatment that had led to prior litigation in several jurisdictions. In April, the Centre organized a Conference on Dispute Resolution in International Science and Technology Collaboration. Some 150 participants from 39 countries examined the types of disputes that could arise from complex international research collaborations between public and private research institutions and industry, and addressed the various options for resolving such disputes.

International registration activities

PCT. In 2005, international patent applications under the Patent Cooperation Treaty (PCT) increased by 9.3 per cent, reflecting international economic trends. Japan, the Republic of Korea and China showed the highest increases of 24.3 per cent, 33.6 per cent and 43.7 per cent, respectively.

Madrid System. WIPO received 33,565 international trademark applications under the Madrid System in 2005, a 13.9 per cent increase over 2004, due to the accession of the United States in 2003 and the European Community in 2004. By the end of 2005, WIPO's International Register contained over 450,000 trademark registrations in force, belonging to some 150,000 different holders. During the year, one country, Bahrain, acceded to the 1989 protocol to the Madrid Agreement concerning the International Registration of Trademarks.

Hague System. WIPO recorded 1,135 international registrations and 3,884 renewals of industrial designs under the Hague System in 2005. Two new States, Latvia and Singapore, joined the Geneva Act of the Hague Agreement, bringing the total number of members of the Hague System to 42.

Lisbon System. In 2005, Peru became party to the Lisbon Agreement and the Islamic Republic of Iran deposited an instrument of accession in December. By the end of the year, 23 States participated in the Lisbon System. The total number of registered international appellations of origin in force increased to 793.

Secretariat

As at 31 December, WIPO employed 855 staff members.

Budget

The approved programme and budget for 2006-2007 amounted to 531 million Swiss francs. About 89 per cent of WIPO's total income in 2005 was derived from global protection services fees, as well as fees related to arbitration and mediation services, while some 6 per cent came from member States' contributions. The remaining 5 per cent came mainly from the sale of WIPO publications, rental income and interest earnings.

Chapter XV

International Fund for Agricultural Development (IFAD)

The International Fund for Agricultural Development (IFAD) continued in 2005 to promote the economic advancement of the rural poor by providing low-interest loans and grants.

The twenty-eighth session of the Governing Council (Rome, Italy, 15-18 February) focused on providing assistance in the processing and marketing of agricultural goods and responding to the needs created by the December 2004 Indian Ocean tsunami [YUN 2004, p. 952] and the October 2005 Pakistan earthquake (see p. 1034).

In 2005, IFAD membership increased to 164 states, of which 23 were in List A (developed countries), 12 in List B (oil-exporting developing countries) and 129 in List C (other developing countries). Of the latter, 49 were in Sub-List C1 (Africa), 49 in Sub-List C2 (Europe, Asia and the Pacific) and 31 in Sub-List C3 (Latin America and the Caribbean).

Resources

In 2005, IFAD was in the middle of its sixth replenishment (2004-2006). By the end of the year, member States had pledged a total amount equivalent to $509 million.

Activities

In 2005, IFAD responded to the exceptional needs created by the Indian Ocean tsunami and the Pakistan earthquake by developing fast-track projects to help survivors restore their livelihoods and strengthen their ability to face future disasters.

IFAD's Executive Board approved 31 new programmes and projects in 29 countries. The estimated total cost of those initiatives was over $1,053 million, of which $568.5 million would be provided by co-financiers, including Governments of the recipient countries.

As at 31 December, total IFAD investments were distributed as follows: Asia and the Pacific, $785 million for 41 projects; Eastern and Southern Africa, $590 million for 39 projects; the Near East and North Africa, Central and Eastern Europe and the Newly Independent States, $485 million for 33 projects; Latin America and the Caribbean, $461 million for 30 projects; and Western and Central Africa, $518 million for 41 projects.

Secretariat

As at 31 December, the IFAD secretariat had 317 staff members, comprising 150 Professional and higher-category positions and 167 General Service positions.

Chapter XVI

United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO)

The United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO) continued in 2005 to promote the sustainable industrial development of developing countries and countries in transition.

The Industrial Development Board, at its thirtieth session (Vienna, 20-23 June), considered UNIDO's programme and budget for the 2006-2007 biennium. Member States discussed the implementation of a Cooperation Agreement with the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) and the UNIDO strategic long-term vision.

The eleventh session of the UNIDO General Conference (Vienna, 28 November-2 December) appointed Kandeh K. Yumkella (Sierra Leone) as Director-General of UNIDO and adopted the strategic long-term vision statement for UNIDO for the period 2005-2015.

UNIDO membership remained at 171 in 2005.

Global forum activities

Through its global forum activities, UNIDO continued to promote industrial development and cooperation between countries, partnerships, knowledge-sharing, technology and investment. It also assisted developing countries and economies in transition in the implementation of multilateral environmental agreements.

Global forum activities included the compilation and dissemination worldwide of the 2005 edition of UNIDO's industrial statistics databases through various media, including CD-ROM, hard copy publication and the Internet; completion of a research programme on combating marginalization and poverty through industrial development; publication of research undertaken in the context of the medium-term programme framework 2004-2007 on productivity, technology diffusion, public goods, global value chains and of the 2005 Industrial Development Report entitled Capability-building for catching-up: Historical, empirical and policy dimensions; and joint activities with selected multilateral organizations. UNIDO helped to organize the second International Conference on the Process of Innovation and Learning in Dynamic City Regions (Bangalore, India, 13-15 July) to examine case studies of dynamic city governance systems.

Technical cooperation

UNIDO continued to provide technical cooperation through its integrated programmes and country service frameworks, most of which dealt with capacity-building. Many were also geared towards increasing productivity and competitiveness, with a particular emphasis on small- and medium-sized enterprises and on environmental protection. During 2005, UNIDO achieved a record delivery of some $112.9 million in technical cooperation projects—compared to $98.8 million in 2004—due to efforts made to formulate and submit sound project proposals and replenish the stock of pipeline projects.

Secretariat

As at 31 December, UNIDO employed a total of 647 staff members: 246 were in the Professional or higher categories, 382 were in the General Service category and 19 were national officers.

Budget

The tenth (2003) session of the UNIDO General Conference approved the organization's 2004-2005 regular budget in the amount of 142,000,000 euros. The eleventh (2005) session approved the 2006-2007 regular budget in the amount of 154,009,900 euros.

Chapter XVII

World Trade Organization (WTO)

During 2005, the World Trade Organization (WTO), the legal and institutional foundation of the multilateral trading system, continued to oversee the rules of international trade, settle trade disputes and organize trade negotiations.

The Sixth WTO Ministerial Conference (Hong Kong, China, 13-18 December), WTO's highest decision-making body, adopted a Declaration, which was intended to push the Doha Development Round negotiations, launched at the Fourth (2001) Ministerial Conference [YUN 2001, p. 1432], closer to completion (see below).

As at 31 December, WTO membership (members and observers) totalled 149.

General activities

In 2005, WTO observed its tenth anniversary. Doha Round negotiations continued throughout the year, involving some 450 meetings and 200 consultations held during the Sixth Ministerial Conference. The Conference reviewed the operation and functioning of the multilateral trading system and ongoing accession processes. Ministers from WTO's 149 member Governments approved a Declaration, which included: a 2013 end date for all export subsidies in agriculture; an agreement on cotton; duty- and quota-free market access for WTO's 32 least-developed country (LDC) members; an enhanced framework for full modalities in agriculture and non-agricultural market access; and a text in services that would facilitate ongoing negotiations.

The Committees and Working Groups of the WTO's General Council, the body overseeing WTO's work between Ministerial Conferences, received a number of mandates from the Council to follow up on issues and concerns related to the implementation of the Doha Development Agenda work programme, adopted in 2001 [YUN 2001, p. 1432]. The Committee on Trade and the Environment restructured its work to focus on the effect of environmental measures on market access and other issues. The Working Group on Trade, Debt and Finance examined themes, including better coherence in the design and implementation of trade-related reforms and monitoring, and trade liberalization as a source of growth.

During the year, the Trade Policy Body carried out reviews of Bolivia, Ecuador, Egypt, Guinea, Jamaica, Japan, Mongolia, Nigeria, Paraguay, the Philippines, Qatar, Romania, Sierra Leone, Trinidad and Tobago and Tunisia.

In May, the General Council appointed Pascal Lamy (France) as the next Director-General for a period of four years, beginning on 1 September.

Trade in goods

During 2005, the Committee on Agriculture continued to examine the implementation of members' commitments resulting from the Uruguay Round (1986-1994) of negotiations or from accession to WTO. It held the fourth transitional review of China's accession commitments, during which members raised concerns regarding the operation of Chinese trading enterprises and the implementation of its tariff quota commitments and taxation policies. The Agriculture and Commodities Division of the WTO secretariat undertook a number of technical assistance and training activities designed to assist members in implementing their existing commitments.

The Committee on Sanitary and Phytosanitary Measures considered specific trade concerns raised by members on a range of issues, including measures taken in response to the Avian influenza and the outbreak of foot-and-mouth disease, and those affecting trade in meat, fish and fresh fruit. In June, it completed its second review of the Agreement on the Application of Sanitary and Phytosanitary Measures, which set out the rights and obligations of members to ensure food safety, protect humans from plant- or animal-spread diseases, and protect plants and animals from pests and diseases.

The Committee on Safeguards continued to review national safeguard legislation and/or regulations.

Trade in services

In 2005, the Council for Trade in Services held four formal meetings, during which it continued its second review of most favoured nation exemptions, began its second review of air transport, and conducted its fourth transitional review of the Protocol on the Accession of the People's Republic of China to WTO, among other activities.

Intellectual property

The Council for the Trade-related Aspects of Intellectual Property Rights (TRIPS) Agreement followed up the reviews of the national implementing legislation of developing country members that were initiated in 2001 [YUN 2001, p. 1433] and 2002 [YUN 2002, p. 1497]. The completion of ten reviews was pending at the end of 2005. The Council continued its work on the preparation of an amendment to the TRIPS Agreement and undertook its fourth annual transitional review of the implementation by China of its WTO commitments regarding TRIPS.

Regional trade agreements

In 2005, the Special Session of the Committee on Regional Trade Agreements focused on the five remaining LDC Agreement-specific proposals, including one on the Understanding in Respect of Waivers of Obligations under the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT) 1994, one on the Agreement on Trade-Related Investment Measures and three relating to the Decision on Measures in Favour of LDCs.

As at 31 December, WTO received notifications of 15 additional regional trade agreements, bringing the number of notified agreements to 241.

Trade and development

The Committee on Trade and Development continued to consider aspects of WTO's work in relation to development, including its technical assistance and training activities, the declining terms of trade for primary commodities and the developmental and environmental aspects of the Doha Round negotiations. Members also continued to pursue their work programmes on small economies and for LDCs.

Plurilateral agreements

At the end of the year, the Committee on Government Procurement continued negotiations on: the simplification and improvement of the text of the Agreement on Government Procurement; expansion of the coverage of the Agreement; and elimination of remaining discriminatory measures and practices that distorted open and competitive procurement.

International Trade Centre

The International Trade Centre, operated jointly by WTO and the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (see p. 1048), continued to play a crucial role in trade-related technical cooperation and trade-related capacity-building. During the year, it focused its technical assistance for developing and transition economies on helping businesses understand WTO rules, strengthening enterprises, competitiveness and developing new trade promotion strategies.

Budget

The WTO budget for 2005 was 168.7 million Swiss francs.

Secretariat

As at 31 December, WTO staff numbered 594.

Chapter XVIII

World Tourism Organization (UNWTO)

In 2005, the World Tourism Organization (UNWTO), recognized by the UN General Assembly in resolution 58/232 [YUN 2003, p. 1475] as a specialized agency, continued to play a central role in promoting responsible, sustainable and universally accessible tourism, with particular attention to the interests of developing countries. In its second year as a UN agency, UNWTO assisted in rebuilding the tourism sector in destination countries affected by the 2004 Indian Ocean tsunami [YUN 2004, p. 952] and confirmed its role in fighting poverty around the world.

The UNWTO General Assembly, its governing body, held its sixteenth session (Dakar, Senegal, 3-6 December). The UNWTO Executive Council, which met between Assembly sessions, held its seventy-fifth session (Nessebar, Bulgaria, 13-14 June). Other meetings of UNWTO organs convened in 2005 included the first emergency session of the UNWTO Executive Council (Phuket, Thailand, 1 February); a conference on Harnessing Tourism for the Millennium Development Goals (MDGs) [YUN 2000, p. 51] (New York, 13 September); a World Tourism Forum for Peace and Sustainable Development (Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, 23-24 October); and meetings of the UNWTO Commissions for Africa (Gaborone, Botswana, April), Europe (Coimbra, Portugal, May), the Americas (Santiago, Chile, May), East Asia and the Pacific (Otsu, Japan, June) and the Middle East (Amman, Jordan, September).

World Tourism Day was commemorated on 27 September, under the theme "Travel and transport: from the imaginary of Jules Verne to twenty-first century reality".

As at 31 December, UNWTO comprised 150 member States, seven associate members, two observers and over 300 affiliate members, representing the private sector, educational institutions and destination management organizations. During the year, six States—the Bahamas, Belarus, Latvia, Papau New Guinea, Timor-Leste and the United Kingdom—became members of the Organization.

Activities

During 2005, UNWTO continued its work to develop sustainable tourism as a force for eliminating poverty, as part of its commitment to contribute to the implementation of the MDGs, in particular through its programme known as Sustainable Tourism—Eliminating Poverty (ST-EP) initiative, which was operated jointly with the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD).

The UNWTO General Assembly (see above), considered, as one of its principle themes, tourism's contribution to the sustainable development of poorer countries and the elimination of poverty. During the session, the UNWTO Secretary-General highlighted the need for greater awareness of tourism in and to Africa.

The first emergency session of the UNWTO Executive Council, convened in February (see above), adopted the Phuket Action Plan (see p. 1026) to assist countries affected by the 2004 Indian Ocean tsunami [YUN 2004, p. 952] in the recovery of their tourism sectors.

The World Committee on Tourism Ethics, established by the UNWTO General Assembly in 2003 as an independent body to assist in implementing and monitoring the Global Code of Ethics for Tourism, at its third meeting (Tunis, Tunisia, 16-17 May), examined four disputes reported by individual applicants. Three of the four cases received did not qualify in terms of the Committee's criteria for the consideration of such cases. In the fourth case, the Committee was expected to make its recommendation towards the end of the year, after consulting all the parties concerned. The Committee agreed on a short and user-friendly extract of the Code entitled "The Responsible Tourist and Traveller", with the intention of creating awareness among ordinary travelers of their responsibilities.

During the year, UNWTO launched its UNWTO TedProm initiative, which encompassed all activities aimed at disseminating information about quality tourism through education, training and research programmes. The organization recognized and promoted those programmes and activities carried out by UNWTO Tourism Education Quality (TedQual) certified institutions, which were selected by means of a quality audit. UNWTO released the first edition of TedQual: The World's Leading Tourism Programmes, a publication aimed at promoting the academic programmes offered by TedQual certified institutions and helping to guide students in the tourism programme selection process.

Other UNWTO activities addressed cooperation for development; sustainable tourism development; statistics; market intelligence; support for tourism microbusiness; and other issues.

Regional activities to strengthen and support national tourism were undertaken by UNWTO in Africa, the Americas, Asia and the Pacific, the Middle East and Europe.

On 30 November, Franceso Frangialli (France) was re-elected for a third four-year term as Secretary-General of UNWTO, effective 1 January 2006.

Secretariat

As at 31 December 2005, UNWTO staff numbered 91, of whom 37 were in the Professional or higher categories and 54 were in the General Service category.

Budget

The UNWTO budget for 2005 amounted to 11,438,000 euros.

[1]Czechoslovakia, which was an original Member of the United Nations from 24 October 1945, split up on 1 January 1993 and was succeeded by the Czech Republic and Slovakia.

[2]Egypt and Syria, both of which became Members of the United Nations on 24 October 1945, joined together—following a plebiscite held in those countries on 21 February 1958—to form the United Arab Republic. On 13 October 1961, Syria, having resumed its status as an independent State, also resumed its separate membership in the United Nations; it changed its name to the Syrian Arab Republic on 14 September 1971. The United Arab Republic continued as a Member of the United Nations and reverted to the name of Egypt on 2 September 1971.

[3]Through accession of the German Democratic Republic to the Federal Republic of Germany on 3 October 1990, the two German States (both of which became United Nations Members on 18 September 1973) united to form one sovereign State. As from that date, the Federal Republic of Germany has acted in the United Nations under the designation Germany.

[4]On 20 January 1965, Indonesia informed the Secretary-General that it had decided to withdraw from the United Nations. By a telegram of 19 September 1966, it notified the Secretary-General of its decision to resume participation in the activities of the United Nations. On 28 September 1966, the General Assembly took note of that decision and the President invited the representatives of Indonesia to take their seats in the Assembly.

[5]On 16 September 1963, Sabah (North Borneo), Sarawak and Singapore joined with the Federation of Malaya (which became a United Nations Member on 17 September 1957) to form Malaysia. On 9 August 1965, Singapore became an independent State and on 21 September 1965 it became a Member of the United Nations.

[6]The Union of Soviet Socialist Republics was an original Member of the United Nations from 24 October 1945. On 24 December 1991, the President of the Russian Federation informed the Secretary-General that the membership of the USSR in all United Nations organs was being continued by the Russian Federation.

[7]Tanganyika was admitted to the United Nations on 14 December 1961, and Zanzibar, on 16 December 1963. Following ratification, on 26 April 1964, of the Articles of Union between Tanganyika and Zanzibar, the two States became represented as a single Member: the United Republic of Tanganyika and Zanzibar; it changed its name to the United Republic of Tanzania on 1 November 1964.

[8]Yemen was admitted to the United Nations on 30 September 1947 and Democratic Yemen on 14 December 1967. On 22 May 1990, the two countries merged and have since been represented as one Member.

Charter of the United Nations and Statute of the International Court of Justice

Charter of the United Nations

NOTE: The Charter of the United Nations was signed on 26 June 1945, in San Francisco, at the conclusion of the United Nations Conference on International Organization, and came into force on 24 October 1945. The Statute of the International Court of Justice is an integral part of the Charter.

Amendments to Articles 23, 27 and 61 of the Charter were adopted by the General Assembly on 17 December 1963 and came into force on 31 August 1965. A further amendment to Article 61 was adopted by the General Assembly on 20 December 1971 and came into force on 24 September 1973. An amendment to Article 109, adopted by the General Assembly on 20 December 1965, came into force on 12 June 1968.

The amendment to Article 23 enlarges the membership of the Security Council from 11 to 15. The amended Article 27 provides that decisions of the Security Council on procedural matters shall be made by an affirmative vote of nine members (formerly seven) and on all other matters by an affirmative vote of nine members (formerly seven), including the concurring votes of the five permanent members of the Security Council.

The amendment to Article 61, which entered into force on 31 August 1965, enlarged the membership of the Economic and Social Council from 18 to 27. The subsequent amendment to that Article, which entered into force on 24 September 1973, further increased the membership of the Council from 27 to 54.

The amendment to Article 109, which relates to the first paragraph of that Article, provides that a General Conference of Member States for the purpose of reviewing the Charter may be held at a date and place to be fixed by a two-thirds vote of the members of the General Assembly and by a vote of any nine members (formerly seven) of the Security Council. Paragraph 3 of Article 109, which deals with the consideration of a possible review conference during the tenth regular session of the General Assembly, has been retained in its original form in its reference to a "vote of any seven members of the Security Council", the paragraph having been acted upon in 1955 by the General Assembly, at its tenth regular session, and by the Security Council.

WE THE PEOPLES OF THE UNITED NATIONS DETERMINED

to save succeeding generations from the scourge of war, which twice in our lifetime has brought untold sorrow to mankind, and to reaffirm faith in fundamental human rights, in the dignity and worth of the human person, in the equal rights of men and women and of nations large and small, and to establish conditions under which justice and respect for the obligations arising from treaties and other sources of international law can be maintained, and to promote social progress and better standards of life in larger freedom, to practice tolerance and live together in peace with one another as good neighbours, and to unite our strength to maintain international peace and security, and to ensure, by the acceptance of principles and the institution of methods, that armed force shall not be used, save in the common interest, and to employ international machinery for the promotion of the economic and social advancement of all peoples,

AND FOR THESE ENDS

HAVE RESOLVED TO COMBINE OUR EFFORTS TO ACCOMPLISH THESE AIMS

Accordingly, our respective Governments, through representatives assembled in the city of San Francisco, who have exhibited their full powers found to be in good and due form, have agreed to the present Charter of the United Nations and do hereby establish an international organization to be known as the United Nations.

Chapter I
PURPOSES AND PRINCIPLES

Article 1

The Purposes of the United Nations are:

1. To maintain international peace and security, and to that end: to take effective collective measures for the prevention and removal of threats to the peace, and for the suppression of acts of aggression or other breaches of the peace, and to bring about by peaceful means, and in conformity with the principles of justice and international law, adjustment or settlement of international disputes or situations which might lead to a breach of the peace;
2. To develop friendly relations among nations based on respect for the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples, and to take other appropriate measures to strengthen universal peace;

2. All Members, in order to ensure to all of them the rights and benefits resulting from membership, shall fulfil in good faith the obligations assumed by them in accordance with the present Charter.

3. All Members shall settle their international disputes by peaceful means in such a manner that international peace and security, and justice, are not endangered.
4. All Members shall refrain in their international relations from the threat or use of force against the territorial integrity or political independence of any state, or in any other manner inconsistent with the Purposes of the United Nations.
5. All Members shall give the United Nations every assistance in any action it takes in accordance with the present Charter, and shall refrain from giving assistance to any state against which the United Nations is taking preventive or enforcement action.
6. The Organization shall ensure that states which are not Members of the United Nations act in accordance with these Principles so far as may be necessary for the maintenance of international peace and security.
7. Nothing contained in the present Charter shall authorize the United Nations to intervene in matters which are essentially within the domestic jurisdiction of any state or shall require the Members to submit such matters to settlement under the present Charter; but this principle shall not prejudice the application of enforcement measures under Chapter VII.

Chapter II
MEMBERSHIP

Article 3

Article 5

The International Court of Justice established by the Charter of the United Nations as the principal judicial organ of the United Nations shall be constituted and shall function in accordance with the provisions of the present Statute.

Chapter I
ORGANIZATION OF THE COURT

Article 2

The Court shall be composed of a body of independent judges, elected regardless of their nationality from among persons of high moral character, who possess the qualifications required in their respective countries for appointment to the highest judicial offices, or are jurisconsults of recognized competence in international law.

Article 3

1. The Court shall consist of fifteen members, no two of whom may be nationals of the same state.

2. A person who for the purposes of membership in the Court could be regarded as a national of more than one state shall be deemed to be a national of the one in which he ordinarily exercises civil and political rights.

Article 4

1. The members of the Court shall be elected by the General Assembly and by the Security Council from a list of persons nominated by the national groups in the Permanent Court of Arbitration, in accordance with the following provisions.

2. In the case of Members of the United Nations not represented in the Permanent Court of Arbitration, candidates shall be nominated by national groups appointed for this purpose by their governments under the same conditions as those prescribed for members of the Permanent Court of Arbitration by Article 44 of the Convention of The Hague of 1907 for the pacific settlement of international disputes.

3. The conditions under which a state which is a party to the present Statute but is not a Member of the United Nations may participate in electing the members of the Court shall, in the absence of a special agreement, be laid down by the General Assembly upon recommendation of the Security Council.

Article 5

1. At least three months before the date of the election, the Secretary-General of the United Nations shall address a written request to the members of the Permanent Court of Arbitration belonging to the states which are parties to the present Statute, and to the members of the national groups appointed under Article 4, paragraph 2, inviting them to undertake, within a given time, by national groups, the nomination of persons in a position to accept the duties of a member of the Court.

2. No group may nominate more than four persons, not more than two of whom shall be of their own nationality. In no case may the number of candidates nominated by a group be more than double the number of seats to be filled.

Article 6

Before making these nominations, each national group is recommended to consult its highest court of justice, its legal faculties and schools of law, and its national academies and national sections of international academies devoted to the study of law.

Article 7

1. The Secretary-General shall prepare a list in alphabetical order of all the persons thus nominated. Save as provided in Article 12, paragraph 2, these shall be the only persons eligible.

2. The Secretary-General shall submit this list to the General Assembly and to the Security Council.

Article 8

The General Assembly and the Security Council shall proceed independently of one another to elect the members of the Court.

Article 9

At every election, the electors shall bear in mind not only that the persons to be elected should individually possess the qualifications required, but also that in the body as a whole the representation of the main forms of civilization and of the principal legal systems of the world should be assured.

Article 10

1. Those candidates who obtain an absolute majority of votes in the General Assembly and in the Security Council shall be considered as elected.

2. Any vote of the Security Council, whether for the election of judges or for the appointment of members of the conference envisaged in Article 12, shall be taken without any distinction between permanent and non-permanent members of the Security Council.

3. In the event of more than one national of the same state obtaining an absolute majority of the votes both of the General Assembly and of the Security Council, the eldest of these only shall be considered as elected.

Article 11

If, after the first meeting held for the purpose of the election, one or more seats remain to be filled, a second and, if necessary, a third meeting shall take place.

Article 12

1. If, after the third meeting, one or more seats still remain unfilled, a joint conference consisting of six members, three appointed by the General Assembly and three by the Security Council, may be formed at any time at the request of either the General Assembly or the Security Council, for the purpose of choosing by the vote of an absolute majority one name for each seat still vacant, to submit to the General Assembly and the Security Council for their respective acceptance.

2. If the joint conference is unanimously agreed upon any person who fulfils the required conditions, he may be included in its list, even though he was not included in the list of nominations referred to in Article 7.

3. If the joint conference is satisfied that it will not be successful in procuring an election, those members of the Court who have already been elected shall, within a period to be fixed by the Security Council, proceed to fill the vacant seats by selection from among those candidates who have obtained votes either in the General Assembly or in the Security Council.

4. In the event of an equality of votes among the judges, the eldest judge shall have a casting vote.

Article 13

1. The members of the Court shall be elected for nine years and may be re-elected; provided, however, that of the judges elected at the first election, the terms of five judges shall expire at the end of three years and the terms of five more judges shall expire at the end of six years.

2. The judges whose terms are to expire at the end of the above-mentioned initial periods of three and six years shall be chosen by lot to be drawn by the Secretary-General immediately after the first election has been completed.

3. The members of the Court shall continue to discharge their duties until their places have been filled. Though replaced, they shall finish any cases which they may have begun.

4. In the case of the resignation of a member of the Court, the resignation shall be addressed to the President of the Court for transmission to the Secretary-General. This last notification makes the place vacant.

Article 14

Vacancies shall be filled by the same method as that laid down for the first election, subject to the following provision: the Secretary-General shall, within one month of the occurrence of the vacancy, proceed to issue the invitations provided for in Article 5, and the date of the election shall be fixed by the Security Council.

Article 15

A member of the Court elected to replace a member whose term of office has not expired shall hold office for the remainder of his predecessor's term.

Article 23

1. The Court shall remain permanently in session, except during the judicial vacations, the dates and duration of which shall be fixed by the Court.

3. A quorum of nine judges shall suffice to constitute the Court.

Article 29

With a view to the speedy dispatch of business, the Court shall form annually a chamber composed of five judges which, at the request of the parties, may hear and determine cases by summary procedure. In addition, two judges shall be selected for the purpose of replacing judges who find it impossible to sit.

Article 30

2. If the Court includes upon the Bench a judge of the nationality of one of the parties, any other party may choose a person to sit as judge. Such person shall be chosen preferably from among those persons who have been nominated as candidates as provided in Articles 4 and 5.

3. If the Court includes upon the Bench no judge of the nationality of the parties, each of these parties may proceed to choose a judge as provided in paragraph 2 of this Article.

4. The provisions of this Article shall apply to the case of Articles 26 and 29. In such cases, the President shall request one or, if necessary, two of the members of the Court forming the chamber to give place to the members of the Court of the nationality of the parties concerned, and, failing such, or if they are unable to be present, to the judges specially chosen by the parties.

5. Should there be several parties in the same interest, they shall, for the purpose of the preceding provisions, be reckoned as one party only. Any doubt upon this point shall be settled by the decision of the Court.

6. Judges chosen as laid down in paragraphs 2, 3 and 4 of this Article shall fulfil the conditions required by Articles 2, 17 (paragraph 2), 20, and 24 of the present Statute. They shall take part in the decision on terms of complete equality with their colleagues.

Article 35

1. The Court shall be open to the states parties to the present Statute.

Article 37

The judgment is final and without appeal. In the event of dispute as to the meaning or scope of the judgment, the Court shall construe it upon the request of any party.

Article 61

1. An application for revision of a judgment may be made only when it is based upon the discovery of some fact of such a nature as to be a decisive factor, which fact was, when the judgment was given, unknown to the Court and also the party claiming revision, always provided that such ignorance was not due to negligence.
2. The proceedings for revision shall be opened by a judgment of the Court expressly recording the existence of the new fact, recognizing that it has such a character as to lay the case open to revision, and declaring the application admissible on this ground.

Indexes

USING THE SUBJECT INDEX

To assist the researcher in reading and searching the Yearbook index, three typefaces have been employed.

ALL BOLD CAPITAL LETTERS are used for major subject entries, including chapter topics (e.g., DEVELOPMENT, DISARMAMENT), as well as country names (e.g., TAJIKISTAN), region names (e.g., AFRICA) and principal UN organs (e.g., GENERAL ASSEMBLY).

CAPITAL LETTERS are used to highlight major sub-topics (e.g., POVERTY), territories (e.g., MONTSERRAT), subregions (e.g., CENTRAL AMERICA) and official names of specialized agencies (e.g., UNIVERSAL POSTAL UNION) and regional commissions (e.g., ECONOMIC COMMISSION FOR EUROPE).

Regular body text is used for single entries and cross-reference entries, e.g., armed conflict, mercenaries, terrorism.

1—An asterisk (*) next to a page number indicates the presence of a text (reproduced in full) of General Assembly, Security Council or Economic and Social Council resolutions and decisions, or Security Council presidential statements.

2—Entries, which are heavily cross-referenced, appear under key substantive words, as well as under the first word of official titles.

3—United Nations bodies are listed under major subject entries and alphabetically.
