6. Stresses the importance of avoiding the erosion of human rights by derogation, and recalls that, in accordance with article 4 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, certain rights are recognized as non-derogable in any circumstances and that any measures derogating from the provisions of the Covenant must be in accordance with that article in all cases, bearing in mind the need for States parties to provide the fullest possible information during states of emergency so that the justification for the appropriateness of measures taken in those circumstances can be assessed, and underlining the exceptional and temporary nature of any such derogations;

7. Encourages States parties to consider limiting the extent of any reservations that they lodge to the International Covenants on Human Rights and the Optional Protocols to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, to formulate any reservations as precisely and narrowly as possible, and to regularly review such reservations with a view to withdrawing them so as to ensure that no reservation is incompatible with the object and purpose of the relevant treaty;

8. Welcomes the annual reports of the Human Rights Committee submitted to the General Assembly at its fifty-ninth and sixtieth sessions, and takes note of the General Comments adopted by the Committee, including the most recent, General Comment No. 31 on the nature of the general legal obligation imposed on States parties to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights;

9. Also welcomes the reports of the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights on its thirtieth and thirty-first sessions and on its thirty-second and thirty-third sessions, and takes note of the General Comments adopted by the Committee, including the most recent, General Comment No. 16 on the equal right of men and women to the enjoyment of all economic, social and cultural rights, adopted by the Committee at its thirty-fourth session;

10. Expresses regret at the number of States parties that have failed to fulfil their reporting obligations under the International Covenants on Human Rights, and urges States parties to fulfil their reporting obligations on time and to attend and participate in the consideration of the reports by the Human Rights Committee and the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights when so requested;

11. Urges States parties to make use in their reports of sex-disaggregated data, and stresses the importance of integrating a gender perspective in the implementation of the International Covenants on Human Rights at the national level, including in the national reports of States parties and in the work of the Human Rights Committee and of the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights;

12. Strongly encourages States parties that have not yet submitted core documents to the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to do so, and invites all States parties regularly to review and update their core documents while bearing in mind the current discussion on the elaboration of an expanded core document;

13. Urges States parties to take duly into account, in implementing the provisions of the International Covenants on Human Rights, the recommendations and observations made during the consideration of their reports by the Human Rights Committee and by the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, and the views adopted by the Human Rights Committee under the first Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights;

14. Urges all States to publish the texts of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the Optional Protocols to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights in as many local languages as possible and to distribute them and make them known as widely as possible to all individuals within their territory and subject to their jurisdiction;

15. Urges each State party to give particular attention to the dissemination at the national level of their reports submitted to the Human Rights Committee and the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and, further, to translate, publish and make available as widely as possible to all individuals within its territory and subject to its jurisdiction by appropriate means the full text of the recommendations and observations made by the Committees after the examination of those reports;

16. Reiterates that States parties should take into account, in their nomination of members to the Human Rights Committee and the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, that the Committees shall be composed of persons of high moral character and recognized competence in the field of human rights, consideration being given to the usefulness of the participation of some persons having legal experience, and to equal representation of women and men, and that members serve in their personal capacity, and also reiterates that, in the elections of the Committees, consideration shall be given to equitable geographical distribution of membership and to the representation of the different forms of civilization and of the principal legal systems;

17. Invites the Human Rights Committee and the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, when considering the reports of States parties, to continue to identify specific needs that might be addressed by United Nations departments, funds and programmes and the specialized agencies, including through the advisory services and technical assistance programme of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights;

18. Stresses the need for improved coordination among relevant United Nations mechanisms and bodies in supporting States parties, upon their request, in implementing the International Covenants on Human Rights and the Optional Protocols to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, and encourages continued efforts in this direction;

19. Expresses its appreciation for the efforts made so far by the Human Rights Committee and the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights to improve the efficiency of their working methods and encourages the Committees to pursue their efforts, welcomes in this regard the meetings held by the Committees and States parties to exchange ideas on how to render the working methods of the Committees more efficient, and encourages all States parties to continue to contribute to the dialogue with practical and concrete proposals and ideas on ways to improve the effective functioning of the Committees;

20. Takes note of the proposals of the Secretary-General and the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights as well as other proposals on human rights treaty body reform, inter alia, to harmonize reporting requirements and to create a unified standing treaty body, and looks forward to further deliberations on this subject;

21. Welcomes the continuing efforts of the Human Rights Committee and the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights to strive for uniform standards in the implementation of the provisions of the International Covenants on Human Rights;

22. Notes the need for further consideration of the issue of justiciability of the rights set forth in the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and for further efforts towards developing indicators and benchmarks to measure progress in the national implementation by States parties of the rights protected by the Covenant;

23. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the open-ended working group of the Commission on Human Rights established with a view to considering options regarding the elaboration of an optional protocol to the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights on its second session, and encourages all parties to participate actively in the third session, at which the working group will consider a paper with elements for an optional protocol presenting a non-judgemental analysis of all the various options for an optional protocol, to be submitted by the Chairperson of the working group in order to facilitate a more focused discussion at the third session;

24. Encourages the specialized agencies that have not yet done so to submit their reports on the progress made in achieving the observance of the provisions of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, in accordance with article 18 of the Covenant, and expresses its appreciation to those that have done so;

25. Encourages the Secretary-General to continue to assist States parties to the International Covenants on Human Rights in the preparation of their reports, including by convening seminars or workshops at the national level for the training of government officials engaged in the preparation of such reports and by exploring other possibilities available under the programme of advisory services in the field of human rights;

26. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure that the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights effectively assists the Human Rights Committee and the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights in the implementation of their respective mandates by providing, inter alia, adequate Secretariat staff resources and conference and other relevant support services;

27. Also requests the Secretary-General to keep the General Assembly informed of the status of the International Covenants on Human Rights and the Optional Protocols to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, including all reservations and declarations, through the United Nations websites.

Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and Optional Protocols

Accessions and ratifications

As at 31 December, parties to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the Optional Protocol thereto, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 2200 A (XXI) [YUN 1966, p. 423], numbered 154 and 105, respectively. During the year, Honduras became a party to the Optional Protocol to the Covenant.

The Second Optional Protocol, aimed at the abolition of the death penalty, adopted by the Assembly in resolution 44/128 [YUN 1989, p. 484], was acceded to by Canada and Liberia, bringing the total number of States parties to 56 as at 31 December.

Note by Secretariat. In response to a 2004 Commission request [YUN 2004, p. 633] that the Secretary-General report on the status of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and its Optional Protocols, and of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, a Secretariat note [E/CN.4/2005/95] informed the Commission that the Secretary-General would submit the requested report in 2006. Meanwhile, relevant information on the subject might be found on the websites of the United Nations Office of Legal Affairs Treaty Section and of OHCHR (http://untreaty.un.org; http://www.unhchr.ch).

Implementation

Monitoring body. The Human Rights Committee, established under article 28 of the Covenant, held three sessions in 2005: its eighty-third from 14 March to 1 April (New York), its eighty-fourth from 11 to 29 July (Geneva) [A/60/40, vol. I] and its eighty-fifth from 17 October to 3 November (Geneva) [A/61/41, vol. I]. In 2005, the Committee considered reports from 13 States—Brazil, Canada, Greece, Iceland, Italy, Kenya, Mauritius, Paraguay, Slovenia, the Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Uzbekistan and Yemen—under article 40. It adopted views on communications from some individuals alleging violations of their rights under the Covenant, and decided that other such communications were inadmissible. Those views and decisions were annexed to the Committee's reports [A/60/40, vol. II; A/61/40, vol. II].

By notifications of 25 January, 31 March, 8 April, 24 May and 20 July, Peru stated that it had extended the state of emergency in different provinces and parts of the country, declared initially in 2003 [YUN 2003, p. 670]. On 20 September, it notified other States through the intermediary of the Secretary-General of the further extension of the state of emergency for 60 days, and by further notifications of 1 and 23 December, it again extended the State of emergency. On 1 February, Nepal proclaimed a state of emergency in the entire kingdom, which it revoked on 5 May. On 18 August, Ecuador notified other States, through the intermediary of the Secretary-General, of the declaration of a state of emergency in different provinces of the country, which was extended to other parts on 22 August. On 14 October, Guatemala informed the Secretary-General that its Congress had adopted a legislative decree recognizing a state of national disaster in parts of the country for 30 days. On 15 November, France informed the Secretary-General that it had declared a state of emergency throughout the metropolitan territory.

On 16 December, the General Assembly took note of the report of the Human Rights Committee on its eighty-second to eighty-fourth sessions (decision 60/533).

Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights

Accessions and ratifications

As at 31 December, the number of parties to the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 2200 A (XXI) [YUN 1966, p. 419], remained at 151.

Note by Secretariat. The Commission had before it a Secretariat note [E/CN.4/2005/95] informing it that the Secretary-General would report in 2006 on the status of the Covenant, in accordance with the Commission's 2004 request [YUN 2004, p. 663].

Draft optional protocol

In response to a 2004 Commission request [YUN 2004, p. 663], the open-ended Working Group to consider options regarding the elaboration of an optional protocol to the Covenant held its second session (Geneva, 10-20 January) [E/CN.4/2005/52]. The optional protocol would be designed to establish a complaints procedure format for individuals or groups who felt that their rights under the Covenant had been violated. Background information for the Group's discussions was provided in a report of the Secretary-General [E/CN.4/2005/WG.23/2] containing a comparative summary of existing communications and inquiry procedures and practices under international human rights instruments and the UN system, submitted in response to a 2004 Commission request [YUN 2004, p. 663].

After considering preliminary views on options by States, delegations and representatives of intergovernmental organizations and NGOs, the Working Group held an interactive dialogue with the Commission's special rapporteurs whose mandates addressed economic, social and cultural rights, and with experts of the International Labour Organization (ILO), the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO), the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the Committee against Torture (CAT) and the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW). The Group also met with regional experts, including the Commissioner of the African Commission on Human and Peoples' Rights and the Deputy Executive Secretary of the Committee of Independent Experts (European Committee of Social Rights).

The Group requested its Chairperson-Rapporteur to submit to its third session a document listing elements that could be contained in an optional protocol, including, among other things, an explanation of its nature and scope; ways to ensure the effective functioning of a communications procedure; the criteria for admissibility of complaints; the standing of individuals or groups under an optional protocol; the nature of economic, social and cultural rights, particularly regarding the risk of interference in domestic political discussions about resource allocation; the cost implications of an optional protocol with a complaints mechanism; the relationship between an optional protocol and existing mechanisms; an analysis and assessment of the potential impact of an optional protocol on improving the implementation of economic, social and cultural rights at the national level; and the option of having no optional protocol.

Commission action. On 15 April [res. 2005/22], the Commission, by a recorded vote of 50 to none, with 3 abstentions, called on States to give full effect to economic, social and cultural rights and guarantee that they would be exercised without discrimination; consider signing and ratifying the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and take it into account in relevant national and international policy-making processes; and ensure the participation of civil society representatives in preparing periodic reports to the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and in implementing its recommendations. The Commission requested the open-ended Working Group to consider options regarding the elaboration of an optional protocol to the Covenant (see above) and to report in 2006, and the Secretary-General, to report also in 2006 on the implementation of the current resolution.

Implementation

Monitoring body. The Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights held its thirty-fourth (25 April–13 May) and thirty-fifth (7-25 November) sessions, both in Geneva [E/2006/22]. Its pre-sessional working group also met in Geneva from 16 to 20 May and from 28 November to 2 December to identify issues to be discussed with reporting States.

On 25 and 27 July, the Economic and Social Council took note of the Committee's reports on its thirty-second and thirty-third sessions, held in 2004 [YUN 2004, p. 644] (decision 2005/296).

In 2005, the Committee examined reports under articles 16 and 17 of the Covenant submitted by Austria, Bosnia and Herzegovina, China (including Hong Kong SAR and Macao SAR), Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Norway, Serbia and Montenegro, Slovenia, Uzbekistan and Zambia.

The Committee adopted three general comments, including, on 10 May, general comment No. 16 (2005) on the equal right of men and women to the enjoyment of economic, social and cultural rights, covered in article 3 of the Covenant; on 21 November, general comment No. 17 (2005) on the right of everyone to benefit from the protection of the moral and material interests resulting from any scientific and literary artistic production of which he was the author, covered in article 15 (1) (c); and on 24 November, general comment No. 18 (2005) on the right to work, covered in article 6.

OHCHR was invited to consider the possibility of organizing, in 2006, a workshop on follow-up action to its concluding observations for States parties to the Covenant from the East European region whose reports had recently been considered by the Committee.

Reports of Secretary-General. In accordance with a 2004 Commission request [YUN 2004, p. 663], the Secretary-General submitted a report [E/CN.4/2005/39] highlighting the activities undertaken and other developments within the international human rights system to promote the realization of economic, social and cultural rights. The report found that progress had been made to increase focus and understanding on those rights, marked by higher levels of cooperation with UN agencies, particularly in the context of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO) Voluntary Guidelines on the Right to Food. There was also greater focus on technical cooperation and further progress in raising awareness through the work of treaty bodies about the nature of the rights concerned. In particular, the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights had continued to draft a general comment on article 3 of the Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights (right to the enjoyment of those rights), and on article 6 (right to work) and article 15 (1) (c) (right to benefit from the protection of the moral and material interests resulting from scientific, literary or artistic production). The Commission's special procedures continued to play a key role in promoting a more effective realization of the rights in question and OHCHR had maintained cooperation with other UN agencies to integrate them into the UN system.

Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 58/165 [YUN 2003, p. 671], the Secretary-General, on 19 August [A/60/284], reported on the status of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and its Optional Protocols (see p. 726), and of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights (see p. 727).

On 16 December, the Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's report (decision 60/533).

Convention against racial discrimination

As at 31 December, the number of parties to the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 2106 A (XX) [YUN 1965, p. 440], remained at 170.

On 20 April [res. 2005/64], by a recorded vote of 38 to 1, with 14 abstentions, the Commission reiterated the call made in the Durban Plan of Action, adopted at the World Conference against Racism, Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia and Related Intolerance [YUN 2001, p. 615], to achieve universal ratification of the Convention by 2005 and for all States to consider making the declaration provided for in article 14 (see below). It asked OHCHR to publish a list of countries yet to ratify the Convention, reinvigorate the campaign for universal ratification and report thereon in 2006. The Commission welcomed the adoption by the Committee on Racial Discrimination of general comment XXX on discrimination against non-citizens [YUN 2004, p. 665] and stressed the need to implement it.

On 25 July, the Economic and Social Council took note of the Commission's resolution (decision 2005/272).

Implementation

Monitoring body. The Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination (CERD), established under article 8 of the Convention, held its sixty-sixth (21 February–11 March) and sixty-seventh (2-19 August) sessions [A/60/18], both in Geneva.

The Committee considered reports submitted by Australia, Azerbaijan, Bahrain, Barbados, France, Georgia, Iceland, Ireland, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Nigeria, Turkmenistan, the United Republic of Tanzania, Venezuela and Zambia. Under article 9 relating to measures to give effect to the Convention's provisions, the Committee considered Botswana's response to its 2002 observations [YUN 2002, p. 628] and informed it on 10 March that several aspects of its relevant legislation, including the Tribal Territories Act and its Constitution, had a discriminatory effect on some ethnic groups, particularly those subordinate to a dominant tribe on a Tribal Territory. The Committee asked to be kept informed of Botswana's ongoing reform process.

On 11 March, the Committee adopted a decision on Surinam, recommending the country's legal acknowledgment of indigenous peoples' right to possess, develop, control and use their communal lands and to participate in the exploitation and management of the associated natural resources. Suriname was invited to comment by 15 April on the Committee's assessment of its draft Mining Act as it affected indigenous and tribal peoples' right to be consulted and fairly compensated for any damage by mining activities.

With regard to the Convention's implementation in States parties whose reports were seriously overdue, the Committee adopted a decision on Papua New Guinea, regretting that, despite repeated requests, it had not fulfilled its obligations under the Convention. CERD adopted decisions also regretting the situations of Malawi, Seychelles and Saint Lucia and informing them that it intended to proceed with the adoption of concluding observations under its review procedure in the absence of their response by 31 January 2006 to relevant questions designed to facilitate the resumption of dialogue.

Under article 14 of the Convention, CERD considered communications from individuals or groups claiming violation of their rights enumerated in the Convention by a State party. Forty-six States parties had recognized CERD's competence to do so (Algeria, Australia, Austria, Azerbaijan, Belgium, Brazil, Bulgaria, Chile, Costa Rica, Cyprus, Czech Republic, Denmark, Ecuador, Finland, France, Georgia, Germany, Hungary, Iceland, Ireland, Italy, Liechtenstein, Luxembourg, Malta, Mexico, Monaco, Netherlands, Norway, Peru, Poland, Portugal, Republic of Korea, Romania, Russian Federation, Senegal, Serbia and Montenegro, Slovakia, Slovenia, South Africa, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland, The former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Ukraine, Uruguay, Venezuela).

Pursuant to article 15 of the Convention, the Committee was empowered to consider petitions, reports and other information relating to Trust and Non-Self-Governing Territories. The Committee noted, as it had in the past, the difficulty in fulfilling its functions in that regard, owing to the lack of copies of relevant petitions and to the fact that reports contained scant information relating directly to the Convention's principles and objectives.

CERD also considered follow-up to the 2001 World Conference against Racism, Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia and Related Intolerance [YUN 2001, p. 615] and to the Third Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination (1993-2003), proclaimed by the General Assembly in resolution 48/91 [YUN 1993, p. 853] (see p. 757).

The Committee adopted decisions under its early warning and urgent action procedures regarding the situation in New Zealand [dec. 1 (66)], Darfur, Sudan [dec. 2 (66)], and Suriname [dec. 1 (67)]. It also addressed the situations of the Western Shoshone indigenous people in the United States and the Tatars in Crimea, Ukraine, drew both parties' attention to a list of questions to clarify the situation of the communities concerned and asked them to respond by 31 December, for discussion at its 2006 session. CERD also adopted a decision on follow-up to the declaration on the prevention of genocide: indicators of patterns of systematic and massive racial discrimination, and general recommendation XXXI on the prevention of racial discrimination in the administration and functioning of the criminal justice system.

As at 31 December, 41 States parties had accepted an amendment to article 8 of the Convention regarding the financing of CERD [YUN 1992, p. 714]. The amendment was to enter into force when accepted by a two-thirds majority of States parties, comprising approximately 113 of the 170 States parties to the Convention. A meeting of the States parties, planned for 12 January 2006, would elect nine candidates to replace Committee members whose terms of office were to expire shortly thereafter [CERD/SP/68 & Add.1].

Subregional workshop. A subregional workshop (Cairo, Egypt, 19-22 December) [HRI/EGY/SEM/2006/1], attended by over 50 participants from six North African countries (Algeria, Egypt, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Mauritania, Morocco, Tunisia), adopted a series of recommendations to support and enhance States' capacity to implement the concluding comments/observations of CEDAW and CERD and to strengthen cooperation with other relevant stakeholders for that purpose.

Convention against torture

Accessions and ratifications

As at 31 December, 141 States were parties to the 1984 Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 39/46 [YUN 1984, p. 813]. Madagascar and Nicaragua ratified the Convention during the year. The Optional Protocol to the Convention, which was adopted in resolution 57/199 [YUN 2002, p. 631] and opened for signature on 4 February 2003, had 49 signatories and 16 States parties (Albania, Argentina, Costa Rica, Croatia, Denmark, Georgia, Liberia, Mali, Malta, Mauritius, Mexico, Paraguay, Poland, Sweden, United Kingdom, Uruguay). The Protocol would enter into force 30 days following the deposit of the twentieth instrument of ratification or accession. As at 1 July, 51 parties had made the required declarations under articles 21 and 22 (under which a party recognized the competence of the Committee against Torture to receive and consider communications by which a party claimed that another was not fulfilling its obligations under the Convention, and from or on behalf of individuals who claimed to be victims of a violation of the Convention by a State party). Four parties had made the declaration only under article 21, bringing the total number of declarations under that article to 55, while five had made the declaration only under article 22, bringing the total of declarations under that article to 56. Amendments to articles 17 and 18, adopted in 1992 [YUN 1992, p. 735], had been accepted by 27 parties as at year's end.

Commission action. On 19 April [res. 2005/39], the Commission urged States to become parties to the Convention and to limit the extent of their reservations. Ratifying or acceding States were invited to make the declarations provided for in articles 21 and 22 and to comply with their obligations pursuant to article 19, including reporting obligations.

Report of Secretary-General. The Secretary-General reported on the status of the Convention, its Optional Protocol and the declarations provided for in articles 21 and 22 as at 1 July [A/60/220]. On 16 December, the General Assembly took note of the report (decision 60/533).

Election of Committee members. The Tenth Meeting of States Parties to the Convention (Geneva, 31 November) elected five members to the Committee against Torture, for a four-year term, effective 1 January 2006, to replace those whose terms were due to expire on 31 December.

Implementation

Monitoring body. The Committee against Torture, established as a monitoring body under the Convention, held its thirty-fourth and thirty-fifth sessions in Geneva from 2 to 20 May [A/60/44] and 14 to 25 November [A/61/44], respectively. Under article 19, it considered reports submitted by Albania, Austria, Bahrain, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Canada, the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Ecuador, Finland, France, Nepal, Sri Lanka, Switzerland and Uganda. During the year, the Committee continued its work in accordance with article 20, under which it studied reliable information that appeared to contain well-founded indications that torture was systematically practised in a State party. Within the framework of its follow-up activities, the Rapporteur of article 20 continued to encourage those States parties on which enquiries had been conducted to implement the related recommendations of the Committee. Under article 22, the Committee considered communications submitted by individuals who claimed that their rights under the Convention had been violated by a State party and who had exhausted all available domestic remedies.

Convention on elimination of discrimination against women and Optional Protocol

(For details on the status of the Convention and on the Optional Protocol, see p. 1271.)

Convention on the Rights of the Child

As at 31 December, the number of States parties to the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 44/25 [YUN 1989, p. 560], remained at 192. States parties to the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the involvement of children in armed conflict, adopted by the Assembly in resolution 54/263 [YUN 2000, p. 615], rose to 105, with ratification during the year by Armenia, Benin, Colombia, India, Israel, Latvia, Liechtenstein, Poland, the Sudan, Togo and Ukraine, and accession by Eritrea, Nicaragua and Turkmenistan. The Optional Protocol to the Convention on the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography, also adopted by resolution 54/263, had 101 States parties, with ratification in 2005 by Armenia, Benin, Canada, India, Japan, the Netherlands and Poland, and accession by Angola, Eritrea, Georgia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines and Turkmenistan.

Commission action. On 19 April [res. 2005/44], by a recorded vote of 52 to 1, the Commission urged States to sign and ratify or accede to the Convention and its Optional Protocols, implement them fully and end impunity for perpetrators of crimes against children. The Secretary-General should assist the Committee on the Rights of the Child, while OHCHR, UN mechanisms and relevant UN system organs were asked to incorporate a strong child-rights perspective in all their activities, and to train their staff in child protection matters.

The Secretary-General reported on the status of the Convention and Optional Protocols as at 30 June [A/60/175 & Corr.1] and 6 December [E/CN.4/2006/64].

On 23 December, the Assembly urged States that had not done so to become parties to the Convention and the Optional Protocols thereto, and to strengthen cooperation with CRC (resolution 60/231) (see p. 855).

Implementation

Monitoring body. In 2005, the Committee on the Rights of the Child (CRC) held its thirty-eighth (10-28 January) [CRC/C/146], thirty-ninth (17 May–3 June) [CRC/C/150] and fortieth (12-30 September) [CRC/C/153] sessions, all in Geneva. Its working group met to review State party reports and identify the main questions to be discussed with representatives of the reporting States.

Under article 44 of the Convention, CRC considered initial or periodic reports submitted by Albania, Algeria, Australia, Austria, the Bahamas, Belize, Bolivia, Bosnia and Herzegovina, China (including Hong Kong SAR and Macao SAR), Costa Rica, Denmark, Ecuador, Finland, Iran, Luxembourg, Mongolia, Nepal, Nicaragua, Nigeria, Norway, the Philippines, the Russian Federation, Saint Lucia, Sweden, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Uganda and Yemen.

In September, the Committee held a day of general discussion on the subject of children without parental care and adopted recommendations and general comment No. 7 on Implementing Child Rights in Early Childhood. It also discussed the drafts of other general comments on unaccompanied and asylum-seeking children, fundamental principles in the juvenile justice system, and the rights of indigenous children and of children with disabilities.

Subregional workshop. A subregional workshop (Buenos Aires, Argentina) [HRI/ARG/SEM/2006/1], attended by participants from 10 Latin American States (Argentina, Bolivia, Brazil, Chile, Colombia, Ecuador, Paraguay, Peru, Uruguay, Venezuela), discussed issues relating to the rights of the child and adopted recommendations to enhance the implementation of the Committee's concluding observations in the subregion.

Convention on migrant workers

Accessions and ratifications

As at 31 December, the number of States parties to the International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 45/158 [YUN 1990, p. 594] and which entered into force in 2003 [YUN 2003, p. 676], totalled 34. During the year, Chile, Lesotho and Peru ratified the Convention, while Algeria, Honduras, Nicaragua and the Syrian Arab Republic acceded to it.

The Secretary-General reported on the status of the Convention as at 1 August [A/60/272].

Commission action. On 19 April [res. 2005/47], the Commission requested States to promote and protect the human rights and fundamental freedoms of all migrants, especially those of women and children, regardless of their immigration status, in conformity with the Convention and other relevant international human rights instruments, norms and standards.

In July, the Economic and Social Council took note of the Commission's action (decision 2005/267).

Implementation

Monitoring body. In 2005, the Committee on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families held its second (25-29 April) [A/60/48] and third (12-16 December) [A/61/48] sessions, both in Geneva, at which it adopted provisional guidelines for the submission of initial reports by States and agreed to follow the practices of other treaty bodies in considering those reports.

It also discussed, among other things, ways to simplify and harmonize reporting, cooperation with States parties and other concerned bodies, and treaty body reform. The Committee held days of general discussion on 28 April and 15 December on "protecting the rights of all migrant workers as a tool to enhance development", to enable it to contribute to the high-level dialogue of the General Assembly devoted to international migration and development, to be held in 2006, pursuant to Assembly resolution 58/208 [YUN 2003, p. 1087].

Concerned that it had not yet received any reports from State parties under article 73 of the Convention relating to States parties' obligation to report on measures they had taken to give effect to the Convention's provisions, the Committee urged States to fulfil their reporting obligation in accordance with the provisional reporting guidelines it had adopted. In December, it elected five members to replace those whose terms were due to expire on 31 December and requested the Secretary-General to arrange two sessions in 2006.

On 16 December, the Assembly took note of the Committee's report on its second session (decision 60/533).

Convention on genocide

As at 31 December, 138 States were parties to the 1948 Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 260 A (III) [YUN 1948-49, p. 959]. During the year, Bolivia ratified the Convention and the United Arab Emirates acceded to it.

Commission action. On 20 April [res. 2005/62], the Commission called on States that had not ratified or acceded to the Convention to do so and, where necessary, to enact national legislation in conformity with its provisions. It stressed the importance of enhanced international cooperation in fostering the principles enshrined in the Convention and invited the Secretariat and relevant UN system bodies and agencies to disseminate it widely, in order to ensure its universality.

It requested the Secretary-General to make available to the Commission in 2006 a report on the implementation of his five-point action plan for preventing genocide and on the activities of the special Adviser on the Prevention of Genocide, who should, in 2006 and 2007, report on progress made in discharging his mandate.

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 2005/295, endorsed that request.

Other activities

Follow-up to the 1993 World Conference

Report of High Commissioner. In a March report [E/CN.4/2005/12] on follow-up to the World Conference on Human Rights [YUN 1993, p. 908], the High Commissioner described OHCHR activities to help promote and protect human rights at the national level, strengthen the rule of law, transitional justice and democracy, support and strengthen the establishment of national human rights institutions and counter impunity for perpetrators of human rights violations. The report also discussed the situation of groups vulnerable to discrimination in various regions, including especially indigenous peoples, migrants and women, as well as issues relating to human trafficking and human rights and development. Highlighting a number of challenges in the task of protecting human rights for all, most notably terrorism, peace and development questions and the resurgence of torture, the report observed that the human rights community could best respond to those challenges from a human rights perspective and within the framework of existing instruments and the related legal obligations of States.

Annual meeting. In August, the High Commissioner transmitted the report of the twelfth meeting of special rapporteurs/representatives, independent experts and chairpersons of working groups of the Commission's special procedures and advisory services programme (Geneva, 20-24 June) [E/CN.4/2006/4]. Participants discussed issues relating to the effectiveness of the special procedures system, both in terms of the functioning of each mandate and of the system as a whole. Discussions focused on identifying specific measures to be taken within the context of current efforts to reform the Commission and measures to enhance coordination among the procedures, in order to better follow up on their findings and recommendations and to communicate more effectively.

The meeting agreed to establish a coordination committee, whose principal role would be to assist individual experts to carry out their mandates effectively and promote the standing of the special procedures system within the broader framework of the UN and its human rights programmes. The committee's main function was to facilitate coordination among mandate-holders and act as a bridge between them and OHCHR, other UN human rights components and civil society. However, its role would be limited to making recommendations in order to ensure the independence and autonomy of mandate-holders, and would be reviewed by the 2006 meeting of special procedures. Participants also considered follow-up measures to encourage, facilitate and monitor the implementation of the recommendations of special procedures, requesting OHCHR, in that regard, to present a separate annual report to the Commission containing statistics reflecting responses to requests by those procedures for visits and communications arising therefrom. To facilitate a more effective strategy for communications, they agreed that OHCHR should consider appointing a communication specialist to work closely with the coordination committee and individual mandate-holders.

On 16 December, the Assembly took note of the Third Committee's report [A/50/509/Add.4] on the implementation of and follow-up to the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Actions, adopted at the 1993 World Conference (decision 60/534).

Advisory services and technical cooperation

Report of Secretary-General. In accordance with Commission resolution 2004/81 [YUN 2004, p. 670], the Secretary-General submitted his annual report [E/CN.4/2006/104] describing OHCHR technical cooperation programme, which provided assistance for building national and regional human rights infrastructure. Highlighting the programme's continuing growth, the report noted that OHCHR had refined the policy orientation of the programme, in the light of the Secretary-General's reform initiatives. The OHCHR Plan of Action, in particular, developed within the context of discussions to reform the Commission (see p. 715), of which a summary was annexed to the report, was changing the way the Office carried out its work, including the Technical Cooperation Programme. At a time of such fundamental changes, clear operational and policy guidance was important to ensure consistency and common understanding and OHCHR had taken steps to develop a suitable policy framework for the Programme, through consolidating, updating and streamlining past discussions and positions.

In 2005, the Voluntary Fund for Technical Cooperation in the Field of Human Rights funded 42 projects, of which 14 were completed during the year, while the implementation of 28 others was in progress. There were 23 new requests. As at 31 December, the Fund had received approximately $18.7 million for the 2004-2005 biennium, against expenditure of over $19 million. The Fund's Board of Trustees, at its twenty-third session (7-10 June), reviewed the programme's status and discussed technical cooperation in the context of the Secretary-General's reform agenda, regional activities, strategies and plans in the Asia-Pacific and Arab regions, cooperation between UNICEF and OHCHR in the follow-up to treaty body recommendations and a human rights approach to programming. It advised OHCHR on policy orientation, global vision and strategy on a broader level. Its twenty-fourth session, initially scheduled for November, was postponed to January 2006. As at year's end, the Fund's income amounted to $27.7 million, including carry over from the previous year. Expenditure totalled $19.2 million for the 2004-2005 biennium.

Working paper. In response to a 2004 Subcommission request [YUN 2004, p. 670], Gudmundur Alfredsson (Iceland) and Ibrahim Salama (Egypt) presented a June working paper [E/CN.4/Sub.2/2005/41], which examined the content and delivery of technical cooperation in the field of human rights. The paper discussed related institutional issues within the UN system, including the mainstreaming of human rights and rights-based activities; the substantive basis for technical cooperation in human rights instruments adopted by the United Nations and accepted by States; dialogue and exchange of positive experiences; national ownership as a crucial element for sustainability; and technical aspects concerning delivery, such as national and international actors, local expertise and independent evaluations.

Subcommission action. On 11 August [res. 2005/25], the Subcommission, taking into account the working paper on technical cooperation (see above), decided to appoint Mr. Alfredsson and Mr. Salama as Special Rapporteurs with the task of preparing a comprehensive study focusing on the best ways to include economic, social and cultural rights in international, regional and bilateral technical cooperation in the field of human rights. It asked the Secretary-General to assist them, and UN offices and agencies to respond favourably to their queries.

Afghanistan

Note by Secretary-General. A January note of the Secretary-General [E/CN.4/2005/112], submitted in response to a 2004 Commission request [YUN 2004, p. 671], highlighted the work of the independent expert on technical cooperation in the field of human rights in Afghanistan, including a planned mission to the country during the year, as well as the efforts of the UN Assistance Mission in Afghanistan (UNAMA) (see p. 408) to enhance the role of its gender adviser.

Report of independent expert. During his second mission to Afghanistan (30 January–7 February) [E/CN.4/2005/122], the independent expert, following extensive research and broad-based consultations with senior Government officials, the country's human rights institutions and UN bodies and NGOs operating there, acknowledged that some progress had been made to promote and protect human rights. Notable positive developments included advances in the country's democratic process, the release, based on his appeal, of some 730 individuals illegally held in inhuman conditions for over 30 months and developments relating to a national transitional justice strategy. However, pressing human rights issues remained, and those demanding the immediate attention of the Government and the international community included: the activities of factional commanders involved in illegal land seizures, extortion and intimidation; arbitrary arrest and routine violations of the administration of justice by the Afghan National Police; the lack of due process and the use of torture by State security and intelligence operatives; threats to the country's security and human rights promotion and protection by the illegal drug industry; poor prison conditions, particularly with regard to women and children and other egregious violations of women's rights; child trafficking and other abusive treatment of children; inadequate rights for the disabled and the displaced; and the actions of the United States–led coalition forces that appeared to be unregulated, and to have allegedly violated international human rights and humanitarian law. The expert emphasized that the country's future depended on strengthening the rule of law, improving the administration of justice and promoting and protecting human rights, and to that end, recommended a comprehensive strategic plan. Other recommendations related to oversight for State security institutions; action against poppy cultivation and drug trafficking; and the need to address social and economic issues, secure women's and children's rights, resolve pressing land and housing questions, improve access to education, strengthen civil society and transitional or post-conflict justice, ensure the successful conduct of elections, and ensure that the activities of coalition forces accorded with international human rights and humanitarian law.

Commission action. The Commission Chairperson, in a 21 April statement on technical cooperation in the field of human rights in Afghanistan [E/2005/23], which the Commission adopted by consensus, said that the Commission welcomed the new Afghan Constitution adopted in 2004 [YUN 2004, p. 761], which stated that the citizens, whether men or women, were equal before the law and also provided for adequate representation of women in the Wolesi Jirga (House of the People) and Meshrano Jirga (House of Elders). Noting that the protection and promotion of women's and children's rights were of paramount importance, particularly regarding access to education, health care and full participation in all aspects of Afghan life, the Commission expressed concern about the continuing violence and abuse against women and girls, including honour crimes, early and forced marriages, and human trafficking, which still occurred in certain parts of the country. The security situation also remained fragile owing to extremist violence and related criminality. To address those problems, the Commission called for the adoption of comprehensive anti-trafficking legislation and emphasized that an environment free from violence, discrimination and abuse for all Afghans was essential for a viable and sustainable recovery and reconstruction process. It also addressed the need to expose human rights violations, hold the perpetrators accountable and obtain justice and reparations for the victims, and encouraged the Government to assist the Afghan Independent Human Rights Commission to enable it to fulfil its mandate. The High Commissioner was asked to monitor the human rights situation in Afghanistan, expand the programme of advisory services and technical cooperation there and report to the General Assembly in 2005, and to the Commission in 2006. The Secretary-General was asked to ensure the appointment of a senior gender adviser within the newly established Gender Unit of UNAMA.

On 25 July, the Economic and Social Council endorsed the Commission's requests to the High Commissioner (decision 2005/293).

Report of High Commissioner. A September note of the Secretary-General [A/60/343] transmitted the report of the High Commissioner on the situation of human rights in Afghanistan and on the achievements of the technical assistance in the field of human rights, prepared in accordance with the Commission's requests, contained in its Chairperson's statement (see above). The High Commissioner noted that, despite the achievement of many of the benchmarks in the 2001 Bonn Agreement [YUN 2001, p. 311], the human rights situation in Afghanistan remained of great concern, with much of the problem attributable to the security situation and weakness in governance. Factional commanders and former warlords remained major power brokers, and conflict between anti-Government entities and Government and international forces combating them had taken a toll on civilians. The rule of law was emerging only slowly, and reform in the justice system was patchy, with impunity often prevailing. She concluded that the political achievements made, including the holding of Parliamentary elections, while crucial, were not a full measure of progress towards a society where human rights were respected and protected. As such, there was a need for the Government and the international community to continue making bold strides in human rights. All the Afghan people needed to be empowered, including men, women, persons with disabilities and members of all ethnic groups, to enable them to assert and claim their rights. Only then could human rights be more readily respected, protected and fulfilled. The High Commissioner recommended that the Government and the international community protect the right of the civilians affected by the continuing armed conflict in parts of the country, in accordance with international human rights and humanitarian law. She also proposed measures concerning the rule of law and administration of justice, transitional justice, the situation of women and children, economic, social and cultural rights, and capacity-building to enhance the role of the Afghan Independent Human Rights Commission and NGOs.

The General Assembly took note of the note by the Secretary-General on 16 December (decision 60/533).

Burundi

Commission action. On 20 April [res. 2005/75], the Commission, condemning all acts of violence and violations of human rights and international humanitarian law in Burundi, urged the Transitional Government to establish an independent national human rights commission to promote and protect human rights. The independent expert on the human rights situation in the country was asked to continue his work and to submit an interim report to the General Assembly in 2005 and report to the Commission in 2006.

On 25 July, the Economic and Social Council endorsed the Commission's requests (decision 2005/275).

Reports of independent expert. A September note of the Secretary-General [A/60/354] transmitted to the General Assembly the expert's interim report on the human rights situation in Burundi during the period from January to 15 August, pursuant to Commission resolution 2005/75 (see above). The report provided information on the expert's third visit to Burundi (2-10 July), which coincided with the legislative elections of 4 July. The expert found that peace in the country was advancing steadily and that there had been progress in the legislative process and improvements in the security and human rights situations. The country had promulgated its new Constitution on 22 March, following a referendum, which drew a voter turnout of 92 per cent, many of them women. Other positive developments included efforts to establish a Truth and Reconciliation Commission and the initiation of the demobilization process for over 12,000 ex-combatants, including 2,939 children. Despite those advances, human rights violations occurred on a daily basis, largely due to the continued armed conflict in the country and to subregional factors, such as mass migrations and the proliferation of small arms. Armed elements, including the military, allegedly violated the right to life and committed torture, arbitrary detention, sexual violence and mass displacement of people. Poverty compounded the country's human rights problems, as it restricted access to health care and encouraged the transmission of HIV/AIDS. The impact of reform in the judicial sector had been limited. Prisons were overcrowded and no consensus had been reached on who should be categorized as a "political prisoner". The expert reiterated the recommendations set out in his 2004 report [YUN 2004, p. 671] that had not yet been implemented, and proposed new measures to the parties to the conflict, whom he urged to respect the rights of civilians; to the Burundian authorities, whom he requested to combat impunity, end arbitrary detention and torture, and continue with the reforms provided for by the Arusha Agreement [YUN 2000, p. 146]; and to the international community, which he urged to maintain humanitarian and development assistance to Burundi. The Assembly took note of the expert's report on 16 December (decision 60/533).

A later report of the expert [E/CN.4/2006/109] provided information on his fourth visit to Burundi (4-5 October). While he continued to acknowledge positive developments in the political process, most notably the successful completion of elections, the expert reported a deplorable deterioration of the human rights situation, owing to the continuation of the armed conflict and related violence, of which civilians remained the main victims. The overall security situation remained fragile, and a weak judiciary and perceived climate of impunity continued to give rise to human rights violations, including of the rights to life; to liberty, security and inviolability of the person; and to freedom of movement and of the choice of one's residence. In particular, alleged violations of the rights of women, children and other vulnerable groups continued. The expert urged the Government to implement urgent measures to strengthen the judicial system, combat impunity and bring perpetrators of human rights violations to justice. Troubled by reports of persisting sexual violence in the country, he called for swift and concrete government measures to combat the phenomenon. He also recommended action on issues relating to prisoners and encouraged the authorities to maintain efforts to establish institutions provided for in the Arusha Agreement, particularly those relating to human rights. Other recommendations were addressed to the international community to ensure better human rights protection and promotion in the country.

Cambodia

Commission action. On 20 April [res. 2005/77], the Commission welcomed Cambodia's improvements in its human rights situation, while still expressing concern about continuing violations relating to the rule of law, the judiciary, human trafficking, violence against activists, impunity and corruption. Also welcoming the signing of a new memorandum of understanding between the Government and OHCHR on the implementation of a technical cooperation programme on human rights, the Commission encouraged efforts to improve further the country's human rights situation, especially through the establishment of the rule of law and judicial reform. It invited the Secretary-General and the international community to continue to assist the Government in improving democracy and protecting human rights, and requested the Secretary-General to report in 2006.

Report of Special Representative. Following the resignations of the former Special Representatives, Yash Ghai (Kenya) was appointed the new Special Representative of the Secretary-General for human rights in Cambodia. During his first visit to the country (28 November–5 December) [E/CN.4/2006/110], he accorded particular attention to its Constitution, the justice sector and the rule of law, and the status of fundamental freedoms. He found unfavourable circumstances for democratic participation in State affairs, as the Government's frequent use of lawsuits to counter dissent and opposition made it hard for opposition-party politicians, trade unions, journalists, civil society and human rights organizations to express their views. Consequently, well known public figures had been unable to return to the country or were in jail awaiting trial for such charges as defamation, disinformation and incitement. Although Cambodia's Constitution incorporated international human rights instruments to which the country was a party, its provisions had been mostly disregarded and its safeguards weakened. The legal framework for effective rule of law was inadequate, as the country maintained the transitional code of criminal law and procedure adopted, for temporary purposes only, by the United Nations Transitional Authority in Cambodia, which operated between February 1992 [YUN 1992, p. 243] and September 1993 [YUN 1993, p. 371]. Against that background, there were indications of abuse of the law and pervasive impunity for politically or economically prominent persons. The way that Cambodia's land and natural resources were managed also created a major problem, with the Government withholding information on those resources conceded to private companies and the military in the name of development. Such practices and other resource abuse had affected the livelihood of the rural poor harshly, particularly indigenous communities. The Representative addressed recommendations to the authorities, urging that priority be given to strengthening institutions central to upholding and implementing the Constitution and to strengthening the independence and functioning of the legal and judicial process. Other recommendations related to the need to: restore an environment conducive to public debate and the exercise of democratic rights, particularly regarding freedoms of expression, of association and of peaceful assembly; update the legal framework for the effective rule of law and repeal of provisions contradicting human rights; reinstate parliamentary immunity to opposition members and drop the charges against them; end impunity; and implement the land law and resolve land disputes fairly and in accordance with domestic and international laws.

OHCHR/Cambodia

Report of Secretary-General. A report of the Secretary-General [E/CN.4/2006/105] described the role and achievements of OHCHR/Cambodia in 2005 in assisting the Cambodian Government and people to promote and protect human rights. During the year, the Office continued to monitor the overall human rights situation, and responded to violations, giving first priority to the problems confronted by NGOs and human rights defenders in their work. The Office brought its concerns to the attention of the authorities and requested their intervention. It also continued to advocate for structural reform of key institutions to guarantee an independent and professional judiciary, and worked with the courts to help address deficiencies in justice delivery. It followed up on the 2004 recommendations of the Special Representative [YUN 2004, p. 673] on land concessions for economic purposes, responded to the problems arising in some concessions, and monitored the continuing award of land and other concessions of Cambodia's natural resources. During the reporting period, OHCHR gave particular attention to the right to adequate housing (see p. 843), and to preventing forced evictions, especially in Phnom Penh. It also made efforts to help integrate and implement human rights standards in development policies and programmes.

Chad

Commission action. On 22 April [dec. 2005/118], the Commission asked OHCHR to expand its cooperation with the Government of Chad regarding the promotion and protection of human rights.

Commission action. On 21 April [res. 2005/85], the Commission, expressing concern at persistent reports of violations of human rights and international humanitarian law in the eastern part of the Democratic Republic of the Congo (DRC), particularly in North Kivu and South Kivu, northern Katanga and Ituri, condemned the impunity enjoyed by those responsible and decided to extend the mandate of the independent expert for one year. The expert was requested to submit a progress report to the General Assembly in 2005 and to report to the Commission in 2006. The Secretary-General was asked to provide advisory services to the DRC in the field of human rights.

On 25 July, the Economic and Social Council endorsed the Commission's requests to the independent expert and the Secretary-General (decision 2005/282).

Reports of independent expert. By a 29 September note [A/60/395], the Secretary-General transmitted the expert's report to the General Assembly, pursuant to Assembly resolution 59/207 [YUN 2004, p. 674] and Commission resolution 2005/85 (see p. 736). The report contained information on the expert's visit to the DRC (16-27 August), particularly the capital city of Kinshasa, the sensitive region of Ituri and the region of Bunia, where he inspected the central prison and its holding cell. He consulted widely with Government officials, UN entities there and civil society organizations, focusing on alleged human rights violations and issues relating to justice, impunity and the electoral process. Thereafter, he observed that the human rights situation throughout the country remained a matter of concern, especially in some eastern regions and in northern Katanga, where militias and other armed groups were committing massive human rights violations with impunity. Massacres of civilians, pillage, mass rape of women and girls and summary executions, among other things, seriously undermined the Transitional Government's efforts to improve the situation. The suppression of peaceful demonstrations in many parts of the country, the precarious situation of unpaid or underpaid public officials and the threats and harassment suffered by journalists and human rights defenders fomented unrest and jeopardized the prospects for peace in the country. Other major sources of concern included the lack of consensus in the joint management of the transition period, the steady deterioration of law and order in the Orientale province of Ituri following repeated attacks by armed militias, the lack of an independent judiciary, general insecurity and the trafficking and illegal exploitation of natural resources. The expert recommended that all the Congolese parties promote a culture of peace, tolerance and reconciliation among the population, and recognize the need also to foster a culture of dialogue and to reject violence and ethnic hatred. He addressed a number of other measures to the Government and the international community, and proposed to the Commission, the General Assembly, the Security Council and the Economic and Social Council, the establishment, by decision of the Security Council, of an international criminal tribunal for the DRC. Failing that, consideration should be given to setting up mixed criminal chambers within existing Congolese courts to hear cases of the crimes that had been committed.

A later report of the expert to the Commission [E/CN.4/2006/113] contained the same account of his visit to the DRC during the year.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December [meeting 64], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/60/509/Add.3], adopted resolution 60/170 by recorded vote (102-3-67) [agenda item 71 (c)].

Situation of human rights in the Democratic Republic of the Congo

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming that all States Members of the United Nations have an obligation to promote and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms, and the duty to fulfil the obligations they have undertaken under the various instruments in this field,

Noting that the Democratic Republic of the Congo is a party to several international and regional human rights instruments and to several instruments pertaining to international humanitarian law,

Underlining the importance of elections as the foundation for the longer-term restoration of peace and stability, national reconciliation, the rule of law and lasting promotion and protection of human rights in the Democratic Republic of the Congo,

Recalling its previous resolutions, as well as those of the Commission on Human Rights and the Security Council, on the situation in the Democratic Republic of the Congo,

1. Welcomes:

(a) The report of the independent expert on the situation of human rights in the Democratic Republic of the Congo of 29 September 2005, as well as his visit to the Democratic Republic of the Congo in August 2005;

(b) The strengthened mandate of the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo regarding the protection of civilians in accordance with Security Council resolution 1592(2005) of 30 March 2005, and expresses its support for the continued work of the Mission and the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for the Democratic Republic of the Congo;

(c) The work accomplished by the human rights field office in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, and encourages the office to pursue and enhance its cooperation with the relevant agencies of the United Nations and the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo in the fulfilment of its mandate;

(d) The measures taken in 2005 by the authorities of the Democratic Republic of the Congo to arrest and detain leaders of militia groups suspected of committing killings and other serious crimes against civilians;

(e) The substantial progress made by the transitional national Government and the Independent Electoral Commission, with the welcome assistance of the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, towards the holding of elections before June 2006 as specified in the Global and All-Inclusive Agreement, in particular the registration of voters and the enthusiasm shown by the Congolese people to embrace a democratic future;

2. Takes note of the continuing investigation by the Office of the Prosecutor of the International Criminal Court, based upon the referral of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, into crimes allegedly committed in the territory of the Democratic Republic of the Congo since the entry into force of the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court on 1 July 2002;

3. Requests the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to ensure that consultations continue between the field office of the Office of the High Commissioner in the Democratic Republic of the Congo and the Secretary-General concerning the ways in which to assist the transitional Government of the Democratic Republic of the Congo in tackling the problem of impunity, and looks forward to the report of the High Commissioner to the Commission on Human Rights at its sixty-second session on those consultations and on possible options for putting an end to the impunity of the perpetrators of crimes committed before 1 July 2002;

4. Condemns:

(a) The ongoing violations of human rights and international humanitarian law, particularly in North Kivu and South Kivu, northern Katanga and other areas in the eastern part of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, including armed violence and reprisals against the civilian population and the recourse to sexual violence against women and children, including in situations where such practices are being used as a weapon of war;

(b) The killing of United Nations peacekeeping troops by militia groups in Ituri Province, eastern Democratic Republic of the Congo, in February 2005 and in June 2005;

(c) The killing of Pascal Kabungulu Kibembi, Executive Secretary of the human rights non-governmental organization Héritiers de la Justice on 31 July 2005 and the harassment of human rights defenders across the country, but particularly in the eastern Democratic Republic of the Congo;

(d) The continued illegal exploitation of natural resources in the eastern Democratic Republic of the Congo and killings and other serious crimes against civilians committed by groups linked to the mining and trading of those resources, as well as the linkage between the illegal exploitation of natural resources, illicit trade in such resources and the proliferation and trafficking of arms as one of the factors fuelling and exacerbating conflicts in the Democratic Republic of the Congo;

5. Urges all the parties, including non-signatories of the Global and All-Inclusive Agreement on the Transition, in the Democratic Republic of the Congo:

(a) To respect and further implement the Global and All-Inclusive Agreement and to cease immediately any action which impedes the consolidation of the sovereignty, unity and territorial integrity of the Democratic Republic of the Congo;

(b) To support the transitional Government and its institutions in order to allow for the re-establishment of political and economic stability and for the gradual reinforcement of State structures over the entire territory of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, in accordance with their obligations under the transitional Constitution and as per the text of the Constitution submitted for referendum in December 2005;

(c) To put an immediate end to the recruitment and use of child soldiers, which is contrary to international law and to the African Charter on the Rights and Welfare of the Child, with the understanding that, under the Convention on the Rights of the Child and the Optional Protocol thereto on the involvement of children in armed conflict, and in accordance with Security Council resolutions 1539(2004) of 22 April 2004 and 1612(2005) of 26 July 2005 on children and armed conflict, persons under the age of 18 are entitled to special protection, and to develop and implement without delay the action plans called for in Council resolutions 1539(2004) and 1612(2005);

(d) To take special measures to protect women and children from the appalling violence, including sexual violence, which continues to be prevalent throughout the country, in particular in the eastern part of the country, and to bring the perpetrators of such crimes to justice as soon as possible, and condemns in particular the widespread use of sexual violence as a means of warfare;

(e) To respect international humanitarian law, in particular on the protection of civilians, and to ensure the safety, security and freedom of movement of all civilians and United Nations and associated personnel, and the unhindered access of humanitarian personnel to all of the affected population throughout the territory of the Democratic Republic of the Congo in accordance with Security Council resolutions 1265 (1999) of 17 September 1999 and 1296(2000) of 19 April 2000;

(f) To promote the full enjoyment of all human rights and to protect the safety, security and freedom of movement of all human rights defenders;

6. Calls upon the Government of National Unity and Transition to take specific measures:

(a) To complete the objectives of the transitional period as laid down in the Global and All-Inclusive Agreement, in particular the holding of free and transparent elections at all levels within the specified timetable, enabling the establishment of a democratic constitutional regime, and the formation of a restructured and fully integrated national army, and also the formation of an integrated and adequately resourced national police force, while ensuring that government institutions, including the army and police, are trained in human rights aspects of their work; and ensuring that both light and heavy weapons are being surrendered in the disarmament process;

(b) To strengthen the transitional institutions, in particular to set up effectively the Independent Electoral Commission, and to make more effective the institutions for the strengthening of democracy, namely, the Truth and Reconciliation Commission, the Human Rights Monitoring Centre and the Haute Autorité des Médias, and to re-establish stability and the rule of law over the entire territory of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, thereby returning peace and progress to its people;

(c) To comply fully with its obligations under international human rights instruments and, accordingly, to continue to cooperate with United Nations mechanisms for the protection of human rights and further strengthen its cooperation with the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and the Human Rights Section of the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo;

(d) To put an end to impunity and to ensure, as it is duty-bound to do, that those responsible for human rights violations and grave breaches of international humanitarian law are brought to justice in accordance with applicable international procedural standards, and to carry out urgently a comprehensive reform of the judicial and prison system;

(e) To promote the full enjoyment of all human rights by women and children and to meet the special needs of women and girls in post-conflict reconstruction, as well as to ensure the full participation of women in all aspects of conflict resolution and peace processes, including peacekeeping, conflict management and peacebuilding, as a matter of priority, in accordance with Security Council resolution 1325 (2000) of 31 October 2000 on women and peace and security;

(f) To continue to cooperate fully with the International Criminal Court and with the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda, by ensuring that they have all necessary means with which to accomplish their tasks;

(g) To continue to uphold its commitment to abolishing the death penalty and not to impose it on juvenile offenders in line with its obligations assumed under the relevant provisions of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and other human rights instruments;

(h) To prevent the use of the media to incite hatred or tensions among communities, while respecting freedom of expression and of the press, particularly during the electoral campaign;

(i) To ensure that human rights defenders are protected from abuses, threats and harassment;

(j) To accelerate its programme to demobilize, disarm and reintegrate former combatants, taking into account the special needs of women and children, including girls, associated with those combatants;

(k) To ensure the rights and well-being of internally displaced persons;

(l) To increase its efforts to eliminate corruption in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, which contributes to a general climate of impunity, and to take steps towards the setting up of an arrangement to strengthen support for good governance and transparent economic management, with the support of the International Committee in Support of the Transition, the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, international financial institutions and donors;

7. Calls upon the Governments of countries in the region, including the Democratic Republic of the Congo:

(a) To contribute to preventing armed groups operating in the eastern Democratic Republic of the Congo from perpetrating killings and other serious crimes by tackling the illicit trade by those armed groups in illegally extracted natural resources as well as the linkage between the illegal exploitation of natural resources, illicit trade in such resources and the proliferation and trafficking of arms, including by preventing support for such armed groups, while fully respecting the sovereignty, unity and territorial integrity of the Democratic Republic of the Congo;

(b) To work with the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo to take urgent steps towards the disarmament and resettlement or repatriation of foreign armed groups, which remain a threat to regional peace and perpetrate killings and serious crimes against the civilian population of the Democratic Republic of the Congo;

(c) To support the transitional process in the Democratic Republic of the Congo and adhere fully to the Principles on Good-neighbourly Relations and Cooperation between the Democratic Republic of the Congo and Burundi, Rwanda and Uganda, signed in New York on 25 September 2003, to continue to work towards the successful implementation of the Joint Verification Mechanism, to work through the Tripartite Commission Plus One and to respect the principles of the Dar es Salaam Declaration of 20 November 2004, and welcomes steps taken in this regard to date;

(d) To peacefully repatriate members of the Forces démocratiques de libération du Rwanda returning to Rwanda, in accordance with the applicable norms of international law and with respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms, and to ensure the rights and well-being of returnees and refugee populations;

(e) To continue to cooperate with the International Criminal Court and with the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda, and, specifically in the case of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, to make swift progress towards passing legislation necessary for the International Criminal Court's investigations in the Democratic Republic of the Congo to proceed smoothly;

8. Urges the Secretary-General to continue his work aimed at eliminating sexual exploitation and abuse committed by personnel serving the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo;

9. Encourages the international community:

(a) To continue to support the transitional process in the Democratic Republic of the Congo and its institutions and, in particular, to support the electoral process and to provide further assistance for the reform of the justice system;

(b) To observe the arms embargo on the Democratic Republic of the Congo established by Security Council resolution 1493(2003) of 28 July 2003 and expanded by Council resolution 1596(2005) of 18 April 2005, and to enforce the sanctions measures against individuals identified by the Council in line with its resolution 1596(2005) and its resolution 1616(2005) of 29 July 2005;

(c) To continue to exert political pressure on concerned States and members of armed groups based in the eastern Democratic Republic of the Congo in order to limit their capacity for continued fund-raising, which contributes to ongoing killings and other serious crimes;

10. Decides to continue to examine the situation of human rights in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, and requests the independent expert on the situation of human rights in the Democratic Republic of the Congo to report to the General Assembly at its sixty-first session.

Haiti

Commission action. On 21 April [E/2005/23], the Commission Chairperson, in a statement concerning technical cooperation and the situation of human rights in Haiti, stated that the Commission welcomed the efforts of the Haitian transitional authorities to protect and promote human rights and encouraged continued international support for those efforts. It noted with concern the difficulties in the functioning of the judicial system arising from pretrial detention and encouraged the authorities to continue efforts to expedite justice. The Commission welcomed the authorities' agreement to the opening of an OHCHR office in the country, and invited the independent expert to continue his mission and report thereon in 2006.

On 25 July, the Economic and Social Council approved the Commission's request to the independent expert (decision 2005/294).

Report of independent expert. Independent expert Louis Joinet (France) visited Haiti three times in 2005 [E/CN.4/2006/115], where he focused on the issues of insecurity and vulnerable groups, human rights violations and the failure of justice. He found that, despite gradual improvement in the provinces, the situation in the capital was increasingly disturbing, owing in particular to a daily increase in kidnaping incidents. The situation concerning children's rights had deteriorated due to growing poverty and violence, illustrated by the fact that some 2,500 children lived on the streets in the capital and that the country's armed factions recruited children. In addition, up to 47 per cent of sexual assaults involved minors, school enrolment rate was low in the most disadvantaged districts and some 200,000 children, including orphans, were infected by the HIV virus. The situation of women was also worrisome, with up to 85 per cent of cases of interpersonal violence involving them, particularly regarding increasing reports of rape. Efforts to secure women's rights had involved the launching of a national plan to combat violence against them, which resulted in an obligation for doctors to issue medical certificates in cases of injuries that might be linked to sexual assault, the criminalization of rape and the progressive lifting of the taboo on the voluntary termination of pregnancy.

Also of concern were mass expulsions of people of Haitian origin from the Dominican Republic under conditions that violated their rights, as well as the mass deportation through processes that lacked a legal basis, particularly from the United States, of convicted Haitians who had served their sentences. The justice system was undermined by a number of other problems, including damage to judicial facilities, recurrent abuse of extended pretrial detention and interference with the judiciary by the executive arm of government, illustrated by the alleged dismissal (reportedly misrepresented as retirements) of five judges from the Court of Cassation. The expert recommended that priority be given to efforts to combat insecurity and poverty, which had been the major cause of the violence experienced by the poorest. He also proposed measures to improve the justice system, advance women's rights, improve such electoral processes as voter registration, reform the land register, and develop stand-alone, small-scale water supply projects.

Liberia

Commission action. On 22 April [dec. 2005/117], the Commission took note of the 2004 report of the independent expert [YUN 2004, p. 676] on the situation of human rights in Liberia and decided to consider the question in 2006.

Report of independent expert. The independent expert on the human rights situation in Liberia, Charlotte Abaka (Ghana), visited the country (25 September–6 October) [E/CN.4/2006/114] and found that progress had been made, including improvements in the security situation, which enhanced the freedom of movement and facilitated the conduct of national elections. Other positive developments included the enhancement of laws to improve the functioning of national institutions concerned with human rights, such as the Truth and Reconciliation Commission Act and the Act establishing the Independent National Commission on Human Rights; Liberia's recent ratification of several international human rights treaties; the resettlement of 39,851 refugees and over 221,828 internally displaced persons (IDPs); and efforts to improve the justice system, particularly as a result of the creation of a Case Flow Management Committee, which helped reduce prison congestion in some counties. Despite those encouraging developments, the expert noted that human rights violations had continued, and a major concern was that two of the country's five main rubber plantations were being controlled by former combatants, and the line between State and corporate responsibility for the human rights concerns on those plantations was blurred. Although the Transitional Government was making efforts to secure women's rights, including the development of a draft law on rape, women continued to suffer increasing incidents of rape, domestic violence, harmful traditional practices, ritual killings and trial by ordeal. Also of major concern were egregious violations of children's rights owing to variations in the legal definition of a child and the consequent lack of formal recognition of children's special needs, a high incidence of sexual assault against them, and the prevalence of illegal, privately run orphanages, among other reasons. The problem was compounded by the fact that those violations attracted only slight attention from the justice system, which was hampered by poor court management and corruption. The expert also noted shortcomings regarding the realization of the rights to an adequate standard of living, fair remuneration and regular payment of wages, to physical and mental health, and to education. She addressed recommendations to the Liberian authorities to better address human rights, including the establishment of such national institutions as the Truth and Reconciliation Committee, a National Human Rights Council, a judicial council and a law reform commission, as well as measures against corruption and on the need to review salaries for government officials and expedite action in giving effect to the international treaties it had ratified. She recommended that the Security Council strengthen and extend the current human rights mandate of the United Nations Mission in Liberia (UNMIL) (see p. 256) and that OHCHR, Governments and the international community support UNMIL and reform efforts in Liberia.

Nepal

Reports of OHCHR. In response to a request contained in the 2004 statement of the Commission's Chairperson [YUN 2004, p. 676], OHCHR submitted a January report [E/CN.4/2005/114] on the question of human rights assistance to Nepal. The report provided an overview of the deteriorating human rights situation in the country, characterized by widespread systematic violations, particularly among the civilian population and resulting from increased military activity on both sides of the ongoing conflict between the Communist Party Nepal–Maoist (CPN) and the Government. Grave violations allegedly committed by the former included mass abductions, particularly of children, executions, torture and disappearances. In addition, there were reports of frequent blockades, enforced through terror, including the use of landmines, which created considerable social and economic hardship among the poor population. Government forces reportedly committed similar violations, and in the past year, there had been increasing reports of threats and reprisals against human rights defenders from both sides. The report also highlighted OHCHR activities in the country, which included advice and assistance to the National Human Rights Commission and to the Government on human rights commitments, support to the UN Resident Coordinator and the Country Team, the development of regular exchanges of information and views with civil society and cooperation with regional and international partners. The Office proposed measures for ending the cycle of violence and impunity and to ensure the efficiency of the National Human Rights Commission, a strong and active civil society, and a more active engagement in Nepal by the United Nations and the international community.

Commission action. On 20 April [res. 2005/78], the Commission, condemning the human rights violations of the Communist Party Nepal–Maoist (CPN), urged the Government to take measures to prevent and end those violations; begin a national political dialogue to restore peace; assist IDPs; safeguard judicial remedies; support the National Human Rights Commission of Nepal; and request the technical assistance of the United Nations and the international community in planning local elections. It requested the High Commissioner to establish an office in Nepal, in accordance with an 11 April Agreement with the Government, in order to assist the authorities in developing policies to promote and protect human rights, to monitor the situation of human rights in the country and report to the General Assembly in 2005, and to the Commission in 2006.

On 25 July, the Economic and Social Council endorsed the Commission's requests to the High Commissioner (decision 2005/277).

Report of High Commissioner. By a September note [A/60/359], the Secretary-General transmitted a report of the High Commissioner regarding the human rights situation and OHCHR activities in Nepal, including technical cooperation, submitted in response to Commission resolution 2005/78 (see above). The report described the political, legal and human rights situation in the country and examined the trend regarding respect for international human rights and humanitarian law, including by State authorities, the Communist Party Nepal–Maoist (CPN), vigilante elements and other groups. It considered, in particular, the status of democratic rights relative to arbitrary detention, freedom of movement and fair trial, and to the freedom of assembly, of expression and of association. The report determined that long-standing human rights concerns, including economic impoverishment, social inequities and discrimination, were among the root causes of the crisis in the country, and under the circumstances, the rights to food and to adequate water and other economic, social and cultural rights were all at risk. Particular issues of concern included the practice of caste and ethnic discrimination, mainly against the Dalits, who were relegated to the lowest caste, and which was also inflicted on the over 60 different indigenous communities in the country. Gender discrimination and human trafficking, affecting mostly women and girls, were also critical problems. Other groups of concern were IDPs compelled by human rights problems to flee their homes; children, who were abducted by the Communist Party Nepal–Maoist (CPN) as combatants, human shields or servants; and human rights defenders vulnerable to arrests and travel restrictions.

OHCHR, which had been active in Nepal since 2003 to assist with human rights issues, enhanced its presence in the country during the year with the establishment of an office there, following an April agreement with the Government. Thereafter, it presented Member States with a plan for the new office, comprising some 50 international staff, including UN volunteers and national professional and support staff. The office was mandated to advise the Resident Coordinator and the Country Team on human rights protection and capacity-building, and to coordinate human rights activities. To that end, an inter-agency human rights protection working group had been established, and would, in turn, establish subgroups on the protection of children and IDPs and on other priority human rights protection issues. During the year, the office received and investigated reports of ongoing violations by both parties to the conflict, particularly regarding extrajudicial executions, disappearances, arbitrary arrest and detention, and torture, and also addressed the question of accountability for violations by military personnel and of responsibility for the protection of the civilian population. In other developments, OHCHR reviewed the appointment of new commissioners to the National Human Rights Council after a controversial amendment to the procedure for such appointments, assessed how the development might impact the work of that body, and made recommendations for future assistance.

On 16 December, the General Assembly took note of the High Commissioner's report (decision 60/533).

Sierra Leone

Reports of High Commissioner. In response to a 2004 Commission request [YUN 2004, p. 676], the High Commissioner submitted a February report [E/CN.4/2005/113] on the situation of human rights in Sierra Leone. The report examined human rights challenges relating to the right to life and security of the person, amputees and war-wounded, children's welfare, gender-based violence and women's rights, refugees, returnees and IDPs. It also analysed the human rights activities of the United Nations Mission in Sierra Leone (UNAMSIL) (see p. 276) and other UN entities in the country, including OHCHR, and considered developments concerning transitional justice. The High Commissioner observed that there had been a continuing consolidation of progress in the field of human rights in Sierra Leone, and developments in that regard included the submission by the Truth and Reconciliation Commission of recommendations, some of which, by statute, were binding on the Government; trials in process by the Special Court for Sierra Leone; increased compliance by law enforcement officers with the rule of law; and relative improvements in detention conditions. Despite that progress, violations persisted, including of the right to life. In that regard, reports of unresolved killings involved women, who also suffered unfavourable traditional and cultural practices and sexual exploitation, as well as children, many of whom had been abducted as child soldiers, maimed, and subjected to forced labour, sexual slavery and child trafficking. The situation of amputees and war-wounded also highlighted human rights challenges in Sierra Leone, as many of them had been compelled to become city beggars owing to the Government's failure to address their needs, particularly regarding adequate housing, among other things. Additional shortcomings in the field of economic, social and cultural rights threatening the hard-won peace included a high level of youth unemployment, limited possibility for education and skills training, poor health facilities, high levels of corruption, and continuing discrimination against women. Those issues needed to be addressed to ensure the long-term sustainability of the progress made. In particular, greater efforts should be made to achieve the Millennium Development Goals (MDGs) [YUN 2000, p. 51].

In an August note [A/60/349], the Secretary-General transmitted the High Commissioner's report on assistance to Sierra Leone in the field of human rights, submitted in response to Commission resolution 2005/76 (see p. 743). After examining the human rights situation in the country, the High Commissioner, noting progress towards achieving the benchmarks set for UNAMSIL by year's end, stated that the peace remained fragile owing to a number of human rights concerns. She observed that the critical issues of marginalization and exclusion at the root of the conflict were yet to be addressed and that sufficient efforts were not being made to protect women and children from violations. Other problems included widespread corruption, a weak judiciary and impunity. Overall, however, the poor state of the economy constituted the largest potential threat to peace, stability and the continuous enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms under the rule of law. The High Commissioner recommended that the human rights situation in the country continue to be closely monitored, investigated and documented, with the human rights components of UNAMSIL and the United Nations Mission in Liberia (UNMIL) undertaking more public reporting on individual responsibilities for violations and other issues of concern. Further recommendations concerned the need for continuing training and capacity-building in the area of human rights; the establishment of a national human rights commission; reform of the justice system and of relevant laws, as well as the ratification and implementation of international instruments, in order to ensure respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms, particularly regarding women's and children's rights. It was also vital to maintain a strong human rights presence in Sierra Leone after the termination of UNAMSIL, to support the national authorities in addressing human rights issues.

On 16 December, the General Assembly took note of the High Commissioner's report (decision 60/533).

Commission action. On 20 April [res. 2005/76], the Commission, welcoming progress achieved in the field of human rights in Sierra Leone, expressed concern at developments that could threaten that progress, including the return of ex-combatants, increasing reports of child trafficking and the plight of amputees and mutilated victims of the conflict in the country. It urged the Government to continue to promote and protect human rights, accord priority attention to the needs of mutilated victims and further strengthen its judicial system. The Commission asked the High Commissioner and the international community to assist the Government in strengthening its capacity to review and update national legislation, particularly relating to women, children and vulnerable groups. The High Commissioner was further asked to report to the General Assembly in 2005, and to the Commission in 2006.

On 25 July, the Economic and Social Council endorsed the Commission's request to the High Commissioner (decision 2005/276).

Somalia

Commission action. On 21 April [res. 2005/83], the Commission, welcoming the newly established transitional institutions in Somalia among important steps towards a durable solution to the conflict there, condemned the ongoing and widespread human rights violations, the forced recruitment of children for use in the armed conflict and those who obstructed the peace process by persisting with confrontation and violence, including hostage-taking, abduction and murder. It called on the Transitional Federal Government to establish a national commission on human rights to promote and protect rights, combat impunity, bring perpetrators to justice, and integrate human rights standards into national institutions. The High Commissioner was asked to provide for the translation into Somali language and subsequent dissemination within the country of international human rights treaties and the Commission's current resolution, while the transnational federal institutions were requested to cooperate with the Commission's mechanisms, particularly its special procedures. The Commission decided to extend the mandate of the independent expert on the situation of human rights in Somalia for a further year and requested him to report to the Commission in 2006.

On 25 July, the Economic and Social Council endorsed the Commission's requests to the independent expert (decision 2005/281).

Report of independent expert. In response to a 2004 Commission request [YUN 2004, p. 677], the independent expert on the situation of human rights in Somalia, Ghanim Alnajjar (Kuwait), submitted a March report [E/CN.4/2005/117] covering the period from December 2004 to February 2005, during which he undertook a mission to the country, including visits to Puntland (31 January–2 February) and Somaliland (3-5 February). He observed some optimism towards resolving the border conflict between those two regions, with the authorities undertaking infrastructure projects and NGOs maintaining efforts to address local human rights issues. In Somaliland, where he helped negotiate the release of a 17 year-old girl sentenced to five years' incarceration for alleged espionage and lying about her clan identity, the expert found a number of other causes for concern, including an increase in police brutality, an alarming trend in juvenile suicides, the forced return of refugees and reports of threats to human rights defenders and journalists, to freedom of association and opinion. In Puntland, large-scale illegal fishing by foreign trawlers, complicated by recent droughts, floods and the long-term effects of a ban on livestock infringed on the economic and social rights of the population. In other parts of Somalia, the right to life continued to be violated extensively, owing to continuing insecurity and violence, particularly in the south and most notably in the capital city Mogadishu, where unrelenting inter-clan fighting resulted in many dead and wounded civilians. The expert noted that the greatest threat to security in Somalia was weapons proliferation, owing mainly to large-scale violations of the arms embargo. Notable violations related to increasing incidents of hostage-taking, which affected the freedom of the press; economic, social and cultural rights; prison conditions; the rights of minorities, including women and children; the rule of law; and the rights of refugees and IDPs. The expert recommended that the Somali authorities accord particular attention to children's and women's rights and establish independent institutions to promote and protect human rights. He also proposed that UN bodies study the possibility of establishing an independent organization to protect the endangered Somali coastline and that the Secretary-General and the Security Council establish a committee of independent experts to examine allegations of past violations and related crimes against humanity committed in Somalia. OHCHR should deploy a senior human rights officer to Nairobi, with the possibility of moving to Mogadishu at a later stage, charged with traveling frequently to Somalia to document violations, undertaking human rights advocacy duties and providing expertise when requested.

Timor-Leste

Report of High Commissioner. In response to a request contained in a 2004 statement of the Commission's Chairperson [YUN 2004, p. 677], the High Commissioner reported on technical cooperation in the field of human rights in Timor-Leste [E/CN.4/2005/115]. The report summarized the activities of OHCHR and of the Human Rights Unit of the United Nations Mission of Support in East Timor (UNMISET) (see p. 439), which were working together to implement a two-year technical cooperation project with the Government of Timor-Leste. It also discussed other technical assistance activities in the field of capacity-building regarding the justice system, the prisons, strengthening the legislative framework for police operations, monitoring alleged human rights violations by the defence forces of Timor-Leste, the role of a Provedor (ombudsperson with administrative oversight and the task of promoting and protecting human rights), intolerance, accession to international human rights instruments, and support to NGOs and other civil society organizations in promoting human rights. In addition, the report examined issues relevant to transitional justice in the country, as well as the human rights situation of vulnerable groups, including women, children, refugees, illegal immigrants and religious minorities. The report noted that, although considerable progress had been made in addressing the human rights situation in Timor-Leste, significant challenges remained. Notable achievements included the fact that the Commission for Reception, Truth and Reconciliation, charged with conducting community reconciliation hearings, successfully completed its work, and that the law establishing a national human rights institution and the office of the Provedor and Justice had been promulgated. On the negative side, however, the post of Prevedor was yet to be filled and alleged human rights violations had increased, particularly against women, children and refugees. Also, accountability mechanisms were unclear and inadequate, and the justice system remained weak. In efforts to address some of those problems, OHCHR and the Human Rights Unit of UNMISET had provided human rights training to law enforcement and prison officials, and to civil society and NGOs. Continuing technical assistance was being provided to the Commission for Reception, Truth and Reconciliation, and a technical advisor on human rights treaty reporting had been appointed to assist the Government in preparing its reports under international human rights instruments to which the country was a party. Nonetheless, there was a need for further technical assistance and advisory services to strengthen State institutions and civil society capacities for promoting and protecting human rights, and to ensure their sustainability after the scheduled withdrawal of UNMISET within the year. To that end, the High Commissioner recommended that the international community provide adequate resources to fund the continuation of a technical cooperation programme between OHCHR and the Government. She also addressed a series of recommendations to the Government for improving the human rights situation in the country, including through the expeditious appointment of the Provedor, effective independent monitoring of detention conditions, tackling police misconduct and violations, providing more legal assistance to women and strengthening their access to justice, and expediting the process of reuniting separated children with their families.

Human rights education

World Programme for Human Rights Education

Report of High Commissioner. In accordance with a 2004 Commission request [YUN 2004, p. 678], the High Commissioner submitted a report [E/CN.4/2005/98] on progress made regarding follow-up to the United Nations Decade for Human Rights Education, proclaimed by the General Assembly in resolution 49/184 [YUN 1994, p. 1039] and which ended in 2004. The report provided information on related events in the past year, particularly the Assembly's proclamation of the World Programme for Human Rights Education, conceived to advance the implementation of human rights education programmes in all sectors [YUN 2004, p. 678], with effect from 1 January 2005. It also reflected on the contents of the draft plan of action for the first phase (2005-2007) of the World Programme, prepared jointly by OHCHR and UNESCO [ibid.] and considered by the Assembly.

Note by Secretary-General. By a 2 March note [A/59/525/Rev.1], the Secretary-General transmitted, for adoption by the General Assembly, a revised draft plan of action for the first phase (2005-2007) of the World Programme, prepared by OHCHR, in consultation with UNESCO and based on comments received from Member States, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 59/113 [YUN 2004, p. 678]. The revised draft, annexed to the note, addressed issues relating to the context and definition of human rights education. It also considered specific issues concerning the first phase, the implementation strategy at the national level, coordination of implementation efforts, international cooperation and support, and evaluation.

Commission action. On 20 April [res. 2005/61], the Commission, welcoming the High Commissioner's report (see above), encouraged the Assembly to adopt the revised plan of action for the first phase (2005-2007) of the Programme. It asked OHCHR and UNESCO to disseminate it widely once adopted, and States to implement it. The High Commissioner and UN system bodies were asked to promote and assist in the national implementation of the plan, and the High Commissioner was further asked to report in 2006.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 July [meeting 113], the General Assembly adopted resolution 59/113 B [draft A/59/L.65 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 105 (b)].

World Programme for Human Rights Education

The General Assembly,

Recalling the relevant resolutions adopted by the General Assembly and the Commission on Human Rights concerning the United Nations Decade for Human Rights Education, 1995-2004,

Convinced that human rights education is a long-term and lifelong process through which everyone learns tolerance and respect for the dignity of others and the means and methods of ensuring that respect in all societies,

Believing that human rights education is essential to the realization of human rights and fundamental freedoms and contributes significantly to promoting equality, preventing conflict and human rights violations and enhancing participation and democratic processes, with a view to developing societies in which all human beings are valued and respected,

Welcoming the proclamation by the General Assembly on 10 December 2004 of the World Programme for Human Rights Education, structured in consecutive phases, which began on 1 January 2005,

1. Adopts the revised draft plan of action for the first phase (2005-2007) of the World Programme for Human Rights Education, which focuses on primary and secondary school systems;

2. Encourages all States to develop initiatives within the World Programme and, in particular, to implement, within their capabilities, the plan of action;

3. Requests the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, in close cooperation with the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, to promote the national implementation of the plan of action, provide relevant technical assistance when requested and coordinate related international efforts;

4. Appeals to relevant organs, bodies or agencies of the United Nations system, as well as all other international and regional intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, within their respective mandates, to promote and technically assist, when requested, the national implementation of the plan of action;

5. Calls upon all existing national human rights institutions to assist in the implementation of human rights education programmes consistent with the plan of action;

6. Requests the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization to widely disseminate the plan of action among States and inter-governmental and non-governmental organizations.

Subcommission action. On 11 August [res. 2005/26], the Subcommission recommended that human rights treaty bodies, when examining reports of States parties, devote attention to human rights education, particularly in the framework of the World Programme for Human Rights Education, and that the item be included in the agenda of the annual meeting of the persons chairing the treaty bodies, to enable them to make recommendations on how human rights education could contribute to national capacity-building, aimed at strengthening national human rights protection mechanisms.

Children and a culture of peace

Report of UNESCO Director-General. In response to General Assembly resolutions 59/142 [YUN 2004, p. 1102] and 59/143 [ibid., p. 679] on the promotion of religious and cultural understanding, harmony and cooperation, and on the International Decade for a Culture of Peace and Non-violence for the Children of the World (2001-2010), proclaimed in 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 639], the Secretary-General transmitted a report [A/60/279] of the UNESCO Director-General on a midterm review of the Decade. The report analysed work undertaken by the UN system, civil society organizations and UNESCO during the past five years. At the national level, UNESCO National Commissions had coordinated culture of peace activities, and 26 of them, representing all regions, had responded to questionnaires on actions taken, progress achieved and remaining challenges. Action in fostering the culture was taken mainly through education programmes, the promotion of sustainable economic and social development, the promotion of respect for human rights and equality between men and women, support for democratic participation, advancement of understanding, tolerance and solidarity, support for participatory communication and free flow of information and knowledge, and promotion of international peace and solidarity. Respondents reported progress in terms of increased children's access to schools, owing to the improved awareness of parents of the need for basic education; improved health-care services and infrastructure; enhanced involvement of governmental institutions in relevant activities; better participation of citizens in electoral processes; and increased participation of women in decision-making at the local and national levels. A change in mentalities and behaviour was observed in some countries in post-conflict situations, where violence decreased markedly and ex-combatants experienced better integration into civilian society. At the global level, progress included increased civil society awareness of issues relating to a culture of peace and of peaceful conflict resolution. Major obstacles to further progress were political instability and the complexity of violence, exacerbated by a lack of interest and of political support from national and international authorities and the mass media. Other obstacles included the lack of human and financial resources, poverty, male-female inequality in access to education, HIV/AIDS, unemployment, illiteracy, traditional religious beliefs and the lack of political will. Additional reports on the activities undertaken, the progress made and integral problems in promoting the culture were provided by 36 NGOs that had also responded to the questionnaires. In the light of the obstacles highlighted, respondents advocated the development of national and regional plans of action, the creation of national and international coordination mechanisms, better monitoring of the activities carried out by various actors and better information-sharing and communication on issues pertaining to the Decade at all levels. Also needed were better training in conflict resolution and the development of appropriate methodologies of intervention on issues relating to a culture of peace and human rights and better communication and information mechanisms at the national level.

To maintain visibility and momentum between the midpoint and the completion of the Decade, the report proposed that a global framework be promoted to integrate the various objectives of the Declaration and Programme of Action on a Culture of Peace, which should launch national, regional or international events to demonstrate the Decade's objectives, and, among other things, mobilize the requisite resources for those activities. Annexed to the report was a summary of the views of some 700 civil society organizations from over 100 countries, which had responded to the questionnaires regarding the progress made and obstacles towards a culture of peace and non-violence during the first half of the Decade.

On 20 October [meeting 36], the General Assembly adopted resolution 60/3 [draft A/60/L.5 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 43].

International Decade for a Culture of Peace and Non-Violence for the Children of the World, 2001-2010

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind the Charter of the United Nations, including the purposes and principles contained therein, and especially the dedication to saving succeeding generations from the scourge of war,

Recalling the Constitution of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, which states that, "since wars begin in the minds of men, it is in the minds of men that the defences of peace must be constructed",

Recalling also its previous resolutions on a culture of peace, in particular resolution 52/15 of 20 November 1997 proclaiming 2000 the International Year for the Culture of Peace, resolution 53/25 of 10 November 1998 proclaiming the period 2001-2010 the International Decade for a Culture of Peace and Non-Violence for the Children of the World, and resolutions 56/5 of 5 November 2001, 57/6 of 4 November 2002, 58/11 of 10 November 2003 and 59/143 of 15 December 2004,

Reaffirming the Declaration and Programme of Action on a Culture of Peace, recognizing that they serve, inter alia, as the basis for the observance of the Decade, and convinced that the effective and successful observance of the Decade throughout the world will promote a culture of peace and non-violence that benefits humanity, in particular future generations,

Recalling the United Nations Millennium Declaration, which calls for the active promotion of a culture of peace,

Taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 2000/66 of 26 April 2000, entitled "Towards a culture of peace",

Taking note also of the report of the Secretary-General on the International Decade for a Culture of Peace and Non-Violence for the Children of the World, including paragraph 28 thereof, which indicates that each of the ten years of the Decade will be marked with a different priority theme related to the Programme of Action,

Noting the relevance of the World Summit on Sustainable Development, held in Johannesburg, South Africa, from 26 August to 4 September 2002, the International Conference on Financing for Development, held in Monterrey, Mexico, from 18 to 22 March 2002, the special session of the General Assembly on children, held in New York from 8 to 10 May 2002, the World Conference against Racism, Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia and Related Intolerance, held in Durban, South Africa, from 31 August to 8 September 2001, and the United Nations Decade for Human Rights Education, 1995-2004, for the International Decade for a Culture of Peace and Non-Violence for the Children of the World, 2001-2010, as well as the need to implement, as appropriate, the relevant decisions agreed upon therein,

Recognizing that all efforts made by the United Nations system in general and the international community at large for peacekeeping, peacebuilding, the prevention of conflicts, disarmament, sustainable development, the promotion of human dignity and human rights, democracy, the rule of law, good governance and gender equality at the national and international levels contribute greatly to the culture of peace,

Noting that its resolution 57/337 of 3 July 2003 on the prevention of armed conflict could contribute to the further promotion of a culture of peace,

Taking into account the "Manifesto 2000" initiative of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization promoting a culture of peace, which has so far received over seventy-five million signatures of endorsement throughout the world,

Taking note with appreciation of the report of the Director-General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization on the implementation of resolution 59/143,

Taking note of the 2005 World Summit Outcome adopted at the High-level Plenary Meeting of the General Assembly,

1. Reiterates that the objective of the International Decade for a Culture of Peace and Non-Violence for the Children of the World, 2001-2010, is to strengthen further the global movement for a culture of peace following the observance of the International Year for the Culture of Peace in 2000;

2. Invites Member States to continue to place greater emphasis on and expand their activities promoting a culture of peace and non-violence, in particular during the Decade, at the national, regional and international levels and to ensure that peace and non-violence are fostered at all levels;

3. Commends the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization for recognizing the promotion of a culture of peace as the expression of its fundamental mandate, and encourages it, as the lead agency for the Decade, to strengthen further the activities it has undertaken for promoting a culture of peace, including the dissemination of the Declaration and Programme of Action on a Culture of Peace and related materials in various languages across the world;

4. Also commends the relevant United Nations bodies, in particular the United Nations Children's Fund, the United Nations Development Fund for Women and the University for Peace, for their activities in further promoting a culture of peace and non-violence, including the promotion of peace education and activities related to specific areas identified in the Programme of Action on a Culture of Peace, and encourages them to continue and further strengthen and expand their efforts;

5. Encourages the appropriate authorities to provide education, in children's schools, that includes lessons in mutual understanding, tolerance, active citizenship, human rights and the promotion of a culture of peace;

6. Commends civil society, including non-governmental organizations and young people, for their activities in further promoting a culture of peace and non-violence, including through their campaign to raise awareness on a culture of peace, and takes note of the progress achieved by more than seven hundred organizations in more than one hundred countries;

7. Encourages civil society, including non-governmental organizations, to further strengthen its efforts in furtherance of the objectives of the Decade, inter alia, by adopting its own programme of activities to complement the initiatives of Member States, the organizations of the United Nations system and other international and regional organizations;

8. Encourages the involvement of the mass media in education for a culture of peace and non-violence, with particular regard to children and young people, including through the planned expansion of the Culture of Peace News Network as a global network of Internet sites in many languages;

9. Welcomes the efforts made by the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization to continue the communication and networking arrangements established during the International Year for providing an instant update of developments related to the observance of the Decade;

10. Invites Member States to observe 21 September each year as the International Day of Peace, as a day of global ceasefire and non-violence, in accordance with resolution 55/282 of 7 September 2001;

11. Invites Member States, as well as civil society, including non-governmental organizations, to continue providing information to the Secretary-General on the observance of the Decade and the activities undertaken to promote a culture of peace and non-violence;

12. Appreciates the participation of Member States in the day of plenary meetings to review progress made in the implementation of the Declaration and Programme of Action on a Culture of Peace and the observance of the Decade at its midpoint;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to explore enhancing mechanisms for the implementation of the Declaration and Programme of Action on a Culture of Peace;

14. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its sixty-first session a report on the implementation of the present resolution;

15. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its sixty-first session the item entitled "Culture of peace".

National institutions and regional arrangements

National institutions for human rights promotion and protection

Commission action. On 20 April [res. 2005/74], the Commission, affirming the important role of national human rights institutions to protect and promote the rights of particularly vulnerable groups, welcomed the decision of a growing number of States to establish such institutions, consistent with the Paris Principles relating to the status of national institutions for the promotion and protection of human rights (Paris Principles), adopted in General Assembly resolution 48/134 [YUN 1993, p. 899]. Further welcoming the strengthening of cooperation among those institutions, including through the International Coordinating Committee of National Institutions for the promotion and protection of human rights (for which OHCHR served as secretariat), the Commission asked the Secretary-General to assist the Committee's meetings and to report in 2006 on the process it used to accredit national institutions in compliance with the Paris Principles, and to ensure that the process was strengthened with periodic review. The Secretary-General was further asked to report, also in 2006, on the implementation of the Commission's resolution. In accordance with the recommendations contained in the Secretary-General's 2004 report [YUN 2004, p. 681], the Commission asked its Chairperson to finalize by 2006, the modalities for national institutions to participate in the work of the Commission and its subsidiary bodies, and for continuing the practice of issuing documents from those institutions under their own symbol numbers.

Reports of Secretary-General. In response to a 2004 Commission request [YUN 2004, p. 680], the Secretary-General, in a January report [E/CN.4/2005/107], discussed ways to enhance the participation of national human rights institutions in the Commission's work, with the objective of outlining a possible means of strengthening the status of those institutions in international forums, in order to feed national human rights challenges and experiences into the international agenda and to provide for effective follow-up at the national level of related recommendations. Against that background, the report provided a historical overview of calls within the Commission for enhancing the participation of national institutions and described their work, noting that their involvement in the Commission's work had grown over the years. Nonetheless, their status and the nature of their participation had yet to be formally defined. Issues of particular concern related to their accreditation by the International Coordinating Committee and their compliance with the Paris Principles. The Secretary-General recommended that strengthening the accreditation procedures of the Committee be accorded priority, and the Commission might wish to request that a report be submitted to it on action taken to that effect by the Committee. He also recommended that national institutions be permitted to address substantive issues under various items on the Commission's agenda other than the item relating to national institutions and regional arrangements, as that would enrich the information provided to the Commission and assist it in making informed decisions. There was also scope for a continued engagement with national institutions through the Subcommission, working groups and various Commission mechanisms, which could help strengthen the Commission's work. The Commission might wish to put in place a consultative process with OHCHR and the International Coordinating Committee to further explore ways in enhancing the participation of national institutions in that regard.

A later report of the Secretary-General [E/CN.4/2006/101], covering January to December 2005, contained information on the activities undertaken by OHCHR to establish and strengthen national institutions, measures taken by Governments and national institutions in that regard, and cooperation between those institutions and international mechanisms to promote and protect human rights.

During the reporting period, at the request of Governments, OHCHR provided advice and information on activities and issues which might assist national institutions in Afghanistan, Angola, Belgium, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Cameroon, Chile, China, Colombia, the Comoros, the Congo, Côte d'Ivoire, the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Djibouti, El Salvador, Finland, Iraq, Italy, Jordan, the province of Kosovo (Serbia and Montenegro), Lesotho, Liberia, Maldives, Mauritania, Nepal, the Niger, Norway, Pakistan, Qatar, Saudi Arabia, Serbia and Montenegro, Sierra Leone, Sri Lanka, the Sudan, the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Timor-Leste, Turkey, the United Kingdom and Uruguay. The national institutions of Afghanistan, Mongolia, Nepal, the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, Rwanda and Zambia benefited from the support programmes provided by the National Institutions Unit of OHCHR's Capacity-Building and Field Operations Branch, often in collaboration with the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) and UN missions. During its 2005 session (Geneva, 14-15 April), the International Coordinating Committee discussed a paper on early warning mechanisms and agreed to establish a working group with at least one representative from each region to follow up on the commitments made at the Seventh International Conference of National Human Rights Institutions [YUN 2004, p. 681], based on feedback from a questionnaire provided by OHCHR. Support was given to regional initiatives, including the International Conference on National Institutions in the Arab Region (Cairo, Egypt, 6-8 March) (see p. 752), the international seminar on illicit trafficking of migrants and smuggling (Campeche, Mexico, 10-11 March), the fourth annual meeting of the Network of National Institutions of the Americas (12 April), the Asia Pacific Regional Training Programme on Human Rights Investigations (Tagaytay City, the Philippines, 18-22 April), a meeting of the Coordinating Committee of African National Institutions (12 April), the Tenth annual meeting of the Asia Pacific Forum (Ulaanbaatar, Mongolia, 24-26 August), the thirteenth Workshop on Regional Cooperation for the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights in the Asia-Pacific Region (Beijing, China, 30 August–2 September), a regional workshop on national human rights institutions and the right to education (Copán, Honduras, 21-23 September), the first congress of the Association francophone des commissions nationales des droits de l'homme on economic, social and cultural rights (Montreal, Canada, 29 September–1 October) and the fifth Conference of African National Institutions (Abuja, Nigeria, 8-10 December). In Europe, OHCHR participated in meetings of the European Coordinating Group of National Human Rights Institutions (Paris, 16 February; Geneva, 12 April) and met with the Commission nationale consultative des droits de l'homme (Paris 6-7 June) to help define a common strategy in establishing and strengthening national human rights institutions in Europe and Central Asia. OHCHR also assisted UN operations in Burundi, Kosovo (Serbia and Montenegro), Liberia, Sierra Leone and the Sudan in addressing issues relating to national human rights institutions and undertook or participated in several national and regional activities to support related initiatives. In November, OHCHR launched the Economic, Social and Cultural Rights: Handbook for National Human Rights Institutions, No. 12 in the Professional Training Series, focusing on the role of those institutions in promoting and protecting economic, social and cultural rights. It also provided support for the International Round Table on National Institutions and the Implementation of Economic, Social and Cultural Rights (New Delhi, India, 29 November–1 December), which adopted the New Delhi Concluding Statement, annexed to the report. Various other initiatives of national institutions supported during the year by OHCHR related to migration, gender, rights of persons with disabilities, indigenous peoples, minorities, HIV/ AIDS prevention and related discrimination, the prevention of conflict and of torture, and the Paris Principles.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December [meeting 64], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/60/509/Add.2], adopted resolution 60/154 without vote [agenda item 71 (b)].

National institutions for the promotion and protection of human rights

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions and those of the Commission on Human Rights concerning national institutions for the promotion and protection of human rights,

Welcoming the rapidly growing interest throughout the world in the creation and strengthening of independent, pluralistic national institutions for the promotion and protection of human rights,

Convinced of the important role that such national institutions play and will continue to play in promoting and protecting human rights and fundamental freedoms and in developing and enhancing public awareness of those rights and freedoms,

Recognizing that the United Nations has played an important role and should continue to play a more important role in assisting the development of national institutions,

Recalling the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights on 25 June 1993, which reaffirmed the important and constructive role played by national human rights institutions, in particular in their advisory capacity to the competent authorities and their role in remedying human rights violations, in disseminating information on human rights and in education in human rights,

Recalling also the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action, in which Governments were urged to create or strengthen independent national institutions for the promotion and protection of human rights, including the human rights of women,

Reaffirming that all human rights are universal, indivisible, interrelated, interdependent and mutually reinforcing, and that all human rights must be treated in a fair and equal manner, on the same footing and with same emphasis,

Bearing in mind the significance of national and regional particularities and various historical, cultural and religious backgrounds, and that all States, regardless of their political, economic and cultural systems, have the duty to promote and protect all human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Recalling the programme of action adopted by national institutions, at their meeting held in Vienna in June 1993 during the World Conference on Human Rights, for the promotion and protection of human rights, in which it was recommended that United Nations activities and programmes should be reinforced to meet the requests for assistance from States wishing to establish or strengthen their national institutions for the promotion and protection of human rights,

Noting the valuable role played and contributions made by national institutions in United Nations meetings dealing with human rights and the importance of their continued appropriate participation,

Welcoming the strengthening in all regions of regional cooperation among national human rights institutions and between national human rights institutions and other regional human rights forums,

Noting with appreciation the existence of the regional human rights networks in Europe, and the continuing work of the Network of National Institutions for the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights in the Americas, the Asia Pacific Forum of National Human Rights Institutions and the Coordinating Committee of African National Human Rights Institutions,

Welcoming the strengthening of international cooperation among national human rights institutions, including through the International Coordinating Committee of National Institutions,

1. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Reaffirms the importance of the development of effective, independent and pluralistic national institutions for the promotion and protection of human rights, in keeping with the principles relating to the status of national institutions for the promotion and protection of human rights ("the Paris Principles"), contained in the annex to resolution 48/134 of 20 December 1993;

3. Reiterates the continued importance of the Paris Principles, recognizes the value of further strengthening their application, where appropriate, and encourages States, national institutions and other interested parties to consider ways to achieve this;

4. Recognizes that, in accordance with the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, it is the right of each State to choose the framework for national institutions that is best suited to its particular needs at the national level in order to promote human rights in accordance with international human rights standards;

5. Also recognizes that national institutions have a crucial role to play in promoting and ensuring the indivisibility and interdependence of all human rights, and calls upon States to ensure that all human rights are appropriately reflected in the mandate of their national human rights institutions when established;

6. Encourages Member States to establish effective, independent and pluralistic national institutions or, where they already exist, to strengthen them for the promotion and protection of human rights, as outlined in the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action;

7. Welcomes the growing number of States establishing or considering the establishment of national institutions for the promotion and protection of human rights;

8. Encourages national institutions for the promotion and protection of human rights established by Member States to continue to play an active role in preventing and combating all violations of human rights as enumerated in the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action and relevant international instruments;

9. Notes with satisfaction the efforts of those States that have provided their national institutions with more autonomy and independence, including by giving them an investigative role or enhancing such a role, and encourages other Governments to consider taking similar steps;

10. Reaffirms the role of national institutions, where they exist, as appropriate agencies, inter alia, for the dissemination of human rights materials and other public information activities, including those of the United Nations;

11. Urges the Secretary-General to continue to give high priority to requests from Member States for assistance in the establishment and strengthening of national human rights institutions as part of the United Nations Programme of Advisory Services and Technical Assistance in the Field of Human Rights;

12. Commends the high priority given by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to work on national institutions, encourages the High Commissioner, in view of the expanded activities relating to national institutions, to ensure that appropriate arrangements are made and budgetary resources provided to continue and further extend activities in support of national human rights institutions, and invites Governments to contribute additional funds to the United Nations Voluntary Fund for Technical Cooperation in the Field of Human Rights for that purpose;

13. Welcomes the establishment of a national institutions website as an important vehicle for the delivery of information to national institutions and also the launch of a database of comparative analysis of procedures and methods of complaint-handling by national human rights institutions;

14. Notes with appreciation the increasingly active and important role of the International Coordinating Committee of National Institutions, in close cooperation with the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, in assisting Governments and national institutions, when requested, to follow up on relevant resolutions and recommendations concerning the strengthening of national institutions;

15. Also notes with appreciation the holding of regular meetings of the International Coordinating Committee of National Institutions and the arrangements for the participation of national human rights institutions in the annual sessions of the Commission on Human Rights;

16. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to provide the necessary assistance for holding meetings of the International Coordinating Committee of National Institutions during the sessions of the Commission on Human Rights, in cooperation with the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights;

17. Welcomes the continuation of the practice of national institutions convening regional meetings in some regions, and its initiation in others, and encourages national institutions, in cooperation with the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, to organize similar events with Governments and non-governmental organizations in their own regions;

18. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to provide, including from the United Nations Voluntary Fund for Technical Cooperation in the Field of Human Rights, the necessary assistance for holding international and regional meetings of national institutions;

19. Recognizes the important and constructive role that civil society can play, in cooperation with national institutions, for better promotion and protection of human rights;

20. Expresses its appreciation to those Governments that have contributed additional resources for the purpose of the establishment and strengthening of national human rights institutions;

21. Encourages all Member States to take appropriate steps to promote the exchange of information and experience concerning the establishment and effective operation of national institutions;

22. Encourages all United Nations entities, funds and agencies to work in close cooperation with national institutions in the promotion and protection of human rights, and in this regard welcomes efforts made through the action 2 initiative of the Secretary-General;

23. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its sixty-second session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Regional arrangements

Commission action. On 20 April [res. 2005/73], the Commission, welcoming the progress made in establishing regional and subregional arrangements for promoting and protecting human rights, requested OHCHR to pay special attention to the most appropriate ways of assisting countries. The Secretary-General was asked to include in his 2006 report to the General Assembly information on progress made in reinforcing information sharing and collaboration between UN organs and regional organizations since the adoption of the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action by the 1993 World Conference [YUN 1993, p. 908]. The Secretary-General was further asked to report to the Commission in 2007.

Report of Secretary-General. In response to a 2003 Commission request [YUN 2003, p. 693], the Secretary-General submitted a report [E/CN.4/2005/104] focusing on the regional strategies of OHCHR and the most significant developments since 2003. During the reporting period, OHCHR systematically pursued regional and subregional approaches to human rights promotion, through a variety of complementary means and methods, including by concluding cooperative agreements with UN agencies and regional institutions, undertaking joint regional projects, sponsoring or organizing consultations and dialogues, and outposting regional and subregional representatives.

In Africa, OHCHR focused on a subregional approach in East, Central, Southern and West Africa, where consultations and dialogues on priority issues had continued with various sectors of African society producing tangible results and providing guidance to Governments, regional organizations and NGOs, and better links to the New Partnership for Africa's Development (NEPAD) (see p. 1003), the African Union and other subregional groups. In particular, OHCHR continued to support the African Union's efforts to strengthen its human rights system and to ensure subregional representation to enhance national and subregional human rights capacities. In the Arab region, OHCHR had developed cooperative projects with several countries in the area and had identified key issues of common concern, including human rights awareness-raising, civil society networking and training, and the need to translate human rights materials into Arabic. A joint regional project with UNDP on those issues was under way. In cooperation with regional organizations and UN Country Teams, the OHCHR Beirut-based Regional Office for the Arab Region continued to undertake activities to enable OHCHR to strengthen partnerships outside the UN system and to respond better to the human rights needs and priorities of the regional States, particularly with regard to the issues of mainstreaming human rights in development programmes and strengthening civil society organizations through capacity-building, training and participation in national and regional activities. In follow-up to the adoption of the Arab Charter on Human Rights [YUN 2004, p. 681], OHCHR planned to develop a broader technical cooperation programme, in collaboration with the League of Arab States, and intended to enhance its human rights capacities. In Asia and the Pacific, OHCHR had undertaken numerous activities that helped reinforce regional cooperation for promoting and protecting human rights in four priority areas, including national human rights action plans; national human rights institutions; human rights education; and strategies for the realization of economic, social and cultural rights and the right to development. Consultations continued with Governments, aimed at the possible establishment of regional human rights arrangements. The Bangkok-based OHCHR Regional Representative, primarily charged to facilitate exchange of information and experiences in the region, maintained efforts to help the UN system and civil society assist Governments to better protect human rights. A project on "Human rights approach to development—lessons learned", initiated by the Representative's Office, was expected to be concluded during the year. In the context of the Asia-Pacific framework, consultations were also held with Governments, supported by national human rights institutions and civil society organizations, which were aimed at the possible establishment of regional arrangements.

In Europe, Central Asia and the Caucasus, OHCHR further intensified its cooperation with regional organizations, including the Council of Europe, the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe (OSCE) and the European Union. Its activities in that regard reflected the contents of the UN human rights programme, as highlighted in the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights [YUN 1993, p. 908]. OHCHR maintained efforts to consolidate subregional approaches by establishing programmes for Central Asia and South-East Europe, and by conducting planning activities for the Caucasus. That approach, intended to complement the work of UN agencies, regional organizations and other international actors in the region, focused on key human rights gaps not covered by the mandates of those organizations. The implementation of a four-year regional human rights project, which OHCHR had initiated in Central Asian States (Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, Tajikistan, Uzbekistan) in 2004 [YUN 2004, p. 682], continued, aimed at raising public understanding of human rights.

In Latin America and the Caribbean, OHCHR continued to support the establishment and strengthening of the Network of National Human Rights Institutions of the Americas, particularly its meetings and seminars on specific issues, including the rights of indigenous peoples, the rights of persons with disabilities and the prevention of torture. Such meetings enabled the exchange of experiences and best practices among national human rights institutions in the region, and also helped strengthen cooperation among them.

Conference. During the year, OHCHR, in cooperation with Egypt's National Council for Human Rights, UNDP and the League of Arab States, organized a regional conference on human rights institutions in the Arab world (Cairo, Egypt, 6-8 March) (see p. 749) [E/CN.4/2005/G/34], which discussed, among other things, ways of promoting respect for human rights in the region. The conference adopted the Cairo Declaration, by which the participants, including delegations from 17 Arab States, emphasized the importance of promoting and protecting human rights. They affirmed the special value of the role of national human rights institutions and encouraged regional States that had not done so to establish such institutions. They also stressed the need for inter-Arab cooperation on human rights and called on Arab Governments to speed up the process for ratifying and implementing the Arab Charter on Human Rights and other international human rights instruments. The Conference also adopted a number of recommendations designed to strengthen human rights in the region.

Africa

In September [A/60/353], the Secretary-General submitted a report on the Subregional Centre for Human Rights and Democracy in Central Africa, based in Yaoundé, Cameroon. On 27 January, the Centre, in collaboration with civil society organizations, launched in Cameroon's police stations the United Nations campaign for the dissemination of the 1984 Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment [YUN 1984, p. 813, GA res. 39/46]. As part of its training activities, the Centre helped organize seminars on human rights and indigenous women in Central Africa (Yaoundé, Cameroon, 3 February) and on the role of civil society in the implementation of the Durban Declaration and Programme of Action adopted at the 2001 World Conference on racism [YUN 2001, p. 615] (Yaoundé, Cameroon, July). It collaborated with the Joint United Nations Programme on HIV/AIDS (UNAIDS) and the Rwandan Government to organize for civil society representatives from the Economic Community of Central African States (ECCAS) a capacity-building workshop (Rwanda, 27-29 June) on the role of civil society in the fight against discrimination and stigmatization of people living with HIV/AIDS, which ended with the adoption of a declaration and code of conduct and the establishment of a network of activists on the disease in that subregion. It also partnered with the UN Resident Coordinator in Equatorial Guinea to organize a two-day working session (Malabo, Equatorial Guinea, June) on follow-up to human rights training projects it had designed for the country, scheduled to be implemented during 2005 and 2006. Under the Centre's internship programme, the fourteenth group of interns comprising lawyers and human rights activists with outstanding records, drawn from Burundi, the Congo, the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Kenya, Germany and the United States, completed their training, bringing to 42 the total number of such interns trained by the Centre. The Centre also undertook a variety of other activities in support of peace processes, conflict prevention and early warning projects, and electoral processes. In addition, it disseminated information on human rights through its publications, continued to provide advice and technical assistance to ECCAS and collaborated with UN agencies to support efforts to promote and protect human rights in the Central African subregion. The report concluded that OHCHR, through the Centre, had helped increase recognition of the need to uphold and promote human rights and democratic principles by various stakeholders in the subregion. Given increasing requests to the Centre for technical assistance, additional funds should be envisaged to enable it to respond effectively.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December [meeting 64], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/60/509/Add.2], adopted resolution 60/151 without vote [agenda item 71 (b)].

Subregional Centre for Human Rights and Democracy in Central Africa

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 55/105 of 4 December 2000 concerning regional arrangements for the promotion and protection of human rights,

Recalling also its resolution 59/183 of 20 December 2004 on the Subregional Centre for Human Rights and Democracy in Central Africa,

Recalling further its resolutions 55/34 B of 20 November 2000 and 55/233 of 23 December 2000, section III of resolution 55/234 of 23 December 2000, and resolution 58/176 of 22 December 2003,

Recalling that the World Conference on Human Rights recommended that more resources be made available for the strengthening of regional arrangements for the promotion and protection of human rights under the programme of technical cooperation in the field of human rights of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights,

Recalling also the report of the High Commissioner,

Taking note of the holding of the twenty-second ministerial meeting of the United Nations Standing Advisory Committee on Security Questions in Central Africa in Brazzaville from 14 to 18 March 2005,

Taking note also of the report of the Secretary-General,

Welcoming the 2005 World Summit Outcome, in particular the decision confirmed therein to double the regular budget of the Office of the High Commissioner over the next five years,

1. Welcomes the activities of the Subregional Centre for Human Rights and Democracy in Central Africa at Yaoundé;

2. Notes with satisfaction the support provided for the establishment of the Centre by the host country;

3. Requests the Secretary-General and the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to provide additional funds and human resources to enable the Centre to respond positively and effectively to the growing needs in the promotion and protection of human rights and in developing a culture of democracy in the Central African subregion;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its sixty-first session a report on the implementation of the present resolution.

Asia and the Pacific

Note by Secretariat. A January note of the Secretariat [E/CN.4/2005/105] informed the Commission that the thirteenth Annual Workshop on Regional Cooperation for the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights in the Asian and Pacific Region, initially scheduled to take place in February, had been postponed due to the effects of the December 2004 tsunami on many of the participating countries. The Secretary-General, who had been requested in a 2004 Commission resolution [YUN 2004, p. 684] to report in 2005 on the workshop's outcome, would submit the requested report at the conclusion of the workshop.

Commission action. On 20 April [res. 2005/71], the Commission requested the Secretary-General to submit a report in 2006 containing the conclusions of the thirteenth Workshop on Regional Cooperation for the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights in the Asian and Pacific Region and information on the progress made in implementing its current resolution.

Report of Secretary-General. In December [E/CN.4/2006/100], the Secretary-General reported on the outcomes of the thirteenth Annual Workshop on Regional Cooperation in the Asian and Pacific Region (Beijing, China, 30 August–2 September), which reviewed the four pillars under the Framework of Regional Technical Cooperation Programme for Asia and the Pacific (Tehran Framework), adopted in 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 641], future directions for the Framework and recent regional and subregional human rights initiatives. In addition, the Workshop held an in-depth thematic discussion on human rights and human trafficking, in accordance with the conclusions of the twelfth Workshop [YUN 2004, p. 684] and also discussed progress achieved since then, reviewed three intersessional regional and subregional workshops, and examined the report of the ninth annual meeting of the Asia-Pacific Forum (Seoul, Republic of Korea, 14-17 September). The Workshop adopted conclusions addressing needs and challenges relating to the implementation of national human rights plans of action and capacity-building; human rights education; national human rights institutions; the realization of the right to development and of economic, social and cultural rights; and human rights and human trafficking.

In a later addendum [E/CN.4/2006/100/Add.1], the Secretary-General reported on the conclusions and recommendations of the Expert Meeting on National Human Rights Plans of Action and Human Rights Education in the Asia-Pacific Region (Bangkok, Thailand, 20-22 October). The Meeting focused on processes and components relevant to national action plans, including the responsibilities of various actors; strategies for effective implementation and monitoring; linkage with other planning processes; and human rights education as a potential priority area. It adopted conclusions on the value of such action plans, the related preparatory process and challenge of implementation, as well as the involvement of national human rights institutions and civil society, and addressed a series of recommendations to Governments and the United Nations. The report also outlined the conclusions of the 2004 subregional workshop for judges and lawyers on the justiciability of economic, social and cultural rights in South-East Asia [YUN 2004, p. 682].

South West Asia and the Arab region

On 16 December [meeting 64], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/60/509/Add.2], adopted resolution 60/153 without vote [agenda item 71 (b)].

Establishment of a United Nations human rights training and documentation centre for South-West Asia and the Arab region

The General Assembly,

Guided by the fundamental and universal principles enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights,

Recalling the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action of 1993, which reiterated the need to consider the possibility of establishing regional and subregional arrangements for the promotion and protection of human rights where they do not already exist,

Recalling also its resolutions 32/127 of 16 December 1977, 51/102 of 12 December 1996 and all its subsequent resolutions concerning regional arrangements for the promotion and protection of human rights,

Recalling further Commission on Human Rights resolution 1993/51 of 9 March 1993 and all its subsequent resolutions concerning regional arrangements for the promotion and protection of human rights,

Recalling the report of the Secretary-General on regional arrangements for the promotion and protection of human rights,

Reaffirming its endorsement of the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action of 1993, and the universality, indivisibility, interdependence and interrelatedness of all human rights, economic, civil, cultural, political and social, including the right to development,

Reaffirming also that regional cooperation plays a fundamental role in promoting and protecting human rights and should reinforce universal human rights, as contained in international human rights instruments, and their protection,

Committed to enhancing subregional, regional and international cooperation to promote universal respect for and observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms, in conformity with international obligations,

Convinced that cooperation between the United Nations and regional initiatives in the field of human rights continues to be both substantive and supportive and that possibilities exist for increased cooperation,

Recalling its resolution 49/184 of 23 December 1994 proclaiming the United Nations Decade for Human Rights Education, 1995-2004, and its resolution 59/113 of 10 December 2004 proclaiming the World Programme for Human Rights Education, to begin on 1 January 2005, and Commission on Human Rights resolution 1993/56 of 9 March 1993 on education and human rights and Commission resolution 2003/70 of 25 April 2003 on the United Nations Decade for Human Rights Education,

Recognizing that human rights education can play a crucial role in enhancing respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms and can contribute to the promotion of human rights, the achievement of a culture of peace, in particular the teaching of the practice of non-violence, and respect for the rule of law,

Noting the endorsement and the support expressed by the Council of the League of Arab States and the member States of the Gulf Cooperation Council and in the Brasilia Declaration adopted at the South American and Arab Countries Summit for the initiative of the State of Qatar to host a United Nations centre for human rights for South-West Asia and the Arab region,

Noting also Commission on Human Rights resolutions 2005/71 and 2005/73 of 20 April 2005 welcoming the offer by the Government of Qatar to host a United Nations centre for human rights for South-West Asia and the Arab region,

Noting further the support expressed at the thirteenth Workshop on Regional Cooperation for the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights in the Asia-Pacific Region, held in Beijing from 30 August to 2 September 2005, for the initiative of the State of Qatar to host a United Nations centre for human rights for South-West Asia and the Arab region,

Mindful of the vastness of and the diversity within South-West Asia and the Arab region,

1. Takes note with satisfaction of the continuing cooperation and assistance of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights in the further strengthening of the existing regional arrangements and regional machineries for the promotion and protection of human rights, in particular through technical cooperation which is aimed at national capacity-building, public information and education, with a view to exchanging information and experience in the field of human rights;

2. Welcomes the initiative of the Government of Qatar to host a United Nations human rights training and documentation centre for South-West Asia and the Arab region, which will be under the supervision of the Office of the High Commissioner, with the mandate to undertake training and documentation activities according to international human rights standards and to support such efforts within the region by Governments, United Nations agencies and programmes, national human rights institutions and non-governmental organizations;

3. Requests the Secretary-General and the Office of the High Commissioner to give their support to the establishment of a United Nations human rights training and documentation centre for South-West Asia and the Arab region, to conclude an agreement with the host country regarding its establishment and to make available resources for the establishment of the centre;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its sixty-first session a report on the implementation of the present resolution;

5. Decides to consider the question further at its sixty-first session.

Cooperation with human rights bodies

Report of Secretary-General. A report of the Secretary-General [E/CN.4/2005/31] described situations in which persons or NGO members had allegedly suffered intimidation or reprisals for having cooperated with UN human rights bodies regarding human rights violations.

Commission action. On 14 April [res. 2005/9], the Commission urged Governments to refrain from intimidating persons who sought to cooperate or had cooperated with representatives of UN human rights bodies; persons who availed themselves of UN procedures and who had provided legal assistance to them for that purpose; those who submitted communications under procedures established by human rights instruments; and relatives of victims of human rights violations. It requested representatives of UN human rights bodies to help prevent such intimidation and to include in their reports allegations of intimidation or reprisals and of hampering access to UN human rights procedures, and an account of the action they had taken. The Secretary-General was asked to draw the attention of UN human rights treaty bodies to the Commission's resolution and to report in 2006.

Chapter II

Protection of human rights

In 2005, the United Nations continued to focus attention on the protection of human rights in civil and political terms and in the economic, social and cultural fields. Ongoing efforts to further secure indigenous peoples' rights were advanced with the adoption by the General Assembly of the Programme of Action for the Second International Decade of the World's Indigenous People, which took effect on 1 January, under the theme "Partnership for action and dignity". Progress also continued with follow-up activities to implement the Durban Declaration and Programme of Action, adopted at the 2001 World Conference against Racism, Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia and Related Intolerance. In February, the independent experts appointed to monitor follow-up activities underlined the tangible impact of related actions by Governments and civil society on peoples' lives and called for a plan for the five-year review of the implementation of the Declaration. In commemoration of the sixtieth anniversary of the liberation of the Nazi concentration camps, the Assembly reaffirmed that the Holocaust, which resulted in the murder of one third of the Jewish people, along with countless members of other minorities, remained a warning of the dangers of hatred, bigotry and racism, and designated 27 January as an international day of commemoration in memory of holocaust victims. Demonstrating the Organization's increasing concern about the welfare of children caught in situations of armed conflict, the Secretary-General presented to the Security Council an action plan for the effective application of international norms and standards for protecting the rights of the child in that regard. Towards the same end, the Council, in a February Presidential statement, strongly condemned the recruitment and use of child soldiers by parties to armed conflict and urged that such intolerable practice be halted promptly. Marking a turning point in ensuring compensation for victims of human rights violations, the Economic and Social Council adopted, in July, the Basic Principles and Guidelines on the Right to a Remedy and Reparations for Victims of Gross Violations of International Human Rights Law and Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law, which established a legal framework for States' obligations and victims' rights in the administration of justice. In related action, the Commission on Human Rights adopted an updated Set of Principles for the protection and promotion of human rights through action to combat impunity.

In 2005, the Commission and its subsidiary body, the Subcommission on the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights, established new mandates for independent experts on minority issues and on the right of peoples to international solidarity. Additional mandates were also created for special rapporteurs to monitor the promotion and protection of human rights during countering terrorism actions, and to undertake studies on discrimination against leprosy victims and members of their families, on the accountability of international personnel taking part in peace operations and on the legal implications of the disappearance of States and other territories for environmental reasons. Also created was a new mandate for a working group on the use of mercenaries as a means of violating human rights. Special rapporteurs, special representatives and independent experts of the Commission and the Subcommission examined, among other issues, contemporary forms of racism; the rights of migrants, freedom of religion or belief; mercenary activity; the independence of the judiciary; extralegal executions; allegations of torture; freedom of expression; human rights and terrorism; the prevention of human rights violations committed with small arms and light weapons; the right to development; the effects of structural adjustment programmes and foreign debt on human rights; corruption and its impact on the enjoyment of human rights; human rights and extreme poverty; the right to food; the right to adequate housing; the right to education; illicit practices related to toxic and dangerous products and wastes; the right to physical and mental health; human rights and the human genome; violence against women; violence against children; the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography; children affected by armed conflict; internally displaced persons; and the human rights and fundamental freedoms of indigenous people.

Working groups considered the problems of racial discrimination affecting people of African descent, discrimination against minorities, arbitrary detention, enforced or involuntary disappearances, the right to development, working methods and activities of transnational corporations, contemporary forms of slavery and the rights of indigenous peoples.

Racism and racial discrimination

Follow-up to 2001 World Conference

Reports of the High Commissioner. In accordance with a 2004 Commission request [YUN 2004, p. 687], the High Commissioner submitted a report [E/CN.4/2005/16] describing the activities undertaken by her Office to implement the recommendations adopted at the second session of the Intergovernmental Working Group, established in 2002 [YUN 2002, p. 661] to recommend measures for the effective implementation of the Durban Declaration and Programme of Action (DDPA). DDPA was adopted by the 2001 World Conference against Racism, Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia and Related Intolerance [YUN 2001, p. 615]. During that session, the Working Group focused on the themes of education, poverty, and complementary standards. The report highlighted the various activities relating to those themes, including meetings, projects, studies, and publications, which the Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR) had helped implement, often in collaboration with other UN system agencies. Under education, which the report described as an effective tool for empowering people to understand and exercise their human rights, OHCHR promoted tolerance, religious diversity and debate on dialogue among cultures. Regarding poverty, OHCHR continued to explore and promote explicit recognition of the linkages between human rights and poverty, including through support to the work of the independent expert on human rights and extreme poverty and of experts of the Subcommission on the question of developing guiding principles on implementing human rights norms and standards for combating extreme poverty. In addition, OHCHR supported Governments' efforts to improve race relations and undertook a number of activities to mainstream DDPA into the mandates and programmes of the United Nations and its specialized agencies, and of other international organizations and non-governmental organizations (NGOs). The report concluded that significant progress had been achieved in implementing relevant recommendations of the Working Group.

In response to a further 2004 Commission request [YUN 2004, p. 687], the High Commissioner reported on OHCHR efforts to explore the possibility of developing a racial equality index [E/CN.4/2005/17], as proposed by the independent eminent experts appointed to follow up the implementation of DDPA provisions [YUN 2003, p. 698]. The Office undertook preliminary research on the problems of discrimination in general, and racial discrimination in particular. It gathered information on socio-economic indicators, justice and criminality, and disaggregated the data by race, colour and ethnic origin. The Office further found that, although a racial equality index appeared to be a potentially important tool for substantive research in identifying the causes and manifestations of racial discrimination in a society, its complexity warranted serious consideration of its usefulness for decision makers. It was also necessary to establish the methodological soundness of such a tool if the outcome of the exercise was to be credible. As such, the Commission needed to further consider the issue.

Report of independent experts. At its second meeting (21-23 February) [E/CN.4/2005/125 & Corr.1], the independent eminent experts appointed in 2003 [YUN 2003, p. 698] to follow-up the implementation of DDPA provisions addressed the scope of their mandate and how best to implement it. They considered the reports of the High Commissioner and the Secretary-General on Member States' efforts to implement DDPA and expressed concern that limited responses had been received following requests for information on related initiatives and activities, making it difficult to identify relevant trends. Additional problems were posed by the diverse nature of the information received, which prevented the systematic evaluation of the progress made since the 2001 World Conference on Racism [YUN 2001, p. 615]. The experts assessed international standards and instruments to combat racial discrimination, with a view to preparing complementary standards, deliberated on implementation strategies and possible modalities for action, consulted with regional representatives and explored ways to follow-up on their first meeting [YUN 2003, p. 698]. They concluded that the implementation of DDPA had taken a variety of forms worldwide and that the tangible impact could be felt in the lives of people through actions by Governments and civil society. Nonetheless, the international community had not achieved any real breakthrough in countering the scourges of racial discrimination, which constituted the root causes of many contemporary conflicts. The experts stressed the importance of education and awareness-raising as tools for combating discrimination and proposed that the relationship between racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance and new information technologies be given attention at the second phase of the World Summit on the Information Society, scheduled for November (see p. 933). They appealed to the Commission and the General Assembly to adopt a plan for the five-year review of DDPA implementation and called on Member States to take into account the content of DDPA during the High-level Plenary Meeting of the Assembly (2005 World Summit) (see p. 47) to review the implementation of the Millennium Declaration, adopted at the 2000 Millennium Summit [YUN 2000, p. 49]. The experts also reiterated the recommendation adopted at their first meeting on the need for a racial equality index aimed at measuring existing racial inequalities, and encouraged the High Commissioner to pursue efforts in addressing the issue.

Commission action. On 20 April [res. 2005/64], the Commission, by a recorded vote of 38 to 1, with 14 abstentions, called on States and OHCHR to implement the recommendations of the Intergovernmental Working Group at its third session [YUN 2004, p. 686], and asked OHCHR to report thereon in 2006. The Commission decided to convene the Group's fourth session in 2006 to consider the thematic issue of globalization and racism. OHCHR was requested to convene, during that session, and in consultation with Member States, a high-level seminar focusing on racism and the Internet, and on producing a list of areas where gaps existed and for which complementary standards were necessary. Taking note of the High Commissioner's report on the possibility of developing a racial equality index (see above), the Commission requested her to expedite the consultative process on the issue in 2005 and to submit a draft basic document on the proposed index for consideration in 2006. In an effort to promote a world of sports free from racism and within the context of the 2006 World Cup tournament, the Commission invited the Fédération Internationale de Football Association (FIFA) to consider introducing a visible theme promoting non-racism in football.

Report of Secretary-General. In accordance with General Assembly resolution 59/177 [YUN 2004, p. 688], the Secretary-General submitted an August report [A/60/307 & Corr.1, 2] summarizing the activities undertaken by States, UN bodies, OHCHR, specialized agencies, international and regional organizations, national human rights institutions, NGOs and youth groups to implement DDPA. He observed that those activities demonstrated continuing momentum against racial discrimination and growing cooperation and mutual assistance between stakeholders. Governments were reacting more often to such new forms of racism as cybercrime and the dissemination of racist ideologies through the Internet, and a trend was also developing towards improved monitoring and reporting of racist crimes and incidents.

CERD action. In 2005 [A/60/18], the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination (see p. 728) considered follow-up to the World Conference against Racism [YUN 2001, p. 615], focusing on the 2004 report of the Intergovernmental Working Group [YUN 2004, p. 686], in relation to the development of complementary standards to strengthen and update international instruments against racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance in all its aspects.

Working Group on people of African descent. The Working Group of Experts on People of African Descent, established in accordance with the 2002 Durban Declaration and Programme of Action [YUN 2002, p. 661] to consider problems of racial discrimination affecting people of African descent, held its fifth session (Geneva, 29 August–2 September) [E/CN.4/2006/19]. The Working Group examined the themes of mainstreaming the situation of people of African descent in plans for achieving the UN Millennium Development Goals (MDGs) [YUN 2000, p. 51], the empowerment of women of African descent and the role of political parties in the integration of people of African descent into political life and decision-making processes. The experts agreed that, due to conceptual limitations and data collection inadequacies, it was difficult to evaluate the extent of racial discrimination. Positive measures aimed at accelerating the substantive equality of people of African descent were needed, as were strong monitoring and evaluation mechanisms at the national level, in order to assess progress made and the effectiveness of those measures, and to identify good practices. The experts recommended that a "Durban + 5" activity be organized, with OHCHR assistance, to evaluate the implementation of DDPA provisions, particularly by examining national action plans and regional progress. They also adopted numerous conclusions and recommendations under each of the themes considered, as well as a three-year programme of work.

The experts visited Belgium (13-17 June) [E/CN.4/2006/19/Add.1] at the invitation of the Government, where they raised concerns relating to the disempowered situation of people of African descent. The problem stemmed from discriminatory practices at the work place, which hampered their enjoyment of equal employment opportunities and access to education and adequate housing. While recognizing the efforts of the authorities to improve the situation, notably by translating DDPA provisions into the national legislative framework for remedial action, the experts recommended a series of measures highlighting the necessity for further awareness-raising for private enterprises on the issue of discrimination and the need for the work environment to reflect the diversity of society. They also advocated measures to counter inequalities in educational outcome for children of foreign origin, for combating racism and discrimination and for promoting African culture and traditions in Belgium. The experts invited associations of people of African descent to devise strategies to cooperate and establish a common platform to interface with government authorities.

Regional seminars. OHCHR, in collaboration with Gabon, organized a seminar (Libreville, Gabon, 27-29 July) [E/CN.4/2006/21] for member States of the Economic Community of Central African States (ECCAS) on the role of civil society in implementing DDPA, which aimed to provide a platform for an exchange of views and experiences on how to bring all population groups into the political process and to discuss best practices. The seminar addressed 21 recommendations to ECCAS member States and OHCHR.

OHCHR also organized a regional seminar for South and South-East Asia (Bangkok, Thailand, 19-21 September) [E/CN.4/2006/22] to identify obstacles and challenges impeding the implementation of DDPA in education, and promote discussions of human rights-based strategies for overcoming exclusion and achieving wider access to primary and secondary education. The seminar adopted several conclusions and recommendations, which confirmed challenges in the implementation of internal standards, and also identified good practices at the national, regional and local levels with respect to effective implementation.

In collaboration with the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), OHCHR organized a regional workshop (Chincha, Peru, 2-4 November) [E/CN.4/2006/23] for the Americas on strategies for the inclusion of people of African descent in programmes to reduce poverty and achieve the MDG on eradicating extreme poverty [YUN 2000, p. 51]. The workshop's main objective was to develop strategies for involving people of African descent in the development, implementation, monitoring and assessment of poverty-reduction programmes, as well as the preparation of related strategy papers. The workshop adopted a declaration on ending poverty among people of African descent and indigenous peoples, and made recommendations to States, UN bodies and civil society actors regarding education, employment, affirmative action policies, data collection and gender. The workshop invited the General Assembly to consider proclaiming an international decade for people of African descent, with the aim of strengthening international cooperation in resolving their human rights and socio-economic problems, and to establish a voluntary fund for them, which would provide technical assistance in implementing development projects and promoting affirmative action.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December [meeting 64], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee [A/60/507], adopted resolution 60/144 by recorded vote (172-3-4) [agenda item 69].

Global efforts for the total elimination of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance and the comprehensive implementation of and follow-up to the Durban Declaration and Programme of Action

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 59/177 of 20 December 2004, in which it firmly consolidated the global drive for the total elimination of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance and recognized the absolute necessity and the imperative nature of the political will for the achievement of the commitments undertaken in the Durban Declaration and Programme of Action adopted by the World Conference against Racism, Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia and Related Intolerance, held in Durban, South Africa, from 31 August to 8 September 2001,

Recalling also its resolution 58/160 of 22 December 2003, in which it decided to place emphasis on the concrete implementation of the Durban Declaration and Programme of Action as a solid foundation for a broad-based consensus for further actions and initiatives towards the total elimination of the scourge of racism,

Recalling further its resolution 57/195 of 18 December 2002, in which it outlined the important roles and responsibilities of the various organs of the United Nations and other stakeholders at the international, regional and national levels, including, in particular, the Commission on Human Rights, and its resolution 56/266 of 27 March 2002, in which it endorsed the Durban Declaration and Programme of Action as constituting a solid foundation for further action and initiatives towards the total elimination of the scourge of racism,

Reiterating that all human beings are born free and equal in dignity and rights and have the potential to contribute constructively to the development and well-being of their societies, and that any doctrine of racial superiority is scientifically false, morally condemnable, socially unjust and dangerous and must be rejected, together with theories that attempt to determine the existence of separate human races,

Convinced that racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance manifest themselves in a differentiated manner for women and girls and may be among the factors leading to a deterioration in their living conditions, poverty, violence, multiple forms of discrimination and the limitation or denial of their human rights, and recognizing the need to integrate a gender perspective into relevant policies, strategies and programmes of action against racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance in order to address multiple forms of discrimination,

Taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolutions 2002/68 of 25 April 2002, 2003/30 of 23 April 2003, 2004/88 of 22 April 2004 and 2005/64 of 20 April 2005, by which the international community put into effect mechanisms for the effective implementation of the Durban Declaration and Programme of Action,

Underlining the primacy of political will, international cooperation and adequate funding at the national, regional and international levels for the successful implementation of the Durban Programme of Action,

Alarmed at the increase in racist violence and xenophobic ideas in many parts of the world, in political circles, in the sphere of public opinion and in society at large, inter alia, as a result of the resurgent activities of associations established on the basis of racist and xenophobic platforms and charters, and the persistent use of those platforms and charters to promote or incite racist ideologies,

Underlining the importance of urgently eliminating continuing and violent trends involving racism and racial discrimination, and conscious that any form of impunity for crimes motivated by racist and xenophobic attitudes plays a role in weakening the rule of law and democracy, tends to encourage the recurrence of such crimes and requires resolute action and cooperation for its eradication,

Welcoming the determination of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to profile and increase the visibility of the struggle against racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance and her intention to make this a cross-cutting issue in the activities and programmes of her Office,

Taking note of the interim report of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on contemporary forms of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance,

I

Basic general principles

1. Acknowledges that no derogation from the prohibition of racial discrimination, genocide, the crime of apartheid or slavery is permitted, as defined in the obligations under the relevant human rights instruments;

2. Expresses its profound concern about and its unequivocal condemnation of all forms of racism and racial discrimination, including related acts of racially motivated violence, xenophobia and intolerance, as well as propaganda activities and organizations that attempt to justify or promote racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance in any form;

3. Expresses deep concern at recent attempts to establish hierarchies among emerging and resurgent forms of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance, and urges States to adopt measures to address these scourges with the same emphasis and vigour with a view to preventing this practice and protecting victims;

4. Stresses that States and international organizations have a responsibility to ensure that measures taken in the struggle against terrorism do not discriminate in purpose or effect on grounds of race, colour, descent or national or ethnic origin, and urges all States to rescind or refrain from all forms of racial profiling;

5. Recognizes that States should implement and enforce appropriate and effective legislative, judicial, regulatory and administrative measures to prevent and protect against acts of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance, thereby contributing to the prevention of human rights violations;

6. Emphasizes that it is the responsibility of States to adopt effective measures to combat criminal acts motivated by racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance, including measures to ensure that such motivations are considered an aggravating factor for the purposes of sentencing, to prevent those crimes from going unpunished and to ensure the rule of law;

7. Urges all States to review and, where necessary, revise their immigration laws, policies and practices so that they are free of racial discrimination and compatible with their obligations under international human rights instruments;

8. Condemns the misuse of print, audio-visual and electronic media and new communication technologies, including the Internet, to incite violence motivated by racial hatred, and calls upon States to take all necessary measures to combat this form of racism in accordance with the commitments that they have undertaken under the Durban Declaration and Programme of Action, in particular paragraph 147 of the Programme of Action, in accordance with existing international and regional standards of freedom of expression and taking all necessary measures to guarantee the right to freedom of opinion and expression;

9. Encourages all States to include in their educational curricula and social programmes at all levels, as appropriate, knowledge of and tolerance and respect for foreign cultures, peoples and countries;

10. Stresses the responsibility of States to mainstream a gender perspective in the design and development of prevention, education and protection measures aimed at the eradication of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance at all levels, to ensure that they effectively target the distinct situations of women and men;

II

International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination

11. Reaffirms that universal adherence to and full implementation of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination are of paramount importance for the promotion of equality and non-discrimination in the world;

12. Reiterates the call made by the World Conference against Racism, Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia and Related Intolerance, in paragraph 75 of the Durban Programme of Action, to achieve universal ratification of the Convention by 2005 and for all States to consider making the declaration envisaged under article 14 of the Convention, and endorses the grave concern expressed by the Commission on Human Rights in its resolution 2005/64 to the effect that, with one hundred and seventy ratifications and only forty-six declarations, the deadline for universal ratification decided by the Conference has, regrettably, not been realized;

13. Urges, in the above context, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to maintain and issue regular updates on its website of a list of countries that have not yet ratified the Convention and to encourage such countries to demonstrate their practical commitment to meet the goal of universal ratification as decided upon by the World Conference;

14. Expresses concern at the serious delays in the submission of overdue reports to the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination, which impedes the effectiveness of the Committee, and makes a strong appeal to all States parties to the Convention to comply with their treaty obligations;

15. Invites States parties to the Convention to ratify the amendment to article 8 of the Convention, on the financing of the Committee, and calls for adequate additional resources from the regular budget of the United Nations to enable the Committee to discharge its mandate fully;

16. Welcomes the work of the Committee in applying the Convention to the new and contemporary forms of racism and racial discrimination, bearing in mind the need to identify the gaps in the existing international human rights instruments, notably the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, for which complementary standards are necessary;

17. Recognizes the contribution to be made to the above process by conducting an in-depth assessment and evaluation of the implementation of existing international human rights instruments by States parties;

18. Urges all States parties to the Convention to intensify their efforts to implement the obligations that they have accepted under article 4 of the Convention, with due regard to the principles of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and article 5 of the Convention;

19. Notes that the Committee holds that the prohibition of the dissemination of ideas based on racial superiority or racial hatred is compatible with the right to freedom of opinion and expression as outlined in article 19 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and in article 5 of the Convention;

20. Welcomes the emphasis placed by the Committee on the importance of follow-up to the World Conference and the measures recommended to strengthen the implementation of the Convention as well as the functioning of the Committee;

III

Comprehensive implementation of and follow-up to the Durban Declaration and Programme of Action

21. Acknowledges that the outcome of the World Conference against Racism, Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia and Related Intolerance is on an equal footing with the outcomes of all the major United Nations conferences, summits and special sessions in the human rights and social fields;

22. Also acknowledges that the World Conference, which was the third world conference against racism, was significantly different from the previous two conferences, as evidenced by the inclusion in its title of two important components relating to contemporary forms of racism, namely, xenophobia and related intolerance;

23. Emphasizes that the basic responsibility for effectively combating racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance lies with States, and to this end stresses that States have the primary responsibility to ensure full and effective implementation of all commitments and recommendations contained in the Durban Declaration and Programme of Action;

24. Also emphasizes the fundamental and complementary role of national human rights institutions, regional bodies or centres and civil society, working jointly with States towards the achievement of the objectives of the Durban Declaration and Programme of Action;

25. Welcomes the steps taken by numerous Governments, in particular the elaboration and implementation of national action plans to combat racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance, and steps taken by national human rights institutions and non-governmental organizations, towards the full implementation of the Durban Declaration and Programme of Action, and affirms this trend as a demonstration of commitment for the elimination of all scourges of racism at the national level;

26. Calls upon all States that have not yet elaborated their national action plans on the combating of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance to comply with their commitments undertaken at the World Conference;

27. Calls upon all States to formulate and implement without delay, at the national, regional and international levels, policies and plans of action to combat racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance, including their gender-based manifestations;

28. Urges States to support the activities of existing regional bodies or centres that combat racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance in their respective regions, and recommends the establishment of such bodies in all regions where they do not exist;

29. Recognizes the fundamental role of civil society in the fight against racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance, in particular in assisting States to develop regulations and strategies, in taking measures and action against such forms of discrimination and through follow-up implementation;

30. Decides that the General Assembly, through its role in policy formulation, the Economic and Social Council, through its role in overall guidance and coordination, in accordance with their respective roles

under the Charter of the United Nations and Assembly resolution 50/227 of 24 May 1996, and the Commission on Human Rights shall constitute a three-tiered intergovernmental process for the comprehensive implementation of and follow-up to the Durban Declaration and Programme of Action;

31. Stresses and reaffirms its role as the highest intergovernmental mechanism for the formulation and appraisal of policy on matters related to the economic, social and related fields, in accordance with Chapter IX of the Charter, including in the comprehensive implementation of and follow-up to the goals and targets set at all the major United Nations conferences, summits and special sessions;

32. Welcomes the second meeting of the group of independent eminent experts, held in Geneva from 21 to 23 February 2005, in particular its programme of work, notes its appeal for convening a five-year review of the implementation of the Durban Declaration and Programme of Action, and in this context urges Member States and relevant stakeholders to give due consideration to its appeal with a view to its examination at the sixty-first session;

33. Reaffirms that the Commission on Human Rights, as a functional commission of the Economic and Social Council, shall have a central role in the monitoring of the implementation of the Durban Declaration and Programme of Action within the United Nations system and in advising the Council thereon;

34. Expresses its appreciation for the continuing work in follow-up to the World Conference, and in this regard endorses the outcome of the third session of the Intergovernmental Working Group on the Effective Implementation of the Durban Declaration and Programme of Action, while taking note of the outcome of the fourth session of the Working Group of Experts on People of African Descent, and calls for their implementation by all stakeholders;

35. Welcomes the convening of the high-level seminar in January 2006 under the auspices of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights as set out in Commission on Human Rights resolution 2005/64, and encourages all States to participate in this seminar at the appropriate level;

36. Acknowledges the centrality of resource mobilization, effective global partnership and international cooperation in the context of paragraphs 157 and 158 of the Durban Programme of Action for the successful realization of commitments undertaken at the World Conference, and to this end emphasizes the central role to be played by the group of independent eminent experts on the implementation of the Durban Declaration and Programme of Action in mobilizing the necessary political will required for the successful implementation of the Declaration and Programme of Action;

37. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the necessary resources for the effective fulfilment of the mandates of the Intergovernmental Working Group on the Effective Implementation of the Durban Declaration and Programme of Action, the Working Group of Experts on People of African Descent and the group of independent eminent experts on the implementation of the Durban Declaration and Programme of Action;

38. Expresses its concern at the increasing incidence of racism in various sporting events, while noting with appreciation the efforts made by some governing bodies of the various sporting codes to combat racism, and in this regard invites all international sporting bodies to promote, through their national, regional and international federations, a world of sport free from racism and racial discrimination;

39. Invites, in this context, the Fédération internationale de football association, in connection with the 2006 and 2010 soccer World Cup tournaments to be held in Germany and in South Africa, respectively, to consider introducing a visible theme on non-racism in football, and requests the Secretary-General to bring this invitation to the attention of the Fédération and to bring the issue of racism in sport to the attention of other relevant international sporting bodies;

IV

Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on contemporary forms of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance and follow-up to his visits

40. Expresses its full support and appreciation for the work of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on contemporary forms of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance, and encourages its continuation;

41. Reiterates its call to all Member States, intergovernmental organizations, relevant organizations of the United Nations system and non-governmental organizations to cooperate fully with the Special Rapporteur, and calls upon States to consider responding favourably to his requests for visits so as to enable him to fulfil his mandate fully and effectively;

42. Recognizes with deep concern the increase in anti-Semitism, Christianophobia and Islamophobia in various parts of the world, as well as the emergence of racial and violent movements based on racism and discriminatory ideas directed against Arab, Christian, Jewish and Muslim communities, communities of people of African descent, communities of people of Asian descent and other communities;

43. Encourages closer collaboration between the Special Rapporteur and the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, in particular the Anti-Discrimination Unit;

44. Urges the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to provide States, at their request, with advisory services and technical assistance to enable them to implement fully the recommendations of the Special Rapporteur;

45. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the Special Rapporteur with all the necessary human and financial assistance to carry out his mandate efficiently, effectively and expeditiously and to enable him to submit an interim report to the General Assembly at its sixty-first session;

46. Takes note of the recommendations contained in the interim report of the Special Rapporteur, and urges Member States and other relevant stakeholders to consider implementing those recommendations;

47. Requests the Special Rapporteur to continue giving particular attention to the negative impact of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance on the full enjoyment of civil, cultural, economic, political and social rights by national or ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities, immigrant populations, asylum-seekers and refugees;

48. Invites Member States to demonstrate greater commitment to fighting racism in sport by conducting educational and awareness-raising activities and by strongly condemning the perpetrators of racist incidents, in cooperation with national and international sports organizations;

V

General

49. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report on the implementation of the present resolution to the General Assembly at its sixty-first session;

50. Decides to remain seized of this important matter at its sixty-first session under the item entitled "Elimination of racism and racial discrimination".

Contemporary forms of racism

Reports of Special Rapporteur. In his annual report to the Commission [E/CN.4/2005/18], the Special Rapporteur on contemporary forms of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance, Doudou Diène (Senegal), described activities he had undertaken since his 2004 report [YUN 2004, p. 692]. Those activities focused on fieldwork and on strengthening cooperation with regional and institutional partners, particularly regarding general and specific forms of racism, such as anti-Semitism and Islamophobia. He also stepped up consultations and cooperation with relevant bodies on the issue of racism in sports and considered contemporary manifestations of the phenomenon in terms of the impact of identity constructs on racism, discrimination and xenophobia, hierarchy of forms of discrimination and intellectual justification of racism and xenophobia, the rise of parties and movements with racist and xenophobic platforms and the situation of the Roma and other groups vulnerable to racial discrimination. In considering those issues, the Special Rapporteur pursued a dual strategy, which, on the one hand, aimed at extending and strengthening the legal and political responses to intolerance, and on the other hand, sought an intellectual and ethical approach, aimed at better understanding the roots of intolerance. On the basis of the information gathered, the Special Rapporteur noted the following prominent tendencies: the growing importance of the identity factor in recent manifestations of racism, racial discrimination and xenophobia; the inclination to hierarchize different forms of racial discrimination; a more pronounced interest to provide an intellectual justification for racism and intolerance; the rise and growing influence of parties and movements with racist and xenophobic platforms; and the exacerbation of the phenomenon of racism in sport. The Special Rapporteur addressed recommendations to the Commission, Member States, regional organizations and civil society actors on how best to address those tendencies. He proposed, in particular, that the Commission devise an intellectual strategy for combating racism in the domain of ideas, concepts, images, perceptions and value systems, and that all forms of such discrimination be treated equally, as any hierarchization of the problem would undermine universal efforts to tackle it. The Commission should alert Member States to ways in which racism and racial discrimination could enter the mainstream of society through political platforms, and Member States needed to demonstrate greater commitment to fighting racism in sports.

In a February addendum to the report [E/CN.4/2005/Add.1 & Corr.1], the Special Rapporteur summarized communications transmitted to Governments regarding cases of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance, and replies received.

In response to a 2004 Commission request [YUN 2004, p. 706] that he examine the situation of Muslim and Arab peoples in various parts of the world in the aftermath of the terrorist attacks of 11 September 2001 in the United States [YUN 2001, p. 60], the Special Rapporteur submitted a report [E/CN.4/2005/18/Add.4] on the defamation of religions, particularly anti-Semitism, Christianophobia and Islamophobia. The report analysed each of those forms of discrimination, considered universal efforts to combat them, and found that the religious and socio-political factors that led to intolerance in each case were increasing. The Special Rapporteur made recommendations to the Commission and Member States on the need to combat the specific cultural and historical roots of each type of intolerance while treating all religious phobias equally and promoting religious and spiritual pluralism. In measures to combat racism and racial discrimination, the Commission should take greater account of the increasing intertwining of race, ethnicity, culture and religion, and of the rise of anti-Semitism, Christianophobia and Islamophobia, and in that regard, it was important to draw Member States' attention to the clash of cultures, civilizations and religions, particularly in the current context of efforts to combat terrorism.

The Special Rapporteur visited Japan (3-11 July) [E/CN.4/2006/16/Add.2 & Corr.1], where he assessed the impact of discrimination on minorities, including victims of the caste-like system; indigenous people (mostly the Ainu, estimated at between 30,000 and 50,000 people) and the Buraku and Okinawa peoples; descendants of former Japanese colonies (Koreans and Chinese); and foreigners and migrants from other Asian nations and elsewhere. Discrimination against those minorities was evident in social and economic life, as surveys of the situation highlighted their marginalization regarding access to education, employment, health and housing. Politically, they were poorly represented in State institutions, and culturally, they were affected by poor recognition and transmission of their history and the perpetuation of an unfavourable image. While acknowledging policies and measures adopted by the authorities to address the problem, including laws that promoted minority rights, the Special Rapporteur was concerned that there was no national legislation that specifically outlawed racial discrimination or provided a judicial remedy for the victims. He recommended that the Government officially recognize the existence of racial discrimination in the country, and express the will to combat it; adopt a national law against the problem; establish a national commission for equality and human rights; and rewrite the teaching history to better reflect the history of minorities and Japan's relations with neighbouring countries.

Commission action. On 12 April [res. 2005/3], the Commission, by a recorded vote of 31 to 16, with 5 abstentions, asked the Special Rapporteur to continue to examine the situation of Muslims and Arab peoples in various parts of the world in the aftermath of the September 2001 terrorist attacks in the United States [YUN 2001, p. 60], and to report thereon in 2006.

By a recorded vote of 46 to none, with 4 abstentions, the Commission, on 14 April [res. 2005/5], alarmed at the spread in many parts of the world of various extremist political parties, movements and groups, including neo-Nazis and skinheads, stressed that the practices of such organizations fueled contemporary forms of racism and were incompatible with Member States' obligations under the UN Charter and detrimental to the Organization's goals and principles. The Commission asked the Special Rapporteur to reflect on the issue, make relevant recommendations and report in 2006, taking into account the views of Governments and NGOs.

On 20 April [res. 2005/64], the Commission, by a recorded vote of 38 to 1, with 14 abstentions, extended the Special Rapporteur's mandate for a period of three years and asked him to submit an interim report to the General Assembly in 2005 and to report to the Commission in 2006. The Secretary-General was asked to assist him.

By decision 2005/272 of 25 July, the Economic and Social Council endorsed the Commission's decision to extend the Special Rapporteur's mandate and its request to the Secretary-General to assist him.

Further reports of Special Rapporteur. The Special Rapporteur visited Brazil (17-26 October) [E/CN.4/2006/16/Add.3] to assess the situation of racial discrimination and the Government's efforts to combat it. After analysing the views of the authorities and representatives of civil society organizations and ethnic groups in the country, the Special Rapporteur found that racial discrimination had influenced the structure of the entire Brazilian society for the past five centuries. The phenomenon was rooted in the system of slavery, founded on racist intellectual and ideological sentiments, which affected the mentalities and societal structures of States like Brazil that had participated in that system. The most striking manifestation of the problem was social, economic and political marginalization, as well as cultural repression. Those most affected were people of African descent, who accounted for 46 per cent of the Brazilian population and the majority among its ethnic groups. Also affected was the country's Amerindian community, comprising 0.4 per cent of the population, and other vulnerable groups, such as migrant workers, refugees and asylum-seekers. The Special Rapporteur noted in that regard that "traveling in Brazil was like moving simultaneously between two different planets, from that of the lively, coloured and mixed races of the streets to that of the almost all-white corridors of political, social, economic and media power". There was almost a complete lack of representation of blacks and Indians in State institutions. Although the authorities had recognized the existence and depth of racism and had adopted a number of laws to combat it, resistance to those policies remained, even among some federal and local authorities. The Special Rapporteur recommended measures aimed at translating the Government's political will into a legal and cultural strategy to eradicate the deeply rooted causes and consequences of racism and racial discrimination in Brazilian society. He proposed, in particular, that the Government establish a comprehensive national programme for the eradication of racism, based on DDPA provisions, a national commission on truth and reconciliation on racism and racial discrimination and a national commission for equality and human rights. The Government should accord priority to the prevention of violence against Indians and Afro-Brazilians, and make efforts to protect and support the indigenous and quilombo communities.

In accordance with General Assembly resolution 59/177 [YUN 2004, p. 688], the Secretary-General, in August [A/60/283], transmitted the Special Rapporteur's interim report, which summarized his activities during the year. The report drew the Assembly's attention to developments of particular concern, including a rise in racism and xenophobia as a result of identity constructs, and the mistreatment, contrary to international standards, of aliens, asylum-seekers, refugees and immigrants by the official administrative services of many States. The growing number of counter-terrorism policies and programmes by Member States were generating new forms of discrimination against groups and entire communities, religious and spiritual traditions, and in that context, the resurgence of Islamophobia had to be given particular attention. The Assembly should invite Member States to be more vigilant to all forms of religious defamation; to address the resurgence of racism, manifested through the erosion of the economic and social rights of national, ethnic, cultural and religious minorities, and of immigrants, asylum-seekers and refugees; and to take measures to prevent the discriminatory treatment of people in waiting and holding areas at airports and borders. The Special Rapporteur also discussed the upsurge of racism in sports, and invited Member States and national and international sporting bodies to address it.

Communication. In March [E/CN.4/2005/G/22], Thailand, referring to the Special Rapporteur's report (see above), provided information on the situation and incidents in southern Thailand.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December [meeting 64], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/60/507], adopted resolution 60/143 by recorded vote (114-4-57) [agenda item 69].

Inadmissibility of certain practices that contribute to fuelling contemporary forms of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance

The General Assembly,

Guided by the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination and other relevant human rights instruments,

Recalling the provisions of Commission on Human Rights resolutions 2004/16 of 16 April 2004 and 2005/5 of 14 April 2005,

Recalling also the Charter of the Nuremberg Tribunal and the Judgement of the Tribunal, which recognized the Waffen SS organization and all its integral parts as criminal and declared it responsible for many war crimes and crimes against humanity,

Recalling further the relevant provisions of the Durban Declaration and Programme of Action adopted by the World Conference against Racism, Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia and Related Intolerance on 8 September 2001, in particular paragraph 2 of the Declaration and paragraph 86 of the Programme of Action,

Recalling equally the study undertaken by the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on contemporary forms of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance, and taking note of his report,

Alarmed, in this regard, at the spread in many parts of the world of various extremist political parties, movements and groups, including neo-Nazis and skinhead groups,

1. Reaffirms the provision of the Durban Declaration in which States condemned the persistence and resurgence of neo-Nazism, neo-Fascism and violent nationalist prejudice and stated that those phenomena could never be justified in any instance or in any circumstances;

2. Expresses deep concern over the glorification of the Nazi movement and former members of the Waffen SS organization, including by erecting monuments and memorials as well as holding public demonstrations in the name of the glorification of the Nazi past, the Nazi movement and neo-Nazism;

3. Notes with concern the increase in the number of racist incidents in several countries and the rise of skinhead groups, which have been responsible for many of these incidents, as observed by the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on contemporary forms of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance;

4. Reaffirms that such acts may be qualified to fall within the scope of activities described in article 4 of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, and that they represent a clear and manifest abuse of the rights to freedom of peaceful assembly and of association as well as the rights to freedom of opinion and expression within the meaning of those rights as guaranteed by the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination;

5. Stresses that the practices described above do injustice to the memory of the countless victims of crimes against humanity committed in the Second World War, in particular those committed by the SS organization, and poison the minds of young people, in particular in the year of the sixtieth anniversary of victory in the Second World War and the liberation of Auschwitz and other concentration camps, and that those practices are incompatible with the obligations of States Members of the United Nations under its Charter and are incompatible with the goals and principles of the Organization;

6. Also stresses that such practices fuel contemporary forms of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance and contribute to the spread and multiplication of various extremist political parties, movements and groups, including neo-Nazis and skinhead groups;

7. Emphasizes the need to take the necessary measures to put an end to the practices described above, and calls upon States to take more effective measures to combat those phenomena and the extremist movements, which pose a real threat to democratic values;

8. Reaffirms that, according to article 4 of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, States parties to that instrument are, inter alia, under the obligation:

(a) To condemn all propaganda and all organizations that are based on ideas of racial superiority or that attempt to justify or promote racial hatred and discrimination in any form;

(b) To undertake to adopt immediate and positive measures designed to eradicate all incitement to, or acts of, such discrimination with due regard to the principles embodied in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the rights expressly set forth in article 5 of the Convention;

(c) To declare as an offence punishable by law all dissemination of ideas based on racial superiority or hatred, incitement to racial discrimination, as well as all acts of violence or incitement to such acts against any race or group of persons of another colour or ethnic origin, and also the provision of any assistance to racist activities, including the financing thereof;

(d) To declare illegal and prohibit organizations and organized and all other propaganda activities that promote and incite racial discrimination and to recognize participation in such organizations or activities as an offence punishable by law;

(e) To prohibit public authorities or public institutions, national or local, from promoting or inciting racial discrimination;

9. Recalls the request of the Commission on Human Rights in its resolution 2005/5 that the Special Rapporteur continue to reflect on this issue, make relevant recommendations in his report to the Commission at its sixty-second session and seek and take into account in this regard the views of Governments and non-governmental organizations;

10. Invites Governments and non-governmental organizations to cooperate fully with the Special Rapporteur in the exercise of the aforementioned task;

11. Decides to remain seized of the issue.

RECORDED VOTE ON RESOLUTION 60/143:

In favour: Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Armenia, Azerbaijan, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belarus, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Burundi, Cambodia, Cameroon, Cape Verde, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Democratic Republic of the Congo, Djibouti, Dominica, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Eritrea, Ethiopia, Gabon, Gambia, Ghana, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Israel, Jamaica, Jordan, Kazakhstan, Kenya, Kuwait, Kyrgyzstan, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lesotho, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Myanmar, Namibia, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Qatar, Russian Federation, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Singapore, Somalia, South Africa, Sudan, Suriname, Syrian Arab Republic, Tajikistan, Thailand, Timor-Leste, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkmenistan, Tuvalu, Uganda, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Uzbekistan, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Japan, Marshall Islands, Micronesia, United States.

Abstaining: Albania, Andorra, Australia, Austria, Belgium, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Canada, Croatia, Cyprus, Czech Republic, Denmark, Estonia, Fiji, Finland, France, Georgia, Germany, Greece, Hungary, Iceland, Ireland, Italy, Latvia, Liechtenstein, Lithuania, Luxembourg, Malta, Monaco, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Palau, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Poland, Portugal, Republic of Korea, Republic of Moldova, Romania, Samoa, San Marino, Serbia and Montenegro, Slovakia, Slovenia, Solomon Islands, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sweden, Switzerland, The former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Turkey, Ukraine, United Kingdom , Vanuatu.

Study of political platforms

On 19 April [res. 2005/36], the Commission, condemning political platforms and organizations based on racism, xenophobia or doctrines of racial superiority and related discrimination, recommended the creation, where they did not exist, of monitoring, reporting, documentation and information-processing institutions and procedures in order to prevent and reduce racial, ethnic or religious tensions. OHCHR was invited to continue efforts, in collaboration with the Special Rapporteur, to further analyse the issue of incitement and promotion of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance in political debate. The Special Rapporteur was asked to review and further expand his 2004 study on the question of political platforms that promoted or incited racial discrimination [YUN 2004, p. 695], and to report in 2006.

Right to nationality

On 19 April [res. 2005/45], the Commission, recognizing that arbitrary deprivation of nationality on racial, national, ethnic, religious, political or gender grounds violated human rights and fundamental freedoms, called on States to refrain from taking discriminatory measures and enacting legislation that would result in such deprivation and to prevent and reduce statelessness. States that had not yet done so were asked to consider acceding to the 1961 Convention on the Reduction of Statelessness [YUN 1961, p. 533] and the 1954 Convention relating to the Status of Stateless Persons [YUN 1954, p. 416]. The Secretary-General was asked to collect information on the issue from relevant sources for the Commission's consideration in 2006.

Protection of migrants

Report of Special Rapporteur. The Special Rapporteur on the human rights of migrants, Gabriela Rodríguez Pizarro (Costa Rica), in a report covering her 2004 activities [E/CN.4/2005/85], described the situation regarding her two research priority areas, namely racism, racial discrimination and xenophobia against immigrants and the situation of migrant women and unaccompanied minors. Judging from the alleged violations she had received, the Special Rapporteur determined that the most frequent abuses against migrants were discriminatory, xenophobic and racist practices that occurred during the administrative detention of undocumented migrants and the exploitation of migrant workers in various ways. Administrative detention amounted to discrimination against the exercise of migrants' basic right to freedom and legal security and the arbitrary denial of their right to an effective recourse against police detention, a situation that had become widespread owing to States' application of special legislation to combat terrorism. There were also instances of discrimination against migrants regarding access to the labour market, home purchase or rental, and in education opportunities. Women migrants were at greater risk of discrimination and abuse than men, owing to the tendency for them to be employed in the shadow economy and relatively less skilled work, and to become more dependent on their employers, making them more vulnerable to exploitation. Unaccompanied minors were also at great risk of violence, exploitation, child trafficking and discrimination, and were more vulnerable to sexual abuse and being coerced into begging, drug dealing or prostitution by criminals. States seemed slow to take account of the best interests of such minors regarding the issues of detention, repatriation procedures and family reunification. Consequently, alleged summary deportations of those affected persisted, as well as their ill-treatment at reception centres and detention. In terms of progress made in protecting migrants' rights, the Special Rapporteur said that a number of trade unions in host countries were making efforts to address the labour situation of migrant workers and some countries had adopted national plans of action, in line with the recommendations contained in the Durban Declaration and Programme of Action (DDPA) adopted at the World Conference against Racism, Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia and Related Intolerance [YUN 2001, p. 615], particularly regarding the provisions on migrants. Yet, alarming manifestations of discrimination against them persisted, characterized by resurgent traditional forms of discrimination, rooted in colour-based racism, and the appearance of new forms targeting non-citizens, refugees and immigrants. The Special Rapporteur recommended that States be held responsible and punished for abuses and violations of migrants' rights and urged that the Commission continue its work on the "Basic Principles and Guidelines on the Right to a Remedy and Reparation for Victims of Violations of International Human Rights and Humanitarian Law" (see p. 792) and that the General Assembly do likewise regarding the codification of the draft articles on responsibility of States for internationally wrongful acts submitted by the International Law Commission [YUN 2001, p. 1218]. OHCHR should participate more actively in migration-management forums and help run specific programmes on migrants' human rights. UNDP needed to be aware of the migration-development nexus and promote local level programmes in the countries where migration began. The Special Rapporteur was confident that the Assembly's high-level dialogues on international migration and development, scheduled for 2006 (see p. 1176), would provide a fresh opportunity to consider strategies and mechanisms for addressing the myriad aspects of migration.

An addendum to the report [E/CN.4/2005/85/Add.1 & Corr. 1] summarized the communications the Special Rapporteur had sent to 51 Governments and responses thereto regarding individual cases of alleged violations of migrants' human rights and general situations concerning their rights in specific countries.

Commission action. On 19 April [res. 2005/47], the Commission strongly condemned racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance against migrants and asked States to promote and protect their rights. The Commission extended the Special Rapporteur's mandate for three years, encouraged her to continue to examine ways of overcoming obstacles in that regard, and requested that she report to the Assembly in 2005 and to the Commission in 2006. The Secretary-General was requested to assist her.

On 25 July, the Economic and Social Council approved the Commission's decision to extend the Special Rapporteur's mandate and endorsed its request to the Secretary-General to assist her (decision 2005/267).

Further reports of Special Rapporteur. At the invitation of the Government, the Special Rapporteur visited Burkina Faso (2-9 February) [E/CN.4/2006/73/Add.2] to assess the situation of migrants, including some 350,000 of its nationals repatriated from neighbouring Côte d'Ivoire, which had been in the throes of conflict since a 2002 failed attempt by armed rebels to overthrow the Government [YUN 2002, p. 180]. The plight of those returnees, who faced extreme poverty, particularly women and children, highlighted problems regarding the fundamental rights of migrants, most notably socio-economic rights relating to poor access to employment, social security, health, housing, food and education. Child trafficking was of particular concern in Burkina Faso, affecting the large percentage of children who left home in search of a better life, most of whom found work on plantations as domestic workers or were left in the care of Koranic teachers. To address those problems, the Special Rapporteur recommended more determined structural action against child trafficking and the development and implementation of a clearly defined migration policy, as a means of dealing effectively with irregular migration flows and optimizing the potential benefits of international migration to Burkina Faso's development. In that context, priority should be given to the conclusion of bilateral agreements with countries expelling Burkinabe nationals, especially the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, in order to safeguard the dignity of irregular migrants at the time of repatriation. She also advocated that Burkina Faso participate actively in regional migration processes; seek ways of optimizing the benefits of international migration; and introduce stricter controls of civil status documents used in the preparation of national passports and transparent procedures respectful of human rights in the area of irregular migration. Other recommendations concerned measures to facilitate the socio-economic resettlement of returnees and the need for the international community to support the resettlement process.

In July, the Commission appointed Jorge Bustamante (Mexico) as the new Special Rapporteur on the human rights of migrants.

Interim report of Special Rapporteur. In response to General Assembly resolution 59/194 [YUN 2004, p. 699] and Commission resolution 2005/47 (see p. 767), the Secretary-General, by a September note [A/60/357], transmitted the interim report of the Special Rapporteur, which made preliminary observations regarding migration and described the working methods he intended to adopt in fulfilling his mandate.

Report of Secretary-General. In accordance with General Assembly resolution 59/194 [YUN 2004, p. 699], the Secretary-General, in an August report [A/60/272], summarized communications received from 11 States providing information on legal provisions, programmes, campaigns and policies established to protect migrants. The Secretary-General was encouraged by the increasing number of bilateral, regional and international consultations on migration and the protection of migrants, and by States' efforts in that regard. He welcomed the work of the Committee on Migrant Workers (see p. 731), which monitored the compliance of States parties with the provisions of the 1990 International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families [YUN 1990, p. 594] and urged Member States who had not done so to ratify and adhere to that instrument. The Special Rapporteur was encouraged to continue working for the protection of migrants, particularly women and children, maintain the programme of visits and continue promoting dialogue and cooperation on the issue of migration.

Communications. On 16 March [E/CN.4/2005/G/19], Italy provided its observations on the report of the former Special Rapporteur following her 2004 visit to the country [YUN 2004, p. 697]. It emphasized that it had enacted legislation that focused on integration, reception and full protection of migrants' rights and disagreed with the Special Rapporteur's suggestion that the provisions of that legislation were potentially restrictive of migrants' rights.

On 18 March [E/CN.4/2005/G/31], Peru clarified aspects of the former Special Rapporteur's report on her 2004 visit to the country [YUN 2004, p. 698].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December [meeting 64], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/60/507], adopted resolution 60/169 without vote [agenda item 71 (b)].

Protection of migrants

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, which proclaims that all human beings are born free and equal in dignity and rights and that everyone is entitled to all the rights and freedoms set out therein, without distinction of any kind, in particular as to race, colour or national origin,

Recalling its resolution 59/194 of 20 December 2004, taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 2005/47 of 19 April 2005, and recalling its resolution 40/144 of 13 December 1985, by which it adopted the Declaration on the Human Rights of Individuals Who are not Nationals of the Country in which They Live,

Considering that every State party to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights must ensure to all individuals within its territory and subject to its jurisdiction the rights recognized in the Covenant, and that every State party to the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights has undertaken to guarantee the exercise of all rights enunciated in that Covenant without discrimination of any kind, including, in particular, on the basis of national origin,

Reaffirming the provisions concerning migrants adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights, the International Conference on Population and Development, the World Summit for Social Development and the Fourth World Conference on Women,

Reaffirming also the provisions on the human rights of migrants contained in the Durban Declaration and Programme of Action adopted by the World Conference against Racism, Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia and Related Intolerance on 8 September 2001, and expressing its satisfaction at the important recommendations made for the development of international and national strategies for the protection of migrants and for the design of migration policies that fully respect the human rights of migrants,

Recalling the renewed commitment made in the United Nations Millennium Declaration and at the 2005 World Summit to take measures to ensure respect for and protection of the human rights of migrants, migrant workers and their families, to eliminate the increasing acts of racism and xenophobia in many societies and to promote greater harmony, tolerance and respect in all societies,

Taking note of advisory opinion OC-16/99 of 1 October 1999 on the Right to Information on Consular Assistance in the Framework of the Guarantees of the Due Process of Law and advisory opinion OC-18/03 of 17 September 2003 on the Juridical Condition and Rights of the Undocumented Migrants, issued by the Inter-American Court of Human Rights,

Taking note also of the Judgment of the International Court of Justice of 31 March 2004 in the case concerning Avena and Other Mexican Nationals, and recalling the obligations of States reaffirmed therein,

Encouraged by the increasing interest of the international community in the effective and full protection of the human rights of all migrants, and underlining the need to make further efforts to ensure respect for the human rights and fundamental freedoms of all migrants,

Aware of the increasing number of migrants worldwide, and bearing in mind the situation of vulnerability in which migrants and their accompanying families can find themselves when outside their States of origin owing, inter alia, to the difficulties they encounter because of discrimination in society, differences of language, custom and culture, as well as the economic and social difficulties and obstacles to the return of migrants to their States of origin, especially those who are undocumented or in an irregular migratory situation,

Emphasizing the global character of the migratory phenomenon, the importance of international, regional and bilateral cooperation and dialogue in this regard, as appropriate, and the need to protect the human rights of migrants, particularly at a time in which migration flows have increased in the globalized economy and take place in a context of new security concerns,

Bearing in mind that policies and initiatives on the issue of migration, including those that refer to the orderly management of migration, should promote holistic approaches that take into account the causes and consequences of the phenomenon, as well as the full respect of the human rights and fundamental freedoms of migrants,

Concerned at the large and growing number of migrants, especially women and children, who place themselves in a vulnerable situation by attempting to cross international borders without the required travel documents, and underlining the obligation of States to respect the human rights of those migrants,

Deeply concerned at the manifestations of violence, racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and other forms of intolerance and inhuman and degrading treatment against migrants, especially women and children, in different parts of the world,

Concerned that the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on contemporary forms of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance has indicated the appearance of new forms of discrimination targeting migrants, among other groups,

Noting the strong concern expressed by the special rapporteurs, special representatives, independent experts and chairpersons of working groups of the special procedures of the Commission on Human Rights and of the advisory services programme regarding the continued deterioration in the situation and the denial of the human rights of migrants, in particular current attempts to institutionalize discrimination against and exclusion of migrants, in the joint statement made at their eleventh annual meeting,

Highlighting the importance of creating conditions that favour greater harmony, tolerance and respect between migrants and the rest of society in countries of transit or destination in order to eliminate manifestations of racism and xenophobia against migrants, including members of their families,

Recognizing the positive and diverse contributions that migrants make to host societies and societies of origin and the efforts that some host countries and countries of origin undertake to integrate and reintegrate migrants,

Recognizing also the increasing participation of women in international migration movements,

Acknowledging the work of the Committee on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families,

Acknowledging also the work done by the International Labour Organization and the International Organization for Migration in addressing migration issues,

Resolved to ensure respect for the human rights and fundamental freedoms of all migrants,

1. Strongly condemns the manifestations and acts of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance against migrants and the stereotypes often applied to them, and urges States to apply the existing laws when xenophobic or intolerant acts, manifestations or expressions against migrants occur, in order to eradicate impunity for those who commit xenophobic and racist acts, and calls upon States to implement fully the commitments and recommendations relating to the promotion and protection of the human rights of migrants contained in the Durban Declaration and Programme of Action through, inter alia, the adoption of national plans of action, as recommended by the World Conference against Racism, Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia and Related Intolerance;

2. Strongly condemns also all forms of racial discrimination and xenophobia related to access to employment, vocational training, housing, schooling, health services and social services, as well as services intended for use by the public;

3. Welcomes the active role played by governmental and non-governmental organizations in combating racism and xenophobia and in assisting victims of racist acts, including migrant victims;

4. Calls upon all States to consider reviewing and, where necessary, revising immigration policies with a view to eliminating all discriminatory practices against migrants and their families and adopting effective action to create conditions that foster greater harmony, tolerance and respect within societies, and to provide specialized training for government policymaking, law enforcement, migration and other concerned officials, including in cooperation with non-governmental organizations and civil society;

5. Requests States effectively to promote and protect the human rights and fundamental freedoms of all migrants, regardless of their immigration status, especially those of women and children, in conformity with the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the international instruments to which they are party, which may include the International Covenants on Human Rights, the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, the Convention on the Rights of the Child, the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, the International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families and other relevant human rights instruments;

6. Requests all States, international organizations and relevant stakeholders to take into account in their policies and initiatives on migration issues the global character of the migratory phenomenon and to give due consideration to international, regional and bilateral cooperation in this field, with a view to addressing, in a comprehensive manner, its causes and consequences and granting priority to the protection of the human rights of migrants;

7. Welcomes the increasing number of signatures and ratifications or accessions to the International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families, and calls upon States that have not done so to consider signing and ratifying or acceding to the Convention as a matter of priority;

8. Urges States parties to the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime and supplementing protocols thereto, namely, the Protocol against the Smuggling of Migrants by Land, Sea and Air and the Protocol to Prevent, Suppress and Punish Trafficking in Persons, Especially Women and Children, to implement them fully, and calls upon States that have not done so to consider ratifying them as a matter of priority;

9. Reaffirms emphatically the duty of States parties to ensure full respect for and observance of the Vienna Convention on Consular Relations of 1963, in particular with regard to the right of all foreign nationals, regardless of their immigration status, to communicate with a consular official of the sending State in the case of arrest, imprisonment, custody or detention, and the obligation of the receiving State to inform without delay the foreign national of his or her rights under the Convention;

10. Expresses concern about the legislation and the measures adopted by some States that restrict the human rights and fundamental freedoms of migrants;

11. Welcomes immigration programmes, adopted by some countries, that allow migrants to integrate fully into the host countries, facilitate family reunification and promote a harmonious, tolerant and respectful environment, and encourages States to consider the possibility of adopting these types of programmes;

12. Calls upon States to facilitate family reunification in an expeditious and effective manner, with due regard to applicable laws, as such reunification has a positive effect on the integration of migrants;

13. Encourages all States to integrate a gender and age perspective in developing and implementing international migration policies and programmes in order to adopt the necessary measures to better protect women and children against possible dangers and abuse associated with migration and to foster opportunities for their contribution to their societies of origin and destination;

14. Calls upon States to promote and protect all human rights of migrant children, given their vulnerability, in particular unaccompanied migrant children, ensuring that the best interests of the children are a primary consideration, underlines the importance of reuniting them with their parents, when possible, and encourages the relevant United Nations bodies, within the framework of their respective mandates, to pay special attention to the conditions of migrant children in all States and, where necessary, to put forward recommendations for strengthening their protection, especially against sexual abuse, sexual exploitation, trafficking, the threat or use of force or other forms of coercion, including coercion into begging and drug dealing, in particular by national or transnational organized crime groups;

15. Encourages States of origin to promote and protect the human rights of those families of migrant workers that remain in the countries of origin, paying particular attention to children and adolescents whose parents have emigrated, and encourages international organizations to consider supporting States in this regard;

16. Requests all States, in conformity with national legislation and applicable international legal instruments to which they are party, to enforce labour law effectively, including by addressing violations of such law, with regard to migrant workers' labour relations and working conditions, inter alia, those related to their remuneration and conditions of health, safety at work and the right to freedom of association;

17. Encourages all States to remove obstacles that may prevent the safe, unrestricted and expeditious transfer of earnings, assets and pensions of migrants to their country of origin or to any other countries, in conformity with applicable legislation, and to consider, as appropriate, measures to solve other problems that may impede such transfers;

18. Calls upon States to observe national legislation and applicable international legal instruments to which they are party when enacting national security measures in order to respect the human rights of migrants;

19. Urges all States to adopt effective measures to put an end to the arbitrary arrest and detention of migrants and to take action to prevent and punish any form of illegal deprivation of liberty of migrants by individuals or groups;

20. Also urges all States to employ duly authorized and trained government officials to enforce their immigration laws and border controls and to take appropriate and effective measures to deter and prevent private persons or groups from violating criminal and immigration laws relating to border enforcement and from wrongfully undertaking actions reserved to government officials, including by prosecuting those violations of the law that may result from such actions;

21. Requests States to adopt concrete measures to prevent the violation of the human rights of migrants while in transit, including in ports and airports and at borders and migration checkpoints, to train public officials who work in those facilities and in border areas to treat migrants respectfully and in accordance with the law, and to prosecute, in conformity with applicable law, any act of violation of the human rights of migrants, inter alia, arbitrary detention, torture and violations of the right to life, including extrajudicial executions, during their transit from their country of origin to the country of destination and vice versa, including their transit through national borders;

22. Calls upon States that have not yet done so to enact domestic legislation and to take further effective measures to combat and prosecute international trafficking in and smuggling of migrants, recognizing that these crimes may endanger the lives of migrants or subject them to harm, servitude or exploitation, which may include debt bondage, slavery and sexual exploitation or forced labour, and urges States to strengthen international cooperation to combat such trafficking and smuggling and to protect the victims of trafficking;

23. Encourages States, in cooperation with non-governmental organizations, to undertake information campaigns aimed at clarifying opportunities, limitations and rights in the event of migration, so as to enable everyone, in particular women, to make informed decisions and to prevent them from becoming victims of trafficking and utilizing dangerous means of access to countries of transit and destination that put their lives and physical integrity at risk;

24. Also encourages States to consider participating in international and regional dialogues on migration that include countries of origin and destination, as well as countries of transit, and invites them to consider negotiating bilateral and regional agreements on migrant workers within the framework of applicable human rights law and designing and implementing programmes with States of other regions to protect the rights of migrants;

25. Requests Member States, the United Nations system, international organizations, civil society and all relevant stakeholders, especially the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and her Office, as well as the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on the human rights of migrants, to ensure that the perspective of the human rights of migrants is included among the priority issues in the ongoing discussions on migration and development within the United Nations system, including, in particular, at the high-level dialogue on international migration and development that will be held in 2006, pursuant to General Assembly resolution 58/208 of 23 December 2003;

26. Invites States, the United Nations system and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to observe, on 18 December of each year, International Migrants Day, proclaimed by the General Assembly, through, inter alia, the dissemination of information on the human rights and fundamental freedoms of migrants and on their economic, social and cultural contributions to their host and home countries, the sharing of experience and the adoption of measures to ensure their protection, and to promote greater harmony, tolerance and respect between migrants and the societies in which they live;

27. Welcomes the renewal of the mandate of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on the human rights of migrants for a period of three years and the appointment of the new Special Rapporteur, and takes note with interest of the interim report submitted by him to the General Assembly, including the proposed methods of work for the fulfilment of his mandate;

28. Requests all Governments to cooperate fully with the Special Rapporteur in the performance of the tasks and duties mandated, to furnish all information requested and to respond appropriately and expeditiously to his urgent appeals and to give serious consideration to his requests to visit their countries, and welcomes in this regard the standing invitations extended by some Member States to all special procedures, including the Special Rapporteur;

29. Requests all relevant mechanisms to cooperate with the Special Rapporteur;

30. Requests the Secretary-General to give the Special Rapporteur all the human and financial assistance necessary for the fulfilment of his mandate;

31. Takes note of the report of the Committee on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families on its second session, and requests the Secretary-General to arrange, within existing resources, two sessions for the Committee in 2006, in spring and autumn, respectively, each of a duration of one week;

32. Takes note also of the report of the Secretary-General on the protection of migrants, and calls upon Member States and all relevant stakeholders to consider the implementation of the recommendations contained therein;

33. Decides to examine the question further at its sixty-first session under the item entitled "Human rights questions".

Other forms of intolerance

Impact of intolerance

By a June note [E/CN.4/Sub.2/2005/31], the Secretariat informed the Subcommission that Soli

Sorabjee (India) had indicated that he would not be able to submit the working paper on the impact of intolerance on the enjoyment and exercise of human rights, which the Subcommission had requested in 2004 [YUN 2004, p. 702].

Cultural prejudice

Report of High Commissioner. In response to a 2004 Commission request [YUN 2004, p. 702], the High Commissioner submitted a report [E/CN.4/2005/40] summarizing replies received from one Government, one UN system agency and three NGOs on the appointment of a special rapporteur and on steps they had taken to promote the full enjoyment of cultural rights.

Commission action. By a recorded vote of 39 to 1, with 13 abstentions, the Commission, on 14 April [res. 2005/20], reaffirming that cultural rights were an integral part of human rights, recognized that States had the responsibility to promote the full enjoyment of cultural rights and to enhance respect for different cultural identities. The Commission called on States, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs to implement its resolution and asked the High Commissioner to consult with them on the possibility of establishing a thematic procedure, whose mandate would be the comprehensive implementation of the resolution, and to report in 2006.

Note by Secretary-General. Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 58/167 [YUN 2003, p. 710], the Secretary-General, in an 8 September note [A/60/340], informed the Assembly that no comments had been received from Member States, UN agencies and NGOs on the subject of human rights and cultural diversity. However, a more comprehensive report would be submitted on the issue, and in that connection, the Assembly should note that the Commission, in its resolution 2005/20 (see above), had requested the High Commissioner to consult States and intergovernmental organizations and NGOs on the scope of a mandate for an independent expert on the promotion and enjoyment of cultural rights, and to report thereon.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December [meeting 64], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/60/509], adopted resolution 60/167 without vote [agenda item 71 (b)].

Human rights and cultural diversity

The General Assembly,

Recalling the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, as well as other pertinent human rights instruments,

Recalling also its resolutions 54/160 of 17 December 1999, 55/91 of 4 December 2000, 57/204 of 18 December 2002 and 58/167 of 22 December 2003, and recalling further its resolutions 54/113 of 10 December 1999, 55/23 of 13 November 2000 and 60/4 of 20 October 2005 concerning the United Nations Year of Dialogue among Civilizations,

Noting that numerous instruments within the United Nations system promote cultural diversity, as well as the conservation and development of culture, in particular the Declaration of the Principles of International Culture Cooperation proclaimed on 4 November 1966 by the General Conference of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization at its fourteenth session,

Taking note of the note by the Secretary-General,

Welcoming the adoption of the Global Agenda for Dialogue among Civilizations by its resolution 56/6 of 9 November 2001,

Welcoming also the contribution of the World Conference against Racism, Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia and Related Intolerance, held at Durban, South Africa, from 31 August to 8 September 2001, to the promotion of respect for cultural diversity,

Welcoming further the Universal Declaration on Cultural Diversity of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, together with its Action Plan, adopted on 2 November 2001 by the General Conference of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization at its thirty-first session, in which member States invited the United Nations system and other intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations concerned to cooperate with the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization in the promotion of the principles set forth in the Declaration and its Action Plan with a view to enhancing the synergy of actions in favour of cultural diversity,

Reaffirming that all human rights are universal, indivisible, interdependent and interrelated and that the international community must treat human rights globally in a fair and equal manner, on the same footing and with the same emphasis, and that, while the significance of national and regional particularities and various historical, cultural and religious backgrounds must be borne in mind, it is the duty of States, regardless of their political, economic and cultural systems, to promote and protect all human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Recognizing that cultural diversity and the pursuit of cultural development by all peoples and nations are a source of mutual enrichment for the cultural life of humankind,

Taking into account that a culture of peace actively fosters non-violence and respect for human rights and strengthens solidarity among peoples and nations and dialogue between cultures,

Recognizing that all cultures and civilizations share a common set of universal values,

Recognizing also that the promotion of the rights of indigenous people and their cultures and traditions will contribute to the respect for and observance of cultural diversity among all peoples and nations,

Considering that tolerance of cultural, ethnic, religious and linguistic diversities, as well as dialogue among and within civilizations, is essential for peace, understanding and friendship among individuals and people of different cultures and nations of the world, while manifestations of cultural prejudice, intolerance and xenophobia towards different cultures and religions generate hatred and violence among peoples and nations throughout the world,

Recognizing in each culture a dignity and value that deserve recognition, respect and preservation, and convinced that, in their rich variety and diversity, and in the reciprocal influences that they exert on one another, all cultures form part of the common heritage belonging to all humankind,

Convinced that the promotion of cultural pluralism and tolerance towards and dialogue among various cultures and civilizations would contribute to the efforts of all peoples and nations to enrich their cultures and traditions by engaging in a mutually beneficial exchange of knowledge and intellectual, moral and material achievements,

Acknowledging the diversity of the world, recognizing that all cultures and civilizations contribute to the enrichment of humankind, acknowledging the importance of respect and understanding for religious and cultural diversity throughout the world, and, in order to promote international peace and security, committing itself to advancing human welfare, freedom and progress everywhere, as well as to encouraging tolerance, respect, dialogue and cooperation among different cultures, civilizations and peoples,

1. Affirms the importance for all peoples and nations to hold, develop and preserve their cultural heritage and traditions in a national and international atmosphere of peace, tolerance and mutual respect;

2. Welcomes the adoption on 8 September 2000 of the United Nations Millennium Declaration, in which Member States consider, inter alia, that tolerance is one of the fundamental values essential to international relations in the twenty-first century and that it should include the active promotion of a culture of peace and dialogue among civilizations, with human beings respecting one another in all their diversity of belief, culture and language, neither fearing nor repressing differences within and between societies but cherishing them as a precious asset of humanity;

3. Recognizes the right of everyone to take part in cultural life and to enjoy the benefits of scientific progress and its applications;

4. Affirms that the international community should strive to respond to the challenges and opportunities posed by globalization in a manner that ensures respect for the cultural diversity of all;

5. Expresses its determination to prevent and mitigate cultural homogenization in the context of globalization, through increased intercultural exchange guided by the promotion and protection of cultural diversity;

6. Affirms that intercultural dialogue essentially enriches the common understanding of human rights and that the benefits to be derived from the encouragement and development of international contacts and cooperation in the cultural fields are important;

7. Welcomes the recognition at the World Conference against Racism, Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia and Related Intolerance of the necessity of respecting and maximizing the benefits of diversity within and among all nations in working together to build a harmonious and productive future by putting into practice and promoting values and principles such as justice, equality and non-discrimination, democracy, fairness and friendship, tolerance and respect within and among communities and nations, in particular through public information and educational programmes to raise awareness and understanding of the benefits of cultural diversity, including programmes in which the public authorities work in partnership with international and non-governmental organizations and other sectors of civil society;

8. Recognizes that respect for cultural diversity and the cultural rights of all enhances cultural pluralism, contributing to a wider exchange of knowledge and understanding of cultural background, advancing the application and enjoyment of universally accepted human rights throughout the world and fostering stable, friendly relations among peoples and nations worldwide;

9. Emphasizes that the promotion of cultural pluralism and tolerance at the national, regional and international levels is important for enhancing respect for cultural rights and cultural diversity;

10. Also emphasizes that tolerance and respect for diversity facilitate the universal promotion and protection of human rights, including gender equality and the enjoyment of all human rights by all, and underlines the fact that tolerance and respect for cultural diversity and the universal promotion and protection of human rights are mutually supportive;

11. Urges all actors on the international scene to build an international order based on inclusion, justice, equality and equity, human dignity, mutual understanding and promotion of and respect for cultural diversity and universal human rights, and to reject all doctrines of exclusion based on racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance;

12. Urges States to ensure that their political and legal systems reflect the multicultural diversity within their societies and, where necessary, to improve democratic institutions so that they are more fully participatory and avoid marginalization and exclusion of, and discrimination against, specific sectors of society;

13. Calls upon States, international organizations and United Nations agencies, and invites civil society, including non-governmental organizations, to recognize and promote respect for cultural diversity for the purpose of advancing the objectives of peace, development and universally accepted human rights;

14. Requests the Secretary-General, in the light of the present resolution, to prepare a report on human rights and cultural diversity, taking into account the views of Member States, relevant United Nations agencies and non-governmental organizations, as well as the considerations in the present resolution regarding the recognition and importance of cultural diversity among all peoples and nations in the world, and to submit the report to the General Assembly at its sixty-second session;

15. Requests the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to continue to bear in mind fully the issues raised in the present resolution in the course of its activities for the promotion and protection of human rights;

16. Decides to continue consideration of the question at its sixty-second session under the sub-item entitled "Human rights questions, including alternative approaches for improving the effective enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms".

Discrimination against minorities

Report of High Commissioner. In response to a 2004 Commission request [YUN 2004, p. 702], the High Commissioner submitted a March report [E/CN.4/2005/81] on the study of options for the timely identification of minority issues and related measures. The report summarized information presented by Governments and NGOs on the subject, the views contained in the High Commissioner's 2004 report to the Commission [YUN 2004, p. 702], recent developments with respect to minority issues and an analysis of the options for the timely identification of minority issues, which involved a review of the work of existing human rights bodies and mechanisms dealing with them. The report noted that minorities faced specific and often grave human rights violations that could lead to political instability and conflict, and that the root causes of their problems were often linked to discrimination against them, the non-recognition of aspects of their identity and the denial of their effective participation in decisions affecting them. Thus, significant gaps existed in the protection of minority rights and the United Nations needed to strengthen its capacity to tackle the problem. Those gaps were particularly visible in the context of timely identification and swift or urgent action, and it was encouraging that States and other actors had expressed interest in considering modalities to address the situation. It was also auspicious that human rights mechanisms currently concerned with minority issues possessed a considerable potential to tackle, in a timely fashion, the problems faced by minorities. However, to fully utilize them required that they be strengthened significantly in terms of time and resources. The report also reflected on the varied proposals made by the Subcommission and its Working Group on Minorities (see below) for strengthening minority protection, including through the establishment of a special procedure and an international year of the world's minorities.

Commission action. On 21 April [res. 2005/79], the Commission urged States to promote and protect the rights of persons belonging to national or ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities, give special attention to protecting their children's rights and take measures to protect their cultural and religious sites. The High Commissioner was requested to appoint an independent expert on minority issues for a period of two years, with the mandate to promote the implementation of the Declaration on the Rights of Persons Belonging to National or Ethnic, Religious and Linguistic Minorities, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 47/135 [YUN 1992, p. 722]; identify best practices and possibilities for technical cooperation at the request of Governments; apply a gender perspective in his or her work; cooperate closely, while avoiding duplication, with UN bodies, mandates, mechanisms and regional organizations; and to take into account the views of NGOs on matters pertaining to the mandate. The Commission requested that the expert report to it annually on his or her activities, including recommendations for effective strategies for better implementation of minorities' rights. In the light of its current resolution, the Commission decided to amend the mandate of the Working Group on Minorities of the Subcommission (see below) to allow it to hold one annual session of three consecutive working days, focusing its work on interactive dialogue with NGOs and support for the independent expert, who would participate as an observer. The High Commissioner was asked to provide the expert with the necessary resources for the effective fulfilment of the mandate, review the mechanisms' performance and effectiveness after two years and report thereon in 2007.

On 25 July (decision 2005/278), the Economic and Social Council endorsed the Commission's requests to the High Commissioner to appoint an independent expert; to the Secretary-General to provide him with the resources for fulfilling the mandate; and to the expert to submit annual reports. The Council further endorsed the Commission's decision to amend the mandate of the Subcommission's Working Group on Minorities.

Also in July, the Commission appointed Gay McDougall (United States) as the independent expert on minority issues.

Working Group activities. The five-member Working Group on Minorities, at its eleventh session (Geneva, 30 May–3 June) [E/CN.4/Sub.2/2005/27], reviewed the promotion of the 1992 Declaration, examined possible solutions to problems involving minorities, including the promotion of mutual understanding between and among minorities and Governments, and recommended further measures to promote and protect minority rights. The Group also discussed its future role.

The Group had before it working papers on minorities and self-determination [E/CN.4/Sub.2/AC.5/2005/WP.1], international and national actions for the protection of the rights of minorities: the role of the Working Group [E/CN.4/Sub.2/AC.5/2004/WP.3], the Millennium Development Goals: helping or harming minorities [E/CN.4/Sub.2/AC.5/2005/WP.4], and towards a general comment on self-determination and autonomy [E/CN.4/Sub.2/AC.5/2005/WP.5]. It also considered a commentary on the 1992 Declaration, prepared by Asbjrrn Eide (Norway) and presented on behalf of the Group as a whole [E/CN.4/Sub.2/AC.5/2005/2]; a report of the African Commission on Human and Peoples' Rights Working Group of Experts on Indigenous Populations/Communities [E/CN.4/Sub.2/AC.5/2005/WP.3]; reports of the 2004 Sub-Regional Seminars on Minority Rights in Central and South Asia [YUN 2004, p. 705]; and a document on minorities and the work of national human rights institutions [E/CN.4/Sub.2/AC.5/2005/3].

In its decisions and recommendations, the Group decided to include in the agenda of its 2006 session an item on the promotion and practical realization of the 1992 Declaration and solutions to problems involving minorities, including conflict prevention and resolution. Thematic issues proposed for discussion in 2006 included the question of mainstreaming minorities' rights into the MDGs, particularly the goal on eradicating extreme poverty by 2015, and cooperation with the independent expert on minority issues and UN organizations. The Group encouraged further regional and subregional meetings, in cooperation with regional mechanisms, and recommended that training on the use of UN human rights mechanisms be held in conjunction with those meetings. It also recommended that a seminar on the Roma be organized, in cooperation with the Council of Europe, to which Roma representatives from non-European countries should be invited. It invited NGOs and academic institutions to present studies on the promotion and protection of the rights of specific minorities, including Pastoralists, Afro-descendants and Fisherfolk. The Group decided to forward the statements made by minority representatives and NGOs at its current session to the Governments concerned and invited them to share their response with the Group, with a view to promoting dialogue between and among minorities and Governments. Minorities and related organizations were invited to prepare further submissions prior to the Group's next session, and to describe their areas of concern, the main problems in meeting those concerns and suggestions on effective remedies. United Nations system bodies were also invited to present information on their contribution to the full realization of the rights and principles set forth in the 1992 Declaration. The Group recommended that the Subcommission support a study on the utility and advisability of an international convention on the rights of minorities and addressed recommendations to Governments on the need to protect the rights of minorities residing within their territory, provide effective and easily accessible remedies to redress violations against them, and bring to justice those responsible for such violations. In that context, the Group emphasized the importance of establishing a voluntary fund to support the participation of minority representatives in its meetings, especially those from developing countries, and recommended that OHCHR continue to organize training on universal and regional standards and mechanisms, in order to strengthen minority representatives' cooperation with human rights procedures. It should, in addition, continue the Minority Fellowship Programme, first organized during the Group's current session, as well as the further preparation of a minority profile and matrix and the update and preparation of other pamphlets, for inclusion in the United Nations Guide for Minorities. The Group asked OHCHR to re-issue the publication entitled Human Rights: A Basic Handbook for UN Staff and make it available to minority representatives in order to promote awareness among them of the UN human rights programme, and to ensure that minority issues were mainstreamed into the work of its human rights-based approaches to development, particularly through the proposed task force on the MDGs. The Group's other recommendations for safeguarding minorities' rights were addressed to regional, national and international development agencies and UN system bodies, including peacekeeping and peacebuilding operations and humanitarian organizations.

Subcommission action. On 10 August [res. 2005/18], the Subcommission asked the Commission to request the Economic and Social Council to authorize the Working Group to meet for five working days prior to the Subcommission's 2006 session and subsequent sessions. It instructed the Group to continue efforts to identify, study and analyse problems faced by minorities and to encourage dialogue concerning those problems.

Report of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 58/182 [YUN 2003, p. 714], the Secretary-General submitted a 6 September report [A/60/333] on the effective promotion of the 1992 Declaration. The report described efforts by the United Nations and its bodies to assist Governments in finding the expertise for addressing minority issues, including through the newly appointed independent expert on minority issues (see p. 774). It also analysed the involvement of relevant international actors and participation of NGOs and persons belonging to minorities in minority-related activities, and identified good practices in the field of education on minority questions, including the issue of instruction in minority languages and the content of the curriculum. The report concluded that there was a growing recognition that the promotion and protection of minorities' rights were integral to the process of strengthening the political and social stability of States and to development within a democratic framework based on the rule of law. It was, therefore, essential for programmes and projects implemented by the United Nations at the country level to include minority-related issues. Mainstreaming minorities' rights into the work of the United Nations in peace and security and development could significantly enrich that task and enhance its impact, and the 1992 Declaration should guide the process. It was vital to involve minorities in the work of the Organization at the international and national levels and OHCHR and other UN agencies and programmes should continue to develop training tools and information materials towards that end. They should also facilitate the participation of minorities in seminars, workshops and training sessions, and assist in building the relative capacities of Governments and civil society. The voluntary fund for minority activities, proposed by the Commission in 2004 [YUN 2004, p. 703], might be an important instrument in that regard.

Workshop. In efforts to help resolve and prevent conflicts affecting minorities, strengthen the human rights perspective of recommendations in related work and support initiatives to increase civil society participation in the work of the United Nations, OHCHR organized a workshop on minorities and conflict prevention and resolution (26-27 May) [E/CN.4/Sub.2/AC.5/2006/2], aimed at providing minority participants an opportunity to make observations on the issue. Participants addressed, among other subjects, the root causes of conflict from the perspective of minorities and identified opportunities for their participation in the work of the United Nations and for action by the Organization and Member States to protect them. They adopted concluding observations on those topics and made recommendations concerning the development of a minority profile and matrix for use by the Working Group on Minorities, the independent expert and other UN bodies and mechanisms in identifying the causes of conflicts and assisting in early warning, prevention and resolution initiatives. A number of other recommendations advocated related conflict prevention initiatives.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December [meeting 64], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/60/509], adopted resolution 60/160 without vote [agenda item 71 (b)].

Effective promotion of the Declaration on the Rights of Persons Belonging to National or Ethnic, Religious and Linguistic Minorities

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 47/135 of 18 December 1992, as well as its subsequent resolutions on the Declaration on the Rights of Persons Belonging to National or Ethnic, Religious and Linguistic Minorities,

Noting that the promotion and protection of the rights of persons belonging to national or ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities contributes to political and social stability and peace and enriches the cultural diversity and heritage of society, as reaffirmed in the 2005 World Summit Outcome,

Concerned by the frequency and severity of disputes and conflicts concerning minorities and their often tragic consequences, and concerned also that persons belonging to minorities are particularly vulnerable to displacement,

Recognizing that the effective promotion and protection of the rights of persons belonging to minorities is a fundamental part of the promotion and protection of human rights, and acknowledging that measures in this area can also contribute significantly to conflict prevention,

Emphasizing the role that national institutions can play in early warning for problems regarding minority situations,

Emphasizing also the importance of human rights education as an effective tool to promote an inclusive society and understanding of and tolerance towards and among persons belonging to minorities,

Acknowledging that the United Nations has an important role to play regarding the protection of minorities by, inter alia, taking due account of and giving effect to the Declaration,

Noting that the Working Group on Minorities of the Subcommission on the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights held its tenth and eleventh sessions from 1 to 5 March 2004 and from 30 May to 3 June 2005, respectively,

Noting with appreciation the appointment of the independent expert on minority issues by the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights on 29 July 2005, as requested by the Commission on Human Rights in its resolution 2005/79 of 21 April 2005,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Recognizes that respect for human rights and the promotion of understanding and tolerance by Governments as well as between and among minorities are central to the promotion and protection of the rights of persons belonging to minorities;

3. Reaffirms the obligation of States to ensure that persons belonging to minorities may exercise fully and effectively all human rights and fundamental freedoms without any discrimination and in full equality before the law, as proclaimed in the Declaration on the Rights of Persons Belonging to National or Ethnic, Religious and Linguistic Minorities, and draws attention to the relevant provisions of the Durban Declaration and Programme of Action, including the provisions on forms of multiple discrimination;

4. Encourages States, in their follow-up to the World Conference against Racism, Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia and Related Intolerance, to include aspects relating to minorities in their national plans of action and, in this context, to take forms of multiple discrimination fully into account;

5. Urges States and the international community to promote and protect the rights of persons belonging to national or ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities, as set out in the Declaration, including through the encouragement of conditions for the promotion of their identity, the provision of adequate education and the facilitation of their participation in all aspects of the political, economic, social, religious and cultural life of society and in the economic progress and development of their country, without discrimination, and to apply a gender perspective while doing so;

6. Calls upon States to give special attention to the promotion and protection of the human rights of children belonging to minorities, taking into account that girls and boys may face different types of risks;

7. Urges States to take, as appropriate, all necessary constitutional, legislative, administrative and other measures to promote and give effect to the Declaration, and appeals to States to cooperate bilaterally and multilaterally, in accordance with the Declaration, in order to promote and protect the rights of persons belonging to national or ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities;

8. Calls upon States to take all appropriate measures to protect the cultural and religious sites of national or ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities;

9. Calls upon the Secretary-General to make available, at the request of Governments concerned, qualified expertise on minority issues, including the prevention and resolution of disputes, to assist in existing or potential situations involving minorities;

10. Calls upon the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to promote, within her mandate, the implementation of the Declaration, to continue to engage in a dialogue with Governments for that purpose and to disseminate widely the United Nations Guide for Minorities;

11. Requests the High Commissioner to continue her efforts to improve the coordination and cooperation among United Nations programmes and agencies on activities related to the promotion and protection of the rights of persons belonging to minorities and to take the work of relevant regional organizations active in the field of human rights into account in her endeavours;

12. Welcomes the inter-agency consultation of the High Commissioner with United Nations programmes and agencies on minority issues, and calls upon those programmes and agencies to contribute actively to this process;

13. Encourages intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to continue to contribute to the promotion and protection of the rights of persons belonging to national or ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities;

14. Calls upon the Working Group on Minorities of the Subcommission on the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights to implement fully its mandate, focusing its work on interactive dialogue with relevant non-governmental organizations and on conceptual support of, and dialogue with, the independent expert on minority issues, by recommending, on the basis of its findings, further measures for the promotion and protection of the rights of persons belonging to national or ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities;

15. Invites the High Commissioner to seek voluntary contributions to facilitate the effective participation of representatives of non-governmental organizations and persons belonging to minorities, in particular those from developing countries, in minority-related activities organized by the United Nations, particularly its human rights bodies, and in doing so to give particular attention to ensuring the participation of young people and women;

16. Decides to continue consideration of the question at its sixty-second session under the item entitled "Human rights questions".

Leprosy victims

Note by Secretariat. By a 15 July note [E/CN.4/Sub.2/2005/29], the Secretariat informed the Subcommission that, owing to the late submission of the working paper on discrimination against leprosy victims and their families (see below), which it had requested in 2004 [YUN 2004, p. 705], the paper had been issued only in the language of submission.

Working paper. In response to a 2004 Subcommission request [ibid.], Yozo Yokota (Japan) submitted a 14 July preliminary working paper on discrimination against leprosy victims and their families [E/CN.4/Sub.2/2005/WP.1]. The paper considered the nature of the disease and its human rights dimension and presented case studies of countries where significant improvements had been made in treating leprosy patients and in overcoming related discrimination. The paper also gave an overview of important international conferences on leprosy-related discrimination. It concluded that, although leprosy was curable and modern medical science had proven that it was not transmitted to most people in ordinary human contact, discrimination had persisted against patients and their families owing to the lack of knowledge and mistaken ideas about the disease. Against that background, the forced institutionalization of the victims, often adopted by many countries, was a serious violation of basic human rights and fundamental freedoms, as well as the dignity and security of the person. The report recommended that Governments abolish legislation that required such institutionalization and provide instead, effective, prompt and free treatment and appropriate remedies to those affected. Discrimination of any kind against them should be prohibited and leprosy education included in school curricula to give correct information about the disease and the need to prevent discrimination against afflicted persons. The Subcommission should request the Commission to appoint a Special Rapporteur on leprosy and human rights to facilitate information gathering from Governments, UN bodies and NGOs. Regional seminars should be organized to hear the views and experiences of patients and their families, as well as doctors, social workers, experts, NGOs and Government officials. Efforts should also be made to include an element of effective leprosy education in formulating and implementing the first phase of the World Programme for Human Rights Education (see p. 745).

Subcommission action. On 11 August [res. 2005/24], the Subcommission, welcoming the preliminary working paper on discrimination against leprosy victims, endorsed the conclusions and recommendations contained therein, and the proposal to organize regional seminars on the topic. It decided to appoint Mr. Yokota as Special Rapporteur to prepare a comprehensive study on discrimination against leprosy victims and their families and requested him to enter into dialogue with relevant entities and to submit a preliminary report in 2006, a progress report in 2007 and a final report in 2008.

Discrimination based on work and descent

Commission action. On 19 April [dec. 2005/109], the Commission approved a 2004 decision of the Subcommission [YUN 2004, p. 705] to appoint Yozo Yokota (Japan) and Chin-Sung Chung (Republic of Korea) as Special Rapporteurs on discrimination based on work and descent, with the task of preparing a comprehensive study on the subject, on the basis of three working papers submitted to the Subcommission in 2001 [YUN 2001, p. 625], 2003 [YUN 2003, p. 715] and 2004 [YUN 2004, p. 705]. The Commission also approved the Subcommission's request to the Special Rapporteurs to submit a preliminary report in 2005, a progress report in 2006 and a final report in 2007, and to the Secretary-General and High Commissioner to assist them.

On 25 July, the Economic and Social Council endorsed the Commission's decision to appoint the Special Rapporteurs and approved its requests to them to submit reports (decision 2005/288).

Report of Special Rapporteurs. In response to a 2004 Subcommission request [YUN 2004, p. 705], the Special Rapporteurs on discrimination based on work and descent, Yozo Yokota and Chin-Sung Chung, submitted a preliminary report [E/CN.4/Sub.2/2005/30] focusing on the elaboration of a questionnaire to Governments, national human rights institutions, NGOs and UN organs and agencies, for the purpose of identifying best practices and to gather comprehensive information regarding constitutional, legislative, judicial, administrative and educational measures taken to address discrimination based on work and descent. The Special Rapporteurs recommended that the Subcommission approve the questionnaire, which was annexed to the report, and that it endorse the proposal to hold in 2006 a general consultation and two regional workshops in Asia and Africa.

Subcommission action. On 11 August [res. 2005/22], the Subcommission approved the Special Rapporteurs' proposal to send the questionnaire to Governments, national human rights institutions, relevant UN bodies and specialized agencies and NGOs, and requested recipients to respond in a timely and constructive manner. It also endorsed their proposal to hold a general consultation in Geneva in 2006 and to organize two regional workshops. The Subcommission asked the Special Rapporteurs to reflect the results of the questionnaire, the consultation and workshops in the progress report to be submitted in 2006, and to continue drafting the principles and guidelines for the effective elimination of discrimination based on work and descent. The Secretary-General and the High Commissioner were requested to assist them.

Non-discrimination

Commission action. On 15 April [dec. 2005/105], the Commission approved a 2004 decision of the Subcommission [YUN 2004, p. 706] to appoint Marc Bossuyt (Belgium) as Special Rapporteur on non-discrimination as enshrined in article 2, paragraph 2, of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 2200 A (XXI) [YUN 1966, p. 419]. It also approved the request that he submit a preliminary report in 2005, a progress report in 2006 and a final report in 2007, and the request to the Secretary-General to assist him.

By decision 2005/284 of 25 July, the Economic and Social Council endorsed the Commission's decision to appoint Marc Bossuyt as the Special Rapporteur and its request that Mr. Bossuyt submit reports. The Council also approved the Commission's request to the Secretary-General to assist him.

Report of Special Rapporteur. The Special Rapporteur on non-discrimination as enshrined in article 2, paragraph 2 of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, Marc Bossuyt, submitted a June preliminary report [E/CN.4/Sub.2/2005/19 & Corr.1, 2] on the topic.

The report reviewed academic writings on the nature of economic, social and cultural rights, distinguishing between rights that required no action by the State and those that required active State intervention. The report noted that, although the mechanisms for implementing those rights and obligations differed, both categories of rights were equally important, and that the lack of respect for any right had a detrimental effect on other rights. The rights contained in the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, such as the right to education and the freedom of education, contained elements of both sets of rights. However, while the prohibition on discrimination was applicable to all human rights, it had more far-reaching effects regarding rights that carried positive obligations. The progress and final reports of the Special Rapporteur would consider the elements that would allow the determination of a violation of the prohibition on discrimination with respect to economic, social and cultural rights.

Subcommission action. On 8 August [res. 2005/7], the Subcommission asked the Special Rapporteur to submit an interim report in 2006 and a final report in 2007, and the Secretary-General to assist him.

Religious intolerance

Report of Special Rapporteur. In her first annual report to the Commission [E/CN.4/2005/61 & Corr.1], the Special Rapporteur on freedom of religion and belief, Asma Jahangir (Pakistan), reviewed her activities, analysed particular situations involving violations of the freedom of religion and provided observations on a number of relevant issues. Noting that the twenty-first century posed new challenges for her mandate, such as the use of religious beliefs for political purposes and the increasing negative stereotyping of some religions, the Special Rapporteur undertook activities pertaining to the principles of protection and prevention, which played a crucial role in challenging religious intolerance. Most of the violations she addressed also infringed on other human rights, including the rights to life, not to be subjected to torture and other inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, to liberty and security of the person, to freedom of movement and association, and to freedom of opinion and expression. Other violations occurred within the context of interreligious violence, the issue of forced conversion, attacks and restrictions against places of worship, religious buildings and property, and the banning of religious publications. The Special Rapporteur also considered a number of other issues relevant to her mandate, including the procedure for the registration of religious communities, anti-terrorism legislation, the categorization of religions, religious symbols, and the relationship between the freedoms of religion and of expression. She concluded that a large number of people worldwide suffered limitations to their right to the freedom of religion or belief, and that the September 2001 terrorist attacks in the United States [YUN 2001, p. 60] continued to have a dramatic impact in that regard. Of particular concern was that States continued to adopt legislation and measures establishing a confusing and misleading link between certain religions and terrorism, which affected those whose religion or belief was targeted. Also of major concern was the widely applied practice of forced conversions, mostly by non-State actors, which, the Special Rapporteur observed, breached the most fundamental part of freedom of religion. She stressed, in that context, that States had an obligation to protect and remedy the situation of those who had suffered religious intolerance and to bring perpetrators to justice. Governments needed to pay more attention to protecting religious sites, buildings and shrines from increasing acts of desecration by non-State actors.

In a March addendum [E/CN.4/2005/61/Add.1] to the report, the Special Rapporteur summarized 69 communications she had sent to 42 States and the replies received from 28 of them, regarding violations and governmental action that was inconsistent with the provisions of the 1981 Declaration on the Elimination of All Forms of Intolerance and of Discrimination based on Religion or Belief, adopted in General Assembly resolution 36/55 [YUN 1981, p. 881].

Report of High Commissioner. In response to a 2004 Commission request [YUN 2004, p. 706], the High Commissioner submitted a February report [E/CN.4/2005/15] summarizing the activities undertaken by the United Nations, intergovernmental bodies, human rights mechanisms, specialized agencies and programmes, including OHCHR, to support intercultural dialogue, respect and tolerance. The High Commissioner noted that, although many steps had been taken to counter religious intolerance, which she described as one of the basic evils of history, there were increasing and serious instances of discrimination on the grounds of religion or belief, and defamation of religions was one of its most aggressive manifestations. Further efforts needed to be made to counter the problem by strategizing and harmonizing action at the local, country, regional and international levels, and education systems and awareness-raising should play a decisive role in such strategies. Fostering a culture of respect should also be accompanied by adequate legislative and administrative measures to specifically counter discrimination and intolerance in all spheres of life.

Commission action. On 12 April [res. 2005/3], the Commission, by a recorded vote of 31 to 16, with 5 abstentions, called on the High Commissioner to promote and include human rights aspects in the dialogue among civilizations, by integrating them into topical seminars and special debates on the positive contributions of cultures and religious and cultural diversity, to hold joint conferences with other international organizations to promote understanding of the universality of human rights and their implementation, and to report in 2006.

On 19 April [res. 2005/40], the Commission urged States to guarantee freedom of thought, conscience, religion and belief and to combat hatred, intolerance and acts of violence based on religion or belief, particularly with regard to religious minorities. It stressed the need for international and regional organizations, as well as civil society groups and relevant parts of the UN system, to strengthen dialogue by revitalizing the Global Agenda for Dialogue among Civilizations, proclaimed by the General Assembly in resolution 56/6 [YUN 2001, p. 1014], and asked the Special Rapporteur to report to the General Assembly in 2005 and to the Commission in 2006.

Further reports of Special Rapporteur. At the invitation of the Government, the Special Rapporteur visited Nigeria (27 February–7 March) [E/CN.4/2006/5/Add.2, E/CN.4/2005/61/Add.2], where pre-existing tensions and lack of understanding between the predominant Muslim and Christian populations had flared up yet again. In particular, the adoption in parts of northern Nigeria of criminal law based on sharia codes (Muslim law governing acts of worship and human interaction, which prescribed punishments for offences pronounced therein, including a mandatory death penalty for extra-marital relations and rape, among other crimes) had provoked negative reactions from non-Muslim communities. Although only Muslims were subject to the sharia penal codes, many Christians and Muslims had complained that the interpretation and/or method of implementing those codes were either not acceptable or violated their right to freedom of religion or belief. A major concern in that regard was the climate of fear created by the associated religious tensions and violence, to which thousands of Nigerians had lost their lives in recent years. While economic, political and other factors had contributed to such tension, the consequent polarization often manifested along religious lines. An especially alarming development in the implementation of the sharia system was the institutionalization of enforcement bodies known as Hisbah, composed of young, untrained Muslim civilians charged with enforcing the principles of Islam and whose activities had resulted in violent and arbitrary human rights violations against non-Muslim women. Other violations were being perpetrated by non-State actors or as a result of the lack of appropriate Government measures to protect the people. Against that background, the Special Rapporteur determined that the level of enjoyment of the right to freedom of religion or belief in Nigeria was not satisfactory and recommended that the Government adopt a more careful approach in supporting any religious community in the country, refrain from interfering with religious matters that did not endanger human rights, act firmly whenever human rights violations were religion-related, and further strengthen inter-religious dialogue. Regarding the sharia penal codes, the Government should respect international human rights instruments to which it was party, end the practice of Hisbah and ensure that the citizens enjoyed freedom of religion and of expression, by allowing them to express dissent within their religion, without fear of retaliation or threat. To better tackle religious tensions and communal violence, the Government should strengthen early warning mechanisms, protect religious groups that might be targeted and ensure that justice was dispensed promptly and properly.

In Sri Lanka (2-12 May) [E/CN.4/2006/5/Add.3], the Special Rapporteur examined the situation of freedom of religion or belief in the light of reports of attacks against certain religious groups, acts of unethical conversions and the introduction of draft laws criminalizing those acts. She found that, although the Government respected freedom of religion or belief, religious tolerance and harmony among religious groups in the country had declined, and the greatest tension existed between the Buddhist community and certain Christian groups there. Of particular concern was the alleged proselytising behaviour of some Christians groups, often referred to as fundamentalists, who appeared in the country in recent decades and whose reportedly unethical attempts to convert other faiths within the country, mostly the Buddhists and members of the Hindu community, had been described as unwelcome interference and a new form of colonialism. Reports reaching the Special Rapporteur alleged that the fundamentalist groups influenced people into changing religions by promising such material benefits as food, medicine, bicycles, housing, or assistance with securing a job, which many Sri Lankans considered an abuse or manipulation of the most vulnerable sections of the population. The phenomenon became more prominent within the context of the humanitarian activities of some foreign NGOs, following the December 2004 tsunami [YUN 2004, p. 952]. The resulting tension and related violence, including the destruction or desecration of religious symbols, encouraged the adoption of a draft legislation criminalizing unethical conversions. Against that background, the Special Rapporteur, while acknowledging periods of a high level of religious harmony in Sri Lanka, concluded that the deterioration in recent years of religious tolerance in the country and the lack of appropriate Government action had brought respect for freedom of religion or belief to an unsatisfactory level. She recommended that the Government effectively combat the persecution of religious minorities by investigating all acts of violence or religious intolerance and ensuring prompt justice and appropriate compensation to the victims. Rather than going ahead with its draft legislation against unethical conversion, which was incompatible with human rights law, the Government should implement existing criminal legal provisions that could appropriately address the behaviour of religious groups and organizations. It should, in addition, consider mechanisms to enable it to better deal with religious tension, including seeking the assistance of UN agencies and civil society in exploring possible models for the creation of an interreligious body that could help diffuse such tension.

In France (18-29 September) [E/CN.4/2006/5/Add.4], the Special Rapporteur focused on a 2004 legislation prohibiting the wearing of conspicuous religious symbols in public schools and on the situation of cult groups and certain religious movements or communities (sectes). While noting the country's recognition of the principle of the separation of Church and State and the Government's respect for the right to freedom of religion or belief, a number of concerns remained, including the selective interpretation in some circumstances of that principle, which undermined the freedom of religion. Regarding the law against the wearing of conspicuous religious symbols, which was supported by the authorities and the population, and which was intended to apply to all persons, the Special Rapporteur found that certain religious minorities, notably Muslims, were mainly affected. The law was appropriate insofar as it was intended, in accordance with the principle of the best interest of the child, to protect the autonomy of minors who might be pressured or forced to wear a headscarf or other religious symbols. However, the law denied the right of those minors who had freely chosen to wear a religious symbol to school as part of their religious belief. In a number of cases, the implementation of the law by educational institutions had led to abuses and humiliation of young Muslim women especially. Considering the situation of cult groups, which were allegedly responsible for a variety of serious human rights violations, including the infringement of physical integrity, sequestration, failure to assist a person in danger or exposed to illegal medical practices, defamation and violations of labour or social law, the Special Rapporteur determined that the policy and measures adopted by the authorities to deal with the problem had provoked situations that curtailed the right to freedom of religion or belief of members of those groups. The Special Rapporteur recommended a flexible implementation of the law banning the wearing of conspicuous religious symbols, in order to accommodate school children for whom the display of such symbols constituted an essential part of their faith. The Government should promptly provide redress for victims of discrimination or other act of religious intolerance, owing to their religious symbols, and ensure that its mechanisms for dealing with cult groups and related religious communities delivered a message based on tolerance, freedom of religion or belief and due process. Additional recommendations addressed acts of religious intolerance against the Jewish community in France and the freedom of religion or belief of persons deprived of their liberties.

By a September note [A/60/399], the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly a report of the Special Rapporteur, which highlighted aspects of her mandate, updated information on the status of communications sent to Governments over the past year and drew attention to the importance of cooperation between the Commission's special procedures and of the preventative and early warning aspects of the mandate. Of particular concern to the Special Rapporteur was the unsatisfactory level of cooperation she received from States during in situ visits, and encouraged the creation of a mechanism to deal more systematically with countries that fell within that category. Other issues of concern related to the right to choose, change or maintain a religion and the freedom of religion or belief of persons deprived of their liberty. Stressing that the right to adopt a religion of one's choice was a core element of the freedom of religion and should not be limited in any way, the Special Rapporteur stated that States had an obligation to protect that right, especially when threatened by non-State actors. She also recommended that freedom of religion receive more emphasis in the training of the personnel of detention facilities and other places where people were deprived of their liberty.

On 16 December, the Assembly took note of the Special Rapporteur's report (decision 60/533).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December [meeting 64], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/60/509], adopted resolution 60/150 by recorded vote (101-53-20) [agenda item 71 (b)].

Combating defamation of religions

The General Assembly,

Recalling that all States have pledged themselves, under the Charter of the United Nations, to promote and encourage universal respect for and observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion,

Recalling also the relevant resolutions of the Commission on Human Rights in this regard,

Recalling further the United Nations Millennium Declaration adopted by the General Assembly on 8 September 2000, welcoming the resolve expressed in the Millennium Declaration to take measures to eliminate the increasing acts of racism and xenophobia in many societies and to promote greater harmony and tolerance in all societies, and looking forward to its effective implementation at all levels, including in the context of the Durban Declaration and Programme of Action adopted by the World Conference against Racism, Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia and Related Intolerance, held in Durban, South Africa, from 31 August to 8 September 2001,

Recalling the proclamation of the Global Agenda for Dialogue among Civilizations, and inviting States, the organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, within existing resources, other international and regional organizations and civil societies to contribute to the implementation of the Programme of Action contained in the Global Agenda,

Welcoming the progress achieved in the follow-up to the Durban Declaration and Programme of Action,

Noting with regret the cancellation of the meeting on the theme "Civilization and harmony: values and mechanisms of the global order", which was to be held in Istanbul, Turkey, in 2004 as a follow-up to the Organization of the Islamic Conference-European Union joint forum on the theme "Civilization and harmony: the political dimension", held in Istanbul on 12 and 13 February 2002, and underscoring the fact that such initiatives to deepen dialogue and reinforce understanding between the two biggest groups of nations of Eurasia and Africa will be continued,

Reaffirming that discrimination against human beings on the grounds of religion or belief constitutes an affront to human dignity and a disavowal of the principles of the Charter,

Convinced that religious and cultural diversity in a globalizing world needs to be used as a vehicle for creativity, dynamism and the promotion of social justice, tolerance and understanding, as well as international peace and security, and not as a rationale for a new ideological and political confrontation,

Recognizing the valuable contributions of all religions to modern civilization and the contribution that dialogue among civilizations can make to an improved awareness and understanding of the common values shared by all humankind,

Reaffirming that cultural diversity is a cherished asset for the advancement and welfare of humanity at large and should be valued, enjoyed, genuinely accepted and embraced as a permanent feature that enriches our societies,

Emphasizing that States, non-governmental organizations, religious bodies and the media have an important role to play in promoting tolerance and freedom of religion and belief, in particular through education that teaches tolerance and respect for religion and belief,

Alarmed at the continuing negative impact of the events of 11 September 2001 on Muslim minorities and communities in some non-Muslim countries, the negative projection of Islam in the media and the introduction and enforcement of laws that specifically discriminate against and target Muslims,

Alarmed also at the serious instances of intolerance, discrimination and acts of violence based on religion or belief, intimidation and coercion motivated by extremism, religious or otherwise, occurring in many parts of the world and threatening the enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Noting with concern that defamation of religions is among the causes of social disharmony and leads to violations of human rights,

Noting with deep concern the increasing trend in recent years of statements attacking religions, Islam and Muslims in particular, especially in human rights forums,

1. Expresses deep concern at the negative stereotyping of religions and manifestations of intolerance and discrimination in matters of religion or belief still in evidence in some regions of the world;

2. Strongly deplores physical attacks and assaults on businesses, cultural centres and places of worship of all religions as well as targeting of religious symbols;

3. Notes with deep concern the intensification of the campaign of defamation of religions and the ethnic and religious profiling of Muslim minorities in the aftermath of the tragic events of 11 September 2001;

4. Expresses its deep concern that Islam is frequently and wrongly associated with human rights violations and terrorism;

5. Also expresses its deep concern at programmes and agendas pursued by extremist organizations and groups aimed at the defamation of religions, in particular when supported by Governments;

6. Deplores the use of the print, audio-visual and electronic media, including the Internet, and any other means to incite acts of violence, xenophobia or related intolerance and discrimination against Islam or any other religion;

7. Recognizes that, in the context of the fight against terrorism and the reaction to counter-terrorism measures, defamation of religions becomes an aggravating factor that contributes to the denial of fundamental rights and freedoms of target groups, as well as their economic and social exclusion;

8. Stresses the need to effectively combat defamation of all religions, Islam and Muslims in particular, especially in human rights forums;

9. Urges States to take resolute action to prohibit the dissemination through political institutions and organizations of racist and xenophobic ideas and material aimed at any religion or its followers that constitute incitement to discrimination, hostility or violence;

10. Also urges States to provide, within their respective legal and constitutional systems, adequate protection against acts of hatred, discrimination, intimidation and coercion resulting from defamation of religions, to take all possible measures to promote tolerance and respect for all religions and their value systems and to complement legal systems with intellectual and moral strategies to combat religious hatred and intolerance;

11. Urges all States to ensure that all public officials, including members of law enforcement bodies, the military, civil servants and educators, in the course of their official duties, respect different religions and beliefs and do not discriminate on the grounds of religion or belief, and that necessary and appropriate education or training is provided;

12. Underscores the need to combat defamation of religions by strategizing and harmonizing actions at the local, national, regional and international levels through education and awareness-raising;

13. Urges States to ensure equal access to education for all, in law and in practice, including access to free primary education for all children, both girls and boys, and access for adults to lifelong learning and education based on respect for human rights, diversity and tolerance, without discrimination of any kind, and to refrain from any legal or other measures leading to racial segregation in access to schooling;

14. Calls upon the international community to initiate a global dialogue to promote a culture of tolerance and peace based on respect for human rights and religious diversity, and urges States, non-governmental organizations, religious bodies and the print and electronic media to support and promote such a dialogue;

15. Calls upon the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to promote and include human rights aspects in the dialogue among civilizations, inter alia, through:

(a) Integrating them into topical seminars and special debates on the positive contributions of cultures, as well as religious and cultural diversity, including through educational programmes, particularly the World Programme for Human Rights Education proclaimed on 10 December 2004;

(b) Collaboration by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights with other relevant international organizations in holding joint conferences designed to encourage this dialogue and promote understanding of the universality of human rights and their implementation at various levels;

16. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report on the implementation of the present resolution to the General Assembly at its sixty-first session.

RECORDED VOTE ON RESOLUTION 60/150:

In favour: Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Azerbaijan, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belarus, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Burkina Faso, Cambodia, Cameroon, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Djibouti, Dominica, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Eritrea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Gabon, Gambia, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Jamaica, Jordan, Kazakhstan, Kuwait, Kyrgyzstan, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Mauritius, Mexico, Morocco, Mozambique, Myanmar, Nicaragua, Niger, Oman, Pakistan, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Qatar, Russian Federation, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Singapore, Somalia, South Africa, Sudan, Suriname, Syrian Arab Republic, Tajikistan, Thailand, Timor-Leste, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Turkmenistan, Uganda, United Arab Emirates, Uruguay, Uzbekistan, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Zimbabwe.

Against: Albania, Andorra, Australia, Austria, Belgium, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Bulgaria, Canada, Croatia, Cyprus, Czech Republic, Denmark, Estonia, Finland, France, Georgia, Germany, Greece, Hungary, Iceland, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Japan, Latvia, Liechtenstein, Lithuania, Luxembourg, Malta, Marshall Islands, Mauritania, Micronesia, Monaco, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Palau, Poland, Portugal, Republic of Moldova, Romania, Samoa, San Marino, Serbia and Montenegro, Slovakia, Slovenia, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland, The former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Ukraine, United Kingdom, United States.

Also on 16 December [meeting 64], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/60/509], adopted resolution 60/166 without vote [agenda item 71 (b)].

Elimination of all forms of intolerance and of discrimination based on religion or belief

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 36/55 of 25 November 1981, by which it proclaimed the Declaration on the Elimination of All Forms of Intolerance and of Discrimination Based on Religion or Belief,

Recalling also article 18 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, article 18 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and other relevant human rights provisions,

Reaffirming the call of the World Conference on Human Rights upon all Governments to take all appropriate measures in compliance with their international obligations and with due regard to their respective legal systems to counter intolerance and related violence based on religion or belief, including practices of discrimination against women and the desecration of religious sites, recognizing that every individual has the right to freedom of thought, conscience, expression and religion,

Reaffirming also the recognition by the World Conference on Human Rights that all human rights are universal, indivisible, interdependent and interrelated,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 56/6 of 9 November 2001 on the Global Agenda for Dialogue among Civilizations, in which the Assembly recognized the valuable contribution that dialogue among civilizations could make to an improved awareness and understanding of the common values shared by all humankind,

Acknowledging that in order to be effective, such a dialogue should be based on respect for the dignity of adherents of religions and beliefs, as well as respect for diversity and the universal promotion and protection of human rights,

Considering that religion or belief, for those who profess either, is one of the fundamental elements in their conception of life and that freedom of religion or belief should be fully respected and guaranteed,

Considering also that the disregard for and infringement of human rights and fundamental freedoms, in particular the right to freedom of thought, conscience, religion or belief, have brought, directly or indirectly, wars and great suffering to humankind,

Recognizing the importance of promoting dialogue among civilizations in order to enhance mutual understanding and knowledge among different social groups, cultures and civilizations in various areas, including culture, religion, education, information, science and technology, and in order to contribute to the promotion and protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Recalling Commission on Human Rights resolution 2005/40 of 19 April 2005 on the elimination of all forms of intolerance and of discrimination based on religion or belief,

Seriously concerned at all attacks upon religious places, sites and shrines, including any deliberate destruction of relics and monuments,

Seriously concerned also at the misuse of registration procedures as a means to limit the right to freedom of religion or belief of members of certain religious communities and at the limitations placed on religious publications,

Recognizing the important work carried out by the Human Rights Committee in providing guidance with respect to the scope of the freedom of religion or belief,

Convinced of the need to address, for instance, in the context of the Global Agenda for Dialogue among Civilizations the rise in all parts of the world of religious extremism affecting the rights of individuals and groups based on religion or belief, the situations of violence and discrimination that affect many women as a result of religion or belief and the abuse of religion or belief for ends inconsistent with the Charter of the United Nations and other relevant instruments of the United Nations,

Resolved to adopt all necessary and appropriate measures for the speedy elimination of such intolerance based on religion or belief in all its forms and manifestations and to prevent and combat discrimination based on religion or belief,

Noting that a formal or legal distinction at the national level between different kinds of religions or faith-based communities may, in some cases, constitute discrimination and may impinge on the enjoyment of the freedom of religion or belief,

Underlining the importance of education in the promotion of tolerance which involves the acceptance by the public of, and its respect for, diversity, including with regard to religious expressions, and underlining also the fact that education, in particular at school, should contribute in a meaningful way to promoting tolerance and the elimination of discrimination based on religion or belief,

Recalling the importance of the International Consultative Conference on School Education in relation to Freedom of Religion or Belief, Tolerance and Non-Discrimination, held in Madrid from 23 to 25 November 2001, and continuing to invite Governments to give consideration to the Final Document adopted at the Conference,

Emphasizing that States, regional organizations, non-governmental organizations, religious bodies and the media have an important role to play in promoting tolerance, respect and freedom of religion or belief,

Recognizing the importance of interreligious and intrareligious dialogue and the role of religious and other non-governmental organizations in promoting tolerance in matters relating to religion or belief,

Believing that further intensified efforts are therefore required to promote and protect the right to freedom of thought, conscience, religion or belief and to eliminate all forms of hatred, intolerance and discrimination based on religion or belief, as also noted at the World Conference against Racism, Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia and Related Intolerance,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the work and the report of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on freedom of religion or belief;

2. Condemns all forms of intolerance and of discrimination based on religion or belief;

3. Encourages the efforts made by the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to coordinate in the field of human rights the activities of relevant United Nations organs, bodies and mechanisms dealing with all forms of intolerance and of discrimination based on religion or belief;

4. Urges States:

(a) To ensure that their constitutional and legislative systems provide adequate and effective guarantees of freedom of thought, conscience, religion and belief to all without distinction, inter alia, by the provision of effective remedies in cases where the right to freedom of thought, conscience, religion or belief, or the right to practise freely one's religion, including the right to change one's religion or belief, is violated;

(b) To exert the utmost efforts, in accordance with their national legislation and in conformity with international human rights law, to ensure that religious places, sites, shrines and religious symbols are fully respected and protected and to take additional measures in cases where they are vulnerable to desecration or destruction;

(c) To review, whenever relevant, existing registration practices in order to ensure the right of all persons to manifest their religion or belief, alone or in community with others and in public or in private;

(d) To ensure, in particular, the right of all persons to worship or assemble in connection with a religion or belief and to establish and maintain places for these purposes and the right of all persons to write, issue and disseminate relevant publications in these areas;

(e) To ensure that, in accordance with appropriate national legislation and in conformity with international human rights law, the freedom of all persons and members of groups to establish and maintain religious, charitable or humanitarian institutions is fully respected and protected;

(f) To ensure that no one within their jurisdiction is deprived of the right to life, liberty or security of person because of religion or belief and that no one is subjected to torture or arbitrary arrest or detention on that account and to bring to justice all perpetrators of violations of these rights;

(g) To ensure that all public officials and civil servants, including members of law enforcement bodies, the military and educators, in the course of their official duties, respect different religions and beliefs and do not discriminate on the grounds of religion or belief, and that all necessary and appropriate education or training is provided;

5. Recognizes with deep concern the overall rise in instances of intolerance and violence directed against members of many religious and other communities in various parts of the world, including cases motivated by Islamophobia, anti-Semitism and Christianophobia;

6. Expresses concern over the persistence of institutionalized social intolerance and discrimination practised against many in the name of religion or belief;

7. Condemns any advocacy of religious hatred that constitutes incitement to discrimination, hostility or violence, whether it involves the use of print, audiovisual and electronic media or any other means;

8. Stresses the need to strengthen dialogue, inter alia, by revitalizing the Global Agenda for Dialogue among Civilizations;

9. Invites States, the Special Rapporteur, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and other relevant entities of the United Nations system, such as the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, and other international and regional organizations and civil society to consider promoting dialogue among civilizations in order to contribute to the elimination of intolerance and discrimination based on religion or belief, inter alia, by addressing the following issues within the framework of international standards of human rights:

(a) The rise of religious extremism affecting religions in all parts of the world;

(b) The situations of violence and discrimination that affect many women as a result of religion or belief;

(c) The use of religion or belief for ends inconsistent with the Charter of the United Nations and other relevant instruments of the United Nations;

10. Urges States to step up their efforts to eliminate intolerance and discrimination based on religion or belief, notably by:

(a) Taking all necessary and appropriate action, in conformity with international standards of human rights, to combat hatred, intolerance and acts of violence, intimidation and coercion motivated by intolerance based on religion or belief, as well as incitement to hostility and violence, with particular regard to religious minorities, and devoting particular attention to practices that violate the human rights of women and discriminate against women, including in the exercise of their right to freedom of thought, conscience, religion or belief;

(b) Promoting and encouraging, through education and other means, understanding, tolerance and respect in all matters relating to freedom of religion or belief;

(c) Undertaking all appropriate efforts to encourage those engaged in teaching to cultivate respect for all religions or beliefs, thereby promoting mutual understanding and tolerance;

11. Invites Governments, religious bodies and civil society to continue to undertake dialogue at all levels to promote greater tolerance, respect and understanding;

12. Emphasizes the importance of a continued and strengthened dialogue among and within religions or beliefs, including as encompassed in the dialogue among civilizations, to promote greater tolerance, respect and mutual understanding;

13. Also emphasizes that equating any religion with terrorism should be avoided, as this may have adverse consequences on the enjoyment of the right to freedom of religion or belief of all members of the religious communities concerned;

14. Further emphasizes that, as underlined by the Human Rights Committee, restrictions on the freedom to manifest religion or belief are permitted only if limitations are prescribed by law, are necessary to protect public safety, order, health or morals, or the fundamental rights and freedoms of others, and are applied in a manner that does not vitiate the right to freedom of thought, conscience and religion;

15. Encourages the continuing efforts in all parts of the world of the Special Rapporteur to examine incidents and governmental actions that are incompatible with the provisions of the Declaration on the Elimination of All Forms of Intolerance and of Discrimination Based on Religion or Belief and to recommend remedial measures, as appropriate;

16. Stresses the need for the Special Rapporteur to continue to apply a gender perspective, inter alia, through the identification of gender-specific abuses, in the reporting process, including in information collection and in recommendations;

17. Welcomes and encourages the continuing efforts of all actors in society, including non-governmental organizations and bodies and groups based on religion or belief, to promote the implementation of the Declaration, and further encourages their work in promoting freedom of religion or belief and in highlighting cases of religious intolerance, discrimination and persecution;

18. Recommends that the United Nations and other actors, in their efforts to promote freedom of religion or belief, ensure the widest possible dissemination of the text of the Declaration in as many different languages as possible by United Nations information centres and by other interested bodies;

19. Decides to continue its consideration of measures to implement the Declaration;

20. Welcomes the work of the Special Rapporteur and urges all Governments to cooperate fully with the Special Rapporteur and to respond favourably to her requests to visit their countries and to provide her with all necessary information so as to enable her to fulfil her mandate even more effectively;

21. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure that the Special Rapporteur receives the necessary resources to enable her to discharge her mandate fully;

22. Requests the Special Rapporteur to submit an interim report to the General Assembly at its sixty-first session;

23. Decides to consider the question of the elimination of all forms of religious intolerance at its sixty-first session under the item entitled "Human rights questions".

Civil and political rights

Right to self-determination

Report of the Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 59/180 [YUN 2004,

p. 709], the Secretary-General submitted an August report [A/60/268] summarizing Commission discussions on human rights violations, particularly regarding the right to self-determination, as well as relevant principles from the jurisprudence of the Human Rights Committee (see p. 726), the expert body monitoring the implementation of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights by the States parties.

Communication. On 21 May [E/CN.4/2005/G/23], Armenia alleged that Azerbaijan had violated the right to self-determination of the Nagorny Karabakh territory in the Caucus region (see p. 490), by annulling its autonomous status without its peoples' consent and by refusing to yield the territory. That action violated article 1 of the UN Charter, which recognized the equal rights and self-determination of peoples.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December [meeting 64], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/60/508], adopted resolution 60/145 without vote [agenda item 70].

Universal realization of the right of peoples to self-determination

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the importance, for the effective guarantee and observance of human rights, of the universal realization of the right of peoples to self-determination enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations and embodied in the International Covenants on Human Rights, as well as in the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples contained in General Assembly resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960,

Welcoming the progressive exercise of the right to self-determination by peoples under colonial, foreign or alien occupation and their emergence into sovereign statehood and independence,

Deeply concerned at the continuation of acts or threats of foreign military intervention and occupation that are threatening to suppress, or have already suppressed, the right to self-determination of peoples and nations,

Expressing grave concern that, as a consequence of the persistence of such actions, millions of people have been and are being uprooted from their homes as refugees and displaced persons, and emphasizing the urgent need for concerted international action to alleviate their condition,

Recalling the relevant resolutions regarding the violation of the right of peoples to self-determination and other human rights as a result of foreign military intervention, aggression and occupation, adopted by the Commission on Human Rights at its sixty-first and previous sessions,

Reaffirming its previous resolutions on the universal realization of the right of peoples to self-determination, including resolution 59/180 of 20 December 2004,

Reaffirming also its resolution 55/2 of 8 September 2000, containing the United Nations Millennium Declaration, and recalling its resolution 60/1 of 16 September 2005, containing the 2005 World Summit Outcome, which, inter alia, upheld the right to self-determination of peoples under colonial domination and foreign occupation,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the right of peoples to self-determination,

1. Reaffirms that the universal realization of the right of all peoples, including those under colonial, foreign and alien domination, to self-determination is a fundamental condition for the effective guarantee and observance of human rights and for the preservation and promotion of such rights;

2. Declares its firm opposition to acts of foreign military intervention, aggression and occupation, since these have resulted in the suppression of the right of peoples to self-determination and other human rights in certain parts of the world;

3. Calls upon those States responsible to cease immediately their military intervention in and occupation of foreign countries and territories and all acts of repression, discrimination, exploitation and maltreatment, in particular the brutal and inhuman methods reportedly employed for the execution of those acts against the peoples concerned;

4. Deplores the plight of millions of refugees and displaced persons who have been uprooted as a result of the aforementioned acts, and reaffirms their right to return to their homes voluntarily in safety and honour;

5. Requests the Commission on Human Rights to continue to give special attention to the violation of human rights, especially the right to self-determination, resulting from foreign military intervention, aggression or occupation;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to report on the question to the General Assembly at its sixty-first session under the item entitled "Right of peoples to self-determination".

Right of Palestinians

By a recorded vote of 49 to 1, with 2 abstentions, the Commission, on 7 April [res. 2005/1], reaffirming the inalienable right of the Palestinian people to self-determination, urged Member States and relevant UN system bodies to support and assist them in the early realization of that right.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December [meeting 64], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/60/508], adopted resolution 60/146 by recorded vote (170-5-1) [agenda item 70].

The right of the Palestinian people to self-determination

The General Assembly,

Aware that the development of friendly relations among nations, based on respect for the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples, is among the purposes and principles of the United Nations, as defined in the Charter,

Recalling, in this regard, its resolution 2625(XXV) of 24 October 1970 entitled "Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Cooperation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations",

Bearing in mind the International Covenants on Human Rights, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action adopted at the World Conference on Human Rights on 25 June 1993,

Recalling the Declaration on the Occasion of the Fiftieth Anniversary of the United Nations,

Recalling also the United Nations Millennium Declaration,

Recalling further the advisory opinion rendered on 9 July 2004 by the International Court of Justice on the Legal Consequences of the Construction of a Wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, and noting in particular the reply of the Court, including on the right of peoples to self-determination, which is a right erga omnes,

Recalling the conclusion of the Court, in its advisory opinion of 9 July 2004, that the construction of the wall by Israel, the occupying Power, in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, along with measures previously taken, severely impedes the right of the Palestinian people to self-determination,

Expressing the urgent need for the resumption of negotiations within the Middle East peace process on its agreed basis and for the speedy achievement of a final settlement between the Palestinian and Israeli sides,

Recalling its resolution 59/179 of 20 December 2004,

Affirming the right of all States in the region to live in peace within secure and internationally recognized borders,

1. Reaffirms the right of the Palestinian people to self-determination, including the right to their independent State of Palestine;

2. Urges all States and the specialized agencies and organizations of the United Nations system to continue to support and assist the Palestinian people in the early realization of their right to self-determination.

RECORDED VOTE ON RESOLUTION 60/146:

Against: Israel, Marshall Islands, Micronesia, Palau, United States.

Abstaining: Australia.

Western Sahara

On 7 April [E/2005/23], the Commission agreed by consensus to defer its consideration of the question of Western Sahara to its sixty-second (2006) session.

Mercenaries

Report of Special Rapporteur. In response to a 2004 Commission request [YUN 2004, p. 711], the Special Rapporteur on the question of the use of mercenaries, Shaista Shameem (Fiji), in her first report [E/CN.4/2005/14] to the Commission, summarized replies from Governments regarding a proposal for the legal definition of mercenaries contained in the final report of her predecessor in 2004 [YUN 2004, p. 711], described developments in mercenary activities in Africa and discussed the impact of the activities of private companies offering military assistance, consultancy and security services on the international market. The report also highlighted the distinction between mercenary and terrorist activities, examined the current status of the Convention Against the Recruitment, Use, Financing and Training of Mercenaries (see p. 789), and considered the outcome of the third expert meeting on mercenaries [ibid., p. 712]. Reflecting on the arrest and trial of many of the suspected mercenaries implicated in the alleged attempt to overthrow the democratically elected Government of Equatorial Guinea [ibid., p. 232], the Special Rapporteur, while noting concerns over claims of violations of the defendants' rights, advocated that the legal proceedings be pursued in a manner consistent with legal and human rights standards. Noting regional initiatives for the repatriation of former combatants in Liberia and Sierra Leone, she pointed out that in post-conflict situations, such initiatives and related training efforts would help reduce the pool of foreign ex-combatants from which mercenaries were often recruited for armed conflicts in other countries. The Special Rapporteur also noted that the proliferation in the last decade of international private military companies associated with mercenary activity, which were operating in over 50 countries around the world, had outstripped the effectiveness of existing legal framework and enforcement mechanisms for addressing the problem. The Special Rapporteur emphasized that the nature and the degree of accountability of those organizations and their employees were uncertain. She cited the involvement of private military contractors in the alleged abuse of Iraqi prisoners at the United States-run Abu Ghraib prison [ibid., p. 346], pointing out that neither the United States jurisdiction of military law nor Iraqi law could be applied in investigating those incidents. In her recommendations, the Special Rapporteur said there was a need to examine whether the proposed new legal definition of mercenaries would encourage States that had not done so to ratify the International Convention against the Recruitment, Use, Financing and Training of Mercenaries. It was also important to explore whether licensing and regulating genuine private security companies through national legislation or international mechanisms could help establish clear lines of accountability for bona fide companies and identify other organizations engaging in mercenary activity to the detriment of human rights and peoples' right to self-determination.

Commission action. On 7 April [res. 2005/2], the Commission, by a recorded vote of 35 to 15, with 2 abstentions, while acknowledging the Special Rapporteur's work, decided to end the mandate and to establish a working group on the use of mercenaries as a means of violating human rights and impeding the exercise of the right of peoples to self-determination. The working group, which would comprise five independent experts, was asked to continue the work begun by previous Commission mechanisms on mercenaries, taking into account the proposal for a new legal definition of a mercenary drafted by the Special Rapporteur in 2004 [YUN 2004, p. 711] and the new forms, manifestations and modalities of mercenary activities occurring around the world, to consult with States, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs in the fulfillment of its mandate and to report in 2006. The Commission asked OHCHR to publicize the adverse effects of mercenary activities on the right to self-determination, provide advisory services to affected States when requested and support the working group in implementing its mandate, as elaborated by the Commission and endorsed by the Economic and Social Council (see below).

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In July, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on Human Rights [E/2005/23], adopted decision 2005/255 by recorded vote (29-18-0) [agenda item 14 (g)].

The use of mercenaries as a means of violating human rights and impeding the exercise of the right of peoples to self-determination

At its 38th plenary meeting, on 25 July 2005, the Economic and Social Council took note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 2005/2 of 7 April 2005, and endorsed the Commission's decision to establish a working group on the use of mercenaries as a means of violating human rights and impeding the exercise of the right of peoples to self-determination, to be composed of five independent experts, one from each regional group, to meet intersessionally for a period of three years, with the following mandate:

(a) To elaborate and present concrete proposals on possible new standards, general guidelines or basic principles encouraging the further protection of human rights, in particular the right of peoples to self-determination, while facing current and emergent threats posed by mercenaries or mercenary-related activities;

(b) To seek opinions and contributions from Governments, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations on questions relating to its mandate;

(c) To monitor mercenaries and mercenary-related activities in all their forms and manifestations in different parts of the world;

(d) To study and identify emerging issues, manifestations and trends regarding mercenaries or mercenary-related activities and their impact on human rights, particularly on the right of peoples to self-determination;

(e) To monitor and study the effects of the activities of private companies offering military assistance, consultancy and security services on the international market on the enjoyment of human rights, particularly the right of peoples to self-determination, and to prepare draft international basic principles that encourage respect for human rights on the part of those companies in their activities.

The Council also endorsed the request of the Commission to the Working Group to report annually to the Commission and the General Assembly.

RECORDED VOTE ON DECISION 2005/255:

In favour: Armenia, Azerbaijan, Bangladesh, Belize, Brazil, China, Colombia, Congo, Cuba, Ecuador, Guinea, India, Indonesia, Jamaica, Kenya, Malaysia, Mauritius, Mexico, Namibia, Nicaragua, Panama, Russian Federation, Senegal, South Africa, Thailand, Tunisia, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania.

Against: Albania, Australia, Belgium, Canada, Denmark, France, Germany, Iceland, Ireland, Italy, Japan, Lithuania, Poland, Republic of Korea, Spain, Turkey, United Kingdom, United States.

Abstaining: None.

Note by Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 59/178 [YUN 2004, p. 712], the Secretary-General, by an August note [A/60/263], transmitted a report of the Special Rapporteur, which provided an overview of her activities, the status of her work and how it could be further developed under the mandate of the working group on the use of mercenaries established in Commission resolution 2005/2 (see above). She determined that there was need for a fundamental reconsideration of issues concerning mercenaries, particularly regarding the responsibility of States and the United Nations in addressing related activities. Notable problems in that context included the fact that the 1989 Convention (see p. 789) had only negligible support, demonstrated by the remarkably small number of signatures and ratifications. In addition, there was ambiguity with regard to the status of the private military and security companies, many of which employed mercenaries. Noting that she had received a limited number of responses from Member States on the proposal for a new legal definition of a mercenary, the Special Rapporteur believed that the process towards adopting some version of the new definition was likely to be prolonged if the current course was followed. She concluded that Member States were demonstrating their own ambiguous positions and understanding with respect to the roles and duties of States in the fast-evolving climate of international security and UN peacekeeping. The Special Rapporteur recommended a substantive and comprehensive review of the legal definition of mercenaries and their activities and that the working group on the use of mercenaries consider taking the process forward within the framework of its mandate. She also advocated that the United Nations should debate the fundamental question of the role of the State with respect to the use of force, so as to reach a common understanding on the respective duties and responsibilities of the different actors in the current context, and their respective obligations for promoting and protecting human rights. Such a debate could result in the revamping or revocation of the 1989 Convention. The Special Rapporteur also reported on the current status of that Convention, her contacts with private military and security companies, and efforts to develop a code of conduct for that sector. Annexed to the report was a communication issued by the International Peace Operations Association at the end of its meeting with the Special Rapporteur (London, 27-28 June), calling on the United Nations to re-examine the term "mercenary" and its derogatory connotations, and indicating its intention to develop an international code of conduct for private sector operations in conflict/post conflict environments.

Note by Secretariat. An August note of the Secretariat [A/60/319] set out the mandate of the newly established working group on the use of mercenaries as a means of violating human rights and impeding the exercise of the right to self-determination, established in Commission resolution 2005/2 and endorsed by the Economic and Social Council in resolution 2005/255 (see p. 788). The note also announced the appointment of the five members of the working group and the scheduling of its first session in October.

On 16 December, the General Assembly took note of the note by the Secretariat and that of the Secretary-General transmitting the report of the Special Rapporteur (decision 60/532).

1989 International Convention

As at 31 December, 27 States had become parties to the 1989 International Convention against the Recruitment, Use, Financing and Training of Mercenaries, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 44/34 [YUN 1989, p. 825], with the accession of Liberia in 2005. The Convention entered into force in 2001 [YUN 2001, p. 632].

Administration of justice

Commission action. On 19 April [dec. 2005/108], the Commission approved the Subcommission's 2004 decision [YUN 2004, p. 715] to appoint Lalaina Rakotoarisoa (Madagascar) as Special Rapporteur entrusted with preparing a detailed study on the difficulties of establishing guilt and/or responsibilities with regard to crimes of sexual violence, its request that she submit a preliminary report in 2005, an interim report in 2006 and a final report in 2007, and its request to the Secretary-General to assist her.

On 25 July, the Economic and Social Council endorsed the Commission's decision and approved its requests to the Special Rapporteur and to the Secretary-General (decision 2005/287).

Working group activities. Established by the Subcommission on 25 July [dec. 2005/101], the five-member sessional working group on the administration of justice met on 25 and 29 July and in August [E/CN.4/Sub.2/2005/11]. The group discussed international criminal justice, women and the criminal justice system, the right to an effective remedy and the issue of transitional justice.

Pursuant to a 2004 Subcommission request [YUN 2004, p. 715], the group had before it a June report on the administration of justice through military tribunals [E/CN.4/Sub.2/2005/9], prepared by the Subcommission's Special Rapporteur on that subject, Emmanuel Decaux (France), which updated his 2003 [YUN 2003, p. 725] and 2004 [YUN 2004, p. 714] reports on the issue. The current report presented 19 draft principles governing the administration of justice through military tribunals and called for broad consultations with States, international and national human rights organizations and NGOs to examine those drafts in depth.

The group also had before it a 21 June working paper on the relationship between human rights law and international humanitarian law [E/CN.4/Sub.2/2005/14], prepared by Françoise Hampson (United Kingdom) and Ibrahim Salama (Egypt), in response to a further 2004 Subcommission request [YUN 2004, p. 715]. The paper discussed the potential for institutional complementarity and mutual reinforcement of human rights law and international humanitarian law; terminology, the history of the law of armed conflict; the question of whether human rights law and international humanitarian law could be applicable to the same circumstances; and whether human rights law could be applied outside national territory. It concluded by identifying related areas for further study, and recommended the establishment of a Subcommission working group to consider those issues

In response to a further 2004 Subcommission request [ibid., p. 716], the group considered a 21 June working paper on the right to an effective remedy in criminal proceedings [E/CN.4/Sub.2/2005/13], submitted by Mohamed Habib Cherif (Tunisia). The paper addressed the international, regional and national sources of the right and its specific content, namely the right to an independent, impartial tribunal, to adequate and prompt reparation, and to accurate and relevant information. It determined that the right to a remedy, leading to a fair trial, was the cornerstone of the rule of law and of human rights mechanisms. Under any circumstance, it was one of the most important human rights and every State subject to the rule of law had a duty to establish a judicial system that met the requirements of a fair trial. The paper recommended that the draft third optional protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, which guaranteed the right to an effective remedy and a fair trial, be reviewed and adopted.

The group discussed a 27 June working paper on the implementation in domestic law of the right to an effective remedy [E/CN.4/Sub.2/2005/15], prepared by Ms. Hampson, as requested by the Subcommission [YUN 2004, p. 716]. The paper, which explained the scope and importance of the right, explored its content and areas in which difficulties arose, and suggested practical measures that could be taken by human rights bodies and NGOs to examine it more systematically.

The group further discussed a 14 July progress report on discrimination in the criminal justice system [E/CN.4/Sub.2/2005/7], submitted by Leïla Zerrougui (Algeria), pursuant to a 2004 Subcommission request [YUN 2004, p. 715], which analysed institutional and structural discrimination in the national criminal justice system and highlighted direct or indirect discrimination that seriously impaired the enjoyment of the fundamental rights of the most vulnerable. The final report would consider, among other things, discriminatory treatment in prison administration and a gender-specific approach to discrimination.

Lalaina Rakotoarisoa (Madagascar), appointed Special Rapporteur in 2004 to prepare a study on the difficulties of establishing guilt and/or responsibilities with regard to crimes of sexual violence [YUN 2004, p. 715], made an oral presentation to the group, in accordance with a 2004 Subcommission request [ibid., p. 715].

Subcommission action. On 10 August [res. 2005/13], the Subcommission, taking note of the discussions of the sessional working group (see above), reaffirmed the importance of the full and effective implementation of all UN standards on human rights in the administration of justice. It welcomed a proposal by NGOs to organize, in consultation with OHCHR, a seminar on transitional justice to prepare papers for submission to the working group's next session and invited States, competent UN bodies, intergovernmental organizations, NGOs and national human rights institutions to provide information to the group at its future sessions.

On the same date [res. 2005/15], the Subcommission decided to transmit to the Commission the updated draft principles on the administration of justice through military tribunals, prepared by Emmanuel Decaux (see p. 789). It requested Mr. Decaux to prepare, without financial implications, a note to facilitate the Commission's examination of the draft, taking into account the comments and observations of the Subcommission, and to revise it.

On 8 August [res. 2005/3], the Subcommission asked Lalaina Rakotoarisoa to submit in 2006 a preliminary report on the difficulties of establishing responsibility or guilt with regard to crimes of sexual violence, and the Secretary-General to assist her in implementing her mandate.

Also on 8 August [res. 2005/5], the Subcommission requested Ms. Zerrougui to submit a final report on discrimination in the criminal justice system, for consideration in 2006, and asked the Secretary-General to assist her.

On the same date [dec. 2005/105], the Subcommission requested Vladimir Kartashkin (Russian Federation) to prepare, without financial implications and for consideration in 2006, a working paper on human rights and State sovereignty; and Ms. Hampson and Mr. Cherif to prepare, without financial implications, an expanded working paper on the implementation of the right to an effective remedy for human rights violations, for submission to the working group in 2006 [dec. 2005/106].

On 10 August [dec. 2005/108], the Subcommission further requested Ms. Hampson to prepare, without financial implications, a working paper on the circumstances in which civilians could lose their immunity from attack under international humanitarian and human rights law; Ibrahim Salama, to prepare, without financial implications, a working paper on measures designed to prevent violations in circumstances in which international humanitarian law and international human rights law were both applicable; and Yozo Yokota (Japan), to prepare, without financial implications, a working paper on the issues of amnesties, impunity and accountability for violations of international humanitarian law and international human rights law. The papers were all to be submitted to the working group in 2006.

In further action on 10 August [dec. 2005/109], the Subcommission asked Janio Iván Tuñón Veilles (Panama) to prepare, without financial implications, a working paper on transitional justice and investigation mechanisms for truth and reconciliation, with an emphasis on the experiences in Latin America, and to submit it to the working group in 2006.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December [meeting 64], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of Third Committee [A/60/509], adopted resolution 60/159 without vote [agenda item 71*(b)*].

Human rights in the administration of justice

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind the principles embodied in articles 3, 5, 8, 9 and 10 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the relevant provisions of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the Optional Protocols thereto, in particular article 6 of the Covenant, which states, inter alia, that no one shall be arbitrarily deprived of his life and prohibits the imposition of the death penalty for crimes committed by persons below 18 years of age, and article 10, which provides that all persons deprived of their liberty shall be treated with humanity and with respect for the inherent dignity of the human person,

Bearing in mind also the relevant provisions of the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, in particular the right to equal treatment before tribunals and all other organs administering justice, the Convention on the Rights of the Child, in particular article 37, according to which every child deprived of liberty shall be treated in a manner that takes into account the needs of persons of his or her age, and the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, in particular the obligation to treat men and women equally in all stages of procedures in courts and tribunals,

Calling attention to the numerous international standards in the field of the administration of justice,

Convinced that the independence and impartiality of the judiciary are essential prerequisites for the protection of human rights, good governance and democracy as well as for ensuring that there is no discrimination in the administration of justice, and should therefore be respected in all circumstances,

Noting the adoption by the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination of general recommendation XXXI on the prevention of racial discrimination in the administration and functioning of the criminal justice system,

Emphasizing that the right to access to justice, as contained in applicable international human rights instruments, forms an important basis for strengthening the rule of law through the administration of justice,

Mindful of the importance of ensuring respect for the rule of law and human rights in the administration of justice, in particular in post-conflict situations, as a crucial contribution to building peace and justice and ending impunity,

Recalling the Guidelines for Action on Children in the Criminal Justice System and the establishment and subsequent meetings of the Inter-Agency Coordination Panel on Juvenile Justice,

Calling attention to the relevant provisions of the Vienna Declaration on Crime and Justice: Meeting the Challenges of the Twenty-first Century, and of the plans of action for its implementation and follow-up,

Recalling its resolution 58/183 of 22 December 2003, as well as Commission on Human Rights resolution 2004/43 of 19 April 2004, and Economic and Social Council resolution 2004/28 of 21 July 2004 entitled "United Nations standards and norms in crime prevention and criminal justice",

1. Reaffirms the importance of the full and effective implementation of all United Nations standards on human rights in the administration of justice;

2. Reiterates its call to all Member States to spare no effort in providing for effective legislative and other mechanisms and procedures, as well as adequate resources, to ensure the full implementation of those standards;

3. Affirms that States must ensure that any measure taken to combat terrorism, including in the administration of justice, complies with their obligations under international law, in particular international human rights, refugee and humanitarian law;

4. Invites Governments to provide for training, including anti-racist, multicultural and gender-sensitive training, in human rights in the administration of justice, including juvenile justice, to all judges, lawyers, prosecutors, social workers, immigration and police officers and other professionals concerned, including personnel deployed in international field presences;

5. Invites States to make use of technical assistance offered by the relevant United Nations programmes in order to strengthen national capacities and infrastructures in the field of the administration of justice;

6. Appeals to Governments to include in their national development plans the administration of justice as an integral part of the development process and to allocate adequate resources for the provision of legal-aid services with a view to promoting and protecting human rights, and invites the international community to respond favourably to requests for financial and technical assistance for the enhancement and strengthening of the administration of justice;

7. Encourages the regional commissions, the specialized agencies, United Nations institutes active in the areas of human rights and crime prevention and criminal justice, and other relevant parts of the United Nations system, as well as intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, including national professional associations concerned with promoting United Nations standards in this field, and other segments of civil society, including the media, to continue to develop their activities in promoting human rights in the administration of justice;

8. Invites the Commission on Human Rights and the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice, as well as the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime, to closely coordinate their activities relating to the administration of justice;

9. Calls upon mechanisms of the Commission on Human Rights and its subsidiary bodies, including special rapporteurs, special representatives and working groups, to continue to give special attention to questions relating to the effective promotion and protection of human rights in the administration of justice, including juvenile justice, and to provide, where appropriate, specific recommendations in this regard, including proposals for advisory services and technical assistance measures;

10. Calls upon the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime to reinforce, within their respective mandates, their activities relating to national capacity-building in the field of the administration of justice, in particular in post-conflict situations and, in this context, in cooperation with the Department of Peacekeeping Operations of the Secretariat;

11. Encourages the Office of the High Commissioner to continue organizing training courses and other relevant activities aimed at enhancing the promotion and protection of human rights in the field of the administration of justice, and welcomes the publication of the Manual on Human Rights Training for Prison Officials;

12. Welcomes the increased attention paid to the issue of juvenile justice by the High Commissioner and the United Nations Children's Fund, in particular through technical assistance activities, and, taking into account the fact that international cooperation to promote juvenile justice reform has become a priority within the United Nations system, encourages the further activities of the High Commissioner and the United Nations Children's Fund, within their mandates, in this regard;

13. Encourages the Inter-Agency Coordination Panel on Juvenile Justice to further increase cooperation among the partners involved, to develop common indicators, tools and manuals, to share information and to pool their capacities and interests in order to increase the effectiveness of programme implementation, and takes note with appreciation of the publication entitled "Protecting the rights of children in conflict with the law";

14. Welcomes the adoption by the Economic and Social Council of the Guidelines on Justice in Matters involving Child Victims and Witnesses of Crime, set out in the annex to its resolution 2005/20 of 22 July 2005, and encourages all relevant actors to draw upon the Guidelines where appropriate;

15. Encourages the independent expert for the United Nations study on violence against children to address in his final report the prevalence of violence in the juvenile justice system;

16. Invites Governments, relevant international and regional bodies, national human rights institutions and non-governmental organizations to devote increased attention to the issue of women in prison, including the children of women in prison, with a view to identifying and addressing the key problems;

17. Underlines the importance of rebuilding and strengthening structures for the administration of justice and respect for the rule of law and human rights in post-conflict situations, and requests the Secretary-General to ensure system-wide coordination and coherence of programmes and activities of the relevant parts of the United Nations system, including through the proposed Peacebuilding Commission and the Rule of Law Assistance Unit, in the field of the administration of justice in post-conflict situations, including assistance provided through United Nations field presences;

18. Stresses the special need for national capacity-building in the field of the administration of justice, in particular through reform of the judiciary, the police and the penal system, as well as juvenile justice reform, in order to establish and maintain stable societies and the rule of law in post-conflict situations, and in this context welcomes the role of the Office of the High Commissioner in supporting the establishment and functioning of transitional justice mechanisms in post-conflict situations;

19. Decides to consider the question of human rights in the administration of justice at its sixty-second session under the item entitled "Human rights questions".

Compensation for victims

Commission action. By a recorded vote of 40 to none, with 13 abstentions, the Commission, on 19 April [res. 2005/35], welcomed the report of Mr. Alejandro Salinas, the Chairperson-Rapporteur of the third consultative meeting on the basic principles and guidelines on the right to a remedy and reparation for victims of violations of international human rights and humanitarian law [YUN 2004, p. 716], which indicated that the draft basic principles and guidelines had been finalized, in response to a 2004 Commission request [ibid.]. The Commission adopted the draft, which was annexed to its current resolution, and recommended that States promote respect for the basic principles and guidelines and bring them to the attention of members of the executive bodies of Government, particularly law enforcement officials and military and security forces, legislative bodies and the judiciary, as well as victims and their representatives, human rights defenders, lawyers, the media and the public in general.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 25 July, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on Human Rights [E/2005/23], adopted resolution 2005/30 by recorded vote (43-0-5) [agenda item 14 (g)].

Basic Principles and Guidelines on the Right to a Remedy and Reparation for Victims of Gross Violations of International Human Rights Law and Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law

The Economic and Social Council,

Taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 2005/35 of 19 April 2005, in which the Commission adopted the text of the Basic Principles and Guidelines on the Right to a Remedy and Reparation for Victims of Gross Violations of International Human Rights Law and Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Commission on Human Rights for the adoption of the Basic Principles and Guidelines on the Right to a Remedy and Reparation for Victims of Gross Violations of International Human Rights Law and Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law;

2. Adopts the Basic Principles and Guidelines as contained in the annex to the present resolution;

3. Recommends to the General Assembly that it adopt the Basic Principles and Guidelines.

RECORDED VOTE ON RESOLUTION 2005/30:

In favour: Armenia, Azerbaijan, Bangladesh, Belgium, Belize, Brazil, Canada, Denmark, Ecuador, France, Guinea, Iceland, Indonesia, Ireland, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Kenya, Lithuania, Malaysia, Mauritius, Mexico, Namibia, Nicaragua, Panama, Poland, Republic of Korea, Russian Federation, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, South Africa, Spain, Thailand, Tunisia, Turkey, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania.

Against: None.

Abstaining: Australia, Germany, India, Nigeria, United States.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December [meeting 64], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/60/509], adopted resolution 60/147 without vote [agenda item 71 (a)].

Basic Principles and Guidelines on the Right to a Remedy and Reparation for Victims of Gross Violations of International Human Rights Law and Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law

The General Assembly,

Guided by the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights, other relevant human rights instruments and the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action,

Affirming the importance of addressing the question of remedies and reparation for victims of gross violations of international human rights law and serious violations of international humanitarian law in a systematic and thorough way at the national and international levels,

Recognizing that, in honouring the victims' right to benefit from remedies and reparation, the international community keeps faith with the plight of victims, survivors and future human generations and reaffirms international law in the field,

Recalling the adoption of the Basic Principles and Guidelines on the Right to a Remedy and Reparation for Victims of Gross Violations of International Human Rights Law and Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law by the Commission on Human Rights in its resolution 2005/35 of 19 April 2005 and by the Economic and Social Council in its resolution 2005/30 of 25 July 2005, in which the Council recommended to the General Assembly that it adopt the Basic Principles and Guidelines,

1. Adopts the Basic Principles and Guidelines on the Right to a Remedy and Reparation for Victims of Gross Violations of International Human Rights Law and Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law annexed to the present resolution;

2. Recommends that States take the Basic Principles and Guidelines into account, promote respect thereof and bring them to the attention of members of the executive bodies of government, in particular law enforcement officials and military and security forces, legislative bodies, the judiciary, victims and their representatives, human rights defenders and lawyers, the media and the public in general;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to take steps to ensure the widest possible dissemination of the Basic Principles and Guidelines in all the official languages of the United Nations, including by transmitting them to Governments and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and by including the Basic Principles and Guidelines in the United Nations publication entitled Human Rights: A Compilation of International Instruments.

Annex

Basic Principles and Guidelines on the Right to a Remedy and Reparation for Victims of Gross Violations of International Human Rights Law and Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law

Preamble

The General Assembly,

Recalling the provisions providing a right to a remedy for victims of violations of international human rights law found in numerous international instruments, in particular article 8 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, article 2 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, article 6 of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, article 14 of the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, and article 39 of the Convention on the Rights of the Child, and of international humanitarian law as found in article 3 of the Hague Convention respecting the Laws and Customs of War on Land of 18 October 1907 (Convention IV), article 91 of the Protocol Additional to the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949, and relating to the Protection of Victims of International Armed Conflicts (Protocol I) of 8 June 1977, and articles 68 and 75 of the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court,

Recalling the provisions providing a right to a remedy for victims of violations of international human rights found in regional conventions, in particular article 7 of the African Charter on Human and Peoples' Rights, article 25 of the American Convention on Human Rights, and article 13 of the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms,

Recalling the Declaration of Basic Principles of Justice for Victims of Crime and Abuse of Power emanating from the deliberations of the Seventh United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders and General Assembly resolution 40/34 of 29 November 1985 by which the Assembly adopted the text recommended by the Congress,

Reaffirming the principles enunciated in the Declaration of Basic Principles of Justice for Victims of Crime and Abuse of Power, including that victims should be treated with compassion and respect for their dignity, have their right to access to justice and redress mechanisms fully respected, and that the establishment, strengthening and expansion of national funds for compensation to victims should be encouraged, together with the expeditious development of appropriate rights and remedies for victims,

Noting that the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court requires the establishment of "principles relating to reparations to, or in respect of, victims, including restitution, compensation and rehabilitation", requires the Assembly of States Parties to establish a trust fund for the benefit of victims of crimes within the jurisdiction of the Court, and of the families of such victims, and mandates the Court "to protect the safety, physical and psychological well-being, dignity and privacy of victims" and to permit the participation of victims at all "stages of the proceedings determined to be appropriate by the Court",

Affirming that the Basic Principles and Guidelines contained herein are directed at gross violations of international human rights law and serious violations of international humanitarian law which, by their very grave nature, constitute an affront to human dignity,

Emphasizing that the Basic Principles and Guidelines contained herein do not entail new international or domestic legal obligations but identify mechanisms, modalities, procedures and methods for the implementation of existing legal obligations under international human rights law and international humanitarian law which are complementary though different as to their norms,

Recalling that international law contains the obligation to prosecute perpetrators of certain international crimes in accordance with international obligations of States and the requirements of national law or as provided for in the applicable statutes of international judicial organs, and that the duty to prosecute reinforces the international legal obligations to be carried out in accordance with national legal requirements and procedures and supports the concept of complementarity,

Noting that contemporary forms of victimization, while essentially directed against persons, may nevertheless also be directed against groups of persons who are targeted collectively,

Recognizing that, in honouring the victims' right to benefit from remedies and reparation, the international community keeps faith with the plight of victims, survivors and future human generations and reaffirms the international legal principles of accountability, justice and the rule of law,

Convinced that, in adopting a victim-oriented perspective, the international community affirms its human solidarity with victims of violations of international law, including violations of international human rights law and international humanitarian law, as well as with humanity at large, in accordance with the following Basic Principles and Guidelines,

Adopts the following Basic Principles and Guidelines:

I. Obligation to respect, ensure respect for and implement international human rights law and international humanitarian law

1. The obligation to respect, ensure respect for and implement international human rights law and international humanitarian law as provided for under the respective bodies of law emanates from:

(a) Treaties to which a State is a party;

(b) Customary international law;

(c) The domestic law of each State.

2. If they have not already done so, States shall, as required under international law, ensure that their domestic law is consistent with their international legal obligations by:

(a) Incorporating norms of international human rights law and international humanitarian law into their domestic law, or otherwise implementing them in their domestic legal system;

(b) Adopting appropriate and effective legislative and administrative procedures and other appropriate measures that provide fair, effective and prompt access to justice;

(c) Making available adequate, effective, prompt and appropriate remedies, including reparation, as defined below;

(d) Ensuring that their domestic law provides at least the same level of protection for victims as that required by their international obligations.

II. Scope of the obligation

3. The obligation to respect, ensure respect for and implement international human rights law and international humanitarian law as provided for under the respective bodies of law, includes, inter alia, the duty to:

(a) Take appropriate legislative and administrative and other appropriate measures to prevent violations;

(b) Investigate violations effectively, promptly, thoroughly and impartially and, where appropriate, take action against those allegedly responsible in accordance with domestic and international law;

(c) Provide those who claim to be victims of a human rights or humanitarian law violation with equal and effective access to justice, as described below, irrespective of who may ultimately be the bearer of responsibility for the violation; and

(d) Provide effective remedies to victims, including reparation, as described below.

III. Gross violations of international human rights law and serious violations of international humanitarian law that constitute crimes under international law

4. In cases of gross violations of international human rights law and serious violations of international humanitarian law constituting crimes under international law, States have the duty to investigate and, if there is sufficient evidence, the duty to submit to prosecution the person allegedly responsible for the violations and, if found guilty, the duty to punish her or him. Moreover, in these cases, States should, in accordance with international law, cooperate with one another and assist international judicial organs competent in the investigation and prosecution of these violations.

5. To that end, where so provided in an applicable treaty or under other international law obligations, States shall incorporate or otherwise implement within their domestic law appropriate provisions for universal jurisdiction. Moreover, where it is so provided for in an applicable treaty or other international legal obligations, States should facilitate extradition or surrender offenders to other States and to appropriate international judicial bodies and provide judicial assistance and other forms of cooperation in the pursuit of international justice, including assistance to, and protection of, victims and witnesses, consistent with international human rights legal standards and subject to international legal requirements such as those relating to the prohibition of torture and other forms of cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment.

IV. Statutes of limitations

6. Where so provided for in an applicable treaty or contained in other international legal obligations, statutes of limitations shall not apply to gross violations of international human rights law and serious violations of international humanitarian law which constitute crimes under international law.

7. Domestic statutes of limitations for other types of violations that do not constitute crimes under international law, including those time limitations applicable to civil claims and other procedures, should not be unduly restrictive.

V. Victims of gross violations of international human rights law and serious violations of international humanitarian law

8. For purposes of the present document, victims are persons who individually or collectively suffered harm, including physical or mental injury, emotional suffering, economic loss or substantial impairment of their fundamental rights, through acts or omissions that constitute gross violations of international human rights law, or serious violations of international humanitarian law. Where appropriate, and in accordance with domestic law, the term "victim" also includes the immediate family or dependants of the direct victim and persons who have suffered harm in intervening to assist victims in distress or to prevent victimization.

9. A person shall be considered a victim regardless of whether the perpetrator of the violation is identified, apprehended, prosecuted, or convicted and regardless of the familial relationship between the perpetrator and the victim.

VI. Treatment of victims

10. Victims should be treated with humanity and respect for their dignity and human rights, and appropriate measures should be taken to ensure their safety, physical and psychological well-being and privacy, as well as those of their families. The State should ensure that its domestic laws, to the extent possible, provide that a victim who has suffered violence or trauma should benefit from special consideration and care to avoid his or her re-traumatization in the course of legal and administrative procedures designed to provide justice and reparation.

VII. Victims' right to remedies

11. Remedies for gross violations of international human rights law and serious violations of international humanitarian law include the victim's right to the following as provided for under international law:

(a) Equal and effective access to justice;

(b) Adequate, effective and prompt reparation for harm suffered;

(c) Access to relevant information concerning violations and reparation mechanisms.

VIII. Access to justice

12. A victim of a gross violation of international human rights law or of a serious violation of international humanitarian law shall have equal access to an effective judicial remedy as provided for under international law. Other remedies available to the victim include access to administrative and other bodies, as well as mechanisms, modalities and proceedings conducted in accordance with domestic law. Obligations arising under international law to secure the right to access justice and fair and impartial proceedings shall be reflected in domestic laws. To that end, States should:

(a) Disseminate, through public and private mechanisms, information about all available remedies for gross violations of international human rights law and serious violations of international humanitarian law;

(b) Take measures to minimize the inconvenience to victims and their representatives, protect against unlawful interference with their privacy as appropriate and ensure their safety from intimidation and retaliation, as well as that of their families and witnesses, before, during and after judicial, administrative, or other proceedings that affect the interests of victims;

(c) Provide proper assistance to victims seeking access to justice;

(d) Make available all appropriate legal, diplomatic and consular means to ensure that victims can exercise their rights to remedy for gross violations of international human rights law or serious violations of international humanitarian law.

13. In addition to individual access to justice, States should endeavour to develop procedures to allow groups of victims to present claims for reparation and to receive reparation, as appropriate.

14. An adequate, effective and prompt remedy for gross violations of international human rights law or serious violations of international humanitarian law should include all available and appropriate international processes in which a person may have legal standing and should be without prejudice to any other domestic remedies.

IX. Reparation for harm suffered

15. Adequate, effective and prompt reparation is intended to promote justice by redressing gross violations of international human rights law or serious violations of international humanitarian law. Reparation should be proportional to the gravity of the violations and the harm suffered. In accordance with its domestic laws and international legal obligations, a State shall provide reparation to victims for acts or omissions which can be attributed to the State and constitute gross violations of international human rights law or serious violations of international humanitarian law. In cases where a person, a legal person, or other entity is found liable for reparation to a victim, such party should provide reparation to the victim or compensate the State if the State has already provided reparation to the victim.

16. States should endeavour to establish national programmes for reparation and other assistance to victims in the event that the parties liable for the harm suffered are unable or unwilling to meet their obligations.

17. States shall, with respect to claims by victims, enforce domestic judgements for reparation against individuals or entities liable for the harm suffered and endeavour to enforce valid foreign legal judgements for reparation in accordance with domestic law and international legal obligations. To that end, States should provide under their domestic laws effective mechanisms for the enforcement of reparation judgements.

18. In accordance with domestic law and international law, and taking account of individual circumstances, victims of gross violations of international human rights law and serious violations of international humanitarian law should, as appropriate and proportional to the gravity of the violation and the circumstances of each case, be provided with full and effective reparation, as laid out in principles 19 to 23, which include the following forms: restitution, compensation, rehabilitation, satisfaction and guarantees of non-repetition.

19. Restitution should, whenever possible, restore the victim to the original situation before the gross violations of international human rights law or serious violations of international humanitarian law occurred. Restitution includes, as appropriate: restoration of liberty, enjoyment of human rights, identity, family life and citizenship, return to one's place of residence, restoration of employment and return of property.

20. Compensation should be provided for any economically assessable damage, as appropriate and proportional to the gravity of the violation and the circumstances of each case, resulting from gross violations of international human rights law and serious violations of international humanitarian law, such as:

(a) Physical or mental harm;

(b) Lost opportunities, including employment, education and social benefits;

(c) Material damages and loss of earnings, including loss of earning potential;

(d) Moral damage;

(e) Costs required for legal or expert assistance, medicine and medical services, and psychological and social services.

21. Rehabilitation should include medical and psychological care as well as legal and social services.

22. Satisfaction should include, where applicable, any or all of the following:

(a) Effective measures aimed at the cessation of continuing violations;

(b) Verification of the facts and full and public disclosure of the truth to the extent that such disclosure does not cause further harm or threaten the safety and interests of the victim, the victim's relatives, witnesses, or persons who have intervened to assist the victim or prevent the occurrence of further violations;

(c) The search for the whereabouts of the disappeared, for the identities of the children abducted, and for the bodies of those killed, and assistance in the recovery, identification and reburial of the bodies in accordance with the expressed or presumed wish of the victims, or the cultural practices of the families and communities;

(d) An official declaration or a judicial decision restoring the dignity, the reputation and the rights of the victim and of persons closely connected with the victim;

(e) Public apology, including acknowledgement of the facts and acceptance of responsibility;

(f) Judicial and administrative sanctions against persons liable for the violations;

(g) Commemorations and tributes to the victims;

(h) Inclusion of an accurate account of the violations that occurred in international human rights law and international humanitarian law training and in educational material at all levels.

23. Guarantees of non-repetition should include, where applicable, any or all of the following measures, which will also contribute to prevention:

(a) Ensuring effective civilian control of military and security forces;

(b) Ensuring that all civilian and military proceedings abide by international standards of due process, fairness and impartiality;

(c) Strengthening the independence of the judiciary;

(d) Protecting persons in the legal, medical and health-care professions, the media and other related professions, and human rights defenders;

(e) Providing, on a priority and continued basis, human rights and international humanitarian law education to all sectors of society and training for law enforcement officials as well as military and security forces;

(f) Promoting the observance of codes of conduct and ethical norms, in particular international standards, by public servants, including law enforcement, correctional, media, medical, psychological, social service and military personnel, as well as by economic enterprises;

(g) Promoting mechanisms for preventing and monitoring social conflicts and their resolution;

(h) Reviewing and reforming laws contributing to or allowing gross violations of international human rights law and serious violations of international humanitarian law.

X. Access to relevant information concerning violations and reparation mechanisms

24. States should develop means of informing the general public and, in particular, victims of gross violations of international human rights law and serious violations of international humanitarian law of the rights and remedies addressed by these Basic Principles and Guidelines and of all available legal, medical, psychological, social, administrative and all other services to which victims may have a right of access. Moreover, victims and their representatives should be entitled to seek and obtain information on the causes leading to their victimization and on the causes and conditions pertaining to the gross violations of international human rights law and serious violations of international humanitarian law and to learn the truth in regard to these violations.

XI. Non-discrimination

25. The application and interpretation of these Basic Principles and Guidelines must be consistent with international human rights law and international humanitarian law and be without any discrimination of any kind or on any ground, without exception.

XII. Non-derogation

26. Nothing in these Basic Principles and Guidelines shall be construed as restricting or derogating from any rights or obligations arising under domestic and international law. In particular, it is understood that the present Basic Principles and Guidelines are without prejudice to the right to a remedy and reparation for victims of all violations of international human rights law and international humanitarian law. It is further understood that these Basic Principles and Guidelines are without prejudice to special rules of international law.

XIII. Rights of others

27. Nothing in this document is to be construed as derogating from internationally or nationally protected rights of others, in particular the right of an accused person to benefit from applicable standards of due process.

Rule of law

Non-State actors

In response to a 2004 Subcommission request [YUN 2004, p. 717], Gáspár Bíró (Hungary) and Antoanella-Iulia Motoc (Romania) submitted a working paper on human rights and non-State actors [E/CN.4/Sub.2/2005/40], in order to approach systematically the question of accountability under international human rights law. The paper aimed to provide an overview of the most characteristic views expressed on the subject, including those relating to the definition of non-State actors; a possible typology, in terms of a distinction between political actors and other actors in international relations; the non-State element relative to the internal authorization of sub-State treaty-making and the individual accountable for human rights violations; an understanding of relevant international organizations in addressing the subject; and the role of NGOs and other non-State actors, such as Commission mechanisms. It also discussed the contemporary crises of nation-States following the rise of non-State actors and networks, and the status of transnational corporations that also operated as such actors. The paper concluded by identifying issues for further clarification, which related to political and non-political actors, the alternative designation of non-State actors as transnational actors, freely assumed and/or intentionally assigned responsibilities, and those who were benefiting or losing from the international order.

Subcommission action. On 11 August [dec. 2005/112], the Subcommission requested Mr. Bíró, Ms. Motoc, David Rivkin (United States) and Ibrahim Salama (Egypt) to prepare, without financial implications, an expanded working paper on human rights and non-State actors, taking into account the discussions of the Subcommission, for consideration in 2006.

Civilians in armed conflict

Commission action. On 20 April [res. 2005/63], the Commission, by a recorded vote of 51 to 1, with 1 abstention, urged parties to armed conflict to comply with their obligations under international humanitarian law regarding the protection of the civilian population. To that end, it asked States to comply with their human rights obligations and invited the international community to support regional efforts.

Subcommission action. On 8 August [res. 2005/2], the Subcommission expressed concern about military operations directed against medical facilities, transport and personnel and invited the Special Rapporteur on the right to the highest attainable standard of physical and mental health to address urgently the issue of the protection of such facilities in situations of armed conflict.

On 10 August [res. 2005/10], the Subcommission, emphasizing that no alleged political, philosophical, religious or military ground justified attacks against persons entitled to protection as civilians, affirmed that anyone who knowingly financed such attacks, prohibited by customary international criminal law, was guilty of an international crime.

On the same date [res. 2005/14], the Subcommission, concerned about alleged criminal behaviour and other misconduct by military and civilian personnel in peace support operations, appointed Françoise Hampson (United Kingdom) as Special Rapporteur with the task of preparing a comprehensive study on the accountability of international personnel taking part in peace support operations. She was asked to submit a preliminary report in 2006, a progress report in 2007 and a final report in 2008. The Secretary-General was requested to assist her, including by facilitating a possible visit to the UN Secretariat to distribute a questionnaire to States contributing troops to peace support operations. The Subcommission decided that, should its appointment of Ms. Hampson as Special Rapporteur not be approved by the Commission or the Economic and Social Council, she should prepare a working paper on the assigned topic, for consideration in 2006.

Report of Secretary-General. A November report [S/2005/740] of the Secretary-General on the protection of civilians in armed conflict reviewed emerging trends, related issues of concern to the Security Council, the framework for discussing the complex range of issues relevant for ensuring respect for civilian status and the next steps that should be taken regarding the questions of protection, the provision of humanitarian assistance, peacemaking and monitoring and reporting. Highlighting the main events of the past five years that had shaped the protection environment, the Secretary-General observed that, during that period, civilians were caught up in armed conflict or acts of terrorism in diverse situations, including in Afghanistan, Burundi, Colombia, the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Iraq, the Occupied Palestinian Territory, Nepal, the Sudan, Uganda, as well as in the West Africa region and elsewhere. The impact of armed conflict on civilians went far beyond the notion of collateral damage, as targeted attacks, forced displacement and conscription, sexual violence, indiscriminate killings, malnutrition, hunger, disease and loss of livelihoods collectively painted an extremely grim picture of its human costs. Although the number of such conflicts decreased from 50 in 1992 to 30 in 2004, the current trend toward low-intensity conflicts fought by smaller and less well-trained armed groups and with small arms and light weapons in urban and rural areas placed civilians at greater risk of being caught in cross fires and used as human shields, and forced to surrender their food and money or forcibly recruited into armed groups, many of them, as child soldiers.

Select areas of concern to the Security Council related to the nature of violence against civilians, the security of displaced persons and host communities, special issues relating to women and children, and access to vulnerable population. Despite the fact that the UN agenda for protecting civilians in armed conflict continued to provide an important framework for safeguarding civilian status in conflict situations, including Council resolutions 1265(1999) [YUN 1999, p. 649] and 1296(2000) [YUN 2000, p. 667], which provided a solid basis for response, and relative progress had been made in implementing the framework, gaps remained, which needed to be addressed in order to consolidate progress in meeting protection needs. Notably, new challenges to the safety and well-being of civilian populations had emerged, and tools at the disposal of the international community to address them needed to be developed accordingly. Protection from physical and sexual violence was one of the major challenges in that regard, and the framework by which the Council could support civilian protection needed to be updated to better reflect UN capacity to respond. To ensure a clear focus on protection that could be reflected in the Council's work, it was essential to establish the capacity to collate necessary information, including that relating to protection incidents in countries of concern to the Council. In addition, improvements in the design of peacekeeping missions, supported by mandates that addressed the specific protection needs of a conflict or the post-conflict environment would contribute to the protection of civilians. Enhancing the capacity and readiness of regional organizations to respond to protection concerns would also contribute significantly to the effectiveness with which the protection needs of civilians were addressed.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 21 June 2005 [meeting 5209], the Security Council discussed the protection of civilians in armed conflict. Its President, following consultations among Council members, made statement S/PRST/2005/25 on behalf of the Council:

> The Security Council, recalling its resolutions 1265(1999) and 1296(2000) as well as statements made by its Presidents on the protection of civilians in armed conflict, reiterates its commitment to address the widespread impact of armed conflict on civilian populations.
> The Council reaffirms its strong condemnation of the deliberate targeting of civilians or other protected persons in situations of armed conflict, and calls upon all parties to put an end to such practices. It expresses, in particular, its deep concern at the use of sexual violence as a weapon of war. It calls upon all States to put an end to impunity also in this regard.
> The Council is gravely concerned about limited progress on the ground to ensure the effective protection of civilians in situations of armed conflict. It stresses, in particular, the urgent need for providing better physical protection for displaced populations as well as for other vulnerable groups, in particular women and children. Efforts should be focused in areas where these populations and groups are most at risk. At the same time, it considers that contributing to the establishment of a secure environment for all vulnerable populations should be a key objective of peacekeeping operations.
> The Council invites, accordingly, the Secretary-General to include in his next report recommendations on ways to better address the persisting and emerging protection challenges in the evolving peacekeeping environment. Upon receipt of this report, it expresses its intention to take further action to strengthen and to enhance the protection of civilians in armed conflict, including, if necessary, the possible adoption of a resolution in this regard.

Missing persons

Report of Secretary-General. In accordance with a 2002 Commission request [YUN 2002, p. 696], the Secretary-General, in February [E/CN.4/2005/83], summarized replies received from three Governments and one international humanitarian organization on the issue of missing persons.

Arbitrary detention

Commission action. On 19 April [res. 2005/28], the Commission encouraged States to consider the recommendations of the Working Group on Arbitrary Detention (see below) to cooperate with it, consider its requests for visits and to ensure that their legislation, regulations and practices conformed with international standards and instruments. The Secretary-General was asked to assist Governments, special rappporteurs and working groups to ensure the promotion and observance of guarantees relating to the prevention of arbitrary detention laid down in relevant international instruments, and to assist the Group. The Group was asked to report in 2006.

Working Group activities. The Working Group on Arbitrary Detention held its forty-second (23-27 May), forty-third (29 August–2 September) and forty-fourth (21-30 November) sessions, all in Geneva [E/CN.4/2006/7]. During the year, the Group adopted 48 opinions concerning 115 persons in 30 countries; the texts of those opinions were contained in a separate report [E/CN.4/2006/7/Add.1]. The Group also transmitted 181 urgent appeals concerning 565 individuals to 56 Governments, of which 168 were issued jointly with other thematic or country-oriented mandates of the Commission. In 32 cases, the Governments concerned informed the Group that they had taken measures to remedy the situation of detainees.

In 2005, the Group considered issues relating to the use of the Internet; such issues of concern as the use of secret prisons and over-incarceration; and its own competence regarding cases of detention that were linked to an armed conflict. In November, the Group adopted its deliberation No. 8 concerning the deprivation of liberty linked to/resulting from the use of the Internet, against the background of an increasing number of communications on behalf of affected individuals. The Group held, in that context, that the freedom to impart, receive or seek information through the Internet was protected under international law in the same way as any other form of expression of opinions, ideas or convictions. In effect, the peaceful, non-violent expression or manifestation of one's opinion, or dissemination and reception of information, including through the Internet, if it did not constitute incitement to national, racial or religious hatred or violence, remained within the boundaries of freedom of expression. However, the use of the Internet might be restricted if it unduly interfered with the rights of others or aimed to promote terrorist purposes. The Group recommended that States take its deliberation No. 8 into account when addressing the legislative or law enforcement aspects of the use of the Internet. In other recommendations, it urged States to stop operating secret prisons and detention facilities, and when cooperating with other States in their lawful fights against terrorism, to ensure that the transfer of suspected individuals rested on a sound legal basis. States should also avoid over-incarceration and mitigate the over-representation of minorities and other vulnerable groups among the prison population. In addition, they should also guarantee to detained foreign nationals the right to challenge the lawfulness of their detention.

At the invitation of the Government, three Working Group members visited Canada (1-15 June) [E/CN.4/2006/7/Add.2], where they reviewed the institutional and legal frameworks for detention. The Group identified several positive aspects of the country's justice system relating to the independence of the judiciary and checks on the criminal justice system; a reduction in the incarceration rate; efforts to reduce pretrial detention, particularly of persons belonging to vulnerable and marginalized groups; and the limited duration of immigration custody. It found in particular, that the country possessed a strong, independent judiciary, which strove to ensure that trials were fair and that the deprivation of liberty was lawful. The control exercised by the judiciary was complemented by the active role of lawyers in private practice, NGOs and commission of inquiry for the administration of justice. It was also encouraging that the incarceration rate in the country had reduced significantly, owing largely to legislation that provided for the enhanced use of sanctions other than incarceration. Despite those encouraging factors, problems remained, including the continuing over-representation of aboriginals in the corrections system, and increased recourse to pretrial detention, which mostly affected vulnerable social groups, including minorities, the poor and persons with mental health problems. Furthermore, although Canada had a well-developed criminal legal aid system to secure the constitutionally guaranteed right to counsel, in practice, the system left many needs uncovered. Other sources of concern included the existence of several provisions of the immigration law governing detention of asylum-seekers and migrants, which had resulted in the unjustifiable detention of aliens who were not able to challenge their detention, and a security certificate process, which authorized the detention of aliens for years on the suspicion that they posed a security threat, without raising criminal charges. The Group addressed recommendations to the Government regarding the issues the over-representation of Aboriginals in prisons, the excessive use of pretrial detention in dealing with accused persons belonging to vulnerable social groups, and unmet needs for legal aid. It proposed changes to immigration law and policy, recommending, in that regard, that terrorism suspects be detained in the criminal process, with the relevant safeguards, rather than under immigration laws.

In South Africa (4-19 September) [E/CN.4/2006/7/Add.3], where the Group acknowledged dramatic changes over the past 15 years and an emerging democratic culture, it found that the protection of human rights, particularly the rights of arrested and detained persons were well established in the Constitution. It also highlighted improvements in the correctional system, which was oriented towards rehabilitation and reinsertion, and the establishment by the Government of a legal aid system available to all detainees in the criminal process. Contrary to those positive elements was a high rate of incarceration in the country, attributed partly to the harsh and long sentences passed by the courts and mandatory minimum sentences that were applicable to a wide range of offences. The situation had resulted in a worrisome number of persons in detention serving long sentences and an alarming rate of overcrowding in detention facilities. Also of concern were the fact that the behaviour of some police officers had led to a negative perception of police activities and that, in some cases, foreigners were deprived of their liberty. The Group encouraged ongoing reforms to improve the treatment of young offenders and to set up a specialized justice system for minors. It recommended that the Government adopt alternative measures to detention and reduce the duration of pretrial detention, avoid holding pretrial detainees in police cells, and in sentencing, take into account time already spent in pre-trial custody. The Government should also take appropriate measures to allow for an effective challenge of the detention of illegal foreigners to enable them exercised the rights guaranteed under the Constitution.

Impunity

Report of independent expert. In response to a 2004 Commission request [YUN 2004, p. 722], the independent expert to update the 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 655] set of principles to combat impunity, Diane Orentlicher (United States), submitted a February report [E/CN.4/2005/102] updating the principles in the light of recent developments in international law and practice, including those noted in her 2004 study [YUN 2004, p. 722]. The current report, which was based on information provided by Governments, revised various parts of the text of the principles, including those relating to the definition of relevant terms, the right to know, the right to justice, and the right to reparation/guarantees of non-recurrence. In that context, the study chronicled the advances in national and international efforts to combat impunity since the set of principles was submitted in 1997. The expert observed that, since then, seemingly impregnable barriers to prosecution had been dismantled in countries that had endured dictatorship, and States had cooperated to ensure prosecution of officials at the highest levels of government before international tribunals and national courts. A new breed of court, combining national and international elements, had evolved to help render justice for atrocious crimes, and against that background, Government and civil society had benefited from an expanding repertoire of tools for combating impunity. In sum, relevant developments in international law had strongly affirmed the principles, while providing further clarification of the scope of States' established legal obligations.

An addendum to the report [E/CN.4/2005/102/Add.1] presented the expert's revised text of the principles.

Commission action. On 21 April [res. 2005/81], the Commission, taking note of the report of the independent expert and the updated set of principles for the protection and promotion of human rights through action to combat impunity (see above), asked the High Commissioner to disseminate them and make them available in an accessible and user-friendly format, including in the UN publication entitled Human Rights: A Compilation of International Instruments. The Secretary-General was asked to invite States, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs to provide information on steps they had taken to combat impunity and on remedies available to victims, and to report in 2006 on developments in international law and practice relevant to combating impunity.

Working paper. In response to a 2002 Subcommission request [YUN 2002, p. 699], Françoise Hampson (United Kingdom) submitted a July working paper [E/CN.4/Sub.2/2005/42] on the accountability of international personnel taking part in peace support operations. The paper defined the scope of those operations, the missions in question and the personnel who might be involved, and examined who was potentially subject to particular jurisdictions, the operation of the system in practice and the impact of impunity. It concluded that, although significant changes had been made in efforts to deal with criminal and disciplinary matters outside the mandate of peace operations, the United Nations did not appear to accept accountability for acts committed within those mandates. That posed particular difficulties in the case of peace support operations where the Organization was, in effect, the Government of the territory, or in the case of personnel other than military personnel. In practical terms, the problems appeared to relate to the prevention of misconduct and to operationalization of the system regarding how complaints were made and received. The paper identified several issues which merited further study and recommended that the Subcommission request the Commission to appoint a special rapporteur to study the subject.

Right to the truth

Commission action. On 20 April [res. 2005/66], the Commission, stressing the imperative for society to recognize the right of victims of gross human rights violations to know the truth, including the identity of the perpetrators and the causes, facts and circumstances in which such violations took place, welcomed the establishment in several States of specific judicial and non-judicial mechanisms, such as truth and reconciliation commissions that complemented the justice system. It encouraged the States concerned to disseminate and implement the recommendations of such mechanisms, and other States, to consider establishing them. OHCHR was asked to prepare, for consideration in 2006, a study on the right to the truth, including information on the basis, scope and content of the right under international law, as well as best practices and recommendations for effective implementation of the right. Special rapporteurs and other Commission mechanisms were invited to take the issue into account in their work.

Independence of the judicial system

Report of Special Rapporteur. The Special Rapporteur on the independence of judges and lawyers, Leandro Despouy (Argentina), submitted a report [E/CN.4/2005/60], which provided an overview of his 2004 activities. He had transmitted 104 urgent appeals, 34 letters of allegation and 15 press releases to 53 Governments, replies to which were received from 38 countries. An addendum to the report [E/CN.4/2005/60/Add.1] contained summaries of the communications sent and the replies thereto. The report focused on issues relating to the thematic questions of the impact of the fight against terrorism on human rights and the administration of justice in a period of transition. In that context, it examined the rise of terrorism and efforts to combat the phenomenon within the law, worrisome developments concerning the status of enemy combatants and their effects in practical terms, administrative detention without legal safeguards, the improper use of military courts to try civilians, and the consequences for other human rights of counter-terrorism and measures taken on the grounds of national security. In addition, the report considered the questions of reconstructing the judiciary, fighting against impunity, re-establishing truth and ensuring justice, reparation and compensation for victims, as well as good practices and tools to assist new authorities and the work of the International Criminal Court (ICC) (see p. 1402) within the framework of post-conflict justice. Highlighting the extent to which the right to a fair trial by an independent and impartial court of law might be affected by counter-terrorism measures, the Special Rapporteur proposed that a study be undertaken on the compatibility of action taken by States to combat terrorism and preserve national security with the rules of international law. He also proposed that the Commission further examine the question of justice in a period of transition, so as to provide States in transition with the necessary tools and references to help them respond to challenges concerning justice, impunity and the right of victims to the truth, reparation and compensation. Advocating a complementary approach in UN work on the problem, the Special Rapporteur recommended that the Commission envisage a special procedure for supervising the compatibility of ongoing or planned counter-terrorism or security measures with the current rules of international law. Other recommendations related to justice in post-conflict and transition periods, capital punishment, training of judges and lawyers and mechanisms for cooperation with States.

Commission action. On 19 April [res. 2005/30], by a recorded vote of 52 to none, with 1 abstention, the Commission called on States that used military courts to try criminal offenders to ensure that such courts were an integral part of the general judicial system and that they applied internationally recognized due process procedures. The Special Rapporteur was asked to take the Commission's current resolution into account in discharging his mandate and to report in 2006.

Also on 19 April [res. 2005/33], the Commission called on Governments to respect and uphold the independence of judges and lawyers and asked the High Commissioner to continue to provide technical assistance to train them. The Special Rapporteur was requested to report to the General Assembly in 2005 and to the Commission in 2006, and the Secretary-General was asked to assist him.

On 25 July, the Economic and Social Council endorsed the Commission's requests to the Special Rapporteur and the Secretary-General (decision 2005/263).

Further reports of Special Rapporteur. At the invitation of the Government, the Special Rapporteur undertook preliminary (13-18 March) [E/CN.4/2005/60/Add.4] and follow-up (11-15 July) [E/CN.4/2006/52/Add.2] visits to Ecuador, where he studied the situation regarding the country's highest courts, following recent decisions by the National Congress, which resulted in the removal of some judges and appointment of their successors in a manner that might have violated the constitutional order and independence of the country's judiciary. Reflecting on suggestions that the changes were made because the majority parties dominated the court and in order to rectify a constitutional anomaly whereby one member of the court belonged to a party that no longer existed, the Special Rapporteur noted, in March, that the National Congress was not competent to resolve or rectify an unconstitutional situation, since that was the exclusive right of the Constitutional Court. In a series of preliminary recommendations, he observed that, since it was the National Congress that had taken the principal steps that provoked the situation, it was incumbent on it to adopt measures to rectify the situation. The country needed to devise a formula to govern appointments to the Supreme Court in a manner that guaranteed the independence, suitability and probity of judges.

Following further examination of the situation during his July visit, the Special Rapporteur found that the Government had begun to implement some of the recommendations he had made in March, particularly by establishing a Qualifications Committee, which appointed new Supreme Court judges in a transparent manner, with public oversight and under the supervision of international and national bodies, including judges from other regional States. In further recommendations, he advocated urgent reforms of the justice system, including the enactment of a new law on the organization of the judiciary, its standards and safeguards, the practical application of the principle that only judicial bodies might perform judicial functions and the establishment of an effective legal aid system. Priority should be given to the establishment of the Constitutional Court, the adoption of rules for the Supreme Electoral Court and the appointment of a Comptroller General and an Attorney-General.

By an August note [A/60/321], the Secretary-General transmitted a report of the Special Rapporteur, submitted in accordance with Commission resolution 2005/33 (see above). The report outlined the terms of reference for his mandate and developments in that regard, described his main activities and reflected on the progress made in the field of human rights. It also identified issues of concern to the Special Rapporteur, the first of which related to the situation in Ecuador following the unconstitutional dismissal of many members of the judiciary, including Supreme Court judges, which had prompted the Special Rapporteur to visit the country twice within the year. Other issues of concern related to the questions of counter-terrorism and the right to a fair trial, the work of the ICC (see p. 1402), judicial proceedings at the Iraqi Special Tribunal, and transitional justice and the right to the truth. Regarding the situation in Ecuador, the Special Rapporteur noted that actions that undermined justice could have such serious political consequences as those that affected the country in April, culminating in the removal of its President. To redress the situation, he stressed the need for greater transparency and credibility to the process of selecting judges, and recommended that, in accordance with Ecuadorian legislation, international observers, particularly the United Nations, should oversee the process.

Turning to other issues, the Special Rapporteur observed that many States, including the United Kingdom and the United States, were currently discussing or adopting measures for combating suspected terrorists, which could undermine international human rights standards. While condemning terrorist practices, including the bloody attacks in London and Egypt (Sharm El Sheik) within the year (see pp. 103 & 105), he emphasized the need for concerted international action in combating the scourge. He noted nonetheless, that there had been setbacks regarding respect for the rule of law and human rights, owing to counter-terrorism measures. Of particular concern, was a tendency to roll back existing levels of international protection, as was the continuing opposition of some Governments to ICC and the manner in which trials were being conducted by the Iraqi Special Tribunal. He observed, in particular, that the Tribunal's power to impose capital punishment contravened international human rights standards. Reflecting on efforts to reform the Commission through the creation of a standing human rights council (see p. 712), the Special Rapporteur hoped that the restructuring would acknowledge the cross-cutting nature of the issues he had addressed and establish the mechanisms to strengthen his work.

At the invitation of the Government, the Special Rapporteur visited Kyrgyzstan (18-22 September) [E/CN.4/2006/52/Add.3], where he gained an insight into the issues and challenges facing the judiciary and the main actors in the administration of justice. He found that the country's new leadership had undertaken several reforms and initiated developments favourable to the judicial system, including legislative initiatives; constitutional amendments transferring the power to issue arrest warrants to the judiciary; introducing juries and lay assessors and enabling courts to control their budgets; and a proposal to abolish the death penalty. Despite those efforts, the judiciary still did not operate as a fully independent institution capable of administering fair and independent justice and safeguarding and protecting human rights. Widespread corruption among the judiciary continued, owing partly to low salary levels, and there was a lack of trust of the population in the judicial system. The Bar had the potential to play a fundamental role in safeguarding human rights, yet it was weakened by the failure to implement the principle of equality of arms and continuing executive control over admissions and regulatory procedures.

The Special Rapporteur called for the consolidation of constitutional and legislative reforms and made recommendations to the Government on the need for a legal framework better equipped to ensure the full independence of the judges and lawyers and enhanced respect for human rights principles. Other recommendations addressed the need to ensure a fairer balance between the respective roles of the judiciary and defence lawyers. The Special Rapporteur further recommended the strengthening of the judiciary as a fully independent institution capable of protecting human rights and fundamental freedoms, of the Bar to ensure it could play its role in protecting clients' rights, and of the court system and other institutions to enable them to function effectively, and in a transparent manner.

In Tajikistan (23-30 September) [E/CN.4/2006/52/Add.4], the Special Rapporteur examined the status of and recent developments regarding the judiciary. He found that the country had introduced significant judicial reforms since the 1997 peace accord that ended its six-year civil war, including a moratorium on the death penalty, the adoption of new civil and criminal codes, the extension of judges' tenures and the ratification of all major international human rights instruments. While acknowledging those measures, the Special Rapporteur found the strengthening of the role of the prosecutor disquieting, as that represented a step backwards and a development towards forms of authoritarianism that were a feature of the past. It was all the more disturbing as Tajikistan was a country exposed to major geopolitical challenges and was struggling with a high percentage of people living in poverty and a high level of endemic corruption that affected almost all spheres of life. In addition, the executive branch remained very influential in the selection and appointment procedures for judges, with the vulnerable position of lawyers posing additional problems. To help Tajikistan accelerate the judicial reform process leading to a fully independent judiciary, the Special Rapporteur recommended numerous measures to the Government for bringing the national legal system in compliance with international standards governing the independence of the judiciary; strengthen related institutional structures and mechanisms; address the problem of the weak role of lawyers; strengthen national human rights institutions and mechanisms; provide for training, continuing legal education and the availability of legal information material; and address the problem of corruption.

Capital punishment

Report of Secretary-General. Pursuant to a 2004 Commission request [YUN 2004, p. 724], the Secretary-General, in March [E/2005/3], submitted his seventh quinquennial report on capital punishment and the implementation of safeguards guaranteeing protection of the rights of those facing the death penalty, covering the period 1999 to 2003. The report drew on current criminological data and information from Member States, intergovernmental organizations, UN specialized agencies and NGOs, gathered through a questionnaire. Of the 52 countries that responded, 33 (63 per cent) were abolitionists at the beginning of the reporting period, accounting for 47 per cent of all abolitionist countries. Of 34 de facto abolitionist countries—those that had retained the death penalty for ordinary crimes but had not executed anyone in the last 10 years or more—only five (about 10 per cent) replied, and of the 78 States that retained and enforced capital punishment during the reporting period, only eight (about 11 per cent) responded.

At the beginning of the quinquennial period, 70 countries and territories had embraced total abolition of the death penalty, a considerably higher number than at the beginning of the previous quinquennium [YUN 2000, p. 672]. During the current survey period, two of the de facto abolitionists became abolitionists for all offences, four became abolitionists for ordinary offences and three resumed executions, thereby becoming retentionists. Of the 78 countries that were retentionists in 1999, three became abolitionists for all crimes, 15 became de facto abolitionists, and 59 maintained their status as retentionist countries, although 18 of them did not carry out judicial executions between 1999 and 2003. Over that period, figures available suggested that an estimated 18,200 persons were sentenced to death, and 9,000 judicially executed, marking a reduction from 23,000 persons sentenced to death and 13,500 executed in the last reporting period (1994-1998).

The report also included information on the implementation of the safeguards guaranteeing protection of the rights of those facing the death penalty, adopted by the Economic and Social Council in resolution 1984/50 [YUN 1984, p. 709]. The Secretary-General, while acknowledging an encouraging trend towards abolition and restriction of the use of capital punishment in most countries, observed, nonetheless, that much remained to be done in the implementation of the 1984 safeguards in countries retaining the death penalty.

Commission action. On 20 April [res. 2005/59], by a recorded vote of 26 to 17, with 10 abstentions, the Commission called on States that still maintained the death penalty to abolish it, and, in the meantime, establish a moratorium on executions, to restrict the number of offences for which the death penalty might be imposed; not to impose it for crimes committed by persons below 18 years of age and on a person suffering from mental disorder; to exclude pregnant women and mothers with dependent infants; and to provide the Secretary-General and relevant UN bodies with information relating to the use of capital punishment and the observance of safeguards guaranteeing the rights of those facing it, as contained in Economic and Social Council resolution 1984/50 [YUN 1984, p. 709]. The Secretary-General was asked to submit, in 2006, a supplement to his quinquennial report, paying attention to the imposition of the death penalty on persons younger than 18 years at the time of the offence and on persons suffering from any mental or intellectual disabilities.

By decision 2005/247 of 22 July, the Economic and Social Council requested the Secretary-General to continue collecting relevant data and information, in consultation with Governments, specialized agencies, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs, on capital punishment and the safeguards guaranteeing protection of the rights of those facing the death penalty and to prepare additional quinquennial reports on the subject for the consideration of the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice and, upon request, the Commission on Human Rights.

Forensic science

Note by Secretariat. By a 21 March note [E/CN.4/2005/56], the Secretariat informed the Commission that the High Commissioner was finalizing, for submission in due course, the progress report on human rights and forensic science, pursuant to a 2003 Commission request [YUN 2003, p. 736].

Commission action. On 19 April [res. 2005/26], the Commission, welcoming the increased use of forensic investigations in situations of grave violations of human rights and international humanitarian law, encouraged Governments to establish thorough prompt and impartial investigation, documentation procedures on the practice, and ensure that personal information, including medical and genetic data, was not used in a way that might infringe on human rights, such as the right to privacy. The Secretary-General was asked to provide the requisite resources to fund OHCHR's efforts to implement the Commission's resolution, including a revision of the Manual on the Effective Prevention and Investigation of Extralegal, Arbitrary and Summary Executions [Sales No. E.91.IV.I]. The Commission recommended that OHCHR encourage forensic experts to promote the consolidation of relevant guidelines, with a view to harmonizing the procedures in forensic investigation and repatriation, and to encourage the dissemination and use of the principles, best practices and manuals referred to in the resolution. The High Commissioner was asked to update continuously OHCHR's consolidated database of forensic experts and to submit in 2007, an updated version of the report requested by the Commission in 2003 [YUN 2003, p. 736], which related to the examination of living persons.

Right to democracy

Report of High Commissioner. In response to a 2003 Commission request [YUN 2003, p. 736], the High Commissioner submitted a report [E/CN.4/2005/57], which compiled documents and texts used by various intergovernmental, international, regional and subregional organizations aimed at promoting and consolidating democracy. The texts expressed the adherence of those organizations to such principles and objectives as equality of law, freedom of expression and association and participation in the decision-making process. They also contained commitments to the strengthening and implementation of the essential elements of democracy, such as separation of powers, empowerment and enhancement of parliaments, independence of the judiciary, fair and transparent elections, opposition to unconstitutional changes of Government, popular participation, decentralization of power, freedom of the press, freedom of the members of the Bar, and the subsidiary role of the armed forces, the police or the security forces in a democracy.

In response to a 2004 Commission request [YUN 2004, p. 724], the High Commissioner submitted a February report [E/CN.4/2005/127], which summarized the views of one UN department, one UN system organization and two regional organizations on the role they had played in promoting and consolidating democracy.

Commission action. By a recorded vote of 46 to none, with 7 abstentions, the Commission, on 19 April [res. 2005/32], reaffirmed that democracy facilitated the promotion and protection of civil and political rights and called on States to strengthen the rule of law and promote democracy by upholding the separation of powers, guaranteeing that no individual or institution was above the law and respecting equal protection under the law. OHCHR was urged to further develop its technical assistance programmes in the area of administration of justice to include more training on human rights standards and jurisprudence for members of the executive, legislative and judicial branches of Governments, and to cooperate with and assist them at their request.

Expert seminar. In accordance with a 2003 Commission request [YUN 2003, p. 736], OHCHR held an expert seminar (Geneva, 28 February–2 March) to promote an analytical approach towards action-oriented conclusions on democracy and the rule of law, building on the first expert seminar held in 2002 [YUN 2002, p. 702]. From that perspective, participants explored the interaction between democracy, human rights and the rule of law and power dynamics, related challenges and how to address the issues of equality, participation and accountability, and measures to enhance democracy and the rule of law. They agreed that democracy and the rule of law were interdependent and necessary to create an environment in which human rights could be realized. However, while significant gains had been made on every continent in advancing democracy, each society had its own institutional traditions, which should function under universally accepted principles and norms. The seminar made several recommendations to States and the international community on how to promote and strengthen better democracy, the rule of law and human rights, particularly with regard to judicial authorities and Parliaments, and to tackle related challenges.

Commission action. On 19 April [res. 2005/29], the Commission, by a recorded vote of 28 to 14, with 11 abstentions, urged States to foster democracy that promoted people's welfare and invited its mechanisms and human rights treaty bodies to continue to take into account the discharge of their respective mandates, the question of strengthening popular participation, equity, social justice and non-discrimination as the foundations of democracy.

Report of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 58/180 [YUN 2003, p. 737], the Secretary-General, in an October report [A/60/431] covering UN electoral activities undertaken since his 2003 report on the subject [YUN 2003, p. 736], stated that the Organization's role in technical assistance and in post-conflict elections increased quantitatively and in complexity, illustrating the importance of forging a better link between electoral events and parallel processes in such areas as human rights, the rule of law and institution-building. The United Nations had received 326 requests for electoral assistance from 101 Member States, of which 223 led to related projects. That level of requests represented a phenomenal increase of over 600 per cent relative to the 52 requests received in 2003 [ibid.]. The number of UN peacekeeping missions with electoral responsibilities also grew to include Burundi, Côte d'Ivoire, Haiti, Iraq and Liberia, in addition to existing missions in Afghanistan and the Democratic Republic of the Congo. Much Progress was made in consolidating and coordinating electoral assistance capacities within the UN system, with related activities strengthened through arrangements between the Electoral Assistance Division of the UN Department of Political Affairs and the main UN entities providing such assistance. While most technical assistance projects implemented by the Organization continued to be related to specific events, such as voter registration, an election or a change in the electoral law, efforts were also made to increase long-term projects with national electoral authorities to gradually improve electoral processes. Despite those positive developments, serious challenges remained, and in that context, the report made a number of recommendations highlighting the need for the United Nations to develop or recruit additional expertise in such election specialties as voter registration, electronic voting and election administration. It also advocated the development of means to ensure a consistent and sustained follow-up to electoral assistance; further strengthening of the function of the Focal Point for Electoral Assistance Activities; cooperation and coordination within the United Nations and between it and other organizations, including the recruitment of electoral experts to help in negotiations for peace agreements; tackling administrative impediments; and the active support of Member States.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December [meeting 64], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/60/509/Add.2], adopted resolution 60/162 by recorded vote (173-0-1) [agenda item 71 (b)].

Strengthening the role of the United Nations in enhancing the effectiveness of the principle of periodic and genuine elections and the promotion of democratization

The General Assembly,

Recalling its previous resolutions on the subject, in particular resolution 58/180 of 22 December 2003,

Reaffirming that United Nations electoral assistance and support for the promotion of democratization are provided only at the specific request of the Member State concerned,

Noting with satisfaction that increasing numbers of Member States are using elections as a peaceful means of discerning the will of the people, which builds confidence in representational governance and contributes to greater national peace and stability,

Recalling the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, adopted on 10 December 1948, in particular the principle that the will of the people, as expressed through periodic and genuine elections, shall be the basis of government authority, as well as the right freely to choose representatives through periodic and genuine elections, which shall be by universal and equal suffrage and held by secret vote or by equivalent free voting procedures,

Taking note with interest of Commission on Human Rights resolution 2004/30 of 19 April 2004 on enhancing the role of regional, subregional and other organizations and arrangements in promoting and consolidating democracy and Commission resolution 2005/32 of 19 April 2005 on democracy and the rule of law;

Recognizing the need for strengthening democratic processes, electoral institutions and national capacity-building, including the capacity to administer fair elections, increase citizen participation and provide civic education, in requesting countries in order to consolidate and regularize the achievements of previous elections and support subsequent elections,

Welcoming the support provided by States to the electoral assistance activities of the United Nations, inter alia, through the provision of electoral experts, including electoral commission staff, and observers, as well as through contributions to the United Nations Trust Fund for Electoral Observation,

Welcoming also the contributions made by international and regional organizations and also by non-governmental organizations to enhancing the effectiveness of the principle of periodic and genuine elections and the promotion of democratization,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on United Nations activities aimed at enhancing the effectiveness of the principle of periodic and genuine elections and the promotion of democratization,

1. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Commends the electoral assistance provided upon request to Member States by the United Nations, and requests that such assistance continue on a case-by-case basis in accordance with the evolving needs of requesting countries to develop, improve and refine their electoral institutions and processes, recognizing that the fundamental responsibility of organizing free and fair elections lies with Governments;

3. Requests the Electoral Assistance Division of the Department of Political Affairs of the Secretariat, in its role as coordinator of United Nations electoral assistance, to continue to inform Member States regularly about the requests received and the nature of any assistance provided;

4. Requests that the United Nations continue its efforts to ensure, before undertaking to provide electoral assistance to a requesting State, that there is adequate time to organize and carry out an effective mission for providing such assistance, including the provision of long-term technical cooperation, that conditions exist to allow a free and fair election and that the results of the mission will be reported comprehensively and consistently;

5. Recommends that, throughout the time span of the entire electoral process, including before and after elections, as appropriate, based on needs-assessment missions, the United Nations continue to provide technical advice and other assistance to requesting States and electoral institutions in order to help to strengthen their democratic processes;

6. Notes with appreciation additional efforts being made to enhance cooperation with other international, governmental and non-governmental organizations in order to facilitate more comprehensive and needs-specific responses to requests for electoral assistance, and encourages those organizations to share knowledge and experience in order to promote best practices in the assistance they provide and in their reporting on electoral processes, and expresses its appreciation to those Member States, regional organizations and non-governmental organizations that have provided observers or technical experts in support of United Nations electoral assistance efforts;

7. Recalls the establishment by the Secretary-General of the United Nations Trust Fund for Electoral Observation, and calls upon Member States to consider contributing to the Fund;

8. Encourages the Secretary-General, through the Electoral Assistance Division, to continue responding to the evolving nature of requests for assistance and the growing need for specific types of medium-term expert assistance aimed at supporting and strengthening the existing capacity of the requesting Government, in particular by enhancing the capacity of national electoral institutions;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the Electoral Assistance Division with adequate human and financial resources to allow it to carry out its mandate, and to continue to ensure that the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights is able to respond, within its mandate and in close coordination with the Division, to the numerous and increasingly complex and comprehensive requests from Member States for advisory services;

10. Notes with satisfaction the comprehensive coordination between the Electoral Assistance Division and the United Nations Development Programme, and encourages further engagement of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights in this context;

11. Requests the United Nations Development Programme to continue its governance assistance programmes in cooperation with other relevant organizations, in particular those that strengthen democratic institutions and linkages between civil society and Governments;

12. Reiterates the importance of reinforced coordination within and outside the United Nations system in this regard;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its sixty-second session on the implementation of the present resolution, in particular on the status of requests from Member States for electoral assistance, and on his efforts to enhance support by the Organization for the democratization process in Member States.

RECORDED VOTE ON RESOLUTION 60/162:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Andorra, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Armenia, Australia, Austria, Azerbaijan, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belarus, Belgium, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Cambodia, Cameroon, Canada, Cape Verde, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Croatia, Cyprus, Czech Republic, Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Democratic Republic of the Congo, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominica, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Eritrea, Estonia, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, France, Gabon, Gambia, Georgia, Germany, Ghana, Greece, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kazakhstan, Kenya, Kuwait, Kyrgyzstan, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Latvia, Lebanon, Lesotho, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Liechtenstein, Lithuania, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Marshall Islands, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Micronesia, Monaco, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Myanmar, Namibia, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Palau, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Republic of Korea, Romania, Russian Federation, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, San Marino, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Serbia and Montenegro, Singapore, Slovakia, Slovenia, Solomon Islands, Somalia, South Africa, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Sweden, Switzerland, Tajikistan, Thailand, The former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Timor-Leste, Togo, Tunisia, Turkey, Turkmenistan, Uganda, Ukraine, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania, United States, Uruguay, Uzbekistan, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Abstaining: Tuvalu.

On the same date [meeting 64], the Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/60/509/Add.2], adopted resolution 60/164 by recorded vote (110-6-61) [agenda item 71 (b)].

Respect for the principles of national sovereignty and diversity of democratic systems in electoral processes as an important element for the promotion and protection of human rights

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the purpose of the United Nations to develop friendly relations among nations based on respect for the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples and to take other appropriate measures to strengthen universal peace,

Recalling its resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples,

Recalling also its resolution 2625(XXV) of 24 October 1970, by which it approved the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Cooperation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations,

Reaffirming the right to self-determination, by virtue of which all peoples can freely determine their political status and freely pursue their economic, social and cultural development,

Recognizing that the principles enshrined in Article 2 of the Charter, in particular respect for national sovereignty, should be respected in the holding of elections,

Recognizing also the richness and diversity of democratic political systems and models of free and fair electoral processes in the world, based on national and regional particularities and various backgrounds,

Stressing the responsibility of States in ensuring ways and means to facilitate full and effective popular participation in their electoral processes,

Recognizing the contribution made by the United Nations of electoral assistance provided to numerous States upon their request,

Reaffirming the solemn commitment of all States to fulfil their obligations to promote universal respect for, and observance and protection of, all human rights and fundamental freedoms for all in accordance with the Charter, other instruments relating to human rights, and international law,

Reaffirming also that democracy, sustainable development and respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms, as well as good governance at all levels, are interdependent and mutually reinforcing, and determined to strengthen respect for the rule of law at the national and international levels,

Welcoming the commitment of all Member States, expressed in the United Nations Millennium Declaration, to work collectively for more inclusive political processes allowing genuine participation by all citizens in all countries,

1. Reaffirms that all peoples have the right to self-determination, by virtue of which they freely determine their political status and freely pursue their economic, social and cultural development, and that every State has the duty to respect that right, in accordance with the provisions of the Charter of the United Nations;

2. Reiterates that periodic, fair and free elections are important elements for the promotion and protection of human rights;

3. Reaffirms the right of peoples to determine methods and to establish institutions regarding electoral processes and, consequently, that there is no single model of democracy or of democratic institutions and that States should ensure all the necessary mechanisms and means to facilitate full and effective popular participation in those processes;

4. Also reaffirms that free development of the national electoral process in each State should be fully honoured in a manner that fully respects the principles established in the Charter and in the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Cooperation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations;

5. Calls upon all States to refrain from financing political parties or other organizations in any other State in a way that is contrary to the principles of the Charter and that undermines the legitimacy of its electoral processes;

6. Condemns any act of armed aggression or threat or use of force against peoples, their elected Governments or their legitimate leaders;

7. Reaffirms that the will of the people shall be the basis of the authority of government and that this will shall be expressed in periodic and genuine elections, which shall be by universal and equal suffrage and shall be held by secret vote or by equivalent free voting procedures;

8. Decides to continue its consideration of the question of the respect for the principles of national sovereignty and diversity of democratic systems in electoral processes as an important element for the promotion and protection of human rights at its sixty-second session under the item entitled "Human rights questions".

Other issues

Extralegal executions

Reports of Special Rapporteur. The Special Rapporteur on extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions, Philip Alston (Australia), in his first annual report [E/CN.4/2005/7 & Corr.1], outlined his terms of reference, legal framework and methods of work, and highlighted his communications with Governments, which were contained in an addendum [E/CN.4/2005/7/Add.1]. Between 1 December 2003 and 30 September 2004, the Special Rapporteur transmitted 201 communications to 63 countries, comprising 112 urgent appeals and 89 letters of allegations concerning 1,799 individuals who had reportedly suffered violations of their right to life. The report summarized the cases transmitted, noting that the response rate, which stood at about 54 per cent, meant that almost half of all the communications sent drew no response from the Governments concerned within a reasonable time period. Other parts of the report focused on genocide and crimes against humanity; violations of the right to life in armed conflict and internal strife; capital punishment; and violations of the right to life by non-State actors.

The Special Rapporteur noted that, despite several encouraging developments regarding UN system initiatives against genocide in the past year, the problem continued to be characterized by outright denial, refusal to address the issue, or undermining of the initiatives designed to respond to the most serious cases of alleged genocide. With a growing number of civilians being killed in situations of armed conflict and internal strife, respect for established and binding international norms was fading, illustrated partly by the proliferation of proposals seeking to justify illegal executions, which undermined the essential foundations of human rights law. Addressing capital punishment and related issues, including the need for transparency, the importance of periodic reviews of its implementation and cases where it was mandatory, the Special Rapporteur noted that killings by non-State actors were among the most complex issues that needed to be dealt with, and raised with Governments related matters with respect to State responsibility in that context. In effect, States could be held accountable for killings by non-State actors. Therefore, it was the obligation of Governments to be diligent in dealing with the problem. The Special Rapporteur recommended that States ratify the Statute of the International Criminal Court, in order to promote its objectives, among which was the prevention of genocide and crimes against humanity. In addition, permanent members of the UN Security Council should pledge not to use their veto power in cases involving genocide; proposals justifying or rationalizing the arbitrary execution of individuals alleged to have committed crimes or linked to terrorism should be condemned without reservations, given that they undermined international human rights law; and national investigation of alleged violations of international law by armed or security forces should be conducted, with their results made public.

The Special Rapporteur visited Nigeria (27 June–8 July) [E/CN.4/2006/53/Add.4], where serious problems existed regarding extrajudicial executions, illustrated by the alleged killing in police custody of armed robbers in the southeastern State of Enugu, in January, and by the framing and killing of six innocent civilians by the police in the Apo local Government area of Benue State in the east central part of the country, in June.

Other worrisome reports were the killing in 2004 by security forces of an innocent bystander who witnessed their misconduct during communal violence in Kano, northern Nigeria, and the death penalty by stoning under sharia (Muslim law) for such acts as adultery and homosexuality in a number of States. The problem largely stemmed from the fact that the Nigerian Police force, which was seriously under-resourced and confronted with a high rate of violent crime, often resorted to corruption, arbitrariness, torture, excessive use of force and executions, of which there were no systematic statistical record. As armed robbery was a capital offence, police often used that label as a pretext for extrajudicial executions or claimed that victims were attempting to escape from custody. Matters were worsened by the fact that the standing rules for use of firearms by the police were deeply flawed, and police officers' enjoyment of impunity facilitated extrajudicial executions. Overall, the problem was closely linked to inadequacies at almost all levels of the Nigerian criminal justice system: forensic investigation, coroner's inquiries, prosecution process, functioning of the judiciary, and detention procedures.

While acknowledging encouraging developments, such as the Government's efforts to combat corruption and public admission of the problem of widespread extrajudicial executions and commitment to ending it, the Special Rapporteur recommended that the Government introduce a standard practice of official inquiry into cases of extrajudicial executions and the publication within six months of the reports of such inquiries; declare the death penalty unconstitutional for such offences as adultery and sodomy, and remove armed robbery as a capital offence; commute the sentence of all prisoners who had spent years on death row; and review the convictions of all persons sentenced to death or life imprisonment under martial law. UNICEF should take up the review of death row prisoners for crimes committed before they were 18 years old. Other recommendations advocated accountability for extrajudicial executions through the establishment of an annual register for recording all such incidents, police reform, the end of the use of vigilante groups and community policing, international development assistance, and legislation to compel the cooperation of military and police officers with official inquiries.

In Sri Lanka (28 November–6 December) [E/CN.4/2006/53/Add.5], the Special Rapporteur found that extrajudicial executions were among the factors exacerbating the conflict between the Government and the rebel Liberation Tigers of Tamil Eelam (LTTE). Many Tamil and Muslim civilians had been killed because they sought to exercise their freedoms of expression, movement, association and participation in ways that were not supportive of one or another of the factions in the conflict, and many others had been killed in retaliation or because they were sympathizers. Unfortunately, almost none of those or other extrajudicial executions had been effectively investigated. In the light of those developments, the Special Rapporteur examined the problem of deaths in custody, the causes of which allegedly included the inadequate training of police in criminal investigation, the widespread use of torture to extract confessions and the failure to impose effective disciplinary measures against police officers guilty of torture. The Special Rapporteur made recommendations on, among other things, the need for a wide-ranging human rights agreement, including an effective monitoring mechanism; the importance of all parties to respect the provisions of the Geneva Convention Relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War; arrangements to compensate the families of all non-combatants killed during the conflict; effective police investigation of all extrajudicial killings and a programme to train police reservists in criminal detection and investigation; and the need for the LTTE to adopt concrete steps to demonstrate its commitment to human rights, including the denunciation of killings attributed to it.

Commission action. On 19 April [res. 2005/34], the Commission, by a recorded vote of 36 to none, with 17 abstentions, strongly condemned all extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions, and demanded that States end the practice in all its forms. The Commission asked the Secretary-General and the High Commissioner to use their best endeavours in cases where the minimum standard of legal safeguards provided for in the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights (see p. 726) appeared not to be respected. The Secretary-General was also asked to provide the Special Rapporteur with adequate resources, and to ensure that personnel specialized in human rights and humanitarian law formed part of UN missions, in order to deal with extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions.

Disappearance of persons

Draft instrument. Pursuant to a 2004 Commission request [YUN 2004, p. 730], the intersessional open-ended working group established to prepare a draft legally binding instrument for the protection of all persons from enforced disappearance held its fourth (31 January–11 February) [E/CN.4/2005/66] and fifth (12-23 September)

[E/CN.4/2006/57] sessions, both in Geneva. In January, the group continued to discuss the Chairman's working paper, which it first revised in 2004 [YUN 2004, p. 730], taking into account comments made by delegations and informal consultations. Relevant issues considered during the group's current session included the definition of enforced disappearance, the various obligations of States in terms of legislative and other measures to ensure the recognition of enforced disappearance as a criminal offence attracting consequences and penalties under national and international law, the form of the future instrument and functions of a monitoring body, as well as the number of ratifications necessary for its entry into force. In September, the group continued discussions on the draft instrument, focusing primarily on the articles on which agreement in principle was yet to be achieved. Those included draft article 2 on acts similar to enforced disappearances committed by non-State actors, draft article 20 on the refusal to provide information on a detainee, and draft article 32 on the extension of the instrument to all territories for whose international relations a State was responsible. Discussions also continued on the form of the instrument and nature and functions of the monitoring body. Subsequently, the group undertook a complete review of all substantive articles and final provisions of the draft instrument and approved them. A number of delegations made statements expressing satisfaction with the work accomplished by the group and emphasizing the importance of the new convention. In the absence of a provision on reservations, Egypt, supported by Iran, stated that it was understood that States parties had the right to enter reservations to any of the instrument's articles, in accordance with international jurisprudence and the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties [YUN 1986, p. 1006]. In response, the Chairperson said States parties would have the right to enter reservations at the time of accession, on the understanding that such reservations had to be in keeping with international law. In particular, if a reservation related to the substance of the instrument, other States parties could challenge it. On 23 September, the group adopted its report, ad referendum, to which was annexed the finalized draft instrument for transmission to the Commission and approval by the General Assembly.

Commission action. On 19 April [res. 2005/27], the Commission urged States to promote and give full effect to the 1992 Declaration on the Protection of All Persons from Enforced Disappearance, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 47/133 [YUN 1992, p. 744], and to cooperate with the Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances (see below). The Working Group was asked to report in 2006 and States to provide it with information on preventative measures and action taken to give effect to the Declaration. The Secretary-General was asked to assist it, to provide the requisite resources to update the database on cases of enforced disappearance and to inform the Commission of steps taken to disseminate and promote the Declaration. The Commission asked the intersessional working group (see above) to meet for 10 days before the end of the year to complete its work and to report in 2006.

On 25 July, the Economic and Social Council approved the Commission's request to the intersessional working group (decision 2005/262).

Working Group activities. The five-member Working Group on Involuntary Disappearances held three sessions in 2005: its seventy-fifth (Bangkok, 26 May–3 June), seventy-sixth (an e-meeting to consider only individual cases), and seventy-seventh (Geneva, 21-30 November) [E/CN.4/2006/56]. In addition to its core mandate, which was to act as a channel of communication between families of disappeared persons and the Governments concerned, with a view to ensuring that sufficiently documented individual cases were investigated, the Working Group monitored States' compliance with the 1992 Declaration. Cases under active consideration by the Group totalled 41,128, concerning 79 countries with outstanding cases of alleged disappearance. Up to 30 November, the last day of its seventy-seventh session, the Group had transmitted 535 new cases of disappearance to 22 States, 91 of which allegedly occurred in 2005. It also sent 132 urgent action appeals to 12 countries, filed 15 others jointly with other Commission special procedures and clarified 1,347 cases. The Group's report summarized information concerning disappearances received from 81 countries. The Group, regretting the continuing occurrence of the phenomenon of disappearances in many countries, expressed concern that children had been affected in a number of cases, which was a particularly heinous crime.While in the past the phenomenon was mainly associated with the polices of authoritarian regimes, currently it occurred in more complex situations of internal conflict or tensions that generated violence, humanitarian crises and human rights violations. The Group was especially troubled about alleged linkages of disappearances to the war on terror, as some countries used the need to combat terrorism as a justification to repress opposition groups, which sometimes resulted in disappearances. The Group called on Governments to comply with their obligations under relevant provisions of the 1992 Declaration, reminding them that preventive measures, aimed at democratizing governance and making human rights the cornerstone of public policy, were crucial to combatting disappearances. A further goal of public policy in that regard, was the eradication of the culture of impunity for perpetrators of enforced disappearances. Concerned that the culprits might take advantage of post-conflict amnesty laws to escape justice and that such a situation might result in impunity, the Group, in an effort to contribute to the progressive development of international law on the subject, adopted a general comment on article 18 of the 1992 Declaration, which precluded exemption from criminal proceedings or sanctions for persons involved in all acts of enforced disappearance. The Group also commissioned a comparative study on the criminal law treatment of enforced or involuntary disappearances and invited Governments to provide related information within their national law, for inclusion in the study, scheduled for publication in 2006.

Two Working Group members visited Colombia (5-13 July) [E/CN.4/2006/56/Add.1] to monitor progress made since the Group's first visit [YUN 1988, p. 522] in preventing and resolving the problem of enforced or involuntary disappearances, and to investigate the development of the phenomenon in the country. The Group noted that, since 1988, Colombia, which had been in the throes of internal conflict and related human rights violations, had developed constitutional and legal mechanisms for dealing with enforced disappearances. Against that background, significant changes included constitutional provisions forbidding the phenomenon, incorporation into its criminal code of a definition of enforced disappearance that included all the elements of the 1992 Declaration, the country's ratification of the Inter-American Convention on Forced Disappearance of Persons, and the establishment of a number of State institutions to deal with the phenomenon. Despite the progress illustrated by those developments, the Group observed contradictory views of the situation from NGOs and the Government and between the authorities within and outside the capital. Additional shortcomings included the existence of a gap between the legal progress made and practical implementation of relevant laws and procedures, overlapping functions of institutions and agencies and competing programmes and missions, legal challenges regarding the definition of the criminal offence of enforced disappearance relative to non-State actors, difficulties in tracing the fate and whereabouts of victims, and inadequate reporting of cases. Other matters of concern related to the legal provisions for the demobilization of paramilitaries in relation to enforced disappearances, the protection regime and an environment of fear and terror under which most victims and their families lived, and the Government's lack of political will to root out the problem of disappearances in Colombia. The Group made recommendations for tackling the situation of ongoing disappearances in the country, protecting the families of victims and the NGOs working to locate them, solving the situation of underreported cases due to fear and impunity, and implementing more effectively existing legal mechanisms on disappearances.

Holocaust remembrance

In November, the General Assembly, reaffirming that the Holocaust, which resulted in the murder of one third of the Jewish people, along with countless members of other minorities, would forever be a warning of the dangers of hatred, bigotry, racism, and prejudice, resolved to designate 27 January as an international day of commemoration in memory of the victims of the Holocaust (see below).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 1 November [meeting 42], the General Assembly adopted resolution 60/7 [draft: A/60/L.12 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 72].

Holocaust remembrance

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, which proclaims that everyone is entitled to all the rights and freedoms set forth therein, without distinction of any kind, such as race, religion or other status,

Recalling article 3 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, which states that everyone has the right to life, liberty and security of person,

Recalling also article 18 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and article 18 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, which state that everyone has the right to freedom of thought, conscience and religion,

Bearing in mind that the founding principle of the Charter of the United Nations, "to save succeeding generations from the scourge of war", is testimony to the indelible link between the United Nations and the unique tragedy of the Second World War,

Recalling the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide, which was adopted in order to avoid repetition of genocides such as those committed by the Nazi regime,

Recalling also the preamble of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, which states that disregard and contempt for human rights have resulted in barbarous acts which have outraged the conscience of mankind,

Taking note of the fact that the sixtieth session of the General Assembly is taking place during the sixtieth year of the defeat of the Nazi regime,

Recalling the twenty-eighth special session of the General Assembly, a unique event, held in commemoration of the sixtieth anniversary of the liberation of the Nazi concentration camps,

Honouring the courage and dedication shown by the soldiers who liberated the concentration camps, Reaffirming that the Holocaust, which resulted in the murder of one third of the Jewish people, along with countless members of other minorities, will forever be a warning to all people of the dangers of hatred, bigotry, racism and prejudice,

1. Resolves that the United Nations will designate 27 January as an annual International Day of Commemoration in memory of the victims of the Holocaust;

2. Urges Member States to develop educational programmes that will inculcate future generations with the lessons of the Holocaust in order to help to prevent future acts of genocide, and in this context commends the Task Force for International Cooperation on Holocaust Education, Remembrance and Research;

3. Rejects any denial of the Holocaust as an historical event, either in full or part;

4. Commends those States which have actively engaged in preserving those sites that served as Nazi death camps, concentration camps, forced labour camps and prisons during the Holocaust;

5. Condemns without reserve all manifestations of religious intolerance, incitement, harassment or violence against persons or communities based on ethnic origin or religious belief, wherever they occur;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to establish a programme of outreach on the subject of the "Holocaust and the United Nations" as well as measures to mobilize civil society for Holocaust remembrance and education, in order to help to prevent future acts of genocide; to report to the General Assembly on the establishment of this programme within six months from the date of the adoption of the present resolution; and to report thereafter on the implementation of the programme at its sixty-third session.

Communication. On 9 December, in identical letters addressed to the Secretary-General and the President of the Security Council [A/60/586-S/2005/776], Israel called attention to Iran's statements, which reportedly cast doubt on the truth of the Holocaust. Noting that Iran had joined to adopt by consensus General Assembly resolution 60/7 (see above) on Holocaust remembrance, which rejected any denial of the Holocaust as an historical event, Israel urged the international community to take swift and strong action against Iran.

Torture and cruel treatment

Reports of Special Rapporteur. In response to a 2004 Commission request [YUN 2004, p. 733], the Special Rapporteur on torture, Theo van Boven (Netherlands), submitted his final report to the Commission [E/CN.4/2005/62] describing his activities from 16 December 2003 to 30 November 2004. He had sent 223 letters to 77 countries on alleged torture of individuals and 330 urgent appeals to 72 Governments on behalf of individuals who, it was feared, might suffer torture and other forms of ill-treatment. A summary of communications sent by the Special Rapporteur and of replies received were contained in an addendum to the report [E/CN.4/2005/62/Add.1]. Building on the findings of his 2003 preliminary study [YUN 2003, p. 741] on the situation of trade in and production of equipment specifically designed to inflict torture or other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment, its origin, destination and forms, the Special Rapporteur outlined a policy strategy for preventing effectively the spread of torture technology—instruments and techniques commonly used in law enforcement but implicated in torture and ill-treatment. From that perspective, the report highlighted some of the challenges in measuring the global trade and proliferation of such instruments and techniques; considered the need to monitor developments in security and law enforcement technology that could easily be used for torture, as well as the transfer of interrogation techniques, know-how and hardware; and updated information regarding the European Commission's proposal for trade regulation, referred to in the Special Rapporteur's 2003 preliminary report [ibid.]. Within the existing framework of international standards to prohibit torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, the Special Rapporteur made a series of recommendations to States regarding the manufacture, transfer, use and prohibition of products and techniques designed specifically to inflict torture, and asked his successor and the Committee against Torture (see p. 730) to examine the trade in torture instruments in the course of their work.

Commission action. On 19 April [res. 2005/39], the Commission, condemning all forms of torture, urged States to become parties to the 1984 Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment (see p. 729). Governments were called up on to prohibit the practice; prevent the production, trade, export and use of equipment specifically designed for it; and not to expel, return, extradite or transfer a person to another State where he or she might be subjected to torture. The Special Rapporteur was asked to submit an interim report to the General Assembly in 2005 on the overall trends and developments regarding his mandate, and a full report to the Commission in 2006.

On 25 July, the Economic and Social Council endorsed the Commission's requests to the Special Rapporteur (decision 2005/265).

Subcommission action. On 8 August [res. 2005/1], the Subcommission recommended that all States develop independent and effective mechanisms as concrete means of combating torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment.

On 10 August [res. 2005/12], the Subcommission, by a roll-call vote of 21 to 1, with 2 abstentions, concluded that the transfer of a person to a State where that person could face a real risk of being subjected to torture, cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or extrajudicial killing would be a breach of customary international law. It recommended that in situations where there was such a risk, no transfer should be carried out unless the State effecting the transfer sought and received credible assurances from the State to which the person was to be transferred that he or she would not be subjected to torture.

Further reports of Special Rapporteur. In 2005, the new Special Rapporteur on torture, Manfred Nowak (Austria), appointed in November 2004 [YUN 2004, p. 733], visited Georgia (19-25 February) [E/CN.4/2005/62/Add.3] to assess the prevailing situation of torture, promote preventive mechanisms and initiate cooperation with the Government. While acknowledging the Government's efforts to tackle corruption, uphold the rule of law and reform the criminal justice system, torture and ill-treatment by law enforcement officials still existed in the country. The common characteristics of the cases examined by the Special Rapporteur included the perpetration of torture in the first 72 hours of police custody to extract confessions for alleged offences, and the methods used, such as beatings with fists, butts of guns and truncheons, as well as electric shocks and cigarette burns. In those circumstances, victims suffered broken bones, burns, scars and neuro-psychological effects, among other things. The Special Rapporteur made preliminary recommendations addressing impunity, detention conditions, preventive measures against torture, the need to abolish the death penalty and for international cooperation in assisting the country's implementation of his recommendations.

In Mongolia (6-9 June) [E/CN.4/2006/6/Add.4], the Special Rapporteur also found that torture existed, particularly in police stations and pretrial detention facilities, as evidenced by two recent instances of detainees tortured to death. Impunity for torture and ill-treatment continued unimpeded, owing to the absence in the criminal code of a definition of torture that was consistent with the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment (see p. 729), the lack of effective mechanisms to investigate alleged cases, and a basic lack of awareness of prosecutors, lawyers and the judiciary of international standards relating to the prohibition of torture. Consequently, victims had no effective recourse to justice, compensation and rehabilitation. Issues of particular concern included overcrowding in detention facilities, the situation of prisoners subjected to special isolation regimes and compelled to serve several-year terms virtually in total isolation, and the situation of death row inmates, who were also held in complete isolation, handcuffed, shackled and denied adequate food. The Special Rapporteur recommended, among other things, that the authorities declare a policy of non-tolerance for torture and end the culture of impunity; ensure those legally arrested were not held for more than the time required by law, including through an amendment of the Criminal Procedure Code; ensure confessions were obtained appropriately; provide for an independent authority to promptly and thoroughly investigate all allegations of torture; and end the special isolation regime and ensure death row inmates were detained in accordance with the standard minimum rules for the treatment of prisoners.

Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 59/182 [YUN 2004, p. 735] and Commission resolution 2005/39 (see p. 812), the Secretary-General, in August, transmitted the interim report of the Special Rapporteur [A/60/316], which further described his activities and addressed issues of special concern. In addition to the communications contained in his report to the Commission (see above), the Special Rapporteur transmitted 41 letters of alleged torture to 30 Governments and 133 urgent appeals to 47 Governments on behalf of persons who might be at risk of torture or other forms of ill-treatment. He drew the Assembly's attention to the issue of corporal punishment—amputation, stoning, strangulation, eye-gouging, flogging and beating—which was of particular concern and which many States justified as lawfully sanctioned punishment under domestic or religious law falling outside the prohibition against torture. After reviewing relevant jurisprudence of UN human rights treaty bodies and regional human rights mechanisms, the Special Rapporteur concluded that corporal punishment was, to the contrary, inconsistent with international instruments prohibiting torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment. He also addressed the principle of non-refoulment and the use of diplomatic assurances or formal guarantees between Governments that a person to be returned would not be subjected to torture, ill-treatment or the death penalty and would be afforded the right to a fair trial. The Special Rapporteur determined, in that regard, that such assurances were unreliable and ineffective in protecting against torture and called on Governments to observe the principle of non-refoulment scrupulously and not to expel any person to frontiers or territories where they might run the risk of human rights violations.

The Special Rapporteur visited Nepal (10-16 September) [E/CN.4/2006/6/Add.5] to examine numerous allegations relating to torture and ill-treatment he had received, primarily within the context of the Government's armed conflict with the Communist Party of Nepal (Maoist). He found that the police and Royal Nepalese Army (RNA) systematically practiced torture, including beatings with bamboo poles and plastic pipes, kicking with boots, pouring water into the nose, electric shocks to the ears, trampling on thighs and legs, and maintaining prisoners in stress positions, among other things. Despite constitutional and legal provisions to safeguard the rights of criminal suspects, many of those rights were not being respected, including timely access to a lawyer, arraignment before a judge within 24 hours of arrest and medical examinations upon arrest or transfer. Detainees registers were poorly kept, if at all, and there was a general lack of confidence in the justice system and rule of law among torture victims and their families. Preventive detention legislation, such as the Public Security Act and the Terrorist and Disruptive Activities Ordinance, provided the police and military with sweeping powers to detain suspects for preventive reasons, sometimes for months. Of particular concern, was a culture of impunity for torture, which emphasized compensation to the victims as an alternative to criminal proceedings against the perpetrator. The Special Rapporteur recommended corrective measures to the Government, including the denouncement of torture and impunity by the highest authorities; the criminalization of incommunicado detention; independent medical examination of how persons in custody were treated; prompt investigations of all allegations of torture and the suspension from duty of public officials indicted for abuse of torture; compensation to victims; and requisite training for security officials, legal professionals and the judiciary. He also called on the Maoists to end torture and recommended that the Government continue to cooperate with relevant international organizations, including OHCHR, in requesting assistance with the follow-up to his recommendations.

According to the Special Rapporteur, Nepal subsequently objected to his findings and maintained that it did not tolerate, condone or permit torture, nor did it allow impunity.

Communication. On 21 March [E/CN.4/2005/G/21], Uzbekistan stated that it had implemented 18 of the 22 recommendations made by the former Special Rapporteur, and provided information relating to the measures it had taken.

Voluntary fund for victims of torture

Commission action. On 19 April [res. 2005/39], the Commission, recognizing the need for international assistance to victims of torture, appealed to Governments, organizations and individuals to contribute annually to the United Nations Voluntary Fund for Victims of Torture and, if possible, to increase their contributions. The Secretary-General was asked to continue to include the Fund among the programmes receiving donations at the annual UN Pledging Conference for Development Activities and to ensure adequate staffing and technical facilities for UN bodies and mechanisms dealing with torture. The Fund's Board of Trustees was asked to report in 2006.

Report of Secretary-General. An August report of the Secretary-General [A/60/215] provided information on the recommendations of the Fund's Board of Trustees at its twenty-fourth session (Geneva, 13-22 April). Contributions received during the year totaled $8,736,785 from 25 countries and three individuals, while pledges stood at $1,444,327 from seven States. Against requests amounting to $14 million, the Board recommended that $8.5 million be allocated to new grants, to fund 186 projects in 68 countries providing medical, legal, social, economic and psychological assistance to victims of torture and members of their families, which were approved on 27 May by the High Commissioner, on behalf of the Secretary-General. Annexed to the Board's report was a list of the organizations and activities financed by the Fund in 2005. The Board maintained the practice of financing requests for training and seminars, and recommended, in that regard, that the amount of $50,000 be allocated for the organization of six workshops. It also allocated $125,000 for emergency assistance to organizations that might encounter unforeseen financial difficulties before its next session. The Board estimated that $15 million would be needed to enable it assist torture victims in 2006. The report also summarized action taken by the Fund's secretariat to implement the recommendations of the Office of Internal Oversight Services during its 2004 review of the Fund's functioning [YUN 2004, p. 734].

On 16 December (decision 60/533), the General Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's report.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December [meeting 64], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/60/509/Add.1], adopted resolution 60/148 without vote [agenda item 71 (a)].

Torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming that no one shall be subjected to torture or to other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment,

Recalling that freedom from torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment is a non-derogable right that must be protected under all circumstances, including in times of international or internal armed conflict or disturbance, and that the absolute prohibition of torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment is affirmed in relevant international instruments,

Recalling also that a number of international, regional and domestic courts, including the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991, have recognized that the prohibition of torture is a peremptory norm of international law and have held that the prohibition of cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment is customary international law,

Recalling further the definition of torture contained in article 1 of the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment,

Noting that under the Geneva Conventions of 1949 torture and inhuman treatment are a grave breach and that under the statutes of the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia and of the International Criminal Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Genocide and Other Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of Rwanda and Rwandan Citizens Responsible for Genocide and Other Such Violations Committed in the Territory of Neighbouring States between 1 January and 31 December 1994, and the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court acts of torture constitute war crimes and can constitute crimes against humanity,

Commending the persistent efforts by non-governmental organizations, including the considerable network of centres for the rehabilitation of victims of torture, to combat torture and to alleviate the suffering of victims of torture,

1. Condemns all forms of torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, including through intimidation, which are and shall remain prohibited at any time and in any place whatsoever and can thus never be justified, and calls upon all States to implement fully the absolute prohibition of torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment;

2. Emphasizes that States must take persistent, determined and effective measures to prevent and combat torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, including their gender-based manifestations, and also emphasizes the importance of taking fully into account the recommendations and conclusions of the relevant treaty bodies and mechanisms, including the Committee against Torture and the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment;

3. Condemns any action or attempt by States or public officials to legalize, authorize or acquiesce in torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment under any circumstances, including on grounds of national security or through judicial decisions;

4. Stresses that all allegations of torture or other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment must be promptly and impartially examined by the competent national authority, that those who encourage, order, tolerate or perpetrate acts of torture must be held responsible and severely punished, including the officials in charge of the place of detention where the prohibited act is found to have been committed, and takes note in this respect of the Principles on the Effective Investigation and Documentation of Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment (the Istanbul Principles) as a useful tool in efforts to combat torture;

5. Stresses also that all acts of torture must be made offences under domestic criminal law, and emphasizes that acts of torture are serious violations of international humanitarian law and in this regard constitute war crimes and can constitute crimes against humanity, and that the perpetrators of all acts of torture must be prosecuted and punished;

6. Urges States to ensure that any statement that is established to have been made as a result of torture shall not be invoked as evidence in any proceedings, except against a person accused of torture as evidence that the statement was made;

7. Stresses that States must not punish personnel who are involved in the custody, interrogation or treatment of any individual subjected to any form of arrest, detention or imprisonment for not obeying orders to commit or conceal acts amounting to torture or other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment;

8. Urges States not to expel, return ("refouler"), extradite or in any other way transfer a person to another State where there are substantial grounds for believing that the person would be in danger of being subjected to torture, and recognizes that diplomatic assurances, where used, do not release States from their obligations under international human rights, humanitarian and refugee law, in particular the principle of non-refoulement;

9. Stresses that national legal systems must ensure that victims of torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment obtain redress, are awarded fair and adequate compensation and receive appropriate social and medical rehabilitation, urges States to take effective measures to this end, and in this regard encourages the development of rehabilitation centres;

10. Recalls its resolution 43/173 of 9 December 1988 on the Body of Principles for the Protection of All Persons under Any Form of Detention or Imprisonment, and in this context stresses that ensuring that any individual arrested or detained is promptly brought before a judge or other independent judicial officer in person and permitting prompt and regular medical care and legal counsel as well as visits by family members and independent monitoring mechanisms can be effective measures for the prevention of torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment and punishment;

11. Reminds all States that prolonged incommunicado detention or detention in secret places may facilitate the perpetration of torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment and can in itself constitute a form of such treatment, and urges all States to respect the safeguards concerning the liberty, security and dignity of the person;

12. Calls upon all States to take appropriate effective legislative, administrative, judicial and other measures to prevent and prohibit the production, trade, export and use of equipment that is specifically designed to inflict torture or other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment;

13. Urges all States that have not yet done so to become parties to the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment as a matter of priority;

14. Invites all States parties to the Convention that have not yet done so to make the declarations provided for in articles 21 and 22 of the Convention concerning inter-State and individual communications, to consider the possibility of withdrawing their reservations to article 20 of the Convention and to notify the Secretary-General of their acceptance of the amendments to articles 17 and 18 of the Convention as soon as possible;

15. Urges States parties to comply strictly with their obligations under the Convention, including, in view of the high number of reports not submitted in time, their obligation to submit reports in accordance with article 19 of the Convention, and invites States parties to incorporate a gender perspective and information concerning children and juveniles when submitting reports to the Committee against Torture;

16. Calls upon States parties to give early consideration to signing and ratifying the Optional Protocol to the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, which provides further measures for use in the fight against and prevention of torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment;

17. Welcomes the work of the Committee against Torture and the report of the Committee, submitted in accordance with article 24 of the Convention;

18. Calls upon the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, in conformity with her mandate established by the General Assembly in its resolution 48/141 of 20 December 1993, to continue to provide, at the request of States, advisory services for the prevention of torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, including for the preparation of national reports to the Committee against Torture and for the establishment and operation of national preventive mechanisms, as well as technical assistance for the development, production and distribution of teaching material for this purpose;

19. Notes with appreciation the interim report of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, and encourages the Special Rapporteur to continue to include in his recommendations proposals on the prevention and investigation of torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, including its gender-based manifestations;

20. Requests the Special Rapporteur to continue to consider including in his report information on the follow-up by States to his recommendations, visits and communications, including progress made and problems encountered, and on other official contacts;

21. Calls upon all States to cooperate with and assist the Special Rapporteur in the performance of his task, to supply all necessary information requested by the Special Rapporteur, to fully and expeditiously respond to and follow up his urgent appeals, to give serious consideration to responding favourably to requests by the Special Rapporteur to visit their countries and to enter into a constructive dialogue with the Special Rapporteur on requested visits to their countries as well as with respect to the follow-up to his recommendations;

22. Stresses the need for the continued regular exchange of views among the Committee against Torture, the Special Rapporteur and other relevant United Nations mechanisms and bodies, as well as for the pursuance of cooperation with relevant United Nations programmes, notably the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme, with a view to enhancing further their effectiveness and cooperation on issues relating to torture, inter alia, by improving their coordination;

23. Recognizes the global need for international assistance to victims of torture, stresses the importance of the work of the Board of Trustees of the United Nations Voluntary Fund for Victims of Torture, and appeals to all States and organizations to contribute annually to the Fund, preferably with a substantial increase in the level of contributions;

24. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to transmit to all States the appeals of the General Assembly for contributions to the Fund and to include the Fund on an annual basis among the programmes for which funds are pledged at the United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities;

25. Also requests the Secretary-General to ensure, within the overall budgetary framework of the United Nations, the provision of adequate staff and facilities for the bodies and mechanisms involved in combating torture and assisting victims of torture commensurate with the strong support expressed by Member States for combating torture and assisting victims of torture, noting the upcoming entry into force of the Optional Protocol to the Convention;

26. Further requests the Secretary-General to submit to the Commission on Human Rights at its sixty-second session and to the General Assembly at its sixty-first session a report on the status of the Convention and a report on the operations of the Fund;

27. Calls upon all States, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and other United Nations bodies and agencies, as well as relevant intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, to commemorate, on 26 June, the United Nations International Day in Support of Victims of Torture;

28. Decides to consider at its sixty-first session the reports of the Secretary-General, including the report on the United Nations Voluntary Fund for Victims of Torture, the report of the Committee against Torture and the interim report of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment.

Right to peaceful assembly

On 19 April [res. 2005/37], the Commission, by a recorded vote of 45 to none, with 8 abstentions, called on Member States to respect and protect the rights of individuals to associate and to assembly peacefully, and to ensure that any restrictions on the free exercise of those rights were in accordance with international law. OHCHR was asked to assist States in that regard, including through technical assistance, and to cooperate in doing so with relevant UN system bodies and other intergovernmental organizations. The Commission encouraged civil society, including NGOs and the private sector, to promote and facilitate the rights, and called upon the Commission's special procedures to consider them in their work.

Freedom of expression

Report of Special Rapporteur. In accordance with a 2002 Commission request [YUN 2002, p. 716], the Special Rapporteur on the promotion and protection of the right to freedom of opinion and expression, Ambeyi Ligabo (Kenya), described his 2004 activities [E/CN.4/2005/64 & Corr. 1]. He had sent 449 urgent appeals and 161 allegation letters on behalf of 1,782 individuals whose rights to freedom of opinion and expression were reportedly threatened or violated. The texts of the communications he had sent and the replies received from Governments were summarized in an addendum [E/CN.4/2005/64/Add.1]. The Special Rapporteur also updated information contained in his previous report [YUN 2004, p. 736], particularly concerning the right of access to information, and in the light of the final session of the World Summit on the Information Society (see p. 933), he reviewed UN action regarding the freedom of opinion and expression, in order to derive new proposals for future direction. He concluded that, despite some progress, the situation remained grim. While a number of countries had adopted positive measures, several others had recently enacted restrictive legislation, particularly against new forms of freedom of expression and defamation. Many Governments used anti-terrorism and national security legislation to restrict that freedom. The Special Rapporteur found that media security and concentration were major sources of concern, with numerous journalists killed while performing their duties, either by paramilitary groups or undercover law enforcement officials, rebel groups or terrorists. Yet, most of those crimes were not adequately punished. The Special Rapporteur recommended, among other things, that Governments review existing practices and take remedial actions in all fields relating to the promotion and protection of freedom of expression. He encouraged civil society organizations to continue to provide him with information on the realization and violations of the right to that freedom and reiterated his proposal to the Commission for a study on the security of journalists, especially in armed conflict situations. He would give further consideration to the drafting of a set of recommendations supporting a comparative study of measures to better implement the right of access to information.

Commission action. On 19 April [res. 2005/38], the Commission called on States to ensure respect for the right to freedom of opinion and expression; end violations of the right and create conditions to prevent such violations; and ensure that victims of violations had an effective remedy. It extended the Special Rapporteur's mandate for a period of three years and asked him to report in 2006, and the Secretary-General to assist him.

On 25 July, the Economic and Social Council approved the Commission's request to the Special Rapporteur (decision 2005/264).

Communication. On 18 March [E/CN.4/2005/G/20], Italy transmitted its observations on the Special Rapporteur's report, following his 2004 visit to the country [YUN 2004, p. 738], particularly regarding legislation on the organization of its broadcasting system and alleged public subsidies and conflicts of interest in the media sector.

Terrorism

Report of High Commissioner. In response to General Assembly resolution 59/191 [YUN 2004, p. 741] and to a 2004 Commission request [ibid., p. 739], the High Commissioner submitted a report [E/CN.4/2005/100] reviewing action taken by her Office and the UN human rights system to further protect human rights and fundamental freedoms while countering terrorism. In addition to its work with the Security Council's Counter-Terrorism Committee (see p. 107) and others in the area of technical assistance, OHCHR maintained cooperation and information exchange on the subject with other partners, including the Council of Europe and the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe. Moreover, the Office had assumed a central role in the framework for cooperation in confronting new challenges to international peace and security, including international terrorism. It also provided support to the Commission's independent expert on the protection of human rights while countering terrorism (see below) and to the Subcommission's work on the subject. OHCHR continued to update the Digest of Jurisprudence of the United Nations and Regional Organizations on the Protection of Human Rights while Countering Terrorism, first compiled in 2003 [YUN 2003, p. 746], and reviewed in 2004 [YUN 2004, p. 739]. The High Commissioner, noting that UN human rights mechanisms remained concerned over counter-terrorism measures that jeopardized human rights and fundamental freedoms, expressed the hope that strengthened action by the United Nations on the issue would result in more consistent adherence by States to international human rights obligations in their efforts to counter terrorism.

Report of independent expert. By a 7 February note [E/CN.4/2005/103], the High Commissioner transmitted the report of the independent expert on the protection of human rights while countering terrorism, Robert K. Goldman (United States), prepared in response to a 2004 Commission request [YUN 2004, p. 739]. Building on the High Commissioner's 2004 study [ibid., p. 740] relating to the compatibility of national counter-terrorism measures with international human rights obligations, the report identified key issues affecting the enjoyment of human rights in the struggle against terrorism that had not been addressed or extensively developed by other mandate holders. Those issues included the question of upholding the rule of law while countering terrorism, within the context of human rights protection in emergency situations; the role of the civilian judiciary in supervising counter-terrorism measures; the applicability and relevance of international humanitarian law; the relationship between international human rights and humanitarian law during armed conflicts; the principle of nullum crimen sine lege (pertaining to the principles of criminal law) and the definitions of terrorism and related offences; the rights to liberty and security of persons, of detained children, to due process and a fair trial and to humane treatment; to property and to privacy; the role of military tribunals; the principle of non-refoulement and the inter-State transfer of persons, including terrorist suspects; diplomatic assurances; and the principle of non-discrimination and techniques to screen terrorist suspects. The report also considered ways to strengthen the UN human rights mechanisms for protecting human rights and fundamental freedoms while countering terrorism, and concluded that, despite significant efforts in that regard by the UN human rights system, gaps existed in the coverage of the monitoring systems of the special procedures and the treaty bodies. The expert recommended that the Commission consider the creation of a special procedure with a multidimensional mandate to monitor States' counter-terrorism measures and their compatibility with international human rights law.

Commission action. On 19 April [dec. 2005/107], the Commission, acknowledging the 2004 final report of the Special Rapporteur on terrorism and human rights, Kalliopi Koufa (Greece) [YUN 2004, p. 739], decided, by a recorded vote of 40 to 2, with 11 abstentions, to recommend to the Economic and Social Council that all the reports and documents she had submitted be compiled and published as part of the Human Rights Study Series.

On 21 April [res. 2005/80], the Commission, deploring human rights violations in the fight against terrorism, reaffirmed that States needed to ensure that measures to combat terrorism complied with their obligations under international law, particularly regarding human rights, refugee and humanitarian law. States were also encouraged to take into account relevant UN resolutions and decisions on human rights while countering terrorism. The Commission requested the High Commissioner to examine the matter, make recommendations concerning States' obligations, provide assistance and advice to States upon their request, and to report regularly on the implementation of the Commission's current resolution. The Commission decided to appoint, for three years, a special rapporteur on the promotion and protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms while countering terrorism, with a mandate to: make concrete recommendations on the matter; gather, request, receive and exchange information and communications with Governments and other actors regarding alleged violations; identify, exchange and promote best practices on counter-terrorism measures that respected human rights and fundamental freedoms; work in close coordination with other relevant UN bodies and mechanisms; develop regular dialogue between all relevant actors; and report regularly to the Commission and the General Assembly.

On 25 July, the Economic and Social Council approved the Commission's decision to appoint a special rapporteur and its requests to the High Commissioner (decision 2005/279).

Also in July, the Commission appointed Martin Scheinin (Finland) as the new Special Rapporteur on the protection and promotion of human rights and fundamental freedoms while countering terrorism.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 25 July, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on Human Rights [E/2005/23], adopted decision 2005/286 by recorded vote (33-2-14) [agenda item 14 (g)].

Terrorism and human rights

At its 38th plenary meeting, on 25 July 2005, the Economic and Social Council took note of Commission on Human Rights decision 2005/107 of 19 April 2005, and endorsed the Commission's recommendation that a compilation into a comprehensive document of all the reports and documents submitted to date by the Special Rapporteur of the Subcommission on the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights on terrorism and human rights be published as a United Nations publication as part of the Human Rights Study Series.

RECORDED VOTE ON DECISION 2005/286:

In favour: Armenia, Azerbaijan, Bangladesh, Belize, Brazil, China, Colombia, Costa Rica, Cuba, Ecuador, Guinea, India, Indonesia, Jamaica, Japan, Kenya, Malaysia, Mauritius, Mexico, Mozambique, Namibia, Nicaragua, Pakistan, Panama, Russian Federation, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, South Africa, Thailand, Tunisia, Turkey, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania.

Against: Australia, United States.

Abstaining: Albania, Belgium, Canada, Denmark, France, Germany, Iceland, Ireland, Italy, Lithuania, Poland, Republic of Korea, Spain, United Kingdom.

Working Group. The sessional working group established by the Subcommission in 2004 [YUN 2004, p. 740] to elaborate detailed principles and guidelines concerning the promotion and protection of human rights when combating terrorism met during the year (2-3 August) [E/CN.4/Sub.2/2005/43]. The group discussed issues relating to its mandate and heard comments from Subcommission experts, Member States, national human rights institutions and NGOs. The group had before it an expanded working paper containing a preliminary framework draft of principles and guidelines concerning human rights and terrorism, prepared by the Special Rapporteur on terrorism and human rights, Kalliopi K. Koufa (Greece), in response to a 2004 Subcommission request [YUN 2004, p. 740], as well as her preliminary working paper which the Subcommission had considered in 2004 [ibid.]. The group decided to continue its work in 2006 and requested Ms. Koufa, who also served as its Chairperson, to update her draft. In related action, it requested that four papers be prepared for the Subcommission's consideration, and mandated Ms. Koufa to prepare the first, which would elaborate on the issues outlined in her draft and on exceptions and derogations, based on the Committee on Human Rights general comment No. 29 of 2001 [YUN 2001, p. 590] concerning derogations during a state of emergency. The group mandated Marc Bossuyt (Belgium) and Ibrahim Salama (Egypt) to prepare the second paper on freedom of expression; Françoise Hampson (United Kingdom), the third, on international judicial cooperation; and Emmanuel Decaux (France), the fourth, on the rights of victims of terrorist acts.

Subcommission action. On 25 July [dec. 2005/103], the Subcommission decided to establish a sessional working group to elaborate detailed principles and guidelines concerning the promotion and protection of human rights when combating terrorism.

On 11 August [res. 2005/31], the Subcommission endorsed the recommendations contained in the report of the sessional working group (see above) and requested OHCHR to disseminate them to States, UN system bodies, regional intergovernmental organizations, national human rights institutions, NGOs, UN bodies, agencies and other mechanisms. It invited stakeholders to provide information and data to the working group to assist it in carrying out its mandate.

Reports of Secretary-General. In accordance with General Assembly resolution 59/195 [YUN 2004, p. 742], the Secretary-General submitted a September report [A/60/326] summarizing replies received from seven Governments in response to an OHCHR questionnaire seeking the views of Member States on the implications of terrorism in all its forms and manifestations for the full enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms, and on the possible establishment of a voluntary fund for victims of terrorism and on ways to rehabilitate them.

On 16 December, the Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's report on human rights and terrorism (above) (decision 60/533).

Pursuant to Assembly resolution 59/191 [YUN 2004, p. 741], and to Commission resolution 2005/80 (see p. 818), the Secretary-General, on 22 September [A/60/374], provided an overview of developments in the United Nations regarding the protection of human rights while fighting against terrorism. Most notably, he had delivered an address to the International Summit on Democracy, Terrorism and Security (10 March, Madrid, Spain), in which he outlined the five elements of the UN strategy for responding to the terrorist threat, as recommended by the High-level Panel on Threats, Challenges and Change [YUN 2004, p. 54]. Those elements were to: defend human rights in the struggle against terrorism; dissuade disaffected groups from choosing terrorism as a tactic; deny terrorists the means to carry out their attacks; deter States from supporting terrorist groups; and develop State capacity to prevent terrorism. An implementation task force established for that strategy held its first meeting during the year. The report also reflected on relevant activities undertaken by the High Commissioner and OHCHR, and by the Commission, human rights treaty bodies and special procedures. A particularly important development during the year was the Commission's appointment of a Special Rapporteur on the promotion and protection of human rights while countering terrorism. The report also summarized the deliberations and outcome of an expert seminar (Strasbourg, France, 13-14 June) on human rights, counter-terrorism and states of emergency, organised by OHCHR to explore ways of strengthening human rights protection in counter-terrorism measures at the national level. The seminar had discussed the general principles of human rights in the counter-terrorism context; national experiences with states of emergency; fundamental principles of fair trial; torture; extradition; and non-refoulement. The seminar adopted conclusions aimed at further defending human rights while combating terror and identified issues requiring further attention.

The Secretary-General concluded that, while States had a duty to protect their citizens from terrorism, counter-terrorism measures needed to conform with international human rights, humanitarian and refugee law, which was currently not the case in many instances.

Report of Special Rapporteur. By a 21 September note [A/60/370], the Secretary-General transmitted the preliminary report of the newly appointed Special Rapporteur on the protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms while countering terrorism, Martin Scheinin (Finland), submitted in accordance with Commission resolution 2005/80 (see p. 818). The report outlined the conceptual framework of the Special Rapporteur's mandate, emphasizing the following four key features: the importance of complementarity in the work of mandate holders in general, the comprehensiveness of his mandate as a multidimensional mechanism, the proactive nature of his work, and the thematic approach he would adopt in addressing substantive issues relating to his mandate. Those themes would be further developed in the Special Rapporteur's future reports.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December [meeting 64], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/60/509/Add.2], adopted resolution 60/158 without vote [agenda item 71 (b)].

Protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms while countering terrorism

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations,

Reaffirming also the fundamental importance, including in response to terrorism and the fear of terrorism, of respecting all human rights and fundamental freedoms and the rule of law,

Recalling that States are under the obligation to protect all human rights and fundamental freedoms of all persons,

Acknowledging the important contribution of measures taken at all levels against terrorism, consistent with international law, in particular international human rights law and refugee and humanitarian law, to the functioning of democratic institutions and the maintenance of peace and security and thereby to the full enjoyment of human rights, as well as the need to continue this fight, including through international cooperation and the strengthening of the role of the United Nations in this respect,

Deeply deploring the occurrence of violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms in the context of the fight against terrorism, as well as violations of international refugee law and international humanitarian law,

Recognizing that the respect for human rights, the respect for democracy and the respect for the rule of law are interrelated and mutually reinforcing,

Recognizing also that all States must fully respect the non-refoulement obligations under international refugee and human rights law, while at the same time bearing in mind relevant exclusion provisions under international refugee law,

Welcoming the various initiatives to strengthen the promotion and protection of human rights in the context of counter-terrorism adopted by the United Nations and regional intergovernmental bodies, as well as by States,

Noting the declarations, statements and recommendations of a number of human rights treaty monitoring bodies and special procedures on the question of the compatibility of counter-terrorism measures with human rights obligations,

Recalling its resolutions 57/219 of 18 December 2002, 58/187 of 22 December 2003 and 59/191 of 20 December 2004, Commission on Human Rights resolutions 2003/68 of 25 April 2003, 2004/87 of 21 April 2004 and 2005/80 of 21 April 2005 and other relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and the Commission on Human Rights,

Recalling also its resolution 48/141 of 20 December 1993 and, inter alia, the responsibility of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to promote and protect the effective enjoyment of all human rights,

Reaffirming that acts, methods and practices of terrorism in all its forms and manifestations are activities aimed at the destruction of human rights, fundamental freedoms and democracy, threatening territorial integrity, security of States and destabilizing legitimately constituted Governments, and that the international community should take the necessary steps to enhance cooperation to prevent and combat terrorism,

Noting the declaration on the issue of combating terrorism contained in the annex to Security Council resolution 1456(2003) of 20 January 2003, in particular the statement that States must ensure that any measures taken to combat terrorism comply with all their obligations under international law and should adopt such measures in accordance with international law, in particular international human rights, refugee and humanitarian law,

Reaffirming its unequivocal condemnation of all acts, methods and practices of terrorism in all its forms and manifestations, wherever and by whomsoever committed, regardless of their motivation, as criminal and unjustifiable, and renewing its commitment to strengthen international cooperation to prevent and combat terrorism,

Stressing that everyone is entitled to all the rights and freedoms recognized in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights without distinction of any kind, including on the grounds of race, colour, sex, language, religion, political or other opinion, national or social origin, property, birth or other status,

1. Reaffirms that States must ensure that any measure taken to combat terrorism complies with their obligations under international law, in particular international human rights, refugee and humanitarian law;

2. Deplores the suffering caused by terrorism to the victims and their families, and expresses its profound solidarity with them;

3. Reaffirms the obligation of States, in accordance with article 4 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, to respect certain rights as non-derogable in any circumstances, recalls, in regard to all other Covenant rights, that any measures derogating from the provisions of the Covenant must be in accordance with that article in all cases, and underlines the exceptional and temporary nature of any such derogations;

4. Calls upon States to raise awareness about the importance of these obligations among national authorities involved in combating terrorism;

5. Urges States to fully respect non-refoulement obligations under international refugee and human rights law and, at the same time, to review, with full respect for these obligations and other legal safeguards, the validity of a refugee status decision in an individual case if credible and relevant evidence comes to light that indicates that the person in question has committed any criminal acts, including terrorist acts, falling under the exclusion clauses under international refugee law;

6. Welcomes the establishment by the Commission on Human Rights in its resolution 2005/80 of the mandate of the Special Rapporteur on the promotion and protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms while countering terrorism;

7. Reaffirms that it is imperative that all States work to uphold and protect the dignity of individuals and their fundamental freedoms, as well as democratic practices and the rule of law, while countering terrorism, as stated in the report of the Secretary-General submitted pursuant to General Assembly resolution 58/187;

8. Takes note with appreciation of the study of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights submitted pursuant to resolution 58/187;

9. Encourages States to make available to relevant national authorities the "Digest of Jurisprudence of the United Nations and Regional Organizations on the Protection of Human Rights while Countering Terrorism" and to take into account its content, and requests the High Commissioner to update and publish it periodically;

10. Welcomes the ongoing dialogue established in the context of the fight against terrorism between the Security Council and its Counter-Terrorism Committee and the relevant bodies for the promotion and protection of human rights, and encourages the Security Council and its Counter-Terrorism Committee to strengthen the links and to continue to develop cooperation with relevant human rights bodies, in particular with the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on the promotion and protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms while countering terrorism and other relevant special procedures and mechanisms of the Commission, giving due regard to the promotion and protection of human rights in the ongoing work pursuant to relevant Security Council resolutions relating to terrorism;

11. Stresses that, while developing, as agreed at the 2005 World Summit, a strategy to promote comprehensive, coordinated and consistent counter-terrorism responses, full consideration should be given throughout the process to the protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms and to the provisions of international humanitarian law and international refugee law;

12. Requests all relevant special procedures and mechanisms of the Commission on Human Rights, as well as the United Nations human rights treaty bodies, to cooperate, within their mandates, with the Special Rapporteur on the promotion and protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms while countering terrorism, and encourages the Special Rapporteur to work closely with them to coordinate efforts, where appropriate, in order to promote a consistent approach on this subject;

13. Encourages States, while countering terrorism, to take into account relevant United Nations resolutions and decisions on human rights, and encourages them to consider the recommendations of the special procedures and mechanisms of the Commission on Human Rights and the relevant comments and views of United Nations human rights treaty bodies;

14. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the independent expert on the protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms while countering terrorism;

15. Takes note with interest of the report of the Secretary-General submitted pursuant to General Assembly resolution 59/191;

16. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Special Rapporteur submitted pursuant to Commission on Human Rights resolution 2005/80, and the four features of his mandate emphasized, namely, complementarity, comprehensiveness, its proactive nature and its thematic approach, and requests the Special Rapporteur to report regularly to the General Assembly and to the Commission on Human Rights;

17. Requests all Governments to cooperate fully with the Special Rapporteur in the performance of the tasks and duties mandated, including by reacting promptly to the urgent appeals of the Special Rapporteur and providing the information requested;

18. Requests the High Commissioner, making use of existing mechanisms, to continue:

(a) To examine the question of the protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms while countering terrorism, taking into account reliable information from all sources;

(b) To make general recommendations concerning the obligation of States to promote and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms while taking actions to counter terrorism;

(c) To provide assistance and advice to States, upon their request, on the protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms while countering terrorism, as well as to relevant United Nations bodies;

19. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report on the implementation of the present resolution to the Commission on Human Rights at its sixty-second session and to the General Assembly at its sixty-first session.

Hostage-taking

On 19 April [res. 2005/31], the Commission, condemning all acts of hostage-taking in the world, demanded the immediate and unconditional release of all hostages. It called upon States to prevent, combat and punish hostage-taking, and urged thematic rapporteurs and working groups to address the consequences of such acts in their reports.

Peace and security

Commission action. By a recorded vote of 32 to 15, with 6 abstentions, the Commission, on 20 April [res. 2005/56], affirmed that States should promote international peace and security, and urged them to respect and put into practice the principles and purposes of the UN Charter in their relations with other States. It called on the High Commissioner to carry out a constructive dialogue and consultations with Member States, specialized agencies and intergovernmental organizations on how the Commission could work for the promotion of peace, and encouraged NGOs to contribute to the endeavour.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December [meeting 64], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/60/509/Add.2], adopted resolution 60/163 by recorded vote of 116-53-8 [agenda item 71 (b)].

Promotion of peace as a vital requirement for the full enjoyment of all human rights by all

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 58/192 of 22 December 2003,

Recalling also Commission on Human Rights resolution 2005/56 of 20 April 2005 entitled "Promotion of peace as a vital requirement for the full enjoyment of all human rights by all",

Taking note of its resolution 39/11 of 12 November 1984 entitled "Declaration on the Right of Peoples to Peace", and the United Nations Millennium Declaration,

Determined to foster strict respect for the purposes and principles enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations,

Bearing in mind that one of the purposes of the United Nations is to achieve international cooperation in solving international problems of an economic, social, cultural or humanitarian character and in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and for fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion,

Underlining, in accordance with the purposes and principles of the United Nations, its full and active support for the United Nations and for the enhancement of its role and effectiveness in strengthening international peace, security and justice and in promoting the solution of international problems, as well as the development of friendly relations and cooperation among States,

Reaffirming the obligation of all States to settle their international disputes by peaceful means in such a manner that international peace and security and justice are not endangered,

Emphasizing its objective of promoting better relations among all States and contributing to setting up conditions in which their people can live in true and lasting peace, free from any threat to or attempt against their security,

Reaffirming the obligation of all States to refrain in their international relations from the threat or use of force against the territorial integrity or political independence of any State, or in any other manner inconsistent with the purposes of the United Nations,

Reaffirming its commitment to peace, security and justice and the continuing development of friendly relations and cooperation among States,

Rejecting the use of violence in pursuit of political aims, and stressing that only peaceful political solutions can ensure a stable and democratic future for all people around the world,

Reaffirming the importance of ensuring respect for the principles of the sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of States and non-intervention in matters that are essentially within the domestic jurisdiction of any State, in accordance with the Charter and international law,

Reaffirming also that all peoples have the right to self-determination, by virtue of which they freely determine their political status and freely pursue their economic, social and cultural development,

Reaffirming further the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Cooperation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations,

Recognizing that peace and development are mutually reinforcing, including in the prevention of armed conflict,

Affirming that human rights include social, economic and cultural rights and the right to peace, a healthy environment and development, and that development is in fact the realization of those rights,

Underlining the fact that the subjection of peoples to alien subjugation, domination and exploitation constitutes a denial of fundamental rights, is contrary to the Charter and is an impediment to the promotion of world peace and cooperation,

Recalling that everyone is entitled to a social and international order in which the rights and freedoms set forth in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights can be fully realized,

Convinced of the aim of creating conditions of stability and well-being, which are necessary for peaceful and friendly relations among nations based on respect for the principles of equal rights and self-determination of peoples,

Convinced also that life without war is the primary international prerequisite for the material well-being, development and progress of countries and for the full implementation of the rights and fundamental human freedoms proclaimed by the United Nations,

Convinced further that international cooperation in the field of human rights contributes to creating an international environment of peace and stability,

1. Stresses that peace is a vital requirement for the promotion and protection of all human rights for all;

2. Also stresses that the deep fault line that divides human society between the rich and the poor and the ever-increasing gap between the developed and developing worlds pose a major threat to global prosperity, peace and security and stability;

3. Solemnly declares that the peoples of our planet have a sacred right to peace and that the preservation and promotion of peace constitutes a fundamental obligation of each State;

4. Emphasizes that the preservation and promotion of peace demands that the policies of States be directed towards the elimination of the threat of war, particularly nuclear war, the renunciation of the use or threat of use of force in international relations and the settlement of international disputes by peaceful means on the basis of the Charter of the United Nations;

5. Affirms that all States should promote the establishment, maintenance and strengthening of international peace and security and an international system based on respect for the principles enshrined in the Charter and the promotion of all human rights and fundamental freedoms, including the right to development and the right of peoples to self-determination;

6. Urges all States to respect and to put into practice the purposes and principles of the Charter in their relations with other States, irrespective of their political, economic or social system and of their size, geographical location or level of economic development;

7. Reaffirms the duty of all States, in accordance with the principles of the Charter, to use peaceful means to settle any dispute to which they are parties and the continuance of which is likely to endanger the maintenance of international peace and security, as a vital requirement for the promotion and protection of all human rights of everyone and all peoples;

8. Calls upon the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to carry out a constructive dialogue and consultations with Member States, the specialized agencies and intergovernmental organizations on how the Commission on Human Rights could work for the promotion of an international environment conducive to the full realization of the right of peoples to peace, and encourages non-governmental organizations to contribute actively to this endeavour;

9. Invites States and relevant United Nations human rights mechanisms and procedures to continue to pay attention to the importance of mutual cooperation, understanding and dialogue in ensuring the promotion and protection of all human rights;

10. Decides to continue consideration of the question of the promotion of the right of peoples to peace at its sixty-second session under the item entitled "Human rights questions".

Small arms

Note by Secretariat. By a 16 June note [E/CN.4/Sub.2/2005/35], the Secretariat informed the Subcommission that the Special Rapporteur on the prevention of human rights violations committed with small arms and light weapons, Barbara Frey (United States), would not be able to submit her final report, as requested by the Subcommission in 2004 [YUN 2004, p. 744]. She had indicated that she needed extra time to compile and evaluate the responses of Governments to her questionnaire and requested that she be allowed to submit the report in 2006. Annexed to the note were the draft principles on the prevention of human rights violations committed with small arms and commentary thereto, which the Special Rapporteur had presented to the Subcommission in 2004 [ibid.], and which she had further revised.

Subcommission action. On 11 August [dec. 2005/110], the Subcommission encouraged Governments that had not yet done so to submit responses to the Special Rapporteur's questionnaire, preferably by 1 November, to enable her to complete her work. She was asked to submit her final report in 2006.

Economic, social and cultural rights

Right to development

Reports of Secretary-General. The Commission had before it a report of the Secretary-General [E/CN.4/2005/39], submitted in accordance with a 2004 Commission request [YUN 2004, p. 746], which described the activities undertaken by the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the Committee on the Rights of the Child, special procedures on economic, social and cultural rights and OHCHR to contribute to the articulation and realization of economic, social and cultural rights. The Secretary-General concluded that progress had continued in increasing the understanding of those rights, marked by higher levels of cooperation among UN agencies, particularly within the context of the adoption of voluntary guidelines on the right to food by the Food and Agriculture Organization (FAO) of the United Nations, as well as a greater focus on technical cooperation on related issues.

An August report of the Secretary-General [A/60/286], submitted in accordance with General Assembly resolution 59/185 [YUN 2004, p. 747], updated and complemented information contained in the High Commissioner's report (see below). The report summarized the activities of the open-ended Working Group on the Right to Development (see below) and of its high-level task force on the implementation of the right, as well as related action by OHCHR, the Commission and the Subcommission.

On 16 July, the Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's report (decision 60/533).

Report of the High Commissioner. In response to 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 683] and 2004 [YUN 2004, p. 746] Commission requests, the High Commissioner submitted a January report [E/CN.4/2005/24], which summarized OHCHR activities undertaken to implement the right to development and provided information on the implementation of related General Assembly and Commission resolutions, and on UN system interagency cooperation to implement Commission resolutions.

In response to a 1999 Subcommission request [YUN 1999, p. 652] for the annual transmission of information relating to the realization of the right to development, the Secretary-General, in a June Secretariat note [E/CN.4/Sub.2/2005/16], drew attention to the High Commissioner's report (see above).

Working Group activities. The open-ended Working Group on the Right to Development, at its sixth session (Geneva, 14-18 February) [E/CN.4/2005/25], considered the High Commissioner's report (see above) and the report of the high-level task force, which the Group established in 2004 [YUN 2004, p. 746], on the implementation of the right to development (see below), and also heard presentations from two Member States on the way forward. In its conclusions, the Group agreed on the importance of continuing partnerships among the Commission, UN bodies, multilateral financial and development institutions and the World Trade Organization (WTO) for implementing the right to development. It accorded priority to evolving, assessing and disseminating measures for realizing the right, through collaborative efforts by stakeholders at the national and international levels, and recognized that States had a duty to formulate development policies to facilitate the full realization of the right, in accordance with the provisions of the Declaration on the Right to Development, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 41/128 [YUN 1986, p. 717]. The Group also adopted conclusions advocating the timely attainment of the MDGs [YUN 2000, p. 51], and the necessity for introducing human rights standards and principles in impact assessments of trade and development rules and policies.

Noting that an unsustainable debt burden was obstructing developing countries from achieving the MDGs and progressing with the realization of the right to development, the Group called for more official development assistance (ODA) from donor countries. It also recommended that the Commission extend the mandate of the high-level task force for a further year to examine Millennium Development Goal 8 on the value of global partnership for development. OHCHR was requested to undertake and make available to policy makers a mapping of the MDGs against the provisions of relevant international human rights instruments, as a means of mobilizing, strengthening and sustaining efforts to implement those Goals in a manner compatible with the right to development. It was also asked to assist the high-level task force; provide an outline for the compendium of partnerships for development cooperation and other multilateral and bilateral arrangements contributing to the realization of the right; identify common elements and best practices emerging therefrom, for the Working Group's consideration in 2006; and bring the conclusions and recommendations of the task force and the Group to the attention of relevant international institutions. The Group prepared a list of issues to guide its future work, considered ongoing activities and recommended that the Commission renew the Group's mandate for a further year.

The Group's high-level task force, established by the Commission in 2004 [YUN 2004, p. 746] to consider issues relating to the implementation of the right to development, held its first (13-17 December 2004) [E/CN.4/2005/WG.18/2] and second (14-18 November 2005) [E/CN.4/2005/WG.18/TF/3] sessions, both in Geneva. At its first session, it discussed obstacles and challenges to implementation efforts, social impact assessments in the areas of trade and development at the national and international levels, and within the context of those two topics, it considered the issue of best practices. The task force adopted, for the Working Group's consideration, conclusions and recommendations relating to the topics it had considered. It also considered, among other things, measures to enable developing countries to overcome the obstacle posed by a heavy debt burden in achieving the MDGs and the need for such practical tools as guidelines and indicators to help translate human rights norms and principles into accessible parameters in undertaking social impact assessments. In November, the task force reviewed the evolution of and recent developments in global partnerships for development. It considered regional and national perspectives on the topic, as well as the criteria for evaluating Millennium Development Goal 8 and the value that the right to development would add to global partnerships. The task force adopted conclusions on the issues of aid, trade, debt, technology transfer, Millennium Development Goal 8 questions, the role of the private sector, global governance, migration and regional initiatives. It made recommendations relating to the criteria for assessing global partnerships for realizing the right to development; the activities of treaty bodies; the work of civil society and national institutions; the involvement of States; the monitoring mechanisms and activities of transnational corporations; and the work of UN country teams, OHCHR and international financial institutions.

Note by Secretariat. By a December note [E/CN.4/2006/WG.18/3], the Secretariat transmitted to members of the Working Group the report of the high-level task force on its second meeting (see above).

Commission action. On 12 April [res. 2005/4], by a recorded vote of 48 to 2, with 2 abstentions, the Commission endorsed the conclusions and recommendations of the Working Group at its sixth session (see above) and called for their effective implementation. Noting with concern that the Subcommission had not submitted the concept document on the right to development (see below) requested by the Commission in 2003 [YUN 2003, p. 753], it called for the submission of the document without delay, for the Commission's consideration in 2006. The Commission asked OHCHR to support the Subcommission in its work on the concept document and, the High Commissioner, to undertake activities aimed at strengthening global partnership for development between Member States, development agencies and international development institutions, and to reflect those activities in her 2006 report to the Commission. The Commission decided to renew the mandate of the Working Group for one year and to convene its seventh session before the Commission's 2006 session.

On 15 April [res. 2005/22], by a recorded vote of 50 to none, with 3 abstentions, the Commission called on States to guarantee economic, social and cultural rights without discrimination of any kind; to secure, through national development policies and with international assistance, the full realization of those rights, giving particular attention to the most vulnerable and disadvantaged, most often women and children, and communities living in extreme poverty; and to promote the effective participation of civil society in decision-making processes related to those rights. The Secretary-General was asked to report in 2006 on the implementation of the Commission's resolution.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 25 July, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on Human Rights [E/2005/23], adopted decision 2005/256 by recorded vote (46-2-1) [agenda item 14 (g)].

The right to development

At its 38th plenary meeting, on 25 July 2005, the Economic and Social Council took note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 2005/4 of 12 April 2005, and approved the decision of the Commission to renew for one year the mandate of the open-ended working group established to monitor and review progress made in the promotion and implementation of the right to development and to convene its seventh session before the sixty-second session of the Commission for a period of ten working days, five of which shall be allocated to the second meeting of the high-level task force on the right to development to be held well in advance of the session of the working group.

RECORDED VOTE ON DECISION 2005/256:

In favour: Albania, Armenia, Azerbaijan, Bangladesh, Belgium, Belize, Brazil, Canada, China, Colombia, Congo, Costa Rica, Cuba, Denmark, Ecuador, France, Germany, Guinea, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Ireland, Italy, Jamaica, Kenya, Lithuania, Malaysia, Mauritius, Mexico, Mozambique, Namibia, Nicaragua, Panama, Poland, Republic of Korea, Russian Federation, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, South Africa, Spain, Thailand, Tunisia, Turkey, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania.

Against: Australia, United States.

Abstaining: Japan.

Working paper. In response to a 2003 Subcommission request [YUN 2003, p. 754], Florizelle O'Connor (Jamaica) submitted a June working paper [E/CN.4/Sub.2/2005/23], designed as a concept document on the right to development. The paper discussed concepts which she considered essential for the improvement and advancement of ongoing work on the right, and the importance of many of the Subcommission's projects in laying the foundation for a human rights approach to that right, including studies on slavery and slave-practices, globalization, the right to drinking water, and extreme poverty. It also addressed the importance of creating human rights indicators and principles for development partnerships. The paper highlighted the need to question the validity of emerging human rights indicators to ensure that they measured the right things, and the importance of focusing on a human rights approach to the right, as well as the value of good governance to the successful implementation of development programmes, and of funding support. It recommended, among other things, that the Subcommission adopt in 2005, a thematic resolution on the right to development, summarizing its work in that field and encouraging dialogue with other UN bodies. It should also request authors of studies or working papers under the agenda item concerning economic, social and cultural rights to make observations and recommendations in their reports pertaining to the right to development and to consider developing draft standards or guidelines to facilitate transparency and the participation of local communities in their own development programmes. In order to facilitate the broadest discussion on the right to development, the Subcommission should recommend that the World Programme for Human Rights Education (see p. 745) should be sued to focus on education on the right.

Subcommission action. On 10 August [res. 2005/17], the Subcommission, welcoming Ms. O'Connor's concept document, decided to submit it to the Commission in 2006. The Subcommission asked her to continue her work and to submit a further working paper for consideration in 2006.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December [meeting 64], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/60/509/Add.2], adopted resolution 60/157 by recorded vote (172-2-5) [agenda item 71 (b)].

The right to development

The General Assembly,

Guided by the Charter of the United Nations, which expresses, in particular, the determination to promote social progress and better standards of life in larger freedom, as well as to employ international mechanisms for the promotion of the economic and social advancement of all peoples,

Recalling the Universal Declaration of Human Rights as well as the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights,

Recalling also the outcomes of all the major United Nations conferences and summits in the economic and social fields,

Recalling further that the Declaration on the Right to Development, adopted by the General Assembly in its resolution 41/128 of 4 December 1986, confirmed that the right to development is an inalienable human right and that equality of opportunity for development is a prerogative both of nations and of individuals who make up nations, and that the individual is the central subject and beneficiary of development,

Stressing that the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action reaffirmed the right to development as a universal and inalienable right and an integral part of fundamental human rights, and the individual as the central subject and beneficiary of development,

Reaffirming the objective of making the right to development a reality for everyone, as set out in the United Nations Millennium Declaration, adopted by the General Assembly on 8 September 2000,

Reaffirming also the universality, indivisibility, interrelatedness, interdependence and mutually reinforcing nature of all civil, cultural, economic, political and social rights, including the right to development,

Recalling the framework modalities agreed to at the General Council meeting of the World Trade Organization in Geneva on 1 August 2004 in key areas such as agriculture, market access for non-agricultural products, trade facilitation, development and services,

Recalling also the outcome of the eleventh session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, held at Sno Paulo, Brazil, from 13 to 18 June 2004, on the theme "Enhancing the coherence between national development strategies and global economic processes towards economic growth and development, particularly of developing countries",

Recalling further all its previous resolutions and those of the Commission on Human Rights on the right to development, in particular Commission resolution 1998/72 of 22 April 1998, on the urgent need to make further progress towards the realization of the right to development as set out in the Declaration on the Right to Development,

Recalling the Thirteenth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Kuala Lumpur from 20 to 25 February 2003, and the Fourteenth Ministerial Conference of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Durban, South Africa, from 17 to 19 August 2004,

Reiterating its continuing support for the New Partnership for Africa's Development as a development framework for Africa,

Recognizing that historical injustices have undeniably contributed to the poverty, underdevelopment, marginalization, social exclusion, economic disparity, instability and insecurity that affect many people in different parts of the world, in particular in developing countries,

Stressing that poverty eradication is one of the critical elements in the promotion and realization of the right to development and that poverty is a multifaceted problem that requires a multifaceted and integrated approach in addressing economic, political, social, environmental and institutional dimensions at all levels, especially in the context of the millennium development goal of halving, by 2015, the proportion of the world's people whose income is less than one dollar a day and the proportion of people who suffer from hunger,

1. Endorses the agreed conclusions and recommendations adopted by the Working Group on the Right to Development at its sixth session, and calls for their immediate, full and effective implementation by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and other relevant actors;

2. Welcomes the convening of the first meeting of the high-level task force on the implementation of the right to development, held at Geneva from 13 to 17 December 2004, and expresses its appreciation to the task force for the work it has undertaken;

3. Notes with appreciation that the high-level task force, at its second meeting, examined millennium development goal 8 on a global partnership for development and suggested criteria for its periodic evaluation with the aim of improving the effectiveness of global partnership with regard to the realization of the right to development;

4. Stresses the importance of the core principles contained in the conclusions of the Working Group at its third session, congruent with the purpose of international human rights instruments, such as equality, non-discrimination, accountability, participation and international cooperation, as critical to mainstreaming the right to development at the national and international levels, and underlines the importance of the principles of equity and transparency;

5. Notes with appreciation that the Subcommission on the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights decided at its fifty-seventh session to submit the concept document establishing options and their feasibility for the implementation of the right to development to the Commission on Human Rights at its sixty-second session, in this regard calls upon the Commission to give due consideration to the options contained therein, and requests the Secretary-General to report on progress in this regard to the General Assembly at its sixty-first session;

6. Takes note of the convening and outcome of the third Social Forum held at Geneva on 21 and 22 July 2005 on the theme "Poverty and economic growth: challenges to human rights" and the strong support extended to it by the Subcommission on the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights, and invites Member States and all other stakeholders to participate actively in its subsequent sessions;

7. Reaffirms the commitment to implement the goals and targets set out in all the outcome documents of the major United Nations conferences and summits and their review processes, in particular those relating to the realization of the right to development, recognizing that the realization of the right to development is critical to achieving the objectives, goals and targets set in those outcome documents;

8. Also reaffirms that the realization of the right to development is essential to the implementation of the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, which regards all human rights as universal, indivisible, interdependent and interrelated, places the human person at the centre of development and recognizes that, while development facilitates the enjoyment of all human rights, the lack of development may not be invoked to justify the abridgement of internationally recognized human rights;

9. Stresses that the primary responsibility for the promotion and protection of all human rights lies with the State, and reaffirms that States have the primary responsibility for their own economic and social development and that the role of national policies and development strategies cannot be overemphasized;

10. Reaffirms the primary responsibility of States to create national and international conditions favourable to the realization of the right to development as well as their commitment to cooperate with each other to that end;

11. Also reaffirms the need for an international environment that is conducive to the realization of the right to development;

12. Stresses the need to strive for greater acceptance, operationalization and realization of the right to development at the international and national levels, and calls upon States to institute the measures required for the implementation of the right to development as a fundamental human right;

13. Emphasizes the critical importance of identifying and analysing obstacles impeding the full realization of the right to development at both the national and the international levels;

14. Affirms that, while globalization offers both opportunities and challenges, the process of globalization remains deficient in achieving the objectives of integrating all countries into a globalized world, and stresses the need for policies and measures at the national and global levels to respond to the challenges and opportunities of globalization if this process is to be made fully inclusive and equitable;

15. Recognizes that, despite continuous efforts on the part of the international community, the gap between developed and developing countries remains unacceptably wide, that developing countries continue to face difficulties in participating in the globalization process and that many risk being marginalized and effectively excluded from its benefits;

16. Underlines the fact that the international community is far from meeting the target set in the United Nations Millennium Declaration of halving the number of people living in poverty by 2015, reaffirms the commitment made to meet that target, and emphasizes the principle of international cooperation, including partnership and commitment, between developed and developing countries towards achieving the goal;

17. Urges developed countries that have not yet done so to make concrete efforts towards meeting the targets of 0.7 per cent of their gross national product for official development assistance to developing countries and 0.15 to 0.2 per cent of their gross national product to least developed countries, and encourages developing countries to build on the progress achieved in ensuring that official development assistance is used effectively to help to meet development goals and targets;

18. Recognizes the need to address market access for developing countries, including in agriculture, services and non-agricultural products, in particular those of interest to developing countries;

19. Calls for the implementation of a desirable pace of meaningful trade liberalization, including in areas under negotiation; implementation of commitments on implementation-related issues and concerns; review of special and differential-treatment provisions, with a view to strengthening them and making them more precise, effective and operational; avoidance of new forms of protectionism; and capacity-building and technical assistance for developing countries as important issues in making progress towards the effective implementation of the right to development;

20. Recognizes the important link between the international economic, commercial and financial spheres and the realization of the right to development, stresses, in this regard, the need for good governance and broadening the base of decision-making at the international level on issues of development concern and the need to fill organizational gaps, as well as strengthen the United Nations system and other multilateral institutions, and also stresses the need to broaden and strengthen the participation of developing countries and countries with economies in transition in international economic decision-making and norm-setting;

21. Also recognizes that good governance and the rule of law at the national level assist all States in the promotion and protection of human rights, including the right to development, and agrees on the value of the ongoing efforts being made by States to identify and strengthen good governance practices, including transparent, responsible, accountable and participatory government, that are responsive and appropriate to their needs and aspirations, including in the context of agreed partnership approaches to development, capacity-building and technical assistance;

22. Further recognizes the important role and the rights of women and the application of a gender perspective as a cross-cutting issue in the process of realizing the right to development, and notes in particular the positive relationship between women's education and their equal participation in the civil, cultural, economic, political and social activities of the community and the promotion of the right to development;

23. Stresses the need for the integration of the rights of children, girls and boys alike, in all policies and programmes, and for ensuring the promotion and protection of those rights, especially in areas relating to health, education and the full development of their capacities;

24. Also stresses that further and additional measures must be taken at the national and international levels to fight HIV/AIDS and other communicable diseases, taking into account ongoing efforts and programmes, and reiterates the need for international assistance in this regard;

25. Recognizes the need for strong partnerships with civil society organizations and the private sector in pursuit of poverty eradication and development, as well as for corporate social responsibility;

26. Emphasizes the urgent need for taking concrete and effective measures to prevent, combat and criminalize all forms of corruption at all levels, to prevent, detect and deter in a more effective manner international transfers of illicitly acquired assets and to strengthen international cooperation in asset recovery consistent with the principles of the United Nations Convention against Corruption, particularly chapter V thereof, stresses the importance of a genuine political commitment on the part of all Governments through a firm legal framework, and in this context urges States to sign and ratify as soon as possible, and States parties to implement effectively, the Convention;

27. Also emphasizes the need to strengthen further the activities of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights in the promotion and realization of the right to development, including ensuring effective use of the financial and human resources necessary to fulfil its mandate, and calls upon the Secretary-General to provide the Office of the High Commissioner with the necessary resources;

28. Reaffirms the request to the High Commissioner, in mainstreaming the right to development, to undertake effectively activities aimed at strengthening the global partnership for development between Member States, development agencies and the international development, financial and trade institutions, and to reflect those activities in detail in her report to the Commission on Human Rights at its sixty-second session;

29. Calls upon the United Nations agencies, funds and programmes, as well as the specialized agencies, to mainstream the right to development in their operational programmes and objectives, and stresses the need for the international financial and multilateral trading systems to mainstream the right to development in their policies and objectives;

30. Requests the Secretary-General to bring the present resolution to the attention of Member States, United Nations organs and bodies, specialized agencies, funds and programmes, international development and financial institutions, in particular the Bretton Woods institutions, and non-governmental organizations;

31. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to the General Assembly at its sixty-first session and an interim report to the Commission on Human Rights at its sixty-second session on the implementation of the present resolution, including efforts undertaken at the national, regional and international levels in the promotion and realization of the right to development, and invites the chairperson of the Working Group on the Right to Development to present a verbal update to the General Assembly at its sixty-first session.

RECORDED VOTE ON RESOLUTION 60/157:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Andorra, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Armenia, Austria, Azerbaijan, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belarus, Belgium, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Cambodia, Cameroon, Cape Verde, Chile, China,

Human rights and international solidarity

Commission action. On 20 April [res. 2005/55], the Commission, by a recorded vote of 37 to 15, with 1 abstention, urged the international community to promote and consolidate international assistance to developing countries in their endeavours for development and for the promotion of conditions that could make possible the full realization of human rights. It recognized that the "third generation rights" or "right to solidarity" needed further progressive development within the UN human rights machinery to respond to the increasing challenges to international cooperation in that area. The Commission decided to appoint an independent expert on human rights and international solidarity for a period of three years, to study the issue and prepare a draft declaration on the right of peoples to international solidarity. The expert was also asked to report annually to the Commission, taking into account the outcomes of major UN and other global meetings in the economic and social fields and to seek the views of Governments, UN agencies and other relevant entities.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 25 July, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on Human Rights [E/2005/23], adopted decision 2005/271 by recorded vote (32-18-0) [agenda item 14 (g)].

Human rights and international solidarity

At its 38th plenary meeting, on 25 July 2005, the Economic and Social Council took note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 2005/55 of 20 April 2005, and endorsed the decision of the Commission to appoint an independent expert on human rights and international solidarity for a period of three years to study the issue and prepare a draft declaration on the right of peoples to international solidarity, taking into account the outcomes of all major United Nations and other global summits and ministerial meetings in the economic and social fields and seeking views and contributions from Governments, United Nations agencies, other relevant international organizations and non-governmental organizations.

The Council also approved the request of the Commission to the independent expert to report annually to the Commission on the progress made in the fulfilment of his/her mandate.

RECORDED VOTE ON DECISION 2005/271:

In favour: Armenia, Azerbaijan, Bangladesh, Belize, Brazil, China, Colombia, Congo, Costa Rica, Cuba, Ecuador, Guinea, India, Indonesia, Jamaica, Kenya, Malaysia, Mauritius, Mexico, Mozambique, Namibia, Nicaragua, Nigeria, Pakistan, Panama, Russian Federation, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, South Africa, Thailand, Tunisia, United Republic of Tanzania.

Against: Albania, Australia, Belgium, Canada, Denmark, France, Germany, Iceland, Ireland, Italy, Japan, Lithuania, Poland, Republic of Korea, Spain, Turkey, United Kingdom, United States.

Also in July, Rudi Muhammah Rizki (Indonesia) was appointed as independent expert on the right of peoples to international solidarity.

Note by Secretariat. By a June note [E/CN.4/Sub.2/2005/37], the Secretariat informed the Subcommission that Rui Baltazar Dos Santos Alves (Mozambique) had indicated that he would not be able to submit the expanded working paper, which the Subcommission had requested in 2004 [YUN 2004, p. 750].

Democratic and equitable international order

Commission action. On 20 April [res. 2005/57], the Commission, by a recorded vote of 32 to 15, with 6 abstentions, affirmed that a democratic and equitable international order fostered the full realization of all human rights and urged States to continue efforts to establish such order. The Commission asked human rights treaty bodies, OHCHR, and Commission and Subcommission mechanisms to contribute to the implementation of its resolution, and the Secretary-General, to bring it to the attention of Member States, UN organs and bodies, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs and to disseminate it widely.

Expert seminar. In response to a 2003 Commission request [YUN 2003, p. 736] and to General Assembly resolution 59/193 [YUN 2004, p. 750], OHCHR organized an expert seminar [E/CN.4/2005/58] (Geneva, 28 February–2 March) to explore the linkages between democracy, the rule of law and human rights, which built on the outcome of the first such expert seminar [YUN 2002, p. 702] and adopted conclusions and recommendations.

Globalization

Report of High Commissioner. In response to a 2004 Commission request [YUN 2004, p. 753], the High Commissioner submitted a report [E/CN.4/

2005/41], which considered the relevance to globalization of the enjoyment of the right to participate in the conduct of public affairs and related rights, and suggested ways in which that right could be promoted in the context of globalization. The report outlined the legal basis of participation in the principal human rights treaties and explored the enjoyment of participatory rights in globalization processes in three areas: the promotion of those rights in national level policy-making as it related to globalization; the capacity of States to respect the will of the people in decision-making processes in global institutions, expressed through the enjoyment of participatory rights; and the increasing role of individuals and civil society groups in policy discussion and decision-making at the global level. It made several recommendations relating to, among other things, understanding the international dimensions of the right to take part in the conduct of public affairs; undertaking human rights impact assessments of global rules, policies and projects; strengthening the role of parliaments in global governance; clarifying the human rights responsibilities of non-State actors; increasing the voice of civil society in institutions relating to globalization; and the possibility of further study on methodologies for undertaking human rights impact assessment.

Commission action. By a recorded vote of 38 to 15, the Commission, on 14 April [res. 2005/17], reaffirmed the commitment to create an environment conducive to development and the elimination of poverty through good governance, transparency in the financial, monetary and trading systems and the commitment to an open, equitable, rule-based, predicable and non-discriminatory multilateral trading and financial system. The Commission urged the international community, at the General Assembly's High-Level Plenary Meeting, to be held at the commencement of its sixtieth (2005) session (World Summit) (see p. 47), to take measures, including enhancing official development assistance, and resolving the problems of the external debt, market access, capacity-building, and dissemination of knowledge and technology, in order to integrate developing countries into the global order. The High Commissioner was asked to bring her comprehensive analytical report (see above) to the attention of WTO and other relevant international organizations, with a view to operationalizing its conclusions and recommendations.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December [meeting 64], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/60/509/Add.2], adopted resolution 60/152 by a recorded vote (121-53-4) [agenda item 71 (b)].

Globalization and its impact on the full enjoyment of all human rights

The General Assembly,

Guided by the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations, and expressing, in particular, the need to achieve international cooperation in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction,

Recalling the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, as well as the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights on 25 June 1993,

Recalling also the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights,

Recalling further the Declaration on the Right to Development adopted by the General Assembly in its resolution 41/128 of 4 December 1986,

Recalling the United Nations Millennium Declaration and the outcome documents of the twenty-third and twenty-fourth special sessions of the General Assembly, held in New York from 5 to 10 June 2000 and in Geneva from 26 June to 1 July 2000, respectively,

Recalling also its resolution 59/184 of 20 December 2004,

Recalling further Commission on Human Rights resolution 2005/17 of 14 April 2005 on globalization and its impact on the full enjoyment of all human rights,

Recognizing that all human rights are universal, indivisible, interdependent and interrelated and that the international community must treat human rights globally in a fair and equal manner, on the same footing and with the same emphasis,

Realizing that globalization affects all countries differently and makes them more exposed to external developments, positive as well as negative, inter alia, in the field of human rights,

Realizing also that globalization is not merely an economic process, but that it also has social, political, environmental, cultural and legal dimensions, which have an impact on the full enjoyment of all human rights,

Reaffirming the commitment contained in paragraphs 19 and 47 of the 2005 World Summit Outcome to promote fair globalization and the development of the productive sectors in developing countries to enable them to participate more effectively in and benefit from the process of globalization,

Realizing the need to undertake a thorough, independent and comprehensive assessment of the social, environmental and cultural impact of globalization on societies,

Recognizing in each culture a dignity and value that deserve recognition, respect and preservation, convinced that, in their rich variety and diversity and in the reciprocal influences that they exert on one another, all cultures form part of the common heritage belonging to all humankind, and aware that the risk of a global monoculture poses more of a threat if the developing world remains poor and marginalized,

Recognizing also that multilateral mechanisms have a unique role to play in meeting the challenges and opportunities presented by globalization,

Emphasizing the global character of the migratory phenomenon, the importance of international, regional and bilateral cooperation and the need to protect human rights of migrants, particularly at a time in which migration flows have increased in the globalized economy,

Expressing concern at the negative impact of international financial turbulence on social and economic development and on the full enjoyment of all human rights,

Recognizing that globalization should be guided by the fundamental principles that underpin the corpus of human rights, such as equity, participation, accountability, non-discrimination at both the national and the international levels, respect for diversity, tolerance and international cooperation and solidarity,

Emphasizing that the existence of widespread extreme poverty inhibits the full and effective enjoyment of human rights; its immediate alleviation and eventual elimination must remain a high priority for the international community,

Strongly reiterating the determination to ensure the timely and full realization of the development goals and objectives agreed at the major United Nations conferences and summits, including those agreed at the Millennium Summit that are described as the Millennium Development Goals, which have helped to galvanize efforts towards poverty eradication,

Deeply concerned at the inadequacy of measures to narrow the widening gap between the developed and the developing countries, and within countries, which has contributed, inter alia, to deepening poverty and has adversely affected the full enjoyment of all human rights, in particular in developing countries,

Noting that human beings strive for a world that is respectful of human rights and cultural diversity and that, in this regard, they work to ensure that all activities, including those affected by globalization, are consistent with those aims,

1. Recognizes that, while globalization, by its impact on, inter alia, the role of the State, may affect human rights, the promotion and protection of all human rights is first and foremost the responsibility of the State;

2. Emphasizes that development should be at the centre of the international economic agenda and that coherence between national development strategies and international obligations and commitments is imperative for an enabling environment for development and an inclusive and equitable globalization;

3. Reaffirms that narrowing the gap between rich and poor, both within and between countries, is an explicit goal at the national and international levels, as part of the effort to create an enabling environment for the full enjoyment of all human rights;

4. Reaffirms also the commitment to create an environment at both the national and the global levels that is conducive to development and to the elimination of poverty through, inter alia, good governance within each country and at the international level, transparency in the financial, monetary and trading systems and commitment to an open, equitable, rule-based, predictable and non-discriminatory multilateral trading and financial system;

5. Recognizes that, while globalization offers great opportunities, the fact that its benefits are very unevenly shared and its costs unevenly distributed represents an aspect of the process that affects the full enjoyment of all human rights, in particular in developing countries;

6. Welcomes the report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights on globalization and its impact on the full enjoyment of human rights, which focuses on the liberalization of agricultural trade and its impact on the realization of the right to development, including the right to food, and takes note of the conclusions and recommendations contained therein;

7. Calls upon Member States, relevant agencies of the United Nations system, intergovernmental organizations and civil society to promote equitable and environmentally sustainable economic growth for managing globalization so that poverty is systematically reduced and the international development targets are achieved;

8. Recognizes that only through broad and sustained efforts, including policies and measures at the global level to create a shared future based upon our common humanity in all its diversity, can globalization be made fully inclusive and equitable and have a human face, thus contributing to the full enjoyment of all human rights;

9. Underlines the urgent need to establish an equitable, transparent and democratic international system to strengthen and broaden the participation of developing countries in international economic decision-making and norm-setting;

10. Affirms that globalization is a complex process of structural transformation, with numerous interdisciplinary aspects, which has an impact on the enjoyment of civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights, including the right to development;

11. Affirms also that the international community should strive to respond to the challenges and opportunities posed by globalization in a manner that ensures respect for the cultural diversity of all;

12. Underlines, therefore, the need to continue to analyse the consequences of globalization for the full enjoyment of all human rights;

13. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General, and requests him to seek further the views of Member States and relevant agencies of the United Nations system and to submit a substantive report on the subject to the General Assembly at its sixty-first session.

RECORDED VOTE ON RESOLUTION 60/152:

In favour: Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Armenia, Azerbaijan, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belarus, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brunei Darussalam, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Cambodia, Cameroon, Cape Verde, China, Colombia, Comoros, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Democratic Republic of the Congo, Djibouti, Dominica, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Eritrea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Gabon, Gambia, Ghana, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, India, Indonesia, Iran, Jamaica, Jordan, Kazakhstan, Kenya, Kuwait, Kyrgyzstan, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Myanmar, Namibia, Nepal, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Qatar, Russian Federation, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Solomon Islands, Somalia, South Africa, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Syrian Arab Republic, Tajikistan, Thailand, Timor-Leste, Togo, Tonga, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkmenistan, Uganda, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of

Structural adjustment policies

Reports of independent expert. The Commission considered a January report [E/CN.4/2005/42] of the independent expert on the effects of structural adjustment policies and foreign debt on human rights, Bernards Mudho (Kenya). The report reviewed the previous work undertaken by the Commission and Subcommission that was relevant to the question of draft general guidelines to be followed by States and national and international financial institutions in the decision-making and execution of debt repayments and structural reform programmes. It suggested a framework and some elements for consideration in elaborating the guidelines and also reviewed significant recent developments in debt sustainability issues that were relevant to policies and programmes of international financial institutions. In that context, the report highlighted the origin and scale of external debt and creditors' response; the Heavily Indebted Poor Countries (HIPC) Initiative and its status and impact and the extension of its sunset clause; the new approach under way at the World Bank and International Monetary Fund (IMF) to debt sustainability, which advocated country-specific considerations in developing appropriate external borrowing strategies; the effect of debt on developing countries' efforts to finance the MDGs; and the evolution of the World Bank's approach to adjustment lending. The expert determined that, although HIPC countries faced many difficulties, the initiative had helped them increase poverty-reduction expenditures and that the World Bank/IMF new approach to debt sustainability had vital policy implications for donors, creditors and borrowers and should benefit from important human rights considerations that were being elaborated within the context of the draft guidelines. The report made recommendations for the next steps in further elaborating those guidelines, including the possibility of organizing an expert consultation of international finance institutions to contribute to the process. The expert suggested that the Commission encourage him to continue to cooperate with Commission and Subcommission mechanisms and treaty bodies in furthering efforts towards the draft general guidelines, develop additional ideas and elements for inclusion in the draft, further explore the interlinkages with trade and other issues, including HIV/AIDS, when examining the impact of structural adjustment policies and foreign debt on the enjoyment of human rights, and contribute to the follow-up process for the 2002 International Conference on Financing for Development (see p. 1060).

Over the past year, the expert visited Kyrgyzstan [E/CN.4/2005/42/Add.1], where he examined, among other things, the effects of the burden of foreign debt and the policies adopted to address them, and recommended measures and actions to alleviate such effects.

Commission action. By a recorded vote of 33 to 14, with 6 abstentions, the Commission, on 14 April [res. 2005/19], asked the independent expert to explore further the interlinkages with trade and other issues, including HIV/AIDS, when examining the impact of structural adjustment policies and foreign debt, and to contribute to the follow-up to the 2002 International Conference on Financing for Development [YUN 2002, p. 953], with a view to bringing to the Commission's attention the effects of structural adjustment and foreign debt on the enjoyment of human rights. The expert was asked to seek the views of States, international organizations, UN agencies, regional commissions, financial institutions and NGOs on the draft, to present a final draft for the Commission's consideration in 2006 and to report to the General Assembly on the effects of economic reform policies and foreign debt on the full enjoyment of human rights. The Secretary-General was asked to assist him. The Commission decided to convene a three-day expert consultation, with participants from UN-system organizations, to contribute to the expert's work in finalizing the draft guidelines, and to replace the phrase "effects of structural adjustment policies" with "effects of economic reform policies" in the title of the special procedure's mandate.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 25 July, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on Human Rights [E/2005/23], adopted decision 2005/260 by recorded vote (29-18-4) [agenda item 14 (g)].

Effects of economic reform policies and foreign debt on the full enjoyment of all human rights

At its 38th plenary meeting, on 25 July 2005, the Economic and Social Council took note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 2005/19 of 14 April 2005, and endorsed the Commission's decision to request the independent expert to report to the General Assembly on the issue of the effects of economic reform policies and foreign debt on the full enjoyment of human rights, particularly economic, social and cultural rights.

The Council also endorsed the Commission's request to the Secretary-General to provide the independent expert with all necessary assistance, in particular the staff and resources required to carry out his functions, as well as to facilitate his participation in and contribution to the follow-up process of the International Conference on Financing for Development, including in the multi-stakeholder consultations to be organized in 2005 on issues relevant to his mandate.

RECORDED VOTE ON DECISION 2005/260

In favour: Bangladesh, Belize, Brazil, China, Colombia, Congo, Cuba, Ecuador, Guinea, India, Indonesia, Jamaica, Kenya, Malaysia, Mauritius, Mozambique, Namibia, Nicaragua, Nigeria, Pakistan, Panama, Russian Federation, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, South Africa, Thailand, Tunisia, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania.

Against: Albania, Australia, Belgium, Canada, Denmark, France, Germany, Iceland, Ireland, Italy, Japan, Lithuania, Poland, Republic of Korea, Spain, Turkey, United Kingdom, United States.

Abstaining: Armenia, Azerbaijan, Costa Rica, Mexico.

Adverse effects of debt

By a June note [E/CN.4/Sub.2/2005/24], the Secretariat informed the Subcommission that El-Hadji Guissé (Senegal) had indicated that he would make an oral presentation in lieu of the expanded working paper on the effects of debt on human rights, requested by the Subcommission in 2004 [YUN 2004, p. 755].

Social Forum

Note by OHCHR. In June [E/CN.4/Sub.2/SF/2005/2], OHCHR presented the organizational details of the 2005 Social Forum, held in accordance with Economic and Social Council decisions 2003/264 [YUN 2003, p. 760] and 2004/217 [YUN 2004, p. 755].

Social Forum session. At its third session (Geneva, 21-22 July) [E/CN.4/Sub.2/2005/21], the Social Forum held panel discussions on the perspectives of those living in poverty: voices from around the world; growth with accountability; and methods and instruments of accountability. It adopted conclusions on issues relating to poverty eradication and recommended that consideration be given to enhancing the full and meaningful participation of the poor in the process of formulating policies and strategies to attain the MDGs. As civil society organizations played a key role in the development process, they should support the participation of the poor in related decision-making, and in that regard, institutionalize their means for effective participation; become literate in macroeconomic and international public finance discourses; and ensure transparency and accountability of their internal structures. Emphasizing the need for an effective accountability mechanism, the Forum noted that, since access to formal justice was often non-existent to those living in extreme poverty, it was necessary to promote within the national poverty reduction strategic innovative means for ensuring that obligations were discharged. As a corollary, there was a need to educate people of their rights to complain and criticize official policy. States should consider the importance for national human rights institutions to have a mandate to monitor the enjoyment of economic, social and cultural rights, as well as the opportunity to provide human rights-based policy recommendations to Governments.

The Forum had before it a June working paper on participation, development and human rights [E/CN.4/Sub.2/SF/2005/3], submitted by José Bengoa (Chile), in response to a 2004 Subcommission request [YUN 2004, p. 756]. The paper examined participation in public affairs and decision-making processes as a human right and a means of empowerment, considered passive and active participation and analysed participation within the context of the MDGs and related efforts to combat extreme poverty. It observed that the lack of participation was the main reason for the failure of poverty alleviation policies, as without high levels of participation by the people, economic growth was usually selective and segmented.

Subcommission action. On 8 August [res. 2005/8], the Subcommission, taking note of the conclusions and recommendations of the Social Forum (see above), called on States, intergovernmental and civil society organizations to take them into account when designing and implementing poverty reduction programmes and strategies. It decided that the next meeting of the Forum would be held in 2006 in Geneva and that the theme would be "The fight against poverty and the right of participation: the role of women", to be addressed within the context of the preparation of the review of the first United Nations Decade for the Eradication of Poverty (1997-2006), proclaimed by the General Assembly in resolution 50/107 [YUN 1995, p. 844]. Chin-Sung Chung (Republic of Korea) was asked to prepare a working paper on the challenges of women's participation in policies and strategies to combat poverty for the Forum's consideration in 2006. The Subcommission requested OHCHR to seek an effective means of ensuring consultation and the broadest possible participation in the Forum, and the Chairperson of the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW) (see p. 1271), to participate in the Forum's next session and to make a presentation on the chosen theme. The Forum was invited to report to the Subcommission in 2006 regarding its discussions, recommendations and conclusions, while the Secretary-General was requested to adopt appropriate measures to disseminate information about the Forum, invite relevant individuals and organizations to attend it and to take measures for its success.

Transnational corporations

Report of High Commissioner. In response to a 2004 Commission decision [YUN 2004, p. 756], the High Commissioner submitted a February report [E/CN.4/2005/91], which considered the scope and legal status of existing initiatives and standards on the responsibilities of transnational corporations (TNCs) and related business enterprises with regard to human rights, as well as outstanding issues requiring further consideration by the Commission. In considering the responsibilities of business regarding human rights, the report emphasized that States were the primary duty bearers of human rights, and that, although business could affect the enjoyment of those rights significantly, its influence differed from that of States. The responsibilities of States could not, therefore, simply be transferred to business, as the responsibilities of the latter needed to be defined separately, and in proportion to its nature and activities. Observing, however, that there were gaps in understanding the human rights responsibilities of business, the High Commissioner adopted conclusions and made recommendations to help advance dialogue between States and different stakeholders on the issue and to assist the Commission to identify options for strengthening standards on the responsibilities of transnational corporations and related business enterprises with regard to human rights. Noting a growing interest in further discussing the possibility of drafting a UN statement on universal human rights standards applicable to business, she pointed to the need to develop tools, particularly training materials and methodologies, for undertaking human rights impact assessments and to assist businesses in implementing their responsibilities. She also identified issues raised in the report that required further study and clarification.

Commission action. On 20 April [res. 2005/69], by a recorded vote of 49 to 3, with 1 abstention, the Commission requested the Secretary-General to appoint a special representative on the issue of human rights and transnational corporations and other business enterprises, for an initial period of two years to: identify and clarify standards of corporate responsibility and accountability for transnational corporations and other business enterprises with regard to human rights; elaborate on the role of States in regulating and adjudicating the role of such corporations; research and clarify the implications for those corporations of such concepts as "complicity" and "sphere of influence"; develop materials and methodologies for undertaking human rights impact assessments of their activities; and compile a compendium of best practices of States and transnational corporations and other business enterprises. The representative was asked to liaise closely with the Special Adviser to the Secretary-General for the Global Compact; to consult with all stakeholders, including States, relevant UN bodies and civil society organization; and to submit an interim report to the Commission in 2006 and a final report in 2007. The High Commissioner was asked to support those efforts and to cooperate with the expert in convening an annual meeting with senior executives from companies and experts from relevant sectors, in order to raise awareness and share best practice, and to report to the Commission in 2006 on the outcome of the first such meeting.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 25 July, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on Human Rights [E/2005/23], adopted decision 2005/273 by recorded vote (47-3-0) [agenda item 14 (g)].

Human rights and transnational corporations and other business enterprises

At its 38th plenary meeting, on 25 July 2005, the Economic and Social Council took note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 2005/69 of 20 April 2005, and approved the request of the Commission to the Secretary-General to appoint a special representative on the issue of human rights and transnational corporations and other business enterprises, for an initial period of two years, to undertake the activities set out in that resolution.

The Council also endorsed the Commission's request to the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to convene annually, in cooperation with the Special Representative, a meeting with senior executives from companies and experts from a particular sector, such as the pharmaceutical, extractive or chemical industries, to consider, within the mandate of the Special Representative, the specific human rights issues faced by those sectors, to raise awareness and share best practice, and to report on the outcome of the first meeting to the Commission at its sixty-second session.

RECORDED VOTE ON DECISION 2005/273:

In favour: Albania, Armenia, Azerbaijan, Bangladesh, Belgium, Belize, Brazil, Canada, China, Colombia, Congo, Costa Rica, Cuba, Denmark, Ecuador, France, Germany, Guinea, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Ireland, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Kenya, Lithuania, Malaysia, Mauritius, Mexico, Nicaragua, Pakistan, Panama, Poland, Republic of Korea, Russian Federation, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Spain, Thailand, Tunisia, Turkey, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania.

Against: Australia, South Africa, United States.

Working group activities. The working group on the working methods and activities of TNCs, at its seventh session (Geneva, 27 and 29 July) [E/CN.4/Sub.2/2005/22], continued its consideration of the draft norms on the responsibilities of TNCs and other business enterprises, towards the elaboration of a binding instrument. The group had before it a number of relevant background documents, including the draft norms approved by the Subcommission in 2003 [YUN 2003, p. 761] and commentary thereto, as well as the report of the High Commissioner (see p. 834). The group considered current standards and standard-setting activities and related comments by its members, Subcommission experts, Member States and NGOs, and adopted recommendations on its future work.

Subcommission action. On 25 July [dec. 2005/102], the Subcommission decided to establish a sessional working group to examine the working methods and activities of TNCs (see above).

On 8 August [res. 2005/6], the Subcommission invited Gáspár Bíró (Hungary) to prepare a working paper on the role of States in the guarantee of human rights, with a reference to the activities of TNCs and other business entities, and Chin-Sung Chung (Republic of Korea) and Florizelle O'Connor (Jamaica), to prepare a working paper on bilateral and multilateral economic agreements and their impact on the human rights of the beneficiaries for submission in 2006. It decided that the group's 2006 agenda would include a review of developments related to the responsibilities of business with regard to human rights; a consideration of possible situations where business might facilitate or generate human rights violations and the identification of appropriate responses thereto; as well as consideration of possible ways of protecting individuals or groups from harm caused by business activities. The group was requested to report in 2006.

Coercive economic measures

Commission action. By a recorded vote of 37 to 14, with 2 abstentions, the Commission, on 14 April [res. 2005/14], decided to consider the negative impact of unilateral coercive measures with regard to implementing the right to development and invited relevant special rapporteurs and thematic mechanisms to pay attention to the issue. It requested the High Commissioner to give urgent consideration to its resolution, and the Secretary-General, to bring it to the attention of Member States, to seek their views on the implications and negative effects of unilateral coercive measures and to report in 2006.

Reports of Secretary-General. In response to a 2004 Commission request [YUN 2004, p. 757], the Secretary-General summarized information received from two States (Cuba, Qatar) on the implications and negative effects of unilateral coercive economic measures [E/CN.4/2005/37].

In response to General Assembly resolution 59/188 [YUN 2004, p. 757], the Secretary-General, in an October report [A/60/305], presented further information from five States (Azerbaijan, Cuba, Georgia, Iraq, Lebanon) regarding such measures.

On 16 December, the Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's report (decision 60/533).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December [meeting 64], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/60/509/Add.2], adopted resolution 60/155 by recorded vote (125-53-0) [agenda item 71 (b)].

Human rights and unilateral coercive measures

The General Assembly,

Recalling all its previous resolutions on this subject, the most recent of which was resolution 59/188 of 20 December 2004, and Commission on Human Rights resolution 2005/14 of 14 April 2005,

Reaffirming the pertinent principles and provisions contained in the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States proclaimed by the General Assembly in its resolution 3281(XXIX) of 12 December 1974, in particular article 32 thereof, in which it declared that no State may use or encourage the use of economic, political or any other type of measures to coerce another State in order to obtain from it the subordination of the exercise of its sovereign rights,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General, submitted pursuant to Commission on Human Rights resolution 1999/21 of 23 April 1999, and the reports of the Secretary-General on the implementation of resolutions 52/120 of 12 December 1997 and 55/110 of 4 December 2000,

Recognizing the universal, indivisible, interdependent and interrelated character of all human rights, and, in this regard, reaffirming the right to development as an integral part of all human rights,

Recalling that the World Conference on Human Rights, held at Vienna from 14 to 25 June 1993, called upon States to refrain from any unilateral coercive measure not in accordance with international law and the Charter of the United Nations that creates obstacles to trade relations among States and impedes the full realization of all human rights,

Bearing in mind all the references to this question in the Copenhagen Declaration on Social Development adopted by the World Summit for Social Development on 12 March 1995, the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action adopted by the Fourth World Conference on Women on 15 September 1995, the Istanbul Declaration on Human Settlements and the Habitat Agenda adopted by the second United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II) on 14 June 1996, and their five-year reviews,

Expressing its concern about the negative impact of unilateral coercive measures on international relations, trade, investment and cooperation,

Expressing its grave concern that, in some countries, the situation of children is adversely affected by unilateral coercive measures not in accordance with international law and the Charter that create obstacles to trade relations among States, impede the full realization of social and economic development and hinder the well-being of the population in the affected countries, with particular consequences for women and children, including adolescents,

Deeply concerned that, despite the recommendations adopted on this question by the General Assembly and recent major United Nations conferences, and contrary to general international law and the Charter, unilateral coercive measures continue to be promulgated and implemented with all their negative implications for the social-humanitarian activities and economic and social development of developing countries, including their extraterritorial effects, thereby creating additional obstacles to the full enjoyment of all human rights by peoples and individuals under the jurisdiction of other States,

Bearing in mind all the extraterritorial effects of any unilateral legislative, administrative and economic measures, policies and practices of a coercive nature against the development process and the enhancement of human rights in developing countries, which create obstacles to the full realization of all human rights,

Noting the continuing efforts of the open-ended Working Group on the Right to Development of the Commission on Human Rights, and reaffirming in particular its criteria, according to which unilateral coercive measures are one of the obstacles to the implementation of the Declaration on the Right to Development,

1. Urges all States to refrain from adopting or implementing any unilateral measures not in accordance with international law and the Charter of the United Nations, in particular those of a coercive nature with all their extraterritorial effects, which create obstacles to trade relations among States, thus impeding the full realization of the rights set forth in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and other international human rights instruments, in particular the right of individuals and peoples to development;

2. Also urges all States to take steps to avoid and to refrain from adopting any unilateral measures not in accordance with international law and the Charter that impede the full achievement of economic and social development by the population of the affected countries, in particular children and women, that hinder their well-being and that create obstacles to the full enjoyment of their human rights, including the right of everyone to a standard of living adequate for their health and well-being and their right to food, medical care and the necessary social services, as well as to ensure that food and medicine are not used as tools for political pressure;

3. Invites all States to consider adopting administrative or legislative measures, as appropriate, to counteract the extraterritorial applications or effects of unilateral coercive measures;

4. Rejects unilateral coercive measures with all their extraterritorial effects as tools for political or economic pressure against any country, in particular against developing countries, because of their negative effects on the realization of all the human rights of vast sectors of their populations, in particular children, women and the elderly;

5. Calls upon Member States that have initiated such measures to commit themselves to their obligations and responsibilities arising from the international human rights instruments to which they are party by revoking such measures at the earliest possible time;

6. Reaffirms, in this context, the right of all peoples to self-determination, by virtue of which they freely determine their political status and freely pursue their economic, social and cultural development;

7. Urges the Commission on Human Rights to take fully into account the negative impact of unilateral coercive measures, including the enactment of national laws and their extraterritorial application, in its task concerning the implementation of the right to development;

8. Requests the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, in discharging her functions relating to the promotion, realization and protection of the right to development and bearing in mind the continuing impact of unilateral coercive measures on the population of developing countries, to give priority to the present resolution in her annual report to the General Assembly;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to bring the present resolution to the attention of all Member States, to continue to collect their views and information on the implications and negative effects of unilateral coercive measures on their populations and to submit an analytical report thereon to the General Assembly at its sixty-first session, highlighting the practical and preventive measures in this respect;

10. Decides to examine the question on a priority basis at its sixty-first session under the sub-item entitled "Human rights questions, including alternative approaches for improving the effective enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms".

Corruption

Commission action. On 15 April [dec. 2005/104], the Commission endorsed the Subcommission's 2004 request [YUN 2004, p. 759] to the Secretary-General to facilitate the work of the Special Rapporteur in preparing a comprehensive study on corruption and its impact on the full enjoyment of human rights, by enabling her to attend the meeting of the "Friends of the United Nations Convention against Corruption" in Vienna.

On 25 July, the Economic and Social Council endorsed the Commission's decision (decision 2005/283).

Report of Special Rapporteur. In accordance with a 2003 Subcommission request [YUN 2003, p. 764], the Special Rapporteur on corruption and its impact on the enjoyment of human rights, Christy Mbonu (Nigeria), submitted a June progress report [E/CN.4/Sub.2/2005/18]. Building on her 2004 preliminary report, the current report focused on institutions considered to be more prone to corruption, including those necessary to sustain democracy, such as political parties and parliaments. In that context, it highlighted the problem posed by party corruption, particularly in developing countries and countries in transition, noting that political parties often abused their positions to extort bribes and provide members and followers with lucrative positions, and that corruption among parliamentarians compromised their legislative, oversight and financial control and representational roles. The report also examined the impact of corruption on the integrity of the judiciary and law enforcement agencies, public sector procurement and procurement at international organizations. It discussed the effect of capital flight through corruption, which was described as one of the main causes of poverty in developing countries, particularly as it related to tax evasion and the illegal export of capital. Highlighting international efforts to combat the problem, including through regional mechanisms and the legal framework provided by the United Nations Convention against Corruption, adopted in General Assembly resolution 58/4 [YUN 2003, p. 1127], the report noted the successes and challenges of civil society groups and States in that regard. Against that background, it outlined conclusions and recommendations underscoring the way in which corruption violated all regimes of rights and the fact that it remained one of the major obstacles to honest and transparent government, the consolidation of democracy and the promotion of sustainable development. The report called for the focusing of international efforts on turning the tide against perpetrators; measures by States to ensure that the vice was eliminated from political parties and parliaments; the strengthening of legislation to tackle the problem in procurement activities; and assistance to States by international financial institutions in designing economic policies that included transparency in procurement. It also highlighted the importance of ratifying and incorporating into domestic laws the UN Convention against Corruption, of international cooperation in repatriating the funds of illicit origin siphoned from developing countries and of the crucial role of civil society and the media in the fight against corruption.

Subcommission action. On 10 August [res. 2005/16], the Subcommission urged States to introduce national mechanisms to prevent and combat corruption and, in that regard, requested the Secretary-General to assist the Special Rapporteur in her work, including study visits to interested countries, to enable her to examine related obstacles and challenges confronting those mechanisms.

Extreme poverty

Report of independent expert. In accordance with a 2004 Commission request [YUN 2004, p. 759], the independent expert on the question of human rights and extreme poverty, Arjun Sengupta (India), submitted his first report [E/CN.4/2005/49], in which he proposed a definition of extreme poverty, explored how that definition could be linked to human rights and suggested concrete actions at the national and international levels that could contribute to a more efficient eradication of poverty. In that context, the expert determined that extreme poverty should be defined as a composite of income poverty, human development poverty and social exclusion, and should encompass the notions of lack of basic security and capability deprivation. Such a definition would aid the development of targeted and integrated policies for dealing with the issue. A resolution or declaration would be necessary to characterize poverty as a violation or denial of human rights, with corresponding obligations for realizing human rights and eradicating poverty. At the national level, actions would aim at fulfilling civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights to eradicate poverty and social exclusion, particularly targeted and sustainable employment-generation strategies to eradicate poverty as part of human rights-based national poverty reduction strategies. At the international level, the expert underlined the role of financial institutions in facilitating human rights-based poverty-reduction efforts and recommended the establishment of a mechanism for coordinating the development cooperation activities of Governments and agencies.

Commission action. On 14 April [res. 2005/16], the Commission asked OHCHR to give high priority to the relationship between extreme poverty and human rights and to pursue further work in that area. It requested OHCHR, the independent expert on extreme poverty (see p. 837) and the Subcommission to ensure coordination and coherence of their work and to continue consultations with the poorest, civil society and interested States. The Commission invited treaty bodies to take into account, when considering the reports of States parties, the question of extreme poverty and human rights, and the independent expert, to maintain focus on the link between human rights and extreme poverty and to report in 2006. The United Nations was called upon to strengthen poverty eradication as a priority throughout the common system.

International declaration

Ad hoc group of experts. In response to a 2004 Subcommission request [YUN 2004, p. 760], Mr. José Bengoa, in his capacity as coordinator of the ad hoc group of experts to prepare a study on the draft international declaration on extreme poverty and human rights, presented a July progress report [E/CN.4/Sub.2/2005/20] on the need to develop guiding principles on the implementation of human rights norms and standards in the context of the fight against extreme poverty. The report considered the challenge of poverty eradication and summarized discussions held on extreme poverty and human rights (see below). Based on those discussions and on the work of the independent expert (see p. 837), the group emphasized the need to develop an instrument on human rights and extreme poverty, and recommended the continuation of its consultations with the poor, so as to bring together relevant elements for the drafting of an international declaratory instrument on human rights and the elimination of extreme poverty for submission to the Subcommission in 2006. The Commission should be requested to authorize the establishment of a working group charged with the drafting of such an instrument, based on the work of the ad hoc group of experts. There was a need to embark on a new phase, which should include the organization of an expert seminar to frame the draft instrument, among other things.

A July addendum [E/CN.4/Sub.2/2005/20/Add.1] summarized the discussions of a seminar on extreme poverty and human rights (São Paulo, Brazil, 2-3 March), sponsored by the Nippon Foundation, a Tokyo-based charity organization, and its affiliate, the Sasakawa Memorial Health Foundation, and of regional consultations (Bangkok, Thailand, 26-27 March), organized by ATD Fourth World, an international NGO dedicated to the eradication of extreme poverty. It also provided information on the development of extreme poverty as a human rights issue within UN human rights mechanisms and a list of resolutions and documentation relating to the work of the ad hoc group of experts.

Subcommission action. On 8 August [res. 2005/9], the Subcommission requested the ad hoc group of experts to continue extensive consultations with regional and international intergovernmental organizations, NGOs, local associations, academics and other competent persons, and through regional seminars, to ensure the involvement of persons living in extreme poverty. The group was further requested to prepare, without financial implications, a final report for submission in 2006. The Subcommission called on the Commission to replace the ad hoc group with a new group, comprising five Subcommission members and with a specific mandate to continue consideration of the subject, taking into account the results already attained.

Right to food

Reports of Special Rapporteur. In response to a 2004 Commission request [YUN 2004, p. 762], the Special Rapporteur on the right to food, Jean Ziegler (Switzerland), in a January report [E/CN.4/2005/47], reviewed his 2004 activities to promote and monitor the right. During the year, he transmitted a number of communications regarding urgent situations or alleged violations concerning the right to seven countries, as well as to the Occupied Palestinian Territory, and received responses from two of them. The report described the Special Rapporteur's efforts to promote a growing awareness of the right to food, including through meetings with numerous civil society organizations, and detailed several positive developments with respect to the right. Despite that progress, situations of special concern persisted in many countries, including the Darfur region of the Sudan, where militia groups had allegedly destroyed or looted crops, agricultural areas, livestock and drinking water installations; the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, where millions of people suffered from a silent famine; Iraq, where many people had died of increasingly difficult living conditions; and the Occupied Palestinian Territory, where the occupying forces continued to violate the right to food; and in regions struck by natural disasters, such as the tsunami in Asia and the locust infestations in western Africa. The Special Rapporteur stressed that the right to food was a human right that had to be respected and enforced around the world. In that connection, he participated in an initiative to develop a set of internationally accepted voluntary guidelines to support the progressive realization of the right. Those Guidelines, adopted by the Council of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO) in 2004 [YUN 2004, p. 1486], provided an internationally accepted definition of the right to food, addressed how that right could be incorporated into government strategies and institutions and called on States to set up mechanisms to inform people of their right to food and to increase access to justice in that regard. As part of his mandate to examine emerging issues, the Special Rapporteur examined current discussions regarding the extraterritorial obligations of States to the right, and recommended that Governments recognize those obligations. Other recommendations advocated the commitment of Governments to respect, protect and fulfill the right to food of people living within their territories, as well as the practical implementation of the FAO Voluntary Guidelines (see above) and their incorporation into national development programmes for food security and poverty reduction.

The Special Rapporteur visited Guatemala (26 January–4 February) [E/CN.4/2006/44/Add.1], where acute malnutrition had increased and extreme poverty levels remained high, particularly among indigenous people, owing to a long history of social exclusion and inequality. The Special Rapporteur examined food insecurity issues in the country, such as hunger and social conflict, and considered the legal and policy framework for the right to food there. He found that, despite the progress made in the 1990s to reduce poverty and malnutrition, the gap between the rich and poor was widening and the country was not using its maximum available resources to fight hunger. Over 60 per cent of Guatemalans survived on an income that did not cover their basic food needs, preventing them from exercising their right to food. The main obstacles to the realization of the right included the country's model of exclusionary development that concentrated wealth and power in the hands of a small elite, persistent impunity for human rights violations and the lack of equality before the law for the people, and the model of export-oriented agriculture. The Special Rapporteur recommended the full implementation of Guatemala's legal and policy framework for the realization of the right to food of all Guatemalans, to be implemented within the context of its peace accords [YUN 1996, p. 168; YUN 1997, p. 176]. Specific recommendations to the Government included the recognition of indigenous communities' land rights; the prompt implementation of the Law on Land Registry and the elaboration of an Agrarian Code to regulate the access, use and tenure of land, which respected the right to food; and the establishment of a special unit within the Office of the Human Rights Ombudsman to monitor the realization of the right and the related obligations of the State.

The Special Rapporteur undertook an urgent mission to the Niger (8-12 July) [A/60/350] to raise awareness about the dramatic food situation in the country, where some 3.6 million people, accounting for almost a third of the population and including 800,000 children, faced acute malnutrition. Infants were reportedly dying of starvation. The acute food crisis had resulted from a combination of unfavourable economic trends and structural shortcomings, caused mainly by the drought and locust invasion that destroyed many crops and impeded pasture and cereal production in 2004. It was a matter of concern that the response of the international community had been extremely slow. Of the $16.2 million requested in an urgent appeal to cover the country's essential needs, only $3.8 million had been received. The Special Rapporteur concluded that the immediate provision of food aid was essential and urged the Government to begin free distribution of such aid to vulnerable groups, especially children, pregnant women and elderly people, and to guarantee free access to health units for undernourished children. Addressing the underlying structural causes of hunger was also essential to limit vulnerability to future famines and to fully realize the right to food of the people of the Niger.

In India (20 August–2 September) [E/CN.4/2006/44/Add.2], the Special Rapporteur found that, despite relative progress in Government efforts to eradicate famine and food shortages, millions of Indians remained undernourished and starvation deaths persisted. With falling agricultural wages, increasing landlessness and rising food prices, food insecurity was growing particularly in rural areas. While recent economic growth generated employment, mostly in high-tech sectors, it was insufficient to absorb the loss of livelihood from agriculture, on which two thirds of the population still depended. Violations of the right to food had involved over 250 cases of starvation deaths, discrimination against the scheduled castes and tribes, displacements or evictions of people by the State without adequate resettlement or rehabilitation, the lack of protection against the activities of private companies and the lack of implementation of food-based schemes in most states in the country.

The Special Rapporteur recommended, among other measures, the effective monitoring of the severity of chronic undernourishment and malnutrition and accountability for related deaths, including by the national and state human rights commissions and local panchayat (self-governing) bodies; the establishment of a framework law with a national strategy for the implementation of the right to food; the implementation of land and agrarian reforms to strengthen smallholder agricultural livelihoods; and the strengthening of public food distribution schemes to ensure that food aid reached all those in need. The implementation of all food-based schemes should be improved by incorporating the human rights principles of non-discrimination, participation, transparency and accountability, and food security programmes should ensure nutritional security and better emphasize the protection and promotion of sustainable livelihoods.

Commission action. By a recorded vote of 52 to 1, the Commission, on 13 April [res. 2005/18], considering it intolerable that there were some 852 million undernourished people in the world, asked States, private actors and international organizations to promote the effective realization of the right to food for all. The Special Rapporteur was asked to submit an interim report to the General Assembly in 2005 (see below) and to report to the Commission in 2006, with the assistance of the High Commissioner, while Governments, UN agencies, funds and programmes, treaty bodies and NGOs were invited to cooperate with him by submitting suggestions on ways to realize the right to food.

Further report of Special Rapporteur. In accordance with General Assembly resolution 59/202 [YUN 2004, p. 763], the Secretary-General, in September, transmitted a report of the Special Rapporteur [A/60/350], which addressed the emerging issues of the right to food of indigenous peoples and the responsibilities of international organizations regarding that right. Addressing the former, the report noted that in most countries, hunger and malnutrition were disproportionately higher among indigenous populations, making it urgent to strengthen the protection of their rights in that regard, including by better protecting their land and resources. Considering international organizations, the Special Rapporteur was concerned that projects financed by such organizations as the World Bank could have a negative impact on the right to food of vulnerable populations, sometimes causing them to be displaced from their land and to lose access to their traditional livelihoods. It was also of concern that economic development models promoted and imposed by international organizations such as the Bank, the IMF and the World Trade Organization (WTO) were threatening the right to food of small farmers worldwide. Although important recent progress had been made in some countries to tackle food security problems, the overall trend was one of regression rather than the progressive realization of the right to food. The Special Rapporteur determined that hunger appeared to have increased every year since the 1996 World Food Summit [YUN 1996, p. 1129], which was dedicated to combating hunger. The situation in Africa was particularly disturbing, given that up to nine countries on the continent suffered from critical food emergencies. The Special Rapporteur recommended that Governments take urgent action to halt global undernourishment, respond rapidly to the food crises currently affecting Africa, and accord special attention to the situation and rights of indigenous peoples, who suffered from disproportionately high levels of hunger and malnutrition. Food security should be ensured as a human right and not left up to the vagaries of the market system, which could not address hunger in times of emergency, and international organizations should recognize that they had binding responsibilities towards human rights, including the right to food.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December [meeting 64], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/60/509/Add.2], adopted resolution 60/165 by a recorded vote (176-1-1) [agenda item 71 (b)].

The right to food

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 59/202 of 20 December 2004, as well as all Commission on Human Rights resolutions in this regard, in particular resolution 2005/18 of 14 April 2005,

Recalling also the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, which provides that everyone has the right to a standard of living adequate for her or his health and well-being, including food, the Universal Declaration on the Eradication of Hunger and Malnutrition and the United Nations Millennium Declaration,

Recalling further the provisions of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, in which the fundamental right of every person to be free from hunger is recognized,

Bearing in mind the Rome Declaration on World Food Security and the World Food Summit Plan of Action and the Declaration of the World Food Summit: five years later, adopted in Rome on 13 June 2002,

Welcoming the concrete recommendations contained in the Voluntary Guidelines to Support the Progressive Realization of the Right to Adequate Food in the Context of National Food Security, adopted by the Council of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations in November 2004,

Reaffirming that all human rights are universal, indivisible, interdependent and interrelated,

Reaffirming also that a peaceful, stable and enabling political, social and economic environment, at both the national and the international levels, is the essential foundation that will enable States to give adequate priority to food security and poverty eradication,

Reiterating, as in the Rome Declaration on World Food Security and the Declaration of the World Food Summit: five years later, that food should not be used as an instrument of political or economic pressure, and reaffirming in this regard the importance of international cooperation and solidarity, as well as the necessity of refraining from unilateral measures that are not in accordance with international law and the Charter of the United Nations and that endanger food security,

Convinced that each State must adopt a strategy consistent with its resources and capacities to achieve its individual goals in implementing the recommendations contained in the Rome Declaration on World Food Security and the World Food Summit Plan of Action and, at the same time, cooperate regionally and internationally in order to organize collective solutions to global issues of food security in a world of increasingly interlinked institutions, societies and economies where coordinated efforts and shared responsibilities are essential,

Recognizing that the problems of hunger and food insecurity have global dimensions and that they are likely to persist and even to increase dramatically in some regions unless urgent, determined and concerted action is taken, given the anticipated increase in the world's population and the stress on natural resources,

Expressing its deep concern at the number and scale of natural disasters, diseases and pests and their increasing impact in recent years, which have resulted in massive loss of life and livelihood and threatened agricultural production and food security, in particular in developing countries,

Stressing the importance of reversing the continuing decline of official development assistance devoted to agriculture, both in real terms and as a share of total official development assistance,

1. Reaffirms that hunger constitutes an outrage and a violation of human dignity and therefore requires the adoption of urgent measures at the national, regional and international levels for its elimination;

2. Also reaffirms the right of everyone to have access to safe and nutritious food, consistent with the right to adequate food and the fundamental right of everyone to be free from hunger, so as to be able to fully develop and maintain their physical and mental capacities;

3. Considers it intolerable that there are about 852 million undernourished people in the world, that every five seconds a child under the age of 5 dies from hunger or hunger-related diseases somewhere in the world, when, according to the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the planet could produce enough food to provide 2,100 kilocalories per person per day to 12 billion people, twice the world's present population;

4. Expresses its concern that women are disproportionately affected by hunger, food insecurity and poverty, in part as a result of gender inequality and discrimination, that in many countries, girls are twice as likely as boys to die from malnutrition and preventable childhood diseases, and that it is estimated that almost twice as many women as men suffer from malnutrition;

5. Encourages all States to take action to address gender inequality and discrimination against women, in particular where it contributes to the malnutrition of women and girls, including measures to ensure the full and equal realization of the right to food and ensuring that women have equal access to resources, including income, land and water, to enable them to feed themselves and their families;

6. Encourages the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on the right to food to continue mainstreaming a gender perspective in the fulfilment of his mandate, and encourages the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations and all other United Nations bodies and mechanisms addressing the right to food and food insecurity to integrate a gender perspective into their relevant policies, programmes and activities;

7. Encourages all States to take steps with a view to achieving progressively the full realization of the right to food, including steps to promote the conditions for everyone to be free from hunger and, as soon as possible, to enjoy fully the right to food, and to create and adopt national plans to combat hunger;

8. Acknowledges that many indigenous organizations and representatives of indigenous communities have expressed in different forums their deep concerns over the obstacles and challenges for their full enjoyment of the right to food, and calls upon States to take special actions to combat the root causes of the disproportionately high level of hunger and malnutrition among indigenous peoples and the continuous discrimination against them;

9. Requests all States and private actors, as well as international organizations within their respective mandates, to take fully into account the need to promote the effective realization of the right to food for all, including in the ongoing negotiations in different fields;

10. Stresses the need to make efforts to mobilize and optimize the allocation and utilization of technical and financial resources from all sources, including external debt relief for developing countries, and to reinforce national actions to implement sustainable food security policies;

11. Recalls the importance of the New York Declaration on Action against Hunger and Poverty, which has been supported by more than one hundred countries to date, and recommends the continuation of efforts aimed at identifying additional sources of financing for the fight against hunger and poverty;

12. Recognizes that the promises made at the World Food Summit in 1996 to halve the number of persons who are undernourished are not being fulfilled, and invites once again all international financial and development institutions, as well as the relevant United Nations agencies and funds, to give priority to and provide the necessary funding to realize the aim of halving by 2015 the proportion of people who suffer from hunger, as well as the right to food as set out in the Rome Declaration on World Food Security and the United Nations Millennium Declaration;

13. Urges States to give adequate priority in their development strategies and expenditures to the realization of the right to food;

14. Stresses the importance of international development cooperation and assistance, in particular in emergency situations such as natural and man-made disasters, diseases and pests, for the realization of the right to food and the achievement of sustainable food security, while recognizing that each country has the primary responsibility for ensuring the implementation of national programmes and strategies in this regard;

15. Calls upon Member States, the United Nations system and other relevant stakeholders to support national efforts aimed at responding rapidly to the food crises currently occurring across Africa;

16. Invites all relevant international organizations, including the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund, to promote policies and projects that have a positive impact on the right to food, to ensure that partners respect the right to food in the implementation of common projects, to support strategies of Member States aimed at the fulfilment of the right to food and to avoid any actions that could have a negative impact on the realization of the right to food;

17. Takes note of the interim report of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on the right to food, and also takes note of his valuable work in the promotion of the right to food;

18. Supports the realization of the mandate of the Special Rapporteur as extended by the Commission on Human Rights in its resolution 2003/25 of 22 April 2003;

19. Requests the Secretary-General and the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to provide all the necessary human and financial resources for the effective fulfilment of the mandate of the Special Rapporteur;

20. Welcomes the work already done by the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights in promoting the right to adequate food, in particular its General Comment No. 12 (1999) on the right to adequate food (article 11 of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights), in which the Committee affirmed, inter alia, that the right to adequate food is indivisibly linked to the inherent dignity of the human person and is indispensable for the fulfilment of other human rights enshrined in the International Bill of Human Rights, and is also inseparable from social justice, requiring the adoption of appropriate economic, environmental and social policies, at both the national and the international levels, oriented to the eradication of poverty and the fulfilment of all human rights for all;

21. Recalls General Comment No. 15 (2002) of the Committee on the right to water (articles 11 and 12 of the Covenant), in which the Committee noted, inter alia, the importance of ensuring sustainable water resources for human consumption and agriculture in realization of the right to adequate food;

22. Welcomes the adoption by the Council of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations of the Voluntary Guidelines to Support the Progressive Realization of the Right to Adequate Food in the Context of National Food Security, which represent a practical tool to promote the realization of the right to food for all, contribute to the achievement of food security and thus provide an additional instrument in the attainment of internationally agreed development goals, including those contained in the Millennium Declaration;

23. Also welcomes the continued cooperation of the High Commissioner, the Committee and the Special Rapporteur, and encourages them to continue their cooperation in this regard;

24. Calls upon all Governments to cooperate with and assist the Special Rapporteur in his task, to supply all necessary information requested by him and to give serious consideration to responding favourably to the requests of the Special Rapporteur to visit their countries to enable him to fulfil his mandate more effectively;

25. Requests the Special Rapporteur to submit a comprehensive report to the Commission on Human Rights at its sixty-second session and an interim report to the General Assembly at its sixty-first session on the implementation of the present resolution;

26. Invites Governments, relevant United Nations agencies, funds and programmes, treaty bodies and civil society actors, including non-governmental organizations, as well as the private sector, to cooperate fully with the Special Rapporteur in the fulfilment of his mandate, inter alia, through the submission of comments and suggestions on ways and means of realizing the right to food;

27. Decides to continue the consideration of the question at its sixty-first session under the item entitled "Human rights questions".

RECORDED VOTE ON RESOLUTION 60/165:

Right to adequate housing

Reports of Special Rapporteur. The Special Rapporteur on the right to adequate housing, Miloon Kothari (India), in a March report [E/CN.4/2005/48], focused on homelessness, its causes and impacts. Reflecting on the fact that approximately 100 million people worldwide had no place to live and that over one billion were inadequately housed, the report described homelessness as the most visible and severe symptom of the lack of respect for the right to adequate housing. It examined common definitions of homelessness, the legal basis for protection against it, and the driving forces behind the problem, including structural factors, such as poverty, unplanned urban migration and large-scale developmental and infrastructure projects; legislation and policy questions, such as the privatization of civic services; conflict situations; and landlessness. Mostly affected were women, children and youth, indigenous peoples, persons with disabilities, and communities discriminated against on the basis of ethnicity and descent. The Special Rapporteur concluded, among other things, that the right to adequate housing needed to be recognized as being linked to numerous other human rights, including the right to security of the person and of the home. Pointing out that the principle of non-discrimination should guide all aspects of programme design and implementation in policy-making relating to the right to adequate housing, he called for a combination of a humanitarian and human rights approaches in addressing the crises faced by millions living in inadequate and insecure housing. Specific recommendations for furthering the right related to legislation and regulation, programme design and financing, and enforcement, protection and monitoring strategies.

The Special Rapporteur visited Iran (19-31 July) [E/CN.4/2005/41/Add.2], where he examined and reported on the status of the realization of the right to adequate housing, with particular attention to gender equity and non-discrimination. He found that efforts in that regard faced a number of obstacles and challenges relating mainly to the prohibitive costs of housing in the country and policies and programmes that did not seem to improve access to adequate housing for the very poor. That failure resulted from the inaccessibility of Government credit facilities, and leasing and pro-housing savings programmes to the very poor; distortions in Government incentives to large-scale builders of low-price housing units; urban bias in the planning of housing programmes; and the lack of coordination between different Government branches, agencies and organizations responsible for implementation. Additional causes for concern included continuing discrimination against ethnic and religious minorities, nomadic groups and women with respect to adequate housing rights; the high number of alleged cases of land confiscation and forced evictions; and the poor and limited status of related basic services for informal settlements and poor neighbourhoods. The Special Rapporteur addressed a series of recommendations to the Government, including a legal and administrative review of the doctrine of "eminent domain", which prevented individuals and groups from challenging State acquisition of housing and land; the development of further policies to ensure women's equal access to housing, land property and inheritance; the adoption of policies to avoid land and housing speculation; further attention to marginalized provinces; public participation in the elaboration of development plans and the preparation and assessment of housing projects; and the reinforcement, expansion and implementation of policies aimed at groups in vulnerable situations and minorities.

In Cambodia (22 August–3 September) [E/CN.4/2006/41/Add.3], where years of civil conflict and related land acquisition on a massive scale had exacerbated land disputes and distorted land ownership patterns to the disadvantage of the poor, the Special Rapporteur found numerous problems, including the inability of the land management system to address the consequences of the lack of land records destroyed during the Khmer Rouge period. Other problems related to the undeveloped and non-transparent land registration system, the absence of cadastral index maps, inadequate land laws and procedures, unclear delineation of State land and the weakness of the justice system. Particularly worrisome were Government land exchanges, which relocated families to remote areas often lacking adequate infrastructure and access to water and sanitation; forced evictions; intimidation and threats by local authorities and private developers, as well as urban infrastructure development, which often resulted in dubious deals and involuntary relocations or resettlements; arbitrary detention of homeless persons, including children, under the pretext of "beautifying" the city; and a severe lack of public services in rural areas. While the Special Rapporteur was encouraged by some initiatives taken by NGOs and the municipality of Phnom Penh to promote a rights-based approach to urban development and housing rights, he remained concerned about the situation and urged the Government to adopt progressive measures to secure adequate housing for all Cambodians, in accordance with its international human rights obligations. He recommended, in particular, the clear mapping of the housing needs of the country and an interpretation of the data from a human rights perspective, aimed at the development of a comprehensive national housing policy, and urgent attention to those living in distressed housing and living conditions, including slum and relocation site dwellers.

Women's right to property and adequate housing

Report of Special Rapporteur. In response to a 2003 Commission request [YUN 2003, p.770], the Special Rapporteur on the right to adequate housing (see above), submitted a February progress report [E/CN.4/2005/43] on a study of women's equal ownership of, access to and control over land and the equal right to own property and to adequate housing, which built on the 2003 report on the topic [YUN 2003, p. 769]. The current report examined the interrelated issue of land, property and inheritance, and other human rights issues, such as the rights to water and to health, in order to provide a more comprehensive analysis of women's right to adequate housing. Based on questionnaire responses, testimonies and outcomes of regional consultations with civil society, the key themes that emerged as critical issues in the context of that right were violence against women, forced evictions, homelessness, cultural norms and practices, other barriers as poverty, gender discrimination and some countries' lack of national implementation mechanisms for human rights treaties, including national housing laws. Women's right in that regard was especially affected by the lack of secure tenure, information about their human rights, and access to affordable social services, owing to privatization, credit and housing subsidies, as well as adequate housing programmes, owing to bureaucratic barriers. While acknowledging the increasing recognition by international and national laws of women's right to adequate housing, the Special Rapporteur observed that considerable gaps existed between such recognition and the reality of large-scale denial of that right. To improve the situation, he addressed several recommendations to States, the United Nations and civil society actors, regarding the need for, among other actions, the implementation of innovative government housing policies and programmes and the integration of women's human rights into poverty reduction strategies, anti-poverty policies and rural development and land reform programmes. He also emphasized the adoption of an indivisibility-of-rights approach to promoting women's right to adequate housing.

Commission action. On 15 April [res. 2005/25], the Commission encouraged Governments to support the transformation of customs and traditions that discriminated against women and denied them security of tenure and equal ownership of, access to, and control over land, and equal rights to own property and to adequate housing. It recommended that international, regional, national and local housing financing institutions and other credit facilities facilitate women's participation and remove discriminatory policies, giving special consideration to single women and households headed by women. The Secretary-General was invited to encourage UN entities to undertake initiatives that promoted women's rights to own property and to adequate housing, while the Special Rapporteur was asked to submit a final report, in 2006, containing the study on women and adequate housing, and States were invited to respond to the questionnaire he had prepared.

Right to education

Report of Special Rapporteur. The Special Rapporteur on the right to education, Vernor Muñoz Villalobos (Costa Rica), in his first report to the Commission [E/CN.4/2005/50], described his planned activities and the issues he intended to consider toward the implementation of his mandate. Following up on his predecessor's work, the Special Rapporteur said he would continue to strengthen the human rights dimension of education by encouraging a shift from policies addressing education as an economic good to those that considered it as a right. He would focus on the financial resources allocated to education and the need for free compulsory primary education, and engage various key partners in a dialogue on the issue. Reflecting on financial and structural constraints and on discrimination, as major impediments to the full enjoyment of the right to education, the Special Rapporteur said he would accord particular attention to the access of girls and adolescents to education, and examine the exercise of the right by migrants, indigenous populations, minorities and persons with different capacities. He would review security in schools and the exercise of the right to education in emergency situations, including those relating to displacement, armed conflicts, military occupation and intra-school violence.

Commission action. On 15 April [res. 2005/21], the Commission urged States to give full effect to the right to education and to guarantee that the right was recognized and exercised without discrimination. It invited the Special Rapporteur to gather, request, receive and exchange information from all relevant sources, to intensify efforts aimed at identifying ways to overcome obstacles and difficulties in realizing the right, to apply a gender perspective to his work and, with the Secretary-General's assistance, to report in 2006.

Environmental and scientific concerns

Toxic wastes

Reports of Special Rapporteur. In response to a 2004 Commission request [YUN 2004, p. 767], the Special Rapporteur on the adverse effects of the illicit movement and dumping of toxic and dangerous products and wastes on the enjoyment of human rights, Okechukwu Ibeanu (Nigeria), submitted a preliminary report [E/CN.4/2005/45], which analysed his mandate and its relationship to existing multilateral environmental agreements, particularly the 1989 Basel Convention on the Control of Transboundary Movements of Hazardous Wastes and Their Disposal [YUN 1989, p. 420]. It also outlined the scope of his mandate, the methodology he intended to adopt in implementing it and the activities he had undertaken. He also reviewed communications and observations received from Governments and NGOs. To assist him in his work, the Special Rapporteur encouraged Governments to respond to his requests for comments on allegations brought to his attention and for in situ visits.

An addendum to the report [E/CN.4/2005/45/Add.1] updated information on previously reported cases of alleged human rights violations relating to the mandate.

Commission action. By a recorded vote of 37 to 13, with 2 abstentions, the Commission, on 14 April [res. 2005/15], reaffirmed that illicit traffic and dumping of toxic and dangerous products and wastes constituted a serious threat to human rights and urged Governments to prevent it, including through the ratification of related international instruments. Developed countries and international financial institutions were asked to provide financial assistance for implementing the Programme of Action adopted at the First Continental Conference for Africa on the Environmentally Sounds Management of Unwanted Stocks of Hazardous Wastes and Their Prevention [YUN 2001, p. 972]. The Special Rapporteur was asked to study, in consultation with relevant UN bodies, the problems of, and solutions to illicit trafficking and to report in 2006. The Secretary-General was asked to assist him.

Environmental protection and sustainable development

Report of Secretary-General . In response to a 2004 Commission request [YUN 2004, p. 768], the Secretary-General, in January [E/CN.4/2005/96], updated his 2004 report [ibid.] on the relationship between the environment and human rights as part of sustainable development. In that context, the report analysed related developments at the international and regional levels, including the work of human rights treaty bodies, Commission special procedures, multilateral environmental agreements, intergovernmental and civil society organizations, the UN Economic Commission for Europe and the European Court of Human Rights. Regarding developments at the national level, the report considered constitutional and legal provisions for preserving the environment, the status of the right to information on and public participation in environmental matters, relevant jurisprudence and references to environment-related issues in States parties' reports to treaty bodies. The report concluded that the work of many of those entities illustrated a growing recognition of the connection between environmental protection and human rights since the World Summit on Sustainable Development [YUN 2002, p. 821]. At the regional level, in particular, the Aarhus Convention in Europe [YUN 1998, p. 952] and a growing number of decisions by regional courts provided examples of such recognition. Those links were reinforced by developments at the national level, within the framework of the justice system and administrative practices and decisions.

Commission action. On 20 April [res. 2005/60], the Commission asked the High Commissioner and the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP) to continue to coordinate their efforts in capacity-building activities, in cooperation with other relevant bodies and organizations. The High Commissioner was asked to disseminate widely the reports considered and resolutions adopted by the Commission, as well as the observations and recommendations of human rights treaty bodies on environmental protection issues. The Secretary-General was asked to submit in 2007, a report on how respect for human rights could contribute to sustainable development and to include information that would update his report on human rights and the environment as part of sustainable development.

Disappearance of States for environmental reasons

Commission action. On 20 April [dec. 2005/112], the Commission, by a recorded vote of 51 to 2, welcomed the working paper on the human rights situation of indigenous peoples in States and other territories threatened with extinction for environmental reasons [YUN 2004, p. 768], and endorsed the 2004 request of the Subcommission [ibid.] to Françoise Hampson (United Kingdom) to submit an expanded working paper in 2005 (see p. 846), and its request to the Secretary-General to assist her, by facilitating contacts with States, including by transmitting a questionnaire she had elaborated soliciting information for her study.

Working paper. In accordance with the Subcommission's request [YUN 2004, p. 768] and Commission decision 2005/112 (see p. 845), Ms. Hampson submitted an expanded working paper on the subject [E/CN.4/Sub.2/2005/28]. The paper updated information contained in her 2004 report [YUN 2004, p. 768] and explained the issues to be addressed by the questionnaire, which would seek to establish the types of environmental threats facing different populations, including from volcanoes, earthquakes, tidal waves and rising sea levels. In that regard, affected States fell into three categories: those that would disappear totally; those, of which a significant part would disappear, leaving only territory that would be unable to support the remaining population; and those, of which a significant part would disappear, with serious implications for the remaining population. The paper examined the legal and human rights implications of the situation, particularly those relating to the citizenship rights of affected populations and rights relating to their forced relocation to other States. Focusing on the States most likely to be affected (Tuvalu, Nauru, Kiribati, Maldives, the Bahamas), the paper considered action currently being taken to address the problem and possible future action.

Subcommission action. On 10 August [res. 2005/20], the Subcommission appointed Ms. Hampson as Special Rapporteur to prepare, based on her expanded working paper and comments thereon, a comprehensive study on the legal implications of the disappearance of States and other territories for environmental reasons, including the human rights implications for the residents of those states, with particular reference to indigenous peoples. The Special Rapporteur was requested to submit a preliminary report in 2006, a progress report in 2007, and a final report in 2008. The Secretary-General was asked to assist her.

Right to physical and mental health

Reports of Special Rapporteur. The Special Rapporteur on the right to the highest attainable standard of physical and mental health, Paul Hunt (New Zealand), in a February report [E/CN.4/2005/51] describing his activities, stated that, between 2 December 2004 and 1 December 2005, he had transmitted 38 communications, including urgent appeals, to 25 Governments on alleged violations of the right to physical and mental health of numerous persons, with similar communications sent to the United Nations Interim Administration Mission in Kosovo (UNMIK) and the Global Fund to Fight AIDS, Tuberculosis and Malaria. The communications sent and replies received were summarized in a separate document [E/CN.4/2006/48/Add.1].

In the February report, the Special Rapporteur focused on the situation of persons with mental disabilities, whom he observed, were among the most neglected, marginalized and vulnerable. The report reviewed evolving human rights standards and obligations relating to persons with mental disabilities and highlighted three related issues demanding particular attention: intellectual disability, the right to community integration and consent to treatment. It observed that some 450 million people were affected globally, very few of whom were receiving treatment, care and support. While mental and behavioural disorders were estimated to account for 12 per cent of the global burden of disease, the mental health budget of most countries was less than one per cent of their total health expenditure. Over 40 per cent of countries had no mental health policy and more than 30 per cent had no mental health programme. Against that background, mental health was among the most neglected element of the right to health. International organizations had also given little attention to mental health, although the World Health Organization (WHO) and the Pan American Health Organization (PAHO) were making efforts to redress the situation. Civil society organizations and other stakeholders were also making significant progress in advancing debates on the issue of mental disabilities and human rights and in promoting an understanding of the problem. Nonetheless, the Special Rapporteur recommended that States should enhance legal initiatives in mental disability to ensure the right to health and other human rights. They should devote more of their health budgets to mental health, particularly for prevention and community-based treatment and care, and request technical cooperation from WHO and PAHO and financial assistance from donors.

The Special Rapporteur visited Uganda (17-25 March) [E/CN.4/2006/48/Add.2] to consider, from a human rights perspective, the issue of neglected diseases, also known as "poverty-related" tropical diseases, which had inflicted severe and permanent disabilities and deformities on some one billion people around the world, particularly among the poorest in developing countries. In Uganda, those diseases included lymphatic filariasis (elephantiasis), leprosy and human African trypanosomiasis (sleeping sickness) and soil-transmitted diseases, among others. While the Government had achieved impressive health successes in some areas, most notably in halting and reversing the spread of HIV/AIDS, significant challenges remained, as poor infrastructure curtailed access to health-care facilities, especially in rural areas, where only 49 per cent of households had such access. Communicable diseases, such as malaria, parasitic infection, HIV and tuberculosis, fueled by poor sanitation and water resources, were widespread and contributed to high levels of morbidity and mortality, particularly among women and children. The Special Rapporteur identified the main features of a right-to-health approach to neglected diseases in the Ugandan context. He outlined conclusions on the issues addressed in the report and made recommendations for improving Uganda's capacity to tackle neglected diseases, including the possible alignment of various mass drug administration mechanisms in the country and an increase in their sustainable and predictable contributions to Uganda's health sector by development partners.

Commission action. By a recorded vote of 52 to 1, the Commission, on 15 April [res. 2005/24], called on States to guarantee that the right of everyone to the enjoyment of the highest attainable standard of physical and mental health would be exercised without discrimination, and to recognize the needs of persons with disabilities, by reflecting those needs in national health and social policies. The Commission recommended that States review their legislation, procedural safeguards and practices relating to the treatment of persons with disabilities relating to mental disorders, taking into account, the principle of informed consent. It decided to extend, for a period of three years, the Special Rapporteur's mandate and requested him to submit a report annually to the Commission and an interim report to the General Assembly. The High Commissioner was asked to assist him.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 25 July, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on Human Rights [E/2005/23], adopted decision 2005/261 by recorded vote (50-1-0) [agenda item 14 (g)].

The right of everyone to the enjoyment of the highest attainable standard of physical and mental health

At its 38th plenary meeting, on 25 July 2005, the Economic and Social Council took note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 2005/24 of 15 April 2005, and approved the Commission's decision to extend for a period of three years the mandate of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on the right of everyone to the enjoyment of the highest attainable standard of physical and mental health.

RECORDED VOTE ON DECISION 2005/261:

In favour: Albania, Armenia, Australia, Azerbaijan, Bangladesh, Belgium, Belize, Brazil, Canada, China, Colombia, Congo, Costa Rica, Cuba, Denmark, Ecuador, France, Germany, Guinea, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Ireland, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Kenya, Lithuania, Malaysia, Mauritius, Mexico, Mozambique, Namibia, Nicaragua, Nigeria, Pakistan, Panama, Poland, Republic of Korea, Russian Federation, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, South Africa, Spain, Thailand, Tunisia, Turkey, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania.

Against: United States.

Abstaining: None.

Further report of Special Rapporteur. In accordance with Commission resolution 2005/24 (see above), the Secretary-General, by a September note [A/60/348], transmitted the Special Rapporteur's interim report, which discussed the work of the Commission on Social Determinants of Health, established by WHO to study the social dimensions of health, the importance of health professionals' education in human rights, and the migration of health professionals from developing to developed countries, otherwise known as the "brain drain". The Special Rapporteur concluded that the integration of human rights into national and international policies affecting the skills drain was likely to make those policies more effective, robust, equitable, inclusive and meaningful to those living in poverty. The report considered three possible policy responses to the brain drain phenomenon in developing countries: the strengthening of health systems in those countries; ethical recruitment by destination counties; and compensation or restitution. It suggested that developed countries establish independent national offices to monitor their international cooperation on health, including those policies relating to the brain drain.

By decision 60/533 of 16 December, the General Assembly took note of the Special Rapporteur's report.

Communication. On 21 March [E/CN.4/2005/G/32], Peru transmitted its comments on the Special Rapporteur's report, following his 2004 visit to that country [YUN 2004, p. 769]. Peru's Ministry of Health was aware of the need to give priority to the formulation and implementation of a comprehensive rights-based health policy that would benefit its poorest and most vulnerable groups. A national campaign had been launched to enable all Peruvian citizens to enjoy the right to health.

Human rights and HIV/AIDS

On 21 April [res. 2005/84], the Commission invited States, UN entities, international organizations and NGOs to ensure the respect, protection and fulfillment of HIV/AIDS-related human rights, as contained in the guidelines on HIV/AIDS and human rights adopted by the Second International Consultation on HIV/AIDS and Human Rights [YUN 1996, p. 617]. States were further urged to ensure that their laws, policies and practices, including those in the workplace, respected human rights in the context of HIV/AIDS, promoted effective programmes for its treatment, and prohibited HIV-related discrimination. In particular, they should ensure full and equal access for women and children to HIV prevention and related information, voluntary counselling and testing, and education and care. Human rights treaty bodies were invited to give particular attention to HIV-related rights when considering reports submitted by States parties. The Secretary-General was requested to solicit comments from Governments, UN bodies, international organizations and NGOs on steps to promote and implement programmes addressing the HIV-related human rights of women, children and vulnerable groups in the context of prevention, care and access to treatment, and to report thereon in 2006.

Access to medication

Report of Secretary-General. The Commission had before it a report of the Secretary-General [E/CN.4/2005/38], submitted in response to a 2004 Commission request [YUN 2004, p. 770], which summarized information received from eight Governments, four UN bodies, and NGOs on steps they had taken to promote access to medication in the context of pandemics, such as HIV/AIDS, tuberculosis and malaria.

Commission action. On 15 April [res. 2005/23], the Commission recognized that access to medication in the context of pandemics, such as HIV/AIDS, tuberculosis and malaria, was fundamental to achieving the full realization of the right of everyone to the enjoyment of the highest attainable standard of physical and mental health. It called on States to develop and implement national strategies in order to realize access for all to prevention-related goods and services, and to establish or strengthen national health and social infrastructure for the effective delivery of treatment, care and support in responding to such pandemics. The Secretary-General was asked to solicit comments from Governments, UN entities, international organizations and NGOs on steps taken to implement the Commission's resolution, and to report in 2006.

Water and sanitation services

Report of Special Rapporteur. In accordance with a 2004 Subcommission request [YUN 2004, p. 771], the Special Rapporteur on the realization of the right to drinking water and sanitation, El Hadji Guissé (Senegal), submitted draft guidelines for the realization of the right to water supply and sanitation [E/CN.4/Sub.2/2005/25], which were intended to assist government policymakers, international agencies and civil society representatives working in the water and sanitation sector to implement the right.

Commission action. On 15 April [dec. 2005/106], the Commission approved the 2004 request [YUN 2004, p. 770] of the Subcommission that the report of the Special Rapporteur be published in the official languages of the United Nations.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 25 July, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on Human Rights [E/2005/23], adopted decision 2005/285 by recorded vote (47-2-0) [agenda item 14 (g)].

Promotion of the realization of the right to drinking water and sanitation

At its 38th plenary meeting, on 25 July 2005, the Economic and Social Council took note of Commission on Human Rights decision 2005/106 of 15 April 2005, and endorsed the Commission's request that the reports of the Special Rapporteur of the Subcommission on the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights on the conduct of a detailed study on the relationship between the enjoyment of economic, social and cultural rights and the promotion of the realization of the right to drinking water supply and sanitation at the national and international levels be published in the official languages of the United Nations.

RECORDED VOTE ON DECISION 2005/285:

In favour: Albania, Armenia, Azerbaijan, Bangladesh, Belgium, Belize, Brazil, Canada, China, Colombia, Congo, Costa Rica, Cuba, Denmark, Ecuador, France, Germany, Guinea, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Ireland, Italy, Jamaica, Kenya, Lithuania, Malaysia, Mauritius, Mexico, Mozambique, Namibia, Nicaragua, Pakistan, Panama, Poland, Republic of Korea, Russian Federation, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, South Africa, Spain, Thailand, Tunisia, Turkey, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania.

Against: Japan, United States.

Bioethics

Report of Secretary-General. In accordance with a 2003 Commission request [YUN 2003, p. 775], the Secretary-General submitted a report [E/CN.4/2005/93] summarizing information provided by 11 Governments, as well as human rights bodies and OHCHR, on the relationship between human rights and bioethics.

Report of Special Rapporteur. In response to a 2004 Commission request [YUN 2004, p. 771], the Special Rapporteur on human rights and the human genome, Antoanella-Iulia Motoc (Romania), submitted a July interim report [E/CN.4/Sub.2/2005/38], which considered issues relating to intellectual property rights in the context of biotechnology and genetic resources. The report reviewed the 1994 Agreement on Trade-Related Aspects of Intellectual Property Rights (TRIPS)

[YUN 1994, p. 1464] and other international instruments, with reference to specific provisions on the application of patents to genetic resources. It also examined relevant national and regional legislation relating to patents. The Special Rapporteur observed that, as a recent phenomenon, international intellectual property lawmaking had permeated international regimes concerning biodiversity, plant genetic resources, and public health and human rights. At the same time, the TRIPS agreement had come under increasing challenge, as two systems existed: one for developed countries, which emphasized patent and privatization and their ability to promote innovation, and the other, which led developing countries to close their systems around the notion of State sovereignty, thereby potentially undermining scientific research. Yet, both systems questioned the notion of "a common human heritage". The Special Rapporteur recommended that efforts be made to reconcile the two systems through the promotion of scientific research.

Subcommission action. On 11 August [dec. 2005/111], the Subcommission asked the Special Rapporteur to submit a final report in 2006, and the Secretary-General to assist her.

Human cloning

On 8 March, the General Assembly adopted the United Nations Declaration on Human Cloning (resolution 59/280) (see p. 1454), which called on Member States to prohibit all forms of human cloning that were incompatible with human dignity and the protection of human life.

Slavery and related issues

Working group activities. The five-member Working Group on Contemporary Forms of Slavery, at its thirtieth session (Geneva, 6-10 June) [E/CN.4/Sub.2/2005/34], devoted priority attention to the review and assessment of its activities and working experience since its establishment, as well as the implementation of human rights standards on contemporary forms of slavery, including trafficking in persons, sexual exploitation and the protection of children from exploitation. The Group discussed the need to ensure effective implementation of the slavery conventions, heard testimonies from victims of bonded labour and forced marriage, discussed the working conditions of migrant workers, considered information about the issue of boys trafficked as camel jockeys and of traditional practices as a contributing factor for the perpetuation of slavery. It adopted recommendations for its future work and for the work of the Subcommission, human rights treaty bodies and other relevant actors. The Group recommended that the Subcommission request one of its members to draft a working paper examining the feasibility of a study on the human rights dimensions of prostitution. It decided to sharpen its thematic focus and to devote more time during its sessions to discussions of a specific theme, leading to the adoption of thematic recommendations. It would give priority to the identification of remaining slavery-related issues not appropriately addressed by other human rights mechanisms and focus its activities on those issues. The Group selected as its theme for 2006 the human rights dimensions of prostitution and the need to strengthen international cooperation to suppress international transfers of profits from the exploitation of the prostitution of others and trafficking in persons.

The Group had before it an informal background document on its main activities since its establishment, reports on the status of the 1956 Supplementary Convention on the Abolition of Slavery [YUN 1956, p. 228] and the 1949 Convention for the Suppression of the Traffic in Persons and the Exploitation of the Prostitution of Others [YUN 1948-49, p. 613] [E/CN.4/Sub.2/AC.2/2005/2 & E/CN.4/Sub.2/AC.2/2005/3] and the report of the Secretary-General (see below).

Report of Secretary-General. A June report of the Secretary-General [E/CN.4/Sub.2/AC.2/2005/4], submitted in accordance with a 2004 Subcommission resolution [YUN 2004, p. 773], summarized information on various slavery-related issues received from four Governments and ILO.

Subcommission action. On 11 August [res. 2005/29], the Subcommission recommended States' ratification of treaties on slavery-related issues and that human rights treaty bodies and other entities established under the auspices of specialized agencies take into account the obligations under the conventions on slavery in the discharge of their respective mandates. The Subcommission requested Ibrahim Salama (Egypt) to draft a working paper examining the feasibility of a study on the human rights dimensions of prostitution, taking into account the latest developments on that matter. The High Commissioner was asked to bring the Subcommission's resolution to the attention of States, international organizations and national human rights institutions and to request them to provide information to the Working Group.

Fund on slavery

Note by Secretariat. In a February note [E/CN.4/2005/86/Add.1], the Secretariat informed the Commission that, owing to the postponement of the tenth session of the Board of Trustees of the United Nations Voluntary Trust Fund on Contemporary Forms of Slavery (7-11 March), it would not be possible to submit the session's recommendations to the Commission in 2005. Interested Governments were invited to contact the Board of Trustees for more information.

Report of Secretary-General. In August [A/60/273], the Secretary-General reported that the Fund's Board of Trustees, at its tenth session (7-11 March), recommended 25 new project grants amounting to $215,330 to assist work in 15 countries in Africa, the Americas, Asia and Europe, and seven travel grants amounting to $14,800 to enable NGO representatives to participate in the deliberations of the Working Group on Contemporary Forms of Slavery (see above). The Board estimated that, in order to fulfil its mandate satisfactorily, the Fund would need an additional $600,500 before its eleventh session, scheduled for January 2006. On 16 March, the High Commissioner, on behalf of the Secretary-General, approved the Board's recommendations.

In a later report [E/CN.4/2006/76], the Secretary-General reported that contributions available to the Fund, as at 31 December 2005, stood at $809,010.

Subcommission action. On 11 August [res. 2005/30], the Subcommission urged Governments, NGOs and other private or public entities to contribute to the Fund and to do so by September to allow it to fulfil effectively its mandate in 2006.

On 16 December, the General Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's August report (decision 60/533).

Sexual exploitation during armed conflict

Report of High Commissioner. The High Commissioner, in a July report [E/CN.4/Sub.2/2005/33], reviewed the activities of the Commission, treaty monitoring bodies and various human rights mechanisms, as well as developments in international criminal, human rights and humanitarian law on the issue of systematic rape, sexual slavery and slavery-like practices in situations of armed conflict, since 2004. Noting that sexual abuse had become a tactic of war, being used to dominate and humiliate the civilian population, the High Commissioner highlighted two important relevant instruments designed to tackle the problem, which were adopted by the Commission in 2005: the updated Set of Principles for the protection and promotion of human rights through action to combat impunity (see p. 800) and the Basic Principles and Guidelines on the Right to Remedy and Reparation for Victims of Gross Violations of International Human Rights Law and Serious Violations of Humanitarian Law (see p. 792). Other relevant developments concerned the work of international commission of enquiry and tribunals for countries where sexual abuse had occurred within the context of armed conflicts, including those for Darfur (the Sudan), the former Yugoslavia, Rwanda and Sierra Leone, the work of the International Criminal Court (see p. 1402) and the involvement of UN peacekeeping personnel in sexual abuse and exploitation (see p. 165). The report noted that, despite the remedial measures taken, obstacles, such as the under-representation of women at decision-making levels, the persistence of violence against women in various spheres of life and their lack of access to financial resources, employment, education and social services, still posed challenges. The High Commissioner noted the lack of awareness of the seriousness of crimes of sexual and gender-based violence at the national level and recommended that States adopt legislation prohibiting rape and other forms of sexual violence. The training of law enforcement officials and other authorities involved in investigations of crimes of sexual violence should be strengthened to ensure that they were equipped to respond to victims' needs.

Subcommission action. On 11 August [res. 2005/27], the Subcommission reiterated that States should provide effective criminal penalties and compensation for unremedied violations, in order to end the cycle of impunity with regard to sexual violence committed during armed conflicts. It asked the High Commissioner to submit an updated report in 2006 on the issues of systematic rape, sexual slavery and slavery-like practices during armed conflict and encouraged States to promote human rights education on those issues.

Violence against women

Report of Secretary-General. In accordance with General Assembly resolution 50/166 [YUN 1995, p. 1188], the Secretary-General submitted to the Commission on Human Rights and to the Commission on the Status of Women the report of the United Nations Development Fund for Women regarding the Fund's activities to eliminate violence against women [E/CN.6/2005/7-E/CN.4/2005/70].

Reports of Special Rapporteur. In her annual report [E/CN.4/2005/72], the Special Rapporteur on violence against women, its causes and consequences, Yakin Ertürk (Turkey), analysed the interconnections between violence against women and HIV/AIDS. The report considered violence both as a cause and consequence of the disease, the many forms of discrimination affecting women living with HIV, particularly female migrants, refugees and minorities, and the obstacles to women's access to medical care and justice. Against that background, the report noted that HIV, which was rising in all parts of the world, was spreading particularly among women and girls. Of some 39 million people around the world living with the disease, the percentage of women affected was increasing significantly, currently accounting for almost half of that number. In sub-Saharan African, up to 57 per cent of those living with HIV/AIDS were women, and in other regions, including Latin America and the Caribbean, Asia and the Pacific, Eastern Europe and Central Asia, the number was increasing. The pandemic illustrated the complex manifestations of gender inequality as it affected women, and which was compounded by such other sources of oppression as discrimination and patriarchy, subjugating women to continuous violence and making them susceptible to HIV/AIDS. Although HIV-related human rights were protected under international human rights law, States had yet to respond effectively to gender inequality as the root cause and consequence of the gender-specific manifestations of the disease. The report concluded that programmes aimed at the prevention and treatment of HIV/AIDS could not succeed without challenging the structures of unequal power relations between men and women. It recommended measures for eliminating violence against women; addressing the gender dimension of HIV/AIDS, discrimination and stigma; ensuring equal access to health care for women; empowering women for the full enjoyment of human rights; and promoting a global coalition against HIV/AIDS.

An addendum to the report [E/CN.4/2005/72/Add.1 & Corr. 1] summarized communications and urgent appeals on alleged cases of violence against women, which the Special Rapporteur had transmitted to 45 Governments, and the replies received thereto.

The Special Rapporteur visited the Russian Federation (17-24 December 2004) [E/CN.4/2006/61/Add.2], where she addressed violence stemming from the insecurity in the North Caucus and domestic violence in the Federation at large. The Special Rapporteur found that violence against women in the Federation posed a major challenge in terms of the Government's human rights obligations and sustained security. Although the Government was well equipped to mobilize society to end such violence, public discourse on policy regarding gender equality was hampered by the lack of national machinery for the advancement of women. The Special Rapporteur identified key measures and initiatives needed to protect and promote women's rights and to eliminate violence against them, including Government action to empower them and improve their access to justice.

In Iran (29 January–6 February) [E/CN.4/2006/61/Add.3], the Special Rapporteur found that violence against women was ingrained in gender inequality, perpetuated by patriarchal values and attitudes based on male supremacy, and by State-promoted institutional structures founded on gender-biased, hardline interpretations of religious principles. Although most Iranian women had access to health care, education, and to some extent, employment and political participation, gender-based legal provisions and practices that rendered them vulnerable to violence in the country persisted. The ruling clergy's reading of the sharia (Islamic) law, which shaped attitudes and institutional structures, tended towards conservative and gender-based interpretations. Violence against women in that context was rarely acknowledged as a serious problem by the authorities, and as such, was rarely reported by the victims. While the Government had taken some steps to address violence against women, more needed to be done to deal with the full spectrum of such violence. The Special Rapporteur addressed recommendations to the Government, advocating the adoption and observation of international human rights standards; the enhancement of women's access to justice through transparent legal and judicial reforms; the prioritization of the elimination of violence against women as a public policy issue, to prevent, investigate and punish all acts of violence against women, whether perpetrated by private individuals or State actors; and the promotion and support of the empowerment of women in all spheres of life.

In Mexico (21-25 February) [E/CN.4/2006/61/Add.4], the Special Rapporteur also found that the high level of violence against women was both the consequence and symptom of widespread gender discrimination and inequality. Official records indicated that one out of every four women had been the victim of physical violence and one in six had experienced sexual violence. The machista culture, which relegated women to a subordinate role in their family and community, often denied them an independent existence and made it difficult for them to escape abusive relationships. The most vulnerable to violence were migrant women, many of whom travelled unaccompanied and without appropriate travel documents or financial resources, as well as indigenous women. The Special Rapporteur also examined reports of murders and disappearances of women in the State of Chihuahua on Mexico's border with the United States, and found impunity for perpetrators continuing as a result of the indifferent and negligent investigations by the authorities. Despite some Government efforts to control violence against women, more needed to be done. The Special Rapporteur recommended that the Government end impunity for violence against women; investigate and prosecute the perpetrators; provide protective and support services; create a gender-sensitive information and knowledge base; strengthen institutional infrastructure for the advancement of women; and promote training, and awareness-raising programmes.

Commission action. On 19 April [res. 2005/41], the Commission, condemning all acts of violence against women and girls, stressed the importance of efforts to eliminate impunity in that regard in situations of armed conflict, including by prosecuting gender-related crimes and crimes of sexual violence, providing protective measures, counselling or other appropriate assistance to victims and witnesses and by integrating a gender perspective into efforts to end impunity. The Special Rapporteur was asked to cooperate with other special procedures of the Commission, regional and intergovernmental organizations and their mechanisms engaged in promoting the rights of women and girls, and to report orally to the General Assembly in 2005. The Secretary-General was asked to assist her.

On 25 July, the Economic and Social Council took note of the Commission's resolution and requested the Special Rapporteur to present an oral report to the Assembly at its sixtieth (2005) session (decision 2005/266).

Further report of Special Rapporteur. The Special Rapporteur visited Afghanistan (9-19 July) [E/CN.4/2006/61/Add.5], where domestic violence, rape, trafficking and other forms of violence against women had reportedly escalated, owing to the conflict and post-conflict situations affecting the country in recent years. The consequent destruction of State structures, poverty, the lack of human and institutional capacity, and insecurity in the country contributed to women's vulnerability and the perpetuation of severe violence against them, illustrated by reports of rape, trafficking and forced marriages, including child marriages. The prevailing power blocks tended to legitimize much of the transgression of women's rights, based on sharia law or Islamic code, and perpetrators enjoyed impunity because the law enforcement and justice systems were generally dysfunctional and biased against women. Although some changes in Afghanistan's legal and institutional framework, introduced after the fall of the Taliban regime, had relatively improved the situation of women, including the adoption of the new Constitution recognizing the equal rights of men and women [YUN 2004, p. 311], the Special Rapporteur noted that the extraordinary level of violence against women was embedded in a traditional system of male domination in which women had no status as independent persons. She addressed recommendations to the Government, the international community and NGOs on issues relating to: State-building and sense of citizenry; family and criminal law; public awareness and targeted information campaigns on women's rights; the situation of women in detention; expanding and strengthening safe houses; data collection and research; prioritizing women's human rights; and the elimination of discrimination against women in public policy.

Traditional practices affecting the health of women and girls

Report of Special Rapporteur. In response to a 2004 Subcommission request [YUN 2004, p. 777], the Special Rapporteur on traditional practices affecting the health of women and the girl child, Halima Warzazi (Morocco), submitted a July final report [E/CN.4/Sub.2/2005/36] synthesizing her previous work. The report examined the origins of those practices, reviewed related actions taken by the Subcommission and identified the main practices warranting close scrutiny by the international community and the current situation regarding those practices, including female genital mutilation; "son" preference and its impact on nutritional priorities and its consequences, such as female infanticide and prenatal selection; and forced marriage, early marriage and crimes and acts of violence associated with dowries. The Special Rapporteur concluded that the policies and actions aimed at terminating harmful practices had to be directed towards raising the status of women in society from the earliest stage. She urged States to accelerate the drafting of legislation that outlawed all forms of violence against women and girls, including harmful traditional practices, and which prescribed penalties commensurate with the gravity of such acts. Those measures should be accompanied by national information and awareness campaigns.

Subcommission action. On 11 August [res. 2005/28], the Subcommission, taking note of the Special Rapporteur's decision that her July report (see above) would be her final report on the subject, invited the Commission to request the Special Rapporteur on violence against women, its causes and consequences to continue the systematic examination of harmful traditional practices affecting the health of women and girls. It called on Governments to give full attention to the implementation of the 1994 Plan of Action for the Elimination of Harmful Traditional Practices Affecting the Health of Women and Children [YUN 1994, p. 1123] in their countries. The Subcommission reiterated its 2003 proposal [YUN 2003, p. 778] that three seminars be held in Africa, Asia and Europe to review progress achieved and to explore ways of overcoming obstacles in implementing the Plan of Action and asked the High Commissioner to help raise funds towards that end.

The girl child

On 19 April [res. 2005/44], the Commission, by a recorded vote of 52 to 1, called upon States to take measures, including legal reforms, to ensure girls' enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms and to eliminate discrimination and all forms of violence against them, including harmful traditional practices, sexual abuse, son preference and early marriages.

(See also p. 1256).

Mainstreaming women's rights

Reports of Secretary-General. In response to a 2004 Commission request [YUN 2004, p. 778], the Secretary-General, in a January report [E/CN.4/2005/68], described measures taken to integrate a gender perspective into the work of the UN system by Commission mechanisms and procedures, human rights treaty bodies, OHCHR and human rights field presences. It also examined the participation of women in human rights mechanisms and activities. The report noted that, while attention had steadily grown regarding women's human rights in the work of the UN human rights system, the use of gender analysis and integration of a gender perspective in that work had been more varied and less methodical. Gender balance continued to be a problem among individuals carrying out the Commission's thematic and country-specific mandates, as women accounted for only 26.4 per cent of Commission mandate-holders in 2004. Also, while four of the six Special Rapporteurs reporting to the Subcommission were women, only eight of its 26 members were female. The report concluded that the participation of women in the work of human rights mechanisms was important in ensuring that sufficient attention was paid to women's rights and gender issues. However, the full implementation of the gender mainstreaming strategy required more regular training of human rights staff, support for the work of gender focal points, the availability of tools to facilitate the integration of a gender perspective, and engaging in gender analysis and monitoring of the implementation of the strategy in all human rights activities. The report suggested, among other things, that the Commission encourage greater gender balance in the nomination, designation and election of experts to human rights mechanisms and give greater attention to women's participation in human rights activities and the benefits they could derive from doing so.

A further report [E/CN.4/2005/69-E/CN.6/2005/6] of the Secretary-General presented the joint 2005 work plan of the UN Division for the Advancement of Women and OHCHR.

Commission action. On 19 April [res. 2005/42], the Commission decided to integrate a gender perspective into all of its agenda items, and encourage Member States to promote gender balance by regularly nominating more female candidates for election to human rights treaty bodies and for appointment to UN bodies. It also encouraged the Secretary-General to ensure implementation of the joint work plan (see above), elaborate his plan annually, identify obstacles/impediments and areas for further collaboration, and submit them regularly to the Commission and to the Commission on the Status of Women. The Secretary-General was further asked to report in 2007.

Trafficking in women and girls

Reports of Special Rapporteur. In response to a 2004 Commission request [YUN 2004, p. 779], the Special Rapporteur on trafficking in persons, especially women and children, Sigma Huda (Bangladesh), submitted her first report [E/CN.4/2005/71]. The report described the content and scope of the mandate, its legal framework and the methods of work proposed by the Special Rapporteur, including communication with Governments, country visits, the consideration of thematic issues and cooperation with relevant partners. The report also highlighted the Special Rapporteur's activities since her appointment in 2004 [YUN 2004, p. 779]. She observed that the majority of victims of trafficking, often for sexual exploitation, were women and girls, and that the phenomenon represented a denial of all human rights. As trafficking continued to be treated as a "law and order" problem in many contexts, she intended to highlight its causes and human rights implications and to recommend measures aimed at preventing it through a human rights approach and the upholding of the rights of victims.

The Special Rapporteur visited Bosnia and Herzegovina (21-28 February) [E/CN.4/2005/71/Add.1; E/CN.4/2006/62/Add.2] to gather lessons learned from combating trafficking, to further study the situation and to recommend measures to assist the Government in addressing its root causes and in protecting victims' rights. To combat the problem, the country had adopted the 2001 National Action Plan, which focused on prevention, detection and prosecution of crimes relating to human trafficking, as well as assistance to and protection of victims. The framework for implementing the plan involved institutional arrangements, anti-trafficking interventions, border controls, awareness-raising, legislative reform, prosecution of the perpetrators, and a review of the situation regarding trafficking in children. While acknowledging that the Action Plan had facilitated progress in tackling the problem, the Special Rapporteur drew attention to persisting weaknesses in coordination, harmonization, the provision of training on new legislation and procedures, awareness-raising and education to eliminate other gender-based stereotypes, sensitization of law enforcement officials and the judiciary, assistance to victims and witness protection. The lack of resources had also hampered efforts to implement anti-trafficking laws. The Special Rapporteur addressed a number of recommendations to the Government, civil society and the international community for tackling those weaknesses and supported the country's efforts to combat trafficking and protect its victims. She welcomed a revision of the Action Plan and encouraged the Government to take the lead in implementing it, including in supporting shelters and rehabilitation programmes.

The Special Rapporteur visited Lebanon (7-16 September) [E/CN.4/2006/62/Add.3], following allegations from that country and other Middle Eastern States of widespread exploitation of foreign nationals and significant human trafficking in the region. Identifying the most vulnerable as female migrants from such countries as Sri Lanka, the Philippines and Ethiopia, among others, working as domestic servants in Lebanese homes, the Special Rapporteur examined their situation and highlighted the manifestations of their exploitation, the lack of State protection, alternative mechanisms for protection, and the situation of runaway workers. Other vulnerable groups included women in the sex industry and children, who were trafficked into organized begging and other forms of exploitation, including early or forced marriage. Despite some progress, the Government still fell short of fulfilling its international obligations with regard to human trafficking, having failed to adequately organize and regulate the large-scale migration, which the country had experienced since the end of the period of conflict in the country. In her recommendations, the Special Rapporteur called upon the Government to: enhance national and international cooperation; criminalize all forms of trafficking and strengthen the labour framework; identify, protect and safely repatriate trafficked persons; and ensure the effective prosecution of acts of trafficking and related crimes. She called upon the countries of origin of migrants to offer them consular protection, preferably on the basis of bilateral agreements concluded with Lebanon, and asked civil society and the international community to focus more on the situation of migrant workers, foreign women in the sex industry and street children.

Children

On 19 April [res. 2005/44], the Commission, by a recorded vote of 52 to 1, called upon States to ensure that children were entitled to civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights without discrimination; incorporate special measures in programmes to combat racial discrimination, in accordance with the principle of the best interests of the child in programmes to combat racial discrimination; and to protect children from all forms of violence, including physical, mental and sexual violence, and to especially protect the rights of the girl child in that regard. States were also urged to: intensify efforts to ensure the implementation of the rights of the child to birth registration and preservation of identity, as recognized by law; ensure that they were not separated from their parents against their will, except when consistent with the Convention on the Rights of the Child (see p. 730), and address the problem of children growing up without parents; cooperate with the international community in supporting and participating in global poverty eradication efforts, particularly regarding investments in children and the realization of their rights to contribute to their social and economic development; ensure children enjoyed the highest attainable standard of physical and mental health and support and rehabilitate them and their families affected by HIV/AIDS; ensure children had access to good quality education; protect the rights of children with disabilities, migrant children, street children, refugee or internally displaced children; ensure that those arrested, detained or imprisoned were provided legal assistance and not sentenced to forced labour, corporal punishment or deprived of access to healthcare; eliminate child labour; facilitate the social reintegration of children in difficult situations; and ensure those affected by natural disasters were provided with access to basic social services.

(Other aspects of the Commission's resolution—child labour, the prevention and eradication of the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography, and protection of children affected by armed conflict—are covered below.)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 23 December [meeting 69], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/60/505 & Corr.1], adopted resolution 60/231 by recorded vote (130-1-0) [agenda item 67].

Rights of the child

The General Assembly,

Recalling its previous resolutions on the rights of the child, the most recent of which is resolution 59/261 of 23 December 2004, as well as Commission on Human Rights resolution 2005/44 of 19 April 2005,

Emphasizing that the Convention on the Rights of the Child must constitute the standard in the promotion and protection of the rights of the child, and bearing in mind the importance of the Optional Protocols to the Convention, as well as other human rights instruments,

Reaffirming the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, the United Nations Millennium Declaration, the outcome document of the twenty-seventh special session of the General Assembly on children, entitled "A world fit for children", and the outcome document of the twenty-sixth special session of the General Assembly on HIV/AIDS, entitled "Global Crisis - Global Action",

Taking note with appreciation of the reports of the Secretary-General on progress made towards achieving the commitments set out in the outcome document of the twenty-seventh special session of the General Assembly and on the status of the Convention on the Rights of the Child and the issues raised in Assembly resolution 59/261, as well as the reports of the Chairman of the Committee on the Rights of the Child, the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Children and Armed Conflict and the Independent Expert for the United Nations study on violence against children,

Reaffirming that the best interests of the child shall be a primary consideration in all actions concerning children,

Recognizing the importance of incorporating a child-protection perspective across the human rights agenda, as highlighted in the outcome of the 2005 World Summit,

Profoundly concerned that the situation of children in many parts of the world remains critical, in an increasingly globalized environment, as a result of the persistence of poverty, social inequality, inadequate social and economic conditions, pandemics, in particular HIV/AIDS, malaria and tuberculosis, environmental damage, natural disasters, armed conflict, displacement, violence, abuse, exploitation, trafficking in children and their organs, child prostitution, child pornography and child sex tourism, neglect, illiteracy, hunger, intolerance, discrimination, racism, xenophobia, gender inequality, disability and inadequate legal protection, and convinced that urgent and effective national and international action is called for,

Underlining the need for mainstreaming a gender perspective in all policies and programmes relating to children, and recognizing the child as a rights holder in all policies and programmes relating to children,

I
Implementation of the Convention on the Rights of the Child and the Optional Protocols thereto

1. Reaffirms that the general principles of, inter alia, the best interests of the child, non-discrimination, participation and survival and development provide the framework for all actions concerning children, including adolescents;

2. Urges States that have not yet done so to become parties to the Convention on the Rights of the Child and the Optional Protocols thereto as a matter of priority and to implement them fully by, inter alia, putting in place effective national legislation and policies;

3. Urges States parties to withdraw reservations that are incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention or the Optional Protocols thereto and to consider reviewing other reservations with a view to withdrawing them;

4. Welcomes the work of the Committee on the Rights of the Child, and calls upon all States to strengthen their cooperation with the Committee, to comply in a timely manner with their reporting obligations under the Convention and the Optional Protocols thereto, in accordance with the guidelines elaborated by the Committee, and to take into account its recommendations on implementation of the Convention;

5. Requests all relevant organs of the United Nations system and United Nations mechanisms regularly and systematically to incorporate a strong child rights perspective throughout all activities in the fulfilment of their mandates, as well as to ensure that their staff are trained in child rights matters, and calls upon States to continue to cooperate closely with all these mechanisms, in particular the special rapporteurs and special representatives of the United Nations system;

6. Encourages States to strengthen their national statistical capacities and to use statistics disaggregated, inter alia, by age, gender and other relevant factors that may lead to disparities and other statistical indicators at the national, subregional, regional and international levels to develop and assess social policies and programmes so that economic and social resources are used efficiently and effectively for the full realization of the rights of the child;

II
Promotion and protection of the rights of the child

Registration, family relations and adoption

7. Once again urges all States to intensify their efforts to comply with their obligations under the Convention on the Rights of the Child to preserve the child's identity, including nationality and family relations, as recognized by law, to allow for the registration of the child immediately after birth, to ensure that registration procedures are simple, expeditious and effective and provided at minimal cost and to raise awareness of the importance of birth registration at the national, regional and local levels;

8. Encourages States to adopt and enforce laws and improve the implementation of policies and programmes to protect children growing up without parents or caregivers, recognizing that, where alternative care is necessary, family- and community-based care should be promoted over placement in institutions;

9. Calls upon States to guarantee, to the extent consistent with the obligations of each State, the right of a child whose parents reside in different States to maintain, on a regular basis, save in exceptional circumstances, personal relations and direct contact with both parents by providing means of access and visitation in both States and by respecting the principle that both parents have common responsibilities for the upbringing and development of their children;

10. Also calls upon States to address and pay particular attention to cases of international parental or familial child abduction, and encourages States to engage in multilateral and bilateral cooperation to resolve these cases, preferably by accession to the Hague Convention on the Civil Aspects of International Child Abduction, and to facilitate, inter alia, the return of the child to the country in which he or she resided immediately before the removal or retention;

11. Further calls upon States to take all necessary measures to prevent and combat illegal adoptions and all adoptions that are not in the best interests of the child;

Economic and social well-being of children

12. Calls upon States and the international community to create an environment in which the well-being of the child is ensured, inter alia, by:

(a) Cooperating, supporting and participating in global efforts for poverty eradication at the global, regional and country levels, recognizing that strengthened availability and effective allocation of resources are required at all these levels, in order to ensure that all the internationally agreed development and poverty eradication goals, including those set out in the United Nations Millennium Declaration, are realized within their time framework, reaffirming that investments in children and the realization of their rights are among the most effective ways to eradicate poverty;

(b) Taking all necessary measures to ensure the right of the child to the enjoyment of the highest attainable standard of health and developing sustainable health systems and social services, ensuring access to such systems and services without discrimination, paying particular attention to adequate food and nutrition and assigning priority to activities and programmes aimed at preventing addictions, in particular addiction to alcohol and tobacco, and the abuse of narcotic drugs, psychotropic substances and inhalants and by, inter alia, securing appropriate prenatal and post-natal care for mothers;

(c) Recognizing the right to education on the basis of equal opportunity and non-discrimination by making primary education compulsory and available free to all children, ensuring that all children have access to education of good quality, as well as making secondary education generally available and accessible to all, in particular through the progressive introduction of free education, bearing in mind that special measures to ensure equal access, including affirmative action, contribute to achieving equal opportunity and combating exclusion;

(d) Designing and implementing programmes to provide social services and support to pregnant adolescents and adolescent mothers, in particular by enabling them to continue and complete their education;

Violence against children

13. Condemns all forms of violence against children, including physical, mental and sexual violence, torture, child abuse and exploitation, hostage-taking, domestic violence, trafficking in or sale of children and their organs, paedophilia, child prostitution, child pornography and child sex tourism as well as the increasing phenomenon of gang-related violence;

14. Also condemns the abduction of children, in particular extortive abduction and abduction of children in situations of armed conflict, including for the recruitment and use of children in armed conflicts, and urges States to take all appropriate measures to secure their unconditional release, rehabilitation, reintegration and reunification with their families;

15. Urges States:

(a) To strengthen efforts to prevent and protect children from all forms of violence through a comprehensive approach;

(b) To end impunity for perpetrators of crimes against children, investigate and prosecute all acts of violence and impose appropriate penalties;

(c) To protect children from abuse by government officials such as the police, law enforcement authorities and employees and officials in detention centres or welfare institutions;

(d) To take measures to protect children from violence or abuse in schools, including sexual abuse and intimidation, maltreatment and bullying, to establish complaint mechanisms that are age- and gender-appropriate and accessible to children and to take measures to eliminate the use of corporal punishment in schools;

(e) To strengthen international cooperation and mutual assistance to end impunity for crimes against children;

16. Recognizes the contribution of the International Criminal Court in ending impunity for the most serious crimes against children, including genocide, crimes against humanity and war crimes, and calls upon States not to grant amnesties for such crimes;

Non-discrimination

17. Calls upon all States to ensure the enjoyment by children of all their civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights without discrimination of any kind;

18. Notes with concern the large number of children who are victims of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance, stresses the need to incorporate special measures, in accordance with the principle of the best interests of the child and respect for his or her views, in programmes to combat racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance, and calls upon States to provide special support and ensure equal access to services for all children;

19. Calls upon States to take all necessary measures, including legal reforms where appropriate, to eliminate all forms of discrimination against girls and all forms of violence, including female infanticide and prenatal sex selection, rape, sexual abuse and harmful traditional or customary practices, including female genital mutilation, marriage without the free and full consent of the intending spouses, early marriage and forced sterilization, by enacting and enforcing legislation and by formulating, where appropriate, comprehensive, multidisciplinary and coordinated national plans, programmes or strategies to protect girls;

20. Also calls upon States to take the necessary measures to ensure the full and equal enjoyment of all human rights and fundamental freedoms by children with disabilities in both the public and the private spheres, including access to good quality education and health care and protection from violence, abuse and neglect, and to develop and, where it already exists, to enforce legislation to prohibit discrimination against them in order to ensure their inherent dignity, promote their self-reliance and facilitate their active participation and integration in the community, taking into account the particularly difficult situation of children with disabilities living in poverty;

Promoting and protecting the rights of children, including children in particularly difficult situations

21. Calls upon all States to prevent violations of the rights of children working and/or living on the street, including discrimination, arbitrary detention and extrajudicial, arbitrary or summary executions, torture, and all kinds of violence and exploitation, and to bring the perpetrators to justice, to adopt and implement policies for the protection, social and psychosocial rehabilitation and reintegration of those children and to adopt economic, social and educational strategies to address the problems of children working and/or living on the street;

22. Also calls upon all States to protect refugee, asylum-seeking and internally displaced children, in particular those who are unaccompanied, who are particularly exposed to risks in connection with armed conflict, such as recruitment, sexual violence and exploitation, stressing the need for States as well as the international community to continue to pay more systematic and in-depth attention to the special assistance, protection and development needs of those children through, inter alia, programmes aimed at rehabilitation and physical and psychological recovery, and to programmes for voluntary repatriation and, wherever possible, local integration and resettlement, to give priority to family tracing and family reunification and, where appropriate, to cooperate with international humanitarian and refugee organizations, including by facilitating their work;

23. Further calls upon all States to ensure, for children belonging to minorities and vulnerable groups, including migrant children and indigenous children, the enjoyment of all human rights as well as access to health care, social services and education on an equal basis with others and to ensure that all such children, in particular victims of violence and exploitation, receive special protection and assistance;

24. Calls upon all States to protect the inheritance and property rights of orphans in law and in practice, with particular attention to underlying gender-based discrimination, which may interfere with the fulfilment of these rights;

25. Also calls upon all States to translate into concrete action their commitment to the progressive and effective elimination of child labour that is likely to be hazardous or to interfere with the child's education or to be harmful to the child's health or physical, mental, spiritual, moral or social development, to eliminate immediately the worst forms of child labour, to promote education as a key strategy in this regard, including the creation of vocational training and apprenticeship programmes and the integration of working children into the formal education system and to examine and devise economic policies, where necessary, in cooperation with the international community, that address factors contributing to these forms of child labour;

26. Urges all States that have not yet done so to consider signing and ratifying or acceding to the Convention concerning Minimum Age for Admission to Employment, 1973 (Convention No. 138) and the Convention concerning the Prohibition and Immediate Action for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labour, 1999 (Convention No. 182) of the International Labour Organization;

27. Calls upon all States, in particular those States in which the death penalty has not been abolished:

(a) To abolish by law, as soon as possible, the death penalty for those below the age of 18 years at the time of the commission of the offence;

(b) To comply with their obligations as assumed under relevant provisions of international human rights instruments, including the Convention on the Rights of the Child and the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights;

(c) To keep in mind the safeguards guaranteeing protection of the rights of those facing the death penalty and the guarantees set out in United Nations safeguards adopted by the Economic and Social Council;

28. Also calls upon all States to ensure that no child in detention is sentenced to forced labour or corporal punishment or deprived of access to and provision of health-care services, hygiene and environmental sanitation, education, basic instruction and vocational training;

29. Encourages States to promote actions, including through bilateral and multilateral technical cooperation and financial assistance, for the social reintegration of children in difficult situations, considering, inter alia, views, skills and capacities that those children have developed in the conditions in which they lived and, where appropriate, with their meaningful participation;

Prevention and eradication of the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography

30. Calls upon all States:

(a) To criminalize and penalize effectively all forms of sexual exploitation and sexual abuse of children, including all acts of paedophilia, including within the family or for commercial purposes, child pornography and child prostitution, child sex tourism, trafficking in children, the sale of children and their organs and the use of the Internet for these purposes, and to take effective measures against the criminalization of children who are victims of exploitation;

(b) To ensure the prosecution of offenders, whether local or foreign, by the competent national authorities, either in the country in which the crime was committed, in the country of which the offender is a national or resident, in the country of which the victim is a national or on any other basis permitted under domestic law, and for these purposes to afford one another the greatest measure of assistance in connection with investigations or criminal or extradition proceedings;

(c) To increase cooperation at all levels to prevent and dismantle networks trafficking or selling children and their organs and, for those States that have not yet done so, to consider signing and ratifying or acceding to the Protocol to Prevent, Suppress and Punish Trafficking in Persons, Especially Women and Children, supplementing the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime;

(d) In cases of trafficking in children, the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography, to address effectively the needs of victims, including their safety and protection, physical and psychological recovery and full reintegration into society, including through bilateral and multilateral technical cooperation and financial assistance;

(e) To combat the existence of a market that encourages such criminal practices against children, including through the adoption, effective application and enforcement of preventive, rehabilitative and punitive measures targeting customers or individuals who sexually exploit or sexually abuse children, as well as by ensuring public awareness;

(f) To contribute to the elimination of the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography by adopting a holistic approach, addressing the contributing factors, including underdevelopment, poverty, economic disparities, inequitable socio-economic structures, dysfunctional families, lack of education, urban-rural migration, gender discrimination, criminal or irresponsible adult sexual behaviour, child sex tourism, organized crime, harmful traditional practices, armed conflicts and trafficking in children;

Children affected by armed conflict

31. Strongly condemns any recruitment or use of children in armed conflict contrary to international law, as well as other violations and abuses committed against children affected by armed conflict, and urges all States and other parties to armed conflict that are engaged in such practices to end them;

32. Reaffirms the essential roles of the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council and the Commission on Human Rights for the promotion and protection of the rights and welfare of children, including children affected by armed conflict, and notes the increasing role played by the Security Council in ensuring protection for children affected by armed conflict;

33. Calls upon States:

(a) When ratifying the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the involvement of children in armed conflict, to raise the minimum age for voluntary recruitment of persons into the national armed forces from that set out in article 38, paragraph 3, of the Convention, bearing in mind that under the Convention persons under 18 years of age are entitled to special protection, and to adopt safeguards to ensure that such recruitment is not forced or coerced;

(b) To take all feasible measures to ensure the demobilization and effective disarmament of children used in armed conflicts and to implement effective measures for their rehabilitation, physical and psychological recovery and reintegration into society, in particular through educational measures, taking into account the rights and the specific needs and capacities of girls;

(c) To protect children affected by armed conflict, in particular from violations of international humanitarian law and human rights law and to ensure that they receive timely, effective humanitarian assistance, in accordance with international humanitarian law, including the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949, and calls upon the international community to hold those responsible for violations accountable, inter alia, through the International Criminal Court;

(d) To take all necessary measures, in accordance with international humanitarian law and human rights law, as a matter of priority, to prevent the recruitment and use of children by armed groups, as distinct from the armed forces of a State, including the adoption of policies that do not tolerate the recruitment and use of children in armed conflict, and legal measures necessary to prohibit and criminalize such practices;

34. Notes with appreciation the adoption of Security Council resolution 1612(2005) of 26 July 2005 on the protection of children affected by armed conflict and the efforts of the Secretary-General to implement the monitoring and reporting mechanism called for in that resolution, with the participation of and in cooperation with national Governments and relevant United Nations and civil society actors, including at the country level;

35. Recognizes the progress achieved since the establishment of the mandate of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Children and Armed Conflict in paragraphs 35 to 37 of General Assembly resolution 51/77 of 12 December 1996, and, bearing in mind the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations system-wide response to children and armed conflict, recommends that the Secretary-General extend the mandate of the Special Representative for a further period of three years;

36. Recalls the recommendation contained in resolution 51/77 that the Special Representative foster international cooperation to ensure respect for children's rights in situations of armed conflict and contribute to the coordination of efforts by Governments and relevant United Nations bodies, as well as the request to Governments and relevant United Nations bodies to cooperate with the Special Representative;

III
Children infected with and affected by HIV/AIDS

37. Acknowledges that prevention, care, support, including psychosocial support, and treatment for those infected with and affected by HIV/AIDS, including children, are mutually reinforcing elements of an effective response and must be integrated in a comprehensive approach to combat the pandemic, reaffirms that the full realization of human rights and fundamental freedoms for all is an essential element in the global response to the HIV/AIDS pandemic, and reaffirms also the importance of the elimination of all forms of discrimination against people living with or at risk of HIV/AIDS, especially those most vulnerable;

38. Calls upon States:

(a) To ensure universal access to comprehensive information related to HIV/AIDS prevention by 2010 through education, life skills training for adolescents and the use of child-targeted media and to ensure that this information is relevant, gender- and age-appropriate and timely, engaging the meaningful participation of children and their parents or caregivers in its development and recognizing children as agents of change, to enable them to protect themselves from HIV infection;

(b) To support adolescents to be able to deal positively and responsibly with their sexuality in order to protect themselves from HIV/AIDS infection and to implement measures to increase their capacity to protect themselves from HIV/AIDS, through, inter alia, the provision of health care, including for sexual and reproductive health, and through prevention education that promotes gender equality;

(c) To put in place strategies, policies and programmes that identify and address those factors that make individuals particularly vulnerable to HIV infection in order to complement prevention programmes that address activities that place individuals at risk of HIV infection, such as risky and unsafe sexual behaviour and injecting drug use;

(d) To ensure that, in preventing and addressing HIV/AIDS, particular attention is paid to girls, deeply concerned that the global HIV/AIDS pandemic disproportionately affects women and girls, that the majority of new HIV infections occur among young people and that unequal legal, economic and social status, negative or judgemental attitudes that limit the ability of girls to take preventive measures and violence against girls increase their vulnerability to HIV/AIDS;

(e) To take measures to prevent mother-to-child transmission of HIV, including the provision of essential drugs, appropriate antenatal, delivery and postpartum care, voluntary and confidential counselling and testing services for pregnant women and their partners and support for mothers, such as counselling on infant feeding options and access to treatment, including antiretroviral treatment;

39. Also calls upon States:

(a) To ensure full and equal access for children to voluntary, free and confidential counselling, testing and care, including affordable and effective medication for the treatment of HIV and AIDS and associated opportunistic infections, recognizing the need for youth-friendly services, and urges States to work with the pharmaceutical industry and other stakeholders to ensure the development and universal availability of child-suitable medication and treatments;

(b) To strengthen partnerships and international cooperation at the national, regional and international levels in order to offer infected and affected children medicines and related technology which are affordable, easy to use and readily available, in supporting developing countries that may not have the financial or human resources capacity to mount an effective response to the HIV/AIDS pandemic;

(c) To integrate all aspects of HIV and AIDS prevention, treatment, care and support into all health-care programmes and services;

40. Further calls upon States to take effective measures to eliminate stigmatization and discrimination on the basis of the HIV or AIDS status, actual or presumed, of the child or parent and to ensure that HIV or AIDS status does not stand in the way of the enjoyment by the child of all human rights;

41. Calls upon States to make suitable provision for children affected by HIV/AIDS who can no longer live with their parents to retain links with their wider family and community, urges all States to implement the United Nations Framework for the Protection, Care and Support of Orphans and Vulnerable Children Living in a World with HIV and AIDS and its key strategies, inter alia, by adopting and implementing, as an integral part of their comprehensive national planning and budgeting processes, national action plans for the protection and care of orphans and vulnerable children, and requests donors, the United Nations system and civil society to support their efforts;

42. Urges donors:

(a) To ensure, by 2007, a complete and successful replenishment of the Global Fund to Fight AIDS, Tuberculosis and Malaria, as well as the HIV/AIDS component of the work programmes of the agencies and programmes of the United Nations system engaged in the fight against HIV/AIDS, and notes that a major part of the international HIV and AIDS financing gap relates to children orphaned or made vulnerable by HIV/AIDS;

(b) To improve the effectiveness of their programmes through better alignment and elimination of duplication, and calls upon donors and the United Nations system to take forward the recommendations of the Global Task Team on Improving AIDS Coordination among Multilateral Institutions and International Donors;

Follow-up

43. Decides:

(a) To request the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its sixty-first session a report on the rights of the child, containing information on the status of the Convention on the Rights of the Child and the issues contained in the present resolution;

(b) To request the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Children and Armed Conflict to continue to submit reports to the General Assembly and the Commission on Human Rights;

(c) To request the Independent Expert for the United Nations study on violence against children to present his final report to the General Assembly at its sixty-first session;

(d) To reiterate its invitation to the Chairman of the Committee on the Rights of the Child to present an oral report on the work of the Committee to the General Assembly at its sixty-first session as a way to enhance communication between the General Assembly and the Committee;

(e) To pay particular attention to the rights of children infected with and affected by HIV and AIDS at its special session on HIV and AIDS in 2006;

(f) To continue its consideration of this question at its sixty-first session under the item entitled "Promotion and protection of the rights of children", focusing section III on "Children and poverty".

The Assembly retained those paragraphs by recorded votes, respectively, of 95 to 11, with 14 abstentions; 85 to 20, with 16 abstentions; and 93 to 10, with 17 abstentions.

Violence against children

Report of Secretary-General. In response to a 2004 Commission request [YUN 2004, p. 785], the Secretary-General submitted a March progress report [E/CN.4/2005/75] on the study on violence against children, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 56/138 [YUN 2001, p. 681]. He noted that the independent expert appointed to lead the study, Paulo Sérgio Pinheiro (Brazil), had focused on gathering information on the topic, in order to provide an in-depth and global picture of the problem, documenting its nature, incidence, causes and consequences. As at February, 87 Governments had responded to a 2004 questionnaire on legal, institutional and policy frameworks to address the issue, which would lay the groundwork for the study. To encourage the submission of relevant information by other stakeholders, the expert had also designed an indicative outline of his final report, which was annexed to the current one. The expert emphasized that the views of children and youth should be reflected in the submissions. The expert also paid particular attention to relevant information available within the UN system and encouraged contributions from OHCHR, UNICEF, WHO and ILO. Further contributions were being sought from the Committee on the Rights of the Child, which had recommended the study, the Commission's special procedures, other human rights bodies and NGOs. The expert was also gathering additional information through participation in several regional, subregional and national conferences on relevant issues.

Report of independent expert. Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 59/261 [YUN 2004, p. 779], the Secretary-General, by an August note [A/60/282], transmitted the report of independent expert Paulo Pinheiro, which summarized his activities, including those mentioned in the Secretary-General's report (see above). In addition to his ongoing efforts to collate responses to the questionnaire he had sent out to Governments previously, 117 of which had been received as at 16 August, the expert conducted regional, subregional and national consultations, undertook field visits to identify country experiences of violence against children and how to deal with them, and participated in several other thematic meetings designed to provide a forum for identifying existing research and the most effective practical approaches to eliminating violence against children and measures to protect them. The report also analysed the work of the Commission and the Subcommission special procedure mandate holders relating to the topic, as well as the concluding observations of the Committee on the Rights of the Child, which raised such key concerns as the insufficient financial and human resources allocated and the inadequacy of programmes established to prevent and combat the problem. The Committee observed, among other things, that children were not provided with adequate mechanisms to file complaints, and that in many cases, there were obstacles to prosecuting persons for child abuse and neglect. Also, rehabilitation measures for victims were lacking, as were comprehensive information and data on the different manifestations of violence against children. In completing his final report, the expert planned to build on the information emerging from the consultations and other action he had undertaken and would accord particular attention to the outcome of the analysis of responses to the questionnaire he had sent to Governments.

Commission action. On 19 April [res. 2005/44], the Commission, by a recorded vote of 52 to 1, called on States to prevent and protect children from all forms of violence, investigate and prosecute such violence and cases of torture against children and eliminate the use of corporal punishment in schools. The Secretary-General was asked submit his final report on the study of violence against children in 2006.

Sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography

Reports of Special Rapporteur. In response to a 2004 Commission request [YUN 2004, p. 786], the Special Rapporteur on the sale of children, child prostitution and child pronography, Juan Miguel Petit (Uruguay), submitted a report [E/CN.4/2005/78] on the prevention of child pornography on the Internet, based on information received from 51 Governments and from international organizations and NGOs, in response to a questionnaire he had circulated. The report examined the definition of child pornography in international instruments and national legislation, with particular reference to the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography and the Council of Europe Convention on Cybercrime, the two main international instruments on the issue. In that context, the report described national legislation relating to child pornography on the Internet, the work of national law-enforcement agencies in dealing with the issue, and domestic initiatives to combat it. Pointing to the challenges and potentially harmful use of the Internet, the report noted that cyberspace hosted an alarming quantity of child pornographic material and that chat rooms were increasingly being used by sexual predators for contacting children. Many countries still lacked legislation on child pornography and the resulting legal vacuum left a dangerous gap that exposed children to the risk of abuse, which was exacerbated by related impunity. The Special Rapporteur recommended that States ratify the Optional Protocol; attach criminal consequences to the conduct of each participant in the chain of child pornography, from production to possession; introduce legislation against "Internet grooming or luring" and on the obligations of Internet Service Providers (ISPs); and ensure that legislation on child pornography protected all children under the age of 18, regardless of the age of consent to sexual activity. He noted that more efforts were needed to identify the victims of abuse and to provide them with rehabilitation programmes and adequate compensation. Other recommendations related to awareness-raising campaigns, international cooperation and self-regulatory initiatives by the private sector.

Between 1 January and 31 December, the Special Rapporteur sent 34 communications to 25 countries regarding alleged cases relating to the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography. Of those, replies were received from four Governments, with six other responses addressing communications he transmitted in previous years. The communications sent and replies thereto were summarized in a separate report [E/CN.4/2006/67/Add.1].

The Special Rapporteur visited Albania (31 October–7 November) [E/CN.4/2006/67/Add.2], followed by a mission to Greece (see below), in order to better understand the transnational elements of the phenomena of child trafficking and migration flows of unaccompanied children involving both countries. In Albania, he examined the situation relating to child trafficking, forms of child exploitation and the root causes and factors that protected against related risks. Other concerns included the phenomenon of unaccompanied children, domestic violence and sexual abuse, the situation of the Roma and Egyptian communities and their children, child labour, the role of the media and corruption in the public service. The Special Rapporteur found that the country had become a source of human trafficking, including children, for the purpose of sexual exploitation and forced labour. The main destinations were Italy, Greece and various other European countries. Albanian children who fell victim to trafficking were made to beg, wash car windows or to sell small items and flowers in the streets of Greece. Some of them were trafficked with the consent of their parents, as they were seen as assets to help their families cope. The internal prostitution market also appeared to be growing, and against that background, child trafficking occurred for the purpose of sexual exploitation, affecting mostly girls and young women. Despite some progress by the authorities in addressing the problem, including through the establishment of related legislative, institutional and policy frameworks and increased societal awareness, many challenges remained. The Special Rapporteur recommended various measures to the Government relating to the need for a functioning child protection system, social programmes for communities, creating the profession of specialized social workers, legislation, investigation and prosecution, and unaccompanied child migrants, among others.

In Greece (8-15 November) [E/CN.4/2006/67/Add.3], the Special Rapporteur further examined the transnational dynamics of child trafficking between that country and neighbouring Albania (see above) and found that, while the number of street children in the former had declined considerably, the problem of transnational child trafficking persisted. An appropriate system was not yet in place for detecting victims of such trafficking, and the child victims, together with adults, continued to be arrested, detained and deported on the grounds of illegal entry. Other issues of concern related to the deportation procedures and detention conditions of unaccompanied children, the lack of an institutionalized protection system and the status of cooperation with NGOs. While acknowledging progress in the country's efforts to combat the problem, the Special Rapporteur urged the Government to address remaining challenges and recommended measures relating to, among other things, international standards, legislation and agreements, including the decriminalization of begging; clear rules and standards for identifying victims; the need to end the detention of alien minors for illegal entry; the establishment of a more efficient and cooperative relationship with NGOs; and the implementation of public policies to protect Roma children.

Commission action. On 19 April [res. 2005/44], the Commission, by a recorded vote of 52 to 1, called on States to take measures to eliminate the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography by adopting a holistic approach and addressing the contributing factors, including underdevelopment, poverty, economic disparities, inequitable socio-economic structures, dysfunctional families, lack of education, urban-rural migration, gender discrimination, irresponsible adult sexual behaviour, harmful traditional practices, armed conflicts and trafficking in children.

Child labour

By a recorded vote of 52 to 1, the Commission, on 19 April [res. 2005/44], called on States to translate into concrete action their commitment to protect children from economic exploitation, or from work that was hazardous, interfered with a child's education or was harmful to the child's health, and to eliminate the worst forms of child labour urgently. It urged them to consider ratifying and implementing ILO Convention No. 182 concerning the prohibition and elimination of the worst forms of child labour (Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention), adopted in 1999 [YUN 1999, p. 1388], and Convention No. 138 concerning the minimum age for admission to employment (Minimum Age Convention), adopted in 1973 [YUN 1973, p. 885].

Children and armed conflict

Report of Special Representative. In accordance with General Assembly resolution 51/77 [YUN 1996, p. 665], the Secretary-General's Special Representative for Children and Armed Conflict, Olara A. Otunnu (Côte d'Ivoire), in a February report [E/CN.4/2005/77], discussed key issues and proposals for establishing a monitoring, reporting and compliance mechanism for protecting children affected by armed conflict. The mechanism would enable the provision of reliable and objective information on grave violations against children, and ensure action on and compliance with protection standards relating to children and armed conflict. The report addressed the issues of the most grave violations that should be monitored; standards that constituted the basis for monitoring; parties whose activities should be monitored; the gathering and compilation of information at the country level; review, scrutiny and integration of information and the preparation of reports at the Headquarters level; and identification of bodies that constituted "destination for action", with responsibility for taking necessary action based on monitoring reports.

Drawing on resources at both the national and international levels, the mechanism would operate at three principal levels: information-gathering, coordination and action at the country level; review, scrutiny and integration of information and preparation of reports at Headquarters level; and concrete actions to ensure compliance, to be taken by the bodies that constituted "destinations for action". The Office of the Special Representative, UN peacekeeping missions and UN country teams would play important roles in the establishment and implementation of the mechanism. The bodies constituting "destination for action" included the Governments, the Security Council, the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council, the International Criminal Court (ICC), UN human rights bodies, regional and subregional organizations and NGOs and civil society organizations. Those entities would undertake concrete and targeted measures to ensure compliance.

Report of Secretary-General. In response to Security Council resolution 1539(2004) [YUN 2004, p. 787], the Secretary-General, in a February report [A/59/695-S/2005/72], outlined an action plan for establishing a monitoring, reporting and compliance mechanism, as proposed in the Special Representative's report (see above). The plan contained proposed actions designed to create a critical mass of response to ensure compliance and bring about the "era of application" of related international norms and standards. It also provided information on compliance and progress in ending the recruitment and use of children and other violations being committed against them, in particular, on compliance and progress in situations on the Council's agenda in numerous countries. In addition, the report considered the question of sexual exploitation and abuse by UN peacekeeping personnel, updated information on best practices for disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programmes for children, and discussed measures to control illicit subregional cross-border activities that were harmful to children, including cross-border abduction and recruitment, the trafficking of small arms and light weapons and the illicit exploitation of natural resources. In view of the widespread and unacceptable patterns of violations highlighted in the report, the Secretary-General recommended that the Council take targeted and concrete measures where insufficient or no progress had been made by parties named in the lists annexed to his previous reports. Such measures should include the imposition of travel restrictions on leaders and their exclusion from any governance structures and amnesty provisions, the imposition of arms embargoes, a ban on military assistance and restrictions on the flow of financial resources to the parties concerned. Annexed to the report were lists of parties that recruited or used children in situations of armed conflict on the agenda of the Security Council and parties that engaged in the practice or were involved in other situations of concern that were not on the Council's agenda.

Commission action. By a recorded vote of 52 to 1, the Commission, on 19 April [res. 2005/44], strongly condemned any recruitment and use of children in armed conflicts, and urged all parties to armed conflict to end the practice. It called on States to raise the minimum age for voluntary recruitment into their armed forces to 18 and adopt safeguards to ensure that the recruitment of those under 18 was not forced or coerced. The Commission asked States, UN bodies and regional organizations to integrate the rights of the child into all activities in conflict and post-conflict situations, ensure adequate child protection training of their staff and personnel and support national and international efforts to deal with the issue of landmines.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 23 February [meeting 5129], following consultation among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PSRT/2005/8 on behalf of the Council:

> The Security Council considered the matter of children and armed conflict and took note with deep concern of the continued recruitment and use of children by parties to armed conflict in violation of international obligations applicable to them, as reported by the Secretary-General in his fifth report. It reiterates its commitment to address in all its forms the impact of armed conflict on children.
> The Council reaffirms its strong condemnation of the recruitment and use of child soldiers by parties to armed conflict in violation of international obligations applicable to them and of all other violations and abuses committed against children in situations of armed conflict. It urges all parties to armed conflict to halt immediately such intolerable practices.
> The Council recalls all its previous resolutions, which provide a comprehensive framework for addressing the protection of children affected by armed conflict. It reiterates its determination to ensure respect for its resolutions and other international norms and standards for the protection of children affected by armed conflict.
> The Council recalls, in particular, paragraph 2 of its resolution 1539(2004) of 22 April 2004, requesting the Secretary-General, taking into account the proposals contained in his report as well as any other relevant elements, to devise urgently an action plan for a systematic and comprehensive monitoring and reporting mechanism, which utilizes expertise from the United Nations system and the contributions of national Governments, regional organizations, non-governmental organizations in their advisory capacity and various civil society actors, in order to provide timely, objective, accurate and reliable information on the recruitment and use of child soldiers in violation of applicable international law and on other violations and abuses committed against children affected by armed conflict, for consideration in taking appropriate action.
> The Council takes note of the Secretary-General's proposal for an action plan for the establishment of a monitoring, reporting and compliance mechanism, in accordance with this request and with paragraph 15 (b) of resolution 1539(2004) and has started consideration of the Secretary-General's proposal.
> The Council reiterates the crucial need for a systematic and comprehensive monitoring and reporting mechanism, and its determination to ensure compliance and to put an end to impunity. The Council further reiterates its intention to complete expeditiously the process of the establishing the mechanism.
> In this regard, it has started work on a new resolution with the aim of its early adoption and with due consideration of views expressed by the States Members of the United Nations during the open debate of 23 February 2005, in order to take forward the implementation of its previous resolutions with a view to ending the recruitment or use of child soldiers in violation of applicable international law and other violations and abuses committed against children affected by armed conflict situations, and promoting their reintegration and rehabilitation.

In further action, on 26 July [meeting 5235], the Council unanimously adopted resolution 1612 (2005). The draft [S/2005/477] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolutions 1261(1999) of 25 August 1999, 1314(2000) of 11 August 2000, 1379(2001) of 20 November 2001, 1460(2003) of 30 January 2003 and 1539(2004) of 22 April 2004, which contribute to a comprehensive framework for addressing the protection of children affected by armed conflict,

Noting the advances made for the protection of children affected by armed conflict, particularly in the areas of advocacy and the development of norms and standards, while remaining deeply concerned over the lack of overall progress on the ground, where parties to conflict continue to violate with impunity the relevant provisions of applicable international law relating to the rights and protection of children in armed conflict,

Stressing the primary role of national Governments in providing effective protection and relief to all children affected by armed conflict,

Recalling the responsibilities of States to end impunity and to prosecute those responsible for genocide, crimes against humanity, war crimes and other egregious crimes perpetrated against children,

Convinced that the protection of children in armed conflict should be regarded as an important aspect of any comprehensive strategy to resolve conflict,

Reiterating its primary responsibility for the maintenance of international peace and security and, in this connection, its commitment to address the widespread impact of armed conflict on children,

Stressing its determination to ensure respect for its resolutions and other international norms and standards for the protection of children affected by armed conflict,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 9 February 2005, and stressing that the present resolution does not seek to make any legal determination as to whether situations which are referred to in the report of the Secretary-General are or are not armed conflicts within the context of the Geneva Conventions of 1949 and the Additional Protocols thereto, of 1977, nor does it prejudge the legal status of the non-State parties involved in these situations,

Gravely concerned by the documented links between the use of child soldiers in violation of applicable international law and the illicit trafficking of small arms and light weapons, and stressing the need for all States to take measures to prevent and to put an end to such trafficking,

1. Strongly condemns the recruitment and use of child soldiers by parties to armed conflict in violation of international obligations applicable to them and all other violations and abuses committed against children in situations of armed conflict;

2. Takes note of the action plan presented by the Secretary-General relating to the establishment of a monitoring and reporting mechanism on children and armed conflict, as called for in paragraph 2 of its resolution 1539(2004) and, in this regard:

(a) Underlines the fact that the mechanism is to collect and provide timely, objective, accurate and reliable information on the recruitment and use of child soldiers in violation of applicable international law and on other violations and abuses committed against children affected by armed conflict, and will report to the working group to be created in accordance with paragraph 8 below;

(b) Underlines further the fact that this mechanism must operate with the participation of and in cooperation with national Governments and relevant United Nations and civil society actors, including at the country level;

(c) Stresses that all actions undertaken by United Nations entities within the framework of the monitoring and reporting mechanism must be designed to support and supplement, as appropriate, the protection and rehabilitation roles of national Governments;

(d) Also stresses that any dialogue established under the framework of the monitoring and reporting mechanism by United Nations entities with non-State armed groups in order to ensure protection for and access to children must be conducted in the context of peace processes, where they exist, and the cooperation framework between the United Nations and the concerned Government;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to implement, without delay, the above-mentioned monitoring and reporting mechanism, beginning with its application, within existing resources, in close consultation with countries concerned, to parties in situations of armed conflict listed in the annexes to the report of the Secretary-General that are on the agenda of the Security Council, and then, in close consultation with countries concerned, to apply it to parties in other situations of armed conflict listed in those annexes, bearing in mind the discussion of the Council and the views expressed by Member States, in particular during the annual debate on children and armed conflict, and also taking into account the findings and recommendations of an independent review on the implementation of the mechanism to be reported to the Council by 31 July 2006. The independent review will include:

(a) An assessment of the overall effectiveness of the mechanism, as well as the timeliness, accuracy, objectivity and reliability of the information compiled through the mechanism;

(b) Information on how effectively the mechanism is linked to the work of the Security Council and other organs of the United Nations;

(c) Information on the relevance and clarity of the division of responsibilities;

(d) Information on the budgetary and other resource implications for United Nations actors and voluntary funded organizations contributing to the mechanism;

(e) Recommendations for the full implementation of the mechanism;

4. Stresses that the implementation of the monitoring and reporting mechanism by the Secretary-General will be undertaken only in the context of and for the specific purpose of ensuring the protection of children affected by armed conflict and shall not thereby prejudge or imply a decision by the Security Council as to whether or not to include a situation in its agenda;

5. Welcomes the initiatives taken by the United Nations Children's Fund and other United Nations entities to gather information on the recruitment and use of child soldiers in violation of applicable international law and on other violations and abuses committed against children in situations of armed conflict, and invites the Secretary-General to take due account of these initiatives during the initial phase of implementation of the mechanism referred to in paragraph 3 above;

6. Notes that information compiled by this mechanism, for reporting by the Secretary-General to the General Assembly and the Security Council, may be considered by other international, regional and national bodies, within their mandates and the scope of their work, in order to ensure the protection, rights and well-being of children affected by armed conflict;

7. Expresses serious concern regarding the lack of progress in development and implementation of the action plans called for in paragraph 5 (a) of its resolution 1539(2004), and, pursuant to this, calls upon the parties concerned to develop and implement action plans without further delay, in close collaboration with United Nations peacekeeping missions and United Nations country teams, consistent with their respective mandates and within their capabilities, and requests the Secretary-General to provide criteria to assist in the development of such action plans;

8. Decides to establish a working group of the Security Council consisting of all members of the Council to review the reports of the mechanism referred to in paragraph 3 above, to review progress in the development and implementation of the action plans mentioned in paragraph 7 above, and to consider other relevant information presented to it, and decides further that the working group shall:

(a) Make recommendations to the Council on possible measures to promote the protection of children affected by armed conflict, including through recommendations on appropriate mandates for peacekeeping missions and recommendations with respect to the parties to the conflict;

(b) Address requests, as appropriate, to other bodies within the United Nations system for action to support implementation of the present resolution in accordance with their respective mandates;

9. Recalls paragraph 5 (c) of its resolution 1539 (2004), and reaffirms its intention to consider imposing, through country-specific resolutions, targeted and graduated measures, such as, inter alia, a ban on the export and supply of small arms and light weapons and of other military equipment and on military assistance, against parties to situations of armed conflict that are on the agenda of the Security Council and are in violation of applicable international law relating to the rights and protection of children in armed conflict;

10. Stresses the responsibility of United Nations peacekeeping missions and United Nations country teams, consistent with their respective mandates, to ensure effective follow-up to Council resolutions, ensure a coordinated response to concerns regarding children and armed conflict and to monitor and report to the Secretary-General;

11. Welcomes the efforts undertaken by United Nations peacekeeping operations to implement the Secretary-General's zero-tolerance policy on sexual exploitation and abuse and to ensure full compliance of their personnel with the United Nations code of conduct, requests the Secretary-General to continue to take all necessary action in this regard and to keep the Council informed, and urges troop-contributing countries to take appropriate preventive action, including predeployment awareness training, and to take disciplinary action and other action to ensure full accountability in cases of misconduct involving their personnel;

12. Decides to continue the inclusion of specific provisions for the protection of children in the mandates of United Nations peacekeeping operations, including the deployment, on a case-by-case basis, of child-protection advisers, requests the Secretary-General to ensure that the need for and the number and roles of child-protection advisers are systematically assessed during the preparation for each United Nations peacekeeping operation, and welcomes the comprehensive assessment undertaken on the role and activities of child-protection advisers, with a view to lessons learned and best practices;

13. Welcomes recent initiatives by regional and subregional organizations and arrangements for the protection of children affected by armed conflict, and encourages continued mainstreaming of child protection into their advocacy, policies and programmes; development of peer review and monitoring and reporting mechanisms; establishment, within their secretariats, of child-protection mechanisms; inclusion of child-protection staff and training in their peace and field operations; subregional and interregional initiatives to end activities harmful to children in times of conflict, in particular cross-border recruitment and abduction of children, illicit movement of small arms, and illicit trade in natural resources through the development and implementation of guidelines on children and armed conflict;

14. Calls upon all parties concerned to ensure that the protection, rights and well-being of children affected by armed conflict are specifically integrated into all peace processes, peace agreements and post-conflict recovery and reconstruction planning and programmes;

15. Also calls upon all parties concerned to abide by the international obligations applicable to them relating to the protection of children affected by armed conflict, as well as the concrete commitments they have made to the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Children and Armed Conflict, the United Nations Children's Fund and other agencies of the United Nations system, and to cooperate fully with the United Nations peacekeeping missions and United Nations country teams, where appropriate, in the context of the cooperation framework between the United Nations and the concerned Government, in the follow-up to and implementation of those commitments;

16. Urges Member States, United Nations entities, regional and subregional organizations and other parties concerned, to take appropriate measures to control illicit subregional and cross-border activities harmful to children, including illicit exploitation of natural resources, illicit trade in small arms, abduction of children and their use and recruitment as soldiers, as well as other violations and abuses committed against children in situations of armed conflict in violation of applicable international law;

17. Urges all parties concerned, including Member States, United Nations entities and financial institutions, to support the development and strengthening of the capacities of national institutions and local civil society networks for the advocacy, protection and rehabilitation of children affected by armed conflict to ensure the sustainability of local child-protection initiatives;

18. Requests that the Secretary-General direct all relevant United Nations entities to take specific measures, within existing resources, to ensure systematic mainstreaming of issues concerning children and armed conflict within their respective institutions, including by ensuring allocation of adequate financial and human resources towards the protection of war-affected children within all relevant offices and departments and on the ground, as well as to strengthen, within their respective mandates, their cooperation and coordination when addressing the protection of children in armed conflict;

19. Reiterates its request to the Secretary-General to ensure that, in all his reports on country-specific situations, the protection of children is included as a specific aspect of the report, and expresses its intention to give its full attention to the information provided therein when dealing with those situations on its agenda;

20. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report by November 2006 on the implementation of the present resolution and resolutions 1379(2001), 1460 (2003) and 1539(2004) which would include, inter alia:

(a) Information on compliance by parties in ending the recruitment or use of children in armed conflict in violation of applicable international law and other violations being committed against children affected by armed conflict;

(b) Information on progress made in the implementation of the monitoring and reporting mechanism mentioned in paragraph 3 above;

(c) Information on progress made in the development and implementation of the action plans referred to in paragraph 7 above;

(d) Information on the assessment of the role and activities of child-protection advisers;

21. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Further report of Special Representative. In a September report [A/60/335 & Corr.1], the Special Representative provided an overview of the agenda for war-affected children, highlighted the progress made in protecting and addressing their needs and identified the principal elements of the "era of application" campaign for the enforcement of existing international child protection norms and standards. The report also highlighted significant advances that had created a strong momentum for the children in armed conflict agenda, in particular the development and strengthening of norms and standards, the placement of the issue on the Security Council's agenda, the incorporation of children's concerns into peace negotiations and accords, the deployment of child protection advisers to UN peacekeeping operations, increased global awareness and advocacy on children affected by armed conflict issues, the engagement of civil society, the work of UN field missions, and the integration of the issue of the protection of children affected by war into the agendas and programmes of regional and other international organizations. The report also considered mainstreaming children affected by armed conflict in the UN system and the "era of application" campaign.

The Special Representative determined that, despite the advances made, the situation of children in armed conflict remained grave and unacceptable, prompting him to call for a vigorous campaign to ensure the enforcement of international norms and standards for protecting their rights. The key elements of the "era of application" campaign included the review, naming and listing of the parties committing grave child rights violations and the initiation of dialogue with them in order to halt the abuses; the implementation of a monitoring and reporting mechanism on those violations; and ensuring accountability through concrete action by key policymaking bodies and entities, such as the General Assembly. The Special Representative concluded that a higher level of commitment and more effective collaboration by all parties concerned would be required to achieve the "era of application", and recommended that the Assembly consider introducing a separate resolution on children and armed conflict, in order to ensure a sustained focus on the issue. Further recommendations advocated that Member States ensure that the concerns of war-affected children were prioritized in their advocacy, policies and programmes, particularly in the context of post-conflict recovery and development, and that relevant UN entities took specific measures to ensure the systematic mainstreaming of children and armed conflict issues within their respective institutions and assess periodically the progress made in those efforts.

In October [S/2005/659], the Security Council appointed Jean-Marc de La Sablière (France) as Chairman of the Working Group of the Security Council on Children and Armed Conflict, established in accordance with Council resolution 1612(2005) (see p. 865).

Abduction of children in Africa

Report of High Commissioner. In a February report [E/CN.4/2005/74], the High Commissioner summarized replies received from Member States, relevant international organizations, OHCHR field presences and NGOs to a questionnaire, which OHCHR had prepared and circulated in 2004.

Commission action. On 19 April [res. 2005/43], the Commission, condemning the abduction of children, called for the unconditional release and safe return of all abducted children to their families and called upon African states to prohibit and criminalize such practices. They were also requested, in cooperation with relevant UN agencies, to assist the victims and their families and support sustainable rehabilitation and integration programmes for them, taking into account the special needs of abducted girls. OHCHR, in cooperation with Member States, ILO, UNICEF and other relevant UN agencies, international organizations and NGOs, was asked to undertake a comprehensive assessment of the situation of the abduction of children throughout Africa, and to report thereon in 2006. The Commission urged States to submit information to OHCHR regarding the implementation of its resolution and further urged those states that had established national mechanisms to combat the abduction of children to report on progress made in that regard to OHCHR.

Freedom of movement

Mass exoduses

Report of High Commissioner. In response to a 2003 Commission request [YUN 2003, p. 791], the High Commissioner, in a January report [E/CN.4/2005/80], described measures taken by OHCHR and other relevant UN bodies to address the problem of mass exoduses, taking into account information and comments provided by Governments, intergovernmental organizations, specialized agencies and NGOs. In that context, the report highlighted developments concerning refugees and internally displaced persons (IDPs) and discussed the question of accession to relevant international instruments; the prevention of mass exoduses and displacement; and assistance and protection to affected persons; and the question of durable solutions, including return. The High Commissioner noted that, States were continuing to accede to relevant international instruments and that important steps had been taken at the national and international levels to prevent displacement. States around the world had hosted millions of refugees and as many IDPs had found some degree of safety and support in their own countries. Large scale returns were also continuing in many areas, owing to efforts by States and international actors, most notably the United Nations. Nonetheless, ongoing outflows indicated that more could and should be done to better address the problem of mass exoduses and displacement, as assistance and protection measures were being hampered by the fear of terrorism, resource constraints, institutional problems, issues of access and safety of humanitarian personnel and of forcible return and insufficient attention to potential solutions. Further cooperation among States, the United Nations and other international partners would be required to overcome those obstacles and ensure that the rights of persons in situations of mass exodus were respected, protected and fulfilled.

Also in response to the Commission's 2003 request [YUN 2003, p. 791], the High Commissioner provided, in an addendum [E/CN.4/2005/80/Add.1], a compilation of relevant Commission and Subcommission reports and resolutions.

Commission action. On 19 April [res. 2005/48], the Commission requested the High Commissioner to pay particular attention to human rights situations that caused or threatened to cause mass exoduses and to contribute to efforts to address such situations through promotion and protection measures, emergency preparedness and response mechanisms, early warning and information-sharing, technical advice and expertise and cooperation in countries of origin and host countries. She was further asked to report in 2007 on measures taken to implement the Commission's resolution and on obstacles thereto, taking into account information and comments provided by Governments, intergovernmental organizations, specialized agencies and NGOs, and to annex to the report a thematic compilation of relevant Commission and Subcommission reports and resolutions.

Report of Secretary-General. Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 58/169 [YUN 2003, p. 792], the Secretary-General, in a September report [A/60/325] on human rights and mass exoduses, described UN system efforts to protect better those affected and to facilitate their return and reintegration, enhance the system's capacity to avert new flows of refugees and IDPs and tackle the root causes of such flows. Highlighting the scope of the challenge as presented in his March report entitled "In larger freedom: towards development, security and human rights for all" (see p. 67), the Secretary-General examined efforts to monitor the human rights of persons in mass exodus; the role of early warning mechanisms in preventing displacement; the human rights of IDPs, consideration of which had influenced the establishment of the mandate of his Representative on IDPs (see below); and mass exodus caused by natural disasters. He concluded that the phenomena of mass exodus and displacement, in order to be fully understood, had to be viewed within the framework of his reform proposals, in which had outlined the interdependence of human rights, poverty and development. Recent examples of mass exoduses, both as a result of armed conflict and as a consequence of massive natural disasters, had demonstrated the need to address comprehensively the human rights of victims, given that persons had the right to be protected from displacement. As human rights issues were often at the core of the conflicts or situations resulting in mass exoduses, patterns of discrimination and disadvantage, if unchecked, could develop into levels of violence that might reach genocidal proportions. The report pointed out that substantial progress had been made over the years by human rights treaty bodies to address those issues, the Commission's special procedures and parts of the UN system entrusted with humanitarian mandates, which had broadened early warning mechanisms in order to identify patterns of disadvantage at an early stage when preventive remedial action was possible. With sustained attention to capacity gaps and measures needed to implement the Secretary-General's proposals for humanitarian reform, the United Nations was striving to avoid the development of mass exodus and respond better to the needs of those affected.

Internally displaced persons

Reports of Secretary-General's Representative. In his first annual report to the Commission [E/CN.4/2005/84], the Secretary-General's Representative on the human rights of internally displaced persons, Walter Kälin (Switzerland), described his activities and reflected on the meaning and challenges of protection for IDPs. The report accorded particular attention the special needs of IDPs in terms of physical security and integrity; basic necessities of life; other economic, social, cultural, civil and political protection needs; and the needs of IDPs with particular vulnerabilities, such as women and children. It also considered frameworks for protection activity and proposed a complementary categorization of actions to the International Committee of the Red Cross, including actions to prevent violations of IDPs' rights under human rights and humanitarian law, stop violations of those rights, prevent the recurrence of violations and ensure remedies (including rehabilitation, restitution, compensation and satisfaction) for persons whose rights had been violated. Under each of the categories, the report highlighted the Representative's proposed programme of protection-related activities. It noted that progress had been made at the international level in conceptualizing the protection of IDPs, including through a growing acceptance of the Guiding Principles on Internal Displacement [YUN 1998, p. 675] and the adoption of a new IDP policy by the United Nations Inter-Agency Standing Committee (IASC). However, there was still a lack of appreciation of the particular needs of IDPs and the role of UN agencies and human rights mechanisms in addressing them. While States bore the primary responsibility for protecting IDPs, little attention had been devoted to whether and how the international community's conceptual framework for protection could be applied by Governments in developing their own responses. Considerable work also remained to be done at the international level, as the basic notion that the protection needs of IDPs should be given specific attention was still not universally accepted or practiced. The Representative would contribute to efforts to address that aspect, in keeping with his mandate to strengthen international protection and mainstream the human rights of IDPs throughout the UN system, in collaboration with key actors.

The Representative visited Nepal (13-22 April) [E/CN.4/2006/71/Add.2], which faced a serious problem of conflict-induced internal displacement, owing to the armed conflict between the Government and the insurgency led by the Communist Party of Nepal-Maoist (CPN-M). It was estimated that up to 100,000 persons in the country had been displaced by the conflict. Those affected were fleeing mainly from direct acts of violence or threats by the CPN-M; to prevent their children from being forcibly recruited or forced to contribute to the insurgency; the fear of reprisals by the Royal Nepalese Army or of being caught in the crossfire; a general feeling of insecurity and uncertainty; the collapse of local infrastructure and coping mechanisms within villages; and the economic decline in the traditionally poorer areas of the country, reportedly hastened by the conflict. Displaced persons often moved to urban or semi-urban areas in the Terai region, and onward to Kathmandu or India. In some cases, whole villages were displaced within days or hours by vigilante of alleged CPN-M supporters. The main needs of the IDPs related to security and protection, discrimination, food, shelter and health, access to education for their children, documentation, protection from sexual abuse and domestic violence, the risk of increased child labour, the lack of protection of property rights and the denial of voting and electoral rights. Although the authorities had taken some action to address the situation, including the establishment of several compensation and resettlement funds for victims, and the active efforts to support the National Human Rights Commission, the Representative was concerned about several major limitations to those efforts, including the inadequacy of the resources made available for IDPs. He recommended, among other things, that the Government adopt a comprehensive national IDP policy based on non-discrimination; train national and local authorities on the Guiding Principles on the Rights of IDPs; ensure that IDP property left behind was adequately protected; and create conditions conducive to the safe and dignified return to their homes. Recommendations were also addressed to CPN-M forces, the UN country team in the country and other international actors.

The Representative visited Croatia (6-8 June) [E/CN.4/2006/71/Add.3] and found that, although problems relating to the return of refugees and internal displacement caused by the armed conflicts in the former Yugoslavia had been largely resolved, some 7,000 cases of internal displacement still remained. A key factor affecting the resolution of their cases was an overburdened court system and haphazard execution of court judgements. The Representative called on the Government to address those problems in order to consolidate the progress that had already been achieved. Other systematic and structural problems demanding attention included deep-rooted discrimination against returnees who were members of ethnic minorities, perceived exclusion from appropriate participation in local structures of governance and civil service, incidents of localized violence, economic and societal difficulties and the residual effects of the armed conflict in the country [YUN 1995, p. 566], including especially, the presence of landmines. The Representative recommended specific measures to the Government for tackling those problems.

In Bosnia and Herzegovina (9-15 June) [E/CN.4/2006/71/Add.4], where some 185,000 IDPs were registered in the course of the year, the Representative focused on identifying outstanding problems and durable solutions. He found that the main obstacles to the sustainable return of those affected were physical insecurity, delays in the return of property to the original owners, the reconstruction of buildings and a discouraging economic, social and political environment. While threats to life and limb had been largely reduced, a cause for concern was the insufficient protection of vulnerable groups who were particularly exposed to the risk of attacks, including war crimes victims and witnesses and ethnic minorities, such as the Roma. Acknowledging the efforts of the Government and the international community to have a large proportion of occupied property returned to their original owners, the Representative maintained that much remained to be done to resolve outstanding property disputes, reconstruct houses and reconnect them to water and electricity supplies and infrastructure. The main challenge was to create conditions for sustaining returns, given that many returnees had reportedly sold their repossessed property and opted to remain at their site of displacement rather than reintegrate into their original communities. The Representative recommended that the authorities avoid depriving IDPs of their current accommodation without offering an adequate alternative solution. The international community should concentrate efforts and resources on creating an environment conducive to sustainable return, and assist in human rights training and related capacity-building in such areas as administration of justice, employment policies and the harmonization of the health and education systems.

The Representative visited Serbia and Montenegro, including Kosovo (16-24 June) [E/CN.4/2006/71/Add.5], where the events, which had resulted in international intervention in 1999 [YUN 1999, p. 333] to stop massive human rights violations, had, in turn, led to massive displacement. Against that background, an estimated 248,000 IDPs continued to live in difficult conditions in collective centres and irregular settlements, among them, the elderly, ill, disabled, traumatized, witnesses in war crimes investigations and trial, female-headed households and families of missing persons. Many of those affected, particularly Roma and other minorities, suffered discrimination, as they often had difficulties providing proof of their origins, and many were also only marginally aware of their rights under domestic and international law, while others were unable, for practical reasons, to access entitlements and remedies provided by the Government. The efforts of the international community and national authorities had been almost exclusively focused on return as the only solution, which discouraged local integration. Yet, returns had been slow for several reasons, including the fact that many IDPs lacked appropriate information, felt disempowered and were overwhelmed by negative messages about their region of origin, which reinforced their feelings of insecurity. Since they were unlikely to return or to live on their own, the time had come to find a dignified solution to their situation, given especially that the international community was in the process of withdrawing its support from many IDP centres and that the buildings no longer offered acceptable living conditions. The Representative recommended that national and local authorities, in coordination with international agencies, seek durable solutions for those persons, including alternative housing and appropriate institutional arrangements, such as social housing, foster families or homes which respected their right to human dignity. A comprehensive plan of action in that regard should be developed. Specific conclusions and recommendations were addressed to the Republic of Serbia, the internationally-administered Serbian province of Kosovo, the Republic of Montenegro, the international community and donors.

In the Sudan (3-13 October) [E/CN.4/2006/71/Add.6], the Representative assessed the preparedness of both Government authorities and the international community to receive hundreds of thousands of IDPs whose return was anticipated after the signing of a Comprehensive Peace Agreement in January (see p. 302), marking the end of the 22-year civil war between the southern and northern parts of the country. The conflict, which had left more than two million dead, displaced up to four million southerners internally and drove another half a million people to seek asylum abroad. The Representative, after reviewing the domestic and international response to displacement in the country, as well as the protection needs of the returning population, concluded that local authorities were not in a position to protect the human rights of returnees. Of particular concern was the forcible relocation of Khartoum IDPs to the south in a disrespectful manner. He recommended to the national and southern Sudanese authorities that IDPs be given a free and meaningful choice on whether to return or integrate locally, by providing them with reliable and up-to-date information and by refraining from forcible relocations and exposing them to living conditions that fell short of international human rights standards. He also advocated that the authorities and the UN system establish protection mechanisms for IDPs en route, and provide humanitarian assistance to returnees urgently. The authorities should also ensure that obstacles to sustainable return to the south were removed and that adequate conditions were created, including protection of the full spectrum of human rights of IDPs.

In Georgia (21-24 December) [E/CN.4/2006/71/Add.7], where uprisings by nationalist groups and the related violent internal conflict following the 1991 collapse of the Soviet Union had resulted in mass displacements, the Representative sought dialogue with the Government and other relevant actors, with a view to finding durable, rights-based solutions for the country's estimated 221,597 registered IDPs. The lack of political solutions to regional conflicts, as well as discriminatory measures and widespread feelings of insecurity, posed major obstacles to the return of displaced populations, which was further hampered by the lack of infrastructure and basic services in return areas. In considering the protection needs of IDPs, the Representative noted that issues of safety, including armed attacks, abductions, forced disappearances, robberies and explosions, deterred IDPs from returning. Other needs related to land and property issues, the conditions for sustainable return and institutional and structural problems. While stressing that IDPs had the right to return voluntarily to their former homes in safety and dignity, the Representative welcomed the Government's intention to support more effectively their local integration. Of great concern, however, were the living conditions of IDPs accommodated in temporary collective shelters for many years, including many vulnerable groups. The Representative encouraged the Government to expedite the creation and implementation of its proposed policy for addressing the displacement crisis, ensuring that it supported integration into society and the acquisition of adequate accommodation, while maintaining the IDP option to return. He urged the de facto authorities in Abkhazia and the authorities in Tbilisi to refrain from adopting measures incompatible with the right to return and with international human rights standards, such as discriminatory legislation, particularly regarding the "citizenship law".

Commission action. On 19 April [res. 2005/46], the Commission called on Governments to protect and assist IDPs, including integration and protection assistance, develop national policies aimed at addressing their plight and ensure that they benefitted from public services. Stressing the need to strengthen further inter-agency arrangements and the capacities of UN agencies and other relevant actors to meet the immense humanitarian challenge of internal displacement, the Commission encouraged the Emergency Relief Coordinator to lead efforts in promoting an effective, predictable and collaborative response among relevant international agencies and bodies with regard to protecting and assisting IDPs. The Representative of the Secretary-General was asked to address the complex problem of internal displacement, in particular by mainstreaming the human rights of the internally displaced into all relevant parts of the UN system. The Commission recommended that the Representative strengthen international response to situations of internal displacement and invited him to submit annual reports on his activities to the Commission and the General Assembly. The Secretary-General was asked to assist him.

Communication. On 5 April [E/CN.4/2005/G/33], Turkey transmitted a note on the issue of internally displaced persons in the country.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December [meeting 64], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/60/509/Add.2], adopted resolution 60/168 without vote [agenda item 71 (b)].

Protection of and assistance to internally displaced persons

The General Assembly,

Deeply disturbed by the alarmingly high numbers of internally displaced persons throughout the world, for reasons including armed conflict, violations of human rights and natural or human-made disasters, who receive inadequate protection and assistance, and conscious of the serious challenges that this is creating for the international community,

Recognizing the significant number of persons who have become internally displaced owing to natural disasters over the course of the past twelve months,

Conscious of the human rights and the humanitarian dimensions of the problem of internally displaced persons, including in long-term displacement situations, and the responsibilities of States and the international community to strengthen further their protection and assistance,

Emphasizing that States have the primary responsibility to provide protection and assistance to internally displaced persons within their jurisdiction as well as to address the root causes of the displacement problem in appropriate cooperation with the international community,

Noting the growing awareness of the international community of the issue of internally displaced persons worldwide and the urgency of addressing the root causes of their displacement and finding durable solutions, including voluntary return in safety and with dignity, or local integration,

Recalling the relevant norms of international human rights law, international humanitarian law and international refugee law, and recognizing that the protection of internally displaced persons has been strengthened by identifying, reaffirming and consolidating specific standards for their protection, in particular through the Guiding Principles on Internal Displacement,

Emphasizing the central role of the Emergency Relief Coordinator for the inter-agency coordination of protection of and assistance to internally displaced persons, and welcoming the continued initiatives taken in order to ensure better protection, assistance and development strategies for internally displaced persons, as well as better coordination of activities regarding them,

Commending the Representative of the Secretary-General on the human rights of internally displaced persons for the activities undertaken so far, for the catalytic role that he plays in raising the level of consciousness about the plight of internally displaced persons and his efforts to promote a comprehensive strategy that focuses on prevention as well as better protection and assistance and addressing the development and other specific needs of internally displaced persons, including through the mainstreaming of the human rights of internally displaced persons into all relevant parts of the United Nations system,

Taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 2005/46 of 19 April 2005, and recalling the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights on 25 June 1993, regarding the need to develop global strategies to address the problem of internal displacement,

Deploring practices of forced displacement and their negative consequences for the enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms by large groups of populations, and noting that the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court defines the deportation or forcible transfer of population as a crime against humanity and the unlawful deportation or transfer of the civilian population, as well as ordering the displacement of the civilian population, as war crimes,

Welcoming the increasing dissemination, promotion and application of the Guiding Principles when dealing with situations of internal displacement,

Welcoming also the cooperation established between the new Representative of the Secretary-General and the United Nations and other international and regional organizations, and encouraging further strengthening of his collaboration in order to promote better protection, assistance and development strategies for internally displaced persons,

Acknowledging with appreciation the important and independent contribution of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement and other humanitarian agencies in protecting and assisting internally displaced persons, in cooperation with relevant international bodies,

Recalling its resolution 58/177 of 22 December 2003,

1. Welcomes the appointment of the new Representative of the Secretary-General on the human rights of internally displaced persons;

2. Welcomes also the report of the Representative of the Secretary-General, and takes note of his conclusions and recommendations;

3. Expresses its appreciation to those Governments and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations that have provided protection and assistance to internally displaced persons and have supported the work of the Representative of the Secretary-General;

4. Encourages the Representative of the Secretary-General, through continuous dialogue with Governments and all intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations concerned, to continue his analysis of the causes of internal displacement, the needs and rights of those displaced, measures of prevention and ways to strengthen protection, assistance and solutions for internally displaced persons, taking into account specific situations, and to include information thereon in his reports to the Commission on Human Rights and the General Assembly;

5. Expresses particular concern at the grave problems faced by many internally displaced women and children, including violence and abuse, sexual exploitation, forced recruitment and abduction, and welcomes the commitment of the Representative of the Secretary-General to pay more systematic and in-depth attention to their particular assistance, protection and development needs, as well as to other groups with special needs, such as severely traumatized individuals, older persons and persons with disabilities, taking into account the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and bearing in mind Security Council resolution 1325(2000) of 31 October 2000;

6. Notes with appreciation the increasing role of national human rights institutions in assisting internally displaced persons and in promoting and protecting their human rights;

7. Notes the importance of taking the human rights and the specific protection and assistance needs of internally displaced persons into consideration, when appropriate, in peace processes and reintegration and rehabilitation processes;

8. Recognizes the Guiding Principles on Internal Displacement as an important international framework for the protection of internally displaced persons, welcomes the fact that an increasing number of States, United Nations agencies and regional and non-governmental organizations are applying them as a standard, and encourages all relevant actors to make use of the Guiding Principles when dealing with situations of internal displacement;

9. Welcomes the fact that the Representative of the Secretary-General continues to use the Guiding Principles in his dialogue with Governments and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and other relevant actors, and requests him to continue his efforts to further the dissemination, promotion and application of the Guiding Principles and to provide support for efforts to promote capacity-building and the use of the Guiding Principles, as well as the development of domestic legislation and policies;

10. Urges all Governments to continue to facilitate the activities of the Representative of the Secretary-General, in particular Governments with situations of internal displacement, and to give serious consideration to inviting the Representative to visit their countries so as to enable him to continue and enhance dialogue with Governments in addressing situations of internal displacement, and thanks those Governments that have already done so;

11. Invites Governments to give serious consideration, in dialogue with the Representative of the Secretary-General, to the recommendations and suggestions addressed to them, in accordance with his mandate, and to inform him of measures taken thereon;

12. Calls upon Governments to provide protection and assistance, including reintegration and development assistance, to internally displaced persons, and to facilitate the efforts of relevant United Nations agencies and humanitarian organizations in these respects, including by further improving access to internally displaced persons;

13. Emphasizes the central role of the Emergency Relief Coordinator for the inter-agency coordination of protection of and assistance to internally displaced persons, and notes with appreciation the work of the Inter-Agency Internal Displacement Division within the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat;

14. Takes note of the efforts currently under way by the United Nations humanitarian system, emphasizes the need to strengthen further inter-agency arrangements and the capacities of the United Nations agencies and other relevant actors to meet the immense humanitarian challenges of internal displacement, and underlines in this regard the importance of an effective, accountable and predictable collaborative approach;

15. Encourages all relevant United Nations agencies and humanitarian assistance, human rights and development organizations to enhance their collaboration and coordination, through the Inter-Agency Standing Committee and in countries with situations of internal displacement, and to provide all possible assistance and support to the Representative of the Secretary-General;

16. Notes with appreciation the increased attention paid to the issue of internally displaced persons in the consolidated inter-agency appeals process, and encourages further efforts in this regard;

17. Recognizes the relevance of the global database on internally displaced persons advocated by the Representative of the Secretary-General, and encourages the members of the Inter-Agency Standing Committee and Governments to continue to collaborate on and support this effort, including by providing relevant data on situations of internal displacement and financial resources;

18. Welcomes the initiatives undertaken by regional organizations, such as the African Union, the Organization of American States, the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe, the Intergovernmental Authority on Development, the Council of Europe, the Commonwealth and the Economic Community of West African States, to address the protection, assistance and development needs of internally displaced persons, and encourages them and other regional organizations to strengthen their activities and their cooperation with the Representative of the Secretary-General;

19. Requests the Secretary-General to provide his Representative, from within existing resources, with all necessary assistance to carry out his mandate effectively, and encourages the Representative to continue to seek the contributions of States, relevant organizations and institutions in order to create a more stable basis for his work;

20. Requests the Representative of the Secretary-General to prepare, for consideration by the General Assembly at its sixty-second session, a report on the implementation of the present resolution;

21. Decides to continue its consideration of the question of protection of and assistance to internally displaced persons at its sixty-second session.

Housing and property restitution

Reports of Special Rapporteur. In response to a 2004 Subcommission request [YUN 2004, p. 791], the Special Rapporteur on housing and property restitution in the context of the return of refugees and IDPs, Paulo Sérgio Pinheiro (Brazil), submitted a June final report [E/CN.4/Sub.2/2005/17], annexed to which was the finalized version of the Draft Principles on Housing and Property Restitution for Refugees and Displaced Persons. Designed to assist relevant national and international actors in addressing the legal and technical issues surrounding housing, land and property restitution in situations of unlawful or arbitrary displacement, the Principles determined that all refugees and displaced persons had the right to have restored to them, or to be compensated for, any housing, land and/or property of which they were arbitrarily or unlawfully deprived. Overarching principles in that regard related to the respective rights to non-discrimination, equality between men and women in protecting them from displacement, privacy and respect for the home, peaceful enjoyment of possessions, adequate housing, and freedom of movement. The principles also outlined legal, policy, procedural and institutional implementation mechanisms to protect those rights, and highlighted the role of the international community in promoting and protecting the right to housing, land and property restitution.

An addendum to the report [E/CN.4/Sub.2/2005/17/Add.1] contained explanatory notes to the Principles, meant to provide an overview of the international human rights, refugee and humanitarian law and related standards, which supported and informed the Principles themselves.

Subcommission action. On 11 August [res. 2005/21], the Subcommission welcomed the Special Rapporteur's final report (see p. 872), endorsed the Principles on Housing and Property Restitution for Refugees and Displaced Persons and encouraged their application and implementation by States, intergovernmental organizations and other relevant actors. The Special Rapporteur was asked to compile and update the study on housing and property restitution for refugees and IDPs so that it could be published in one volume as part of the Human Rights Study Series in the official languages of the United Nations. The Secretariat was requested to transmit the Principles and the explanatory notes to the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination (see p. 728) and other UN treaty monitoring bodies and regional human rights bodies, in order to assure their wide dissemination.

Persons with disabilities

Report of OHCHR. In response to a 2004 Commission request [YUN 2004, p. 801], OHCHR submitted a report [E/CN.4/2005/82] on the progress made in implementing the recommendations contained in the 2002 study on human rights and disability [YUN 2002, p. 771]. The report reviewed efforts by States, treaty bodies, the Commission, national human rights institutions and civil society, and addressed OHCHR's programme of work relating to the human rights of persons with disabilities. The report concluded that, since the study's publication, there had been encouraging developments in the way in which disability issues were addressed within the human rights treaty system. There were increasing references to the issue in the general comments and recommendations of treaty bodies and positive examples of collaboration between States, national institutions and human rights/disability NGOs. However, the degree of attention that States devoted to disability under existing human rights mechanisms varied from one treaty to another, and it was vital that they referred more systematically to the rights of persons with disabilities and focused on the specific situation and needs of those individuals rather than dealing with them as one of the groups vulnerable to discrimination. As suggested in the study, thematic discussions on disability could help increase attention to the rights of disabled persons under each treaty and clarify the content of human rights standards with regard to that category of individuals. National human rights institutions and disability NGOs could also enhance their contribution to the work of relevant human rights treaty bodies. OHCHR supported the elaboration of a new international convention to promote and protect the rights and dignity of persons with disabilities and considered that such an instrument could strengthen the protection already afforded by existing human rights treaties.

Commission action. On 20 April [res. 2005/65], the Commission called on OHCHR to continue implementing the recommendations addressed to it in the study on human rights and disability and to report to the Commission in 2006 on progress in that regard and on the achievement of the objectives set forth in its programme of work relating to the human rights of persons with disabilities. OHCHR was also asked to prepare an expert paper focusing on the lessons learned from existing monitoring mechanisms and to make it available to the Ad Hoc Committee on a Comprehensive and Integral International Convention on the Protection and Promotion of the Rights and Dignity of Persons with Disabilities (see below). The Secretary-General and OHCHR were requested to include in relevant reports to the Assembly and the Commission information on progress to ensure the full recognition and equal enjoyment of all human rights by persons with disabilities, and to make such reports available to the Ad Hoc Committee.

The Special Rapporteur on disability of the Commission for Social Development (see p. 1190) was invited to address the Commission in 2006 on her experience in disability and human rights-related issues. The Commission urged Governments to address the human rights of persons with disabilities in their reporting obligations under relevant human rights instruments, and called on UN organizations and agencies and intergovernmental institutions for development cooperation to integrate a disability and human rights perspective into their activities and to reflected that in related reports.

On 21 July, the Economic and Social Council, in its resolution 2005/9 (see p. 1196), encouraged States to participate actively in international cooperation for the equalization of opportunities for persons with disabilities.

Report of Ad Hoc Committee. In response to General Assembly resolution 59/198 [YUN 2004, p. 1100], the Secretary-General, in August [A/60/266], transmitted the report of the Ad Hoc Committee on a Comprehensive and Integral International Convention on the Protection and Promotion of the Rights and Dignity of Persons with Disabilities, established in Assembly resolution 56/168 [YUN 2001, p. 1012], on its sixth session (New York, 1-12 August). The Committee, mandated to consider proposals for the convention, recommended that it continue its work in 2006.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 23 December [meeting 69], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/60/509/Add.2], adopted resolution 60/232 without vote [agenda item 71 (b)].

Ad Hoc Committee on a Comprehensive and Integral International Convention on the Protection and Promotion of the Rights and Dignity of Persons with Disabilities

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 56/168 of 19 December 2001, by which it decided to establish an Ad Hoc Committee, open to the participation of all Member States and observers to the United Nations, to consider proposals for a comprehensive and integral international convention to promote and protect the rights and dignity of persons with disabilities, based on a holistic approach in the work done in the fields of social development, human rights and non-discrimination and taking into account the recommendations of the Commission on Human Rights and the Commission for Social Development,

Recalling also its resolution 59/198 of 20 December 2004, as well as relevant resolutions of the Commission for Social Development and the Commission on Human Rights,

Reaffirming the universality, indivisibility, interdependence and interrelatedness of all human rights and fundamental freedoms and the need for persons with disabilities to be guaranteed their full enjoyment without discrimination,

Convinced of the contribution that a convention will make in this regard, and encouraged by the increased support of the international community for such a convention,

Welcoming with satisfaction the progress achieved so far in the negotiations on a draft convention,

Stressing the importance of the active participation of intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and national human rights institutions in the work of the Ad Hoc Committee, and their valuable contribution to the promotion of the full enjoyment of all human rights and fundamental freedoms by persons with disabilities,

Underlining the importance of the participation of the Special Rapporteur on disability of the Commission for Social Development in the work of the Ad Hoc Committee,

Recognizing the important contributions made thus far to the Ad Hoc Committee by all stakeholders,

1. Welcomes the reports of the Ad Hoc Committee on a Comprehensive and Integral International Convention on the Protection and Promotion of the Rights and Dignity of Persons with Disabilities on its fifth and sixth sessions;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit the reports of the Ad Hoc Committee to the Commission for Social Development at its forty-fourth session and to the Commission on Human Rights at its sixty-second session, and requests both Commissions to continue to contribute to the work of the Ad Hoc Committee;

3. Invites Member States and observers to continue to participate actively and constructively in the work of the Ad Hoc Committee with the aim of concluding a draft text of a convention and submitting it to the General Assembly, as a matter of priority, for its adoption, preferably at the sixty-first session;

4. Decides that the Ad Hoc Committee shall hold, within existing resources, prior to the sixty-first session of the General Assembly, two sessions in 2006, one of fifteen working days, from 16 January to 3 February, in order to achieve a complete reading of the draft text of a convention prepared by the Chairman of the Ad Hoc Committee, and one of ten working days, from 7 to 18 August;

5. Underlines the importance of further strengthening the cooperation and coordination between the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the Secretariat in order to provide technical support to the work of the Ad Hoc Committee, and invites them to provide, in advance of the meetings of the Ad Hoc Committee, background documentation to assist Member States and observers in the negotiation of a draft convention, and to organize, in close connection and timing with the dates and venue of the meetings of the Ad Hoc Committee, meetings of experts and seminars in relation to the draft convention, within existing resources;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to provide the Ad Hoc Committee with the facilities necessary for the performance of its work, and in this context invites the Secretary-General to reallocate resources to the United Nations Programme on Disability so as to provide support to the negotiations on a draft convention;

7. Stresses the need for additional efforts to ensure accessibility at the United Nations, with reasonable accommodation regarding facilities and documentation, for all persons with disabilities, in accordance with General Assembly decision 56/474 of 23 July 2002;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to explore and implement innovative measures, within existing resources and in consultation with organizations of persons with disabilities and the Bureau of the Ad Hoc Committee, for the provision of selected documents of the Ad Hoc Committee in formats accessible to participants with visual and hearing disabilities;

9. Encourages Member States to continue to include in their delegations to the Ad Hoc Committee persons with disabilities and/or other experts in the field;

10. Urges Member States, observers, civil society, international organizations, financial institutions and the private sector to contribute to the voluntary fund established pursuant to its resolution 57/229 of 18 December 2002 to support the participation of non-governmental organizations and experts from developing countries, in particular least developed countries, in the work of the Ad Hoc Committee;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to disseminate widely to non-governmental organizations all available information on accreditation procedures, modalities and supportive measures for their participation in the work of the Ad Hoc Committee, as well as the criteria for the financial assistance that is available through the voluntary fund;

12. Also requests the Secretary-General to transmit a comprehensive report of the Ad Hoc Committee and to report on the implementation of paragraphs 5, 6, 7, 8 and 11 of the present resolution to the General Assembly at its sixty-first session.

Indigenous people

Reports of Special Rapporteur. In response to a 2004 Commission request [YUN 2004, p. 792], the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights and fundamental freedoms of indigenous people, Rodolfo Stavenhagen (Mexico), submitted a January report [E/CN.4/2005/88], which focused on the obstacles, disparities and challenges facing indigenous peoples regarding access to and quality of education and cultural appropriateness of educational approaches. The report also provided examples of good practice and initiatives aimed at solving the educational problems of indigenous peoples in various countries. It observed that, although the right to education was universally recognized, indigenous peoples still did not exercise it fully. Whereas the right was critical to them as a means of extricating themselves from exclusion and discrimination and for the enjoyment and maintenance of their cultures and traditions, formal education had been a two-edged sword for them. While it enabled their children and youth to acquire knowledge and skills to allow them to progress in life and connect with the broader world, it had been a means of forcibly changing or destroying their cultures, especially when the programmes, curricula and teaching methods were detached from indigenous cultures. Factors impeding indigenous peoples' access to education included their demographic dispersion and lack of adequate transport, which often made it difficult for their children to attend the few schools that existed in their areas. Other major limiting factors related to economic, social and cultural questions, discrimination against indigenous education and assimilationist models of education and ignorance of, or failure to appreciate indigenous languages and culture. The Special Rapporteur recommended, among other things, that Governments attach high priority to the objectives and principles of indigenous education and prepare, in close collaboration with indigenous communities, programmes for training an adequate number of bilingual and intercultural education teachers. In addition, courses on indigenous peoples should be broadened at all levels of national education, with an anti-racist, multicultural focus that reflected respect for cultural and ethnic diversity and, in particular, gender equality.

A separate report of the Special Rapporteur [E/CN.4/2006/78/Add.1] summarized communications, including urgent appeals he had sent to 17 Governments on alleged violations of indigenous peoples' rights between 1 January and 31 December 2005, and the responses received.

Commission action. On 20 April [res. 2005/51], the Commission asked the Special Rapporteur to request, receive, exchange and respond to information on violations of indigenous peoples' rights, begin preparing a study of best practices in implementing his recommendations, and submit a progress report in 2006 and a final report in 2007. The Commission further requested the Special Rapporteur to report on his activities to the General Assembly in 2005 and to the Commission in 2006. The Secretary-General was asked to assist him. The Commission took note of the Special Rapporteur's intention to devote his next report to the topics of constitutional reform, legislation and implementation of laws regarding the protection of indigenous peoples' rights, as well as the intention of OHCHR and the Inter-Parliamentary Union (IPU) to organize a seminar on that topic (see p. 876) to assist the Special Rapporteur in examining related issues in his annual report to the Commission in 2006.

In related action on 20 April [res. 2005/52], the Commission, by a recorded vote of 35 to 13, with 4 abstentions, requested the Special Rapporteur to liaise with the Special Adviser for the Prevention of Genocide [YUN 2004, p. 730] regarding the protection of indigenous peoples from genocide, and to develop an emergency response mechanism as part of his mandate. The Secretary-General was asked to ensure that the Special Adviser took into account the need to protect indigenous peoples and their territories and ensure that UN forces protected them, their territories and objects indispensable to their survival.

On 25 July, the Economic and Social Council, taking note of Commission resolution 2005/51, requested the Special Rapporteur to submit a report to the General Assembly in 2005 and to the Commission in 2006 (decision 2005/270).

Further reports of Special Rapporteur. The Special Rapporteur visited South Africa (28 July–8 August) [E/CN.4/2006/78/Add.2], which continued to deal with the legacy of the racist apartheid policy. Six groups within the country had identified themselves as indigenous and the Government had declared its commitment to meet the demands of the indigenous groups in the country. Although indigenous people had access to Government social services, including education, health delivery systems and infrastructure, they tended to be more marginalized than other sectors, such that they were concentrated at the lower end of the socio-economic scale. The Special Rapporteur recommended measures for improving the human rights situation of indigenous peoples in the country, including their constitutional recognition and removal of the stigma of their classification as "coloureds" by the then apartheid regime. He also called for a systematic land needs and land rights study of indigenous communities, the acceleration of the land restitution process, and the end of the policy of limiting indigenous peoples' restitution claims to the 1913 cut-off date. The Special Rapporteur further recommended the use of economic, social and human development indicators for indigenous peoples and the improvement of their access to the justice system, among other measures.

In New Zealand (16-26 November) [E/CN.4/2006/78/Add.3], the Special Rapporteur considered the human rights situation of the indigenous Maori, who accounted for 15 per cent of the national population. He reviewed aspects of their political representation, land rights claims and resettlements and the human rights implications of the Foreshore and Seabed Act of 2004, some aspects of which many Maori considered to be discriminatory. He also considered the country's justice system and language, cultural and education policies as they related to indigenous issues. The Special Rapporteur observed that, while the Maori were well integrated into the national economy, and the Government had made efforts to reduce inequalities in the country, persistent disparities remained between Maori and European-descended New Zealanders in many areas, including healthcare and affordable housing. The Special Rapporteur recommended constitutional reforms to regulate the relationship between the Government and the Maori, based on the 1840 Treaty of Waitangi with Britain, which was considered a founding document of New Zealand and which guaranteed the Maori full exclusive and undisturbed possession of their lands and estates, forests, fisheries and other properties which they might collectively or individually possess. Other recommendations addressed further constitutional issues; human rights issues and the Waitangi Tribunal; treaty settlements; the environment; education and culture; social policy; and international indigenous rights.

In response to Commission resolution 2005/51 (see p. 875), the Secretary-General, by a September note [A/60/358], transmitted a report of the Special Rapporteur, which reviewed activities undertaken between August 2004 and August 2005, and highlighted issues of concern requiring urgent attention. The report described the Special Rapporteur's cooperation with other international and regional mechanisms and discussed the major human rights problems affecting indigenous peoples, which related to persistent poverty, access to education and armed conflicts, among other factors. The Special Rapporteur concluded that, while the living conditions and human rights of indigenous people had improved in some countries and regions owing to specific circumstances, in many other instances, their rights had not been respected. The main problem was rooted in shortcomings in terms of implementation, the efficiency of institutions and the procedures and mechanisms for the full realization of their human rights. The Special Rapporteur recommended that States adopt specific goals and policies for indigenous people with regard to achieving the Millennium Development Goals on the eradication of extreme poverty and hunger and on the achievement of universal primary education, respectively. They should adopt emergency measures to guarantee the provision of basic services to indigenous communities where access to such services was lacking, and attach high priority to the objectives and principles of indigenous education.

On 16 December, the General Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's note (decision 60/530).

International seminars. In accordance with Commission resolution 2005/51 (see p. 875), OHCHR organized two international seminars on constitutional reforms, legislation and implementation of laws regarding the rights of indigenous peoples, in collaboration with IPU (Geneva, 25-26 July) and the Indigenous Peoples Law and Policy Programme of the University of Arizona (Arizona, United States, 12-14 October) [E/CN.4/2006/78/Add.5]. The seminar discussed with parliamentarians, government representatives and other experts the role of legislators in protecting and promoting indigenous peoples' rights and analysed good practices and obstacles encountered in the implementation of relevant legislation. Participants adopted conclusions and recommendations designed to provide an input in the Special Rapporteur's annual report to the Commission.

Working Group on Indigenous Populations

Commission action. By a recorded vote of 39 to 13, with 1 abstention, the Commission, on 20 April [res. 2005/49], invited the Working Group on Indigenous Populations (see p. 877) to continue to consider ways in which indigenous peoples' expertise could contribute to its work, and to pay special attention to its standard-setting activities throughout the Second International Decade of the World's Indigenous People (1995-2004) (see p. 879). The Commission invited Governments, indigenous peoples' organizations and NGOs to ensure the full participation of indigenous people in the Group's activities, and further invited the Group and special procedure mandate holders to continue to consider ways to ensure that indigenous peoples' situation was properly reflected in their periodic reports. The Commission recommended that the Economic and Social Council authorize the Working Group to meet for five working days prior to the Commission's 2006 session and the Chairperson-Rapporteur of the Group's 2004 session to submit a report on that session to the Permanent Forum on Indigenous Issues (see below). The Secretary-General was asked to assist the Group and to transmit its reports to Governments, indigenous peoples' organizations, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In July, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on Human Rights [E/2005/23 & Corr.1], adopted decision 2005/268 by recorded vote (32-17-1) [agenda item 14 (g)].

Working Group on Indigenous Populations of the Subcommission on the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights

At its 38th plenary meeting, on 25 July 2005, the Economic and Social Council took note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 2005/49 of 20 April 2005, and endorsed the Commission's recommendation to authorize the Working Group on Indigenous Populations of the Subcommission on the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights to meet for five working days prior to the fifty-seventh session of the Subcommission.

The Council also authorized the Chairperson-Rapporteur of the twenty-second session of the Working Group to submit the report on that session to the Permanent Forum on Indigenous Issues at its fourth session in 2005.

RECORDED VOTE ON DECISION 2005/268:

In favour: Armenia, Azerbaijan, Bangladesh, Belize, Brazil, Canada, China, Colombia, Congo, Costa Rica, Cuba, Ecuador, Guinea, India, Indonesia, Jamaica, Kenya, Malaysia, Mauritius, Mexico, Mozambique, Namibia, Nicaragua, Pakistan, Panama, Russian Federation, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Thailand, Tunisia, UnitedArab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania.

Against: Albania, Australia, Belgium, France, Germany, Iceland, Ireland, Italy, Japan, Lithuania, Poland, Republic of Korea, South Africa, Spain, Turkey, United Kingdom, United States.

Abstaining: Denmark.

Working group activities. The Working Group on Indigenous Populations held its twenty-third session (Geneva, 18-22 July) [E/CN.4/Sub.2/2005/26] to review developments pertaining to the promotion and protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms of indigenous populations and to give special attention to the evolution of relevant standards. In annotations to the provisional agenda [E/CN.4/Sub.2/AC.4/2005/1/Add.1], the Secretariat presented background information on indigenous peoples and the international and domestic protection of traditional knowledge; indigenous peoples and conflict prevention and resolution; cooperation with other UN bodies in the sphere of indigenous issues; standard-setting activities and the International Decade of the World's Indigenous Peoples (see p. 879).

The Group had before it a working paper prepared by the secretariat of the Convention on Biological Diversity and Traditional Knowledge [E/CN.4/Sub.2/AC.4/2005/CRP.2] and expanded working papers by Antoanella-Iulia Motoc (Romania) and the Tebtebba Foundation offering guidelines to govern the implementation of the principle of free, prior and informed consent of indigenous peoples in relation to developments affecting their lands and natural resources [E/CN.4/Sub.2/AC.4/2005/WP.1], and by Yozo Yokota (Japan) and the Saami Council on substantive proposals on the draft principles and guidelines on the heritage of indigenous peoples [E/CN.4/Sub.2/AC.4/2005/3]. The Group also considered a Joint Statement from the Indigenous World Association and Indigenous Media Network [E/CN.4/Sub.2/AC.4/2005/CRP.3]; working papers prepared by the secretariat of the Permanent Forum on Indigenous Issues [E/CN.4/Sub.2/AC.4/2005/CRP.4] (see p. 881) and the Indian Movement Tupac Katari [E/CN.4/AC.4/2005/CRP.5]; and a note by the UN Secretariat on the Human Rights component of the Comprehensive Programme of Action for the Second Decade [E/CN.4/AC.4/2005/WP.2].

In its recommendations, the Group decided to maintain on its agenda for 2006 a sub-item on future priorities for its standard-setting activities, and decided that the preparation of working papers relating to standard-setting would be expanded to other Group activities. The Group decided to continue the dialogue on the session's principle theme "indigenous peoples and the international and domestic protection of traditional knowledge", by inviting interested bodies to discuss it in depth in 2006, and invited UN treaty bodies to pay specific attention to the promotion and protection of traditional knowledge. The Group reiterated its decision to accept the invitation extended by representatives of indigenous peoples from parties to Treaty 6 in Canada to a seminar on the implementation of treaties, agreements and other constructive arrangements, scheduled to take place in 2006. Under that item, Member States were invited to submit information during the Group's 2006 session on their respective conflict prevention/resolution mechanisms. The Subcommission was requested to appoint one of its members to prepare a preliminary report on current sequels of colonialism that continued to affect the lives of indigenous people, for submission to the Subcommission and the Working Group in 2007. The Group recommended that the Subcommission request OHCHR to invite submissions from Governments on the implementation of the principle of free, prior and informed consent of indigenous peoples in relation to developments affecting their lands and natural resources, also for submission in 2007. It invited OHCHR to prepare a draft publication drawing on the working papers on legal commentary and guidelines prepared by Ms. Motoc and the Tebtebba Foundation, as well as on the information provided by States on best practices in that area, for the Group's consideration in 2006. They further asked OHCHR to organize, in consultation with indigenous organizations and UN bodies, an expert seminar on the draft principles and guidelines on the protection of the heritage of indigenous peoples. The Group decided to further strengthen its cooperation with the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights and fundamental freedoms of indigenous people. It also further decided that the principle theme for its twenty-fourth session would be the "utilization of indigenous peoples' land by non-indigenous authorities, groups or individuals for military purposes." Governments, indigenous peoples, the UN system and NGOs were invited to provide information in advance and to contribute to the discussion on that item.

Annexed to the Group's report was a list of activities that it recommended to the Subcommission for possible inclusion in the Programme of Action of the Second Decade of the World's Indigenous People (see p. 879).

Subcommission action. On 11 August [res. 2005/23], the Subcommission asked the Secretary-General to transmit the Working Group's report on its 2005 session to the High Commissioner, indigenous organizations, Governments, intergovernmental organizations, concerned NGOs, treaty bodies and all thematic rapporteurs, special representatives, independent experts and working groups, and requested that it be made available to the Commission in 2006. The Subcommission decided that the Group, in 2006, should adopt as its principal theme "utilization of indigenous peoples' lands by non-indigenous authorities, groups or individuals for military purposes" and review the revised draft principles and guidelines on the heritage of indigenous people [YUN 1995, p. 780]. It requested the Commission to endorse the participation of the Chairperson/Rapporteur of the Working Group at the fifth session of the Permanent Forum on Indigenous Issues in 2006, to enable him present the Group's report on its 2005 session, and to recommend that the Economic and Social Council approve such participation. It decided on the Group's agenda for 2006, asked the Secretary-General to prepare an annotated agenda for it and invited States to submit to the Group at that session information regarding mechanisms for conflict resolution and prevention available to indigenous peoples under their jurisdiction. OHCHR was asked to forward to the Coordinator for the Second International Decade of the World's Indigenous Peoples the list of activities annexed to the Group's report for possible inclusion in the Decade's Programme of Action, to be submitted to the General Assembly in 2005. The Subcommission endorsed the Group's recommendation that the High Commissioner organize a workshop on indigenous peoples and conflict resolution and prevention to be held in Geneva no later than in autumn of 2007 and invited the High Commissioner to organize, in Spring 2006, a second workshop on indigenous peoples, mining and other private sector companies and human rights. Miguel Alfonso Martínez (Cuba) was asked to submit the additional working paper requested in 2004 [YUN 2004, p. 795] on indigenous people and conflict prevention and resolution, and to prepare, without financial implications, a working paper on the current sequels of the colonial era that continued to adversely affect the living conditions of indigenous peoples in various parts of the world, to be submitted to the Working Group and to the Subcommission in 2007. The Subcommission further requested OHCHR to submit to the Group in 2006 an updated compilation of all studies, reports and other research work on the situation of the rights of indigenous peoples that had been undertaken since 1982 by UN bodies, and those that were currently being undertaken, to serve as a point of reference for the Group in its future research action. The Commission was asked to request the Economic and Social Council to authorize 10 meetings for the Working Group prior to the beginning of the Subcommission's 2006 session.

Voluntary Fund for Indigenous Populations

The Board of Trustees of the United Nations Voluntary Fund for Indigenous Populations, at its eighteenth session (Geneva, 28 February–4 March) [E/CN.4/Sub.2/AC.4/2005/5], recommended

26 travel grants totaling $136,900 to enable indigenous representatives to attend the Permanent Forum on Indigenous Issues, 25 travel grants totaling $80,800 to enable representatives to attend the Working Group on Indigenous Populations, and nine travel grants totaling $62,400 for representatives to attend the working group on the draft UN declaration of the rights of indigenous peoples. The Board's recommendations were approved by the High Commissioner on the Secretary-General's behalf on 7 March. Annexed to the report were lists of the beneficiaries.

Subcommission action. On 11 August [res. 2005/23], the Subcommission appealed to Governments, indigenous peoples, intergovernmental organizations, NGOs and other potential donors in a position to do so, to contribute to the Fund.

Second International Decade of the World's Indigenous People

Commission action. On 20 April [res. 2005/49], the Commission, by a recorded vote of 39 to 13, with 1 abstention, urged States to continue working, in cooperation with the UN system, on the implementation of the conclusions and recommendations of the First International Decade of the World's Indigenous People, and to support the goals of the Second Decade (2004-2013), proclaimed by the General Assembly in resolution 59/174 [YUN 2004, p. 799]. It invited the Coordinator for the Second Decade to secure the effective participation of Governments, the Permanent Forum on Indigenous Issues and other relevant UN system bodies and mechanisms, as well as indigenous and non-governmental organizations, in the planning, execution and monitoring of the Second Decade's programme of action (see below). The Commission invited the Working Group on Indigenous Populations to submit to the Second Decade's Coordinator a list of activities to be considered for possible inclusion in the human rights component of its programme of action. The High Commissioner was requested to submit, in 2006, a report on the 2005 activities undertaken by her Office relating to indigenous people, as well as other relevant proposals.

Subcommission action. On 10 August [res. 2005/19], the Subcommission endorsed the list of activities recommended by the Working Group on Indigenous Populations (see p. 877), compiled in compliance with Commission resolution 2005/49 (see p. 662), and requested OHCHR to forward it to the Coordinator of the Second Decade. It stressed the need to continue giving particular attention to achieving the effective participation of indigenous peoples in the planning, organization and implementation of the activities of the Second Decade. The Working Group was requested to follow closely the activities carried out as part of the human rights component of the Second Decade's programme of action, so as to be able to contribute to its mid-term and end-term reviews, to be carried out in 2010 and 2015, respectively. The Coordinator for the Second Decade was asked to appeal to Governments and other donors to contribute to the Voluntary Fund for the Second International Decade of the World's Indigenous People (see p. 881).

Programme of Action for the Second International Decade

Report of Secretary-General. In accordance with General Assembly resolution 59/174 [YUN 2004, p. 799], the Secretary-General submitted an August report [A/60/270] containing a draft programme of action for the Second International Decade of the World's Indigenous People. The report identified five key objectives for the Decade: promoting non-discrimination and inclusion of indigenous peoples in the design, implementation and evaluation of laws, policies, resources, programmes and projects; promoting full and effective participation of indigenous people in decisions directly or indirectly affecting various aspects of their lives; redefining development policies that departed from a vision of equity and that were culturally appropriate; adopting targeted policies, programmes, projects and budgets for the development of indigenous people, including concrete benchmarks, with a particular emphasis on indigenous women, children and youth; and developing strong monitoring mechanisms and enhancing accountability for the protection of indigenous people and the improvement of their lives.

The report examined each area of action and made recommendations for achieving them at the international and national levels. At the national level, States were urged to develop policies and focused programmes to reverse ethnocentric perceptions of indigenous cultures, which were often stereotypical, folklorized and biased. They should review also national legislation to eliminate possible discriminatory provisions, with the full and effective participation of indigenous experts. The international community was urged to continue to promote bilingual and cross-cultural education programmes for indigenous and non-indigenous peoples, while States, the UN system and other intergovernmental organizations were urged to ensure access to comprehensive, community-based and culturally appropriate healthcare services, education, adequate nutrition and housing without discrimination. They were asked to finalize negotiations on the draft declaration on the rights of indigenous peoples and to adopt it early in the Second Decade, as a priority action. Regarding the promotion and monitoring of the programme, the report urged the Coordinator of the Second Decade to collect information and submit annual reports to the General Assembly on progress made in achieving the goals, objectives and programme of action of the Second Decade. The Assembly was asked to hold a midterm and end-term assessment of the Decade to review its progress. The report also recommended that indigenous organizations establish national committees to monitor the implementation of the programme of action.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December [meeting 64], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/60/506 & Corr.1], adopted resolution 60/142 without vote [agenda item 68].

Programme of Action for the Second International Decade of the World's Indigenous People

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind that, in the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, the 1993 World Conference on Human Rights recognized the inherent dignity and the unique contribution of indigenous peoples to the development and plurality of society and strongly reaffirmed the commitment of the international community to their economic, social and cultural well-being and their enjoyment of the fruits of sustainable development,

Reaffirming the commitment of States to continue making progress in the advancement of the human rights of the world's indigenous peoples at the local, national, regional and international levels, as well as in the areas of culture, education, health, environment and social and economic development,

Reaffirming also that States should, in accordance with international law, take concerted positive steps to ensure respect for all human rights and fundamental freedoms of indigenous peoples, on the basis of equality and non-discrimination, and recognizing the value and diversity of their distinctive identities, cultures and social organizations,

Recalling its resolution 48/163 of 21 December 1993, in which it proclaimed the International Decade of the World's Indigenous People, commencing on 10 December 1994, with the goal of strengthening international cooperation for the solution of problems faced by indigenous people in such areas as human rights, the environment, development, education and health,

Bearing in mind the internationally agreed development goals, including those contained in the United Nations Millennium Declaration and the draft programme of action for the Second International Decade of the World's Indigenous People, which are linked and which together promote actions to improve the standard of living of the indigenous peoples,

Recalling its resolution 59/174 of 20 December 2004 proclaiming the Second International Decade of the World's Indigenous People, 2005-2014,

Expressing its appreciation to the Coordinator of the Second Decade, the Under-Secretary-General for Economic and Social Affairs, for having elaborated a concrete programme of action to be pursued during the Decade based upon equal participation and partnership between all actors involved,

Conscious that in its resolution 59/174 it requested the Coordinator to fulfil his mandate in full cooperation and consultation with, inter alia, the Permanent Forum on Indigenous Issues, other relevant bodies and mechanisms of the United Nations system and the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights,

Keeping in mind the need to continue, as appropriate, developing standard-setting activities on issues of particular interest to indigenous peoples,

Expressing its appreciation for all contributions and proposals submitted in the course of the drafting of the programme of action for the Second Decade, and also giving due consideration to the contributions of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and the Working Group on Indigenous Populations of the Subcommission on the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights to the draft programme of action,

1. Adopts the Programme of Action for the Second International Decade of the World's Indigenous People as a guideline for action for the Second Decade;

2. Urges all actors involved in the process to cooperate in a constructive and decisive manner in order to achieve rapid progress and concrete results in realizing the goals of the Second Decade;

3. Appeals to the international community at large to provide financial support to the Programme of Action for the Second International Decade of the World's Indigenous People, inter alia, through contributions to the Voluntary Fund for the Second Decade;

4. Adopts "Partnership for action and dignity" as the theme for the Second Decade;

5. Requests the Coordinator of the Second Decade to consult with Member States, agencies, organizations and other relevant bodies and mechanisms of the United Nations system, indigenous organizations and other non-governmental organizations about the possibility of undertaking midterm and end-of-term reviews of the Second Decade;

6. Reaffirms that, in accordance with its resolutions 40/131 of 13 December 1985, 52/108 of 12 December 1997 and 56/140 of 19 December 2001, the representatives of indigenous communities and organizations will continue to benefit from the financial assistance provided by the United Nations Voluntary Fund for Indigenous Populations to facilitate their participation in the deliberations of the Permanent Forum on Indigenous Issues, the working group of the Commission on Human Rights charged with elaborating the draft United Nations declaration on the rights of indigenous peoples and the Working Group on Indigenous Populations of the Subcommission on the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights, according to the terms of reference of the Fund;

7. Urges all Governments and indigenous organizations concerned to take every action necessary to facilitate the adoption of the draft United Nations declaration on the rights of indigenous peoples as soon as possible;

8. Invites Governments, the organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, other intergovernmental organizations, indigenous and other non-governmental organizations and civil society actors to draw up their own plans for the Second Decade, using as a guideline for action the goals, objectives and Programme of Action for the Second Decade, including integrating a gender perspective in such activities;

9. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its sixty-first session, under the item entitled "Indigenous issues", a sub-item entitled "Second International Decade of the World's Indigenous People".

Voluntary Fund for International Decade

Efforts continued during the year to secure support for the Voluntary Fund for the Second International Decade of the World's Indigenous People, which the General Assembly had requested the Secretary-General to establish in resolution 59/174 [YUN 2004, p. 799]. The new Fund would serve as the successor to the Fund established for the First Decade, pursuant to Assembly resolution 48/163 [YUN 1993, p. 865]. In 2005, the Assembly, in resolution 60/142 (see p. 880), by which it adopted the Programme of Action for the Second Decade, appealed to the international community to provide international support to the Programme through contributions to the new Fund. The Subcommission, in its resolutions 2005/19 and 2005/23 (see p. 879), made similar pleas to Governments and donors.

Draft declaration of the rights of indigenous peoples

Commission action. On 20 April [res. 2005/50], by a recorded vote of 52 to 0, with 1 abstention, the Commission recommended that the working group established to elaborate a draft declaration on the rights of indigenous peoples (see below) meet for 10 working days prior to the Commission's 2006 session and report in 2006. It urged all parties involved in the negotiation to present for adoption, as soon as possible, a final draft of the United Nations declaration on the rights of indigenous people.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 25 July, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on Human Rights [E/2005/23 & Corr.1], adopted decision 2005/269 by recorded vote (49-0-1) [agenda item 14 (g)].

Working Group of the Commission on Human Rights to elaborate a draft declaration in accordance with paragraph 5 of General Assembly resolution 49/214 of 23 December 1994

At its 38th plenary meeting, on 25 July 2005, the Economic and Social Council took note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 2005/50 of 20 April 2005, and authorized the Working Group established in accordance with Commission resolution 1995/32 of 3 March 1995 to meet for a period of ten working days prior to the sixty-second session of the Commission, stipulating that the costs of the meeting would be met from within existing resources.

RECORDED VOTE ON DECISION 2005/269:

In favour: Albania, Armenia, Australia, Azerbaijan, Bangladesh, Belgium, Belize, Brazil, Canada, China, Colombia, Congo, Costa Rica, Cuba, Denmark, Ecuador, France, Germany, Guinea, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Ireland, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Kenya, Lithuania, Malaysia, Mauritius, Mexico, Mozambique, Namibia, Nicaragua, Pakistan, Panama, Poland, Republic of Korea, Russian Federation, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, South Africa, Spain, Thailand, Tunisia, Turkey, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania.

Against: None.

Abstaining: United States.

Subcommission action. On 11 August [res. 2005/23], the Subcommission recommended the completion of the final version of the draft declaration as early as possible.

Workshop. During the year, Mexico organized an international workshop (Michoacán, Mexico, 26-30 September) [E/CN.4/2005/WG.15/CRP.1], at which informal discussions were held towards resolving some of the obstacles to the adoption of the UN draft declaration on the rights of indigenous peoples before the next session of the Working Group negotiating that draft (see below). The workshop considered three themes: self-determination; land, territories and natural resources; and general provisions. It heard presentations by representatives of Governments, indigenous peoples and academic experts.

Working group activities. The working group established to consider a draft declaration on the rights of indigenous peoples, at its eleventh session (Geneva, 5-16 December) [E/CN.4/2006/79], discussed articles relating to self-determination; lands, territories and resources; and other articles where potential agreement might be reached. The group had before it the report of the September workshop that considered those articles (see above), sponsored by Mexico, and intended to help facilitate the Group's negotiations.

The group discussed preambular paragraphs 6, 13 and article 36 related to treaties, self-determination and land, territories and resources. The working group's session was to be reconvened in January 2006.

Permanent Forum on Indigenous Issues

Report of Permanent Forum. The 16-member Permanent Forum on Indigenous Issues, established by Economic and Social Council resolution 2000/22 [YUN 2000, p. 731] to address indigenous issues relating to economic and social development, the environment, health, education and culture, and human rights, at its fourth session (New York, 16-27 May) [E/2005/43 & Corr. 1, 2], considered as its theme "Millennium Development Goals and indigenous peoples" and recommended three draft decisions for adoption by the Council (see below). Matters brought to the Council's attention related to the eradication of extreme poverty and hunger, the achievement of universal primary education, the human rights and fundamental freedoms of indigenous people, data collection on indigenous peoples, indigenous children and youth and indigenous women and the Forum's future work.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 22 July, the Economic and Social Council authorized a three-day international expert group meeting on the MDGs, indigenous participation and good governance, and requested the meeting to report to the Forum in 2006 (decision 2005/252). It decided that the Forum's fifth session would be held in New York from 15 to 26 May 2006 (decision 2005/253), and approved the provisional agenda and documentation for that session (decision 2005/254).

On 25 July, the Council took note of the Forum's report on its fourth session (decision 2005/296).

Indigenous peoples' permanent sovereignty over natural resources

On 20 April [dec. 2005/110], the Commission, by recorded vote (38-2-12), expressed appreciation to the Special Rapporteur on indigenous peoples' permanent sovereignty over natural resources, Erica-Irene A. Daes (Greece), for her 2004 final report [YUN 2004, p. 800] on a study on the topic. It recommended that the Economic and Social Council authorize OHCHR to convene an expert seminar on the theme, and give further attention to and discuss the political, legal, economic, social and cultural aspects and matters relating to the study. It also recommended that studies that might be used as a basis for reconciliation between Governments and indigenous peoples be issued as UN publications and part of the Human Rights Study Series.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 25 July, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on Human Rights [E/2005/23 & Corr. 1], adopted decision 2005/289 by recorded vote (33-2-15) [agenda item 14 (g)].

Final report on the study on indigenous peoples' permanent sovereignty over natural resources

At its 38th plenary meeting, on 25 July 2005, the Economic and Social Council took note of Commission on Human Rights decision 2005/110 of 20 April 2005, and endorsed the Commission's recommendation to authorize the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to convene an expert seminar during 2005, to which representatives of indigenous peoples and Governments as well as the Special Rapporteur of the Subcommission on the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights would be invited, in order to give further attention to and to discuss in detail the many political, legal, economic, social and cultural aspects and matters relating to the study on indigenous peoples' permanent sovereignty over natural resources as well as to the study entitled "Indigenous peoples and their relationship to land".

The Council also endorsed the Commission's recommendation that the studies of the Special Rapporteur be issued as United Nations publications as part of the Human Rights Study Series.

RECORDED VOTE ON DECISION 2005/289:

In favour: Armenia, Azerbaijan, Bangladesh, Belize, Brazil, Canada, China, Colombia, Congo, Costa Rica, Cuba, Ecuador, Guinea, India, Indonesia, Jamaica, Kenya, Malaysia, Mauritius, Mexico, Mozambique, Namibia, Nicaragua, Pakistan, Panama, Russian Federation, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, South Africa, Thailand, Tunisia, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania.

Against: Australia, United States.

Abstaining: Albania, Belgium, Denmark, France, Germany, Iceland, Ireland, Italy, Japan, Lithuania, Poland, Republic of Korea, Spain, Turkey, United Kingdom.

Chapter III

Human rights violations

Alleged violations of human rights and international humanitarian law in a number of countries were examined in 2005 by the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council, the Commission on Human Rights and its Subcommission on the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights, and by Special rapporteurs, special representatives of the Secretary-General and independent experts appointed to examine allegations.

General aspects

In accordance with a procedure established by Economic and Social Council resolution 1503 (XLVIII) (1503 procedure) [YUN 1970, p. 530] to deal with communications alleging denial or violation of human rights, the Working Group on Situations of the Commission on Human Rights, in closed meetings on 24 March and 1 April, examined human rights situations in Honduras, Kyrgyzstan and Uzbekistan, to decide whether or not to refer any of those situations to the Commission. The Commission decided to discontinue consideration of the situation on human rights in Honduras and to keep those in Kyrgyzstan and Uzbekistan under review. It appointed an independent expert to report to it on Uzbekistan, in accordance with the 1503 procedure and Council resolution 2000/3 [YUN 2000, p. 596]. Subsequently, Michèle Picard (France) was appointed independent expert.

(For information on the right to restitution, compensation and rehabilitation for victims of grave violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms, see p. 792.)

Africa

Sudan

Report of independent expert. In response to a 2004 request of the Commission on Human Rights [YUN 2004, p. 803], the independent expert on the situation of human rights in the Sudan, Emmanuel Akwei Addo (Ghana), in a February report on his 2004 mission to the Sudan [E/CN.4/2005/11], described Sudan's obligations under international human rights and humanitarian law, particularly within the context of the continuing armed conflict between the Government and the Sudan People's Liberation Movement/Sudan People's Liberation Army (SPLM/SPLA).

Commission action. On 21 April [E/2005/23 (res. 2005/82)], the Commission on Human Rights condemned the continuing violation of human rights and international humanitarian law in the Sudan, including sexual violence against women and girls, the destruction of villages and widespread displacement and attacks against civilians by all parties, particularly the Janjaweed and other militias. Emphasizing the need to control, disarm and disband the militias and to bring those responsible for human rights violations to justice, the Commission also condemned violations of the N'Djamena Humanitarian Ceasefire Agreement [YUN 2004, p. 235] and their impact on humanitarian efforts. It called on all parties to observe the humanitarian ceasefire and grant safe and unhindered humanitarian access to the Darfur region and elsewhere in the country; cease all acts of violence and protect women and girls from sexual and other forms of violence; respect the rights of refugees and internally displaced persons (IDPs), including their right of voluntary return in safety and dignity; cooperate with relevant human rights bodies and mechanisms of the African Union (AU) and the United Nations; prevent the recruitment of children as soldiers and combatants; refrain from the use of landmines; and stop the abduction and murder of relief workers by armed groups. The Government of the Sudan was called upon to investigate human rights violations, bring the perpetrators to justice and end impunity for crimes committed in Darfur; enhance access to the courts for all victims of human rights violations; and strengthen the independence and impartiality of the judiciary. The Commission also called on the international community to expand support for the AU's efforts and activities aimed at bringing peace to the Sudan and to continue relief assistance to the affected population in Darfur. The High Commissioner was requested to increase and speed up the deployment of human rights monitors in Darfur to complement the mission in the Sudan and to increase technical assistance and advisory services to the Government, with a view to enhancing the national human rights capacity. The Commission appointed for one year, a special rapporteur on the situation of human rights in the Sudan, who would, with the Secretary-General's assistance, monitor the situation and submit an interim report to the General Assembly in 2005 and a report to the Commission in 2006.

On 25 July, the Economic and Social Council approved the Commission's decision to establish the mandate of a Special Rapporteur, as well as its requests to the Special Rapporteur and the Secretary-General (decision 2005/280).

In July, Sima Samar (Afghanistan) was appointed as the Special Rapporteur.

Note by Secretary-General. By a 20 September note [A/60/356], the Secretary-General informed the General Assembly that the Special Rapporteur was scheduled to visit the Sudan in October (see below) and would, therefore, not be able to submit a written report, which the Commission had called for in resolution 2005/82 (see p. 883). She would, however, make an oral presentation.

On 16 December, the Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's note (decision 60/533).

Reports of Special Rapporteur. The Special Rapporteur, Ms. Samar, undertook her first visit to the Sudan (15-22 October) [E/CN.4/2006/111] to gather information on the human rights situation and on the Government's action to promote and protect those rights. Among the issues of concern she addressed were: alleged violations of the rights to life and physical integrity; women's rights and gender-based violence; physical abuse in State custody, the denial of fair trial standards and detention conditions; impunity, transitional justice and justice in Darfur; rebuilding the entire justice system; the death penalty; forced recruitment of children and forced relocations; economic, social and cultural rights; freedom of association, freedom of expression and the media; national security, power and practice; reconciliation and reparation in Darfur; and the efforts of the United Nations Mission in the Sudan to promote human rights.

The Special Rapporteur concluded that the framework for the protection and promotion of human rights had improved through the signing of the Comprehensive Peace Agreement between the north and the south (see p. 301), the establishment of the Government of National Unity and the Government of southern Sudan, and the adoption of the interim national constitution and the constitution of South Sudan, both of which guaranteed human rights and fundamental freedoms. However, despite the optimism generated by those positive developments, there was no significant improvement in the human rights situation. While peace talks progressed, the conflict in the Darfur region continued.

Effective action was not taken to disarm the Government-backed militia or Janjaweed, and none of the serious crimes committed during the 2004 conflict had been seriously investigated, nor were the perpetrators brought to justice. Immunities in place for security forces had not been repealed, the state of emergency laws were maintained in certain areas, and security agents continued to detain and torture persons suspected of crimes. Access to detention facilities was generally denied and new laws were introduced limiting freedoms of expression and association. Discrimination and the marginalization of groups persisted and basic human rights such as access to food, shelter, health care and education were not guaranteed, while humanitarian aid was looted or blocked from being delivered.

The Special Rapporteur recommended that all parties to the conflict respect international humanitarian and human rights law, particularly regarding the protection of civilians and the recruitment and use of child soldiers. The Government of National Unity should undertake, as a priority, a comprehensive law reform to ensure conformity with the interim national constitution and international human rights law, focusing on legislation regulating the police, armed forces, the press, non-governmental organizations (NGOs) and criminal law. The Special Rapporteur proposed to the Government a series of other measures designed to strengthen the national justice system and to prevent and/or deter further human rights violations. Other recommendations called for a civilian police presence in all displaced persons' camps and returnees' villages and enjoined Member States and the international community to provide financial, logistical and other support to the AU Mission in the Sudan, and to the Government and people in creating a non-violent society that respected human dignity. Rebel groups were asked to prevent and punish human rights abuses and violations of international humanitarian law by their commanders and combatants.

The Special Rapporteur, in a 27 October oral report to the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee [A/C.3/60/SR.26], highlighted several positive developments in the political process in the Sudan, but noted that the implementation of the Comprehensive Peace Agreement was encountering serious delays, as the Commission established to monitor the process had not yet been set up. Also, national legislation had not been harmonized with the interim national constitution, which recognized international human rights standards. Thus, the people of the Sudan had seen little change in their everyday life since the formation of the Government of National Unity. Civilians were being harassed and killed in villages and camps for IDPs in all three regions of Darfur, where sexual violence was committed with impunity. Although the Government was addressing the issue, there had not been any tangible results. Pointing out that it was unclear whether the Government was truly committed to bringing the perpetrators of human rights violations to justice, the Special Rapporteur made a series of recommendations to the Sudanese authorities and the international community for the effective protection of human rights throughout that country, particularly regarding IDPs and women.

In response, the representative of the Sudan promised his country's full cooperation with the Special Rapporteur, as confirmation of his country's commitment to work through multilateral diplomatic channels for the protection and enhancement of human rights. The conflict in Darfur had adversely affected the humanitarian situation and caused suffering to the people there, but the Government was taking steps to alleviate the situation, including through the establishment of a special criminal court in Darfur (see p. 326) to try human rights violators and national committees to investigate cases of violence against women.

(For information on the visit to the Sudan by the Representative of the Secretary-General on internally displaced persons, see p. 869.)

Communications. The Sudan, in a follow-up to its 2004 communication announcing the establishment by its President of a Commission of Inquiry into alleged human rights violations by armed groups in Darfur [YUN 2004, p. 804], circulated, on 28 January, a summary of the Commission's findings [E/CN.4/2005/G/14]. It also announced on 8 March, the subsequent creation of three committees on judicial investigation, damage assessment and administrative issues to address the implementation of the Commission's recommendations [E/CN.4/2005/G/17].

On 1 March, the Government of the Sudan circulated its plan for disarming armed militias in the Darfur region [E/CN.4/2005/G/15], and, on 8 March, issued information concerning the subversive and criminal activities of rebel movements in that region [E/CN.4/2005/G/16].

Americas

Colombia

The Commission's Chairperson, in a 22 April statement [E/2005/23], said the Commission was concerned about the situation of human rights and international humanitarian law in Colombia, particularly regarding vulnerable groups. It reported violations of the rights to life, personal integrity, freedom and security, due process, privacy and intimacy, as well as alleged breaches of the fundamental freedoms of movement, residence, opinion and expression.

Concerns were also expressed over problems relating to the justice system, including access to justice and judicial independence/impartiality; the role of unverified information from informants; breaches of international humanitarian law by security agents; and the increasing number of IDPs. In particular, the Commission condemned massacres and cruel violence in the country, especially the murder in February of eight members of the Community of Peace of San José de Apartadó (citizens who sought to separate themselves from the conflict), terrorism and other criminal attacks by illegally armed groups, the recruitment by those groups of a large number of children, kidnapping, violations of the rights of minorities and indigenous communities, and of women and girls.

The Commission, stressing its support for the Government's efforts to establish the rule of law throughout the country, urged dialogue and negotiations between the Government and all illegally armed groups, emphasized the importance of truth, justice and reparation in a comprehensive peace strategy and requested the Government to ensure the investigation of complaints relating to forced disappearances. The Commission stressed the need to further address poverty, exclusion, social injustice and the gap in wealth distribution and called on the Government to ensure that the recommendations of the High Commissioner were implemented swiftly. The High Commissioner was asked to report in 2006.

Report of High Commissioner. The High Commissioner's report on the 2005 human rights situation in Colombia, based on information gathered by the Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights in Colombia (OHCHR/Bogotá) [E/CN.4/2006/9 & Corr. 1, 2], stated that OHCHR continued to cooperate with and assist the Government of Colombia to improve the protection and promotion of human rights, particularly through its contacts with State authorities, civil society organizations, NGOs, churches, the media and diplomatic representatives, and a May visit to that country by the High Commissioner. During the year, the Office undertook 300 observation missions and received 2,403 complaints, of which 1,789 were related to violations of human rights and/or breaches of international humanitarian law.

According to the High Commissioner, the human rights situation in Colombia was marked by grave violations of civil and political rights and unresolved challenges affecting economic, social and cultural rights. Extrajudicial executions and enforced disappearances persisted with impunity, as did arbitrary detentions, torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment and attacks on the freedom of expression. While such violations were not a deliberate State policy, they were difficult to deal with, owing to the failure of the authorities to recognize them as violations and the inadequacy of remedial action. The related issue of poverty affecting over half of the Colombian population, particularly ethnic groups, women and children, reflected a high degree of inequity, especially regarding the enjoyment of the rights to education, health, employment and housing. Illegally armed groups, especially the Revolutionary Armed Forces of Colombia–People's Army (FARC-EP) and the paramilitaries of the Autodefensas Unidas de Colombia (United Self-Defence Forces of Colombia) (AUC), continued to commit serious breaches of humanitarian rules, such as attacks on the civilian population. Most affected were vulnerable groups, including human rights defenders, displaced persons, trade unionists, ethnic minorities, journalists, leaders of political parties, conscientious objectors, detainees and local authorities. The situation was exacerbated by challenges relating to the demobilization of over 11,100 persons released by paramilitary groups since 2003. Not only was the legal framework for the demobilization exercise incompatible with international principles, it conferred certain benefits to most demobilized persons, including pardon, and did not adequately address the problem of the State's responsibility in crimes committed by paramilitaries. In addition, there was no mechanism to ensure the dismantling of illegal structures, thereby enabling the paramilitaries to maintain their strong influence in many regions in the country.

While encouraging the national authorities to implement her previous recommendations, the High Commissioner addressed 26 additional proposals to the Government, the illegally armed groups operating in the country, operatives of Colombia's internal justice system and human rights mechanisms, civil society representatives and the international community regarding prevention and protection measures, the internal armed conflict, the rule of law and impunity, economic and social policies, the promotion of a human rights culture and OHCHR's advisory and technical cooperation services.

Communication. On 1 April [E/CN.4/2005/G/29], Colombia, in its observations on the content of the High Commissioner's report, stated that the importance the Government attached to human rights in that country was reflected by its inclusion in the 2002-2006 national development plan adopted in 2003, as well as in the adoption of a specific Government policy containing nine guiding principles, the implementation of which was being coordinated by the Office of the Vice President. However, while the Government appreciated the fact that the High Commissioner's report had acknowledged the progress made in guaranteeing human rights in Colombia, it did not accept a number of other observations contained therein.

Cuba

Report of Personal Representative. In a report to the Commission [E/CN.4/2006/33], the High Commissioner's Personal Representative, Christine Chanet (France), reviewed factors hindering the realization of human rights in Cuba, especially the impact of the economic, trade and financial embargo (see p. 394) on economic, social and cultural rights. She noted that the restrictions imposed by the embargo had deprived Cuba of vital access to medicines and related technology, food, chemical water-treatment and electricity and had led to the adoption by the Cuban authorities of repressive laws, under which some Cuban citizens were described as mercenaries and subject to punishment. The difficulties facing the population as a result of the embargo had been compounded since 2004 by the tightening of economic and financial restrictions imposed by the United States.

Despite positive efforts by the Government to maintain a sound health system, improve the quality of education and literacy rates, combat discrimination against women and promote human rights, issues of concern remained, primarily about the continuing detention of some 80 persons, including journalists, writers, human rights defenders, politicians and opposition trade unionists arrested since March/April 2003. Annexed to the report was a list of those persons who remain imprisoned. Most of the victims had supported changing the electoral system and other legislative reforms. In 2005, more people were arrested and convicted for openly expressing dissident political opinions and the Working Group on Arbitrary Detention (see p. 799) reported that 60 persons remained in arbitrary detention. The Personal Representative was alarmed at allegations of ill-treatment in detention facilities. Several prisoners had been on hunger strike and the European Union had issued an appeal in favour of three of the affected prisoners.

The Personal Representative recommended that the Cuban Government halt the prosecution of citizens exercising rights guaranteed under the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 217 A (III) [YUN 1948-49, p. 535]; release detained persons who had not committed acts of violence against individuals or property; review laws which had led to criminal prosecutions of persons exercising their freedom of expression, demonstration, assembly and association; uphold, without exception, the moratorium on the application of the death penalty; reform the rules of criminal procedure; establish a standing independent body to receive complaints from persons whose rights had been allegedly violated; review the regulations relating to travel into and out of Cuba in order to guarantee the freedom of movement; authorize NGOs to enter Cuba; foster pluralism in respect of associations, trade unions, the media and political parties; and accede to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and its Optional Protocols and to the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 2200 A (XXI) [YUN 1966, pp. 423 & 419], as well as the former Covenant's Second Optional Protocol, aimed at the abolition of the death penalty, adopted by Assembly resolution 44/128 [YUN 1989, p. 484].

Commission action. On 14 April [res. 2005/12], the Commission, by a recorded vote of 21 to 17, with 15 abstentions, invited the Personal Representative to report on the current situation of human rights in Cuba, as addressed in previous Commission resolutions.

A draft resolution [E/CN.4/2005/L.94/Rev.1], introduced in the Commission on 21 April, would have requested the United States to authorize an impartial and independent fact-finding mission by the Commission's special procedures on the situation of detainees at the United States naval base in Guantánamo Bay, Cuba, as well as the Chairperson-Rapporteur of the Working Group on Arbitrary Detention, the Special Rapporteur on the question of torture and other cruel, inhuman and degrading treatment or punishment, the Special Rapporteur on the right of everyone to the enjoyment of the highest attainable standard of physical and mental health, and the Special Rapporteur on the independence of judges and lawyers to visit the detention centres at the base. The resolution would have also requested the High Commissioner to report in 2006 on the situation of detainees there, based on the findings of the visits, which would have been conducted by the designated special procedures. By a recorded vote of 22 to 8, with 23 abstentions, taken at the request of the United States, the draft resolution was rejected.

Communications. During the year, Cuba transmitted to the Commission a series of documents on issues relating to human rights and fundamental freedoms [E/CN.4/2005/G/18, E/CN.4/2005/G/26, E/CN.4/2005/G/36, E/CN.4/2005/G/39, E/CN.4/2005/G/41, E/CN.4/2005/G/42, E/CN.4/2005/G/43, E/CN.4/2006/G/1, E/CN.4/2006/G/3].

Democratic People's Republic of Korea

Note by Secretariat. In response to a 2004 Commission request [YUN 2004, p. 807], a note by the Secretariat [E/CN.4/2005/32] described efforts to provide human rights advisory services to the Democratic People's Republic of Korea (DPRK). In that context, OHCHR had explored ways of initiating technical cooperation with DPRK, but was yet to receive a response from the Government to its proposals on the subject.

In a 28 February response [E/CN.4/2005/G/13], DPRK stated that it rejected the 2004 Commission resolution [YUN 2004, p. 807] that had called for the provision of technical cooperation to DPRK in the area of human rights, adding that the resolution, which was initiated by the European Union, was based on political motivations and had nothing to do with genuine promotion and protection of human rights.

Reports of Special Rapporteur. In a January report [E/CN.4/2005/34], the Special Rapporteur, Vitit Muntarbhorn (Thailand), summarized the situation of human rights in the DPRK, noting some constructive developments in recent decades as well as a variety of discrepancies and transgressions warranting immediate action. According to the Rapporteur, the country was party to four key human rights treaties and had submitted a number of reports to the relevant monitoring committees. It had occasionally allowed human rights mechanisms, such as the Committee on the Rights of the Child (see p. 731) and UN agencies, to assess the status of human rights in that country and to address related issues. It had also established some legal and operational infrastructures, such as the national constitution, which could help promote and protect human rights. Moreover, there was a warming of relations between DPRK and a number of countries within and outside the region. Nonetheless, the situation of human rights in DPRK did not accord with international standards. The enjoyment of human rights was affected by the nature of the country's leadership, with power concentrated absolutely at the top, by the continuing effects of the war (1950-1953) on the peninsula, the related demilitarization problems and the need for broad-based popular participation. Against that background, human rights challenges included the right to food and life. The food shortages of the mid-1990s, brought about by floods and drought, were compounded by power imbalances and inadequate response from the power structure. It had affected the country's development and endangered many lives and livelihoods. According to several humanitarian agencies, there was a continuing need for food aid to help the population, some 6.4 million of whom, particularly women and children, had benefited to date.

Other challenges related to the realization of the rights to security of person, humane treatment, non-discrimination and access to justice; freedom of movement and protection of displaced persons; the highest attainable standard of health and education; self-determination/political participation, access to information, freedom of expression/belief/opinion, association and religion; and of specific persons/groups, including women and children.

The Special Rapporteur recommended that the Government abide by international human rights standards and reform laws and practices inconsistent with those standards; uphold human rights, democracy, peace, sustainable development and demilitarization; respect the rule of law, build the capacity of law enforcement bodies and reform the justice system; address the root causes of displacement, prevent persecution and victimization of those displaced; provide redress for transgressions, such as those relating to the abduction of foreign nationals; issue a national human rights action plan with public participation for law enforcement bodies; ensure that humanitarian assistance reached targeted groups; and seek assistance from OHCHR and other agencies for promoting and protecting human rights. Additional recommendations were addressed to the international community.

Commission action. On 14 April [res. 2005/11], by a recorded vote of 30 to 9, with 14 abstentions, the Commission expressed deep concern about continuing reports of systemic, widespread and grave violations of human rights in DPRK, its non-acceptance of the mandate of the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in that country, as contained in a 2004 Commission resolution [YUN 2004, p. 807], and its failure to engage in technical cooperation activities with OHCHR. The Commission urged the Government to address those concerns in an open and constructive manner and requested the High Commissioner to continue to engage DPRK authorities in a comprehensive dialogue, with a view to establishing technical cooperation programmes in human rights, and to submit her findings and recommendations to the Commission in 2006. The Commission extended the Special Rapporteur's mandate for a further year and requested him, with assistance from the Secretary-General, to continue efforts to establish direct contact with the Government and people of DPRK, to report on the human rights situation in that country and on the Government's compliance with its obligations under international human rights instruments, and to submit his findings and recommendations to the General Assembly in 2005, and to the Commission in 2006. All relevant special rapporteurs and special representatives were also asked to examine alleged human rights violations in DPRK and to report thereon to the Commission in 2006.

On 25 July, the Economic and Social Council endorsed the Commission's decision to extend the Special Rapporteur's mandate and its request to him to submit reports (decision 2005/258).

As requested in Commission resolution 2005/11 (see above), the Secretary-General, by a 29 August note [A/60/306], transmitted the Special Rapporteur's updated report to the General Assembly, which further described the human rights situation in DPRK and his visits to Japan and Mongolia.

During his visit to Japan (24 February–4 March), the Special Rapporteur examined the impact on that country of the human rights situation in DPRK, particularly the reported abductions by that country of Japanese nationals. Japan claimed that 15 individuals had been abducted, five of whom had been released. DPRK claimed that eight of the remaining 10 persons had died; a claim contested by Japan, and the victim's families in particular. Expressing concern over the issue, and recalling that the abduction of persons ("enforced disappearances") was generally forbidden in national and international law, the Special Rapporteur called on DPRK to respond effectively and expeditiously to Japan's claims that some of the abducted persons were still alive and should be returned to Japan immediately and safely; verify claims concerning the alleged deaths of abducted Japanese nationals and ascertain whether there had been additional abductions; respect and guarantee family unity/reunification; enable the victims of abductions and their families to access justice and seek redress; and resume dialogue with Japan to prevent further abductions.

In Mongolia (4-11 March), the Special Rapporteur also examined the consequences for that country of the human rights situation in DPRK, especially the displacement of people across the borders since 1999, seeking refuge from DPRK. Mongolia provided temporary shelter and treated them as humanitarian cases, without specifically calling them refugees, since they were in transit and later departed for long-term settlement in the Republic of Korea. Mongolia feared a mass influx of non-nationals into the country, particularly the potentially destabilizing effect, which had inevitably influenced the country's policy-making and security concerns. The Special Rapporteur recommended that Mongolia should sustain its humanitarian policy and practice in sheltering those seeking refuge in the country and to continue to abide by international human rights and refugee law.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December [meeting 64], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/60/509/Add.3 & Corr.1], adopted resolution 60/173 by recorded vote (88-21-60) [agenda item 71 (c)].

Situation of human rights in the Democratic People's Republic of Korea

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming that States Members of the United Nations have an obligation to promote and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms and to fulfil the obligations that they have undertaken under the various international instruments,

Mindful that the Democratic People's Republic of Korea is a party to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the Convention on the Rights of the Child and the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women,

Recalling Commission on Human Rights resolutions 2003/10 of 16 April 2003, 2004/13 of 15 April 2004 and 2005/11 of 14 April 2005,

Recalling in particular that, in its resolution 2005/11, the Commission on Human Rights urged the General Assembly to take up the question of the situation of human rights in the Democratic People's Republic of Korea if the Government did not extend cooperation to the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on the situation of human rights in the Democratic People's Republic of Korea and if no improvement of the situation of human rights in the country was observed,

Taking note of the report of the Special Rapporteur,

1. Expresses its serious concern at:

(a) The refusal of the Government of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea to recognize the mandate of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on the situation of human rights in the Democratic People's Republic of Korea or to extend cooperation to him;

(b) Continuing reports of systemic, widespread and grave violations of human rights in the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, including:

(i) Torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, public executions, extrajudicial and arbitrary detention, the absence of due process and the rule of law, the imposition of the death penalty for political reasons, the existence of a large number of prison camps and the extensive use of forced labour;

(ii) Sanctions imposed on citizens of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea who have been repatriated from abroad, such as treating their departure as treason, leading to punishments of internment, torture, cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or the death penalty;

(iii) All-pervasive and severe restrictions on the freedoms of thought, conscience, religion, opinion and expression, peaceful assembly and association, and on equal access to information and limitations imposed on every person who wishes to move freely within the country and travel abroad;

(iv) Continuing violation of the human rights and fundamental freedoms of women, in particular the trafficking of women for the purpose of prostitution or forced marriage, forced abortions, and infanticide of children of repatriated mothers, including in police detention centres and camps;

(v) Unresolved questions relating to the abduction of foreigners in the form of an enforced disappearance;

2. Expresses its concern that the Government of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea has not engaged in technical cooperation activities with the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and her Office, despite efforts by the High Commissioner to engage in a dialogue with the authorities of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea in this regard;

3. Expresses its deep concern at the precarious humanitarian situation in the country, in particular the prevalence of infant malnutrition, which still affects the physical and mental development of a significant proportion of children;

4. Urges the Government of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, in this regard, to ensure that humanitarian organizations, including non-governmental organizations and United Nations organizations, in particular the World Food Programme, have full, free, safe and unimpeded access to all parts of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea so that they may ensure that humanitarian assistance is delivered impartially on the basis of need in accordance with humanitarian principles, this concern having been aggravated by the announcement by the authorities of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea of their intention not to accept humanitarian assistance from January 2006;

5. Also urges the Government of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea to respect fully all human rights and fundamental freedoms and, in this regard, to implement fully the measures set out in the abovementioned resolutions of the Commission on Human Rights, in particular full cooperation with the Special Rapporteur.

RECORDED VOTE ON RESOLUTION 60/173:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Andorra, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Azerbaijan, Belgium, Belize, Bhutan, Bolivia, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Brazil, Bulgaria, Canada, Chile, Costa Rica, Croatia, Cyprus, Czech Republic, Denmark, Dominica, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, El Salvador, Estonia, Fiji, Finland, France, Georgia, Germany, Greece, Guatemala, Guinea-Bissau, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, Iraq, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Japan, Kazakhstan, Latvia, Lebanon, Liechtenstein, Lithuania, Luxembourg, Maldives, Malta, Marshall Islands, Mexico, Micronesia, Monaco, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Norway, Palau, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Republic of Moldova, Romania, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, San Marino, Saudi Arabia, Serbia and Montenegro, Slovakia, Slovenia, Solomon Islands, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland, The former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Timor-Leste, Tonga, Turkey, Ukraine, United Kingdom, United States, Uruguay.

Iran

By a May note [E/CN.4/2006/3], the Secretariat circulated a letter from Iran drawing the attention of the Bureau of the Commission to the request of the Transnational Radical Party, an NGO in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council, for the withdrawal as an official document, of its written statement [E/CN.4/2005/NGO/260] to the sixty-first session of the Commission on the situation in the Iranian province of Khuzestan.

(See pp. 851 and 843, respectively, for details of visits to Iran by the Special Rapporteurs on violence against women, its causes and consequences and on adequate housing as a component of the right to an adequate standard of living.)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December [meeting 64], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/60/509/Add.3 & Corr.1], adopted resolution 60/171 by recorded vote (75-50-43) [agenda item 71 (c)].

Situation of human rights in the Islamic Republic of Iran

The General Assembly,

Guided by the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights and other international human rights instruments,

Reaffirming that all Member States have an obligation to promote and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms and to fulfil the obligations they have undertaken under the various international instruments in this field,

Mindful that the Islamic Republic of Iran is a party to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination and the Convention on the Rights of the Child,

Recalling its previous resolutions on the subject, the most recent of which is resolution 59/205 of 20 December 2004, and recalling also Commission on Human Rights resolution 2001/17 of 20 April 2001,

Noting the statements made by the Government of the Islamic Republic of Iran on strengthening respect for human rights in the country and promoting the rule of law,

1. Welcomes:

(a) The open invitation extended by the Government of the Islamic Republic of Iran to all human rights thematic monitoring mechanisms in April 2002 and the cooperation extended to the special procedures of the Commission on Human Rights during their visits;

(b) The visit of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on violence against women, its causes and consequences to the Islamic Republic of Iran from 29 January to 6 February 2005;

(c) The visit of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on adequate housing as a component of the right to an adequate standard of living to the Islamic Republic of Iran from 19 to 30 July 2005;

(d) The recommendation by the head of the judiciary of the Islamic Republic of Iran to judges in December 2002 that they choose alternative punishment in cases where the sentence of stoning would otherwise be imposed;

(e) The announcement by the head of the judiciary in April 2004 of the ban on torture and the subsequent passage of related legislation by the parliament, which was approved by the Guardian Council in May 2004;

(f) The compliance by the Islamic Republic of Iran with its obligation, as a party to the Convention on the Rights of the Child, to deliver its presentation to the Committee on the Rights of the Child in January 2005;

(g) The human rights dialogues between the Islamic Republic of Iran and a number of countries, while regretting that a number of these have not been held at regular intervals lately;

(h) The cooperation with United Nations agencies in developing programmes in the field of human rights, good governance and the rule of law;

2. Expresses its serious concern at:

(a) The continuing harassment, intimidation and persecution of human rights defenders, non-governmental organizations, political opponents, religious dissenters, political reformists, journalists, parliamentarians, students, clerics, academics and webloggers, including through undue restrictions on the freedoms of assembly, opinion and expression, the use of arbitrary arrest, targeted at both individuals and their family members, and the unjustified closure of newspapers and blocking of Internet sites, as well as the absence of many conditions necessary for free and fair elections, including by the arbitrary disqualification of large numbers of prospective candidates, including all women, during the presidential elections of June 2005;

(b) The persistent failure to comply fully with international standards in the administration of justice and, in particular, the absence of due process of law, the refusal to provide fair and public hearings, the denial of the right to counsel and access to counsel by those detained, the use of national security laws to deny human rights, the harassment, intimidation and persecution of defence lawyers and legal defenders, the lack of respect for internationally recognized safeguards, inter alia, with respect to persons belonging to religious, ethnic or national minorities, officially recognized or otherwise, the application of arbitrary prison sentences, and the violation of the rights of detainees, including the systematic and arbitrary use of prolonged solitary confinement, the failure to provide proper medical care to those imprisoned and the arbitrary denial of contact between detainees and their family members;

(c) The continuing use of torture and cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment such as flogging and amputations;

(d) The continuing of public executions, including multiple public executions, and, on a large scale, other executions in the absence of respect for internationally recognized safeguards, and, in particular, deplores the execution of persons who were under the age of 18 at the time their offence was committed, contrary to the obligations of the Islamic Republic of Iran under article 37 of the Convention on the Rights of the Child and article 6 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and in spite of the announcement of a moratorium on juvenile executions;

(e) The continuing violence and discrimination against women and girls in law and in practice, despite some minor legislative improvements, and the refusal of the Guardian Council to take steps to address this systemic discrimination, noting in this context its rejection, in August 2003, of the proposal of the elected parliament to accede to the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women;

(f) The continuing discrimination, and other human rights violations against persons belonging to ethnic and religious minorities, recognized or otherwise, including Arabs, Kurds, Baluchis, Christians, Jews and Sunni Muslims, the escalation and increased frequency of discrimination and other human rights violations against the Baha'i, including cases of arbitrary arrest and detention, the denial of freedom of religion or of publicly carrying out communal affairs, the disregard of property rights, the destruction of sites of religious importance, the suspension of social, educational and community-related activities and the denial of access to higher education, employment, pensions, adequate housing and other benefits and recent violent crackdowns on Kurds;

3. Calls upon the Government of the Islamic Republic of Iran:

(a) To ensure full respect for the rights to freedom of assembly, opinion and expression, and the right to take part in the conduct of public affairs in accordance with its obligations under the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and, in particular, to end the harassment, intimidation and persecution of political opponents and human rights defenders, including by releasing persons imprisoned arbitrarily or on the basis of their political views;

(b) To ensure full respect for the right to due process of law, including the right to counsel and access to counsel by those detained, in criminal justice proceedings and, in particular, to ensure a fair and public hearing by a competent, independent and impartial tribunal established by law, to end harassment, intimidation and persecution of defence lawyers and legal defenders and to ensure equality before the law and the equal protection of the law without any discrimination in all instances, including for members of religious, ethnic, linguistic or other minority groups, officially recognized or otherwise;

(c) To eliminate, in law and in practice, the use of torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, such as amputations and flogging, to end impunity for violations of human rights that constitute crimes by bringing the perpetrators to justice in accordance with international standards and, as proposed by the elected Iranian parliament, to accede to the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment;

(d) To abolish public executions and other executions carried out in the absence of respect for internationally recognized safeguards, in particular, as called for by the Committee on the Rights of the Child in its report of January 2005, executions of persons who, at the time of their offence, were under the age of 18, and to uphold the moratorium on executions by stoning and to introduce this moratorium as law as a first step towards the abolition of this punishment;

(e) To eliminate, in law and in practice, all forms of discrimination and violence against women and girls, and, as proposed by the elected Iranian parliament, to accede to the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women;

(f) To eliminate, in law and in practice, all forms of discrimination based on religious, ethnic or linguistic grounds, and other human rights violations against persons belonging to minorities, including Arabs, Kurds, Baluchis, Christians, Jews, Sunni Muslims and the Baha'i, and to address this matter in an open manner, with the full participation of the minorities themselves, to otherwise ensure full respect for the right to freedom of thought, conscience, religion or belief of all persons, and to implement the 1996 report of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on religious intolerance, which recommended ways in which the Islamic Republic of Iran could emancipate the Baha'i community;

4. Encourages the thematic mechanisms of the Commission on Human Rights, inter alia, the Special Rapporteur on extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions, the Special Rapporteur on torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, the Special Rapporteur on the independence of judges and lawyers, the Special Rapporteur on freedom of religion or belief, the Special Rapporteur on the promotion and protection of the right to freedom of opinion and expression, the Special Representative of the Secretary-General on the situation of human rights defenders and the Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances, to visit or otherwise continue their work to improve the situation of human rights in the Islamic Republic of Iran, and urges the Government of the Islamic Republic of Iran to cooperate with these special mechanisms and to illustrate how their subsequent recommendations have been addressed, including recommendations of special procedures that have visited the country in the past twelve months;

5. Decides to continue its examination of the situation of human rights in the Islamic Republic of Iran at its sixty-first session, under the item entitled "Human rights questions", in the light of additional elements provided by the Commission on Human Rights.

RECORDED VOTE ON RESOLUTION 60/171:

Myanmar

Commission action. On 14 April [res. 2005/10], the Commission, while acknowledging encouraging developments in Myanmar, including the Government's release of some 19,906 prisoners, its establishment of a committee for the prevention of the recruitment of under-age soldiers, its ratification of several human rights instruments, its negotiation of a ceasefire agreement with the Karen National Union (KNU) and cooperation with humanitarian agencies, expressed grave concern at the systematic violation of human rights in the country. The Commission called on the Government to end those violations; lift all restraints on peaceful political activity by all persons; restore democracy and respect the results of the 1990 elections by releasing unconditionally, members of political parties and all political prisoners; ensure that future elections were conducted according to international standards for free and fair elections and that the National Convention included all political parties and major ethnic nationalities not represented by a political party; initiate an independent inquiry, with international cooperation, into the Depayin incident of 30 May 2003 [YUN 2003, p. 819], as called for in General Assembly resolution 58/247 [YUN 2003, p. 820]; restore the independence of the judiciary; consider becoming party to all relevant international human rights and humanitarian law instruments; and establish a national human rights commission to promote and protect human rights.

The Government was further called upon to pursue, through dialogue and peaceful means, the end of conflict with all ethnic groups in Myanmar, cooperate with the Special Envoy of the Secretary-General for Myanmar and with the Special Rapporteur to bring about the country's transition to civilian rule, and to eradicate the practice of forced labour by all Government organs. The Commission extended the Special Rapporteur's mandate for a further year and asked him, with assistance from the Secretary-General, to report to the Assembly in 2005 and to the Commission in 2006, and to integrate a gender perspective in his work.

On 25 July, the Economic and Social Council endorsed the Commission's decision to extend the Special Rapporteur's mandate and its request to him to submit reports (decision 2005/257).

Reports of Secretary-General. In response to Assembly resolution 59/263 [YUN 2004, p. 812], the Secretary-General submitted a March report

[E/CN.4/2005/130] on his good offices efforts and those of his Special Envoy, Razali Ismail, in facilitating national reconciliation and democratization in Myanmar. Acknowledging that Myanmar faced complex and difficult challenges in its transition to democracy and quest for national reconciliation, the Secretary-General cautiously welcomed the Government's seven-step road map aimed at democratic transition [YUN 2003, p. 820] and acknowledged the potential role that the National Convention could play in that regard. However, contrary to consistent advice that the process be all-inclusive and democratic to be credible, the National Convention fell short of those basic requirements and did not adhere to the recommendations of the Assembly and the Commission on Human Rights. The continued detention of Daw Aung San Suu Kyi and other members of her party, the detention and arrest of other ethnic national leaders, the restrictions on the activities of the country's political parties, and the mass imprisonment of people for expressing their political views were incompatible with the process of democratization and national reconciliation, however defined. The Secretary-General maintained that, unless the views of the National League for Democracy (NLD), other political parties and all the country's ethnic groups on Myanmar's future were sought, considered and taken into account, the National Convention and the road map process would be incomplete and lacking in credibility. He reiterated his call on Myanmar's authorities to make the road map process more inclusive and credible, and to resume substantive political dialogue with all ethnic groups and political leaders, including Daw Aung San Suu Kyi, in order to achieve a genuine process of national reconciliation. The Secretary-General emphasized the need for the remaining constraints on all political and ethnic leaders to be lifted and for political prisoners, including elected officials, to be released. The authorities should ensure that the third phase of the road map—the drafting of the constitution—was fully inclusive. A national referendum should be held subsequently, and unless that exercise adhered to internationally accepted standards of conduct and participation, it may be difficult for the international community to endorse the result. The authorities should demonstrate their commitment to a genuine and credible process of democratization and national reconciliation by allowing the Secretary-General's Special Envoy to resume his visits to Myanmar as soon as possible, in order to continue his facilitation efforts and to discuss ways to enhance Myanmar's cooperation with the UN good offices efforts. The Secretary-General maintained that the Government of Myanmar had an obligation to ensure that its people derived the same benefits of economic, social and political development as elsewhere in the region and underscored the UN system's parallel commitment to invest in the country's long-term future, by enhancing the scale and scope of its social and humanitarian engagement with the people and communities.

In October [A/60/422 & Corr.1], the Secretary-General further reported on his good offices efforts and those of his Special Envoy, aimed at facilitating national reconciliation and democratization in Myanmar. The report reiterated the shortcomings of the National Convention, which continued to exclude representatives from many political parties, including NLD, and failed to adhere to the Assembly's recommendations. The Secretary-General, therefore, called on the Myanmar authorities to make the reform efforts more inclusive and credible when the National Convention resumed later in the year and during subsequent phases of the road map process, including those for drafting the constitution and organizing a national referendum. The Secretary-General recalled that Daw Aung San Suu Kyi had expressed her readiness to cooperate with the Government for the good of the people, as had the representatives of ethnic nationality political parties. He promised to mobilize international assistance to support Myanmar's authorities, if progress occurred.

On 24 October [A/C.3/60/2], Myanmar stated that the Secretary-General's report contained factual errors and went beyond the parameters mandated by Assembly resolution 59/263. Myanmar claimed that the main thrust of the report seemed to question the National Convention process, the first important step of the seven-point political road map for transition to democracy.

On 7 November [A/60/422/Add.1], the Secretary-General clarified the issues raised by Myanmar.

Reports of Special Rapporteur. In response to Commission resolution 2005/10 and Economic and Social Council decision 2005/257 (see p. 892), the Secretary-General, by an August note [A/60/221], transmitted the interim report of Special Rapporteur Paulo Sérgio Pinheiro (Brazil) on the human rights situation in Myanmar, based on information he had received up to 22 July. The Special Rapporteur regretted that the situation regarding the exercise of fundamental rights and freedoms in Myanmar had not substantially changed, as many people continued to be harassed, arrested, tried and sentenced to prison for the peaceful exercise of basic civil and political rights and freedoms. Despite the welcome release in July of 249 political prisoners, there reportedly remained over 1,100 others, including monks, lawyers, teachers, journalists, farmers, politicians, student leaders, writers and poets. The Special Rapporteur was concerned at ongoing allegations of pervasive and systematic torture and ill-treatment of persons in pre-trial detention, the denial to detainees of access to their relatives, legal professionals and others, and the application of the 1975 State Protection Law permitting the Home Minister to detain without charge or trial anyone believed to constitute "a danger to the State". Among those detained under the law was Daw Aung San Suu Kyi, who had been under house arrest for over nine of the past 16 years, and her virtual solitary confinement and lack of access to her NLD colleagues ran counter to the spirit of national reconciliation. The situation regarding economic, social and cultural rights and the rights of ethnic minorities raised similar concerns. The humanitarian situation also remained dire, as the ongoing conflict between Government forces and non-State groups, combined with grave human rights violations, continued to result in mass population displacements.

The Special Rapporteur recommended that the Government demonstrate its commitment to implement political and constitutional reforms by guaranteeing: the full and effective participation of all political actors, including NLD, political parties and ethnic leaders, in a meaningful and substantive dialogue; the release of NLD General Secretary Daw Aung San Suu Kyi and other political prisoners; the protection and promotion of civil and political rights and that State institutions receive and investigate all complaints of human rights abuses; and the prosecution of those responsible in accordance with international standards. The Government should initiate fundamental reforms, with the assistance of the international community and multilateral organizations, so that Myanmar could successfully integrate into international financial and economic structures. In that context, policy initiatives which could be launched simultaneously during the transition process could include civil service reform, environmental protection, reform of the education sector and the judiciary, and the establishment of social safety nets for the most vulnerable groups, including the poor, women, youth, the elderly and persons with disabilities. As a matter of priority, however, the Government should ratify core international human rights instruments.

On 16 December, the General Assembly took note of the interim report of the Special Rapporteur (decision 60/533).

In a later report [E/CN.4/2006/34], the Special Rapporteur stated that the National Convention reconvened in December, but had made no progress towards genuine democratic reform and the situation regarding the exercise of fundamental human rights and freedoms remained grave. The intimidation, harassment, arbitrary arrest and imprisonment of civilians for peacefully exercising their civil and political rights and freedoms continued and the activities of political parties remained severely repressed by government agents. On 27 November, the Government issued a new executive order prolonging the detention of Daw Aung San Suu Kyi for a further six months and the number of political prisoners reached an estimated 1,144 persons. The socio-economic and humanitarian situation in the country had also further deteriorated.

The Special Rapporteur observed that the human rights concerns in the country were largely the same as those he had highlighted six years ago and regretted that early indications of the Government's willingness to address those problems had disappeared. He stated that his previous recommendations remained valid, and their implementation was even more essential, given the stagnation of the transition process, the lack of progress towards national reconciliation and the deteriorating humanitarian situation. He was convinced that progress in resolving the ethnic conflict in Myanmar might not be possible or sustainable without tangible political reform. The ongoing armed conflict in several ethnic minority areas continued to underpin the most grave human rights abuses in the country, to exacerbate its humanitarian decline and to inhibit socio-economic development. Without an inclusive reform process, such challenges could not be addressed by the Government's current road map process.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 23 December [meeting 69], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/60/509/Add.3 & Corr.1], adopted resolution 60/233 without vote [agenda item 71 (c)].

Situation of human rights in Myanmar

The General Assembly,

Guided by the Charter of the United Nations and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, and recalling the International Covenants on Human Rights and other relevant human rights instruments,

Reaffirming that all Member States have an obligation to promote and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms and the duty to fulfil the obligations they have undertaken under the various international instruments in this field,

Reaffirming also its previous resolutions on the situation of human rights in Myanmar, the most recent of which is resolution 59/263 of 23 December 2004, those of the Commission on Human Rights, the most recent of which is resolution 2005/10 of 14 April 2005, and the conclusions of the International Labour Conference of 4 June 2005,

Bearing in mind Security Council resolution 1325 (2000) of 31 October 2000 on women and peace and security, resolutions 1265(1999) of 17 September 1999 and 1296(2000) of 19 April 2000 on the protection of civilians in armed conflict and resolution 1612(2005) of 26 July 2005 on children in armed conflict, and the report of the Secretary-General on children and armed conflict,

Recognizing that good governance, democracy, the rule of law and respect for human rights are essential to achieving sustainable development and economic growth, and affirming that the establishment of a genuine democratic government in Myanmar is essential for the realization of all human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Affirming that the will of the people is the basis of the authority of government and that the will of the people of Myanmar was clearly expressed in the elections held in 1990,

1. Welcomes:

(a) The reports of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on the situation of human rights in Myanmar and the reports of the Secretary-General;

(b) The personal engagement and statements of the Secretary-General with regard to the situation of Myanmar;

(c) The efforts of the United Nations and other international humanitarian organizations to deliver urgently needed humanitarian assistance to the most vulnerable people in Myanmar;

(d) The release by the Government of Myanmar of two hundred and forty-nine political prisoners on 6 July 2005, while noting that over one thousand, one hundred political prisoners remain incarcerated;

(e) The establishment by the Government of a committee for the prevention of military recruitment of underage soldiers and the adoption in November 2004 of an outline plan of action to address the issues of underage recruitment and child soldiers;

(f) The ratification by Myanmar on 30 March 2004 of the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime and two of the Protocols thereto, namely, the Protocol to Prevent, Suppress and Punish Trafficking in Persons, Especially Women and Children, and the Protocol against the Smuggling of Migrants by Land, Sea and Air, and the enactment by Myanmar on 13 September 2005 of an Anti-trafficking in Persons Law drawn up in accordance with the Convention;

2. Expresses grave concern at:

(a) The ongoing systematic violation of the human rights, including civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights, of the people of Myanmar, including violations of the right to an adequate standard of living, discrimination and violations suffered by persons belonging to ethnic nationalities, women and children, especially in non-ceasefire areas, including but not limited to extrajudicial killings, rape and other forms of sexual violence persistently carried out by members of the armed forces, continuing use of torture, deaths in custody, political arrests and continuing imprisonment and other detentions; forced relocation; forced labour, including child labour; trafficking in persons; denial of freedom of assembly, association, expression and movement; wide disrespect for the rule of law, continuing recruitment and use of child soldiers, use of landmines, and the confiscation of arable land, crops, livestock and other possessions;

(b) The extension of the house arrest of the General Secretary of the National League for Democracy, Aung San Suu Kyi, and her deputy, Tin Oo, and the persistent denial of their human rights and fundamental freedoms, including freedom of movement and association, as well as the continuing detention, particularly incommunicado detention, of other senior leaders of the League and of the leadership of other political parties or ethnic nationalities, particularly the detention of Khun Htun Oo and Sai Nyunt Lwin, Chairman and General Secretary, respectively, of the Shan Nationalities League for Democracy, and Sao Hso Ten, Chairman of the Shan State Peace Council;

(c) The consistent harassment of members of the National League for Democracy and other politicians, and the fact that no full and independent inquiry, with international cooperation, into the attack perpetrated near Depayin on 30 May 2003 has been initiated, despite the decision taken thereon by the General Assembly in its resolution 58/247 of 23 December 2003;

(d) The absence of a substantive and structured dialogue with Aung San Suu Kyi and the National League for Democracy, and some representative ethnic groups, that facilitates national reconciliation, coupled with continuing restrictions placed on the League and other political parties, which have prevented them from participating in the National Convention, including the continued closure of the regional offices of the League;

(e) The renewed attacks by military forces on ceasefire groups in violation of ceasefire agreements, and the subsequent and continuing violations of human rights, and the deterioration of the enjoyment of human rights by the affected populations;

(f) The continuing denial of the freedom of human rights defenders to pursue their legitimate activities;

(g) The situation of the large number of internally displaced persons and the flow of refugees to neighbouring countries, and recalls in this context the obligations of Myanmar under international law;

(h) The fact that the Government of Myanmar, as noted by the 2005 International Labour Conference, has still not implemented the recommendations of the International Labour Organization Commission of Inquiry, has yet to demonstrate its stated determination to eliminate forced labour and take the necessary measures to comply with the International Labour Organization Convention concerning Forced or Compulsory Labour, 1930 (Convention No. 29), and has yet to demonstrate commitment at the highest level to a substantive policy dialogue that can address the forced labour problem;

(i) The fact that the Special Envoy of the Secretary-General for Myanmar and the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on the situation of human rights in Myanmar have been unable to visit the country for almost two years, despite repeated requests;

(j) The imposition of various travel restrictions on United Nations and other international organizations undertaking to enable access for the delivery of humanitarian assistance to all parts of Myanmar, and notes the related withdrawal of the Global Fund to Fight AIDS, Tuberculosis and Malaria;

3. Strongly calls upon the Government of Myanmar:

(a) To end the systematic violations of human rights in Myanmar and to ensure full respect for all human rights and fundamental freedoms;

(b) To end impunity and to investigate and bring to justice any perpetrators of human rights violations, including members of the military and other government agents in all circumstances;

(c) To consider as a matter of high priority becoming a party to all instruments of international human rights law and international humanitarian law, and to ensure that existing legal obligations are implemented;

(d) To promote the full enjoyment of all human rights and allow human rights defenders to pursue their activities unhindered and to ensure their safety, security and freedom of movement in that pursuit;

(e) To put an immediate end to the recruitment and use of child soldiers and to extend full cooperation to relevant international organizations in order to ensure the demobilization of child soldiers, their return home and their rehabilitation in accordance with Security Council resolutions 1539(2004) of 22 April 2004 and 1612(2005), and stresses the need for the Government of Myanmar to maintain close dialogue with the United Nations Children's Fund and to cooperate with the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Children and Armed Conflict in accordance with Council resolutions 1539(2004) and 1612(2005);

(f) To end widespread rape and other forms of sexual violence persistently carried out by members of the armed forces, in particular against women belonging to ethnic nationalities, and to investigate and bring to justice any perpetrators in order to end impunity for those acts;

(g) To end the systematic forced displacement of persons and other causes of refugee flows to neighbouring countries, to provide the necessary protection and assistance to internally displaced persons, in cooperation with the international community, and to respect the right of refugees to voluntary, safe and dignified return monitored by appropriate international agencies in accordance with international law, including applicable international humanitarian law;

(h) To release all political prisoners immediately and unconditionally, including National League for Democracy leaders Aung San Suu Kyi and Tin Oo, and Shan Nationalities League for Democracy leader Khun Htun Oo and other Shan leaders, and to allow their full participation in an inclusive and credible process of national reconciliation;

(i) To lift all restraints on peaceful political activity of all persons, including former political prisoners, by, inter alia, guaranteeing freedom of association and freedom of expression, including freedom of the media, and to ensure unhindered access to information for the people of Myanmar and to desist from arresting and punishing persons for their peaceful political activities;

(j) To urgently resolve the serious issues identified by the very High-level Team and the International Labour Conference, including to give clear assurances that no action will be taken against persons lodging complaints of forced labour, to resolve outstanding allegations of forced labour, to issue the necessary visas to allow a strengthening of the International Labour Organization presence in Myanmar, and to respect the freedom of movement of the Liaison Officer ad interim;

(k) To cooperate fully with the Special Envoy and the Special Rapporteur in order to bring Myanmar towards a transition to civilian rule, and to ensure that they are both granted full, free and unimpeded access to Myanmar and that no person cooperating with the Special Envoy, the Special Rapporteur or any international organization is subjected to any form of intimidation, harassment or punishment, and to review as a matter of urgency the cases of those currently undergoing punishment in this regard;

(l) Without further delay, to cooperate fully with the Special Rapporteur to facilitate an independent international investigation of continuing reports of sexual violence and other abuse of civilians carried out by members of the armed forces in Shan, Karen, Mon and other states;

(m) To ensure immediately safe and unhindered access to all parts of Myanmar for the United Nations and international humanitarian organizations and to cooperate fully with those organizations so as to ensure that humanitarian assistance is delivered in accordance with humanitarian principles and reaches the most vulnerable groups of the population in accordance with international law, including applicable international humanitarian law;

(n) To ensure that discipline in prisons does not constitute torture or cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, and that conditions of detention otherwise meet international standards, and to include the possibility of visiting any detainee, including Aung San Suu Kyi;

(o) To ensure that government forces do not engage in food and land requisition or the destruction of villages;

(p) To continue to take action to fight the HIV/AIDS epidemic;

4. Calls upon the Government of Myanmar:

(a) To ensure that the remainder of the National Convention, in particular the subsequent constitution-drafting exercise, becomes genuinely inclusive, through the unhindered participation of all political parties and representatives of ethnic nationalities;

(b) To ensure that the proposals tabled at the National Convention for the chapters of the draft constitution are consistent with the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights and other human rights instruments;

(c) To create the conditions for the free operation of existing and new political parties, in advance of the referendum and elections envisaged under the seven-step road map, and to ensure that all eligible citizens are registered to vote in any future referendum and elections and that these are conducted according to international standards with the full participation of all political parties;

(d) To pursue through dialogue and peaceful means the immediate suspension and permanent end of conflict with all ethnic groups in Myanmar, including by ensuring that the constitution-drafting process responds to the concerns of the ethnic nationalities, including the ceasefire groups attending the National Convention, and respects their rights, so as to increase the likelihood that the ceasefires will lead to lasting political settlements and peace;

(e) To fulfil its obligations to restore the independence of the judiciary and due process of law, and to take further steps to reform the system of the administration of justice;

5. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To continue to provide his good offices and to pursue his discussions on the situation of human rights and the restoration of democracy with the Government and the people of Myanmar, including all relevant parties to the national reconciliation process in Myanmar, and to offer technical assistance to the Government in this regard;

(b) To give all necessary assistance to enable his Special Envoy and the Special Rapporteur to discharge their mandate fully and effectively;

(c) To report to the General Assembly at its sixty-first session and to the Commission on Human Rights at its sixty-second session on the progress made in the implementation of the present resolution;

6. Decides to continue the consideration of the question at its sixty-first session.

Turkmenistan

Report of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 59/206 [YUN 2004, p. 813], the Secretary-General submitted a September report on the situation of human rights in Turkmenistan [A/60/367]. The report described efforts to implement resolution 59/206, including the development of constructive dialogue between Turkmenistan and OHCHR on technical cooperation for the preparation of reports to human rights treaty bodies and the implementation of international human rights standards; the related activities of the Commission's special procedures; and the status of Turkmenistan's reporting to treaty bodies and efforts to implement their recommendations.

The Secretary-General concluded that, although the country had made some progress in addressing outstanding problems, the reported continuation of serious human rights violations indicated a lack of overall improvement in the human rights situation there. He encouraged the Government to continue to submit reports to UN treaty bodies, to maintain dialogue with the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination and to implement the recommendations made by those bodies. It should extend invitations to the Commission's thematic special mechanisms interested in visiting that country and to continue cooperation with OHCHR.

Communication. In an 11 April note to OHCHR [E/CN.4/2005/G/35], Turkmenistan described recent measures taken by the Government to improve human rights and to strengthen cooperation with international organizations.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December [meeting 64], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/60/509/Add.3 & Corr.1], adopted resolution 60/172 by recorded vote (71-35-60) [agenda item 71 (c)].

Situation of human rights in Turkmenistan

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming that all States Members of the United Nations have the obligation to promote and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms and the duty to fulfil the obligations that they have undertaken under the various international instruments in this field,

Recalling its resolutions 58/194 of 22 December 2003 and 59/206 of 20 December 2004, and Commission on Human Rights resolutions 2003/11 of 16 April 2003 and 2004/12 of 15 April 2004,

Noting the conclusion of the first needs-assessment mission of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to Turkmenistan in March 2004 and the ongoing consultations to finalize a possible technical cooperation project,

Noting with appreciation that the Government of Turkmenistan has received the Chairman-in-Office and the High Commissioner on National Minorities of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe,

Welcoming the report of the Secretary-General of 20 September 2005, which concludes that, while the Government of Turkmenistan has made some progress in addressing human rights issues and has shown readiness to cooperate with the international community, there was a lack of overall improvement in addressing serious human rights violations,

Reaffirming that improving security and the fight against terrorism should be conducted in accordance with international law, in particular international human rights, humanitarian and refugee law, and democratic principles,

1. Welcomes:

(a) The fact that additional minority religious groups have been allowed to worship for the first time as a result of the removal of a legal impediment to the full realization of the right to freedom of thought, conscience, religion or belief, but notes that serious violations of these freedoms continue;

(b) The release in April 2005 of four Jehovah's Witnesses who had made conscientious objections to undertaking military service;

(c) The lifting of criminal penalties for the activities of non-registered non-governmental organizations in November 2004, while nevertheless noting that difficulties in the registration process for non-governmental organizations and private organizations continue and that other significant restrictions continue to hinder their activities;

(d) The submission, within the past year, of the national report under the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination to the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination, as well as the reports due under the Convention on the Rights of the Child and the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, while encouraging the Government of Turkmenistan to comply with its outstanding reporting obligations to the Human Rights Committee, the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and the Committee against Torture;

(e) The demonstrated readiness of the Government of Turkmenistan to discuss human rights matters with interested third parties on an ad hoc basis and to agree on the desirability of continuing dialogue and practical cooperation;

(f) The statements made by the President of Turkmenistan in April 2005 on democratic reforms, and urges that those reforms be truly democratic, in line with established international norms;

(g) The accession by Turkmenistan to the following United Nations protocols and conventions, and urges the Government of Turkmenistan to implement its obligations under these instruments:

(i) The Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the involvement of children in armed conflict;

(ii) The Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography;

(iii) The United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime, its Protocol to Prevent, Suppress and Punish Trafficking in Persons, Especially Women and Children and its Protocol against the Smuggling of Migrants by Land, Sea and Air;

(h) The public statements of the President of Turkmenistan recommending the abolition of the practice of removing children from school for the cotton harvest and reprimanding a local governor for the use of child labour in the fields, as well as a law passed on 1 February 2005 prohibiting the employment of minors under the age of 15 and stipulating that no form of child labour should interfere with a child's education, and calls upon the Government of Turkmenistan to ensure that the law is fully implemented;

(i) The decision of the Government of Turkmenistan to grant citizenship or permanent resident status to more than sixteen thousand refugees, including a significant number of Tajik refugees, who had fled Tajikistan between 1992 and 1999 and whose naturalization under the Turkmen Nationality Law had been advocated for many years by the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees;

(j) The abolition of exit visas as a requirement for leaving the country;

2. Expresses its grave concern at the continuing and serious human rights violations occurring in Turkmenistan, in particular:

(a) The persistence of a governmental policy based on the repression of all political opposition activities;

(b) The continuing abuse of the legal system through arbitrary detentions, imprisonment and surveillance of persons who try to exercise their freedom of expression, assembly and association, and harassment of their families;

(c) The poor conditions in prisons in Turkmenistan and credible reports of ongoing torture and mistreatment of detainees;

(d) The failure of the Government of Turkmenistan to grant access to detainees to the International Committee of the Red Cross, according to the usual terms of the Committee, as well as to international monitors;

(e) The complete control of the media by the Government of Turkmenistan, its censorship of all newspapers and access to the Internet and intolerance of independent criticism of government policy, as well as further restrictions on the freedom of expression and opinion, including shutting down of the last remaining Russian-language radio station, Radio Mayak, even if satellite television is permitted and widely used, harassing of local correspondents and collaborators of Radio Liberty and prohibition of all contact between local journalists and foreigners without the express consent of the Government;

(f) Continuing restrictions on the exercise of the freedom of thought, conscience, religion or belief, including the use of registration procedures as a means to limit the right to freedom of thought, conscience and religion of members of certain religious communities;

(g) Continuing discrimination by the Government of Turkmenistan against ethnic Russian, Uzbek and other minorities, inter alia, in the fields of education and employment and access to media, despite assurances by the Government that it will stop this discrimination, taking note in this regard of the concluding observations of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination of August 2005;

(h) Forced displacement of its citizens, including a disproportionate displacement of ethnic minorities;

(i) Continuing restrictions on the exercise of the right of peaceful assembly, including increased constraints faced by civil society organizations, such as the slow progress in the registration of non-governmental organizations under the procedures set out in the law of 2003 on public associations;

(j) The continuing failure of the Government of Turkmenistan to respond to the criticisms identified in the report of the Rapporteur of the Moscow Mechanism of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe with regard to the investigation, trial and detention procedures following the reported assassination attempt against the President of Turkmenistan in November 2002, as well as the failure of the Turkmen authorities to allow appropriate independent bodies, family members and lawyers access to those convicted, or to provide any kind of evidence to dispel rumours that some of those convicted have died in detention;

(k) Arbitrary or unlawful interference with individuals' privacy, family, home or correspondence and violations of the freedom to leave one's country;

(l) Reported instances of hate speech against national and ethnic minorities, including statements attributed to high-ranking government officials and public figures supporting an approach to Turkmen ethnic purity, as noted in the concluding observations of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination of August 2005;

3. Urges the Government of Turkmenistan:

(a) To ensure full respect for all human rights and fundamental freedoms and, in this regard, to implement fully the measures set out in General Assembly resolutions 58/194 and 59/206 and Commission on Human Rights resolutions 2003/11 and 2004/12;

(b) To work closely with the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights with regard to the areas of concern and to cooperate fully with all the mechanisms of the Commission on Human Rights, in particular to consider favourably requests made by a number of special rapporteurs of the Commission to visit the country, as recalled in the report of the Secretary-General, and with all the relevant United Nations treaty bodies;

(c) To implement fully the recommendations outlined in the report of the Rapporteur of the Moscow Mechanism of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe and to work constructively with the various institutions of the Organization, and to facilitate further visits of the Organization's Chairman-in-Office as well as his Personal Envoy for participating States in Central Asia, and of the Organization's High Commissioner on National Minorities;

(d) To follow through on the presentation of the Government of Turkmenistan to the Commission on Human Rights in April 2004 and the meetings of the Government of Turkmenistan with the International Committee of the Red Cross in 2005 by finalizing an agreement allowing the Committee to visit Turkmen prisons with full and repeated access to all places of detention in accordance with the usual modalities for that organization, and by providing international monitors, lawyers and relatives with full and repeated access to all those in detention, including those convicted of involvement in the coup attempt of 25 November 2002;

(e) To respect the right of everyone to freedom of thought, conscience, religion or belief, whether a member of a religious group or not, and to cease the harassment, detention and persecution of members of religious minorities, whether registered or unregistered;

(f) To bring laws and practices governing registration of public associations, including non-governmental organizations, into line with the standards of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe and to enable non-governmental organizations, particularly human rights organizations, and other civil society actors, including independent media, to carry out their activities without hindrance;

(g) To submit reports to the United Nations treaty bodies to which it has assumed a reporting obligation and to give due regard to the recommendations and concluding observations of those treaty bodies, the most recent being the recommendations and concluding observations of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination;

(h) To fulfil its responsibility to ensure that those responsible for human rights violations are brought to justice;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to the General Assembly at its sixty-first session on the implementation of the present resolution.

RECORDED VOTE ON RESOLUTION 60/172:

Uzbekistan

According to a report of the High Commissioner [E/CN.4/2006/119], the outbreak of demonstrations in the Andijan city of Uzbekistan between 12 and 14 May, resulted in the deaths of over 176 people and caused some 500 survivors to flee to Kyrgyzstan. In the absence of a positive response from Uzbekistan to the call from the High Commissioner and the Secretary-General for an international investigation, OHCHR dispatched a mission to Kyrgyzstan from 13 to 21 June to collect information on the causes and circumstances of the incidents as a preparatory step to a possible independent international investigation into those events. Following extensive meetings and interviews with some of the eyewitnesses in Kyrgyzstan, the mission concluded that there was strong, consistent and credible testimony that grave violations of human rights, mostly of the right to life, were committed by Uzbek military and security forces, and that the incident resulted in mass killing. The demonstration at Babur Square was a public expression of discontent relating to the trial of 23 businessmen whose arrest had created financial and personal hardship to the population in and around Andijan, and while the demonstration might have constituted a serious threat to law and order, the armed forces appeared not to have taken any measures to protect life and did not warn people against gathering at the square.

The mission recommended the prompt establishment of an international commission of inquiry to investigate the alleged violations, to establish the facts and circumstances and, to the extent possible, prosecute those responsible. In the light of conflicting information on the death toll, such an inquiry should also establish what happened to the bodies of those killed, trace those who had disappeared and ensure that survivors were reunited with their families. The Government of Uzbekistan should ensure adequate compensation for the families of the victims and for those whose property was destroyed during those incidents.

Given the consistent pattern of human rights violations in Uzbekistan, the international community should consider appointing a country-based special rapporteur or independent expert, with the mandate to report on progress in implementing international human rights norms and in ensuring the rule of law in the country.

In December, the General Assembly called on the Government of Uzbekistan to implement promptly the recommendations contained in the mission's report, most notably with respect to granting permission for the establishment of an international commission of inquiry into the events in Andijan (see resolution 60/174 below).

Communication. By a 2 August communication [A/59/890], Uzbekistan circulated a decree of its President on the abolition of the death penalty.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December [meeting 64], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/60/509/Add.3 & Corr.1], adopted resolution 60/174 by recorded vote (74-39-56) [agenda item 71 (c)].

Situation of human rights in Uzbekistan

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming that all States Members of the United Nations have an obligation to promote and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms, and the duty to fulfil the obligations they have undertaken under the various international instruments in this field,

Mindful that Uzbekistan is a party to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women and the Convention on the Rights of the Child,

Deeply concerned by the events that occurred in Andijan in May 2005 and the subsequent response of the Uzbek authorities,

1. Welcomes:

(a) The high-level talks of the Government of Uzbekistan with the Secretary General of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe and with the Special Representative of the European Union for Central Asia, and hopes that a real, constructive dialogue on human rights issues will be held soon;

(b) The steps, albeit limited, taken to date to implement the National Action Plan on Torture and the recommendations of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, including the definition of torture by the Supreme Court in accordance with the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, and the amendment of the Criminal Code to include torture as a punishable crime;

(c) The statement made by the President of Uzbekistan on 28 January 2005 in which he expressed, inter alia, the intention to provide for true independence of the judiciary, and calls upon the Government of Uzbekistan to take steps to allow for its practical independence, as outlined by the President;

(d) The decree of the President of Uzbekistan on 1 August 2005 that the death penalty shall be abolished in Uzbekistan as from 1 January 2008;

2. Expresses its grave concern at the continuing and serious human rights violations occurring in Uzbekistan, in particular:

(a) Eyewitness reports of indiscriminate and disproportionate force used by government troops to quell demonstrations in Andijan in May 2005 resulting in the death of many civilians;

(b) The pressure applied to prevent citizens of Uzbekistan with refugee status granted by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees from travelling to a third country;

(c) Reports of arbitrary arrest and detention, including of eyewitnesses to the events in Andijan;

(d) Prevention of the functioning of independent media and the intolerance of any form of dissent expressed therein, and increasing restrictions on freedom of expression, particularly harassment, beatings, arrests and threats made against journalists and civil society activists attempting to document and publicize information on the events in Andijan;

(e) Continuing refusal to permit the registration of opposition political parties, and their consequent inability to participate in the electoral process;

(f) A continuing pattern of discrimination, harassment and prosecution with regard to the exercise of freedom of thought, conscience and religion;

(g) Serious constraints on, and harassment and detention of, the members of non-governmental organizations and civil society, including human rights defenders;

3. Deeply regrets the decision of the Government of Uzbekistan to reject both the repeated calls of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights for the establishment of an independent commission of inquiry into the events that occurred in Andijan on 13 May 2005 and the request of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions to visit Uzbekistan soon afterwards;

4. Strongly calls upon the Government of Uzbekistan:

(a) To implement fully without any delay the recommendations contained in the report of the mission of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to Kyrgyzstan from 13 to 21 June 2005, most notably with respect to granting permission for the establishment of an international commission of inquiry into the events in Andijan;

(b) To accede to the 1951 Convention relating to the Status of Refugees and its 1967 Protocol;

(c) To put an end to the harassment and detention of eyewitnesses to the events in Andijan;

(d) To ensure readily accessible and fair trials;

(e) To ensure full respect for all human rights and fundamental freedoms and, in this regard, to implement fully the recommendations of the independent expert on the situation of human rights in Uzbekistan appointed under the confidential 1503 procedure at the sixtieth session of the Commission on Human Rights and to extend full cooperation to the newly appointed independent expert;

(f) To permit the full freedom of practising religion;

(g) To implement fully the recommendations contained in the report of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on the question of torture on his visit to Uzbekistan from 24 November to 6 December 2002;

(h) To work closely with the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights with regard to the areas of concern and to cooperate fully with all the mechanisms of the Commission on Human Rights and all the relevant United Nations treaty bodies;

(i) To allow the representatives of the International Committee of the Red Cross unimpeded access to persons detained, in accordance with its working procedures;

(j) To implement fully the commitments undertaken within the framework of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe and to cooperate with the institutions of the Organization;

(k) To register independent opposition political parties and allow them to participate in the electoral process;

(l) To lift restrictions on the activities of civil society, including non-governmental organizations;

(m) To protect journalists, including those who write articles opposing government policy, in line with past appeals by the President for journalists to be more critical, and the functioning of independent media outlets, including, as the case may be, licensing and accreditation;

(n) To take legislative, judicial, administrative and other appropriate measures to actively protect human rights defenders against any violence, threats and other forms of harassment, and to withdraw all measures that restrict their freedom of action, assembly and speech or that hinder them in carrying out their legitimate activities according to the Declaration on the Right and Responsibility of Individuals, Groups and Organs of Society to Promote and Protect Universally Recognized Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms;

(o) To place no restrictions on diplomats and representatives of the United Nations, the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe and other international bodies in respect of their travel to Uzbekistan;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report on the implementation of the present resolution to the General Assembly at its sixty-first session.

RECORDED VOTE ON RESOLUTION 60/174:

Europe

Belarus

Commission action. By a recorded vote of 23 to 22, with 7 abstentions, the Commission rejected a motion by the Russian Federation that the Commission take no decision on a draft resolution introduced in the Commission on 14 April [E/2005/23].

On the same day, the Commission, by a recorded vote of 23 to 16, with 14 abstentions, adopted a draft resolution [res. 2005/13], by which it expressed concern that Belarus Government officials were implicated in the forced disappearance and/or summary execution of three political opponents and a journalist; at findings that the 2004 parliamentary elections had fallen significantly short of commitments made under the Organization of Security and Cooperation in Europe (OSCE); at the grave situation of the independent media in Belarus; at reports that the Government was enforcing excessive legal requirements and requesting substantial monetary sums for the registration and operation of NGOs; at reports on the Government's level of observance of international conventions relating to freedom of association and related rights to organize and to collective bargaining; at persistent reports of harassment and closure of NGOs, national minority organizations, independent media outlets, opposition political parties, independent trade unions and religious organizations and the harassment of individuals engaged in democratic activities; at the continuing pressure exerted by the Government on academic institutions; at its failure to cooperate with the Commission's mechanisms; at the politically motivated prosecution of a leading opposition figure; and at the continuing reports of arbitrary arrest and detention. The Commission urged the Government to address those concerns.

The Commission extended the Special Rapporteur's mandate for a further year and asked him to continue efforts, with the Secretary-General's assistance, to establish direct contact with the Government and people of Belarus and to report in 2006.

On 25 July, the Economic and Social Council endorsed the Commission's decision to extend the Special Rapporteur's mandate (decision 2005/259).

Report of Special Rapporteur. The Special Rapporteur, Adrian Severin (Romania), submitted a report [E/CN.4/2006/36] on the human rights situation in Belarus, based on the findings of his missions to Estonia, Latvia, Lithuania and Poland, and discussions and consultations in Geneva, Strasbourg (France) and Brussels. The Special Rapporteur, noting the refusal of the Belarus Government to cooperate with him, stated that all efforts made to engage in constructive dialogue were futile.

Belarus, by obstructing United Nations special procedures from fulfilling their mandates, violated its obligations, as a Member State of the Organization, and as party to international human rights instruments to which it had adhered. The Government had not considered any of the Special Rapporteur's previous recommendations, nor those of other special procedures. The breach of social, economic and cultural rights in that country was a matter of concern, since an oligarchy, formed by managers of the former Soviet industrial-military-agricultural complex, had generated a political superstructure headed by the President, which preserved an obsolete command economy that was surviving only within a context of political oppression and social hardship. Workers' rights were violated and there were considerable imbalances between employment, wages and the provision of basic services, and between rural and urban settlements. The regime suppressed or brought under its control every independent civil or economic initiative, and the President reportedly disposed personally of a shadow budget that was larger than the State budget, without any civic or political oversight, while the regime kept people quiet by meeting their basic needs from extra-economic resources. The regime had reinforced its authoritarian character and was rapidly turning into a dictatorship with clear totalitarian inclinations.

Emphasizing that the conclusions and recommendations contained in his 2004 report [YUN 2004, p. 815] remained valid, the Special Rapporteur urged the Government to give a clear sign of its readiness to cease human rights violations and to bring perpetrators to justice. He further recommended that the Commission request OHCHR to establish a group of legal experts to analyse the responsibility of senior Government officials in the disappearance or murder of public persons, political opponents and journalists and to make proposals for their prosecution. Also, the Secretary-General should investigate the apparent involvement of senior Government officials in international organized crime and illegal arms sales, monitor the international financial cash flows of Belarus, and, if necessary, freeze the foreign bank accounts of those involved in illicit trafficking, and prosecute criminals. In order to continue to raise international awareness of the situation of human rights in Belarus, the Special Rapporteur recommended that the Commission extend his mandate and enlarge its scope and means. Other recommendations were addressed to the Belarusian political opposition and civil society, the international community, Member States and regional organizations, particularly the Council of Europe and OSCE.

Communications. On 24 March, Belarus, referring to the Special Rapporteur's report (see above), submitted information on its contribution to strengthening international security, arms control and disarmament [E/CN.4/2005/G/27], and on social and economic developments in that country, based on the reports of international organizations [E/CN.4/2005/G/28].

Cyprus

Commission action. On 14 April [dec. 2005/103], the Commission retained the item on Cyprus on its agenda, with the understanding that previous resolutions would continue to remain operative, including its request to the Secretary-General to report on their implementation.

(See also p. 491.)

Note by Secretary-General. In response to a 2004 Commission request [YUN 2004, p. 816], the Secretary-General transmitted an OHCHR report [E/CN.4/2006/31 & Corr.1], which provided an overview of human rights issues in Cyprus covering the period up to 23 December 2005. Human rights concerns were rooted in the persisting division of the island, which affected the freedom of movement, property rights, the freedom of religion and the right to education, among other rights.

Limitations to the freedom of movement, owing notably to identity checks at crossing points, particularly affected the military zones in the northern part of the island. The crossing points had also given rise to other problems, including criminal activities, such as smuggling, drug and human trafficking and illegal immigration. Other issues of concern pertained to the question of missing persons, which the Security Council, in resolution 1642(2005) (see p. 496), asked the parties to assess and address with urgency and seriousness.

Regarding economic rights, the gap in the standards of living between the two parts of the island persisted. The report, emphasizing that the continuing de facto partition of the island constituted a major obstacle to the enjoyment of human rights, concluded that the situation would greatly benefit from a comprehensive settlement of the Cyprus problem.

Middle East

Lebanon

On 14 April [dec. 2005/102], the Commission deferred to its 2006 session consideration of a draft resolution on the human rights situation of Lebanese detainees in Israel.

(For information on a visit to Lebanon by the Special Rapporteur on trafficking in persons, especially women and children, see p. 854.)

Territories occupied by Israel

During 2005, the question of human rights violations in the territories occupied by Israel as a result of the 1967 hostilities in the Middle East was again considered by the Commission on Human Rights. Political and other aspects were considered by the General Assembly, its Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Palestinian People and Other Arabs of the Occupied Territories (Committee on Israeli Practices) and other bodies (see PART ONE, Chapter VI).

Reports of Secretary-General. In response to a 2004 Commission request [YUN 2004, p. 817], the Secretary-General reported that he had brought the Commission's resolution on the occupied Syrian Golan to the attention of all Governments, the specialized agencies, regional intergovernmental organizations and international humanitarian organizations [E/CN.4/2005/26]. It was also communicated to the Committee on Israeli Practices, the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People (Committee on Palestinian Rights) and the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA).

The Secretary-General, in a further report [E/CN.4/2005/27], also submitted in response to a 2004 Commission request [YUN 2004, p. 817], said he had brought the Commission's resolution on the violation of human rights in the occupied Arab territories to the attention of the Government of Israel and all other Governments, relevant UN bodies, specialized agencies, regional intergovernmental organizations and international humanitarian organizations, the Committee on Israeli Practices, the Committee on Palestinian Rights and UNRWA. He received no reply from Israel.

A note of the Secretary-General [E/CN.4/2005/28] listed all General Assembly reports issued since 23 April 2004 on the situation of the population living in the occupied Arab territories.

Commission action. On 14 April [res. 2005/6], the Commission, by a recorded vote of 39 to 2, with 12 abstentions, expressed concern at the continuing Israeli settlement and related activities, in violation of international law, which had changed the physical character and demographic composition of the occupied territories, including East Jerusalem and the occupied Syrian Golan. It also expressed concern at the new construction plan announced by Israel on 18 April (see p. 509).

Taking note of the resumption of dialogue between the parties, the Commission urged them to seize the opportunity offered by the current political context to give renewed impetus to the peace process and to implement the 2003 road map aimed at a comprehensive settlement [YUN 2003, p. 464], endorsed by the Security Council in resolution 1515(2003) [ibid., p. 483]. The Commission asked Israel to implement measures, including the confiscation of arms and enforcement of criminal sanctions, to prevent violence by Israeli settlers and to guarantee the safety and protection of Palestinians. It further demanded that Israel comply with its legal obligations set out in the 2004 advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice (ICJ) [YUN 2004, p. 465] and implement the recommendations regarding settlements contained in the High Commissioner's report on her 2000 visit to the region [YUN 2000, p. 776].

Also, on 14 April [res. 2005/7], by a recorded vote of 29 to 10, with 14 abstentions, the Commission condemned Israel's continuing violations of the human rights of the Palestinian people in the Occupied Palestinian Territory and called on Member States to fulfil their obligations under international human rights and humanitarian law to ensure that Israel ceased killing, targeting, arresting and harassing Palestinians, particularly women and children. The High Commissioner was asked to address the issue of Palestinian pregnant women giving birth at Israeli checkpoints owing to Israel's denial of access to hospitals, with a view to ending that inhumane practice, and to report thereon to the General Assembly in 2005 and to the Commission in 2006. The Commission further requested the High Commissioner to demand the immediate release of Palestinian detainees, including women, children and the sick, investigate reported cases of torture, harassment or ill-treatment and bring to justice Israeli officers involved in the abuse of detainees.

Israel was asked to comply with its obligations under international law, as mentioned in the ICJ advisory opinion and as demanded in relevant General Assembly resolutions, to cease construction of the wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, dismantle the structure and make reparations for damage caused due to its construction.

The Special Rapporteur was asked to report to the General Assembly in 2005 and to the Commission in 2006.

On the same date [res. 2005/8], by a recorded vote of 32 to 2, with 19 abstentions, the Commission called on Israel to comply with UN resolutions on the Syrian Golan and demanded that it rescind its decision to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration on the occupied territory. It also called on Israel to desist from changing the physical character, demographic composition, institutional structure and legal status of the area and from imposing Israeli citizenship and identity cards on the Syrian citizens of the Syrian Golan and to cease its repressive measures against them. The Secretary-General was requested to bring the Commission's resolution to the attention of all Governments, UN organs, specialized agencies, regional intergovernmental organizations and international humanitarian organizations, to widely publicize it and to report in 2006.

Reports of Special Rapporteur. A report of Special Rapporteur John Dugard (South Africa) [E/CN.4/2005/29] focused on Israel's military incursions into the Gaza Strip, the demolition of houses, violations of human rights and humanitarian law arising from the wall it was constructing in the Occupied Palestinian Territory and restrictions on freedom of movement. The report stated that the large-scale demolition of houses during the past year, resulting in many deaths and rendering hundreds of persons homeless in parts of Gaza, probably qualified as war crimes under the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War (Fourth Geneva Convention).

Although Israel had announced that it would withdraw unilaterally from Gaza [YUN 2004, p. 455], in reality, it intended to retain ultimate control over the area by controlling its borders, territorial sea and airspace. Referring to the 2004 ICJ advisory opinion, which held that the wall Israel was building was contrary to international law, the Special Rapporteur noted that Israel had not dismantled the wall. Freedom of movement was severely curtailed in the West Bank and Gaza, with the inhabitants of Gaza being imprisoned by a combination of wall, fence and sea, and by roadblocks that had effectively divided the small territory. The Special Rapporteur reminded States of their obligation not to recognize the illegal situation resulting from the wall's construction and not to render aid or assistance in maintaining the situation. While acknowledging Israel's legitimate security concerns, the Special Rapporteur stressed that those concerns should be addressed within the parameters of the law and that Israel was both legally and morally obliged to bring its practice in line therewith.

In a March addendum [E/CN.4/2005/29/Add.1], the Special Rapporteur reported on his visit to the Occupied Palestinian Territory and Israel (13-20 February), following the announcement of a ceasefire agreement between Palestinian Authority President Mahmoud Abbas and Israeli Prime Minister Ariel Sharon (see p. 506), by which Palestine would stop all acts of violence against Israelis and Israel would cease all military activity against Palestinians. The Special Rapporteur observed that, despite violations, the ceasefire agreement continued to hold, resulting in important improvements in the human rights situation in the Palestinian Territory, including the release of some 500 Palestinian prisoners from Israeli jails; the return to the West Bank of many Palestinians deported to Gaza and overseas; the discontinuation by the Israeli Defence Forces (IDF) of the targeted killings or assassinations of militants and the announced cessation of the punitive demolition of houses belonging to persons who had committed acts of violence against Israelis; the increase in the number of Palestinian workers and merchants allowed to enter Israel from the Gaza Strip; and the removal of some checkpoints in the West Bank and plans to hand over the control of five cities to the Palestinian Authority.

Despite those developments and reforms, however, the main violations of human rights and humanitarian law in the Occupied Palestinian Territory had not been addressed, including settlements, checkpoints and roadblocks, the situation in Gaza and the continued incarceration of over 7,000 Palestinians. The Special Rapporteur concluded that there was still hope for both Israel and Palestine, and that if the ceasefire was to hold, the Palestinian Authority would have to exercise control over militant groups responsible for violence against IDF and settlers within Palestine and for suicide bombings within Israel. It was equally important that Israel kept its part of the bargain. In that regard, it was not sufficient for Israel merely to cease its military activity against Palestinians, but it also had to address the causes of Palestinian militancy. In the longer term, the questions of the return of refugees, the status of Jerusalem and the occupation had to be confronted, but in the short term, Israel needed to address the release of prisoners, the abandonment of checkpoints, the dismantling of the wall and the evacuation of all settlements in Palestinian territory. If it failed to do so, it would forfeit an opportunity for peace that might not arise again.

In a 29 March communication [E/CN.4/2005/G/30], Israel transmitted its response to the aforementioned reports of the Special Rapporteur.

An August note of the Secretary-General [A/60/271] transmitted a further report of the Special Rapporteur, based on his visit to the Occupied Palestinian Territory (Gaza and the West Bank, 26 June–3 July). The report focused on Israel's decision to withdraw Jewish settlers and troops from Gaza, its continuing construction of the wall in Palestinian territory, the expansion of settlements and the de-Palestinization of Jerusalem.

The report noted that Israel's withdrawal from Gaza would result in the decolonization of Palestinian territory, but would not end the occupation owing to its continuing control of Gaza's borders. In addition, Israel had ignored ICJ's advisory opinion that the construction of the wall was contrary to international law and should be dismantled, and was planning to expand Jewish settlements in the West Bank and parts of Jerusalem. The report also drew attention to the impact of the wall on the welfare of Palestinians, cutting thousands of them off their agricultural lands and forcing them to gradually leave land and homes they had occupied for generations.

Highlighting what he considered to be principal violations of human rights in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, the Special Rapporteur pointed out that the wall and settlements seriously undermined the Palestinian people's fundamental right to self-determination, upon which all other rights depended. Other key rights that continued to be violated included the freedom of the person, the freedom of movement, women's rights, economic and social rights and the right to a clean environment. He said that only a resolution to the conflict, which would end the Israeli occupation of the Occupied Palestinian Territory, the construction of the wall, the expansion of settlements and the de-Palestinization of Jerusalem, would restore hope for respect for human rights.

On 16 December, the General Assembly took note of the Special Rapporteur's report (decision 60/533).

(For information on a visit to the Occupied Palestinian Territory by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General on human rights defenders, see p. 718.)

Report of High Commissioner. In response to Commission resolution 2005/7 (see p. 904), the High Commissioner submitted a 31 August report [A/60/324] containing information from three UN entities on the issue of Palestinian pregnant women giving birth at Israeli checkpoints.

PART THREE

Economic and social questions

Chapter I

Development policy and international economic cooperation

Global economic growth continued into 2005, but at a slower pace than the 4 per cent recorded in 2004, and was expected to fall to around 3 per cent. Much of that deceleration was attributable to the slowdown in developed economies, although some developing countries were also showing signs of losing momentum. The moderate slowdown in the global economy was an indication that the world's main engine of growth, the United States economy, might not be able to drive global growth without support from other parts of the world, at a time when the euro was stagnating and Japan's growth showed a moderate deceleration.

Development issues were high on the global agenda in 2005, as world leaders attending the High-level Plenary Meeting of the General Assembly, in September (see p. 47) adopted the "2005 World Summit Outcome", in which they acknowledged that development was a central goal in itself and that sustainable development in its economic, social and environmental aspects constituted a key element of the overarching framework of United Nations activities.

During the year, the United Nations convened the International Meeting to Review the Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States and adopted the Mauritius Declaration and Mauritius Strategy for the Further Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States.

The United Nations also convened the second phase of the World Summit on the Information Society, which adopted the Tunis Commitment and Tunis Agenda for the Information Society. The Summit also called upon the Assembly to declare 17 May as World Information Society Day, to help raise awareness of the importance of the Internet as a global facility, of the issues dealt with at the Summit, as well as ways to bridge the digital divide.

The Commission on Sustainable Development considered the implementation of the outcomes of the 2002 World Summit on Sustainable Development, particularly the Johannesburg Declaration and Plan of Implementation, which outlined actions and targets for stepping up implementation of Agenda 21, a programme of action for sustainable development worldwide, adopted at the 1992 United Nations Conference on Environment and Development. As its contribution to the Assembly's High-level Plenary Meeting (see above), the Commission adopted a resolution on accelerating implementation of development goals and targets related to water, sanitation and human settlements—the thematic cluster of its 2004-2005 multi-year programme. In other development-related activities, the United Nations celebrated 2005 as the International Year of Microcredit; and launched the United Nations Decade of Education for Sustainable Development (2005-2014), and the International Decade for Action, "Water for Life" (2005-2015). The international community continued its observance of the United Nations Decade for the Eradication of Poverty (1997-2006), aimed at eradicating absolute poverty and substantially reducing overall poverty worldwide, and achieving the MDG of halving by 2015 the proportion of the world's people living in extreme poverty. The Assembly, for its part, adopted a resolution on the Decade, focusing on: a global response and policies for poverty eradication; specific initiatives in the fight against poverty; Africa, least developed, landlocked and island developing countries; and the United Nations and the fight against poverty.

In other actions regarding countries in special situations, the Assembly decided to convene a high-level meeting on the midterm comprehensive global review of the implementation of the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the Decade 2001-2010 in 2006, and welcomed the decision by the Commission on Sustainable Development to devote one day of its 2006 session to review the implementation of the Mauritius Strategy.

In addition, the Assembly noted the results of the sixth annual Ministerial Meeting of Landlocked Developing Countries, and a report of the Secretary-General on poor mountain countries.

International economic relations

Development and international economic cooperation

A number of UN bodies addressed development and international economic cooperation issues during 2005, including the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council.

On 22 December, the Assembly took note of the report of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee on its discussion of macroeconomic policy questions [A/60/486] (decision 60/541).

Economic and Social Council consideration. On 18 April, the Economic and Social Council held its eighth special high-level meeting with the Bretton Woods institutions (the World Bank Group and the International Monetary Fund), the World Trade Organization (WTO) and the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) [A/60/3]. It had before it a 6 April note [E/2005/50] by the Secretary-General on coherence, coordination and cooperation in the context of the implementation of the Monterrey Consensus: achieving the internationally agreed development goals, including those contained in the Millennium Declaration. A summary of the meeting by the Council President [A/59/823-E/2005/69] highlighted the critical importance of building momentum towards the 2005 High-level Plenary Meeting of the General Assembly (see p. 47), which would provide a unique opportunity to agree on actions to achieve the MDGs [YUN 2000, p. 51] and implement the Monterrey Consensus adopted at the 2002 International Conference on Financing for Development [YUN 2002, p. 953].

At its high-level segment (29 June–1 July, and 27 July) [A/60/3], the Council considered the theme of achieving the internationally agreed development goals, including the MDGs, and implementing the outcomes of the major UN conferences and summits: progress made, challenges and opportunities. Activities included a high-level policy dialogue on important developments in the world economy and international economic cooperation.

During its coordination segment (5-7 July) [A/60/3], the Council again discussed how to achieve the internationally agreed development goals, including the MDGs.

Globalization and interdependence

In response to General Assembly resolution 59/240 [YUN 2004, p. 822], the Secretary-General submitted a 1 September report on building institutions for achieving the development goals and integrating them into the global economy [A/60/322]. The report examined the features of effective institutional change, the challenges to be faced and ways to manage integration, while achieving sustainable development. According to the report, the process of globalization and interdependence, created by market reforms and openness, had made integration into the world economy imperative, particularly for developing countries. However, in many cases, particularly in Africa and Latin America, efforts at integration had fallen short of expectations, mainly due to the lack of appropriate and effective institutions around which economic activity and development could thrive. To achieve poverty eradication and sustainable development, institutions were needed that could put developing countries on the path to economic growth and mediate the goals of social equity and environmental sustainability. Institutional development and adaptation were therefore an enduring challenge. Institutional reform that narrowly focused on the role of markets and securing private property rights without attention to holistic and optimal development outcome might be inadequate. Markets, though critical, needed to be seen within the context of broader societal goals of social equity and environmental sustainability. The principal challenge for developing countries was creating sound institutional foundations for the effective functioning of markets within the framework of their social and environmental objectives. A central objective should be to ensure that institutional reforms responded to the needs of the poor as a key priority in poverty-reduction strategies, as well as in overall strategies to promote more rapid, broad-based and sustainable development. Making globalization work for all required the reshaping of rules governing trade, finance and technology transfer; filling the institutional gap in areas such as investment and migration; and giving developing countries a more effective voice and the means to participate in making the global decisions that affected them.

The report recommended that developing countries put institutional development high among their development priorities, and that Governments design their policies, regulatory regimes and agencies to flexibly balance social, economic and environmental objectives. It also recommended the development of flexible regulatory frameworks among Governments, the private sector and consumers, because of their crucial role in delivering development within the new dynamic of interdependence; and expand productive employment through measures that would enable, rather than constrain, the informal economy sector. At the regional level, countries could consider establishing and/or strengthening regional and interregional cooperation arrangements to pool their resources on major development issues. Internationally, a global sustained capacity and institutional development effort was required, supported by the UN system, the Bretton Woods institutions and WTO and other relevant international organizations, to promote the dissemination of institutional innovations that could be adapted by developing countries. Global institutional challenges in trade, finance, investment and technology should be reviewed in order to promote pro-development global rules and norms that gave developing countries a better chance of integrating beneficially in the global economy. Expert-level meetings should be organized to analyse and review institutional questions raised in the Secretary-General's report so as to bring greater clarity to the complex challenges of building inclusive, accountable, dynamic pro-poor and pro-development institutions.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December [meeting 68], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/60/490/Add.1], adopted resolution 60/204 without vote [agenda item 54 (a)].

Role of the United Nations in promoting development in the context of globalization and interdependence

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 53/169 of 15 December 1998, 54/231 of 22 December 1999, 55/212 of 20 December 2000, 56/209 of 21 December 2001, 57/274 of 20 December 2002, 58/225 of 23 December 2003 and 59/240 of 22 December 2004 on the role of the United Nations in promoting development in the context of globalization and interdependence,

Recalling also the 2005 World Summit Outcome,

Recalling further its resolution 57/270 B of 23 June 2003 on the integrated and coordinated implementation of and follow-up to the outcomes of the major United Nations conferences and summits in the economic and social fields,

Reaffirming the resolve expressed in the United Nations Millennium Declaration to ensure that globalization becomes a positive force for all the world's people,

Recognizing that globalization and interdependence have opened new opportunities for the growth of the world economy and development, that globalization offers new perspectives for the integration of developing countries into the world economy and that it can improve the overall performance of the economies of developing countries by opening up market opportunities for their exports, by promoting the transfer of information, skills and technology and by increasing the financial resources available for investment in physical and intangible assets, acknowledging that globalization has also brought new challenges for growth and sustainable development and that developing countries have been facing special difficulties in responding to them, recognizing that some countries have successfully adapted to the changes and benefited from globalization but that many others, especially the least developed countries, have remained marginalized in the globalizing world economy, and recognizing also that, as stated in the Millennium Declaration, the benefits are very unevenly shared, while the costs are unevenly distributed,

Recognizing also that all human rights are universal, indivisible, interdependent and interrelated,

Recognizing further that an enabling economic environment should, inter alia, foster a dynamic and well-functioning business sector and include efforts to further promote good corporate and public-sector governance, to combat corruption in the public and private sectors and to promote the strengthening of and respect for the rule of law,

Noting that particular attention must be given, in the context of globalization, to the objective of protecting, promoting and enhancing the rights and welfare of women and girls, as stated in the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action,

Noting also that an overall commitment to multiculturalism helps to provide an environment for preventing and combating discrimination and promoting solidarity and tolerance in our societies,

Noting further the ongoing work on cultural diversity in the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization,

Reaffirming the commitment to eradicate poverty and hunger and promote sustained economic growth, sustainable development and global prosperity for all and to promote the development of the productive sectors in developing countries to enable them to participate more effectively in and benefit from the process of globalization,

Reaffirming also its strong support for fair globalization and its resolve to make the goals of full and productive employment and decent work for all, including women and young people, a central objective of relevant national and international policies as well as national development strategies, including poverty reduction strategies, as part of the efforts to achieve the Millennium Development Goals, and that these measures should also encompass the elimination of the worst forms of child labour, as defined in International Labour Organization Convention No. 182, and forced labour, and resolving to ensure full respect for the fundamental principles and rights at work,

Reaffirming further the commitment to broaden and strengthen the participation of developing countries and countries with economies in transition in international economic decision-making and norm-setting, and to that end stressing the importance of continuing efforts to reform the international financial architecture, and noting that enhancing the voice and participation of developing countries and countries with economies in transition in the Bretton Woods institutions is a continuing concern,

Reaffirming its commitment to governance, equity and transparency in the financial, monetary and trading systems and its commitment to open, equitable, rule-based, predictable and non-discriminatory multilateral trading and financial systems,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Reaffirms the need for the United Nations to play a fundamental role in the promotion of international cooperation for development and the coherence, coordination and implementation of development goals and actions agreed upon by the international community, and resolves to strengthen coordination within the United Nations system in close cooperation with all other multilateral financial, trade and development institutions in order to support sustained economic growth, poverty eradication and sustainable development;

3. Reaffirms also that good governance is essential for sustainable development; that sound economic policies, solid democratic institutions responsive to the needs of the people and improved infrastructure are the basis for sustained economic growth, poverty eradication and employment creation; and that freedom, peace and security, domestic stability, respect for human rights, including the right to development, and the rule of law, gender equality, market-oriented policies and an overall commitment to just and democratic societies are also essential and mutually reinforcing;

4. Reaffirms further that good governance at the international level is fundamental for achieving sustainable development, that, in order to ensure a dynamic and enabling international economic environment, it is important to promote global economic governance through addressing the international finance, trade, technology and investment patterns that have an impact on the development prospects of developing countries, and that to this effect the international community should take all necessary and appropriate measures, including ensuring support for structural and macroeconomic reform, a comprehensive solution to the external debt problem and increasing the market access of developing countries;

5. Reaffirms that each country has primary responsibility for its own development, that the role of national policies and development strategies cannot be overemphasized in the achievement of sustainable development and that national efforts should be complemented by supportive global programmes, measures and policies aimed at expanding the development opportunities of developing countries, while taking into account national conditions and ensuring respect for national ownership, strategies and sovereignty;

6. Recognizes, at the same time, that domestic economies are now interwoven with the global economic system and that, inter alia, the effective use of trade and investment opportunities can help countries to fight poverty;

7. Stresses that, in the increasingly globalizing interdependent world economy, a holistic approach to the interconnected national, international and systemic challenges of financing for development, namely, sustainable, gender-sensitive and people-centred development, is essential and that such an approach must open up opportunities for all and help to ensure that resources are created and used effectively and that solid and accountable institutions are established at all levels;

8. Stresses also that development strategies have to be formulated with a view to minimizing the negative social impact of globalization and maximizing its positive impact, while striving to ensure that all groups of the population, in particular the poorest, benefit from it, and that at the international level, efforts should focus on the means to achieve the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals;

9. Stresses further that, in the common pursuit of growth, poverty eradication and sustainable development, a critical challenge is to ensure the necessary internal conditions for mobilizing domestic savings, both public and private, sustaining adequate levels of productive investment and increasing human capacity, while a crucial task is to enhance the efficacy, coherence and consistency of macroeconomic policies and an enabling domestic environment is vital for mobilizing domestic resources, increasing productivity, reducing capital flight, encouraging the private sector and attracting and making effective use of international investment and assistance, and in this regard stresses also that efforts to create such an environment should be supported by the international community;

10. Stresses the special importance of creating an enabling international economic environment through strong cooperative efforts by all countries and institutions to promote equitable economic development in a world economy that benefits all people;

11. Invites developed countries, in particular major industrialized economies, to take into account the effect of their macroeconomic policies on international growth and development;

12. Underlines the fact that the increasing interdependence of national economies in a globalizing world and the emergence of rule-based regimes for international economic relations have meant that the space for national economic policy, i.e., the scope for domestic policies, especially in the areas of trade, investment and industrial development, is now often framed by international disciplines, commitments and global market considerations, that it is for each Government to evaluate the trade-off between the benefits of accepting international rules and commitments and the constraints posed by the loss of policy space and that it is particularly important for developing countries, bearing in mind development goals and objectives, that all countries take into account the need for appropriate balance between national policy space and international disciplines and commitments;

13. Underlines also the fact that in addressing the linkages between globalization and sustainable development, particular focus should be placed on identifying and implementing mutually reinforcing policies and practices that promote sustained economic growth, social development and environmental protection and that this requires efforts at both the national and international levels;

14. Underlines further the fact that the issue of enhancing the voice of developing countries and countries with economies in transition in the Bretton Woods institutions is of vital importance, stresses the importance of advancing ongoing work in this regard, taking into account progress in the context of the International Monetary Fund quota review, and invites the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund to continue to provide information on this issue, using existing cooperation forums, including those involving Member States;

15. Reaffirms the commitments made in the Doha Ministerial Declaration and the decision of the General Council of the World Trade Organization of 1 August 2004 to fulfil the development dimensions of the Doha Development Agenda, which places the needs and interests of developing and least developed countries at the heart of the Doha work programme, and calls for the successful and timely completion of the Doha round of trade negotiations with the fullest realization of the development dimensions of the Doha work programme, and looks to the Sixth Ministerial Conference of the World Trade Organization, to be held in Hong Kong, China, from 13 to 18 December 2005, to constitute an important milestone to this end;

16. Stresses the importance of building a people-centred and inclusive information society so as to enhance digital opportunities for all people in order to help bridge the digital divide, putting the potential of information and communication technologies at the service of development and addressing the new challenges of the information society, and in this regard calls for the implementation of the outcomes of the World Summit on the Information Society;

17. Reaffirms that development is a central goal in itself and that sustainable development in its economic, social and environmental aspects constitutes a key element of the overarching framework of United Nations activities, stresses the importance of continuing efforts in this regard, and invites the World Bank, the International Monetary Fund, the regional development banks and other relevant institutions to further integrate development dimensions into their strategies and policies, consistent with their respective mandates;

18. Reaffirms also that gender equality is of fundamental importance for achieving sustained economic growth, poverty eradication and sustainable development, in accordance with the relevant General Assembly resolutions and United Nations conferences, and that investing in the development of women and girls has a multiplier effect, in particular on productivity, efficiency and sustained economic growth, in all sectors of economy, especially in key areas such as agriculture, industry and services;

19. Invites relevant organizations of the United Nations system and other relevant multilateral bodies to provide information to the Secretary-General on their activities to promote an inclusive and equitable globalization;

20. Stresses the importance of migration as a phenomenon accompanying increased globalization, including its impact on economies, and underlines further the need for greater coordination and cooperation among countries as well as relevant regional and international organizations;

21. Recognizes that science and technology, including information and communication technologies, are vital for the achievement of development goals and that international support can help developing countries to benefit from technological advancements and enhance their productive capacity, and in this regard reaffirms the commitment to promoting and facilitating, as appropriate, access to and the development, transfer and diffusion of technologies, including environmentally sound technologies and corresponding know-how, to developing countries;

22. Recognizes also the special needs of the least developed countries, the small island developing States, and the landlocked developing countries, within the new global framework for transit transport cooperation for landlocked and transit developing countries, as contained in the Almaty Programme of Action, and reaffirms continued support and assistance for their endeavours, particularly in their efforts to achieve the internationally agreed development goals, including those contained in the Millennium Declaration, and the implementation of the Brussels Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the Decade 2001-2010, the Mauritius Strategy for the Further Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States, and the Almaty Programme of Action;

23. Emphasizes the importance of recognizing and addressing the specific concerns of countries with economies in transition so as to help them to benefit from globalization, with a view to their full integration into the world economy;

24. Recognizes that the contribution of non-governmental organizations, civil society, the private sector and other stakeholders in national development efforts, as well as in the promotion of the global partnership for development, should be enhanced;

25. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its sixty-first session a report on the implementation of the present resolution under the item entitled "Globalization and interdependence".

Also on 22 December, the Assembly, by decision 60/543, took note of the report of the Second Committee on its consideration of the agenda item on globalization and interdependence [A/60/490].

Development through partnership

In response to General Assembly resolution 58/129 [YUN 2003, p. 836], the Secretary-General submitted an August report on enhanced cooperation between the United Nations and all relevant partners, particularly the private sector [A/60/214], which built upon his 2001 [YUN 2001, p. 743] and 2003 [YUN 2003, p. 835] reports on the subject. The report stated that much progress had been made on public-private partnerships in the last decade. The United Nations was successfully reaching out to and engaging business and civil society in its intergovernmental processes, and offering the private sector opportunities to bring its valuable perspective to the table. Partnerships had allowed the United Nations to become more creative and sophisticated in directing the skills and resources of business and civil society towards its own goals. The challenge was to learn from those experiences and move towards a more systematic approach to partnerships that included a greater focus on their impact and sustainability.

Despite the progress made by UN organizations in creating partnership units, only in a few cases was such work integrated into mainstream operations. Staff often lacked the incentives to become involved in partnership work and there was confusion in the UN system with regard to the legal issues governing partnership activities. Greater consistency and transparency were needed in selecting suitable business partners, and additional resources provided for training on the subject of partnerships to enable staff to work more effectively with businesses. Another impediment to more effective partnerships was a lack of understanding of corporate culture within the United Nations. To address that issue and enhance staff skills, some organizations were featuring staff exchange programmes. The Global Compact, launched in 2000 [YUN 2000, p. 989], which continued to be a magnet for businesses wanting to support UN goals, and the United Nations Fund for International Partnerships (UNFIP), the operational arm in the partnership between the UN system and the United Nations Foundation (UNF), the public charity administering the gift by Robert E. Turner to the United Nations of stock valued at some $1 billion to support UN causes, played a critical role in facilitating exchanges, particularly by reaching out to businesses and advocating business engagement within the United Nations.

The Secretary-General observed that one vital component of the ongoing UN transformative process was the progressive opening of the Organization to non-State actors. A variety of engagement mechanisms had been developed, but the challenge was finding ways to fully utilize the opportunities that partnerships afforded. Specific actions were required to scale up successful experiments and allow cooperative engagements with non-State actors to be a stronger force for institutional change.

The report recommended steps the UN system should take to build the environment for its private sector partnerships. Those included increasing institutional capacity in country offices; promoting the staff training at all levels; streamlining UN guidelines for partnerships; improving the coherence and practicality of the partner selection processes; building the foundation for smart selectivity through systematic impact assessment; and fostering transparency through improved learning and best practice exchanges.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December [meeting 68], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/60/495 & Corr.1], adopted resolution 60/215 without vote [agenda item 59].

Towards global partnerships

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 55/215 of 21 December 2000, 56/76 of 11 December 2001 and 58/129 of 19 December 2003,

Reaffirming the vital role of the United Nations, including the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council, in the promotion of partnerships in the context of globalization,

Underlining the intergovernmental nature of the United Nations, and recalling the central role and responsibility of Governments in national and international policymaking,

Reaffirming its resolve to create an environment, at the national and global levels alike, that is conducive to sustainable development and the elimination of poverty,

Recalling the objectives formulated in the United Nations Millennium Declaration, notably the Millennium Development Goals, and the reaffirmation they have received in the 2005 World Summit Outcome, particularly in regard to developing partnerships through the provision of greater opportunities to the private sector, non-governmental organizations and civil society in general so as to enable them to contribute to the realization of the goals and programmes of the Organization, in particular in the pursuit of development and the eradication of poverty,

Underlining the fact that cooperation between the United Nations and all relevant partners, including the private sector, shall serve the purposes and principles embodied in the Charter of the United Nations and can make concrete contributions to the realization of the Millennium Development Goals and the other goals contained in the Millennium Declaration, as well as in the outcomes of major United Nations conferences and summits and their reviews, in particular in the area of development and the eradication of poverty, and shall be undertaken in a manner that maintains the integrity, impartiality and independence of the Organization,

Underlining also the importance of the contribution of the private sector, non-governmental organizations and civil society in general to the implementation of the outcomes of United Nations conferences in the economic, social and related fields,

Welcoming, in this regard, the participation of civil society and private-sector entities in the multi-stakeholder consultations on development finance issues, whose findings were presented at the High-level Dialogue on Financing for Development held in New York on 27 and 28 June 2005,

Emphasizing that all relevant partners, including the private sector, can contribute in several ways to addressing the obstacles confronted by developing countries in mobilizing the resources needed to finance their sustainable development and to the realization of the development goals of the United Nations through, inter alia, financial resources, access to technology, management expertise and support for programmes, including through the reduced pricing of drugs, where appropriate, for the prevention, care and treatment of HIV/AIDS and other diseases,

Welcoming the efforts and encouraging further efforts by all relevant partners, including the private sector, to engage as reliable and consistent partners in the development process and to take into account not only the economic and financial, but also the developmental, social, human rights, gender and environmental implications of their undertakings and, in general, towards accepting and implementing the principle of good corporate citizenship, that is, bringing social values and responsibilities to bear on a conduct and policy premised on profit incentives, in conformity with national laws and regulations,

Noting that, in line with Economic and Social Council resolution 2003/61 of 25 July 2003, the secretariat of the Commission on Sustainable Development is continuing its efforts to promote partnerships for sustainable development, inter alia, through the establishment of an interactive online database, the preparation of a report on partnerships for sustainable development to the Commission at its twelfth session, in 2004, the holding of a partnership fair at its twelfth and thirteenth sessions, in 2004 and 2005, respectively, and prospectively at its fourteenth session, in 2006, in line with the determination by the Council that partnerships for sustainable development, as voluntary multi-stakeholder initiatives, contribute to the implementation of Agenda 21 and the Plan of Implementation of the World Summit on Sustainable Development ("Johannesburg Plan of Implementation"),

Welcoming the implementation and expansion of the database of the Commission on Sustainable Development and its increasing use as a platform to provide access to information on partnerships and facilitate the exchange of experiences and best practices,

Taking note of the progress achieved in the work of the United Nations on partnerships, notably in the framework of various United Nations organizations, agencies, funds, programmes, task forces, commissions and initiatives, such as the Global Compact, launched by the Secretary-General, the Information and Communication Technologies Task Force and the United Nations Fund for International Partnerships, and welcoming the establishment of a multitude of partnerships at the field level, entered into by various United Nations agencies, non-public partners and Member States, such as the United Nations Public-Private Alliance for Rural Development,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on enhanced cooperation between the United Nations and all relevant partners, in particular the private sector;

2. Stresses that partnerships are voluntary and collaborative relationships between various parties, both public and non-public, in which all participants agree to work together to achieve a common purpose or undertake a specific task and, as mutually agreed, to share risks and responsibilities, resources and benefits;

3. Also stresses the importance of the contribution of voluntary partnerships to the achievement of the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals, while reiterating that they are a complement to, but not intended to substitute for, the commitments made by Governments with a view to achieving these goals;

4. Further stresses that partnerships should be consistent with national laws and national development strategies and plans, as well as the priorities of countries where their implementation takes place, bearing in mind the relevant guidance provided by Governments;

5. Recalls that the 2005 World Summit welcomed the positive contributions of the private sector and civil society, including non-governmental organizations, in the promotion and implementation of development and human rights programmes and also welcomed the dialogue between those organizations and Member States, as reflected in the first informal interactive hearings of the General Assembly with representatives of non-governmental organizations, civil society and the private sector;

6. Also recalls that the 2005 World Summit resolved to enhance the contribution of non-governmental organizations, civil society, the private sector and other stakeholders in national development efforts, as well as in the promotion of the global partnership for development, and encouraged public-private partnerships in the following areas: the generation of new investments and employment, financing for development, health, agriculture, conservation, sustainable use of natural resources and environmental management, energy, forestry and the impact of climate change;

7. Encourages the United Nations system to continue to develop, for those partnerships in which it participates, a common and systemic approach which places greater emphasis on impact, transparency, accountability and sustainability, without imposing undue rigidity in partnership agreements, and with due consideration being given to the following partnership principles: common purpose, transparency, bestowing no unfair advantages upon any partner of the United Nations, mutual benefit and mutual respect, accountability, respect for the modalities of the United Nations, striving for balanced representation of relevant partners from developed and developing countries and countries with economies in transition, sectoral and geographic balance, and not compromising the independence and neutrality of the United Nations system in general and the agencies in particular;

8. Also encourages responsible business practices, such as those promoted by the Global Compact;

9. Further encourages the Global Compact Office to promote the sharing of best practices and positive action through learning, dialogue and partnerships;

10. Encourages the relevant United Nations organizations and agencies, as well as the Global Compact Office, to share relevant lessons learned and positive experiences from partnerships, including with the business community, as a contribution to the development of more effective United Nations partnerships;

11. Takes note with appreciation of the appointment by the Secretary-General of a Special Adviser on the Global Compact;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to take further appropriate action to enhance partnership management through the promotion of: adequate training at all concerned levels; institutional capacity in country offices; strategic focus and local ownership; the sharing of best practices; the improvement of partner selection processes; and the streamlining of United Nations guidelines for partnerships between the United Nations and all relevant partners, including the private sector, and further requests the Secretary-General to report on these actions in the context of his report under the item entitled "Towards global partnerships";

13. Also requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with Member States, to promote, within existing resources, impact-assessment mechanisms, taking into account best tools available, in order to enable effective management, ensure accountability and facilitate effective learning from both successes and failures;

14. Welcomes innovative approaches to use partnerships as a means to better implement goals and programmes, in particular in the pursuit of development and the eradication of poverty, and encourages relevant United Nations bodies and agencies and invites the Bretton Woods institutions and the World Trade Organization to further explore such possibilities, bearing in mind their different mandates, modes of operation and objectives, as well as the particular roles of the non-public partners involved;

15. Recommends, in this context, that partnerships should also foster the elimination of all forms of discrimination, including on gender grounds, in respect of employment and occupation;

16. Reiterates its call upon:

(a) All bodies within the United Nations system that engage in partnerships to ensure the integrity and independence of the Organization and to include information on partnerships in their regular reporting, as appropriate, on their websites and through other means;

(b) Partners to provide to and exchange relevant information with Governments, other stakeholders and the relevant United Nations agencies and bodies and other international organizations with which they engage, in an appropriate way, including through reports, with particular attention to the importance of sharing among partnerships information on their practical experience;

17. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its sixty-second session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Coercive economic measures

In response to General Assembly resolution 58/198 [YUN 2003, p. 838], the Secretary-General submitted an August report [A/60/226] summarizing replies received from 14 Governments and two UN bodies, in response to his request for information on unilateral economic measures as a means of political and economic coercion against developing countries.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December [meeting 68], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/60/486/Add.1], adopted resolution 60/185 by recorded vote (120-1-50) [agenda item 50 (a)].

Unilateral economic measures as a means of political and economic coercion against developing countries

The General Assembly,

Recalling the relevant principles set forth in the Charter of the United Nations,

Reaffirming the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Cooperation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, which states, inter alia, that no State may use or encourage the use of unilateral economic, political or any other type of measures to coerce another State in order to obtain from it the subordination of the exercise of its sovereign rights,

Bearing in mind the general principles governing the international trading system and trade policies for development contained in relevant resolutions, rules and provisions of the United Nations and the World Trade Organization,

Recalling its resolutions 44/215 of 22 December 1989, 46/210 of 20 December 1991, 48/168 of 21 December 1993, 50/96 of 20 December 1995, 52/181 of 18 December 1997, 54/200 of 22 December 1999, 56/179 of 21 December 2001 and 58/198 of 23 December 2003,

Gravely concerned that the use of unilateral coercive economic measures adversely affects the economy and development efforts of developing countries in particular and has a general negative impact on international economic cooperation and on worldwide efforts to move towards a non-discriminatory and open multilateral trading system,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Urges the international community to adopt urgent and effective measures to eliminate the use of unilateral coercive economic measures against developing countries that are not authorized by relevant organs of the United Nations or are inconsistent with the principles of international law as set forth in the Charter of the United Nations and that contravene the basic principles of the multilateral trading system;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to monitor the imposition of measures of this nature and to study the impact of such measures on the affected countries, including the impact on trade and development;

4. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its sixty-second session a report on the implementation of the present resolution.

RECORDED VOTE ON RESOLUTION 60/185:

The Assembly, on 8 November, adopted resolution 60/12 on the necessity of ending the economic, commercial and financial embargo imposed by the United States against Cuba (see p. 394).

Sustainable development

Implementation of Agenda 21, the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21 and the Johannesburg Plan of Implementation

In 2005, various UN bodies, among them the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council and the Commission on Sustainable Development, considered the implementation of the outcomes of the 2002 World Summit on Sustainable Development [YUN 2002, p. 821], particularly the Johannesburg Declaration and Plan of Implementation, which outlined actions and targets for stepping up implementation of Agenda 21—a programme of action for sustainable development worldwide, adopted at the 1992 United Nations Conference on Environment and Development [YUN 1992, p. 672]—and of the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21, adopted by the Assembly at its nineteenth special session in 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 792].

Commission on Sustainable Development consideration. As the main body responsible for coordinating and monitoring implementation of the Summit outcomes, the Commission on Sustainable Development, at its thirteenth session (New York, 11-22 April) [E/2005/29], discussed, in line with the multi-year programme adopted by the Economic and Social Council in resolution 2003/61 [YUN 2003, p. 842], the thematic cluster for the 2004-2005 implementation cycle—water, sanitation and human settlements.

Intersessional events. The Commission heard presentations on the following intersessional events that were held in preparation for its thirteenth session: Stockholm Water Week (Stockholm, Sweden, 16-20 August 2004); World Urban Forum (Barcelona, Spain, 13-17 September 2004); Global Water, Sanitation and Hygiene Forum (Dakar, Senegal, 29 November–3 December 2004); International Conference on Integrated Water Resources Management (Tokyo, Japan, 6-9 December 2004); World Conference on Disaster Reduction (Kobe, Japan, 18-22 January, 2005); International Meeting to Review the Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States (Port Louis, Mauritius, 10-14 January); African Ministerial Conference on Housing and Urban Development (Durban, South Africa, 31 January–4 February); and the Second International Forum on Partnerships for Sustainable Development (Marrakesh, Morocco, 21-23 March).

Thematic issues. For its consideration of the thematic issues for 2004-2005—water, sanitation and human settlements, the Commission had before it reports of the Secretary-General on policy options and possible actions to expedite implementation of the goals, targets and commitments of Agenda 21, the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21 and the Johannesburg Plan of Implementation covering freshwater management [E/CN.17/2005/2] (see p. 1129), sanitation [E/CN.17/2005/3] and human settlements [E/CN.17/2005/4] (see p. 1165). It also considered a Secretariat note [E/CN.17/2005/5] containing the views of major groups (women, children and youth, indigenous peoples, NGOs, local authorities, workers and trade unions, business and industry, scientific and technological community, and farmers) on their priorities for action in the three thematic areas. Also before the Commission was the report of the Intergovernmental Preparatory Meeting for the thirteenth session [E/CN.17/2005/6], containing the Chairman's summary of interactive discussions on the three themes.

The Commission adopted some 30 policy options and 100 practical measures and actions to expedite implementation of commitments relating to water, sanitation and human settlements [A/60/261].

Implementation activities

In response to General Assembly resolution 59/227 [YUN 2004, p. 829], the Secretary-General submitted on 16 August the report on the implementation of Agenda 21, the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21 and the outcome of the World Summit on Sustainable Development [A/60/261 & Corr.1]. It reviewed activities at the intergovernmental, inter-agency, regional and country levels during 2005 to ensure a coordinated follow-up to the World Summit, and the progress made both in advancing partnerships for sustainable development and in integrating further major groups into the work of the Commission on Sustainable Development. The report showed that there was a broad range of implementation going on at all levels. At the intergovernmental level, the Commission, at its policy session, focused on water, sanitation and human settlements, and adopted policy options and practical measures to accelerate implementation in those three thematic areas (see above). The Economic and Social Council, at its substantive session, devoted its high-level segment to achieving the internationally agreed development goals, including the MDGs; its coordination segment focused on implementing those development goals; and its general segment reviewed, among other topics, the work of the functional commissions, including that of the Commission on Sustainable Development. At the inter-agency level, the United Nations System Chief Executive Board for Coordination (CEB) continued to coordinate system-wide activities in sustainable development and, through its High Level Committee on Programmes (HLCP), provided overall guidance to UN-Water, UN-Energy, UN-Oceans and other inter-agency cooperation initiatives in sustainable development.

Regionally, UN regional commissions, through their priority programme activities, as well as other offices, regional development banks and organizations had contributed to implementing sustainable development goals and targets. At the national level, Member States had made available to the Commission significant information relating to sustainable development. Major groups played multiple roles at various levels, promoting education, raising awareness of socio-economic and environmental issues and monitoring progress in implementing sustainable development. Some 300 voluntary, multi-stakeholder partnerships working towards sustainable development goals had registered with the Commission's secretariat.

The Secretary-General urged all concerned to stay on track concerning implementation, while aiming for accelerated progress. He urged Governments to continue implementing the 2005 World Summit Outcome (see p. 48) and supporting the Commission on Sustainable Development; requested HLCP to continue monitoring the operational effectiveness of UN-Water, UN-Energy, UN-Oceans and other inter-agency collaborative mechanisms; and called upon donor Governments and international financial institutions to target funding support to developing countries in key policy options and practical measures as identified in the policy decision of the Commission's thirteenth session (see p. 917).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December [meeting 68], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/60/488/Add.1], adopted resolution 60/193 without vote [agenda item 52 (a)].

Implementation of Agenda 21, the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21 and the outcomes of the World Summit on Sustainable Development

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 55/199 of 20 December 2000, 56/226 of 24 December 2001, 57/253 of 20 December 2002 and 57/270 A and B of 20 December 2002 and 23 June 2003, respectively, and its resolutions 58/218 of 23 December 2003 and 59/227 of 22 December 2004,

Recalling also the Rio Declaration on Environment and Development, Agenda 21, the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21, the Johannesburg Declaration on Sustainable Development and the Plan of Implementation of the World Summit on Sustainable Development ("Johannesburg Plan of Implementation"), as well as the Monterrey Consensus of the International Conference on Financing for Development,

Reaffirming the commitment to implement Agenda 21, the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21, the Johannesburg Plan of Implementation, including the time-bound goals and targets, and the other internationally agreed development goals, including those contained in the United Nations Millennium Declaration, and reaffirmed in the 2005 World Summit Outcome,

Recalling the 2005 World Summit Outcome,

Reaffirming the decisions taken at the eleventh session of the Commission on Sustainable Development,

Reaffirming also the continuing need to ensure a balance among economic development, social development and environmental protection as interdependent and mutually reinforcing pillars of sustainable development,

Reiterating that the Commission is the high-level body responsible for sustainable development within the United Nations system and serves as a forum for consideration of issues related to integration of the three dimensions of sustainable development,

Reaffirming that eradicating poverty, changing unsustainable patterns of production and consumption and protecting and managing the natural resource base of economic and social development are overarching objectives of and essential requirements for sustainable development,

Recognizing that good governance within each country and at the international level is essential for sustainable development,

Recognizing also that eradicating poverty is the greatest global challenge facing the world today and an indispensable requirement for sustainable development, particularly for developing countries, and that although each country has the primary responsibility for its own sustainable development and poverty eradication and the role of national policies and development strategies cannot be overemphasized, concerted and concrete measures are required at all levels to enable developing countries to achieve their sustainable development goals as related to the internationally agreed poverty-related targets and goals, including those contained in Agenda 21, the relevant outcomes of other United Nations conferences and the Millennium Declaration,

Recalling the decision taken by the Commission at its thirteenth session to devote one day of its review sessions to the review of the implementation of the Mauritius Strategy for the Further Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States, focusing on that year's thematic cluster, as well as on any new developments regarding the sustainable development efforts of small island developing States using existing modalities,

Recalling also the decision of the Commission to request its secretariat to update the policy options and practical measures contained in the Chairman's summary of the interactive discussions held at the Intergovernmental Preparatory Meeting, on a regular basis, so as to make it a living document, and to develop web-based tools to disseminate information on implementation and best practices,

Looking forward to the upcoming cycles of the work programme of the Commission as adopted at its eleventh session and their contributions to the further implementation of Agenda 21, the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21 and the outcomes of the World Summit on Sustainable Development,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the activities undertaken in the implementation of Agenda 21, the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21 and the outcomes of the World Summit on Sustainable Development;

2. Notes that the Commission on Sustainable Development at its thirteenth session adopted policy decisions on options and practical measures aimed at accelerating progress in implementation in the areas of water, sanitation and human settlements;

3. Reiterates that sustainable development is a key element of the overarching framework for United Nations activities, in particular for achieving the internationally agreed development goals, including those contained in the United Nations Millennium Declaration and in the Plan of Implementation of the World Summit on Sustainable Development ("Johannesburg Plan of Implementation");

4. Calls upon Governments, all relevant international and regional organizations, the Economic and Social Council, the United Nations funds and programmes, the regional commissions and the specialized agencies, the international financial institutions, the Global Environment Facility and other intergovernmental organizations, in accordance with their respective mandates, as well as major groups, to take action to ensure the effective implementation of and follow-up to the commitments, programmes and time-bound targets adopted at the World Summit on Sustainable Development, and encourages them to report on concrete progress in that regard;

5. Calls for the effective implementation of the commitments, programmes and time-bound targets adopted at the World Summit on Sustainable Development and for the fulfilment of the provisions relating to the means of implementation, as contained in the Johannesburg Plan of Implementation;

6. Encourages Governments to participate at the appropriate level with representatives, including ministers, from the relevant departments and organizations working in the areas of energy for sustainable development, industrial development, air pollution/atmosphere and climate change, as well as finance, in the fourteenth session of the Commission;

7. Recalls the decision of the Commission at its eleventh session to invite the regional commissions, in collaboration with the secretariat of the Commission, to consider organizing regional implementation meetings in order to contribute to the work of the Commission, and, in this regard, welcomes the activities undertaken by the regional commissions and the secretariat of the Commission to organize the regional implementation meetings in preparation for the fourteenth session of the Commission, and looks forward to their contributions, based on the discussions in the intergovernmental regional implementation meetings, to the preparation of the fourteenth session;

8. Also recalls the decision of the Commission at its eleventh session that activities during Commission meetings should provide for the balanced involvement of participants from all regions, as well as for gender balance;

9. Invites donor countries to consider supporting the participation of experts from the developing countries in the areas of energy for sustainable development, industrial development, air pollution/atmosphere and climate change in the fourteenth session of the Commission;

10. Reaffirms the objective of strengthening the implementation of Agenda 21, including through the mobilization of financial and technological resources, as well as capacity-building programmes, particularly for developing countries;

11. Also reaffirms the objective of enhancing the participation and effective involvement of civil society and other relevant stakeholders in the implementation of Agenda 21, as well as to promote transparency and broad public participation;

12. Further reaffirms the need to promote corporate responsibility and accountability as envisaged by the Johannesburg Plan of Implementation;

13. Reaffirms the need to promote the development of microenterprises and small- and medium-sized enterprises, including by means of training, education and skill enhancement, with a special focus on agro-industry as a provider of livelihoods for rural communities;

14. Requests the secretariat of the Commission to make arrangements to facilitate the balanced representation of major groups from developed and developing countries in the sessions of the Commission;

15. Also requests the secretariat of the Commission to coordinate the participation of the relevant major groups in the discussions at the fourteenth session of the Commission;

16. Requests the Secretary-General, in reporting to the Commission at its fourteenth session on the state of the implementation of Agenda 21, the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21 and the Johannesburg Plan of Implementation, on the basis of appropriate inputs from all levels, to submit thematic reports on the thematic cluster of issues for the fourteenth session of the Commission, in accordance with the decisions taken by the Commission at its eleventh session;

17. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to the Commission, at its review session, on progress and obstacles in respect of sustainable development in small island developing States, including recommendations on how to enhance the implementation of the Mauritius Strategy for the Further Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States, focusing on that year's thematic cluster;

18. Encourages Governments and organizations at all levels, as well as major groups, including the scientific community and educators, to undertake results-oriented initiatives and activities to support the work of the Commission and to promote and facilitate the implementation of Agenda 21, the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21 and the Johannesburg Plan of Implementation, including through voluntary multi-stakeholder partnership initiatives;

19. Notes the convening of the Second International Expert Meeting on the Ten-year Framework of Programmes for Sustainable Consumption and Production in San José, Costa Rica, from 5 to 8 September 2005;

20. Also notes the work in inter-agency cooperation and coordination undertaken in the follow-up to the World Summit on Sustainable Development, and requests the Secretary-General to report, at its sixty-first session, on action taken by the United Nations system in the thematic areas being addressed by the Commission in its current two-year cycle, with a view to facilitating an in-depth consideration of system-wide inter-agency cooperation and coordination in the relevant thematic areas, in accordance with the mandates agreed upon in the Johannesburg Plan of Implementation;

21. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its sixty-first session the item entitled "Implementation of Agenda 21, the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21 and the outcomes of the World Summit on Sustainable Development", and requests the Secretary-General, at that session, to submit a report on the implementation of the present resolution.

Commission on Sustainable Development

The Commission on Sustainable Development held its thirteenth session in New York on 30 April 2004 and from 11 to 22 April 2005 [E/2005/29]. On 22 April, the Commission held the first meeting of its fourteenth session, at which it elected the members of its Bureau [E/2005/29]. The Commission's high-level segment interactive sessions focused on turning political commitments into action, with discussions on the MDGs and the impact of natural disasters on water, sanitation and human settlements and how to prevent and respond thereto. The session included an interactive dialogue with ministers and major groups; a policy session on regional perspectives, policy options and other measures in the three thematic areas; and a ministerial panel on the economic benefits of sound policies for water, sanitation and human settlements at all levels. A partnerships fair provided a venue for networking and exchanging lessons learned and best practices; and a learning centre offered 15 courses on goals and targets related to water, sanitation and human settlements.

The Commission recommended to the Economic and Social Council for adoption two draft resolutions: one on support to the Bureau in preparing for future Commission sessions (see below) and the other on support for the travel of representatives from developing countries and countries with economies in transition to future Commission sessions. It also recommended to the Council for adoption decisions on the term of the Bureau; dates of meetings of the Commission during 2006/2007; and the Commission's report at its thirteenth session and provisional agenda for the fourteenth. The Commission also adopted a decision [dec. 13/1] on policy options and practical measures to expedite implementation in water, sanitation and human settlements, which it submitted to the Council for consideration as a significant contribution to the High-level Plenary Meeting of the General Assembly (see p. 47).

The Commission also had before it a 1 April letter from Morocco transmitting the executive summary of the Second International Forum on Partnerships for Sustainable Development (Marrakesh, Morocco, 21-23 March) [E/CN.17/2005/7].

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 20 July [meeting 32], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission [E/2005/29], adopted resolution 2005/5 without vote [agenda item 13 (a)].

Support to the Bureau in preparing for future sessions of the Commission on Sustainable Development

The Economic and Social Council,

Taking note of the decisions of the Commission on Sustainable Development adopted at its sixth, seventh and eighth sessions on matters related to the intersessional work of the Commission,

Recalling its resolution 2003/61 of 25 July 2003 concerning the mandate and new organization and programme of work for the Commission,

1. Decides that, in order for members of the Bureau to carry out their functions effectively, consideration should be given to providing financial support consisting of travel and daily subsistence to members of the Bureau from developing countries and countries with economies in transition through designated extrabudgetary contributions to the Trust Fund to Support the Work of the Commission on Sustainable Development;

2. Also decides that financial support to members of the Bureau from developing countries and countries with economies in transition should cover participation in one of the meetings of the Bureau to be held outside New York and the respective regional implementation meeting and other relevant meetings in the region;

3. Invites donor Governments, institutions and other organizations to contribute to the Trust Fund.

At the same meeting, the Council, on the recommendation of the Commission [E/2005/29], adopted resolution 2005/6 without vote [agenda item 13 (a)].

Support for the travel of representatives of developing countries and countries with economies in transition to future sessions of the Commission on Sustainable Development

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 59/227 of 22 December 2004, in which the Assembly encouraged, inter alia, broad-based participation of government representatives and experts in the meetings of the Commission on Sustainable Development,

Emphasizing that such broad participation of representatives and experts from developing countries is key to a balanced review of thematic clusters of issues of the implementation cycles,

1. Invites donor Governments, institutions and other organizations to provide contributions to the Trust Fund to Support the Work of the Commission on Sustainable Development;

2. Recommends that the General Assembly decide that support to participants from developing countries, with priority given to the least developed countries, as well as from countries with economies in transition, may be provided from the Trust Fund for travel from funds designated for that purpose.

On 20 July, the Council decided that the current term of the Bureau of the Commission should continue on the basis of a one-year term for its next cycle, comprising the fourteenth and fifteenth sessions of the Commission (decision 2005/227), and the Commission's fourteenth (review) session should take place from 1 to 12 May 2006, the intergovernmental preparatory meeting for the fifteenth session from 26 February to 2 March 2007, and the Commission's fifteenth (policy) session from 30 April to 11 May 2007 (decision 2005/228); took note of the Commission's report on its thirteenth session; and approved the provisional agenda for the fourteenth (2006) session (decision 2005/229).

Tourism

In response to General Assembly resolution 56/212 [YUN 2001, p. 752] and decision 58/573 [YUN 2004, p. 833], the Secretary-General, in July [A/60/167], transmitted to the Assembly a report prepared by the World Tourism Organization (UNWTO) [YUN 2004, p. 1513] on implementation of the 1999 Global Code of Ethics for Tourism—a set of basic principles to guide tourism development and serve as a frame of reference for stakeholders in the tourism sector, adopted by the UNWTO General Assembly in 1999. The Code of Ethics was not legally binding, the report pointed out, but its application could be advanced by incorporating its contents and provisions into appropriate legislation, regulations and professional codes. Part I of the Protocol of Implementation, adopted in 2001, created the World Committee on Tourism Ethics, tasked with interpreting, applying and evaluating the Global Code of Ethics for Tourism. Part II, the conciliation mechanism for the settlement of disputes, was to be submitted for final adoption to the UNWTO General Assembly's sixteenth session in Dakar, Senegal, in 2005.

The World Committee conducted a survey between 2004 and 2005 of UNWTO members to assess the degree of implementation of the Code. It found that nearly three quarters of the 92 respondents had already incorporated its principles into their laws, regulations or tourism development plans. The Code had been translated into 33 countries. It was generally disseminated among various tourism stakeholders, and was applied in the promotion of responsible travel advisories. The World Committee planned to establish a short- and medium-term strategy to improve the promotion of the Code worldwide and strengthen its implementation. It endorsed the idea of regional tourism awards as a way of encouraging the implementation of the Code.

In the report's conclusions, the UNWTO Secretary-General observed that, five years after its adoption, the Global Code of Ethics had proved to be a valuable tool in developing environmentally and socially sound and sustainable tourism. UNWTO would report to the United Nations within five years on the progress achieved in implementing the Code by both the public and private tourism sectors.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December [meeting 68], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/60/488], adopted resolution 60/190 without vote [agenda item 52].

Global Code of Ethics for Tourism

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 56/212 of 21 December 2001 and its decision 58/573 of 13 September 2004,

Recalling also its resolution 58/232 of 23 December 2003, by which it approved the Agreement between the United Nations and the World Tourism Organization,

Recalling further the Manila Declaration on World Tourism of 10 October 1980, the Rio Declaration on Environment and Development and Agenda 21 of 14 June 1992, the Amman Declaration on Peace through Tourism of 11 November 2000, the Johannesburg Declaration on Sustainable Development and the Plan of Implementation of the World Summit on Sustainable Development, the Declaration of Barbados and the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States, the Mauritius Declaration and the Mauritius Strategy for the Further Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States, and the Brussels Declaration and the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the Decade 2001-2010,

Recognizing the important dimension and role of tourism as a positive instrument towards the eradication of poverty and the improvement of the quality of life for all people, its potential to make a contribution to economic and social development, especially of the developing countries, and its emergence as a vital force for the promotion of international understanding, peace and prosperity,

1. Takes note of the note by the Secretary-General transmitting the report by the World Tourism Organization on the implementation of the Global Code of Ethics for Tourism;

2. Notes with interest the establishment of the World Committee on Tourism Ethics as adopted by the General Assembly of the World Tourism Organization in 2001;

3. Notes the approval by the World Committee on Tourism Ethics of the Procedures for Consultation and Conciliation for the Settlement of Disputes concerning the Application of the Global Code of Ethics for Tourism;

4. Reiterates the invitation to Member States and other stakeholders to consider introducing, as appropriate, the contents of the Global Code of Ethics for Tourism in their relevant laws, regulations and professional practices, and, in this regard, recognizes with appreciation those Member States that have already done so;

5. Recognizes the need to promote sustainable tourism development, including non-consumptive tourism and ecotourism, taking into account the spirit of the International Year of Ecotourism, 2002, the United Nations Year for Cultural Heritage, 2002, the World Ecotourism Summit, 2002, and the Quebec Declaration on Ecotourism, and the Global Code of Ethics for Tourism as adopted by the World Tourism Organization in 1999, in order to increase the benefits from tourism resources for the population in host communities while maintaining the cultural and environmental integrity of the host communities and enhancing the protection of ecologically sensitive areas and natural heritages and to promote sustainable tourism development and capacity-building in order to contribute to the strengthening of rural and local communities;

6. Invites Member States and other stakeholders to give support to the activities undertaken by the World Tourism Organization in favour of sustainable tourism in developing countries for the eradication of poverty;

7. Emphasizes the need for the promotion of responsible and sustainable tourism for the protection and safeguarding of natural and cultural heritage that could be beneficial to all sectors of society and the natural environment towards the achievement of sustainable development;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its sixty-fifth session on the developments related to the implementation of the present resolution on the basis of the reports of the World Tourism Organization.

Eradication of poverty

UN Decade for Eradication of Poverty

In response to General Assembly resolution 59/247 [YUN 2004, p. 834] on implementation of the first United Nations Decade for the Eradication of Poverty (1997-2006) [A/60/314], the Secretary-General submitted a 30 August report on the centrality of employment to poverty eradication.

The report examined the relationship between growth and poverty reduction equation and discussed the key elements of employment strategy, including generating adequate levels of productive employment and work, enhancing productivity, choice of technique, sectoral shift and labour market interventions. It also looked at the employment dimensions of security and human rights, and their linkages to growth and poverty reduction.

The report concluded that the achievement of the MDG of eradicating poverty required more than just high economic growth. There should be a focus on creating better and more productive jobs by investing in labour-intensive industries, especially agriculture, encouraging a shift in the structure of employment to higher productivity occupations and sectors, and upgrading job quality in the informal economy. Employment also played a major role in maintaining peace and security. Respect for human rights and dignity was an essential element for poverty eradication and the foundation for providing access to and opportunities for productive employment. Of critical importance were promoting education, skill development, training and health care, and empowering workers through improving their protection, rights and voice, while expanding opportunities for quality jobs.

Recommendations for the Assembly's consideration included: ensuring that the creation of productive employment was a central objective of national and international macroeconomic policies, and that employment policies were fully integrated into national poverty reduction strategies; enhancing coherence within the multilateral system in promoting productive and decent work; promoting decent employment opportunities, rights at work, social protection and social dialogue, as well as raising the quality of work, skills and capabilities. Recommendations also included: increasing the demand for labour, raising the productivity and incomes of people living in poverty and improving their access to health care, education, skills development and training; integrating socially excluded groups into the labour market and overcoming discrimination and barriers to employment against women and girls.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December [meeting 68], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/60/492/Add.1], adopted resolution 60/209 without vote [agenda item 56 (a)].

Implementation of the first United Nations Decade for the Eradication of Poverty (1997-2006)

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 47/196 of 22 December 1992, 48/183 of 21 December 1993, 50/107 of 20 December 1995, 56/207 of 21 December 2001, 57/265 and 57/266 of 20 December 2002, 58/222 of 23 December 2003 and 59/247 of 22 December 2004,

Recalling also the United Nations Millennium Declaration, adopted by Heads of State and Government on the occasion of the Millennium Summit, and their commitment to eradicate extreme poverty and to halve, by 2015, the proportion of the world's people whose income is less than one dollar a day and the proportion of people who suffer from hunger,

Recalling further the 2005 World Summit Outcome,

Underlining the priority and urgency given by the Heads of State and Government to the eradication of poverty, as expressed in the outcomes of the major United Nations conferences and summits in economic and social fields,

Bearing in mind the outcomes of the World Summit for Social Development and the twenty-fourth special session of the General Assembly,

Expressing its deep concern that the number of people living in extreme poverty in many countries continues to increase, with women and children constituting the majority and the most affected groups, in particular in the least developed countries and in sub-Saharan Africa,

Encouraged by reductions in poverty in some countries in the recent past and determined to reinforce and extend this trend to benefit people worldwide,

Acknowledging the contribution of full and productive employment to poverty eradication and to the achievement of the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals,

Recognizing that microcredit and microfinance programmes can generate productive self-employment and assist people in eradicating poverty and reducing their social and economic vulnerability,

Expressing deep concern that the number of women and girls living in poverty has increased disproportionately to the number of men, particularly in developing countries, and that the majority live in rural areas where their livelihoods are dependent on subsistence agriculture,

Aware that, to eradicate poverty and achieve sustainable development, women and men must participate fully and equally in the formulation of macroeconomic and social policies and strategies for the eradication of poverty,

Recognizing that the empowerment of women is a critical factor in the eradication of poverty and that the implementation of special measures aimed at empowering women can help to achieve this,

Recognizing also that improving women's economic status also improves the economic status of their families and their communities and thereby creates a multiplier effect for economic growth,

Recognizing further that mobilizing financial resources for development at the national and international levels and the effective use of those resources are central to a global partnership for development in support of the achievement of the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals,

Recognizing the ongoing international efforts, contributions and discussions, such as the Action against Hunger and Poverty initiative, aimed at identifying and developing possible innovative and additional sources of financing for development from all sources, public and private, domestic and external, to increase and supplement traditional sources of financing within the context of the follow-up to the International Conference on Financing for Development, and recognizing that some of the sources and their use fall within the realm of sovereign action,

Noting with interest the International Conference on Poverty Alleviation and Development, to be hosted by the Government of Mauritius in 2006,

Reiterating the need to strengthen the leadership role of the United Nations in promoting development,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Reiterates that eradicating poverty is the greatest global challenge facing the world today and an indispensable requirement for sustainable development, in particular for developing countries;

3. Underlines the fact that each country has the primary responsibility for its own sustainable development and poverty eradication, that the role of national policies and development strategies cannot be overemphasized, and that concerted and concrete measures are required at all levels to enable developing countries to eradicate poverty and achieve sustainable development;

4. Acknowledges that sustained economic growth, supported by rising productivity and a favourable environment, including for private investment and entrepreneurship, is necessary to eradicate poverty, achieve the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals, and realize a rise in living standards;

5. Reaffirms the importance of the contributions and assistance made by developing countries to the other developing countries in the context of South-South cooperation in order to achieve development and eradicate poverty;

6. Recognizes that, for developing countries to reach the targets set in the context of national development strategies for the achievement of the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals, in particular the goal on the eradication of poverty, and for such poverty eradication strategies to be effective, it is imperative that developing countries be integrated into the world economy and share equitably in the benefits of globalization;

7. Reaffirms that, within the context of overall action for the eradication of poverty, special attention should be given to the multidimensional nature of poverty and the national and international conditions and policies that are conducive to its eradication, fostering, inter alia, the social and economic integration of people living in poverty and the promotion and protection of all human rights and fundamental freedoms for all, including the right to development;

Global response for the eradication of poverty

8. Stresses the importance of the follow-up to the outcomes of the International Conference on Financing for Development and the World Summit on Sustainable Development, and calls for the full and effective implementation of the Monterrey Consensus of the International Conference on Financing for Development and the Plan of Implementation of the World Summit on Sustainable Development ("Johannesburg Plan of Implementation"), as well as the outcomes of other major United Nations conferences and summits in the economic and social fields;

9. Reaffirms that good governance at the international level is fundamental for achieving poverty eradication and sustainable development; also reaffirms that, in order to ensure a dynamic and enabling international economic environment, it is important to promote global economic governance through addressing the international finance, trade, technology and investment patterns that have an impact on the development prospects of developing countries; to that end, reiterates that the international community should take all necessary and appropriate measures, including ensuring support for structural and macroeconomic reform and a comprehensive solution to the external debt problem and increasing market access for developing countries; and also reaffirms that a universal, rule-based, open, non-discriminatory and equitable multilateral trading system, as well as meaningful trade liberalization, can substantially stimulate development worldwide, benefiting countries at all stages of development;

10. Also reaffirms the commitment to broaden and strengthen the participation of developing countries and countries with economies in transition in international economic decision-making and norm-setting, and to that end stresses the importance of continuing efforts to reform the international financial architecture, noting that enhancing the voice and participation of developing countries and countries with economies in transition in the Bretton Woods institutions remains a continuous concern;

11. Further reaffirms that good governance at the national level is essential for poverty eradication and sustainable development; that sound economic policies, solid democratic institutions responsive to the needs of the people and improved infrastructure are the basis for sustained economic growth, poverty eradication and employment creation; and that freedom, peace and security, domestic stability, respect for human rights, including the right to development, and the rule of law, gender equality, market-oriented policies and an overall commitment to just and democratic societies are also essential and mutually reinforcing;

12. Welcomes the outcomes of the eleventh session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, held in São Paulo, Brazil, from 13 to 18 June 2004, and the adoption of The Spirit of São Paulo, and the São Paulo Consensus;

13. Reaffirms the need for the United Nations to play a fundamental role in the promotion of international cooperation for development and the coherence, coordination and implementation of development goals and actions agreed upon by the international community, and also reaffirms the need to strengthen coordination within the United Nations system in close cooperation with all other multilateral financial, trade and development institutions in order to support sustained economic growth, poverty eradication and sustainable development;

14. Stresses that together with coherent and consistent domestic policies, international cooperation is essential in supplementing and supporting the efforts of developing countries to utilize their domestic resources for development and poverty eradication and in ensuring that they will be able to achieve the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals;

15. Recalls that Member States redirected and recommitted themselves to fulfilling the development dimensions of the Doha Development Agenda, which places the needs and interests of developing countries at the heart of the Doha work programme, and recognizes the major role that trade plays as an engine of growth and development and in eradicating poverty;

16. Recognizes that fighting corruption at all levels is a priority and that corruption is a serious barrier to effective resource mobilization and allocation and diverts resources from activities that are vital for poverty eradication, the fight against hunger and economic and sustainable development;

17. Reaffirms the Monterrey Consensus, and recognizes that mobilizing financial resources for development and the effective use of those resources in developing countries and countries with economies in transition are central to a global partnership for development in support of the achievement of the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals, and in this regard:

(a) Welcomes the increased resources that will become available as a result of the establishment of timetables by many developed countries to achieve the target of 0.7 per cent of gross national product for official development assistance by 2015 and to reach at least 0.5 per cent of gross national product for official development assistance by 2010 as well as, pursuant to the Brussels Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the Decade 2001-2010, 0.15 per cent to 0.20 per cent for the least developed countries no later than 2010, and urges those developed countries that have not yet done so to make concrete efforts in this regard in accordance with their commitments;

(b) Recognizes the importance of official development assistance as an important source of financing development for many developing countries, and stresses the need to translate increases in official development assistance into real increases in resources for national development strategies, to achieve their national development priorities as well as the internationally agreed development goals and objectives including the Millennium Development Goals, taking into account the need for resource predictability including budget support mechanisms where appropriate; also, welcomes recent efforts and initiatives to enhance the quality of aid and increase its impact, including the Paris Declaration on Aid Effectiveness, and resolves to take concrete, effective and timely action in implementing all agreed commitments on aid effectiveness, with clear monitoring and deadlines, including through further aligning assistance with countries' strategies, building institutional capacities, reducing transaction costs and eliminating bureaucratic procedures, making progress on untying aid, enhancing the absorptive capacity and financial management of recipient countries and strengthening the focus of development results; also encourages the broadest possible participation of developing countries in future work on aid effectiveness;

(c) Recognizes the importance of developing innovative sources of financing for development, provided that such sources do not unduly burden developing countries, notes that some countries will launch the International Financial Facility, have launched its immunization pilot, and that some countries, utilizing their national authorities, will implement in the near future a contribution on airline tickets as a "solidarity contribution" to enable financing for development projects, and notes that other countries are considering whether and to what extent they will participate in those initiatives;

(d) Emphasizes the importance of microcredit and microfinance in the eradication of poverty and highlights that the observance of the International Year of Microcredit, 2005 has provided a significant opportunity to raise awareness, to share best practices and to further enhance financial sectors that support sustainable pro-poor financial services in all countries, in this regard urges member countries to put best practices into action, and invites the international community, including the United Nations system, to build on the momentum created by the Year;

(e) Acknowledges the vital role the private sector can play in generating new investments, employment and financing for development;

18. Resolves to continue to support the development efforts of middle-income developing countries by working, in competent multilateral and international forums and also through bilateral arrangements, on measures to help them meet, inter alia, their financial, technical and technological requirements;

19. Also resolves to address the development needs of low-income developing countries by working in competent multilateral and international forums, to help them meet, inter alia, their financial, technical and technological requirements;

20. Recognizes that an enabling domestic environment is vital for mobilizing domestic resources, increasing productivity, reducing capital flight, encouraging the private sector and attracting and making effective use of international investment and assistance, and that efforts to create such an environment should be supported by the international community;

21. Emphasizes that creditors and debtors must share responsibility for preventing unsustainable debt situations, and stresses that debt relief can play a key role in liberating resources that should be directed towards activities consistent with poverty eradication, sustained economic growth and sustainable development and the achievement of the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals, and, in this regard, urges countries to direct those resources freed through debt relief, in particular through debt cancellation and reduction, towards these objectives;

22. Calls upon the developed countries, by means of intensified and effective cooperation with developing countries, to promote capacity-building and facilitate access to and transfer of technologies and corresponding knowledge, in particular to developing countries, on favourable terms, including concessional and preferential terms, as mutually agreed, taking into account the need to protect intellectual property rights, as well as the special needs of developing countries;

23. Recognizes the crucial role that microcredit and microfinance could play in the eradication of poverty, the promotion of gender equality, the empowerment of vulnerable groups and the development of rural communities, encourages Governments to undertake policies to facilitate the expansion of microcredit and microfinance institutions in order to service the large unmet demand among poor people for financial services, including the identification and development of mechanisms to promote sustainable access to financial services, the removal of institutional and regulatory obstacles and the provision of incentives to microfinance institutions that meet established standards for delivering such financial services to the poor;

24. Also recognizes the potential of information and communication technologies to serve as a powerful tool for development and poverty eradication and to help the international community to maximize the benefits of globalization, and, in this regard, welcomes the Tunis Commitment and the Tunis Agenda for the Information Society adopted by the World Summit on the Information Society at its Tunis phase, and recalls the Geneva Declaration of Principles and the Geneva Plan of Action adopted by the Summit at its Geneva phase;

Policies for the eradication of poverty

25. Reaffirms that the eradication of poverty should be addressed in a multisectoral and integrated way, as set out in the Johannesburg Plan of Implementation, taking into account the importance of the need for the empowerment of women and sectoral strategies in such areas as education, the development of human resources, health, human settlements, rural, local and community development, productive employment, population, environment and natural resources, water and sanitation, agriculture, food security, energy and migration and the specific needs of disadvantaged and vulnerable groups in such a way as to increase opportunities and choices for people living in poverty and to enable them to build and to strengthen their assets so as to achieve development, security and stability, and, in that regard, encourages countries to develop their national poverty reduction policies in accordance with their national priorities, including, where appropriate, through poverty reduction strategy papers;

26. Underlines, in this context, the importance of further integration of the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals, in the national development strategies and plans, including the poverty reduction strategy papers where they exist, and calls upon the international community to continue to support developing countries in the implementation of those development strategies and plans;

27. Strongly supports fair globalization, and resolves to make the goals of full and productive employment and decent work for all, including for women and young people, a central objective of the relevant national and international policies, as well as national development strategies, including poverty reduction strategies, as part of efforts to achieve the Millennium Development Goals, resolves that these measures should also encompass the elimination of the worst forms of child labour, as defined in International Labour Organization Convention No. 182, and forced labour; and also resolves to ensure full respect for the fundamental principles and rights at work;

28. Recognizes the importance of disseminating best practices for the reduction of poverty in its various dimensions, taking into account the need to adapt those best practices to suit the social, economic, cultural and historical conditions of each country;

29. Reaffirms that all Governments and the United Nations system should promote an active and visible policy of mainstreaming a gender perspective in all policies and programmes aimed at the eradication of poverty, at both the national and international levels, and encourages the use of gender analysis as a tool for the integration of a gender dimension into planning the implementation of policies, strategies and programmes for the eradication of poverty;

30. Also reaffirms that all Governments and the United Nations system should emphasize the importance and encourage the mainstreaming of poverty eradication in all policies, at both the national and international levels;

31. Further reaffirms that poverty eradication, changing unsustainable patterns of production and consumption and protecting and managing the natural resource base of economic and social development are overarching objectives of, and essential requirements for, sustainable development;

32. Emphasizes the critical role of both formal and non-formal education, in particular basic education and training, especially for girls, in empowering those living in poverty, reaffirms in that context the Dakar Framework for Action adopted at the World Education Forum, and recognizes the importance of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization strategy for the eradication of poverty, especially extreme poverty, in supporting the Education for All programmes as a tool with which to achieve the millennium development goal on universal primary education by 2015;

33. Recognizes the devastating effect of HIV/AIDS, malaria, tuberculosis and other infectious and contagious diseases on human development, economic growth, food security and poverty reduction efforts in all regions, in particular sub-Saharan Africa, and urges Governments and the international community to give urgent priority to combating those diseases;

34. Also recognizes that armed conflict results in the loss of human lives and the destruction of economic resources, and that countries emerging from conflict are faced with damaged physical and social infrastructure, scarce employment opportunities, reduced foreign investment and increased capital flight, and, in this regard, stresses that strategies, programmes and international assistance for reconstruction and rehabilitation should, inter alia, create employment and eradicate poverty;

35. Emphasizes the link between poverty eradication and improving access to safe drinking water, and stresses in that regard the objective to halve, by 2015, the proportion of people who are unable to reach or to afford safe drinking water and the proportion of people who do not have access to basic sanitation, as reaffirmed in the Johannesburg Plan of Implementation;

36. Recognizes that the lack of adequate housing remains a pressing challenge in the fight to eradicate extreme poverty, particularly in the urban areas in developing countries, expresses its concern at the rapid growth in the number of slum-dwellers in the urban areas of developing countries, particularly in Africa, stresses that, unless urgent and effective measures and actions are taken at the national and international levels, the number of slum-dwellers, who constitute one third of the world's urban population, will continue to increase, and emphasizes the need for increased efforts, with a view to significantly improving the lives of at least 100 million slum-dwellers by 2020;

37. Also recognizes that the eradication of rural poverty and hunger is crucial for the achievement of the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals, and that rural development should be an integral part of national and international development policies;

38. Further recognizes that access to microcredit and microfinance can contribute to the achievement of the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals, in particular the goals relating to poverty eradication, gender equality and the empowerment of women;

39. Emphasizes the important contribution the observance of the International Year of Microcredit, 2005, has made in raising awareness of the importance of microcredit and microfinance in the eradication of poverty, in sharing good practices and in enhancing financial sectors that support sustainable financial services for the poor, and calls upon Member States, the United Nations system and other international organizations to consolidate and further build on the momentum created by the Year with a view to providing microcredit and microfinance services to the poor;

40. Recognizes the important contribution that the observance of the International Year of Rice, 2004, has made in drawing world attention to the role that rice can play in providing food security and eradicating poverty in the attainment of the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals;

Specific initiatives in the fight against poverty

41. Also recognizes the important potential contribution of the World Solidarity Fund to the achievement of the Millennium Development Goals, in particular the objective to halve, by 2015, the proportion of people living on less than one dollar a day and the proportion of people who suffer from hunger;

42. Resolves to operationalize the World Solidarity Fund established by the General Assembly, and invites Member States, international organizations, the private sector, relevant institutions, foundations and individuals in a position to do so to make voluntary contributions to the Fund;

43. Recalls that, in the Millennium Declaration, the Heads of State and Government, inter alia, identified solidarity as one of the fundamental and universal values that should underlie relations between peoples in the twenty-first century, and in that regard decides to proclaim 20 December of each year International Human Solidarity Day;

44. Invites Governments and relevant stakeholders to utilize entrepreneurship, taking fully into account national interests, priorities and development strategies, to contribute to poverty eradication;

45. Recognizes that natural disasters remain a major impediment to sustainable development and poverty eradication, and, in this regard, invites Member States, the United Nations system, including international financial institutions, regional bodies and international organizations, as well as relevant civil society organizations, to support, implement and follow up the Hyogo Framework for Action 2005-2015: Building the Resilience of Nations and Communities to Disasters, adopted by the World Conference on Disaster Reduction, held in Kobe, Hyogo, Japan, from 18 to 22 January 2005;

Africa, least developed countries, landlocked developing countries and small island developing States

46. *Stresse*s, as recognized in the Millennium Declaration and reiterated in the 2005 World Summit Outcome, the importance of meeting the special needs of Africa, where poverty remains a major challenge and where most countries have not benefited fully from the opportunities of globalization, which has further exacerbated the continent's marginalization;

47. Reaffirms its support for the New Partnership for Africa's Development, encourages further efforts in the implementation of the commitments contained therein in the political, economic and social fields, and calls upon Member States and the international community, and invites the United Nations system, to continue to support the implementation of the Partnership, the primary objective of which is to eradicate poverty and promote sustainable development on the basis of African ownership and leadership and enhanced partnerships with the international community, in accordance with the principles, objectives and priorities of the Partnership;

48. Notes the continuing role of the International Labour Organization in assisting African countries in implementing the Plan of Action for Promotion of Employment and Poverty Alleviation in Africa adopted at the extraordinary summit of the African Union on employment and poverty alleviation, held in Ouagadougou from 3 to 9 September 2004;

49. Resolves to promote a comprehensive and durable solution to the external debt problems of African countries, including through the cancellation of 100 per cent of multilateral debt consistent with the recent Group of Eight proposal for the heavily indebted poor countries, and, on a case-by-case basis, where appropriate, significant debt relief, including, inter alia, cancellation or restructuring for heavily indebted African countries not part of the Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Initiative that have unsustainable debt burdens;

50. Calls upon the Governments of the least developed countries and their development partners to implement fully the commitments contained in the Brussels Declaration and the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the Decade 2001-2010, adopted at the Third United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries, held in Brussels from 14 to 20 May 2001;

51. Recognizes the special needs and vulnerabilities of small island developing States, reaffirms the commitment to take urgent and concrete action to address those needs and vulnerabilities through the full and effective implementation of the Mauritius Strategy for the Further Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States, the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States, and the outcome of the twenty-second special session of the General Assembly, and undertakes to promote greater international cooperation and partnership for the implementation of the Mauritius Strategy through, inter alia, the mobilization of domestic and international resources, the promotion of international trade as an engine for development and increased international financial and technical cooperation;

52. Also recognizes the special needs of and challenges faced by landlocked developing countries, and therefore reaffirms the commitment to urgently address those needs and challenges through the full, timely and effective implementation of the Almaty Programme of Action: Addressing the Special Needs of Landlocked Developing Countries within a New Global Framework for Transit Transport Cooperation for Landlocked and Transit Developing Countries and the São Paulo Consensus, encourages the work undertaken by the regional commissions and United Nations organizations towards establishing a time-cost methodology for indicators to measure the progress made in the implementation of the Almaty Programme of Action, and recognizes the special difficulties and concerns of landlocked developing countries in their efforts to integrate their economies into the multilateral trading system and that, in this regard, priority should be given to the full and timely implementation of the Almaty Declaration and Almaty Programme of Action;

The United Nations and the fight against poverty

53. Calls for the full implementation of General Assembly resolution 57/270 B of 23 June 2003 on the integrated and coordinated implementation of and follow-up to the outcomes of the major United Nations conferences and summits in the economic and social fields, which provides a comprehensive basis for the follow-up to the outcomes of those conferences and summits and contributes to the achievement of the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals, in particular the eradication of poverty and hunger;

54. Reaffirms the role of United Nations funds and programmes, in particular the United Nations Development Programme and its associated funds, in assisting the national efforts of developing countries, inter alia, in the eradication of poverty, and the need for their funding in accordance with the relevant resolutions of the United Nations;

55. Welcomes the observance of the International Day for the Eradication of Poverty, established by the General Assembly in its resolution 47/196 of 22 December 1992 in order to raise public awareness to promote the eradication of poverty and extreme poverty in all countries, and in this regard recognizes the useful role the observance of the Day continues to play in raising public awareness and mobilizing all stakeholders in the fight against poverty, and requests the Secretary-General to undertake a review of the observance of the Day in order to identify lessons learned and ways to promote the mobilization of all stakeholders in the fight against poverty;

56. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its sixty-first session the item entitled "Implementation of the first United Nations Decade for the Eradication of Poverty (1997-2006)".

Also on 22 December, the Assembly took note of the report of the Second Committee [A/60/492] on its discussion of the eradication of poverty and other development issues (decision 60/545).

Evaluation

By an April note [E/AC.51/2005/2], the Secretary-General transmitted to the Committee for Programme and Coordination (CPC) the report of the Office of Internal Oversight Services (OIOS) on the evaluation of linkages between headquarters and field activities: a review of best practices for poverty eradication in the framework of the United Nations Millennium Declaration.

OIOS concluded that those linkages were crucial to a comprehensive, multisectoral and coordinated approach to poverty eradication. Within the headquarters' field transmission line, a highly complex system of linkages connected and coordinated the poverty eradication activities of headquarters, regional and field offices, with linkages flowing in multiple directions and often dependent on personal connections and ad hoc agreements. That complexity was not conducive to the consistent and systematic transmission of knowledge, guidance and experience.

OIOS made recommendations to the Secretary-General, CEB, the United Nations Development Group, the UN Department of Economic and Social Affairs and the regional commissions. Those recommendations included enhancing collaboration among inter-agency coordinating bodies, introducing a more strategic approach to system-wide knowledge management networks, increasing the exchange of information between country teams and non-resident agencies and regional commissions, and strengthening management practices and the resident coordinator system.

At its forty-fifth session (6 June–1 July) [A/60/16], CPC recommended approval of those recommendations. It emphasized that the Secretary-General should enhance inter-agency coordination to fight hunger; UN programmes should be harmonized with the needs and priorities of national Governments; and the regional commissions and the country offices should establish mechanisms for the regular exchange of information and knowledge-sharing and strengthen their websites as platforms for the exchange of best practices.

International Year of Microcredit, 2005

The General Assembly, by resolution 53/197 [YUN 1998, p. 785], proclaimed 2005 the International Year of Microcredit to give impetus to microcredit programmes throughout the world. The goals of the year were to assess and promote the contributions of microcredit and microfinance towards the achievement of the MDGs; increase public awareness and understanding of them; promote inclusive financial systems; support sustainable access; and encourage innovation and partnership. The main message of the Year was building inclusive financial sectors to help poor people around the world gain access to affordable financial services.

Activities in observance of the Year were undertaken at the national and international levels. Among them were the "Blue Book" and data project, which had an important impact on further promoting the commitment to develop inclusive financial sectors. In addition, the Global Microentrepreneurship Award served to celebrate and reward microentrepreneurs around the world and contributed to promoting entrepreneurial culture, establishing strong partnerships and increasing the visibility of microentrepreneurs. An important outcome of the Year was the establishment of the United Nations Advisers Group on Inclusive Financial Sectors, which would provide advice and guidance to the United Nations and seek ways to make a broad variety of financial services accessible for the poor and small enterprises across the globe.

The Assembly had decided to devote a plenary meeting at its sixty-first (2006) session to consideration of the outcome and follow-up to the Year.

Rural development

On 27 July [meeting 40], the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 2005/45 [draft: E/2005/L.48] without vote [agenda item 7].

Promoting an integrated approach to rural development in developing countries for poverty eradication and sustainable development

The Economic and Social Council,

Reaffirming the ministerial declaration of the high-level segment of its substantive session of 2003,

Recalling its resolution 2004/48 of 23 July 2004,

Noting the offer of the Government of Brazil to host the International Conference on Agrarian Reform and Rural Development in 2006,

Reiterating that the eradication of rural poverty and hunger is crucial for the achievement of internationally agreed development goals, including those contained in the United Nations Millennium Declaration, and that rural development should be pursued through an integrated approach that encompasses economic, social and environmental dimensions, takes into account a gender perspective and consists of mutually reinforcing policies and programmes, which should be balanced, targeted, situation-specific, locally owned, should include local synergies and initiatives and should be responsive to the needs of rural populations,

Having considered progress, or the lack thereof, in the implementation of the ministerial declaration of the high-level segment of its substantive session of 2003 at its substantive session of 2005,

Decides to consider, at its regular organizational session in February 2006, the proposal to include a discussion on promoting an integrated approach to rural development in developing countries for poverty eradication and sustainable development at a future substantive session of the Council.

United Nations Alliance

On 26 July [meeting 39], the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 2005/42 [draft: E/2005/L.35, as orally amended] without vote [agenda item 13 (a)].

United Nations Public-Private Alliance for Rural Development

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling the ministerial declaration adopted on 2 July 2003 at the high-level segment of the Economic and Social Council, which underlined the importance of alliances and partnerships among actors in different sectors for the promotion of integrated rural development,

Recalling also its resolution 2004/49 of 23 July 2004 on the United Nations Public-Private Alliance for Rural Development,

Underlining the importance of the contribution of the private sector, non-governmental organizations and civil society in general to the implementation of the outcomes of United Nations conferences in the economic, social and related fields,

Recalling the central role and responsibility of Governments in national and international policymaking,

Bearing in mind General Assembly resolution 58/129 of 19 December 2003, entitled "Towards global partnerships", in which the Assembly, inter alia, identified the principles and objectives of such partnerships and welcomed the establishment of a multitude of partnerships at the field level, entered into by various United Nations organizations, Member States and other stakeholders, such as the United Nations Public-Private Alliance for Rural Development (the United Nations Alliance),

1. Encourages the initiative of the Government of the Dominican Republic to serve as the second pilot country for the United Nations Public-Private Alliance for Rural Development (the United Nations Alliance);

2. Invites all Member States, the funds, programmes and agencies of the United Nations system, the Bretton Woods institutions, civil society, the private sector and other relevant stakeholders to support the programmes and activities of the United Nations Alliance in its mission to promote sustainable rural development, consistent with General Assembly resolution 58/129 and other relevant resolutions and decisions of the Assembly and the Economic and Social Council;

3. Stresses that activities of the funds, programmes and specialized agencies of the United Nations system at the country level in support of the United Nations Alliance should take into account the implementation of the United Nations Development Assistance Framework;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Economic and Social Council at its substantive session of 2007 on the work of the United Nations Alliance.

Science and technology for development

Commission on Science and Technology for Development

The Commission on Science and Technology for Development held its eighth session in Geneva from 23 to 27 May [E/2005/31]. It considered as its main substantive theme "Science and technology promotion, advice and application for the achievement of the internationally agreed development goals contained in the United Nations Millennium Declaration" (see below). The Commission had before it reports of the Secretary-General on science and technology promotion, advice and application for the achievement of the MDGs [E/CN.16/2005/2 & Corr.1,2] (see below) and on a review of the Commission's work methods [E/CN.16/2005/4 & Corr.1]. It also discussed a February note by the Secretariat on implementation of and progress made on decisions taken at the Commission's seventh (2004) session [E/CN.16/2005/3 & Corr.1]. The Commission heard national country reports on experiences in science and technology promotion, advice and application of the MDGs, as well as presentations by international organizations on their contribution to its work.

The Commission recommended a draft resolution and three draft decisions for adoption by the Economic and Social Council. It brought to the Council's attention a decision by which it took note of the reports that were before its eighth session [E/2005/31 (dec. 8/101)]. The Commission chose as the substantive theme for its 2005-2006 intersessional period "Bridging the technology gap between and within nations".

By decision 2005/308 of 27 July, the Council decided that the Commission would adopt a biennial programme of work beginning at its ninth session, focusing, in the first year, on policy analyses and, in the second, on operational aspects and implementation. It should also strengthen the connection between its review of implementation and its policy recommendations. The Commission should encourage the active participation of civil society and the private sector in its activities, and strengthen collaboration with the other functional commissions.

The Council also took note of the Commission's report on its eighth (2005) session and approved the provisional agenda and documentation for the ninth (2006) session (decision 2005/309).

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 27 July [meeting 40], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission [E/2005/31], adopted resolution 2005/52 without vote [agenda item 13 (b)].

Science and technology for development

The Economic and Social Council,

Welcoming the work of the Commission on Science and Technology for Development on its theme "Science and technology promotion, advice and application for the achievement of the internationally agreed development goals contained in the United Nations Millennium Declaration",

Taking note of initiatives that call for substantial support for institutes of higher education and centres of excellence in developing countries, particularly in Africa, such as that of the Commission for Africa,

Expressing its appreciation for the support provided to the Commission for Africa by donors including the generous financial contributions of the Governments of Italy and Pakistan to the network of centres of excellence to be established, as well as the financial support provided by Austria to expand the Internet connectivity benchmarking tool and the financial and technical support provided by the Centre for Information Technology of the state of Geneva to assist the least developed countries for building capacity in information and communication technologies,

Taking note of General Assembly resolution 58/200 of 23 December 2003, in which the relevant bodies of the United Nations system engaged in biotechnology were urged to work cooperatively so as to ensure that countries received sound scientific information and practical advice to enable them to take advantage of those technologies, as appropriate, to promote economic growth and development,

1. Takes note of the findings contained in the report of the Commission on Science and Technology for Development on its eighth session and of the following recommendations of the Commission at its eighth session, and invites Governments to review these recommendations and to consider implementing them as they deem appropriate:

(a) To ensure that science, technology and innovation strategies are incorporated in international and national development strategies, especially those addressing the Millennium Development Goals and that science and technology education and research and technology are a major part of these strategies and are funded adequately;

(b) To support venture capital and encourage the establishment of business incubators and science and technology parks and, at the same time, strengthen linkages between public research and private industry and tap into regional and international research and development networks;

(c) To create innovative compensation and reward structures to promote research and innovation directed towards solving development problems aligned with national objectives in such areas as agriculture, health, the environment, the mitigation of natural disasters and the protection of traditional knowledge;

(d) To strengthen science and technology educational systems, including through strong gender policies ensuring equal access to technological and scientific studies, appropriate funding, the introduction of entrepreneurial skills and attention to relevant intellectual property rights issues, and provide science and technology graduates with incentives and resources for starting innovative enterprises, with a view to improving gainful employment;

(e) To ensure that adequate funding is allocated for the infrastructure for science and technology development, taking into account national needs for technological upgrading and development and providing a favourable working environment for scientists and researchers to attract and keep them in their home countries;

(f) To involve representatives from industry, academia and public sectors in carrying out a comprehensive technology foresight exercise with the purpose of identifying technologies that are likely to help address pressing socio-economic issues, and establish priorities accordingly in science and technology policy and governmental programmes on research and education;

(g) To encourage the design and implementation of science and technology systems targeted at the poor and at adapting conventional science and technologies, such as those of the green revolution, as well as emerging technologies, such as information and communication technologies and biotechnology;

(h) To promote international cooperation and establish linkages aimed at sharing experiences and forging partnerships for the provision of financial assistance and expertise with a view to maximizing coverage of the socio-economic benefits of the progress achieved by modern science and technology;

2. Decides to make the following recommendations to the Commission, by which the Commission, within its existing mandate and within existing resources or through extrabudgetary resources, is:

(a) Encouraged to facilitate the establishment of a network of centres of excellence in developing countries with a view to allowing scientists and engineers to interact with each other and make use of state-of-the-art teaching and research facilities offered by these centres;

(b) Requested to collect and compile case studies of successful experiences and best practices in science, technology and innovation that showcase their positive impact on the internationally agreed development goals, including those contained in the United Nations Millennium Declaration, with a view to evaluating and benchmarking national science and technology policies;

(c) Requested to further develop its Internet connectivity benchmarking tool, using extrabudgetary sources;

(d) Encouraged to continue providing its expertise and analytical skills for science, technology and innovation policy reviews aimed at providing information-based policy recommendations to assist developing countries with their specific needs and circumstances;

New substantive theme and other activities

Recognizing that science and technology are essential in the implementation of the internationally agreed development goals contained in the United Nations Millennium Declaration and that many developing countries will need to enhance their capacity to harness the benefits of technology,

Welcoming the proposal to establish an informal working group for Africa as part of the Commission on Science and Technology for Development to address science and technology issues for Africa,

Endorses the decision of the Commission to select as its substantive theme for the intersessional period 2005-2006 "Bridging the technology gap between and within nations" and that specific emphasis should be placed on multi-stakeholder partnerships not only for bridging the technology gap but also to prevent it from growing wider; in this regard, the Commission will identify and address concrete aspects of this theme in cooperation with experts at its forthcoming panel meeting.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December [meeting 68], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/60/490/Add.2], adopted resolution 60/205 without vote [agenda item 54 (b)].

Science and technology for development

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 58/200 of 23 December 2003 and 59/220 of 22 December 2004,

Recognizing the vital role that science and technology can play in development and in facilitating efforts to eradicate poverty, achieve food security, fight diseases, improve education, protect the environment, accelerate the pace of economic diversification and transformation and improve productivity and competitiveness,

Recalling the 2005 World Summit Outcome,

Recognizing that international support can help developing countries to benefit from technological advances and can enhance their productive capacity,

Underscoring the role that traditional knowledge can play in technological development and in the sustainable management and use of natural resources,

Recognizing the catalysing role of information and communication technologies in promoting and facilitating the achievement of all development goals, and in this regard stressing the importance of the contribution of the World Summit on the Information Society process to the building of a people-centred, balanced and inclusive information society so as to enhance digital opportunities for all people in order to help bridge the digital divide,

Welcoming the Tunis Commitment and the Tunis Agenda for the Information Society of the second phase of the World Summit on the Information Society, and recalling the Geneva Declaration of Principles and the Geneva Plan of Action of the first phase of the Summit,

Acknowledging with appreciation the role played by the International Telecommunication Union in the organization of the two phases of the World Summit,

Welcoming the adoption of the Bali Strategic Plan for Technology Support and Capacity-building of the United Nations Environment Programme,

Noting with appreciation the hosting of the second World Information Technology Forum by Botswana from 31 August to 2 September 2005 in Gaborone,

Acknowledging the urgent need to bridge the digital divide and to assist developing countries to benefit from the potential of information and communication technologies,

Noting with appreciation the work of the Commission on Science and Technology for Development during its intersessional period 2004-2005 on the theme "Science and technology promotion, advice and application for the achievement of the internationally agreed development goals contained in the United Nations Millennium Declaration", in particular, the recommendation to facilitate the establishment of a network of centres of excellence in developing countries with a view to allowing scientists and engineers to interact with each other and make use of state-of-the-art teaching and research facilities offered by those centres,

Taking note of the selection by the Commission on Science and Technology for Development of the substantive theme "Bridging the technology gap between and within nations" for its work during the intersessional period 2005-2006,

Taking note also of the report of the Secretary-General on science and technology for development,

Taking note further of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development publication entitled The Digital Divide: ICT Development Indices 2004,

Reaffirming the need to enhance the science and technology programmes of the relevant entities of the United Nations system,

Taking note with interest of the establishment of the inter-agency cooperation network on biotechnology, UN-Biotech, as described in the report of the Secretary-General,

1. Affirms its commitment to:

(a) Strengthen and enhance existing mechanisms and to support initiatives for research and development, including through voluntary partnerships between the public and private sectors, to address the special needs of developing countries in the areas of health, agriculture, conservation, sustainable use of natural resources and environmental management, energy, forestry and the impact of climate change;

(b) Promote and facilitate, as appropriate, access to, and development, transfer and diffusion of, technologies, including environmentally sound technologies and the corresponding know-how, to developing countries;

(c) Assist developing countries in their efforts to promote and develop national strategies for human resources and science and technology, which are primary drivers of national capacity-building for development;

(d) Promote and support greater efforts to develop renewable sources of energy, such as solar, wind and geothermal energy;

(e) Implement policies at the national and international levels to attract both public and private investment, domestic and foreign, that enhances knowledge, transfers technology on mutually agreed terms and raises productivity;

(f) Support the efforts of developing countries, individually and collectively, to harness new agricultural technologies in order to increase agricultural productivity through environmentally sustainable means;

2. Requests the Commission on Science and Technology for Development to provide a forum to address within its mandate the special needs of developing countries in areas such as agriculture, rural development, information and communication technologies and environmental management;

3. Encourages the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and other relevant organizations to assist developing countries in their efforts to integrate science, technology and innovation policies in national development strategies;

4. Recognizes the contribution of the International Centre for Genetic Engineering and Biotechnology and its affiliated centres as well as the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, the United Nations Environment Programme, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the World Health Organization and the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development in the area of biotechnology, and encourages those and other relevant bodies of the United Nations system engaged in biotechnology to collaborate with a view to enhancing effectiveness in the implementation of programmes designed to assist developing countries in building capacity in all areas of biotechnology, including for industry and agriculture, as well as for risk assessment and management of biosafety;

5. Reiterates its request to the Secretary-General of the World Summit on the Information Society to transmit to the General Assembly at its sixtieth session the report of the Summit;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its sixty-second session a report on the implementation of the present resolution.

Promoting the application of science and technology to meet the development goals

The Commission had before it an April report by the Secretary-General on science and technology promotion, advice and application for achieving the MDGs [E/CN.16/2005/2 & Corr.1 & 2], which focused on three sub-themes: infrastructure building as a foundation for scientific and technology development; the mutual interaction and dependency of science and technology education with research and development; and promoting gainful employment and enterprise development through the use of existing and emerging technologies. The report's main findings were that science, technology and innovations were crucial inputs to the competitiveness and growth prospects of countries and that science and engineering education was critical to developing countries in addressing development problems and helping enterprises remain competitive in the global economy. The report also found that: research and development were under-funded in such critical areas as agriculture, health and environmental management; infrastructure development provided the foundation for technological activities and the opportunity for technological learning; and the development of enterprises was critical to economic growth and to achieving the MDGs. The report further found that the effective harnessing of existing and emerging technologies, particularly applications in information and communication technology (ICT) and biotechnologies, could increase the likelihood of achieving the MDGs. The opportunities for developing countries would be enhanced if national and international norms helped balance the interests of technology producers and users, and enhanced the transfer of relevant knowledge and technology.

The report recommended that the Commission, in collaboration with international scientific organizations, should help establish a network of centres of excellence in developing countries to allow scientists and engineers to interact and utilize the state-of-the-art research facilities offered by those centres, and compile best practices case studies of the link between science and technology and socio-economic development. Governments were called upon to consider other proposals relating to science and technology for development.

Biotechnology

In response to General Assembly resolution 58/200 [YUN 2003, p. 860], the Secretary-General submitted an August report [A/60/184], which reviewed UN system biotechnology-related activities in agriculture and food, health, biosafety and the environment, trade and development and capacity-building. It examined the status of collaboration among those UN entities, and recommended ways to strengthen system-wide coordination, especially through UN-Biotech—the inter-agency cooperation network on biotechnology established to complement and add value to existing programmes and projects by facilitating synergies and joint efforts to maximize system-wide coordination and coherence. The report proposed that UN-Biotech should serve as an advisory unit for developing countries on new trends in biotechnology innovations, policy and trade. It should focus on building productive capacity in all areas of biotechnology to help developing countries become leaders in formulating policies as the technology was developed. It should also explore mechanisms to help those countries build the human resources and infrastructure needed to participate in the bioeconomy.

Biotechnology had the potential to become a powerful tool in meeting the challenges posed by food insecurity, industrial underdevelopment, environmental degradation and disease. As most of the investment in modern biotechnology had occurred in developed countries, significant new investments and human resources development would be required in the developing world. The accelerated development and application of biotechnologies would also require all relevant UN agencies to coordinate their activities and help developing countries build their institutional capacities.

Information and communication technologies

During 2005, the United Nations continued to consider how the benefits of new technologies, especially ICT, could be made available to all, in keeping with recommendations contained in the ministerial declaration adopted by the Economic and Social Council at its 2000 high-level segment [YUN 2000, p. 799], the Millennium Declaration [ibid., p. 49] and the Geneva Declaration of Principles and Plan of Action [YUN 2003, p. 857], adopted at the first phase of the World Summit on the Information Society [ibid.]. Among the year's events, was the convening of the second phase of the World Summit on the Information Society in November, which adopted the Tunis Commitment and the Tunis Agenda for the Information Society (see below).

World Summit on the Information Society (second phase)

The second phase of the World Summit on the Information Society (Tunis, Tunisia, 16-18 November) [WSIS-05/TUNIS/DOC/9(Rev.1)-E] was attended by political leaders from 174 countries, including Heads of State or Government, and representatives of intergovernmental organizations, NGOs and the private sector. It adopted the Tunis Commitment and Tunis Agenda for the Information Society, recognizing that the time had come to move from principles to action on financial mechanisms for bridging the digital divide, on Internet governance, and on follow-up and implementation of the decisions (Declaration of Principles and Plan of Action) [YUN 2003, p. 857] of the first phase held in Geneva in 2003 [ibid.] and those of the second (see below) held in Tunis. In two round tables, the Summit discussed the overarching theme "From commitment to action: implementation after Tunis". It also held a high-level panel discussion on ICT for development. The Summit considered reports on a number of multi-stakeholder events and one outlining activities undertaken by Governments and stakeholders in implementing the decisions of the first phase of the Summit and assessing progress in building the Information Society [WSIS-05/TUNIS/DOC/5].

Tunis Commitment and Agenda for the Information Society

The Tunis Commitment, adopted on 18 November, reaffirmed Governments' commitment to building a people-centred, inclusive and development-oriented information society to enable people to achieve their full potential and the internationally agreed development goals and objectives, including the MDGs, and confirmed that the key principles for building an inclusive information society were those elaborated in the Geneva Declaration. It underlined the importance of removing barriers to bridging the digital divide, particularly those that hindered economic, social and cultural development especially of developing countries. It recognized that the ICT revolution could have a tremendous positive impact as an instrument of sustainable development, and underscored the effectiveness of ICTs as tools for promoting peace, security and stability, and enhancing democracy, social cohesion, good governance and the rule of law.

The Summit committed itself to evaluating and following up progress in bridging the digital divide and promoting universal access to ICTs. Calling on the international community to ensure that all countries had equitable and affordable access to those technologies, the Summit pledged to pay attention to the special needs of marginalized and vulnerable groups, countries in special situations and indigenous peoples and their cultural heritage. It recognized the existence of a gender divide, and reaffirmed the commitment to women's empowerment and their full participation in the information society; pledged to strengthen action to protect the rights of children in the context of ICTs; and reaffirmed the commitment to empower youth in ICT-based development programmes.

The Summit reaffirmed its desire to build affordable and accessible ICT networks and develop applications, and pledged to implement the Digital Solidarity Agenda, contained in the Geneva Plan of Action. The Summit was convinced that its goals could be accomplished through the involvement, cooperation and partnership of Governments and other stakeholders, and that international cooperation and solidarity at all levels were indispensable if the fruits of the information society were to benefit everyone. It reaffirmed its strong resolve to develop and implement an effective and sustainable response to the challenges and opportunities of building a truly global information society that benefited all peoples.

The Tunis Agenda for the Information Society addressed the financial mechanisms for meeting the challenges of ICT for development, Internet governance, and implementation and follow-up. The Summit recognized that bridging the digital divide would require sustainable investments for ICT infrastructure and services, capacity-building and transfer of technology over many years. It also recognized the Monterrey Consensus on Financing for Development [YUN 2002, p. 953] as the basis for creating financial mechanisms to promote ICT for development, in accordance with the Digital Solidarity Agenda. It agreed that the financing of ICT for development needed to be placed in the context of the growing importance of ICTs, not only as a medium of communication, but also as a development enabler and a tool for achieving development goals, including the MDGs. It encouraged Governments to give priority to ICTs in their national development strategies, and multilateral institutions and bilateral public donors to consider providing more financial support for regional and large-scale national ICT infrastructure projects. The Agenda listed areas where current approaches to ICT for development financing were insufficient, as well as other relevant issues that had not received adequate attention.

Acknowledging the prerequisites for access to financial mechanisms, the Summit recommended: improving mechanisms to make financial resources more predictable and sustainable; enhancing regional cooperation and creating multi-stakeholder partnerships; and providing affordable access to ICTs by reducing international Internet costs, and by encouraging the International Telecommunication Union (ITU) to continue studying the question of International Internet Connectivity as an urgent matter. It also recommended coordinating programmes among Governments and major financial players to mitigate investment risks and costs in rural and low-income market segments; helping to accelerate the development of domestic financial instruments; and improving access to facilities to finance ICT infrastructure and services. The Summit welcomed the Digital Solidarity Fund [YUN 2003, p. 858], a voluntary financial mechanism for transforming the digital divide into digital opportunities for the developing world by focusing on urgent needs at the local level.

The Summit recognized Internet governance as an essential element for a people-centred, inclusive, development-oriented and non-discriminatory information society, and committed itself to the stability and security of the Internet as a global facility and to ensuring the legitimacy of its governance, based on the full participation of all stakeholders. Regarding the management of the Internet, the Summit recognized that authority for Internet-related public policy issues was the sovereign right of States, and that all stakeholders should continue to play their respective roles in Internet-related matters. It reaffirmed the need to develop and implement a global culture of cybersecurity, underlined the importance of developing legislation to prosecute cybercrime, resolved to deal effectively with the growing problem posed by the abuse of unsolicited electronic bulk mail and underlined the importance of countering terrorism on the Internet.

The Summit reaffirmed its commitment to turn the digital divide into digital opportunity and called for strategies to increase affordable global connectivity, particularly among developing countries. It encouraged Governments and other stakeholders to promote ICT education and training in developing countries, and committed itself to working towards multilingualization of the Internet. It recognized that Internet governance included public policy, social, economic and technical issues, and that many cross-cutting issues were not adequately addressed by existing mechanisms. In view of the continuing internationalization of the Internet, the Summit agreed to implement the Geneva Principles on Internet Governance, and invited the UN Secretary-General to convene, in 2006, the Internet Governance Forum (IGF) for multi-stakeholder policy dialogue, and to examine the desirability of continuing the Forum. The Summit welcomed the offer by Greece to host the first IGF meeting.

The Summit committed itself to ensuring the sustainable implementation and follow-up of the outcomes and commitments reached during its Geneva and Tunis phases, and encouraged Governments which had not done so to elaborate sustainable national e-strategies, as part of their national development and poverty reduction plans, before 2010. It stated its commitment to working to achieve the indicative targets set out in the Geneva Plan of Action for improving ICT connectivity and access by 2015. The Summit established a mechanism for implementation and follow-up at the national, regional and international levels.

The Summit requested the UN Secretary-General to establish, within the UN System Chief Executives Board for Coordination, a UN Group on the Information Society to facilitate the implementation of the 2005 World Summit outcomes and to report to the General Assembly, by June 2006, on the modalities of inter-agency coordination. It requested the Economic and Social Council to oversee the system-wide follow-up of the Geneva and Tunis outcomes, and to review, in 2006, the mandate, agenda and composition of the Commission on Science and Technology for Development, including considering the strengthening of that body. The Summit requested the General Assembly to conduct an overall review of the implementation of the Summit outcomes in 2015, as well as periodic evaluations, using an agreed methodology for measuring and bridging the digital divide. It called upon the Assembly to declare 17 May as World Information Society Day to help raise awareness, annually, of the importance of the Internet as a global facility, of the issues dealt with in the Summit, as well as ways to bridge the digital divide.

Summit preparations

Preparations for the Tunis phase of the World Summit on the Information Society continued throughout 2005. The second meeting of the Preparatory Committee (Geneva, 17-25 February) heard progress reports on the drafting of the final documents and related activities. At its third meeting (Geneva, 19-30 September), the Preparatory Committee considered the text of the final documents of the Summit, which it adopted at the resumed session (Tunis, 13-15 November), and recommended them to the World Summit for adoption.

Four regional preparatory meetings were held in 2005: the African Regional Conference (Accra, Ghana, 2-4 February); the Pan Arab Conference on the World Summit on the Information Society Phase II (Cairo, Egypt, 8-10 May); the Asia-Pacific Regional Conference (Tehran, Islamic Republic of Iran, 31 May–2 June); and the Latin America and the Caribbean Regional Conference (Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, 8-10 June).

UN role

ICT Task Force. In June, the Secretary-General submitted to the Economic and Social Council the third annual report [E/2005/71] of the Information and Communication Technologies Task Force, which was established in 2001 [YUN 2001, p. 763] to provide a global forum on integrating ICT into development programmes and a platform for promoting public and private partnerships to help bridge the digital divide and foster digital opportunity. The second report was submitted to the Council in 2004 [YUN 2004, p. 846].

In its third year, the Task Force, through its core activities, working groups and regional nodes, contributed to advancing multi-stakeholder discussion on policy issues relating to the benchmarking of progress in ICT, Internet governance, promoting an enabling environment, supporting ongoing partnerships and strengthening support activities. It added to progress in measuring, monitoring and analysing the impact of ICT on the achievement of the internationally agreed development goals, supported and promoted collaborative initiatives at the regional, subregional and national levels, and provided significant input to the formulation of a comprehensive UN ICT strategy.

The Task Force continued to promote the mainstreaming of ICT into development. Within the context of the ongoing programme of reform and renewal of the United Nations, the Task Force provided advice to the Secretary-General on ICT.

By decision 2005/301 of 27 July, the Economic and Social Council took note of the third annual report of the ICT Task Force, and welcomed its valuable contribution to preparations for the Tunis phase of the World Summit on the Information Society and to mainstreaming ICT into development.

CEB consideration. At its tenth session (10-11 October) [CEB/2005/5], the High-level Committee on Management (HLCM) of CEB noted that the true cost of large ICT-based systems comprised not only software licences, the major cost, but development costs as well. It established a task force to document existing global software licensing purchasing agreements and explore new ones for the resource planning system software products currently in use throughout the UN system.

UNCTAD report. In response to General Assembly resolution 58/200 [YUN 2003, p. 860], UNCTAD submitted a publication, The Digital Divide: ICT Development Indices 2004 [UNCTAD/ITE/IPC/2005/4], which reviewed trends in the digital divide, and evaluated and updated ICT development indices using a range of indicators to benchmark connectivity, access, ICT policy and overall ICT diffusion in a cross-country analysis of 165 countries. It presented a number of policy options for fostering ICT development, and successful country case studies conducted in China, Egypt, the Republic of Korea and the Czech Republic, and described innovative grass-roots ICT programmes in Africa. The report underscored the importance and relevance of benchmarking ICT development for policymaking, and called for proactive policies to ensure effective utilization of ICT in bridging opportunity gaps for those with limited access to technology.

Report of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 57/295 [YUN 2002, p. 836], the Secretary-General submitted a 1 September report [A/60/323] on progress in developing a comprehensive UN system ICT strategy. In 2005, the ICT Network, guided by CEB, worked to implement the 15 initiatives contained in the ICT strategic framework grouped into five categories of development, governance, information security, working together and sustaining the initiative. The ICT Network prioritized them, selecting eight for immediate attention, and developing a business case for each one. A steering group was created to advise the Network and ensure a business-oriented direction for the cases selected. While work was proceeding in many areas of the strategic framework, of particular note was the critical areas of knowledge-sharing and knowledge management, where UN system efforts remained uncoordinated and had limited support. To address that issue, the Network was creating a system-wide knowledge-sharing and knowledge management strategy to link and guide individual efforts in the area.

By decision 60/540 of 22 December, the Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's report on ICT for development: progress in the implementation of resolution 57/295.

Economic and social trends

The World Economic and Social Survey 2005 [Sales No. E.05.II.C1] was devoted to the issue of financing for development (see p. 1052).

The Trade and Development Report, 2005 [Sales No. E.05.II.D.13], published by UNCTAD, stated that the world economy was still growing at a steady pace, but the risk of a relapse hung in the balance. However, the 4 per cent growth in 2004, the best performance since 2000, was expected to fall to around 3 per cent in 2005. Most of the deceleration was attributable to the slowdown in developed economies, although some developing economies were showing signs of losing momentum.

The annual growth of the United States economy, the world's main engine of growth, was forecast to be around 3.5 per cent in 2005, while Australia, Canada and the United Kingdom were expected to experience a moderate decline in the gross domestic product (GDP) growth in 2005 of close to 2.5 per cent. Growth in the euro area had slowed since mid-2004 and expectations were that it would only reach 1.5 per cent or lower due to a fall in the growth rate exports and sluggish domestic demand. Japan recorded a 2.6 per cent growth rate in 2004, driven by consumption, non-residential investment and brisk export performance. Developing economies as a whole were expected to grow by 5 to 5.5 per cent in 2005, down from 6.4 per cent in 2004. Africa's growth rate was expected to expand from about 4.5 per cent in 2004 to close to 5 per cent in 2005, fuelled mainly by higher prices of primary commodity exports, particularly petroleum, greater political stability and improved agricultural performance. However, the overall figures for Africa masked considerable differences across countries, with growth rates ranging from a 31 per cent expansion in Chad to a contraction of over 8 per cent in Zimbabwe.

West Asia performed strongly in 2004, reaching 6.2 per cent growth, compared to 5.3 per cent the previous year, due to the massive windfall revenues in oil-exporting countries, which also benefited most of the other countries in the region through increased demand for their exports, capital inflows and workers' remittances. In East and South Asia, China and India acted as the second engine of worldwide growth. With 7.1 per cent growth in 2004, that region recorded its strongest expansion since the 1997 financial crisis, led by China. Preliminary evidence for 2005 in Latin America pointed to a continuation of economic growth, but at a slower pace, because of monetary tightening in the two biggest economies (Brazil and Mexico), slower growth in others (Argentina, Uruguay and Venezuela), less investment in natural resources and little new production capacities coming on stream in the Andean countries. Central America would maintain a moderate growth pace in 2005, while Caribbean countries, some of which were hit by natural disasters in the second half of 2004, should benefit from the recovery of tourism in 2005.

The report on the World Economic Situation and Prospects [Sales No. E.06.II.C.2], prepared jointly by the UN Department of Economic and Social Affairs and UNCTAD, stated that the slowdown in the world economic growth experienced in 2005 was expected to continue at a moderate pace in the near term. Part of that global slowdown resulted from the maturing of the cyclical recovery in a number of economies from recessions and the associated unwinding of earlier stimuli policy. Several exogenous shocks, including natural disasters and terrorist incidents, also left their imprint on the current pace of growth. In the developed economy region, the deceleration of GDP growth rates in 2005 was also due to the surge in energy prices. The still modest, but continuing, growth in Japan in 2005 pointed to an end of the long period of stagnation, while growth in the euro area remained weak. Recovery in Western Europe as a whole was weaker than expected, with GDP rising by 1.5 per cent. Growth in the economies in transition moderated in 2005, but still preserved its dynamism and continued to outpace that of the world economy. In the developing countries, economic growth slowed moderately, reaching 5.7 per cent in 2005, compared to 6.6 per cent in 2004. Africa was the exception to that general trend, with GDP estimated to grow by 5.2 per cent, roughly the same as in 2004, as the region was able to maintain its economic performance, owing to favourable conditions in agriculture and higher prices and volume for exports.

On a per capita basis, the income of developing countries was expected to grow by about 4 per cent in 2005 and 2006. Of the 107 developing countries for which data were available, 51 of them registered per capita growth in 2005 above the 3 per cent necessary for reducing poverty, 19 reached that benchmark, but 36 did not. Conversely, per capita GDP growth declined in 14 countries. Overall, the distribution of per capita GDP growth rates across developing countries in 2005 remained similar to that of 2004, with a large number of them having registered satisfactory growth, while others remained below the benchmark.

Human Development Report 2005

The Human Development Report 2005 [Sales No. 05.III.B.1], prepared by UNDP, discussed the question of international cooperation at the crossroads: aid, trade and security in an unequal world. It took stock of human development and the scale of the challenge facing the international community at the start of the 10-year countdown to 2015—the target date for achieving the MDGs. It found that human development was faltering in some key areas and inequalities were widening. The year 2005 marked a crossroad, during which Governments would be invited to make it the start of a "decade for development", put the investment and policies in place and adopt bold action plans, not only to meet the 2015 goals, but to overcome those inequalities and forge a new pattern of globalization.

The report analysed the problems facing international cooperation and identified solutions. It ranked 177 countries in its human development index by combining indicators of life expectancy, educational attainment and adjusted per capita income, among other factors. Of the countries listed, 57 were in the high human development category, 88 in the medium category and 32 in the low category.

UNDP consideration. In response to General Assembly resolution 57/264 [YUN 2002, p. 841], UNDP submitted to its Executive Board an update [DP/2005/19] on consultations that took place in the preparation of the Human Development Report.

In June [E/2005/35 (dec. 2005/30)], the Board took note of the update.

Development policy and public administration

Committee for Development Policy

The Committee for Development Policy (CDP), at its seventh session (New York, 14-18 March) [E/2005/33], considered three major themes: achieving the internationally agreed development goals, including the MDGs, as well as implementing the outcomes of the major UN conferences and summits: progress made, challenges and opportunities; reconstruction, development and sustainable peace in post-conflict countries; and improvements in the criteria for the identification of the least developed countries (LDCs), in preparation for the 2006 triennial review of the list of LDCs.

CDP believed that recent changes in both developing and developed countries held the promise that, given the right direction and effort, the MDGs were achievable. Success, particularly in sub-Saharan Africa, depended on responsible and accountable leadership, and on the ownership, planning and executing of the policies and programmes by the countries themselves. The capacity of those Governments to implement development policies and programmes needed to be strengthened, with international assistance. Considering the links between poverty and conflict, CDP called for special attention to be paid to the reintegration into society of people involved in violence, and proposed that a UN monitoring unit be set up to identify countries most at risk of conflict, and a UN post-conflict reconstruction facility created to serve as a prompt response instrument for donor coordination.

CDP also proposed "Coping with economic vulnerability and instability: national and international policy responses" as the theme for its 2006 session.

By decision 2005/306 of 27 July, the Economic and Social Council deferred consideration of the CDP report on its seventh session, with a view to concluding its deliberations before commencement of the Committee's eighth (2006) session.

Public administration

Committee of Experts on Public Administration. In March, the Economic and Social Council considered the recommendations contained in the report of the Committee of Experts on Public Administration on its third session [YUN 2004, p. 849].

On 31 March [meeting 4], it adopted resolution 2005/3 [draft: E/2005/L.8/Rev.1] without vote [agenda item 2].

Public administration and development

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolutions 2001/45 of 20 December 2001, 2002/40 of 19 December 2002 and 2003/60 of 25 July 2003,

Reaffirming the role of the public service in the attainment of national goals for social and economic development, including those contained in the United Nations Millennium Declaration,

Emphasizing the need to improve the efficiency, transparency and accountability of public administration,

Recognizing the important role played by public administration with respect to the planning and provision of public services and the positive contribution it can make to the creation of an enabling environment to promote sustainable development,

1. Takes note of the report of the Committee of Experts on Public Administration on its third session;

2. Reiterates that efficient, accountable, effective and transparent public administration, at both the national and international levels, has a key role to play in the implementation of the internationally agreed development goals, including those contained in the United Nations Millennium Declaration, and in that context stresses the need to strengthen national public sector administrative and managerial capacity-building, in particular in developing countries and countries with economies in transition;

3. Requests all Member States to abide by the principles of proper management of public affairs and public property, fairness, responsibility and equality before the law and the need to safeguard integrity and foster a culture of transparency, accountability and rejection of corruption at all levels and in all its forms, and in that regard urges Member States that have not yet done so to consider enacting laws to accomplish those ends;

4. Encourages the international community to increase financial, material and technical support to developing countries with a view to assisting them in their efforts to strengthen and revitalize their public administration institutions and managerial capacity through, inter alia, adopting methods, processes and systems that foster public participation in the governance and development process, and in that regard calls upon the United Nations system to provide further substantive technical and advisory support to developing countries, at their request, aimed at strengthening their public service delivery, ensuring national ownership in the development of these programmes;

5. Welcomes the initiative of the African countries to strengthen their institutional capacities and their public service through appropriate mechanisms or institutions, in particular the New Partnership for Africa's Development;

6. Encourages Member States to consider, as appropriate, the recommendations made by the Committee of Experts on Public Administration;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to focus the work of the Organization on public administration according to the recommendations contained in Economic and Social Council decision 2004/302 of 23 July 2004, General Assembly resolution 58/231 of 23 December 2003 and the report of the Committee of Experts on Public Administration on its third session, in particular those aimed at strengthening the human capital in the public sector, facilitating access to information and best practices, promoting good governance and accountability in public administration, at the national and international levels, and strengthening public administration institutions in developing countries, in particular the least developed countries;

8. Encourages the Secretary-General to continue his consultations with Member States on a regular basis on the nomination of members of the Committee, keeping in mind its resolution 2001/45 and the annex thereto;

9. Encourages the United Nations system and Member States to celebrate United Nations Public Service Day in a more visible manner, and invites Member States to nominate candidates for the United Nations Public Service Awards.

The Committee of Experts on Public Administration, at its fourth session (New York, 4-8 April) [E/2005/44], had before it two reports of the Secretary-General: on revitalizing public administration: strategic directions for the future [E/C.16/2005/2]; and on promoting and rewarding innovations and excellence for revitalizing public administration and service delivery: the United Nations public service awards [E/C.16/2005/5]. The Committee also had before it a Secretariat report on bottom-up approaches and methodologies to develop foundations and principles of public administration: the example of criteria-based organizational assessment [E/C.16/2005/3].

To revitalize public administration, the Committee recommended that the Council encourage countries to ratify, adopt and implement commitments and conventions on integrity, transparency and accountability, including those on corruption, crime and forced or child labour; support a wider concept of security to include human security and human rights; reaffirm and deepen the participatory processes of Government and civil society dialogue and inclusion, in order to implement the MDGs; and support the Secretariat in providing the analytical tools, research findings and advisory services to that end.

Regarding the bottom-up approach in developing sound public administration principles, the Committee reaffirmed that there was no good governance without good government.

The Committee decided to focus on defining the basic concepts relating to governance and public administration and to provide an in-depth assessment of such concepts, their evolution and their use and application. To ascertain the values and qualities of public administration in effective service delivery, the Committee requested the Secretariat to prepare a questionnaire to elicit views from the recipients of public services on what constituted a well-performing, efficient and quality-oriented public administration.

The Committee called for the strengthening of the United Nations Public Service Awards to improve the process of granting the awards and their content and for consideration to be given to adapting or expanding the criteria and/or categories of the awards to recognize the special difficulties faced by public administration in LDCs, crisis or post-conflict countries or countries with special development challenges. The Committee reviewed the activities of the United Nations Programme on Public Administration, Finance and Development and welcomed the celebration of the tenth anniversary of the General Assembly's resumed fiftieth session [YUN 1996, p. 750] on public administration and development.

On 27 July, the Council deferred consideration of the report of the Committee of Experts on Public Administration until its resumed substantive session (decision 2005/310).

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 21 October [meeting 41], the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 2005/55 [draft: E/2005/L.51] without vote [agenda item 13 (g)].

Report of the Committee of Experts on Public Administration on its fourth session and dates, venue and provisional agenda for the fifth session of the Committee

The Economic and Social Council,

Recognizing the importance of good governance, which flows, inter alia, from a harmonious and balanced relationship of the State, the private sector and civil society, and recognizing the importance of State capacity, including institutional and human resource capacity, in securing steady and sustainable progress towards internationally agreed commitments and objectives,

Recognizing also that all Member States, in particular the developing countries, can greatly benefit from peer learning and the sharing of experiences about innovation and initiative in the public sector,

Recognizing further that the United Nations Public Service Award is an effective means of rewarding outstanding achievements in the area of public administration and encouraging their replication,

Recognizing recent regional initiatives that have led to successful actions to promote integrity, transparency and accountability,

Underscoring the importance of public administration as a tool to support progress on development and human rights in line with the United Nations Millennium Declaration,

Reaffirming the need to deepen the participatory processes of government to ensure citizens' engagement to achieve the internationally agreed development goals, including those contained in the Millennium Declaration, and to encourage the Secretariat to provide the analytical tools, research capacity and advisory services to that end,

1. Takes note of the report of the Committee of Experts on Public Administration on its fourth session;
2. Encourages countries to ratify, adopt and implement the relevant commitments and conventions in the areas of integrity, transparency and accountability, including those related to the prevention of corrupt policies and practices;
3. Requests the Committee of Experts on Public Administration to deepen its analysis of the relationships between State capacity, public administration and development by identifying, for the benefit of interested countries, successful examples, options and solutions in the area of public administration that have facilitated the achievement of the internationally agreed development goals, including those contained in the United Nations Millennium Declaration;
4. Requests the Secretary-General to disseminate and promulgate in a more systematic and coherent way innovations and successful practices recognized by the United Nations Public Service Award;
5. Also requests the Secretary-General to strengthen the capacity and the reach of the United Nations Online Network in Public Administration and Finance to serve as a vehicle for sharing knowledge, innovation and practices in public administration, in particular by associating more partner organizations from developing countries with the network;
6. Approves the convening of the fifth session of the Committee of Experts on Public Administration in New York from 3 to 7 April 2006;
7. Also approves the following agenda for the fifth session of the Committee:
   1. Innovation in public administration for the achievement of the internationally agreed development goals, including those contained in the Millennium Declaration;
   2. Searching for a bottom-up approach and methodologies for developing foundations and principles of sound public administration (continued from the fourth session);
   3. Review of the work programme of the United Nations Programme in Public Administration, Finance and Development.

Report of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 59/55 [YUN 2004, p. 851], the Secretary-General submitted a July report on public administration and development [A/60/114], which highlighted the development challenges facing Member States, and, based on responses from 40 countries to a questionnaire submitted to Governments reviewed the measures adopted to revitalize public administration systems. The future of public administration, it said, lay in instituting measures to reconfigure public service organizations into open, participative, knowledge-sharing, innovating and results-oriented service-delivery systems, and it stressed the need to strengthen the UN's role in public administration.

Future directions in revitalizing public administration should focus on consolidating the gains of the reform and revitalization measures instituted in the past 10 years, particularly in underscoring the role of public administration in development, to strengthen public administration knowledge-sharing networks and to invest in institutional capacity-building and human resource development. To ensure that the study of public administration did not lag too far behind developments in practice, a new programme of action should be launched, aimed at rehabilitating public administration education and training institutions.

The report concluded that the coming years would be crucial for public administration systems worldwide. Besides contributing to efforts to alleviate poverty, they would be required to create conditions for wealth creation and broad development objectives.

The United Nations had a key role to play in helping Member States meet the challenges outlined by: continuing to promote the adoption of public administration principles and standards; sharing information, knowledge and successful experiences by organizing global and regional forums and expanding the UN Online Network in Public Administration; and fostering horizontal exchanges between and among administrations. The Organization's role also included strengthening the UN Public Service Awards mechanism; launching a global initiative to enhance research, teaching and training in public administration schools and institutes; providing specialized technical assistance to developing countries to support their public administration revitalization; and strengthening partnerships with other organizations to maximize the impact of its activities.

Transmitted to the Secretary-General by the Republic of Korea was the text of the Seoul Declaration on Participatory and Transparent Governance [A/60/391], adopted at the Sixth Global Forum on Reinventing Government (Seoul, Republic of Korea, 24-27 May). The Forum welcomed the upcoming launch by the Republic of Korea, together with DESA, of a feasibility study on establishing the United Nations Governance Centre in Seoul, to serve as a regional and international focal point for advancing research, disseminating information and providing training courses on reinventing government, as well as that Government's commitment to establishing a portal site for online sharing of information on innovations and best practices on good governance. The seventh Forum, to be hosted by the United Nations in 2007, would highlight the importance of improving public administration in order to achieve the internationally agreed development goals, including the MDGs.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 30 November [meeting 58], the General Assembly adopted resolution 60/34 [draft: A/60/L.24 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 41].

Public administration and development

The General Assembly,

Recalling all pertinent resolutions, in particular its resolution 59/55 of 2 December 2004 on public administration and development,

Acknowledging the tenth anniversary of the resumed fiftieth session of the General Assembly, on public administration and development, held in April 1996,

Recognizing the important role played by public administration with respect to the planning and provision of public services and the positive contribution it can make to the creation of an enabling environment to promote sustainable development,

Emphasizing the need to improve the efficiency, transparency and accountability of public administration,

Reiterating that efficient, accountable, effective and transparent public administration, at both the national and international levels, has a key role to play in the implementation of the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals,

Noting that the capacities of public institutions and human resources will play a vital role in the ability of Member States to effectively achieve the Millennium Development Goals,

Acknowledging, further, that measures that increase participatory and transparent governance will help Member States to build and strengthen state capacity to address development and other challenges,

Stressing the importance of participatory public administration responsive to the needs of the people, and good governance,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Emphasizes that good governance and transparent and accountable public administration at the national and international levels will contribute to the achievement of the Millennium Development Goals;

3. Recognizes the importance of the efforts of Governments to foster public participation in governance and development processes through cooperating with all stakeholders in their societies, including the private sector, civil society and non-governmental organizations;

4. Stresses that national efforts to improve governance, public administration and institutional and managerial capacities are essential to enable Member States to achieve the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals, and encourages Member States to increase their efforts in this regard;

5. Encourages the international community to increase support for national efforts, including those of developing countries, in public administration, including through North-South cooperation, South-South cooperation and public-private partnership to, inter alia, provide financial, educational, material and technical support and cooperation as appropriate;

6. Requests all Member States to abide by the principles of proper management of public affairs and public property, fairness, responsibility and equality before the law and the need to safeguard integrity and foster a culture of transparency, accountability and rejection of corruption at all levels and in all its forms, consistent with the United Nations Convention against Corruption, and in that regard urges Member States that have not yet done so to consider enacting laws to accomplish those ends;

7. Agrees that the United Nations should promote innovation in government and public administration, and stresses the importance of making more effective use of United Nations Public Service Day and the United Nations Public Service Awards in the process of revitalizing public administration by building a culture of innovation, partnership and responsiveness;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to facilitate, through the United Nations Online Network in Public Administration and Finance, the dissemination of information, knowledge and valuable practices in public administration;

9. Stresses the valuable contribution that the Global Forum on Reinventing Government has made to the exchange of lessons learned in public administration reform;

10. Takes note with appreciation of the Seoul Declaration on Participatory and Transparent Governance, which was adopted by the participants in the sixth Global Forum on Reinventing Government, held in Seoul from 24 to 27 May 2005;

11. Expresses its appreciation to the Government of the Republic of Korea for hosting the sixth Global Forum on Reinventing Government;

12. Emphasizes the importance of the seventh Global Forum on Reinventing Government, to be hosted by the United Nations in 2007, which will highlight the importance of improving public administration in order to achieve the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals;

13. Urges the United Nations to maximize the effectiveness of its activities in the field of public administration and development by strengthening partnerships with other international and regional organizations, as appropriate, and by promoting the use of information and communications technology as a tool for development;

14. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to the General Assembly on the implementation of the present resolution and the result of the seventh Global Forum on Reinventing Government, to be held in 2007.

Groups of countries in special situations

By decision 60/544 of 22 December, the General Assembly took note of the report of the Second Committee on groups of countries in special situations [A/60/491 & Corr.1].

Least developed countries

The special problems of the officially designated least developed countries (LDCs) were considered in several UN forums in 2005, particularly in connection with the implementation of the Brussels Declaration and Programme of Action for LDCs for the Decade 2001-2010, adopted at the Third United Nations Conference on LDCs in 2001 [YUN 2001, p. 770] and endorsed by the General Assembly in resolution 55/279 in July of that year [ibid., p. 771]. World leaders, in their 2005 World Summit Outcome document, reaffirmed their commitment to addressing the special needs of LDCs (resolution 60/1) (see p. 48), and urged all countries and the UN system to speedily meet the goals and targets of the Brussels Programme, particularly the official development assistance target. The Committee for Development Policy (CDP) and UNCTAD also considered LDC-related issues.

LDC list

The number of countries officially designated as LDCs remained at 50. Although Cape Verde and Maldives were recommended for graduation from the list, the process would take place over a three-year period, as decided by the General Assembly in resolution 59/209 [YUN 2004, p. 854]. With regard to Maldives, the Assembly, in resolution 60/33 (see below), deferred, until January 2008, the start of the three-year transition period for its graduation from the list of LDCs, following the destruction and damage caused by the 26 December 2004 Indian Ocean tsunami to the country's social and economic infrastructure and disruption of its development plans.

The full list of LDCs comprised: Afghanistan, Angola, Bangladesh, Benin, Bhutan, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Cambodia, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Comoros, Democratic Republic of the Congo, Djibouti, Equatorial Guinea, Eritrea, Ethiopia, Gambia, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Haiti, Kiribati, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lesotho, Liberia, Madagascar, Malawi, Maldives, Mali, Mauritania, Mozambique, Myanmar, Nepal, Niger, Rwanda, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Sudan, Timor-Leste, Togo, Tuvalu, Uganda, United Republic of Tanzania, Vanuatu, Yemen, Zambia.

Smooth transition strategy

CDP consideration. At its seventh session (New York, 14-18 March) [E/2005/33], CDP, which was responsible for adding countries to or graduating them from the LDC list, considered the situation in Maldives—one of two countries it had recommended, in resolution 2004/67 [YUN 2004, p. 855], to be graduated from the LDC category—in the light of the December 2004 Indian Ocean tsunami [ibid., p. 952], which had affected that country. The Committee, in turn, recommended to the Economic and Social Council that, in the case of Maldives, the consultative mechanism envisaged in General Assembly resolution 59/209 [YUN 2004, p. 854] be organized to consider the exceptional circumstances of reconstruction in the aftermath of the tsunami.

The Committee agreed that flexibility should be exercised in the application of the three criteria for the identification of LDCs: gross national income (GNI) per capita; the human assets index (HAI); and the economic vulnerability index (EVI). In determining the eligibility of countries for inclusion or graduation, the Committee suggested considering simultaneously two structural handicaps (HAI and EVI), or even the three criteria in such a way as to take into account some degree of substitutability among them and the possible combined impact of the handicaps as captured by HAI and EVI.

The Committee agreed that, if the GNI of a LDC increased to an exceptionally high level (at least twice the threshold level), the country could be considered eligible for graduation even if it did not reach the graduation threshold for either of the other two criteria, recognizing that the sustainability of the higher income level had to be taken into account. It decided to replace the average daily calorie consumption per capita by the percentage of the population undernourished.

Re-emphasizing that the size of population was a major indicator of economic vulnerability, the Committee agreed to include the proportion of the population displaced by natural disasters, together with the instability of the agricultural production, in the EVI, and to include an indicator of remoteness to reflect likely high transportation costs and isolation from world markets and to replace the share of manufacturing and modern services by the share of agriculture, forestry and fisheries.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 30 November [meeting 58], the General Assembly adopted resolution 60/33 [draft: A/60/L.21] without vote [agenda item 41].

Deferral of the smooth transition period for the graduation of Maldives from the list of least developed countries

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 59/209 and 59/210 of 20 December 2004,

Reaffirming its commitment to the process for graduation from the list of least developed countries and to the smooth transition strategy for countries graduating from that list,

Giving due consideration to the unique destruction and damage caused by the Indian Ocean tsunami of 26 December 2004 to the social and economic infrastructure of Maldives, the homes of thousands of individuals and their livelihoods, the setback to the economy of the country and the disruption of its development plans,

Inviting the international community to provide comprehensive support for the rehabilitation, reconstruction and risk reduction efforts being undertaken by the Government of Maldives,

1. Expresses its deep concern at the consequences of the Indian Ocean tsunami on Maldives;

2. Decides to defer, in the case of Maldives, for a period of three years until 1 January 2008, the commencement of the three-year smooth transition period for graduation from the list of least developed countries;

3. Underlines the unique nature of this decision, taken in the context of the unprecedented natural disaster caused by the tsunami of 26 December 2004.

Programme of Action (2001-2010)

In response to Economic and Social Council resolution 2004/65 [YUN 2004, p. 856] and General Assembly resolution 59/244 [ibid., p. 857], the Secretary-General submitted in May the first results-oriented annual progress report [A/60/81-E/2005/68] on the implementation of the Programme of Action for the LDCs for the Decade 2001-2010.

According to the report, despite significant progress of some LDCs in meeting specific goals, progress, as a group, in meeting most of the goals had been slow and uneven, and insufficient to achieve the Brussels Programme of Action goals and its objective of eradicating poverty and achieving sustained growth and sustainable development by 2010. If current conditions persisted, the number of people living in extreme poverty might increase from 334 million in 2000 to 471 million in 2015. Three major obstacles—country ownership, capacity and resources—continued to hamper implementation of the Programme by LDCs, and the lack of statistical data jeopardized monitoring and reporting on the national level. To strengthen ownership, LDCs needed to prepare a results-based poverty reduction strategy in which their public actions and donor support were aimed at achieving the Programme's goals. Addressing the challenges of capacity-building and resources mobilization required strengthening of the partnership between LDCs and their development partners. Achieving the Programme's goals by 2010 also required developed countries to fulfil their commitments on ODA, debt relief, trade and technology transfer. Development partners should integrate the Brussels Programme into their development policies, strategies and programmes, and UN country teams should support the preparation and implementation of national development strategies based on the Brussels Programme.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 27 July [meeting 40], the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 2005/44 [draft: E/2005/L.46] without vote [agenda item 6 (b)].

Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the Decade 2001-2010

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling the Brussels Declaration and the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the Decade 2001-2010,

Recalling also its decision 2001/320 of 24 October 2001, in which it decided to establish, under the regular agenda item entitled "Integrated and coordinated implementation of and follow-up to the major United Nations conferences and summits", a regular sub-item entitled "Review and coordination of the implementation of the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the Decade 2001-2010",

Recalling further its resolution 2003/17 of 22 July 2003 and its decision 2003/287 of 24 July 2003, as well as the ministerial declaration of the high-level segment of its substantive session of 2004 on the theme "Resources mobilization and enabling environment for poverty eradication in the context of the implementation of the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the Decade 2001-2010",

Recalling paragraph 5 of General Assembly resolution 59/244 of 22 December 2004, in which the Assembly decided to hold the comprehensive review of the Programme of Action in 2006 during its sixty-first session, in accordance with paragraph 114 of the Programme of Action, and paragraph 6 of the same resolution, in which the Assembly decided to consider at its sixtieth session the modalities for conducting such a comprehensive review,

1. Takes note of the annual progress report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the Decade 2001-2010;

2. Expresses its deep concern over the insufficient progress achieved in the implementation of the Programme of Action, and stresses the need to address areas of weakness in its implementation;

3. Urges the least developed countries and their bilateral and multilateral development partners to undertake increased efforts and to adopt measures rapidly, with a view to meeting the goals and targets of the Programme of Action in a timely manner;

4. Urges the least developed countries that have not yet done so to develop, adopt and implement national development strategies to achieve the goals and targets of the Programme of Action;

5. Calls upon development partners to assist the least developed countries in the development and implementation of their national development strategies based on the goals and targets of the Programme of Action;

6. Also calls upon development partners, including organizations of the United Nations system, to provide assistance to national statistical bodies of the least developed countries in order to strengthen monitoring and reporting on the implementation of the Programme of Action;

7. Calls upon the least developed countries, in preparation for the comprehensive review in 2006 by the General Assembly at its sixty-first session, to undertake their national reviews on the implementation of the Programme of Action, with a particular focus on progress, obstacles, constraints, actions and measures necessary to further the implementation of the Programme of Action;

8. Requests United Nations resident coordinators to assist the least developed countries in undertaking their national reviews in preparation for the comprehensive review of the implementation of the Programme of Action by the General Assembly at its sixty-first session;

9. Requests the regional commissions to assist the least developed countries in undertaking regional reviews of the implementation of the Programme of Action in their respective regions in preparation for the comprehensive review in 2006 by the General Assembly at its sixty-first session;

10. Encourages the organizations of the United Nations system and other international organizations to undertake, in preparation for the comprehensive review in 2006 by the General Assembly at its sixty-first session, sectoral reviews of the implementation of the Programme of Action by their governing bodies;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to include least developed country issues in all relevant reports in the economic, social and related fields, in particular those that analyse global development trends, such as World Economic Situation and Prospects, to ensure the follow-up of their development in a broader context;

12. Reiterates the critical importance of the participation of Government representatives from the least developed countries in the annual review of the Programme of Action by the Economic and Social Council, welcomes in this regard the establishment by the Secretary-General of a specific trust fund for the travel and daily subsistence allowance of two representatives from each least developed country to attend the annual review of the Programme of Action, calls upon Member States to contribute generously to that trust fund, and requests the Secretary-General to intensify his efforts to mobilize the resources necessary in order to ensure that the trust fund is adequately resourced;

13. Calls upon the Secretary-General, while stressing the central role of the Economic and Social Council in the coordination of actions in the United Nations system for the implementation of the Programme of Action, to take appropriate measures to strengthen the efficiency and effectiveness of the Office of the High Representative for the Least Developed Countries, Landlocked Developing Countries and Small Island Developing States so that it can carry out its functions, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 56/227 of 24 December 2001;

14. Requests the Secretary-General to submit an annual progress report on the implementation of the Programme of Action in a more analytical and results-oriented way, by placing emphasis on the progress achieved by the least developed countries and their development partners in its implementation.

UNDP action. The Executive Board of the United Nations Development Programme/United Nations Population Fund, at its annual session (New York, 13-24 June), adopted decision [E/2005/35 (dec. 2005/29)], in which it welcomed the United Nations Capital Development Fund business plan, 2005-2007: Investing in the LDCs to achieve the MDGs.

Trade and Development Board action. The Trade and Development Board (TDB) of UNCTAD, at its sixtieth session (Geneva, 3-14 October) [A/60/15 (Part IV)], adopted agreed conclusions [A/60/15 (agreed conclusion 482 (LII))] on the review of progress in the implementation of the Programme of Action for the LDCs. The Board encouraged UNCTAD to further enhance the delivery and effectiveness of its technical cooperation and capacity-building activities so as to improve their development impact on the economies of LDCs. It encouraged the UNCTAD secretariat to implement fully the relevant decisions of the São Paulo Consensus, adopted by UNCTAD XI [YUN 2004, p. 955], including the annualization of the Least Developed Countries Report, and to further enhance efforts in favour of LDCs, landlocked and transit developing countries and small island developing States. It called on the secretariat to make available adequate resources for that purpose and to seek voluntary contributions. The secretariat should contribute also to the 2006 General Assembly comprehensive midterm review of progress in the implementation of the Programme of Action and the related preparatory process. TDB called for intensified international support measures to enable LDCs to enhance their productive capacities, diversify their economies into non-preference-dependent activities, and improve their utilization of the market access preferences available to them. It emphasized the need for continued contributions, broader donor participation to ensure effective and efficient delivery and implementation of existing and new technical assistance programmes and projects in those countries.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 23 December [meeting 69], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/60/491/Add.1], adopted resolution 60/228 without vote [agenda item 55 (a)].

Third United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries: high-level meeting on the midterm comprehensive global review of the implementation of the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the Decade 2001-2010

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 55/279 of 12 July 2001, in which it endorsed the Brussels Declaration and the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the Decade 2001-2010, and its resolutions 57/276 of 20 December 2002, 58/228 of 23 December 2003 and 59/244 of 22 December 2004 on the Third United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries,

Recalling also its resolution 57/270 B of 23 June 2003 on the integrated and coordinated implementation of and follow-up to the outcomes of the major United Nations conferences and summits in the economic and social fields,

Reaffirming its resolution 55/2 of 8 September 2000, by which it adopted the United Nations Millennium Declaration, in particular paragraph 15 thereof, in which the Heads of State and Government undertook to address the special needs of the least developed countries,

Recognizing the importance of the review of the progress achieved towards meeting the goals and targets contained in the Programme of Action, as well as other internationally agreed development goals, including those contained in the Millennium Declaration, as they address the special needs of the least developed countries,

Taking note of the ministerial declaration of the high-level segment of the 2004 substantive session of the Economic and Social Council on the theme "Resources mobilization and enabling environment for poverty eradication in the context of the implementation of the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the Decade 2001-2010",

Recalling paragraph 5 of its resolution 59/244, in which it decided to hold the midterm comprehensive global review of the Programme of Action in 2006 during its sixty-first session, in accordance with paragraph 114 of the Programme of Action, and recalling also paragraph 6 of the same resolution, in which it decided to consider at its sixtieth session the modalities for conducting such a midterm comprehensive review,

Taking note of Economic and Social Council resolution 2005/44 of 27 July 2005 on the implementation of the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the Decade 2001-2010,

Recalling the 2005 World Summit Outcome,

Taking note of the annual progress report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the Decade 2001-2010,

1. Reaffirms the commitment to address the special needs of the least developed countries, and urges all countries and all relevant organizations of the United Nations system, including the Bretton Woods institutions, to make concerted efforts and adopt speedy measures for meeting in a timely manner the goals and targets of the Brussels Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the Decade 2001-2010;

2. Expresses its deep concern over the insufficient implementation of the Programme of Action, and stresses the need to address the areas of weakness in its implementation;

3. Stresses that progress in the implementation of the Programme of Action will require effective implementation of national policies and priorities for the economic growth and sustainable development of the least developed countries, as well as strong and committed partnership between those countries and their development partners;

4. Reiterates its request to the Secretary-General to ensure at the secretariat level the full mobilization and coordination of all parts of the United Nations system to facilitate coordinated implementation as well as coherence in the follow-up to the Programme of Action at the national, subregional, regional and global levels, and in this context requests the Secretary-General to engage the United Nations Development Group, consistent with the respective mandates of its members, in the coordinated implementation of the Programme of Action;

5. Decides to convene a high-level meeting on the midterm comprehensive global review of the implementation of the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the Decade 2001-2010, in New York on 19 and 20 September 2006, to be chaired by the President of the General Assembly;

6. Decides also to convene a three-day preparatory meeting of experts during the sixtieth session of the General Assembly, preferably on 4, 5 and 6 September 2006, for the midterm comprehensive global review in order to propose, as appropriate, measures to advance the process of the implementation of the Programme of Action;

7. Stresses that the midterm comprehensive global review should assess the progress made in the implementation of commitments and provide the occasion to reaffirm the goals and objectives agreed upon at the Third United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries, to share best practices and lessons learned, and to identify obstacles and constraints encountered, actions and initiatives to overcome them and important measures for the further implementation of the Programme of Action, as well as new challenges and emerging issues;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare, for consideration by Member States, a note on the organizational aspects of the high-level meeting;

9. Requests the regional commissions to assist the least developed countries in undertaking regional reviews of the implementation of the Programme of Action in their respective regions in preparation for the midterm comprehensive global review in 2006 by the General Assembly at its sixty-first session;

10. Emphasizes that the midterm comprehensive global review of the implementation of the Programme of Action is of particular significance as it will provide an opportunity for the international community, in particular the least developed countries and their development partners, to discuss the implementation of the Programme of Action with a view to ensuring support for the least developed countries in all areas, in order to ensure the timely, effective and full implementation of the Programme of Action during the remainder of the decade;

11. Requests the organs, organizations, funds and programmes of the United Nations system to undertake sectoral appraisals in their respective fields of competence on the implementation of the Programme of Action, with special emphasis on areas where implementation has remained insufficient, and to make proposals for new measures as necessary, as further inputs to the preparation for the midterm comprehensive global review, and in this regard affirms that appropriate inter-agency meetings should be convened to ensure the full mobilization and coordination of the entire United Nations system, including the Bretton Woods institutions;

12. Recognizes the importance of the contribution of civil society actors in the preparatory process, and in this regard requests the President of the General Assembly to organize, within existing resources, one-day informal interactive hearings in New York with representatives of non-governmental organizations, civil society organizations and the private sector, as an input to the midterm comprehensive global review;

13. Calls upon all Member States to take a positive interest in the preparation of the midterm comprehensive global review and to be represented at a high level in the plenary meeting of the review, with a view to reaching a successful outcome;

14. Emphasizes the importance of country-level preparations as a critical input to the preparatory process for the midterm comprehensive global review and to the implementation of and follow-up to its outcome, and in this context calls upon the least developed countries to undertake their national reviews on the implementation of the Programme of Action, with a particular focus on progress, obstacles, constraints, actions and measures necessary to further its implementation;

15. Requests the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme, in his capacity as Chairman of the United Nations Development Group, to ensure the full involvement of the United Nations resident coordinators and country teams in the least developed countries in the preparations for the midterm comprehensive global review, in particular at the country level, including in the preparation of national reports;

16. Requests the Secretary-General to submit, in a timely manner, a comprehensive report for the midterm comprehensive global review;

17. Reiterates the critical importance of the full and effective participation of the least developed countries in the midterm comprehensive global review of the Programme of Action at the national, regional and global levels, stresses that adequate resources should be provided, and in this regard requests the Secretary-General to mobilize extrabudgetary resources in order to cover the cost of participation of two government representatives from each least developed country in the process of the high-level meeting on the midterm comprehensive global review;

18. Welcomes the pledges already made by the United Nations Development Programme and the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to support the preparatory process, and calls upon Member States and invites other multilateral development partners, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and the private sector to make voluntary contributions to the trust fund established by the Secretary-General in accordance with resolution 59/244;

19. Requests the Secretary-General, with the assistance of concerned organizations and bodies of the United Nations, including the Department of Public Information of the Secretariat, to take the necessary measures to intensify their public information efforts and other relevant initiatives to enhance public awareness in favour of the midterm comprehensive global review;

20. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its sixty-second session a report on the implementation of the present resolution.

The Secretary-General, in December [A/C.5/60/24], informed the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee that a total of $254,000 would be required for the activities set out in resolution 60/228 (above).

Island developing States

International Meeting on Implementation of Programme of Action for SIDS

The International Meeting to Review the Implementation of the 1994 Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island States (SIDS) [YUN 1994, p. 783] (Barbados Programme of Action) (Port Louis, Mauritius, 10-14 January) [A/CONF.207/11] adopted the Mauritius Declaration and the Mauritius Strategy for the Further Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States. The Meeting assessed the progress achieved in implementing the Barbados Programme of Action and considered how best to invest future effort for a more effective implementation. It was attended by political leaders from 120 countries and representatives of intergovernmental organizations, NGOs and the private sector. Two round tables, convened during the high-level segment, discussed the way forward in mobilizing resources for the further implementation of the Barbados Programme of Action, and building capacity for the sustainable development of SIDS. Five panels, held from 10 to12 January, discussed issues confronting small island developing States: environmental vulnerabilities; special challenges in trade and economic development; the role of culture in their sustainable development; addressing the emerging trends and social challenges for their sustainable development; and resilience-building. There were also parallel and associated activities by NGOs and other major groups, as well as partnerships activities.

Mauritius Declaration and Mauritius Strategy for Implementation

The Mauritius Declaration reaffirmed the continued validity of the Barbados Programme of Action as the blueprint for action in support of SIDS, while taking account of new and emerging issues, and invoked renewed political commitment to support the sustainable development strategies of SIDS through technical and financial cooperation, regional and interregional institutional assistance and an improved international enabling environment. The importance of technology transfer, capacity-building and human resources development to building the resilience of SIDS and to advancing implementation of the Programme of Action was also recognized.

Additionally, the Declaration reaffirmed the commitment to implementing the outcomes of major UN conferences and summits as they related to the sustainable development of SIDS. Recognizing the importance of international trade, it called on international institutions to pay attention to the structural disadvantages and vulnerabilities of those States, and to focus on their trade- and development-related needs and concerns to enable them to integrate fully into the multilateral trading system.

The Declaration reaffirmed the commitment to conservation and the sustainable use of island and marine biodiversity; recognized the important roles of women, youth and civil society in promoting sustainable development; and reaffirmed the commitment to create a world fit for children and to assist in their protection and minimize the impacts of natural disasters and environmental degradation on them. It also recognized the importance of the cultural identity of people in SIDS and the increasing incidence of health issues, particularly HIV/AIDS, which had a disproportionate impact on women and youth in SIDS, and committed States to ensuring that the health needs of SIDS were addressed in all regional and global programmes. Governments committed themselves to the timely implementation of the Mauritius Strategy and to advancing implementation of the Barbados Programme of Action.

The preamble to the Mauritius Strategy for the Further Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States indicated that the Programme of Action remained the blueprint for SIDS and the international community to address national and regional sustainable development. Those States acknowledged that sustainable development was primarily a national responsibility, but for them to succeed, the principles contained in the Rio Declaration on Environment and Development, adopted at the 1992 International Conference on Environment and Development [YUN 1992, p. 670], should be given specific expression. There was a need for strengthened cooperation and partnership in support of sustainable development of SIDS at all levels, which should be broad-based to ensure the involvement and participation of relevant stakeholders. In order to complement national and regional development efforts of SIDS, there was an urgent need to enhance coherence, governance and consistency of the international monetary, financial and trading systems. Implementation of the sustainable development agenda for SIDS should proceed, notwithstanding the current emphasis on international security. In that regard, the international community acknowledged the increased financial and administrative obligation placed on those States as part of the global fight against terrorism. The importance of culture, the role of youth and the promotion of gender equality in their sustainable development were also recognized.

The Mauritius Strategy, responding to the need for a more focused approach to implementation of the Programme of Action, identified critical areas for further attention within the established sectors, and highlighted new and emerging issues that had to be addressed if more effective implementation was to be achieved. Those issues included: HIV/AIDS and health-related issues; security concerns; the impact of the erosion of trade preferences on SIDS and the consequent need for improved market access and an international trading system that promoted economic growth, employment and development for all; support for information communication technology development; and the importance of protecting cultural diversity and promoting cultural industries as a vital component of sustainable development strategy in SIDS. Beyond specific sectoral issues identified for continued attention, the Strategy promoted the fullest participation of civil society and other stakeholder groups, advocated greater South-South and SIDS cooperation, and articulated a range of cross-sectoral measures, regional and interregional mechanisms and strategies for enhanced inter-institutional consultation and coordination, particularly within the UN system, as essential tools to be employed in strengthening implementation of the Programme of Action.

More specifically, the Strategy set out the commitments made by SIDS and the actions they needed to take, with international support, in 19 areas: climate change and sea-level rise; natural and environmental disasters; management of wastes; coastal and marine resources; freshwater resources; land resources; energy resources; tourism resources; biodiversity resources; transport and communication; science and technology; graduation from LDC status; trade: globalization and trade liberalization; sustainable capacity development and education for sustainable development; sustainable production and consumption; national and regional enabling environments; health; knowledge management and information for decision-making; and culture.

Defining the UN's role in the further implementation of the Programme of Action, the Strategy declared that the Commission on Sustainable Development would continue to be the primary intergovernmental body responsible for the implementation of and follow-up to the commitments related to SIDS. Other UN system organs, programmes and organizations should coordinate and rationalize their work in implementing the Strategy. The Secretary-General was requested to fully mobilize and coordinate the agencies, funds and programmes of the UN system to further mainstream SIDS issues to facilitate coordinated implementation of the follow-up to the Programme of Action at the national, regional, subregional and global levels. He should ensure that DESA continued to provide substantive support and advisory services to those States for the further implementation of the Programme of Action and the Johannesburg Plan of Implementation, and that the Office of the High Representative for the Least Developed Countries, Landlocked Developing Countries and Small Island Developing States continue to mobilize international support and resources for the further implementation of the Programme of Action.

Communication. On 14 February, Mauritius transmitted to the Secretary-General the communiqué adopted at the Fifth Summit of the Heads of State and Government of the Alliance of Small Island States (Port Louis, Mauritius, 12 January), requesting that it be annexed to the report of the International Meeting [A/CONF.207/10].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 July [meeting 113], the General Assembly adopted resolution 59/311 [draft: A/59/L.63 and Add.1] without vote [agenda item 85 (b)].

International Meeting to Review the Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the Declaration of Barbados and the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States, adopted by the Global Conference on the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States, and recalling its resolution 49/122 of 19 December 1994 on the Global Conference,

Recalling Agenda 21, the Johannesburg Declaration on Sustainable Development and the Plan of Implementation of the World Summit on Sustainable Development ("Johannesburg Plan of Implementation"), in particular the emphasis given to small island developing States in chapter VII of the Johannesburg Plan of Implementation, as well as the references to the specific needs of small island developing States contained in the United Nations Millennium Declaration and the Monterrey Consensus of the International Conference on Financing for Development,

Welcoming the adoption by the International Meeting to Review the Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States, held in Port Louis from 10 to 14 January 2005, of the Mauritius Declaration and the Mauritius Strategy for the Further Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States ("Mauritius Strategy for Implementation") on 14 January 2005,

Expressing its satisfaction that the International Meeting and its preparatory process provided for the active participation of all States Members of the United Nations and members of the specialized agencies, observers and various intergovernmental organizations, including the funds, programmes and specialized agencies of the United Nations system, as well as the major groups representing all the regions of the world,

Noting with interest the partnership initiatives announced by some Governments, international organizations and major groups at the International Meeting, as well as those already undertaken,

Welcoming the decision taken by the Commission on Sustainable Development at its thirteenth session to devote one day of the review sessions of the Commission to the review of the implementation of the Mauritius Strategy for Implementation, focusing on that year's thematic cluster, as well as on any new developments in the sustainable development efforts of small island developing States using existing modalities, and to request the Secretary-General to submit a report to the Commission at its review session on progress and obstacles to sustainable development in small island developing States, including recommendations to enhance the implementation of the Mauritius Strategy,

Recognizing that it is crucial to mobilize resources from all sources for the effective implementation of the Mauritius Strategy for Implementation,

Expressing its profound gratitude to the Government and the people of Mauritius for the excellent arrangements made for hosting the International Meeting, for the hospitality extended to the participants and for the facilities, staff and services placed at their disposal,

Expressing its appreciation to the Secretariat of the United Nations, including the Secretary-General of the International Meeting, the specialized agencies, the United Nations regional commissions, funds and programmes, and donor countries as well as those countries that contributed to the Trust Fund for Small Island Developing States, for their contribution to the success of the International Meeting,

Also expressing its appreciation to the Facilitator of the outcomes of the International Meeting,

Having considered the report of the International Meeting,

1. Takes note of the note by the Secretary-General transmitting the report of the International Meeting to Review the Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States;

2. Endorses the Mauritius Declaration and the Mauritius Strategy for the Further Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States;

3. Welcomes the renewed commitment of the international community to the implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States;

4. Urges Governments and all relevant international and regional organizations, United Nations funds and programmes, the specialized agencies, regional economic commissions, international financial institutions, the Global Environment Facility, as well as other intergovernmental organizations and major groups, to take timely actions to ensure the effective implementation of and follow-up to the Mauritius Declaration and the Mauritius Strategy for Implementation;

5. Calls for the full and effective implementation of the commitments, programmes and targets adopted at the International Meeting and, to this end, for fulfilment of the provisions for the means of implementation, as contained in the Mauritius Strategy for Implementation;

6. Encourages the implementation of partnership initiatives, within the framework of the Mauritius Strategy for Implementation, in support of the sustainable development of small island developing States;

7. Recommends that the outcomes of the International Meeting be taken into consideration at the High-level Plenary Meeting of the General Assembly, to be held from 14 to 16 September 2005, and in its preparatory process;

8. Requests the Secretary-General, through the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the Secretariat, to articulate a plan with recommendations for action and proposed activities for the coordinated and coherent implementation of the Mauritius Strategy for Implementation by the relevant United Nations bodies, the specialized agencies, regional commissions and other organizations of the United Nations system within their respective mandates, and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its sixtieth session;

9. Supports the convening by the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of regional meetings of small island developing States in 2005 or 2006, in partnership with relevant regional organizations and stakeholders, for the follow-up to the implementation of the Mauritius Strategy for Implementation, funded from voluntary contributions, and in this regard encourages Member States to contribute to the Trust Fund for Small Island Developing States;

10. Reiterates its request to the Secretary-General to strengthen the Small Island Developing States Unit of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs, as called for in its resolutions 57/262 of 20 December 2002, 58/213 A of 23 December 2003 and 59/229 of 22 December 2004 and taking into account paragraph 7 of the present resolution, and urges the Secretary-General to ensure that the Unit is sufficiently and sustainably staffed without delay to undertake its broad range of mandated functions with a view to facilitating the full and effective implementation of the Mauritius Strategy for Implementation, within existing resources, including by redeploying resources;

11. Requests the relevant agencies of the United Nations system, within their respective mandates, to mainstream the Mauritius Strategy for Implementation further in their work programmes and to establish a focal point for small island developing States within their respective secretariats;

12. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its sixtieth session under the item entitled "Sustainable development", a sub-item entitled "Follow-up to and implementation of the Mauritius Strategy for the Further Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States".

Conference follow-up. In response to General Assembly resolution 59/311 (see above), the Secretary-General submitted an October report [A/60/401], which described a comprehensive UN system approach to promote and strengthen implementation of the Mauritius Strategy by national, regional and international stakeholders. The report summarized actual and proposed programming support and workplans of UN System organizations and bodies under the respective headings of the Mauritius Strategy. Among the activities identified for advancing the implementation of the Mauritius Strategy were regional meetings for the Caribbean (Saint Kitts and Nevis, 5-7 October), the Pacific (Samoa, 17-19 October) and for the Atlantic, Indian Ocean, Mediterranean and South China Seas (Seychelles, 26-28 October) to facilitate broad consultation on mechanisms and strategies and allow for the pursuit of partnership initiatives with civil society, regional institutions, the UN system and the donor community.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December [meeting 68], the General Assembly adopted resolution 60/194 [draft: A/60/488/ Add.2] without vote [agenda item 52 (b)].

Follow-up to and implementation of the Mauritius Strategy for the Further Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the Declaration of Barbados and the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States, adopted by the Global Conference on the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States, and recalling its resolution 49/122 of 19 December 1994 on the Global Conference,

Reaffirming also the Mauritius Declaration and the Mauritius Strategy for the Further Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States ("Mauritius Strategy for Implementation"), adopted by the International Meeting to Review the Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States on 14 January 2005, and recalling its resolution 59/311 of 14 July 2005, in which it endorsed the outcomes of the International Meeting,

Recalling the 2005 World Summit Outcome,

Welcoming the decision taken by the Commission on Sustainable Development at its thirteenth session to devote one day of its review sessions to the review of the implementation of the Mauritius Strategy for Implementation, focusing on that year's thematic cluster, as well as on any new developments in the sustainable development efforts of small island developing States using existing modalities, and to request the Secretary-General to submit a report to the Commission at its review session on progress in and obstacles to sustainable development in small island developing States, including recommendations to enhance the implementation of the Mauritius Strategy for Implementation,

Recognizing that it is crucial to mobilize resources from all sources for the effective implementation of the Mauritius Strategy for Implementation,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Welcomes the renewed commitment of the international community to the implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States;

3. Urges Governments and all relevant international and regional organizations, United Nations funds, programmes, specialized agencies and regional commissions, international financial institutions and the Global Environment Facility, as well as other intergovernmental organizations and major groups, to take timely action for the effective implementation of and follow-up to the Mauritius Declaration and the Mauritius Strategy for Implementation, including the further development and operationalization of concrete projects and programmes;

4. Calls for the full and effective implementation of the commitments, programmes and targets adopted at the International Meeting to Review the Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States and, to this end, for the fulfilment of the provisions for the means of implementation, as contained in the Mauritius Strategy for Implementation, and encourages small island developing States and their development partners to continue to consult widely in order to develop further concrete projects and programmes for the implementation of the Mauritius Strategy for Implementation;

5. Encourages the implementation of partnership initiatives, within the framework of the Mauritius Strategy for Implementation, in support of the sustainable development of small island developing States;

6. Notes with interest the convening by the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the Secretariat, pursuant to resolution 59/311, of regional meetings of small island developing States, held in Saint Kitts and Nevis, Samoa and Seychelles, as well as the interregional meeting of small island developing States, held in Rome in November 2005, and requests the Secretary-General to transmit the reports of the regional and interregional meetings to the Commission on Sustainable Development at its fourteenth session;

7. Notes the recent efforts to strengthen the Small Island Developing States Unit in the Department of Economic and Social Affairs, and urges the Secretary-General to ensure that the Unit is sufficiently and sustainably staffed to undertake its broad range of mandated functions with a view to ensuring the full and effective implementation of the Mauritius Strategy for Implementation, within existing resources, including by redeploying resources;

8. Requests the relevant agencies of the United Nations system, within their respective mandates, to mainstream, as appropriate, the Mauritius Strategy for Implementation in their work programmes and to establish a focal point for matters related to small island developing States within their respective secretariats;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to the General Assembly at its sixty-first session on the follow-up to and implementation of the Mauritius Strategy for Implementation;

10. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its sixty-first session, under the item entitled "Sustainable development", the sub-item entitled "Follow-up to and implementation of the Mauritius Strategy for the Further Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States".

Landlocked developing countries

Report of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 59/245 [YUN 2004, p. 861], the Secretary-General submitted an August report [A/60/287 & Corr.1] on the progress made by the UN system and other organizations in implementing the Almaty Programme of Action: Addressing the Special Needs of Landlocked Developing Countries within a New Global Framework for Transit Transport Cooperation for Landlocked and Transit Developing Countries. The Programme of Action was adopted by the International Ministerial Conference of Landlocked and Transit Developing Countries and Donor Countries and International Financial and Development Institutions on Transit Transport Cooperation (Almaty, Kazakhstan, 28-29 August 2003) [YUN 2003, p. 875].

The report analysed the overall socio-economic situation in landlocked developing countries and action taken to implement the Almaty Programme of Action in the priority areas of fundamental transit policy issues, infrastructure development and maintenance, international trade and trade facilitiation, international support measures and implementation and review of the United Nations.

In its conclusions and recommendations, the report stated that high trade transaction costs, due to their lack of access to the sea, isolation and remoteness from international markets, remained the main factors responsible for the marginalization of landlocked and transit developing countries in international trade and for their poor economic performance. The international community should provide greater market access for goods originating in landlocked and transit developing countries to mitigate the high transaction costs stemming from their geographical disadvantages. Technical assistance should be extended to them to ensure their effective participation in WTO trade negotiations, particularly those related to trade facilitation. The triangular arrangements promoting South-South cooperation between landlocked and transit developing States should be fully utilized. UN system organizations should intensify efforts to articulate a methodology to measure progress in establishing efficient transit transport systems, and should also provide technical assistance in transit transport. With official development assistance (ODA) as the major source of investment in infrastructure development in LDCs, donor countries and financial and development institutions were invited to provide greater financial resources to transit transport infrastructure projects in landlocked and transit developing countries, and to contribute to the trust fund set up to facilitate follow-up and implementation of the outcome of the Almaty Programme of Action.

UNCTAD report. UNCTAD submitted a July report [UNCTAD/LDC/2005/3(PART II)], in response to a request contained in the communiqué of the Fifth Annual Ministerial Meeting of Landlocked Developing Countries [YUN 2004, p. 861] for help in preparing for a meeting of trade ministers on their effective participation in the new round of WTO trade negotiations (Doha Development Round). The report provided key elements of a road map for landlocked and transit developing countries' participation in WTO negotiations. It analysed the situation of landlocked and transit developing countries in the international trading system and made proposals for long-term policy strategies to mitigate the effects of remoteness from world markets and to address related constraints.

Communications. On 29 April [A/60/75], Kazakhstan transmitted the joint communiqué of the High-level Meeting on the Role of International, Regional and Subregional Organizations in the Implementation of the Almaty Programme of Action (Almaty, 29-31 March). On 25 August [A/60/308], Paraguay transmitted the report of the Meeting of the Ministers of Landlocked Developing Countries Responsible for Trade (Asunción, 9-10 August), and the Asunción Platform for the Doha Development Round. On 26 September [A/C.2/60/2], the Lao People's Democratic Republic transmitted the ministerial communiqué of the Sixth Annual Ministerial Meeting of Landlocked Developing Countries (New York, 19 September). On 4 October [A/60/419], Azerbaijan, Georgia and Turkey transmitted the joint declaration on the "Kars-Akhalkalaki-Tbilisi-Baky new railway connection" project (Baky, 25 May).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December [meeting 68], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/60/491/Add.2], adopted resolution 60/208 without vote [agenda item 55 (b)].

Specific actions related to the particular needs and problems of landlocked developing countries: outcome of the International Ministerial Conference of Landlocked and Transit Developing Countries and Donor Countries and International Financial and Development Institutions on Transit Transport Cooperation

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 56/180 of 21 December 2001, 57/242 of 20 December 2002, 58/201 of 23 December 2003 and 59/245 of 22 December 2004,

Recalling also the United Nations Millennium Declaration,

Recalling further the 2005 World Summit Outcome,

Recognizing that the lack of territorial access to the sea, aggravated by remoteness from world markets, and prohibitive transit costs and risks impose serious constraints on export earnings, private capital inflow and domestic resource mobilization of landlocked developing countries and therefore adversely affect their overall growth and socio-economic development,

Recognizing also that landlocked developing countries, with their small and vulnerable economies, are among the poorest of developing countries, and noting that, of the thirty-one landlocked developing countries, sixteen are also classified by the United Nations as least developed countries,

Recalling the Almaty Declaration and the Almaty Programme of Action: Addressing the Special Needs of Landlocked Developing Countries within a New Global Framework for Transit Transport Cooperation for Landlocked and Transit Developing Countries,

Recalling also the New Partnership for Africa's Development, an initiative for accelerating regional economic cooperation and development as most landlocked and transit developing countries are located in Africa,

Noting with interest the Meeting of the Ministers of Landlocked Developing Countries Responsible for Trade, held in Asunción, on 9 and 10 August 2005, which adopted the Asunción Platform for the Doha Development Round,

Taking note of the Communiqué of the Sixth Annual Ministerial Meeting of Landlocked Developing Countries, held at United Nations Headquarters on 19 September 2005,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the Almaty Programme of Action: Addressing the Special Needs of Landlocked Developing Countries within a New Global Framework for Transit Transport Cooperation for Landlocked and Transit Developing Countries;

2. Recognizes the special needs and challenges faced by landlocked developing countries, and therefore reaffirms the commitment to urgently address those needs and challenges through the full, timely and effective implementation of the Almaty Programme of Action;

3. Reaffirms the right of access of landlocked countries to and from the sea and freedom of transit through the territory of transit countries by all means of transport, in accordance with the applicable rules of international law;

4. Also reaffirms that transit countries, in the exercise of their full sovereignty over their territory, have the right to take all measures necessary to ensure that the rights and facilities provided for landlocked countries in no way infringe their legitimate interests;

5. Invites Member States, organizations of the United Nations system and other relevant international, regional and subregional organizations and multilateral financial and development institutions to implement the specific actions in the five priorities agreed upon in the Almaty Programme of Action;

6. Invites donor countries and multilateral and regional financial and development institutions, in particular the World Bank, the Asian Development Bank, the African Development Bank and the Inter-American Development Bank, to provide landlocked and transit developing countries with appropriate financial and technical assistance in the form of grants or concessionary loans for the construction, maintenance and improvement of their transport, storage and other transit-related facilities, including alternative routes and improved communications, to promote subregional, regional and interregional projects and programmes;

7. Recognizes that most transit countries are themselves developing countries often of broadly similar economic structure and beset by similar scarcity of resources, including the lack of adequate transit transport infrastructure;

8. Emphasizes that assistance for the improvement of transit transport facilities and services should be integrated into the overall economic development strategies of the landlocked and transit developing countries and that donor countries should consequently take into account the requirements for the long-term restructuring of the economies of the landlocked developing countries;

9. Stresses the need for the implementation of the São Paulo Consensus, adopted at the eleventh session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, held in São Paulo, Brazil, from 13 to 18 June 2004, in particular paragraphs 66 and 84 thereof, by the relevant international organizations and donors in a multi-stakeholder approach;

10. Encourages Member States to support the special needs of landlocked developing countries within a new global framework for transit transport cooperation for landlocked and transit developing countries, as contained in the Almaty Programme of Action, with respect to trade facilitation, consistent with the decision adopted by the General Council of the World Trade Organization on 1 August 2004, according to their individual needs;

11. Invites the relevant organizations of the United Nations system and other international organizations, including the regional commissions, the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, the World Bank, the World Customs Organization, the World Trade Organization and the International Maritime Organization, to integrate the Almaty Programme of Action into their relevant programmes of work, encourages them to continue their support to the landlocked and transit developing countries, inter alia, through well-coordinated and coherent technical assistance programmes in transit transport, and in this regard takes note of the joint communique adopted at the High-level Meeting on the Role of International, Regional and Subregional Organizations in the Implementation of the Almaty Programme of Action, convened by the Office of the High Representative for the Least Developed Countries, Landlocked Developing Countries and Small Island Developing States of the Secretariat and hosted by the Government of Kazakhstan in Almaty from 29 to 31 March 2005;

12. Requests the United Nations system organizations, particularly the Office of the High Representative for the Least Developed Countries, Landlocked Developing Countries and Small Island Developing States and regional commissions, to continue their efforts to establish effective indicators to measure progress in the implementation of the Almaty Programme of Action;

13. Encourages the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, in particular the Division for Services Infrastructure for Development and Trade Efficiency and the Special Programme on the Least Developed Countries, Landlocked Developing Countries and Small Island Developing States, to continue its technical assistance activities and analytical work related to transit transport cooperation between landlocked and transit developing countries;

14. Requests the Office of the High Representative for the Least Developed Countries, Landlocked Developing Countries and Small Island Developing States, in accordance with the mandate given by the General Assembly in its resolution 56/227 of 24 December 2001 and in the Almaty Programme of Action and the Almaty Declaration, to continue its cooperation and coordination with organizations within the United Nations system, particularly those engaged in operational activities on the ground in landlocked and transit developing countries, to ensure effective implementation of the Almaty Programme of Action in line with Assembly resolution 57/270 B of 23 June 2003, and also requests the Office to continue to carry out advocacy work to mobilize international awareness and focus attention on the implementation of the Almaty Programme of Action;

15. Requests, in this regard, the Secretary-General to take the necessary measures, within existing resources, including through reprioritization, to provide the Office with adequate resources so as to allow it to effectively carry out its added mandate as stipulated in the Almaty Programme of Action;

16. Invites donor countries and the international financial and development institutions to make voluntary contributions to the trust fund established by the Secretary-General to support the activities related to the follow-up to the implementation of the outcome of the Almaty International Ministerial Conference;

17. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its sixty-first session the item entitled "Specific actions related to the particular needs and problems of landlocked developing countries: outcome of the International Ministerial Conference of Landlocked and Transit Developing Countries and Donor Countries and International Financial and Development Institutions on Transit Transport Cooperation";

18. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its sixty-first session a report on progress made in the implementation of the Almaty Programme of Action and the present resolution.

Poor mountain countries

In response to General Assembly resolution 58/216 [YUN 2003, p. 1063], the Secretary-General submitted a September report [A/60/309] on the status of sustainable development in mountain regions, with an analysis of future challenges and made recommendations on ways to promote and effectively sustain development in mountain regions.

The report found that, despite increased awareness and the achievement of many positive results, key challenges were still being faced by fragile mountain ecosystems to attain sustainable development and alleviate poverty, consistent with the targets of the MDGs, including the growing demand for water and other natural resources, the consequences of global climate change, the growth of tourism, increasing rates of migration, conflicts and pressures of industry, mining and agriculture in a world of increased globalization. Higher levels of funding and investment in mountain areas, better coordinated cooperation at all levels and a stronger enabling environment with more supportive laws, policies and institutions were required. The report described action taken at the national level in Africa, Asia, Europe, Latin America and the Near East to achieve progress in sustainable mountain development, regional cooperation and transboundary approaches and international initiatives. It also looked at communications and networking, mountain partnership, education, research and resource mobilization and funding.

The report recommended possible courses of action the Assembly might take to help poor mountain countries.

The Assembly, in resolution 60/198 of 22 December, invited the UN system, international financial institutions, the Global Environment Facility, relevant UN conventions and their funding mechanisms, civil society and the private sector, to provide support, including financial, to local national and international programmes and projects for sustainable development in mountain regions.

Chapter II

Operational activities for development

In 2005, the UN system continued to provide development assistance to developing countries and countries with economies in transition through the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), the central UN funding body for technical assistance. UNDP income in 2005 amounted to $5.1 billion, a 21 per cent increase over 2004. Total expenditure for all programme activities and support costs in 2005 was $4.4 billion, compared with $3.6 billion the previous year. Technical cooperation funded through other sources included $48.4 million provided through the programme executed by the UN Department of Economic and Social Affairs, $170.5 million through the United Nations Fund for International Partnerships, and $27.3 million through the United Nations Capital Development Fund (UNCDF).

In May, the General Assembly confirmed the appointment of Kemal Dervis (Turkey) as UNDP Administrator for a four-year term, beginning on 15 August.

The Secretary-General reported in May on an appropriate management process, in the form of a matrix, for the full implementation of resolution of 59/250 on the 2004 triennial comprehensive policy review of UN operational activities for development. The matrix included implementation targets for the UN system, actions planned to pursue those targets, specific system entities responsible for those actions and the time frames for their execution. In July, the Economic and Social Council requested the Secretary-General to update the matrix, including analytical reporting on results and outcomes achieved.

The United Nations Office for Project Services (UNOPS) had a record project delivery of $888.2 million, exceeding the approved targets for the year by 35.5 per cent. In September, the UNDP/United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA) Executive Board approved an action plan for restoring the viability of UNOPS as a separate, self-financing service provider in the UN system.

The High-level Committee on South-South Cooperation, at its May/June meeting, reviewed progress in implementing the 1978 Buenos Aires Plan of Action for Promoting and Implementing Technical Cooperation among Developing Countries (TCDC) and the new directions strategy for TCDC. In December, the Assembly invited UNDP to rename the Voluntary Trust Fund for the Promotion of South-South Cooperation as the United Nations Fund for South-South Cooperation, and to designate it as the main UN trust fund for promoting and supporting South-South and triangular initiatives.

The United Nations Volunteers programme, administered by UNDP, expanded for the ninth consecutive year, with 8,122 volunteers carrying out 8,470 assignments in 144 countries. The Assembly, in a December resolution on follow-up to the International Year of Volunteers (2001), called for UN system organizations and bodies to integrate volunteerism in its various forms into their policies, programmes and reports.

In January, the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board considered further options for a future strategic niche and a new business model for UNCDF, and decided to maintain it as an independent organization focused on reducing poverty and achieving the Millennium Development Goals in least developed countries (LDCs). In May, the UNDP Administrator presented the UNCDF 2005-2007 business plan, which proposed a trust fund for investing in LDCs.

System-wide activities

Operational activities segment of Economic and Social Council

The Economic and Social Council, during its 2005 substantive session [A/60/3], considered the question of operational activities of the United Nations for international development cooperation at meetings held from 8 to 12 July, as decided by the Council on 1 March (decision 2005/210); a further meeting was held on 20 July, to complete consideration of a draft resolution on progress in the implementation of General Assembly resolution 59/250 [YUN 2004, p. 868] on the triennial comprehensive policy review of operational activities for development of the UN system (see p. 955). On 4 February (decision 2005/205), the Council decided to devote the work of the operational activities segment to progress in the implementation of resolution 59/250. The Council held discussions on South-South cooperation for development (see p. 982); and the reports of the Executive Boards of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP)/United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA), the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) and the World Food Programme (WFP).

Among the documents before the Council were reports of the Secretary-General on funding options and modalities for financing operational activities for development of the UN system [A/60/83-E/2005/72], comprehensive statistical data on operational activities for development for 2003 [A/60/74-E/2005/57], and the management process for the implementation of resolution 59/250 [E/2005/58], as well as the report of the High-level Committee on South-South Cooperation [A/60/39] (see sections below).

On 8 July, the Council held an interactive dialogue on introducing operational reforms in the UN development system, in pursuit of the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals (MDGs) [YUN 2000, p. 51]. On 11 July, it held a panel discussion on funding arrangements for achieving those goals, including those contained in the Millennium Declaration [ibid., p. 49]: alternative options and modalities for financing UN system operational activities for development; and a dialogue with heads of UN funds and programmes on strengthening the resident coordination system, programme alignment, the role of regional structures in supporting operational effectiveness, and sector programme and national capacity development.

Implementation of resolution 59/250

In May [E/2005/58], the Secretary-General, in response to resolution 59/250 on the 2004 triennial policy review of operational activities for development of the UN system [YUN 2004, p. 868], reported on an appropriate management process for the full implementation of that resolution. The management process, set out in the form of a matrix, provided details about the issues addressed in the resolution, corresponding targets for the UN system as a whole and/or its components, concrete actions planned to pursue those targets, specific entities of the system that were responsible for those actions, and the time frames for their execution. The elements of the matrix were grouped by individual themes. They included the basic approach to the role and functioning of UN system development cooperation to support national development strategies and priorities, and the achievements of internationally agreed development goals; funding for UN operational activities and statistical reporting; capacity-building; transaction costs and efficiency; coherence, effectiveness and relevance of operational activities for development; country-level capacity of the UN system; evaluation of operational activities for development; regional dimensions of operational activities; South-South cooperation and development of national capacities; gender; transition from relief to development; and additional reporting requirements. The matrix resulted from extensive consultations between the Secretariat and the UN system, including close collaboration with the United Nations Development Group (UNDG) and the UN System Chief Executives Board for Coordination (CEB), and reflected the several initiatives promoted to implement relevant parts of the resolution.

The Secretary-General said that the management process should assist the Economic and Social Council in fulfilling its responsibility for improving the quality and impact of UN operational activities, promoting an integrated approach, and ensuring that policy directives formulated by the General Assembly at the triennial comprehensive policy review were implemented on a system-wide basis. The management process should be reviewed in conjunction with the work programme for the implementation of reforms by UN system funds, programmes and specialized agencies to further simplify and harmonize their rules and procedures in compliance with resolution 59/250, a report on which was being prepared in consultation with all UNDG members and would be submitted separately to the Council. The key aim of UN system development support was to respond flexibly to the needs of developing countries, shaping operational activities to better respond to their demands, in accordance with their policies and priorities. Through its operational activities for development, the UN system could contribute significantly to the country-level implementation of the commitments made in the 2000 Millennium Declaration, adopted by the Assembly in resolution 55/2 [YUN 2000, p. 49], and other conferences and summits. However, the system should align its activities to well-defined national development priorities. It was crucial that economic, social, environmental and humanitarian factors were taken into account in building stable and sustainable conditions for economic growth and social development.

The Secretary-General, in a May report [A/60/74-E/2005/57] issued to complement his report on the management process for the implementation of resolution 59/250, provided detailed data on resources channelled through, and spent by UN system organizations for 2003 and previous years, as well as a review of the multi-year trends in UN system operational activities for development from 1993 to 2003.

A June report of the Secretary-General [A/60/83-E/2005/72] examined various options for funding UN system operational activities for development, in order to increase its predictability, long-term stability and adequacy, while preserving the advantages of current funding modalities. It was intended to stimulate debate on funding modalities for the operational activities of the system as a whole, as a key component of the overall effort to further the implementation of the global development agenda emerging from UN conferences and summits.

The report described two alternative funding models: the negotiated replenishment used by the International Fund for Agricultural Development (IFAD) (see p. 1590) and the voluntary indicative scale of contributions applied by the United Nations Environment Programme on a trial basis. In IFAD's negotiated replenishment, contributions were first estimated on the basis of a review of the adequacy of available resources, after which the Governing Council might invite Fund members to make additional contributions. While complex, the negotiated replenishment modality had proved capable, given the necessary political will and the right environment, of mobilizing a significant volume of resources for the International Development Association and the Global Fund to fight AIDS, Tuberculosis and Malaria, which used it.

UNEP's experimental voluntary indicative scale of contributions helped guide Member States in setting their levels of voluntary contributions for programme expenditures. Experience with the indicative scale had been positive and led to a significant increase both in the number of countries making voluntary contributions to UNEP and in the level of their contributions.

The report also discussed the expansion of supplementary funding as a short-term solution and its consequences, future challenges and options with regard to UN development funding.

CEB action. The CEB High-level Committee on Programmes (HLCP), at its ninth session (Rome, 23-25 February) [CEB/2005/4], decided to appoint a task group to review the practical implication of resolution 59/250 relating to the CEB/HLCP work programme and to identify ways for HLCP and UNDG to complement each other's work in advancing the resolution's objectives. HLCP approved the terms of reference for the task group at its 2005 retreat (Manhasset, New York, United States, 19-21 July) [CEB/2005/6]. At its tenth session (Frascati, Italy, 6-8 October) [CEB/2005/7], the task group submitted a progress report, which contained two sets of proposals on capacity development and on the evaluation of UN system operational activities for development. A revised proposal for the two distinct areas was presented and endorsed by HLCP. The Committee agreed to launch an analysis of UN system capacity development efforts and to promote the formulation of an overall policy statement for CEB's endorsement, which should provide broad guidance to all CEB member organizations in supporting the evaluation function and encouraging wide collaboration.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 20 July [meeting 33], the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 2005/7 [draft: E/2005/L.29] without vote [agenda item 3 (a)].

Progress in the implementation of General Assembly resolution 59/250 on the triennial comprehensive policy review of operational activities for development of the United Nations system

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolutions 44/211 of 22 December 1989, 47/199 of 22 December 1992, 50/120 of 20 December 1995, 52/203 of 18 December 1997, 52/12 B of 19 December 1997, 53/192 of 15 December 1998, 56/201 of 21 December 2001 and 59/250 of 22 December 2004, Economic and Social Council resolutions 2002/29 of 25 July 2002, 2003/3 of 11 July 2003 and 2004/5 of 12 July 2004 and other relevant resolutions,

Recalling also the importance of the triennial comprehensive policy review of operational activities, through which the General Assembly establishes key system-wide policy orientations for the development cooperation and country-level modalities of the United Nations system,

Reaffirming its role in providing coordination and guidance to the United Nations development system to ensure that those policy orientations are implemented on a system-wide basis, in accordance with General Assembly resolutions 48/162 of 20 December 1993, 50/227 of 24 May 1996 and 57/270 B of 23 June 2003,

Reaffirming also that the fundamental characteristics of operational activities for development of the United Nations system should be, inter alia, their universal, voluntary and grant-based nature, their neutrality and their multilateralism and their ability to respond to the development needs of recipient countries in a flexible manner, and that operational activities are carried out for the benefit of recipient countries, at the request of those countries and in accordance with their own policies and priorities for development,

Stressing that the purpose of reform is to make the United Nations development system more efficient and effective in supporting developing countries to achieve the internationally agreed development goals, on the basis of their national development strategies, and stressing also that reform efforts should enhance organizational efficiency and achieve concrete development results,

Emphasizing that operational activities for development of the United Nations system should be valued and assessed on the basis of their impact on recipient countries as contributions to enhance their capacity to pursue poverty eradication, sustained economic growth and sustainable development,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the management process for the implementation of General Assembly resolution 59/250 on the triennial comprehensive policy review of operational activities for development of the United Nations system, and welcomes the efforts to establish the management process for the implementation of the resolution, as contained in that report;

2. Notes the response of the United Nations system in undertaking initiatives to implement resolution 59/250, as specified in the actions, targets, benchmarks and time frames identified at the agency and inter-agency levels that are contained in that report;

3. Requests the Secretary-General, in response to paragraph 102 of resolution 59/250, to update the matrix contained in that report, including analytical reporting on results and outcomes achieved through the implementation of all actions outlined in the report;

4. Encourages the use, within the matrix, of quantifiable targets and measurable benchmarks, with well-defined time frames at the system level, in accordance with resolution 59/250, taking into account section III of the resolution on capacity-building in its entirety, as well as increasing system-wide capacity in support of recipient countries and enabling and facilitating the access of recipient countries to the full range of services and accumulated experience available throughout the entire United Nations system, including the regional commissions, as appropriate and consistent with their mandates;

5. Takes note of the work programme related to the coordination of operational activities for development for 2005;

6. Takes note also of the report of the Secretary-General on funding options and modalities for financing operational activities for development of the United Nations system;

7. Looks forward to further consideration of that report, in accordance with paragraph 24 of resolution 59/250;

8. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on comprehensive statistical data on operational activities for development for 2003;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to further refine the data contained in that report to better reflect funding for operational activities for development, including a better distinction between contributions made for humanitarian assistance and for long-term development cooperation, and expenditures and actual contributions as received and channelled through the United Nations funds, programmes and specialized agencies and the Secretariat;

10. Also requests the Secretary-General to make use of the annual statistical compendium on operational activities for development submitted to the Council at the operational activities segment of its substantive session in its new format, as adopted in accordance with paragraph 22 of resolution 59/250;

11. Reaffirms the necessity for the full implementation by the United Nations funds and programmes of the relevant provisions of resolution 59/250.

The Second (Economic and Financial) Committee considered the Secretary-General's reports on comprehensive statistical data on operational activities for development for 2003 (see p. 955) and on funding options and modalities for financing operational activities for development of the UN system (see p. 956) on 9 November.

On 22 December (decision 60/546), the General Assembly took note of the Committee's report on operational activities for development [A/60/493].

Report of UNDP Administrator and UNFPA Executive Director. In response to resolution 59/250 [YUN 2004, p. 868], the UNDP Administrator and the UNFPA Executive Director submitted, in December [E/2006/5], a report on joint UNDP/UNFPA progress towards the implementation of resolution 59/250 and specific UNDP and UNFPA activities.

The UNDG working group on capacity development, in which both UNDP and UNFPA participated, was defining a framework that would enable UN country teams to engage in structured capacity development for national counterparts, which was essential if developing countries were to achieve the internationally agreed development goals, including the MDGs [YUN 2000, p. 51]. The working group was developing a system-wide matrix; mapping potential niches for the United Nations in country-level capacity development initiatives; and compiling an inventory of existing capacity development tools, which, by mid-2006, would become part of the operational methodologies to be used by country teams.

In July, UNDP and UNFPA, along with their UNDG partners, adopted an action plan to implement the Paris Declaration on Aid Effectiveness, adopted by the High-level Forum on Aid Effectiveness in March, which addressed the alignment of the work of the United Nations with national development plans, the strengthening of national capacities in a changing aid environment and increased efforts to strengthen and use national systems. It would follow up on commitments made in the Rome Declaration on harmonization adopted in 2003 [YUN 2003, p. 938]; advise country teams of their role in the new aid environment; and serve as a tool to monitor the UNDG response. In February, UNDG endorsed a common position on the role of the United Nations in sector support and, in April, launched a cash transfer framework that was consistent with the Paris Declaration and which sought to reduce transaction costs for national partners.

The UNDG working group on joint programming established a database of joint programmes based on information provided by country offices and headquarters, covering approximately 150 joint programmes, over 30 of which began in 2005. The working group also oversaw a review of joint programme experiences in a number of countries.

To facilitate programmatic coherence, the UNDG Executive Committee requested UN country teams to review the timing of their programme cycles and, where necessary, readjust them to national cycles. The UNDG programme group would propose, in 2006, that UNDG adopt a single United Nations Development Assistance Framework (UNDAF) and its results matrix in lieu of multiple country programme documents, as a means of strengthening the role of the UNDAF as the basis for one coherent UN country programme. To ensure the quality of common country assessments (CCAs), UNDAF and UNDG developed a quality support and assurance system. UNDG members, including UNDP, reviewed the UNDAF documents completed in 2005, prepared five UNDAF good practice notes and enumerated 10 lessons from the review. UNDG forwarded the results to the country teams scheduled to begin their UNDAF exercises in September.

As called for in resolution 59/250, UNDG was developing an accountability framework for resident coordinators, along with systems for mutual resident coordinator and country team performance appraisal, reinforcing the notion of the resident coordinator as the principal UN representative in a country.

During the previous biennium, UNDP increased threefold its contribution of core resources to the funds allocated to the resident coordinator system, thus permitting the creation of a special $2.25 million fund to support countries in transition from relief to development. In 2005, those funds provided some 20 countries with strategic planning and coordination support for recovery and transition and were used to support technical missions.

As a follow-up to the 2005 World Summit (see p. 47), UNDP and UNFPA, together with their UNDG partners, prepared a common plan to support countries in their efforts to adopt, by 2006, national development strategies to achieve the internationally agreed development goals and objectives, including the MDGs, and to implement those strategies.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December [meeting 68], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/60/493/Add.1], adopted decision 60/547 by recorded vote (172-1-0) [agenda item 57].

Operational activities for development of the United Nations system

At its 68th plenary meeting, on 22 December 2005, the General Assembly, by a recorded vote of 172 to 1, with no abstentions, and on the recommendation of the Second Committee:

(a) Recalled its resolution 59/250 of 22 December 2004, as well as Economic and Social Council resolution 2005/7 of 20 July 2005 and other relevant resolutions;

(b) Took note of the reports of the Secretary-General on comprehensive statistical data on operational activities for development of the United Nations system for 2003 and on funding options and modalities for financing operational activities for development of the United Nations system, and decided to request the Economic and Social Council at its substantive session of 2006 to further consider the above-mentioned reports in conjunction with paragraph 102 of General Assembly resolution 59/250 on the evaluation of the full implementation of that resolution;

(c) Also took note of the report of the Joint Inspection Unit on some measures to improve overall performance of the United Nations system at the country level, the related note by the Secretary-General transmitting the comments of the United Nations System Chief Executives Board for Coordination on that report and the note by the Secretary-General transmitting the report of the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme on the activities of the United Nations Development Fund for Women.

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Andorra, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Armenia, Australia, Austria, Azerbaijan, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belarus, Belgium, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Cambodia, Cameroon, Canada, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Croatia, Cuba, Cyprus, Czech Republic, Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominica, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Eritrea, Estonia, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, France, Georgia, Germany, Ghana, Greece, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Israel, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kazakhstan, Kenya, Kuwait, Kyrgyzstan, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Latvia, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Liechtenstein, Lithuania, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Marshall Islands, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Micronesia, Monaco, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Myanmar, Namibia, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Palau, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Republic of Korea, Republic of Moldova, Romania, Russian Federation, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, San Marino, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Serbia and Montenegro, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Slovakia, Slovenia, Solomon Islands, South Africa, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Switzerland, Syrian Arab Republic, Tajikistan, Thailand, The former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Tuvalu, Uganda, Ukraine, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Uzbekistan, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: United States.

Abstaining: None.

Following the vote, the United States said that throughout the discussion on funding for the UN operational activities for development, its position had been that voluntary funding was the most effective way to ensure results and accountability. During the year, an attempt had been made to turn the discussion to consideration of various schemes to compel funding, including the so-called "voluntary indicative scales of contributions". Those schemes were unacceptable to the United States, as they were unrelated to performance results and accountability and incompatible with the voluntary funding principle for operational activities for development enshrined in previous resolutions.

Improving country-level UN system performance

The Economic and Social Council, at its 2005 substantive session (29 June–27 July), considered the report of the Joint Inspection Unit (JIU) on measures to improve overall performance of the UN system at the country level. The report, which was reissued for technical reasons, comprised two parts [A/60/125-E/2005/85 (part I) & Add.1 (part II)], the first providing a historical perspective on UN reform with a focus on operational activities, and the second addressing selected issues regarding the UN system's operational activities, especially in relation to country-level performance.

The report stated that, measured by funding levels, the United Nations, its funds, programmes and specialized agencies played only a modest role in international development, accounting for only $4,705 million in Members' core contributions, out of the latest published official development assistance (ODA) figure of $69 billion, or less than 7 per cent of net ODA, not including the amounts for lending and grant assistance at the disposal of the Bretton Woods institutions (the World Bank Group and the International Monetary Fund (IMF)). The relevance of the UN system's technical assistance and operational activities in 135 countries was perceived as its ability to link national and international goals, both in advice and implementation. The implementation of the agreed development agenda continued to be hampered by the different decision-making structures, policies, procedures, and institutional and management cultures of bilateral, regional and multilateral actors. The United Nations and its funds, programmes and specialized agencies were not always good examples of coherence and consistency. The issue, therefore, was how to define more clearly their respective roles in development and technical assistance, in order to organize the working relations of all parts of the UN development system, including the Bretton Woods institutions, and to optimize efficiency in planning, programming and implementation to benefit partner countries.

Part I of the report recommended that the General Assembly request the Secretary-General to provide, on the UN website, a full inventory of all the reform proposals made by the UN system to date as a possible part of the United Nations Intellectual History Project, which was to be set up by the UN Department of Public Information, in cooperation with other UN system organizations.

Part II dealt with the following issues and contained recommendations to address them: fostering a culture of partnership for improved analysis, planning, programme implementation and results; simplifying and harmonizing procedures; rationalizing field presence; monitoring progress in operational activities for development; and improving transparency.

Among the recommendations made were that the General Assembly should request UN system organizations to consider ways to achieve a single core country analysis, as well as a single comprehensive implementation plan with partner countries. Executive heads should explore the feasibility of further delegating authority to their field representation and improving simplification and harmonization within the system. The Assembly should de-link the functions of the resident coordinator and UNDP resident representative and change the designation process of the resident coordinator. The grade structure and skills profile of field representatives and other staff should be reviewed and a report thereon submitted to the Assembly and the Economic and Social Council. The governing bodies of UNDG organizations should request their respective executive heads to examine ways to further rationalize their field presence. The Assembly should establish at its sixtieth session a task force on operational activities to oversee, support and monitor developments in operational activities, as identified by the triennial comprehensive policy review of operational activities for development of the UN system. CEB should set up an inter-agency task force to deal with the issue of fundraising for extrabudgetary/non-core funding.

Annexed to part II of the report were a list of the 13 indicators, developed by the Development Assistance Committee of the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD/DAC), to identify progress in harmonization and alignment, and an explanation of UNDG's new tools and processes.

In November [A/60/125/Add.2-E/2005/85/Add.2], the Secretary-General transmitted to the Assembly his comments and those of CEB on the JIU report. CEB generally found part I of the report useful and informative. As to part II of the report, CEB agreed in principle that greater emphasis on inter-agency coordination at the policy level was indispensable for ensuring enhanced country-level effectiveness, and concurred with the JIU Inspector's view that efforts could be better focused on optimizing the efficiency of operations at that level. CEB agreed with the general theme of the report—the desirability of stronger field representation by UN system organizations with appropriate support mechanisms at their headquarters as one of the pillars of enhanced country-level coherence and coordination, but pointed out that a number of UN system organizations were already moving in that direction. In CEB's view, the analysis and most of the recommendations contained in the report did not take into account the significant differences between the core activities of the UN funds and programmes and those of the specialized agencies and, consequently, did not advance approaches to address those differences.

CEB agreed that the starting point of UN reform at the country level had to be a common, coherent programme, firmly grounded in national priorities and responding to national needs. However, there was no agreement on what constituted "effective" development policy, or how to gauge such policy.

CEB pointed out that several emerging trends in development cooperation were not identified in the report, including those relating to the increasing concentration of UN aid and grant assistance in the areas of humanitarian, social and emergency operations; the proliferation of non-governmental organizations (NGOs) competing with UN system organizations at the country level; the enlargement of the scope of World Bank technical cooperation in all areas of the Organization's economic and social agendas; and the shifting role of UNDP from being the main funding source of the UN system to providing direct programme delivery in areas already covered by other UN system organizations. CEB noted that the sections of the report on the simplification and harmonization of procedures and on rationalizing field presence did not take into consideration the situation of the non-resident agencies. Several CEB members expressed concern that conferring formal authority and accountability for the development and monitoring of the UNDAF results matrix to the resident coordinator might erode the authority of the respective organizations' governing boards and executive heads for programme orientation and implementation. CEB also provided comments on the specific recommendations put forth in the JIU report.

On 9 November, the Second Committee considered the JIU report and the Secretary-General's note transmitting CEB's comments thereon. On 22 December, the Assembly took note of the Committee's report [A/60/493] on operational activities for development (decision 60/546) (see p. 957), and the JIU report and the note by the Secretary-General thereon (decision 60/547) (see p. 958).

Financing of operational activities in 2004

UN system expenditures on operational activities, excluding loans through the World Bank Group, totalled $10 billion in 2004 [A/61/77-E/2006/59], the most recent year for which figures were available (compared with $9.7 billion in 2003). Of that amount, $2,899.6 million was distributed in development grants by WFP, $2,816.8 million by UNDP and UNDP-administered funds, $2,126.3 million by specialized agencies and other organizations from extrabudgetary sources, $1,343.6 million by UNICEF, $496.8 million by specialized agencies and other organizations from regular budgets, and $317.6 million by UNFPA.

The UNDP Administrator, in an August report on UN system technical cooperation expenditures in 2004 [DP/2005/34 & Add.1], said that, although 2004 marked the first year that technical cooperation to the developing world reached the $10 billion mark, it represented only a modest increase of 3.4 per cent over 2003. While WFP remained the key player, with $2.9 billion in expenditure, that figure represented a decline of 11.5 per cent from 2003. Expenditure increases of 17.3 per cent (at $2.8 billion) were posted by UNDP; specialized agencies, funds and programmes, 4.5 per cent (at $2.62 billion); UNICEF, 11.2 per cent (at $1.34 billion); and UNDP, 16.4 per cent (at $317.6 million).

By region, Africa was the largest recipient (25.6 per cent, or $2.6 billion), followed by the Arab States (25 per cent, or $2.5 billion), Asia and the Pacific (19.6 per cent, or $2 billion), Latin America and the Caribbean (16.1 per cent, or $1.6 billion) and Europe and the Commonwealth of Independent States (CIS) (4.3 per cent, or $430 million). Other global and interregional activities received 9.4 per cent or $940 million. Five countries received one quarter of total technical cooperation expenditure: Iraq ($1.1 billion), Afghanistan ($539 million), the Sudan ($506 million), Brazil ($289 million) and Ethiopia ($257 million). The health and humanitarian assistance sectors together accounted for 45.7 per cent of the total expenditure, or $4.7 billion.

In September [E/2005/35 (dec. 2005/42)], the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board took note of the Administrator's report on technical cooperation expenditure for 2004.

At the 2005 United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities (New York, 11

November) [A/CONF.208/2005/L.1], Governments made pledges to UN programmes and funds concerned with development. The Conference noted that several Governments would communicate their pledges to the Secretary-General as soon as they were able to do so.

The Secretary-General provided a statement of contributions pledged or paid at the 2004 Pledging Conference, as at 30 June 2005, to 24 funds and programmes [A/CONF.208/2005/2]. The total amounted to some $800.2 million.

Technical cooperation through UNDP

The UNDP report on its performance and results for 2005, in implementation of the multi-year funding framework (MYFF) for 2004-2007 [DP/2006/17], described performance against core goals and organizational strategies. Observations made in the report were derived from the performance analysis of 135 country programmes, reporting results achieved against planned annual targets towards intended outcomes in the five UNDP practice areas established by the MYFF, 2004-2007: reducing human poverty; fostering democratic governance; energy and environment for sustainable development; crisis prevention and recovery; and responding to HIV/AIDS. The report contained also performance information on programme focus and results, organizational strategies and expenditures to achieve MYFF objectives. In keeping with Executive Board decision 2005/20 (see p. 972), the report adopted capacity development as its main theme. It presented a broad analysis of the programme portfolio, examining the distribution of demand and expenditure and progress made against targets set by country programmes, and highlighted UNDP's capacity development work, challenges and notable achievements. It examined two critical strategies outlined in the MYFF, 2004-2007, namely, the integration of drivers of development effectiveness and partnerships and coordination.

In 2005, all 135 country programmes were working in the poverty practice. All but two country programmes were involved in governance, and 123 in energy and environment. HIV/AIDS and crisis prevention and recovery had lower rates of country activity, with 90 and 83 programmes, respectively. UNDP country programmes, in partnership with national stakeholders, pursued 1,653 development outcomes within the five practices. Thirty-three per cent of outcomes were under the poverty practice; 28 per cent under governance; 22 per cent under energy and the environment; 9 per cent under crisis prevention and recovery; and 8 per cent under HIV/AIDS.

Programme expenditures totalled $3.7 billion, $3.3 billion of which were country programme expenditures. Ninety per cent, or $3 billion, of the country programme expenditure was directly linked to the five practices. The major share (46 per cent) of that amount was spent in the governance practice, followed by the poverty practice (25 per cent), the crisis prevention and recovery, and energy and the environment practices (12 per cent each), and the HIV/AIDS practice (5 per cent).

The analysis indicated that UNDP had met one of the key strategic objectives of the 2004-2007 MYFF cycle: concentrating programming activity and financial resources within the five practices and 30 service lines. Close to 100 per cent of UNDP programming fell within the service lines and was consistent across all regions. Nine outcomes (0.3 per cent) fell outside the service lines, accounting for $2.1 million (0.07 per cent). On average, programmes focused on 10 service lines and 12 outcomes, a slight improvement over 2004, but fell short of the 6 to 10 outcome target of the MYFF. The majority of country programmes either fully or partially met their targets, with minor variations across regional bureaux and practices. The HIV/AIDS practice had the highest percentage of fully achieved targets (61 per cent). On average, country programmes reported 54 per cent of targets fully achieved, 42 per cent partially achieved, and 4 per cent not achieved.

One of UNDP key corporate strategies for ensuring quality development results centred on the promotion and integration of six critical and cross-cutting development drivers into its programmatic work. The 2005 data suggested that the majority of country programmes had placed a medium to high level of emphasis on four drivers: forging national partnerships (85 per cent of country programmes); fostering an enabling environment (77 per cent); developing national capacities (75 per cent); and seeking South-South cooperation (57 per cent). More work needed to be done to integrate the remaining two drivers—promoting gender equality and enhancing national ownership—both of which showed low emphasis placed by the majority of country programmes. The data also suggested that emphasis on the other four drivers could be improved, as expected levels of high emphasis were not realized.

The report concluded that the 2005 review of UNDP performance suggested that the organization was on track to meeting the performance targets and executing the operational strategies of the MYFF, 2004-2007. The assessment of field operations confirmed that UNDP was operating in line with UN reform principles and mandates, while remaining aligned with, and responsive to, national priorities. With respect to capacity development work, UNDP conformed to the recommendations of the 2004 triennial comprehensive policy review [YUN 2004, p. 867] and the World Summit Outcome, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 60/1 (see p. 48), with country programmes involved in a wide range of substantive capacity development programmes in each practice. Substantial support went into strengthening governance institutions to enhance the efficiency and effectiveness of both public and private sector entities and create more stable foundations for democracy.

The UNDP Administrator, in a December report [E/2006/5] on UNDP activities, issued jointly with the UNFPA Executive Director, stated that in recognition of the key role of communities in sustaining post-conflict assistance, UNDP launched an integrated community development programme in Burundi and a similar initiative, the Srebrenica regional recovery programme, in Bosnia and Herzegovina. It supported a transition and recovery programme for northern Uganda designed to reintegrate internally displaced persons, provided assistance for disarmament, demobilization and reintegration efforts in the Democratic Republic of the Congo (DRC), and worked with UN partners to develop joint programmes on disarmament, demobilization and reintegration in Haiti and the Sudan. UNDP worked with the UN Department of Peacekeeping Operations (DPKO) to develop the United Nations Integrated Office in Sierra Leone (see p. 281), which would replace the UN Mission in Sierra Leone in January 2006. The Office would be headed by a representative of the Secretary-General who would also serve as resident representative of UNDP and UN resident coordinator. In Haiti, Kosovo (Serbia and Montenegro), Liberia, Sierra Leone and the Sudan, UNDP supported the reform and rebuilding of the justice and security sectors, and emphasized developing the capacity of national and local institutions to work with civic, traditional and community leaders. It provided technical and logistical support to the truth and reconciliation commissions in Sierra Leone and Timor-Leste and to the Special Court for Sierra Leone. UNDP also supported rebuilding and reconciliation efforts at the community level in Côte d'Ivoire.

UNDP supported, in collaboration with several UN partners, a programme for building national conflict prevention, as well as some 80 countries in implementing the 2001 Programme of Action to Prevent, Combat and Eradicate the Illicit Trade in Small Arms and Light Weapons in All Its Aspects [YUN 2001, p. 499]. UNDP helped Mauritania, Senegal and Uganda in setting up national mine action programmes and collaborated with other UN organizations in establishing a completion initiative to resolve landmine issues in various countries. It also promoted South-South cooperation through the mine action exchange programme and helped launch a forum of mine-affected countries. UNDP intensified efforts in 2005 to build national capacity for natural disaster prevention, preparedness and recovery, drawing on lessons learned from the 2004 Indian Ocean tsunami [YUN 2004, p. 952] and other natural disasters.

UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board

In 2005, the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board held its first (20-28 January) and second (6-9 September) regular sessions and an annual session (13-14 June), all in New York [E/2005/35].

At the first regular session, the Board adopted 14 decisions, including one giving an overview of the Board's actions taken at that session [E/2005/35 (dec. 2005/14)]. Other decisions dealt with a revision of UNDP financial regulations (see p. 976); the UNDP global programme, 2005-2007 (see p. 964); the UNDP report on the assessment mission to Myanmar (see p. 964); the UNDP corporate gender strategy and action plan (see p. 968); options for a future business model for the United Nations Capital Development Fund (UNCDF) (see p. 985); the progress report of the Executive Director of the United Nations Office for Project Services (UNOPS) (see p. 978); the third cooperation framework for South-South cooperation (see p. 984); implementation by UNDP and UNFPA of the recommendations of the Board of Auditors (see p. 975); the reports of the UNDP Administrator and the UNFPA Executive Director to the Economic and Social Council (see p. 963), and their report on joint programming (see p. 970); and revision of UNFPA financial regulations, recovery of indirect costs for co-financing by UNFPA, and the quinquennial review of the UNFPA system for the allocation of resources to country programmes (see PART THREE, Chapter VIII).

At its annual session, the Executive Board adopted 17 decisions. In addition to an overview decision that summarized the action taken at that session [dec. 2005/31] and a decision expressing appreciation to the outgoing UNDP Administrator (see p. 963), other decisions dealt with: the UNDP global programme, 2005-2007 (see p. 964); the revision of UNDP financial regulations (see p. 976); the UNDP strategic cost management and implications for cost recovery (see p. 974); the internal audit and oversight for UNDP, UNFPA and UNOPS (see p. 975); the report on UNDP performance and results for 2004 in implementing the MYFF, 2004-2007 (see p. 964); the UNDP Administrator's annual report on evaluation, 2004 (see p. 971); the midterm report on the United Nations Development Fund for Women (UNIFEM) MYFF, 2004-2007 (see p. 1275); the status of regular resources funding commitments to UNDP and its funds and programmes for 2005 and onwards (see p. 973); the funding commitments to UNFPA, and the report of its Executive Director for 2004 (see PART THREE, Chapter VIII); the midterm review of UNDP successor programming arrangements (see p. 969); the question of gender in UNDP (see p. 968); the progress in implementing UNDP decision 2001/11: addressing the time frame for developing country programme documents (see p. 970); UNCDF business plan 2005-2007 (see p. 986); and the UNDP and UNFPA programme performance information at the country level (see p. 970).

At its second regular session, the Board adopted 11 decisions, including an overview decision [dec. 2005/42]. The other decisions concerned the Board's working methods (see below); UNDP budget estimates for the 2006-2007 biennium (see p. 973); UNIFEM budget estimates for the 2006-2007 biennium (see p. 1275); UNDP report on evaluation of the regional cooperation framework for the Arab States, 2002-2005 (see p. 971); UNOPS plan of action (see p. 979); estimates for the UNFPA biennial support budget for 2006-2007, the UNFPA 2004 financial review, its Technical Advisory Programme, and its role in emergency preparedness, humanitarian response, and transition and recovery (see PART THREE, Chapter VIII); and follow-up to the decisions and recommendations of the Joint United Nations Programme on HIV/AIDS (UNAIDS) Programme Coordinating Board (see p. 967).

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 2005/230 of 20 July, took note of the reports of the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board on its work in 2004 [YUN 2004, p. 877] and the report on its 2005 first regular session.

Working methods

In a September report [DP/2005/CRP.13], the Bureau of the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board identified proposals to improve the Board's working methods with regard to the election of the Bureau; its decision-making process; documentation; meeting procedures; joint consideration of draft country programme documents; draft field visits and meetings; strengthening ties with the Economic and Social Council; and MDG country reporting.

On 9 September [dec. 2005/32], the Board decided, in order to ensure continuity of its work, to encourage newly elected members to participate in its work soon after their election by the Council; and to establish the composition of the incoming Bureau at an early date to enable incoming members to consult with the outgoing Bureau and take part in its work. The Board requested that it be provided with the financial implications of draft decisions prior to its sessions. The Board encouraged the joint meetings of the Executive Boards of UNDP/UNFPA, UNICEF and WFP to discuss and comment on individual country cases as a practical illustration of joint UN work in the field, and invited the UN agencies, funds and programmes taking part in UNDAF to participate in that exercise. It continued discussion and consultations on making its working methods more efficient and effective, while expediting and facilitating the decision-making process.

Appointment of Administrator

By a 3 May note [A/59/240], the Secretary-General requested that the General Assembly confirm the appointment of Kemal Dervis (Turkey) as UNDP Administrator for a four-year term, beginning on 15 August 2005 and ending on 14 August 2009, to replace Mark Malloch Brown, who had taken up the post of Chief of Staff to the Secretary-General, effective 18 January. The Assembly confirmed the appointment on 5 May 2005 (decision 59/417). The UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board, on 14 June [dec. 2005/15], commended Mr. Malloch Brown for his effective management of UNDP from 1999 to 2005.

UNDP/UNFPA reports

In January [dec. 2005/9], the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board took note of the reports of the UNDP Administrator [E/2005/4-DP/2005/13] and the UNFPA Executive Director [E/2005/5-DP/FPA/2005/2] to the Economic and Social Council and decided to transmit them to the Council with the comments and guidance of delegations. The Council requested UNDP and UNFPA to maintain a sharp focus with respect to following up on the triennial comprehensive policy review [YUN 2004, p. 866].

The Executive Board, at its annual session in June, had before it an April [DP/2005/19] update on the Human Development Report consultations, submitted in response to General Assembly resolution 57/264 [YUN 2002, p. 841]. The Human Development Report Office, charged with preparing the report (see p. 937), held five consultations with Board members on a concept note for the report and the report's outline, statistics, structure and message.

The Board took note of the report in June [dec. 2005/31].

UNDP operational activities

Country and regional programmes

The UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board, at its January session [dec. 2005/14], reviewed the draft subregional programme document for the countries of the Organisation of Eastern Caribbean States and Barbados. It approved the country programme documents for Angola, Argentina, Armenia, Azerbaijan, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Burundi, the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Guatemala, Iran, Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, Lesotho, Madagascar, Mauritius, the Philippines, the Republic of Korea, Romania, Serbia and Montenegro, Tajikistan, the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Turkmenistan and Uzbekistan.

Also in January [dec. 2005/3], the Board took note of the UNDP Administrator's report on the assessment mission to Myanmar [DP/2005/6] and the report by the independent assessment mission to that country, in particular the key challenges and recommendations mentioned therein. The Board requested the Administrator to consider and implement the findings of the independent assessment mission. It asked UNDP, in expanding the programme, to ensure that quality was maintained, taking into account the findings of the 2004 mission [YUN 2004, p. 878].

At its annual session in June [dec. 2005/31], the Board took note of draft country programme documents and the comments made thereon for Albania, Belarus, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Cambodia, China, Ghana, Georgia, Namibia, Peru, Turkey, the British Overseas Territory of Turks and Caicos Islands, Uganda, Ukraine and Viet Nam. It took note of the one-year extensions of the country programmes for the Democratic Republic of the Congo (DRC) and Liberia, and the draft regional programme document for Europe and the Commonwealth of Independent States (CIS), 2006-2010. The Board also approved the subregional programme for the countries of the Organisation of Eastern Caribbean States and Barbados.

At its second regular session in September [dec. 2005/42], the Board took note of the draft country programme documents and the comments made thereon for Afghanistan, Bangladesh, Chad, Guyana, Indonesia, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya and Swaziland. It also took note of the draft regional programme document for the Arab States, 2006-2009. The Board approved the two-year extension of phase IV of the Human Development Initiative in Myanmar for the period 2006-2007; the two-year extensions of the second country cooperation framework (CCF) for Mexico and the country programme for Timor-Leste; the two-year extension of the regional cooperation framework for Latin America and the Caribbean, from 1 January 2006 to 31 December 2007; and the third-year extensions of the second CCFs for Chile and Uruguay.

Global programme, 2005-2007

The UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board, at its January session, considered the UNDP global programme, 2005-2007 [DP/GP/1], whose primary objective was to support programme countries in achieving the MDGs. The four priority areas outlined in the MYFF, 2004-2007, which was endorsed by the Board in 2003 [YUN 2003, p. 901], made up the substantive core of the programme: achieving the MDGs and reducing human poverty; fostering democratic governance; managing energy and environment for sustainable development; and responding to HIV/AIDS. Programme initiatives would aim to accelerate progress towards the realization of the MDGs through policy support services, global learning, and knowledge management and capacity development.

On 28 January [dec. 2005/2], the Executive Board extended until December 2005, the second global cooperation framework (GCF-II), approved in 2001 [YUN 2001, p. 793] and extended previously in 2003 [YUN 2003, p. 893]. The Administrator was to ensure that the extension of GCF-II did not have an adverse impact on programme countries and to submit to the Board a revised third global programme, together with a work plan, at its annual session in June, concerning, among other things, national ownership and leadership of the development process. The Board included an item on the global programme in the agenda of its June session.

In June [dec. 2005/16], the Board adopted the revised UNDP global programme, 2005-2007, and workplan [DG/GP/1/Rev.1], and stressed the importance of fully aligning them with the MYFF, 2004-2007, and with the provision of the triennial comprehensive policy review relating to national ownership and development processes.

UNDP programme results

The establishment and implementation by UNDP of its practice approach were an important element of its strategy to provide knowledge services and part of its objective to develop the ability to provide high-quality support to programme countries. UNDP activities were organized under five practice areas: poverty reduction, fostering democratic governance, crisis prevention and recovery, energy and environment, and responding to HIV/AIDS.

Poverty reduction

In 2005, the poverty reduction practice registered the highest level of country demand for services, with 97 per cent of all country programmes reported having fully or partially met their targets in the practice. Fifty-seven per cent of the $761 million expenditure in the practice came from local resources, reflecting country commitment to achieving the MDGs and reducing poverty. The practice also accounted for the largest expenditure of regular resources in 2005 (32 per cent of the total), which was consistent with the country and global priority of focusing UNDP resources on the MDGs and reducing poverty, and with the demand for poverty practice advisory services.

UNDP supported the preparation of 50 of the 152 national MDG reports submitted in the build-up to the High-level Plenary Meeting of the General Assembly (World Summit) in September (see p. 47), as well as the national human development reports which complemented them. Significant capacity development was recorded in MDG reporting and monitoring. Priority interventions included: strengthening statistical capacity for data collection and monitoring poverty and inequality; using statistics to improve policy design and address gender issues and other social inequalities; setting benchmark indicators to monitor MDG progress; and promoting stakeholder involvement in policy dialogue and ownership of the development agenda. Despite progress made, a number of challenges remained, as the focus shifted from data collection to managing the growing amount of information on human development and the MDGs.

With respect to national ownership and local engagement in national development processes, UNDP supported countries in fostering civil society participation in policy formulation, implementation, and monitoring and evaluation of the MDGs. However, while many countries concentrated on building wide stakeholder support for the MDG agenda, advocacy and capacity-building for disadvantaged and marginalized groups to participate effectively in development dialogue and implementation processes were insufficient.

Work under the pro-poor policies service line focused on support for national capacity-building to help countries link their poverty reduction strategies to MDG-focused economic policies for pro-poor growth. Intensive capacity-building activities on MDG-based poverty reduction strategy papers were seen in all regions. While UNDP support for initiatives that connected and integrated the MDGs with national development strategies helped lay a foundation for follow-up to the World Summit, the limited absorptive capacity in many countries constrained efforts to transform national development plans into MDG-based development strategies.

Support for national aid coordination was an important element of UNDP's work under the globalization benefiting the poor service line, particularly in LDCs. The service line also covered support for trade and debt relief. In 2005, through regional programmes in Africa, Asia and the Arab States, UNDP assisted countries to utilize better development finance, improve their capacity to integrate into the global economy, and negotiate trade arrangements and debt relief for highly indebted poor countries. UNDP, in collaboration with other agencies, supported the coordinated delivery of trade-related capacity building technical assistance to over 29 LDCs. Despite progress in integrating trade into their respective anti-poverty strategies, various assessments indicated continuing constraints on the ability of many LDCs to enhance their supply-side response.

Within the private sector development and local poverty initiatives service lines, UNDP, in partnership with UNCDF, supported programme countries to access microfinance, productive resources and basic social services to help overcome poverty. In 2005, UNCDF supported programmes in 23 LDCs. At the regional level, UNCDF and UNDP approved a programme to build inclusive financial sectors in Africa.

Democratic governance

In 2005, 133 of 135 UNDP country programmes promoted democratic governance. UNDP was one of the largest providers of technical assistance in that area, with over $1.4 billion in expenditure worldwide. It played an important role in providing governance assistance in conflict and post-conflict countries, particularly in transitional justice and security sector reform, and helped countries to transition from UN peacekeeping operations to stability through electoral and constitutional processes and institution-building.

Of the 464 programme outcomes focusing on democratic governance, 23 per cent was in the area of justice and human rights, while decentralization, local governance and urban/rural development accounted for 22 per cent. The three service lines—public administration reform and anti-corruption; electoral systems and processes; decentralization and local governance—together accounted for approximately 83 per cent of the resources in governance. Projects falling under those service lines included electoral support programmes in Afghanistan, Cambodia, the DRC and Iraq, as well as large decentralization and local governance initiatives in other countries, including Haiti and Honduras.

UNDP's core results in each of the governance service lines included an emphasis on developing capacities. The practice increased focus on governance at the local level and decentralization more generally, with more than two thirds of country programmes reporting outcomes in the practice area and almost $1 billion in expenditure. UNDP continued to emphasize support for national decentralization policy making; local governance institution-building, including strengthening participation and partnerships in social service delivery; policy formulation and resource management; and urban and rural development. At the country level, progress was achieved in influencing national, sectoral and local development strategies to incorporate MDG targets; strengthening the capacity of public and civil society institutions to monitor and report resource use for development results; and facilitating policy dialogue among key stakeholders aimed at building broad-based consensus.

UNDP's development work was also visible in the public administration reform and anti-corruption service line, especially in the areas of reform for pro-poor public services, and the establishment of institutional, legal and policy frameworks to promote and enforce accountability, transparency and integrity in the public service. Capacity development also featured prominently in UNDP's justice and human rights work. It helped to increase human resources capacities through systematic training for legal, judicial and administrative officers in the justice system in the provision of human rights knowledge for the police, judiciary and the media and through the expansion of human rights advocacy networks.

In parliamentary development, UNDP capacity development support centred primarily on enhancing the representation function. It made significant progress in establishing legal and institutional frameworks that enabled free, fair, transparent and sustainable elections at all levels in 2005. E-governance and access to information were used to facilitate capacity development so as to increase opportunity and enhance the capacity of vulnerable groups to participate in policy-making processes.

Crisis prevention and recovery

The demand for services linked to the crisis prevention and recovery practice area increased in 2005, with 83 of 135 UNDP country offices working in that area. The most requested service line was natural disasters, followed closely by recovery. The natural disasters service line was especially prominent in the Asia and the Pacific and the Latin America and the Caribbean regions due to the 2004 Indian Ocean tsunami [YUN 2004, p. 952] and the 2004-2005 Atlantic hurricane seasons. The recovery service line was particularly in demand in Africa and to a lesser extent in Asia and the Pacific. Those two service lines also made up almost one third of the resources spent globally in the practice area in 2005, partly due to high investment and expenditure in post-tsunami recovery efforts. The highest expenditure was on the special initiatives for countries in transition, especially the Sudan and Afghanistan. Conflict prevention and peacebuilding accounted for a significant share of global expenditure in the practice area. In absolute numbers, UNDP was most active in crisis prevention and recovery in the African region (25 countries), followed by Asia and the Pacific (20), Europe and CIS (14), Latin America and the Caribbean (14), and the Arab States (10). When viewed proportionally, however, 80 per cent of all countries in Asia and the Pacific were active in crisis prevention and recovery, as were 59 per cent of countries in the Arab States region and around 56 per cent of the countries in each of the other regions.

UNDP contributied significantly to policy development and advocacy in crisis prevention and recovery, and its inputs and leadership role were reflected in many related fields. UNDP was designated the lead agency for early recovery within the framework of the Inter-Agency Standing Committee reform of humanitarian response and was charged with enhancing capacity at the global level to ensure integrated humanitarian and recovery responses. UNDP was also the lead agency for discussions with the Bretton Woods institutions and donor and landmine-affected countries on the need to integrate mine action concerns into development plans, programmes and budgets. It sought to foster an environment where national authorities could solve the problem of landmines by supporting the development of appropriate structures and policies for the coordination and implementation of mine action activities, as well as ensuring that adequate and sustainable human and financial resources were available to complete those activities.

With UNDP heavily involved in the mobilization and management of large amounts of official development assistance (ODA) in response to the 2004 Indian Ocean tsunami and several major hurricanes and earthquakes, particular emphasis was placed on supporting and facilitating national aid coordination arrangements and enhancing national ownership. Setbacks in recovery coordination were indicated in some areas of post-tsunami reconstruction, largely due to divergent views on priority setting between national and subnational levels; lengthy processes in resolving land allocation formalities; slow finalization of technical details for procurement processes; and the unfamiliarity of technical counterparts with certain UNDP and government procedures with regard to tsunami recovery.

Environment and energy

The energy and environment practice served 123 programme countries in 2005, with 22 per ent of total outcomes focusing on energy and environment for sustainable development. The distribution of demand was similar across all regions, with the lowest demand coming from Africa and the highest from Latin America and the Caribbean. The areas receiving priority attention were frameworks and strategies for sustainable development (96 countries), conservation and sustainable use of biodiversity (66 countries) and access to sustainable energy services (56 countries).

Country programme expenditure for the energy and environment practice was $327 million, including $103 million from the global environmental facility (GEF) (see p. 1141). An additional $77 million of GEF funding for energy and environment activities was reported under global initiatives and the small grants programme. The total GEF contribution of approximately $180 million represented 50 per cent of donor and trust fund contributions to total energy and environment expenditure for the year.

More than a third of the practice's outcomes (118) were focused on the integration of sustainable management of environment and natural resources in poverty reduction strategies and national development frameworks.

The most significant capacity development drivers within the energy and environment practice were developing national capacities and fostering an enabling policy environment. Activities were particularly strong in capacity development diagnostics for pro-poor responses and national, sectoral and local development strategies to incorporate MDG targets. Country programmes were working to ensure that activities under the practice supported countries in incorporating those targets into national, sectoral and local development strategies, and adapting them to national conditions and priorities.

While significant efforts were reported by most UNDP country programmes to support planning, target-setting and capacity development diagnostics to achieve the MDGs, that work was not sufficiently matched by efforts to increase the delivery of energy, water and sanitation services. However, some initiatives were paving the way in supporting such service delivery and implementation capacities. UNDP's support for access to safe water and sanitation services yielded significant results in Tajikistan, Myanmar, the Niger and Uzbekistan. Activities to support access to energy services, electricity or cleaner fuels in rural areas increased in 2005, with initiatives to improve access to energy services in remote areas of India and the United Republic of Tanzania.

Response to HIV/AIDS

UNDP continued to intensify capacity development efforts and build momentum at all levels of government and civil society to respond effectively to the HIV/AIDS epidemic. In 2005, 90 country programmes were involved in the fight against HIV/AIDS. UNDP undertook development support activities in 80 per cent of countries in Africa, and in 63 per cent of countries in the Asia and the Pacific region. Europe and CIS, Latin America and the Caribbean and the Arab States regions each contained roughly half of countries with HIV/AIDS programming. The focus of UNDP's HIV/AIDS interventions in the different regions mirrored the spread of the epidemic, reflecting both organizational focus and responsiveness to national demand. Development planning and implementation was the service line with the highest demand and expenditure, followed by leadership and capacity development, and advocacy and communication.

The majority of outcomes under the development planning and implementation service line centred on mainstreaming HIV/AIDS into national development plans, which was central to UNDP's HIV/AIDS work. The outcomes also reflected increased country demand for support in integrating HIV/AIDS into MDG-based poverty reduction strategies. In response to that demand, as well as the evolving global environment and the recommendations of the Global Task Team on improving AIDS coordination among multilateral and international donors (see p. 1327), UNDP was assigned the lead role, in collaboration with the World Bank, in supporting countries to mainstream HIV/AIDS more effectively into MDG-based poverty reduction strategy papers. In 2005, seven African countries benefited from capacity development support to plan, manage and deliver an increasingly robust response to the epidemic through the joint UNDP, World Bank and Joint United Nations Programme on HIV/AIDS (UNAIDS) initiative. Support would be expanded to meet demand from 13 more countries in 2006.

Another key area of growing demand was support to advance the "Three Ones" strategy endorsed by donor countries in 2004 [YUN 2004, p. 1219]. Those efforts helped to improve the capacity of national Governments in several countries in aid coordination and harmonization, including Indonesia, Kyrgyzstan, the Russian Federation and Zambia. In other countries, such as Mozambique and Rwanda, country efforts focused on strengthening national AIDS councils.

The leadership and capacity development service line continued to support efforts across all regions in both high and low prevalence settings. A key shift in the work under that service line was the adaptation of capacity development methodologies to targeted outcomes in development planning and human rights. Significantly fewer outcomes were reported under the advocacy and communication service line, possibly indicating a shift from making the case for action on HIV/AIDS to large-scale, multisectoral programmes.

The HIV/AIDS practice area continued to play an important role in developing country capacity for improved implementation of multilateral funding initiatives, including the Global Fund to Fight AIDS, Malaria and Tuberculosis, established in 2002 [YUN 2002, p. 1217]. While UNDP continued to act as principal recipient of last resort for Global Fund grants in 24 countries, the success of its engagement would ultimately be judged by the extent to which it built the capacity of local partners to implement the grants. That model had enabled the successful handover of its role as principal recipient to a local partner in Haiti, and similar results were expected in Benin and El Salvador.

Programme planning and management

Gender issues

The UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board, at its January session, considered a conference room paper updating the progress achieved in the partnership between UNDP and UNIFEM [DP/2005/CRP.2], submitted in response to 2004 Board decisions [YUN 2004, pp. 883 & 884, respectively]. The paper outlined four dimensions of a strengthened UNDP/UNIFEM partnership to enhance gender mainstreaming in UNDP and promote gender equality through: scaling up innovations piloted by UNIFEM; joint programming for enhanced development effectiveness; strengthening support to UNDP country programmes; and utilizing UNDP's role as coordinator of the resident coordinator system and chair of UNDG to advance gender mainstreaming. The Board took note of the paper on 28 January [dec. 2005/14].

Also before the Board in January was a report on the UNDP corporate gender strategy and action plan [DP/2005/7 & Corr.1]. The corporate gender strategy was designed to integrate the promotion of gender equality and women's empowerment fully into UNDP's core business and rested on three major dimensions: to develop capacities, both in-country and in-house, to integrate gender concerns in all practice areas and programmes; to provide gender-responsive policy advisory services that promoted gender equality and women's empowerment; and to support specific interventions that benefited women and scaled up and expanded innovative models, including those tested by UNIFEM.

Specific elements of the corporate gender action plan included: monitoring the MDGs from a gender perspective; gender-sensitive budgeting; reducing the incidence of HIV among vulnerable women; mainstreaming gender in macroeconomic policies and trade negotiations; promoting women's empowerment in democratic governance, decentralization and civil society participation; and developing capacities through training, knowledge sharing and networking. All UNDP bureaux and country offices were engaged in a mapping exercise, to produce a comprehensive review of gender-related interventions and planned activities, with a view to a possible partnership between UNIFEM and UNDP. The action plan would put emphasis on developing capacities; mainstreaming gender in the UNDP practice areas; and in MDG reporting, advocacy and implementation; coordinating UN system work on gender at the country level; mainstreaming gender in human development reports; providing financial and human resources to implement the plan; and developing performance indicators.

Annexed to the report were an assessment of substantive performance of the driver of development effectiveness on promoting gender equality, and a UNDP gender mainstreaming scorecard requested by the Board in 2004 [YUN 2004, p. 884].

On 28 January [dec. 2005/4], the Executive Board took note of the report and deferred further consideration of it to the Board's annual session in June.

In June, the Board considered an explanatory note on the implementation of the UNDP corporate gender strategy and action plan [DP/2005/

CRP.9], which indicated that UNDP continued to deliver on its gender programmes in all areas of the action plan, supported mainly by core resources. UNDP had developed an interim work plan to implement the corporate strategy and action plan in 2005. All UNDP regional bureaux, country offices, regional centres, the UNDP Learning Resource Centre, and the practice groups were working collaboratively to develop short- and long-term work plans with specific interventions to institutionalize gender equality as a core UNDP objective. The 2005 implementation plan focused on institutional capacities, including gender expertise and staff training for all units; a gender mainstreaming strategy implemented in 45 country offices, four regional centres and five headquarters units; knowledge sharing and tools development to strengthen internal capacities and learning; and mainstreaming gender in the CCA/UNDAF process, with support to the resident coordinator system. A results matrix on the implementation of the corporate strategy and action plan for 2005 was annexed to the note.

In June [dec. 2005/27], the Executive Board adopted the corporate gender strategy and action plan as set forth in the January report (see above). It took note of the explanatory note and urged UNDP to further expand its work in mainstreaming gender, including through the increase of financial and human resources to support the implementation of the action plan, and to take into account the comments of member States in that regard. The Board requested UNDP to promote and establish partnerships with all relevant UN organizations working in the area of gender to support the implementation of the plan. It requested the Administrator to develop the gender action plan through 2007, including the results matrix, taking into account the findings of the MYFF report on performance and results for 2004 [YUN 2004, p. 876], and the findings of the independent gender evaluation initiated that year [ibid., p. 883]. The Administrator was also asked to report to the Board on the medium-term action plan at its first regular session in 2006, building on the 2004 management response to the independent gender evaluation.

Programming arrangements

In May [DP/2005/18], the Administrator reported on the midterm review of UNDP programming arrangements for the period 2004-2007. In accordance with a 2002 Executive Board decision on programming arrangements [YUN 2002, p. 870], UNDP, for the first time within a programming period, conducted a full recalculation of target for resource assignment from the core (TRAC) line 1.1.1 earmarkings for 2004-2007. In applying the distribution methodology approved in the Board's 2002 decision, the recalculation required a full redistribution of resources based on 2003 gross national income (GNI) per capita and population data, which was summarized in the report. The recalculation, like the initial calculation, was based on a $450 million regular programme resource base. Should regular programme resources fall below that base, TRAC 1.1.1 minimum allocations and fixed programme lines would be reduced in direct proportion to the shortfall; should regular programme resources exceed the $450 million base, TRAC 1.1.1 allocations not subject to the minimum allocation, and programme lines that were not fixed, would be increased on a pro rata basis.

Two options based on the midterm recalculation were presented in the report. Option 1 took into account all countries, reflecting either upward or downward revisions to their initial annual TRAC 1.1.1 earmarkings. Option 2 considered only those countries reflecting upward revisions to their annual TRAC 1.1.1 earmarkings. Under option 2, TRAC 1.1.1 resource flows to low-income countries during 2006-2007 were maximized. The initial annual TRAC 1.1.1 earmarkings, based on 2001 GNI, totalled $195.3 million; the recalculation, based on 2003 GNI, totalled $195.4 million under option 1 and $203.5 million under option 2. UNDP recommended the adoption of option 2.

The Administrator proposed changes in the earmarkings between TRAC lines 1.1.1 and 1.1.2 for available resources over the base total programming level of $450 million to provide UNDP with flexibility in supporting urgent programme country national capacity development needs towards achieving the MDGs. He also proposed a separate, predictable level of funding in the amount of $3 million for the Programme of Assistance to the Palestinian People.

In June [dec. 2005/26], the Executive Board took note of the report and reiterated that allocations from TRAC lines 1.1.1 and 1.1.2 to least developed countries (LDCs) should be fixed at a minimum of 60 per cent, and for low-income countries at a range of between 85 and 91 per cent. The Board maintained the current TRAC line 1.1.1 earmarkings for 2006 and 2007 and approved, subject to revision in 2007, the following temporary changes for available new resources over the base total programming level of $450 million: changing the ratio of internal earmarking between TRAC lines 1.1.1 and 1.1.2 from 60/40 per cent to 50/50 per cent; eliminating the current limitation on country allocations between TRAC lines 1.1.1 and 1.1.2, while fully adhering to the principle of priority allocation to low-income countries and LDCs; and introducing a flexibility of up to 10 per cent to facilitate some movement of TRAC 1.1.2 resources between regions, while retaining the regional limitation in principle. The Board also approved the proposed level of annual funding for the Programme of Assistance to the Palestinian People. UNDP was asked to assess the current programming arrangements, particularly the approved changes, in the context of proposing a successor programming arrangement for submission to the Board in 2007.

Joint programming

In January [dec. 2005/10], the Executive Board took note of the 2004 report [YUN 2004, p. 884] on joint programming submitted by the UNDP Administrator and the UNFPA Executive Director. The Board emphasized the importance that it attached to joint programming as a tool for supporting the implementation of national development plans, including poverty reduction strategies, through a more concerted approach under the CCA and UNDAF, towards achieving the internationally agreed development goals, including the MDGs. It requested the Administrator and the Executive Director, in managing their respective organizations' cooperation with other agencies, to ensure that the implementation of joint programming resulted in improved development impact, including the further harmonization of country programme preparation, implementation, monitoring and evaluation processes, and the improvement of communication between UN agencies during the programme cycle; effective delivery of programme goals and the reduction of transaction costs; and promotion of common monitoring and reporting processes to governing bodies and joint approaches to evaluations. The Board requested the Administrator and the Executive Director to report in June on joint programming and joint programmes in their respective annual reports, and to submit for the Board's consideration in 2006 a comprehensive report on the implementation of joint programming.

In response to a 2004 Executive Board decision [YUN 2004, p. 884], the UNDP Administrator and the UNFPA Executive Director reported, in April [DP/2005/28-DP/FPA/2005/10], on progress in the implementation of a 2001 Board decision that called for modifying the UNDP/UNFPA two-step programming process [YUN 2001, p. 799], addressing the issue of the time frame for developing country programme documents. The report indicated that, while the common country programming process had produced a more unified and strategic vision for country-level operational activities, the preparatory process was too cumbersome and its duration lengthy (two years in a typical five-year cycle). The report proposed shortening the preparation time for country programme documents as well as the time frame between preparation and implementation, in order to avoid those documents becoming outdated by the time of their approval; and ensuring high-quality processes and documents that improved the timeliness and relevance of UN programmes, while guaranteeing adequate formal approval for them. To do so, country teams would need to start the preparation process closer to the start of implementation and complete the CCA in three months. However, to maintain and improve the quality of strategic planning, it would be difficult to develop the UNDAF in less than three months. Shortening the preparation time for country programme documents, based on the UNDAF and its results matrix, could jeopardize the review with national partners and other stakeholders, undermine the quality of the products and affect the participation and ownership by Governments and their partners.

If the Executive Board wished, the time between the submission of the draft country programme documents and their approval by the Board could be reduced or, alternatively, the Board could approve the documents automatically within two months of the Board session at which they were submitted, unless five or more Board members wished to bring them before the Board for further discussion. That would reduce the approval period from seven to two months, and eliminate the need to schedule formal approval of the documents as an agenda item for Board sessions.

The report also discussed other options for further simplifying and streamlining the country programme preparation and approval process, but which would require further discussion among the agencies, as well as major changes in the current procedures of the respective Executive Boards.

In June [dec. 2005/28], the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board took note of the report on the time frame for developing country programme documents and the proposals contained therein. It reconfirmed the validity of the current programming process approval procedure, while stressing the need to ensure the quality and results orientation of the country programme documents and their alignment with national priorities in the areas of competence of all agencies involved. It requested the UNDP Administrator and the UNFPA Executive Director, with UNICEF, to present to the Board in 2006 a joint report on options to further improve and streamline the current harmonized country programme approval procedure, so as to decrease the time frame for developing and approving country programmes and better synchronize them with the length of cycle of the respective national country programming instruments, bearing in mind the need to maintain the institutional integrity and organizational mandate of each agency.

Also in June [dec. 2005/30], the Executive Board requested UNDP and UNFPA to make a proposal at the Board's January 2006 session on cost-efficient approaches to providing programme-level data as part of their programming and reporting cycles.

Monitoring and evaluation

In April [DP/2005/25], the UNDP Administrator, in his annual report on evaluation covering the period from July 2004 to March 2005, addressed the progress and challenges in the area of evaluation. The report also identified the major findings of corporate evaluations, assessed UNDP's contribution to selected development results and highlighted the central organizational lessons. The analysis drew from 280 evaluations conducted during the year and a review of the function itself. The report, which integrated the evaluative work of all UNDP-associated funds and programmes, showed that the coverage of outcome evaluations improved dramatically in the reporting period, with 37 conducted, a proportional increase of 70 per cent over the 2003 figure.

The review of the UNDP evaluation function underscored that evaluation practices, as well as standards, capacities and demands, were highly variable across the organization. The results-oriented framework introduced in 2001 [YUN 2001, p. 803] was found to have only partial relevance in operational practice; some offices were planning, monitoring and evaluating around outcomes derived from national strategies, whereas others were still planning and conducting discrete project-based interventions, sometimes with weak review mechanisms and no evaluations. Evaluation budgeting had not been standardized at either the regional or the country-programme level and monitoring often took the largest share at the project level.

Evaluations conducted in 2004 revealed that UNDP's strategic positioning as an impartial and trustworthy organization and its ability to respond to major development concerns and provide access to expertise and global information were key to the organization's relevance. Wherever UNDP gained recognition as an impartial and legitimate broker, it mobilized support from Governments and international donors and made relevant contributions in facilitating dialogue and consensus-building on the rule of law and democratic practices.

Evaluations pointed to numerous poverty-reduction initiatives and public sector management efforts that concentrated on reform; UNDP programmes might yield greater benefits if they facilitated reform at a higher level of national importance. Evaluations also showed UNDP's gradual but uneven progress in the institutionalization and use of corporate results-based management and often highlighted the failure to situate projects within wider organizational and national frameworks, thus diminishing development results. They recommended that, at the country level, UNDP should focus on a small number of national priorities, with clear strategies for delivery as a basis for enhancing operational effectiveness and efficiency, as well as sustainability of benefits. UNDP would define its evaluation policy, which would be aligned with the norms and standards issued by the United Nations Evaluation Group in April, and situated within the priorities of General Assembly resolution 59/250 on the triennial comprehensive policy review of UN system operational activities for development [YUN 2004, p. 868].

In June [dec. 2005/21], the Executive Board encouraged the Evaluation Office to pay more attention to concrete development results achieved and follow-up on the recommendations of previous evaluations; highlighted the importance of seeking synergy through evaluation among UNDP and its associated funds and programmes in enhancing the accountability of the organization; and approved the codification of an evaluation policy during the 2005 reporting period and the formulation of a system for tracking evaluation recommendations.

Regional cooperation framework for Arab States region

At its September session, the Executive Board considered a July report [DP/2005/36] summarizing the findings of the independent evaluation of the regional cooperation framework for the Arab States, 2002-2005, carried out by the UNDP Evaluation Office. The report contained recommendations dealing with the design, relevance and positioning of future regional cooperation frameworks; management issues within the Regional Bureau for Arab States; and monitoring, evaluation and the systematic performance of UNDP regional programmes.

On 9 September [dec. 2005/35], the Executive Board took note of the report and welcomed the approach and methodology used in the evaluation. It requested the UNDP Evaluation Office to give more attention to the relevance of the regional programmes in their approach and conduct of independent evaluations of all regional programmes in the future. The Board expressed concern at the lack of outcome evaluations and requested UNDP to develop mechanisms for systematic monitoring and evaluation systems, and to collect baseline data and track indicators that could provide information on the outcomes and impact of UNDP regional programmes, in close cooperation with national authorities. The Board suggested that the Evaluation Office prioritize the conclusions and recommendations contained in the report. It urged UNDP to take into account the lessons learned in implementing the regional cooperation framework for the Arab States, 2002-2005, while developing and implementing the next regional programme for that region.

Funding strategy

Multi-year funding framework, 2004-2007

In June, the Executive Board had before it a report [DP/2005/16] on the multi-year funding framework, UNDP performance and results for 2004 [YUN 2004, p. 876] and a statistical annex [DP/2005/16/Add.2], as well as a report by the Joint Inspection Unit [DP/2005/16/Add.1], which provided a synopsis of 10 reports prepared by the Unit, with selected recommendations of relevance to UNDP.

In June [dec. 2005/20], the Executive Board took note of the UNDP report on its performance and results for 2004 in the implementation of the MYFF, 2004-2007. It encouraged UNDP to further advance its methodology for presenting its results and to continue to enhance and refine the quantitative and qualitative measures contained in the MYFF, so as to better analyse progress and results. The Board requested UNDP to include in subsequent MYFF reports an executive summary and a flow diagram showing the results chain it was reporting, and to take follow-up actions based on the report and the discussions following its presentation to the Board. UNDP should select capacity development as the theme for its in-depth analysis of the 2006 annual report, and present to the Board, in January 2006, a timeline for the preparation and discussion of its report on the end-of-cycle performance assessment of the MYFF, 2004-2007, as well as on the process leading to the preparation of the MYFF, 2008-2011. The Board called on donors to continue to increase voluntary contributions to UNDP regular resources and asked the Administrator to follow up on the recommendations contained in the JIU reports. The Board took note of the statistical analysis of the midterm report on the MYFF.

Financing

The UNDP Administrator, in his annual review of the financial situation for 2005 [DP/2006/37], said that consistent growth in resource contributions continued, reaching $4.8 billion in 2005, a 20 per cent increase over the 2004 level of $4 billion. Compared to 2004, regular resources income increased by 10 per cent to $914 million, exceeding the 2005 MYFF interim target of $900 million; exchange rate fluctuations accounted for approximately one quarter of the increase. Expenditures under regular resources increased 2 per cent, to $849 million. The resource balance, exclusive of operational reserves but including after-service health insurance, increased 31 per cent. Contributions from the top 15 bilateral donor members of the Development Assistance Committee of the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD/DAC) (Belgium, Canada, Denmark, Finland, France, Germany, Ireland, Italy, Japan, Netherlands, Norway, Sweden, Switzerland, United Kingdom, United States) increased by 8 per cent in nominal terms and 4 per cent in real terms.

Programme expenditure, including programme support to the resident coordinator system, development support services and the UNDP economist programme, increased 4 per cent, from $498 million to $520 million. By appropriation group, 56 per cent of expenditure went to programme support activities, 21 per cent to management and administration and 23 per cent to UN system operational activities. In terms of percentage share of programme expenditure among regions, Africa recorded the highest share of programme delivery ($205 million, or 41 per cent, and $517 million, or 16 per cent, for regular and other expenditures, respectively), followed by Asia and the Pacific ($149 million, or 30 per cent, and $644 million or 20 per cent, respectively), Latin America and the Caribbean ($38 million, or 7 per cent, and $1.2 billion, or 36 per cent, respectively), the Arab States ($41 million, or 8 per cent, and $273 million, or 9 per cent, respectively) and Europe and CIS ($36 million, or 7 per cent, and $238 million, or 8 per cent, respectively).

As at 31 December, the balance of unexpended regular resources stood at $238 million, an increase of 39 per cent over the 2004 figure of $171 million. UNDP held cash and investments for regular resources totalling $217 million, excluding the operational reserve.

For other resources activities—local resources (government, cost-sharing and cash-counterpart contributions), donor cost-sharing, trust funds, the United Nations Volunteers (UNV) programme (see p. 980), management services agreements, the Junior Professional Officer programme and the reserve for field accommodation—overall income increased by $820 million, from $3.3 billion in 2004 to $4.1 billion in 2005. Net contributions, interest and other income received totalled $3.8 billion, of which 32 per cent ($1.2 billion) were received from bilateral OECD/DAC donors; non-bilateral/multilateral sources and local resources shared 33 per cent ($1.3 billion) each. Overall expenditure increased by 29 per cent ($771 million). Contributions from OECD/ DAC countries increased 31 per cent, from $900 million in 2004 to $1.2 billion in 2005.

In September [dec. 2005/42], the Executive Board took note of the Administrator's annual review of the financial situation for 2004 [YUN 2004, p. 887].

Regular funding commitments to UNDP

In June [DP/2005/17], UNDP submitted a report on the status of its regular funding commitments and its associated funds and programmes for 2005 and onward. Provisional data showed that contributions to regular resources for 2004 reached $842 million, a 9.4 per cent ($72 million) increase over the $770 million reached in 2003, marking the first time since 1996 that contributions exceeded $800 million. Current projections suggested that, based on the official UN exchange rate as at 1 May, contributions would exceed $900 million. Ten OECD/DAC members increased or resumed their contributions in local currency terms in 2004 and three donors increased their contributions by 10 per cent or more. Almost all OECD/DAC donors paid their contributions in full in 2004. Current estimates suggested that almost all OECD/DAC donors would either maintain or increase their contributions. Ten of those donors had indicated that they would increase their contribution in local currencies while one of them committed to increasing its contributions regularly over the full period of the MYFF, 2004-2007. Six programme countries made contributions in excess of $1 million to UNDP regular resources, indicating the high value such countries placed on UNDP work and the support they received from the organization. Eleven OECD/DAC donor countries provided fixed payment schedules in 2004. That same number had communicated their payment schedules for 2005. Of the 11 OECD/DAC donors that had provided schedules in 2003 and 2004, many did not contribute in accordance with the schedule provided. Although a number of donors delayed paying significant proportions of their pledges until the last quarter of 2004, the operational reserves did not have to be used.

In June [dec. 2005/23], the Executive Board took note of the report on the status of regular resources funding commitments to UNDP and its associated funds and programmes for 2005 and onwards. It also noted that UNDP had achieved the first (2004) annual funding target of the MYFF, 2004-2007, and that a stable and adequate base of regular resources was within reach, provided the organization continued to follow the directions of the MYFF, and improve programme design, implementation, monitoring and evaluation, as requested by the Board, and that UNDP member States not only sustained but increased their funding over the full period of the MYFF, 2004-2007. The Board requested member States to give priority to regular resources ("core" contributions) over other resources ("non-core" contributions). It requested UNDP to continue to reduce its dependency on a few large donors and to broaden its donor base. Countries that had already made their contributions to regular resources for 2005 were asked to consider supplementing them, if they were in a position to do so, in order to accelerate the momentum in rebuilding UNDP's regular resource base. The Board encouraged member States to announce multi-year pledges and payment schedules over the period of the MYFF, 2004-2007, and to adhere to those pledges and payment schedules.

Budget estimates for 2006-2007

In June [DP/2005/31], the Administrator submitted budget estimates for the 2006-2007 biennium, which underpinned the MYFF, 2004-2007, endorsed by the Executive Board in 2003 [YUN 2003, p. 901]. He proposed a budget in net terms of $658 million, an increase of $95 million over the net approved budget for 2004-2005 [ibid., p. 903], after adjustments made for security. The budget incorporated net cost increases of $86 million and net volume increases of $9 million, resulting primarily from the mainstreaming of United Nations Capital Development Fund (UNCDF) administrative costs into the UNDP budget proposals, and an increase of $1 million in projected income ($71 million, compared to $70 million in 2004-2005). The Administrator also proposed that UN-mandated security costs of $31 million be treated as a distinct requirement from regular resources. Despite expected programme delivery growth in both regular and other resources, the proposals represented a zero net real growth budget for 2006-2007, excluding the support budget requirements for UNCDF.

In August [DP/2005/32], the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) recommended that the process of harmonization towards implementing results-based budgeting for the next biennium, 2008-2009, be given high priority. While noting some improvement in channelling more funds to programmes in other resources, the Committee was of the opinion that further effort was needed to reduce expenditure on programme support and administration and management in respect of regular resources, so as to allocate more resources for programmes. It recommended that the Executive Board bear in mind its earlier recommendation that proposals for upward reclassification of UN posts in funds and programmes, particularly at the D-1 and D-2 levels, should be submitted only as a result of significant changes in the level and scope of responsibilities involved.

In September [dec. 2005/33], the Executive Board approved gross appropriations in the amount of $729,056,300 for the 2006-2007 biennial support budget, except the proposed new regional advocacy posts and the associated expenditure. It resolved that the income estimate of $71,210,000 should be used to offset the gross appropriations, resulting in estimated net appropriations of $657,846,300. The Board encouraged all host country Governments to meet their obligations for local office costs. Noting the increase in costs in the biennial support budget, it requested UNDP to report in more detail in the next budget on cost-containment strategies and measures. The Board authorized the incoming Administrator (see p. 963) to redeploy or reprioritize resources between appropriations lines up to a maximum of 5 per cent of the appropriation line to which the resources were redeployed, and urged him to continue to realign the UNDP support requirements funding modality with proportional cost sharing between regular and other resources. It endorsed the Administrator's proposal to reflect the UN-mandated security costs as a separate line in the UNDP resource plan and approved the amount of $31,243,700 from UNDP regular resources to cover such costs. The Board also endorsed ACABQ's concerns regarding the upward classifications of posts and asked UNDP to only submit such reclassifications as a result of significant changes in the level and scope of responsibilities involved and to better document such cases in the budget proposal. It endorsed the priority given to gender mainstreaming and requested that the financial implications of the gender action plan (see p. 968) for 2006 be reflected in the budgeting process. UNDP was asked to continue discussion with the Board on the overall strategy to enhance the effectiveness of the resident coordinator system.

Strategic cost management and cost recovery

In response to a 2004 Board decision [YUN 2004, p. 890], UNDP submitted a January conference room paper [DP/2005/CRP.4] on current concepts for providing the Executive Board with additional options on extrabudgetary income reporting and preliminary elements for providing further transparency in such reporting. The current UNDP resource mobilization system was decentralized, as was the utilization of cost recovery income, with the bulk of such income remaining with country offices. As part of the new system design of the Atlas enterprise resource planning system, launched in 2004 [YUN 2004, p. 889], the various types of income from cost recovery were being tracked separately; however, as UNDP had not financially closed the 2004 financial year, aggregate figures for cost recovery by category were not yet available. Under the current reporting system, the ratio between the total support budget estimates and the total programme delivery estimates from other resources did not properly reflect the average cost recovery rate because no distinction was made between income earned through programme support and income earned through agency service. In addition, not all extrabudgetary income was earned on the basis of a percentage. Biennial support budget requirements were not based solely on income expected to be earned within the same biennium resulting from the cost recovery policy.

To make the reporting more transparent, UNDP proposed a two-step approach based on the availability of data from the Atlas system. First, the 2006-2007 biennial support budget could include a table for income earned from programme support and for services to UN organizations. Second, the 2008-2009 biennial support budget could include a more detailed breakdown of income earned from programme support to indicate the source of funds. The Administrator was committed to providing a more transparent report within the context of the UNDP budget estimates for the 2008-2009 biennium.

On 28 January [dec. 2005/14], the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board took note of the conference room paper.

A May conference room paper [DP/2005/CRP.5] reported on the criteria for determining project-specific cost recovery rates, and established how the recovery rate for general management support (GMS) for a specific project was determined. The GMS rate of 5 to 7 per cent was set at the corporate level, based on an aggregate calculation of UNDP indirect variable costs and the required contribution of other resources to UNDP total operational costs. That approach was consistent with the harmonized principles and methodology of cost recovery agreed on among UN organizations. The criteria for determining the GMS rate within the 5 to 7 per cent range had to be based on the actual operational environment of the project, taking into account differences in the nature and complexity of projects and in costs among offices. UNDP established a fixed floor of 2 per cent in GMS for every trust fund and third-party cost-sharing project that was used to cover the indirect costs of central and headquarters units. UNDP recommended that the main criteria to guide the determination of a specific GMS rate above the 2 per cent fixed rate should be the proportional sharing of all indirect costs among regular and other resources at the individual unit level. That approach ensured that the Executive Board's requirement for the elimination of any subsidy from regular resources was fulfilled, while preserving a minimum of flexibility to adjust the GMS rate based on the project in question. UNDP also recommended that the incentives to donors to contribute both regular and other resources should be built on the focus of the intervention in line with the multi-year funding framework priorities; alignment to the programming cycle; and the development results achieved by each pool of funding, as long as the attributable management costs were proportionately split.

In June [dec. 2005/18], the Executive Board took note of the May conference room paper and reiterated that UNDP had to ensure that each funding source covered its proportional share of management and programme support. It stressed the need for flexibility within the established ranges of cost-recovery rates for contributions from both donor and recipient Governments so as to reflect the different execution modalities and management costs in different countries. The Board reaffirmed that UNDP had to ensure full recovery, at an aggregate level, of all actual costs for implementing activities financed from UNDP third-party cost-sharing, trust fund contribution and programme country cost-sharing. It noted that the May conference room paper did not outline a detailed proposal containing clear criteria that encouraged incentives for un-earmarked, timely and flexible contributions to trust funds, third-party cost-sharing and programme country cost-sharing, as requested by the Board in 2004 [YUN 2004, p. 890]. The Board asked UNDP to submit, at its second regular session in 2006, a report on the current practice of determining specific cost-recovery rates and clear cost-recovery criteria.

Audit reports

The Executive Board, at its January session, considered the Administrator's report [DP/2005/11] on implementation of the recommendations of the Board of Auditors for the 2002-2003 biennium [YUN 2004, p. 1396], which contained an update of actions taken by UNDP on the Board's recommendations, including the status of any follow-up action and the target date for completion. The Administrator said that progress had been achieved in most areas and outstanding issues were being addressed. The Executive Board also considered a conference room paper [DP/2005/CRP.3], which provided an update on the implementation of the recommendations.

In January [dec. 2005/8], the Executive Board took note of the Administrator's report and update, and stressed the importance of adequate follow-up to the Board of Auditors' recommendation, particularly regarding improving internal management control. It requested that future reports include an indication of the priority of the recommendations and an expected time frame for their implementation.

In May [DP/2005/26 & Corr.1], the Administrator submitted the annual report on the internal audit and oversight services provided by the UNDP Office of Audit and Performance Review (OAPR) for 2004. In response to a 2004 Executive Board decision [YUN 2004, p. 890], the report also contained information on the steps taken to address the issues contained in the 2003 audit report [ibid.], as well as the timeline for the completion of those efforts and indicators of progress or completion thereof.

As part of its efforts to improve effectiveness and client services, OAPR used an informal risk-assessment approach to prepare its strategy and work plan for 2005, taking into account recent audits conducted and the complexity, volume and level of operations of the various UNDP organizational units or of mission-critical projects. The risk-assessment process would be pursued further in 2005 and a more systematic and comprehensive system developed.

The number of UNDP audits/reviews undertaken in 2004 was 27, compared to 18 in 2003, while audit reports of national execution rose to 1,811, from 1,660 in 2003. OAPR issued a total of 16 internal audit reports on country offices, containing 485 recommendations, virtually all of which were accepted by management and were being implemented. At the end of 2004, OAPR started to prioritize the recommendations. Annexes to the report provided definitions of categories of recommendations, as well as definitions of standard audit opinion ratings used by OAPR and national execution audit areas.

In June [dec. 2005/19], the Executive Board took note of the reports of the Administrator, of OAPR to the UNOPS Executive Director [DP/2005/27] (see p. 980) and of the UNFPA Executive Director (see p. 957) on internal audit and oversight. It urged UNDP and UNFPA to base their oversight and accountability activities on a corporate risk model and develop risk-assessment functions in their audit offices; encouraged them to use monitoring and financial control data systems to better mitigate the risks related to programme implementation; and requested them to explain, in their next reports, the selection criteria of the country offices audited. The Board requested a further analysis of the underlying causes of audit remarks, and that the analysis and the presentation of audit recommendations by frequency of occurrence and by priority be maintained in future reports on internal audit and oversight. It asked UNDP and UNFPA to carry out an in-depth review of the level of internal audit resources, so as to align them with best practices and adequately cover the strategic areas identified in its current decision. The Board concurred with the need to strengthen the analysis of the outcomes of audits of nationally executed projects, and the follow-up actions taken to address audit observations and recommendations. UNDP, UNFPA and UNOPS should provide adequate training, particularly for field-based staff, to interpret and follow up on audit findings and recommendations, an analysis and presentation of the follow-up on previous internal audit recommendations in the 2003 and 2004 reports, and report on the status of the most frequent and highest-priority recommendations in the next report. The Administrator and the UNOPS and UNFPA Executive Directors were requested to provide a management response to their internal audit reports at the Board's annual session. UNDP was asked to arrange for the Board of Auditors to present their report to the Board.

Revision of financial regulations

In January, the Executive Board considered the Administrator's proposed revisions to the UNDP financial regulations [DP/2005/3]. The revisions reflected changes resulting from Board decisions that had affected the financial regulations since the last comprehensive revision in 2000 [YUN 2000, p. 838], including those dealing with the timing of the Board's special funding meeting [ibid., p. 836]; the treatment of support costs; and the elimination of the system of reimbursable target for resource assignment from the core (TRAC) earmarkings, with effect from 2001. They also reflected changes resulting from alignment with UNDG simplification and harmonization initiatives. The proposed substantive changes related to programming modalities, authority to commit resources against future receipt of contributions, separation of duties and previous Board decisions. Terminological and editorial changes to the financial regulations were also proposed. An annex to the report contained the text of the revised regulations.

ACABQ, in its report on the proposed revisions [DP/2005/4], emphasized the need for UNDP financial regulations to promote transparency and accountability. It recommended that the Board approve the revisions, as contained in the Administrator's report.

On 28 January [dec. 2005/1], the Board approved the proposed revised financial regulations, with the exception of changes to regulations 5.07 regarding commitment of resources against future receipt of contributions and 20.02 regarding exceptions to separation of duties. It requested the Administrator to establish risk guidelines with respect to the proposed changes to those regulations, as well as an independent expert assessment of the changes, and deferred consideration of them to the Board's annual session in June, pending the assessment. The Administrator was also requested to keep the financial regulations under review and to consult accordingly with the Board.

A June conference room paper [DP/2005/CRP.6], submitted in response to the Board's decision (see above), outlined in greater depth the rationale for the proposed changes to financial regulations 5.07 and 20.02, the associated risks and guidelines for mitigating those risks. The revisions and guidelines had been reviewed by the UNDP External Auditor of the United Nations Board of Auditors.

On 22 June [dec. 2005/17], the Executive Board approved, on a three-year provisional basis, the proposed changes to regulations 5.07 and 20.02, and requested that all transactions made during the period of waived separation of duties would be subject to ex post facto review. The Board also requested the Board of Auditors to assess the implementation of those changes at the end of the three-year trial period, within the context of their biennial audit.

Other technical cooperation

Review of UN regular programme of technical cooperation and Development Account

On 13 April (decision 59/558), the General Assembly decided to consider, as a matter of priority in 2005, the Secretary-General's 2004 report on the review of the regular programme of technical cooperation and the Development Account [YUN 2004, p. 891], which contained specific proposals for improving both programmes.

The Assembly, in resolution 60/246 of 23 December (see p. 1489), having considered the Secretary-General's 2004 report, decided that the Development Account would be recosted for the 2006-2007 biennium and, to that end, requested the Secretary-General to pursue the relevant proposals contained in his report and provide to the Assembly at its sixty-first (2006) session recommendations on how additional resources of up to $5 million could be added to the Account.

UN activities

Department of Economic and Social Affairs

During 2005, the UN Department of Economic and Social Affairs (DESA) had approximately 500 technical cooperation projects under execution in a dozen substantive sectors, with a total project expenditure of $48.4 million. Projects financed by UNDP represented $9.7 million, and those by trust funds, $38.7 million.

On a geographical basis, DESA's technical cooperation programme included expenditures of $32 million for interregional and global programmes; $9.3 million in Africa; $3.7 million in Asia and the Pacific; $2.5 million in the Middle East; and $0.9 million in the Americas.

Distribution of expenditures by substantive sectors was as follows: associate expert programme, $23.8 million; socio-economic governance management, $8.8 million; governance and public administration, $6.9 million; programme support, $1.9 million; Information and Communication Technologies (ICT) Task Force, $1.8 million; infrastructure, $1.7 million; energy, $1.4 million; water, $1.1 million; social development, $0.5 million; knowledge management, $0.2 million; statistics, $0.2 million; and Forum on Forests, $0.1 million. Of the total delivery of $48.4 million, the associate expert programme comprised 50 per cent; socio-economic governance management, 19 per cent; and governance and public administration, 15 per cent.

On a component basis, DESA's delivery included $40.1 million for project personnel; $3.9 million for training; $2.2 million for equipment; $1.6 million for subcontracts; and $0.6 million for miscellaneous expenses.

The total expenditure for DESA against the UN regular programme of technical cooperation was $6.8 million. Distribution of expenditures by division was as follows: public administration and development management, $2.6 million; sustainable development, $1.7 million; statistics, $1.2 million; social policy and development, $0.8 million; advancement of women, $0.3 million; population, $0.1 million; and administrative support, $0.1 million. On a component basis, expenditure for the year included $4.9 million for advisory services; $0.8 million for meetings; $0.7 million for travel; and $0.4 million for consultancy services.

UN Fund for International Partnerships

The Secretary-General, in his report on the 2005 activities of the United Nations Fund for International Partnerships (UNFIP) [A/61/189], established in 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 1297] to manage the process of grant allocations through the United Nations Foundation, a public charity founded by Robert E. Turner to channel his gift to the United Nations of stock valued at some $1 billion, provided data on the seventeenth and eighteenth funding cycles and intersessional approvals in 2005, progress in each programme area, and a review of UNFIP activities in advocacy and partnership-building. A total of $170.5 million was programmed for 2005, $46.3 million in the seventeenth funding cycle and $1.5 million in the eighteenth. A further $122.7 million was approved between sessions of the United Nations Foundation Board of Directors. The difference in the level of grant approvals between the sessions resulted from the Board's decision to consolidate future investments by thematic area and use core resources to build partnerships and lead advocacy campaigns in support of key themes, instead of investing exclusively in projects or programmes. Of the total, $143.5 million was for six projects related to children's health; $2.7 million for three projects for population and women; $10.1 million for 18 projects for the environment; $3.7 million for four projects for peace, security and human rights; and $10.5 million for 23 strategic initiative projects. Since 1998, $809.5 million had been allocated to fund 376 projects in 121 countries, involving 39 UN organizations.

In 2005, UNFIP was given responsibility for the management and oversight of the United Nations Democracy Fund (UNDEF), established in Sirte, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, on 4 July (see p. 655). UNDEF funding priorities were aimed at strengthening democratic dialogue and supporting constitutional processes; civil society empowerment; civic education; voter registration and strengthening of political parties; citizens' access to information; human rights and fundamental freedoms; and accountability, transparency and integrity. The Fund supported projects from governmental, non-governmental and UN system organizations. As at 31 December, UNDEF had received $41 million in pledges and contributions from 16 member States.

On 13 April (decision 59/554) and 23 December (decision 60/550), the General Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's reports on UNFIP activities in 2003 [YUN 2003, p. 905] and 2004 [YUN 2004, p. 892], respectively.

UN Office for Project Services

The United Nations Office for Project Services (UNOPS) was established in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 900], in accordance with General Assembly decision 48/501 [YUN 1994, p. 806], as a separate, self-financing entity of the UN system to act as a service provider to UN organizations. It offered a broad range of services, from overall project management to the provision of single inputs.

2005 activities

The Executive Director, in his annual report on UNOPS activities for 2005 [DP/2006/22], said that the year was critical in the UNOPS multi-year turnaround programme, initiated in 2003 [YUN 2003, p. 906]. Project portfolio acquisition reached a record level of $1 million, with some 55 per cent attributable to post-conflict and emergency-related activities and 45 per cent to development activities.

Project delivery, which reached a record $888.2 million, exceeded the forecast of $641.4 million (38.5 per cent) submitted by the Executive Director in January.

In 2005, UNOPS generated $71.7 million in total revenue, exceeding the 2005 forecast of $53.8 million. Project services continued to provide the largest percentage of total UNOPS revenue ($58.8 million); including $27.6 million from UNDP core and trust funds, $4.1 million from UNDP management services agreements, and $26.8 million from other UN organizations. Service revenue totalled $9.9 million, and interest and rental income $2.3 million. For the first time since 1998, UNOPS achieved an operating surplus of $5.2 million, which, after reimbursements to the United Nations oil-for-food programme and to the World Food Programme, resulted in an ending balance of $5.1 million.

Administrative expenditures reached $66.5 million in 2005, $9.2 million above the 2004 level and $15.7 million above the approved level of $50.9 million. Of the 2005 total, salaries and benefits accounted for $30.4 million, exceeding the budgeted level by $2.4 million; $25.6 million was spent on general and administrative expenses. Reimbursements to UNDP and the United Nations accounted for $5.1 million. UNOPS also set aside $5.5 million for after-service health insurance payments, write-offs and doubtful accounts.

Budget estimates

Projected 2004 budget performance and revised 2005 estimates

In a January progress report on UNOPS activities [DP/2005/9], the Executive Director provided an overview of projected 2004 budget performance, revised budget estimates for 2005, and updates on the evolving UNOPS corporate strategy. Projected expenditure was expected to exceed revenue by almost $14 million. The fund balance, as at 31 December 2004, was estimated at $9.2 million, comprising an operating reserve balance of $6 million and working capital in the amount of $3.2 million.

As at 30 November 2004, UNOPS estimated that total 2004 delivery would be $381.6 million and revenue $38.4 million.

Total expenditures for 2004 were estimated at $52.4 million, of which $26.2 million pertained to salaries and benefits and $12.1 million to general and administrative expenditures. Reimbursements to UNDP and other UN organizations were estimated to reach $8.5 million, $1 million higher than initially projected. Expenditures under the approved change management budget were projected at $4.9 million.

As at 30 November 2004, new business acquired under the project portfolio of services reached $663 million, $458 million of which related to business acquisition in post-conflict and transition environments.

The 2005 budget proposal estimated $53.8 million in revenues, comprising $42.1 million in project portfolio implementation; $9.8 million in service revenue derived from the IFAD loan portfolio and the Global Fund to Fight AIDS, Tuberculosis and Malaria; and $1.8 million in rental, interest and other miscellaneous income. Total 2005 expenditures were estimated at $50.9 million, comprising $28 million for salaries and benefits; $10.1 million for general administrative costs; $4.7 million for change management; $7.4 million for reimbursements to UNDP and other UN organizations; and $0.7 million for doubtful accounts. UNOPS would reduce ongoing operating expenses by $2 million in 2005, as compared to current estimates for 2004. The project delivery forecast for 2005 was $641.4 million. The 2005 year-end net income from operations was forecast at $2.9 million and a fund balance at $12.1 million.

In January [DP/2005/10], the UNOPS Management Coordination Committee (MCC), in response to a 2004 Executive Board decision [YUN 2004, p. 896], submitted its report on progress in UNOPS, including MCC's views on the Executive Director's January progress report on UNOPS activities (see p. 978), the 2005 budget proposals and recommendations for the future UNOPS operations. MCC noted the encouraging UNOPS business acquisition in 2004 for delivery during 2004 and 2005, and urged UNOPS management to ensure that new business generated higher income, with an emphasis on project management activities rather than limited loan-servicing activities. It expressed serious doubts as to whether the projected revenue for 2005, which were predicted to be 40 per cent more than the 2004 projections, would materialize, as recent revenue projections had not been accurate, or reliable. MCC also noted that the 2005 budget proposal offered only a narrow operating surplus of $2.9 million, and that the level of the 2005 fund balance was highly dependent on the final 2004 fund balance results, as well as on UNOPS ensuring that the 2005 income and expenditures reached projected levels. It observed that to date UNOPS had not demonstrated its ability to control expenditures within budgeted levels and had not been able to achieve the projected revenue. MCC therefore urged caution in the implementation of the 2005 budget proposal. Concerned that UNOPS might again incur an operating loss in 2005, it urged UNOPS senior management to monitor revenue and expenditures on a continuous basis and ensure adherence to the underlying principle that expenditure be below income in any single year.

MCC recognized the progress by UNOPS in implementing some important aspects of the change management process, but noted that a number of important change initiatives remained to be implemented, in particular the completion of a corporate strategy for achieving financial viability (see below). It discussed with UNOPS senior management various approaches for improving long-term financial performance and options to help ensure its sustainability.

MCC endorsed the 2005 budget proposal, provided that 2005 was viewed as a "survival year", during which UNOPS would consolidate the gains made in the implementation of the change management programme, while ensuring that expenditures remained below 95 per cent of actual income. During 2005, UNOPS should develop a plan of action to correct the persistent income volatility and high fixed costs, in order to become financially viable in 2006. MCC recommended that the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board request UNOPS to outline, in the context of the ongoing development of a corporate strategy, a plan of action to improve financial performance, by realigning and reconfiguring its operations during the 2006-2007 period. UNOPS should submit a full plan of action for decision by the Executive Board at its annual session in 2005.

On 28 January [dec. 2005/6], the Executive Board took note of the Executive Director's progress report and MCC's report on the assessment of progress in UNOPS. It approved the 2005 budget estimates, and indicated that 2005 expenditures would be covered by revenues earned during that year, and the change management programme remained a priority and would be adjusted according to the availability of funds. It noted MCC concerns with regard to the attainment of 2005 targets and requested the Executive Director to provide periodic updates on the financial situation during 2005. He should continue to improve the UNOPS financial management and control systems and the required reporting. UNOPS should remain committed to its audit response and achieve a clean audit for the 2004-2005 biennium. The Executive Director was also asked to prepare, for the Board's September 2005 meeting, a comprehensive plan of action, based on consultations with MCC, on further measures to be implemented in 2006 to enhance the efficiency of business operations, ensure cost reductions, continue the change management process and achieve sustainable financial viability.

UNOPS action plan

In response to Executive Board decision 2005/6 (see above), the UNOPS Executive Director submitted an August report [DP/2005/39] providing two options for UNOPS to ensure the future viability of its operations as a self-financing, independent service provider in the UN system.

Option 1 proposed an immediate reduction in the range of services provided in UNOPS geographic coverage and fixed-cost structures around a core set of product offerings and skill sets. Its primary product lines would encompass engineering and infrastructure operations, complex operations management and supportive service lines. Primary market environments would comprise countries in post-conflict transition or recovering from natural disasters, and countries with poorly developed infrastructure and limited management or implementation capacities. The changes would be completed, for the most part, in 2006, enabling UNOPS to start rebuilding its reserves and return to sustained viability in 2007.

Option 2 would maintain the current range of UNOPS service offerings, but cut fixed costs, rationalize its structures and phase out portfolios that could not achieve full cost recovery. The support structure would be more geographically dispersed than for option 1, but portfolios would be subject to full cost recovery, assured by improved pricing through activity-based costing processes. Implementation of the changes would be completed by late 2007, enabling UNOPS to begin returning to sustained viability in 2008.

The report specified product lines, related product streams under option 1 and service lines under option 2, and included financial projections for each option, with explanatory notes about the data presented and the assumptions on which projections were developed.

An August conference room paper [DP/2005/CRP.14], submitted as a supplement to the action plan, provided updated financial projections for 2005 and for 2006-2008, taking into account revised revenue projections for 2005 and the impact of reimbursements required against fees for service earned in 2003 under the oil-for-food programme (see p. 434) and Security Council resolution 1483(2003) on the lifting of economic sanctions on Iraq [YUN 2003, p. 338].

In September [dec. 2005/36], the Executive Board took note of the Executive Director's report on the action plan for restoring the viability of UNOPS and the supplement thereto. It recognized the necessity for implementing the measures proposed under option 1. It emphasized that the measures to be taken in line with the decision were a foundation for the future, but did not exclude provision of services to clients in situations and circumstances other than those specified under option 1, so long as UNOPS could provide satisfactory services at full cost recovery. The Board expected that the reform measures would enable UNOPS to return to sustainable financial viability, rebuild its operational reserve and meet its statutory obligations with regard to staff post-service benefits and other areas. It requested the Executive Director to implement the reforms expeditiously and provide periodic updates to the Board in 2006 on the UNOPS financial situation and on progress in the implementation of the transition measures. The Board intended to engage in a continuing discussion on the role and mandate of UNOPS in the wider context of UN reform.

Audit reports

The Executive Board, at its January session [dec. 2005/8], took note of the Executive Director's report [DP/2005/12] on the implementation of the recommendations of the Board of Auditors [YUN 2004, p. 1397] for the 2002-2003 biennium.

In May [DP/2005/27], the UNDP Office of Audit and Performance Review (OAPR) reported that it conducted 20 internal audits covering operational activities at headquarters and in the field, including those under management and support services arrangements. Together, the audit reports contained 72 recommendations for improving internal controls and organizational efficiency. The organizational units concerned provided written comments on the contents of the draft audit reports. UNOPS provided comments on 61 of the recommendations. In general, the comments indicated that actions had been taken or were being taken to address the audit issues raised and recommendations made.

In June [dec. 2005/19] (see p. 976), the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board took note of OAPR's May report.

UN Volunteers

The number of volunteers working for the UNDP-administered United Nations Volunteers programme (UNV) increased to 8,122, from 7,300 in 2004. The volunteers, representing 168 nationalities, carried out 8,470 assignments in 144 countries. Volunteers from developing countries represented 76.3 per cent of the total number of volunteers. Women accounted for 36.5 per cent of the total in 2005, compared to 35 per cent in 2004. By region, 47.3 per cent of assignments were carried out in Africa, 20.8 per cent in Latin America and the Caribbean, 18 per cent in Asia and the Pacific, 7.3 per cent in Europe and CIS, and 6.6 per cent in the Arab States.

The UNDP Administrator, in his annual report on the UNV financial situation [DP/2006/37 & Add.1], indicated that income for 2005 was $26.2 million, compared to $22.7 million in 2004. Taking into account that $3 million of the 2004 income related to 2003 contributions, the actual increase in total net income was $6.5 million, or 33 per cent compared to 2004. The increase in income was due mainly to a substantial increase in new trust funds, especially for recovery programmes related to the 2004 Indian Ocean tsunami [YUN 2004, p. 952]. Programme expenditure increased by $700,000 to $18.4 million, compared to $17.7 million in 2004. The balance of the operational reserve, as at 31 December, was $900,000.

Follow-up to the International Year of Volunteers (2001)

In response to General Assembly resolution 57/106 [YUN 2002, p. 881], the Secretary-General

submitted a July report [A/60/128] on follow-up to the implementation of the International Year of Volunteers (2001) [YUN 2001, p. 814]. The report provided an overview of actions taken during the International Year and presented conclusions and recommendations for follow-up.

The Secretary-General said that the momentum built up during the Year continued to stimulate a vibrant and expanding volunteer movement. Most of the recommendations proposed by the Assembly in resolution 57/106 were being taken up by Governments and the UN system, as well as by civil society and the private sector. The World Volunteer Web portal, launched in 2002, encouraged global information sharing on how volunteerism could contribute to economic and social development. The first International Conference on Volunteerism and the Millennium Development Goals (Islamabad, Pakistan, 5-7 December 2004), organized jointly by UNDP, UNV and the National Commission for Human Development of Pakistan, outlined actions to enhance the environment for volunteer interventions in support of the MDGs [YUN 2000, p. 51]. Awareness was growing in many countries in all regions and was expected to lead to the participation of increased numbers of people in voluntary activity. Governments, the media and the private sector were increasingly vocal in their support for volunteering, and human resources and physical infrastructure were being developed to facilitate volunteerism.

Despite overall progress, positive global trends varied widely between countries and regions. In the least developed countries in Africa and in countries undergoing profound social, economic and political change, volunteering was lower on the agenda of Governments than in other parts of the world. The situation within the UN system was also mixed. Since 2001, UN system organizations were increasingly recognizing, facilitating and promoting volunteerism as an integral part of their work, but that trend needed to be reinforced and broadened.

In addition to raising awareness on the role and contribution of volunteerism, the International Year led, in many cases, to the introduction or strengthening of proactive measures at the national level to support voluntary action. Those developments needed to be sustained and extended to cover all countries if the potential of volunteerism to help meet the MDGs was to be fully realized.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December [meeting 64], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee [A/60/501], adopted resolution 60/134 without vote [agenda item 62].

Follow-up to the implementation of the International Year of Volunteers

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 57/106 of 26 November 2002 on the follow-up to the International Year of Volunteers,

Recognizing the valuable contribution of volunteering, including traditional forms of mutual aid and self-help, formal service delivery and other forms of civic participation, to economic and social development, benefiting society at large, communities and the individual volunteer,

Recognizing also that volunteerism is an important component of any strategy aimed at, inter alia, such areas as poverty reduction, sustainable development, health, disaster prevention and management and social integration and, in particular, overcoming social exclusion and discrimination,

Noting with appreciation the efforts to increase understanding and awareness of volunteerism through research, global information-sharing and education, including efforts to develop an effective network for volunteers through, inter alia, the World Volunteer Web and linked national sites,

Acknowledging the existing contribution of the organizations of the United Nations system to supporting volunteering, including the work of United Nations Volunteers around the world,

Bearing in mind the need for an integrated and coordinated follow-up to the International Year of Volunteers to be pursued in the relevant parts of the United Nations system,

1. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General in response to the report of the Panel of Eminent Persons on United Nations-Civil Society Relations;

3. Welcomes the hosting of the first International Conference on Volunteerism and the Millennium Development Goals, organized jointly by the Government of Pakistan and the United Nations system and held in Islamabad from 5 to 7 December 2004, and takes note of its final report;

4. Reiterates its call upon Governments, with the active support of the media, civil society and the private sector, to observe the International Volunteer Day for Economic and Social Development on 5 December and to include activities, in particular on efforts to achieve the Millennium Development Goals;

5. Reaffirms the need to recognize and promote all forms of volunteerism as an issue that involves and benefits all segments of society, including children, young persons, older persons, persons with disabilities, minorities and immigrants and those who remain excluded for social or economic reasons;

6. Recognizes that volunteering, in particular at the community level, will help to achieve the internationally agreed development goals, including those contained in the United Nations Millennium Declaration;

7. Also recognizes the importance of supportive legislative and fiscal frameworks for the growth and development of volunteerism, and encourages Governments to enact such measures;

8. Welcomes the work of the United Nations Volunteers, and requests them to continue their efforts, together with other stakeholders, to raise awareness of volunteerism, increase reference and networking resources available, provide technical cooperation to developing countries, upon their request, in the field of volunteerism and enhance coordination among those operating on the ground;

9. Invites all stakeholders, especially from the private sector community and from private foundations, to support volunteerism as a strategic tool to enhance economic and social development, including by expanding corporate volunteering;

10. Calls for the relevant organizations and bodies of the United Nations system to integrate volunteerism in its various forms into their policies, programmes and reports, and encourages the recognition and inclusion of volunteer contributions in future United Nations and other relevant international conferences;

11. Acknowledges the importance of civil society organizations for the promotion of volunteerism, and in this respect recognizes that strengthening the dialogue and interaction between civil society and the United Nations contributes to the expansion of volunteerism;

12. Encourages Governments to establish partnerships with civil society in order to build up volunteer potential at the national level, given the important contribution that volunteerism makes to the fulfilment of the internationally agreed development goals, including those contained in the Millennium Declaration;

13. Recognizes the increasing attention being given to the economic dimension of volunteerism, and encourages Governments, with the support of civil society, to build up a knowledge base on the subject, to disseminate data and to expand research on other volunteer-related issues, including in developing countries;

14. Welcomes the work of the United Nations Volunteers in building up the capacity of the World Volunteer Web with a view to enhancing network capabilities and to expanding information, knowledge and resource management, and encourages Governments and all stakeholders, in particular the private sector, to contribute on a voluntary basis to this initiative;

15. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its sixty-third session on the implementation of the present resolution under the item entitled "Social development, including questions relating to the world social situation and to youth, ageing, disabled persons and the family" and to include in the report proposals regarding possible ways to mark the tenth anniversary of the International Year of Volunteers in 2011.

Economic and technical cooperation among developing countries

South-South cooperation

In response to a 2004 UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board decision [YUN 2004, p. 898], the Special Unit for South-South Cooperation submitted, in January, an updated version of the third cooperation framework for South-South cooperation (2005-2007) [DP/CF/SSC/3/Rev.1 & Corr.1]. Through the framework, the Special Unit sought to strengthen UNDP's work in identifying and sharing knowledge and proven approaches to human development, particularly in efforts to meet the MDGs [YUN 2000, p. 51]. To that end, the framework elaborated the context, initiatives and strategy for sharing knowledge, experiences and technology through South-South cooperation. It was designed to respond to the emerging trends and changing fundamentals in southern development, with particular attention to the needs and priorities shared by LDCs, small island developing States (SIDS) and landlocked developing countries. In keeping with its mandate, the Special Unit would continue to support developing countries in addressing issues of common concern and in multicultural settings, so as to accelerate development through South-South approaches. The framework would place greater emphasis on establishing or strengthening self-sustaining mechanisms and platforms relevant to South-South cooperation, rather than supporting ad hoc forums and conferences. The Special Unit needed to become a South-South knowledge centre, complementing and linking with UNDP's global knowledge systems and those of UN organizations, developing countries and donor organizations. The framework would be designed to: support policy dialogue and follow-up to major intergovernmental conferences; help create an enabling environment and public-private partnership mechanisms for sustained intra-South business collaboration and technology exchanges; and support a more robust, South-specific system for managing and sharing development knowledge. The framework also included an implementation strategy.

The updated total resource mobilization target for the framework for 2005-2007 was $27,500, comprising $16,500 in UNDP regular resources and $11,000 in other resources.

On 28 January [dec. 2005/7], the Executive Board endorsed the third cooperation framework. It requested the UNDP Administrator to: include in his report to the High-level Committee on South-South cooperation in May (see p. 984) a detailed strategy for the implementation of the framework, including resource mobilization, and inform the Board thereon; hold periodic consultations with Member States; and report to the Board in June 2006 on progress achieved in implementing the framework.

An April report [SSC/14/2] reviewed the implementation of the revised Guidelines for the Review of Policies and Procedures concerning South-South Cooperation, including common indicators, as approved in 2003 by the thirteenth session of the High-level Committee on South-South cooperation. The report also reviewed the status, management and use of resources for the promotion of South-South cooperation, the development of a forward-looking strategy for resource mobilization, and supporting UNDP organizational, administrative and financial arrangements.

Among the recommendations made were that the Special Unit design and support the implementation of innovative projects that would serve as models for future replication in South-South development programmes, and that the Unit work more closely with UN development system organizations and UNDP country offices to further integrate South-South cooperation into their regular programmes. Other recommendations related to resource mobilization; South-South policy implementation; the use of information and communication technology; dissemination of information on specific problems and the needs of LDCs, SIDS and landlocked developing countries; and the use of the Web of Information for Development (WIDE).

Second South Summit. The Second South Summit of the Group of 77 and China (Doha, Qatar, 12-16 June) [A/60/111] adopted the Doha Declaration and Plan of Action, in which participating Heads of State and Government reaffirmed the role of South-South cooperation in confronting challenges faced by the South and as a valuable contribution to development, and the need to further strengthen it, including through enhancing the capacities of the institutions and mechanisms that promoted it. They called for a more energetic effort to deepen and revitalize South-South cooperation to take advantage of the new geography of international economic relations, while recognizing that such cooperation was complementary to, and not a substitute for, North-South cooperation. The participants reaffirmed that South-South trade should be enhanced and further market access from developing countries had to continue to stimulate such trade, and resolved to strengthen cooperation in the monetary and financial fields. In the Doha Plan of Action of the Second South Summit, participants decided to establish the South Fund for Development and Humanitarian Assistance for economic, social, health and educational development, as well as to address hunger, poverty and human catastrophes. The Plan of Action recommended the expansion of the Voluntary Trust Fund for the Promotion of South-South Cooperation, established in accordance with General Assembly resolution 50/119 [YUN 1995, p. 848], and requested the Assembly to review its structure and modalities of operation in order to enable it to respond better to the needs of developing countries. Participants agreed to convene the third South Summit in 2010.

Report of Secretary-General. The Secretary-General, in response to Assembly resolution 58/220 [YUN 2003, p. 913], submitted an August report [A/60/257] on the state of South-South cooperation in the period since January 2003. The report reviewed its growing role and the opportunities and challenges of a globalizing world and provided an overview of trends in global and regional cooperation agreements. It also considered the contribution of developing and developed countries, the UN system, the private sector and civil society in support of South-South cooperation.

South-South cooperation received intense support from developing countries and the larger international community, as evidenced by a number of important summits and conferences organized by the Group of 77 and China, the Non-Aligned Movement and other entities. Its new vibrancy was reflected in increasing flows of South-South trade and investment and collaboration in the monetary and energy sectors. Movements towards regional and subregional integration also benefited South-South relations. The scope of South-South cooperation had also expanded beyond the traditional economic and technical areas. It was pervasive in UN development system activities, although there was little uniformity in the information available from different agencies. Despite signs of progress, however, the programmatic visibility of South-South cooperation in multilateral affairs continued to be generally low, which hampered improved coordination and synergy.

The report concluded that the emerging consensus of developed and developing countries on the value of South-South approaches to development presented a unique opportunity for the international community to scale up South-South and triangular initiatives that required the mobilization of complementary resources. Strategies and mechanisms for South-South coordination should be strengthened. To optimize the use of Southern capacities, the UN system should develop a more coordinated approach to the identification and use of the growing number of world-class experts and institutions in developing countries, in coordination with the Special Unit for South-South cooperation, which should be strengthened as the UN South-South cooperation focal point. As the private sector became the main source of foreign direct investment flows to developing countries, efforts should be made to expand and strengthen innovative, self-sustaining public-private partnership mechanisms to overcome obstacles to South-South cooperation.

High-level Committee on South-South cooperation

The High-level Committee on South-South cooperation, formerly the High-level Committee on the Review of Technical Cooperation among Developing Countries, considered at its fourteenth session (New York, 31 May–3 June) [A/60/39] an April report [SSC/14/1 & Corr.1] reviewing progress in the implementation of the 1978 Buenos Aires Plan of Action for Promoting and Implementing Technical Cooperation among Developing Countries (TCDC) [YUN 1978, p. 467] and the new directions strategy for TCDC [YUN 1995, p. 902], as well as reports of the UNDP Administrator [SSC/14/2] (see p. 982). It also held a thematic discussion on the role of South-South cooperation in achieving the MDGs.

The Committee urged developed and developing countries, the organizations and agencies of the UN development system, including the regional commissions, and other development partners to intensify support for South-South initiatives, with a view to achieving economic growth, sustainable development and more equitable integration into the global economy. It stressed the need for intensifying triangular cooperation to facilitate educational and technical exchanges between developed and developing countries. The Committee called on UN development system entities to include in periodic reports on the internationally agreed development goals, including the MDGs, a section on South-South cooperation. The Committee requested the Special Unit to consult with Member States and UN organizations and agencies, with a view to updating the new directions strategy for technical cooperation among developing countries. The UNDP Administrator was asked to submit a comprehensive report to the High-level Committee at its fifteenth (2007) session on progress made in the implementation of the Buenos Aires Plan of Action and the new directions strategy.

In a decision on the overall framework for promoting and applying South-South cooperation [dec. 14/2], the Committee requested the Special Unit, in implementing its third cooperation framework (2005-2007) (see p. 982), to design and support the implementation of innovative South-South projects and programmes that would serve as models for replication or adaptation. The Committee called on the UN system to intensify the mainstreaming of South-South cooperation in development activities, in collaboration with the Special Unit. It also called on the Unit to capitalize on the momentum generated by international conferences on South-South cooperation and initiatives in regional cooperation and integration to design specific follow-up and implementation actions that addressed the common concerns of developing countries. It should intensify support for national efforts to strengthen South-South policy implementation and continue to work with national South-South focal points to scale up well-coordinated South-South cooperation programmes to LDCs, landlocked developing countries and SIDS. The Committee encouraged the Special Unit to undertake initiatives to attract more resources, both financial and in kind, to supplement regular resources and other funds for South-South activities; and work more closely with UN development system organizations and agencies and the South Centre to maximize the potential of WIDE in addressing the need for information on best practices. The UNDP Administrator was asked to report to the High-level Committee on the implementation of the decision in 2007.

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 2005/230 of 20 July, took note of the Committee's report on its twelfth session.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 23 December [meeting 68], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/60/493/Add.2], adopted resolution 60/212 without vote [agenda item 57 (b)].

South-South cooperation

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 58/220 of 23 December 2003,

Recalling also the 2005 World Summit Outcome,

Recalling further its resolution 59/250 of 22 December 2004, which, inter alia, called on organizations and bodies of the United Nations system to mainstream, in their programmes and through their country-level activities and country offices, modalities to support South-South cooperation,

1. Welcomes the report of the High-level Committee on South-South Cooperation at its fourteenth session and the decisions taken at that session;

2. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the state of South-South cooperation;

3. Stresses that South-South cooperation, as an important element of international cooperation for development, offers viable opportunities for developing countries in their individual and collective pursuit of sustained economic growth and sustainable development;

4. Recognizes that developing countries have the primary responsibility for promoting and implementing South-South cooperation, not as a substitute for but rather as a complement to North-South cooperation, and in this context reiterates the need for the international community to support the efforts of the developing countries to expand South-South cooperation;

5. Encourages the international community, including the international financial institutions, to support the efforts of developing countries, inter alia, through triangular cooperation;

6. Recognizes that regional integration initiatives between developing countries constitute an important and valuable form of South-South cooperation and that regional integration is a step towards beneficial integration into the world economy;

7. Welcomes the initiatives and partnerships being undertaken at the subregional, regional, interregional and global levels towards establishing public-private partnership mechanisms aiming to enhance and expand South-South cooperation in trade and investment;

8. Takes note with appreciation of the launching of the third round of negotiations on the Global System of Trade Preferences among Developing Countries as an important instrument to stimulate South-South cooperation;

9. Recognizes the considerable contribution of South-South cooperation arrangements, which promote development activities in developing countries;

10. Also recognizes the importance of initiatives and arrangements, including public-private mechanisms, in the undertaking of efforts to enhance cooperation between developing countries, including, inter alia, in the areas of information and communication technologies, science and technology, culture, health and education;

11. Welcomes the contributions made by developing countries in the context of South-South cooperation to countries and peoples stricken by natural disasters, including through the Voluntary Trust Fund for the Promotion of South-South Cooperation within the framework for the rehabilitation and reconstruction of countries affected by the Indian Ocean tsunami disaster and through the South Fund for Development and Humanitarian Assistance;

12. Urges all relevant United Nations organizations and multilateral institutions to intensify their efforts to effectively mainstream the use of South-South cooperation in the design, formulation and implementation of their regular programmes and to consider increasing allocations of human, technical and financial resources for supporting South-South cooperation initiatives, and in this regard takes note of the initiatives contained in the Havana Programme of Action adopted by the first South Summit, the Marrakesh Framework for the Implementation of South-South Cooperation and the Doha Plan of Action;

13. Recognizes the need to mobilize additional resources for enhancing South-South cooperation, reiterates in this context its decision, in its resolution 57/263 of 20 December 2002, to include the Voluntary Trust Fund for the Promotion of South-South Cooperation in the United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities, as long as it exists, recalls the decision to include the Pérez-Guerrero Trust Fund for Economic and Technical Cooperation among Developing Countries in the same Pledging Conference, and invites all countries, in particular developed countries, to support South-South and triangular cooperation through, inter alia, these funds, bearing in mind the need for these funds to continue to use such resources in an effective manner;

14. Invites the United Nations Development Programme to rename the Voluntary Trust Fund for the Promotion of South-South Cooperation, which was established in accordance with General Assembly resolution 50/119 of 20 December 1995, as the United Nations Fund for South-South Cooperation, while maintaining its mandate and voluntary nature, and to designate it as the main United Nations trust fund for promoting and supporting South-South and triangular initiatives;

15. Invites the High-level Committee on South-South Cooperation and the United Nations Development Programme Executive Board, as appropriate, to consider measures to strengthen further the Special Unit for South-South Cooperation within the United Nations Development Programme as a separate entity and a focal point for South-South cooperation in the United Nations system, so as to enable it to carry out its full responsibilities, in particular through the mobilization of resources for the advancement of South-South cooperation, including through triangular cooperation;

16. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its sixty-second session a sub-item entitled "South-South cooperation for development", and requests the Secretary-General to submit at that session a comprehensive report on the state of South-South cooperation and on the implementation of the present resolution.

UN Capital Development Fund

In 2005, contributions to the regular resources of the United Nations Capital Development Fund (UNCDF) declined by $7.7 million (45 per cent) to $9.5 million, from $17.2 million in 2004 [DP/2006/37 & Add.1]. Contributions to other resources increased to $10.3 million in 2005, from $6.2 million in 2004. Overall expenditure decreased by $3 million, from $30.3 million in 2004 to $27.3 million in 2005. Expenditure against regular resources decreased to $18.4 million, from $20.2 million in 2004. Other resources expenditures decreased by $1.2 million, from $10.1 million in 2004 to $8.9 million in 2005. Unexpended resources at the end of 2005 totalled $60.1 million, including an operational reserve of $22.6 million.

In June [DP/2005/21], UNCDF submitted to the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board its 2004 results-oriented annual report (ROAR). Since no new strategic results framework was approved by the Executive Board in 2004, the 2002-2003 framework, which defined UNCDF sub-goals in local governance, microfinance and organizational strengthening, was automatically extended by one year.

UNCDF performance in 2004 continued to be affected by the low level of contributions to its core resources, which totalled $17.6 million, down from $26.9 million in 2003, and far below the target core contribution of $30 million called for by the Executive Board in 2002 [YUN 2002, p. 884]. Insufficient core funding affected UNCDF's capacity to scale up its programmes in local governance and microfinance and initiate new investments. The underlying causes for the gap between target and actual core resources prompted a reassessment of the UNCDF business model (see below).

Total programme expenditure from core and non-core resources in 2004 was $21 million, up from $16.7 million in 2003. Non-core programme expenditures continued their positive trend, reaching $6.6 million in 2004. Local governance remained the primary focus of UNCDF expenditure in 2004, accounting for 70 per cent of the total, followed by microfinance, 17 per cent. The remaining 13 per cent was spent on organizational strengthening. Disbursal rates averaged 73 per cent of planned expenditure in 2004 and were affected by the uncertainty surrounding the transition to a new business model and the rapid decline in core resources.

In 2004, UNCDF approved six new programmes under the local governance sub-goal with a total budget commitment of $10 million. Under the microfinance sub-goal, it approved six programmes applying its new sector development approach, with others in the pipeline for 2005. With regard to the organizational strengthening sub-goal, UNCDF reported improvement in its financial efficiency, resulting in a 9:1 ratio of programme delivery costs to staff support costs.

UNCDF future business model

In January, the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board considered a report [DP/2005/8], issued in response to a 2004 Board decision [YUN 2004, p. 899], presenting four options for a future strategic niche and new business model for UNCDF. Those options were: maintaining an independent UNCDF focused on microfinance (option 1), first presented in 2004 [ibid.]; migrating current UNCDF programmes and activities in local development to a new UNDP centre for local development (option 2); maintaining an independent UNCDF focused on reducing poverty in LDCs (option 3); and migrating UNCDF microfinance programmes and activities to UNDP (option 4). Following consultation with Board members and private sector representatives, UNDP management proposed a fifth option, an independent UNCDF focused on private sector development. The Administrator established four working groups with representatives from UNCDF and UNDP to develop each of the options. The options were based on an evaluative framework setting out the guiding principles and strategic criteria. The Executive Director would consult with the Board to seek its guidance on the proposed options.

On 28 January [dec. 2005/5], the Executive Board decided to maintain UNCDF as an independent organization focused on reducing poverty and achieving the MDGs in the LDCs (option 3). It requested the Administrator to provide a detailed implementation plan for that option and its sub-option 4, under which UNCDF would be gradually integrated financially into UNDP for decision at the Board's June session (see p. 986). The Administrator should also appoint a new Executive Secretary for UNCDF. The Board stressed that regular resources, because of their untied nature, would continue to be the foundation of UNCDF programme activities and that the Fund's effectiveness hinged on its access to predictable and sustained multi-year funding to finance its programmes. It called on UNDP to assist UNCDF in mobilizing the resources necessary to sustain its activities, and on donor countries and other countries in a position to do so to provide and sustain additional funding to UNCDF programmes and activities in the LDCs.

UNCDF business plan 2005-2007

A May report [DP/2005/22] presented the UNCDF 2005-2007 business plan: investing in LDCs to achieve the MDGs [YUN 2000, p. 51], including implementation arrangements, in accordance with UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board decision 2005/5 (see above). Building on the UNCDF niche and comparative advantages, the plan envisioned an expansion of UNCDF investments in and technical support to LDCs in the areas of local development and microfinance, thus supporting an increased number of LDCs to achieve the MDGs by 2015. It outlined strategies for generating increased business and resources and translating them into development results. The plan took as its key reference and starting point option 3, sub-option 4 (see above), selected by the Board in decision 2005/5 for the future UNCDF business model; that option was developed into a road map for UNCDF through a change management process that involved the participation of UNCDF staff and facilitation by UNDP.

Under the plan's business development strategy, UNCDF would establish, by mid-2005, a global trust fund for investing in LDCs, which, over time, would replace current UNCDF core resources as the primary source of predictable, multi-year funding. Its service lines would mirror the UNCDF strategic results framework and would be streamlined with UNDP/UNCDF partnerships within the overall UNDP multi-year funding framework (MYFF) (see p. 972). UNDP would support UNCDF in mobilizing resources for the trust fund, as well as specific global and regional initiatives, including the UNCDF-UNDP partnership for localizing the MDGs.

The administrative costs of UNCDF, to be funded through the UNDP biennium budget, were estimated at about $5 million per year for the 2006-2007 period. For UNCDF to fulfil its mandate, it would require predictable, multi-year programme resources in the order of $18 million per year, to be provided as either core or multi-year allocation under the global window of the trust fund for investing in LDCs. The total funding needed for administrative costs, technical expertise and investment purposes, including miscellaneous income, would amount to around $49 million in 2006 and $63 million in 2007.

In June [dec. 2005/29], the Executive Board welcomed the UNCDF business plan 2005-2007 and requested UNDP to report on the mainstreaming of UNCDF administrative costs in the 2006-2007 biennial support budget, as laid out in the plan. It also requested UNCDF to report to the Board at its first session in 2006 on its budgeting and programming decision-making processes. The Board reiterated its call to the Administrator to appoint, as soon as possible, a new UNCDF Executive Secretary. It called on donor countries, and other countries in a position to do so, to provide and sustain additional funding support for UNCDF programmes and activities in LDCs, including by providing funding to the proposed trust fund for investing in those countries. Member States, particularly LDCs, were encouraged to provide advocacy support to assist UNCDF in its resource mobilization efforts.

Chapter III

Humanitarian and special economic assistance

In 2005, the United Nations, through the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs (OCHA), continued to mobilize and coordinate humanitarian assistance to respond to international emergencies. During the year, consolidated inter-agency appeals were launched for Angola, Benin, Burundi, the Central African Republic, Chad, Chechnya and neighbouring republics of the Russian Federation, the Congo, Côte d'Ivoire, Djibouti, the Democratic Republic of the Congo (DRC), Eritrea, the Great Lakes region, Guatemala, Guinea, Guyana, the Indian Ocean region, Malawi, the Niger, the Occupied Palestinian Territory, Somalia, the South Asia subregion, the Sudan, Uganda, and the West and Central Africa subregions. OCHA received contributions for natural disaster assistance totalling $7.6 billion.

The Ad Hoc Advisory Groups on Burundi, Guinea-Bissau and Haiti continued to develop long-term programmes of support for those countries.

The World Conference on Disaster Reduction (Kobe, Hyogo, Japan, 18-22 January) concluded a review of the 1994 Yokohama Strategy and Plan of Action and adopted the Hyogo Declaration and the Hyogo Framework for Action 2005-2015: Building the Resilience of Nations and Communities to Disasters. The Framework included strategic goals and priority actions aimed at the substantial reduction of disaster losses, in lives and in the social, economic and environmental assets of communities and countries over the following 10 years. The Conference also issued the common statement of the special session on the Indian Ocean disaster: risk reduction for a safer future.

Humanitarian assistance

Coordination

Humanitarian affairs segment of the Economic and Social Council

The humanitarian affairs segment of the Economic and Social Council (13-15 July) considered, in accordance with Council decision 2005/212, the strengthening of UN humanitarian assistance coordination, including capacity, as well as organizational aspects, and convened panels on lessons learned from the 2004 Indian Ocean earthquake/tsunami disaster [YUN 2004, p. 921]. On 28 April (decision 2005/216), the Council decided to hold an informal event on 13 July to consider the issue of transition from relief to development.

The Council considered the Secretary-General's June report [A/60/87-E/2005/78] on strengthening the coordination of emergency humanitarian assistance, submitted in response to General Assembly resolutions 46/182 [YUN 1991, p. 421] and 59/141 [YUN 2004, p. 906], and Council resolution 2004/50 [ibid., p. 903]. The report summarized humanitarian developments and challenges, particularly capacity gaps experienced in complex emergencies and disasters over the preceding year. It also analysed the implementation and impact of Council resolutions 2002/32 [YUN 2002, p. 886], 2003/5 [YUN 2003, p. 916] and 2004/50, with a view to strengthening the policy guidance provided by those resolutions, and discussed the roles of and complementarity among UN entities with regard to multidimensional missions.

While the number of crises worldwide decreased from 31 in 2004 to 25 in 2005, the financial requirements to address them increased to nearly $6 billion, from $3.4 billion in 2004. Humanitarian concerns during the reporting period included major disasters in more than 12 nations caused by the 2004 Indian Ocean tsunami [YUN 2004, p. 952]; devastating hurricanes in the Caribbean; the decimation of crops by locusts in 10 West and North African countries; the outbreak of some 35 epidemics worldwide; ongoing fighting in the Darfur region of the Sudan, which resulted in the displacement of more than 2.4 million people and rendered 17 per cent of the region inaccessible to aid workers; and successive seasons of drought in the Horn of Africa, which left millions in need of food aid. While refugees in several parts of the world were able to find solutions, the number of internally displaced persons (IDPs) worldwide remained at 50 million.

Prospects for peace in nine African countries, including Angola, Sierra Leone and Somalia, presented opportunities for making progress on the humanitarian front. However, substantial humanitarian needs persisted and the challenges involved in addressing them remained significant. Despite the high levels of need and promising opportunities, donors still approached humanitarian crises unevenly and with insufficient resources. Funds to pay for prominent crises, including those in Afghanistan, Iraq and the aftermath of the Indian Ocean tsunami, were diverted from other areas, often to the detriment of African appeals; promises to replenish aid budgets depleted by large-scale crises were not generally kept.

The humanitarian community was capable of launching a massive response, but it was also apparent that the timeliness and efficacy of such a response could not be guaranteed. Some of the factors affecting response, such as lack of access and obstruction of aid, were specific to individual crises, while some of the key challenges seemed to be systemic in nature. Drawing on lessons learned from the crises in the Darfur region of the Sudan, the Indian Ocean region and elsewhere, the report highlighted limitations of the system and provided insight into possible improvements. In an effort to strengthen global humanitarian response capacities and improve the overall UN emergency response system, the Emergency Relief Coordinator initiated an independent, system-wide capacity review (see p. 991), which analysed potential resources to meet future demands for assistance and protection.

The Secretary-General evaluated the impact of humanitarian resolutions, including Council resolutions 2002/32, 2003/5 and 2004/50. The analysis suggested that the Council's value with respect to humanitarian assistance and coordination continued to be its inclusiveness as an annual platform that brought together UN agencies, non-governmental organizations (NGOs) and donor and recipient countries on issues that constrained humanitarian work. The Council also served as a means for tracking progress on humanitarian policy issues, but its effectiveness as a monitoring tool was contingent on its ability to promote accountability among all parts of the humanitarian system. The Council had failed to generate broad respect for humanitarian principles or promote compliance with them on the ground. It would benefit from a more strategic vision and approach with regard to humanitarian issues. Such an approach might better define its role vis-à-vis that of the General Assembly and the Security Council; clearly and systematically identify and address gaps in the system and improve humanitarian action; and promote broad ownership of and accountability for issues of common concern.

The relationships between the humanitarian, development, political and military elements of UN missions were also reviewed. The "Report on Integrated Missions: Practical Perspectives and Recommendations", an independent study commissioned by the expanded Core Group of the Executive Committee on Humanitarian Affairs, identified ways in which the United Nations could improve its response in peacekeeping and peacebuilding situations. The study concluded that mission mandates needed to recognize humanitarian principles, and mission design had to be sufficiently flexible to allow for protection of the humanitarian operating environment. Mission structures had to enable human rights actors to meet their mandated obligations, while supporting transitional processes.

The Secretary-General recommended strengthening humanitarian response capacity by broadening the capacity base and improving expertise and performance benchmarks; improving coordination by making more efficient use of available resources; and expanding the use of the Central Emergency Revolving Fund (CERF) to include a grant facility component based on voluntary contributions (see p. 993).

Transition from relief to development

In response to General Assembly resolution 59/141 [YUN 2004, p. 906] and Economic and Social Council resolution 2004/50 [ibid., p. 903], the Secretary-General, in a June report [A/60/89-E/2005/79], discussed the issue of transition from relief to development. The report described key challenges in post-disaster, drought and conflict transitions, and highlighted lessons learned and best practices. The Secretary-General said that, while all transition situations were unique and required flexible responses adapted to the specific context and circumstances of the country, national ownership of the transition process was a key to successful and sustainable recovery and development efforts and to lasting peace. Managing recovery in any transition context required the investment of funds and efforts to build national capacity, empower communities and exploit the synergies among development, humanitarian and other actors. Post-disaster transition phases should include sustained support for the immediate restoration of livelihoods and basic social services, as well as for preparedness measures and activities that would reduce future disaster vulnerability. Disaster-recovery programming should be developed with affected Governments and communities and with an awareness of the existing socio-economic situation. The United Nations needed to strengthen leadership and coordination support structures in the field and improve institutional accountability at Headquarters. That could include empowering the resident coordinator system to take on a more directive role during the transition phase and strengthening the UN country teams to ensure that support was provided in a timely, predictable and cost-effective manner. In addition, funding appeals should include support for early recovery needs and transition coordination.

Post-conflict transition operations involved a complex web of political, peacekeeping, human rights, humanitarian and development activities geared towards consolidating peace, supporting the restoration of State and Government institutions and reinforcing human security. It was critical, therefore, that the desired goal of those efforts be developed by and with affected Governments, civil society and communities. It was also essential to fully fund early recovery needs identified in the consolidated appeals process (CAP) and to support resident coordinators and UN country teams in issuing early transitional appeals for needs not covered by CAP.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 15 July [meeting 28], the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 2005/4 [draft: E/2005/L.19, orally revised] without vote [agenda item 5].

Strengthening of the coordination of emergency humanitarian assistance of the United Nations

The Economic and Social Council,

Reaffirming General Assembly resolution 46/182 of 19 December 1991 and the guiding principles contained in the annex thereto, and recalling other relevant resolutions of the Assembly and Economic and Social Council and agreed conclusions of the Council,

Welcoming the fact that, at the humanitarian affairs segment of its substantive session of 2005, the Council considered the theme "Strengthening of the coordination of United Nations humanitarian assistance, including capacity as well as organizational aspects",

Also welcoming the fact, that the Council held a panel discussion on lessons learned from the recent Indian Ocean earthquake/tsunami disaster,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Also takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on strengthening emergency relief, rehabilitation, reconstruction, recovery and prevention in the aftermath of the Indian Ocean tsunami disaster as well as of the report of the Secretary-General on the transition from relief to development;

3. Requests the relevant organizations of the United Nations system to strengthen, within their respective mandates, essential common humanitarian services that are coordinated through the Inter-Agency Standing Committee so that those services can be provided in a predictable, efficient and effective manner;

4. Also requests the relevant organizations of the United Nations system to engage systematically with relevant authorities and organizations at the regional and national levels to support efforts to strengthen humanitarian response capacities at all levels, in particular through preparedness programmes, with a view to improving the overall adequacy of the deployment of resources;

5. Stresses that the United Nations system should make efforts to enhance existing humanitarian capacities, knowledge and institutions, including, as appropriate, through the transfer of technology and expertise to developing countries and countries with economies in transition;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to encourage the relevant organizations of the United Nations system, within their respective mandates, to develop further appropriate mechanisms for the identification and/or development of specialist technical expertise and capacity to fill gaps in critical humanitarian programming sectors in order to improve the capacity of the United Nations system to respond to humanitarian needs;

7. Also requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with relevant United Nations humanitarian organizations and States, to discuss ways to help assess the effectiveness of the United Nations humanitarian response;

8. Stresses that the United Nations system should improve its ability to make the best use of existing humanitarian capacities at all levels;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to encourage the relevant organizations of the United Nations system to identify and use, as appropriate and available, local resources and expertise from within the affected country and/or its neighbours in response to humanitarian needs;

10. Also requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with States and relevant organizations, to further develop and improve, as required, mechanisms for the use of emergency standby capacities, including, where appropriate, regional humanitarian capacities, under the auspices of the United Nations, inter alia, through formal agreements with appropriate regional organizations, and to report on this issue to the General Assembly at its sixty-first session, through the Economic and Social Council;

11. Further requests the Secretary-General to develop more systematic links with Member States offering military assets for natural disaster response in order to identify the availability of such assets;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to strengthen the humanitarian response capacity of, and the support to, United Nations resident/humanitarian coordinators and United Nations country teams, including by providing the necessary training, identifying resources and improving the identification and selection of United Nations resident/humanitarian coordinators, to help provide a timely, predictable and appropriate response to humanitarian needs and to further improve United Nations coordination activities at the field level;

13. Calls upon the relevant United Nations entities, under the coordination mandate of the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat, to improve the development of common needs assessments and work towards more effective prioritization, including reviewing the Consolidated Appeals Process Needs Assessment Framework and Matrix;

14. Stresses the importance of rapid access to funds for an effective United Nations humanitarian response in the initial phases of a humanitarian emergency, before an appeal is launched, or in cases of unanticipated humanitarian needs, as well as for addressing core needs in underfunded emergencies;

15. Emphasizes the need to establish reliable, predictable and timely funding to meet humanitarian needs, including those in underfunded emergencies;

16. Requests the Secretary-General to continue efforts, including through consultations with States, to address the need to establish finance mechanisms to enable timely allocation of humanitarian resources in response to the Consolidated Appeals Process so as to address gaps in the United Nations humanitarian response;

17. Recommends to the General Assembly that it improve functioning of the Central Emergency Revolving Fund, inter alia, through the possible inclusion of a grant facility component based on voluntary contributions, and requests the Secretary-General to submit a report on this issue for consideration by the Assembly at its sixtieth session;

18. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to strive to broaden the donor base for humanitarian response, including by engaging the private sector, as well as to strengthen efforts to further enhance transparency and accountability with respect to the channelling and utilization of resources;

19. Recommends to the General Assembly that it request the Secretary-General to ensure that United Nations humanitarian organizations work, as appropriate, with the Department of Peacekeeping Operations of the Secretariat in order to better ensure that humanitarian issues are accounted for from the earliest stages of planning and design of United Nations multidimensional integrated peacekeeping operations with humanitarian components and that the mandates of such operations continue to respect the need for their humanitarian activities to be carried out in accordance with humanitarian principles;

20. Requests the Secretary-General to reflect the progress made in the implementation of and follow-up to the present resolution in his next report to the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly on the strengthening of the coordination of emergency humanitarian assistance of the United Nations.

Humanitarian Response Review. In an August report commissioned by the United Nations Emergency Relief Coordinator and the Under-Secretary-General for Humanitarian Affairs, independent consultants examined the humanitarian response capacities of the United Nations, NGOs, the Red Cross/Red Crescent movement and other key humanitarian actors. The evaluation, known as the Humanitarian Response Review, gauged the preparedness of international humanitarian organizations to predict, prevent and mitigate the impact of crises on vulnerable populations in complex emergencies and natural disasters, and respond effectively to their needs. The major gap identified by the review was the low level of preparedness of humanitarian organizations in terms of human resources and sectoral capacities. The report recommended a global mapping of humanitarian response capacities covering international, national and regional action, the private sector and the military. Other key recommendations covered the development and application of performance benchmarks and indicators; strengthening response capacities; improving international response system coordination; and the adequacy of available funding to ensure timely response.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December [meeting 63], the General Assembly adopted resolution 60/124 [draft: A/60/L.38 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 73 (a)].

Strengthening of the coordination of emergency humanitarian assistance of the United Nations

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its resolution 46/182 of 19 December 1991 and the guiding principles contained in the annex thereto, and recalling other relevant General Assembly and Economic and Social Council resolutions and agreed conclusions of the Council,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the strengthening of the coordination of emergency humanitarian assistance of the United Nations,

Also taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the improvement of the Central Emergency Revolving Fund,

Reaffirming the principles of neutrality, humanity, impartiality and independence for the provision of humanitarian assistance,

Reiterating that independence means the autonomy of humanitarian objectives from the political, economic, military or other objectives that any actor may hold with regard to areas where humanitarian action is being implemented,

Expressing deep concern at the number and scale of natural disasters and their increasing impact within recent years, and reaffirming the need for sustainable measures at all levels to reduce the vulnerability of societies to natural hazards, using an integrated, multi-hazard and participatory approach to addressing vulnerability, risk assessment, and disaster prevention, mitigation, preparedness, response and recovery,

Reaffirming, in this regard, the Hyogo Declaration and the Hyogo Framework for Action 2005–2015: Building the Resilience of Nations and Communities to Disasters, as adopted by the World Conference on Disaster Reduction, held in Kobe, Hyogo, Japan, from 18 to 22 January 2005,

Noting with grave concern that violence, including sexual abuse and sexual and other violence against women, girls and boys, continues to be, in many emergency situations, deliberately directed against civilian populations,

Concerned about the need to mobilize adequate support, including financial resources, for emergency humanitarian assistance at all levels, including at the national, regional and international levels,

Recognizing the clear relationship between emergency, rehabilitation and development and that, in order to ensure a smooth transition from relief to rehabilitation and development, emergency assistance must be provided in ways that will be supportive of recovery and long-term development, and that emergency measures should be seen as a step towards long-term development,

Welcoming the ongoing efforts to strengthen international humanitarian response, including the emergency humanitarian assistance of the United Nations,

Emphasizing that the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat should benefit from adequate and more predictable funding, while stressing the importance for the Office to continue to make efforts to broaden its donor base,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the outcome of the eighth humanitarian affairs segment of the Economic and Social Council held during its substantive session of 2005;

2. Calls upon all Governments and parties in complex humanitarian emergencies, in particular in armed conflicts and in post-conflict situations, in countries in which humanitarian personnel are operating, in conformity with the relevant provisions of international law and national laws, to cooperate fully with the United Nations and other humanitarian agencies and organizations and to ensure the safe and unhindered access of humanitarian personnel and delivery of supplies and equipment in order to allow them to perform efficiently their task of assisting the affected civilian population, including refugees and internally displaced persons;

3. Reaffirms the obligation of all States and parties to an armed conflict to protect civilians in armed conflicts in accordance with international humanitarian law, and invites States to promote a culture of protection, taking into account the particular needs of women, children, older persons and persons with disabilities;

4. Calls upon States to adopt preventive measures and effective responses to acts of violence committed against civilian populations and to ensure that those responsible are promptly brought to justice, as provided for by national law and obligations under international law;

5. Also calls upon States to elaborate and implement strategies to report on, prevent and punish all forms of violence against women, girls and boys, in particular sexual violence and abuse;

6. Recognizes the Guiding Principles on Internal Displacement as an important international framework for the protection of internally displaced persons, and encourages Member States and humanitarian agencies to work together in endeavours to provide a more predictable response to the needs of internally displaced persons, and in that regard calls for international support, upon request, to capacity-building efforts of Governments;

7. Emphasizes the fundamentally civilian character of humanitarian assistance, reaffirms the leading role of civilian organizations in implementing humanitarian assistance, particularly in areas affected by conflicts, and affirms the need, in situations where military capacity and assets are used to support the implementation of humanitarian assistance, for their use to be in conformity with international humanitarian law and humanitarian principles;

8. Encourages the Emergency Relief Coordinator to continue his efforts to strengthen the coordination of humanitarian assistance, and calls upon relevant United Nations organizations and other humanitarian and development actors to work with the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat to enhance the coordination, effectiveness and efficiency of humanitarian assistance;

9. Reiterates the need for a more effective, efficient, coherent, coordinated and better performing United Nations country presence, with a strengthened role for the senior United Nations resident official responsible for the coordination of United Nations humanitarian assistance, including appropriate authority, resources and accountability;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to strengthen the support provided to United Nations resident/humanitarian coordinators and to United Nations country teams, including through the provision of necessary training, the identification of resources, and improving the identification and selection of United Nations resident/humanitarian coordinators;

11. Calls upon the relevant organizations of the United Nations system and, as appropriate, other relevant humanitarian actors, to improve the humanitarian response to natural and man-made disasters and complex emergencies by strengthening the humanitarian response capacities at all levels, by strengthening the coordination of humanitarian assistance at the field level, including with national authorities of the affected State, as appropriate, and by enhancing transparency, performance and accountability;

12. Calls upon relevant United Nations organizations to continue to improve the transparency and reliability of humanitarian needs assessments and to engage in the improvement of the consolidated appeals process, inter alia, by further developing the process as an instrument for strategic planning and prioritization and by involving other relevant humanitarian organizations in the process, while reiterating that consolidated appeals are prepared in consultation with the affected State;

13. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with States and relevant organizations, to further develop and improve, as required, mechanisms for the use of emergency stand-by capacities, including, where appropriate, regional humanitarian capacities, under the auspices of the United Nations, inter alia, through formal agreements with appropriate regional organizations, and to report on that issue to the General Assembly at its sixty-first session through the Economic and Social Council;

14. Calls upon donors to take further steps to improve their policies and practices with respect to humanitarian action, and in that regard welcomes the continued efforts under the Good Humanitarian Donorship initiative;

15. Decides to upgrade the current Central Emergency Revolving Fund into the Central Emergency Response Fund by including a grant element based on voluntary contributions, to be replenished at regular intervals, so as to ensure a more predictable and timely response to humanitarian emergencies, with the objectives of promoting early action and response to reduce loss of life, enhancing response to time-critical requirements and strengthening core elements of humanitarian response in underfunded crises, based on demonstrable needs and on priorities identified in consultation with the affected State as appropriate;

16. Decides also that the Fund will continue to operate in accordance with resolution 46/182 and the guiding principles contained in the annex thereto;

17. Affirms its role to provide overall policy guidance on the use of the Fund to maximize its impact and to improve its functioning, and encourages the Economic and Social Council to discuss the implementation of the Fund;

18. Takes note of the fact that an advisory group will be established, as an independent body, to provide advice to the Secretary-General on the use and impact of the Fund, and that the Inter-Agency Standing Committee will discuss the use and impact of the Fund;

19. Calls upon the Secretary-General, on the basis of his report on the improvement of the Central Emergency Revolving Fund and in consultations with all relevant stakeholders, to make the necessary managerial and administrative arrangements to facilitate the implementation of the grant element and set up appropriate reporting and accountability mechanisms to ensure that the funds allocated through the Fund are used in the most efficient, effective and transparent manner possible;

20. Urges all Member States and invites the private sector and all concerned individuals and institutions to consider making voluntary contributions to the Fund, welcomes the financial pledges already made, and emphasizes that contributions should be additional to current commitments to humanitarian programming and not to the detriment of resources made available for international cooperation for development;

21. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council on the detailed use of the Fund;

22. Also requests the Secretary-General to commission an independent review of the Fund at the end of the second year of operation to assess, inter alia, both the grant and revolving elements of the Fund, its administration, criteria for resource allocation, actions and responses supported by it and its ability to meet its objectives, and to submit a report in that regard to the General Assembly at its sixty-third session;

23. Emphasizes the importance of the discussion of humanitarian policies and activities by the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council and that those discussions should be continuously revitalized by Member States;

24. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its sixty-first session, through the Economic and Social Council at its substantive session of 2006, on progress made in strengthening the coordination of emergency humanitarian assistance of the United Nations.

UN and other humanitarian personnel

In response to General Assembly resolution 59/211 [YUN 2004, p. 1435], the Secretary-General, in an August report [A/60/223 & Corr. 1], described threats against humanitarian and UN personnel over the preceding year. He indicated that the apparent rise in the number of security incidents involving UN personnel was most likely due to the increased number of staff operating in the field and improved reporting capability within the UN security management system. It was evident that enhanced risk assessment skills, security training and adherence to minimum operating security standards had instilled greater confidence and capacity to operate safely in areas of higher risk.

The Assembly, in resolution 60/123 of 15 December (see p. 1523), called on Governments and parties in complex humanitarian emergencies to ensure the safe and unhindered access of humanitarian personnel.

OCHA administrative functions

By decision 60/551 of 23 December, the General Assembly deferred to its sixtieth (2006) session consideration of the Secretary-General's 2004 report on defining the administrative functions of the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs (OCHA) [YUN 2004, p. 908].

Resource mobilization

Central Emergency Revolving Fund

In 2005, the Central Emergency Revolving Fund (CERF), established in 1992 [YUN 1992, p. 584] as a cash-flow mechanism for the initial phase of humanitarian emergencies, granted 13 advances, amounting to $36.5 million.

In response to General Assembly resolution 46/182 [YUN 1991, p. 421] and Economic and Social Council resolution 2005/4 (see p. 990), the Secretary-General submitted an October report [A/60/432] on improving CERF. Owing to its exclusively revolving nature, CERF increasingly faced difficulties in providing adequate resources for use in the initial phase of emergencies. To ensure a more predictable and timely response to humanitarian crises and address underfunded emergencies, the Secretary-General recommended that the Assembly upgrade CERF, which would be renamed the Central Emergency Response Fund, with a total target of $500 million, including the existing revolving element of $50 million and a grant element of $450 million. The Fund could be operational early in 2006. Up to two thirds of the Fund's total grant facility would be devoted to life-saving rapid response initiatives, providing financial liquidity to eligible humanitarian organizations to cover the core elements of immediate humanitarian need. An independent advisory group of experts would be formed to provide advice on the use of the Fund and the Inter-Agency Standing Committee would discuss its operation. Member States were encouraged to contribute generously to the Central Emergency Response Fund, ensuring that those contributions were additional to their current commitments to humanitarian programming.

The Assembly upgraded the Fund in resolution 60/124 of 15 December (see p. 991).

Consolidated appeals

The consolidated appeals process (CAP), an inclusive and coordinated programme cycle for analysing context, assessing needs and planning prioritized humanitarian response, was the humanitarian sector's main strategic planning and programming tool. In 2005, the United Nations and its humanitarian partners issued consolidated appeals seeking some $6 billion in assistance to Angola, the Central African Republic, Chad, Chechnya and neighbouring republics of the Russian Federation, the Congo, Djibouti, Eritrea, the Great Lakes region (Burundi, DRC, Rwanda, Uganda, the United Republic of Tanzania), Guatemala, Guyana, the Indian Ocean region (Indonesia, Maldives, Myanmar, Seychelles, Somalia, Sri Lanka), Malawi, the Occupied Palestinian Territory, the South Asia subregion (Pakistan), the Sudan and the West Africa subregion (Benin, Burkina Faso, Cape Verde, Côte d'Ivoire, Ghana, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Liberia, Mali, Mauritania, the Niger, Nigeria, Senegal, Sierra Leone, the Gambia, Togo), and collectively to countries in the West and Central Africa subregions (the Gambia, Guinea-Bissau, Mali, Mauritania, Sao Tome and Principe, and Senegal). Separate appeals were launched for Benin, Burundi, Côte d'Ivoire, the DRC, Guinea, the Niger, Somalia and Uganda.

The latest available data indicated that 67 per cent ($4.03 billion) of requirements had been met.

Mine clearance

On 8 December [meeting 62], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fourth (Special Political and Decolonization) Committee [A/60/473], adopted resolution 60/97 without vote [agenda item 27].

Assistance in mine action

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 58/127 of 19 December 2003 and all its previous resolutions on assistance in mine clearance and mine action, all adopted without a vote,

Recalling all relevant treaties and conventions and their review processes,

Reaffirming its deep concern at the tremendous humanitarian and development problems caused by the presence of mines and explosive remnants of war that have serious and lasting social and economic consequences for the populations of countries affected by mines and explosive remnants of war,

Bearing in mind the serious threat that mines and explosive remnants of war pose to the safety, health and lives of local civilian populations, as well as of personnel participating in humanitarian, peacekeeping and rehabilitation programmes and operations,

Deeply alarmed by the number of mines that continue to be laid each year, as well as the presence of a decreasing but still very large number of, and area of square kilometres infested by, mines and explosive remnants of war as a result of armed conflicts, and therefore remaining convinced of the necessity and urgency of strengthening mine-action efforts by the international community with a view to eliminating the threat of landmines and explosive remnants of war to civilians as soon as possible,

Recognizing that, in addition to the primary role of States, the United Nations has a significant role to play in the field of assistance in mine action, and considering mine action to be an important and integrated component of United Nations humanitarian and development activities, as well as noting the inclusion of mine action in several United Nations peacekeeping operations,

Stressing the need to convince mine-affected States to halt new deployments of anti-personnel mines in order to ensure the effectiveness and efficiency of mine-clearance operations,

Stressing also the pressing need to urge non-State actors to halt immediately and unconditionally new deployments of mines and other associated explosive devices,

1. Calls, in particular, for the continuation of the efforts of States, with the assistance of the United Nations and relevant organizations involved in mine action, as appropriate, to foster the establishment and development of national mine-action capacities in countries in which mines and explosive remnants of war constitute a serious threat to the safety, health and lives of the local civilian population or an impediment to social and economic development efforts at the national and local levels;

2. Urges all States, in particular those that have the capacity to do so, as well as the United Nations system and relevant organizations and institutions involved in mine action, as appropriate, to provide:

(a) Assistance to countries affected by mines and explosive remnants of war for the establishment and development of national mine-action capacities;

(b) Support for national programmes, where appropriate, in cooperation with the relevant bodies of the United Nations system and relevant regional, governmental and non-governmental organizations, to reduce the risks posed by landmines and explosive remnants of war, including to women and children;

(c) Reliable, predictable and timely contributions for mine-action activities, including through national mine-action efforts and humanitarian mine-action programmes of non-governmental organizations, including those relating to victim assistance and mine risk education, especially at the local level, as well as through the Voluntary Trust Fund for Assistance in Mine Action and relevant regional trust funds for assistance in mine action;

(d) Necessary information and technical, financial and material assistance to locate, remove, destroy and otherwise render ineffective minefields, mines, booby traps, other devices and explosive remnants of war, in accordance with international law, as soon as possible;

(e) Technological assistance to countries affected by mines and explosive remnants of war; and to promote user-oriented scientific research on and development of mine-action techniques and technology, within reasonable time frames;

3. Encourages efforts to conduct all mine-action activities in accordance with accepted national standards and with the International Mine Action Standards, where applicable, and emphasizes the importance of using an information management system, such as the Information Management System for Mine Action, to help facilitate mine-action activities;

4. Encourages all relevant multilateral, regional and national programmes and bodies to include, in coordination with the United Nations, activities related to mine action, including mine clearance, in their humanitarian, rehabilitation, reconstruction and development assistance activities, where appropriate, bearing in mind the need to ensure national and local ownership, sustainability and capacity-building, as well as to include a gender and age-appropriate perspective in all aspects of such activities;

5. Stresses the importance of cooperation and coordination in mine action, and emphasizes the primary responsibility of national authorities in that regard, also stresses the supporting role of the United Nations and other relevant organizations in that regard, and underlines the need for continuous assessment of the role of the United Nations in mine action;

6. Notes the potential that mine action can have as a peace and confidence-building measure in post-conflict situations among parties concerned;

7. Declares that 4 April of each year shall be officially proclaimed and observed as International Day for Mine Awareness and Assistance in Mine Action;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its sixty-second session a report on the implementation of the present resolution and on follow-up to previous resolutions on assistance in mine clearance and assistance in mine action, including on relevant United Nations policies and activities;

9. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its sixty-second session the item entitled "Assistance in mine action".

Humanitarian activities

Africa

Central African Republic

The UN Consolidated Inter-Agency Appeal for the Central African Republic, launched for $27.9 million in 2005, received 35 per cent of its target ($9.8 million).

The humanitarian crisis in the Central African Republic continued to spread, with the northern parts of the country, the most directly affected by the conflict, failing to recover from the destruction of the local economies and the consequent impact on sanitation, nutrition and education. Nevertheless, positive developments on the political front gave hope for an improvement in the Government's capacity as an effective partner for humanitarian action and a strengthening of external partnerships. UN system agencies identified four strategic priorities for the 2005 Appeal: access to basic health care, prevention of HIV/AIDS and psychological care for the victims of violence; food security; access to basic education; and ensuring and coordinating humanitarian action.

Chad

The UN Consolidated Inter-Agency Appeal for Chad sought $227.3 million in 2005, of which 61 per cent ($139.7 million) was received.

In 2005, the influx of Sudanese refugees into eastern Chad ended, the situation stabilized and agencies were able to address refugees' needs adequately. In addition, the international community provided more assistance to local host communities to mitigate the impact of the continued refugee presence in eastern Chad. In June, however, a new flow of refugees began to enter Chad from the Central African Republic, raising challenges comparable to those faced in the east. Other factors leading to instability included a tense political environment, the widespread proliferation of small arms, increasing levels of banditry and criminality, armed rebellion and danger from landmines and unexploded ordnance. On the economic front, State revenue remained low, the price of cotton fell on the international market, cattle export revenue was unpredictable, security expenditures increased due to the refugee crisis, and regular strikes and demonstrations were held by civil servants demanding the payment of salary arrears.

The Congo

The UN Consolidated Inter-Agency Appeal for the Congo for 2005, amounting to $24.1 million, received 38 per cent ($9.1 million) of its request.

Successive conflicts in the Congo over the preceding decade destroyed education, sanitation and roadway infrastructure and other means of survival, with the Pool region particularly affected, resulting in a humanitarian crisis. Apart from the consequences of war, the Congo was also affected by ebola virus epidemics and floods, and subregional instability, which caused an influx of some 65,000 refugees into the country.

In 2005, the principal strategic priorities for the humanitarian community included the improvement and rehabilitation of basic social services; revival of production and agricultural activities; the free movement of humanitarian actors and the rehabilitation of access routes; and the promotion of a culture of peace and human rights.

Eritrea

The UN Consolidated Inter-Agency Appeal for Eritrea, launched for $156.7 million in 2005, met 64 per cent ($100.8 million) of its requirements.

The food security situation continued to worsen in the early months of 2005, as a result of low production, inflation of market prices and insufficient distribution of food aid, exhausting further the already overstretched coping mechanisms of the poor. The stalemate in the peace process with Ethiopia (see p. 350) exacerbated the situation. Many investment programmes were postponed, and an unprecedented burden was placed on women and children as many families were without men as a result of conscription.

Great Lakes region

The UN Consolidated Inter-Agency Appeal for the Great Lakes region, launched for a total of $114.5 million to cover 2005, received 77 per cent ($88.1 million) of that amount. In addition to the regional appeal, individual country appeals were made for Burundi, the DRC and Uganda.

The thematic priorities identified in 2005 were providing basic needs assistance; preventing and addressing human rights violations, particularly sexual and gender-based violence and violations of children's rights; and improving humanitarian response policy, with a special focus on displaced populations and HIV/AIDS.

Burundi

The UN Consolidated Inter-Agency Appeal for Burundi, launched for $122 million in 2005, obtained 61 per cent ($74.3 million) of its goal.

Although Burundi did not fall back into a large-scale emergency, general living conditions for the majority of the population remained extremely fragile in 2005. The Government's lack of capacity to respond effectively to the population's needs showed the importance of sustaining support for early warning and rapid response programmes, and recurrent cycles of smaller emergencies highlighted entrenched vulnerabilities. The continuing stabilization of the political and security situation allowed for sustained access to all parts of the country. However, persistent levels of extreme poverty, combined with declining agricultural production, were of major concern. Crop pests, lower land productivity and three years of drought, most apparent in the northern and eastern parts of the country, put an estimated 100,000 households at permanent risk of food insecurity and fragile nutritional conditions.

Democratic Republic of the Congo

The UN Consolidated Inter-Agency Appeal for the DRC sought $219.8 million in 2005, of which 65 per cent ($142.5 million) was received.

In 2005, significant progress was made towards improving the security situation in the eastern provinces, opening up large areas to humanitarian access. That allowed new opportunities for building protective environments for those communities. However, reaping the benefits in newly stabilized zones and disarming hardliners became increasingly difficult in the second half of the year, and the potential remained for ongoing violence and rapid-onset emergencies in the eastern provinces. The physical isolation of vulnerable populations often impeded an adequate humanitarian response, and most provinces needed assistance on both humanitarian and structural levels.

Uganda

The UN Consolidated Inter-Agency Appeal for Uganda requested $188.8 million to cover 2005 requirements, of which 77 per cent ($146.2 million) was received.

The humanitarian and human rights situation in the northern and north-eastern conflict-affected districts remained dire, especially for women and children. Conditions varied greatly from area to area, however, and improved security conditions in the central portion of the country allowed the return of approximately 400,000 internally displaced persons to their villages. In the north-central area, approximately 1.7 million internally displaced persons continued to live in squalid conditions in overcrowded camps, facing poor water and sanitation, human rights abuses, disease outbreaks, wildfires and other perils. In the Karamoja subregion, unsustainable pastoral practices, intermittent drought and deteriorating security conditions combined to perpetuate a fragile food security situation.

Somalia

In response to General Assembly resolution 59/218 [YUN 2004, p. 913], the Secretary-General, in his August consolidated report [A/60/302], provided information on humanitarian assistance and relief provided by the United Nations and its partners in Somalia in 2005.

Insecurity continued to prevail in many parts of Somalia, particularly in the south and central regions; as a result, access to those communities was restricted, making them vulnerable to harassment, exploitation and extortion. Limited resources to strengthen security and safety measures for humanitarian actors severely affected the delivery of aid. However, humanitarian partners responded to the needs of an estimated 900,000 Somalis, including between 370,000 and 400,000 internally displaced persons. The north-eastern coast of Somalia was affected by the 2004 Indian Ocean tsunami [YUN 2004, p. 952], and heavy rains and flash floods caused widespread damage to infrastructure in Somaliland and Puntland; in both cases, the humanitarian response was rapid. The United Nations was working to update the inter-agency action plan for flood forecasting, preparedness and response for the Juba and Shabelle Rivers. In mid-April, cross-border and intra-clan fighting displaced an estimated 10,000 to 15,000 people in the Gedo region, which faced chronic food insecurity and showed the highest malnutrition rates in the country. While more than three years of drought had officially ended, an estimated 500,000 people remained in a state of humanitarian emergency, recovery from which was slowed by reduced herd sizes, excessive debt levels, civil strife and widespread destitution. UN agencies and NGOs continued to assist vulnerable communities in rehabilitating, operating and maintaining water supply systems, promoting hygiene and sanitation, and rebuilding infrastructure. However, the authorities and the aid community needed to strengthen longer-term strategies to find solutions to food and livelihood insecurity.

The UN Consolidated Inter-Agency Appeal for Somalia, launched for $162.8 million in 2005, met 61 per cent ($100 million) of requirements.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December [meeting 68], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee [A/60/496 & Corr.1,2], adopted resolution 60/219 without vote [agenda item 73 (b)].

Assistance for humanitarian relief and the economic and social rehabilitation of Somalia

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 47/160 of 18 December 1992 and subsequent relevant resolutions, in particular resolutions 56/106 of 14 December 2001, 57/154 of 16 December 2002, 58/115 of 17 December 2003 and 59/218 of 22 December 2004,

Noting with serious concern the effects of the civil war in Somalia and in particular the destruction of the physical, economic and social infrastructure of Somalia,

Underlining the urgent need for the rehabilitation and reconstruction of the infrastructure,

Also underlining the urgency in rebuilding State institutions and in strengthening the capacity of those institutions,

Welcoming the continued efforts of the African Union and the Intergovernmental Authority on Development towards the successful conclusion of the peace process for Somalia,

Deeply concerned that the collateral effects of the ongoing drought continue to worsen, as evidenced by the high levels of malnutrition ranging from 19 to 22 per cent,

Noting with grave concern the effects of the 2004 tsunami, which threaten the livelihoods and environment of the coastal population and have had a negative impact on the Somali economy,

Underlining the urgent need for humanitarian assistance and continued relief, reconstruction and livelihood assistance, as well as equitable resource allocation to vulnerable communities, such as destitute pastoralists and internally displaced persons,

Concerned that shipments of illegal nuclear and toxic waste dumped along the coastline of Somalia and stirred up by the tsunami, as reported by the United Nations Environment Programme Asian Tsunami Disaster Task Force, have caused health and environmental problems and can cause serious long-term effects on human health, that they pose a very serious environmental hazard, not only in Somalia but in the eastern Africa subregion, and that they are contrary to international law, infringing on the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Somalia,

Recognizing the negative effects of the proliferation of small arms and light weapons on the humanitarian situation and on development in Somalia, and in this regard condemning the significant increase in the flow of weapons and ammunition supplies to and through Somalia,

Noting the intrinsic link between the search for peace and reconciliation and the alleviation of the humanitarian crisis in Somalia, and in this regard, underlining that a stable and secure environment in Somalia is essential to the future success of the national reconciliation process and that the improvement of the humanitarian situation is an essential component of support for the peace and reconciliation process,

Welcoming the continued focus of the United Nations, in partnership with the newly established Transitional Federal Government of Somalia,

Recalling the statements by the President of the Security Council of 31 October 2001 and 28 March 2002, by which the Council condemned attacks on humanitarian personnel and called upon all parties in Somalia to respect fully the security and safety of personnel of the United Nations, the International Committee of the Red Cross and non-governmental organizations, and to guarantee their complete freedom of movement and access throughout Somalia,

Re-emphasizing the crucial importance of the further implementation of its resolutions 47/160, 56/106, 57/154, 58/115 and 59/218 to rehabilitate basic social and economic services throughout the country,

Taking note of the reports of the Secretary-General,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for his continued and tireless efforts to mobilize assistance for the Somali people, and welcomes the steps being taken to strengthen the capacity of the United Nations Political Office for Somalia, as well as the appointment of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General;

2. Welcomes with great satisfaction the formation of the transitional federal institutions and their relocation to Somalia, urges further progress, and calls upon the Somali leaders to continue to work towards establishing effective national governance through inclusive dialogue and consensus-building within the framework of those institutions, in accordance with the transitional federal charter of the Somali Republic adopted in February 2004;

3. Urges, in that regard, the Somali leaders to make every effort to create conditions to help to increase the effectiveness of humanitarian assistance by, inter alia, improving the security situation on the ground;

4. Urges, in that regard, donor countries and regional and subregional organizations to continue to contribute to the reconstruction and rehabilitation of Somalia, which is of fundamental importance, in particular through the mechanism of the rapid assistance programme and efforts coordinated by the United Nations;

5. Urges the United Nations to continue the implementation of the relief, rehabilitation and reconstruction programmes for Somalia in line with the priorities established by the Transitional Federal Government of Somalia;

6. Commends the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat, the funds and programmes of the United Nations as well as other humanitarian organizations for their response, especially in the wake of the 2004 tsunami, and underlines the urgent need to put into place practical measures aimed at alleviating the consequences of the drought in the most affected areas in Somalia;

7. Urges all States and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations concerned to continue to implement further its resolutions 47/160, 56/106, 57/154, 58/115 and 59/218 in order to assist the transitional federal institutions in embarking on the rehabilitation of basic social and economic services, as well as institution-building aimed at the restoration of structures of civil governance at all levels in all parts of the country;

8. Calls upon the international community to assist in conducting critical assessments of the environmental impacts of the tsunami-affected areas, drought and flood-affected areas and of toxic and other wastes, and in putting into place aggressive programmes focusing on short-, medium- and long-term measures in the areas of institutional development, development of policy and legislation, land use and soil management, marine and coastal ecosystem management and disaster management (prevention, preparedness, assessment, response and mitigation);

9. Calls upon the Secretary-General to continue to mobilize rapid international financial assistance as well as humanitarian, rehabilitation and reconstruction relief for the Somali people and to help build capacity within the transitional federal institutions in support of a consensus agreement;

10. Urges the Somali parties to respect the security and safety of the personnel of the United Nations, the specialized agencies, the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement and non-governmental organizations, as well as all other humanitarian personnel, and to guarantee their complete freedom of movement and safe access throughout Somalia;

11. Urges the international community to support the need for peacebuilding measures and the speedy implementation of programmes for the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration of militias throughout Somalia in order to stabilize the entire country and thereby ensure the effectiveness of the Transitional Federal Government of Somalia;

12. Calls upon the international community to provide, as a matter of urgency, humanitarian assistance and relief to the transitional federal institutions and the Somali people to alleviate in particular the consequences of the civil war and the prevailing drought;

13. Also calls upon the international community to provide continuing and increased assistance in response to the United Nations 2004 Consolidated Inter-Agency Appeal for relief, rehabilitation and reconstruction assistance for Somalia;

14. Commends the Secretary-General for the establishment of the Trust Fund for Peacebuilding in Somalia, welcomes the contributions made thus far to the Fund, and appeals to Member States to contribute to it;

15. Requests the Secretary-General, in view of the critical situation in Somalia, to take all necessary and practicable measures for the implementation of the present resolution and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its sixty-first session.

Sudan

The UN Consolidated Inter-Agency Appeal for the Sudan sought $1.9 billion in 2005 and received 53 per cent ($1 billion) of that amount.

The January signing of the Comprehensive Peace Agreement (see p. 302) formally ended Africa's longest-running civil war, but significant political, economic and social challenges remained. In southern Sudan, increased activity by the Lord's Resistance Army, operating out of Uganda, affected aid and land transport and increased insecurity, threatening economic recovery and livelihoods. In the Darfur region, protracted insecurity, violations of human rights and drought led to an increase in the conflict-affected population, from 2.5 million in May to 3.4 million in August. The international aid community in Darfur provided sustained humanitarian assistance in the life-saving sectors of food, water, sanitation, shelter and health.

(For more information on the Sudan, see p. 301.)

West Africa

The UN Consolidated Inter-Agency Appeal for the West Africa subregion sought $202.2 million in 2005 to assist beneficiaries in Benin, Burkina Faso, Cape Verde, Côte d'Ivoire, the Gambia, Ghana, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Liberia, Mali, Mauritania, the Niger, Nigeria, Senegal, Sierra Leone and Togo, and received 69 per cent ($140.1 million) of the requirement.

Despite a recent shift towards peace in some countries in the subregion, the overall human security environment remained precarious. The Sahelian food security crisis, rising tensions in Côte d'Ivoire, political uncertainty in Guinea-Bissau (see p. 289), floods in five countries and the cholera epidemic in nine others were serious humanitarian concerns. Approximately 1.3 million people were displaced by conflicts in the region. An estimated 4 million children under the age of five suffered from acute malnutrition and 13 million from chronic malnutrition. Relatively stable countries that shared borders with countries in crisis continued to be affected by the deterioration of the security environment.

Côte d'Ivoire

The UN Consolidated Inter-Agency Appeal for Côte d'Ivoire sought $36.4 million to meet 2005 requirements, and received 55 per cent ($20.2 million) of that amount.

Côte d'Ivoire experienced a decline in all its key economic indicators, and humanitarian indicators pointed to a significant decrease in food security, administrative and judicial management of the territory, access to health and education, and protection and respect of human rights. The Pretoria Agreement on the Peace Process in Côte d'Ivoire (see p. 232) that ended the recent political-military crisis in the country was not fully respected, and the climate of violence and insecurity led to the forced displacement of an estimated 500,000 people. Local public administration and basic social services in the rebel-controlled north and in the buffer zone were weak, as exemplified by the declining access to education for children, especially girls. In the Government-controlled south, health and education systems were overburdened by the continued presence of displaced populations.

Guinea

The UN Consolidated Inter-Agency Appeal for Guinea, launched for $36.6 million in 2005, met 61 per cent ($22.5 million) of that target.

Guinea continued to cope with internally displaced persons, refugees and returnees from Côte d'Ivoire and nearly 1 million refugees from Sierra Leone and Liberia. A failed coup d'état against President Lansana Conté, in January, contributed to the sense of insecurity among Guineans. The linking of international assistance to Guinea's compliance with good governance and macroeconomic reforms resulted in increased poverty, high inflation and the breakdown of social services and infrastructure. The humanitarian situation was marked by rising mortality, morbidity and malnutrition rates. The outbreak of polio and yellow fever, a 50 per cent increase in fuel prices and the inability of the Government to provide basic social services further contributed to the deterioration of living conditions for an already vulnerable population, making Guinea's social indicators similar to those of a country emerging from prolonged war.

Afghanistan

The Secretary-General, in response to General Assembly resolution 59/112 B [YUN 2004, p. 917], submitted reports in March and August [A/59/744-S/2005/183 & A/60/224-S/2005/525] covering emergency international assistance activities in Afghanistan during the periods from 23 November 2004 to 15 March 2005 and 16 March to 12 August 2005, respectively. (For political aspects, see p. 397.)

Despite gains over the previous three years, State institutions remained limited in their capacity to deliver economic and social services. In December 2004, the Government merged the Ministries of Planning and of Reconstruction to form the Ministry of Economy, which was responsible for preparing a public sector development strategy and a macroeconomic framework for private sector development. Planning and aid coordination would be transferred to the Ministry once the required capacity was in place. In January 2005, the UN country team started developing the UN development assistance framework for Afghanistan, which aimed to improve its response to Afghan priorities and the Millennium Development Goals (MDGs). It also outlined the proposed development activities of individual UN agencies for the 2006-2008 period. Four critical areas of cooperation were identified under the framework: governance, rule of law and human rights; sustainable livelihoods; health and education; and environment and natural resources. Afghanistan's first national human development report, "Security with a Human Face", called on the Government and the international community to take a long-term view of Afghanistan's development, with the MDGs serving as a normative framework for the formulation of national policies.

In early 2005, heavy snow blocked district roads and prevented the movement of food, causing shortages, steep price rises and the outbreak of disease. The Government set up a disaster relief committee to coordinate the humanitarian response.

In his August report, the Secretary-General said that, while the previous three and a half years had seen significant economic growth in the urban centres, record crop yields and an improvement in food security, the economic and developmental challenges facing Afghanistan remained daunting. According to the International Monetary Fund (IMF), the economy had grown at a rate of 7.5 per cent in the 2004-2005 period, which, although steady, did not meet the estimated 9 per cent rate required to achieve recovery. Government revenues were expected to average less than $400 million per year—half the projected expenditures for public sector salaries and operations until 2008—and the Government was not expected to be able to cover its operating costs fully before 2013. The uncertain security situation, together with underdeveloped legal and regulatory frameworks, continued to discourage private sector investment. Afghanistan's development and rehabilitation needs far exceeded the preliminary estimates to which donors had committed themselves at the 2002 International Conference on Reconstruction Assistance to Afghanistan [YUN 2002, p. 258].

A smooth transition from relief to recovery had been hampered also by natural disasters, internal displacement, land rights issues and urban pressures due to the large influx of returnees; a lack of public sector capacity and access to vulnerable populations hindered attempts at a comprehensive response. The Government had increasingly assumed responsibility for disaster relief and humanitarian assistance, with the Ministry of Rural Rehabilitation and Development taking the lead in disaster-response management. Along with drought mitigation and winterization programmes, the Ministry coordinated the Government's response to nationwide floods in the spring and summer of 2005. On 28 June, the Tripartite Agreement between Afghanistan, Iran and UNHCR for the voluntary repatriation of Afghan refugees and displaced persons was renewed until the end of 2006. Over 3 million people had returned to Afghanistan since the beginning of the programme in March 2002.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 30 November [meeting 58], the General Assembly adopted resolution 60/32 B [draft: A/60/L.27 & Add.1], without vote [agenda items 17 & 73 (e)].

Emergency international assistance for peace, normalcy and reconstruction of war-stricken Afghanistan

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 59/112 B of 8 December 2004 and its previous relevant resolutions,

Recalling also the agreement reached among various Afghan groups in Bonn, Germany, on 5 December 2001, the International Conference on Reconstruction Assistance to Afghanistan, held in Tokyo on 21 and 22 January 2002, and the International Conference on Afghanistan held in Berlin on 31 March and 1 April 2004, and reminding donors to fulfil their commitments in this regard,

Welcoming the continuing and growing ownership of the rehabilitation and reconstruction efforts by the Government of Afghanistan through the National Development Framework, the "Securing Afghanistan's future" exercise and the national budget, and emphasizing the crucial need to achieve ownership in all fields of governance and to improve institutional capabilities in order to use aid more effectively,

Recognizing progress that has been made towards the Afghanistan national development strategy, and welcoming in this regard the adoption of the first report on the Millennium Development Goals by the Government of Afghanistan as well as its further efforts to achieve the Millennium Development Goals,

Welcoming, in this regard, the guarantee of human rights and fundamental freedoms for all Afghans in the new Constitution as a significant step towards an improved situation of human rights and fundamental freedoms, in particular for women and children,

Noting with concern, at the same time, reports of violations of human rights and of international humanitarian law and violent or discriminatory practices in parts of the country,

Noting with concern also that the lack of security in certain areas has caused some organizations to cease or curtail humanitarian and development operations in some parts of Afghanistan because limited access and inadequate security conditions for the delivery of aid continue to hamper their work substantially,

Welcoming the continuous return of refugees and internally displaced persons, while noting with concern that the conditions in parts of Afghanistan are not yet conducive to safe and sustainable returns to places of origin,

Remaining deeply concerned about the problem of millions of anti-personnel landmines and explosive remnants of war, which constitute a great danger for the population and a major obstacle for the resumption of economic activities and for recovery and reconstruction efforts,

Aware of the high vulnerability of Afghanistan to natural disasters, in particular drought or flooding, and emphasizing the need to prepare the population for extreme climate conditions through, for example, winterization measures,

Underlining the coordinating role of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Afghanistan and of the United Nations Assistance Mission in Afghanistan in ensuring a seamless transition, under Afghan leadership, from humanitarian relief to recovery and reconstruction,

Expressing its appreciation for the work of the executive steering committee of the provincial reconstruction teams, which provides guidance on management and coordination of provincial reconstruction teams and on the interaction of civilian and military actors,

Recognizing the need for a continued strong international commitment to humanitarian assistance and for programmes, under the ownership of the Government of Afghanistan, of recovery, rehabilitation and reconstruction, and expressing, at the same time, its appreciation to the United Nations system and to all States and international and non-governmental organizations whose international and local staff continue to respond positively to the humanitarian, transition and development needs of Afghanistan,

1. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General and the recommendations contained therein;

2. Urges the Government of Afghanistan and local authorities to take all possible steps to ensure the safety, security and free movement of all United Nations, development and humanitarian personnel, as well as their safe and unhindered access to all affected populations, and to protect the property of the United Nations and of development or humanitarian organizations, including non-governmental organizations;

3. Strongly condemns all acts of violence and intimidation directed against development and humanitarian personnel and United Nations and associated personnel, regrets the loss of life and physical harm, and urges the Government of Afghanistan to make every effort to identify and to bring to justice the perpetrators of attacks;

4. Welcomes the completion of the disarmament and demobilization of child soldiers in the Afghan Military Forces, stresses the importance of the reintegration of child soldiers and of care for other war-affected children, commends the Government of Afghanistan for its efforts in this regard, and encourages continued efforts in cooperation with the United Nations;

5. Expresses its concern about the recruitment and use of child soldiers by illegal armed groups in Afghanistan, reiterates the importance of ending the use of children contrary to international law, and welcomes the accession by Afghanistan to the Convention on the Rights of the Child and the two optional protocols thereto;

6. Reiterates the necessity of providing Afghan children with educational and health facilities in all parts of the country, recognizing the special needs of girls, and encourages the Government of Afghanistan, with the assistance of the international community, to expand those facilities and to promote full and equal access to them by all members of Afghan society;

7. Welcomes the initiative of the Government of Afghanistan to formulate a national plan of action on combating child trafficking, encourages the Government to formulate the plan of action guided by the Protocol to Prevent, Suppress and Punish Trafficking in Persons, Especially Women and Children, supplementing the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime, and stresses the importance of considering becoming a party to the Protocol;

8. Calls for the full respect of the human rights and fundamental freedoms of all, without discrimination of any kind, including on the basis of gender, ethnicity or religion, in accordance with obligations under the Afghan Constitution and international law;

9. Stresses the need to ensure respect for the right to freedom of expression and the right to freedom of thought, conscience or belief;

10. Continues to emphasize the necessity of investigating allegations of current and past violations of human rights and of international humanitarian law, including violations committed against persons belonging to ethnic and religious minorities, as well as against women and girls, of facilitating the provision of efficient and effective remedies to the victims and of bringing the perpetrators to justice in accordance with international law;

11. Reiterates the important role of the Afghan Independent Human Rights Commission in the promotion and protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms, and stresses the need to expand its range of operation in all parts of Afghanistan in accordance with the Afghan Constitution; welcomes the adoption by the Government of Afghanistan of key elements of the transitional justice action plan, and stresses the importance of judicial accountability of human rights offenders in accordance with international law;

12. Stresses once again the need for further progress on judicial reform in Afghanistan, and urges the Government of Afghanistan and the international community to devote resources also to the reconstruction and reform of the prison sector in order to improve respect for the rule of law and for human rights therein, while reducing physical and mental health risks to inmates;

13. Recalls Security Council resolution 1325(2000) of 31 October 2000 on women and peace and security, commends the efforts of the Government of Afghanistan to mainstream gender issues and to protect and promote the equal rights of women and men as guaranteed, inter alia, by virtue of its ratification of the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, and by the Afghan Constitution, welcomes the level of participation of Afghan women in the recent parliamentary and provincial council elections, including the election of female candidates to these bodies, and reiterates the continued importance of the full and equal participation of women in all spheres of Afghan life;

14. Strongly condemns incidents of discrimination and violence against women and girls, welcomes the significant efforts by the Government of Afghanistan to counter discrimination, urges the Government to actively involve all elements of Afghan society, in particular women, in the development and implementation of relief, rehabilitation, recovery and reconstruction programmes, and encourages the collection and use of statistical data on a sex-disaggregated basis to accurately track the progress of the full integration of women into the political, economic and social life of Afghanistan;

15. Notes with concern that opium poppy cultivation and the related drug production and trafficking pose a serious threat to security, the rule of law and development in Afghanistan, and urges the Government of Afghanistan, supported by the international community, to work to mainstream counter-narcotics throughout all the national programmes; welcomes, in this context, the decrease in opium cultivation, commends the efforts of the Government of Afghanistan in this regard, and further urges it to increase its efforts against opium cultivation;

16. Urges in particular the Government of Afghanistan, in cooperation with the international community, to implement its comprehensive counter-narcotics implementation plan, aimed at eliminating illicit poppy cultivation, supporting increased law enforcement, interdiction, demand reduction, eradication of illicit crops, crop substitution and other alternative livelihood and development programmes, increasing public awareness and building the capacity of drug control institutions, and to promote the development of sustainable livelihoods in the formal production sector as well as other sectors, thus improving substantially the lives, health and security of the people, particularly in rural areas;

17. Expresses its appreciation to those Governments that continue to host Afghan refugees, acknowledging the huge burden they have so far shouldered in this regard, and reminds them of their obligations under international refugee law with respect to the protection of refugees, the principle of voluntary return and the right to seek asylum and to allow international access for their protection and care;

18. Urges the Government of Afghanistan, acting with the support of the international community, to continue and strengthen its efforts to create the conditions for the voluntary, safe, dignified and sustainable return and reintegration of the remaining Afghan refugees and internally displaced persons;

19. Calls for the provision of continued international assistance to the large numbers of Afghan refugees and internally displaced persons to facilitate their voluntary, safe and orderly return;

20. Urges the Government of Afghanistan to meet its responsibilities under the Convention on the Prohibition of the Use, Stockpiling, Production and Transfer of Anti-personnel Mines and on Their Destruction, to cooperate fully with the mine action programme coordinated by the United Nations, and to execute the destruction of all existing stocks of anti-personnel landmines;

21. Endorses the key principles for cooperation between the Government of Afghanistan and the international community during the post-Bonn process as set out in the report of the Secretary-General, including the leadership role of Afghanistan in the reconstruction process, the just allocation of domestic and international reconstruction resources across the country, regional cooperation, lasting capacity- and institution-building, combating corruption and the promotion of transparency and accountability, public information and participation, and the continued central role of the United Nations in the post-Bonn process, which should also include fields in which the United Nations offers the best expertise available;

22. Invites all States and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations providing assistance to Afghanistan to focus on capacity-building and institution-building and to ensure that such work complements and contributes to the development of an economy characterized by sound macroeconomic policies, the development of a financial sector that provides services, inter alia, to microenterprises, small and medium-sized enterprises and households, transparent business regulations and accountability;

23. Urges the Government of Afghanistan to continue to effectively reform the public administration sector in order to implement the rule of law, to ensure good governance and accountability at both national and local levels and to lead the fight against corruption;

24. Also urges the Government of Afghanistan to address, with the assistance of the international community, the question of claims for land property through a comprehensive land titling programme, including formal registration of all property and improved security for property rights, and welcomes the steps already taken by the Government of Afghanistan in this regard;

25. Urges the international community to channel assistance through the national budget, including by contributing to the Afghanistan Reconstruction Trust Fund and the Law and Order Trust Fund, and to generously support the national priority programmes of the Government of Afghanistan in order to strengthen ownership, transparency and the functioning of basic State institutions;

26. Urgently appeals to all States, the United Nations system and international and non-governmental organizations to continue to provide, in close coordination with the Government of Afghanistan and in accordance with its national development strategy, all possible and necessary humanitarian, recovery, reconstruction, financial, technical and material assistance for Afghanistan;

27. Emphasizes the need to maintain, strengthen and review civil-military relations among international actors, as appropriate, at all levels in order to ensure complementarity of action based on the different mandates and comparative advantages of the humanitarian, development, law enforcement and military actors present in Afghanistan;

28. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly every six months during its sixtieth session on developments in Afghanistan, including on parliamentary and provincial elections and on consultations on the post-Bonn process as well as on the progress made in the implementation of the present resolution;

29. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its sixty-first session an item entitled "The situation in Afghanistan".

Palestine

The UN Consolidated Inter-Agency Appeal for the Occupied Palestinian Territory, which sought $301.5 million in 2005, met 65 per cent ($195.7 million) of its requirements.

In 2005, the unfavourable humanitarian situation persisted in Palestine, despite the new momentum in the peace process resulting from the election of Palestinian President Mahmoud Abbas and Israel's disengagement from settlements in the Gaza Strip and parts of the northern West Bank. However, those developments did not affect the key humanitarian indicators. Poverty rates increased, largely because of lower work quality and increasingly fragile household coping mechanisms. Both the West Bank and the Gaza Strip remained strangulated by restrictions on free movement, diminishing prospects for indigenous Palestinian economic growth. Humanitarian assistance remained crucial, as survival strategies were unsustainable.

Europe

North Caucasus (Russian Federation)

The UN Consolidated Inter-Agency Appeal for Chechnya and Neighbouring Republics (North Caucasus–Russian Federation) sought $67.8 million in 2005, 67 per cent ($45.6 million) of which was received.

The security situation in Chechnya continued to cause humanitarian need and socio-economic uncertainty, both internally and in neighbouring republics. The infrastructure was largely destroyed and could not provide essential social services and normal living conditions. The unemployment rate was estimated at 80 per cent. Other areas of the North Caucasus, while not having suffered wide-scale destruction, shared Chechnya's economic stagnation and lack of opportunity. Basic health indicators in those areas were among the worst in the Russian Federation. The return of IDPs to Chechnya continued in 2005, but at a much slower rate than in 2004.

New Partnership for Africa's Development

The General Assembly, by resolution 57/7 [YUN 2002, p. 910], endorsed the Secretary-General's recommendation [ibid., p. 909] that the New Partnership for Africa's Development (NEPAD), adopted in 2001 by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity [YUN 2001, p. 900], should be the framework within which the international community should concentrate its efforts for Africa's development.

Report of Secretary-General (March). The Secretary-General, responding to a 2004 request of the Committee for Programme and Coordination (CPC) [YUN 2004, p. 921], submitted a March report [E/AC.51/2005/6] on UN system support for NEPAD. That support was organized around seven clusters that broadly corresponded to the Partnership's priorities and strategies: infrastructure development; governance, peace and security; agriculture, trade and market access; environment, population and urbanization; human resources development, employment and HIV/AIDS; science and technology; and communication, advocacy and outreach. Institutional support was provided by the UN system to African countries, the African Union (AU) and subregional organizations, and the NEPAD secretariat, including through the secondment of staff to the various regional secretariats and helping them to prepare sectoral programmes; assisting in developing codes and standards; and providing technical expertise. Advocacy work and funding provided by the UN system complemented institutional support.

The Secretary-General concluded that opportunities for the UN system to aid Africa's development in general, and the implementation of NEPAD in particular, existed as much in working together to provide focused and coordinated support to NEPAD as in helping African countries to mobilize significant financial resources. As NEPAD's implementation gathered momentum, African countries would increasingly emphasize mobilizing those resources for NEPAD programme implementation; building technical expertise for the management of development programmes; and strengthening institutions to assist in achieving the NEPAD goals. The UN system should make an active contribution in support of those tasks.

CEB report. The United Nations System Chief Executives Board for Coordination (CEB), in its annual overview report for 2004-2005 [E/2005/63], discussed strengthening system-wide support for Africa and NEPAD. UN system efforts to increase support for NEPAD should place particular emphasis on: providing assistance in integrating NEPAD priorities into the African countries' national development frameworks; enhancing policy and operational coherence in supporting the implementation of NEPAD commitments at the regional, subregional and country levels; strengthening the UN system's technical support for the NEPAD secretariat; and expanding the UN system's technical and financial support for building institutional, managerial and technical capacities in Africa for domestic and external resource mobilization.

CPC action. CPC, at its forty-fifth session (6 June–1 July) [A/60/16 & Corr.1], endorsed the Secretary-General's recommendations on UN system support for NEPAD (see p. 1003). It called on the components of UN system to work together further to provide focused and coordinated support to NEPAD. The Economic Commission for Africa (ECA) and UN country offices should be utilized more actively to ensure broader understanding of and participation in NEPAD programmes. The General Assembly should request the UN system to explore innovative approaches for funding NEPAD priorities and programmes, and the Secretary-General should report to the Committee in 2006, and annually thereafter, on the system's progress, challenges and goals for NEPAD.

CPC requested CEB to ensure that support for NEPAD remained a UN system priority and to update information on its efforts to ensure effective and coordinated system-wide support for NEPAD in its next annual overview report. CEB member organizations were encouraged to further align their priorities with those of NEPAD and to scale up their efforts to support it.

Advisory Panel report. The Secretary-General, on 21 June [A/60/85], transmitted to the General Assembly the report of the Advisory Panel on International Support for NEPAD, established in 2004 [YUN 2004, p. 924]. The report, entitled "From rhetoric to action: mobilizing international support to unleash Africa's potential", carried a twofold central message: first, that NEPAD could not succeed without a significant increase in international support; and second, that unleashing Africa's development potential required harnessing the creativity and dynamism of private initiative in a range of areas, including agriculture, industry, science and technology and infrastructure development.

The Panel concluded that strengthening private initiative, including through the establishment of small enterprises at the grass-roots level, was the key to Africa's economic transformation, and that an efficient, supportive and capable public sector was vital to that goal. The Panel identified priority tasks to be carried out by African countries in the areas of rural development and agriculture, investment in human development, improvement in governance, private sector development, investment in physical infrastructure, and conflict resolution and peacebuilding.

The Panel endorsed the call for a substantial increase in aid levels, in accordance with the 2002 Monterrey Consensus [YUN 2002, p. 953], half of which should be channelled to sub-Saharan Africa. Donors should improve the coherence of their assistance objectives in individual country-supported development plans and strategies; better harmonize their administrative procedures; and commit themselves to an accelerated, time-bound programme for implementing measures contained in various aid-related declarations, including the Paris Declaration on Aid Effectiveness. The Panel supported the proposal that all debt should be cancelled for low-income countries and middle-income countries should receive substantial debt relief. It called for African and other nations to liberalize trade and recommended the establishment of adjustment assistance programmes in Africa to accompany import liberalization. Developed countries should promote policy measures to facilitate inward remittances and capital flows to Africa and, along with multilateral institutions, support the promotion of private business in Africa. In particular, development agencies needed to strengthen their technical cooperation with NEPAD and individual countries by assisting them in the design of country-specific strategies for improving investment climates. UN system organizations and agencies should improve collaboration to provide focused and coordinated support to NEPAD and help African countries mobilize significant financial resources for development at the national and regional levels. The United Nations should partner with the AU in a process of consultation and dialogue for following up on commitments.

Report of Secretary-General (August). In response to General Assembly resolution 59/254 [YUN 2004, p. 924], the Secretary-General submitted, in August, the third consolidated report [A/60/178] on progress in the implementation of and support for NEPAD, highlighting continuing challenges and constraints.

The Secretary-General said that, in addition to greater international response in support of Africa's development, 2005 was marked by important regional actions. Seven physical projects and two additional studies were being considered by the African Development Bank (ADB), and the number of regional infrastructure projects would increase, as projects under preparation with the support of the Canadian Infrastructure Project Preparation Facility (IPPF) became ready for financing and implementation. ADB had launched the preparation of four multinational projects under IPPF, and it was envisaged that approvals would be granted for the preparation of at least four additional projects under the Facility in 2005. The feasibility analysis for the East African Submarine Cable System (EASSy) project, to provide East African countries with a high bandwidth cable connection, was finalized in March. Fifteen African companies signed the memorandum regarding the cable, which would link Durban, South Africa, to Port Sudan, Sudan.

The first NEPAD e-schools demonstration, considered a critical element of the e-Schools Initiative, began in July, and would be launched in 20 countries over a four-month period. Several projects developed in 2004 [YUN 2004, p. 923] in the education and training sector were at various stages of completion.

Several countries used the NEPAD Health Strategy in advancing their health plans. The NEPAD secretariat was establishing multi-stakeholder platforms to help countries obtain developmental support to reach the MDG [YUN 2000, p. 51] on health. The issue of HIV/AIDS had been mainstreamed into the work of all NEPAD programmes, and the provision of antiretroviral treatment on the continent was expanding. The NEPAD secretariat and the AU Commissioner for Social Affairs submitted a joint report on HIV/AIDS, tuberculosis, malaria and polio to the Heads of State of the AU Summit (Abuja, Nigeria, 24-31 January), which endorsed the report's recommendations.

The NEPAD secretariat contributed to the implementation of the AU/NEPAD Tourism Action Plan [YUN 2004, p. 923] in the priority areas of strengthening institutional capacity and reinforcing human resources and quality assurance. That initiative culminated in the Tourism and Development Seminar (Johannesburg, South Africa, May-June), aimed at fostering awareness of tourism as a development tool and helping African countries to learn and share experiences on tourism development initiatives. The second meeting of the NEPAD African Ministerial Conference on Science and Technology (Dakar, Senegal, 29-30 September) approved a consolidated plan of action for promoting science and technology across Africa. Two specialized advisory panels—the AU/NEPAD high-level panel of eminent persons to advise on issues pertaining to biotechnology and an expert working group on science, technology and innovation indicators—were created to help provide policy guidance on matters of science and technology.

The NEPAD secretariat gender issues unit developed a framework and a three-year Comprehensive Strategic Plan, which provided a road map for gender mainstreaming and mobilizing civil society organizations to participate in NEPAD activities and processes. It launched a task force of experts on gender and development issues with the objective of incorporating gender issues into NEPAD programme implementation.

The Secretary-General observed that the central challenge was to grasp the opportunity for making progress and maintaining momentum in Africa's development. Related challenges included building the capacity of the national and regional institutions entrusted with NEPAD implementation; ensuring greater coherence and coordination between national development plans and NEPAD priorities; and promoting greater private sector implementation of NEPAD programmes and projects. African countries needed to continue to show their commitment to economic and social reforms through sound macroeconomic management, as well as focused emphasis on the implementation of NEPAD priorities. There was an urgent need to translate commitments made by Africa's development partners into results, and increased support for Africa should be matched by effective aid delivery and improved coordination among donors. Proposed debt relief needed to be broadened to cover all African low-income and middle-income countries. Compensatory and short-term adjustment-oriented aid flows should be provided to African countries seriously affected by the decline in trade revenue as a result of the extension of more-favoured-nation status to other countries.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 23 December [meeting 69], the General Assembly adopted resolution 60/222 [draft: A/60/L.16/Rev.1 & Add.1, orally revised] without vote [agenda item 66 (a)].

New Partnership for Africa's Development: progress in implementation and international support

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 57/2 of 16 September 2002 on the United Nations Declaration on the New Partnership for Africa's Development,

Recalling also its resolution 57/7 of 4 November 2002 on the final review and appraisal of the United Nations New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s and support for the New Partnership for Africa's Development and resolutions 58/233 of 23 December 2003 and 59/254 of 23 December 2004 entitled "New Partnership for Africa's Development: progress in implementation and international support",

Recalling further the 2005 World Summit Outcome, including the recognition of the need to meet the special needs of Africa,

Bearing in mind that African countries have primary responsibility for their own economic and social development and that the role of national policies and development strategies cannot be overemphasized, and also the need for their development efforts to be supported by an enabling international economic environment, and in this regard recalling the support given by the International Conference on Financing for Development to the New Partnership,

Welcoming the report of the Secretary-General's Advisory Panel on International Support for the New Partnership for Africa's Development entitled "From rhetoric to action: mobilizing international support to unleash Africa's potential",

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General entitled "New Partnership for Africa's Development: third consolidated report on progress in implementation and international support",

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Reaffirms its full support for the implementation of the New Partnership for Africa's Development;

3. Recognizes the progress made in the implementation of the New Partnership as well as regional and international support for the New Partnership, while acknowledging that much needs to be done in the implementation of the New Partnership;

4. Reaffirms its full support for the implementation of the Declaration of Commitment on HIV/AIDS, adopted at the twenty-sixth special session of the General Assembly on 27 June 2001;

I

Actions by African countries and organizations

5. Welcomes the progress made by the African countries in fulfilling their commitments in the implementation of the New Partnership to deepen democracy, human rights, good governance and sound economic management, and encourages African countries, with the participation of stakeholders, including civil society and the private sector, to intensify their efforts in this regard by developing and strengthening institutions for governance, creating an environment conducive to attracting foreign direct investment for the development of the region;

6. Welcomes and appreciates the continuing and increasing efforts of African countries to mainstream a gender perspective and the empowerment of women in the implementation of the New Partnership;

7. Welcomes the good progress that has been achieved in implementing the African Peer Review Mechanism, in particular the completion of the self-assessment in some countries, the hosting of country support missions and the launching of the national preparatory process for the Peer Review in others, and urges African States as a matter of priority to join the Mechanism as soon as possible and to strengthen the Mechanism process for its efficient performance;

8. Stresses that conflict prevention, management and resolution and post-conflict consolidation are essential for the achievement of the objectives of the New Partnership, and in this regard welcomes the cooperation and support granted by the United Nations and development partners to the African regional and subregional organizations in the implementation of the New Partnership;

9. Welcomes the efforts made by African countries and regional and subregional organizations, including the African Union, in developing sectoral policy frameworks and implementing specific programmes of the New Partnership;

10. Emphasizes the importance for African countries to continue to coordinate, on the basis of national strategies and priorities, all types of external assistance, including that provided by multilateral organizations, in order to integrate effectively such assistance into their development processes;

11. Encourages the further integration of the priorities and objectives of the New Partnership into the programmes of the regional structures and organizations, and programmes for the African least developed countries;

12. Recalls that the African Union and the regional economic communities have a critical role to play in the implementation of the New Partnership, and in this regard encourages African countries, with the assistance of their development partners, to increase their support to enhance the capacities of these institutions;

13. Emphasizes that progress in the implementation of the New Partnership depends also on a favourable national and international environment for Africa's growth and development, including measures to promote a policy environment conducive to private sector development and entrepreneurship;

II

Response of the international community

14. Welcomes the efforts by development partners to strengthen cooperation with the New Partnership;

15. Acknowledges the various important initiatives of Africa's development partners in recent years, including those of the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development, the Group of Eight Africa Action Plan, the European Union, the Tokyo International Conference on African Development, the report of the Commission for Africa entitled Our Common Interest, and the Africa Partnership Forum, and in this regard emphasizes the importance of coordination in such initiatives on Africa;

16. Welcomes the contribution made by Member States to the implementation of the New Partnership in the context of South-South cooperation, and in this regard encourages the international community, including the international financial institutions, to support the efforts of African countries, including through triangular cooperation;

17. Acknowledges the important role of the Africa Partnership Forum, as set out in the revised terms of reference dated 5 October 2005, which include catalysing action on the measures taken to meet the commitments that Africa and its development partners have made and coordinating support behind African priorities and the New Partnership, and encourages the Africa Partnership Forum to strengthen its efforts in this regard;

18. Welcomes the commitment of resources by some development partners for various New Partnership programmes, and in this regard notes with satisfaction that some developed countries have committed resources for the infrastructure project preparation facility and the Comprehensive Africa Agriculture Development Programme, and invites similar support to be extended to Africa in water and sanitation and in housing and urban development and other priority sectors specified in the New Partnership Programme of Action aiming at the achievement of sustainable development in the region;

19. Urges continuing support of measures to address the challenges of poverty eradication and sustainable development in Africa, including, as appropriate, debt relief, improved market access, support for the private sector and entrepreneurship, enhanced official development assistance and increased flows of foreign direct investment, and transfer of technology;

20. Reiterates the need for all countries and relevant multilateral institutions to continue efforts to enhance coherence in their trade policies towards African countries, and acknowledges the importance of efforts to fully integrate African countries into the international trading system through initiatives such as building Africa's trade capacity to compete and the provision of assistance to address the adjustment challenges of trade liberalization;

21. Welcomes the recent proposal of the Group of Eight, as endorsed by the Bretton Woods institutions at their 2005 annual meetings, to cancel 100 per cent of the outstanding debt of eligible heavily indebted poor countries owed to the International Monetary Fund, the International Development Association and the African Development Fund and to provide additional resources to ensure that the financing capacity of the international financial institutions is not reduced;

22. Recognizes the importance of a comprehensive and durable solution to the external debt problems of African countries, including through the cancellation of 100 per cent of multilateral debt, consistent with the recent Group of Eight proposal for the heavily indebted poor countries and, on a case-by-case basis, where appropriate, significant debt relief, including cancellation or restructuring for heavily indebted African countries not part of the Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Initiative that have unsustainable debt burdens, and welcomes the ongoing work undertaken by the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank to develop the debt sustainability framework for low-income countries, bearing in mind the importance of debt sustainability and sound budget management in the efforts to achieve national development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals;

23. Welcomes the recent increase in official development assistance pledged by many of the development partners, including the commitments of the Group of Eight and the European Union, that will lead to an increase in official development assistance to Africa of 25 billion dollars per year by 2010, and encourages all development partners to ensure aid effectiveness through the implementation of the Paris Declaration on Aid Effectiveness: Ownership, Harmonization, Alignment, Results and Mutual Accountability, adopted at the High-level Forum on the question of "Joint Progress toward Enhanced Aid Effectiveness: Harmonization, Alignment, Results", held in Paris from 28 February to 2 March 2005;

24. Recognizes the need for national Governments and the international community to make continued efforts to increase the flow of new and additional resources for financing for development, from all sources, public and private, domestic and foreign, to support the development of African countries;

25. Welcomes the efforts by development partners to align their financial and technical support to Africa more closely to the priorities of the New Partnership, as reflected in national poverty reduction strategies or in similar strategies, and encourages development partners to increase their efforts in this regard;

26. Acknowledges the activities of the Bretton Woods institutions and the African Development Bank in African countries, and invites those institutions to continue their support for the implementation of the priorities and objectives of the New Partnership;

27. Requests the United Nations system to continue to provide assistance to the African Union and New Partnership secretariats and to African countries in developing projects and programmes within the scope of the priorities of the New Partnership;

28. Invites the Secretary-General, as a follow-up to the 2005 World Summit, to urge the United Nations development system to assist African countries in implementing quick-impact initiatives, based on their national development priorities and strategies, to enable them to achieve the Millennium Development Goals, and in this respect acknowledges recent commitments by some donor countries;

29. Notes that the entities of the United Nations system have been actively using the regional consultation mechanism as a vehicle for fostering collaboration and coordination at the regional level, and encourages them to intensify their efforts in developing and implementing joint programmes in support of the New Partnership at the regional level;

30. Encourages the United Nations funds and programmes and the specialized agencies to continue to strengthen further their existing coordination and programming mechanisms, and the simplification and harmonization of planning, disbursement and reporting procedures, as a means of enhancing support for African countries in the implementation of the New Partnership;

31. Notes the growing collaboration among the entities of the United Nations system in support of the New Partnership, and requests the Secretary-General to promote greater coherence in the work of the United Nations system in support of the New Partnership, on the basis of the agreed clusters;

32. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General's Advisory Panel on International Support for the New Partnership for Africa's Development, and looks forward to its supplementary report, including recommendations on the actions to be taken to enhance support for the implementation of the New Partnership;

33. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to take measures to strengthen the Office of the Special Adviser on Africa in order to enable it to effectively fulfil its mandate, including monitoring and reporting on progress related to meeting the special needs of Africa;

34. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit a comprehensive report on the implementation of the present resolution to the General Assembly at its sixty-first session on the basis of inputs from Governments, organizations of the United Nations system and other stakeholders in the New Partnership, such as the private sector and civil society.

Rwanda

In response to General Assembly resolution 59/137 [YUN 2004, p. 159], the Secretary-General, in his August consolidated report [A/60/302], updated the information on the implementation by UN agencies of programmes aimed at supporting groups left vulnerable by the 1994 genocide in Rwanda.

Rwanda, with support from the United Nations and the international community, had made significant progress in the areas of rehabilitation, reconstruction, reconciliation and social and political justice in the years following the genocide. The UN country team paid particular attention to the resettlement of vulnerable groups, including orphans, widows, returnees and IDPs during the rehabilitation and reconstruction process. Technical and financial support was provided by various UN agencies in the formulation and implementation of social and economic policies that benefited the poor and disadvantaged. That support resulted in the formulation of policies on good governance, gender equality and empowerment and stronger Government capacity to address economic and social challenges. The UN country team increased its commitment in the areas of institution-building and infrastructure development, health and education, the fight against HIV/AIDS, democratic governance, the reconciliation process and the justice system, and mobilized resources to scale up UN support to genocide survivors.

The Assembly, in resolution 60/225 of 23 December (see p. 216), requested the Secretary-General to establish an outreach programme entitled "The Rwanda Genocide and the United Nations", as well as measures to mobilize civil society for Rwanda genocide victim remembrance and education.

African countries emerging from conflict

Burundi

On 4 February [E/2005/11], South Africa, Chairman of the Ad Hoc Advisory Group on Burundi, transmitted to the Economic and Social Council its statement made before the Council on the same day regarding the Group's activities. In September 2004, the Group met with President Domitien Ndayizeye of Burundi and Carolyn McAskie, the Secretary-General's Special Representative in Burundi. The President requested the Group's continued help in mobilizing support for the peace process, including the reform of security forces, the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programme and international support to ensure the success of the transition process.

Burundi benefited from several positive developments, including the launching of the demobilization, reinsertion and reintegration programme to support up to 55,000 combatants; the provision of international support to the electoral process; a $40 million grant from the World Bank for agricultural rehabilitation and land management; and ADB's decision to clear 35 per cent ($12 million) of Burundi's arrears, which allowed the Bank to resume operations in the country and facilitated the country's access to other multilateral facilities. Nevertheless, the level of international support was far below the approximately $1 billion commitment made at the 2004 Brussels Forum of Burundi's Development Partners [YUN 2004, p. 933]. The Group urged that the Council encourage Forum participants to increase their disbursements.

In response to Council resolution 2004/59 [YUN 2004, p. 932], the Group met with the UN Development Group/Executive Committee on Humanitarian Affairs (UNDG/ECHA) working group on transition issues to discuss UN system mechanisms for improving the coordination of activities during the transition phase, in particular the UN Development Assistance Framework, launched in January. Considering Burundi to be at a crossroads, the Group decided to continue its activities during the transition process, including a second mission to the country, in response to President Ndayizeye's September invitation.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 1 March [meeting 3], the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 2005/1 [draft: E/2005/L.5] without vote [agenda item 2].

Ad Hoc Advisory Group on Burundi

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolutions 2002/1 of 15 July 2002, 2003/16 of 21 July 2003, 2003/50 of 24 July 2003, 2004/2 of 3 May 2004 and 2004/59 and 2004/60 of 23 July 2004, and its decision 2003/311 of 22 August 2003,

Having taken note of the oral report by the Chairman of the Ad Hoc Advisory Group on Burundi,

Recognizing the importance of maintaining the momentum in consolidating the peace process in Burundi,

1. Commends those donors that have provided support to Burundi, and calls for rapid disbursement of funds committed at the fourth Forum of Burundi's Development Partners, held in Brussels on 13 and 14 January 2004;

2. Requests the Ad Hoc Advisory Group on Burundi to continue to follow closely the humanitarian situation and economic and social conditions, to examine the transition from relief to development in Burundi and the way in which the international community supports the process and to report, as appropriate, to the Economic and Social Council at its substantive session of 2005;

3. Decides to consider the reports of the Advisory Group at its substantive session of 2005, requests that the report of the Group to that session describe, inter alia, how the Group has fulfilled its mandate, and decides also to hold a discussion on the work of the Group and on how it has fulfilled its mandate;

4. Requests the Secretary-General, the United Nations Development Group, the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat and relevant United Nations funds and programmes and the specialized agencies to continue to assist the Advisory Group in accomplishing its mandate, and invites the Bretton Woods institutions to continue to cooperate to that end.

In response to Council resolution 2005/1 (above), the Advisory Group submitted a June report [E/2005/82] on the economic, social and humanitarian situation in Burundi, international donor support and the implementation of the Group's mandate. The Group was encouraged by the successful conduct of the referendum on the post-transition Constitution in February (see p. 202) and progress made in the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programme. However, the return of refugees and IDPs continued to present a key challenge; food insecurity persisted; economic governance was weak and insufficient for developing public infrastructures; and the health situation was precarious. While international donor assistance failed to satisfy the country's enormous needs, it did support key steps in the peace process. Donors contributed close to $16 million to the election support trust fund set up by UNDP. In April, UNDP, the United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA) and UNICEF jointly signed cooperation agreements with Burundian authorities for the period from 2005 to 2007 for activities related to, among others, governance, poverty alleviation, water and sanitation, reproductive health, HIV/AIDS and youth-targeted programmes. Following the resumption of ADB activities in Burundi, the African Development Fund granted loans and made agreements for a total amount of $36 million. Operations were financed to reform the country's macroeconomic framework and civil service, to aid the socio-economic reinsertion of disadvantaged groups, and to improve the social health and food situation in the Lake Tanganyika basin. Burundi was expected to complete its full poverty reduction strategy paper (PRSP) by September, after which it could reach the decision point for debt reduction under the Enhanced Heavily Indebted Poor Country Initiative as early as December.

The Group urged the international community and donors to provide additional assistance to answer short- and medium-term needs in the context of the transition from relief to development.

(For more information on the situation in Burundi, see p. 197.)

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 July [meeting 39], the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 2005/33 [draft: E/2005/L.37] without vote [agenda item 7 (h)].

Ad Hoc Advisory Group on Burundi

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolutions 2002/1 of 15 July 2002, 2003/16 of 21 July 2003, 2003/50 of 24 July 2003, 2004/2 of 3 May 2004, 2004/59 and 2004/60 of 23 July 2004 and 2005/1 of 1 March 2005 and its decision 2003/311 of 22 August 2003,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Ad Hoc Advisory Group on Burundi;

2. Expresses its appreciation to the Government and people of Burundi for the successful holding of the communal and legislative elections, and stresses the importance of concluding the transition period and further consolidating peace;

3. Commends those donors that have provided support to Burundi, calls for increased disbursement of funds committed at the fourth Forum of Burundi's Development Partners, held in Brussels on 13 and 14 January 2004, and encourages Member States to provide funds for the United Nations Consolidated Appeal for 2005;

4. Encourages the authorities of Burundi to finalize its poverty reduction strategy paper;

5. Notes the willingness of the authorities of Burundi to convene a further donor round table, and encourages the country's development partners to support the new Government with commensurate means and resources in the post-transition phase and through participation in the round table;

6. Requests the Ad Hoc Advisory Group to continue to follow closely the humanitarian situation and economic and social conditions, to examine the transition from relief to development in Burundi and the way in which the international community supports the process and to report to the Economic and Social Council at its substantive session of 2006;

7. Notes that the post-conflict recovery, reconstruction and rehabilitation, including the experience of the ad hoc advisory groups, are among the subjects being discussed in ongoing talks on United Nations reform;

8. Recognizes the importance of avoiding overlap and duplication with respect to existing mechanisms;

9. Decides that the work of the Ad Hoc Advisory Group on Burundi will be reviewed at the substantive session of 2006, with a view to considering whether to continue the mandate of the Advisory Group based on the Council's consideration of its report, which should be submitted no later than six weeks before the start of the substantive session of 2006, and of the situation prevailing in Burundi at that time.

Guinea-Bissau

On 1 March [meeting 3], the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 2005/2 [draft: E/2005/L.6] without vote [agenda item 2].

Ad Hoc Advisory Group on Guinea-Bissau

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolutions 2002/1 of 15 July 2002, 2003/1 of 31 January 2003, 2003/53 of 24 July 2003, 2004/1 of 3 May 2004 and 2004/59 and 2004/61 of 23 July 2004, and its decision 2002/304 of 25 October 2002,

Recognizing the link between political stability and economic and social development in Guinea-Bissau, as well as the persistent fragility of its democratic institutions,

Welcoming the positive and constructive role of the Ad Hoc Advisory Group on Guinea-Bissau in supporting the country to address its pressing short- and longer-term development objectives,

1. Takes note of the report of the Ad Hoc Advisory Group on Guinea-Bissau;

2. Welcomes the contributions of the Economic Community of West African States, the Community of Portuguese-speaking Countries and other partners to improving the situation in Guinea-Bissau;

3. Welcomes also the recommendation by the Security Council, in its resolution 1580(2004) of 22 December 2004, to establish a voluntary emergency fund, to be administered by the United Nations Development Programme, to support efforts related to the planning and implementation of military reform;

4. Welcomes further the commitment of the Government of Guinea-Bissau to hold presidential elections in accordance with the timetable in the Political Transition Charter, and in that regard invites the international community to provide financial and technical support to Guinea-Bissau in the holding of those elections;

5. Expresses its appreciation to those organizations and countries that have provided assistance to Guinea-Bissau in controlling a locust invasion, which is undermining an already fragile economy, and appeals to the international community to provide additional assistance;

6. Invites the donor community to consider providing budgetary support to meet emergency needs, including the payment of salaries, in particular by providing additional contributions through the Emergency Economic Management Fund;

7. Recognizes that the key challenges for the Government of Guinea-Bissau will be to restore fiscal discipline, rebuild public administration and improve the climate for private investment and economic diversification and that meeting these challenges will require a combination of peace, firm commitment to sound policies by the authorities, improved governance and transparency, and the technical and financial support of the international community;

8. Welcomes the progress in economic and financial management and accountability, as recognized by the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank at the meeting of Guinea-Bissau's partners to prepare for the round-table conference, held in Lisbon on 11 February 2005;

9. Welcomes also the discussion at the International Monetary Fund on 19 November 2004 of the next steps in the Fund's engagement with Guinea-Bissau, which covered, inter alia, emergency post-conflict assistance, a poverty reduction and growth facility and a staff-monitored programme;

10. Welcomes further the holding of the meeting of Guinea-Bissau's partners to prepare for the round-table conference, and stresses the importance of strong participation in the donor round-table conference scheduled for October 2005;

11. Encourages the Government of Guinea-Bissau to give full consideration to the report of the Advisory Group;

12. Reaffirms the need to create an enabling environment in Guinea-Bissau to promote economic and social development in the country, and in that regard renews its invitation to the Government of Guinea-Bissau, the organizations of the United Nations system, the Bretton Woods institutions, the donor community and the international community as a whole to give full consideration to the recommendations formulated by the Advisory Group in its first report and to take specific steps to give effect to the partnership approach set out therein with a view to implementing a long-term programme of support;

13. Decides to extend the mandate of the Advisory Group until the substantive session of 2005 of the Economic and Social Council, and requests that, in its report to the Council at that session, the Group describe how it has fulfilled its mandate and, if necessary, include a discussion of the tasks remaining to be accomplished, as well as an estimated timetable for the completion of those tasks in the light of the prevailing situation and a discussion of the implementation of its recommendations;

14. Decides also to consider the reports of the Ad Hoc Advisory Group on Guinea-Bissau at its substantive session of 2005.

In response to resolution 2005/2 (above), the Ad Hoc Advisory Group on Guinea-Bissau reported in June [E/2005/70] on the fulfilment of its mandate, including highlights of its work since 2002; remaining tasks; and challenges facing the country.

The Group continued its advocacy for Guinea-Bissau to ensure that it received adequate funds to meet its short-term needs and to help it secure longer-term assistance. In that regard, the Group participated in the meeting of Guinea-Bissau's partners (Lisbon, Portugal, 11 February), held in preparation for the full donors' round table conference later in the year, and to help mobilize resources for financing the $40 million fiscal gap in the 2005 budget. The Lisbon meeting confirmed that donors were not yet fully confident in the stability of Guinea-Bissau and were waiting until after the elections before providing non-emergency aid or agreeing on a date for the donors' round table. However, representatives of ADB, the Central Bank of West African States and the West African Economic and Monetary Union urged the international community not to subject Guinea-Bissau to the same conditionalities as other countries. In response, following the Lisbon meeting, the EU pledged an estimated 9.2 million euros in new budget support for 2005, disbursement of which could start by August. In the interim, the EU advanced 5 million of the 7.25 million euros compensation for fishing rights from June to April, to allow the payment of salaries in the sensitive period leading up to the elections. France contributed 0.5 million euros to the Economic Emergency Management Fund.

The World Bank Vice-President for Africa and the Managing Director visited Guinea-Bissau in January and February, respectively. Another World Bank team visited the country in May to discuss an economic recovery credit of $10 million to be disbursed in July. The Bank also intended to submit to its Board an interim support strategy package for a proposed $40 million credit devoted to energy, urban communications and community development projects, and for direct budget support.

An IMF mission visited the country in March to negotiate with national authorities a staff monitored programme, which could be transformed into an emergency post-conflict assistance programme. The IMF provisional data indicated that revenue had increased due to improved collection efforts and supervision. Nevertheless, despite budget support and the recent advance on fishing licences provided by the EU, the budget remained extremely tight. Salaries had been paid for January to April, but other expenditures, including those for the social sectors, had to be cut to far below minimum requirements. The budget gap for 2005 was approximately $16 million.

Two of the immediate tasks for the Group following the elections would be to expand the donor base for Guinea-Bissau and solicit support for the donors' round table. The Group recommended a comprehensive technical assistance plan for capacity-building; that the international community help Guinea-Bissau formulate a comprehensive economic diversification strategy to take advantage of its significant resources; that greater attention be paid to the issue of security sector reform; and that greater interaction and collaboration be promoted between the Group and regional organizations.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 July [meeting 39], the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 2005/32 [draft: E/2005/L.36] without vote [agenda item 7 (h)].

Ad Hoc Advisory Group on Guinea-Bissau

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolutions 2002/1 of 15 July 2002, 2003/1 of 31 January 2003, 2003/53 of 24 July 2003, 2004/1 of 3 May 2004, 2004/59 and 2004/61 of 23 July 2004 and 2005/2 of 1 March 2005 and its decision 2002/304 of 25 October 2002,

Welcoming the efforts of Guinea-Bissau, in particular the successful holding of the first round of presidential elections on 19 June 2005, looking forward to the continuing peaceful electoral process leading up to and including the second round of elections scheduled for 24 July 2005, and encouraging its efforts to consolidate democracy and further deepen transparency and good governance,

Recognizing the link between political stability and economic and social development in Guinea-Bissau,

Welcoming the positive and constructive role of the Ad Hoc Advisory Group on Guinea-Bissau in supporting the country in pursuing its pressing short- and long-term development objectives,

Also welcoming the efforts undertaken by the Secretary-General and his Special Envoy for Guinea-Bissau to assist all relevant actors in Guinea-Bissau to reach a peaceful conclusion of the transitional process in the country,

Recognizing the role played by partners of Guinea-Bissau in helping the country to return to constitutional order,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Ad Hoc Advisory Group on Guinea-Bissau;

2. Expresses its appreciation to those countries that have provided technical and financial support for the holding of the presidential elections;

3. Also expresses its appreciation to those countries and organizations that have shown flexibility in providing budget support to Guinea-Bissau in meeting its emergency needs, including through the Emergency Economic Management Fund, requests donors to continue to provide budgetary support to assist Guinea-Bissau in meeting the effective functioning of the State, and welcomes in this regard the decision of the United Nations Development Programme to extend the duration of the Fund until the end of 2005;

4. Welcomes the recommendation of the Security Council, in its resolution 1580(2004) of 22 December 2004, to establish a voluntary emergency fund, to be administered by the United Nations Development Programme, to support efforts related to the planning and implementation of military reform, and expresses appreciation to those countries and organizations that have provided technical and financial support, including through the United Nations Development Programme, for the definition and implementation of military sector reform;

5. Also welcomes the plan by the United Nations country team to design a transitional strategy for the country, and calls upon the United Nations system, and requests all other partners, to contribute to the implementation of the quick-impact microprojects envisaged therein;

6. Calls upon all participants at the meeting of partners of Guinea-Bissau, held in Lisbon on 11 February 2005, to ensure the implementation of its conclusions, including the fulfilment of their commitments, and to strongly support the donor round-table conference scheduled to be held in the last quarter of 2005, and encourages in this regard all traditional and non-traditional partners, in preparation for the conference, to identify lead donors for various sectors in an effort to coordinate assistance;

7. Calls upon the United Nations system, in collaboration with the Bretton Woods institutions and other multilateral and bilateral donors, to assist Guinea-Bissau in designing and implementing a comprehensive technical assistance plan that focuses on national priority areas, in particular on the public administration, health and education sectors;

8. Encourages the international community to find ways to support Guinea-Bissau in strengthening civil society organizations;

9. Urges the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, the Common Fund for Commodities, where appropriate, and other relevant agencies to assist Guinea-Bissau in formulating and implementing a comprehensive economic diversification strategy;

10. Notes that post-conflict recovery, reconstruction and rehabilitation, including the experience of the ad hoc advisory groups, are among the subjects being discussed in ongoing talks on United Nations reform;

11. Recognizes the importance of avoiding overlap and duplication with respect to existing mechanisms;

12. Decides, in the light of the current situation in Guinea-Bissau, to extend the mandate of the Ad Hoc Advisory Group on Guinea-Bissau until the substantive session of 2006, with the understanding that the decision on whether to renew its mandate will be based on the Council's consideration of the report of the Ad Hoc Advisory Group, which should be submitted no later than six weeks before the start of the 2006 substantive session, and the situation prevailing in Guinea-Bissau at that time.

Other economic assistance

Haiti

In response to Economic and Social Council decision 2004/322 [YUN 2004, p. 939], the Ad Hoc Advisory Group on Haiti, reactivated in 2004 by Council resolution 2004/52 [ibid., p. 938], reported in May [E/2005/66] on its activities, the context for international support to Haiti in 2005 and planning for the country's long-term development.

In accordance with Security Council Presidential statement S/PRST/2005/1 (see p. 378), the Group conducted its first mission to Haiti (12-16 April), in conjunction with the Security Council's mission to Haiti (see p. 379). The Group identified priority areas for action, including economic governance, transport, environment, energy, agriculture, education, justice, land titles and disarmament, demobilization and reintegration.

Haiti's Transitional Government prepared a two-year transitional programme, the Interim Cooperation Framework, extending from July 2004 to September 2006. In July 2004, donors pledged over $1 billion to support the Framework. At two meetings (Washington, D.C., December 2004, and Cayenne, French Guiana, March 2005), donors agreed to identify and fund projects for quick disbursement.

The Transitional Government made progress towards restoring financial and economic stability under an IMF Staff Monitored Programme, and in settling overdue service payments to the World Bank, using its own resources and a grant from Canada. Those steps made additional resources available for the Interim Cooperation Framework and other activities. The IMF supported structural measures to enhance public sector governance and transparency, and the Inter-American Development Bank, in coordination with IMF and the World Bank, provided policy-based loans and technical assistance for key reforms and for anti-corruption initiatives.

The Group concluded that the first action of the new Government should be to determine its short-, medium- and long-term priorities. Work was under way to lay the foundation for a PRSP, which the Government could consider as its medium-term planning document. A broad range of national actors should be engaged to build an ongoing national dialogue on the way forward. The Government would need to focus on a few areas that would demonstrate to the Haitian people that action was being taken. The careful sequencing of activities would be critical to building stronger Government ministries and services, and ensuring that steps to modernize the economy had a positive effect on the poor. The report contained specific recommendations addressed to the Economic and Social Council, the United Nations Stabilization Mission in Haiti and the donor community regarding their respective roles in addressing Haiti's long-term development.

On 27 June [E/2005/86], Haiti informed the Economic and Social Council that it supported the recommendations of the Ad Hoc Advisory Group. It had made arrangements to establish a strategic think tank to identify the content of the long-term development programme and work in close collaboration with the Advisory Group.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 27 July [meeting 40], the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 2005/46 [draft: E/2005/L.20/Rev.1] without vote [agenda item 7 (d)].

Ad Hoc Advisory Group on Haiti

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolution 2004/52 of 23 July 2004 and its decision 2004/322 of 11 November 2004 on the long-term programme of support for Haiti, in which the Council decided to reactivate the Ad Hoc Advisory Group on Haiti,

Recalling also its resolution 2004/46 of 22 July 2004 on support for the United Nations Stabilization Mission in Haiti,

Stressing the continued need for Member States, United Nations organs, bodies and agencies and other international organizations to contribute to the promotion of socio-economic recovery and stability in Haiti,

Taking into account the interaction and cooperation between the Economic and Social Council and the Security Council, within their respective mandates, on the situation in Haiti,

1. Takes note of the report of the Ad Hoc Advisory Group on Haiti;

2. Encourages the recent efforts by the Transitional Government of Haiti to focus on long-term development through the creation of a strategic planning unit in support of the Ministry of Planning and External Cooperation, and recognizes in this context the work of the United Nations country team and the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean to prepare the groundwork for a poverty reduction strategy;

3. Decides to extend the mandate of the Advisory Group until the substantive session of the Economic and Social Council in July 2006, with the purpose of following closely and providing advice on Haiti's long-term development strategy to promote socio-economic recovery and stability, with particular attention to the need to ensure coherence and sustainability in international support for Haiti, based on the long-term national development priorities, building upon the Interim Cooperation Framework and stressing the need to avoid overlap and duplication with respect to existing mechanisms;

4. Expresses its satisfaction to the Secretary-General for the support provided to the Advisory Group, and requests him to continue to support the Group's activities adequately;

5. Requests the Advisory Group, in accomplishing its mandate, to continue to cooperate with the Secretary-General, the United Nations Development Group, relevant United Nations funds and programmes and specialized agencies, the Bretton Woods institutions, regional organizations and institutions, including the Organization of American States and the Caribbean Community, the Inter-American Development Bank and other major stakeholders;

6. Notes that post-conflict recovery, reconstruction and rehabilitation, including the experience of the ad hoc advisory groups, are among the subjects being discussed in ongoing talks on United Nations reform;

7. Requests the Advisory Group to submit a report on its work, with recommendations, as appropriate, to the Economic and Social Council no later than six weeks before the start of the substantive session of 2006;

8. Decides that the work of the Advisory Group will be reviewed at the substantive session of 2006, with a view to considering whether to continue its mandate, based on the Council's consideration of the report of the Advisory Group and of the situation then prevailing in Haiti.

Kazakhstan

The Secretary-General, in his August consolidated report on humanitarian assistance and rehabilitation [A/60/302], provided information on cooperation and coordination for the human and ecological rehabilitation of the Semipalatinsk region of Kazakhstan, where nuclear tests were conducted by the Soviet Union between 1949 and 1989. An estimated 1,323,000 people were negatively affected by those tests and many were still suffering. The Semipalatinsk polygon had yet to be secured, the local economy was still suffering from the collapse of the Soviet Union, and morbidity and mortality levels were high.

The Secretary-General reported on progress made in implementing the Semipalatinsk Relief and Region Rehabilitation Programme since his previous report on the issue in 2002 [YUN 2002, p. 922], covering the health, humanitarian, environmental and economic sectors. In 2005, most donor programmes had ended or were coming to an end and fewer organizations were offering support, the magnitude of which was considerably smaller.

Arising out of a donors' meeting in Almaty in February 2004 to take stock of what had been accomplished and set priorities for further action, the Government of Kazakhstan launched a programme to address the problems of the former Semipalatinsk test site during the period 2005-2007. The main goal was to improve the ecological, economic, medical and social factors affecting living standards in the region. Kazakhstan was expected to provide approximately $18.9 million to finance the programme.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December [meeting 68], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/60/496 & Corr.1, 2], adopted resolution 60/216 without vote [agenda item 73*(b)*].

International cooperation and coordination for the human and ecological rehabilitation and economic development of the Semipalatinsk region of Kazakhstan

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 52/169 M of 16 December 1997, 53/1 H of 16 November 1998, 55/44 of 27 November 2000 and 57/101 of 25 November 2002,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General,

Recognizing that the Semipalatinsk nuclear testing ground, inherited by Kazakhstan and closed in 1991, remains a matter of serious concern for the people and Government of Kazakhstan with regard to the long-term nature of its consequences for the lives and health of the people, especially children and other vulnerable groups, as well as for the environment of the region,

Taking into consideration the results of the international conference on the problems of the Semipalatinsk region, held in Tokyo in 1999, which have promoted the effectiveness of the assistance provided to the population of the region,

Recognizing the important role of national development policies and strategies in the rehabilitation of the Semipalatinsk region, and taking note with satisfaction of the elaboration of the Kazakhstan national programme entitled "Complex solution of the former Semipalatinsk nuclear test site problems for 2005-2007",

Recognizing also the contribution of different organizations of the United Nations system, donor States, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to humanitarian assistance and to the implementation of the projects aimed at the rehabilitation of the region and the role of the Government of Kazakhstan in this regard,

Recognizing further the challenges Kazakhstan faces in the rehabilitation of the Semipalatinsk region, in particular in the context of the efforts by the Government of Kazakhstan to ensure an effective and timely achievement of the Millennium Development Goals,

Taking note of the need for know-how in minimizing and mitigating radiological, health, socio-economic, psychological and environmental problems in the Semipalatinsk region,

Taking into account the fact that many international programmes in the Semipalatinsk region have been completed whereas serious social, economic and ecological problems continue to exist,

Conscious that the international community should continue to pay due attention to the issue of the human, ecological and socio-economic dimensions of the situation in the Semipalatinsk region,

Emphasizing the importance of support by donor States and international development organizations for the efforts by Kazakhstan to improve the social, economic and environmental situation in the Semipalatinsk region,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General and the information contained therein on measures taken to solve the health, ecological, economic and humanitarian problems and to meet the needs of the Semipalatinsk region;

2. Welcomes and recognizes the important role of the Government of Kazakhstan in providing domestic resources to help meet the needs of the Semipalatinsk region, including for the implementation of the Kazakhstan national programme entitled "Complex solution of the former Semipalatinsk nuclear test site problems for 2005-2007";

3. Calls upon the international community, including all Member States, in particular donor States, and United Nations institutions to continue to support Kazakhstan in addressing the challenges of the rehabilitation of the Semipalatinsk region and its population, taking additional action, including by facilitating the implementation of the Kazakhstan national programme on addressing the problems of the former Semipalatinsk nuclear testing ground in a comprehensive manner, and stresses the importance of regional cooperation in this regard;

4. Urges the international community to provide assistance to Kazakhstan in the formulation and implementation of special programmes and projects of treatment and care for the affected population as well as in the efforts to ensure economic growth and sustainable development in the Semipalatinsk region;

5. Calls upon all States, relevant multilateral financial organizations and other entities of the international community, including non-governmental organizations, to share their knowledge and experience in order to contribute to the human and ecological rehabilitation and economic development of the Semipalatinsk region;

6. Invites the Secretary-General to pursue a consultative process, with the participation of interested States and relevant United Nations agencies, on modalities for mobilizing the necessary support to seek appropriate solutions to the problems and needs of the Semipalatinsk region, including those prioritized in the report of the Secretary-General;

7. Calls upon the Secretary-General to continue his efforts to enhance world public awareness of the problems and needs of the Semipalatinsk region;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its sixty-third session, under a separate sub-item, on the progress made in the implementation of the present resolution.

Timor-Leste

In response to General Assembly resolution 58/121 [YUN 2003, p. 953], the Secretary-General, in his August consolidated report [A/60/302], provided information on humanitarian and rehabilitation assistance to Timor-Leste.

The Government and people of Timor-Leste had made significant progress towards consolidating democracy, strengthening State institutions, and building institutional capacity and social and economic development, especially meeting the MDGs [YUN 2000, p. 51]. However, ongoing challenges included the need for continued assistance to ensure sustained development, mainly in the areas of rule of law, justice, human rights and support for the police and other public administration institutions; continued infrastructure rehabilitation; the provision of health services to the general population; support to secondary and higher education; psychosocial support, particularly for children affected by violence; and greater participation of Timorese women in all aspects of society, including legislation to combat domestic violence and other gender-related crimes.

A strategic framework for broader sustainable development assistance was initiated, with specific focus on institutional capacity development in public financial management, the rule of law and justice, and democratic governance. A major objective of the renewed strategy was to continue to develop the capacity of Timorese civil servants and State institutions and improve coordination among all stakeholders.

Third States affected by sanctions

In a 13 May note [E/2005/62], the Secretary-General indicated that his 2004 report on the implementation of the provisions of the Charter of the United Nations related to assistance to third States affected by the application of sanctions [YUN 2004, p. 941] would be made available to the Economic and Social Council at its 2005 substantive session. By decision 2005/312 of 27 July, the Economic and Social Council took note of the Secretary-General's 2004 report and his May note.

In response to General Assembly resolution 59/45 [ibid., p. 1346], the Secretary-General submitted an August report [A/60/320] highlighting measures for the further improvement of the procedures and working methods of the Security Council and its sanctions committees related to assistance to third States affected by the application of sanctions. It reviewed the Secretariat's capacity and modalities for implementing intergovernmental mandates and for addressing the main findings, including recommendations of the ad hoc expert group meeting on assistance to third States affected by the application of sanctions [YUN 1998, p. 1235]. The report also noted recent developments related to the role of the Assembly and the Economic and Social Council in the area of assistance to third States.

Disaster response

In 2005, the number of disasters, such as earthquakes, floods and droughts, increased by 18 per cent, killing some 92,000 people worldwide. The increase in such disasters, from 304 in 2004 to 360 in 2005, affected 157 million people who required immediate assistance, sustained injuries or lost their livelihoods. Natural disasters during the year cost an estimated $159 billion in damage, of which $125 billion were for losses caused by Hurricane Katrina in the United States.

In the Horn of Africa, West Africa and Southern Africa, drought, erratic rains, locust infestation and floods, coupled with chronic poverty, conflict, poor governance and HIV/AIDS, affected millions of people, including farmers and pastoral and agropastoral groups. As a result, more than 29 million people in those subregions required food assistance. In several countries, including Mali, Mauritania and the Niger, vulnerable populations suffered from severe malnutrition. In March, an epidemic of Marburg haemorrhagic fever was declared in Angola (see p. 1029), and by late June, 92 cases and 354 deaths had been recorded. A cholera outbreak in West Africa in June resulted in 42,390 cases of the disease and 702 deaths by late September (see p. 1035).

In early 2005, most of the Central Asia region suffered from adverse weather conditions; heavy rains and snowfall caused 486 deaths in Pakistan and over 100 deaths in Afghanistan, and affected 2 million people in Tajikistan. An earthquake measuring 6.4 on the Richter scale directly affected more than 32,000 people in Iran, with 612 confirmed dead. Following the 2004 Indian Ocean earthquake/tsunami [YUN 2004, p. 952], a powerful aftershock measuring 8.7 on the Richter scale struck the west coast of Sumatra on 28 March 2005. A 7.6-magnitude earthquake struck South Asia in October, killing close to 75,000 people, injuring an equal number, and leaving more than 3 million homeless (see p. 1034).

Twenty-two tropical storms were recorded in the Atlantic, with 12 becoming hurricanes, six of them major. The 2004-2005 hurricanes were directly responsible for the deaths of more than 6,000 people, with several million people affected and at least $100 billion in economic losses. In January, torrential rains caused severe flooding in the densely populated coastal regions of Guyana, affecting over 300,000 people—almost half of the country's population (see p. 1033). Floods and mudslides also caused devastation and displacement in El Salvador and in Guatemala (see p. 1030).

Disaster reduction

World Conference on Disaster Reduction (2005)

In accordance with General Assembly resolution 58/214 [YUN 2003, p. 958], the World Conference on Disaster Reduction was convened in Kobe, Hyogo, Japan, from 18 to 22 January [A/CONF.206/6]. The Conference adopted the Hyogo Declaration and the Hyogo Framework for Action 2005-2015: Building the Resilience of Nations and Communities to Disasters (see p. 1016). It also adopted the report of its Credentials Committee [A/CONF.206/5]. The Conference was attended by some 4,000 participants representing interested public and private entities from 168 States, 78 observer bodies, 161 NGOs and 152 media organizations. The Conference's Public Forum hosted 66 workshops. In three round tables, the Conference discussed disaster risk: the next development challenge; learning to live with risk; and emerging risks. The theme of the Conference, "Indian Ocean disaster: risk reduction for a safer future", was considered in a special session, which delivered a common statement (see p. 1016).

The Conference considered a Secretariat note [A/CONF.206/L.1], containing the review of the Yokohama Strategy and Plan of Action for a Safer World, adopted by the 1994 World Conference on Natural Disaster Reduction [YUN 1994, p. 851]. The review, which was prepared in accordance with Assembly resolutions 56/195 [YUN 2001, p. 863] and 57/256 [YUN 2002, p. 928], stressed the importance of underpinning disaster risk reduction with a more proactive approach to informing, motivating and involving people in all aspects of the issue in their own communities. It also highlighted the scarcity of resources allocated for risk reduction objectives. The review concluded that the Strategy's Principles remained valid as means to guide the development of policy frameworks for enhancing national and local disaster reduction capabilities. It identified gaps and challenges, including a lack of systematic implementation, cooperation and reporting of progress to reduce risk and vulnerability to disasters, which were addressed in the priorities for action outlined in the Hyogo Framework (see below).

Hyogo Declaration and Framework for Action

On 22 January, the Conference adopted the Hyogo Declaration and the Hyogo Framework for Action 2005-2015: Building the Resilience of Nations and Communities to Disasters. In the Declaration, Conference participants reaffirmed the vital role of the UN system in disaster risk reduction. They declared their intention to build on relevant international commitments and frameworks, as well as internationally agreed development goals, including those contained in the Millennium Declaration [YUN 2000, p. 49], to strengthen global disaster reduction activities for the twenty-first century. Participants affirmed that States had the primary responsibility for protecting people and property on their territory from hazards, and it was therefore vital to give high priority to disaster risk reduction in national policy. They resolved to develop indicators to track progress on disaster risk reduction activities and to further develop information-sharing mechanisms on programmes, initiatives, best practices, lessons learned and technologies in support of disaster risk reduction. The Conference called for action from all stakeholders to make the world safer from the risk of disasters within the next decade.

In the Hyogo Framework for Action, Conference participants resolved to pursue for the next 10 years the expected outcome of the Conference, namely, the substantial reduction of disaster losses in lives and the social, economic and environmental assets of communities and countries. To that end, the Conference adopted three strategic goals: more effective integration of disaster risk considerations into sustainable development policies, planning and programming at all levels, with a special emphasis on disaster prevention, mitigation, preparedness and vulnerability reduction; development and strengthening of institutions, mechanisms and capacities, particularly at the community level, that could systematically contribute to building resilience to hazards; and the systematic incorporation of risk reduction approaches into the design and implementation of emergency preparedness, response and recovery programmes in the reconstruction of affected communities. Drawing on the review of the Yokohama Strategy (see p. 1015), the Conference adopted five priorities for action: ensuring that disaster risk reduction was a national and local priority with a strong institutional basis for implementation; identifying, assessing and monitoring disaster risks and enhancing early warning; using knowledge, innovation and education to build a culture of safety and resilience at all levels; reducing underlying risk factors; and strengthening disaster preparedness for effective response at all levels. The Framework included specific key activities for each priority for implementation by States, regional and international organizations, and other relevant actors.

Common statement on the Indian Ocean disaster

In its common statement of the special session on the Indian Ocean disaster: risk reduction for a safer future, the World Conference on Disaster Reduction requested the Economic and Social Council to include regional disaster reduction mechanisms in the agenda of the humanitarian affairs segment of its 2005 substantive session (see p. 1015), and the secretariat of the International Strategy for Disaster Reduction to report on regional mechanisms for disaster reduction to that session and the sixtieth (2005) session of the General Assembly. The Secretary-General was invited to include regional mechanisms for disaster reduction in the agenda of the Assembly's sixtieth session and to submit to the Assembly a report thereon. The Conference recommended that regional disaster reduction mechanisms be established and strengthened as soon as possible for all relevant natural hazards. It called for the establishment of an effective and durable tsunami early warning system for the Indian Ocean and recommended elements of a forward strategy to achieve that goal.

International Strategy for Disaster Reduction

In response to General Assembly resolution 59/231 [YUN 2004, p. 946], the Secretary-General, in an August report [A/60/180], provided an overview of the implementation of the International Strategy for Disaster Reduction (ISDR), which was adopted by the programme forum of the International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction (1990-2000) in 1999 [YUN 1999, p. 859] and endorsed by the Assembly in resolution 54/219 [ibid., p. 861]. The Inter-Agency Task Force for Disaster Reduction and the ISDR secretariat served as the main mechanisms for the Strategy's implementation by the UN system. The report also reviewed the follow-up to the World Conference on Disaster Reduction (see p. 1015).

The ISDR system, in collaboration with agencies and experts, was to assist in facilitating and coordinating action among stakeholders of the Hyogo Framework process (see p. 1016) and to further advocacy and resource mobilization, and in information sharing and reporting. As a first step in the follow-up to the World Conference, the ISDR secretariat presented to the eleventh session of the Inter-Agency Task Force (Geneva, 24-26 May) a set of strategic directions to assist in the implementation of the Hyogo Framework. The Task Force revised and adopted those directions and requested that guiding principles be specifically brought to the attention of States, national platforms and the constituencies of Task Force members, in order to support them in setting their implementation policy parameters. With the adoption of the strategic directions, the ISDR system was called upon to focus on institutional commitments, planning and programming, awareness and advocacy, and monitoring and reporting on progress.

In response to a decision of the eleventh session of the Task Force, a matrix showing commitments and initiatives supporting the implementation of the Hyogo Framework was developed under the coordination of the ISDR secretariat. Several UN agencies and programmes, as well as other international and regional organizations and bodies, initiated national and regional follow-up to the provisions of the Framework. Benchmarks, guidelines and generic indicators that could be adapted to national environments were being developed, facilitated by the ISDR secretariat, Task Force members and national experts. Thematic platforms and networks would be engaged or specifically developed to assist in the implementation of distinct components of the Framework.

The national ownership requirement endorsed by the Framework had stimulated follow-up activities, including national workshops for disaster risk reduction; reviews of national disaster risk reduction plans; the strengthening, or creation, of national platforms in support of broader national policy initiatives; and the development of sustainable institutional systems to deal with disaster risk. The Task Force requested the secretariat to prepare a review of regional and subregional strategies for the implementation of the Hyogo Framework and progress in strengthening the outreach of the ISDR system. To promote an integrated approach to climate change, the Task Force created the Working Group on Climate Change and Disaster Risk Reduction, co-chaired by UNDP and the World Meteorological Organization. A tsunami early warning system for the Indian Ocean region was being developed. A multipartner project coordinated by ISDR provided an integrated framework for strengthening early warning systems in the region. The United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) Intergovernmental Oceanographic Commission had put in place a mechanism to facilitate regional capacities for the detection of potential tsunamigenic events and to issue warnings, and other regional institutions were contributing to the establishment of a tsunami early warning system. The Secretary-General requested the ISDR secretariat to coordinate a global survey of early warning system capacities and gaps, with a view to achieving a comprehensive global capacity for systematic, people-centred early warning systems, as proposed in his report "In larger freedom: towards development, security, and human rights for all" [A/59/2005] (see p. 67).

The Secretary-General called on the Assembly to endorse the Hyogo Declaration (see p. 1016) and the Hyogo Framework for Action, and to invite States, civil society organizations, regional bodies and international organizations to comply with the request for implementation, follow-up and support, as set out in the Framework. The Assembly should endorse a proposed strengthening of the ISDR system as set out in the report, including its governance and secretariat and the distribution of roles and responsibilities among agencies, in support of the implementation of the Hyogo Framework. That would include the establishment of a management oversight board to advise and support the Under-Secretary-General for Humanitarian Affairs; a modified task force reformed into a global platform for disaster reduction, with a subsidiary programme advisory committee; and a strengthened ISDR secretariat to service the system at all levels. Member States were urged to fully support the work of the secretariat by contributing to the Trust Fund for Disaster Reduction. The Secretary-General also recommended the strengthening of regional mechanisms for collaboration and networking in support of national and local efforts to reduce disaster risk. He also called for greater political commitment for the systematic integration of risk reduction into development plans and increased provision of resources and application of knowledge of disaster reduction by Member States, their communities and the wider international community.

ISDR reform. The proposal for strengthening the ISDR system in support of the implementation of the Hyogo Framework, as recommended by the Secretary-General in his August report (see p. 1016), was further discussed and refined at the ISDR stakeholder workshop (Geneva, 10-11 October) and the twelfth session of the Inter-Agency Task Force on Disaster Reduction (Geneva, 22-24 November). The Task Force established a reference group to develop guidance for the first session, scheduled for 2007, of the Global Platform for Disaster Risk Reduction, which was to succeed the Task Force. A revised reform proposal was presented by the Under-Secretary-General for Humanitarian Affairs on 19 December.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December [meeting 68], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/60/488/Add.3], adopted resolution 60/195 without vote [agenda item 52 (c)].

International Strategy for Disaster Reduction

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 44/236 of 22 December 1989, 49/22 A of 2 December 1994, 49/22 B of 20 December 1994, 53/185 of 15 December 1998, 54/219 of 22 December 1999, 56/195 of 21 December 2001, 57/256 of 20 December 2002, 58/214 of 23 December 2003 and 59/231 of 22 December 2004, and Economic and Social Council resolutions 1999/63 of 30 July 1999 and 2001/35 of 26 July 2001, and taking into due consideration its resolution 57/270 B of 23 June 2003 on integrated and coordinated implementation of and follow-up to the outcomes of the major United Nations conferences and summits in the economic and social fields,

Expressing its deep concern at the number and scale of natural disasters and their increasing impact within recent years, which have resulted in massive loss of life and long-term negative social, economic and environmental consequences for vulnerable societies throughout the world, in particular in developing countries,

Reiterating that, although natural disasters damage the social and economic infrastructure of all countries, the long-term consequences of natural disasters are especially severe for developing countries and hamper the achievement of their sustainable development,

Recognizing that disaster risk reduction is a cross-cutting issue in the context of sustainable development,

Recognizing also the clear relationship between development, disaster risk reduction, disaster response and disaster recovery and the need to deploy efforts in all these areas,

Recognizing further the urgent need to further develop and make use of the existing scientific and technical knowledge to build resilience to natural disasters, and emphasizing the need for developing countries to have access to technology so as to tackle natural disasters effectively,

Emphasizing that disaster risk reduction, including reducing vulnerability to natural disasters, is an important element that contributes to the achievement of sustainable development,

Stressing the importance of advancing the implementation of the Plan of Implementation of the World Summit on Sustainable Development and its relevant provisions on vulnerability, risk assessment and disaster management,

Expressing its profound gratitude to the Government and the people of Japan for the excellent arrangements made for hosting the World Conference on Disaster Reduction, held at Kobe, Hyogo, from 18 to 22 January 2005, for the hospitality extended to the participants and for the facilities, staff and services placed at their disposal, as well as for all the voluntary contributions made to facilitate the participation of representatives of developing countries, in particular those from the least developed countries,

Welcoming the Hyogo Declaration, the Hyogo Framework for Action 2005-2015: Building the Resilience of Nations and Communities to Disasters, and the common statement of the special session on the Indian Ocean disaster: risk reduction for a safer future, as adopted by the World Conference on Disaster Reduction,

Recognizing that the Hyogo Framework for Action complements the Yokohama Strategy for a Safer World: Guidelines for Natural Disaster Prevention, Preparedness and Mitigation and its Plan of Action,

Taking note that the scope of the Hyogo Framework for Action encompasses disasters caused by hazards of natural origin and related environmental and technological hazards and risks and thus reflects a holistic and multi-hazard approach to disaster risk management and the relationship between them, which can have a significant impact on social, economic, cultural and environmental systems, as stressed in the Yokohama Strategy for a Safer World: Guidelines for Natural Disaster Prevention, Preparedness and Mitigation and its Plan of Action,

Recalling the 2005 World Summit Outcome,

Recognizing the need to continue to develop an understanding of, and to address, socio-economic activities that exacerbate the vulnerability of societies to natural disasters and to build and further strengthen community capability to cope with disaster risks,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the International Strategy for Disaster Reduction;

2. Endorses the Hyogo Declaration and the Hyogo Framework for Action 2005-2015: Building the Resilience of Nations and Communities to Disasters as adopted by the World Conference on Disaster Reduction, held at Kobe, Hyogo, Japan, from 18 to 22 January 2005, and recalls the common statement of the special session on the Indian Ocean disaster: risk reduction for a safer future;

3. Calls for a more effective integration of disaster risk reduction into sustainable development policies, planning and programming; for the development and strengthening of institutions, mechanisms and capacities to build resilience to hazards and for a systematic incorporation of risk reduction approaches into the implementation of emergency preparedness, response and recovery programmes;

4. Invites Member States, the United Nations system, including international financial institutions, regional bodies and other international organizations, as well as relevant civil society organizations, to support, implement and follow up the Hyogo Framework for Action;

5. Calls upon the United Nations system, including international financial institutions and international organizations, to integrate the goals of and take into full account the Hyogo Framework for Action in their strategies and programmes, making use of existing coordination mechanisms, and to assist developing countries with those mechanisms to design disaster risk reduction measures with a sense of urgency;

6. Calls upon the international community to fully implement the commitments of the Hyogo Declaration and the Hyogo Framework for Action;

7. Recalls that the commitments of the Hyogo Declaration and the Hyogo Framework for Action include the provision of assistance for developing countries that are prone to natural disasters and disaster-stricken States in the transition phase towards sustainable physical, social and economic recovery, for risk-reduction activities in post-disaster recovery and for rehabilitation processes;

8. Calls upon the United Nations system, including the international financial institutions as well as regional banks and other regional and international organizations to support, in a timely and sustained manner, the efforts led by disaster-stricken countries for disaster risk reduction, in post-disaster recovery and rehabilitation processes;

9. Takes note of all the regional and subregional initiatives developed in order to achieve disaster risk reduction, reiterates the need to develop regional initiatives and risk reduction capacities of regional mechanisms and to strengthen them, wherever they exist, and encourages the use and sharing of all the existing tools;

10. Notes the importance of developing international mechanisms for the implementation of the actions established in the Hyogo Framework for Action, such as, for example, the International Recovery Platform launched to ensure the reduction of vulnerability during the post-disaster recovery phase;

11. Recognizes that each State has the primary responsibility for its own sustainable development and for taking effective measures to reduce disaster risk, including for the protection of people on its territory, infrastructure and other national assets from the impact of disasters, including the implementation of and follow-up to the Hyogo Framework for Action, and stresses the importance of international cooperation and partnerships to support those national efforts;

12. Also recognizes the need to strengthen the sharing of good practices, knowledge and technical support among all relevant stakeholders;

13. Calls upon the international community to support the development and strengthening of institutions, mechanisms and capacities at all levels, in particular at the community level, that can systematically contribute to building resilience to hazards;

14. Stresses the importance of further strengthening the capacity of the International Strategy for Disaster Reduction system in order to provide a solid basis for action as mandated by the Hyogo Framework for Action, and requests the Secretary-General to include this issue in his report to the General Assembly at its sixty-first session;

15. Recognizes the importance of integrating a gender perspective as well as engaging women in the design and implementation of all phases of disaster management, particularly at the disaster risk reduction stage;

16. Expresses its appreciation to those countries that have provided financial support for the activities of the Strategy by making voluntary contributions to the Trust Fund for the International Strategy for Disaster Reduction;

17. Encourages the international community to provide adequate voluntary financial contributions to the United Nations Trust Fund for Disaster Reduction, in the effort to ensure the adequate support for the follow-up activities to the Hyogo Framework for Action, and to review the current usage and feasibility for the expansion of the Fund, inter alia, to assist disaster-prone developing countries to set up national strategies for disaster risk reduction;

18. Requests the Secretary-General to allocate adequate financial and administrative resources, within existing resources, for the activities and effective functioning of the Inter-Agency Secretariat for the International Strategy for Disaster Reduction;

19. Invites Governments and relevant international organizations to consider disaster risk assessment as an integral component of development plans and poverty eradication programmes;

20. Stresses the importance of identifying, assessing and managing risks prior to the occurrence of disasters, for which it is necessary to combine the efforts at all levels from the development, humanitarian, scientific and environmental communities as well as the importance of integrating disaster risk reduction, as appropriate, into development plans and poverty eradication programmes;

21. Also stresses the need to foster better understanding and knowledge of the causes of disasters, as well as to build and strengthen coping capacities through, inter alia, the transfer and exchange of experiences and technical knowledge, access to relevant data and information and the strengthening of institutional arrangements, including community-based organizations;

22. Recognizes the importance of early warning as an essential element of disaster risk reduction and looks forward to the results of the Third International Conference on Early Warning, to be held from 27 to 29 March 2006, in Bonn, Germany;

23. Requests, in this context, the Inter-Agency Secretariat for the International Strategy for Disaster Reduction to complete the preparation of the global survey on early warning capacities and gaps, including an account of available technologies for early warning, and invites Member States to provide inputs that may assist the Inter-Agency Secretariat for the Strategy in preparing this survey;

24. Reiterates its call upon Governments to establish national platforms or focal points for disaster reduction and to strengthen them, wherever they exist, encourages the platforms to share relevant information on standards and practices, urges the United Nations system, in this regard, to provide appropriate support for those mechanisms, and invites the Secretary-General to strengthen the regional outreach of the Inter-Agency Secretariat for the International Strategy for Disaster Reduction in order to ensure such support;

25. Stresses that continued cooperation and coordination among Governments, the United Nations system, other organizations, regional organizations, non-governmental organizations and other partners, as appropriate, are considered essential to address effectively the impact of natural disasters;

26. Recognizes the importance of linking disaster risk management to regional frameworks, as appropriate, such as the African Regional Strategy for Disaster Reduction developed within the New Partnership for Africa's Development, to address issues of poverty eradication and sustainable development;

27. Emphasizes the need for the international community to maintain its focus beyond emergency relief and to support medium- and long-term rehabilitation, reconstruction and risk reduction, and stresses the importance of implementing programmes related to the eradication of poverty, sustainable development and disaster risk reduction management in the most vulnerable regions, particularly in developing countries prone to natural disasters;

28. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its sixty-first session a report on the implementation of the present resolution, under the item entitled "Sustainable development".

On the same date, the Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/60/488/Add.3], adopted resolution 60/196 without vote [agenda item 52 (c)].

Natural disasters and vulnerability

The General Assembly,

Recalling its decision 57/547 of 20 December 2002 and its resolutions 58/215 of 23 December 2003 and 59/233 of 22 December 2004,

Reaffirming the Johannesburg Declaration on Sustainable Development and the Plan of Implementation of the World Summit on Sustainable Development, adopted by the World Summit, held in Johannesburg, South Africa, from 26 August to 4 September 2002,

Reaffirming also the Hyogo Declaration and the Hyogo Framework for Action 2005-2015: Building the Resilience of Nations and Communities to Disasters, as adopted by the World Conference on Disaster Reduction, held at Kobe, Hyogo, Japan, from 18 to 22 January 2005,

Taking note that the scope of the Hyogo Framework for Action encompasses disasters caused by hazards of natural origin and related environmental and technological hazards and risks and thus reflects a holistic and multi-hazard approach to disaster risk management and the relationship between them, which can have a significant impact on social, economic, cultural and environmental systems, as stressed in the Yokohama Strategy for a Safer World: Guidelines for Natural Disaster Prevention, Preparedness and Mitigation and its Plan of Action,

Recalling the 2005 World Summit Outcome,

Recognizing the need to continue to develop an understanding of, and to address, the underlying risk factors, as identified in the Hyogo Framework for Action, including socio-economic factors, that exacerbate the vulnerability of societies to natural hazards, to build and further strengthen community capacity to cope with disaster risks and to enhance resilience against hazards associated with disasters, while also recognizing the negative impact of natural disasters on economic growth and sustainable development, in particular in developing countries and disaster-prone countries,

Noting that the global environment continues to suffer degradation, adding to economic and social vulnerabilities, in particular in developing countries,

Taking into account the various ways and forms in which all countries, in particular the more vulnerable countries, are affected by severe natural hazards such as earthquakes, tsunamis, landslides and volcanic eruptions and extreme weather events such as heat waves, severe droughts, floods and storms, and the El Niño/La Niña events which have global reach,

Expressing deep concern at the recent increase in the frequency and intensity of extreme weather events and associated natural disasters in some regions of the world and their substantial economic, social and environmental impacts, in particular upon developing countries in those regions,

Taking into account that geological and hydrometeorological hazards and their associated natural disasters and their reduction must be addressed in a coherent and effective manner,

Noting the need for international and regional cooperation to increase the capacity of countries to respond to the negative impacts of all natural hazards, including earthquakes, tsunamis, landslides and volcanic eruptions and extreme weather events such as heat waves, severe droughts and floods, and associated natural disasters, in particular in developing countries and disaster-prone countries,

Bearing in mind the importance of addressing disaster risks related to changing social, economic, environmental conditions and land use, and the impact of hazards associated with geological events, weather, water, climate variability and climate change, in sector development planning and programmes as well as in post-disaster situations,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the International Strategy for Disaster Reduction, in particular section II, entitled "Disasters associated with natural hazards and vulnerability: a development challenge";

2. Recognizes that each State has the primary responsibility for its own sustainable development and for taking effective measures to reduce disaster risk, including for the protection of people on its territory, infrastructure and other national assets from the impact of disasters, including the implementation of and follow-up to the Hyogo Framework for Action 2005-2015: Building the Resilience of Nations and Communities to Disasters, and stresses the importance of international cooperation and partnerships to support those national efforts;

3. Urges the international community to continue to address ways and means, including through cooperation and technical assistance, to reduce the adverse effects of natural disasters, including those caused by extreme weather events, in particular in vulnerable developing countries, including least developed countries and in Africa, through the implementation of the International Strategy for Disaster Reduction, including the Hyogo Framework for Action, and encourages the Inter-Agency Task Force for Disaster Reduction to continue its work in this regard;

4. Stresses the importance of the Hyogo Declaration and the Hyogo Framework for Action and the priorities for action that States, regional and international organizations and international financial institutions as well as other concerned actors should take into consideration in their approach to disaster risk reduction and implement, as appropriate, according to their own circumstances and capacities, bearing in mind the vital importance of promoting a culture of prevention in the area of natural disasters, including through the mobilization of adequate resources for disaster risk reduction, and of addressing disaster risk reduction, including disaster preparedness, and the adverse effects of natural disasters in efforts to implement national development plans and poverty reduction strategies with a view to achieving the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals;

5. Encourages Governments, through their respective International Strategy for Disaster Reduction national platforms and national focal points for disaster risk reduction, in cooperation with the United Nations system and other stakeholders, to strengthen capacity-building in the most vulnerable regions, to enable them to address the socio-economic factors that increase vulnerability, and to develop measures that will enable them to prepare for and cope with natural disasters, including those associated with earthquakes and extreme weather events, and encourages the international community to provide effective assistance to developing countries in this regard;

6. Emphasizes, in order to build resilience, particularly in developing countries, especially those vulnerable among them, the importance of addressing the underlying risk factors identified in the Hyogo Framework for Action and the importance of promoting the integration of risk reduction associated with geological and hydrometeorological hazards in disaster risk reduction programmes;

7. Encourages the Inter-Agency Task Force for Disaster Reduction to continue, within its mandate, particularly the Hyogo Framework for Action, to enhance the coordination of activities to promote disaster risk reduction and to make available to the relevant United Nations entities information on options for natural disaster risk reduction, including severe natural hazards and extreme weather-related disasters and vulnerabilities;

8. Stresses the importance of close cooperation and coordination among Governments, the United Nations system, other international and regional organizations as well as non-governmental organizations and other partners such as the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement, as appropriate, taking into account the need for the development of disaster management strategies, including the effective establishment of early warning systems that are, inter alia, people-centred, while taking advantage of all available resources and expertise for that purpose;

9. Encourages the Conference of the Parties to the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change and the parties to the Kyoto Protocol to the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change to continue to address the adverse effects of climate change, especially in developing countries that are particularly vulnerable, in accordance with the provisions of the Convention, and also encourages the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change to continue to assess the adverse effects of climate change on the socio-economic and natural disaster reduction systems of developing countries;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its sixty-first session on the implementation of the present resolution, and decides to consider the issue of natural disasters and vulnerability at that session, under the sub-item entitled "International Strategy for Disaster Reduction" of the item entitled "Sustainable development".

International cooperation

In response to General Assembly resolution 59/212 [YUN 2004, p. 943], the Secretary-General, in an August report [A/60/227], provided an update on international cooperation in the field of disasters associated with natural hazards, highlighting the key challenges faced by the international community in strengthening the capacity of disaster-prone countries in disaster preparedness and response, post-disaster recovery and disaster risk reduction. In response to Assembly resolution 57/150 [YUN 2002, p. 926], the report also included information on the activities of the International Search and Rescue Advisory Group (INSARAG), an intergovernmental network established in 1991 [YUN 1991, p. 413] for international cooperation and coordination in earthquake response.

The report stated that, despite some worthwhile gains in the previous decade, the level of commitment and the resources available for preparedness remained inadequate at both the national and international levels. The participation of beneficiaries in the planning and implementation of relief programmes remained largely insufficient. National and international actors lacked a common approach and a shared understanding of terminology, definitions and standards. Governments of affected countries faced great difficulties in coordinating national and international relief assistance, and the capacity of UN country teams to coordinate international assistance was uneven. Coordination of recovery efforts remained a challenge and pointed to the need for more structured and systematic international support of national and local efforts.

International urban search and rescue teams belonging to the INSARAG network responded to the 2004 Indian Ocean earthquake and subsequent tsunami [YUN 2004, p. 952]. INSARAG organized an earthquake response exercise in Yerevan, Armenia, in June, and its methodology was introduced and practised in an exercise held in Geneva in April. It also conducted training courses in Hungary (February 2004), Tunisia (February 2004 and April 2005), Indonesia (May 2004) and Estonia (November 2004). In 2005, an international working group completed a revision of the INSARAG guidelines. The revised guidelines improved and updated the INSARAG coordination methodology and included agreed standards for classifying international search and rescue teams according to their capabilities in collapsed-structure rescue. The report also outlined challenges and recommendations in resolving administrative bottlenecks; safety and security of international staff; on-site coordination; and stopping the deployment of excess international search and rescue teams.

The Secretary-General recommended that UN organizations and donor Governments strengthen the capacity of disaster-prone countries in disaster mitigation, preparedness, response and post-disaster recovery within a risk reduction framework by supporting initiatives in that field and significantly increasing funding for preparedness activities. Regional organizations should play a greater role in disaster risk reduction and management by devising regional-level programmes and by supporting countries' efforts. Providers of relief assistance should maximize the participation of beneficiaries in planning and implementing relief programmes, and enhance the level of accountability to beneficiaries. The United Nations should strengthen civil-military coordination mechanisms and continue to develop and implement the UN humanitarian civil-military coordination concept, including the development of national standby teams, with Member States. Relevant UN organizations and Member States should enhance global capacity for sustainable post-disaster recovery. Member States should implement the priorities set out in the Hyogo Framework for Action 2005-2015 (see p. 1016). In particular, they should incorporate practical disaster reduction steps into sustainable development and poverty reduction strategies, as well as into disaster preparedness and response.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December [meeting 63], the General Assembly adopted resolution 60/125 [A/60/L.39 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 73 (a)].

International cooperation on humanitarian assistance in the field of natural disasters, from relief to development

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its resolution 46/182 of 19 December 1991, the annex to which contains the guiding principles for the strengthening of the coordination of emergency humanitarian assistance of the United Nations system, as well as all its resolutions on international cooperation on humanitarian assistance in the field of natural disasters, from relief to development, and recalling the resolutions of the humanitarian segments of the substantive sessions of the Economic and Social Council,

Recognizing the importance of the principles of neutrality, humanity, impartiality and independence for the provision of humanitarian assistance,

Reiterating that independence means the autonomy of humanitarian objectives as distinct from the political, economic, military or other objectives that may be pursued by any actor with regard to areas where humanitarian action is being implemented,

Welcoming the Hyogo Declaration, the Hyogo Framework for Action 2005-2015: Building the Resilience of Nations and Communities to Disasters and the common statement of the special session on the Indian Ocean disaster: risk reduction for a safer future, as adopted by the World Conference on Disaster Reduction, held in Kobe, Hyogo, Japan, from 18 to 22 January 2005,

Emphasizing that the affected State has the primary responsibility in the initiation, organization, coordination and implementation of humanitarian assistance within its territory and in the facilitation of the work of humanitarian organizations in mitigating the consequences of natural disasters,

Emphasizing also the responsibility of all States to undertake disaster preparedness, response and mitigation efforts in order to minimize the impact of natural disasters, while recognizing the importance of international cooperation in support of the efforts of affected countries which may have limited capacities to fulfil this requirement,

Noting the critical role played by local resources, and by existing in-country capacities, in natural disaster management and risk reduction, disaster response, rehabilitation and development,

Recognizing the importance of international cooperation in support of the efforts of the affected States in dealing with natural disasters in all their phases, and of strengthening the response capacity of countries affected by disaster,

Noting with appreciation the important role played by Member States, including developing countries, that have granted necessary and continued generous assistance to countries and peoples stricken by natural disasters,

Recognizing the significant role played by national Red Cross and Red Crescent societies, as part of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement, in disaster preparedness and risk reduction, disaster response, rehabilitation and development,

Emphasizing the importance of addressing vulnerability and integrating risk reduction into all phases of natural disaster management, post-natural disaster recovery and development planning,

Welcoming the work carried out by the Intergovernmental Oceanographic Commission of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization in the setting up of regional tsunami early warning systems, in the Indian Ocean, the Mediterranean and the north-east Atlantic, and noting the proposed convening of a Third International Conference on Early Warning, to be held from 27 to 29 March 2006 in Bonn, Germany,

Recognizing that efforts to achieve economic growth, sustainable development and internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals, can be adversely affected by natural disasters, and noting the positive contribution that those efforts can make in strengthening the resilience of populations to such disasters,

Emphasizing, in this context, the important role of development organizations in supporting national efforts to mitigate the consequences of natural disasters,

1. Takes note of the reports of the Secretary-General entitled "International cooperation on humanitarian assistance in the field of natural disasters, from relief to development"; "Strengthening of the coordination of emergency humanitarian assistance of the United Nations"; "Strengthening emergency relief, rehabilitation, reconstruction, recovery and prevention in the aftermath of the Indian Ocean tsunami disaster"; "The transition from relief to development"; and "Improvement of the Central Emergency Revolving Fund";

2. Expresses its deep concern at the number and scale of natural disasters and their increasing impact, resulting in massive losses of life and property worldwide, in particular in vulnerable societies lacking adequate capacity to mitigate effectively the long-term negative social, economic and environmental consequences of natural disasters;

3. Calls upon States to fully implement the Hyogo Declaration and the Hyogo Framework for Action 2005-2015: Building the Resilience of Nations and Communities to Disasters, in particular those commitments related to assistance for developing countries that are prone to natural disasters and for disaster-stricken States in the transition phase towards sustainable physical, social and economic recovery, for risk-reduction activities in post-disaster recovery and for rehabilitation processes;

4. Calls upon all States to adopt, where required, and to continue to implement effectively, necessary legislative and other appropriate measures to mitigate the effects of natural disasters and integrate disaster risk reduction strategies into development planning, and in this regard requests the international community to continue to assist developing countries as well as countries with economies in transition;

5. Welcomes the effective cooperation among the affected States, relevant bodies of the United Nations system, donor countries, regional and international financial institutions and other relevant organizations, such as the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement, and civil society, in the coordination and delivery of emergency relief, and stresses the need to continue such cooperation and delivery throughout relief operations and medium- and long-term rehabilitation and reconstruction efforts, in a manner that reduces vulnerability to future natural hazards;

6. Reiterates the commitment to support the efforts of countries, in particular developing countries, to strengthen their capacities at all levels in order to prepare for and respond rapidly to natural disasters and mitigate their impact;

7. Stresses that, to increase further the effectiveness of humanitarian assistance, particular international cooperation efforts should be undertaken to enhance and broaden further the utilization of national and local capacities and, where appropriate, of regional and subregional capacities of developing countries for disaster preparedness and response, which may be made available in closer proximity to the site of a disaster, and more efficiently and at lower cost;

8. Also stresses, in this context, the importance of strengthening international cooperation, particularly through the effective use of multilateral mechanisms, in the timely provision of humanitarian assistance through all phases of a disaster, from relief and mitigation to development, including the provision of adequate resources;

9. Welcomes the role of the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat as the focal point within the overall United Nations system for the promotion and coordination of disaster response among United Nations humanitarian organizations and other humanitarian partners;

10. Also welcomes, so as to increase further the effectiveness of humanitarian assistance, the incorporation of experts from developing countries that are prone to natural disasters into the United Nations Disaster Assessment and Coordination system, and also the work of the International Search and Rescue Advisory Group in assisting such countries in strengthening urban search and rescue capacities and establishing mechanisms for improving their coordination of national and international response in the field, and recalls in this regard its resolution 57/150 of 16 December 2002 entitled "Strengthening the effectiveness and coordination of international urban search and rescue assistance";

11. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with States and relevant organizations, to continue to explore ways to strengthen the rapid response capacities of the international community to provide immediate humanitarian relief, building on existing arrangements and ongoing initiatives;

12. Notes the need to continue to improve the management and use of the Central Register of Disaster Management Capacities, including the Directory of Advanced Technologies for Disaster Response, which has the potential to support planning preparedness and response activities, and requests the Secretary-General to include information about the work of the Central Register in his report on the implementation of the present resolution;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to develop more systematic links with Member States offering military assets for natural disaster response in order to identify the availability of such assets;

14. Encourages donors to consider the importance of ensuring that assistance in the case of higher-profile natural disasters does not come at the expense of those natural disasters that may be relatively lower-profile, bearing in mind that the allocation of resources should be driven by needs;

15. Encourages States that have not acceded to or ratified the Tampere Convention on the Provision of Telecommunication Resources for Disaster Mitigation and Relief Operations, which entered into force on 8 January 2005, to consider doing so;

16. Encourages the further use of space-based and ground-based remote-sensing technologies, as well as the sharing of geographical data, for the prevention, mitigation and management of natural disasters, where appropriate;

17. Encourages Member States, relevant United Nations organizations and international financial institutions to enhance the global capacity for sustainable post-disaster recovery in areas such as coordination with traditional and non-traditional partners, identification and dissemination of lessons learned, development of common tools and mechanisms for recovery needs assessment, strategy development and programming, and incorporation of risk reduction into all recovery processes, and welcomes the ongoing efforts to this end;

18. Requests the United Nations system to improve its coordination of disaster recovery efforts, from relief to development, inter alia, by strengthening institutional, coordination and strategic planning efforts in disaster recovery, in support of national authorities;

19. Stresses the importance of rapid access to funds to ensure a more predictable and timely United Nations response to humanitarian emergencies;

20. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to improve the international response to natural disasters, and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its sixty-first session.

Disaster assistance

Indian Ocean tsunami aftermath

The massive Indian Ocean earthquake and resulting tsunami of December 2004 [YUN 2004, p. 952] killed 183,172 people in 12 countries. One year later, 43,320 people were still listed as missing and more than 1 million were displaced. Indonesia was the most affected country, as the coastline of its Aceh province was damaged by the initial force of the earthquake and then immediately engulfed by the tsunami. In Indonesia, Somalia and Sri Lanka, the disaster took place within the context of long-standing, complex crises, which had significant implications for the organization and delivery of humanitarian assistance. The disaster affected predominantly poor coastal communities, causing $10 billion in damages and destroying the livelihoods of some 1.4 million people, along with critical infrastructure, administrative capacity and basic services.

On 28 March 2005, a second earthquake off the island of Nias in Sumatra, measuring 8.7 on the Richter scale, left an additional 70,000 people displaced and nearly 1,000 dead.

The UN Consolidated Inter-Agency Flash Appeal for the Indian Ocean Earthquake-Tsunami 2005, covering the period from January to the end of June, sought $1.4 billion for humanitarian assistance and recovery efforts in Indonesia, Maldives, Myanmar, Seychelles, Somalia and Sri Lanka. At the Ministerial-level Meeting on Humanitarian Assistance to Tsunami-Affected Communities (Geneva, 11 January), 25 States pledged a total of $777 million towards the Flash Appeal and additional reconstruction activities. The latest available information indicated that the Appeal received 89 per cent ($1.25 billion) of the required amount.

ASEAN Declaration. On 11 January [A/59/669], Indonesia transmitted to the Secretary-General the Declaration on Action to Strengthen Emergency Relief, Rehabilitation, Reconstruction and Prevention in the Aftermath of the Earthquake and Tsunami Disaster of 26 December 2004, adopted at the special meeting of the Association of Southeast Asian Nations (ASEAN) leaders in the aftermath of the earthquake and tsunami (Jakarta, Indonesia, 6 January). The ASEAN leaders agreed to urgently mobilize additional resources to meet the needs of the victims; request the United Nations to mobilize the international community to support national emergency relief programmes; strengthen coordination and cooperation of national, regional and international relief efforts; and support the efforts of the affected countries as national coordinators to ensure an effective channelling and utilization of assistance. They also agreed to support national rehabilitation and reconstruction programmes; call on the international community to provide the necessary funds to sustain those programmes; establish a partnership involving donor countries and regional and international financial institutions to support national programmes; and promote private sector participation in rehabilitation and reconstruction efforts.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 January [meeting 79], the General Assembly adopted resolution 59/279 [draft: A/59/L.58 & Add.1, orally revised] without vote [agenda item 39].

Strengthening emergency relief, rehabilitation, reconstruction and prevention in the aftermath of the Indian Ocean tsunami disaster

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 46/182 of 19 December 1991, 57/152 of 16 December 2002, 57/256 of 20 December 2002, 58/25 of 5 December 2003, 58/214 and 58/215 of 23 December 2003, 59/212 of 20 December 2004, and 59/231 and 59/233 of 22 December 2004,

Expressing sincere condolences and deep sympathy to the victims, their families, the Governments and the peoples of those States that suffered huge losses of life and socio-economic and environmental damage from the unprecedented tsunami disaster that struck the Indian Ocean and Southeast Asian regions on 26 December 2004,

Commending the prompt response, support, generous contributions to and assistance of the international community, by Governments, civil society, the private sector and individuals, in the relief, rehabilitation and reconstruction efforts, which reflect the spirit of international solidarity and cooperation to address the disaster,

Commending also the leading role of the affected States and the role of the United Nations in addressing the disaster, and recognizing the importance of cooperation for effective mobilization, coordination and delivery of international assistance in the emergency relief phase,

Welcoming the Declaration on Action to Strengthen Emergency Relief, Rehabilitation, Reconstruction and Prevention in the Aftermath of the Earthquake and Tsunami Disaster of 26 December 2004, adopted at the special meeting of leaders of the Association of Southeast Asian Nations, held in Jakarta on 6 January 2005 in the aftermath of the earthquake and tsunami, and the pledges made by donor countries and international financial institutions for the affected countries,

Welcoming also the launching of the Indian Ocean earthquake-tsunami 2005 flash appeal by the Secretary-General to respond to the urgent and immediate needs of communities severely affected by the earthquake and tsunami and the outcome of the Ministerial-level Meeting on Humanitarian Assistance to Tsunami-affected Communities, held in Geneva on 11 January 2005,

Welcoming further the recent announcement by the Paris Club creditors that they will not expect debt payments from affected countries that request such forebearance until the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund have made a full assessment of their reconstruction and financing needs as well as specific initiatives from countries on this issue,

Welcoming the appointment by the Secretary-General of a Special Coordinator to coordinate international emergency relief operations in support of national emergency programmes of countries affected by the tsunami disaster and covered by the flash appeal,

Expressing concern over the medium- and long-term social, economic and environmental impacts of the disaster on the affected States,

Stressing the need to develop and implement risk-reduction strategies and to integrate them, where appropriate, into national development plans, in particular through the implementation of the International Strategy for Disaster Reduction, so as to enhance the resilience of populations in disasters and reduce risks to them, their livelihoods, the social and economic infrastructure and environmental resources,

Recognizing that the development of stronger institutions, mechanisms and capacities, including at the community level, that can systematically build resilience to hazards and disasters is essential to reducing the risks and the vulnerability of populations to disasters, including disaster preparedness, mitigation and early warning systems at all levels,

Recalling the need for continued commitment to assist the affected countries and their peoples, particularly the most vulnerable groups, to fully recover from the catastrophic and traumatic effects of the disaster, including in their medium- and long-term rehabilitation and reconstruction efforts, and welcoming Government and international assistance measures in this regard,

Emphasizing that disaster reduction, including reducing vulnerability to natural disasters, is an important element that contributes to the achievement of sustainable development,

Welcoming the convening of the World Conference on Disaster Reduction in Kobe, Japan, from 18 to 22 January 2005, with a view to updating the guiding framework on disaster reduction for the twenty-first century,

Noting the outcome of the International Meeting to Review the Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States, held in Mauritius from 10 to 14 January 2005,

Stressing the importance of advancing the implementation of the Plan of Implementation of the World Summit on Sustainable Development ("Johannesburg Plan of Implementation") and its relevant provisions on vulnerability, risk assessment and disaster management,

Emphasizing the importance of establishing a partnership, upon the request and with the leadership of the country concerned, involving donor countries and regional and international financial institutions as well as the private sector and civil society, to support the respective national rehabilitation and reconstruction programmes of the affected countries,

Emphasizing also the importance of international cooperation in support of the efforts of the affected States in dealing with natural disasters in all phases, including prevention, preparedness, mitigation, recovery and reconstruction, as well as in strengthening the response capacity of affected countries,

1. Expresses its deep concern at the number and scale of natural disasters and their increasing impact within recent years, which have resulted in a massive loss of life and long-term negative social, economic and environmental consequences for vulnerable societies throughout the world, in particular in developing countries;

2. Emphasizes the need for the international community to maintain its focus beyond the present emergency relief, in order to sustain the political will to support the medium- and long-term rehabilitation, reconstruction and risk reduction efforts led by the Governments of the affected countries at all levels;

3. Welcomes the effective cooperation between the affected States, relevant bodies in the United Nations system, donor countries, regional and international financial institutions and civil society in the coordination and delivery of emergency relief, and stresses the need to continue such cooperation and delivery throughout the ongoing relief operations and rehabilitation and reconstruction efforts, in a manner that reduces vulnerability to future natural hazards;

4. Encourages the international community, particularly donor countries, international financial institutions and relevant international organizations, as well as the private sector and civil society, to deliver swiftly on their pledges and to continue to provide the necessary funds and assistance to support the rehabilitation and reconstruction efforts;

5. Welcomes the increasing efforts to further enhance transparency and accountability with respect to the channelling and utilization of resources;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to appoint a special representative in order to, inter alia, sustain the political will of the international community to support medium- and long-term rehabilitation, reconstruction and risk reduction efforts led by the Governments of affected countries at all levels;

7. Also requests the Secretary-General to explore ways to further strengthen the rapid response capacities for immediate humanitarian relief efforts of the international community, building on the existing arrangements and ongoing initiatives, including the consideration of "standby arrangements" under the auspices of the United Nations;

8. Invites the World Bank and the Asian Development Bank, in collaboration with other international and regional financial institutions and the United Nations, to convene members of the international community, including affected countries, to address the medium- and long-term rehabilitation and reconstruction needs of the affected countries;

9. Recognizes the importance of the decision by the Association of Southeast Asian Nations to establish regional mechanisms on disaster prevention, preparedness and mitigation, encourages regional cooperation in this regard, and urges donor countries and regional and international organizations as well as other relevant institutions to provide, where appropriate, financial and technical assistance;

10. Also recognizes the importance of the promotion of public education, awareness and community participation in disaster prevention and preparedness, particularly at the local level, as well as the pressing need to develop and promote national and regional capacity and access to technology and knowledge in building and managing a regional early warning system and in disaster management, through national and regional efforts as well as through international cooperation and partnership;

11. Emphasizes the urgent need for the establishment of a regional early warning system, particularly for tsunamis, in the Indian Ocean and Southeast Asian regions, and notes the interest expressed by some Governments, bodies and organizations, including the Asian Disaster Preparedness Centre, to support the establishment of this system;

12. Welcomes the proposed convening of a regional ministerial meeting on regional cooperation with regard to a tsunami early warning system, to be held in Thailand on 28 January 2005;

13. Also welcomes the proposal of Germany to host a third international early warning conference, covering the complete range of natural hazards, with a focus on the urgent implementation of early warning systems for hydro-meteorological and geological hazards on a global scale;

14. Further welcomes the fact that the World Conference on Disaster Reduction will discuss the issue of a global and regional tsunami early warning system as part of its agenda;

15. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its sixtieth session on the implementation of the present resolution under the item entitled "Strengthening of the coordination of humanitarian and disaster relief assistance of the United Nations, including special economic assistance" and to report to the Economic and Social Council at its substantive session in 2005.

Ministerial Declaration. The Ministerial Meeting on Regional Cooperation on Tsunami Early Warning Arrangements (Phuket, Thailand, 28-29 January), which included the participation of ministers and special envoys from 42 countries and the European Commission, adopted the Phuket Ministerial Declaration on Regional Cooperation on Tsunami Early Warning Arrangements. The Declaration committed participants to the early realization of an effective, real-time warning arrangement covering the Indian Ocean and South-East Asia. To that end, the participants would take immediate and practical steps to enhance early warning capabilities and cooperate towards the establishment of interim early warning arrangements and the strengthening of national systems. They would develop a system for, and undertake, the timely sharing of early warning information among their respective agencies and national centres, and establish timelines for implementing the elements for a regional tsunami early warning arrangement by mid-2006. The participants created an open-ended steering/coordinating group to promote implementation of the Declaration and made recommendations for further action. They welcomed the establishment of the Multi-donor Voluntary Trust Fund on Tsunami Early Warning Arrangements in the Indian Ocean and Southeast Asia, with the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific (ESCAP) as administrator, and Thailand's pledge of $10 million in seed money.

Report of World Tourism Organization. In February [E/2005/48], the World Tourism Organization (UNWTO) (see p. 1595), reporting on its post-tsunami actions, stated that its Emergency Task Force, composed of senior tourism officials, industry leaders, high-level tourism experts and representatives of regional and international institutions, met (Phuket, Thailand, 31 January) to assess the damage caused by the tsunami and prepare a draft global tourism recovery action plan. The Phuket Action Plan, adopted by an extraordinary emergency session of the UNWTO Executive Council (Phuket, 1 February), focused on saving tourism jobs, relaunching small and medium-sized tourism enterprises, training or retraining the tourism workforce, repositioning tourism to be more sustainable and less vulnerable, and restoring consumer confidence in the affected tourism destinations. In collaboration with the international community, UNWTO initiated action to implement the Plan, including communications campaigns and workshops on risk management and repositioning tourism products.

A second meeting of the Emergency Task Force (Berlin, 10 March), convened to review progress towards the implementation of the Action Plan, announced that the tourism industry in the affected regions experienced a swifter than expected return to business. In its 2005 report "Tsunami: One Year On—A Summary of the Phuket Action Plan", UNWTO stated that it had earmarked over 40 Action Plan projects, the majority of which were completed.

By decision 2005/223 of 15 July, the Economic and Social Council took note of the Secretary-General's note transmitting UNWTO's report on its post-tsunami actions.

Earth Observation Summit communiqué. The Third Earth Observation Summit (Brussels, Belgium, 16 February) adopted the "Communiqué relating to support for tsunami and multi-hazard warning systems within the context of the Global Earth Observation System of Systems". In the Communiqué, the Group on Earth Observations (GEO) was asked to support the expansion of multi-hazard capabilities for disaster reduction at national, regional and international levels, within the framework of the International Strategy for Disaster Reduction [YUN 1999, p. 859], by recognizing and building on existing and developing capabilities. GEO was also asked to support the UNESCO Intergovernmental Oceanographic Commission and related national and regional initiatives to realize effective tsunami warning systems in the Indian Ocean and elsewhere, as an integral part of a multi-hazard approach supported by the Global Earth Observation System of Systems.

Asian-African Leaders' Statement. In the Joint African-Asian Leaders' Statement on Tsunami, Earthquake and Other Natural Disasters, adopted at the Asian-African Summit 2005 (Jakarta and Bandung, Indonesia, 22-24 April) [A/59/841], participating Heads of State and Government agreed to establish an integrated strategy for the development of a multi-nodal early warning system with mechanisms for preparedness, prevention, mitigation and response, and to establish and upgrade national early warning systems.

Report of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 59/279 (see p. 1024), the Secretary-General submitted a June report [A/60/86-E/2005/77] on strengthening emergency relief, rehabilitation, reconstruction, recovery and prevention in the aftermath of the Indian Ocean tsunami. The report highlighted key issues that had emerged from the tsunami recovery effort and lessons learned in the areas of national ownership and leadership, response capacity, coordination tactics and tools, resource mobilization, and displacement and protection of affected populations.

Following requests for assistance by the Governments of tsunami-affected countries, five UN Disaster Assessment and Coordination teams composed of 44 disaster-response experts from 18 countries and four international organizations were deployed to five of those countries. Sixteen UN agencies, 18 International Federation of Red Cross and Red Crescent Societies (IFRC) response teams, more than 160 international NGOs and countless private companies and civil society groups deployed to affected areas to provide emergency food, water and medical services. Some 35 countries provided military assets for the relief effort and the United Nations deployed civil-military coordination officers to key locations in the region. The disaster generated the contribution of more resources over a shorter period of time than any other crisis. The United Nations estimated that $6.8 billion had been pledged at the time of the report, some of which had been channelled through the UN Consolidated Inter-Agency Flash Appeal (see p. 994); media reports indicated that at least another $1 billion was contributed by private donors. Immediately following the disaster, the Secretary-General appointed the Deputy Emergency Relief Coordinator, Margareta Wahlstrom, as the Special Coordinator for humanitarian assistance to tsunami-affected communities.

Six months after the disaster, the immediate survival needs of those directly affected had been addressed. However, continuous seismic activity in the region caused further death and damage, slowed recovery efforts and continued to take a psychological toll on the population. It was clear that significant humanitarian needs would persist for many months. The Governments of several of the affected countries, in partnership with the World Bank, the Asian Development Bank and the United Nations, finalized medium- and long-term recovery and reconstruction plans.

To facilitate support for and implementation of national plans, the Secretary-General, in January, appointed former United States President William J. Clinton as his Special Envoy for Tsunami Recovery. The Special Envoy visited affected countries in May to assess progress in launching the recovery process. He also convened the Global Consortium for Tsunami-Affected Countries (New York, 3 June), which brought together affected Governments, UN agencies, international organizations and financial institutions, and NGOs to improve coordination among the main actors, particularly at the country level; facilitate the implementation of individual countries' reconstruction plans; and instil common transparency and accountability measures. The Consortium met again in Washington, D.C., on 22 September.

The Secretary-General recommended that the United Nations, Governments, and other members of the international community work to improve structures for national and international field response to major, sudden-onset emergencies; develop regional response capacity; build coherence within the civil-military response; invest in early warning and preparedness; enhance the coordination and capacity of the UN system for recovery; promote financial transparency and accountability; commit to reducing vulnerability and risk; and promote research and learning to guide recovery activities.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 November [meeting 52], the General Assembly adopted resolution 60/15 [draft: A/60/L.20 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 73].

Strengthening emergency relief, rehabilitation, reconstruction and prevention in the aftermath of the Indian Ocean tsunami disaster

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 46/182 of 19 December 1991, 57/152 of 16 December 2002, 57/256 of 20 December 2002, 58/25 of 5 December 2003, 58/214 and 58/215 of 23 December 2003, 59/212 of 20 December 2004, 59/231 and 59/233 of 22 December 2004 and 59/279 of 19 January 2005,

Commending the prompt response, continued support, generous assistance and contributions of the international community, by Governments, civil society, the private sector and individuals, in the relief, rehabilitation and reconstruction efforts, which reflect the spirit of international solidarity and cooperation to address the disaster,

Noting the Declaration on Action to Strengthen Emergency Relief, Rehabilitation, Reconstruction and Prevention in the Aftermath of the Earthquake and Tsunami Disaster of 26 December 2004, adopted at the special meeting of leaders of the Association of Southeast Asian Nations, held in Jakarta on 6 January 2005,

Recalling the Hyogo Declaration and the Hyogo Framework for Action 2005-2015, as well as the common statement of the special session on the Indian Ocean disaster, adopted at the World Conference on Disaster Reduction, held in Kobe, Hyogo, Japan, from 18 to 22 January 2005,

Noting the communiqué relating to support for tsunami and multihazard warning systems within the context of the Global Earth Observation System of Systems, adopted at the third Earth Observation Summit, in Brussels, on 16 February 2005,

Taking note of the joint Asian-African leaders' statement on tsunami, earthquake and other natural disasters, adopted at the Asian-African Summit 2005, held in Jakarta on 22 and 23 April 2005,

Also taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on strengthening emergency relief, rehabilitation, reconstruction, recovery and prevention in the aftermath of the Indian Ocean tsunami disaster,

Welcoming the appointment of Mr. William Jefferson Clinton, former President of the United States of America, as the Secretary-General's Special Envoy for Tsunami Recovery and the establishment of the Global Consortium for Tsunami-Affected Countries to sustain the political will of the international community to support medium- and long-term rehabilitation, reconstruction and risk reduction efforts led by the Governments of affected countries,

Taking note with appreciation of the convening of the Global Consortium for Tsunami-Affected Countries in June and September 2005, aimed at improving coordination among relevant stakeholders and developing a common online tracking system and common indicators to monitor and evaluate the impact of tsunami relief and rehabilitation programmes, which emphasizes the need to promote national ownership of the tracking processes in tsunami-affected countries,

Welcoming ongoing efforts by the international system to capture, consolidate and disseminate lessons learned from the tsunami response and recovery to guide future disaster management at all levels,

Welcoming also the establishment of the Multi-Donor Voluntary Trust Fund on Tsunami Early Warning Arrangements in the Indian Ocean and Southeast Asia, which will contribute to setting up an early warning system and to building up the capacity of the region in dealing with natural disasters,

Welcoming further the proposed convening of a Third International Conference on Early Warning, in Bonn, Germany, from 27 to 29 March 2006, covering the complete range of natural hazards, with a focus on the urgent implementation of early warning systems for hydrometeorological and geological hazards on a global scale,

Stressing the need to develop and implement risk reduction strategies and to integrate them, where appropriate, into national development plans, in particular through the implementation of the International Strategy for Disaster Reduction, so as to enhance the resilience of populations in disasters and reduce risks to them, their livelihoods, the social and economic infrastructure and environmental resources,

Emphasizing that disaster reduction, including reducing vulnerability to natural disasters, is an important element that contributes to the achievement of sustainable development,

Stressing the need for continued commitment to assist the affected countries and their peoples, particularly the most vulnerable groups, to fully recover from the catastrophic and traumatic effects of the disaster, including in their medium- and long-term rehabilitation and reconstruction efforts, and welcoming Government and international assistance measures in this regard,

1. Notes with appreciation the efforts by the Governments of affected countries to complete the emergency relief phase and move forward to the rehabilitation and reconstruction phase, as well as in enhancing financial transparency and accountability with respect to the channelling and utilization of resources, including, as appropriate, through the involvement of international public auditors;

2. Takes note with appreciation of the work of Mr. William Jefferson Clinton, former President of the United States of America, the Secretary-General's Special Envoy for Tsunami Recovery, and his various initiatives, and encourages his efforts to continue sustaining the political will of the international community, particularly regional and international financial institutions, civil society and the private sector, to support medium- and long-term rehabilitation, reconstruction and risk reduction efforts led by the Governments of affected countries;

3. Encourages donor countries and international and regional financial institutions, as well as the private sector and civil society, to strengthen partnerships and to continue supporting the medium- and long-term rehabilitation and reconstruction needs of the affected countries, including through the swift delivery of pledges made by donors;

4. Emphasizes the need to promote transparency and accountability among donors and recipient countries by means of, inter alia, a unified financial and sectoral information online tracking system—a development assistance database—with the support and participation of the Global Consortium for Tsunami-Affected Countries, and highlights the importance of timely and accurate information on assessed needs and the sources and uses of funds;

5. Encourages the continued effective coordination among the Governments of affected countries, relevant bodies of the United Nations system, international organizations, donor countries, regional and international financial institutions, civil society and private sectors involved in relief, rehabilitation and reconstruction efforts, in order to ensure adequate response to the remaining humanitarian needs and effective implementation of existing joint programmes and to prevent unnecessary duplication, as well as to reduce vulnerability to future natural hazards;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to strengthen the United Nations institutional mechanism and capacities in support of national and local authorities for the coordination of tsunami disaster recovery efforts;

7. Reaffirms that all regional efforts should serve the purpose of strengthening international cooperation aimed at the creation of a global multihazard early warning system, including the newly established Indian Ocean Tsunami Warning and Mitigation System;

8. Stresses the need for the development of stronger institutions, mechanisms and capacities at the regional, national and local levels, as affirmed in the Hyogo Declaration and the Hyogo Framework for Action 2005-2015, as well as through the promotion of public education, awareness and community participation, in order to systematically build resilience to hazards and disasters, as well as reduce the risks and the vulnerability of populations to disasters, particularly in developing countries;

9. Urges Governments and the United Nations system, in planning for disaster preparedness and responding to natural disasters, and implementing recovery, rehabilitation and reconstruction efforts, to integrate a gender perspective and to ensure that women take an active and equal role in all phases of disaster management;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to explore ways to strengthen the rapid response capacities of the international community to provide immediate humanitarian relief, building on existing arrangements and ongoing initiatives;

11. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its sixty-first session on the implementation of the present resolution under the item entitled "Strengthening of the coordination of humanitarian and disaster relief assistance of the United Nations, including special economic assistance", through the Economic and Social Council at its substantive session in 2006.

Report of Special Envoy. In December [A/60/664], the Special Envoy for Tsunami Recovery reported on the status of the recovery effort in the affected countries, including India, Indonesia, Malaysia, Maldives, Myanmar, Seychelles, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Thailand and the United Republic of Tanzania. The recovery process was in its early phase, but much had been achieved in the first year, including the construction of transitional shelter, temporary schools and health clinics. Work on longer-term reconstruction was well under way, with permanent schools, highways and ports, and homes under construction across the region. The establishment of a regional early warning system was also progressing well. While significant progress was made in all the most affected countries, many hurdles remained. A major task for 2006 would be to sustain the level of commitment that had defined the international response up to that point.

The report also discussed key lessons learned with regard to coordination; national leadership in recovery; accountability and transparency; measuring recovery progress; disaster reduction and preparedness; the restoration of livelihoods and the economy; equity in recovery; and political reconciliation, reform and recovery. The Special Envoy said that affected Governments had to ensure that their national recovery plans incorporated disaster risk reduction and "building back better" objectives, with timelines for progress. All agencies, including UN agencies, should support national efforts and continue to give the tsunami recovery operation the institutional attention it deserved.

Other disaster assistance

Angola

In March, an epidemic of Marburg haemorrhagic fever was declared in Angola. By late June, 354 deaths out of 392 reported cases had been recorded, making the epidemic the deadliest and most intense Marburg fever outbreak ever. There was no cure, and in the case of the Angola outbreak, the virus was lethal in 90 per cent of the cases. The majority of the cases were concentrated in Uige province. The number of alert, suspect and confirmed cases was expected to increase as surveillance and reporting mechanisms improved. The Angolan Ministry of Health, which was responsible for coordinating the national response to the epidemic, was constrained by a lack of equipment and supplies, trained personnel and information systems to find cases and trace contacts.

The UN Consolidated Inter-Agency Flash Appeal for Angola was established to address the priority needs of case management; surveillance and epidemiology; social mobilization, risk reduction and health education; and logistics. The Appeal sought $4 million for the period from April to June, 78 per cent ($3.2 million) of which was received.

Benin

Elections held in Togo on 24 April sparked unrest in the border town of Aného, which in turn led to movements of people across the Mono River into Benin, beginning on 25 April. As at 5 May, 11,458 refugees, including 5,536 children, had entered Benin, 3,790 of whom were located at sites and camps in Hillacondji, Comé and Lokossa and 7,668 in Mono and Cotonou, the capital.

The UN Consolidated Inter-Agency Flash Appeal for Benin was aimed at supporting Government and civil society efforts to deal with the presence of 20,000 refugees in the country for the period from May to October. The Appeal sought $5.9 million and received 64 per cent ($3.8 million) of that amount.

Central America

El Salvador

In early October, El Salvador experienced two convergent and simultaneous emergency situations. One of the country's largest volcanoes, Ilamatepec, erupted on 1 October, causing damage and injuries up to 4 kilometres away, with ash falling in a much wider radius. Initially, 4,850 people were evacuated from the vicinity of the volcano following the first eruption and a second eruption, which occurred on 3 October. At the same time, heavy rains, in part brought on by the residual impact of Hurricanes Rita and Stan, caused flooding and deadly mud- and rockslides. By 6 October, 54,308 persons had been evacuated and it was estimated that the total at-risk population stood at 160,485. The death toll from the two emergencies had reached 65.

The Joint UN Agency Appeal in El Salvador sought $13.7 million to be used by seven UN agencies, programmes and funds in their relief efforts. Of that total, 27 per cent ($3.7 million) was received.

Guatemala

In Guatemala, from 4 to 9 October, heavy rains brought by Hurricane Stan caused flooding and over 900 landslides in the southern coastal and western highlands regions, resulting in loss of life, injury and displacement of persons, as well as damage to housing and infrastructure, in 251 of 331 municipalities in 15 of the country's 22 departments. Preliminary information indicated that 652 people were killed and 130,179 were affected, particularly indigenous women and children in poor and isolated communities. The most vulnerable communities lost their livelihoods and incomes and faced precarious survival conditions in the subsequent months.

The UN Consolidated Inter-Agency Flash Appeal for Guatemala, launched in October for a period of six months, was intended to cover key actions in the areas of water, sanitation and hygiene; food security; shelter and non-food items; health services; communication and access to services; and inter-agency coordination and support. It sought $31.9 million, of which 69 per cent ($21.9 million) was received.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December [meeting 68], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/60/496 & Corr.1 & 2], adopted resolution 60/220 without vote [agenda item 73 (b)].

Humanitarian assistance and rehabilitation for El Salvador and Guatemala

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 53/1 B of 5 October 1998, 53/1 C of 2 November 1998, 54/96 E of 15 December 1999, 58/117 of 17 December 2003, 59/212 of 20 December 2004, and 59/231 and 59/233 of 22 December 2004,

Reiterating the need for the United Nations system to respond to requests for assistance by Member States and for humanitarian assistance to be provided in accordance with the principles of humanity, neutrality and impartiality,

Deeply regretting the loss of human lives and the scores of victims in the wake of Tropical Storm Stan, aggravated by other natural events, in El Salvador and Guatemala, from 3 to 12 October 2005,

Conscious of the huge material losses sustained to crops, homes, basic infrastructure and tourist and other areas,

Acknowledging the efforts of the Governments of El Salvador and Guatemala to protect the lives of their nationals and rapidly to assist the affected population, in particular the indigenous communities,

Conscious that the Central American countries are vulnerable to cyclical weather patterns and prone to natural hazards based on their geographical location and features, which impose additional challenges on their ability to achieve the Millennium Development Goals,

Noting the enormous effort that will be required to rebuild the affected areas and to alleviate the grave situation wreaked by these natural hazards,

Aware that the work of reconstruction requires the fullest coordinated support as well as the unwavering solidarity of the international community,

1. Expresses its solidarity and support to the Governments and the peoples of El Salvador and Guatemala;

2. Expresses its appreciation to the members of the international community that have offered their support to the rescue efforts and emergency assistance for the affected population;

3. Appeals to all Member States and all organs and bodies of the United Nations system, as well as international financial institutions and development agencies, to provide speedy support to the relief, rehabilitation and assistance effort for the affected countries;

4. Calls upon the international community to provide assistance in response to the flash appeal for Guatemala and to the joint United Nations agency appeal in El Salvador;

5. Acknowledges the efforts and progress made by El Salvador and Guatemala in strengthening their disaster-preparedness capacity, emphasizes the importance of investing in disaster risk reduction, and encourages the international community to cooperate with the Governments of El Salvador and Guatemala towards this end;

6. Requests the Secretary-General and all organs and bodies of the United Nations system, as well as international financial institutions and development agencies, to assist El Salvador and Guatemala, whenever possible, through continued effective humanitarian, technical and financial assistance that contributes to overcoming the emergency and achieving the rehabilitation and recovery of the economy and the affected population in the short, medium and long term, in conformity with the priorities identified at the national level;

7. Requests the relevant organs and organizations of the United Nations system and other multilateral organizations to increase their support and assistance for strengthening the disaster-preparedness capacity of the countries concerned;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly, through the Economic and Social Council, at the humanitarian affairs segment of its substantive session of 2006, on the implementation of the present resolution and on the progress made in the relief, rehabilitation and reconstruction efforts of the affected countries.

Djibouti

In 2005, Djibouti faced a severe food crisis in five out of six rural zones as a consequence of three consecutive failed rainy seasons and worsening drought conditions. Delayed rains and erratic rainfall patterns were insufficient to replenish water catchments or regenerate pastures, forcing pastoralists to continue seasonal grazing in coastal areas of Djibouti beyond the restorative capacities of the land. Consequently, pasture was overgrazed and exhausted in most areas.

Djibouti instituted policy measures to relieve high food prices and was working with the United Nations to increase access to food and water for the most vulnerable. However, with the remaining resources available to pastoralists depleted, the Government requested supplementary international assistance. Immediate needs included: food aid for 47,500 people; water for 18,000 people; supplementary feeding for 9,500 malnourished children; mobile health services for 5,000 people; animal feed, water and emergency veterinary care for 50,000 head of livestock; and support for disaster management structures at the national and local levels.

The UN Consolidated Inter-Agency Flash Appeal for Djibouti requested $7.49 million to cover requirements for a period of six months, beginning in April; it received 34 per cent ($2.6 million) of that amount.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December [meeting 68], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/60/496 & Corr.1, 2], adopted resolution 60/217 without vote [agenda item 73 (b)].

Economic assistance for the reconstruction and development of Djibouti

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 58/116 of 17 December 2003 and its previous resolutions on economic assistance to Djibouti,

Recalling also the United Nations Millennium Declaration,

Recalling further the Brussels Declaration and the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the Decade 2001-2010, adopted by the Third United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries on 20 May 2001, as well as the mutual commitments undertaken on that occasion and the importance attached to the follow-up to and implementation of the Programme of Action,

Aware that Djibouti is included in the list of the least developed countries and that it is ranked one hundred fiftieth out of the one hundred seventy-seven countries studied in the Human Development Report 2005,

Noting that the economic and social development efforts of Djibouti are constrained by the extreme local climate conditions, in particular severe droughts and flash floods, and that the implementation of reconstruction and development programmes requires the deployment of substantial resources which exceed the limited capacity of the country,

Noting also that the situation in Djibouti has been made worse by the disastrous drought situation prevailing in the Horn of Africa and by the absence of natural resources, which continue to place serious constraints on the fragile economic, budgetary, social and administrative infrastructure of the country,

Expressing its concern at the severe shortage of drinkable water and the severe food crisis, as reflected in the report of the Secretary-General,

Noting that the Government of Djibouti has implemented a reform programme, including the approval of a poverty reduction strategy paper with the Bretton Woods institutions,

Noting with gratitude the support provided by various countries, as well as intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, to meet the humanitarian needs of the country,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Declares its solidarity with the Government and the people of Djibouti, who continue to face critical developmental and humanitarian challenges owing to the scarcity of natural resources, coupled with harsh climatic conditions, including the acute issue of water supply and the severe food crisis impacting on the development aspirations of the country;

3. Encourages the Government of Djibouti, despite difficult economic and regional realities, to continue its important efforts towards the consolidation of democracy, the promotion of good governance, accountability and the eradication of poverty;

4. Notes the implementation of a reform programme and the adoption and endorsement of a poverty reduction strategy paper by Djibouti, encourages the Government of Djibouti to continue to work towards the attainment of the goals outlined in the poverty reduction strategy paper, and, in that context, appeals to all Governments, international financial institutions, the specialized agencies and non-governmental organizations to respond adequately to the financial and material needs of the country in line with the poverty reduction strategy;

5. Expresses its gratitude to the intergovernmental organizations and the specialized agencies of the United Nations for their contributions to the national rehabilitation of Djibouti, and encourages them to continue their efforts;

6. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for his continued efforts to make the international community aware of the difficulties faced by Djibouti, and welcomes his coordinated response to the financial and technical needs of Djibouti and the process of aligning the United Nations Development Assistance Framework to the Djibouti poverty reduction strategy through the United Nations Development Assistance Framework midterm review of 2003-2007;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to continue, in close cooperation with the Government of Djibouti, his efforts to mobilize the resources necessary for an effective programme of financial, technical and material assistance to Djibouti;

8. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its sixty-second session on the progress made in the implementation of the present resolution.

Ethiopia

In Ethiopia, to differentiate between the chronically and acutely food-insecure populations, two complementary action plans were developed in 2004: the 2005 humanitarian appeal to address the acute needs of the food-insecure population; and the Productive Safety Net Programme providing longer-term food security needs for approximately 5 million chronically food-insecure people with assistance in the form of cash or food for labour.

The humanitarian joint appeal intended to meet humanitarian needs for 7.8 million people was updated in May 2005 with a request for $345.2 million, including $240 million for food and $105.2 million in non-food assistance. An additional 471,510 beneficiaries would require food aid for the second half of 2005 due to localized failure of the mid-year harvest, and from August to December 2005, approximately 3.3 million people would continue to require emergency relief assistance. Extensive flooding in May affected an additional 55,000 vulnerable people in the Somali, Oromiya and Southern Nations, Nationalities and People's Regions. Conflict and ethnic tensions also caused displacement in eastern Oromiya and in the Somali and Gambella regions. Many IDPs in Gambella were left without food and other basic items due to limited access and lack of recognition and support.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December [meeting 68], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/60/496 & Corr.1, 2], adopted resolution 60/218 without vote [agenda item 73 (b)].

Humanitarian assistance and rehabilitation for Ethiopia

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 58/24 of 5 December 2003 on emergency humanitarian assistance to Ethiopia and 59/217 of 22 December 2004,

Recalling also the initiatives of the Secretary-General to improve food security, including the appointment of the Special Envoy for the Humanitarian Crisis in the Horn of Africa,

Concerned by the recurrent drought, which still affects millions owing to the serious crop failures in drought-prone parts of the country and the pastoralist areas that have weak infrastructures and low development capacities,

Bearing in mind the joint 2005 appeal of the United Nations and the Government of Ethiopia for emergency assistance for Ethiopia, to respond to the food and non-food requirements of households in need so as to prevent the worsening of the current humanitarian crisis,

Noting with serious concern the significant and persistent humanitarian needs in such areas as health, water and acute malnutrition that still exist in parts of the country,

Noting with serious concern also the dire humanitarian situation and its long-term socio-economic and environmental impacts,

Recognizing that the persistent problem of food insecurity is linked to inadequate progress in achieving and sustaining rural growth at levels required to build household and community assets needed to manage through the various shocks that induce food crises,

Welcoming the launch of the Productive Safety Nets Programme in 2005,

Emphasizing the need to address the crisis, bearing in mind the importance of the transition from relief to development, and acknowledging the underlying structural causes of recurrent drought in Ethiopia,

Recognizing that the main responsibility for improving the humanitarian situation and creating conditions for long-term development lies with the Government of Ethiopia, while bearing in mind the important role played by the international community,

Emphasizing the importance of establishing a strong early warning system for both food and non-food needs in order to better predict and respond as early as possible to disasters and to minimize their consequences,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Welcomes the coordinated and collaborative efforts of the Government of Ethiopia, agencies, funds and programmes of the United Nations system, the donor community, non-governmental organizations and other entities, and their timely and generous response to the joint 2005 appeal so far, and, in this regard, encourages the international community to strengthen its response to non-food assistance;

3. Also welcomes the efforts of the Government of Ethiopia, the international community and civil society, including non-governmental organizations, to strengthen mechanisms already in place to respond to such emergency situations, expresses appreciation of their endeavours to increase the availability of food through the procurement of local produce and to ensure access of households in need to food, health and water facilities, sanitation, seeds and veterinary services, and strongly encourages the Government of Ethiopia to continue such efforts;

4. Stresses the need to address the underlying causes of food insecurity, and issues of recovery, asset protection and the sustainable development of the affected areas, welcomes in this regard the programme prepared by the Coalition for Food Security in Ethiopia, and encourages the international community to support the Coalition in realizing its main objective, namely, breaking the cycle of food aid dependency within the next three to five years, thereby enabling fifteen million vulnerable people to engage in sustainable productive activities;

5. Welcomes the Group of Eight action plan on ending the cycle of famine in the Horn of Africa, and looks forward to its full implementation;

6. Encourages the Government of Ethiopia to continue to strengthen its efforts to address the underlying structural causes of recurrent threats of drought as part of its overall economic development programme;

7. Calls upon all development partners, in cooperation with the Government of Ethiopia, to integrate relief efforts with recovery, asset protection and long-term development, including the structural and productive options needed to stimulate accelerated rural growth, and to address the underlying causes of recurrent drought in Ethiopia in a way that is, inter alia, in line with the poverty reduction strategy paper and the rural development strategy, bearing in mind the need to prevent such crises in the future and to improve the resilience of the population;

8. Welcomes the launch of the Productive Safety Nets Programme at the beginning of 2005, and emphasizes the importance of its effective implementation and its complementarity and coordination with activities undertaken in the context of the joint 2005 appeal of the United Nations and the Government of Ethiopia for emergency assistance for Ethiopia as well as with other food security operations;

9. Welcomes the initiative taken by the Secretary-General in appointing the Special Envoy for the Humanitarian Crisis in the Horn of Africa, with the objective of mobilizing resources to address the root causes of food insecurity as well as the sustainable development of the affected areas;

10. Invites the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat to continue its efforts to coordinate and develop a strategic response to recurrent humanitarian needs in Ethiopia and to consider ways to enhance the mobilization of emergency relief assistance in order to cover the remaining humanitarian needs in Ethiopia;

11. Takes note of the report on evaluation of the response to the 2002-2003 emergency in Ethiopia prepared jointly by the Government of Ethiopia and humanitarian partners, and urges the Government of Ethiopia, donors and all other stakeholders to continue to implement the recommendations contained therein;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its sixty-second session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Guyana

In January, torrential rains in Guyana caused serious flooding in the densely populated coastal area, affecting around 300,000 people. Thousands were forced to flee their homes in the capital city of Georgetown and coastal villages, and many families were trapped in their homes. Three weeks after the peak of the emergency, an estimated 92,000 people still had water in their homes, and the water level remained as high as 1.2 to 1.5 metres in some villages. Disease was a major threat, as poor sanitation, waste management and vector proliferation had rendered the waters highly infectious. The crisis had a serious impact on the normal coping mechanisms of families and communities, as many of the worst affected areas were also among the poorest.

The UN Consolidated Inter-Agency Flash Appeal for Guyana was established to address the country's humanitarian and community recovery needs for a period of six months, beginning in February. It sought $2.6 million and received 30 per cent ($779,730) of that amount.

Malawi

In Malawi, inadequate rainfall and insufficient access to agricultural inputs during the 2004-2005 season resulted in the country's worst food crisis since 1994. Approximately 4.2 million people were unable to meet their minimum food requirements from September 2005 until the next harvest in March 2006. Underlying the crisis were the mutually reinforcing factors of chronic poverty and a high prevalence of HIV/AIDS, compounded by poor general health conditions and malnutrition. Those factors, coupled with repeated shocks throughout the preceding five years, had exhausted the coping mechanisms of the most vulnerable households.

The UN Consolidated Inter-Agency Flash Appeal for Malawi was considered a "smart appeal", as it requested international support for Government leadership to address immediate humanitarian needs and action to minimize the likelihood of another food-shortage crisis the following year, through the distribution of subsidized or free seed and fertilizer. The Appeal was launched for $73.8 million to cover the period from September 2005 to March 2006, and it received 78 per cent ($57.8 million) of that amount.

Niger

In the Niger, the combined effect of drought and the 2004 desert locust infestation [YUN 2004, p. 941] negatively affected pasture and cereal production, compounding the structural factors of population growth, non-sustainable farming and the raising of livestock in an unpredictable environment. Nutritional surveys and food security data pointed to a critical situation in the Tillabéri, Tahoua, Maradi, Diffa, Agadez and Zinder regions. Subregional conflicts hindered the migration of labour that had always been the main coping mechanism during the lean season. Of the Niger's 12 million inhabitants, 3.6 million were adversely affected by the food crisis, of whom 2.5 million were thought to be extremely vulnerable and in need of food assistance. An estimated 32,000 children were severely malnourished and 160,000 were moderately malnourished.

The UN Consolidated Inter-Agency Flash Appeal for Niger covered the period from May to September and was later extended to December. It requested $81.4 million, of which 73 per cent was received ($59.2 million).

South Asia earthquake

On 8 October, an earthquake registering 7.6 on the Richter scale struck South Asia, totally devastating parts of northern Pakistan, India and Afghanistan. Close to 75,000 people were killed, an equal number injured, and more than 3 million left homeless. The earthquake affected the entire area of Pakistan-administered Kashmir and North-West Frontier Province, home to 4.5 million, wiping out hundreds of towns and villages and destroying the infrastructure. It was estimated that over 2 million people required life-saving assistance, including winterized shelter, medical care, food, water and sanitation facilities.

The UN Consolidated Inter-Agency Flash Appeal for South Asia, launched on 11 October and revised following the Conference on Assistance to Communities Affected by the Earthquake in South Asia (Geneva, 26 October), sought $561.3 million in assistance for a six-month period, beginning on 11 October. It received 67 per cent ($374.2 million) of that amount.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 November [meeting 52], the General Assembly adopted resolution 60/13 [draft: A/60/L.18 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 73].

Strengthening emergency relief, rehabilitation, reconstruction and prevention in the aftermath of the South Asian earthquake disaster—Pakistan

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 46/182 of 19 December 1991, 57/152 of 16 December 2002, 57/256 of 20 December 2002, 58/25 of 5 December 2003, 58/214 and 58/215 of 23 December 2003, 59/212 of 20 December 2004, 59/231 and 59/233 of 22 December 2004 and 59/279 of 19 January 2005,

Expressing sincere condolences and deep sympathy to the victims, their families and the people of Pakistan, India, Afghanistan and other affected areas, who suffered huge losses of life and socio-economic and environmental damage from the massive earthquake that struck the South Asian region on 8 October 2005,

Deeply alarmed over the critical condition of millions of homeless and countless injured awaiting immediate response in desperation and pain, which is accentuated by extreme weather and difficult terrain,

Welcoming the assistance and contributions of the international community, including Governments, international organizations, civil society and the private sector, in the relief and rehabilitation efforts, which reflect the spirit of international solidarity and cooperation to address and meet the challenges of the disaster, and in this context also appreciating the role of the people and Government of Pakistan,

Welcoming also the launching of the South Asia earthquake 2005 flash appeal by the United Nations on 11 October 2005 and the continuous engagement by the Secretary-General to escalate the global relief efforts for the urgent and immediate needs of the affected people,

Welcoming further the convening by the United Nations of a high-level ministerial donors meeting in Geneva on 26 October 2005 to generate further relief assistance and support for recovery from the disaster,

Stressing the need to incorporate risk reduction approaches into development policies and recovery programmes, as set out in the Hyogo Framework for Action 2005-2015,

Recalling the need for continued commitment to assist the affected countries and their peoples, particularly the most vulnerable groups, to fully recover from the catastrophic and traumatic effects of the disaster, including in their medium- and long-term rehabilitation and reconstruction efforts, and welcoming measures announced by the Government of Pakistan and by the international agencies in this regard,

Emphasizing the importance of international cooperation in support of the efforts of the affected States in dealing with natural disasters and hazards in all phases, including prevention, preparedness, mitigation, recovery and reconstruction, as well as in strengthening the response capacity of affected countries,

1. Expresses its sympathy to the people affected by the earthquake in South Asia;

2. Emphasizes the need to give particular attention to helping the affected population, especially orphans and widows, in their physical and psychological trauma and to provide immediate medical assistance, in particular with regard to the vaccination of children and to long-term rehabilitation;

3. Also emphasizes the need for the international community to maintain its focus beyond the present emergency relief, in order to sustain the political will to support the medium- and long-term rehabilitation, reconstruction and risk reduction efforts led by the Government of Pakistan and other affected States at all levels;

4. Welcomes the effective cooperation between the authorities of Pakistan and the relevant bodies in the United Nations system, donor countries, regional and international financial institutions, relevant international organizations and civil society in the coordination and delivery of emergency relief, and stresses the need to continue such cooperation and delivery throughout the ongoing relief operations and rehabilitation and reconstruction efforts, in a manner that reduces vulnerability to future natural hazards;

5. Encourages the international community, particularly donor countries, international financial institutions and relevant international organizations, as well as the private sector and civil society, to deliver swiftly on their pledges and to continue to provide the necessary funds and assistance to support the rehabilitation and reconstruction efforts;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to appoint a special envoy in order to, inter alia, sustain the political will of the international community to support medium- and long-term rehabilitation, reconstruction and risk reduction efforts;

7. Also requests the Secretary-General to continue to explore ways to further strengthen the rapid response capacities for immediate humanitarian relief efforts of the international community, building on the existing arrangements and ongoing initiatives;

8. Invites the World Bank and the Asian Development Bank, in collaboration with donor countries, other international and regional financial institutions and the United Nations, to mobilize members of the international community, including affected countries, to address the medium- and long-term rehabilitation and reconstruction needs of the affected areas;

9. Welcomes the proposed convening of a reconstruction conference to generate assistance and commitments for long-term rehabilitation and reconstruction phases in the disaster-stricken areas, to be held in Islamabad on 19 November 2005;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its sixty-first session on the implementation of the present resolution under the item entitled "Strengthening of the coordination of humanitarian and disaster relief assistance of the United Nations, including special economic assistance", through the Economic and Social Council at its substantive session in 2006.

Donors' Conference. The Donors' Conference on Rehabilitation and Reconstruction of Earthquake-affected Areas was held in Islamabad, Pakistan, on 19 November to generate assistance and commitments for long-term rehabilitation and reconstruction in the wake of the 8 October South Asia earthquake. More than 80 countries and international agencies participated in the Conference.

Appointment of Special Envoy. On 15 December, in accordance with Assembly resolution 60/13 (above), the Secretary-General announced the appointment of former United States President George H. W. Bush as his Special Envoy for the South Asia Earthquake Disaster. The Special Envoy would lead overall UN system efforts in the aftermath of the earthquake and work to mobilize and sustain the political will of the international community to support recovery, reconstruction and emergency activities.

West Africa

A wave of cholera outbreaks in West and Central Africa started in June; by late September 42,390 cases, and 702 deaths, were reported in Burkina Faso, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Liberia, Mali, Mauritania, the Niger and Senegal. The epidemic also affected the Gambia and Sao Tome and Principe. The outbreaks caused suffering and panic, disrupted the social and economic fabric, strained already precarious health systems and hampered the development process. Limited resources impeded a more comprehensive and coherent approach to the epidemic at the local and subregional levels.

The UN Consolidated Inter-Agency Flash Appeal for West and Central Africa sought $3.3 million to assist the Governments of the Gambia, Guinea-Bissau, Mali, Mauritania, Sao Tome and Principe and Senegal. Of the required amount, 44 per cent ($1.4 million) was received.

Chernobyl aftermath

In response to General Assembly resolution 58/119 [YUN 2003, p. 963], the Secretary-General, in an October report [A/60/443], described international efforts to study, mitigate and minimize the consequences of the 1986 Chernobyl nuclear accident [YUN 1986, p. 584].

UN agencies continued to implement activities to promote a new recovery strategy for the affected territories, as outlined in "The human consequences of the Chernobyl nuclear accident: a strategy for recovery" [YUN 2003, p. 962]. In line with the strategy, responsibility for the coordination of Chernobyl issues across the UN system was shifted from OCHA to UNDP. UNDP planned to draw on the experience already amassed by its country offices in the three most-affected countries—Belarus, the Russian Federation and Ukraine—in designing programmes aimed at promoting economic development, community self-sufficiency and subregional coordination. It also aimed to promote and give high visibility to measures to revive community spirit and economic vitality, with a view to encouraging greater donor commitment to Chernobyl recovery. UN country teams were working to implement the recommendations of the recovery strategy, and were supported by broader agency initiatives tailored to the shared needs of the affected populations in the three countries. International assistance fell into five main categories: community-based development; infrastructure; health care and healthy lifestyles; radiation mitigation and standard setting; and reactor safety.

As a contribution to the recovery strategy, the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA), in 2003, established the Chernobyl Forum, which included the Governments of the three most-affected countries, OCHA, UNDP, the United Nations Environment Programme, the United Nations Scientific Committee on the Effects of Atomic Radiation, the World Bank and the World Health Organization (WHO). Its mandate was to review and reconcile scientific research on the environmental and health consequences of the Chernobyl accident by issuing authoritative statements and recommendations on the long-term impact. Two expert groups were established under the auspices of WHO and IAEA to address the human health consequences of the accident and the environmental impact, respectively. The groups reviewed the scientific evidence and prepared an assessment report, while UNDP prepared a summary of the socio-economic consequences of the accident and policy recommendations for the three Governments. The Forum also organized, through IAEA, an international conference on the theme "Chernobyl: looking back to go forward" (Vienna, 6-7 September 2005).

With funding from the Swiss Agency for Development and Cooperation and OCHA, the first phase of the International Chernobyl Research and Information Network (ICRIN) project, established in 2003 [YUN 2003, p. 963], was completed, and UNDP was seeking funding for the project's next phase. Owing to the parallel work concluded by the Forum, UNDP revisited the original plans for ICRIN and opted to shift focus to the adaptation and dissemination of available information.

The three most-affected countries were planning major events in April 2006 to commemorate the twentieth anniversary of the Chernobyl accident. The Secretary-General said that it would be appropriate for the Assembly President to convene a special commemorative meeting of the Assembly in April 2006 to call attention to the continuing needs of the region by designating the period from 2006 to 2016 as "the decade of rehabilitation and recovery of Chernobyl-affected areas". Annexed to the report were accounts by Belarus, the Russian Federation and Ukraine regarding their efforts to overcome the consequences of the accident.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 November [meeting 52], the General Assembly adopted resolution 60/14 [draft: A/60/L.19 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 73 (c)].

Strengthening of international cooperation and coordination of efforts to study, mitigate and minimize the consequences of the Chernobyl disaster

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its resolutions 45/190 of 21 December 1990, 46/150 of 18 December 1991, 47/165 of 18 December 1992, 48/206 of 21 December 1993, 50/134 of 20 December 1995, 52/172 of 16 December 1997, 54/97 of 8 December 1999, 56/109 of 14 December 2001 and 58/119 of 17 December 2003, as well as its resolution 55/171 of 14 December 2000 on closure of the Chernobyl nuclear power plant, and taking note of the decisions adopted by the organs, organizations and programmes of the United Nations system in the implementation of those resolutions,

Recalling Economic and Social Council resolutions 1990/50 of 13 July 1990, 1991/51 of 26 July 1991 and 1992/38 of 30 July 1992 and Council decision 1993/232 of 22 July 1993,

Conscious of the long-term nature of the consequences of the disaster at the Chernobyl nuclear power plant, which was a major technological catastrophe in terms of its scope and complexity and created humanitarian, environmental, social, economic and health consequences and problems of common concern, requiring for their solution wide and active international cooperation and coordination of efforts in this field at the international and national levels,

Expressing profound concern at the ongoing effects of the consequences of the accident on the lives and health of people, in particular children, in the affected areas of Belarus, the Russian Federation and Ukraine, as well as in other affected countries,

Noting the consensus reached among members of the Chernobyl Forum on the findings of the reports entitled "Environmental Consequences of the Chernobyl Accident and their Remediation: Twenty Years of Experience" and "Health Effects of the Chernobyl Accident and Special Health Care Programmes", and recognizing the important contribution made by the Forum to the overall assessment of the environmental, health and socio-economic effects of the Chernobyl disaster,

Acknowledging the importance of the national efforts being undertaken by the Governments of Belarus, the Russian Federation and Ukraine to mitigate and minimize the consequences of the Chernobyl disaster,

Recognizing the contribution of civil society organizations, including the national Red Cross Societies of Belarus, the Russian Federation and Ukraine and the International Federation of Red Cross and Red Crescent Societies, in response to the Chernobyl disaster and in support of the efforts of the affected countries,

Emphasizing the importance of the new developmental approach to tackling the problems caused by the Chernobyl accident aimed at normalizing the situation of the individuals and communities concerned in the medium and long term,

Stressing the exceptional Chernobyl-related needs, in particular in the areas of health, ecology and research, in the context of the transition from the emergency to the recovery phase of mitigation of the consequences of the Chernobyl disaster,

Noting the transfer of the functions of the United Nations Coordinator of International Cooperation on Chernobyl from the Under-Secretary-General for Humanitarian Affairs and Emergency Relief Coordinator to the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme and Chairperson of the United Nations Development Group,

Stressing the need for further coordination by the United Nations Development Programme and improved resource mobilization by the United Nations system to support the activities of the International Chernobyl Research and Information Network as well as the efforts to disseminate the findings of the Chernobyl Forum,

Noting the completion of information needs assessments of the affected populations in Belarus, the Russian Federation and Ukraine under the aegis of the International Chernobyl Research and Information Network,

Stressing the significance of the upcoming twentieth anniversary of the accident for the further strengthening of international cooperation to study, mitigate and minimize the consequences of the Chernobyl disaster,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General concerning the implementation of resolution 58/119, as well as relevant parts of the reports of the agencies and organizations of the United Nations system,

1. Welcomes the contribution made by States and by organizations of the United Nations system to the development of cooperation to mitigate and minimize the consequences of the Chernobyl disaster, the activities of regional and other organizations and those of non-governmental organizations, as well as bilateral activities;

2. Notes with appreciation the efforts undertaken by the agencies of the United Nations system and other international organizations members of the Inter-Agency Task Force on Chernobyl to implement a new developmental approach to studying, mitigating and minimizing the consequences of the Chernobyl disaster, in particular through the development of specific projects, and stresses the need for the Inter-Agency Task Force to continue its activities to that end, including through coordinating efforts in the field of resource mobilization;

3. Acknowledges the difficulties faced by the most affected countries in minimizing the consequences of the Chernobyl disaster, and invites States, in particular donor States and all relevant agencies, funds and programmes of the United Nations system, in particular the Bretton Woods institutions, as well as non-governmental organizations, to continue to provide support to the ongoing efforts of Belarus, the Russian Federation and Ukraine to mitigate the consequences of the Chernobyl disaster, including through the allocation of adequate funds to support medical, social, economic and ecological programmes related to the disaster;

4. Reaffirms that the United Nations should continue to play an important catalytic and coordinating role in the strengthening of international cooperation to study, mitigate and minimize the consequences of the Chernobyl disaster;

5. Requests the Secretary-General and the United Nations Coordinator of International Cooperation on Chernobyl, in his capacity as Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme and as Chairperson of the United Nations Development Group, to take further appropriate practical measures to strengthen coordination of the international efforts in that area;

6. Notes with satisfaction the realization of the Cooperation for Rehabilitation Programme in Belarus and the Chernobyl Recovery and Development Programme in Ukraine, aimed at promoting better living conditions in and the sustainable development of the affected territories;

7. Also notes with satisfaction assistance rendered by the International Atomic Energy Agency to Belarus, the Russian Federation and Ukraine on remediation of agricultural and urban environments, cost-effective agricultural countermeasures and the monitoring of human exposure in areas affected by the Chernobyl disaster;

8. Takes note with satisfaction of the progress made by the Governments of the affected countries in implementing national strategies to mitigate the consequences of the Chernobyl accident, and calls upon United Nations agencies and multilateral and bilateral donors to continue to align their assistance with the priorities of the national strategies of the affected States, and stresses the importance of working together on their implementation in a common effort in the spirit of cooperation;

9. Welcomes the efforts of the Government of Ukraine and the international donor community to bring to completion the building of the shelter as well as those efforts to provide for the environmentally sound collection and storage of nuclear waste, and encourages further efforts in this regard;

10. Notes the necessity of further measures to ensure the integration of the assessment by the Chernobyl Forum of the environmental, health and socio-economic consequences of the Chernobyl nuclear accident into the International Chernobyl Research and Information Network process through dissemination of the findings of the Forum, including in the form of practical messages on healthy and productive lifestyles, to the populations affected by the accident in order to empower them to maximize social and economic recovery and sustainable development in all its aspects;

11. Recognizes the role that the Commonwealth of Independent States plays in the process of preparing events in observance of the twentieth anniversary of the Chernobyl accident to be held in States participating in the Commonwealth;

12. Welcomes, in this context, the activities in observance of the International Day Commemorating Victims of Radiation Accidents and Catastrophes, 26 April, undertaken by the States participating in the Commonwealth of Independent States;

13. Invites Member States to observe this Day and to conduct appropriate activities to commemorate victims of radiation accidents and catastrophes and to enhance public awareness of their consequences for human health and the environment throughout the world;

14. Welcomes the initiatives of the Governments of Belarus, the Russian Federation and Ukraine to host international events on lessons learned and on future actions in response to the Chernobyl disaster to observe the twentieth anniversary of the Chernobyl accident, and invites organizations of the United Nations system, donor countries and other development agencies to contribute to their effective realization;

15. Requests the President of the General Assembly to convene, in April 2006, a special commemorative meeting of the Assembly in observance of the twentieth anniversary of the Chernobyl catastrophe;

16. Requests the Secretary-General to continue his efforts in the implementation of the relevant General Assembly resolutions and, through existing coordination mechanisms, in particular the United Nations Coordinator of International Cooperation on Chernobyl, to continue to maintain close cooperation with the agencies of the United Nations system, as well as with regional and other relevant organizations, while implementing specific Chernobyl-related programmes and projects;

17. Requests the United Nations Coordinator of International Cooperation on Chernobyl to organize, in collaboration with the Governments of Belarus, the Russian Federation and Ukraine, a further study of the health, environmental and socio-economic consequences of the Chernobyl accident, consistent with the recommendations of the Chernobyl Forum;

18. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its sixty-second session, under a separate sub-item, a report containing a comprehensive assessment of the implementation of all aspects of the present resolution.

Chapter IV

International trade, finance and transport

In 2005, the growth of world trade decelerated moderately, with the volume of merchandise exports slowing to 7.1 per cent, from 11 per cent in 2004. The deceleration was particularly evident in the developed economies. By contrast, many developing countries and economies in transition recorded relatively fast growing trade, albeit at a slower pace than in previous years. In the United States, import volume growth decelerated as the economy slowed with the maturing of the economic cycle, and the merchandise trade balance recorded a record deficit, despite faster export volume growth. Among developing countries, import growth outpaced export growth in Latin America and South Asia. Commodity prices continued to increase, boosting the export revenues of commodity exporters worldwide.

The net transfers of financial resources from developing to developed countries in 2005 rose to $483.4 billion. Transfers from economies in transition followed a similar pattern, reaching an estimated $95.5 billion. The General Assembly, recalling that trade was in many cases the most important external source of development financing, reiterated the role played by enhanced market access, balanced rules, appropriate adjustment facilities and technical assistance and capacity-building programmes. It reaffirmed the value of multilateralism to the global trading system and the commitment to a universal, rule-based, open, non-discriminatory and equitable multilateral trading system. It also stressed that the international financial system should promote economic growth and support sustainable development and hunger and poverty eradication, recognized the need to enhance the coherence, governance and consistency of the international monetary, financial and trading systems, as well as the need to ensure their openness, fairness and inclusiveness, and emphasized the importance of debt sustainability and debt relief to achieve internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals, adopted by the Assembly in 2000.

In April, the eighth high-level meeting between the Economic and Social Council and the Bretton Woods institutions (the World Bank Group and the International Monetary Fund), the World Trade Organization (WTO) and the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) discussed coherence, coordination and cooperation in the context of the implementation of the Monterrey Consensus, adopted at the 2002 International Conference on Financing for Development. In June, the Assembly held its second High-level Dialogue on Financing for Development under the overall theme "The Monterrey Consensus: status of implementation and tasks ahead". The Dialogue was in preparation for the special session of the sixtieth session of the Assembly on financing for development (see p. 67).

The Trade and Development Board, the governing body of UNCTAD, adopted agreed conclusions on the review of progress in the implementation of the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the Decade 2001-2010, and a decision on the review of UNCTAD technical cooperation activities. The Board adopted further agreed conclusions on economic development in Africa: the role of foreign direct investment in growth and development, and a decision on the venue for UNCTAD XII.

The International Trade Centre, operated jointly by UNCTAD and WTO, increased its delivery of technical assistance by 4.7 per cent to $22.1 million.

In May, the Assembly confirmed the appointment of Supachai Panitchpakdi as UNCTAD Secretary-General for a four year term beginning 1 September 2005.

International trade

The Trade and Development Report, 2005 [Sales No. E.05.II.D.13] stated that the strong performance of the global economy in 2004 brought about an acceleration in world trade. Total merchandise exports grew by 22.5 per cent, as a result of both increasing volume (13 per cent) and rising dollar prices (9.5 per cent). The latter, partly caused by the depreciation of the dollar, increased the value of international trade in dollar terms within the euro area. In comparison to 2003, export volumes from developed countries made a strong recovery, growing by 11 per cent in 2004, compared to 3 per cent the previous year. In Europe, there was a widespread acceleration of export volume growth, largely due to the speeding up of intraregional trade with the new European Union (EU) acceding member countries, and expanding sales to East Asia and oil-exporters in West Asia and the Commonwealth of Independent States (CIS). Exports from the United States also recovered, as a result of a more competitive currency level, while Japan continued to benefit from dynamic Asian intraregional trade.

Exports from developing countries continued their rapid expansion in 2004, registering a growth rate of 16 per cent in volume terms. East and South Asia led that expansion, but Latin America and Africa also experienced significant increases. Exports increased at higher rates in developing countries than in the developed world. Increasing export volume, together with higher commodity prices, boosted the value of merchandise exports from developing countries, which grew by 26 per cent, particularly in regions with a large share of primary commodities in their total exports—Africa, CIS, South America and West Asia. As a whole, developing countries' share in world exports rose to 33.4 per cent.

The World Economic Situation and Prospects 2006 [Sales No. E.06.II.C.2], jointly issued by the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) and the UN Department of Economic and Social Affairs (DESA), stated that, in 2005, growth of world merchandise trade decelerated moderately. After peaking at a growth rate of 11 per cent in 2004, the expansion in the volume of merchandise exports slowed to 7.1 per cent. In dollar value terms, world trade increased by 12.9 per cent in 2005. Prices of merchandise exports grew by 5.5 per cent, mainly reflecting higher prices for primary commodities, as the average price of traded manufactures remained flat during the year. The deceleration of international trade was particularly evident in the developed economies. In contrast, many developing countries and economies in transition recorded relatively fast growing trade, albeit at a slower pace than in 2003 and 2004.

In the United States, import volume growth decelerated and the merchandise trade balance recorded another record deficit, despite faster export volume growth. The rising deficit was explained both by higher oil prices and an increase in the deficit in the non-petroleum trade balance. The value of imports by the United States doubled that of exports. China became a major player in international trade, absorbing about 6 per cent of world imports in 2005, up from 3.3 per cent in 2000. Dependence on Chinese markets increased on a worldwide basis. The pace of growth of intra-Asian trade moderated alongside that of China; Japan's exports also felt the slowdown. Western Europe absorbed about 40 per cent of world imports. Import demand decelerated in the euro zone in 2005, despite the boost brought about by the strength of the euro in the first half of the year. The deceleration in import volume growth in Europe was largely due to weak domestic demand. Japan registered similar developments, with imports slowing down in real terms. Partially offsetting the above trends, import demand by oil exporters, such as Norway, the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries (OPEC) members and the Russian Federation helped to sustain growth in trade.

Among developing countries, import growth outpaced export growth in Latin America and South Asia. African imports also increased strongly in real terms (at 11 per cent, up from 10 per cent in 2004), thanks to robust gross domestic product (GDP) growth, increased food imports in drought-affected countries and rising demand for capital goods. Exports of the new EU members continued to grow in real terms at a relatively fast pace in 2005. Conversely, manufactured exports by the Caribbean, Central America and Mexico suffered from slower demand in the United States, and increased competition by China in the United States market. Commodity prices continued to increase in 2005, thereby boosting the export revenues of commodity exporters worldwide. Major gains were observed in the prices of metals and minerals and agricultural raw materials, while food prices registered modest increases.

Multilateral trading system

Report of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 59/221 [YUN 2004, p. 959], the Secretary-General submitted an August report [A/60/225] on international trade and development, prepared in collaboration with UNCTAD. The report reviewed developments in international trade and trading system, including the implications for developing countries of multilateral trade negotiations under the World Trade Organization (WTO) Doha work programme since the WTO General Council Decision of August 2004 ("July Package") [YUN 2004, p. 958], and identified the interlinkages between different negotiating areas and the Millennium Development Goals (MDGs) [YUN 2000, p. 51].

The report stated that, in 2004, developing countries' merchandise exports expanded by 25 per cent from 2003 to reach the value of $3 trillion, and their share in world merchandise exports increased to 33 per cent. Developing countries' exports grew faster than total world exports, which expanded by 20 per cent. The value of world exports amounted to $8.9 trillion. The largest share of developing countries' exports was accounted for by Asia, which represented 77 per cent of the total exports of developing countries (with a value of $2.3 trillion). Concerning trade in services, world exports in commercial services expanded by 16 per cent to reach a total value of $2.1 trillion in 2004. The share of developing countries' trade increased to 22.5 per cent, with an export value worth $485 billion.

The report noted that some 50 per cent of world trade took place within regional trade agreements. Developing countries participated in agreements with both developed and developing countries. The expansion of North-South agreements had transformed economic relationships based on pre-existing unilateral preferences into relationships based on reciprocity, such as in the free trade area of the Americas negotiations, the African, Caribbean Pacific/Europe economic partnership agreement negotiations and the Central American Free Trade Agreement. Such negotiations tended to result in deeper market access and higher regulatory standards than those at the multilateral level, and could have implications for developing countries. It was therefore important to ensure a positive interface and coherence between multilateralism and regionalism and an expeditious and meaningful outcome of the Doha work programme.

The report concluded that it was imperative for development and the viability and durability of the multilateral trading system that WTO members delivered on the development promises made in the Doha Ministerial Declaration (see below) to place the needs and interests of developing countries at the heart of negotiations and deliver an equitable and fair deal for developing countries.

Negotiating frameworks

On 13 July, the Second South Summit (Doha, Qatar, 14-16 June) of the Group of 77 and China adopted the Doha Declaration [TD/B(S-XXII)/2], which called for, among other things, enhanced market access for goods and services of export interest to developing countries to markets of developed countries, realization of the development dimension of the Doha work programme, the need for a solution to the question of commodities, and accelerating negotiations on the Trade Related Aspects of Intellectual Property Rights Agreement. It also adopted the Doha Plan of Action [TD/B(S-XXII)/3]. At the request of the Chairman of the Group, the texts of the Declaration and the Plan of Action were circulated as official documents of the twenty-second special session and the thirty-seventh executive session (18 July) of the (UNCTAD) Trade and Development Board (TDB).

At the same session, TDB, for its consideration of the review of developments and issues in the post-Doha work programme of particular concern to developing countries, had before it an August note by the UNCTAD secretariat [TD/B/52/8] on the subject, providing an analysis of issues of concern in the post-Doha trade negotiations since the WTO General Council Decision of 1 August 2004 ("July Package") [YUN 2004, p. 958] and containing suggestions for policy makers and trade negotiators. The note stated that the Doha negotiations should fulfil their development promise and be concluded no later than 2006. TDB discussed the Post-July Package negotiations and the progress made towards the convening of the Sixth WTO Ministerial Conference in Hong Kong (see below); regional trade agreements and South-South cooperation; and the role of UNCTAD and TDB. The President reiterated the commitment made in the Millennium Declaration [YUN 2000, p. 47] to an open, rule-based, non-discriminatory, predictable and equitable multilateral trading system, supportive of economic growth and development and poverty alleviation. Progress in the multilateral trading system should be linked to progress in the accomplishment of internationally agreed development goals, including the MDGs. The importance of positive engagement by all members in the multilateral trading system was underscored, as well as the responsibility of all to a development-focus outcome of the Doha work programme and a strengthening of the multilateral trading system. It was also noted that special and differential treatment could be a cross-cutting issue and that technical assistance and capacity building could enable developing countries to participate in the negotiations and take advantage of the successful outcome of the Doha round.

The Sixth WTO Ministerial Conference was held in Hong Kong, China, from 13 to 18 December. On 18 December, it adopted the Ministerial Declaration, which outlined decisions on agriculture, non-agricultural market access (NAMA), services, development issues, trade facilitation and the rules aspects of the negotiations.

The deadline for eliminating agricultural export subsidies was set for 2013. Under NAMA, the Declaration called for a Swiss tariff cutting formula, which would cut high tariffs more than low tariffs, multi coefficients in the formula and sectoral negotiations. The Declaration also called for progress on market access negotiations for both agricultural and industrial goods. Other key provisions recommended continued work on non- tariff barriers, duty free/quota free access for 97 per cent of all goods originating from least developed countries and full negotiating modalities to be agreed upon by April 2006.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December [meeting 68], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee [A/60/486/Add.1], adopted resolution 60/184 by recorded vote (121-1-51) [agenda item 50 (a)].

International trade and development

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 56/178 of 21 December 2001, 57/235 of 20 December 2002, 58/197 of 23 December 2003 and 59/221 of 22 December 2004 on international trade and development,

Recalling also the provisions of the United Nations Millennium Declaration pertaining to trade and related development issues, as well as the outcomes of the International Conference on Financing for Development, held in Monterrey, Mexico, from 18 to 22 March 2002, and the World Summit on Sustainable Development, held in Johannesburg, South Africa, from 26 August to 4 September 2002,

Recalling further the Ministerial Declaration and decisions adopted at the Fourth Ministerial Conference of the World Trade Organization, held in Doha from 9 to 14 November 2001, the decision of 1 August 2004 of the General Council of the World Trade Organization and the full commitment of all members of the World Trade Organization to give effect to them, and the importance of the successful conclusion of the Doha work programme,

Recalling that trade is in many cases the single most important external source of development financing, and in this context reiterating the important role that enhanced market access, balanced rules, appropriate adjustment facility and well-targeted, sustainably financed technical assistance and capacity-building programmes can play in the economic development of developing countries, especially the least developed countries,

Bearing in mind the special needs of the least developed countries, the small island developing States and the landlocked developing countries, within a new global framework for transit transport cooperation for landlocked and transit developing countries, as identified, respectively, in the Brussels Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the Decade 2001-2010, the Barbados Programme of Action and the Almaty Programme of Action,

Stressing the need to address adequately the vulnerabilities faced by developing countries, as a result of external shocks, particularly natural disasters, which can damage the social and economic infrastructure and have long-term consequences, especially hampering the achievement of their sustainable development,

Recalling its resolutions 57/250 of 20 December 2002 and 57/270 B of 23 June 2003, in which it invited the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, as well as the Trade and Development Board, to contribute, within its mandate, to the implementation and the review of the progress made in the implementation of the outcomes of the major United Nations conferences and summits and invited the President of the Trade and Development Board to present the outcomes of such reviews to the Economic and Social Council,

Recalling also the Sno Paulo Consensus, adopted at the eleventh session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, held in Sno Paulo, Brazil, from 13 to 18 June 2004, and reaffirming its commitment to its full and effective implementation,

Taking note of the review undertaken by the Trade and Development Board at its fifty-second session of developments and issues in the post-Doha work programme of particular concern to developing countries, and its contribution to an understanding of the actions required to forge consensus and help developing countries integrate, in a beneficial and meaningful manner, into the multilateral trading system and the global economy and to achieve a balanced, development-oriented and successful conclusion of the Doha negotiations,

Reaffirming the urgency, subject to national legislation, of recognizing the rights of local and indigenous communities that are holders of traditional knowledge, innovations and practices and, with the approval and involvement of the holders of such knowledge, innovations and practices, of developing and implementing benefit-sharing mechanisms on mutually agreed terms for the use of such knowledge, innovations and practices,

Reaffirming also the role of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development as the focal point within the United Nations for the integrated treatment of trade and development and the interrelated issues in the areas of finance, technology, investment and sustainable development as reaffirmed by the Sno Paulo Consensus,

Noting the significant contribution of the multilateral trading system to economic growth, development and employment and the importance of maintaining the process of reform and liberalization of trade policies, as well as the importance of rejecting the use of protectionism, so that the system plays its full part in promoting recovery, growth and development, in particular of developing countries, bearing in mind paragraph 10 of its resolution 55/182 of 20 December 2000,

Taking note of the report of the Trade and Development Board and its statement, as well as the report of the Secretary-General,

1. Reaffirms the value of multilateralism to the global trading system and the commitment to achieving a universal, rule-based, open, non-discriminatory and equitable multilateral trading system that contributes to growth, development and employment generation, and emphasizes that bilateral and regional trading arrangements should contribute to the multilateral trading system;

2. Underlines the fact that the increasing interdependence of national economies in a globalizing world and the emergence of rule-based regimes for international economic relations have meant that the space for national economic policy, that is, the scope for domestic policies, especially in the areas of trade, investment and industrial development, is now often framed by international disciplines, commitments and global market considerations, that it is for each Government to evaluate the trade-off between the benefits of accepting international rules and commitments and the constraints posed by the loss of policy space and that it is particularly important for developing countries, bearing in mind development goals and objectives, that all countries take into account the need for appropriate balance between national policy space and international disciplines and commitments;

3. Stresses the importance of open, transparent, inclusive democratic and more orderly processes and procedures for the effective functioning of the multilateral trading system, including in the decision-making process, so as to enable developing countries to have their vital interests duly reflected in the outcome of trade negotiations;

4. Reiterates that development concerns form an integral part of the Doha Ministerial Declaration, and reaffirms the commitments made in the decision of 1 August 2004 of the General Council of the World Trade Organization to fulfil the development dimension of the Doha Development Agenda, which places the needs and interests of developing countries, especially the least developed among them, at the heart of the Doha work programme;

5. Expresses its concern over the lack of progress in areas of negotiations of particular concern to developing countries, which led to missing deadlines provided in the decision of the General Council of the World Trade Organization;

6. Welcomes the recent "aid for trade" initiative to address the adjustment challenges as well as to build the supply and trade capacities, infrastructure and institutions of developing countries, and stresses the need for the effective operationalization with sufficient and additional funding of the initiative to the benefit of the recipient countries;

7. Reaffirms that all countries have a shared interest in the success of the Doha work programme, which aims both at further increasing trading opportunities for developing countries and at making the trading system more conducive to development, and underscores the need for the major developed countries to make ambitious proposals in line with their commitments to make progress in all areas of negotiations, particularly in agriculture, non-agricultural market access, services, the trade-related intellectual property system and rules as well as operational and meaningful special and differential treatment for developing countries, and to adopt practical and concrete solutions to the outstanding implementation-related issues and concerns raised by developing countries;

8. Calls for the successful and timely conclusion of the negotiations on the Doha work programme in order to maximize the contribution of the trading system to raising standards of living, eradicating hunger and poverty, generating employment and achieving the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals, and, in that context, underscores the fact that enhanced market access for goods and services of export interest to developing countries as well as strong, special and differential treatment in the outcome of negotiations in all areas, balanced rules and well-targeted sustainably financed technical assistance and capacity-building programmes for developing countries are needed for the realization of the development dimension highlighted in the Doha work programme, and stresses that the Sixth Ministerial Conference of the World Trade Organization, to be held in Hong Kong, China, from 13 to 18 December 2005, should constitute an important milestone to this end, and particularly for finalizing the negotiating modalities for successful conclusion of the Doha round by 2006;

9. Recognizes the need to ensure that the comparative advantage of developing countries is not undermined by any form of protectionism, including the arbitrary and abusive use of non-tariff measures, non-trade barriers and other standards to unfairly restrict the access of developing countries' products to developed countries' markets, reaffirms, in this regard, that developing countries should play an increasing role in the formulation of, inter alia, safety, environment and health standards, and recognizes the need to facilitate the increased and meaningful participation of the developing countries in the work of relevant international standard-setting organizations;

10. Calls for accelerating the negotiations on the development-related mandate concerning the Agreement on Trade-related Aspects of Intellectual Property Rights in the Doha Ministerial Declaration, especially the amendments of the Agreement, in order for intellectual property rules fully to support the objectives of the Convention on Biological Diversity as well as for trade-related aspects of intellectual property rights and public health to address the problems afflicting many developing countries, including the least developed countries, especially those resulting from HIV/AIDS, tuberculosis, malaria and other epidemics;

11. Expresses its concern about the adoption of a number of unilateral actions that are not consistent with the rules of the World Trade Organization, harm the exports of all countries, in particular those of developing countries, and have a considerable bearing on the ongoing World Trade Organization negotiations and on the achievement and further enhancement of the development dimension of the trade negotiations;

12. Emphasizes the need for further work to foster greater coherence between the multilateral trading system and the financial system, and urges the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, in fulfilment of its mandate, to undertake the relevant policy analysis in those areas and to operationalize such work, including through its technical assistance activities;

13. Reaffirms the commitments made at the Fourth Ministerial Conference of the World Trade Organization and at the Third United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries, held in Brussels from 14 to 20 May 2001, calls, in this regard, upon developed countries that have not already done so to provide immediate bound duty-free, quota-free market access to all products originating from all least developed countries, calls upon developing countries that are in a position to do so to extend duty-free and quota-free market access to exports of these countries, and in this context reaffirms the need to consider additional measures for progressive improvement in market access for least developed countries;

14. Also reaffirms the commitment to actively pursue the work programme of the World Trade Organization with respect to addressing the trade-related issues and concerns affecting the fuller integration of countries with small, vulnerable economies into the multilateral trading system in a manner commensurate with their special circumstances and in support of their efforts towards sustainable development, in accordance with paragraph 35 of the Doha Ministerial Declaration;

15. Recognizes the special problems and needs of the landlocked developing countries within a new global framework for transit transport cooperation for landlocked and transit developing countries, calls, in this regard, for the full and effective implementation of the Almaty Programme of Action, and stresses the need for the implementation of the Sno Paulo Consensus, in particular paragraphs 66 and 84 thereof, by the relevant international organizations and donors in a multi-stakeholder approach;

16. Takes note with satisfaction of the launch of the third round of negotiations on the Global System of Trade Preferences among Developing Countries and the progress achieved so far in these negotiations with the aim of concluding the third round by November 2006;

17. Recognizes the importance of addressing seriously the concerns of commodity-dependent developing countries, owing to the continuing volatility of world commodity prices and other factors, and of supporting the efforts of such countries to restructure, diversify and strengthen the competitiveness of their commodity sectors, and in this regard notes the formation of an international task force on commodities by the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development;

18. Stresses the importance of facilitating the accession of all developing countries, in particular the least developed countries, as well as countries with economies in transition, that apply for membership in the World Trade Organization, consistent with its criteria, bearing in mind paragraph 21 of resolution 55/182 and subsequent developments, and calls for the effective and faithful application of the World Trade Organization guidelines on accession by the least developed countries;

19. Emphasizes the importance of developing human, institutional, regulatory, research, trade policy and development capacities and infrastructures aimed at enhanced supply-side capacity and competitiveness, as well as ensuring a conducive international environment for the full and effective integration of developing countries into the international trading system;

20. Invites the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, in accordance with its mandate, to monitor and assess the evolution of the international trading system and of trends in international trade from a development perspective, and, in particular, to analyse issues of concern to developing countries, supporting them in building capacities to establish their own negotiating priorities and negotiate trade agreements, including under the Doha work programme;

21. Urges donors, in this regard, to provide the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development with the increased resources necessary to deliver effective and demand-driven assistance to developing countries, as well as to enhance their contributions to the trust funds of the Integrated Framework for Trade-related Technical Assistance to Least Developed Countries and the Joint Integrated Technical Assistance Programme;

22. Welcomes the generous offer by the Government of Ghana to host the twelfth session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development in 2008, and expresses its gratitude to the African Union for its support for Ghana in this connection;

23. Requests the Secretary-General, in collaboration with the secretariat of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, to submit to the General Assembly at its sixty-first session a report on the implementation of the present resolution and on developments in the multilateral trading system, under the sub-item entitled "International trade and development" of the item entitled "Macroeconomic policy questions."

Trade policy

Trade in goods and services, and commodities

The Commission on Trade in Goods and Services, and Commodities, at its ninth session (Geneva, 14-18 March) [TD/B/COM.1/73], had before it the following documentation: a note by the UNCTAD secretariat on market entry for commodities: the role of trade and investment finance and competitiveness [TD/B/COM.1/72]; the report of the Expert Meeting on Financing of Commodity-based Trade and Development: Innovative Financing Mechanisms [YUN 2004, p. 964]; an UNCTAD secretariat note on trade in services and development implications [TD/B/COM.1/71]; the report of the Expert Meeting on Trade and Development Aspects of Professional Services and Regulatory Frameworks [TD/B/COM.1/EM.25/3]; the report of the Expert Meeting on Strengthening Participation of Developing Countries in Dynamic and New Sectors of World Trade: Trends, Issues and Policies [TD/B/COM.1/EM.26/3]; and an UNCTAD secretariat note on trade, environment and development [TD/B/COM.1/70].

In agreed recommendations adopted on 18 March, the Commission expressed appreciation to those donors contributing to the UNCTAD Trade Sub-programme and agreed that particular consideration should be given to the needs of least developed countries (LDCs). It called on UNCTAD to contribute to the mainstreaming of development into international trade and trade negotiations, in particular the Doha negotiations, through its work in consensus-building, analytical work, technical assistance and capacity building, in line with the mandate contained in the São Paulo Consensus [YUN 2004, p. 955]; support capacity building efforts in developing countries in trade policy formulation, trade negotiations, including WTO accession negotiations, and commodities; and strengthen technical assistance to address the special needs of developing countries. The Commission took note of the report of the Expert Meeting that launched the process of sectoral review of new and dynamic sectors in world trade and decided that the annual reviews should continue to be held. It recommended that UNCTAD undertake capacity building activities at national, subregional and regional levels through pilot projects to assist developing countries and invited donors to support such efforts. The Commission also recommended that UNCTAD enhance its work on the interrelationships between market access, market entry and competitiveness factors and their impact on the exports of developing countries; examine the effects of nontariff barriers; continue to work on the challenges and opportunities of trade liberalization, particularly in the area of preference erosion, as well as utilization and improvement of preferential schemes, and continue to support South-South trade initiatives, including the Global System of Trade Preferences (GSTP).

The Commission further recommended that UNCTAD continue to contribute to commodity sector development, diversification and more effective participation in the supply chain; establish the International Task Force on Commodities, announced at UNCTAD XI [ibid. p. 954]; enhance its work in the area of commodity finance; and implement strong and broad-based capacity- and institution-building programmes in that area. The international donor community was invited to enhance extrabudgetary support to UNCTAD in fulfilling its mandate in the area of commodities.

UNCTAD should continue to strengthen its policy-oriented analysis, consensus building and capacity-building activities on services to assist developing countries in: strengthening their domestic supply capacities and increasing their participation in services trade; carrying out assessments of trade in services in line with paragraph 95 of the São Paulo Consensus; undertaking sector-specific studies of interest to developing countries; deepening work on business and professional services in the areas identified in the report of the Expert Meeting on Trade and Development Aspects of Professional Services and Regulatory Frameworks (see above); helping develop capacities in developing countries to establish their own negotiating priorities and negotiate trade agreements, including on the General Agreement on Trade in Services (GATS) and regional trade agreements; and analysing domestic regulations and GATS rules from a development perspective.

UNCTAD should also continue its policy-oriented analysis, consensus building and capacity-building activities in the areas of trade, environment and development, including developing the Consultative Task Force (CTF) on Environmental Requirements and Market Access for Developing Countries; strengthening its work under the BioTrade Initiative, in particular national BioTrade programmes, and following up on partnerships launched at the World Summit on Sustainable Development [YUN 2002, p. 821] and at UNCTAD XI to promote trade, export diversification and investment in biotrade; assisting developing countries to make use of the trade and investment opportunities arising from the Kyoto Protocol [YUN 1997, p. 1048], including the Clean Development Mechanism (CDM), as well as in identifying tariffs and regulatory measures affecting trade in renewable energy goods and equipment, and exploring trading opportunities for environmentally preferable products.

On 18 March, the Commission took note of the reports of the expert meetings and the secretariat's progress report [TD/B/COM.1/69] on the implementation of agreed conclusions and recommendations of the Commission at its eighth (2004) session [YUN 2004, p. 963], including post-Doha follow-up.

At its thirty-sixth executive session (Geneva, 3 May) [A/60/15], TDB took note of the Commission's report and endorsed its recommendations.

Subsidiary bodies. In 2005, a number of expert meetings took place, all in Geneva, on issues to be considered by the Commission.

The Expert Meeting on Trade and Development Aspects of Professional Services and Regulatory Frameworks (17-19 January) [TD/B/COM.1/EM.25/3] had before it an UNCTAD secretariat note on the subject [TD/B/COM.1/EM.25/2], which discussed professional services and development; emergence of new regulatory frameworks and challenges facing developing countries; national experiences of trade in professional services; and experience with regional integration and mutual recognition agreements. In its policy conclusions, the Meeting agreed that developing countries needed to acknowledge the importance of promoting services trade. Unnecessary barriers to the supply of professional services should be removed and developed countries should open their markets to developing countries' professional services exports. Developing countries could benefit from liberalizing their professional services markets if liberalization was linked to human development, to the building of their domestic services capacities, and regulatory and institutional frameworks. Priority should be accorded to those regulatory policies that could yield broader gains, feed into human development and addressed poverty alleviation and income inequalities. Countries with strong regulatory and institutional frameworks should help developing countries in strengthening their domestic regulations, and multilateral and bilateral development agencies should shift attention to services and services trade. To increase the exports of developing countries through the global outsourcing of services, a number of preconditions needed to be met, including the creation of an efficient telecommunications infrastructure and the development of an education system in line with the needs of the market. UNCTAD should, among other things, facilitate the assessment of professional services at the sub-sectoral level; devise trade and development benchmarks for professional services; identify elements for disciplines on qualifications requirements and procedures, licensing requirements and procedures, and technical standards with regard to professional services; analyse trade opportunities arising from global outsourcing of professional services, and ways of facilitating such trade in order to enhance developing countries' exports and market entry barriers faced by developing country professional services supplier.

The Expert Meeting on Strengthening Participation of Developing Countries in Dynamic and New Sectors of World Trade: Trends, Issues and Policies (7-9 February) [TD/B/COM.1/EM.26/3] had before it an UNCTAD secretariat note on the subject [TD/B/COM.1/EM.26/2]. The Meeting reviewed policies and actions to enhance developing country participation in: information technology (IT)-enabled outsourcing of services; renewable energy products, including bio-fuels; and textiles and clothing. With regard to IT-enabled outsourcing of services, the experts stated that UNCTAD should complement its analytical work with capacity-building activities and consider a programme of seminars/workshops in selected countries to identify and assess the capabilities of countries; developing countries concerned should identify and seek sources of funding for building the infrastructure necessary for offshore outsourcing' with special consideration given to the plight of LDCs. In the area of renewable energy products, the Meeting called on UNCTAD to assist developing country members in identifying tariff and non-tariff barriers affecting trade in renewable energy goods and equipment; analyse the implications of trade and environmental regimes for renewable energy markets; and review the various approaches to developing an international strategy for renewable energy. The experts stressed that an environment favourable to private sector initiatives in the bio-fuels sector should be created in developing countries and that the role of Governments in designing promotion policies for the production, use and local trade in bio-fuels should be defined. UNCTAD should assess the trade competitiveness of developing countries in the growing worldwide use of and trade in bio-fuels, as well as market access and market entry issues related to imports of bio-fuels in industrialized economies. As to textiles and clothing, UNCTAD could assist developing countries in strengthening their participation in the manufacture of dynamic textiles and clothing products.

The Expert Meeting on Methodologies, Classification, Quantification and Development Impacts of Non-Tariff Barriers (NTBs) (5-7 September) [TD/B/COM.1/EM.27/3] had before it an UNCTAD secretariat note on the subject [TD/B/COM.1/EM.27/2], which reviewed the scope, definition and classification of NTBs, their quantification, and the concerns of developing countries. The Meeting called on UNCTAD to improve its classification of NTBs and its Coding System of Trade Control Measures by identifying and adding new NTBs, and focus on better defining, classifying and quantifying NTBs, in cooperation with all relevant international and regional organizations and other stakeholders. In particular, its Trade Analysis and Information System required more precise and comprehensive data on NTBs. UNCTAD should maintain a case studies database on various aspects of NTBs; help trade negotiators of developing countries, especially LDCs, build their capacity to deal with NTB-related negotiating issues; give priority to the principal NTBs faced by LDC exporters and those of other developing countries; and improve its analysis of the effects of NTBs on supply capacity, competitiveness and market access/entry conditions. The experts also recommended that UNCTAD establish a Group of Eminent Persons on NTBs and a network of national focal points in developing countries to improve collection and analysis of data on NTBs.

The Expert Meeting on Dynamic and New Sectors of World Trade (24-26 October) [TD/B/COM.1/EM.28/5] had before it UNCTAD secretariat notes on promoting participation of developing countries in dynamic and new sectors of world trade: the electronic sector [TD/B/COM.1/EM.28/2], fishery products [TD/B/COM.1/EM.28/3], and steel and related specialty products [TD/B/COM.1/EM.28/4]. Particular attention was given to LDCs and African countries that specialized in sectors that were among the least market dynamic in world trade. Their inability to manage the challenges of changing global trading and economic processes and the resulting shifts in the international division of labour, were a source of concern. Recognizing that not all countries would be able to participate in the dynamic and new sectors, the experts called on developing countries, including LDCs and African countries, as well as their development partners, to pay attention to the opportunities presented by those sectors for greater diversification and improved domestic value-added from exports.

The Expert Meeting on Distribution Services (16-18 November) [TD/B/COM.1/EM.29/3] considered an UNCTAD secretariat note on the subject [TD/B/COM.1/EM.29/2], which discussed market overview and trends; development issues and challenges facing developing countries; business perspective; regulatory issues; competition-related issues; country experiences; distribution of other services: audiovisual and tourism; and issues for GATS negotiations. The Meeting concluded that measures should be taken at the bilateral, regional and international levels to ensure effective access for goods and services from developing countries to global distribution channels. Developed countries could play an important role in increasing the participation of developing countries in trade in distribution services. The experts called on UNCTAD to support developing countries in their assessment of trade liberalization in the area of distribution services; analyse the distribution value chain of a selected product; promote a better understanding of the classification and coverage of distribution services provided under the UN Central Product Classification and the GATS services classification; analyse to what extent lessons learned in Organisation for Economic Cooperation and Development countries could be applied as best practices in developing countries to promote the distribution of goods and services from those countries; identify ways to overcome challenges facing developing countries in accessing distribution channels and information networks and improve infrastructure, trade facilitation and conditions for traders in developing countries; and analyse to what extent trade agreements could help to achieve those objectives, thereby promoting South-South trade.

Interdependence and global economic issues

TDB, in October [A/60/15], considered interdependence and global economic issues from a trade and development perspective: new features in global interdependence. Participants agreed that, despite the growing importance of developing countries in international trade and finance and the expansion of South-South trade, the global economic environment continued to be shaped by macroeconomic and trade policies in developed countries. Asia was recognized as the most dynamic region in 2004/2005. Latin American economies recovered strongly in 2004 and prospects for 2005 pointed to a continuation of that recovery. Africa's growth performance, however, was reason for concern, particularly in sub-Saharan Africa, where it was still too low to allow for a strong increase in per capita income and a significant reduction of poverty. There was also concern about the increasing global current-account imbalances and the consequences of their eventual correction for the global economy, particularly for developing countries. It was recognized that a more balanced geographical pattern of demand growth would be helpful in correcting those imbalances, and that the necessary adjustments should be shared by the major surplus economies and the major deficit countries. Correction of the imbalances required broad-based multilateral policy coordination and counterbalancing action in major surplus economies. Attention was drawn to the continuing volatility of primary commodity prices, posing a serious risk for the sustainability of growth, and to the need for better international coordination to reduce the instability of commodity prices and exchange rates. A reexamination of mechanisms for reducing price instability in a wide range of commodities so as to minimize its adverse impact on national income could help strengthen a global partnership for development. The currently favourable external environment was a necessary but insufficient condition for sustained growth and development; continued domestic efforts for capital formation and structural change were needed, and developed countries could help developing countries by granting better market access and by facilitating the transfer of technology and increasing financial assistance and debt relief. The Trade and Development Report 2005 (see p. 1039) analysed the new features of global interdependence and considered the recent trends in the global economy, especially the interplay between the imbalances in the global economy and the implications for developing countries of the emergence of East and South Asia as a new growth pole. TDB stressed the importance of UNCTAD in identifying the elements of a coherent global development strategy and providing alternative views on economic policies from a development perspective.

Trade promotion and facilitation

In 2005, UN bodies maintained assistance to developing countries and transition economies in promoting their exports and facilitating their integration into the multilateral trading system. The main originator of technical cooperation projects in that area was the International Trade Centre, under the joint sponsorship of UNCTAD and WTO.

International Trade Centre

In 2005, the UNCTAD/WTO International Trade Centre (ITC) increased its delivery of technical assistance by 4.7 per cent to $22.1 million, from $21.1 million in 2004 [ITC/AG/(XXXIX)/206]. Assistance to Africa and LDCs amounted to 36 per cent and 37 per cent of total delivery, respectively. A total of 184 projects were operational, some 130 publications and technical materials were issued and almost 1,000 advisory missions were carried out. Some 400 training workshops were held with over 17,000 participants.

ITC responded with renewed efforts to harness trade for development. It expanded its WTO-related field activities; increased its support to public-private sector dialogue; sharpened its tools and backstopping services for national and sectoral export strategies; enriched its programmes to boost South-South trade, enterprise competitiveness and the capacity of trade support institutions (TSIs); and improved the depth of its assistance to specific export products and services sectors. Progress was made in achieving greater understanding of trade issues, their business implications and the critical role of business advocacy; applying ITC tools for designing and managing export strategies; enhancing the capacity of export enterprises and TSIs; generating South-South trade and developing better ways to promote products and services from developing countries. New partnerships were launched and an important contribution was made to trade-related MDGs.

ITC focused its activities on its five corporate goals. Under the goal of facilitating the integration of enterprises into the multilateral trading system, the beneficial integration of the business community in developing countries and economies in transition remained ITC's primary focus through broad-based technical cooperation activities aimed at ensuring the development dimension of the Doha negotiations. ITC helped build capacity for participation in services trade negotiations at the national level, continued its support on technical barriers to trade and sanitary and phytosanitary measures, and helped identify new market opportunities after the phasing out of the WTO Agreement on Textiles and Clothing.

Under the goal of supporting the design of trade development strategies, support was provided to a large number of countries at national, sectoral and enterprise levels. Design methodologies were refined and assistance for preparing national export strategies reinforced. ITC provided assistance, under regional and national programmes, for the development of sectoral strategies in 20 countries. It initiated action to develop a methodology for strategy design for services to respond to the increasing number of requests to provide advisory- and capacity-building support to the services sector; provided support to strategy implementation and to ensure its incorporation into national economic and social development planning processes.

As to the goal of strengthening key trade support services (both public and private), international trade treaties were examined, and a regional arbitration network for Southern Africa was established. Activities to establish and strengthen trade promotion organizations continued in Brazil, Pakistan, the Russian Federation, Sierra Leone, Tajikistan and the United Arab Emirates.

On the goal of improving sector performance, ITC provided assistance to critical sectors, including textile and clothing, leather, organic and natural products, fresh fruit and vegetables, coffee, wood products, jute, fisheries, gems and jewellery, services and tourism. Business opportunities between companies were created in key sectors and to support export development work at the sector level; the South-South Trade Promotion Programme organized eight buyers-sellers meetings on services, horticultural and apicultural products, food and agro-processing products, pharmaceutical and natural products, wood and wood products and aid relief items. A record number of 67 business associations and 434 companies in the South concluded new business transactions worth $37.7 million, and a number of market orientation tours were organized for exporters from Benin, Burkina Faso and Senegal to prospect new markets in the South and in developed countries, resulting in business opportunities for small and medium-sized enterprise (SME) exporters from those countries.

Under the goal of building enterprise competitiveness, two new markets and supply assessment tools were developed to quantify the gap between SME needs and the provision of business development services in meeting those needs. ITC held 28 management training events, involving 830 enterprises and trainers. The training and counselling capacities created through ITC's regional hubs continued to demonstrate their viability, and thirty new publications were developed to support the delivery of integrated SME training programmes teaching management, exporting and e-business skills to enterprise managers, with specific support for women entrepreneurs.

JAG action. The ITC Joint Advisory Group (JAG), at its thirty-eighth session (Geneva, 18-22 April) [ITC/AG/(XXXVIII)/204], considered the reports on ITC 2004 activities [YUN 2004, p. 965] and on its technical cooperation projects in 2004 [ITC/AG/(XXXVIII)/202/Add.1,2], and the report of the Consultative Committee of the ITC Global Trust Fund [ITC/AG/(XXXVIII)/203].

The Group noted the increase in delivery of 82 per cent over a four-year period and encouraged ITC to implement its "managed growth" strategy, which emphasized both qualitative and quantitative growth. It endorsed ITC's work in promoting public-private sector dialogue and consultations on trade strategy and called upon it to provide assistance in formulating service sector strategies, building awareness of service exports among service associations and capacities within trade support institutions to promote service exports and organize networking meetings for industry associations. The Group encouraged ITC to maintain its role in increasing the international competitiveness of the textile and clothing sector and in addressing non-tariff barriers. ITC was encouraged to continue to move the Integrated Framework for Trade-related Technical Assistance to Least Developed Countries forward and to increase its support to promoting public-private sector dialogue. ITC's role in supporting sectors of importance to LDCs and in identifying non-tariff trade barriers among developing countries was welcomed. It was encouraged to help countries mainstream trade into national development and poverty reduction strategies and to increase its efforts to attract private-sector partnerships.

In terms of ITC's geographical coverage, the Group noted that the level of support to LDCs had been higher in earlier years than in 2004 and urged ITC to reverse that downward trend in view of the continued marginalization of LDCs from the benefits of world trade. It emphasized the importance of increasing support to the African region and noted that ITC had prepared a response paper on possible areas of support from ITC. It endorsed ITC's focus on building national capacities for trade promotion to ensure the sustainability of its operations and requested it to support SME rehabilitation in tsunami-affected countries in the Indian Ocean region.

Pledges of trust fund contributions to ITC were announced by Canada, China, Denmark, France, Germany, India, Italy, Japan, the Netherlands, Norway, Sweden and Switzerland.

In October [A/60/15], TDB took note of JAG's report on its thirty-eighth session.

ITC administrative arrangements

In March [A/60/6 (Sect. 13)], the Secretary-General submitted preliminary budget estimates for ITC for the 2006-2007 biennium. Requirements, expressed in Swiss francs (SwF) at 2004-2005 rates, were estimated at SwF 65,540,400. Since SwF 470,000 from various sources would be available to ITC during the 2006-2007 biennium, the contribution of each organization (the United Nations and WTO) was estimated at SwF 32,535,200 at 2004-2005 rates for the biennium.

The Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Question (ACABQ), in its first report on the proposed programme budget for the 2006-2007 biennium [A/60/7], recommended that the General Assembly take note of the resources proposed in the ITC preliminary budget estimates.

The Secretary-General, in November, submitted revised budget estimates for ITC for the 2006-2007 biennium [A/60/6 (Sect. 13)/Add.1]. Those requirements were estimated at SwF 66,058,600, before recosting, or SwF 68,369,400, at 2006-2007 rates, representing a decrease of 0.02 per cent compared with the approved budget for 2004-2005. Since the projected miscellaneous income was at SwF 470,000 for the 2006-2007 biennium, the biennial contribution of the United Nations and WTO was SwF 33,949,700, or $26,732,000, at the exchange rate of SwF 1.27 to $1.00.

In December [A/60/7/Add.16 & Corr.1], ACABQ recommended that the Assembly approve an amount of SwF 68,369,400, at 2006-2007 rates, under section 13, ITC UNCTAD/WTO, of the proposed programme budget for the 2006-2007 biennium.

The Assembly, in section I of resolution 60/248, of 23 December (see p. 1494), approved resources in the amount of $26,732,000 for the 2006-2007 biennium under section 13, ITC UNCTAD/WTO, of the proposed programme budget for 2006-2007.

Enterprise, business facilitation and development

The Commission on Enterprise, Business Facilitation and Development, at its ninth session (Geneva, 22-25 February) [TD/B/COM.3/70], had before it UNCTAD secretariat notes on linkages, value chains and outward investment: internationalization patterns of developing countries' SMEs [TD/B/COM.3/69]; efficient transport and trade facilitation to improve participation by developing countries in international trade [TD/B/COM.3/67]; e-commerce strategies for development: selected trade and development aspects of information and communication technologies (ICTs) [TD/B/COM.3/68]; a progress report on the implementation of the Commission's agreed recommendations at its eighth session [TD/B/COM.3/66]; and a number of 2004 expert meeting reports [YUN 2004, p. 968].

In its agreed recommendations on improving the competitiveness of SMEs, the Commission agreed that the globalization process had affected the business environment for SMEs in developing countries, with international competitiveness becoming increasingly difficult for them. It also agreed that the internationalization of enterprises could strengthen the competitiveness of developing country firms. It requested UNCTAD to continue its work on policy analysis in the area of enterprise competitiveness and its technical assistance and capacity building efforts. It should explore ways in which issues of SME development could be addressed and provide assistance to tsunami-affected countries in SME competitiveness rehabilitation. It should also study the possible development of a competitiveness analysis framework and relevant indicators for SME sector development.

In its recommendation on efficient transport and trade facilitation, the Commission asked UNCTAD to: keep under review and monitor developments relating to efficient transport and trade facilitation and examine their implications for developing countries; provide technical assistance and capacity building activities in that area; monitor developments and disseminate information on security measures affecting the international trade and transport of developing countries; and cooperate with other intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations (NGOs) in their work relating to the development of international legal instruments.

On electronic commerce strategies for development, the Commission recommended that UNCTAD should: carry out research and policy-oriented analytical work on the implications for trade and development of the different aspects of ICT and e-business, with a focus on those sectors of main interest to developing countries; continue, with an appropriate implementation strategy, to provide a forum for international discussion and exchange of experiences concerning ICT, e-business and their applications, including dissemination of best practices and standards, in the promotion of trade and development; continue work on the measurement of ICT, including the development of statistical capacity, to enable developing countries to measure the access, use and impact of ICT and to monitor progress; contribute to capacity building in ICT for development, particularly in trade sectors of special interest to developing countries or those that could be enhanced through the use of ICT, such as tourism, SME development and poverty alleviation, and provide advisory services to developing countries in the context of its capacity-building activities and the multistakeholder partnerships launched at UNCTAD XI [YUN 2004, p. 955], and facilitate a discussion on free and open source software, in partnership with private sector and civil society entities.

In May [A/60/15], TDB took note of the Commission's report and endorsed its recommendations.

Subsidiary bodies. A number of expert meetings were held in Geneva during the year. The Expert Meeting on Trade Facilitation as an Engine for Development (21-23 September) [TD/B/COM.3/EM.24/3] had before it an UNCTAD secretariat note on the subject [TD/B/COM.3/EM.24/2]. The meeting discussed trade and transport facilitation and development, trade facilitation and regional integration, private sector expectations from the WTO negotiations on trade facilitation and implementation of trade facilitation measures. It noted the general benefits of an efficient trade and transport facilitation system and agreed that trade facilitation and development strategies should be tailored to the specific needs of landlocked, least developed and small island developing countries. Coordinated action was also required to support those countries in their effort to integrate into the world economy through trade and transport facilitation. ITC should continue to design and implement trade and transport facilitation measures and programmes, and create or strengthen institutional mechanisms to ensure the integration of trade and transport facilitation into the development process.

The Expert Meeting on ICT and Tourism for Development (30 November–2 December) [TD/B/COM.3/EM.25/3] had before it an UNCTAD secretariat note on the subject [TD/B/COM.3/EM.25/2]. The meeting examined current and future characteristics and the dynamics of the innovation process in the tourism industry, focusing on the role of ICTs in developing tourism, the innovation process in the tourism industry managing and promoting destinations online, and e-business challenges. In the light of the contribution of tourism to the economies of many developing countries, ICTs and e-business played a key role in helping destination management organizations (DMOs) and tourism suppliers in developing countries to promote their products and services worldwide. Tourism enterprise in developing countries, particularly SMEs, faced challenges in taking advantage of opportunities because of their slow adoption of ICTs. DMOs should create awareness of the potential offered by ICTs, provide business advice and facilitate access to technology and training. Experts also considered the relevance of destination management systems (DMSs) for Governments and for regional, national and local tourism providers and emphasized that the success of a DMS was related to the establishment of public and private partnerships. The experts concluded that e-tourism policies and strategies would play an increasing role in integrating enterprises, particularly SMEs, into global tourism markets. In developing countries, assistance with the development of e-tourism initiatives was urgently needed, along with capacity building programmes. In addition, experts proposed the development of a "virtual space" to share technical, marketing and strategic solutions, as well as best practices in managing destinations online. South Africa offered to host the "virtual space".

The Expert Meeting on Enhancing Productive Capacity of Developing Country Firms through Internationalization (5-7 December) [TD/B/COM.3/EM.26/3] had before it an UNCTAD secretariat note on internationalization of developing country enterprises through outward foreign direct investment (OFDI) [TD/B/COM.3/EM.26/2] and five case studies prepared by the UNCTAD secretariat [TD/B/COM.3/EM.26/2/Add.1-5]. The meeting examined how enterprise competitiveness in developing countries and economies in transition could be enhanced through internationalization, with a focus on OFDI, particularly by SMEs, and identified policy options for helping developing countries strengthen their firms' competitiveness by investing abroad. It discussed the main trends of OFDI from developing countries, motivations, drivers, the impact on enterprise competitiveness, competitiveness gains and policies for OFDI, and programmes supporting enterprise internationalization. The challenges and risks of internationalization were discussed and risk factors identified. The experts identified also a wide range of trends, motivations, drivers, competitiveness gains and policies for OFDI which deserved further attention and in-depth analysis. They recognized that OFDI was a relatively new and little-studied phenomenon, and there was a need for more research on its impact on the competitiveness of domestic enterprises and home countries. In that regard, an awareness-building effort was needed to enhance understanding of developing countries' Governments and businesses regarding possible ways to increase the potential beneficial impact of OFDI and to minimize its possible negative effects.

Commodities

The UNCTAD/DESA report World Economic Situation and Prospects 2006 [Sales No. E.06.II.C.2] stated that commodity prices continued on an upward trend in 2005. After an increase of 20 per cent in 2004, non-fuel commodity prices, as measured by the UNCTAD commodity index, rose by a further 10 per cent, on average, during the first 10 months of 2005. Higher nominal prices were supported by demand from Asia, in particular from China, and emerging supply constraints in some commodity markets. However, the pace of price increases decelerated during the year, and the increases in commodity prices did not offset the severe declines suffered in the past. Expressed in current United States dollars, non-fuel commodity prices were still lower than what they were in the early 1980s. In real terms, by the end of 2005, commodity prices were about 30 per cent lower than the average for the period 1975-1985. Average price increases concealed considerable diversity across commodity groups. Most of the increase in non-fuel commodity prices markets in 2005, was driven by developments in the minerals and metals markets. After reaching a peak in August 2005, oil prices declined, reflecting a deceleration of oil demand. Brent, one of the two key market references for light, sweet crude, was priced at $55 per barrel in late November, down from $63 in late August, when Hurricanes Katrina and Rita provoked serious disruptions in an already tight market.

Individual commodities

Timber. The United Nations Conference for the Negotiation of a Successor Agreement to the International Tropical Timber Agreement, 1994 [YUN 1994, p. 887] reconvened in 2005 (Geneva, 27 June–1 July). It had before it a final working paper [TD/TIMBER.3/L.4] resulting from the second part of the Conference which took place from 14 to 18 February. The Conference adopted a draft resolution [TD/TIMBER.3/10] requesting the UNCTAD Secretary-General to convene the Conference in January 2006 and, in cooperation with the Executive Director of the International Tropical Timber Organization, to prepare the necessary documentation, notably the working document resulting from the third part of the Conference.

Olive oil and table olives. As at 31 December, the International Agreement on Olive Oil and Table Olives, 1986, as amended and extended 1993 [YUN 1993, p. 760] until 31 December 2005, had 15 parties. On 16 March 2005, Monaco informed the Secretary-General of its decision to withdraw from the Agreement.

Sugar. As at 31 December, the International Sugar Agreement 1992 [YUN 1992, p. 625] had 22 signatories and 51 parties. During the year, Mozambique and Paraguay became parties.

Coffee. As at 31 December, the International Coffee Agreement 2001 [YUN 2001, p. 880] had 35 signatories and 63 parties. During the year, France, Italy and the United States became parties.

Cocoa. As at 31 December, the International Cocoa Agreement 2001 [YUN 2001, p. 880] had 11 signatories and 19 parties. During the year, the Dominican Republic and Venezuela became parties.

Common Fund for Commodities

The 1980 Agreement establishing the Common Fund for Commodities [YUN 1980, p. 621], a mechanism intended to stabilize the commodities market by helping to finance buffer stocks of specific commodities and such commodity development activities as research and marketing, entered into force in 1989, and the Fund became operational later that year. As at 31 December 2005, the number of parties to the Agreement remained at 110.

On 23 November, the General Assembly granted observer status to the Common Fund for Commodities (resolution 60/26) (see p. 1543).

Finance

Financial policy

The World Economic and Social Survey 2005 [Sales No. E.05.II.C.1], which was devoted to financing for development, stated that improved economic conditions in developing countries, as well as the higher global growth and low interest rates, drove a recovery of private capital flows to developing countries in 2003 and 2004, perhaps signalling the beginning of a new cycle. However, periods of increased volatility in yield spreads on emerging market bonds, in 2004 and 2005, in response to uncertainty in the pace of interest rate increases in developed countries (particularly the United States), underscored the vulnerability of financial flows to acceleration in increases in interest rates. More importantly, net transfers of financial resources from developing countries did not experience a positive turnaround and continued to deteriorate in 2004, for the seventh year in a row, reaching an estimated $350 billion. Those transfers were explained by the combination of relatively low net financial flows and accumulation of very large foreign-exchange reserves, particularly in Asia. Divergence in regional trends in private financial flows also resulted in changes in regional distribution of those flows. The most striking aspect of such developments was the increased concentration of flows to Eastern and Southern Asia, in particular to China, at the expense of Latin America, where private financial flows remained far below the 1997 peak. Exhaustion of State assets available for privatization and mergers and acquisitions, joined by macroeconomic volatility in some developing countries, resulted in a brief decline in foreign direct investment (FDI) in 2002-2003, followed by a broad-based recovery across developing regions and economies in transition, owing to the improvement in a combination of cyclical, institutional and structural factors. As a result of the commitments contained in the Monterrey Consensus, adopted at the International Conference in Financing for Development [YUN 2002, p. 953], the decline in the share of official development assistance (ODA) in developed country gross national income (GNI) was reversed, rising to 0.25 per cent in 2003 and 2004. If all the commitments were met by the target date of 2006, total ODA was projected to reach $88 billion, an increase of almost 50 per cent in nominal terms, from the total recorded in 2002. Despite the positive trend since 2002, the projected ODA levels for 2006-2010 would fall short of the estimated $150 billion deemed necessary for developing countries to attain the Millennium Development Goals (MDGs) [YUN 2000, p. 51]. Furthermore, the recent reversal of the decline in aid flows barely brought real assistance back to the 1990 levels. The European Union (EU) and its member States, individually, which provided more than half of total ODA, undertook, in mid-2005, to achieve or maintain the 0.7 per cent ODA/GNI target by 2015.

The UNCTAD/DESA report World Economic Situation and Prospects 2006 [Sales No. E.06.II.C.2], based on information available as at 30 November 2005, stated that macroeconomic policies and, in particular monetary policies, became less synchronized worldwide in 2005, in contrast to 2004, when many economies were unwinding the policy stimuli injected in earlier years. While central banks in some countries continued to raise policy interest rates, other countries reduced interest rates or maintained their policy stance for several months. Among the developed countries, the United States Federal Reserve Board raised interest rates by a total of 325 basis points from mid-2004, pushing up the Federal Funds rate to 4.25 per cent. No further monetary tightening was expected in the euro area, although it was not clear whether the increase in late 2005 was the beginning of a more prolonged restrictive stance. Signals from Japan were more clearly in the direction of maintaining the policy framework of quantitative easing, creating an environment where short-term interest rates could stay close to zero. The central banks in other developed countries would likely keep their policy stance at the current levels. In the developing countries and economies in transition, further monetary tightening was expected, although in measured steps. That strategy held, in particular for most Asian economies, along with continued intervention in foreign-exchange markets and sterilization. In contrast, in Latin America, room for easing remained in several countries with high interest rates and relatively low growth, such as Brazil and Mexico, as inflation was contained within the target range. While most African countries would maintain a cautious monetary policy stance, many economies in West Asia would raise interest rates. Meanwhile, monetary policy in most economies in transition would remain accommodative.

Financial flows

According to the UNCTAD/DESA report on the world economic situation and prospects, the magnitude of net transfers of financial resources from developing to developed countries had risen steadily from an estimated $8.1 billion in 1997 to $483.4 billion in 2005. The net transfer of resources from economies in transition had also followed a similar pattern since 1999, reaching an estimated $95.5 billion in 2005. The most important destination of the net outward transfer of financial resources from developing countries taken as a whole was to the United States, and more than offset the net outward transfer from other major developed countries, namely EU countries and Japan, to developing countries. Net private capital inflows to developing countries as a group fell substantially in 2005 to $95 billion from a peak of $184 billion reported in 2004. Most of the decline was due to falling inflows into East, South and Western Asia. However, inflows increased for Africa and Latin America and the Caribbean. There were substantial declines in portfolio and other investments. In contrast, FDI flows continued to increase and remained the largest type of net capital flow to developing countries.

Worldwide, FDI inflows increased by 18 per cent to $762 billion in 2005. In absolute terms, the bulk of the increase went to East and South Asia. FDI also increased strongly in Africa and Western Asia in relative terms. Total FDI flows to developing countries reached $278 billion in 2005, up from $233 billion in 2004. FDI related to the privatization process in the economies in transition slowed down as that process neared completion in many countries. More noteworthy, was the surge in FDI originating from developing countries, especially by Asian firms. In 2004, those outflows amounted to $83 billion, or about 12 per cent of worldwide FDI.

The role of FDI in Africa

A July report by the UNCTAD secretariat [TD/B/52/5] on economic development in Africa reviewed the role of FDI. It stated that many African countries had implemented policies for attracting FDI as a development finance vehicle of choice in an attempt to avoid further indebtedness, create jobs, acquire new technologies, build linkages with the rest of the economy and reduce poverty. Those policies did not, in many cases, increase FDI flows to productive sectors or ensure more rapid growth and reduce poverty. The report proceeded from the need for a more critical approach to evaluating the size, quality and impact of FDI in Africa and suggested that policy makers should pay attention to its costs and benefits as much as to ways of attracting it. It argued for a more balanced and strategic approach to FDI tailored to African economic conditions and development challenges. The report stressed the need to rethink the emphasis on attracting FDI and its replacement with a more balanced and strategic approach tailored to African conditions and challenges. It concluded that African policymakers should consider how the gains and costs from hosting FDI could be managed to strengthen profit-investment-export linkages and be aware of longer-term losses resulting from giving up policy space for subsequent industrialization and diversification efforts. Reversing the premature deindustrialization of the past two decades would shift resources away from traditional low-productivity activities and attract a more dynamic type of FDI to Africa. However, that would need the establishment of a more robust domestic accumulation process across the region, based on more linkages between the rural and urban economies, across sectors and among consumer, intermediate and capital-goods industries. The effectiveness of strategic trade and investment policies to encourage diversification into non-traditional exports should be complemented with a stronger regional focus.

TDB [A/60/15], in agreed conclusions adopted on 7 November [agreed conclusions 484 (LII)], noted that Africa's share of global FDI had declined over the past three years, 80 per cent of which was going into extractive sectors and had not generated the desired benefits. It underscored the need to encourage greater productive direct investment, including foreign investment, in African countries to support their development activities. Noting further that FDI could complement domestic investment by enhancing human and physical infrastructure, TDB encouraged the creation of an environment conducive to both domestic and foreign direct investment and urged policymakers to adopt a strategic and tailored approach to take into account African economic conditions and development challenges. It encouraged African Governments to adopt policies to attract FDI and increase its benefits for Africa, while achieving sustainable development, taking into account a regional coordinated approach. It underscored that rapid growth was a critical component in the design of African trade and development strategies, a contributor to which should be regional trade arrangements (RTAs) within the multilateral trading system. UNCTAD was urged to continue to undertake in-depth analysis and provide policy advice on African development.

International financial system

Report of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 59/222 [YUN 2004, p. 973], the Secretary-General submitted a July report [A/60/163] on international financial system and development, which complemented his report [A/60/289] (see p. 1061) on follow-up to and implementation of the outcome of the International Conference on Financing for Development [YUN 2002, p. 953]. The report assessed the efficiency of the international financial system in allocating financial resources in a way that supported the mobilization of domestic resources and reviewed measures to improve its stability. It also reviewed policies to counter the procyclicality of international capital flows, improve multilateral surveillance, create additional emergency official financing arrangements, strengthen the International Monetary Fund (IMF) financing of poor countries and streamline its lending conditionality, implement sovereign debt restructuring, improve the role of special drawing rights in the international financial system, support South-South cooperation in the international monetary system and enhance the voice and participation of developing countries in international financial decision-making.

In his conclusions, the Secretary-General stated that many countries were accumulating liquid foreign reserve balances to protect against the volatility of international capital flows and the resulting vulnerability to financial crisis. Measures to increase the stability of the international financial system and provide means to access liquidity in periods of turbulence would reduce the attractiveness of large individual country reserve balances. The reserves built up in multilateral development banks should continue to be used to support growth and poverty reduction in the poorest developing countries and provide liquidity support in middle-income countries. Although developing countries had taken measures to counter the pro-cyclicality of international capital flows, they remained vulnerable to global uncertainties and risks, and the transformation of the global financial system increased the likelihood of boom-bust cycles. It was essential to introduce a modified, system-wide approach to prudential regulation, taking into account the macroeconomic consequences of financial imbalances and the inherent procyclicality of financial markets. Multilateral surveillance remained at the centre of crisis prevention efforts and should focus not only on crisis-prone countries, but also on the stability of the system as a whole, with special emphasis on the policy consistency of major economies. Since emergency financing at the international and regional levels contributed to crisis prevention and management, there was the need for easier, more automatic and rapid access to liquidity support in order to ease the burden of adjustment.

IMF/World Bank Development Committee. The joint International Monetary Fund (IMF)/World Bank Development Committee, in a communiqué issued following its 25 September meeting (Washington, D.C.), reiterated its support for the realization of the internationally agreed development goals, including the MDGs and reaffirmed the importance of sound policies in developing countries. The Committee stated that stronger country policies and more effective aid should be complemented with efforts to increase openness and market access, and stressed the importance of reforming agricultural trade policies to expand market access and eliminate trade-distorting subsidies. The Committee asked the Bank and the Fund to examine the adequacy of mechanisms to address regional or cross-country aid for trade needs and explore new ones, and to integrate better trade-related needs into their support for country programmes. It welcomed the work on enhancing IMF instruments in support of its low-income members, and called for the strengthening of Bank-Fund collaboration.

In an earlier communiqué following a 17 April meeting (Washington D.C.), the Committee stated that macroeconomic stability remained critical, as was the need to strengthen public sector financial management, promote good governance, improve business climate and regulation and develop local financial markets. Development financing remained a challenge, requiring sustained action on domestic resource mobilization, private investment and trade. (See p. 1060 also.)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December [meeting 68], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/60/486/Add.2], adopted resolution 60/186 without vote [agenda item 50 (b)].

International financial system and development

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 55/186 of 20 December 2000 and 56/181 of 21 December 2001, both entitled "Towards a strengthened and stable international financial architecture responsive to the priorities of growth and development, especially in developing countries, and to the promotion of economic and social equity", as well as its resolutions 57/241 of 20 December 2002, 58/202 of 23 December 2003 and 59/222 of 22 December 2004,

Recalling also the United Nations Millennium Declaration and its resolution 56/210 B of 9 July 2002, in which it endorsed the Monterrey Consensus of the International Conference on Financing for Development, and the Plan of Implementation of the World Summit on Sustainable Development ("Johannesburg Plan of Implementation"),

Recalling further the 2005 World Summit Outcome,

Emphasizing that the international financial system should further sustain economic growth and support sustainable development and hunger and poverty eradication, while allowing for the coherent mobilization of all sources of financing for development, including the mobilization of domestic resources, international investment flows, official development assistance, external debt relief and an open, equitable, rule-based, predictable and non-discriminatory global trading system,

Stressing the importance of commitment to sound domestic financial sectors, which make a vital contribution to national development efforts, as an important component of an international financial architecture that is supportive of development,

Stressing also that good governance at the international level is fundamental for achieving sustainable development, in this regard reiterating the importance of promoting global economic governance by addressing the international finance, trade, technology and investment patterns that have an impact on the development prospects of developing countries in order to ensure a dynamic and enabling international economic environment, and reiterating also that, to this effect, the international community should take all necessary and appropriate measures, including ensuring support for structural and macroeconomic reform, finding a comprehensive solution to the external debt problem and increasing the market access of developing countries,

Reaffirming the commitment to broaden and strengthen the participation of developing countries and countries with economies in transition in international economic decision-making and norm-setting, and to that end stressing the importance of continuing efforts to reform the international financial architecture, noting that enhancing the voice and participation of developing countries and countries with economies in transition in the Bretton Woods institutions remains a continuous concern,

Recognizing the urgent need to enhance the coherence, governance and consistency of the international monetary, financial and trading systems and the importance of ensuring their openness, fairness and inclusiveness in order to complement national development efforts to ensure sustained economic growth and the achievement of the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals,

Emphasizing the need for additional stable and predictable financing to help developing countries undertake investment plans to achieve internationally agreed development goals,

Recognizing, in this regard, the value of developing innovative sources of financing from various sources on a public, private, domestic and external basis to increase and supplement traditional sources of financing,

Reiterating the need to strengthen the leadership role of the United Nations in promoting development,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Notes that global economic growth and a stable international financial system, inter alia, can support the ability of developing countries to achieve internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals, and stresses the importance of cooperative efforts by all countries and institutions to cope with the risks of financial instability;

3. Emphasizes that economic growth should be further strengthened and sustained, noting that global economic growth depends on national economic growth and that implementation of sound macroeconomic policies could significantly contribute to a revitalization of economic growth;

4. Invites the World Bank, the International Monetary Fund, the regional development banks and other relevant institutions to further integrate development dimensions into their strategies and policies, consistent with their respective mandates;

5. Notes that developing countries as a whole continue to experience a net outflow of financial resources, and requests the Secretary-General, in continuing collaboration with international financial institutions and other relevant bodies, to analyse the range of reasons for this in his report under this item;

6. Underlines the importance of promoting international financial stability and sustainable growth, and welcomes the efforts undertaken to this end by the International Monetary Fund and the Financial Stability Forum, as well as the consideration by the International Monetary and Financial Committee of ways to sharpen tools designed to promote international financial stability and enhance crisis prevention, inter alia, through an even-handed implementation of surveillance, including at the regional level, and a sharpening of surveillance of capital markets and systemically and regionally important countries, with a view, inter alia, to the early identification of problems and risks, integrating debt sustainability analysis, the fostering of appropriate policy responses, the possible provision of financing and other instruments designed to prevent the emergence or spread of financial crises and further improvements in the transparency of macroeconomic data and statistical information on international capital flows;

7. Also underlines the importance of efforts at the national level to increase resilience to financial risk, stresses in this regard the importance of better assessment of a country's debt burden and its ability to service that debt in both crisis prevention and resolution, and welcomes the ongoing work of the International Monetary Fund on assessing debt sustainability;

8. Invites developed countries, in particular major industrialized economies, to take into account the effect of their macroeconomic policies on international growth and development;

9. Recognizes the need for multilateral surveillance to remain at the centre of crisis prevention efforts and that surveillance should focus not only on crisis-prone countries but on the stability of the system as a whole;

10. Reiterates that measures to mitigate the impact of excessive volatility of short-term capital flows and to improve transparency of and information about financial flows are important and must be considered;

11. Notes the impact of financial crises or risk contagion in developing countries and countries with economies in transition, regardless of their size, and in this regard welcomes the efforts of the international financial institutions, in their support to countries, to continuously adapt their array of financial facilities and resources, drawing on a full range of policies, taking into account the effects of economic cycles, as and where appropriate, having due regard to sound fiscal management and the specific circumstances of each case, so as to prevent and respond to such crises in a timely and appropriate way;

12. Underscores the importance of competitive and inclusive private and public financial markets in mobilizing and allocating savings towards productive investment and thus making a vital contribution to national development efforts and to an international financial architecture that is supportive of development;

13. Invites the international financial and banking institutions to consider enhancing the transparency of risk-rating mechanisms, noting that sovereign risk assessments made by the private sector should maximize the use of strict, objective and transparent parameters, which can be facilitated by high-quality data and analysis, and encourages relevant development institutions, including the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, to continue their work on this issue, including its potential impact on the development prospects of developing countries;

14. Stresses the importance of strong domestic institutions in promoting business activities and financial stability for the achievement of growth and development, inter alia, through sound macroeconomic policies and policies aimed at strengthening the regulatory systems of the corporate, financial and banking sectors, and also stresses that international cooperation initiatives in those areas should encourage flows of capital to developing countries;

15. Underlines the fact that the issue of enhancing the voice of developing countries and countries with economies in transition in the Bretton Woods institutions is of vital importance, stresses the importance of enhancing ongoing work in this regard, taking into account progress in the context of the International Monetary Fund quota review, and invites the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund to continue to provide information on this issue, using existing cooperation forums, including those involving Member States;

16. Emphasizes that it is essential to ensure the effective and equitable participation of developing countries in the formulation of financial standards and codes, underscores the need to ensure their implementation, on a voluntary and progressive basis, as a contribution to reducing vulnerability to financial crisis and contagion, and notes that more than one hundred countries have participated in or agreed to participate in the joint World Bank-International Monetary Fund financial sector assessment programme;

17. Notes the proposal to use special drawing rights allocations for development purposes, and considers that any assessment of special drawing rights allocations must respect the Articles of Agreement of the International Monetary Fund and the established rules of procedure of the Fund, which requires taking into account the global need for liquidity at the international level;

18. Invites the multilateral and regional development banks and development funds to continue to play a vital role in serving the development needs of developing countries and countries with economies in transition, including through coordinated action, as appropriate, and stresses that strengthened regional development banks and subregional financial institutions add flexible financial support to national and regional development efforts, thus enhancing their ownership and overall efficiency, and are an essential source of knowledge and expertise for their developing-country members;

19. Calls for the continued effort of the multilateral financial institutions, in providing policy advice, technical assistance and financial support to member countries, to work on the basis of nationally owned reform and development strategies, to pay due regard to the special needs and implementing capacities of developing countries and countries with economies in transition and to minimize the negative impacts of the adjustment programmes on the vulnerable segments of society, while taking into account the importance of gender-sensitive employment and hunger and poverty eradication policies and strategies;

20. Stresses the need to continuously improve standards of corporate and public sector governance, including accounting, auditing and measures to ensure transparency, noting the disruptive effects of inadequate policies;

21. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to the General Assembly at its sixty-first session on the implementation of the present resolution;

22. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its sixty-first session, under the item entitled "Macroeconomic policy questions", the sub-item entitled "International financial system and development".

Debt problems of developing countries

Report of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 59/223 [YUN 2004, p. 977], the Secretary-General submitted a July report [A/60/139] on external debt crisis and development, which reviewed recent developments in the external debt of developing countries, the implementation of the Heavily Indebted Poor Countries (HIPC) Initiative, launched in 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 867], and the financing challenges for countries having reached the completion point. It also analysed new approaches within the Paris Club (a group of creditor countries), including the Evian approach, debt repayments, and the experiences of debt restructurings with private creditors. The principles of an orderly debt workout process were discussed in the light of those experiences.

The report concluded that, against the backdrop of better growth and export prospects in developing countries in general, recent trends revealed a smaller accumulation of debt and lower debt-service burden. However, some groups of countries continued to struggle for a durable solution to their serious debt problems. Despite notable progress in its implementation, the HIPC Initiative fell short of the MDG targets and would need additional development assistance, including full debt cancellation. In this respect, the G-8 (Group of most industrialized countries) agreed to provide additional resources to cover the cost of full cancellation of HIPC multilateral debt. However, the modalities of the implementation of the G-8 initiative needed to be clarified. For countries that had reached the completion point, it was important to achieve lasting debt sustainability and avoid falling into a new debt trap. Unfortunately, for many of them debt ratios had increased to unsustainable levels under the HIPC Initiative. In order to avoid debt-servicing difficulties and to achieve the MDGs by 2015, without an increase in debt ratios, exclusively grant-based finance for most HIPCs was called for, and donors were encouraged to fulfil their increased ODA commitments. However, in countries where additional loans were necessary, there was a need to promote responsible lending and borrowing and to link the grant element of such loans to the capacity to pay. The question of debt-sustainability analysis was also key to the resolution of the debt crisis of other low- and middle-income countries. It should be part of the overall development strategy of a country, addressing debt, trade and finance issues in a coherent framework, and strengthening debt-management capacity should be an integral part of that strategy. It was essential to reach an international understanding on debt restructuring modalities, which would bring together official and private creditors in a dialogue, with a view to resolving debt problems in an expeditious and timely manner and protecting the interests of debtors and creditors.

Other actions. The joint IMF/World Bank Development Committee, in a communiqué issued following its 17 April meeting (Washington, D.C.), stressed the need to accelerate and sustain growth and development through sound policy frameworks and called upon the Bank to develop an action plan for Africa. It welcomed the agreement by the Bank and Fund on a joint framework for assessing debt sustainability in low-income countries, as well as proposals for additional debt and debt service relief, and agreed that further debt relief beyond HIPCs was needed in specific cases to secure long-term debt sustainability and support progress towards the fulfilment of the MDGs.

In a communiqué issued following its 25 September meeting (Washington, D.C.), the Committee welcomed the World Bank Group's Africa Action Plan, focusing on building state capacity and improving governance; strengthening the drivers of growth; and promoting broad participation in growth and sharing its benefits. It called for its timely implementation and urged the Bank to work closely with the African Union, the New Partnership for Africa's Development (see p. 1003), the African Development Bank, the African Partnership Forum and other partners. The Committee also welcomed the proposal adopted by the G-8 (Gleneagles, United Kingdom, July) for 100 per cent cancellation of debt owed by eligible HIPCs to the International Development Association (IDA), the African Development Fund, and IMF, and agreed on the need for an interdependent package that was additional to existing commitments and maintained the financial integrity and capacity of IDA to assist poor countries in the future. It also agreed on the need for additionality in donor resources for debt relief and emphasized the importance of maintaining sound economic performance and good governance by eligible countries.

The UNCTAD/DESA report World Economic Situation and Prospects 2006 stated that, at the end of 2005, eighteen countries had reached the completion point under the HIPC Initiative and 10 had reached the decision point, making them eligible to receive interim debt relief. The implementation of the HIPC Initiative continued to progress slowly, owing mainly to the difficulty of eligible countries in complying with the conditions required to receive full debt relief. To many of them in the interim phase of the Initiative, maintaining macroeconomic stability was a major challenge.

The World Economic and Social Survey 2005 stated that, by mid-April, 27 countries had received debt relief. Together with other debt relief initiatives, HIPC had provided two-thirds of the reduction in debt stocks of those countries. The total cost of providing debt relief to all of the 38 countries potentially eligible for assistance under the HIPC Initiative was estimated at $58 billion in 2004, in net current value terms. A little more than 50 per cent would come from debt forgiveness by bilateral creditors, while the rest would be provided by multilateral lenders.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December [meeting 68], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/60/486/Add.3], adopted resolution 60/187 without vote [agenda item 50 (c)].

External debt crisis and development

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 58/203 of 23 December 2003 and 59/223 of 22 December 2004 on external debt crisis and development,

Reaffirming the Monterrey Consensus of the International Conference on Financing for Development, which recognizes sustainable debt financing as an important element for mobilizing resources for public and private investment,

Recalling the United Nations Millennium Declaration adopted on 8 September 2000,

Recalling also the 2005 World Summit Outcome,

Recalling further its resolution 57/270 B of 23 June 2003,

Welcoming the fact that total debt service for developing countries decreased in the period from 2003 to 2004, leading to improvements in several traditional debt indicators, but concerned that some low- and middle-income developing countries that are not eligible for debt relief under the Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Initiative are still facing difficulties in finding a durable solution in meeting their external debt-servicing obligations, which could adversely affect their sustainable development,

Welcoming also the fact that the Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Initiative has enabled heavily indebted poor countries to markedly increase their expenditures on health, education and other social services consistent with national priorities and development plans, emphasizing in this regard the need to ensure that debt relief does not replace other sources of financing, stressing the importance of addressing the challenges of those heavily indebted poor countries that are facing difficulties in reaching the completion point under the Initiative, and expressing concern that some heavily indebted poor countries continue to face substantial debt burdens and need to avoid rebuilding unsustainable debt burdens after reaching the completion point under the Initiative,

Welcoming further the recent proposal of the Group of Eight, as endorsed by the Bretton Woods institutions at their 2005 annual meetings, to cancel 100 per cent of the outstanding debt of eligible heavily indebted poor countries owed to the International Monetary Fund, the International Development Association and the African Development Fund and to provide additional resources to ensure that the financing capacity of the international financial institutions is not reduced,

Emphasizing that debt sustainability is essential for underpinning growth, and underlining the importance of debt sustainability to the efforts to achieve national development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals, and that countries should direct those resources freed through debt relief, in particular through debt reduction and cancellation, towards activities consistent with poverty eradication, sustained economic growth and sustainable development and the achievement of the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals,

Convinced that enhanced market access for goods and services of export interest to developing countries contributes significantly to debt sustainability in those countries,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Emphasizes the special importance of a timely, effective, comprehensive and durable solution to the debt problems of developing countries, since debt financing and relief can be an important source of capital for economic growth and development;

3. Stresses the importance of promoting responsible borrowing and lending;

4. Emphasizes that creditors and debtors must share responsibility for preventing unsustainable debt situations;

5. Underlines the fact that the long-term sustainability of debt depends, inter alia, on the economic growth, mobilization of domestic resources and export prospects of debtor countries and, hence, on the creation of an enabling environment conducive to development, progress in following sound macroeconomic policies, transparent and effective regulatory frameworks and success in overcoming structural development problems;

6. Reiterates its call upon developed countries, as expressed in the Millennium Declaration, to complete the enhanced programme of debt relief for the Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Initiative and to ensure that it is fully financed, and in this regard underscores the importance of full participation by creditors in contributing their share to implementing the enhanced Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Initiative;

7. Recognizes and encourages the efforts of the heavily indebted poor countries, calls upon them to continue to improve their domestic policies and economic management, inter alia, through poverty reduction strategies, and to create a domestic environment conducive to private-sector development, economic growth and poverty reduction, including a stable macroeconomic framework, transparent and accountable systems of public finance, a sound business climate and a predictable investment climate, and in this regard invites all creditors, both private and public, to encourage those efforts, for example, through further participation in the delivery of debt relief in the framework of the enhanced Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Initiative and continued provision of adequate and sufficiently concessional financing by international financing institutions and the donor community;

8. Stresses that debt relief can play a key role in liberating resources that should be directed towards activities consistent with poverty eradication, sustained economic growth and sustainable development and the achievement of the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals, and in this regard urges countries to direct those resources freed through debt relief, in particular through debt cancellation and reduction, towards these objectives;

9. Reiterates that debt sustainability depends on a confluence of many factors at the international and national levels, emphasizes that country-specific circumstances and the impact of external shocks should be taken into account in debt sustainability analyses, underscores the fact that no single indicator should be used to make definitive judgements about debt sustainability, and in this regard, while acknowledging the need to use transparent and comparable indicators, invites the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank, in their assessment of debt sustainability, to take into account fundamental changes caused by, inter alia, natural disasters, conflicts, changes in global growth prospects or in the terms of trade, especially for commodity-dependent developing countries, and to continue to provide information on this issue using existing cooperation forums, including those involving Member States;

10. Reiterates also its invitation to the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund to keep the overall implications of the debt sustainability framework for low-income countries under review, calls for transparency in the computation of the country policy and institutional assessments, and welcomes the intention to disclose the country performance ratings of the International Development Association that form part of the framework;

11. Welcomes the Gleneagles proposal by the Group of Eight, as endorsed by the Bretton Woods institutions at their 2005 annual meetings, to cancel 100 per cent of the debt owed by heavily indebted poor countries to the International Monetary Fund, the International Development Association and the African Development Fund and their emphasis that it should be expeditiously implemented by the concerned multilateral financial institutions, also welcomes their efforts to proceed with steps to ensure all necessary arrangements to implement the proposal and ensure that the funds for this process are fully additional to existing aid commitments to the International Development Association and the African Development Fund, looks forward to the remaining heavily indebted poor countries with unsustainable debt burdens, including countries that may enter the Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Initiative process based on their debt burdens at the end of 2004, becoming eligible for such treatment as they reach the completion point, emphasizes that the key element of the proposal is that debt relief will be fully financed by donors to ensure that the financing capacity of international financial institutions is not reduced, and in particular that the financial integrity and capacity of the International Development Association and the African Development Bank to assist developing countries in the future is maintained, and also emphasizes the importance of eligible countries maintaining sound economic policies and performance;

12. Notes with concern that, in spite of the progress achieved, some countries that have reached the completion point of the Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Initiative have not been able to achieve lasting debt sustainability, stresses the importance of promoting responsible borrowing and lending and the need to help those countries to manage their borrowing and to avoid a build-up of unsustainable debt, including through the use of grants, and in this regard welcomes the ongoing work by the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank to develop a forward-looking debt sustainability framework for heavily indebted poor countries and low-income countries;

13. Welcomes the continued flexibility with regard to the application of eligibility criteria for the enhanced Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Initiative, in particular for low-income developing countries emerging from conflicts and/or affected by natural disasters, and on the computational procedures and assumptions underlying debt sustainability analysis, and in this regard takes note of the work on identifying low-income countries with unsustainable debt as of the end of 2004, with a view to finalization, by early 2006, of the list of countries potentially eligible for assistance under the Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Initiative;

14. Emphasizes that the Evian approach of the Paris Club, decided upon by creditors in October 2003, deals with the bilateral debt of non-heavily indebted poor countries and low- and middle-income countries, taking into account not only the financing gaps but also the medium-term debt sustainability of these countries, and welcomes the fact that its objective is to tailor debt restructuring to the financial needs of the country concerned and to ensure long-lasting debt sustainability for countries that have adopted policies that will secure an exit from Paris Club debt reschedulings;

15. Calls upon creditor countries, in this regard, to continue to ensure that a tailored response to debt restructuring is granted only in a case of imminent default and is not considered by debtor countries as an alternative to more expensive sources of finance, and takes into account country-specific circumstances, financial vulnerabilities and the objective of enhancing long-lasting debt sustainability, while emphasizing that creditors and debtors must share responsibility for preventing and resolving unsustainable debt situations in a timely and efficient manner;

16. Acknowledges the ongoing work towards a more comprehensive approach to sovereign debt restructuring, supports the increasing inclusion of collective action clauses in international bond issuing, takes note of the work on issues related to international arbitration and mediation mechanisms, and welcomes the efforts by borrowing countries and private-sector creditors to broaden the consensus on the Principles for Stable Capital Flows and Fair Debt Restructuring in Emerging Markets, which could contribute to strengthening crisis prevention and enhancing predictability of crisis management, bearing in mind the need not to preclude emergency financing in times of crisis, to promote fair burden-sharing and to minimize moral hazard;

17. Stresses the need to find a solution for the debt problems of low- and middle-income developing countries with unsustainable debt burdens that are not eligible for assistance under the Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Initiative, and in this regard invites creditors and debtors to continue to use, where appropriate and on a case-by-case basis, mechanisms such as debt swaps for alleviating their debt burden, and also stresses that this should be achieved in a fashion that does not detract from official development assistance resources, while maintaining the financial integrity of the multilateral financial institutions;

18. Takes note of the recent discussions and assessment by the Paris Club of the proposal for "Debt for Equity in Millennium Development Goal Projects";

19. Invites donor countries, taking into account country-specific debt sustainability analyses, to continue their efforts to increase bilateral grants to developing countries, which could contribute to debt sustainability in the medium to long term, and recognizes the need for countries to be able to invest, inter alia, in health and education while maintaining debt sustainability;

20. Welcomes the efforts of the international community to provide flexibility, and stresses the need to continue those efforts in helping post-conflict developing countries, especially those that are heavily indebted and poor, to achieve initial reconstruction for economic and social development;

21. Welcomes also the efforts by creditors to provide flexibility to developing countries affected by natural disasters on a case-by-case basis so as to allow them to address their debt concerns;

22. Welcomes further the efforts of, and further calls upon, the international community to support institutional capacity-building in developing countries and countries with economies in transition for the management of financial assets and liabilities and to enhance sustainable debt management as an integral part of national development strategies;

23. Invites the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank, in cooperation with the regional commissions, development banks and other relevant multilateral financial institutions, to continue cooperation in respect of capacity-building activities in developing countries in the area of debt management;

24. Calls upon all Member States and the United Nations system, and invites the Bretton Woods institutions as well as the private sector, to take appropriate measures and actions for the implementation of the commitments, agreements and decisions of the major United Nations conferences and summits, in particular those related to the question of the external debt problems of developing countries;

25. Takes note of the contribution provided by the multi-stakeholder dialogues on sovereign debt organized by the Financing for Development Office of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the Secretariat;

26. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its sixty-first session a report on the implementation of the present resolution and to include in that report a comprehensive and substantive analysis of the external debt and debt-servicing problems of developing countries;

27. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its sixty-first session, under the item entitled "Macroeconomic policy questions", the sub-item entitled "External debt crisis and development".

Financing for development

Follow-up to the International Conference on Financing for Development

High-level meeting of the Economic and Social Council, Bretton Woods institutions, WTO and UNCTAD. In accordance with Economic and Social Council decision 2005/211 of 1 March, the eighth special high-level meeting of the Council, the Bretton Woods institutions (the World Bank Group and IMF), WTO and UNCTAD was held in New York on 18 April. The meeting addressed the theme of coherence, coordination and cooperation in the context of the implementation of the Monterrey Consensus: achieving the internationally agreed development goals, including those contained in the Millennium Declaration. Before it was a note by the Secretary-General on the subject [E/2005/50], providing information and raising a number of questions on three subthemes: policies and strategies; trade, investment and private flows; and official development assistance (ODA), innovative sources of financing and debt.

The Council President, in his summary of the proceedings [A/59/823-E/2005/69], noted the participants' emphasis on the importance of a national development strategy towards achieving the MDGs. Such a strategy should be formulated within the country and respond to its specific needs and circumstances. The key role of an adequate policy space in formulating policy orientations was also emphasized. Governments needed to evaluate the trade-off between the benefits of accepting international rules and commitments and the constraints posed by a reduced policy space. It was necessary to pursue an appropriate balance between national policy orientations and international disciplines and commitments. As to policies and multilateral trade negotiations, it was agreed that international trade could make a substantial contribution to financing for development, the critical elements of which were: improved market access for developing countries in agriculture, manufactures and services; elimination of trade-distorting non-tariff barriers; and the provision of adequate preferential and differential treatment. Participants underscored the need to generate a favourable environment for business that included an adequate regulatory environment, rule of law, respect for property rights, transparency and an enabling infrastructure, as well as the need to adopt the appropriate kind of prudential regulations in developing countries. Concern was expressed about the stability of international private financial flows. Regarding the level and quality of ODA, the meeting considered that a rapid increase in aid flows was necessary and that for aid to be effective, recipient countries should receive more predictable, long-term, unconditional ODA that would allow them to better integrate aid flows into the design of their development strategy. The special aid needs of fragile countries were recognized.

By decision 2005/224 of 19 July, the Economic and Social Council took note of the Secretary-General's note on coherence, coordination and cooperation in the context of the implementation of the Monterrey Consensus and of the summary, by the Council President, of the special high-level meeting of the Council, the Bretton Woods institutions, WTO and UNCTAD.

Reports of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 59/225 [YUN 2004, p. 981], the Secretary-General submitted a September report [A/60/289] on follow-up to and implementation of the outcome of the International Conference on Financing for Development [YUN 2002, p. 953], providing updated information on the comprehensive review of the implementation of the Monterrey Consensus and reaffirming the policy actions contained in the Secretary-General's report prepared for the High-level Dialogue on Financing for Development [A/59/822] (see below); and a note on coherence, coordination and cooperation in the context of the implementation of the Monterrey Consensus: achieving the internationally agreed development goals, including those contained in the Millennium Declaration [E/2005/50] (see p. 1060), and the World Economic and Social Survey 2005 (see p. 1052). The report considered measures to increase international financial and technical cooperation for development; proposals on external debt relief; progress in achieving the development dimension of the Doha round of WTO trade negotiations; and enhancing the coherence and consistency of the international monetary, financial and trading systems in support of development.

In an August report [A/60/289/Add.1], the Secretary-General reviewed multistakeholder consultations held in the second half of 2004 and the first half of 2005 to examine issues related to the mobilization of resources for financing development and to promote best practices and exchange of information on the implementation of the International Conference on Financing for Development. The consultations covered: building inclusive financial sectors for development; sovereign debt for sustained development; public-private partnerships for improving the reach and effectiveness of development assistance; improving the climate for private investment; and enhancing the coherence and consistency of the international financial, monetary and trading systems in support of development.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December [meeting 68], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/60/487], adopted resolution 60/188 without vote [agenda item 51].

Follow-up to and implementation of the outcome of the International Conference on Financing for Development

The General Assembly,

Recalling the International Conference on Financing for Development, held in Monterrey, Mexico, from 18 to 22 March 2002, and its resolutions 56/210 B of 9 July 2002, 57/250 of 20 December 2002, 57/270 B of 23 June 2003, 57/272 and 57/273 of 20 December 2002, 58/230 of 23 December 2003 and 59/225 of 22 December 2004, as well as Economic and Social Council resolutions 2002/34 of 26 July 2002, 2003/47 of 24 July 2003 and 2004/64 of 16 September 2004,

Taking note of the reports of the Secretary-General on the follow-up to and implementation of the outcome of the International Conference on Financing for Development, prepared in collaboration with the major institutional stakeholders,

Taking note also of other relevant reports of the Secretary-General on the follow-up to and implementation of the outcome of the International Conference on Financing for Development,

Having considered the World Economic and Social Survey 2005: Financing for Development,

Recalling the 2005 World Summit Outcome,

Having considered the summary by the President of the Economic and Social Council of the special high-level meeting of the Council with the Bretton Woods institutions, the World Trade Organization and the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, held in New York on 18 April 2005,

Welcoming the High-level Dialogue on Financing for Development held in New York on 27 and 28 June 2005 and the separate meeting on financing for development held within the framework of the High-level Plenary Meeting of the General Assembly on 14 September 2005,

Having considered the summary by the President of the General Assembly of the High-level Dialogue on Financing for Development,

Reaffirming the commitment to the global partnership for development set out in the United Nations Millennium Declaration, the Monterrey Consensus of the International Conference on Financing for Development, the Plan of Implementation of the World Summit on Sustainable Development ("Johannesburg Plan of Implementation") and the 2005 World Summit Outcome,

Reaffirming also that each country must take primary responsibility for its own development and that the role of national policies and development strategies cannot be overemphasized for the achievement of sustainable development, and recognizing that national efforts should be complemented by supportive global programmes, measures and policies aimed at expanding the development opportunities of developing countries, while taking into account national conditions and ensuring respect for national ownership, strategies and sovereignty,

Recognizing the ongoing international efforts, contributions and discussions, such as the Action against Hunger and Poverty initiative, aimed at identifying and developing possible innovative and additional sources of financing for development from all sources, public and private, domestic and external, to increase and supplement traditional sources of financing within the context of the follow-up to the International Conference on Financing for Development, recognizing that some of the sources and their use fall within the realm of sovereign action,

Underlining that the increasing interdependence of national economies in a globalizing world and the emergence of rule-based regimes for international economic relations have meant that the space for national economic policy, that is, the scope for domestic policies, especially in the areas of trade, investment and industrial development, is now often framed by international disciplines, commitments and global market considerations; that it is for each Government to evaluate the trade-off between the benefits of accepting international rules and commitments and the constraints posed by the loss of policy space; and that it is particularly important for developing countries, bearing in mind development goals and objectives, that all countries take into account the need for appropriate balance between national policy space and international disciplines and commitments,

Reiterating the need to implement fully and build further on the commitments made and agreements reached at the International Conference on Financing for Development, and recognizing the strong link between financing for development and the achievement of the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals,

Welcoming the recent decisions, commitments and proposals made in this regard to implement and build on the commitments made and agreements reached at the International Conference on Financing for Development,

1. Underlines, in accordance with the Monterrey Consensus:

(a) The importance of the implementation of the commitment to sound policies, good governance at all levels and the rule of law;

(b) The importance of the implementation of the commitment to create an enabling environment for mobilizing domestic resources and the importance of sound economic policies, solid democratic institutions responsive to the needs of the people and improved infrastructure as a basis for sustained economic growth, poverty eradication and employment creation;

(c) The importance, in order to complement national development efforts, of the implementation of the commitment to enhance the coherence and consistency of international monetary, financial and trading systems;

2. Welcomes the efforts by developing countries to adopt and implement national development strategies to achieve their national development priorities as well as the internationally agreed development goals and objectives, including the Millennium Development Goals; reaffirms the resolve, for those countries that have not yet done so, to adopt such strategies by 2006 and implement them; and also reaffirms the resolve to support these efforts as set out in the 2005 World Summit Outcome, including through increased resources;

3. Stresses the importance of a universal, rule-based, open, non-discriminatory and equitable multilateral trading system, as well as meaningful trade liberalization, that can substantially stimulate development worldwide, benefiting countries at all stages of development; in that regard reaffirms its commitment to trade liberalization and to ensuring that trade plays its full part in promoting economic growth, employment and development for all; thus welcomes the decisions of the World Trade Organization to place the needs and interests of developing countries at the heart of its work programme and commits itself to their implementation; and in this regard emphasizes the importance of fulfilling the development dimension of the Doha work programme and the successful completion of the Doha round as soon as possible;

4. Notes that, while foreign direct investment is a major source of financing development, the flow of such funds to developing countries and countries with economies in transition remains uneven, and in this regard calls upon developed countries to continue to devise source-country measures to encourage and facilitate the flow of foreign direct investment, inter alia, through the provision of export credits and other lending instruments, risk guarantees and business development services, and calls upon developing countries and countries with economies in transition to continue their efforts to create a conducive domestic environment for attracting investments by, inter alia, achieving a transparent, stable and predictable investment climate with proper contract enforcement and respect for property rights;

5. Reaffirms the Monterrey Consensus and recognizes that mobilizing financial resources for development and the effective use of those resources in developing countries and countries with economies in transition are central to a global partnership for development in support of the achievement of the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals. In this regard:

(a) Welcomes the increased resources that will become available as a result of the establishment of timetables by many developed countries to achieve the target of 0.7 per cent of gross national product for official development assistance by 2015 and to reach at least 0.5 per cent of gross national product for official development assistance by 2010, as well as, pursuant to the Brussels Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the Decade 2001-2010, 0.15 per cent to 0.20 per cent for the least developed countries by no later than 2010, and urges those developed countries that have not yet done so to make concrete efforts in this regard in accordance with their commitments;

(b) Recognizes the importance of official development assistance as a major source of financing development for many developing countries; stresses the need to translate increases in official development assistance into real increases in resources for national development strategies to achieve the national development priorities of developing countries as well as the internationally agreed development goals and objectives, including the Millennium Development Goals, taking into account the need for resource predictability, including budget support mechanisms where appropriate; welcomes recent efforts and initiatives to enhance the quality of aid and increase its impact, including the Paris Declaration on Aid Effectiveness; resolves to take concrete, effective and timely action to implement all agreed commitments on aid effectiveness, with clear monitoring and deadlines, including through further aligning assistance with countries' strategies, building institutional capacities, reducing transaction costs and eliminating bureaucratic procedures, making progress on untying aid, enhancing the absorptive capacity and financial management of recipient countries and strengthening the focus of development results; and encourages the broadest possible participation of developing countries in future work on aid effectiveness;

(c) Recognizes the importance of developing innovative sources of financing for development, provided that such sources do not unduly burden developing countries; notes that some countries will launch the International Financial Facility, some countries have launched the Facility's immunization pilot and some countries, utilizing their national authorities, will implement in the near future a contribution on airline tickets as a "solidarity contribution" to enable financing for development projects; and notes that other countries are considering whether and to what extent they will participate in those initiatives;

(d) Recognizes the progress achieved in this regard, and decides to give further consideration to the subject of innovative development financing from all sources, public and private, domestic and external;

(e) Emphasizes the importance of microcredit and microfinance in the eradication of poverty; highlights that the observance of the International Year of Microcredit 2005 has provided a significant opportunity to raise awareness, share best practices and further enhance financial sectors that support sustainable pro-poor financial services in all countries; in this regard urges member countries to put best practices into action; and invites the international community, including the United Nations system, to build on the momentum created by the Year;

(f) Acknowledges the vital role that the private sector can play in generating new investments, employment and financing for development;

6. Stresses the importance of investments in basic economic and social infrastructure, as set out in the Monterrey Consensus; notes that scaling up investment in infrastructure, alongside strong programmes for health and education, is a key element for faster growth and progress in reducing poverty; in this regard, calls for continued deepening and scaling up of support for infrastructure service delivery and removal of impediments in order to respond to the needs of developing countries, consistent with national development strategies; welcomes the progress made by the World Bank Group to strengthen public-private partnerships to leverage investment and maximize impact, including in the framework of the newly established Africa Infrastructure Consortium; and acknowledges the work of the World Bank in this area, including plans for a progress report to the Development Committee on the impact of fiscal space on growth and the achievement of the Millennium Development Goals;

7. Emphasizes the great importance of a timely, effective, comprehensive and durable solution to the debt problems of developing countries since debt financing and relief can be an important source of capital for economic growth and development, and also emphasizes that creditors and debtors must share responsibilities for preventing unsustainable debt situations;

8. Welcomes, in this regard, the recent proposal of the Group of Eight as endorsed by the Bretton Woods institutions at their 2005 annual meetings to cancel 100 per cent of the outstanding debt of eligible heavily indebted poor countries owed to the International Monetary Fund, the International Development Association and the African Development Fund, and to provide additional resources to ensure that the financing capacity of the international financial institutions is not reduced;

9. Emphasizes that corruption at all levels is a serious barrier to development and to effective resource mobilization and allocation; reaffirms the commitment expressed in the Monterrey Consensus to make the fight against corruption at all levels a priority; in this regard welcomes the entry into force on 14 December 2005 of the United Nations Convention against Corruption; and reiterates its invitation to all Member States and competent regional economic integration organizations, within the limits of their competence, to ratify or accede to and fully implement the Convention as soon as possible;

10. Recognizes the work of the Financing for Development Office of the Secretariat in organizing, within its mandate, workshops, multi-stakeholder consultations, panel discussions and other activities aimed at better enabling member countries to implement their commitments as agreed in the Monterrey Consensus, and requests the Office, in collaboration with experts from the public and private sectors, academia and civil society, to continue its work in this area;

11. Reiterates its request to the Secretary-General to consult with the Director-General of the World Trade Organization in order to expand existing cooperation between the two organizations on issues related to financing for development and to build on the ad hoc modalities of interaction between the United Nations and the World Trade Organization that were undertaken in the preparations for the International Conference on Financing for Development held in 2002 by making better use of the possibilities offered by the existing framework of cooperation;

12. Decides in accordance with paragraph 73 of the Monterrey Consensus to hold a follow-up international conference on financing for development to review the implementation of the Consensus at a time between 2008 and 2009;

13. Welcomes the offer of the Government of Qatar to host the conference;

14. Decides that, in line with General Assembly resolution 57/270 B, the review conference should assess progress made; reaffirm goals and commitments; share best practices and lessons learned; and identify obstacles and constraints encountered, actions and initiatives to overcome them and important measures for further implementation, as well as new challenges and emerging issues;

15. Also decides to commence the preparatory process, including a decision on the exact date of the conference, at its sixty-first session;

16. Resolves to continue to make full use of the existing institutional arrangements for reviewing the implementation of the Monterrey Consensus, as set out in paragraph 69 of the Consensus and in line with resolution 57/270 B, including the high-level dialogues convened by the General Assembly and the spring meetings of the Economic and Social Council with the Bretton Woods institutions, the World Trade Organization and the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development;

17. Stresses the importance of the full involvement of all relevant stakeholders in the implementation of the Monterrey Consensus at all levels, and also stresses the importance of their full participation in the Monterrey follow-up process, in accordance with the rules of procedure of the General Assembly, in particular the accreditation procedures and modalities of participation utilized at the Conference and in its preparatory process;

18. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its sixty-first session the item entitled "Follow-up to and implementation of the outcome of the International Conference on Financing for Development", and requests the Secretary-General to submit under that item an annual analytical assessment of the state of implementation of the Monterrey Consensus and of the present resolution, to be prepared in full collaboration with the major institutional stakeholders.

High-level Dialogue on Financing for Development

On 27 May [meeting 98], the General Assembly adopted resolution 59/293 [draft: A/59/L.61] without vote [agenda item 84].

Modalities for the High-level Dialogue on Financing for Development

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 57/250 of 20 December 2002,

Recalling also its resolution 59/145 of 17 December 2004, in which it decided to hold the High-level Dialogue on Financing for Development on 27 and 28 June 2005 in New York, and resolution 59/225 of 22 December 2004, in which it decided to consider, by the first part of 2005, the appropriate modalities for holding the High-level Dialogue, taking into account developments in the preparation for the High-level Plenary Meeting of the General Assembly to be held from 14 to 16 September 2005,

Recalling further its resolution 59/291 of 15 April 2005,

Bearing in mind that the results of the High-level Dialogue will be an input to the preparatory process for the High-level Plenary Meeting,

1. Reiterates that the High-level Dialogue on Financing for Development to be held on 27 and 28 June 2005 will be held at the ministerial level;

2. Reaffirms that the High-level Dialogue constitutes the intergovernmental focal point for the general follow-up to the International Conference on Financing for Development, held at Monterrey, Mexico, from 18 to 22 March 2002;

3. Decides that the overall theme of the High-level Dialogue will be "The Monterrey Consensus: status of implementation and tasks ahead";

4. Decides also that the High-level Dialogue will consist of a series of formal and informal meetings to constitute a policy dialogue and six interactive multi-stakeholder round tables to be held as follows:

(a) The first day will consist of a formal meeting chaired by the President of the General Assembly, at which the ministers and high-level officials attending the Dialogue will be able to make formal statements, on the understanding that the principle of precedence will be strictly applied, to allow participation at the ministerial level; the Secretary-General, the President of the Economic and Social Council, the President of the World Bank, the Managing Director of the International Monetary Fund, the Director-General of the World Trade Organization, the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme, as the Chairman of the United Nations Development Group, will be invited to make statements;

(b) The second day will be devoted to six interactive multi-stakeholder round tables, divided into two sessions, each comprising three round tables, followed by an interactive dialogue in the form of an informal meeting with the participation of all relevant stakeholders, which will focus on the implementation of the results of the International Conference on Financing for Development and the link between financing for development and the achievement of the internationally agreed development goals, including those contained in the United Nations Millennium Declaration; the heads of relevant organizations of the United Nations system, the heads of regional and international intergovernmental organs that participated in the International Conference, as well as representatives of regional development banks, civil society and the business sector, will all be able to intervene, on the understanding that the principle of precedence will be strictly applied, to allow participation at the ministerial level;

5. Decides further that the central themes of the round tables will be based on sections of one chapter of the Monterrey Consensus adopted at the International Conference on Financing for Development, as follows:

Round table 1: Mobilizing domestic financial resources for development;

Round table 2: Mobilizing international resources for development–foreign direct investment and other private flows;

Round table 3: International trade as an engine for development;

Round table 4: Increasing international financial and technical cooperation for development;

Round table 5: External debt;

Round table 6: Addressing systemic issues–enhancing the coherence and consistency of the international monetary, financial and trading systems in support of development;

6. Reiterates its invitation to all Governments to enhance coordination among ministries of foreign affairs, finance, development cooperation and trade, as well as central banks and all other national stakeholders for the preparations for the High-level Dialogue;

7. Invites the Bretton Woods institutions, the World Trade Organization and relevant organizations of the United Nations system to participate in the High-level Dialogue, including in the preparatory phase, and invites the President of the Economic and Social Council, the President of the World Bank, the Managing Director of the International Monetary Fund, the Director-General of the World Trade Organization and the heads of other relevant regional and international intergovernmental organs to participate actively in the Dialogue;

8. Invites non-governmental organizations and business sector entities to participate at the interactive round tables and informal meetings of the High-level Dialogue, in accordance with the rules of procedure of the General Assembly, and decides that:

(a) Accreditation will be open to all non-governmental organizations that are in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council and to all non-governmental organizations and business sector entities accredited to the International Conference on Financing for Development or to its follow-up process;

(b) Interested non-governmental organizations and business sector entities that are not in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council or were not accredited to the International Conference on Financing for Development shall apply to the General Assembly for accreditation following the accreditation procedure established during the International Conference;

(c) The above arrangements concerning participation of non-governmental organizations and business sector entities in the High-level Dialogue will in no way create a precedent for other meetings of the General Assembly;

9. Decides that all issues regarding financing for development will be discussed during the informal interactive hearings, to be held on 23 and 24 June 2005, with representatives of non-governmental organizations, civil society organizations and the private sector, and requests the Secretariat to issue a summary of the hearings related to financing for development as an input to the High-level Dialogue;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report on the implementation of commitments and agreements reached at the International Conference on Financing for Development, to be prepared in full collaboration with the major institutional stakeholders, as an input to the High-level Dialogue;

11. Also requests the Secretary-General to prepare a note on the organization of work of the High-level Dialogue;

12. Further requests the Secretary-General to seek from the regional commissions their inputs on the regional and interregional aspects of the follow-up to the International Conference on Financing for Development and to report thereon to the High-level Dialogue;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to make available at the High-level Dialogue relevant inputs related to financing for development from all stakeholders, including the documents of the Economic and Social Council covering its 2005 special high-level meeting with the Bretton Woods institutions, the World Trade Organization and the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development;

14. Reiterates its invitation to countries to report by 2005, inter alia, through existing reporting mechanisms, on their efforts to implement the Monterrey Consensus, bearing in mind the need to achieve the internationally agreed development goals, including those contained in the Millennium Declaration;

15. Decides that the High-level Dialogue will result in a summary by the President of the General Assembly that will provide an input on financing for development to the preparatory process of the High-level Plenary Meeting of the General Assembly of September 2005.

In response to the Assembly's request, the Secretary-General submitted a June note [A/59/850] on the proposed organization of work of the High-level Dialogue.

In response to Assembly resolutions 59/145 [YUN 2004, p. 1364] and 59/293 (see above), the second High-level Dialogue on Financing for Development was held in New York on 27 and 28 June, under the overall theme "The Monterrey Consensus: status of implementation and tasks ahead". The High-level Dialogue, attended by Member States, institutional stakeholders, NGOs and business sector entities, consisted of a series of plenary and informal meetings to constitute a policy dialogue and of six interactive multi-stakeholder round tables on: mobilizing domestic financial resources for development; mobilizing international resources for development: FDI and other private flows; international trade as an engine for development; increasing international financial and technical cooperation for development; external debt; and addressing systemic issues: enhancing the coherence and consistency of the international monetary, financial and trading systems in support of development.

The High-level Dialogue had before it a Secretary-General report on the subject [A/59/822]; the Council President's summary of the high-level meeting of the Council, the Bretton Woods institutions, WTO and UNCTAD [A/59/823-E/2005/69] (see above); a Secretariat summary of the informal interactive hearings on issues related to financing for development [A/59/855], held in New York on 23 June; and a note by the Secretary-General [A/59/826] on implementation of the Monterrey Consensus, containing a review of the regional and interregional aspects of the follow-up to the International Conference on Financing for Development, prepared by the five regional commissions in compliance with resolution 59/293 (see above), and analysing the regional dimension in the implementation of the Monterrey Consensus; policies and measures to fulfil the commitments; and interregional aspects of the follow-up. It also had before the Secretary-General's May report on strengthening the role of the private sector and entrepreneurship in financing for development [A/59/800], prepared in response to Economic and Social Council resolution 2004/64 [YUN 2004, p. 979].

In August, the President of the Assembly prepared a summary of the High-level Dialogue [A/60/219] (see p. 67), which reviewed statements made by ministers and other high-level officials and which was to provide an input on financing for development to the preparatory process of the High-level Plenary Meeting of the Assembly (see p. 47).

Investment, technology and related financial issues

The UNCTAD Commission on Investment, Technology and Related Financial Issues held its ninth session in Geneva from 7 to 11 March [TD/B/COM.2/66].

For its consideration of policy issues related to investment and development, the Commission considered an UNCTAD secretariat note on emerging foreign direct investment (FDI) from developing countries [TD/B/COM.2/64]; the report of the Expert Meeting on Good Governance in Investment Promotion [YUN 2004, p. 984]; the report of the Expert Meeting on the Impact of FDI on Development [TD/B/ COM.2/EM.16/3]; and the World Investment Report 2004: The Shift towards Services [UNCTAD/WIR/ 2004]. For issues related to investment arrangements, the Commission had before it the UNCTAD secretariat note on the subject: Investor-State disputes and policy implications [TD/B/ COM.2/62]; a secretariat report on work undertaken under its work programme on international investment agreements in 2004 [UNCTAD/ ITE/IIT/2004/Misc.15/Rev.1]; the UN publication: Investor-State Dispute Settlement; and the UNCTAD Series on Issues on International Investment Agreements [Sales No. E.00.II]. For its consideration of investment policy reviews (IPRs): exchange of national experiences, the Commission had before it a summary of deliberations on the issue by Algeria, Benin and Sri Lanka [TD/B/COM.2/65]. For its consideration of the implementation of its agreed conclusions and recommendations, including post-Doha follow-up, the Commission considered a progress report on the implementation of recommendations by the UNCTAD secretariat [TD/B/COM.2/63] and the 2004 Activities Report of the Division on Investment, Technology and Enterprise Development [UNCTAD/ITE/2005/1]. The Commission took note of the secretariat's progress report.

The Commission, in agreed recommendations, urged UNCTAD to continue its work on FDI and transnational corporations (TNCs) and their impact on development; further analyse emerging global and regional trends in FDI and their policy implications, especially in the context of South-South cooperation; and follow up on the work undertaken on FDI in services and support, in cooperation with other relevant international agencies, developing countries, especially LDCs in enhancing their FDI data collection and analysis capacity. It should also continue its work on international investment and technology transfer arrangements, with emphasis on bilateral and regional dimensions. Particular attention should be paid to monitoring emerging issues and developments, including in the field of investor-State dispute settlement. It recommended that the secretariat strengthen its programme on Good Governance in Investment Promotion and extend its assistance to more interested developing countries, in particular LDCs, in implementing measures to improve good governance in investment promotion.

The Commission noted that further support was needed to ensure that other countries also benefited from evaluations and improvement in their investment policy framework. Efforts should also be made to disseminate specific lessons arising from investment policy reviews and follow-up activities carried out by UNCTAD. The Commission welcomed the interaction with the World Association of Investment Promotion Agencies in supporting developing countries to attract beneficial FDI and encouraged the secretariat to enhance that cooperation. The Commission recommended that UNCTAD support country-level policy formulation and implementation, with a view to assisting countries in maximizing the benefits that FDI could bring to achieving the international development goals; assist developing countries in creating an enabling regulatory environment for public-private partnerships and investment in enterprises and projects providing basic services to the poor; assess ways in which developing countries could develop their domestic productive capability in the supply of essential drugs in cooperation with pharmaceutical companies; assist developing countries in promoting the application of science and technology in achieving the international development goals; and continue analytical work and the exchange of information and experiences in the area of positive corporate contributions to the social and economic development of host developing countries.

In May [A/60/15], TDB took note of the Commission's report and endorsed its recommendations.

Subsidiary bodies. In 2005, three expert meetings took place, all in Geneva. The Expert Meeting on the Impact of FDI on Development (24-26 January) [TD/B/COM.2/EM.16/3] considered an UNCTAD secretariat note on the globalization of research and development by TNCs and its implication for developing countries [TD/B/COM.2/EM.16/2]. The Meeting noted that, while most research and development activities remained in developed countries, developing countries were becoming more important as host and home countries of FDI in research and development. The Meeting identified a number of positive and negative impacts on host economies and concluded that active policies could create and facilitate the right conditions for countries to attract and benefit from FDI in research and development. Experts discussed the role of performance requirements in maximizing the benefits of research and development-related FDI in developing countries and the role of incentives in attracting it. They also addressed the role of home-country policies in encouraging TNCs to invest in research and development in developing countries, and, in the light of the importance of innovation and research and development for economic development, suggested that a list of indicators be created to assess and measure the contributions of TNCs to the transfer of technology to developing countries. The Experts also highlighted the need to explore the possibilities for the international community to support the strengthening of developing countries' national innovation systems.

The Expert Meeting on Positive Corporate Contributions to the Economic and Social Development of Host Developing Countries (31 October–2 November) [TD/B/COM.2/EM.17/3] had before it an UNCTAD secretariat note on the subject [TD/B/COM.2/EM.17/2]. The Meeting discussed investment in developing countries; provision of goods and services; employment creation, upgrading the skills of the local workforce and the creation of linkages; technology transfer, ethical business behaviour and minimizing the negative effects of business restructuring; and the role of policy. The Meeting suggested that UNCTAD provide a forum for dialogue between Governments, business and other development stakeholders to develop a common understanding of the role of business in development and to establish a common vision on how such a role could be enhanced through partnership among all stakeholders within the framework of the São Paulo Consensus [YUN 2002, p. 953]. UNCTAD should assess the effectiveness of existing practices in corporate contributions to development; help countries address issues related to the link between corporate contributions and development needs; and complement its work on corporate governance in the context of the Intergovernmental Group of Experts on International Standards of Accounting and Reporting.

The Expert Meeting on Capacity Building in the Area of FDI: Data Compilation and Policy Formulation in Developing Countries (12-14 December) [TD/B/COM.2/EM.18/3] had before it an UNCTAD secretariat note on FDI statistics: Data compilation and policy issues [TD/B/COM.2/EM.18/2]. The Meeting discussed key issues on FDI data compilation, analysis and policy formulation in developing countries and examined problems faced by those countries, particularly LDCs, in providing policy makers with timely and accurate FDI and TNC data that would enable them to design policies.

In its conclusions and recommendations, the Meeting stressed the need to collect reliable, accurate, timely and comparable statistical information on FDI and on the activities of TNCs, and to improve the data collecting and reporting systems of many developing countries to provide increased or enhanced information, including through international and regional cooperation. A mechanism should be established to enable developing and transition economies to submit data on FDI and the activities of TNCs to UNCTAD. UNCTAD could also play an expanded role in institutional capacity building in the field of FDI statistics. Experts called for more regional cooperation among relevant institutions in developing countries and economies in transition to promote a harmonized system for collecting and reporting statistics on FDI and TNCs and supported the creation of regional task forces. UNCTAD was asked to organize meetings on FDI statistics and policy formulation on a regular basis and to present the Expert Meeting's report to the UN Statistical Commission in 2007.

The Commission on Investment, Technology and Related Financial Issues, in March [TD/B/COM.2/66], took note of the report of the Expert Meeting on Good Governance in Investment Promotion [YUN 2004, p. 984] and the report of the Expert Meeting on the Impact of FDI on Development (see above).

Competition law and policy

The Intergovernmental Group of Experts on Competition Law and Policy did not meet in 2005. The Commission on Investment, Technology and Related Financial Issues, in March [TD/B/COM.2/66], took note of the report of the sixth (2004) session of the Group of Experts [YUN 2004, p. 984] and endorsed its agreed conclusions.

Fifth Review Conference

In accordance with General Assembly resolution 55/182 [YUN 2000, p. 895], the Fifth United Nations Conference to Review All Aspects of the Set of Multilaterally Agreed Equitable Principles and Rules for the Control of Restrictive Business Practices (known as the Set) was held in Antalya, Turkey from 14 to 18 November [TD/RBP/CONF.6/15]. It had before it three UNCTAD secretariat notes on the handbook on competition legislation [TD/RBP/CONF.6/2], a synthesis of recent cartel investigations [TD/RBP/CONF.6/4] and the review of capacity-building and technical assistance on competition law and policy [TD/RBP/CONF.6/6]; and two UNCTAD secretariat reports on presentation of types of common provisions to be found in international, particularly bilateral and regional, cooperation agreements on competition policy and their application [TD/RBP/CONF.6/3] and recent important cases involving more than one country [TD/RBP/CONF.6/5]. It also had before it two voluntary peer reviews on competition policy: Jamaica [TD/RBP/CONF.6/7] and Kenya [TD/RBP/CONF.6/8]; a report on ways in which possible international agreements on competition might apply to developing countries [TD/RBP/CONF.6/9]; an assessment of the application and implementation of the Set [TD/RBP/CONF.6/10]; an UNCTAD secretariat revised report on experiences gained on international cooperation on competition policy issues and the mechanisms used [TD/RBP/CONF.6/12]; an UNCTAD secretariat study on best practices for defining respective competencies and settling of cases which involved joint action of competition authorities and regulatory bodies [TD/RBP/CONF.6/13]; and an UNCTAD secretariat revised study on roles of possible dispute mediation mechanisms and alternative arrangements [TD/RBP/CONF.6/11].

By an 18 November resolution, the Conference, reaffirming the role of competition law and policy for economic development and the validity of the Set, called upon States to implement fully the provisions of the Set; increase cooperation between their competition authorities and Governments in order to strengthen international action against anticompetitive practices as covered by the Set; and assist UNCTAD in its technical cooperation by providing experts, training facilities or resources. It recommended that the Assembly convene the Sixth Conference in 2010; UNCTAD continue to work on the subjects indicated by the Fourth Conference and monitor trends and developments in the competition law and policy area; assist developing countries in their efforts to adopt competition laws and policies, establish competition authorities to tailor the laws and policies to their development needs; and facilitate stronger international cooperation. UNCTAD should provide technical assistance, advisory and training services and revise the commentary to the Model Law in the light of legislative developments and comments made by States. The Conference invited States to assist UNCTAD in connection with voluntary peer reviews and decided that UNCTAD should undertake: further reviews on competition law and policy of member States or regional groupings of States, back-to-back with sessions of the Group of Experts on Competition Law and Policy; arrangements for the conduct of voluntary peer reviews back-to-back with investment policy reviews conducted by UNCTAD; deliberations on the scope, criteria and conduct of such reviews; and periodic assessment and synthesis of the main issues encountered by countries or regions reviewed in developing and implementing their competition laws and policies. It also recommended the strengthening of the UNCTAD work programme to address competition law and policy issues; and requested the UNCTAD secretariat to continue publishing issues of the Handbook on Competition Legislation and an updated version of the Directory of Competition Authorities, and prepare an information note on recent important competition cases. It also decided on issues for consideration by the 2006 session of the Intergovernmental Group of Experts on Competition Law and Policy.

International standards of accounting and reporting

The Intergovernmental Working Group of Experts on International Standards of Accounting and Reporting, at its twenty-second session (Geneva, 21-23 November) [TD/B/COM.2/ISAR/31], had before it an UNCTAD secretariat note on the review of practical implementation issues of international financial reporting standards [TD/B/COM.2/ISAR/28], and two reports on guidance on corporate responsibility indicators in annual reports [TD/B/COM.2/ISAR/29 & Corr.1] and on guidance on good practices in corporate governance disclosure [TD/B/COM.2/ISAR/30]. The Experts also considered the survey on the "2005 Review of the implementation status of corporate governance disclosures" [TD/B/COM.2/ISAR/CRP.1].

In its agreed conclusions, the Working Group reiterated the importance of a common set of principles-based and high-quality financial reporting standards in support of the coherence and consistency of the international financial system. It agreed that a number of practical implementation challenges needed to be addressed to assist developing countries and economies in transition in meeting internationally recognized standards, particularly in the area of institutional and technical capacity-building. The Group suggested that efforts were needed to ensure broader participation of developing countries and economies in transition in the global standard-setting process, and agreed that the reporting needs of non-listed companies small and medium-sized enterprises (SMEs) should be one of the priorities. It also agreed to conduct further reviews of the practical implementation challenges of international financial reporting standards.

With regard to the comparability of indicators on corporate responsibility, the Group recognized the need for harmonized reporting on corporate responsibility as an important issue in the area of corporate transparency and suggested that the UNCTAD secretariat should conduct a review of enterprise reporting practices based on selected indicators and that follow up work on measurement methodology for selected indicators should be conducted. On the issue of corporate governance disclosure, the Group recognized that the updated "Guidance on good practice in corporate governance disclosure" included important developments in good disclosure practices and contributed to the promotion of convergence of the content of corporate governance disclosure, and agreed that it could be a useful voluntary tool for promoting increased transparency and improved governance. Consideration should be given to carrying out further work on the practical implementation of some of the good practices outlined. On the issue of accounting by SMEs, the Group agreed that the secretariat should continue to disseminate guidance to level 2 and 3 SMEs, as well as monitor and compile feedback on their implementation and field-testing of the guidance for level 3 SMEs. With regard to the Model Curriculum, the Group encouraged cooperation and coordination between UNCTAD and the Education Committee of the International Federation of Accountants and requested UNCTAD to assist States in meeting international qualification requirements. As to environmental accounting, the UNCTAD secretariat was requested to continue disseminating the Group's work on environmental accounting and eco-efficiency indicators and to compile feedback on the implementation experience of entities that were implementing the manual for preparers and users of eco-efficiency indicators.

The Commission on Investment, Technology and Related Financial Issues, in March [TD/B/COM.2/66], took note of the Intergovernmental Working Group' report on its twenty-first (2004) session [YUN 2004, p. 985] and endorsed its agreed conclusions.

Taxation

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 2005/311 of 27 July, deferred consideration of the sub-item on international cooperation in tax matters to its 2006 organizational session.

Pursuant to Council resolution 2004/69 [YUN 2004, p. 985], the first session of the Committee of Experts on International Cooperation in Tax Matters was held in Geneva from 5 to 9 December [E/2005/45-E/C.18/2005/11]. The session discussed treaty abuses and treaty shopping; mutual assistance in collecting tax debts; international tax arbitration; earnings stripping; taxation of income derived by participants in development projects; modified permanent establishment definition; revision of the United Nations Model Double Taxation Convention between Developed and Developing Countries; and review and adoption of the revised draft Manual for the Negotiation of Bilateral Tax Treaties between Developed and Developing Countries.

In its conclusions and recommendations, the Committee recognized that treaty abuse needed to be dealt with in the United Nations Model Convention. It agreed on the importance of ensuring a balance between the need to provide certainty for investors and the need for tax administrations to combat treaty abuse. Further consideration should be given to addressing methods to combat specific treaty abuse issues. The Committee agreed that the proposed draft of article 27 of the Model Convention should be adopted in its current form, with the Commentary containing examples of situations where countries could decide to broaden its application and reflect the concerns raised by developing countries with respect to capacity and constitutional and legal difficulties in relation to the proposed article. It appointed a subcommittee to develop proposals for updating article 27 for discussion at the Committee's next session and decided to collect all data available on alternative methods for avoiding or solving disputes. The Committee agreed that further consideration should be given to the tax regime applied to donor-sponsored development projects and requested IMF to present a report within the framework of the International Tax Dialogue. Further consideration should also be given to the definition of permanent establishment; a subcommittee should propose improvements in the Commentary on article 5 of the Model and also propose language to update the Model and the Commentary on article 26 and present a report on the status of implementation by other international organizations. The Committee decided that its second session would be held in 2006, and requested the preparation of a shorter, revised version of the Manual for consideration at that session. The Committee would continue to organize training workshops for developing countries to provide capacity-building and technical assistance.

Transport

Maritime transport

The Review of Maritime Transport, 2005 [Sales No. E.05.II.D.14] reported that world seaborne trade increased strongly in 2004, reaching a record high of 6.76 billions tons. The annual growth rate reached 4.3 per cent, well below the 5.8 per cent increase in 2003. The world merchant fleet expanded to 895.8 million deadweight tons (dwt) at the beginning of 2005, a 4.5 per cent increase over 2004. New building deliveries increased marginally to 49.4 million dwt, and tonnage broken up and lost was more than halved to 10.6 million dwt, leaving a net gain of 38.8 million dwt.

The fleets of oil tankers and dry bulk carriers, which together made up 73.3 per cent of the total world fleet, increased by 6.1 per cent and 4.2 per cent, respectively. There was an 8.4 per cent increase, from 90.5 to 98.1 million dwt in the container ship fleet, and a 7.6 per cent increase, from 20.9 to 22.5 million dwt in the liquefied gas carriers fleet. Registration of ships by developed market economies and major open-registry countries accounted for 27 and 45.1 per cent of the world fleet, respectively. Open registries increased their tonnage marginally, two thirds of which was owned by market economy and developing countries. Developing countries' share reached 22.6 per cent, or 202.3 million dwt, of which 155.9 million dwt was registered in Asia.

Transport of dangerous goods

In response to Economic and Social Council resolution 2003/64 [YUN 2003, p. 993], the Secretary-General submitted a May report [E/2005/53] on the work, during 2003-2004, of the Committee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods and on the Globally Harmonized System of Classification and Labelling of Chemicals.

The report stated that the secretariat published the thirteenth revised edition of the Recommendations on the Transport of Dangerous Goods: Model Regulations, the fourth revised edition of the Manual of Tests and Criteria and the first edition of the Globally Harmonized System of Classification and Labelling of Chemicals (GHS). All main legal instruments or codes governing the international transport of dangerous goods by sea, air, road, rail or inland waterway were amended accordingly, with effect from 1 January 2005, and many Governments transposed the provisions of the Model Regulations into their own legislation for domestic traffic for application as from 2005. Many Governments and international organizations revised national and international legislation in order to implement the GHS by 2008. The Committee adopted amendments to the Model Regulations, the Manual of Tests and Criteria and the GHS. It also adopted a programme of work and planned sessions for the two Subcommittees of Experts and for the Committee for 2005-2006 and recommended a draft resolution for adoption by the Council.

The Committee's two subsidiary bodies held two sessions each, all in Geneva: the Subcommittee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods held its twenty-seventh (4-8 July) [ST/SG/AC.10/C.3/54] and twenty-eighth sessions (28 November–6 December) [ST/SG/AC.10/C.3/56 & Add.1]; and the Subcommittee of Experts on the Globally Harmonized System of Classification and Labelling of Chemicals held its ninth (11-12 July) [ST/SG/AC.10/C.4/18] and tenth (7-8 December) [ST/SG/AC.10/C.4/20] sessions.

A March annex [ST/SG/AC.10/32/Add.3 &Corr.1] to the 2004 report of the Committee of Experts on its second session [YUN 2004, p. 986] contained amendments to the GHS [ST/SG/AC.10/30] adopted by the Committee.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 27 July [meeting 68], the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 2005/53 [draft: E/2005/53 & E/2005/L.42] without vote [agenda item 13 (m)].

Work of the Committee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods and on the Globally Harmonized System of Classification and Labelling of Chemicals

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolutions 1999/65 of 26 October 1999, 2001/34 of 26 July 2001, 2001/44 of 20 December 2001 and 2003/64 of 25 July 2003,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the work of the Committee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods and on the Globally Harmonized System of Classification and Labelling of Chemicals during the biennium 2003-2004,

A. Work of the Committee regarding the transport of dangerous goods

Recognizing the importance of the work of the Committee for the harmonization of codes and regulations relating to the transport of dangerous goods,

Bearing in mind the need to maintain safety standards at all times and to facilitate trade, as well as the importance of this to the various organizations responsible for modal regulations, while meeting the growing concern for the protection of life, property and the environment through the safe transport of dangerous goods, including their security in transport,

Noting the increasing volume of dangerous goods being introduced into worldwide commerce, and the rapid expansion of technology and innovation,

Recalling its resolution 1973(LIX) of 30 July 1975 whereby it requested the Committee to study, in consultation with other bodies concerned, in particular the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, the then Inter-Governmental Maritime Consultative Organization, the International Civil Aviation Organization, the International Air Transport Association and the regional commissions, the possibility of a joint approach to the drafting of an international convention on the transport of dangerous goods by all modes of transport which would take into account the general scope of a future convention on international intermodal transport,

Noting that the major international instruments governing the transport of dangerous goods by the various modes of transport and many national regulations are now harmonized with the Model Regulations annexed to the Committee recommendations on the transport of dangerous goods, but that the uneven progress in the updating process of national inland transport legislation in some countries of the world remains, inter alia, a reason for regulatory disharmony at the worldwide level and represents a serious legislative obstacle to international multimodal transport,

1. Expresses its appreciation for the work of the Committee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods and on the Globally Harmonized System of Classification and Labelling of Chemicals with respect to matters relating to the transport of dangerous goods, including their security in transport;

2. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To circulate the new and amended recommendations on the transport of dangerous goods to the Governments of Member States, the specialized agencies, the International Atomic Energy Agency and other international organizations concerned;

(b) To publish the fourteenth revised edition of the Recommendations on the Transport of Dangerous Goods: Model Regulations and the amendments to the fourth revised edition of the Recommendations on the Transport of Dangerous Goods: Manual of Tests and Criteria in all the official languages of the United Nations, in the most cost-effective manner, no later than the end of 2005;

(c) To make those publications available on the website of the secretariat of the Economic Commission for Europe, which also provides secretariat services to the Committee, and to make them available also on CD-ROM;

3. Invites all Governments, the specialized agencies, the International Atomic Energy Agency and the other international organizations concerned to transmit to the secretariat of the Committee their views on the Committee's work, together with any comments that they may wish to make on the amended recommendations;

4. Invites all interested Governments, the regional commissions, the specialized agencies and the international organizations concerned to take into account, when developing or updating appropriate codes and regulations, the recommendations of the Committee;

5. Requests the Committee to continue to study, in consultation with the International Maritime Organization, the International Civil Aviation Organization, the regional commissions and the intergovernmental organizations concerned, the possibilities of improving the implementation of the Model Regulations on the Transport of Dangerous Goods in all countries for the purposes of ensuring a high level of safety and eliminating technical barriers to international trade, including through the further harmonization of international agreements or conventions governing the international transport of dangerous goods, or a possible joint approach to the development of an effective international instrument on multimodal international transport of dangerous goods, as appropriate;

B. Work of the Committee regarding the Globally Harmonized System of Classification and Labelling of Chemicals

Bearing in mind that, in paragraph 23 (c) of the Plan of Implementation of the World Summit on Sustainable Development ("Johannesburg Plan of Implementation"), countries were encouraged to implement the Globally Harmonized System of Classification and Labelling of Chemicals as soon as possible with a view to having the system fully operational by 2008,

Bearing in mind also that the General Assembly, in its resolution 57/253 of 20 December 2002, endorsed the Johannesburg Plan of Implementation and requested the Economic and Social Council to implement the provisions of the Plan relevant to its mandate and, in particular, to promote the implementation of Agenda 21 by strengthening system-wide coordination,

Noting with satisfaction:

(a) That all United Nations programmes and specialized agencies concerned with chemical safety in the field of transport or of the environment, in particular the Economic Commission for Europe, the United Nations Environment Programme, the International Maritime Organization and the International Civil Aviation Organization, have taken appropriate steps to amend or consider amending their legal instruments in order to give effect to the Globally Harmonized System of Classification and Labelling of Chemicals;

(b) That the International Labour Office and the World Health Organization are also taking appropriate steps to adapt their existing chemical safety recommendations, codes and guidelines to the Globally Harmonized System, in particular in the areas of occupational health and safety and of the prevention and treatment of poisoning;

(c) That Member States participating in the activities of the Subcommittee of Experts on the Globally Harmonized System of Classification and Labelling of Chemicals, as well as the European Commission, are actively preparing revisions of national or regional legislation applicable to chemicals for implementation of the Globally Harmonized System;

(d) That several United Nations programmes, specialized agencies and regional organizations, in particular the United Nations Institute for Training and Research, the International Labour Organization, the World Health Organization, the Economic Commission for Europe, the Asia-Pacific Economic Cooperation Council, the Intergovernmental Forum on Chemical Safety, Governments, the European Commission and non-governmental organizations representing the chemical industry, have organized or contributed to multiple workshops, seminars and other capacity-building activities at the international, regional, subregional and national levels in order to raise administration, health sector and industry awareness and to prepare for the implementation of the Globally Harmonized System,

Aware that effective implementation by 2008 will require further cooperation between the Subcommittee of Experts on the Globally Harmonized System of Classification and Labelling of Chemicals and the international bodies concerned, continued efforts by the Governments of the Member States, cooperation with the industry and other affected parties, and significant support for capacity-building activities in countries with economies in transition and developing countries,

Recalling the particular significance of the United Nations Institute for Training and Research/International Labour Organization/Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development Global Partnership for Capacity-building to Implement the Globally Harmonized System for building capacities at all levels,

1. Commends the Secretary-General for the publication of the Globally Harmonized System of Classification and Labelling of Chemicals (GHS) in the six official languages of the United Nations, in book form and on CD-ROM, and the availability of that and related material on the website of the secretariat of the Economic Commission for Europe;

2. Expresses its deep appreciation to the Committee, United Nations programmes, specialized agencies and other organizations concerned for their fruitful cooperation and their commitment to the implementation of the Globally Harmonized System of Classification and Labelling of Chemicals;

3. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To circulate the amendments to the Globally Harmonized System to the Governments of Member States, the specialized agencies and other international organizations concerned;

(b) To publish the first revised edition of the Globally Harmonized System of Classification and Labelling of Chemicals in all the official languages of the United Nations in the most cost-effective manner no later than the end of 2005, and to make it available on CD-ROM and on the website of the secretariat of the Economic Commission for Europe, which provides secretariat services to the Committee;

4. Invites Governments that have not yet done so to take the necessary steps, through appropriate national procedures and/or legislation, to implement the Globally Harmonized System, as recommended in the Plan of Implementation of the World Summit on Sustainable Development;

5. Reiterates its invitation to the regional commissions, United Nations programmes, the specialized agencies and other organizations concerned to promote the implementation of the Globally Harmonized System and, where relevant, to amend their respective legal international instruments addressing transport safety, workplace safety, consumer protection or the protection of the environment so as to give effect to the Globally Harmonized System through such instruments;

6. Invites Governments, the regional commissions, United Nations programmes, the specialized agencies and other organizations concerned to provide feedback on implementation to the Subcommittee of Experts on the Globally Harmonized System of Classification and Labelling of Chemicals;

7. Encourages Governments, the regional commissions, United Nations programmes, the specialized agencies and other relevant international organizations and non-governmental organizations, in particular industry, to strengthen their support of the implementation of the Globally Harmonized System by providing financial contributions and/or technical assistance to capacity-building activities in developing countries and countries with economies in transition;

C. Programme of work of the Committee

Taking note of the programme of work of the Committee for the biennium 2005-2006 as contained in paragraphs 41 and 42 of the report of the Secretary-General on the work of the Committee of Experts,

Noting the relatively poor representation of experts from developing countries and countries with economies in transition in the work of the Committee and the need to promote their wider participation in its work,

Noting with concern that the General Service staff resources requested for the activities of the Subcommittee of Experts on the Globally Harmonized System of Classification and Labelling of Chemicals when it was established and which had been provided through general temporary assistance until the end of 2004 were suppressed in 2004, irrespective of the recommendations made by the Committee at its first session,

1. Decides to approve the programme of work of the Committee;

2. Stresses the importance of the participation of experts from developing countries as well as from countries with economies in transition in the work of the Committee, calls, in that regard, for voluntary contributions to facilitate their participation, including through support for travel and daily subsistence allowance, and invites Member States and international organizations in a position to do so to contribute;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to reallocate appropriate General Service staff resources for the activities of the Committee;

4. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to the Economic and Social Council in 2007 on the implementation of the present resolution, the recommendations on the transport of dangerous goods and on the Globally Harmonized System of Classification and Labelling of Chemicals.

UNCTAD institutional and organizational questions

In 2005, the Trade and Development Board (TDB), the governing body of UNCTAD, held the following sessions, all in Geneva: thirty-sixth executive session (3 May); twenty-second special session (18 July); thirty-seventh executive session (26 July); fifty-second session (3-14 October); and resumed fifty-second session (7 November) [A/60/15]. It also held hearings with civil society and private sector representatives (29 September) [TD/B/52/9] on the theme "Economic growth and poverty reduction in the 1990s: Lessons from a decade of economic reform for development strategies and global partnerships in the new millennium".

In May, TDB took note of the reports of its subsidiary bodies and the UNCTAD annual report, took action relating to the financing of experts and its contribution to the 2005 World Summit (see p. 47) and considered the outcome of the high-level meeting of the Economic and Social Council with the Bretton Woods institutions, WTO and UNCTAD.

On 18 July, TDB considered the contribution of UNCTAD to the follow-up to the relevant UN development conferences, including the Millennium Summit.

On 26 July, TDB considered UNCTAD activities relating to Africa, approved proposed amendments to the certificate of origin of the Generalized System of Preferences and decided to allow civil society organizations that had been accredited for UNCTAD XI to continue to participate in Board hearings for civil society. It also continued consideration of the financing of experts and took note of the report of the Working Party on the Medium-term Plan and Programme Budget on its resumed forty-fourth session.

In October, TDB adopted agreed conclusions on the review of progress in the implementation of the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the Decade 2001-2010 [agreed conclusions 482 (LII)] (see p. 942), and a decision on the review of UNCTAD technical cooperation activities and their financing [dec. 483 (LII)] (see below). It requested the UNCTAD Secretary-General to consult further with member States on the financing of experts and the modalities for selecting them, and decided to hold a resumed session in November to finalize its agreed conclusions on economic development in Africa: the role of foreign direct investment in growth and development. TDB took note of: the report on UNCTAD contribution to the implementation of, and the review of progress made in the implementation of the outcomes of major UN conferences and summits [TD/B/52/6]; the reports on UNCTAD assistance to the Palestinian people (see p. 542) and on the hearings with civil society, in accordance with the São Paulo Consensus [YUN 2004, p. 955]; the oral report on multi- stakeholder partnerships for UNCTAD XI; the reports of the Working Party on the Medium-term Plan and Programme Budget on its forty-fifth session (see below) and of the UN Commission on International Trade Law on its thirty-eight session [A/60/17] (see p. 1456); and the reports of the Joint Advisory Group on ITC UNCTAD/WTO on its thirty-eighth session (see p. 1049) and of the Advisory Body on the implementation of courses by the secretariat in 2004-2005 and their impact, in accordance with the Bangkok Plan of Action [YUN 2000, p. 891].

In November, TDB adopted agreed conclusions on economic development in Africa: the role of foreign direct investment in growth and development [agreed conclusions 484 (LII)] (see p. 1054); and a decision on venue for UNCTAD XII [dec. 485 (LII)].

Working Party. The UNCTAD Working Party on the Medium-term Plan and Programme Budget (the Working Party) held three sessions in 2005, all in Geneva: the forty-fourth session (31 January–2 February) [TD/B/WP/179], the forty-fourth resumed session (30-31 May) [TD/B/WP/183] and the forty-fifth session (12-15 September) [TD/B/WP/184].

Technical cooperation

In a July report [TD/B/WP/181 & Add.1,2], the UNCTAD Secretary-General provided a review of technical cooperation activities in 2004, which were focused on enhancing the institutional and negotiating capacity of developing countries in the development of endogenous trade and development policies towards the implementation of the São Paulo Consensus [YUN 2004, p. 955]. In 2004, trust fund contributions for UNCTAD technical cooperation, the main source of funding, amounted to $26.9 million, about the same as in 2003. UNDP-supported activities reached their lowest level in 2004, accounting for 8.5 per cent, or $2.3 million of total expenditures; while the UN regular programme budget accounted for 6.3 per cent.

UNCTAD technical cooperation activities continued to be carried out on the basis of interregional, regional and country-specific projects. Interregional projects, directed towards developing countries and regions, including LDCs, accounted for the bulk of UNCTAD's trust funds expenditures, at $15.5 million, and for 56 per cent of overall UNCTAD technical cooperation expenditures in 2004. Regional projects accounted for 9.5 per cent of expenditures, amounting to $2.6 million. Country projects amounted to $9.4 million, corresponding to more than one-third of expenditures.

By region, $4.2 million went to Africa, $4.5 million to Asia and the Pacific, $2.1 million to Latin America and the Caribbean, $1.2 million to Europe and $15.5 to interregional projects. LDCs continued to be the major beneficiaries of UNCTAD technical cooperation, with expenditures amounting to $9.2 million, reflecting an increase of 6.2 per cent over the previous year and representing one-third of total expenditures in 2004.

By programme, services infrastructure for development and trade efficiency accounted for 35.3 per cent of total expenditure; international trade in goods and services and commodities, 23 per cent; investment, enterprise development, and technology, 6.6 per cent; and globalization and development strategies, 12.5 per cent. The balance of 12.4 per cent went to programmes for executive direction and management and support services, cross-divisional advisory services; and least developed, landlocked and island developing countries.

Major technical assistance programmes in order of expenditures included Automated System for Customs Data($7.3 million); investment policy and capacity building ($3.2 million); Debt Management and Financial Analysis System ($3.2 million); trade negotiations and commercial diplomacy ($2.5 million); and trade, environment and development ($2.2 million).

Technical cooperation strategy

The Working Party on the Medium-term Plan and Programme Budget, at its forty-fifth session in September [TD/B/WP/184], considered the July report on UNCTAD technical cooperation activities in 2004 (see above) and adopted a draft decision for adoption by TDB on the review of UNCTAD technical cooperation activities and their financing.

On 7 October [A/60/15 (dec. 483 (LII))], TDB took note of the report on UNCTAD technical cooperation activities in 2004 and requested the secretariat to improve the information contained in annex I. It underscored the importance of more effective and sustained capacity-building activities; expressed the need to ensure an equitable distribution of resources among developing country regions; and invited donors to continue to support interregional activities and UNCTAD's technical cooperation programme. It urged the secretariat to intensify consultations with potential beneficiaries of UNCTAD's assistance and to coordinate UNCTAD operational activities, the secretariat's research and analytical work and intergovernmental deliberations. The secretariat should report to the next session of the Working Party on technical cooperation relating to UNCTAD's contribution to the implementation of relevant Assembly resolutions and on progress made in operationalizing the São Paulo Consensus. Noting UNCTAD's efforts at raising funds, TDB requested the secretariat to provide further information on options for improving the system of funding technical assistance and making it more predictable; and called for strengthened cooperation among different providers of trade-related technical assistance. TDB requested the UNCTAD Secretary-General to enhance the coherence and the interdivisional nature of programmes and activities and to submit a progress report to the 2006 session of the Working Party. It also requested the secretariat to report on follow-up by no later than the forty-seventh (2007) session of the Working Party.

Evaluation

In August, an independent team submitted an evaluation of UNCTAD technical cooperation activities: in-depth evaluation of the training courses on key issues on the international economic agenda [TD/B/WP/182 & Add.1], in response to a request of the Working Party on the Medium-term Plan and Programme Budget, at its forty-third session [YUN 2004, p. 988]. The evaluation team reviewed all commitments contained in paragraph 166 of the Bangkok Plan of Action [YUN 2000, p.891] and assessed how they had been met. It stated that UNCTAD had developed an innovative product for technical assistance services in trade policy, and that the delivery of the courses had met their objectives. It stressed the positive impacts on some members' institutional capacity building in public agencies, research institutions and universities associated with foreign trade matters, and recommended that activities should continue to aim at excelling in the delivery of the training courses and building sustainable institutional and societal capacities.

At its forty-fifth session in September [TD/B/WP/184], the Working Party adopted agreed conclusions, noted the need for more predictable funding of the training courses and requested the secretariat to explore ways to regularly conduct six regional courses within the biennium and to report thereon to the Working Party in 2006. It encouraged the secretariat to ensure the sustainability of impact through, among other things, increased networking, and to provide courses in the UN language appropriate to the needs of the participants. The Working Party endorsed the recommendations contained in the evaluation report and requested the secretariat to submit a progress report to its forty-seventh (2007) session. It reiterated the importance of the UNCTAD evaluation process and requested that adequate human resources be provided for the coordination of future evaluations.

TDB, in October [A/60/15], endorsed the conclusions of the Working Party.

Participation in expert meetings

TDB, at its thirty-sixth executive session on 3 May [A/60/15], requested the Working Party to consider the outcome of informal consultations on the financing of experts.

On 31 May [TD/B/WP/183], the Working Party, in agreed conclusions on the financing of experts, requested its Chairman to continue consultations with a view to arriving at a solution within two months and to report to TDB. It recommended the designation by the UNCTAD Secretary-General of a focal point responsible for all matters related to the financing of experts and to report to TDB; and that the focal point assist in identifying appropriate modalities in accordance with UN administrative and financial and budgetary rules and regulations and relevant Assembly resolutions.

At its thirty-seventh executive session in July [A/60/15], TDB endorsed the Working Party's agreed conclusions and decided to include the issue of the financing of experts in the agenda of its fifty-second session and to request the secretariat to prepare a note thereon.

At its fifty-second session in October [A/60/15], TDB requested the UNCTAD Secretary-General to conduct, on an urgent basis, further consultations with member States on the financing of experts and the modalities for selecting them, and to report to the Board at an executive or special session.

Medium-term plan and programme budget

At its forty-fourth session [TD/B/WP/179], the Working Party reviewed the draft programme budget on trade and development for the 2006-2007 biennium [UNCTAD/EDM/MISC/2004/5/Rev.2]. In agreed conclusions, the Working Party considered that the review of the work programme could be more effective if it were provided with detailed information on financial and resource distribution. It therefore requested the UNCTAD secretariat to consult with the competent authorities in New York, with a view to sharing information needed or enhancing its proceedings. It invited the secretariat to enhance its contributions towards the implementation of the international development goals, including those contained in the Millennium Declaration, the follow-up to the High-level Plenary Meeting of the General Assembly to be held in September (see p. 47) and to major UN conferences and summits. It also called upon UNCTAD to explore ways in which it could help countries affected by the Indian Ocean earthquake and the tsunami in their recovery and rehabilitation efforts, in coordination with the international community. It also asked UNCTAD to further explore modalities for financing the participation of experts from developing countries in UNCTAD intergovernmental meetings on a predictable and sustainable basis.

At its forty-fourth resumed session [TD/B/WP/183], the Working Party further reviewed the proposed programme budget on trade and development for the 2006-2007 biennium [A/60/6 (Sect.12)]. In agreed conclusions, it requested the secretariat to provide an explanatory note containing information on the rationale for the allocation of resources to substantive subprogrammes, and to improve the quality and clarity of the expected accomplishments and indicators. Noting the two per cent decline in the allocation of resources for UNCTAD, it considered that UNCTAD should be provided with the resources necessary for the implementation of the outcomes of UNCTAD XI.

On 26 July [A/60/15], TDB took note of the Working Party's report on its resumed forty-fourth session and endorsed the agreed conclusions.

UNCTAD Secretary-General

By decision 59/419 of 11 May, the General Assembly, on the proposal of the UN Secretary-General [A/59/110], confirmed the appointment of Supachai Panitchpakdi as Secretary-General of UNCTAD for a four year term of office, beginning on 1 September 2005 and ending on 31 August 2009.

Chapter V

Regional economic and social activities

In 2005, the five regional economic commissions of the United Nations continued to provide technical cooperation, including advisory services, to their member States. They also, among other activities, promoted programmes and projects and provided training to enhance national capacity-building in various sectors. Four of them—the Economic Commission for Africa (ECA), the Economic Commission for Europe (ECE), the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific (ESCAP) and the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia (ESCWA)—held regular sessions during the year. The Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean (ECLAC) did not meet in 2005 but was scheduled to do so in 2006.

The Executive Secretaries of the commissions continued to meet periodically to exchange views and coordinate activities and positions on major development issues. In July, during its annual substantive session, the Economic and Social Council held an interactive dialogue with the Executive Secretaries on the theme: "Achievement of the internationally agreed development goals, including those contained in the Millennium Declaration: a regional perspective".

During the year, ECA and ECE continued to collaborate on the project for a Europe-Africa fixed link through the Strait of Gibraltar; cooperation and progress on the project were welcomed by the Council. The General Assembly, having considered a report by the Office of Internal Oversight Services on its inspection of ECA's subregional offices, urged the implementation of the recommendations contained therein. ECE examined domestic policies that had led to increased resources for development and the role of regional cooperation in financing for development. In December, it held an ad hoc session at which it adopted the workplan on ECE reform. ESCAP adopted revised statutes for its regional institutions so that their workplans were subject to the established intergovernmental review and approval process. It also established the Asian and Pacific Training Centre for Information and Communication Technology for Development (APCICT). The Council approved the revised statutes and the establishment of APCICT, and adopted a resolution on the midterm review of the functioning of ESCAP's conference structure. In other action related to the regional commissions, the Council approved the admission of Germany as a member of ECLAC and adopted a resolution on ESCWA's Damascus Declaration on the Realization of the Millennium Development Goals.

Regional cooperation

During 2005, the United Nations continued to strengthen cooperation among its five regional commissions, between them and other UN entities, and with regional and international organizations.

On 4 February (decision 2005/206), the Economic and Social Council decided that the theme for the regional cooperation item of its 2005 substantive session would be "Achievement of the internationally agreed development goals, including those contained in the United Nations Millennium Declaration: a regional perspective". Accordingly, the Council held an interactive dialogue with the Executive Secretaries on that subject on 5 July.

Meetings of Executive Secretaries. The Executive Secretaries of the regional commissions met on 11 and 17 February (New York), 7-8 July (Beirut, Lebanon) and 24-27 October (New York) [E/2005/15, E/2006/15].

At their February meeting, the Executive Secretaries focused on progress made towards achieving internationally agreed development goals, including those contained in the United Nations Millennium Declaration, adopted at the Millennium Summit in 2000 [YUN 2000, p. 49], and the Secretary-General's reform initiatives for mainstreaming the regional dimension in the Organization's work in the economic and social sectors. They exchanged views on, among other things, the activities undertaken by the commissions on regional follow-up to the 2002 International Conference on Financing for Development [YUN 2002, p. 953]; the preparations for the thirteenth session of the Commission on Sustainable Development, to be held in April (see p. 920) in follow-up to the 2002 World Summit on Sustainable Development [YUN 2002, p. 821]; and preparations for the second phase of the World Summit on the Information Society, to be held in November (see p. 933).

The Executive Secretaries viewed the Economic and Social Council's 1 March decision to hold its dialogue with them immediately after the high-level segment of its substantive session (decision 2005/210) (see p. 954) as a positive step towards the Council's review of the regional dimensions of global issues, including coherent policies to address the varying degrees of achievement of the Millennium Development Goals (MDGs) [YUN 2000, p. 51] at the regional and subregional levels. They agreed that the MDGs and other international development goals were increasingly shaping the development agenda of the regions. Regional processes could bridge the gap between global perspectives and country-specific concerns, and could reinforce good practices through exchange of experiences. The Executive Secretaries were of the view that regional policies should focus, in particular, on the interlinkages between growth, equity and poverty reduction; the conditions for a sustained process of poverty reduction; the links between economic policies and sustainable development; the combination of broad-based human capital formation with social protection and specific anti-poverty programmes; adherence to the principles of governance and accountability; and regional integration policies for reducing vulnerability to various external shocks, such as financial crises and natural or man-made disasters. They stressed that although national policies were crucial for achieving the MDGs, in a globalized world, a supportive international climate was indispensable. International commitments on aid, debt and trade issues for developing countries were essential for achieving the MDGs.

Together with other partners, including the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD), the regional commissions continued to support their member States with regard to their effective integration into the global trading system. They assisted them in formulating trade policies and strategies that would ensure more equitable results of globalization and liberalization. In that regard, the Executive Secretaries noted that the regional commissions would prepare a joint report for the High-level Dialogue of the General Assembly on Financing for Development (see p. 1064) , which would focus on obstacles to achieving the Monterrey Consensus, adopted at the 2002 International Conference on Financing for Development [YUN 2002, p. 953].

Concerning the report of the Secretary-General "In larger freedom: towards development, security and human rights for all" [A/59/2005] (see p. 67), which observed that threats to peace and security in a globalized world included poverty, deadly infectious disease and environmental degradation, the Executive Secretaries agreed that those threats needed to be addressed by the international community at the global and regional levels in an integrated and preventative manner. They therefore decided to meet in July in Beirut, Lebanon, to address issues raised in the Secretary-General's report, including policy issues for greater coherence and harmony between bilateral, regional and global agreements, especially in areas relating to trade and development. Building on the experiences gained through their joint meetings, they were of the view that cooperation among the commissions should continue to be strengthened through knowledge sharing and networking.

Review and reform of the regional commissions

In a May report [E/2005/15], the Secretary-General updated the Economic and Social Council on actions taken by the regional commissions to implement the guidance given in Council resolution 1998/46 [YUN 1998, p. 1262] on mainstreaming the regional dimension into the work of the United Nations and enhancing the coherence of UN activities at the regional level. The report also provided a regional perspective on the achievement of internationally agreed development goals, including the MDGs, which was the theme for the regional cooperation item at the Council's substantive session.

An addendum to the report [E/2005/15/Add.1] contained the texts of resolutions and decisions adopted at recent meetings of the regional commissions and drawn to the Council's attention for consideration or action.

By decision 2005/303 of 27 July, the Council took note of the Secretary-General's report and addendum. By the same decision, it took note of the report of the Secretary-General on the project for a Europe-Africa permanent link through the Strait of Gibraltar and of The Overview of the Economic Report on Africa 2005: "Meeting the Challenges of Unemployment and Poverty in Africa" [E/2005/17]; the summaries of: the Economic and Social Survey of Asia and the Pacific, 2005 [E/2005/18]; the Economic Survey of Europe, 2005: the economic situation in Europe and the Commonwealth of Independent States in 2004-2005 [E/2005/16]; the Economic Survey of Latin America and the Caribbean, 2004 [E/2005/19]; and the Survey of Economic and Social Developments in the Economic and Social Commision for Western Asia, 2005 [E/2005/20].

The Council adopted resolutions on the Europe-Africa fixed link through the Strait of Gibraltar (resolution 2005/34); the midterm review concerning the functioning of the conference structure of ESCAP (resolution 2005/35); the statute of the Statistical Institute for Asia and the Pacific (resolution 2005/36); the statute of the UN Asian and Pacific Centre for Agricultural Engineering and Machinery (resolution 2005/37); the statute of the Asian and Pacific Centre for Transfer of Technology (resolution 2005/38); the Centre for Alleviation of Poverty through Secondary Crops Development in Asia and the Pacific (resolution 2005/39); the establishment of the Asian and Pacific Training Centre for Information and Communication Technology for Development (resolution 2005/40); the admission of Germany as a member of ECLAC (resolution 2005/41); and the Damascus Declaration and the role of ESCWA in the achievement of the internationally agreed development goals, including those contained in the Millennium Declaration (resolution 2005/50). It also adopted decisions on the implementation of resolutions concerning the participation of associate members of ECLAC in the follow-up to UN world conferences and in the work of the Council (decisions 2005/214 and 2005/302); and the venue of the sixty-second session of ESCAP (decision 2005/297).

(For the summaries of economic surveys covering the regions and the texts of the resolutions, see the relevant sections of this chapter.)

Audit of the regional commissions

In response to General Assembly resolution 59/271 [YUN 2004, p. 1369], the Secretary-General submitted a September report [A/60/378] on the implementation of the recommendations of the Office of Internal Oversight Services (OIOS) on its 2004 management audit of the regional commissions [YUN 2004, p. 992]. The report noted that the Executive Secretaries had undertaken follow-up action on all OIOS recommendations and provided details of those measures.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 23 December [meeting 69], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee [A/60/604], adopted resolution 60/239 without vote [agenda item 132].

Implementation of the recommendations of the Office of Internal Oversight Services on its management audit of the regional commissions

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 59/271 of 23 December 2004,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the recommendations of the Office of Internal Oversight Services on its management audit of the regional commissions,

Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the recommendations of the Office of Internal Oversight Services on its management audit of the regional commissions.

Africa

The Economic Commission for Africa (ECA) held its thirty-eighth session/Conference of African Ministers of Finance, Planning and Economic Development (Abuja, Nigeria, 14-15 May) under the theme "Achieving the MDGs in Africa". It considered the report and major recommendations of the twenty-fourth meeting of the Committee of Experts of the Conference of African Ministers of Finance, Planning and Economic Development [E/ECA/CM.38/8], which preceded the session (Abuja, 11-13 May), and discussed the session's agenda, statutory issues and the proposed programme of work and priorities for ECA for the 2006-2007 biennium [E/ECA/CM.38/3]. It also had before it: an issues paper on achieving the MDGs in Africa [E/ECA/CM.38/5]; the ECA annual report for 2005 [E/ECA/CM.38/2]; and an overview of a joint ECA/Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD) paper: Mutual Review of Development Effectiveness in the Context of the New Partnership for Africa's Development (NEPAD) [E/ECA/CM.38/6].

The Ministers adopted a ministerial statement in which they recognized that strong political will and bold and decisive action were needed to achieve poverty eradication and promote sustainable development in Africa. The situation was particularly urgent as only 10 years remained until the target date for reaching the MDGs, which the Ministers reaffirmed as a vitally important framework for reducing poverty and advancing development. The Ministers were encouraged by progress in some parts of the continent and in several African countries on individual MDGs, including progress by countries with severe resource constraints. The wider picture was not satisfactory, however, and faster and broader progress was needed. The Ministers noted the importance of reviewing the advances made and obstacles encountered in implementing the MDGs; they supported the preparation of an African Common Position in that regard.

In consideration of a number of forthcoming high-level discussions, notably the African Union (AU) Summit (Sirte, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, 4-5 July), the UN High-level Dialogue on Financing for Development (New York, 27-28 June) (see p. 1064), the Summit of the Group of Eight (G-8) most industrialized countries (Gleneagles, United Kingdom, 6-8 July), and the General Assembly's World Summit (New York, 14-16 September) (see p. 47), the Ministers set out some key actions they needed to take in order to achieve the MDGs in Africa and highlighted what needed to be done by the international community to enable the African countries to meet the objectives. Those actions were detailed under the following headings: the fruits of growth must be increased and shared; towards local ownership and more effective national poverty reduction and growth strategies; greater focus needed on trade, infrastructure and agriculture; financing a "big push" for Africa; improving aid management and mutual accountability; and fostering greater institutional coherence and effectiveness.

Economic trends

In 2005, Africa's gross domestic product (GDP) grew by 5.3 per cent, a slight increase over the 5.2 per cent achieved in 2004, according to the Overview of the Economic Report on Africa 2006: "Recent economic trends in Africa and prospects for 2006" [E/2006/17]. A key driver of the economic recovery in recent years, after decades of decline and stagnation, was the improvement in macroeconomic management in many African countries, which resulted in controlled inflation rates and consolidation of fiscal balances. Another favourable factor was the increase in international prices of key African export commodities. East Africa led the continent with a GDP growth rate of 6.1 per cent, followed by Southern Africa at 5.8 per cent, North Africa at 5.3 per cent, West Africa at 4.9 per cent and Central Africa at 3.7 per cent. By country, 8 of the top 10 growth performers achieved the 7 per cent growth rate threshold estimated as needed to reach the MDGs: Angola, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Liberia, the Republic of the Congo, Mozambique and the Sudan. Lesotho, Malawi, Seychelles, Togo and Zimbabwe exhibited the weakest performance.

The average fiscal position on the continent improved from a deficit of 0.7 per cent of GDP in 2004 to a surplus of 0.7 per cent in 2005. That improvement was largely driven by the sizeable fiscal surpluses recorded by many oil-producing countries, however, and fiscal imbalances remained a critical problem in Africa, with as many as 28 countries recording fiscal deficits in 2005. The inflation outlook remained satisfactory, with a majority of countries recording single-digit inflation rates. The mean inflation rate for Africa increased slightly from 7.8 per cent in 2004 to 8.2 per cent in 2005. The continent's trade surplus increased to $27.7 billion in 2005 from $12.7 billion in 2004 as a result of a 45 per cent increase in the region's oil trade surplus. Africa's total debt stock stood at $285.8 billion in 2005 and debt-service payments rose to $31.8 billion.

Activities in 2005

The ECA programme of work in 2005 was organized under eight subprogrammes: facilitating economic and social policy analysis; fostering sustainable development; strengthening development management; harnessing information for development; promoting trade and regional integration; promoting the advancement of women; supporting subregional activities for development; and development planning and administration [E/ECA/CM.38/2; E/ECA/CM/39.2].

Facilitating economic and social policy analysis

In 2005, ECA continued its efforts to strengthen the capacity of member States to design and implement appropriate policies to achieve sustained economic growth for poverty reduction, in line with the priorities of the Millennium Declaration [YUN 2000, p. 49] and NEPAD [YUN 2001, p. 900]. Particular emphasis was placed on monitoring and tracking Africa's economic performance; conducting research and policy analysis on macroeconomic, financial and social issues; and strengthening the statistical capacities of African countries for monitoring progress towards the MDGs.

Activities included the organization of an ad hoc experts group meeting on capital flows and current account sustainability (Accra, Ghana, 21-25 September), which identified policies with respect to trade, capital flows and debt that could increase current account sustainability. In addition, a major research report was published, entitled Unleashing the Private Sector in Africa, which, in particular, underlined the role of African governments in promoting the development of the private sector by addressing the constraints to its growth and development, including strategies for increasing flows of foreign direct investment (FDI) and maximizing the contributions of the African diaspora to the continent's development. In the area of social policy and poverty analysis, ECA focused on support for member States in achieving the goals of NEPAD and the Millennium Declaration. The secretariat submitted to the Commission's May session an issues paper on achieving the MDGs in Africa [E/ECA/CM.38/5], which identified the main challenges in meeting the MDGs and provided policy recommendations on how they could be addressed.

New Partnership for Africa's Development

ECA continued to contribute to the implementation of NEPAD a programme for the continent's development that was initiated by African leaders in 2001 [YUN 2001, p. 900]. Most of NEPAD's priorities were at the core of ECA's own mandate and were supported through its analytical work and technical assistance in various areas. In response to NEPAD's emphasis on partnerships, ECA continued its work with the OECD secretariat on developing a framework for mutual accountability and policy coherence, which would form the basis for a new relationship between African countries and their development partners to increase aid effectiveness. It also supported the implementation of the African Peer Review Mechanism (APRM) by contributing to the development of some of the APRM codes and standards, providing country economic and governance data to the APRM secretariat and participating in support missions to nine countries. In addition, ECA carried out training and capacity-building activities to harness information and communication technologies (ICT) for development and increase Africa's participation in global ICT policy- and decision-making forums, as called for in NEPAD's Short-term Action Plan. NEPAD objectives were also supported through ECA assistance to the Regional Economic Communities (RECs) in the development and implementation of subregional policies and plans in order to ensure improved connectivity and unification of standards between member States. In December, an e-government strategy was completed for the East African Community.

In resolution 60/222 of 23 December (see p. 1005), the General Assembly encouraged entities of the UN system to intensify their efforts in support of NEPAD at the regional level.

(For more information on NEPAD, see p. 1003.)

Information for development

ECA activities on harnessing information for development had the objective of further strengthening the growth of a sustainable information society in Africa that better addressed the continent's development challenges. Its work focused on: harnessing information technology for development through implementation of the African Information Society Initiative [YUN 1996, p. 880]; strengthening geoinformation systems for sustainable development; and improving access to information through enhanced library services.

In preparation for the second phase of the World Summit on the Information Society, to be held in November (see p. 933), ECA organized a meeting (Accra, 2-4 February), which, in addition to readying African countries for the Summit, addressed the challenges of achieving the information society in Africa and bridging the digital divide, capacity-building for Internet governance and operationalization of the Digital Solidarity Fund, which was established at the Summit's first phase in 2003 [YUN 2003, p. 858]. ECA organized a series of activities in the run-up to the November Summit, enabling African countries to participate actively in the global decision-making processes and reflect Africa's common concerns and perspectives in their outcomes, based on the African Regional Plan of Action on the Knowledge Economy, adopted by African ministers in charge of ICT (Geneva, 21 September).

The fourth meeting of the Committee on Development Information (Addis Ababa, 23-28 April), held under the theme "Information as an Economic Resource", sought to address key African development issues contained in the ECA workplan as they related to the information and knowledge economy. The Committee adopted a plan of action aimed at accelerating progress in building an effective information and knowledge economy that could enhance economic growth and sustainable development; it made recommendations in several key areas, such as statistics, geoinformation and library development.

Addressing the need to measure the impact of ICT in various sectors, ECA continued to implement its initiative, SCAN-ICT, which was aimed at building and strengthening the capacity of member States in the development of indicators and benchmarks for monitoring and assessing information society trends. The initiative entered its second phase in June with the launch of activities for collecting core ICT for development indicators in Cameroon, the Gambia, Ghana, Mauritius and Rwanda.

In the area of information and knowledge development, the ECA library launched the African Virtual Library Information Network portal in January as a platform for sharing development information and knowledge on Africa.

ECA was also a major geoinformation knowledge hub; it maintained a clearing house system for researchers and decision makers, providing space for member States to publicize their metadata holdings. Capacity-building activities remained central to ECA's mission of promoting awareness of the importance of harnessing and exploiting ICT for socio-economic development. ECA carried out a number of training courses and workshops throughout the year and continued to work through a number of bilateral and multilateral partnership mechanisms to carry out its activities.

Sustainable development

ECA activities in the area of fostering sustainable development aimed to promote awareness of the environmental foundations of sustainable development, with particular emphasis on integrating environmental sustainability into national development processes and poverty reduction strategies so that economic and social development would not be undermined by environmental degradation. They focused on: reinforcing the linkages among food security, population, environment and human settlements; improving stewardship of natural resources by strengthening capacities for sustainable exploitation; and building capacity in the use of science and technology to achieve sustainable development.

In the area of promoting agriculture and food security, ECA participated in five regional implementation meetings and in a summit (Accra, 5-6 May), which resulted in the adoption of the Accra Plan of Action to advance the implementation of the NEPAD Comprehensive African Agricultural Development Programme agenda at regional and country levels. Also in the framework of UN support for NEPAD, specifically the subcluster on water, the ECA secretariat organized workshops in Southern Africa (Pretoria, South Africa, 2-9 March) and North Africa (Cairo, Egypt, 14-17 April) for decision makers and technical personnel in water management to facilitate the development of an African regional water clearing house to strengthen cooperation in integrated water resources management. The inaugural issue of ECA's Sustainable Development Report on Africa highlighted significant environmental trends in the region with a view to increasing awareness of innovative ways to mainstream environment and sustainable development issues into national planning instruments. The fourth meeting of the Committee on Sustainable Development (Addis Ababa, 24-28 October) was held under the theme, "Managing land-based resources for sustainable development". In addition to discussing the theme issue, the Committee considered recent developments in science and technology policy for sustainable development and reviewed ECA's work programme in sustainable development.

ECA activities with regard to energy included a series of studies and reports on power sector reforms, particularly their environmental impact. Similarly, work undertaken in the area of science and technology was aimed at enhancing awareness of the role it could play in achieving sustainable development.

Development management

Addressing the challenge of establishing and sustaining good governance practices for broad stakeholder participation in the development process and strengthening the foundations for sustainable development in Africa remained the central objective of ECA's work under its subprogramme on strengthening development management.

During the year, ECA organized a series of subregional workshops on "Codes and standards for economic and corporate governance in Africa" in collaboration with its five subregional offices (SROs). The aim of the workshops was to provide a forum for experts and policy makers to review economic and corporate practices in member States; identify the main challenges, strategies and good practices; and make recommendations to enhance economic and corporate governance in the region. Each workshop ended with the adoption of a plan of action to promote better corporate governance in the public and private sectors.

The third meeting of the Committee on Human Development and Civil Society (Addis Ababa, 4-6 May) [E/ECA/CHDCS.3/7], held under the theme "Participation and Partnerships for Improving Development and Governance in Africa", underlined the importance of participation and partnerships among civil society, government and the private sector with a view to enhancing transparency, strengthening checks and balances in government and improving efficiency and accountability in the national budgeting process and the delivery of basic social services.

To address the challenge of achieving coherence of policy actions in international support for Africa, ECA and the Development Co-operation Directorate of OECD completed work on a framework for monitoring the progress of Africa and its development partners in support of the NEPAD objectives, and ensuring harmonization of donor policies. A draft of that document, the Mutual Review of Development Effectiveness in the Context of NEPAD, was presented at the fourth meeting of the Africa Partnership Forum (Abuja, 9-10 April), which brought together representatives of the G-8 countries, other OECD members, the 20 nations serving on the NEPAD Heads of State and Government Implementation Committee, the AU Commission and RECs.

The first annual African Governance Report (AGR) was issued in 2005. Even before its formal launching, scheduled for 2006, it was being used by several regional and subregional institutions to support their work on governance. AGR country case studies also served as inputs into the African Peer Review country self-assessment. A number of ad hoc expert group meetings and workshops were organized to review the results of research, analytical studies and publications prepared by the secretariat. Governance issues discussed at those meetings included: best practices in participatory development; public financial management and accountability in the context of budget transparency in Africa; and the role of Africa's civil society in the implementation of the APRM.

Promoting trade and regional integration

In 2005, ECA continued its efforts to accelerate the effective integration of Africa into the global economy and strengthen the process of regional integration on the continent through promoting intraregional and international trade and physical integration.

Throughout the year, ECA worked closely with other partners in supporting the member States in their preparations for the Sixth Ministerial Conference of the World Trade Organization (WTO) in December (see p. 1041). In that regard, ECA and the AU organized a meeting of African Ministers of Trade (Arusha, United Republic of Tanzania, 21-24 November) to assist them in defining and synchronizing their negotiating positions. Despite the failure of the WTO Ministerial Conference to reach agreement on key issues, Africa successfully defended its position, particularly on the crucial issue of agriculture, where it was agreed that various farm support measures would be eliminated by 2013.

ECA increased its support to member States in building a coherent strategy for negotiations between the African, Caribbean and Pacific States and EU countries on the Economic Partnership Agreements (EPAs). ECA undertook a comprehensive impact assessment of EPAs and organized three subregional expert group meetings to examine the main challenges of the negotiations and their potential implications for subregional economies. ECA presented the results of its technical studies, which highlighted the potential impact of concluding an EPA as proposed by the EU, and made recommendations on how Africa should respond. The subregional meetings were followed by a regional meeting (Mombasa, Kenya, 22-24 September) at which lessons and experiences from the various regions were shared and the way forward on EPAs agreed. In response to a request for ECA to examine how African countries could mitigate some of the possible impacts of an EPA, it conducted studies on African countries that had concluded free trade agreements with the EU (Egypt, Morocco, South Africa, Tunisia) and distilled lessons for other African countries. In addition, ECA was undertaking country-specific studies on the likely impact of EPAs, working with national governments and research institutions so that they would gain the experience and skills necessary to conduct further studies. Studies had been completed for Djibouti, Ethiopia, Gabon, Mali, Rwanda, Senegal and Seychelles.

The work of the African Trade Policy Centre, established in 2004 [YUN 2004, p. 998] to strengthen ECA capacity on trade-related issues, continued in 2005. The Centre provided advisory services and training to African countries and regularly published analytical and policy-relevant research to assist member States in developing their negotiating positions.

The fourth session of the Committee on Trade, Regional Cooperation and Integration (Addis Ababa, 23-25 March) reviewed ECA's current and future work priorities in support of trade promotion and economic integration in Africa. The Committee also addressed policies and modalities for implementing regional integration at the national level, reviewed progress and prospects for greater inter-African trade and assessed the status of WTO and EPA negotiations.

Transport and communications

An important objective of ECA's work in the area of infrastructure development was to help establish an efficient, integrated and affordable transport and communications system. As part of the sub-Saharan Africa Transport Programme, a joint initiative of ECA and the World Bank, ECA co-organized the meeting of African Ministers of Transport (Bamako, Mali, 15-16 November). The Ministers adopted a declaration in which they committed themselves to integrating regional corridor treaties and relevant international transport conventions into national legislation, and to removing all non-physical barriers to transport.

In preparation for upcoming events, ECA was conducting a study on the status of transport development in Africa, the findings of which would feed into a 2006 symposium on financing transport infrastructure development in Africa.

Europe-Africa permanent link

In response to Economic and Social Council resolution 2003/52 [YUN 2003, p. 1004], the Secretary-General submitted an April report [E/2005/21] by the Executive Secretaries of ECA and ECE on the work done in connection with the project to establish a Europe-Africa permanent link through the Strait of Gibraltar. Work had taken place in the areas of geodesy, oceanography, geo-prospecting, deep borehole drilling and socio-economic research. Deep-drilling surveys were in progress, and their reports would help clarify geological uncertainties regarding the central portion of the project's undersea route and determine its longitudinal profile. The surveys would also provide information for construction strategies, first for an exploratory gallery and then for a rail tunnel. Future work would centre on the implementation of the 2004-2006 programme of work, giving special attention to the fourth borehole survey already in progress, and to updating the basic engineering and user traffic forecasting studies, in order to formulate the technical and financial feasibility appraisal.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 27 July [meeting 40], the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 2005/34 [draft: E/2005/L.21] without vote [agenda item 10].

Europe-Africa fixed link through the Strait of Gibraltar

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolutions 1982/57 of 30 July 1982, 1983/62 of 29 July 1983, 1984/75 of 27 July 1984, 1985/70 of 26 July 1985, 1987/69 of 8 July 1987, 1989/119 of 28 July 1989, 1991/74 of 26 July 1991, 1993/60 of 30 July 1993, 1995/48 of 27 July 1995, 1997/48 of 22 July 1997, 1999/37 of 28 July 1999, 2001/29 of 26 July 2001 and 2003/52 of 24 July 2003,

Referring to resolution 912(1989) adopted on 1 February 1989 by the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe regarding measures to encourage the construction of a major traffic artery in south-western Europe and to study thoroughly the possibility of a fixed link through the Strait of Gibraltar,

Referring also to the Barcelona Declaration adopted at the Euro-Mediterranean Conference, held in Barcelona, Spain, in November 1995, and to the work programme annexed thereto, aimed at connecting the Mediterranean transport networks to the trans-European transport network so as to ensure their interoperability,

Referring further to the Lisbon Declaration adopted at the Conference on Transport in the Mediterranean, held in Lisbon in January 1997, and to the conclusions of the Pan-European Transport Conference, held in Helsinki in June 1997, on corridors in the Mediterranean incorporating the fixed link,

Taking note of the follow-up report prepared jointly by the Economic Commission for Europe and the Economic Commission for Africa pursuant to resolution 2003/52,

Taking note also of the conclusions of the second and third meetings of the Western Mediterranean Transport Group, held, respectively, in Rabat in September 1995 and in Madrid in January 1997, and of the conclusions of the meeting held in Brussels in 2000 by the Euro-Mediterranean Forum on Transport, which constitutes a framework for coordination among the countries of the Mediterranean basin for the development of integrated transport networks,

Taking note further of the conclusions of the studies launched by the European Commission (INFRAMED, MEDA TEN-T and DESTIN) for the development of an integrated transport network in the Mediterranean basin,

Taking note of the progress of the high-level committee on extension of the main trans-European transport arteries to neighbouring countries and regions, set up by the European Commission, which considers the France-Iberian peninsula-Morocco artery to be a corridor constituting a continuation of the trans-European network,

1. Welcomes the cooperation on the project for the link through the Strait of Gibraltar between the Economic Commission for Africa, the Economic Commission for Europe, the Governments of Morocco and Spain and specialized international organizations;

2. Also welcomes the progress made in deep-sea drilling project studies, and especially the work carried out, which have given a decisive impetus to geological and geotechnical explorations of undersea formations;

3. Commends the Economic Commission for Europe and the Economic Commission for Africa for the work done in preparing the project follow-up report requested by the Council in its resolution 2003/52;

4. Notes with appreciation the holding, in Madrid in January 2005, by the International Tunnelling Association, under the aegis of the Economic Commission for Europe and the Economic Commission for Africa, of a seminar on soundings and treatments;

5. Renews its invitation to the competent organizations of the United Nations system and to specialized governmental and non-governmental organizations to participate in the studies and work on the fixed link through the Strait of Gibraltar;

6. Requests the Executive Secretaries of the Economic Commission for Africa and the Economic Commission for Europe to continue to take an active part in the follow-up to the project and to report to the Council at its substantive session of 2007;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to provide formal support and, to the extent that priorities permit, the resources necessary, within the regular budget, to the Economic Commission for Europe and the Economic Commission for Africa, to enable them to carry out the activities mentioned above.

Integration of women in development

The overall objective of ECA's subprogramme on promoting the advancement of women was to mainstream gender into development policies, programmes and structures of member States. As a tool for gender mainstreaming, the secretariat completed work on the Easy Reference Guidebook on Mainstreaming Unpaid Work and Household Production in National Statistics, Policies and Programmes. Subregional workshops were organized for statisticians, planners and gender policy experts to assist member States in the effective use of the Guidebook. As a complement to the Guidebook, ECA took steps to increase the use of regular time-use surveys in Cameroon, Djibouti, Ghana, Morocco, Uganda and Zambia, with the aim of generating new, more accurate gender disaggregated statistics that addressed the MDGs.

In 2005, the results of the 12 pilot studies of the African Gender and Development Index, a monitoring mechanism to track progress towards gender equality and women's advancement, were produced. The countries had collected gender-disaggregated data in the social, economic and political areas and also reported on their achievements in reducing gender disparities and promoting the advancement of women. The studies revealed that the social sector had witnessed critical milestones in gender equality, particularly in primary and secondary education.

Other activities under the subprogramme included promoting the implementation of the Outcome and Way Forward document adopted at the seventh (2004) African Regional Conference on Women [YUN 2004, p. 998] and strengthening the capacity of ECA secretariat divisions and SROs in mainstreaming gender into ECA's activities and outputs.

Subregional offices

ECA's five subregional offices (SROs), located in Central, East, North, Southern and West Africa, continued to promote the harmonization of national policies in support of integration efforts and assist countries of the subregions to consolidate RECs in the overall framework of the AU and attain the goals set by NEPAD. A major priority was to support member States and the RECs in translating the priorities of NEPAD into concrete projects and programmes at the country and subregional levels, particularly in the areas of trade, infrastructure, human capacity development, gender mainstreaming, agriculture, food security and the environment.

The SROs, which served as the operational arms of ECA, facilitated subregional economic cooperation and integration and served as centres for policy dialogue through workshops, training, data collection and knowledge sharing. They also collaborated with other UN agencies in their subregions within the context of the UN Resident Coordinator system and the Common Country Assessment/United Nations Development Assistance Framework in the implementation of operational activities at the national level.

OIOS report. On 14 July, the Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly a report of the Office of Internal Oversight Services (OIOS) on the inspection of programme and administrative management of the ECA's SROs [A/60/120]. OIOS stated that the SROs for East Africa (Kigali, Rwanda), Southern Africa (Lusaka, Zambia), West Africa (Niamey, Niger), North Africa (Tangier, Morocco) and Central Africa (Yaoundé, Cameroon) were a vital part of ECA. However, their mandate was fulfilled only partially and their role was not clear. OIOS reviewed the progress and effectiveness of the implementation of all components of the SROs' mandate, focusing on coordination, cooperation and partnerships in operational activities and outreach. It learned that the activity of the SROs under each of their defined core functions was far more modest than mandated, and lack of resources limited their activity mainly to their countries of residence and restricted their ability to act as ECA's operational arm throughout their subregions. There was a lack of clarity regarding the balance between operational and analytical activities, and the SROs were weak facilitators of the integration activities of UN organizations and agencies in the subregions.

OIOS concluded that, while the resources of the SROs needed to be increased, resource growth needed to be drastically different in nature. The SROs needed operational expertise, skills that were geared to the specific requirements of their respective subregions, and specialist input to develop and maintain effective outreach and communications and establish a wide visibility in the subregions. Most of all, they needed an increased inflow of ICT resources in order to be effective collectors and disseminators of information relevant to the subregions. Another important challenge was to create a comprehensive, inclusive and dynamic system of coordination and cooperation among SROs; between SROs, UN agencies and other developmental partners; and with regional economic communities (RECs). A further challenge would be to prove convincingly to all concerned the unique value of SROs. Among other things, OIOS recommended that ECA: develop a separate subprogramme of work for each SRO in its biennial budgets; conduct an overall review of the function of regional advisers to ensure that their expertise was deployed correctly; establish a transparent, participatory and equitable mechanism for providing training to SROs; and develop a plan of evaluation and self-evaluation of the work of the SROs and consistently implement it.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 23 December [meeting 69], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [draft: A/60/609], adopted resolution 60/235 without vote [agenda item 122].

Report of the Office of Internal Oversight Services on the inspection of programme and administrative management of the subregional offices of the Economic Commission for Africa

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 48/218 B of 29 July 1994, 54/244 of 23 December 1999 and 59/272 of 23 December 2004,

Having considered the report of the Office of Internal Oversight Services on the inspection of programme and administrative management of the subregional offices of the Economic Commission for Africa,

1. Recalls its resolution 59/287 of 13 April 2005 and its decision that the development of Africa shall be among the priorities of the Organization for the biennium 2006-2007;

2. Recalls also its resolutions 57/2 of 16 September 2002 and 57/7 of 4 November 2002, and stresses the important role played by the Economic Commission for Africa in coordinating the activities of the United Nations system at the regional level in support of the New Partnership for Africa's Development;

3. Takes note of the report of the Office of Internal Oversight Services on the inspection of programme and administrative management of the subregional offices of the Economic Commission for Africa, and welcomes the initial steps that the Commission has taken to implement the recommendations of the Office;

4. Urges the full and expeditious implementation of the recommendations of the Office of Internal Oversight Services, and requests the Secretary-General to support the efforts of the Economic Commission for Africa and its subregional offices to implement the recommendations of the Office;

5. Also urges, in particular, the appropriate integration of the subregional offices into the strategy for the Economic Commission for Africa to ensure increased coordination and the most effective management of resources and implementation of mandates;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure that the information and communications technology capacity and strategy of the Economic Commission for Africa and its subregional offices are fully integrated with the information and communications technology strategy of the Organization and that it is used to its full capacity to disseminate information by electronic means;

7. Also requests the Secretary-General to intensify his efforts to fill vacancies in the subregional offices, inter alia, by recruiting staff with the appropriate operational skills and expertise that match the development priorities of the respective subregions;

8. Takes note with concern of the finding that the subregional offices of the Economic Commission for Africa have a restricted ability to act as the operational arm of the Commission throughout the countries of their respective subregions owing to the lack of adequate resources for core functions, the insufficient level of guidance and support from the headquarters of the Commission and the lack of a clear understanding as to the role of the subregional offices;

9. Stresses the important contribution that the Economic Commission for Africa and its subregional offices are making towards supporting the efforts of the regional economic communities of Africa to implement the priorities and objectives of the New Partnership for Africa's Development, and recognizes the need to strengthen the subregional offices;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to develop separate subprogrammes for the subregional offices of the Economic Commission for Africa;

11. Also requests the Secretary-General to enhance interaction between the regional advisers and subregional offices of the Economic Commission for Africa to ensure a closer link with subregional needs;

12. Further requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its sixty-first session a comprehensive plan of action to strengthen the subregional offices, based on the recommendations of the Office of Internal Oversight Services, with timelines and clear lines of managerial accountability and, in the context of the plan of action, to ensure that adequate resources are provided to the Economic Commission for Africa and its subregional offices to continue their support for the New Partnership for Africa's Development and the regional economic communities for Africa, as well as to ensure the full implementation of the recommendations of the Office of Internal Oversight Services.

Development planning and administration

The objective of the subprogramme on development planning and administration, implemented by the African Institute for Economic Development and Planning (IDEP), was to enhance national capacity for the formulation and implementation of development policies and economic management through training. IDEP contributed to strengthening the technical and analytical skills of experts in the public and private sectors of member States who performed the essential functions of strategic economic planning and management. To that end, IDEP conducted activities in the areas of training, seminars, workshops, conferences, library acquisition, documentation, networking and policy-oriented research.

Mid-career and senior officials from regional organizations and the public and private sectors were trained in the fields of economic policy and management, regional economic integration in Africa, applied econometrics for economic policy making, debt management and agricultural policies. The courses were organized in collaboration with several regional, continental and international institutions including the AU, the Arab Bank for Economic Development in Africa and the Government of the Netherlands.

IDEP staff members undertook six research studies on various policy-related issues, which were presented at international conferences, and 44 theses and graduate research papers were produced by trainees.

Construction of office facilities at ECA

In response to General Assembly resolution 56/270 [YUN 2002, p. 1458], the Secretary-General

submitted a 3 November report [A/60/532] on progress in the construction of additional office facilities at ECA headquarters in Addis Ababa. He requested the Assembly to authorize the expansion of the new office building by two additional floors, endorse a proposed phased approach in financing of further requirements and approve an additional appropriation of funds in the amount of $3,671,500 for the project. The Assembly also had before it a report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) on the Secretary-General's proposals [A/60/7/Add.21]. ACABQ recommended approval of the total estimated additional costs of $3,671,500 if the Assembly were to approve the expansion.

On 23 December, the Assembly, in resolution 60/248, section VII (see p. 1495), took note of the Secretary-General's report and endorsed ACABQ's recommendations.

Regional cooperation

Cooperation between UN and ECCAS

On 14 July [meeting 113] the General Assembly, having considered the section of the Secretary-General's 2004 consolidated report on cooperation between the UN and regional organizations [YUN 2004, p. 999], which described cooperation between the UN and the Economic Community of Central African States (ECCAS), adopted resolution 59/310 [draft: A/59/L.16/Rev.1] without vote [agenda item 56 (g)].

Cooperation between the United Nations and the Economic Community of Central African States

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 55/22 of 10 November 2000, 55/161 of 12 December 2000, 56/39 of 7 December 2001 and 57/40 of 21 November 2002 on cooperation between the United Nations and the Economic Community of Central African States,

Bearing in mind the treaty establishing the Economic Community of Central African States, by which the Central African countries have agreed to work for the economic development of their subregion, to promote economic cooperation and to establish a Common Market of Central Africa,

Recalling the United Nations Millennium Declaration, adopted on 8 September 2000 by the Heads of State and Government at the Millennium Summit of the United Nations, and especially section VII thereof,

Noting that, at the ninth regular session of the Economic Community of Central African States, held at Malabo on 24 June 1999, the Heads of State and Government of the member States decided to resume the activities of the Community, in particular by incorporating a collective security component, and by providing it with sufficient financial and human resources to enable it to become a real tool for the integration of their economies and to foster the development of cooperation between their peoples, with the ultimate aim of making it one of the five pillars of the African community and of helping Central Africa to meet the challenges of globalization,

Bearing in mind the report of the Secretary-General on the causes of conflict and the promotion of durable peace and sustainable development in Africa,

Welcoming the establishment of the Council for Peace and Security in Central Africa with a view to creating a climate of peace and security in the subregion and strengthening the rule of law essential to its development,

Welcoming also the efforts made by the Central African States, both on their own initiative and with the support of the international community, to focus on the difficulties afflicting this key region of Africa,

Noting the understanding of the States members of the Economic Community of Central African States regarding their undertaking to strengthen arrangements for cooperation within the Community,

Noting with deep concern that despite its enormous potential, which could make it one of the poles of development of the continent, Central Africa has yet to achieve the stability that would enable it to utilize its resources to the maximum benefit of its population in an equitable manner,

Welcoming the contribution made by the United Nations system to the efforts made at the national and subregional levels with a view to promoting the process of democratization, recovery and development in Central Africa,

Welcoming also the public meeting of the Security Council on 22 October 2002 devoted to strengthening cooperation between the United Nations system and the Central African region,

Recognizing the role that the private sector can play in the socio-economic development of Central African countries and their integration into the world economy, and stressing the importance of fostering a favourable environment for private investment and entrepreneurship,

Aware of the opportunities and challenges which globalization and liberalization can create for the economies of the countries of the subregion,

Noting with satisfaction that, as a result of the positive efforts of regional and subregional organizations, the subregion is gradually emerging from the conflicts that affect it, which offers an opportunity to build peace that must be seized by all parties and requires the mobilization of significant funds and increased resources to support demobilization, disarmament and reintegration programmes,

Welcoming the achievements of the Subregional Centre for Human Rights and Democracy in Central Africa,

Noting the positive measures taken by the Economic Community of Central African States to combat HIV/AIDS,

Noting also the important contribution of women to the development process,

Emphasizing the urgency of reaching an appropriate solution to the problem of refugees and internally displaced persons in Central Africa,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on cooperation between the United Nations and the Economic Community of Central African States;

2. Welcomes the ongoing efforts of the Secretary-General to support the role of the subregional institutions, in particular his decision to dispatch, in June 2003, at the request of the Security Council, a multidisciplinary assessment mission to the Central African subregion with the task of implementing a global, holistic approach to the problems of peace, security and development in the subregion;

3. Also welcomes the efforts of States Members of the United Nations and United Nations organs, organizations and agencies which have maintained or strengthened their cooperation with the Economic Community of Central African States or have begun to cooperate with it with a view to achieving peace, security and development;

4. Invites the States Members of the United Nations and United Nations organs, organizations and agencies which have not yet established contact or relations with the Economic Community of Central African States to consider doing so in order to help the Community to strengthen its capacities in the area of the maintenance of peace and security and reconstruction;

5. Commends the international community for the financial, technical and material support given to the Economic Community of Central African States;

6. Emphasizes the importance of close cooperation between the United Nations system, including the Bretton Woods institutions, and the Economic Community of Central African States;

7. Welcomes the reforms undertaken by the Economic Community of Central African States, including the execution of its programme of action, in order to be better able to tackle the problems of cooperation and regional integration;
